Foreword

THIS Yearbook of the United Nations is the thirty-seventh published since the founding of the Organization. During this time, the pages of these volumes have provided a factual record of what the United Nations has done or sought to do. Behind this record lies the whole panorama of the accomplishments and frustrations of humanity in this time of phenomenal change.

We have marvelled as countries rebuilt their lives after the dark night of global war and we have rejoiced as more than a hundred nations gained their independence. We have sought to restrain regional conflicts and we have witnessed with distress the failure of Governments to co-operate in resolving them on a basis of justice and honour. We have struggled to control the spiralling arms race, which can spell doom for the human enterprise. We have laid down standards for the observance of human rights which nevertheless are still violated frequently and on a massive scale. As dramatic advances in communications, knowledge and technology have vastly enriched the human estate, we have striven to reduce the deprivation that still remains the lot of the world's majority. Both triumph and tragedy are writ large in the chronicles of our age.

Our hope is anchored in that constituency of peace which cuts across national frontiers and the divisions of race, culture or ideology. The United Nations represents that constituency. It is not, and was not designed to be, a world government. But it provides structure and continuity to the joint effort to solve international problems which affect peace and impinge on justice and human dignity. If used as its Charter envisioned, with loyalty and commitment by its Member States, it can make all nations good neighbours and give new form and direction to their collective strengths.

The information contained in this volume, and its predecessors, is indispensable to anyone wishing to understand how nations have addressed their common concerns, which have emerged at an ever-increasing rate. Whether reporting progress or set-backs, highlighting success or exposing deficiencies, it furnishes evidence of the fact that there is no alternative to the working of the United Nations for ensuring our survival and the betterment of the human condition.

About the 1983 edition of the Yearbook

The 1983 YEARBOOK OF THE UNITED NATIONS has been designed as a reference tool for use not only by diplomats and other officials but also by writers, researchers, journalists, librarians and students, in fact all who might need readily available information on a particular activity of the United Nations system.

The Yearbook covers, during a calendar year, the main activities of the United Nations (Part One) and those of each related organization in the United Nations system (Part Two).

The 1983 edition is subject-oriented like previous editions. Part One (United Nations), containing 50 chapters, is divided into five major sections: political and security questions, economic and social questions, trusteeship and decolonization, legal questions, and administrative and budgetary questions.

Each chapter is divided into a hierarchy of topics, with each level having a heading of distinctive appearance. The assignment of headings implies no editorial judgement about the relative importance of a topic.

Structure and scope of articles

Presented under each topical heading is a summary of pertinent United Nations activities, including those of intergovernmental and expert bodies, major reports, Secretariat activities, and the views of States in written communications. The 1983 edition also gives the position of those States explaining their votes in the principal organs of the Organization. Such explanations are generally given when a recorded vote was taken. At the end of each chapter or subchapter is a list of references, linked by numerical indicators to the text. These references indicate document symbols, previous Yearbook pages supplying additional information, and previous resolutions and/or decisions by the principal United Nations organs. The Yearbook covers the following:

Activities of United Nations bodies. All resolutions, decisions and other major activities of the principal organs and, where applicable, those of subsidiary bodies, including sub-commissions and sub-committees, are either reproduced or summarized in the respective articles. The texts of all resolutions and decisions adopted by the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council, with information on their adoption, are reproduced under the relevant topic. Where relevant provisions of other resolutions and decisions of such bodies are mentioned, the full text can be found by using the INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS at the end of this volume.

Major reports. Most 1983 reports of the Secretary-General on which a United Nations body took action during the year, along with selected reports from other United Nations sources such as seminars and working groups, are summarized briefly under the relevant topic(s). The document symbols of all reports cited in an article appear in the references.

Secretariat activities. The operational activities of the United Nations for development and humanitarian assistance are described under the relevant topics. For all major activities financed outside the United Nations regular budget, information is given on contributions by individual countries and on expenditures. Financial data are generally obtained from the audited accounts prepared for each fund, and cover the 1983 calendar year unless otherwise specified.

Views of States. Each written communication sent to the United Nations by a Member State and circulated separately as a document of a principal organ has been summarized under the most relevant topic.

All substantive debates in the Security Council have been analysed by Yearbook editors, and their main points can be found under the pertinent topic(s). Users wishing details on the position of individual States in the principal organs of the United Nations or any of their main/sessional committees should refer to the meeting numbers to be found at the end of the summaries of procedural action following all resolution/decision texts.

Belated intergovernmental organizations. Part Part of the Yearbook describes the 1983 activities of each specialized agency and the International Atomic Energy Agency, based on information prepared by them for the Yearbook. Included are data on budgets, contributions by member States and principal officials.

Texts

The Yearbook reproduces the texts of all resolutions and substantive decisions adopted in 1983 by the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council. These texts, together with the title (if any) of the resolution/decision, are followed by the procedural details giving: date of adoption, meeting number and vote totals (in favour-against-abstaining); information on their approval by a sessional or subsidiary body prior to final adoption, with document symbols of drafts, approved amendments and committee reports; and a list of sponsors. Also given are the document symbols of any financial implications and all relevant meeting numbers of the principal organs and the General Assembly's Main Committees. Details of any recorded or roll-call vote on the resolution/decision as a whole also follow the text.

Terminology

Formal titles of bodies, organizational units, conventions, declarations and officials are given in full on first mention in an article or sequence of articles. They are also used in resolution/decision texts, and in the SUBJECT INDEX under the key word of the title.

Short titles may be used in subsequent references. They employ key words, usually not capitalized, from the formal title, such as "Committee on colonial countries" for "Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples". Capital letters are used when the only difference between full and short title is the omission of a term such as "Ad Hoc", "International", "Special" or "United Nations" ("Committee against Apartheid", for "Special Committee against Apartheid"). These short titles have no official standing.

How to find information in the Yearbook

The 1983 edition has been designed to enable the user to locate information on United Nations activities in a number of ways.

By subject: Broad subjects may be located in the table of contents on page vi. Each chapter opens with an introduction highlighting the main developments. Where a main topic is subdivided, shorter introductions may precede subchapters. Cross-references give chapters for related information. The SUBJECT INDEX may be used to locate individual topics and specific references to the bodies dealing with each.

By body: Although the Yearbook is oriented by subject rather than by body, surveys of the work of many bodies appear under the topic of their main concern. For the principal organs, APPENDIX IV gives the 1983 agenda for each session. The members, officers, and date and place of sessions of each body are given in APPENDIX III. The SUBJECT INDEX lists bodies by the key word(s) of their formal title: "Apartheid, Special Committee against".

By resolution and decision number: A numerical list of all resolutions and substantive decisions adopted in 1983 by the principal organs, with page numbers for their text, appears in the final pages of this volume.

Each resolution/decision text appears in an article together with the circumstances of its adoption. Summaries of relevant provisions of other resolutions or decisions may also be added where applicable.

Other information: The annual report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization in 1983 is reproduced, beginning on page 3. A list of Member States, with their dates of admission to the United Nations, comprises APPENDIX I. The Charter of the United Nations, including the Statute of the International Court of Justice, is in APPENDIX II. An INDEX OF NAMES follows the SUBJECT INDEX.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

References at the end of each article in Part One of this volume give the symbols of the main documents issued in 1983 on the topic, arranged in the order in which they are referred to in the text. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/38/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the thirty-eighth session, beginning with A/38/1. Documents of special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S- and A/ES-, followed by the session number.

A/C.- refers to documents of six of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.1/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.6/-, a document of the Sixth Committee. The symbol for documents of the seventh Main Committee, the Special Political Committee, is A/SPC/-. A/BUR/- refers to documents of the General Committee. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/CN.4/-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two Arabic numerals: the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session, Decisions of regular sessions are numbered consecutively, from 301 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 401 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/1983/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 1983 sessions, beginning with E/1983/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by identifying numbers, refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/C.1/-, E/C.2/- and E/C.3/- refer to documents of the Council's sessional committees, namely, the First (Economic), Second (Social) and Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committees, respectively; E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/CN.7/-, to documents of its Committee on Natural Resources. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two Arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1 (resolution 1983/1); and one for decisions, beginning, since 1980, with 100 (decision 1983/100).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1 (1946).

T/- refers to documents of the Trusteeship Council. Its resolutions are numbered consecutively, with the session at which they were adopted indicated by Roman numerals, e.g. resolution 2175(L) of the fiftieth session. The Council's decisions are not numbered.

ST/-, followed by symbols representing the issuing department or office, refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

Documents of certain bodies bear special series symbols, including the following:

ACC/-	Administrative Committee on Co-ordination
CD/-	Committee on Disarmament
CERD/-	International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination
DC/-	Disarmament Commission
DP/-	United Nations Development Programme
HS/-	Commission on Human Settlements
ID/-	United Nations Industrial Development Organization
ITC/-	International Trade Centre
LOS/PCN/-	Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea
TD/-	United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
UNEP/-	United Nations Environment Programme
UNITAR/-	United Nations Institute for Training and Research

Many documents of the regional commissions bear special symbol series. These are sometimes preceded by the following:

E/CEPAL/-	Economic Commission for Latin America
E/CN.14/-
E/ECA/-	Economic Commission for Africa
E/ECE/-	Economic Commission for Europe
E/ECWA/-	Economic Commission for Western Asia
E/ESCAP/-	Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific

"L" in a symbol refers to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions; "CONF" to documents of a conference; "INF." to those of general information. Summary records are designated by "SR.", verbatim records by "PV.", each followed by the meeting number.

United Nations sales publications each carry a sales number with the following components separated by periods: a capital letter indicating the language(s) of the publication; two Arabic numerals indicating the year; a Roman numeral indicating the subject category; a capital letter indicating a subdivision of the category, if any; and an Arabic numeral(s) indicating the number of the publication within the category. Examples: E.83.V.7; E/F/R.82.II.E.8; E.84.IX.3.

PART ONE

United Nations

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

Following is the text of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization, submitted to the General Assembly and dated 12 September 1983.⁽¹⁾ The Assembly took note of the report on 5 December 1983 when it adopted decision 38/410.

In my annual report last year I commented on the performance of the United Nations in discharging its primary duty of maintaining international peace and security and on ways in which that performance might be improved. I am gratified that those suggestions have been extensively discussed, both in the General Assembly and, in considerable detail and over a long period of time, by the Security Council. Certainly there is an urgent necessity to develop international institutions capable of encompassing the harsh realities of our time. But despite the interest displayed in my last annual report by the General Assembly and the will of the members of the Security Council to enhance and strengthen the performance of the Council, the actual developments of the past year have been far from encouraging. It seems to me that we are more than ever in need of a fresh collective look at some of the major problems of the world. The basic issue continues to be the development of, and commitment to, a working system of international security as an essential complement to progress in disarmament and arms limitation and a renewed effort at the highest level to strengthen international economic co-operation for growth and development.

There are a number of current problems affecting international peace, security and co-operation which cry out for a central instrument of co-operative effort through which Governments can control conflict and work out solutions. Despite the efforts of many, 1983 has, so far, been a frustrating year for the search for peace, stability and justice and for those who believe that the United Nations is the best available international instrumentality to achieve these ends. As I believe that the erosion of multilateralism and internationalism should be arrested and reversed, I propose in this report to concentrate on certain approaches which might make our Organization more effective as a political institution.

The Charter of the United Nations clearly gives priority to dealing with threats to international peace and security and to the commitment of all nations, especially the permanent members of the Security Council, to co-operate within the framework of the United Nations towards this end. It is the weakening of this commitment that has, perhaps more than any other factor, led to the partial paralysis of the United Nations as the guardian of international peace and security.

Furthermore, when East-West tension is superimposed on regional conflicts and serves to exacerbate them, the already destructive nature of such disputes is likely to be aggravated and the danger of widening strife becomes an ominous prospect. On some occasions this process has gone so far that regional conflicts have been perceived as being wars by proxy among more powerful nations. In situations of this kind, the deliberative organs of the United Nations tend to be bypassed or excluded or, worse yet, to be used solely as a forum for polemical exchanges.

There have been, at any given time in past years, several regional situations with grave potential implications for international peace. At the present time, for example, such situations exist in South-East Asia, Afghanistan, Central America, Namibia and several other parts of Africa including Chad, in the Middle East and Lebanon, Cyprus and in the Iran-Iraq war. I shall be dealing in more detail with most of these situations in separate reports either to the General Assembly or the Security Council.

Neither the Security Council nor any other international organ can in all cases hope to resolve in short order acute international conflict situations that may involve serious clashes of interest between the actual parties as well as between the members of the Council. The Security Council under the Charter has, however, the obligation to assist the parties in the search for solutions to international disputes. But above all it is the Council's duty to ensure that this process should remain peaceful, lest it endanger the wider peace. Even though the members of the Council may be profoundly divided about the merits of a given case, it is their duty to find ways and means of keeping the situation under control, without prejudice to the shape of an eventual settlement. Seen in this perspective, conflict control is a basic element of the primary responsibility of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security.

For their part, States and other parties to international disputes have a primary obligation at all stages to co-operate with the Security Council and the Secretary-General in suitable forms of conflict control. However, the willingness of the parties to co-operate with the United Nations will inevitably be contingent upon the capacity of the Organization to act as an effective and impartial instrument of peace. Only if this essential condition is achieved will Member States come to the realization that in times of trouble they can rely on the United Nations to help to restore or maintain the peaceful conditions in which negotiated solutions of the basic issues can be sought as part of a civilized and rational international order.

Aside from conflict control, the main objective of the Security Council, particularly of its permanent members, should be to develop an effective common approach to potential threats to international peace and security, to assist and, if necessary, to put pressure on the conflicting parties to resolve their differences justly and by peaceful means. Such a concerted approach would dispose of great resources of persuasion and, if necessary, of practical leverage. That, surely, is the approach to important conflict problems which the authors of the Charter had in mind. This approach would go a long way to developing in practice a system for international peace and security designed to supersede arms races, military and other forms of conflict and the inherent risk of ultimate disaster. This is, after all, the basic idea of the Charter.

Unfortunately, we are in danger of becoming accustomed to a very different situation. All too often the members of the Security Council tend to be so divided on the matter at hand and so apprehensive of each other's reaction to it that agreement on how to proceed remains elusive. When we consider how to improve the performance of the United Nations we must give priority to the cohesion and co-operation of the membership in facing threats to international peace. We should recognize that such threats are of an importance which should override the differences of interest and ideology which separate the membership. The Council must be primarily used for the prevention of armed conflict and the search for solutions. Otherwise it will become peripheral to major issues, and in the end the world could pay, as it has before, a heavy price for not learning the lessons of history.

If this analysis seems Utopian, it is certainly preferable to a course of action which risks, through partisanship, the elevating of a local conflict into a world confrontation. Indeed the habit of adopting a concerted approach to problems of international peace and security might lead to the statesmanlike co-operation which will be essential in bridging the great present divisions of our international society and in turning the tide in crucial matters such as disarmament and arms control.

We have this year witnessed some notable efforts to maintain unity and realism in the Security Council on highly charged issues. I am thinking in particular of the Council's proceedings on the complaint of Nicaragua and the Namibia question, which revealed a constructive search for consensus on difficult and controversial problems. This is indeed a step forward, but the next step may be more difficult, namely, to put the necessary leverage and movement into the decisions of the Council.

We must, I believe, firmly persevere in the effort to move from words to action. In this context, and having in mind the views expressed by the members of the Security Council, I have, in the course of this year, kept the Council informed of the responsibilities entrusted to me and of my efforts to discharge them. I have also, within the Secretariat, initiated steps in order to be alerted in advance to incipient problems. I look forward to working with the Council in order to develop a wider and more systematic capacity for fact-finding in potential conflict areas.

As Secretary-General I am the repository of numerous injunctions to use my best efforts, to keep in contact with the parties and to report on a wide variety of problems that no one has been able to solve. Resolutions are passed, on occasion requesting reports which form the basis for new resolutions. This process often becomes the substitute for action, and indeed the antithesis of it. Once again I wish to urge the necessity for realistic and politically effective approaches to problems. I welcome the indications of a trend in this direction.

Naturally, I and my colleagues do our best to follow up on important issues before the Organization. I cannot, however, escape the feeling that decisions of the United Nations on important issues require more than this. As I said last year, I believe that decisions of the various organs should be the beginning, not the end, of governmental concern and action. A continuous effort to contribute to the implementation of United Nations decisions should be an integral part of the foreign policy of Member States to a far greater extent than it is at the present time.

It is deeply disturbing to me as Secretary-General, while pursuing efforts to solve this or that problem, to receive the impression that some Governments sometimes attach little importance to the decisions they themselves have participated in at the United Nations. Conversely it is most encouraging—as I have found in my visits to numerous capitals in the past year—that a basic faith in the purposes and principles of the Charter remains a dominant theme. I wish here to repeat with all possible emphasis the statement in my last report that an essential first step towards strengthening the United Nations would be a conscious recommitment to the Charter by all Governments. With an objective as elusive and as vital as the preservation of peace, a sense of shared purpose and direction is imperative.

In no area is the need for a recommitment to the principles of the Charter more important and more closely tied to the survival of humanity than in the field of disarmament and arms limitation. The prevention of nuclear war remains the unique challenge of our time, since such a war would be the ultimate negation of all human endeavour. While the international community as a whole is deeply concerned with this vital problem, the key to its solution is in the hands of the two major nuclear Powers.

The current bilateral negotiations on the reduction of strategic and intermediate-range nuclear forces are of vital importance in the face of the destabilizing effects of advancing technology and the continuing arms race. It seems likely that the mood and outcome of these talks will decisively affect the general climate of international relations in the future, as well as the chances of progress on other aspects of disarmament.

The failure so far to achieve real progress in these negotiations can only cause us all profound alarm. If they should fail, we may be faced with another significant escalation in the spiralling arms competition. A development of this kind would inevitably add to the world's burden of insecurity and instability. The situation could well become virtually irreversible if the establishment of viable methods of arms limitation is jeopardized by the development of new weapons systems, and if either side, in search of military advantage, deploys strategic weapons that suggest an attempt to reach out for first-strike capability. Currently, perhaps even more acute is the problem of intermediate-range missiles, which may reach a critical stage unless the present negotiations bear fruit. Beyond all this there looms the longer-term prospect of the militarization of outer space and the computerization and automation of warfare, which could eventually escape political control altogether.

I have no doubt that the responsible leaders on both sides are aware of the ominous prospects, and of the crying need for renewed determination to move the current Geneva talks forward. In this connection, I might venture the observation that in this field there are no bargaining chips. Each side seems determined to respond to any advance achieved by the other side by matching it rather than by making concessions.

In view of the urgency of the situation, especially as regards intermediate-range forces, I hope that the parties will give thought to possible interim measures that would keep open the possibility of negotiations. I further recall that certain promising compromise proposals have been informally discussed in Geneva. It is important to bear in mind that negotiations on one weapons system intended to deter one particular threat are inextricably linked to perceptions of the overall threat and to negotiations on other weapons systems. It is therefore imperative to reduce the totality of mutual threat by moving in the direction of more stable systems. The extension of the mutual observance of current limitations would also be helpful in order to allow consideration of a new longer-term approach. Future limits on qualitative improvements and modernization could provide a useful subject of discussion in both sectors of the Geneva talks. The object, while preserving military parity, should be to promote equal security for all at progressively decreasing levels and under effective international control.

I share the general anxiety about the possible uses of outer space for military purposes, and I welcome recent suggestions to deal with important aspects of this problem. I would strongly urge that comprehensive negotiations should begin at an early date on a peaceful régime for outer space. To improve the atmosphere, it would also be desirable to lend fresh impetus to the talks on banning the production of chemical weapons and destroying existing stocks. Enough work has already been done to provide the basis for the long-awaited convention on this subject. Furthermore, I would urge a renewed effort to conclude negotiations on a comprehensive nuclear-weapon test ban. This would significantly help to halt the nuclear-arms race by impeding the qualitative improvement of nuclear weapons. All these questions are currently under consideration in the Committee on Disarmament at Geneva. In addressing that body earlier this year, I urged its members not to let their vital work fall hostage to lack of progress elsewhere.

The situation relating to conventional arms is a source of increasing concern. It is necessary to bear in mind that the many millions killed in war since Hiroshima and Nagasaki have all died from conventional weapons. This situation has had a corrosively harmful effect not least on the world's developing countries, which feel obliged to spend an increasing proportion of their resources for defence purposes, often to the detriment of essential needs. It is of course the right and duty of all nations to provide for their self-defence. But unresolved disputes tend to provoke regional arms races and the international tensions accompanying competitive arms purchases can no longer be ignored.

In the Final Document of the 1978 special session on disarmament, the General Assembly called for consultations among major arms supplier and recipient countries to limit transfers of conventional weapons, in order to preserve security and promote stability at a lower military level. No concrete action has been taken so far to follow up that appeal. I would therefore suggest that the two Governments concerned give careful thought to the possibility of reviving the bilateral talks on conventional arms transfers, which were suspended in 1978. The scope of these talks could eventually be enlarged, perhaps within the framework of the Committee on Disarmament, to cover multilateral aspects and to provide representation of recipient as well as supplier countries.

The United Nations, as stated in the concluding documents of the two special sessions of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, has a central role to play in this field. At its thirty-seventh session, the Assembly adopted a record number of resolutions on disarmament matters, including over 20 dealing with nuclear questions. They reflect the deeply felt concern of many Governments with the present situation. World public opinion is increasingly reacting against the constant threat of extinction hanging over humanity, in a world where despite our vaunted advances in science and human knowledge we cannot even assure our children of their future. In this context, I urge all Members to give full support to the World Disarmament Campaign of the United Nations, which was launched at the second special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament. In an area hitherto marked by polemics, this campaign will enable the Organization to disseminate objective information worldwide so as to provide a solid, factual basis for constructive public involvement and understanding.

In the common quest to realize the ideals and objectives of the Charter, we must never lose sight of the quality of the world we are seeking to build and of the ultimate raison d'être for all our activities: the individual human being, for whom the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims the right to a social and international order in which human rights and fundamental freedoms can be fully realized.

Over the past years, there has developed a growing trend for international co-operation in dealing with human rights issues. In addition to the elaboration of international conventions since the Declaration, I should like to mention the work of the Commission on Human Rights on arbitrary and summary executions and the holding of the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.

However, despite the progress achieved at the international level, gross violations of human rights and restrictions of fundamental freedoms are still taking place in many parts of the world. Racism and racial discrimination in various forms, including the totally unacceptable policy of apartheid, have not been eradicated. There are still far too many refugees, uprooted and destitute as a result of political conflicts.

The problem of refugees can be resolved only with a settlement of the root political causes. In the mean time, various United Nations operations and programmes have provided emergency assistance to many refugees and displaced persons and helped to alleviate their plight in some measure. But this is clearly not enough in spite of the effectiveness and devotion of the United Nations personnel involved. The means available to the Organization are grossly inadequate in relation to the actual needs. I earnestly hope that Governments as well as voluntary agencies will intensify their support of the United Nations for this important humanitarian endeavour.

I attach the highest importance to the question of human rights and I believe it my responsibility to consider the most effective means of dealing with specific cases. Taking into account the nature of my office and mindful of the kind of approach necessary to achieve practical results, I have been in contact with a number of Governments regarding particular human rights situations or individual cases. I am heartened by the instances in which co-operation has been extended to me in these contacts, and I am determined to persist in my efforts.

The Preamble of the Charter expresses the determination of the peoples of the United Nations "to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom" and to this end "to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples".

I am convinced that the impressive economic progress since the Second World War—in which almost all nations have shared—owes a great deal to multilateral co-operation which the United Nations has helped to bring about and develop. Recent trends and events, however, far from strengthening such co-operation, mark a clear retreat from these efforts. Indeed, while the effects of economic interdependence, due to growing integration in trade, finance and money, are widely acknowledged, obvious opportunities to address the major issues in these areas are being repeatedly missed. There can be no doubt that today more than ever many individual nations are affected—for good or ill-by trends elsewhere and by the decisions of others. Furthermore, there are categories of problems which can only be dealt with multilaterally or globally. All these developments intensify the need for international mechanisms to bring about greater harmonization of national policies.

Unilateral actions, taken without due regard for their effects on partner countries, would inevitably lead to the weakening of economic co-operation, thereby damaging world growth and development. They would lead to economic nationalism, the evil effects of which we witnessed during the '30s. Unresolved economic conflicts can be, and usually are, a breeding ground for dangerous political tensions.

A major economic imperative of our times is the accelerated development of the developing countries. The eradication of the poverty that continues to be widespread in several parts of the world must remain a collective responsibility. The needs of the least developed and other poor countries require particular attention. The total population of developing countries is projected to increase from around 3 billion to approximately 5 billion by the end of the century, that is, within less than two decades.

The slowing, and sometimes the halt, in the development process that has taken place in recent years should be seen as a temporary phenomenon that must be reversed in the coming years. In the mean time, every effort has to be made to reduce the vulnerability of developing countries to external shocks and to assist them in attaining greater autonomy and freedom of action, both by themselves and in co-operation with other countries-developed and developing.

At the same time, it is necessary to realize a higher level of growth in the industrialized countries. Thirty-two million people are unemployed in the OECD countries alone, and this figure is likely to rise in the immediate future. A burden of this magnitude cannot be economically or politically accepted as a permanent part of the realities of these countries. The need for investment in order to fight unemployment, to ensure structural adjustments and to deal with the needs of underprivileged areas and groups requires higher growth in that region. This would also encourage better prospects for increased trade and transfer of resources from the industrialized countries to the developing countries. Similar considerations call for high growth in socialist economies as well.

I have recently presented, in statements to intergovernmental bodies, my views on ways to revive the world economy and resume the process of development. There is a primary need for action at the national level to correct economic and social imbalances. Such efforts need to be supported by concerted action among nations and the assistance of multilateral institutions. In this connection I have emphasized the need to make additional finance available as part of concerted policies for world recovery and to examine basic reforms in international trade, money and finance. Economic co-operation among developing countries also needs strengthening.

The recently concluded sixth session of UNCTAD provided an important opportunity to counter the present negative trends and to demonstrate the capacity and the will of Governments to overcome difficulties and to act together. Unfortunately, the results of this important Conference are not commensurate with the gravity of the situation in developing countries and the requirements of the world economy in general, and there was a failure to respond to the need for concerted international action. The opportunity of UNCTAD VI was to a large extent allowed to lapse, thus exacerbating political tensions on a range of economic issues. It is regrettable that efforts at flexibility, as evinced, for example, at the Buenos Aires and New Delhi meetings, did not evoke a comparable response. Nevertheless, it is my view that the consensus achieved at Belgrade on several issues could constitute a worthwhile step provided there is a continuing process of dialogue and action. In this context and despite the remaining obstacles, we must activate the process of negotiation between the developed and developing countries on long-term problems in several interrelated areas and at a high political level.

Let me now turn to the role of the United Nations on economic issues. How effective is the United Nations in discharging the responsibilities with which it has been entrusted by its Charter? Contrary to the perceptions of some, the Organization has been successful in anticipating and identifying issues of importance, mobilizing public opinion, researching and analysing critical problems, providing direct assistance within its means and negotiating constructive agreements in various sectors of activity.

The record of performance and accomplishments of the United Nations system in the economic and social fields is varied and substantial. Through a vast network of technical co-operation activities, organizations of the United Nations system continue to assist developing countries in formulating and implementing a large number of specific projects, ranging from the establishment of primary health care centres to highly sophisticated institutions of agronomic research and training, and technology.

However, I am very much aware that much more needs to be done to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the system and to ensure its responsiveness to changing needs. This requires efforts on the part of the Secretariat as well as of the Member States.

I shall deal elsewhere in this report with issues relating to the improvement of the administration of the Secretariat. There is a need to ensure more concerted action by the organizations of the United Nations system in dealing with the important issues of development and international economic co-operation and in their work at the field level.

As regards Governments, it is important to ensure greater cohesion and consistency in their positions in the different intergovernmental bodies. A greater sense of priority in the deliberations of the General Assembly and of the Economic and Social Council would encourage more effective consideration of issues. It would also strengthen the impact of resolutions. Frequently such resolutions lead to a proliferation of institutions. This can hamper efficiency and add substance to criticism of an ever-expanding bureaucracy. Improvement is also needed in the machinery and methods of negotiation.

Innovative measures should be considered to foster the habit of co-operation. In this connection, I wish to underline the need to strengthen the efforts of the United Nations system to support the initiatives of developing countries to promote co-operation among themselves through the implementation of specific and action-oriented measures.

It is incumbent on us to seize every opportunity to carry forward the development dialogue, setting aside, where necessary, traditional practices or methods which may be obsolete, and testing new means of strengthening the collective effort of Member States to attain their common objectives.

No organization can succeed if its administrative system is inarticulate or unresponsive to its real needs. While there have been criticisms of the United Nations administration as inflated, politicized or extravagant, it is also necessary to understand its fundamental nature and problems. In the full knowledge that much responsible criticism is justified, let me, as chief administrative officer of the United Nations, attempt a brief look at the problems and realities which we face.

The administration of the United Nations is not like the administration of a national Government. For one thing, the Organization has 157 Members, with widely differing notions of administration. For another, it has existed for less than 38 years, a period of great flux in which its membership has more than trebled and the emphasis of its work dramatically changed. The principle of equitable geographical representation, which is essential, nevertheless poses its own considerable problems in the building up of a coherent international civil service. And the fact that there is often on one side of an administrative or budgetary issue a relatively small number of Member States that provide the bulk of the budget, and on the other a majority in the General Assembly that do not, also imposes stresses and strains. These and other factors render the Secretary-General's task as chief administrative officer a complex and sometimes exasperating one, for while all profess their dedication to the principles of independent and objective international administration, few refrain from trying to bring pressure to bear in favour of their own particular interests. This is especially so on the personnel side.

Article 97 of the Charter, which designates the Secretary-General as chief administrative officer of the Organization, gives no precise indication of the functions involved nor of how these functions are to be delimited against those of other principal organs, particularly the General Assembly. I shall not go into detail here about the various fields in which this lack of precision creates problems.

The General Assembly is, of course, pre-eminent. It appoints the Secretary-General under Article 97. It has the power of the purse (Article 17), the power to discuss "any matters relating to the powers and functions of any organs" (Article 10) and to establish regulations for the governance of the Secretariat (Article 101). In other words, the Assembly lays down the general legislative framework within which the Secretary-General performs the executive functions entrusted to him by the Charter. The problem is that there is no defined borderline between the legislative and the executive. This can on occasion have an inhibiting effect on the Secretary-General in instituting and carrying out coherent policies, under the Charter, in recruiting, administering and running the Secretariat and the administration.

Thus in personnel matters, the Charter distribution of functions may be seen as blurred if decisions in respect of individual staff members, or the power to appoint a staff member or part of the staff, are vested in authorities other than the Secretary-General. This is also true of the increasingly detailed directives issued in recent years by the General Assembly concerning various aspects of recruitment, even if these merely reflect its frustration at the administration's failure to achieve, or the slow pace in achieving, goals set in earlier and more general guidelines as to the geographical, gender, linguistic and age distribution of the staff. While it is not my intention to raise constitutional or legal objections to these detailed directtives, the fact remains that rigid directives can be counter-productive from a political and administrative point of view and may not always be conducive to the smooth functioning or efficient administration of the Organization. A case in point is the recent decision curtailing the Secretary-General's hitherto unquestioned authority to promulgate Staff Rules, as distinct from the Regulations issued by the General Assembly.

Another, perhaps unintended, consequence is that an effective career development programme is becoming increasingly difficult to work out. A programme of this kind, which I consider essential for the future capacity of the Secretariat as well as for the morale and encouragement of the present staff, presupposes considerable flexibility in conducting an active personnel policy. The current trend seems to be pushing us in the opposite direction.

The Charter is silent as to any explicit financial or budgetary functions of the Secretary-General, although the Financial Regulations and other decisions of the General Assembly assign to him substantial functions in this area. Of these, perhaps the most important is the preparation of the proposed programme budget for each financial period, upon which the General Assembly makes the final decision. The Secretary-General needs to retain the degree of authority necessary to maintain the financial integrity of the Organization and to safeguard the concept of a unified Secretariat. This necessity has, with minor exceptions, by and large been recognized. In the budget adoption process, it is inevitable that differences of opinion will arise at times between the Secretary-General and the Fifth Committee or the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions. This is completely normal; there is nothing wrong in a process in which the Secretary-General defends his proposals fully and fairly and then implements faithfully whatever decision the Assembly may take thereon.

As regards the structure of the Secretariat, there are, since it is determined by the budget, very considerable restrictions on the Secretary-General's freedom of action. One trend, however, deserves mention here, namely, the tendency to establish more or less autonomous units to carry out certain functions-organs over which the Secretary-General does not have clear control. This trend raises serious questions of organizational responsibility and authority and may sometimes not be altogether consistent with the Charter concept of a unified Secretariat working as a team under a single leadership.

At the same time, critical attention needs to be given to the internal administrative set-up. After nearly four decades of wear and tear it needs a careful overhaul so as to ensure that it meets with increased efficiency the needs of this larger, more complex and more decentralized Organization. To that end I have recently established a high-level advisory group on administrative reform to identify issues and areas in which modification or reform could be effected.

Very often I find myself caught between the directives of the General Assembly, the interests of the staff and the imperatives of good and efficient administration in accordance with the Charter. I believe that it is in the general interest that we act together in full knowledge of the practical difficulties of the enterprise and with the united objective of strengthening the Secretariat and the administration.

This is, admittedly, a formidable task, complicated by the accretion of 38 years of experiment, development and change. I therefore intend to give priority in the coming year to a searching examination and appraisal of the administration with a view to improvement. But I should be less than frank not to pose here the question that often arises in my mind: Does the Secretary-General still have sufficient authority effectively to meet his responsibilities as chief administrative officer of the United Nations?

Thirty-eight years after the Second World War it would seem that the drive towards an effective, peaceful and more equitable international order has slowed, and the incentive to develop international institutions corresponding to the realities and risks of our time has weakened. Political will to these ends, in its best sense, has been dissipated in a variety of rivalries, confrontations and conflicts. The belief in a common future has been, to a large extent, lost in the anxieties of a divided present. Short-term national interests, old resentments and fears, and ideological differences have obscured the vision of the Charter. The will to compose differences seems weak or absent in most conflict situations, and at the other end of the spectrum the concept of world affairs dominated by concerns for national security or conceived as an open-ended struggle between massive ideological forces seems to have taken the place of the new and enlightened international community envisaged in the Charter. In this connection, the recent tragedy of the downed Korean airliner, and the very serious issues it raises, also points dramatically to the urgent need for more open and ready communications between all sides in the interests of the international community as a whole in order to create an environment in which the use of force would be unthinkable.

Admittedly, we have been through a period of fundamental change in the world-geopolitical change, technological change and a revolutionary change in the nature and scope of war. But all of these things demand more than ever a return to the far-sighted statesmanship of the immediate post-war years, not a retreat from it. Who can possibly believe that a world dominated by the nuclear balance, where $800 billion a year is spent on armaments and where a large proportion of the population lives in destitution and with little real hope, is on the right track? And yet, paradoxically, for the time being at any rate, the United Nations, which was set up to deal with such problems, is too often on the sidelines as far as many major issues are concerned.

We are at present in a period when the value of multilateral diplomacy is being questioned and international institutions are not functioning as they were intended to function. The machinery is running and the wheels are turning, but it is not moving forward as it should. This applies to the United Nations and, in different degrees, to regional organizations and to many international agencies and groupings. Nor is it evident that bilateral diplomacy or unilateral efforts are, in most cases, filling the gap by providing that correlation of national policies which is essential to future stability and the general international interest. We must find means to push the machinery into forward motion again. If we do not do this, we run the risk of being caught, immobile and in the open, in a new international storm too great for us to weather.

Let me here point to a source of real encouragement. It is perhaps best symbolized in the proposal of the Chairman of the seventh non-aligned summit conference, Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, that the United Nations should be strengthened by a meeting of heads of State or Government to give a fresh collective look at some of the major problems of the world. At this critical time in human relations it is encouraging that the non-aligned movement has spoken as a protagonist of the multilateral approach and of the purposes and principles of the Charter. Nor is such a view by any means limited to the non-aligned movement.

In meetings with many leaders throughout the world I have been impressed by the evident desire to see the United Nations function in the manner in which it was intended to function.

It is therefore paradoxical that we should be experiencing, I trust only temporarily, the fragmentation and erosion of the historic effort to build an international system designed to provide peace, security, stability and justice for all. Although in the short term the world may get by without such an effort, in the long term such a system, evolving through a conscious political effort by all States, is indispensable if we are to avoid chaos and disaster on a scale hitherto unknown. At the present time we are witnessing instead the unravelling of many agreements reached! by hard and painstaking negotiation over the years. It is absolutely vital that this trend be reversed and that we strengthen our international institutions, not only in order to deal with immediate conflict problems but also to construct a viable framework for the life of future generations on our crowded planet.

Chapter I

Disarmament

In 1983, most of the United Nations efforts for disarmament and arms limitation, including proposals renewed or initiated, were manifestations of global concern about the current situation and consisted of appeals, rather than implementation of concrete steps, for its improvement.

The Committee on Disarmament—the main intergovernmental negotiating body on disarmament—met at Geneva from 1 February to 29 April and from 14 June to 30 August, with substantially the same agenda as in 1982. It decided to designate itself as the Conference on Disarmament starting in 1984, and agreed to a limited expansion of its membership. The Disarmament Commission, composed of all United Nations Member States, held its 1983 session from 9 May to 3 June at United Nations Headquarters.

At its 1983 regular session, the General Assembly examined 25 disarmament items, including four new items concerning: the 1985 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, a proposed treaty on the non-use of force in outer space, condemnation of nuclear war and a nuclear-weapon freeze. In December, 62 resolutions and two decisions were adopted on these items, including an agreement to hold, not later than 1988, the Assembly's third special session devoted to disarmament. As in previous years, all disarmament items were considered by the Assembly's First Committee, where the question of the bilateral nuclear arms negotiations between the USSR and the United States—which were suspended towards the end of 1982—was one of the subjects of intense consideration.

The year 1983 marked the entry into force of the 1980 Convention, and its three Protocols, on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects.

At the beginning of the year, the Centre for Disarmament was transformed into the United Nations Department for Disarmament Affairs, the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research assumed an autonomous status, and the Secretary-

General's Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies was revived with additional functions, as agreed by the Assembly in 1982.

Details on these subjects together with the full texts of the related resolutions or decisions adopted by the General Assembly can be found under the relevant subject headings on the following pages. General aspects of disarmament

Various aspects of disarmament were discussed in 1983 by the 40-member Committee on Disarmament and by the Disarmament Commission. The General Assembly, in resolutions 38/183 I and E respectively, took note of their activities for the year. Agreement could not be reached on a comprehensive programme of disarmament and, by resolution 38/183 K, the Assembly urged continued efforts for the programme's elaboration.

The Assembly, in resolutions 38/183 H, on implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session (the first special session on disarmament), and 38/183 F, on implementation of the 1979 Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament, called for progress in disarmament. By resolution 38/73 I, it decided to convene, not later than 1988, the third special session devoted to disarmament.

The Secretary-General, in his 1983 annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the United Nations (p. 3), stressed the need for a working system of international security as an essential complement to progress in disarmament and arms limitation.

Appeals for peace and disarmament from various sources were transmitted to the Assembly during the year by their respective Governments or those acting as host to the particular meeting. They included appeals from: the Bishops of Austria;(1) the Swedish Ecumenical Council;(2) a meeting of Party and State figures from Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland, Romania and the USSR (Moscow, 28 June);(3) the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (thirty-seventh session, Berlin, 18-20 October);(4) and the Committee of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Warsaw Treaty of Friendship, Co-operation and Mutual Assistance (Sofia, Bulgaria, 13 and 14 October).(5) The Assembly also received the text of a letter in support of disarmament, sent by the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress of China to the Senate of the Congress of the Union of the United Mexican States.(6)

A number of other letters circulated under the item on general and complete disarmament also dealt with the Assembly's annual review of its 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security (see Chapter IV of this section).

Proposed comprehensive programme

Agreement on a comprehensive programme of disarmament was not reached in 1983 despite additional efforts by the Committee on Disarmament to try to elaborate a text. The programme—envisaged in paragraph 109 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly(7) in 1978—had been considered annually by the Committee since 1980. However, it was unable to submit an agreed text to the Assembly's 1982 second special session on disarmament and the Assembly itself, unable to reach a consensus at that session, referred the matter back to the Committee, requesting it to submit a revised draft in 1983.(8)

Consideration by the Committee on Disarmament. The Ad Hoc Working Group on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament, which had been re-established by the Committee on Disarmament in 1982 at the Assembly's request,(9) held 12 meetings between 16 February and 19 August 1983 under the chairmanship of Alfonso García Robles (Mexico). It set up contact groups to elaborate the various sections of the programme dealing with objectives, principles, priorities, measures and stages of implementation, and machinery and procedures. In addition, informal consultations were held during June, July and August.

Differences of view persisted, however, and in the time available the Working Group was not able to consider the introduction, nor the questions of stages of implementation, time-frames, and the nature of the programme. In a number of areas where it was not possible to agree on new formulations, language similar to that of relevant paragraphs of the 1978 Final Document was used. The resulting texts were annexed to the Working Group's report, with those of a number of paragraphs left pending and the inclusion or placement of others to be decided later.

On 23 August, prior to the Committee's adoption of the Group's report, the Group's Chairman described the proposed programme as much less ambitious than the 1982 draft, but potentially as helpful to Governments in enabling them to gain a clear idea from a text entirely free of brackets marking passages on which consensus could not be reached—of the most that could currently be aspired to. He suggested that the Assembly could choose either to adopt the text in 1983 or to return it to the Committee; in the latter case, he said, it would be unrealistic to expect any reasonable prospect of success within less than three years.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December 1983, adopted without vote resolution 38/182 K.

Comprehensive programme of disarmament

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the Ad Hoc 'Working Group on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament, which is an integral part of the report of the Committee on Disarmament on its 1983 session,

Welcoming the progress achieved in the preparation of the programme during the period covered by the report,

Noting, however, that it has not yet been possible to complete the elaboration of a comprehensive programme which, as provided for in paragraph 109 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, should encompass all measures thought to be advisable in order to ensure that the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control becomes a reality in a world in which international peace and security prevail and in which the new international economic order is strengthened and consolidated,

1. Urges the Conference on Disarmament, as soon as it considers that the circumstances are propitious for that purpose, to renew its work on the elaboration of the comprehensive programme of disarmament previously requested, to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a progress report on the matter and to submit to the Assembly, not later than at its forty-first session, a complete draft of such a programme;

2. Decides to consider at its thirty-ninth session, in the light of the above-mentioned progress report, the advisability of requesting the Disarmament Commission to examine the question further and to make appropriate recommendations to the General Assembly.

20 December 1983 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/38/628) without vote, 25 November (meeting 41); 10-nation draft (A/C.1/38/L.31/Rev.1); agenda item 50.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 1st Committee 3-10, 12-31, 34, 35, 41; plenary 103

The text was based on a draft originally submitted by nine countries, to which Brazil(10) proposed adding a paragraph entrusting the Disarmament Commission, without prejudice to paragraph 1, with the examination in 1984 of approaches that could facilitate progress towards elaborating the programme. Subsequently, Brazil withdrew its amendment and joined the sponsors in the revised text which was approved by the First Committee.

Committee on Disarmament

Activities of the Committee. The 40-member Committee on Disarmament—the main multilateral negotiating body on the subject—met in 1983 at Geneva from 1 February to 29 April and from 14 June to 30 August.(11) Holding 50 formal and 27 informal plenary meetings, it considered in addition to the proposed comprehensive programme of disarmament (see above)—a nuclear-test ban, cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States, chemical weapons, new types of weapons of mass destruction, and the prevention of an arms race in outer space. Details on developments on these questions during the year can be found elsewhere in this chapter.

On 29 March, the Committee re-established four ad hoc working groups: three, first set up in 1980, on security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States, chemical weapons, and radiological weapons, and a fourth, established in 1982, on a nuclear-test ban.

The Committee accepted, in principle, a limited expansion of its membership, by not more than four States, subject to its agreement on the selection of new members and taking into account the need to maintain balance. Its Chairman was to hold consultations on the selection before the Committee reported to the General Assembly in 1984.

The Committee, taking into account a December 1982 Assembly suggestion,(12) decided to designate itself as the “Conference on Disarmament”, effective from commencement of its 1984 annual session. This involved no financial or structural implications and the Committee’s rules of procedure remained the same, except for the change of name.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted, by recorded vote, resolution 38/183 I, as recommended by the First Committee.

Report of the Committee on Disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/83 B of 11 December 1979, 35/152 J of 12 December 1980, 36/92 F of 9 December

1981 and 37/78 G of 9 December 1982,

Recalling also the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, and the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Disarmament,

Convinced that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral negotiating body on disarmament, should play the central role in substantive negotiations on priority questions of disarmament and on the implementation of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

Reaffirming that the establishment of ad hoc working groups offers the best available machinery for the conduct of multilateral negotiations on items on the agenda of the Conference on Disarmament and contributes to the strengthening of the negotiating role of the Conference,

Deploping the fact that, despite repeated requests by the General Assembly and the express wish of the great majority of members of the Committee on Disarmament, the establishment of an ad hoc working group to undertake multilateral negotiations on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and on nuclear disarmament was once again prevented during the session of the Committee in 1983,

Regretting that the Committee on Disarmament has also not been enabled to set up ad hoc working groups for negotiations on the prevention of nuclear war and on the prevention of the arms race in outer space, nor to entrust its Ad Hoc Working Group under item 1 of its agenda, entitled “Nuclear-test ban”, with a new mandate enabling it to undertake substantive negotiations on this question as soon as possible,

Stressing that negotiations on specific disarmament issues conducted outside the Conference on Disarmament should in no way serve as a pretext for preventing the conduct of multilateral negotiations on such questions in the Conference,

1. Expresses its deep concern and disappointment that the Committee on Disarmament has not been enabled, this year either, to reach concrete agreements on disarmament issues to which the United Nations has assigned greatest priority and urgency and which have been under consideration for a number of years;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its work, so as to make the utmost effort to achieve concrete results in the shortest possible period of time on the specific priority issues of disarmament on its agenda;

3. Once again urges the Conference on Disarmament to continue or to undertake, during its session to be held in 1984, substantive negotiations on the priority questions of disarmament on its agenda, in accordance with the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and other relevant resolutions of the Assembly on those questions, and, in order to reach that goal, to provide the existing ad hoc working groups with appropriate negotiating mandates and to establish, as a matter of urgency, the ad hoc working groups on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, on the prevention of nuclear war and on the prevention of an arms race in outer space;

4. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to undertake, without further delay, the elaboration of a draft international treaty on a nuclear-weapon test ban and to submit a progress report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

5. Also urges the Conference on Disarmament to accelerate its work on the elaboration of a draft international convention on the complete and effective prohibition of all chemical weapons and on their destruction and to submit the preliminary draft of such a convention to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

6. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to organize its work in such a way as to concentrate most of its attention and time on substantive negotiations on priority issues of disarmament;

7. Calls upon the members of the Conference on Disarmament that have opposed the negotiation on some substantive issues of disarmament to enable the Conference, by adopting a positive stand, to fulfil effectively the mandate that the international community has entrusted to it in the field of negotiations on disarmament;

8. Invites the members of the Conference on Disarmament involved in separate negotiations on specific priority questions of disarmament to intensify their efforts in order to achieve a positive conclusion of those negotiations without further delay and to submit to the Conference a full report on their separate negotiations and the results achieved in order to contribute most directly to the negotiations in the Conference, in accordance with paragraph 3 above;

9. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Report of the Conference on Disarmament".

20 December 1983 Meeting 103 129-2-18 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/38/628) by recorded vote 1104+2-19, 25 November (meeting 40); 27-nation draft (A/C.1/38/L.27); agenda item 50 (b).

In explanation of vote on the text, Australia, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States said the sponsors had not made an attempt to negotiate to make it more generally acceptable, nor shown willingness to respect the views of others. For the United Kingdom, the draft expressed partisan views of the sponsors and the language had become even more objectionable than in the past. Sharing that view, the United States said that the text, instead of reflecting the consensus on the report within the Committee on Disarmament, sought to rewrite it, thus distorting the picture of the work of that body and establishing an unacceptable precedent.

Belgium added that the text gave the impression that the Assembly need only give majority instructions to such a committee in order to produce results; moreover, the sponsors had made no contribution to the Committee on Disarmament, while suggesting that a convention be drafted on a nuclear-test ban. Australia and the Netherlands regretted the resolution's call for a "nuclear-weapon test ban", which departed from the Committee's terminology, "nuclear-test ban".

In 1983, the Assembly adopted a number of other resolutions concerning the Conference on Disarmament (as the Committee on Disarmament would be known in 1984). By resolution 38/183 H, it called on the Conference to start negotiations on nuclear disarmament and on preventing nuclear war, and to elaborate, among others, a draft treaty on a nuclear-weapon test ban. In addition, the Assembly called on the Conference to take up specific topics, in the following resolutions: 38/183 K, on a proposed comprehensive programme of disarmament; 38/183 D, on a proposed working group on nuclear disarmament; 38/73 G, on a draft convention against nuclear weapons; 38/183 G, on preventing nuclear war; 38/62, 38/63 and 38/72, on negotiating a treaty to prohibit nuclear-weapon tests; 38/188 E, on prohibiting production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons; 38/67, on a draft convention on security of non-nuclear-weapon States; 38/183 C, on proposed negotiations to prohibit neutron bombs; 38/70, on the arms race in outer space and anti-satellite systems; 38/80, on outer space; 38/182, on prohibiting new weapons of mass destruction; and 38/187 A and B, on prohibiting chemical weapons.

Disarmament Commission

Disarmament Commission activities. The Disarmament Commission; composed of all United Nations Member States, held its 1983 session from 9 May to 3 June at United Nations Headquarters. (13) It also met on 1 December to organize its work and elect officers for 1984.

Its agenda included items on aspects of the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race; reduction of military budgets and expenditures; South Africa's nuclear capability; follow-up to the 1982 recommendations of the Independent Commission on Disarmament and Security Issues;(4) and guidelines for confidence-building measures. Details on the Commission's discussion of these questions can be found elsewhere in this chapter.

The Commission established informal, open-ended working groups for all these questions except that on aspects of the arms race, for which a Committee of the Whole was established; the Committee subsequently established a contact group on the item to report back to it.

Meeting between 24 May and 1 June, the contact group considered working papers submitted by the Commission Chairman, the German Democratic Republic, the non-aligned countries and Mexico, and letters from the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany and the USSR, but was unable to achieve consensus on a set of recommendations for submission to the Committee and subsequently to the Commission.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December, adopted without vote resolution 38/183 E.

Report of the Disarmament Commission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Disarmament Commission,

Emphasizing again the importance of an effective follow-up to the relevant recommendations and decisions contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Taking into account the relevant sections of the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Considering the important role that the Disarmament Commission has played and the significant contribution that it has made in examining and submitting recommendations on various problems in the field of disarmament and in the promotion of the implementation of the relevant decisions of the tenth special session,

Desirous of strengthening the effectiveness of the Disarmament Commission as the deliberative body in the field of disarmament,

Recalling its resolutions 33/71 H of 14 December 1978, 34/83 H of 11 December 1979, 35/152 F of 12 December 1980, 36/92 B of 9 December 1981 and 37/78 H of 9 December 1982,

1. Takes note of the report of the Disarmament Commission;

2. Notes that the Disarmament Commission has vet to conclude its consideration of some items on its agenda;

3. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue its work in accordance with its mandate, as set forth in paragraph 118 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and with paragraph 3 of resolution 37/78 H, and to that end to make every effort to achieve specific recommendations, at its 1984 substantive session, on the outstanding items on its agenda, taking into account the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly as well as the results of its 1983 session;

4. Requests the Disarmament Commission to meet for a period not exceeding four weeks during 1984 and to submit a substantive report, containing specific recommendations on the items inscribed on its agenda, to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Disarmament Commission the report of the Committee on Disarmament on the work of its 1983 session, together with all the official records of the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly relating to disarmament matters, and to render all assistance that the Commission may require for implementing the present resolution;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Report of the Disarmament Commission".

20 December 1983 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/38/5628) without vote, 21 November (meeting 34); 9-nation draft (A/C.1/38/L. 14); agenda item 50 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 1st Committee 3-10, 12-31, 34; plenary 103.

In another 20 December resolution (38/183 H), on implementation of the recommendations of the 1978 special session on disarmament, the Assembly called on the Commission to intensify its work with a view to making recommendations on specific items on its agenda. In addition, the Assembly instructed the Commission on specific topics, in the following resolutions: 38/73 A, on confidence-building measures; 38/184 A, on reducing military budgets; and 38/71 B, on disarmament and development.

Special sessions of the General Assembly on disarmament

In 1983, the General Assembly adopted resolutions dealing with its special sessions devoted to disarmament—its first, held in 1978,(15) its second in 1982,(16) and the holding of a third one.

Implementation of the recommendations of the 1978 special session

Sixteen resolutions were adopted by the General Assembly in 1983 on implementation of the recommendations and decisions which had been adopted, in 1978, at its tenth special session—its first such session devoted to disarmament. They were on: bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations between the USSR and the United States (38/183 A, N and P), the non-use of nuclear weapons (38/183 B), prohibiting neutron bombs (38/183 C), nuclear weapons (38/183 D), the work of the Committee on Disarmament (38/183 I) and the Disarmament Commission (38/183 E), international co-operation for disarmament (38/183 F), preventing nuclear war (38/183 G), implementation of the recommendations of the 1978 special session (38/183 H, see below), unilateral disarmament measures (38/183 J), a proposed comprehensive disarmament programme (38/183 K), Disarmament Week (38/183 L), reports by nuclear-weapon States on implementing the 1978 recommendations (38/183 M), and the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies (38/183 O). Details on these topics can be found in this chapter.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December 1983, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/183 H.

Implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session

The General Assembly,

Having reviewed the implementation of the recommendations and decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, as well as the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling its resolutions S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 34/83 C of 11 December 1979, 35/46 of 3 December 1980, 35/152 E of 12 December 1980, 36/92 M of 9 December 1981 and 37/78 F of 9 December 1982 and its decision S-12/24 of 10 July 1982,

Deeply concerned that no concrete results regarding the implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session have been realized in the course of more than five years since that session, that in the mean time the arms race, particularly in its nuclear aspect, has gained in intensity, that urgent measures to prevent nuclear war and for disarmament have not been adopted and that continued colonial domination and foreign occupation, open threats, pressure and military intervention against independent States and violation of the fundamental principles of the Charter of the United Nations have taken place, posing the most serious threat to international peace and security,

Convinced that the renewed escalation of the nuclear-arms race, in both the quantitative and the qualitative dimensions, as well as reliance on doctrines of nuclear deterrence and of use of nuclear weapons, has heightened the risk of the outbreak of nuclear war and led to greater insecurity and instability in international relations,

Further convinced that international peace and security can only be ensured through general and complete disarmament under effective international control and that one of the most urgent tasks is to halt and reverse the arms race and to undertake concrete measures of disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament, and that, in this respect, the nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States have the primary responsibility,

Noting with great concern that no real progress in disarmament negotiations has been achieved for several years, which has rendered the current international situation even more dangerous and insecure, and that negotiations on disarmament issues are lagging far behind the rapid technological development in the field of armaments and the relentless growth of military arsenals, particularly nuclear arsenals,

Recalling the commitment of States undertaken in various international agreements to negotiate on disarmament measures, in particular on nuclear disarmament,

Considering that it is more than ever imperative in the present circumstances to give a new impetus to negotiations in good faith on disarmament, in particular nuclear disarmament, at all levels and to achieve genuine progress in the immediate future,

Convinced that the success of disarmament negotiations, in which all the people of the world have a vital interest, can be achieved through the active participation of Member States in such negotiations, contributing thereby to the maintenance of international peace and security,

Reaffirming that the United Nations has a central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament,

Stressing that the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, which was unanimously and categorically reaffirmed by all Member States at the twelfth special session as the comprehensive basis for efforts towards halting and reversing the arms race, has retained all its validity and that the objectives and measures contained therein still represent one of the most important and urgent goals to be achieved,

1. Expresses its grave concern over the acceleration and intensification of the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race, as well as the new, very serious deterioration of relations in the world, and the intensification of focal points of aggression and hotbeds of tension in different regions of the world, which threaten international peace and security and increase the danger of outbreak of nuclear war;

2. Calls upon all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, to take urgent measures in order to put an end to the serious aggravation of the international situation, to promote international security on the basis of disarmament, to halt and reverse the arms race and to launch a process of genuine disarmament;

3. Invites all States, particularly nuclear-weapon States and especially those among them which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, to take urgent measures with a view to implementing the recommendations and decisions contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, as well as to fulfilling the priority tasks set forth in the Programme of Action contained in section III of the Final Document;

4. Calls upon all States to refrain from any actions which have or may have negative effects on the outcome of disarmament negotiations;

5. Once again calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to concentrate its work on the substantive and priority items on its agenda, to proceed to negotiations on nuclear disarmament and on the prevention of nuclear war without further delay and to elaborate drafts of treaties on a nuclear-weapon test ban and on a complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction;

6. Calls upon the Disarmament Commission to intensify its work in accordance with its mandate and to continue improving its work with a view to making concrete recommendations on specific items on its agenda;

7. Calls upon nuclear-weapon States engaged in separate negotiations on issues of nuclear disarmament to exert the utmost effort with a view to achieving concrete results in those negotiations and thus contribute to the success of multilateral negotiations on nuclear disarmament;

8. Invites all States engaged in disarmament and arms limitation negotiations outside the framework of the United Nations to keep the General Assembly and the Conference on Disarmament informed on the status or results of such negotiations, in conformity with the relevant provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session".

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium,^a Israel, Italy,^a Japan, New Zealand, Norway, Spain.

^aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote against.

In explanation of vote on the draft, the United Kingdom said the text reflected not a consensus view but partisan opinions of the sponsors, and the resolution's language had become more extreme than in the past. Australia said that a nuclear-weapon test ban, which the text called for, was far more limited in scope than a comprehensive nuclear-test ban, which it favoured.

Implementation of the recommendations of the 1982 special session

In 1983, the General Assembly adopted 10 resolutions on implementation of the recommendations of its 1982 special session on disarmament. They were on: a third special session on disarmament (38/73 I, see below), a nuclear-weapons freeze (38/73 B and E), regional disarmament (38/73 J), confidence-building measures (38/73 A), disarmament and international security (38/73 H), a draft convention against nuclear weapons (38/73 G), the United Nations fellowships programme on disarmament (38/73 C), and the World Disarmament Campaign (38/73 D and F). Details on these topics can be found in this chapter.

Third special session

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

As recommended by the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 15 December 1983, adopted resolution 38/73 I without vote.

Convening of the third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the decision adopted at its twelfth special session to set, during its thirty-eighth session, the date of the third special session devoted to disarmament,

Desiring to contribute to the furthering and broadening of positive processes initiated through the laying down of the foundations of an international disarmament strategy at its tenth special session,

1. Decides that the third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament should be held not later than 1988;

2. Decides also to set, not later than at its fortieth session, the date of the third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament and to make appropriate arrangements concerning the establishment of a preparatory committee for that third special session.

Implementation of the 1979 Declaration on co-operation for disarmament

In 1983, the General Assembly again called for implementation of its 1979 Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament.⁽¹⁷⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December 1983, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/183 F.

International co-operation for disarmament
The General Assembly,

stressing again the urgent need for an active and sustained effort to intensify the implementation of the recommendations and decisions unanimously adopted at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, as contained in the Final Document of that session and confirmed in the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling the Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament of 11 December 1979 and General Assembly resolutions 36/92 D of 9 December 1981 and 37/78 B of 9 December 1982,

Deeply concerned over the growing danger of nuclear war, the continued arms race and the danger of a further, qualitatively new round of the arms race, all of which will have a very negative impact on the international situation,

Stressing the vital importance of eliminating the danger of nuclear war, halting the nuclear-arms race and attaining disarmament, particularly in the nuclear field, for the preservation of peace and the strengthening of international security,

Bearing in mind the vital interest of all nations in the attainment of effective disarmament measures, which would release considerable financial and material resources to be used for the economic and social development of all States, in particular developing countries,

Considering the increased activity of peace and anti-war movements against the arms race and the escalation of the danger of nuclear war,

Convinced of the need to strengthen constructive international co-operation based on the political goodwill of States for successful negotiations on disarmament, in accordance with the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

Emphasizing the duty of States to co-operate for the preservation of international peace and security, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, as confirmed in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, of 24 October 1970, the obligation to co-operate actively and constructively for the attainment of the aims of disarmament being an indispensable part of that duty,

Expressing the conviction that concrete manifestations of political goodwill, including unilateral measures, such as an obligation not to make first use of nuclear weapons, improve conditions for resolving disarmament issues in a spirit of co-operation among States,

Stressing that proposals, relatively simple in their execution and at the same time effective, such as the proposals aimed at eliminating the use of force, be it on a world-wide or regional scale, contribute considerably to that end,

Bearing in mind that the United Nations bears primary responsibility and plays a central role in unifying efforts to maintain and to develop active co-operation among States in order to resolve the issues of disarmament,

1. Calls upon all States, in implementing the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, to make active use of the principles and ideas contained in the Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament by actively participating in disarmament negotiations, with a view to achieving concrete results, and by conducting them on the basis of equality and undiminished security and the non-use of force in international relations, and to refrain at the same time from developing new directions and channels of the arms race;

2. Stresses the importance of strengthening the effectiveness of the United Nations in fulfilling its responsibility for maintaining international peace and security in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Declares in this context that the elaboration and dissemination of any doctrines and concepts justifying the unleashing of nuclear war endanger world peace, lead to deterioration of the international situation and further intensification of the arms race and are detrimental to the generally recognized necessity of international co-operation for disarmament;

4. Declares that the use of force in international relations as well as in attempts to prevent the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples is a phenomenon incompatible with the ideas of international co-operation for disarmament;

5. Appeals to States which are members of military groupings to promote, on the basis of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session, in the spirit of international co-operation for disarmament, the gradual mutual limitation of military activities of these groupings, thus creating conditions for their dissolution;

6. Calls upon all Member States to cultivate and disseminate, particularly in connection with the World Disarmament Campaign launched by the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the ideas of international co-operation for disarmament, inter alia, through their educational systems, mass media and cultural policies;

7. Calls upon the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to continue to consider, in order further to mobilize world public opinion on behalf of disarmament, measures aimed at strengthening the ideas of international co-operation for disarmament through research, education, information, communication and culture;

8. Calls upon the Governments of all States to contribute substantially, while observing the principle of undiminished security, to halting and reversing the arms race, particularly in the nuclear field, and thus to reducing the danger of nuclear war.

Disarmament negotiations

The General Assembly emphasized the importance of disarmament negotiations in a number of 1983 resolutions, among them 38/183 F, on implementing the 1979 Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament(17) (see above); 38/183 H and M, on implementing recommendations of its 1978 disarmament special session;(15) and 38/190, on implementing the 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security.(18)

Areas of ongoing and proposed negotiations, covered elsewhere in this chapter, concerned: nuclear disarmament, USSR-United States negotiations, nuclear-war prevention, a draft convention against nuclear weapons, proposed negotiations to prohibit neutron bombs, negotiations for a treaty against nuclear-weapon tests, international security of non-nuclear-weapon States, a draft convention on chemical weapons, radiological weapons, new weapons of mass destruction, naval armaments, and the arms race in outer space and anti-satellite systems.

At the 1983 Assembly session, the German Democratic Republic submitted, and later withdrew, a draft resolution entitled "Obligation of States to contribute to effective disarmament negotiations ", (19) which, among other things, would have had the Assembly urge all States, particularly the nuclear-weapon and other militarily significant States, to intensify their efforts to conclude successfully the negotiations under way in the Committee on Disarmament and other international forums, to resume suspended negotiations and to start new ones on effective international disarmament agreements.

Nuclear weapons

Nuclear disarmament

During 1983, the question of nuclear-arms limitation and disarmament was actively debated in the Committee on Disarmament, the Disarmament Commission and the General Assembly.

By year's end, the Treaty, known as SALT II (a treaty between the United States and the USSR on limiting strategic offensive arms), which had emerged from the second phase of the strategic arms limitation talks between the two States (1972-1979), had not entered into force, while further bilateral negotiations between them had been suspended.

Concern over the possibility of war, specifically the threat of nuclear conflict, was a recurrent theme in numerous resolutions adopted by the Assembly in 1983; their texts can be found in this subchapter.

Activities of the Committee on Disarmament. The Committee on Disarmament,(1) at its 1983 session, did not reach consensus on the establishment of ad hoc working groups for negotiations on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, despite proposals to that effect by the group of 21 (the non-aligned and neutral States within the Committee-Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Burma, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire), the group of socialist States members of the Committee (Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, USSR), and some States individually. A group of socialist States had also proposed the setting up of an ad hoc working group on the nuclear neutron weapon. Others, among them Western European countries, considered it preferable, in the existing circumstances, to have substantive informal discussions in the Committee.

In the Committee debate, a number of delegations deplored that the single multilateral negotiating body on disarmament was unable to establish a working group to initiate negotiations due to the opposition of certain nuclear-weapon States and their allies which based their security policy on the possible use of nuclear weapons. These delegations maintained that past experience had shown that exchanges of views in the Committee would not promote the search for a common approach that would enable the Committee to fulfil its negotiating role. Other delegations considered informal meetings to be the most appropriate vehicle to determine such a common approach. A large number of delegations stated that the security perceptions of some States could not be used as an excuse for opposing the establishment of an ad hoc working group on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament.

Disarmament Commission activities. At its 1983 session, following a general exchange of views on the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, the Committee of the Whole of the Disarmament Commission(2) established on 20 May an open-ended contact group, which held 10 meetings between 24 May and 1 June.

The contact group examined a number of working papers submitted to it, choosing as the basis for its drafting work a proposal by the non-aligned group, which contained recommendations dealing with, among other things, a nuclear-weapon test-ban treaty, non-use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, declarations by nuclear-weapon States on non-first-use of such weapons, security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States and the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones. It also considered a working paper prepared by the Commission Chairman, who suggested that the Commission should adopt concrete recommendations on specific subjects, rather than remain on the level of generality as in previous years. The Commission also had before it working papers by the German Democratic Republic, Mexico and the United Kingdom.

As it was unable to achieve consensus on a set of recommendations for submission to the Committee of the Whole, the contact group suggested continued consideration of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament at the Commission's 1984 session with a view to the formulation of concrete recommendations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/183 M, the draft of which had been recommended by the First Committee.

Implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in particular the following:

- (a) That nuclear weapons pose the greatest danger to mankind and to the survival of civilization,
- (b) That it is essential to halt and reverse the nuclear-arms race in all its aspects in order to avert the danger of war involving nuclear weapons,
- (c) That removing the threat of a world war---a nuclear war-is the most acute and urgent task of the present day,
- (d) That while disarmament is the responsibility of all States, the nuclear-weapon States have the primary responsibility for nuclear disarmament,

(e) That the most effective guarantee against the danger of nuclear war and the use of nuclear weapons is nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

(f) That pending the achievement of this goal, the nuclear-weapon States have special responsibilities to undertake measures aimed at preventing the outbreak of nuclear war,

(g) That, in the task of achieving the goals of nuclear disarmament, all the nuclear-weapon States, in particular those among them which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, bear a special responsibility, Deeply regretting that the nuclear-arms race has not yet been halted and that the danger of nuclear war has been increasing,

Gravely concerned over the risks of nuclear war inherent in the present world situation,

1. Solemnly reaffirms the special responsibilities of the nuclear-weapon States for nuclear disarmament and for undertaking measures to prevent nuclear war and to halt the nuclear-arms race in all its aspects;

2. Solemnly reaffirms the vital interest of all the peoples of the world in the success of disarmament negotiations and the consequent duty of all States to contribute to efforts in the field of disarmament;

3. Solemnly reaffirms the central role and primary responsibility of the United Nations in the sphere of disarmament;

4. Requests the nuclear-weapon States to submit to the General Assembly annual reports on the measures and steps taken by them, jointly or individually, in the discharge of the special responsibilities incumbent upon them for the prevention of nuclear war and for halting and reversing the nuclear-arms race.

20 December 1983 Meeting 103 133-1-14 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/38/628) by recorded vote (109-1-15), 23 November (meeting 39); 8-nation draft (A/C.1/38/L.38); agenda item 50 (g).

Sponsors: Argentina, Austria, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Indonesia, Pakistan, Uruguay.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamhuriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, China, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom.

Speaking in explanation of vote on the text, Australia said it interpreted subparagraph (b) in the preamble as pertaining to both vertical and horizontal proliferation; in that regard, it regretted that the text had selectively quoted paragraph 20 of the 1978 Final Document. It saw paragraph 3 as allowing States to negotiate freely between themselves, and paragraph 4 as merely requesting the international community to be kept broadly informed. India, sharing the beliefs expressed in paragraphs 2 and 3, said the text rightly placed the onus for nuclear disarmament on the nuclear-weapon States. Mongolia viewed the result of the vote as an indication that the majority of nations were committed to the consideration of preventing nuclear war and achieving nuclear disarmament and to drafting international legal instruments on those issues. Oman expressed support for all efforts aimed at preventing nuclear war.

Other 1983 Assembly resolutions containing recommendations to nuclear-weapon States included: 38/63, on nuclear-weapon tests; 38/64, on a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East; 38/67, on security of non-nuclear-weapon States; 38/73 B, 38/73 E and 38/76, on a nuclear-weapon freeze; 38/183 H, on implementing the recommendations of the 1978 special session; 38/186, on a proposed World Disarmament Conference; and 38/188 F, on naval armaments. Details on these topics can be found elsewhere in the chapter.

USSR-United States negotiations

At the end of 1983, the SALT II Treaty, concluded between the USSR and the United States on 18 June 1979 at Vienna, Austria, had not entered into force, although each party had agreed to adhere to its substantive provisions as long as the other reciprocated. Two further sets of bilateral negotiations, conducted at Geneva, were suspended towards the end of 1983—one on the limitation and reduction of strategic arms, which had begun in June 1982, and the other on intermediate-range systems, which had commenced in November 1981.

As a follow-up to a 1982 General Assembly resolution on the item on implementation of the recommendations of the 1978 special session on disarmament(3), the Secretary-General, in November 1983,(4) transmitted to the Assembly a communication dated 26 October by the USSR concerning disarmament and arms limitation negotiations conducted outside the United Nations framework.

Between August and November, the Secretary-General also received a number of letters dealing with the USSR-United States negotiations in Geneva.

On 31 August,(5) Romania transmitted messages its President had sent on 21 August to the General Secretary of the USSR and to the President of the United States, containing proposals it deemed conducive to the success of the negotiations. Austria transmitted, on 28 October,(6) an appeal it had adopted on 18 October, urging the two parties to reach a political consensus on the basic elements of an agreement on intermediate-range weapons before the time allocated for the talks expired. The USSR transmitted on 28 October(7) an interview its General Secretary had given to the USSR newspaper Pravda on the status of the Geneva talks.

Bulgaria transmitted on 17 November(8) an appeal made on 10 November at Sofia by the member States of the Warsaw Treaty Organization to the States participants in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (November 1980-September 1983), expressing concern over the anticipated United States deployment of nuclear missiles in Europe. Romania transmitted on 22 November(9) a statement made by its President before its Grand National Assembly on 16 November, containing a peace appeal addressed to the parliaments of European States, the United States and Canada in the face of the new missile deployment.

On 25 November,(10) however, the USSR transmitted a statement made the previous day by its General Secretary, declaring that the United States deployment of medium-range missiles in the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and the United Kingdom-rendered impossible further USSR participation in the talks. It thereby announced: cancellation of the moratorium on the deployment of its medium-range nuclear weapons in the European part of its territory; acceleration of the deployment of increased-range operational-tactical missiles in Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic; and that, as the United States increased the nuclear threat, corresponding USSR weapons would be deployed in ocean areas.

Bulgaria transmitted on 28 November(11) a declaration by its Government, asserting that the member States of the Warsaw Treaty Organization were forced to respond to the new situation created by the United States action, and calling for mutually acceptable nuclear disarmament agreements in Europe.

Romania transmitted on 29 November(12) a declaration of 25 November, calling on the USSR and the United States to halt the new missile deployment, resume negotiations, convene a summit meeting preceded by a meeting at the Foreign Minister level, and hold consultative meetings of the members of the Warsaw Treaty Organization and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY CONSIDERATION

Of the 26 resolutions the General Assembly adopted on nuclear questions in 1983, three focused on USSR-United States bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations (see below).

A fourth text on the bilateral negotiations,⁽¹³⁾ approved by the First Committee on 22 November by a recorded vote of 65 to 19, with 10 abstentions, was not put to a vote in the Assembly at the request of Bulgaria for the sponsors (Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland, Viet Nam). That text would have had the Assembly call on the States parties to the bilateral talks to achieve as soon as possible equitable agreement which would provide for the non-deployment of new medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe and for a reduction in the existing nuclear systems of such range without prejudice to anyone's security.

In withdrawing the text on 20 December, Bulgaria stated that the conditions prevailing at the time of the Committee action had subsequently changed radically due to the deployment of new missiles in Western Europe and the suspension of the Geneva talks. The German Democratic Republic stated that the new United States missile deployment had taken away the basis for bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations and had also affected other negotiations and the international situation.

Stating that the emplacement of the United States missiles had removed the possibility of a mutually acceptable agreement at Geneva, the USSR expressed support for the Bulgarian proposal not to vote on the draft submitted by the socialist States.

The United Kingdom expressed doubts about the procedural implications of the Bulgarian proposal, and said that it did not understand which new development was supposed to have rendered the text inappropriate for the Assembly's adoption, since the only intervening event had been the USSR's withdrawal from the bilateral negotiations, while the other party had made perfectly clear its willingness to continue. The United States saw no need to insist on voting on the text, as it did not consider that draft particularly useful; other resolutions expressed better the need for negotiation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1983, the General Assembly adopted three resolutions (38/183 A, N and P), all of which had been recommended by the First Committee, on the bilateral negotiations.

It adopted resolution 38/183 A by recorded vote.

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the possibility of the deployment of new medium-range missiles in Europe and about the development of those already in existence on that continent,

Profoundly alarmed that the bilateral negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America commenced at Geneva on 30 November 1981 have not so far reached results to meet the expectations of peoples,

Deeply concerned that the failure of those negotiations could lead to a significant new escalation in the spiralling arms competition in Europe and in the world, thereby gravely endangering international peace and security,

Firmly convinced that an early successful conclusion of those negotiations by reaching an appropriate agreement, in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest possible level of armament and military forces, would have crucial importance for the strengthening of international peace and security and for the reduction of the risk of nuclear war,

Convinced also that through negotiations, pursued in a spirit of flexibility and responsibility for the security interests of all peoples, it is still possible to reach an agreement,

1. Urges the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America to make every effort to reach an agreement at their bilateral negotiations at Geneva, or at least to agree on a provisional basis that no medium-range missiles be deployed and the number of the existing ones be reduced, while the negotiations would continue in order to achieve positive results in conformity with the security interests of all States;

2. Calls upon all European States as well as all interested States to do their utmost in order to assist the process of negotiation and promote its successful conclusion;

3. Calls upon all States to do their utmost in order to bring the arms race to a halt and to proceed to disarmament, and first of all to nuclear disarmament, as well as to contribute to the relaxation of international tension and to the resumption of the policy of détente, co-operation and respect for the national independence of all peoples;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements to transmit the content of the present appeal to the Governments of all States.

Approved by First Committee (A/38/628) by recorded vote (64-31-21), 22 November (meeting 37); draft by Romania (A/C.1/38/L.3/Rev.2), orally revised; agenda item 50 (c).

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burundi, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Ghana, Greece, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe

Against: Afghanistan, Australia, Belgium, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Hungary, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Luxembourg, Mongolia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Viet Nam.

Abstaining: Angola, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Burma, Chad, Chile, Cambodia, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, India, Ivory Coast, Lebanon, Mauritius, Morocco, Nepal, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Senegal, Spain, Suriname, Swaziland, United Republic of Cameroon, Uruguay.

Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Benin, Egypt, Finland, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Rwanda, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Sweden, Tunisia, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zaire indicated that their support for the draft was based mainly on their belief in the need for the negotiations to continue, with a view to seeking meaningful agreement. Some of them, in particular Argentina, Finland and Sri Lanka, added that their vote did not imply taking a position with regard to specific stands on the substance of the bilateral negotiations. Similarly, Mexico stressed that its vote should not be taken as total approval of the text. Along with Sri Lanka, it took a similar position regarding the other drafts on the subject. Venezuela thought that the draft took into consideration the security interests of all the parties concerned in a balanced manner. Peru also viewed it as being balanced, and Algeria thought that it responded to the desires expressed by nearly all States.

Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway and Portugal opposed paragraph 1, saying that it contained the idea of postponing deployment of missiles on the Western side while existing USSR SS-20 missiles would continue to be pointed at Western Europe. That implied, as stated by the Federal Republic of Germany, that negotiations could go on indefinitely, with no incentive for the USSR to alter the situation. Similarly, Italy stated that to advocate a moratorium was tantamount to rewarding the fait accompli of the USSR nuclear buildup. Australia felt the text was unbalanced and not likely to enhance the prospect of success of the negotiations.

Austria said that, while it believed that the international community should remind, with one voice, the USSR and the United States of their special responsibilities and urge them to facilitate the successful conclusion of the Geneva talks, the basic political antagonisms between the two had overshadowed all the drafts. India felt that there was lack of clarity in the Romanian draft, which became resolution 38/183 A. The Bahamas, commenting on its abstention on all drafts relating to bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations, stressed that failure to elaborate one single consensus text called into serious doubt the commitment of Member States on the question. Nepal, while supporting the call for unconditional negotiations, did not wish to align itself with any specific position. Similarly, Spain had doubts about the suitability of setting forth guidelines for the behaviour of the negotiating parties.

China explained that its decision not to participate in the vote did not mean that it was not interested in the negotiations; however, after nearly two years, they had not brought about reductions but had aggravated the nuclear-arms race and increased tensions and were, themselves, in a state of crisis. Albania, which did not participate in the vote on any of the drafts on bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations, also stressed that that was not a sign of its lack of interest, but a way to underscore the fact that, while the super-Powers emphasized their concern over disarmament, it was deeds that mattered.

(See also the explanations of vote following resolutions 38/183 N and P, below.)

The Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/183 N, as recommended by the First Committee.

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations

The General Assembly,

Recalling that at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, it approved by consensus a Declaration, contained in section II of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which, inter alia, it proclaimed that, in order effectively to discharge the central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament which belong to the United Nations in accordance with its Charter, the United Nations should be kept appropriately informed of all steps in this field, whether unilateral, bilateral, regional or multilateral, without prejudice to the progress of negotiations,

Recalling also that at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, Member States reiterated their solemn commitment to implement the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session, the validity of which received their unanimous and categorical reaffirmation,

Noting that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America have been continuing at Geneva the two series of bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations begun on 30 November 1981 and 29 June 1982 respectively,

Noting with satisfaction that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics has already submitted the report requested in General Assembly resolution 37/78 A of 9 December 1982,

Hoping that the other major nuclear-weapon State will find it possible to comply also with the request of the General Assembly before the closure of its thirty-eighth session,

Developing that it has become evident that the bilateral negotiations have not yet produced the desired results,

1. Urges the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America to examine immediately, as a way out of the present impasse, the possibility of combining into a single forum the two series of negotiations which they have been carrying out and of broadening their scope so as to embrace also the "tactical" or "battlefield" nuclear weapons;

2. Reiterates its request to the two negotiating parties that they bear constantly in mind that not only their national interests but also the vital interests of all the peoples of the world are at stake in this question;

3. Requests both parties to keep the United Nations appropriately informed of progress achieved in their negotiations;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations".

Before acting on the draft that became resolution 38/183 N, the General Assembly took a separate recorded vote on paragraph 1 of the text, which was adopted by 108 to 2 (United Kingdom, United States), with 37 abstentions. The same paragraph had been approved in the First Committee by a recorded vote of 91 to 2 (United Kingdom, United States), with 33 abstentions. In the Committee, separate recorded votes were also taken on the preambular part of the draft and on each of the other operative paragraphs, in which no negative votes were cast.

Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Benin, Cyprus, Finland, India, Pakistan, Peru, Romania, Trinidad and Tobago, and Zaire expressed their support for the goal of the draft. Cyprus, Pakistan, Trinidad and Tobago, and Zaire emphasized their desire to facilitate progress in the negotiations. Algeria saw specifically in the approach of the draft a way out of the existing impasse. Similarly, Peru saw in the text positive aspects which should help overcome the stagnation in the negotiations, while Romania fully agreed with both the letter and spirit of the draft. Argentina stated that the text, in particular paragraph 1, adequately reflected its own views as to how further progress might be made. Austria regarded the draft as being consistent with its belief in the comprehensive approach to disarmament problems. Bangladesh felt that the bilateral negotiations were not only in the national interests of the two negotiators, but also in the vital interests of all. India, although it would have preferred a single agreed text rather than three drafts, felt the text in question was the clearest on the subject.

Belgium, France and the Federal Republic of Germany expressed appreciation of the fact that the draft had refrained from indicating a stand on the substance of the negotiations; they felt, however, that the technical arrangements put forward should be determined by the two negotiators. Belgium further objected to the implication of paragraph 3 that reports from each should be submitted, feeling that only joint reporting at the opportune moment would allow them to conduct the negotiations freely.

The Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/183 P, as recommended by the First Committee.

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations

The General Assembly,

Deeply regretting that, in their bilateral negotiations, which commenced at Geneva on 30 November 1981, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America have so far been unable to achieve positive results,

Firmly convinced that an early agreement in those negotiations, in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest possible level of armaments and military forces, would have crucial importance for the strengthening of international peace and security,

Deeply concerned that a breakdown of the negotiations could impede efforts to strengthen international peace and security and to achieve progress towards disarmament,

Convinced that, through negotiations pursued in a spirit of flexibility and responsibility for the security interests of all States, it is possible to reach an agreement,

1. Urges the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America to continue, without pre-conditions, their bilateral negotiations at Geneva as long as is necessary in order to achieve positive results in accordance with the security interests of all States and the universal desire for progress towards disarmament;

2. Calls upon the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America to spare no effort in seeking the attainment of the final objective of the negotiations;

3. Invites the Governments of the two States mentioned above to work actively towards the enhancement of mutual trust, in order to create an atmosphere more conducive to disarmament agreements;

4. Expresses its firmest possible encouragement and support to the negotiating parties in their efforts to bring the negotiations to a successful conclusion.

In favour: Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Iceland, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mexico, Morocco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Upper Volta, Vanuatu, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Afghanistan, Angola, Bulgaria, Byelorussian, SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Mozambique, Poland, Romania, Syrian Arab Republic, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Viet Nam.

Abstaining: Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Bhutan, Bolivia, Burma, Cape Verde, China, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Ivory Coast, Mauritius, Nepal, Peru, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Suriname, United Republic of Cameroon, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Although statements by Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Bangladesh, Benin, Egypt, Finland, the Ivory Coast, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Portugal, Rwanda, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia and Yugoslavia showed some differences in the degree of support for the text, they revealed an equal concern for the outcome of the negotiations. As stated by Yugoslavia, the failure of the Geneva talks would exacerbate the mistrust between the two sides; a dialogue, in its view, was the only alternative to the further buildup of nuclear arms in Europe. Australia, in particular, felt that the text, compared with the others on the same subject, was the least prejudicial to the success of the intermediate-range nuclear-force negotiations. Portugal thought it presented an equitable, non-discriminatory solution by recommending the continuation of the talks without pre-conditions. Finland, like most others which explained their vote, made clear that it supported the main thrust of all the drafts on bilateral talks, without taking a stand with respect to the specific issues being debated at Geneva. Algeria stated that its support of the drafts should be seen as an appeal to the negotiators to reach an agreement in the interests of all.

Cuba, Democratic Yemen, the German Democratic Republic and Romania felt that the draft that became resolution 38/183 P was an attempt, as the German Democratic Republic stated, to give the deployment of new medium-range weapons in Western Europe the appearance of legitimacy. Cuba held that from the outset one group of countries had tried to prevent the negotiations from succeeding and, while Cuba supported the continuation of bilateral negotiations, it believed that they should lead to the dismantling of all nuclear weapons in Europe. Romania stressed that the text's approach was unilateral and rigid; it also stated that some States had negotiated in bad faith during the consultations on its draft (see above).

Austria, the Bahamas, China, India, Nepal, Peru, Venezuela and Zaire believed that there were contradictions between all the drafts, especially between the Western and the Eastern proposals. Some of them stated that they did not want to endorse a particular approach.

The USSR and the United States explained their respective positions on the bilateral negotiations in the course of the First Committee and the plenary Assembly debate on the subject.

The USSR maintained that it favoured an integrated limitation and reduction of all the components of strategic potential based on identical security and equality; medium-range nuclear armaments in Europe must be radically reduced without disrupting the balance on both sides. It said it had proposed in the Geneva talks the reduction, by some 25 per cent, of the existing arsenals of both sides to equal levels, substantial reductions of nuclear warheads on those armaments, a ban on deploying long-range cruise missiles and other new kinds of strategic systems, and limiting a qualitative upgrading of arms-all subject to verification. It asserted that the United States refusal to take into account British and French missiles in the overall balance of nuclear arms was intended to delay the talks and enable the United States to deploy its missiles in Western Europe by invoking USSR intransigence; that missile deployment would upset the existing regional and global balance in favour of member States of NATO. The USSR believed that the reductions proposed by the United States would affect the USSR strategic arsenal to a considerably greater degree than they would affect that of the United States, and viewed that country's proposal for an increase in reductions or "build-down" as intended to channel the strategic arms race towards a qualitative improvement of missiles and bombers rather than to curb it. The USSR, stating that the United States deployment had made impossible further USSR participation in the talks, asserted that they should not be used to camouflage the exacerbation of the arms race, started by certain NATO countries and the United States.

The United States said the security situation in Europe was troubling in view of the continued USSR attempts to alter the balance of forces against the Western alliance; it asserted that, while claiming the existence of balance in Europe, the USSR had increased the number of longer-range "intermediate-range nuclear forces" missile warheads from 800 to 1,300 in the past few years without a single United States warhead of that category being introduced into the region. The United States said its position in the strategic arms reduction talks in seeking both substantial reductions and increased stability was based on: reducing the current nuclear arsenals of the USSR and itself by almost 50 per cent to 5,000 ballistic missile warheads, a flexible approach to reducing the disparity and destructive capability and potential of ballistic missiles, substantial reductions in deployed ballistic missiles, and effective verification. It had also made build-down proposals which included linking modernization to reductions and a guaranteed annual percentage reduction of nuclear warheads. Asserting that it had been negotiating seriously even though the USSR had at the same time been deploying SS-20 missiles at the rate of one per week, the United States expressed regret that the USSR had broken off the negotiations on intermediate-range nuclear forces and had not set a date for resuming those on reducing strategic arms or on mutual and balanced force reductions.

Proposed working group

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December 1983, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/183 D, calling on the Conference on Disarmament (as the Committee on Disarmament would be known in 1984) to hold negotiations on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament and especially to elaborate a nuclear-disarmament programme, setting up an ad hoc working group for that purpose.

Nuclear weapons in all aspects

The General Assembly,

Recalling that at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, it expressed its profound preoccupation over the danger of war, in particular nuclear war, the prevention of which remains the most acute and urgent task of the present day,

Reaffirming once again that nuclear weapons pose the most serious threat to mankind and its survival and that it is therefore essential to proceed with nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming also that all nuclear-weapon States, in particular those which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, bear a special responsibility for the fulfilment of the task of achieving the goals of nuclear disarmament,

Stressing again that existing arsenals of nuclear weapons alone are more than sufficient to destroy all life on Earth, and bearing in mind the devastating results which nuclear war would have on belligerents and non-belligerents alike,

Recalling that at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, it decided that effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war had the highest priority and that it was essential to halt and reverse the nuclear-arms race in all its aspects in order to avert the danger of war involving nuclear weapons,

Stressing that any expectation of winning a nuclear war is senseless and that such a war would inevitably lead to the destruction of nations, to enormous devastation and to catastrophic consequences for civilization and life itself on Earth,

Recalling further that, in its resolution 35/152 B of 12 December 1980, it noted with alarm the increased risk of a nuclear catastrophe associated both with the intensification of the nuclear-arms race and with the adoption of the new doctrines of limited or partial use of nuclear weapons, which are incompatible with its resolution 110(II) of 3 November 1947, entitled "Measures to be taken against propaganda and the inciters of a new war", and give rise to illusions of the admissibility and acceptability of a nuclear conflict,

Noting with alarm that to the doctrine of a limited nuclear war was later added the concept of a protracted nuclear war and that these dangerous doctrines lead to a new twist in the spiral of the arms race, which may seriously hamper the reaching of agreement on nuclear disarmament,

Gravely concerned about the renewed escalation of the nuclear-arms race, in both its quantitative and qualitative dimensions, as well as reliance on the doctrine of nuclear deterrence, which in fact is heightening the risk of the outbreak of nuclear war and leads to increased tensions and instability in international relations,

Taking note of the relevant deliberations of the Disarmament Commission in 1983 with regard to item 4 of its agenda, as contained in its report,

Stressing the urgent need for the cessation of the development and deployment of new types and systems of nuclear weapons as a step on the road to nuclear disarmament,

Stressing again that priority in disarmament negotiations should be given to nuclear weapons and referring to paragraphs 49 and 54 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/71 H of 14 December 1978, 34/83 J of 11 December 1979, 35/152 B and C of 12 December 1980, 36/92 E of 9 December 1981 and 37/78 C of 9 December 1982,

Noting that the Committee on Disarmament, at its session held in 1983, discussed the question of the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament and, in particular, the establishment of an ad hoc working group for negotiations on that question,

Regretting, however, that the Committee on Disarmament was unable to reach agreement on the establishment of an ad hoc working group for the purpose of undertaking multilateral negotiations on the question of the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament,

Considering that efforts will continue to be made in order to enable the Conference on Disarmament to fulfil its negotiating role with regard to the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, bearing in mind the high priority accorded to this question in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

Convinced that the Conference on Disarmament is the most suitable forum for the preparation and conduct of negotiations on nuclear disarmament,

1. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to proceed without delay to negotiations on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament in accordance with paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and especially to elaborate a nuclear-disarmament programme, and to establish for this purpose an ad hoc working group on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and on nuclear disarmament;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament: report of the Conference on Disarmament".

Speaking in explanation of vote on the draft, Austria and Finland stated that, despite certain reservations on some of the preambular parts of the text, their votes reflected their concern that the escalating nuclear-arms race be halted and reversed. Austria also supported stronger involvement by the Conference on Disarmament in nuclear disarmament efforts and said it would welcome establishing a working group on the subject. Oman supported all efforts aimed at preventing nuclear war. Brazil understood that the nuclear disarmament programme referred to in paragraph 1 corresponded to the "comprehensive, phased programme" mentioned in paragraph 50(c) of the Final Document of the Tenth Special session(14) and that the elaboration of such a programme must not be a substitute or condition for priority negotiations on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and on nuclear disarmament, which the Conference on Disarmament should act upon urgently.

Australia regarded the proposal as among those which were put forward for propaganda purposes. Belgium considered the text's approach as unproductive and its reference to doctrines of the use of nuclear weapons as unrealistic, when it was war itself that should be prevented; Belgium wished to ensure common security by deterrence at lower levels of both conventional and nuclear weapons.

A call for the establishment of an ad hoc working group on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament was also made in Assembly resolution 38/183 I (see below, under PREVENTION OF NUCLEAR WAR).

Experts' study

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, by resolution 38/183 J, adopted by recorded vote on 20 December 1983, requested the Secretary-General to prepare, with the assistance of governmental experts, a report on unilateral nuclear disarmament measures.

Unilateral nuclear disarmament measures

The General Assembly,

Having examined the various concrete proposals submitted to the Disarmament Commission at its 1983 session and reproduced by the Commission in its report to the General Assembly,

Considering that one of these proposals, intended to expedite negotiations on nuclear disarmament through the preparation of a study on unilateral measures, would be of particular value at present in view of the impasse existing in both the bilateral and the multilateral negotiations,

Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts* and applying the methods customary in these cases, a report, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, on ways and means that seem advisable for stimulating the adoption of unilateral nuclear disarmament measures which, without prejudice to the security of States, would come to promote and complement bilateral and multilateral negotiations in this sphere.

*Subsequently referred to as the Group of Governmental Experts on Unilateral Nuclear Disarmament Measures.

China said it was necessary to explore all channels for the prohibition of nuclear weapons and had itself unilaterally announced, upon acquiring such weapons, that it would not be the first to use them nor would it use them against non-nuclear-weapon States.

The Netherlands recalled a recent announcement by NATO on the withdrawal of 1,400 nuclear warheads from Europe over a number of years, as a step that could inspire Governments to follow suit; it doubted, however, whether the study would contribute much to the success of current arms control negotiations.

Oman and the USSR said they supported any efforts to prevent nuclear war and achieve nuclear disarmament.

Prevention of nuclear war

At the United Nations, the debate on nuclear war prevention continued to focus in 1983, as in recent years, on whether a declaration on the non-use or non-first-use of nuclear weapons, or an international convention outlawing the use of such weapons, would effectively reduce the threat of such war. The supporters of a declaration continued to maintain that a declaration by all nuclear-weapon States would strengthen the relevant principle of the Charter of the United Nations, while the Western States felt such a measure would undermine the wider principle of the non-use of force in any form enshrined in the Charter.

At its 1983 session, the Committee on Disarmament(1) had before it a number of working papers on the prevention of nuclear war. In papers submitted by the group of 21 neutral and non-aligned States(15) and by a group of socialist States,(16) the necessity of urgent negotiations on measures to prevent nuclear war was emphasized and, to achieve this end, an ad hoc working group was proposed (see below). The socialist States also called for the renunciation by all nuclear-weapon States of the first use of nuclear weapons and the conclusion of a world-wide treaty on the non-use of force in international relations. These calls were repeated in a paper put forward by the German Democratic Republic,(17) which also listed as relevant several items such as a freeze on the production and deployment of nuclear weapons and a moratorium on all nuclear explosions.

The Federal Republic of Germany submitted a working paper(18) on preventing all armed conflict, beginning with the prohibition of the threat or use of force as embodied in Article 2 of the Charter. Belgium's working paper(19) was on confidence-building measures within the framework of the prevention of nuclear war. Further, Australia, Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan and the Netherlands, in a joint paper,(20) outlined how preventing nuclear war might be explored in informal meetings.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly adopted resolutions 38/75 and 38/183 B on nuclear war prevention, the former under an item entitled "Condemnation of nuclear war", included in the agenda of the Assembly's 1983 regular session at the request of the USSR.

In transmitting that proposal by a letter of 4 October,(21) the USSR stated that any designs for unleashing nuclear war were criminal and should receive the most severe universal condemnation. The letter carried the text of a draft resolution which, with the addition of the fourth preambular paragraph and after revision by the additional sponsors and approval by the First Committee, was adopted by recorded vote on 15 December as Assembly resolution 38/75.

Condemnation of nuclear war

The General Assembly,

Expressing its alarm at the growing threat of nuclear war, which can lead to the destruction of civilization on earth,

Drawing the attention of all States and peoples to the conclusions arrived at by the most eminent scientists and military and civilian experts to the effect that it is impossible to limit the deadly consequences of nuclear war if it is ever begun and that in a nuclear war there can be no victors,

Convinced that the prevention of nuclear catastrophe is the most profound aspiration of billions of people on earth,

Reaffirming its call for the conclusion of an international convention on the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons with the participation of all the nuclear-weapon States,

1. Resolutely, unconditionally and for all time condemns nuclear war as being contrary to human conscience and reason, as the most monstrous crime against peoples and as a violation of the foremost human right—the right to life;

2. Condemns the formulation, propounding, dissemination and propaganda of political and military doctrines and concepts intended to provide "legitimacy" for the first use of nuclear weapons and in general to justify the "admissibility" of unleashing nuclear war;

3. Calls upon all States to unite and redouble their efforts aimed at removing the threat of nuclear war, halting the nuclear-arms race and reducing nuclear weapons until they are completely eliminated.

In explanation of vote, Greece, India, Indonesia, Mongolia, Oman, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, the Sudan and Togo expressed support for the text's main thrust.

Austria, Belgium, Greece and the Sudan asserted that the condemnation should cover both conventional and nuclear wars.

Sri Lanka held that the mere condemnation of war was inadequate to ensure its prevention, and asserted that some of the language in paragraphs 1 and 2 did not help towards realizing an international convention with the participation of all the nuclear-weapon States. While in agreement with a number of ideas in the resolution, Ireland considered paragraphs 1 and 2 as being rhetorical and as ignoring fundamental problems inherent in nuclear deterrence as a means of maintaining international security. India and Indonesia said, with regard to paragraph 2, that the best way to prevent the outbreak of nuclear war was to forswear the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances. Togo also had reservations on paragraph 2, and Indonesia said that, had a separate vote been taken on that paragraph, it would have abstained.

Recalling a 1982 NATO declaration (Bonn, Federal Republic of Germany) that no NATO weapons would ever be used except in response to attack, the United Kingdom objected to what it called unwarranted implications in paragraph 2, that those not agreeing with the USSR sought to justify the unleashing of a nuclear war; the text diverted attention from practical arms control measures and other real dangers that arose daily from conventional war. For the United States, paragraph 2 reflected the sponsors' aversion to free public discussion of nuclear and other military issues; it would continue to negotiate for concrete and verifiable disarmament measures rather than support such unenforceable resolutions that might lull people into a false sense of security. Austria also emphasized the need for early agreement between the two major Powers on nuclear arms limitations and reductions. China said the international community expected the two Powers to take practical action instead of verbally condemning nuclear war.

Australia thought that the text promoted propagandistic aims. The Federal Republic of Germany called the text a new version of the perennial USSR proposal on nuclear non-first-use, a concept which it maintained neither met Charter obligations nor provided effective means for preventing nuclear war.

Malta, which did not participate in the vote, said the international community should be proposing, instead, the dissemination of positive, well-argued and thoroughly researched stances that would demolish doctrines and concepts that attempted to justify nuclear war.

On 20 December 1983, the Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/183 B, as recommended by the First Committee.

Non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the threat to the survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing arms race,

Recalling that, in accordance with the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war have the highest priority,

Recalling also that this commitment was reaffirmed by the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Bearing in mind its resolutions 36/81 B, 36/92 I and 36/100 of 9 December 1981 and 37/78 J of 9 December 1982,

Reaffirming that the most effective guarantee against the danger of nuclear war and the use of nuclear weapons is nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Recalling also paragraph 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session, in which it is stated that all States should actively participate in efforts to bring about conditions in international relations among States in which a code of peaceful conduct of nations in international affairs could be agreed upon and which would preclude the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming also that the nuclear-weapon States have special responsibilities to undertake measures aimed at preventing the outbreak of nuclear war,

1. Considers that the solemn declarations by two nuclear-weapon States made or reiterated at the twelfth special session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, concerning their respective obligations not to be the first to use nuclear weapons offer an important avenue to decrease the danger of nuclear war;

2. Expresses the hope that those nuclear-weapon States which have not yet done so would consider making similar declarations with respect to not being the first to use nuclear weapons.

In explanation of vote, Australia stated that the text attempted to "score points", rather than improve the atmosphere for negotiations. Belgium said that the scope of the text was limited to the renunciation of the first use of nuclear weapons by those States possessing such weapons, while States should ban all uses of force, as required by the United Nations Charter.

Czechoslovakia felt that a commitment on non-first-use would be an important step towards preventing nuclear war, and Mongolia viewed the non-first-use obligation as acquiring greater relevance and immediacy. While Bulgaria rejected allegations that the text was propagandistic, and deplored attempts to place nuclear and other wars on an equal footing, Hungary believed that the search for nuclear war prevention would create better conditions for preventing any kind of war. The USSR said it had taken several unilateral actions, one being its commitment never to be the first to use nuclear weapons.

Finland and India expressed agreement with the thrust of the proposal, with the latter adding that the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons should be forsworn completely pending nuclear disarmament. Similarly, Indonesia considered that any use of nuclear weapons should be condemned. The Sudan stated that it welcomed any declaratory measure on the non-use of nuclear weapons, provided that such measures were not viewed as effective disarmament measures or in isolation from the Charter principle. Sweden, which viewed the concept of non-first-use of nuclear weapons as important, stressed that a rough parity in both conventional and nuclear forces must be established at lower levels in order to facilitate undertakings by nuclear-weapon States not to be the first to use nuclear weapons.

Other 1983 Assembly resolutions dealing with nuclear war prevention included 38/183 F, on implementation of the 1979 Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament; 38/183 H, on implementation of recommendations of the 1978 special session on disarmament; and 38/183 M, on nuclear disarmament. (For texts of these resolutions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS).

On 14 October, Czechoslovakia transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of an appeal(22) adopted by the World Assembly for Peace and Life, against Nuclear War (Prague, 21-26 June).

Proposed working group

The idea of establishing a working group to negotiate measures for preventing nuclear war was suggested in working papers submitted to the 1983 session of the Committee on Disarmament(1) by the group of 21(15) and by a group of socialist States.(16) The Committee considered the suggestions but was not able to reach a consensus on them.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, as recommended by the First Committee, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/183 G, requesting the Conference on Disarmament (as the Committee on Disarmament would be known in 1984) to establish a working group on the prevention of nuclear war. That request was repeated in resolution 38/183 I, adopted the same day.

Prevention of nuclear war

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the threat to the survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing arms race,

Recalling that removal of the threat of nuclear war is the most acute and urgent task of the present day,

Reiterating that it is the shared responsibility of all Member States to save succeeding generations from the scourge of another world war, which would inevitably be a nuclear war,

Recalling the provisions of paragraphs 47 to 50 and 56 to 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly regarding the procedures designed to secure the avoidance of nuclear war,

Recalling also its resolution 36/81 B of 9 December 1981 and, in particular, its resolution 37/78 I of 9 December 1982, in which it requested the Committee on Disarmament to undertake, as a matter of the highest priority, negotiations with a view to achieving agreement on appropriate and practical measures for the prevention of nuclear war.

Having considered the report of the Committee on Disarmament,

Noting with concern that the Committee on Disarmament was not able to start negotiations on the question during its 1983 session,

Taking into account the deliberations on this item at its thirty-eighth session,

Convinced that the prevention of nuclear war and the reduction of the risks of nuclear war are matters of the highest priority and of vital interest to all the peoples of the world,

1. Again requests the Conference on Disarmament to undertake, as a matter of the highest priority, negotiations with a view to achieving agreement on appropriate and practical measures for the prevention of nuclear war, taking into account the documents referred to in General Assembly resolution 37/78 I as well as other existing proposals and future initiatives;

2. Further requests the Conference on Disarmament to establish for that purpose an ad hoc working group on the subject at the beginning of its 1984 session;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Prevention of nuclear war: report of the Conference on Disarmament".

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Haiti, Iceland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States,

In explanation of vote, Belgium said the text prejudged the form that the work of the Conference on Disarmament should take; consensus might have been possible had the language been less confining. The United Kingdom emphasized that it continued to set the prevention of nuclear war in the context of preventing war in general, because the causes of war, whether conventional or nuclear, were the same; the unwillingness of certain delegations to accept that fact had delayed reaching agreement on an agenda for the Committee on Disarmament in 1983, and contributed to that body's failure to agree to a thorough discussion on the subject, as an essential first stage for identifying areas where negotiation might be possible. Mongolia expressed the hope that, at the 1984 session of the Conference on Disarmament, the Western members would display a spirit of co-operation and a willingness to negotiate on the prevention of nuclear war and on nuclear disarmament. Oman said it supported any efforts to prevent nuclear war.

Proposed nuclear-weapon freeze

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1983, the General Assembly adopted three resolutions (38/73 B, 38/73 E and 38/76) on nuclear-weapon freeze proposals.

Resolution 38/76 was based on a draft which had accompanied a USSR proposal of 4 October (23) for inclusion of a new item entitled "Nuclear-weapon freeze" in the agenda of the Assembly's thirty-eighth (1983) session.

On 15 December, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/73 B, as recommended by the First Committee.

Freeze on nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/100 A of 13 December 1982, Convinced that in this nuclear age lasting world peace can be based only on the attainment of the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Further convinced that the highest priority objectives in the field of disarmament have to be nuclear disarmament and the elimination of all weapons of mass destruction,

Recognizing the urgent need to halt the arms race, particularly in nuclear weapons,

Recognizing further the urgent need for a negotiated reduction of nuclear-weapon stockpiles leading to their complete elimination,

Noting with deep concern that nuclear-weapon States have not so far taken any action in response to the call made in resolution 37/100 A,

1. Once again calls upon all nuclear-weapon States to agree to a freeze on nuclear weapons, which would, inter alia, provide for a simultaneous total stoppage of any further production of nuclear weapons and a complete cut-off in the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Freeze on nuclear weapons".

Nuclear-arms freeze

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, adopted in 1978 and unanimously and categorically reaffirmed in 1982 during the twelfth special session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, the Assembly expressed deep concern over the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing arms race,

Recalling also that, on those occasions, it pointed out that existing arsenals of nuclear weapons are more than sufficient to destroy all life on Earth and stressed that mankind is therefore confronted with a choice: halt the arms race and proceed to disarmament, or face annihilation,

Noting that the conditions prevailing today are a source of even more serious concern than those existing in 1978 because of several factors such as the deterioration of the international situation, the increase in the accuracy, speed and destructive power of nuclear weapons, the promotion of illusory doctrines of "limited" or "winnable" nuclear war and the many false alarms which have occurred owing to the malfunctioning of computers,

Noting also that at the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, it was declared that the renewed escalation in the nuclear-arms race, both in its quantitative and qualitative dimensions, as well as reliance on doctrines of nuclear deterrence, has heightened the risk of the outbreak of nuclear war and led to greater insecurity and instability in international relations,

Believing that it is a matter of the utmost urgency to stop any further increase in the awesome arsenals of the two major nuclear-weapon States, which already have ample retaliatory power and a frightening overkill capacity,

Believing also that it is equally urgent to activate negotiations for the substantial reduction and qualitative limitation of nuclear arms,

Considering that a nuclear-arms freeze, while not an end in itself, would constitute the most effective first step for the achievement of the above-mentioned two objectives, since it would provide a favourable environment for the conduct of the reduction negotiations while, at the same time, preventing the continued increase and qualitative improvement of existing nuclear weaponry during the period when the negotiations would take place,

Firmly convinced that at present the conditions are most propitious for such a freeze, since the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America are now equivalent in nuclear military power and it seems evident that there exists between them an overall rough parity,

Conscious that the mere application of the systems of surveillance, verification and control already agreed upon in some previous cases would be sufficient to provide a reasonable guarantee of faithful compliance with the undertakings derived from the freeze,

Convinced that it would be to the benefit of all other States possessing nuclear weapons to follow the example of the two major nuclear-weapon States as soon as positive results derived from the freeze agreed by them have been obtained,

1. Urges once more the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, as the two major nuclear-weapon States, to proclaim, either through simultaneous unilateral declarations or through a joint declaration, an immediate nuclear-arms freeze, which would be a first step towards the comprehensive programme of disarmament and whose structure and scope would:

(a) Embrace:

- (i) A comprehensive test ban of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;
 - (ii) The complete cessation of the manufacture of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;
 - (iii) A ban on all further deployment of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;
 - (iv) The complete cessation of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;
- (b) Be subject to all the relevant measures and procedures of verification which have already been agreed by the parties in the case of the SALT I and SALT II treaties, as well as those agreed upon in principle by them during the preparatory trilateral negotiations on the comprehensive test ban held at Geneva;

(c) Be of an initial five-year duration, subject to prolongation in the event of other nuclear-weapon States joining in such a freeze, as the General Assembly expects them to do;

2. Requests the above-mentioned two major nuclear-weapon States to submit a joint report or two separate reports to the General Assembly, prior to the opening of its thirty-ninth session, on the implementation of the present resolution;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session an item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 38/73 II on a nuclear-arms freeze".

On 15 December, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/76, the draft of which was recommended by the First Committee.

Nuclear-weapon freeze

The General Assembly,

Expressing its alarm that the continuing nuclear-arms race seriously increases the risk of the outbreak of a nuclear war,

Taking into account the great responsibility of nuclear States for the preservation of universal peace and the prevention of nuclear war,

Recalling its resolution 37/100 B of 13 December 1982, in which it expressed the firm conviction that the existing conditions were most propitious for a nuclear-weapon freeze,

1. Urges all nuclear-weapon States to proceed to freeze, under appropriate verification, all nuclear weapons in their possession both in quantitative and qualitative terms, namely:

(a) To cease the buildup of all components of nuclear arsenals, including all kinds of nuclear-weapon delivery systems and all kinds of nuclear weapons;

(b) Not to deploy nuclear weapons of new kinds and types;

(c) To establish a moratorium on all tests of nuclear weapons and on tests of new kinds and types of their delivery systems;

(d) To stop the production of fissionable materials for the purpose of creating nuclear weapons;

2. Calls upon the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, which possess the largest nuclear arsenals, to freeze, in the first place and simultaneously, their nuclear weapons on a bilateral basis by way of example to the other nuclear States;

3. Believes that all the other nuclear-weapon States should subsequently and as soon as possible freeze their nuclear weapons;

4. Stresses the urgent need to intensify efforts aimed at the speedy achievement of agreements on substantial limitations and radical reductions of nuclear weapons with a view to their complete elimination as the ultimate goal.

A number of States explained in single statements their positions on the three texts which became resolutions 38/73 B and E and 38/76.

Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and the United States maintained that a freeze at existing levels was tantamount to expecting the Western States to acquiesce in a codification of the existing imbalances and USSR superiority and to live in a position of destabilizing military vulnerability under that threat, unable to resort to adequate countermeasures. Similarly, Norway asserted that ongoing nuclear disarmament efforts should not be complicated by a call for a freeze that would result in the preservation of serious military imbalances; it emphasized the need to attain agreed substantial reductions and reduce imbalances in nuclear arsenals. The United States added that nuclear-freeze proposals, however well-intentioned, would decrease international stability and ultimately increase the danger of war; along with France, it asserted that a freeze would be difficult to verify and that the relevant negotiations would be lengthy and complex. Belgium also felt that negotiations on a freeze would add to the difficulties in the existing negotiations in the area of verification. The Federal Republic of Germany asserted that any freeze, to be acceptable, needed adequate verification embodied in firm contractual commitments. The Netherlands considered that the sponsors had grossly underestimated the verification problems. Australia did not believe that the three texts provided the balance and verifiability crucial to maintaining stability and confidence.

Norway found some positive elements in the text which became resolution 38/73 E, including, though somewhat insufficient, a reference to verification and the provisions on a comprehensive test ban. Costa Rica said its support for the drafts which became resolutions 38/73 B and E was based, in part, on their recognition of the need for verification and control; it did not support the other draft for lack of guarantees for verification. Zaire said a freeze, in the absence of effective verification measures, would seemingly consist of keeping nuclear weapons ready for use; its votes were aimed at inciting all negotiators to provide evidence of greater flexibility in their discussions.

France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States maintained that a Power might benefit from a freeze, and thus it could have a negative effect on that Power's readiness to negotiate seriously for reductions. France added that negotiations should begin by defining and establishing a balance satisfactory to both sides. The Netherlands said a declaratory type of freeze could undermine the current bilateral negotiations, as did the United States, which believed that a freeze would make significant arms control more difficult. For Costa Rica, however, the text which became resolution 38/73 E recognized the freeze as the most effective first step for stopping the nuclear-arms race and encouraging negotiations for reductions. The Netherlands rejected the fourth preambular paragraph in that text for what it considered unwarranted mention of nuclear-deterrence strategy.

The German Democratic Republic, which supported all the texts, viewed as unfounded allegations of USSR superiority in the nuclear field and of difficulties regarding verification.

The USSR regarded the sixth preambular paragraph of the text which became resolution 38/73 B as relating to nuclear-weapon States that spoke against a freeze. It asserted that the countries possessing the largest nuclear arsenals—the USSR and the United States—should set an example to other nuclear-weapon Powers; it added that a call it had made in June 1983 to nuclear Powers to freeze all existing stockpiles had not met a positive response.

Indonesia, supporting the three texts, stressed that a freeze was a means and not an end in itself, and that the importance of such a measure should be judged in conjunction with the last paragraph of resolution 38/76. Greece expressed support for all efforts aimed at reducing nuclear weapons to the lowest possible level; it also felt that conventional weapons should be dealt with on an equal footing, since modern technology had made them weapons of mass destruction.

Draft convention against nuclear weapons

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 15 December 1983, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/73 G concerning a possible convention banning the use of nuclear weapons, a draft of which was annexed to the resolution to serve as a basis for negotiations in the Conference on Disarmament.

Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the threat to the survival of mankind and to the life-sustaining system posed by nuclear weapons and by their use, inherent in concepts of deterrence,

Conscious of an increased danger of nuclear war as a result of the intensification of the nuclear-arms race and the serious deterioration of the international situation,

Convinced that nuclear disarmament is essential for the prevention of nuclear war and for the strengthening of international peace and security,

Further convinced that a prohibition of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons would be a step towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons leading to general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Recalling that, in paragraph 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it is stated that all States should actively participate in efforts to bring about conditions in international relations among States in which a code of peaceful conduct of nations in international affairs could be agreed upon and which would preclude the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming that the use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity, as declared in its resolutions 1653(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 33/71 13 of 14 December 1978, 34/83 G of 11 December 1979, 35/152 D of 12 December 1980 and 36/92 I of 9 December 1981,

Noting with regret that the Committee on Disarmament, during its session in 1983, was not able to undertake negotiations with a view to achieving agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a basis the text annexed to General Assembly resolution 37/100 C of 13 December 1982,

1. Reiterates its request to the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations, as a matter of priority, in order to achieve agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a basis the text of the draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons annexed to the present resolution;

2. Further requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the results of those negotiations.

ANNEX

Abstaining: Austria, Greece, Ireland, Israel, Japan, Philippines.

In explanation of vote, Australia considered that a convention prohibiting the use of nuclear weapons could lull the international community into a false sense of security and was an implausible way of seeking to prevent nuclear war; what was needed was a stable, mutual deterrence and viable measures of preventing all war. It was joined by Sweden in favouring balanced reductions of nuclear weapons, leading to their elimination. Sweden, while sharing the text's objectives, expressed reservations on the sixth preambular paragraph which, it said, provided a legally contestable interpretation of the United Nations Charter.

Proposed negotiations on the neutron bomb

For the third consecutive year, the General Assembly requested, in its 1983 resolution 38/183 C, that the Conference on Disarmament (as the Committee on Disarmament would be known in 1984) start without delay negotiations with a view to concluding a convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling, deployment and use of nuclear neutron weapons, also known as enhanced radiation weapons.

The Democratic People's Republic of Korea, in a letter of 16 May 1983, asserted that the United States planned to deploy neutron weapons in the Republic of Korea; this charge was refuted as propaganda by the Republic of Korea in a letter of 23 May (see Chapter VI of this section).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

As recommended by the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December 1983, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/183 C.

Prohibition of the nuclear neutron weapon

The General Assembly,

Recalling paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that the achievement of nuclear disarmament will require urgent negotiation of agreements, inter alia, for the cessation of the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear-weapon systems, which is especially emphasized in paragraph 50 (a) of that Document.

Stressing that the nuclear neutron weapon represents a further step in the qualitative arms race in the field of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming its resolutions 36/92 K of 9 December 1981 and 37/78 E of 9 December 1982,

Sharing the world-wide concern expressed by Member States, as well as by non-governmental organizations, about the continued and expanded production and introduction of the nuclear neutron weapon in military arsenals, which escalates the nuclear-arms race and significantly lowers the threshold of nuclear war,

Aware of the inhuman effects of that weapon, which constitutes a grave threat, particularly to the unprotected civilian population,

Noting the consideration by the Committee on Disarmament at its session in 1983 of issues connected with the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, as well as the prohibition of the nuclear neutron weapon,

Regretting that the Committee on Disarmament was not able to reach agreement on the commencement of negotiations on the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and on nuclear disarmament or on the prohibition of the nuclear neutron weapon in an appropriate organizational framework,

1. Reaffirms its request to the Conference on Disarmament to start without delay negotiations within an appropriate organizational framework with a view to concluding a convention on the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling, deployment and use of nuclear neutron weapons as an organic element of negotiations, as envisaged in paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this question by the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session;

3. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a report on this question to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Prohibition of the nuclear neutron weapon".

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Bahrain, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Explaining their votes, Bangladesh, Brazil, Egypt, Guyana, Ireland, Oman, Pakistan, the Sudan, Sweden and Zaire generally condemned the development and production of nuclear neutron weapons, but at the same time had serious reservations about the idea of prohibiting only one specific nuclear weapon or adopting a selective approach to the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament. Denmark further stated that, while it would not accept nuclear neutron weapons on its territory, it considered the text as an undisguised attempt to split the Western allies in an important area of defence policy. Similarly, the Netherlands viewed the text as having been politically inspired and not genuinely serving the cause of disarmament.

Australia, which favoured the elimination of all nuclear weapons through negotiations, interpreted the text as lending credence to the view that the neutron weapon could be prohibited only as an organic element of negotiations on nuclear weapons as a whole; it did not agree that the neutron weapon could be the subject of a separate disarmament treaty, and it opposed the establishment in the Conference on Disarmament of a working group on that weapon. Sweden considered the reference to the Final Document, in paragraph 1, as an improvement on the previous year's resolution on the same subject.

India supported the text, saying that the nuclear neutron weapon was the manifestation of one of the particularly dangerous consequences of the nuclear-arms race, whose reversal should be negotiated by the Conference on Disarmament without delay.

Nuclear non-proliferation

In 1983, the General Assembly continued efforts to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons to countries other than known nuclear-weapon Powers, as reflected in resolutions 38/62 and 38/188 E (see below).

Throughout the year, the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) continued its efforts concerning nuclear safeguards, particularly in relation to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) (see PART TWO, Chapter I). States were urged, in Assembly resolution 38/8, to ensure the effectiveness of the Agency's safeguards system.

Nuclear-weapon-free zones

The establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various parts of the world was discussed in 1983 by the Disarmament Commission, the Committee on Disarmament and the General Assembly. A number of delegations considered that the 1967 Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco) should serve as a model for possible zones in other parts of the world. Along with the debate on the establishment of zones in Africa, the Middle East and South Asia, proposals were made for such zones in the Balkans and Northern and Central Europe, but no formal initiatives were taken on these proposals at the United Nations.

Group of Experts

Pursuant to a December 1982 General Assembly resolution,(24) the Secretary-General set up in 1983 the Group of Governmental Experts on Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zones to review and supplement a 1975 expert study entitled Comprehensive study of the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones in all its aspects.(25) The 21-member Group met twice during 1983. At an organizational session (14-18 March), it agreed on the study's structure and outline, and decided that the experts would submit written contributions to the Secretariat which would then produce a draft. This draft was discussed at the second session (25 July-5 August), and it was decided that further work would be carried out in 1984, before submission of the study to the Assembly later that year.

The Group consisted of experts from Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Bulgaria, China, Cuba, Egypt, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Japan, Mexico, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States and Yugoslavia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December 1983, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/188 I.

Review of and supplement to the Comprehensive study of the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones in all its aspects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/99 F of 13 December 1982, in which it decided that a study should be undertaken to review and supplement the Comprehensive study of the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones in all its aspects in the light of information and experience accumulated since 1975,

Recalling also that in paragraph 61 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly it was determined that the process of establishing nuclear-weapon-free zones should be encouraged, with the ultimate objective of achieving a world entirely free of nuclear weapons,

Considering that the documents submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session on the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones, as well as the views expressed in the general debate on this particular subject, provide additional elements relevant to the updating of the study,

Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Group of Governmental Experts on Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zones, established by resolution 37/99 F, for its consideration and analysis all the relevant documents submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session, as well as the records of the debate on the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones.

Abstaining: India, United Kingdom, United States.

India said that, while its position on nuclear-weapon-free zones remained unchanged, it abstained in the vote as the text was merely of a procedural character. While voting in favour, the Federal Republic of Germany considered the text unnecessary and felt that resolutions should not interfere with the orderly transaction of United Nations studies, according to their mandate.

Africa

The Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa was adopted in 1964 by the Organization of African Unity (OAU).(26) The General Assembly in 1983 again called on all States to regard the continent as a nuclear-weapon-free zone.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/181 A.

Implementation of the Declaration

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964,

Recalling resolution 1652(XVI) of 24 November 1961, its earliest on the subject, as well as its resolutions 2033(XX) of 3 December 1965, 32/81 of 12 December 1977, 33/63 of 14 December 1978, 34/76 A of 11 December 1979, 35/146 B of 12 December 1980, 36/86 B of 9 December 1981 and 37/74 A of 9 December 1982, in which it called upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa and its surrounding areas as a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Recalling that in its resolution 33/63 it vigorously condemned any overt or covert attempt by South Africa to introduce nuclear weapons into the continent of Africa and demanded that South Africa refrain forthwith from conducting any nuclear explosion in the continent of Africa or elsewhere,

Recalling its resolution 35/146 A of 12 December 1980, by which it, inter alia, expressed its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report on South Africa's plan and capability in the nuclear field and expressed its deep alarm that the report of the Secretary-General had established South Africa's capability to manufacture nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming that South Africa's continued development of a nuclear capability seriously jeopardizes the realization of the objective of the Declaration and poses a grave threat not only to the security of African States but also to international peace and security,

Recalling also its resolution 37/100 F of 13 December 1982, by which it, inter alia, requested the Secretariat, in particular the Department for Disarmament Affairs, and the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research to lend assistance to States and regional institutions which may request it in the context of regional disarmament measures taken at the initiative and with the participation of all the States concerned,

Taking note of the report of the Director of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies,

Eking note with concern of the report of the Disarmament Commission, in particular its paragraph 24 dealing with the question of the nuclear capability of South Africa,

Convinced of the urgent need for the international community to consider practical measures for the realization of the objective of the Declaration,

1. Strongly reiterates its call upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa and its surrounding areas as a nuclear-weapon-free zone;

2. Reaffirms that implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by African heads of State and Government would be a significant measure to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to promote international peace and security;

3. Condemns South Africa's continued pursuit of a nuclear capability and all forms of nuclear collaboration by any State, corporation, institution or individual with the racist régime which enable it to frustrate the objective of the Declaration which seeks to keep Africa free from nuclear weapons;

4. Calls upon all States, corporations, institutions and individuals to terminate forthwith any form of collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa which enables it to frustrate the objective of the Declaration;

5. Demands once again that the racist régime of South Africa refrain from testing, manufacturing, deploying, transporting, storing, using or threatening to use nuclear weapons;

6. Demands once again that South Africa submit forthwith all its nuclear installations and facilities to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency;

7. Requests the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research, in co-operation with the Department for Disarmament Affairs and in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, to provide data on the continued development of South Africa's nuclear capability;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary support to the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research to enable it to carry out the task entrusted to it under the present resolution and for the Institute to submit a report to the Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa".

General Assembly resolution 38/181 A

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Belgium, France, Israel, Portugal, United Kingdom, United States.

On 25 November, the First Committee, before approving the draft as a whole, approved paragraph 8 of the twice-revised draft which became resolution 38/181 A by a recorded vote of 103 to 1 (United States), with 22 abstentions. On 20 December, the Assembly also voted separately on that paragraph and adopted it by a recorded vote of 123 to 1 (United States), with 22 abstentions.

In explanation of vote on paragraph 8, the United Kingdom and the United States asserted that the study should be financed within the budgetary limits of the United Nations; Canada agreed and said it preferred the original wording of the paragraph simply requesting the Director of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR) to submit a report. The Federal Republic of Germany had similar reservations and considered the amounts contained in the financial implications to be exaggerated. Japan also felt that the paragraph lacked conclusive, supporting evidence. The USSR said that the paragraph implied a departure from the established practice of financing UNIDIR activities by voluntary contributions. The Netherlands reserved its position on the financial implications.

On the text as a whole, a number of countries, among them Australia and Portugal, expressed support for the denuclearization of Africa, or for calls to South Africa to become a party to NPT and for it to place all its nuclear installations under IAEA safeguards.

Bulgaria called for the immediate cessation of the support given to South Africa by certain Western countries, particularly in the military and nuclear field, which, it said, was the main obstacle to the denuclearization of Africa. Canada and the Netherlands welcomed the deletion from the 1983 text, as compared to its predecessors, of reference to the nuclear collaboration of certain Western countries and Israel with South Africa. While sharing that view, the Federal Republic of Germany had reservations on the second preambular paragraph and paragraph 1 which, in its view, ambiguously defined the confines of the future nuclear-weapon-free zone. The USSR said the call in paragraph 1 should not be allowed to affect the norms of international law, including the principle of freedom of navigation on the high seas.

As regards paragraphs 3 and 4, the Federal Republic of Germany saw need for their careful interpretation, while Malawi said it would have abstained had a separate vote been taken on those paragraphs because of their implicit call for sanctions. Spain also had reservations about paragraph 4. The United Kingdom, asserting that all States had the right to the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, said it was wrong to seek to limit that right in individual cases for political reasons. Belgium, France and Ireland also regretted the text's failure to distinguish between the uses of nuclear energy for peaceful or for military purposes, and between the corresponding types of co-operation. Portugal considered as excessive the wording relating to nuclear collaboration. The Netherlands believed, however, that those paragraphs, read in conjunction with paragraph 6, made an implicit distinction between different types of nuclear collaboration.

The United States considered that the text contained intemperate language, which was unnecessary and potentially harmful to its underlying objective and which discouraged South Africa from implementing a non-proliferation policy. Austria and Japan also had reservations with regard to certain provisions in the text.

Albania said its affirmative vote was in keeping with its position of support for the cause of the African peoples against the racist regime of South Africa, but did not change its position as regards the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones.

The other 1983 disarmament resolution dealing with a nuclear-weapon-free Africa was 38/181 B, on nuclear weapons and South Africa (see below).

Nuclear weapons and South Africa

As in 1982, the Disarmament Commission(2) established in 1983 a working group (Working Group II) to consider, as requested by the General Assembly in a December 1982 resolution,(27) the question of South Africa's nuclear capability.

The Working Group, chaired by Davidson L. Hepburn (Bahamas), held 15 formal meetings and additional informal consultations between 13 May and 1 June, using a text submitted by Mauritius on behalf of the Group of African States members of the Commission as a basis for discussion. However, the consultations conducted by the Chairman revealed divergent positions regarding, inter alia, the legal and political interpretation to be placed on South Africa's actions and policy, the verification of its nuclear capability and its eligibility for access to nuclear energy for peaceful purposes. In the absence of a consensus text or recommendations, the Group agreed that two working papers, the one submitted and later revised by the African States and the other submitted by the Federal Republic of Germany, should be annexed to its report and taken as a basis for discussion at the Commission's 1984 session.

In a letter of 20 June(28) to the Secretary-General, Israel stated that various references in the African Group's paper were unfounded and devoid of truth.

In response to the 1982 Assembly resolution,(27) the Secretary-General submitted a report(29) on South Africa's nuclear capability in which he stated that he had followed closely South Africa's activities in that area, but had neither received nor identified any information regarding its nuclear evolution and therefore had nothing to add to his previous reports on the subject.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December 1983, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/181 B.

Nuclear capability of South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/76 B of 11 December 1979, 35/146 A of 12 December 1980, 36/86 A of 9 December 1981 and 37/74 B of 9 December 1982,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964,

Recalling that, in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it noted that the accumulation of armaments and the acquisition of armaments technology by racist regimes, as well as their possible acquisition of nuclear weapons, presented a challenging and increasingly dangerous obstacle to a world community faced with the urgent need to disarm,

Taking note of resolution GC(XXVII)/RES/408 on South Africa's nuclear capabilities, adopted on 14 October 1983 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency during its twenty-seventh regular session,

Recalling that, in its resolution 33/63 of 14 December 1978, it vigorously condemned any overt or covert attempt by South Africa to introduce nuclear weapons into the continent of Africa and demanded that South Africa refrain forthwith from conducting any nuclear explosion in the continent of Africa or elsewhere,

Recalling its resolution 35/146 A of 12 December 1980, by which it, inter alia, expressed its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report on South Africa's plan and capability in the nuclear field and expressed its deep alarm that the report of the Secretary-General had established South Africa's capability to manufacture nuclear weapons,

Noting with regret that, despite international concern over the nuclear capability of South Africa and the recognized need to deal concretely and expeditiously with it, the Disarmament Commission failed to conclude consideration of this important item on its agenda with specific recommendations during its 1983 session,

Gravely concerned that South Africa, in flagrant violation of the principles of international law and the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, has not only continued but has in fact intensified its military attacks and other acts of aggression and subversion against independent States of southern Africa, in particular Lesotho, Mozambique and Angola, part of whose territory still remains occupied by South African forces,

Strongly condemning the military occupation by South African troops of parts of the territory of Angola in violation of its national sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity, and urging the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of South African troops from Angolan soil,

Expressing its grave disappointment that, despite repeated appeals by the international community, certain Western States and Israel have continued to collaborate with the racist régime of South Africa in the military and nuclear fields and that some of the same Western States have, by a ready recourse to the use of the veto, consistently frustrated every effort in the Security Council to deal decisively with the question of South Africa,

1. Condemns the massive buildup of South Africa's military machine, including its frenzied acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability for repressive and aggressive purposes and as an instrument of blackmail;

2. Expresses its full support for the Governments of the independent States of southern Africa in their efforts to guarantee and safeguard their territorial integrity and national sovereignty;

3. Reaffirms that the racist régime's acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability constitutes a very grave danger to international peace and security and, in particular, jeopardizes the security of African States and increases the danger of the proliferation of nuclear weapons;

4. Requests the Disarmament Commission to consider substantively and as a matter of priority South Africa's nuclear capability during its session in 1984, taking into account, inter alia, the findings contained in the report of the Secretary-General on South Africa's plan and capability in the nuclear field, with a view to adopting concrete recommendations on the question;

5. Requests the Security Council, for the purposes of disarmament and to fulfil its obligations and responsibilities for the maintenance of international peace and security, to take enforcement measures to prevent any racist régimes from acquiring arms or arms technology;

6. Further requests the Security Council to conclude expeditiously its consideration of the recommendations of its Committee established by resolution 421(1977) concerning the question of South Africa with a view to blocking the existing loopholes in the arms embargo so as to render it more effective and prohibiting, in particular, all forms of co-operation and collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa in the nuclear field;

7. Condemns all forms of nuclear collaboration by any State, corporation, institution or individual with the racist régime of South Africa since such collaboration enables it to frustrate, inter alia, the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa which seeks to keep Africa free from nuclear weapons;

8. Condemns, in particular, recent decisions by some Member States to grant licences to several corporations in their territories to provide equipment and technical and maintenance services for nuclear installations in South Africa;

9. Calls upon all States, corporations, institutions and individuals to terminate forthwith all military and nuclear collaboration with the racist régime, including the provision to it of such materials as computers, electronic equipment and related technology;

10. Demands once again that South Africa submit forthwith all its nuclear installations and facilities to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to follow very closely South Africa's evolution in the nuclear field and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

20 December 1983 Meeting 103 133-4-11 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/38/624) by recorded vote (112-4-11), 25 November (meeting 41); draft by Sierra Leone, for African Group (A/C.1/38/L.68/Rev.2), orally revised; agenda item 46.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: France, Israel, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal.

In explanation of vote, a number of countries expressed objection to the singling out of certain Western countries in the text. Denmark, on behalf also of Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden, deplored that approach as inappropriate and arbitrary, while the Netherlands considered it unwarranted. Ireland and Spain expressed similar reservations. Portugal considered the language in certain paragraphs to be excessive, particularly those referring to nuclear collaboration.

Bulgaria, on the other hand, urged certain Western countries to cease supporting South Africa immediately, particularly in the military and nuclear field.

France and Denmark (on behalf of the Nordic countries) stated that paragraph 5 was not in conformity with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the distribution of responsibilities and powers between the General Assembly and the Security Council. Austria spoke similarly, and Spain had reservations about what it considered the vague language in that paragraph.

The United Kingdom, while believing that South Africa should become a party to NPT, called it wrong to limit, in individual cases for political reasons, the internationally recognized right of all States to apply and develop programmes for the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. Despite its agreement with the fundamental aims of the resolution, France asserted that the text of paragraphs 7 and 8 failed to distinguish between the peaceful and military uses of nuclear energy. Ireland had similar reservations, as did Spain, which felt the language in those paragraphs was also vague.

Australia did not agree with certain elements in the text, but expressed support for those which focused on South Africa's potential to increase the danger of nuclear proliferation. The Netherlands supported the request to the Security Council to look into the existing loopholes in the arms embargo against South Africa.

Albania said its affirmative vote, based on its support for the African cause against the racist régime of South Africa, did not change its position as regards nuclear-weapon-free zones.

For the United States, the draft contained intemperate language, which was unnecessary and potentially harmful to its underlying objectives. Sierra Leone, on behalf of the Group of African States, said the text's language could not be compared to the threat South Africa's apartheid policy posed to all African countries.

The question of nuclear weapons and South Africa was also dealt with in 1983 in Assembly resolutions 38/36 A, on the Namibia question; 38/39 G, on military and nuclear relations with South Africa; 38/181 A, on a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Africa; and 38/190, on implementation of the 1970 Declaration on international security (see Chapter IV of this section); and in decision 38/419, on military activity in Non-Self-Governing Territories (for texts, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS).

Throughout 1983, South Africa's military and nuclear relations with other States were kept under consideration by several United Nations bodies (see Chapter V of this section).

Europe

Disarmament Commission consideration. In 1983, the Disarmament Commission(2) established a working group (Working Group III) to deal with a report by the Independent Commission on Disarmament and Security Issues (ICDSI) entitled "Common Security—a programme for disarmament".(30) The report of ICDSI—a body of 17 independent international personalities also known as the Palme Commission—had been transmitted to the Disarmament Commission in response to a December 1982 General Assembly request.(31) Differing views were expressed in the Working Group, which was chaired by Curt Lidgard (Sweden), as regards the principles, proposals and recommendations contained in the report (see below, under REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON DISARMAMENT AND SECURITY).

Mexico suggested that the Disarmament Commission give priority to the ICDSI proposal for the establishment of a tactical or battlefield nuclear-weapon-free zone in Europe, and urged NATO and the Warsaw Treaty Organization to negotiate without delay the provisions on geographical delimitation, verification machinery and other relevant points for a treaty or convention to be concluded. Those supporting the proposal, including the German Democratic Republic, considered the move an important confidence-building measure, while the Federal Republic of Germany and others rejected it saying that, in view of the conventional superiority of the Warsaw Treaty Organization in Europe, such a zone would actually increase the risk of confrontation.

On the recommendation of the Working Group, the Disarmament Commission noted that in many cases the proposals of ICDSI dealt with efforts under way in the Commission itself, and recommended that the report be duly taken into account in ongoing and future disarmament efforts.

Consideration by the Committee on Disarmament. In the Committee on Disarmament,⁽¹⁾ several delegations, including Mexico, Romania and Yugoslavia, supported a Swedish proposal to create a battlefield nuclear-weapon-free zone in Central Europe as a confidence-building measure; Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary and Poland not only supported the proposal but also advocated enlarging the zone. Several other delegations, including the Federal Republic of Germany, asserted that the proposal did not meet fully the conditions spelt out in the 1978 Final Document,⁽¹⁴⁾ that the decisive question was where the nuclear weapons were aimed at rather than stationed, and that negotiations leading only to a limited geographical disengagement of such arsenals in Europe would not enhance stability, but merely create an illusion of greater security.

In addition, several States, among them Cuba, Hungary, Romania, Sweden and Yugoslavia, supported the creation of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Northern Europe, with Finland pointing out its long-time interest in the concept. Bulgaria and Romania, supported by Cuba, Hungary and Yugoslavia, reiterated initiatives for the creation of such a zone in the Balkans.

Latin America

Since the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco) by all the five nuclear-weapon States by 1979,⁽³²⁾ only one item concerning that Treaty remained on the General Assembly's agenda: the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I which concerns the application of the Treaty to territories in the Latin American region for which outside States have de jure or de facto responsibility, such as the colonial Powers.

By a letter of 3 October,⁽³³⁾ representatives of 12 Latin American and Caribbean countries transmitted to the Assembly President the text of a 19 May resolution adopted by consensus, along with statements made, at the eighth regular session (Jamaica, 16-19 May) of the General Conference of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America, on a report on the United Kingdom's alleged introduction of nuclear weapons into the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) zone

(see also TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter IV). Annexed to the letter was a note from the United Kingdom affirming its scrupulous observance of its obligations under Additional Protocols I and II of the Treaty, and a note from Argentina describing that statement as unsatisfactory and insufficient.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1983, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/61, as recommended by the First Committee.

Implementation of General Assembly resolution 37/71 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2286(XXII) of 5 December 1967, 3262(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3473(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 32/76 of 12 December 1977, S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 33/58 of 14 December 1978, 34/71 of 11 December 1979, 35/143 of 12 December 1980, 36/83 of 9 December 1981 and 37/71 of 9 December 1982 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco),

Taking into account that within the zone of application of that Treaty, to which twenty-three sovereign States are already parties, there are some territories which, in spite of not being sovereign political entities, are nevertheless in a position to receive the benefits deriving from the Treaty through its Additional Protocol I, to which the States that de jure or de facto are internationally responsible for those territories may become parties,

Recalling that the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the United States of America became parties to Additional Protocol I in 1969, 1971 and 1981, respectively,

1. Deplores that the signature of Additional Protocol I by France, which took place on 2 March 1979, has not yet been followed by the corresponding ratification, notwithstanding the time already elapsed and the pressing invitations which the General Assembly has addressed to it;

2. Once more urges France not to delay any further such ratification, which has been requested so many times;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session an item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 38/61 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America ('Treaty of Tlatelolco')".

Abstaining: Argentina, Belize, Cuba, France, Guyana, Ivory Coast, Malawi, Mali, Venezuela.

In explanation of vote, France and the United States expressed regret that the resolution continued to single out one country for not having ratified the Protocol, while there were countries within the region itself which had not ratified or adhered to the Treaty.

Brazil said its affirmative vote was without prejudice to its belief that it had become necessary after the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) conflict to establish in the Treaty a system of verification of compliance by the nuclear-weapon Powers with all the Treaty's provisions. Argentina and Venezuela reaffirmed that their positions remained the same as in 1982.(34)

While expressing its commitment to the establishment of denuclearized zones throughout the world, Mali said it had abstained due to the wording of paragraphs 1 and 2 which, it believed, interfered with the internal procedures followed by States in relation to their security. Cuba reiterated its position that it was not a party to the Treaty since the nuclear Power in its area had been pursuing what it called a hostile and aggressive policy towards Cuba and continued to maintain a military base on its territory.

Middle East

The Secretary-General, in a September 1983 report,(35) submitted at a December 1982 General Assembly request,(36) informed the Assembly of the absence of further development since then with regard to the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East. He expressed the view that, since establishing such a zone would contribute to the improvement of the situation in the area, further efforts to that end deserved strong support.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 15 December 1983, adopted without vote resolution 38/64.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3263(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3474(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/71 of 10 December 1976, 32/82 of 12 December 1977, 33/64 of 14 December 1978, 34/77 of 11 December 1979, 35/147 of 12 December 1980, 36/87 of 9 December 1981 and 37/75 of 9 December 1982 on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also the recommendations for the establishment of such a zone in the Middle East consistent with paragraphs 60 to 63, in particular paragraph 63 (d), of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Emphasizing the basic provisions of the above-mentioned resolutions, which call upon all parties directly concerned to consider taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East and, pending and during the establishment of such a zone, to declare solemnly that they will refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices and from permitting the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territory by any third party, to agree to place all their nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards and to declare their support for the establishment of the zone and deposit such declarations with the Security Council for consideration, as appropriate,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all States to acquire and develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes,

Emphasizing further the need for appropriate measures on the question of the prohibition of military attacks on nuclear facilities,

Bearing in mind the consensus reached by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East would greatly enhance international peace and security,

Desirous to build on that consensus so that substantial progress can be made towards establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Urges all parties directly concerned to consider seriously taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and, as a means of promoting this objective, invites the States concerned to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Calls upon all States of the region that have not done so, pending the establishment of the zone, to agree to place all their nuclear activities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

3. Invites those States, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East, to declare their support for establishing such a zone, consistent with the relevant paragraph of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and to deposit those declarations with the Security Council;

4. Further invites those States, pending the establishment of the zone, not to develop, produce, test or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons or permit the stationing on their territories, or territories under their control, of nuclear weapons or nuclear explosive devices;

5. Invites the nuclear-weapon States and all other States to render their assistance in the establishment of the zone and at the same time to refrain from any action that runs counter to both the letter and spirit of the present resolution;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East".

15 December 1983 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/38/625) without vote, 23 November (meeting 38); draft by Egypt (A/C.1/38/L.20); agenda item 47.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 1st Committee 3-10, 12-31, 38; plenary 97.

In explanation of its position, Brazil said it did not object to consensus because of the specific characteristics of the situation prevailing in the Middle East. Cuba, India and Zambia asserted that their joining the consensus did not prejudice their positions concerning NPT, mentioned in paragraph 1.

Israel said it joined the consensus despite reservations regarding the modalities included in the text; while it believed that the creation of a zone, modelled after the Treaty of Tlatelolco and based on the initiatives and consultations among the States in the region, would prevent the spread of nuclear weapons to the Middle East, the text omitted mention of the negotiating process, without which such an arrangement was unlikely to come about.

The question of Israeli nuclear armament

In a September 1983 report to the General Assembly,(37) the Secretary-General said he had communicated with both OAU and the League of Arab States with regard to a December 1982 Assembly request(38) for him, in co-operation with those bodies, to follow closely the nuclear and military collaboration between Israel and South Africa. The Secretary-General added that he had continued to follow Israeli nuclear activities, taking into account information published by IAEA, but having received no new information, he had nothing to add to his 1982 report.(39)

Israel, in a 13 September letter to the Secretary-General,(40) expressed the hope that the Assembly would grapple with the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone, rather than deal with the question of attacks on nuclear facilities as in the previous two years (see also Chapter IX of this section). The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, in a 25 March letter,(41) called for international efforts to halt the danger posed by what it called Israel's nuclear collaboration with South Africa and the United States and by such other measures as Israel's threat to destroy nuclear installations in any Arab country (see also Chapter VIII of this section).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1983, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/69, as recommended by the First Committee.

Israeli nuclear armament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on Israeli nuclear armament,

Recalling its relevant resolutions on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East, Recalling also its resolution 35/157 of 12 December 1980 on military and nuclear collaboration with Israel.

Recalling its repeated condemnation of nuclear collaboration between Israel and South Africa,

Recalling Security Council resolution 487(1981) of 19 June 1981 and taking note of the special report of the Special Committee against Apartheid on recent developments concerning relations between Israel and South Africa,

Noting with concern Israel's refusal to comply with Security Council resolution 487(1981),

Further noting with grave concern Israel's persistent refusal to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, despite repeated calls by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the International Atomic Energy Agency, and to place its nuclear facilities under Agency safeguards,

Conscious of the grave consequences which endanger international peace and security as a result of Israel's development and acquisition of nuclear weapons and Israel's collaboration with South Africa to develop nuclear weapons and their delivery systems,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Condemns Israel's refusal to renounce any possession of nuclear weapons and to place all its nuclear activities under international safeguards;

2. Requests the Security Council to take urgent and effective measures to implement its resolution 487(1981) and to ensure that Israel complies with the resolution and places its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

3. Requests the International Atomic Energy Agency to suspend any scientific co-operation with Israel which could contribute to Israel's nuclear capabilities;

4. Reiterates its condemnation of the Israeli threat, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, to repeat its armed attack on peaceful nuclear facilities in Iraq and in other countries;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to follow closely Israel's nuclear activities and the nuclear and military collaboration between Israel and South Africa and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session thereon, as appropriate;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Israeli nuclear armament".

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guinea, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States

Abstaining: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Belgium, Burma, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Japan, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Philippines, Portugal, Swaziland, Sweden, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Zaire.

Prior to adopting the resolution as a whole, the Assembly adopted paragraph 3 by a recorded vote of 79 to 28, with 31 abstentions. The First Committee had approved the same paragraph by a recorded vote-requested by Belgium-of 79 to 26, with 19 abstentions.

In explanation of vote, Israel said the text introduced an imbalance into the international debate on the question and thereby hindered efforts to bring regional problems under control; its alleged nuclear and military co-operation with South Africa was an unsubstantiated speculation, and the text was discriminatory in that it singled out Israel for investigation and was based on a 1981 study by the Group of Experts to Prepare a Study on Israeli Nuclear Armament,(42) whose terms of reference had prejudged the findings.

Peru and the United States also felt that the text was discriminatory in singling out one Member State, while ignoring the number of States which had neither become party to NPT nor placed their nuclear facilities under IAEA safeguards. Venezuela spoke similarly and said it would have abstained had paragraph 1 been put to a vote.

Australia, Belgium, Israel and the United States considered paragraph 3 as interference by the Assembly in the affairs of IAEA, whose Board of Governors and General Conference alone had the competence to act in accordance with the Agency's statutory provisions. Peru expressed similar reservations. In addition, Belgium said scientific co-operation between IAEA and its member States applied to the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, not to armaments. Australia voted against the paragraph and abstained on the text as a whole because of the unconditional call to suspend scientific co-operation with Israel. Costa Rica, which did not participate in the voting on the paragraph or the whole text, added that nuclear weapons should be eliminated not merely in one country but throughout the world.

India said its affirmative votes on the resolution and on paragraph 3 were without prejudice to its stand on full-scale safeguards and on NPT. Peru had reservations about those paragraphs which, it said, contained provisions irreconcilable with the division of responsibilities between the Assembly and the Security Council.

Argentina, recalling its affirmative votes for similar resolutions in past years, said it believed the matter was far more serious at the current session and felt obliged to abstain by virtue of its position of principle.

South Asia

In a 1983 report to the General Assembly,(43) the Secretary-General stated that he had been in contact with States of South Asia with regard to a December 1982 Assembly request(44) that he render assistance required to promote a nuclear-weapon-free zone in that region, but there had been no request by those States for his assistance. In the course of those contacts, a view had been expressed that he should continue to be available for that purpose.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 15 December, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/65.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3265 B (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3476 B (XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/73 of 10 December 1976, 32/83 of 12 December 1977, 33/65 of 14 December 1978, 34/78 of 11 December 1979, 35/148 of 12 December 1980, 36/88 of 9 December 1981 and 37/76 of 9 December 1982 concerning the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

Reiterating its conviction that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various regions of the world is one of the measures which can contribute most effectively to the objectives of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and general and complete disarmament,

Believing that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia, as in other regions, will strengthen the security of the States of the region against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the declarations issued at the highest level by Governments of South Asian States reaffirming their undertaking not to acquire or manufacture nuclear weapons and to devote their nuclear programmes exclusively to the economic and social advancement of their peoples,

Recalling that in the above-mentioned resolutions it called upon the States of the South Asian region, and such other neighbouring non-nuclear-weapon States as might be interested, to make all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the mean time, from any action contrary to this objective,

Further recalling that, in its resolutions 3265 B (XXIX), 31/73 and 32/83, it requested the Secretary-General to convene a meeting for the purpose of the consultations mentioned therein and to render such assistance as might be required to promote the efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

Bearing in mind the provisions of paragraphs 60 to 63 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly regarding the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, including in the region of South Asia,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms its endorsement, in principle, of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

2. Urges once again the States of South Asia, and such other neighbouring non-nuclear-weapon States as may be interested, to continue to make all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the mean time, from any action contrary to this objective;

3. Calls upon those nuclear-weapon States that have not done so to respond positively to this proposal and to extend the necessary co-operation in the efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to render such assistance as may be required to promote the efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to report on the subject to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia".

15 December 1983 Meeting 97 94-3-46 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/38/626) by recorded vote (81-2-42) November (meeting 38); draft by Pakistan (A/C.1/38/L.6); agenda item 48.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 1st Committee 3-10, 12-31, 38; plenary 97.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Bolivia, Botswana, Burundi, Canada, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Democratic Kampuchea, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Bhutan, India, Mauritius

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Belize, Benin, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Ethiopia, Fiji, France, German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Israel, Italy, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Norway, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Sweden, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, Upper Volta, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia.

In explanation of vote, India said that a draft on a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia had become an annual and pointless ritual for the First Committee, that there was no consensus among the countries in the region on setting up such a zone, and that the proposal only introduced a discordant note into the process of fostering beneficial regional co-operation.

Those explaining their affirmative votes or abstentions all expressed support for the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, with some of them listing requirements for their success. Unanimity on the issue based on close consultations among the countries of the region was stressed by Bangladesh, Brazil, Indonesia, Japan and Sri Lanka. For Bangladesh, consensus on the delimitation of the zone was important, and for Sri Lanka, full recognition of the characteristics of the zone. Indonesia and Japan stressed the importance of the initiatives of the countries of the region. The United States believed that effective zones, negotiated and supported by the States of the region, could enhance the security of States and reinforce non-proliferation goals on a regional basis. Zambia reserved its position regarding the second preambular paragraph because of its reference to non-proliferation.

Brazil said the text did not reflect adequately its concerns regarding the requirements for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone, among them a commitment by the nuclear-weapon States to respect the status of the zone and to refrain from interfering in the negotiating process, and provisions on verification of compliance by those Powers with commitments under the instrument establishing a zone. Indonesia and Sweden observed that the resolution did not enjoy unanimous regional support. The Lao People's Democratic Republic felt that it was impossible to establish such a zone in South Asia because there were military bases of imperialist States in the region in which nuclear weapons were stationed.

Preparations for the 1985 Review Conference on the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons

In 1983, the General Assembly considered, at the request of a group of 59 Member States,⁽⁴⁵⁾ a new agenda item entitled "Implementation of the conclusions of the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and establishment of a preparatory committee for the Third Review Conference".

The second quinquennial Review Conference of the Parties to NPT, which had entered into force on 5 March 1970, had been held in 1980(46) to review the operation of the various articles of the instrument. It was not able to agree on a substantive final document, but recommended that a third conference be held in 1985.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 15 December 1983, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/74.

Implementation of the conclusions of the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and establishment of the Preparatory Committee for the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2373(XXII) of 12 June 1968, the annex to which contains the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Noting the provisions of article VIII, paragraph 3, of that Treaty concerning the holding of successive review conferences,

Nothing that in the Final Document of the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, held at Geneva from 11 August to 7 September 1980, the Conference proposed to the Depositary Governments that a third conference to review the operation of the Treaty be convened in 1985 and noting that there appears to be a consensus among the parties that the Third Review Conference should be held at Geneva in August/September of that year,

1. Notes that, following appropriate consultations, an open-ended Preparatory Committee for the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons was formed of parties to the Treaty serving on the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency or represented on the Committee on Disarmament as well as any party to the Treaty which may express its interest in participating in the work of the Preparatory Committee;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to render the necessary assistance and to provide such services, including summary records, as may be required for the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and its preparation.

Review Conference on the 1971 Treaty against weapons of mass destruction on the sea-bed

The Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof (sea-bed Treaty), met at Geneva from 12 to 23 September 1983,(47) with the participation of 45 of the 73 States parties, four signatories and two observer States, as well as two non-governmental organizations. It adopted by consensus a Final Document, which contained the Final Declaration consisting of a preamble and the Conference's article-by-article review of the Treaty, including affirmations and requests concerning its operation and a call for additional States to become parties. The other two parts of the Document dealt with the organization and work of the Conference, and summary records of the plenary meetings.

The Treaty, which was concluded in 1970 by a non-United Nations conference and commended to Member States by the General Assembly,(48) was opened for signature on 11 February 1971 and entered into force on 18 May 1972. Its parties included three nuclear-weapon States-the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States-whose Governments were designated as depositaries of the Treaty. The first Review Conference took place in 1977.(49)

Preparations for the Second Review Conference, including agreements on date, venue and the provisional agenda, had been made by its Preparatory Committee, which held one session at Geneva from 2 to 5 May 1983, with the participation of 42 States parties to the Treaty as well as four non-parties who were signatories (Greece, Lebanon, Madagascar, Senegal).

In the Committee on Disarmament,(1) Sweden reiterated in 1983 its proposal for consideration by the Committee of the major technological developments which affected the operation of the sea-bed Treaty, believing that such developments might lead to increased military use of the sea-bed within either the current scope of the Treaty or an enlarged one.

At the invitation of the Conference Preparatory Committee, the Committee on Disarmament, in an informal meeting on 9 August, considered follow-up measures to the conclusions of the first Review Conference, and provided the Chairman of the Preparatory Committee with summaries of statements by Sweden, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States. While Sweden reiterated its views and urged all States to submit relevant information to the Second Review Conference, the three nuclear-weapon States, each urging the widest possible adherence to the Treaty, said they either had received no official communications on the Treaty or were unaware of any technological developments that affected its operation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1983, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 38/188 B, as recommended by the First Committee.

Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2660(XXV) of 7 December 1970, in which it commended the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof,

Convinced that the Treaty constitutes a step towards the exclusion of the sea-bed, the ocean floor and the subsoil thereof from the arms race,

Recalling that the States parties to the Treaty met at Geneva from 12 to 23 September 1983 to review the operation of the Treaty with a view to assuring that the purposes of the preamble and the provisions of the Treaty were being realized,

Noting with satisfaction that the Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof concluded that the obligations assumed under the Treaty had been faithfully observed by the States parties,

Noting that in its Final Declaration the Review Conference affirmed its belief that universal adherence to the Treaty would enhance international peace and security,

Noting furthermore that the States parties to the Treaty reaffirmed their strong support for and continued dedication to the principles and objectives of the Treaty, as well as their commitment to implement effectively its provisions,

Recognizing that in the Final Declaration the States parties to the Treaty reaffirmed the commitment undertaken in article V to continue negotiations in good faith concerning further measures in the field of disarmament for the prevention of an arms race on the sea-bed, the ocean floor and the subsoil thereof,

1. Welcomes with satisfaction the positive assessment by the Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof of the effectiveness of the Treaty since its entry into force, as reflected in its Final Declaration;

2. Reiterates its expressed hope for the widest possible adherence to the Treaty;

3. Affirms its strong interest in avoiding an arms race in nuclear weapons or any other types of weapons of mass destruction on the sea-bed, the ocean floor or the subsoil thereof;

4. Calls again upon all States to refrain from any action which might lead to the extension of the arms race to the sea-bed and the ocean floor;

5. Requests the Conference on Disarmament, in consultation with the States parties to the Treaty, taking into account existing proposals and any relevant technological developments, to proceed promptly with consideration of further measures in the field of disarmament for the prevention of an arms race on the sea-bed, the ocean floor and the subsoil thereof;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all documents of the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly relevant to further measures in the field of disarmament for the prevention of an arms race on the sea-bed, the ocean floor and the subsoil thereof;

7. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report on its consideration of further measures in the field of disarmament for the prevention of an arms race on the sea-bed, the ocean floor and the subsoil thereof to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

Cessation of nuclear-weapon tests

Negotiations for a treaty against nuclear-weapon tests

The Committee on Disarmament(‘) re-established on 29 March 1983 an Ad Hoc Working Group on a Nuclear-Test Ban, based on the Group’s 1982 mandate, to continue to discuss and define issues relating to verification and compliance with a view to making further progress towards a nuclear-test ban. At the same time, the Committee decided to consider with urgency the question of the Group’s mandate, including the possibility of revising it.

The Working Group, chaired by Gerhard Herder and later by Harald Rose (both of the German Democratic Republic), held 17 meetings between 8 April and 16 August. As in 1982, two nuclear-weapon States (China, France) did not participate. The Group considered documents submitted by, among others, Australia on proposals for the scope of a comprehensive nuclear-test ban, Sweden on a draft treaty banning any nuclear-weapon-test explosion in any environment, the USSR on basic provisions of a treaty on the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests, and the United Kingdom on peaceful explosions in relation to a nuclear-test ban.

The Working Group reported to the Committee that a large number of delegations felt that the Group had fulfilled its mandate by discussing and defining, in 1982 and 1983, all issues relating to verification and compliance of a nuclear-test ban (see below), and that the Group's mandate should be changed so that it could proceed to negotiate without further delay on a nuclear-test-ban treaty. However, some delegations maintained that consideration of the subject was not exhausted and that a number of views expressed during the discussions required further examination. In the absence of consensus, a large number of delegations requested that the question of the mandate be taken up at the beginning of the 1984 session of the Conference on Disarmament (as the Committee would then be known).

Verification measures

During the 1983 meetings of the Ad Hoc Working Group on a Nuclear-Test Ban, of the Committee on Disarmament,⁽¹⁾ it was generally recognized that a verification system of a nuclear-test ban should be based on a combination of national and international measures and could include national technical means, international exchange of seismic data, procedures and mechanisms for consultation and co-operation, a multilateral organ or organs of States parties, procedure for complaints and on-site inspection. As regards an international exchange of seismic data, there was general recognition that such an exchange should be based on the future recommendations of the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events (see below); and that it could consist of a network of seismic stations, use of the Global Telecommunication System of the World Meteorological Organization (WMO), and international data centres.

A number of delegations, including that of one nuclear-weapon State, reaffirmed that the existing means of verification were sufficient to provide reasonable assurance of compliance with a nuclear-test-ban treaty (see above). Others, including two nuclear-weapon States, reiterated that the question of adequacy of means of verification could be defined only by each State individually on the basis of its national requirements. Some delegations believed that, apart from a seismic monitoring network, means of verifying a nuclear-test ban should include a similar network for the monitoring of airborne radioactivity; others, however, questioned the need for such a network.

Documents before the Committee on the subject were submitted by, among others: Australia, on institutional arrangements, and a proposal for an international management panel; Japan, on verification and compliance, and an international seismic data exchange system; Sweden, on international surveillance of airborne radioactivity; and the United Kingdom, on verification aspects.

In 1983, the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts on seismic events, composed of experts from 20 countries and a representative from WMO, held its fifteenth and sixteenth sessions (7-18 February and 11-22 July, respectively). Its Chairman noted that the Group needed one more meeting in 1984 to complete its work, particularly with regard to the detailed technical instructions to be annexed to its report to the Conference on Disarmament.

On 15 June, the WMO Secretary-General responded to an August 1982 communication by the Chairman of the Committee on Disarmament concerning the regular use of the WMO Global Telecommunication System of the World Weather Watch for transmission of data for the detection and identification of seismic events. The WMO Secretary-General stated that the WMO Executive Council (thirty-fifth session, Geneva, May/June) had approved inclusion of seismic bulletins in the global exchange programme, for implementation not later than 1 December 1983.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1983, the General Assembly adopted three resolutions (38/62, 38/63 and 38/72) dealing with the cessation of nuclear-weapon tests.

The question of a nuclear-weapon test ban was also touched upon in other 1983 Assembly resolutions: 38/73 E, on a nuclear-arms freeze; 38/76, on a nuclear-weapon freeze; 38/183 H, on implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session; and 38/183 I, on the report of the Committee on Disarmament. (For texts of these resolutions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

On 15 December, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/62, as recommended by the First Committee.

Cessation of all test explosions of nuclear weapons
The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the complete cessation of nuclear-weapon tests, which has been examined for more than twenty-five years and on which the General Assembly has adopted more than forty resolutions, is a basic objective of the United Nations in the sphere of disarmament, to the attainment of which it has repeatedly assigned the highest priority,

Stressing that on seven different occasions it has condemned such tests in the strongest terms and that, since 1974, it has stated its conviction that the continuance of nuclear-weapon testing will intensify the arms race, thus increasing the danger of nuclear war,

Reiterating the assertion made in several previous resolutions that, whatever may be the differences on the question of verification, there is no valid reason for delaying the conclusion of an agreement on a comprehensive test ban,

Recalling that since 1972 the Secretary-General has declared that all the technical and scientific aspects of the problem have been so fully explored that only a political decision is now necessary in order to achieve final agreement, that when the existing means of verification are taken into account it is difficult to understand further delay in achieving agreement on an underground-test ban, and that the potential risks of continuing underground nuclear-weapon tests would far outweigh any possible risks from ending such tests,

Eking into account that the three nuclear-weapon States which act as depositaries of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water undertook in that Treaty, twenty years ago, to seek the achievement of the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time and that such an undertaking was explicitly reiterated in 1968 in the preamble to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, article VI of which further embodies their solemn and legally binding commitment to take effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear-arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament,

Bearing in mind the growing negative influence that the total lack of compliance with those undertakings had on both the first and the second Review Conferences of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, held at Geneva from 5 to 30 May 1975 and from 11 August to 7 September 1980 respectively,

Convinced that the maintenance of such a situation would not augur well for the third review conference of that Treaty, which is to take place in 1985, and even for the future of the Treaty itself,

Deploring that, due to the persistent obstruction of a very small number of its members, the Committee on Disarmament—which henceforth will be designated as the Conference on Disarmament—has been unable to initiate multilateral negotiation of a treaty for the prohibition of all nuclear-weapon tests, as it was specifically requested to do in General Assembly resolution 37/72 of 9 December 1982,

Noting that the Conference on Disarmament has already received various concrete proposals on this question, including a complete draft for the eventual text of the treaty as a whole,

1. Reiterates once again its grave concern that nuclear-weapon testing continues unabated, against the wishes of the overwhelming majority of Member States;

2. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear-test explosions by all States for all time is a matter of the highest priority;

3. Reaffirms also its conviction that such a treaty would constitute a contribution of the utmost importance to the cessation of the arms race and an indispensable element for the success of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, since it is only through the fulfilment of the obligations under the Treaty that its three depositary Powers may expect all other parties to comply likewise with their respective obligations;

4. Urges once more the three depositary Powers of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to abide strictly by their undertakings to seek to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time and to continue negotiations to this end;

5. Urges also all States that have not yet done so to adhere to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and, meanwhile, to refrain from testing in the environments covered by that Treaty;

6. Reiterates its appeal to all States members of the Conference on Disarmament to initiate immediately the multilateral negotiation of a treaty for the prohibition of all nuclear-weapon tests and to exert their best endeavours in order that the Conference may transmit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session the complete draft of such a treaty;

7. Calls upon the States depositaries of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, by virtue of their special responsibilities under those two Treaties and as a provisional measure, to bring to a halt without delay all nuclear-test explosions, either through a trilaterally agreed moratorium or through three unilateral moratoria;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Cessation of all test explosions of nuclear weapons".

Approved by First Committee (A/38/622) by recorded vote (100-2-28), 22 November (meeting 371: 15-nation draft (A/C.1/38/L.48); agenda item 44.

Abstaining: Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Burma, Canada, Chile, China, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, India, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Solomon Islands, Spain, Turkey, Zambia.

In explanation of vote, the United Kingdom stated that the text referred only to nuclear-weapon tests and avoided the issue of nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes in the context of a comprehensive test ban; the text also proposed a moratorium, which the United Kingdom had consistently rejected.

New Zealand could not accept that the text was restricted to the prohibition of nuclear-weapon testing and objected to the call for a moratorium limited to the three original parties to the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water (partial test-ban Treaty).⁽⁵⁰⁾ Similarly, Samoa believed that a test ban should be general and complete. Argentina, Brazil, India and Zambia explained their abstentions on the grounds of the linkage established in the text between a test-ban treaty and NPT.

Fiji had a reservation because the text was limited to weapon tests, but voted in favour because of its policy of general support for such initiatives. Algeria shared the concerns expressed in the resolution, despite some reservations. Ireland agreed with the general thrust of the text but would not draw the conclusions contained in paragraph 3 which, it said, detracted unfairly from the value of NPT. The USSR agreed with the appeal contained in the text for an immediate initiation of negotiations on a nuclear-test-ban treaty, expressed willingness to examine proposals submitted by other States on the subject, and said it had proposed a moratorium on nuclear tests until the conclusion of an agreement. Mongolia said it regarded paragraph 5 as particularly important and expressed concern that not all the nuclear Powers were represented in the Working Group of the Committee on Disarmament. Cuba stated that its affirmative vote should not be interpreted as a change in its position with respect to the partial test-ban Treaty.

France explained its position on all three drafts (see below under resolution 38/72).

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 15 December, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/63.

Urgent need for a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty

The General Assembly,

Convinced of the urgent need for a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty capable of attracting the widest possible international support and adherence,

Reaffirming its conviction that an end to nuclear-weapon testing by all States in all environments would be a major step towards ending the qualitative improvement, development and proliferation of nuclear weapons, a means of relieving the deep apprehension concerning the harmful consequences of radioactive contamination for the health of present and future generations and a measure of the utmost importance in bringing the nuclear-arms race to an end,

Recalling that the parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water undertook not to carry out any nuclear-weapon-test explosion, or any other nuclear explosion, in the environments covered by that Treaty, and that in that Treaty and in the Treaty on the Non-proliferation of Nuclear Weapons the parties expressed their determination to continue negotiations to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time,

Recalling also its previous resolutions on this subject,

Taking into account that part of the report of the Committee on Disarmament concerning consideration of the item entitled "Nuclear-test ban" during its session in 1983,

Noting, in particular, that Sweden submitted to the Committee on Disarmament a draft treaty banning any nuclear-weapon-test explosion in any environment which took into account both the report on the trilateral negotiations submitted to the Committee in 1980 and the basic provisions of a treaty on the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests proposed by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in 1982,

Recognizing the important role of the Conference on Disarmament in the negotiation of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty,

Recognizing the importance to such a treaty of the work assigned by the Committee on Disarmament to the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events on a global network of stations for the exchange of seismological data,

Recalling paragraph 31 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, relating to verification of disarmament and arms control agreements, which stated that the form and modalities of the verification to be provided for in any specific agreement depend on, and should be determined by, the purposes, scope and nature of the agreement,

1. Reiterates its profound concern that, despite the express wishes of the majority of Member States, nuclear-weapon testing continues;

2. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear-test explosions by all States for all time is a matter of the greatest importance;

3. Expresses the conviction that such a treaty would constitute a vital element for the success of efforts to halt and reverse the nuclear-arms race and the qualitative improvement of nuclear weapons, and to prevent the expansion of existing nuclear arsenals and the spread of nuclear weapons to additional countries;

4. Notes that the Committee on Disarmament, in the exercise of its responsibilities as the multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, re-established at its session in 1983 an Ad Hoc Working Group under item 1 of its agenda, entitled "Nuclear-test ban", and that the Ad Hoc Working Group considered the issues under its mandate;

5. Also notes that the Committee on Disarmament agreed that the mandate of the Ad Hoc Working Group on a Nuclear-Test Ban may thereafter be revised as decided by the Committee, which will consider this question with appropriate urgency, and that the Committee discussed the matter;

6. Requests the Conference on Disarmament:

(a) To resume its examination of issues relating to a comprehensive test ban, with a view to the negotiation of a treaty on the subject and, in accordance with that part of the report of the Committee concerning this item, to take up the question of a revised mandate for the Ad Hoc Working Group during its 1984 session;

(b) To determine, in the context of its negotiations on such a treaty, the institutional and administrative arrangements necessary for establishing, testing and operating an international seismic monitoring network as part of an effective verification system;

(c) To initiate investigation of other international measures to improve verification arrangements under such a treaty, including an international network to monitor atmospheric radioactivity;

7. Urges all members of the Conference on Disarmament, in particular the nuclear-weapon States, to co-operate with the Conference in fulfilling these tasks;

8. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to report on progress to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Urgent need for a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty".

15 December 1983 Meeting 97 117-0-29 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/38/623) by recorded vote (99-0-31), 22 November (meeting 37); 23-nation draft (A/C.1/38/L.35); agenda item 45.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 1st Committee 3-10, 12-31, 32, 37; plenary 97.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Indonesia, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Argentina, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, France, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Israel, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Peru, Poland, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Zambia.

In explanation of their positions, the German Democratic Republic and the USSR said the text did not provide for practical negotiations on the issue and the request to the Conference on Disarmament in paragraph 6 (a) was insufficient. The USSR also objected to paragraph 6 (c), as did India, which saw it as unnecessary, and held that by including such issues the text would impede progress in the Conference on Disarmament.

Brazil supported the procedural recommendations contained in paragraph 6 as representing a positive trend towards starting negotiations; its affirmative vote was not to be taken as an endorsement of paragraphs dealing with the future scope of a test-ban treaty. Along with India, which considered the existing means of verification to be adequate, Indonesia felt that the request to the Conference on Disarmament for resumed examination constituted a retrogression from the previous stance of the Assembly, and called for the immediate start of negotiations and the revision of the Group's mandate.

Argentina, while supporting the banning of weapons tests, found the scope of the text to be too general. Ireland regretted that the text did not convey a greater sense of urgency. Algeria felt that the text was not in conformity with the consensus established in the 1978 Final Document, and said its support for the text was limited to those aspects which were in keeping with the provisions of that Document.

On 15 December, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/72, as recommended by the First Committee.

Immediate cessation and prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned over the continuing nuclear-arms race and the growing danger of nuclear war,

Convinced that the conclusion of a multilateral treaty on the prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests by all States would constitute a vital element for the success of efforts to halt and reverse the nuclear-arms race and the qualitative improvement of nuclear weapons, and to prevent the expansion of existing nuclear arsenals and the spread of nuclear weapons to additional countries,

Convinced also that the elaboration of such a treaty is a task of the highest priority and should not be made dependent on the attainment of any other measure in the field of disarmament,

Deplored that the Committee on Disarmament has to date been unable to carry out negotiations with a view to reaching agreement on such a treaty,

Recalling its previous resolutions on this subject,

1. Urges all States to exert every effort for the speediest elaboration of a multilateral treaty on the prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests by all States;

2. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to proceed promptly to negotiations with a view to elaborating such a treaty as a matter of the highest priority, taking into account all existing drafts and proposals and future initiatives, and for that purpose to assign to its subsidiary body a negotiating mandate under an appropriate item of its agenda;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session an item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 38/72 on the immediate cessation and prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests".

15 December 1983 Meeting 97 118-4-24 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/38/635) by recorded vote (98-4-26), 22 November (meeting 371; 12-nation draft (A/C.1/38/L.29); agenda item 57.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: China, France, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Germany, Federal Republic of, Guatemala, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Paraguay, Peru, Portugal, Saint Lucia, Solomon Islands, Spain, Turkey, Venezuela.

The United Kingdom stated that it cast a negative vote because the text referred only to nuclear-weapon tests, avoiding the issue of nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes on which there were fundamental differences to be resolved. New Zealand, for that reason and for lack of mention in the text about the need for verification, abstained. Samoa abstained because of its conviction that a test ban should be general and complete.

Fiji felt that the text, despite its unnecessary, politically motivated tone, addressed the urgency of the immediate prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests. Ireland said it voted affirmatively with some hesitation in view of what it considered as the restricted nature of the scope of the proposals contained in the text. Argentina believed the resolution referred satisfactorily to the complete prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests.

Explaining its position on all three drafts, France held that any test ban should be placed within the framework of an effective nuclear disarmament process. It could not, therefore, associate itself with such proposals until the two main nuclear Powers, by reducing their arsenals, had created conditions that would, in turn, permit France to enter into commitments, including those relating to its own nuclear testing.

Fissionable materials for nuclear weapons

At the General Assembly's 1983 regular session, the question of prohibiting the production of fissionable materials for nuclear explosive devices was taken up under the item on general and complete disarmament.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December 1983, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/188 E.

Prohibition of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/91 H of 16 December 1978, 34/87 D of 11 December 1979, 35/156 H of 12 December 1980, 36/97 G of 9 December 1981 and 37/99 E of 13 December 1982, in which it requested the Committee on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of the implementation of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects", to consider urgently the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration,

Noting that the agenda of the Committee on Disarmament for 1983 included the item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament" and that the Committee's programme of work for both parts of the session held in 1983 contained this item,

Recalling the proposals and statements made in the Committee on Disarmament on that item,

Considering that the cessation of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes and the progressive conversion and transfer of stocks to peaceful uses would be a significant step towards halting and reversing the nuclear-arms race,

Considering that the prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other explosive devices also would be an important measure in facilitating the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons and explosive devices,

Requests the Conference on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects", to pursue its consideration of the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the General Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration.

In explanation of vote, Algeria said that, while all opportunities for dialogue and negotiation should be encouraged, its support for the text was limited to those aspects that were in conformity with the consensus established in the 1978 Final Document.⁽¹⁴⁾ Argentina asserted that, although some objectionable elements contained in previous drafts on the subject had been mitigated, it still had reservations about the scope of the proposal. India maintained that attempts to separate the question of fissionable material for weapons purposes from other aspects of the nuclear disarmament process were inconsistent with the consensus in paragraph 50 of the Final Document; it felt that simultaneous cessation of the production of both nuclear weapons and fissionable materials for weapons purposes would facilitate universal acceptance of equitable and non-discriminatory safeguards on all nuclear facilities. The USSR believed that prohibiting the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes should be examined, but as one of the first steps in nuclear disarmament leading to the elimination of nuclear weapons.

The Assembly's call for stopping the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes was also contained in its 1983 resolutions 38/73 B, 38/73 E and 38/76, concerning a freeze on nuclear weapons. (For texts of these resolutions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States

The Committee on Disarmament⁽¹⁾ continued to consider in 1983 an agenda item entitled "Effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons", arrangements also known as negative security assurances. Discussion took place in the Committee and in an ad hoc working group set up in 1979 and re-established on 29 March 1983 under the chairmanship of Mansur Ahmad (Pakistan).

The Working Group held nine meetings between 26 and 29 April and between 16 June and 22 August. Among documents submitted to the Working Group in 1983 was one by the Group of 21, in which Group members reaffirmed adherence to principles they had set out in 1982.⁽⁵¹⁾ They stated that the inflexibility of the concerned nuclear-weapon States to remove the limitations, conditions and exceptions contained in their unilateral declarations ran counter to their obligations to extend credible security assurances to the non-nuclear-weapon States. The Group of 21 urged them to display the necessary political will so as to enable the Working Group to resume its work.

In its conclusions and recommendations, the Working Group reaffirmed the need for effective security guarantees to non-nuclear-weapon States, and stated that no progress had been achieved on a common formula acceptable to all nor on an international convention, due to specific difficulties related to differing perceptions of security interests of some States and to the complexity of the issues. The Working Group recommended to the Committee on Disarmament that ways should be explored to overcome the difficulties, that a working group be re-established in 1984 and that consultations take place to determine the most appropriate course of action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1983, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions, 38/67 and 38/68, on security assurances for non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons.

On 15 December, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/67, as recommended by the First Committee.

Conclusion of an international convention on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Convinced of the need to take effective measures for the strengthening of the security of States and prompted by the desire shared by all nations to eliminate war and prevent nuclear conflagration,

Taking into account the principle of non-use of force or threat of force enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and reaffirmed in a number of United Nations declarations and resolutions,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing that effective measures to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can constitute a positive contribution to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Noting with satisfaction the desire of States in various regions to prevent nuclear weapons from being introduced into their territories, including through the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned, and being anxious to contribute to the attainment of this objective,

Concerned at the continuing escalation of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and the increased danger of recourse to use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Recalling its resolutions on this subject as well as the relevant part of the special report of the Committee on Disarmament, submitted to the General Assembly, at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Noting that the Committee on Disarmament considered in 1983 the item entitled "Effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons" and the work done by its Ad Hoc Working Group on this item, as reflected in the report of the Committee on Disarmament,

Noting the proposals submitted under that item in the Committee on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention, and the widespread international support for the conclusion of such a convention,

Wishing to promote an early and successful completion of the negotiations in the Conference on Disarmament, aimed at the elaboration of a convention on the item,

Further noting that the idea of interim arrangements as a first step towards the conclusion of such a convention has also been considered in the Committee on Disarmament, particularly in the form of a Security Council resolution on this subject, and reaffirming the calls made in that respect in General Assembly resolutions 35/154 of 12 December 1980, 36/94 of 9 December 1981 and 37/80 of 9 December 1982,

Convinced that abandoning policies of first use of nuclear weapons would, inter alia, constitute a substantive contribution to the efforts to achieve progress towards effective strengthening of the security guarantees for non-nuclear-weapon States,

Welcoming once again the solemn declarations made by some nuclear-weapon States concerning non-first-use of nuclear weapons, in particular the obligation not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, assumed at the highest political level or confirmed at the twelfth special session of the General Assembly,

Convinced further that, if all nuclear-weapon States were to assume obligations not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, that would be tantamount, in practice, to banning the use of nuclear weapons against all States, including all non-nuclear-weapon States,

Considering that, in the search for a solution to the problem of security assurances, priority should be given to the legitimate security concerns of the non-nuclear-weapon States which, by virtue of their forgoing the nuclear option and of not allowing nuclear weapons to be stationed on their territories, have every right to expect to be most effectively guaranteed against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

1. Reaffirm once again the urgent need to reach agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Committee on Disarmament there is once again no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention on this subject, although the difficulties involved have also been pointed out;

3. Expresses its regret that the difficulties as regards evolving a common approach acceptable to all, related to differing perceptions of security interests of some nuclear-weapon States and non-nuclear-weapon States, have once again prevented the Committee on Disarmament from making substantive progress towards the achievement of an agreement;

4. Considers that the Conference on Disarmament should continue to explore ways and means to overcome the difficulties encountered in the negotiations to reach an appropriate agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

5. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to continue the negotiations, as recommended in the report of the Committee on Disarmament on its 1983 session, with a view to concluding an international instrument of a legally binding character to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Conclusion of an international convention on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

On 15 December, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/68, as recommended by the First Committee.

Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need to allay the legitimate concern of the States of the world with regard to ensuring lasting security for their peoples,

Convinced that nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to mankind and to the survival of civilization,

Deeply concerned at the continuing escalation of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and the possibility of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Convinced that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Taking into account the principle of the non-use of force or threat of force enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Deeply concerned about the possibility of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Recognizing that the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of non-nuclear-weapon States need to be safeguarded against the use or threat of use of force, including the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing that effective measures to assure the non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can constitute a positive contribution to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Recalling its resolutions 3261 G (XXIX) of 9 December 1974 and 31/189 C of 21 December 1976,

Bearing in mind paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

Recalling its resolutions 33/72 of 14 December 1978, 34/85 of 11 December 1979, 35/155 of 12 December 1980, 36/95 of 9 December 1981 and 37/81 of 9 December 1982,

Further recalling paragraph 12 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, which states, inter alia, that all efforts should be exerted by the Committee on Disarmament urgently to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Welcoming the in-depth negotiations undertaken in the Committee on Disarmament and its Ad Hoc Working Group on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to reaching agreement on this item,

Noting the proposals submitted under that item in the Committee on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention,

Taking note of the decision of the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, as well as the relevant recommendations of the Organization of the Islamic Conference reiterated at the Thirteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Niamey from 22 to 26 August 1982, calling upon the Committee on Disarmament to elaborate and reach an agreement on an international basis to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Further noting the support expressed in the Committee on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, as well as the difficulties pointed out in evolving a common approach acceptable to all,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to reach agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Committee on Disarmament there is no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, although the difficulties as regards evolving a common approach acceptable to all have also been pointed out;

3. Appeals to all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, to demonstrate the political will necessary to reach agreement on a common approach and, in particular, on a common formula which could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding character;

4. Recommends that further intensive efforts should be devoted to the search for such a common approach or common formula and that the various alternative approaches, including in particular those considered in the Committee on Disarmament, should be further explored in order to overcome the difficulties;

5. Recommends that the Conference on Disarmament should actively continue negotiations with a view to reaching early agreement and concluding effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, taking into account the widespread support for the conclusion of an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

Approved by First Committee (A/38/631) by recorded vote (91-0-5), 23 November (meeting 38); draft by Pakistan (A/C.1/38/L.7); agenda item 53.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 1st Committee 3-10, 12-32, 38; plenary 97.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Argentina, Brazil, India, Philippines, United Kingdom, United states.

Speaking in explanation of vote on both drafts, Brazil said the attitude of the nuclear-weapon States had compelled it to revise its position and to withdraw support it had previously extended to such proposals. Argentina spoke similarly and said it was increasingly convinced of an impasse having been reached; new ways needed to be found to make progress towards a truly satisfactory solution.

Japan explained that it had reservations on parts of the text which became resolution 38/67 concerning a specific procedure of negative security assurances, since it would prejudice the work of the Conference on Disarmament; despite similar reservations, it believed the text which became resolution 38/68 reflected the trend of the work of the Working Group, in particular reference to a common formula, and hoped the Conference would continue efforts in that direction.

Ireland felt that the first text did not take into account the possibility of different approaches to the achievement of international arrangements and favoured the idea of an international convention which would seem to imply further obligations for non-nuclear-weapon States. Sharing that view, Sweden added that that text specifically underlined the importance of a convention, which had a direct bearing on Sweden's policy of neutrality. The Netherlands said that although it saw some positive changes in the text's wording compared with those of previous years, it could not condone the accusations against some countries of having prevented the Committee on Disarmament from making progress towards an agreement; it considered the non-first-use of weapons, rather than of nuclear weapons, as the fundamental pledge; and it maintained its reservations about a convention as the form of agreement.

Other weapons of mass destruction

Efforts continued in 1983 in the Committee on Disarmament and the General Assembly to agree on measures for prohibiting the use and development of chemical, biological, radiological and other weapons of mass destruction.

In December, the Assembly adopted resolutions 38/187 A and B in which it urged the Conference on Disarmament in 1984 (as the Committee on Disarmament would then be known) to continue negotiations on, or submit to the Assembly, a draft convention prohibiting chemical weapons. In resolution 38/187 C, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to complete the task it had entrusted to him in 1982 to devise, with the assistance of consultant experts, procedures for investigating possible chemical weapons use. It also asked the Conference, in resolution 38/188 D, to conclude a draft convention banning radiological weapons and to continue searching for a solution to prohibit attacks on nuclear facilities.

The Assembly further requested the Conference, in resolution 38/182, to intensify negotiations for a draft comprehensive agreement on the prohibition of new types and systems of weapons of mass destruction, and called on militarily significant States to declare their refusal to create such weapons.

Chemical and biological weapons

Implementation of the 1925 Protocol

Communications. In 1983, the Secretary-General received a number of communications on the implementation of a December 1982 General Assembly resolution(1) calling for compliance with the 1925 Geneva Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare. By that resolution, the Assembly had decided, among other things, to establish procedures to investigate possible violations of the Protocol, and requested the Secretary-General to devise procedures for such investigation, compile lists of experts and laboratories that could be called on, and conduct investigations with the assistance of experts.

The USSR, in a 30 March 1983 letter,(2) said the 1982 Assembly resolution was illegal and contradicted the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties,(3) as it increased the scope of obligations assumed by States parties to the Protocol, with the participation of non-parties to that instrument. The USSR also objected that the resolution attempted to give the Secretary-General the functions, not assigned to him under the Charter of the United Nations, of monitoring the implementation of a disarmament agreement.

Similarly, by a letter of 18 April,(4) Viet Nam said the resolution had widened the commitments of the States parties to the 1925 Protocol without their approval; those wishing to amend and revise it should do so at the ongoing Geneva talks on a new convention on the prohibition of chemical weapons.

The United States, on 27 April,(5) stated that the prohibition contained in the 1925 Protocol had become part of customary international law and was thus binding on all States; the 1982 Assembly resolution allowed States to work together and with the Secretary-General in investigating possible violations and constituted an important step forward in helping to bring about an end to the use of chemical and toxin weapons.

Similar views were expressed by three States. The Federal Republic of Germany, on 13 June,(6) added that the procedures envisaged represented a confidence-building measure in the efforts to free mankind from the threat of the use of chemical weapons. The United Kingdom, on 24 June,(7) also considered the mechanism envisaged by the Assembly as temporary until an effective chemical weapons convention came into operation. France, the sole depositary of the 1925 Protocol, in a 26 August letter,(8) spoke in like manner and observed that Article 11 of the Charter allowed the Assembly to make recommendations on disarmament, and hence it could, subject to conditions laid down in Article 98, entrust the Secretary-General with specific functions within the framework thereby established. The Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States also affirmed their commitment to the early conclusion of a comprehensive and verifiable ban on the development, production and stockpiling of chemical weapons. France and the United Kingdom expressed regret over the USSR declaration that it did not intend to carry out the recommendations contained in the 1982 Assembly resolution.

On 10 October,(9) Democratic Kampuchea transmitted three letters from its Prime Minister—two of 28 and 29 January to France and another of 26 September to the Secretary-General—stating that it had decided to recognize the 1925 Protocol as ipso binding; the 28 January letter added that Democratic Kampuchea reserved the right to consider the Protocol no longer binding when the prohibitions laid down in it ceased to be respected by any enemy's armed forces.

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1983, the Secretary-General submitted a report(10)—containing two annexes—to the Assembly, as requested in 1982.(1)

Annex I contained the replies of 25 Member States to his request for the names of qualified experts and laboratories whose services they might be in a position to provide. While a number of Western and other States submitted lists of experts and laboratories, three Eastern European States explained their reasons for opposing the implementation of the 1982 resolution.

Annex II contained the report of the Group of Consultant Experts, which held two sessions in New York from 9 to 20 May and from 22 August to 2 September 1983. The Group comprised experts from Austria, Ecuador, Egypt, France, Sweden and the United States, acting in their personal capacities. The report consisted of three main chapters: organization of work and summary of proceedings, procedures devised by the Group, and the assembling and systematic organization of documentation. The chapter on procedures dealt with criteria to guide the Secretary-General in deciding whether or not to initiate an investigation, follow-up actions related to the initiation of an investigation, and guidance for, and tasks relating to, the organization and conduct of an investigation. The Group's report also contained four appendices dealing with various aspects of an investigation.

The Group pointed out that, because of the complexity of the subject-matter and the short time available, it had not been possible to review thoroughly certain aspects, particularly those concerning the assembling and organization of documentation and some parts of main sections dealing with procedures.

Against: Afghanistan, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mongolia, Mozambique, Poland, Syrian Arab Republic, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Viet Nam, Abstaining: Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahrain, Barbados, Benin, Brazil, Burma, Cape Verde, Chile, Cyprus, Finland, Guinea-Bissau, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Madagascar, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Qatar, Seychelles, Sri Lanka, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

In explanation of vote, Chile and Mexico maintained that a treaty could be amended only with the participation of all the States parties. Similarly, the Byelorussian SSR, Poland, the USSR and Viet Nam said the setting up of verification machinery under the 1982 Assembly resolution, and its continued implementation under the 1983 text, either violated the Protocol or the norms of international law. Argentina and India considered that move a bad precedent. Afghanistan said the 1983 resolution followed the same line as that of the 1982 text. Algeria, although considering the 1983 proposal to be purely procedural, and Yugoslavia, favouring effective systems of verification and control, abstained as the text advocated further continuation of the action begun earlier.

Poland and Viet Nam added that they viewed the text as undermining the Secretary-General's neutral status by forcing him to become involved in highly sensitive, controversial political issues. The Lao People's Democratic Republic said the United States used the initiative to interfere in the internal affairs of other countries on the pretext that chemical weapons were being used in South-East Asia.

Democratic Kampuchea supported the renewal of the mandate so that the Secretary-General and the Group of Consultant Experts could complete the work entrusted to them.

Canada believed the terms of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties were in harmony with those of the Protocol and, moreover, regarded the text as a procedural one based on the concept that it was important for the United Nations to continue work already begun. New Zealand welcomed that a number of countries had participated in implementing the 1982 resolution which provided for interim procedures to uphold the authority of the 1925 Protocol; it rejected the argument that the procedures involved extended the scope of an obligation under the Protocol. Indonesia said its affirmative vote should not be interpreted as in any way contrary to its position that the objectives of the text would be met more appropriately by a comprehensive convention on chemical weapons, such as that being sought by the Committee on Disarmament (to be known as the Conference on Disarmament in 1984).

A draft resolution,⁽¹¹⁾ entitled chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons, was withdrawn by the sponsors (Somalia, Swaziland, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay), citing the heavy work-load of the First Committee and the Chairman's desire to minimize the number of proposals before that body. The draft would have had the Assembly call anew for strict observance of existing legal constraints on chemical and bacteriological weapons and condemn contrary actions, welcome the ongoing efforts to ensure the most effective constraints on such weapons, and urge the Conference on Disarmament to accelerate its negotiations aimed at eliminating such weapons.

Draft convention on chemical weapons

Activities of the Committee on Disarmament. In 1983, negotiations on a convention banning chemical weapons continued in the Committee on Disarmament⁽¹²⁾ which re-established on 29 March an Ad Hoc Working Group on Chemical Weapons under the chairmanship of D. S. McPhail (Canada). The Working Group held 23 meetings between 6 April and 22 August; in addition, the Chairman held a number of informal consultations. The Group's report was incorporated into the Committee's report to the General Assembly.

In an effort to resolve the remaining areas of disagreement and to record those of agreement, the Working Group set up, on the Chairman's proposal, four contact groups to deal with specific spheres of the convention: existing stockpiles, compliance provisions and verification issues, prohibition of use, and definitions. The remaining two major issues—destruction of existing means of production and non-production, and other issues requiring attention, such as the prohibition of transfers and non-development were considered by the Working Group itself.

The Working Group's report consisted of four chapters and two annexes: annex I, containing the substantive provisions which it considered should be included in a convention; and annex II, containing the mandates of the co-ordinators of the four contact groups and their reports submitted to the Working Group.

The Committee on Disarmament accepted the recommendations made by the Ad Hoc Working Group: that the views set forth in annex I to its report be used as a basis for the Group's future work; that the views in annex II, including the draft formulations for possible use in a future convention, together with other relevant reports and documents of the Committee, also be utilized in the further elaboration of a convention; and that the Working Group resume negotiations in 1984 aimed at the final elaboration of a convention at the earliest date.

The Committee decided on 26 August that the Working Group on Chemical Weapons should resume its activities on 16 January 1984.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1983, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions, 38/187 A and B, on a convention banning chemical weapons.

The call on the Committee (Conference) on Disarmament for a speedy elaboration of such a convention was also repeated in Assembly resolutions 38/183 H and I.

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/187 A, as recommended by the First Committee.

Prohibition of chemical and bacteriological weapons
The General Assembly,

Recalling paragraph 75 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, which states that the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and their destruction represents one of the most urgent measures of disarmament,

Referring to the unanimous and categorical reaffirmation by all Member States at the twelfth special session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, of the validity of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

Convinced of the need for the earliest conclusion of a convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction, which would significantly contribute to general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Recalling its resolutions 36/96 B of 9 December 1981 and 37/98 A of 13 December 1982,

Expressing profound concern at the intended production and deployment of binary chemical weapons,

Taking into consideration the decision by the Committee on Disarmament on the mandate for the Ad Hoc Working Group on Chemical Weapons, as well as the work of this Group during the session of the Committee on Disarmament in 1983,

Deeming it desirable for States to refrain from taking any action that could delay or further complicate negotiations,

Aware that the qualitative improvement and development of chemical weapons complicate ongoing negotiations on the prohibition of chemical weapons,

Taking note of proposals on the creation of chemical-weapon-free zones aimed at facilitating the complete prohibition of chemical weapons,

1. Reaffirms the necessity of the speediest elaboration and conclusion of a convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction;

2. Appeals to all States to facilitate in every possible way the conclusion of such a convention;

3. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to intensify the negotiations in the Ad Hoc Working Group on Chemical Weapons in fulfilment of its present mandate, to achieve accord on a chemical weapons convention at the earliest possible date and, for this purpose, to proceed immediately to drafting such a convention for submission to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

4. Reaffirms its call to all States to refrain from any action that could impede negotiations on the prohibition of chemical weapons and specifically to refrain from the production and deployment of binary and other new types of chemical weapons, as well as from stationing chemical weapons on the territory of other States.

Approved by First Committee (A/38/639) by recorded vote (73-1-49), 23 November (meeting 39): 12-nation draft (A/C.1/38/L.11/Rev.1); agenda item 61.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Belgium, Brazil, Burma, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Democratic Kampuchea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Japan, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Paraguay, Philippines, Portugal, Seychelles, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom, Uruguay.

^aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

In explanation of vote, New Zealand said it could not support the text because it lacked balance in its approach and threatened to hinder rather than advance the work of the Conference on Disarmament; there was no justification for singling out one kind of chemical weapon while ignoring the existing large arsenals of other kinds. Similarly, Brazil said the convention should encompass all types of chemical weapons and expressed reservations as regards the concept of chemical-weapon-free zones. Those views were shared by Australia, which added that the scope of a future chemical weapons convention failed to include a ban on use, and that the measure called for in paragraph 4 was not verifiable. India was unable to support the setting up of such zones as an interim measure, holding that all efforts should be directed towards the early conclusion of a multilateral convention that would eliminate chemical weapons. The Netherlands regarded the text as an unbalanced and one-sided document which affected the consensus on a chemical weapons ban and which, while criticizing the possible resumption of the production of such weapons by a Power which had long respected a unilateral moratorium, did not effectively refute the continuing reports of their use, with which the text's sponsors would be associated.

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote on 20 December resolution 38/187 B.

Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions relating to the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and to their destruction,

Reaffirming the necessity of strict observance by all States of the principles and objectives of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and of the adherence by all States to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, signed in London, Moscow and Washington on 10 April 1972,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Disarmament, which includes, inter alia, the report of its Ad Hoc Working Group on Chemical Weapons,

Considering it necessary that all efforts be exerted for the resumption and successful conclusion of negotiations on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction,

1. Takes note of the work of the Committee on Disarmament during its session in 1983 regarding the prohibition of chemical weapons and, in particular, appreciates the work of its Ad Hoc Working Group on Chemical Weapons and the progress achieved therein;

2. Expresses its regret that an agreement on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction has not yet been elaborated;

3. Urges the Conference on Disarmament, as a matter of high priority, to intensify, during its session in 1984, the negotiations on a convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction, taking into account all existing proposals and future initiatives with a view to the final elaboration of a convention at the earliest possible date, and to re-establish its Ad Hoc Working Group on Chemical Weapons for this purpose;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report on the results of its negotiations to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

20 December 1983 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/38/639) without vote. 23 November (meeting 39); 17-nation draft (A/C.1/38/L.41); agenda item 61.

Democratic Kampuchea said that Viet Nam's sponsorship of the drafts that became resolutions 38/187 A and B demonstrated that country's hypocrisy and cynicism.

Alleged uses of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons

In 1983, the Secretary-General received a series of communications relating to alleged uses of chemical weapons in various parts of Asia (see also Chapter VI of this section).

By a letter of 4 February,⁽¹³⁾ the USSR submitted a critique prepared by Soviet experts, evaluating a November 1982 United States report⁽¹⁴⁾ which alleged chemical weapons use by the USSR and its allies in South-East Asia and Afghanistan. The critique declared that the so-called new evidence supporting the allegation did not stand up to scientific scrutiny: it was a mixture of slanderous conjecture and distortion, and, to give the report a semblance of objectivity, made references to an on-site study⁽¹⁴⁾ in Thailand by Dr. H. Bruno Schiefer, whose work in that country, however, was devoted to lecturing on mycotoxins and distributing information on trichothecene mycotoxicoses and various questionnaires.

Finding the USSR critique to contain what it termed an attack on the scientific integrity of Dr. Schiefer's study and on Canada's motive in commissioning the study, Canada said by a letter of 18 March ⁽¹⁵⁾ that it found it necessary to provide an assessment of the critique as it applied to the study. The assessment stated that the critique, by not identifying Dr. Schiefer as a national of Canada, gave the impression that he was working for the United States Department of State, and tried to undercut the study's objectivity by ascribing a motive, namely, to train the reported victims and witnesses of chemical poisoning to give false testimony; the assessment concluded that the attempt to mislead by omission, misquotation, quotation out of context and misinterpretation had destroyed whatever credibility the USSR critique might otherwise have had.

Viet Nam, by a letter of 18 April,(16) transmitted the documents of the International Symposium on Herbicides and Defoliants in War: The long-term effects on man and nature (Ho Chi Minh City, Viet Nam, 14-19 January). According to its report, the Symposium was attended by more than 160 scientists and experts from 21 countries, as well as observers from the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to discuss the effects of what Viet Nam called the United States chemical warfare in Viet Nam between 1961 and 1975.

Democratic Kampuchea transmitted on 23 February(17) and on 12 April(18) lists of incidents which it claimed represented the uses of chemical and bacteriological weapons against it by Viet Nam, between December 1982 and March 1983. On 21 March,(19) Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a 16 March statement by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs denouncing what it called the intensified chemical weapons use by Viet Nam against the Kampuchean civilian population. It requested that the letter, accompanied by photographs, be also brought to the attention of the Group of Consultant Experts on the implementation of the 1925 Geneva Protocol (see above).

On 4 August,(20) the United States submitted a further report on the use of chemical and toxin weapons, based on the scientific analysis of what it said were blood samples drawn from victims in Kampuchea and in the Lao People's Democratic Republic.

By a letter dated 3 November,(21) Iran informed the Security Council, through the Secretary-General, of what it called the chemical weapons attacks by Iraq; Iran said it would be helpful if the Secretary-General's representative were given a mandate to examine the relevant medical and military evidence. On 9 November,(22) Iran reported what it called further Iraqi attacks on Iranian civilian targets, involving the use of chemical weapons in some cases. It further reported, on the same date,(23) that its Mission to the United Nations had received samples of what it claimed as evidence of Iraq's chemical weapons attack against Iran on 25 October, and that they were available for inspection by any expert who might be assigned by the Secretary-General. Asserting that Iraq persisted in its chemical attacks on Iranian civilian targets, Iran expressed the hope, on 16 November,(24) that the Secretary-General would dispatch a team of experts to the sites of attacks which it claimed had occurred on 21 and 30 October, to verify the use of chemical weapons by Iraq, before the traces of the chemicals disappeared.

By a letter of 29 November,(25) Iraq rejected the allegations by Iran as diversion and procrastination tactics aimed at disengagement from international obligations to halt the war and to abide by the relevant Security Council resolutions. It also rejected any response to the Iranian proposals for the dispatch of a representative of the Secretary-General or an expert or a team of experts.

Iran, in a letter of 27 December,(26) held the Security Council responsible for obstructing the acquisition of evidence of what it called Iraq's chemical attacks, by having remained aloof while much of the evidence faded away due to the lapse of time. The Council's failure to deal constructively with the Iran-Iraq war did not reduce that body's responsibility towards Iraq's violations of international humanitarian law, Iran added.

Radiological weapons

The General Assembly, in 1983, requested the Conference on Disarmament (as the Committee on Disarmament would be known in 1984) to conclude the elaboration of a convention banning radiological weapons and to seek a speedy solution to prohibiting attacks on nuclear facilities.

Consideration by the Committee on Disarmament. The agenda item on "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons" was considered by the Committee on Disarmament(12) at its 1983 session from 11 to 15 and from 25 to 29 April. In addition, the Committee re-established on 29 March the Ad Hoc Working Group on Radiological Weapons-initially established in 1980(27)-under the chairmanship of Curt Lidgard (Sweden).

The Working Group held six meetings between 8 and 29 April and between 13 June and 17 August. It established two groups on 8 April, at the Chairman's suggestion: Group A, co-ordinated by the representative of the United States, to consider questions relating to traditional radiological weapons subject-matter; and Group B, co-ordinated by the USSR representative, to examine issues relating to the prohibition of attacks against nuclear facilities. The Working Group itself devoted two meetings to the question of linkage between the two issues.

In its report to the Committee, the Working Group concluded that, although certain outstanding issues remained, the discussion in Group A had further clarified many of the problems involved and would pave the way for future work on the subject. Group A had forwarded to the Working Group a consolidated negotiating text of a treaty prohibiting radiological weapons, which was prepared by its Co-ordinator on his own responsibility, reflecting the state of the negotiations, including areas of agreement and disagreement. In spite of differences on specific matters, the substantive discussion in Group B-focusing on such issues as scope, legal aspects, zones, and compliance and verification-was also considered useful, having led to a better comprehension of the problems and contributed to the examination of common approaches and possible activities of the Group in the future. The Working Group recommended to the Committee that a similar group be established at the beginning of the 1984 session to continue its work and to assess how best to make progress on the subject. On 23 August, the Committee adopted the Working Group's report as part of its own report to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December 1983, adopted without vote resolution 38/188 D.

Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons
The General Assembly,

Recalling the resolution of the Commission for Conventional Armaments of 12 August 1948, which defined weapons of mass destruction to include atomic explosive weapons, radioactive material weapons, lethal chemical and biological weapons and any weapons developed in the future which have characteristics comparable in destructive effect to those of the atomic bomb or the other weapons mentioned above,

Recalling its resolution 2602 C (XXIV) of 16 December 1969,

Recalling paragraph 76 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that a convention should be concluded prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons,

Reaffirming its resolution 37/99 C of 13 December 1982 on the conclusion of such a convention,

Convinced that such a convention would serve to spare mankind the potential dangers of the use of radiological weapons and thereby contribute to strengthening peace and averting the threat of war,

Noting that negotiations on the conclusion of an international convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons have been conducted in the Committee on Disarmament,

Taking note of that part of the report of the Committee on Disarmament on the work of its 1983 session which deals with those negotiations, including the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Radiological Weapons,

Recognizing that, notwithstanding the progress achieved in those negotiations, divergent views continue to exist in connection with various aspects,

Taking into consideration that the peaceful applications of nuclear energy involve the establishment of a large number of nuclear installations with a high concentration of radioactive materials, and bearing in mind that attacks against such nuclear facilities could have disastrous consequences,

Noting with satisfaction the wide recognition of the need to reach agreement on the comprehensive prohibition of radiological weapons,

1. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to continue negotiations with a view to a prompt conclusion of the elaboration of a convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons in order that it may be submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

2. Further requests the Conference on Disarmament to continue its search for a prompt solution to the question of prohibition of attacks on nuclear facilities, including the scope of such prohibition, taking into account all proposals submitted to it to this end;

3. Takes note of the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Radiological Weapons, in the report adopted by the Committee on Disarmament, to re-establish an Ad Hoc Working Group at the beginning of its 1984 session to continue its work and in that context to review and assess how best to make progress on the subject-matter;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration by the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session of the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons and on the question of prohibition of attacks on nuclear facilities;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons".

20 December 1983 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/38/640) without vote, 21 November (meeting 34); 4-nation draft (A/C.1/38/L.23/Rev.1); agenda item 62 (f).

Sponsors: Germany, Federal Republic of, Hungary, Japan, Sweden.
Meeting numbers, GA 38th session: 1st Committee 3-10, 12-31, 33, 34; plenary 103.

In explanation of its position, France expressed a reservation, saying that the text dealt with two subjects, one of which was not covered by the agenda item under which it was submitted; it would have preferred the text to deal solely with that item, which corresponded to the mandate of the Working Group on that question in the Committee on Disarmament.

In a similar vein, the United States maintained that the conclusion of the negotiations on radiological weapons must not be held up because of the discussions which involved issues essentially independent of the traditional radiological weapons subject-matter; it stressed the complexity of the question of military attacks on nuclear facilities and the need for continued evaluation of the existing prohibitions and rules, as well as for gathering expert opinion on the adequacy of existing legal protection.

The question of prohibiting attacks on nuclear facilities was also dealt with in 1983 General Assembly resolutions 38/9, on an armed incident involving Iraqi nuclear facilities and Israel; and 38/69, on nuclear weapons and Israel. (For texts of these resolutions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

New weapons of mass destruction

Divergent approaches towards the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new weapons of mass destruction continued to persist in 1983. In December, the General Assembly, in resolution 38/182, requested the Conference on Disarmament to intensify negotiations on preparing a draft agreement on the ban, and called on militarily significant States to make declarations, to be subsequently approved by the Security Council, on the refusal to create such weapons.

Activities of the Committee on Disarmament. Discussion on the question of new types and systems of weapons of mass destruction continued in 1983 in the Committee on Disarmament, at plenary meetings.

The exchange of views, as summarized in the Committee's annual report to the General Assembly,⁽¹²⁾ showed the continued presence of two differing approaches. One group of delegations favoured a general agreement prohibiting the development and manufacture of all new types of weapons of mass destruction, to be exemplified in a list, and which would also provide for the conclusion of separate agreements to ban specific weapons. Expressing concern over the development of the nuclear neutron weapon, they maintained that the permanent members of the Security Council and other militarily significant States should declare their refusal to develop new weapons of mass destruction and that an ad hoc group of governmental experts be established to draft agreements.

Another group of delegations believed it more appropriate to negotiate agreements case by case as such weapons might be identified. They observed that no such weapons had been identified and asserted that a general prohibitory agreement would be too ambiguous to be useful in concrete situations and would not permit the definition and implementation of verification measures. They added that the so-called nuclear neutron weapon could not be considered as a new weapon of mass destruction nor was it based on new scientific principles, and that any consideration of that subject belonged under another agenda item of the Committee, namely, the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament and all related matters.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December 1983, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/182.

Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3479(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/74 of 10 December 1976, 32/84 A of 12 December 1977, 33/66 B of 14 December 1978, 34/79 of 11 December

1979, 35/149 of 12 December 1980, 36/89 of 9 December 1981 and 37/77 A of 9 December 1982 concerning the prohibition of new types of weapons of mass destruction,

Bearing in mind the provisions of paragraph 39 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, according to Which qualitative and quantitative disarmament measures are both important for halting the arms race and efforts to that end must include negotiations on the limitation and cessation of the qualitative improvement of armaments, especially weapons of mass destruction, and the development of new means of warfare,

Recalling the decision contained in paragraph 77 of the Final Document to the effect that, in order to help prevent a qualitative arms race and so that scientific and technological achievements might ultimately be used solely for peaceful purposes, effective measures should be taken to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction based on new scientific principles and achievements, and that efforts aimed at the prohibition of such new types and new systems of weapons of mass destruction should be appropriately pursued,

Expressing once again its firm belief, in the light of the decisions adopted at the tenth special session, in the importance of concluding an agreement or agreements to prevent the use of scientific and technological progress for the development of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Noting that in the course of its session in 1983 the Committee on Disarmament considered the item entitled "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons":

Convinced that all ways and means should be utilized to prevent the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Taking into consideration the part of the report of the Committee on Disarmament relating to this question,

1. Requests the Conference on Disarmament, in the light of its existing priorities, to intensify negotiations, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, with a view to preparing a draft comprehensive agreement on the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons, and to draft possible agreements on particular types of such weapons;

2. Once again urges all States to refrain from any action which could adversely affect the talks aimed at working out an agreement or agreements to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons;

3. Calls upon the States permanent members of the Security Council as well as upon other militarily significant States to make declarations, identical in substance, concerning the refusal to create new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons, as a first step towards the conclusion of a comprehensive agreement on this subject, bearing in mind that such declarations would be approved thereafter by a decision of the Security Council;

4. Calls again upon all States to undertake efforts to ensure that ultimately scientific and technological achievements may be used solely for peaceful purposes;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this item by the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session:

6. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a report on the results achieved to the General Assembly for consideration at its thirty-ninth session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons: report of the Conference on Disarmament".

20 December 1983 Meeting 103 116-1-26 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/38/627) by recorded vote (94-1-28), 23 November (meeting 39); 28-nation draft (A/C.1/38/L.25); agenda item 49.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 1st Committee 3-10, 12-31, 39; plenary 103.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Paraguay, Portugal, Somalia, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom.

In explanation of vote, Greece, on behalf of the 10 States members of the European Community (EC), asserted that the approach presented in the text was unrealistic, and that those weapons and their technology could be effectively and permanently prohibited only if they were subject to concrete and verifiable controls. By giving special importance to a single blanket prohibition on the development and manufacture of such weapons, the text failed to emphasize the difficulty in distinguishing the precise delimitation of civilian and military research; it was not clear how such a prohibition could be verified, particularly in view of the need for international supervision of civil research activities. A non-verifiable comprehensive prohibition, EC maintained, would not strengthen confidence in the area. It recognized, however, the continued need for international discussions to identify potentially dangerous developments in science and technology, so that necessary control could be introduced early.

Sweden, while convinced of the importance of early prevention of the use of scientific and technological achievements for the development of new weapons of mass destruction, continued to have doubts about the idea of a general prohibition but noted with satisfaction that the text included a request to the Conference on Disarmament to prepare specific agreements on particular types of such weapons.

Conventional weapons

The year 1983 marked the entry into force of the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, and its three Protocols.(1) The General Assembly, in resolution 38/66, noted with satisfaction their entry into force and urged all States which had not done so to become parties to them.

The Assembly, in resolution 38/188 A, extended by one year the deadline for completion of a study by the Group of Experts on All Aspects of the Conventional Arms Race and on Disarmament relating to Conventional Weapons and Armed Forces. In resolution 38/188 G, the Assembly initiated a comprehensive study on the naval arms race and, in resolution 38/188 F, invited Member States to submit their views on the holding of negotiations on naval disarmament.

Group of Experts

The Group of Experts on All Aspects of the Conventional Arms Race and on Disarmament relating to Conventional Weapons and Armed Forces—the 23—member body which had held its first two sessions in 1982(2) to prepare a study on the subject—met again in 1983, from 11 to 22 April and from 18 to 29 July. In an effort to maintain the timetable by which the Secretary-General had been asked to submit a final report to the thirty-eighth (1983) session of the General Assembly, a fifth session was held from 5 to 16 September, but there was insufficient progress to permit completion of the study.

In a 16 September letter annexed to the Secretary-General's report to the Assembly,(3) the Chairman explained that, owing to the wide area embraced and the sensitivity and complexity of the issues involved, the Group needed further time to complete its work. The Chairman reported that the Group, striving for consensus, had almost completed the substantive part of the study and had begun work on the conclusions and recommendations. He also pointed out that the two years the Assembly had envisaged for the study had been reduced to some 15 months by the time the Disarmament Commission had reached agreement in May 1982 on guidelines and the Group had commenced work in July of that year.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 38/188 A by recorded vote.

Study on conventional disarmament The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions in which, inter alia, it approved the carrying out of a study on all aspects of the conventional arms race and on disarmament relating to conventional weapons and armed forces, to be undertaken by the Secretary-General with the assistance of a group of qualified experts appointed by him on a balanced geographical basis,

Recalling the discussions at the 1981 and 1982 substantive sessions of the Disarmament Commission on the general approach to the study and its structure and scope, which resulted in the establishment of agreed guidelines for the study,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General to which is annexed a letter from the Chairman of the Group of Experts on All Aspects of the Conventional Arms Race and on Disarmament relating to Conventional Weapons and Armed Forces informing the Secretary-General that, owing to the very wide area embraced by the study and the sensitivity and complexity of the issues involved, the Group of Experts needs further time in order to complete its work;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the study and to submit the final report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Bahrain, India, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Qatar, United Arab Emirates, Yemen.

In explanation of vote, India, while not objecting to granting more time for completing the study, said attention should not be diverted nor should the time and energies of the international community be wasted on non-priority issues, when measures for nuclear disarmament commanded the highest priority.

The United States considered that the study should be funded within existing resources. Sharing that view, the United Kingdom expressed disappointment that, despite an additional session, the Group of Experts had been unable to complete its work.

Ratification of the 1980 Convention and Protocols

The Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, along with its three Protocols, which had been concluded in 1980,(1) entered into force on 2 December 1983.

The Convention and Protocols provided new rules for the protection of military personnel, civilians and civilian objects from injury or attack by means of incendiary weapons, land-mines, booby traps and other devices, as well as fragments that cannot be easily detected in the human body by X-rays.

In the course of the year, Australia, Austria, Guatemala, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Norway, Poland and Yugoslavia ratified or acceded to the Convention, thus bringing the total number of States parties to 23(4) and enabling the Convention's entry into force, which required a lapse of six months after 20 States had notified their consent to be bound by the instrument. These States also accepted the Convention's Protocol on Non-Detectable Fragments (Protocol I), the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II) and the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Incendiary Weapons (Protocol III).

The Secretary-General's report(5) to the General Assembly contained a list of signatories and parties to the Convention and Protocols as at 31 August 1983.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 15 December 1983, adopted resolution 38/66 without vote.

Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/152 of 19 December 1977, 35/153 of 12 December 1980, 36/93 of 9 December 1981 and 37/79 of 9 December 1982,

Recalling with satisfaction the adoption, on 10 October 1980, of the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, together with the Protocol on Non-Detectable Fragments (Protocol I), the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II) and the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Incendiary Weapons (Protocol III),

Reaffirming its conviction that general agreement on the prohibition or restriction of use of specific conventional weapons would significantly reduce the suffering of civilian populations and of combatants,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Notes with satisfaction that an increasing number of States have either signed, ratified, accepted or acceded to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, which was opened for signature in New York on 10 April 1981;

2. Further notes with satisfaction that, upon the fulfilment of the conditions set out in article 5 of the Convention, the Convention and the three Protocols annexed thereto entered into force on 2 December 1983;

3. Urges all States which have not yet done so to exert their best endeavours to become parties to the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto as early as possible, so as to obtain ultimately universal adherence;

4. Notes that, under article 8 of the Convention, conferences may be convened to consider amendments to the Convention or any of the annexed Protocols, to consider additional Protocols relating to other categories of conventional weapons not covered by the existing annexed Protocols, or to review the scope and operation of the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto and to consider any proposal for amendments to the Convention or to the existing annexed Protocols and any proposals for additional protocols relating to other categories of conventional weapons not covered by the existing annexed Protocols;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, as the depositary of the Convention and its three annexed Protocols, to inform the General Assembly from time to time of the state of adherence to the said Convention and its Protocols;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects".

Explaining its position, the USSR recalled that it had proposed prohibiting other types of excessively injurious weapons, such as phosphorus munitions; with the entry into force of the Convention, no obstacles remained to talks on further additional protocols to that instrument.

Naval armaments

In 1983, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions dealing with naval disarmament. In resolution 38/188 F, the Assembly invited Member States to submit their views on the holding of negotiations on limiting and reducing naval armaments; in resolution 38/188 G, it requested the Secretary-General, with the assistance of governmental experts, to carry out a comprehensive study on the naval arms race.

Proposed negotiations

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1983, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/188 F on proposed negotiations on naval armaments, as recommended by the First Committee.

Curbing the naval arms race: limitation and reduction of naval armaments and extension of confidence-building measures to seas and oceans

The General Assembly,

Convinced that all channels of the arms race, and in particular the nuclear-arms race, should be effectively covered by the efforts to halt and reverse it,

Disturbed by the growing threat to international peace and security posed by the continuing escalation of the naval arms race, especially in its nuclear aspects,

Aware that the growing military presence and naval activities of some States in conflict areas or far from their own shores increase the tension in these regions and could adversely affect the security of the international sea lanes through these areas and the exploitation of marine resources,

Alarmed by the ever more frequent use of naval formations (units, fleets, forces) for the demonstration of force and as an instrument of pressure against sovereign States or of interference in their internal affairs, thus threatening their vital security interests, independence and territorial integrity,

Firmly convinced that the undertaking of urgent practical steps to curb military confrontation at sea would serve the interests of international peace, security and prevention of nuclear war,

Convinced that the progress at the ongoing bilateral negotiations on limitation and reduction of strategic armaments could, inter alia, facilitate the efforts to restrict dangerous destabilizing naval activities and the naval arms race,

Aware of the numerous initiatives and concrete proposals to undertake agreed measures aimed at limiting naval activities, limiting and reducing naval armaments and extending confidence-building measures to seas and oceans,

Believing that measures in this field would be a significant contribution to the efforts to strengthen international security and prevent war, especially nuclear war,

Reaffirming that seas and oceans, being of vital importance for mankind, should be used exclusively for peaceful purposes,

1. Appeals to all Member States, in particular the major naval Powers, to refrain from enlarging their naval activities in areas of conflict or tension, or far from their own shores;

2. Recognizes the urgent need to start negotiations with the participation of the major naval Powers, the nuclear-weapon States in particular, and other interested States on the limitation of naval activities, the limitation and reduction of naval armaments, taking into due account the nuclear aspect of the naval arms race, and the extension of confidence-building measures to seas and oceans, especially to regions with the busiest sea lanes or regions where the probability of conflict situations is high;

3. Invites the Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General, not later than June 1984, their views concerning modalities for holding such negotiations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a report based on the replies of Member States called for under paragraph 3 above;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session an item entitled "Curbing the naval arms race: limitation and reduction of naval armaments and extension of confidence-building measures to seas and oceans".

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahrain, Benin, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Finland, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras,^a Hungary, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia,^a Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Iceland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

^aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

Explaining their votes, Costa Rica, India, Oman and Somalia found the text selective in approach. Somalia, which abstained in the First

Committee vote, said international peace and security was endangered not solely by the escalation of the naval arms race but also by developments such as the introduction of massive foreign forces into the territories of non-aligned States and the use of extra-regional surrogate troops for the purpose of destabilizing the militarily weak countries. Sharing that view, Costa Rica also expressed concern about the reference in the preamble to confidence-building measures, saying that the perception of what inspired confidence depended on which Power was deploying its military forces and where. Oman found the text unbalanced and not conducive to achieving disarmament. India did not feel that the singling out of naval activities was the right approach for disarmament; efforts should focus on nuclear disarmament.

Argentina felt it appropriate for the United Nations to concern itself with what it called the disturbing issue of the recent buildup in naval deployments and their consequences for international peace and security. Also considering the issue to be timely, the Congo said the world was witnessing in all its oceans not merely an increase in naval forces, but also many military manoeuvres carried out by air and sea forces.

Experts' study

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By resolution 38/188 G, adopted by recorded vote on 20 December 1983 on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General, assisted by governmental experts, to carry out a study on the naval arms race.

Study on the naval arms race

The General Assembly,

Concerned about the naval buildup and the development of naval arms systems,

Mindful of the paramount importance for the security and well-being of all nations, for international trade and shipping and for the economic exploitation of marine resources of preserving freedom of the high seas and of keeping open international sea communications for trade and shipping in a manner consistent with the Charter of the United Nations and with the principles of international law,

Mindful also of recent developments in the law of the sea,

Noting that some naval units constitute integral parts of the strategic nuclear forces of the two major nuclear-weapon Powers and are therefore included in the strategic arms negotiations while other naval nuclear-weapon systems are not the subject of any disarmament negotiations,

Recalling paragraph 96 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, which stated that raking further steps in the field of disarmament and other measures aimed at promoting international peace and security would be facilitated by the carrying out of studies by the Secretary-General in this field with appropriate assistance from governmental or consultant experts,

Convinced that a broad study carried out by the United Nations on the naval arms race, as well as on the development of naval forces and systems and their deployment, would enhance international understanding of the issues involved,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts,* to carry out a comprehensive study on the naval arms race, on naval forces and naval arms systems, including maritime nuclear-weapons systems, as well as on the development, deployment and mode of operation of such naval forces and systems, all with a view to analysing their possible implications for international security, for the freedom of the high seas, for international shipping routes and for the exploitation of marine resources, thereby facilitating the identification of possible areas for disarmament and confidence-building measures;

2. Invites all Governments to submit to the Secretary-General, not later than 1 April 1984, their views on the content of such a study and to co-operate with him by making relevant material available in order to achieve the objectives of the study;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the final report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

*Subsequently referred to as the Group of Governmental Experts to Carry Out a Comprehensive Study on the Naval Arms Race. Naval Forces and Naval Arms Systems.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Angola, Belgium, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Dominica, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Hungary, India, Israel, Italy, Japan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Liberia, Luxembourg, Mongolia, Mozambique, New Zealand, Poland, Portugal, Saint Lucia, Togo, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, Viet Nam.

The United States, speaking in explanation of vote, viewed the study's terms of reference and underlying concepts to be broad and imprecise, finding it difficult to see how a small number of experts could deal in a meaningful way with the vast array of issues to be covered; despite consultations with the sponsors, the text failed to indicate that the study would be financed within existing United Nations resources.

Sharing the concern over financial implications and the setting up of an expert group capable of studying the subject in a balanced manner, the United Kingdom said that, by postulating a naval arms race, the study seemed disposed to produce a set of conclusions with which the United Kingdom found it hard to agree; it could not condone the attempt by a few Governments to have a United Nations expert group endorse their own views. The Federal Republic of Germany regarded the proposed study as a regrettable example of a proliferation of United Nations disarmament studies without an adequate preparatory stage.

The USSR felt the study dealt purely with technical aspects and was not aimed at taking practical measures to reduce naval activity and armaments. India said that the singling out of naval activities was not the right approach, and that the international community should focus on nuclear disarmament, rather than divert its resources and energies to activities which did not seem to have any utility.

Argentina asserted that the recent buildup in naval deployments was a timely issue, with which the United Nations should concern itself. Malta considered the text to be a valuable initiative in tackling what it called an increasingly threatening problem; however, it had hoped the text would have given equal importance to the implications of naval forces and their armaments for the security of coastal States.

Other aspects of disarmament and related matters

In 1983, the General Assembly had on its agenda for the tenth year an item concerning the reduction of military budgets. It also continued to discuss measures for building confidence among States and for facilitating a better flow of information on military capabilities so as to avoid misperceptions and thus contribute to disarmament. The United Nations system endeavoured to reflect in its activities the interrelationship between disarmament and development.

In its continuing efforts to prevent an arms race in outer space, the Assembly considered in 1983 a new agenda item on a draft treaty on the non-use of force in that sphere. The Assembly again addressed questions of regional disarmament but, as in previous years, no agreement was reached on the convening of a Conference on the Indian Ocean. The Assembly continued consideration of its item on a World Disarmament Conference.

The World Disarmament Campaign entered its second year of implementation under United Nations auspices, and the United Nations disarmament fellowship programme provided training to 25 participants.

The Secretary-General's Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies was revived in 1983, with an additional function as the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research which, in turn, assumed an autonomous status at the beginning of the year. The Centre for Disarmament was transformed into the United Nations Department for Disarmament Affairs.

Military budgets and expenditures

The United Nations continued to grapple in 1983 with the problems involved in limiting and reducing military budgets and with the related objective of diverting resources from the arms race to promote economic and social development. The Disarmament Commission strove to reach agreement on the principles that should govern the further actions of States in freezing and reducing military expenditure; however, discussions revealed irreconcilable differences. Meanwhile, the Group of Experts on the Reduction of Military Budgets proceeded to construct price indices and purchasing-power parities for military expenditures.

Disarmament Commission consideration. As in previous years, the Disarmament Commission⁽¹⁾ considered two aspects of the reduction of military budgets: harmonization of views on their gradual, agreed reduction and the reallocation to economic and social development of resources thus saved; and examination and identification of ways to achieve verifiable agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain military expenditures in a balanced manner.

As in the two previous years, the Commission, on 9 May, established an informal, open-ended working group (Working Group I) to consider the question. The Working Group held 14 meetings between 12 and 31 May under the chairmanship of Ion Diaconu (Romania).

The Group based its deliberations on a background paper⁽²⁾ annexed to the Commission's report to the General Assembly's 1982 special session on disarmament. The Group also referred to a 1982 working paper by India⁽²⁾ and one by Romania and Sweden submitted in 1981.⁽³⁾ Two new working papers were submitted in 1983: one by Australia., Belgium, Canada, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom, stressing the need for transparency and comparability of data; and another by Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary and Poland, which concluded that curbing and subsequently reducing military expenditure could not be achieved by abstract discussions on data.

During the Group's meetings, suggestions were made to reconcile conflicting positions, but no consensus was reached and, at the end of the discussion, the Chairman submitted a working paper containing a set of suggestions for formulating several of the proposals and ideas that had been considered.

On 2 June, the Commission adopted by consensus the report of the Working Group, in which it was suggested, among other things, that the Commission should continue in 1984 considering proposals and ideas, including the Chairman's suggestions, in order to identify and elaborate the principles which should govern further actions of States on freezing and reducing military expenditures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December 1983, adopted without vote resolution 38/184 A, under the item on reduction of military budgets.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the ever-spiralling arms race and growing military expenditures, which constitute a heavy burden for the economies of all nations and have extremely harmful effects on world peace and security,

Reaffirming once again the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, according to which the gradual reduction of military budgets on a mutually agreed basis, for example in absolute figures or in terms of percentage, particularly by nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, would contribute to curbing the arms race and would increase the possibilities for the reallocation of resources now being used for military purposes to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries,

Recalling that at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, all Member States unanimously and categorically reaffirmed the validity of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session, as well as their solemn commitment to it,

Recalling also the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second United Nations Disarmament Decade, in which it is provided that during this period renewed efforts should be made to reach agreement on the reduction of military expenditures and the reallocation of resources thus saved to economic and social development, especially for the benefit of developing countries,

Recalling further the provisions of its resolution 34/83 F of 11 December 1979, subsequently reaffirmed in its resolutions 35/142 A of 12 December 1980, 36/82 A of 9 December 1981 and 37/95 A of 13 December 1982, in which it considered that a new impetus should be given to the endeavours to achieve agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain, in a balanced manner, military expenditure, including adequate measures of verification satisfactory to all parties concerned,

Aware of the various proposals submitted by Member States and of the activities carried out so far within the framework of the United Nations in the field of the reduction of military budgets,

Convinced that identification and elaboration of the principles which should govern further actions of States in freezing and reducing military budgets could contribute to harmonizing the views of States and create confidence among them conducive to achieving international agreements on the reduction of military budgets,

Considering that the identification and elaboration of the principles which should govern further actions of States in freezing and reducing military budgets and the other current activities within the framework of the United Nations related to the question of the reduction of military budgets should be regarded as having the fundamental objective of reaching international agreements on the reduction of military expenditures,

Taking note of the report of the Disarmament Commission on the work accomplished during its session in 1983 on the question of the reduction of military budgets,

1. Declares once again its conviction that it is possible to achieve international agreements on the reduction of military budgets without prejudice to the right of all States to undiminished security, self-defence and sovereignty;

2. Reaffirms that the human and material resources released through the reduction of military expenditures could be reallocated to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries;

3. Calls upon all Member States, in particular the most heavily armed States, to reinforce their readiness to co-operate in a constructive manner with a view to reaching agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain military expenditures;

4. Appeals to all States, in particular to the most heavily armed States, pending the conclusion of agreements on the reduction of military expenditures, to exercise self-restraint in their military expenditures with a view to reallocating the funds thus saved to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of developing countries;

5. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue, at its 1984 substantive session, the consideration of the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets", including consideration of the suggestions of the Chairman of the working group, as well as other proposals and ideas on the subject-matter, with a view to further identifying and elaborating the principles which should govern further actions of States in the field of freezing and reduction of military expenditures, keeping in mind the possibility of embodying such principles in a suitable document at an appropriate stage;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets".

20 December 1983 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Stating that it would have abstained had a vote been taken on the text, the Netherlands said a mutually agreed, gradual reduction of military budgets would be meaningful only if it were adequately verifiable; accordingly, it regretted that States of one particular group-including Romania, a sponsor of the text-continued to refuse to report their military expenditures. Similarly, France hoped that Romania would participate in the reporting system. The United States said it interpreted the text's reference to activities on military budgets reduction to include participation in the reporting system and in the efforts for resolving problems associated with data evaluation. India, which also would have abstained had there been a vote, could not endorse the premise that all States, rather than a few militarily significant ones, were responsible for rising military expenditures.

In related action (resolution 38/71 B), the Assembly also considered the contribution a reduction in arms and military expenditures could make to development and invited Member States to comment in that regard (see below, under DISARMAMENT AND DEVELOPMENT).

Reporting procedures

Report of the Group of Experts. Responding to a December 1982 General Assembly resolution,(4) the Group of Experts on the Reduction of Military Budgets met twice in 1983, from 7 to 11 March and from 8 to 19 August, holding 26 formal meetings as well as a number of informal ones. In a progress report(5) on the construction of price indices and purchasing-power parities for military expenditures, the Group stated that it had examined replies received as at 19 August to the Secretary-General's earlier inquiry regarding Member States' willingness to assist the Group in its work.

Ten of the 21 responding countries (Australia, Austria, Canada, Finland, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Norway, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States) indicated their willingness to exchange data. Although the Group felt it desirable to obtain wider participation, including countries in all geographic regions and with different accounting and budgeting systems, it considered the number of participants sufficient to proceed with its task and prepared initial requests for information from them. The Group observed that additional resources would be needed for the successful completion of its task.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In 1983, the third annual report by the Secretary-General containing information on military expenditures supplied on a voluntary basis by Member States was issued.⁽⁶⁾ Of the 23 countries submitting information as at 2 November, 20 had used the standard reporting instrument, consisting of a matrix designed to show how much each force group (such as land, naval and air forces) spent in each resource category (such as personnel, procurement and operations). The Secretary-General submitted a further report⁽⁷⁾ containing the views of 10 States on practical means of promoting the wider participation of States in the international system of standardized reporting of military expenditures.

Both reports were submitted in response to the Assembly's December 1982 resolution.⁽⁴⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

As recommended by the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December 1983, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/184 B, under the item on reduction of military budgets.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the arms race and present tendencies to increase further the rate of growth of military expenditures, the deplorable waste of human and economic resources and the potentially harmful effects on world peace and security,

Considering that a gradual reduction of military expenditures on a mutually agreed basis would be a measure that would contribute to curbing the arms race and would increase the possibilities of reallocating resources now being used for military purposes to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries,

Convinced that such reductions could and should be carried out on a mutually agreed basis without detriment to the national security of any country,

Reaffirming its conviction that provisions for defining, reporting, comparing and verifying military expenditures will have to be basic elements of any international agreement to reduce such expenditures,

Recalling that an international system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures has been introduced in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 35/142 B of 12 December 1980, and that annual reports on military expenditures are now being received from a number of Member States,

Considering that a wider participation in the reporting system of States from different geographic regions and representing different budgeting systems would promote its further refinement and would, by contributing to greater openness in military matters, increase confidence between States,

Noting, in this connection, the proposal to convene an international conference on military expenditures,

Recalling its resolution 37/95 B of 13 December 1982, in which it requested the Secretary-General, with the assistance of a group of qualified experts and with the voluntary co-operation of States, to undertake the task of constructing price indices and purchasing-power parities for the military expenditures of participating States,

Considering that a wide participation in this exercise is essential for achieving the most useful results possible,

Noting that in the progress report of the Secretary-General the Group of Experts on the Reduction of Military Budgets established that a direct contact between its members and the voluntarily participating Member States is vital for the work of the Group,

Emphasizing that all the above-mentioned activities and initiatives, as well as other ongoing activities within the United Nations relating to the reduction of military budgets, should have the fundamental objective of facilitating future negotiations aimed at the conclusion of international agreements on the reduction of military expenditures,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General containing the replies received in 1983 from Member States in the framework of the above-mentioned reporting system and with the submitted data arranged by the Secretariat according to statistical practice, and of the report of the Secretary-General containing views and suggestions of States on practical means of promoting the wider participation of States in the international system of standardized reporting of military expenditures;

2. Stresses the need to increase the number of reporting States with a view to the broadest possible participation of States from different geographic regions and representing different budgeting systems;

3. Reiterates its recommendation that all Member States should report annually, by 30 April, to the Secretary-General, using the reporting instrument, their military expenditures for the latest fiscal year for which data are available;

4. Also takes note with appreciation of the progress report of the Secretary-General on the ongoing exercise undertaken in pursuance of paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 37/95 B;

5. Reiterates its invitation to all Member States to participate in the above-mentioned exercise;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Group of Experts on the Reduction of Military Budgets with sufficient financial and other resources to carry out its complex tasks as outlined in the progress report of the Secretary-General;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets".

In explanation of vote, Brazil said the text did not stress the special responsibility borne by the nuclear-weapon States, whose military expenditures, it said, accounted for almost 90 per cent of the overall resources diverted to armaments. Sharing that view, India felt that exercises such as that endorsed by the text served to deflect attention from the principal political issues in disarmament. Yugoslavia said the text would be useful and effective only if all countries, primarily the militarily significant States, participated in the reporting system.

The German Democratic Republic, asserting that agreements on freeze or reduction could be readily attained given the necessary political will, said insistence on transparency and agreement on reporting, comparison and verification prevented negotiations leading to that end.

The United Kingdom and the United States welcomed the text's emphasis on the need for wider participation in the reporting system, saying that greater openness and comparison of military expenditures helped strengthen international confidence. The United Kingdom was disappointed, however, that no State member of the Warsaw Treaty Organization had participated in that exercise. According to the Netherlands, the negative votes showed that those States were not serious about reducing military budgets. France hoped that Romania, a sponsor of the text, would participate, and stressed the need for comparability of data for the drawing of valid conclusions.

The United Kingdom believed that, because of the limited participation in the exercise, additional support should be found within the existing resources.

Arms race in outer space and anti-satellite systems

In 1983, the General Assembly considered a new agenda item and the text of a draft treaty, both proposed by the USSR, on the non-use of force in outer space. At the same time, it continued to discuss whether to concentrate on reaching a general agreement on preventing an arms race in outer space in all its aspects, or on a verifiable agreement prohibiting anti-satellite systems.

Activities of the Committee on Disarmament. The Committee on Disarmament(8) considered the item on preventing an arms race in outer space, from 18 to 22 April and from 8 to 12 August 1983, in both plenary and informal meetings. The debate centred on an appropriate mandate for an ad hoc working group on the question. Despite the setting up of a contact group, which held a number of meetings under the guidance of the Committee Chairman to formulate a mandate, no consensus was reached.

Two proposals submitted to the Committee in 1983 dealt with an ad hoc working group. Mongolia(9) believed that the mandate should provide a possibility for negotiating an agreement on preventing an arms race in outer space in all its aspects and for initially identifying the questions of immediate concern. The 10 Western States in the Committee(10) would have had the working group identify, through substantive examination, issues relevant to preventing such an arms race, taking into account all existing agreements and proposals as well as future initiatives.

In the Committee, the group of 21 and the socialist States reiterated their previous separate proposals(11) for setting up a working group. The socialist States also indicated that they could support the proposal of the group of 21-that a working group be established immediately with a mandate to negotiate an agreement or agreements for preventing an arms race in outer space in all aspects-which China also supported.

A working paper, submitted by France,(12) dealt, inter alia, with possible future technological developments and the inadequacy of existing legal instruments in ensuring the immunity of satellites. The USSR also submitted a document,(13) stating its commitment not to be the first to put into outer space any type of anti-satellite weapon as long as other countries, including the United States, reciprocated.

Consideration by the Committee on outer space. The Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Committee on outer space),(14) in 1983, urged all nations, particularly those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to preventing an arms race in outer space, declaring that objective to be essential for international co-operation in the peaceful uses of that sphere. Some delegations called for the early preparation of legal instruments to prevent further militarization of outer space; some also felt that the two major space Powers should resume the arms control negotiations on anti-satellite systems. Some considered the Conference on Disarmament (as the Committee on Disarmament would be known in 1984) to be the appropriate forum to deal with the question; others spoke of the legitimate interest of the Committee on outer space, believed that body should give priority consideration to the question, and felt that the Conference should take the Committee's views into account in its negotiations.

Subsequently, the General Assembly, in resolution 38/80, called for prompt negotiations under United Nations auspices on agreement(s) on halting the militarization of outer space; it requested the Committee on outer space to consider, as a priority, the questions relating to such militarization, taking also into account the need to co-ordinate its efforts with those of the Conference (see Chapter II of this section).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY CONSIDERATION

In 1983, the General Assembly considered the question of outer space and its uses under the previous two items of its agenda—"Prevention of an arms race in outer space: report of the Committee on Disarmament" and "General and complete disarmament", the latter including a sub-item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space and prohibition of anti-satellite systems: report of the Committee on Disarmament"—and a third item entitled "Conclusion of a treaty on the prohibition of the use of force in outer space and from space against the Earth", which was included in the 1983 agenda at the request of the USSR.⁽¹⁵⁾ In proposing the item, the USSR stated that it was seeking to avoid the militarization of outer space, being particularly concerned about the plans to create and deploy various space-weapon systems capable of destroying targets both in space and on the Earth. A draft treaty was annexed to the proposal.

Three draft resolutions were submitted to the First Committee. Two of them—one sponsored by 12 Western and other States, and one by Mongolia—were not pressed to a vote; the other, sponsored by 20 States, was approved.

The draft sponsored by the Western and other States, entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space and prohibition of anti-satellite systems",⁽¹⁶⁾ would have had the Assembly request the Conference on Disarmament to continue consideration of negotiating effective and verifiable agreements on that subject, including ways of strengthening the outer-space legal régime for protecting satellites.

Mongolia's draft,⁽¹⁷⁾ submitted under the new agenda item on concluding an outer space treaty, would have had the Assembly request the Conference, in co-operation with the Committee on outer space, to consider elaborating a relevant international agreement, and to consider, inter alia, establishing an ad hoc working group to negotiate an agreement or agreements to prevent an arms race in outer space in all aspects. In announcing that it would not press its draft to a vote, Mongolia joined the sponsors of the text that became resolution 38/70 (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 38/421 of 15 December, the Assembly, on an oral proposal by its President, took note of the First Committee's report⁽¹⁸⁾ on the disposition of the Mongolian draft.

Conclusion of a treaty on the prohibition of the use of force in outer space and from space against the Earth

At its 97th plenary meeting, on 15 December 1983, the General Assembly took note of the report of the First Committee.

General Assembly decision 38/421

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 141.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 1st Committee 3-10, 12-31, 33, 41; plenary 97.

On 15 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 38/70 by recorded vote.

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The General Assembly,

Inspired by the great prospects opening up before mankind as a result of man's entry into outer space twenty-six years ago,

Recognizing the common interest of all mankind in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Reaffirming that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development, and shall be the province of all mankind,

Reaffirming further the will of all States that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be exclusively for peaceful purposes,

Recalling that the States parties to the 'Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, have undertaken, in article III, to carry on activities in the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations, in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international co-operation and understanding,

Reaffirming, in particular, article IV of the above-mentioned Treaty, which stipulates that States parties to the Treaty undertake not to place in orbit around the Earth any objects carrying nuclear weapons or any other kinds of weapons of mass destruction, install such weapons on celestial bodies or station such weapons in outer space in any other manner,

Reaffirming also paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that, in order to prevent an arms race in outer space, further measures should be taken and appropriate international negotiations held in accordance with the spirit of the Treaty,

Recalling its resolutions 36/97 C and 36/99 of 9 December 1981, 37/83 of 9 December 1982 and 37/99 D of 13 December 1982,

Gravely concerned at the danger posed to all mankind by an arms race in outer space,

Mindful of the widespread interest expressed by Member States in the course of the negotiations on and following the adoption of the above-mentioned Treaty in ensuring that the exploration and use of outer space should be for peaceful purposes, and taking note of proposals submitted to the General Assembly at its tenth special session and at its regular sessions and to the Committee on Disarmament,

Noting the grave concern expressed by the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space over the extension of an arms race into outer space and the recommendations made to the competent organs of the United Nations, in particular the General Assembly, and also to the Committee on Disarmament,

Convinced that further measures are needed for the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Recognizing that, in the context of multilateral negotiations for preventing an arms race in outer space, the resumption of bilateral negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America could make a significant contribution to such an objective,

Taking note of the report of the Committee on Disarmament,

Noting that in the course of its session in 1983 the Committee on Disarmament considered this subject both at its formal and informal meetings, as well as through informal consultations,

Aware of the various proposals submitted by Member States to the Committee on Disarmament, particularly concerning the establishment of a working group on the subject and its draft mandate, which had been considered extensively by a contact group,

Taking note of the draft Treaty on the Prohibition of the Use of Force in Outer Space and from Space against the Earth, submitted by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, as well as views and comments expressed during the discussion of that draft at its thirty-eighth session,

Expressing its deep concern and disappointment that, although there was no objection, in principle, to the establishment without delay of such a working group, the Committee on Disarmament has not thus far been enabled to reach agreement on an acceptable mandate for the working group during its 1983 session,

1. Reaffirms that general and complete disarmament under effective international control warrants that outer space shall be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and that it shall not become an arena for an arms race;

2. Emphasizes that further effective measures to prevent an arms race in outer space should be adopted by the international community;

3. Calls upon all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space and to take immediate measures to prevent an arms race in outer space;

4. Reiterates that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, has a primary role in the negotiation of an agreement or agreements, as appropriate, on the prevention of an arms race in all its aspects in outer space;

5. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to consider as a matter of priority the question of preventing an arms race in outer space;

6. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its consideration of the question of the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects, taking into account all relevant proposals, including the consideration of the proposal referred to in the preambular part of the present resolution;

7. Further requests the Conference on Disarmament to establish an ad hoc working group at the beginning of its session in 1984, with a view to undertaking negotiations for the conclusion of an agreement or agreements, as appropriate, to prevent an arms race in all its aspects in outer space;

8. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report on its consideration of this subject to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this subject by the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space".

Approved by First Committee (A/38/633) by recorded vote (121-1-1), 25 November (meeting 41); 20-nation draft (A/C.1/38/L.36/Rev.1), orally revised: agenda item 55. Sponsors: Bangladesh, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Maldives, Mongolia, Pakistan, Poland, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Sweden, Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam, Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 1st Committee 3-10, 12-31, 33,41; plenary 97. Recorded vote in Assembly as follows

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: United Kingdom.

In explanation of vote, the United Kingdom said the text prejudged a number of important issues and ignored or dismissed unsolved problems, whereas the withdrawn Western draft had offered a realistic and balanced approach.

Italy said that paragraph 7 on the mandate did not fully respect the autonomy of the Conference on Disarmament; Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany and Japan expressed similar reservations. Norway felt that the proposed mandate was broader than what was currently acceptable to all members of that body. Mexico and the USSR stressed the need for an ad hoc working group with an appropriate mandate. Brazil and Mexico hoped that the State casting the sole negative vote would honour the wishes of the majority, while India hoped the adoption of a consensus text would be reflected in the Conference's deliberations.

The Federal Republic of Germany and Turkey expressed reservations about the phrase "exclusively for peaceful purposes", in paragraph 1. Similarly, Australia said this should not be interpreted as contrary to its interest in stable deterrence, and Belgium rejected concepts linked to the demilitarization of outer space in so far as that affected security.

Italy, Japan and Norway considered it inappropriate that the text singled out from other proposals the draft treaty proposed by the USSR; the Federal Republic of Germany further expressed doubts about whether that draft proposal formed a suitable basis for negotiations. Japan also felt the various terms of the text lacked precise definition. The Federal Republic of Germany added that it should be left to the parties of former bilateral discussions to decide when to renew their efforts.

Regional disarmament

The General Assembly's 1983 consideration of regional disarmament measures focused on implementing its 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace⁽¹⁹⁾ and on the possibility of establishing a zone of peace in South-East Asia.

Report of the Secretary-General. In connection with the Assembly's consideration of regional disarmament, the Secretary-General submitted in early October a report, with later addenda,⁽²⁰⁾ prepared in response to a December 1982 Assembly resolution,⁽²¹⁾ containing the views of, or measures taken by, Belgium, Bulgaria and the USSR in regard to regional disarmament. Information was also provided by the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (see below) which stated that it had received no specific requests to assist States and regional institutions concerning regional disarmament.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 15 December 1983, adopted without vote resolution 38/73 J.

Regional disarmament

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 37/100 F of 13 December 1982 on regional disarmament,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Takes note also of the fact that, at the request of the States having participated in the Madrid meeting of representatives of the participating States of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, held from 11 November 1980 to 9 September 1983, on the basis of the provisions of the Final Act relating to the follow-up to the Conference, the Government of Spain has transmitted the Concluding Document of this meeting to the Secretary-General;

3. Expresses its satisfaction, in this connection, at the convening at Stockholm of the Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe, commencing on 17 January 1984, as a substantial and integral part of the multilateral process initiated by the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe;

4. Takes note also of the proposals made in the context of regional disarmament since the adoption of its resolution 37/100 F;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the General Assembly regularly informed on the implementation of resolution 37/100 F, as well as on the activities carried out by the Secretariat, in particular the Department for Disarmament Affairs, and the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research, in the field of the regional approach to disarmament;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Regional disarmament: report of the Secretary-General".

Zones of peace

Indian Ocean region

Activities of the Committee on the Indian Ocean. In 1983, the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean, established by the General Assembly in 1972⁽²²⁾ to study practical measures for achieving the objectives of the 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace,⁽¹⁹⁾ held three sessions in New York-31 January to 9 February, 11 to 22 April and 12 to 22 July-with two additional meetings on 15 and 30 November; at this last meeting the Committee adopted its annual report to the Assembly.⁽²³⁾ Thirty-two formal meetings were held in addition to a number of informal ones.

Membership of the Ad Hoc Committee rose to 47, with the appointment of the United Arab Emirates by the Assembly President on 11 May 1983; the Committee was unable, in the time available, to reach consensus on the applications for participation in its work made by Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Hungary, Mongolia and Viet Nam.

As in previous years, two different approaches continued to be advocated in the Committee as it continued efforts to harmonize views relevant to the convening of the proposed Conference on the Indian Ocean-as first decided by the Assembly in 1979(24)-as a necessary step for implementing the Declaration. Most of the non-aligned and Eastern European members asserted that the continued deterioration of the political and security climate in the area had established the urgency for the Conference, and urged the Committee to begin practical preparations for convening the Conference no later than the first half of 1984, a timing indicated in a December 1982 Assembly resolution.(25) Other Committee members asserted that the lack of progress in harmonizing views, and the political and security climate in the region, were not currently conducive for such an undertaking.

In July, Sri Lanka introduced a draft resolution, on behalf of the non-aligned States members of the Committee, calling for the convening of the Conference at Colombo on 4 June 1984 for a period of three weeks.(26)

Among working papers submitted to the Committee in 1983 were those by: Bulgaria and the German Democratic Republic on the Conference's structure and agenda; (27) Egypt on safeguards governing the Ad Hoc Committee's work;(28) and Australia, also on behalf of the United States, on the views of the ANZUS Council partners-the third party being New Zealand-on peace proposals for the Indian Ocean, referred to in a July 1983 Council communiqué.(29) In addition, the German Democratic Republic submitted an excerpt from a January 1983 Prague declaration of the States parties to the Warsaw Treaty Organization,(30) and the USSR submitted an excerpt from the statement made in 1982 to the General Assembly by its Minister for Foreign Affairs.(31)

On 30 November, the Committee adopted parts I and II of its report by consensus, and then proceeded to consider part III, containing a draft resolution put together by an open-ended drafting group for recommendation to the General Assembly (the draft being subsequently adopted by the Assembly, see below). During the discussion on the text, the USSR stated that since paragraphs 5 and 6 failed to provide a sufficiently reliable basis for the preparatory work of the Conference, it could not support the adoption of the text by consensus.

Related action. In an October 1983 communiqué,(32) the Meeting of Foreign Ministers and Heads of Delegations of the Non-Aligned Countries to the General Assembly's thirty-eighth (1983) session (New York, 4-7 October) expressed concern over the increasing military presence of the major Powers in the Indian Ocean area, and reaffirmed their determination to ensure that the Conference be held in 1984.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1983, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 38/185, the draft of which had been recommended by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean and approved by the First Committee.

Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, contained in its resolution 2832(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, and recalling also its resolutions 2992(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, 3080(XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3259 A (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3468(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/88 of 14 December 1976, 32/86 of 12 December 1977, S-10/2 of 30 June 1979, 33/68 of 14 December 1978, 34/80 A and B of 11 December 1979, 35/150 of 12 December 1980, 36/90 of 9 December 1981 and 37/96 of 13 December 1982, and other relevant resolutions,

Recalling further the report of the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean,

Reaffirming its conviction that concrete action for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace would be a substantial contribution to the strengthening of international peace and security,

Recalling its decision, taken at its thirty-fourth session in resolution 34/80 B, to convene a Conference on the Indian Ocean at Colombo during 1981,

Recalling also its decision to make every effort, in consideration of the political and security climate in the Indian Ocean area and progress made in the harmonization of views, to finalize, in accordance with its normal methods of work, all preparations for the Conference, including the dates for its convening,

Recalling further its decision, taken at the thirty-seventh session in resolution 37/96, concerning the consideration of the convening of the Conference not later than the first half of 1984,

Recalling the exchange of views in the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean in 1983,

Noting the exchange of views on the adverse political and security climate in the region,

Noting further the various documents before the Ad Hoc Committee,

Convinced that the continued military presence of the great Powers in the Indian Ocean area, conceived in the context of their confrontation, gives urgency to the need to take practical steps for the early achievement of the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace,

Considering that any other foreign military presence in the area, whenever it is contrary the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace and the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, gives greater urgency to the need to take practical steps towards the early achievement of the objectives of the Declaration,

Considering also that the creation of a zone of peace in the Indian Ocean requires the active participation of and full co-operation among the littoral and hinterland States, the permanent members of the Security Council and the major maritime users to ensure conditions of peace and security based on the purposes and principles of the Charter, as well as on the general principles of international law,

Considering further that the creation of a zone of peace requires co-operation and agreement among the States of the region to ensure conditions of peace and security within the area, as envisaged in the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, and respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the littoral and hinterland States,

Calling for the renewal of genuinely constructive efforts through the exercise of the political will necessary for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace,

Deeply concerned at the danger posed by the grave and ominous developments in the area and the resulting sharp deterioration of peace, security and stability which particularly seriously affect the littoral and hinterland States, as well as international peace and security,

Convinced that the continued deterioration of the political and security climate in the Indian Ocean area is an important consideration bearing on the question of the urgent convening of the Conference and that the easing of tension in the area would enhance the prospect of success being achieved by the Conference,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean and the exchange of views in the Committee;

2. Regrets that the Ad Hoc Committee has failed to reach consensus on the finalization of dates for the convening, during 1984, of the Conference on the Indian Ocean;

3. Emphasizes its decision to convene the Conference at Colombo as a necessary step for the implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, adopted in 1971;

4. Takes note of the work of the Ad Hoc Committee during 1983;

5. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to make decisive efforts in 1984 to complete preparatory work relating to the Conference on the Indian Ocean, in consideration of the political and security climate in the region and with a view to enabling the opening of the Conference at Colombo in the first half of 1985, it being understood that such preparatory work would comprise organizational matters, including the provisional agenda for the Conference, rules of procedure, documentation and consideration of appropriate arrangements for any international agreement that may ultimately be reached for the maintenance of the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace, and substantive issues;

6. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee at the same time to make determined efforts in 1984 for the necessary harmonization of views on the remaining relevant issues;

7. Renews the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee as defined in the relevant resolutions and requests the Committee to intensify its work with regard to the implementation of its mandate;

8. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to hold three further sessions in 1984 of a duration of two weeks each, with the possibility of holding a fourth session to be considered as required;

9. Requests the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee to continue his consultations on the participation in the work of the Committee by States Members of the United Nations which are not members of the Committee, with the aim of resolving this matter at the earliest possible date;

10. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a full report on the implementation of the present resolution;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to render all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Committee, including the provision of summary records.

General Assembly resolution 38/185

20 December 1983 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/38/637) without vote. 2 December (meeting 48); draft by Committee on Indian Ocean (A/38/29); agenda item 59.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/38/729; S-G, A/C.1/38/L.85, A/C.5/38/84. Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 1st Committee 3-10, 12-31, 48; 5th Committee 6/2; plenary 103.

Prior to the text's approval in the First Committee, roll-call votes, requested by Poland, were taken on two paragraphs. Paragraph 5 was approved by 97 votes to none, with 16 abstentions; paragraph 6 was approved by 94 votes to none, with 20 abstentions. Among those abstaining were the Eastern European and some other socialist countries, as well as the United States.

In explanation of position, the USSR stated that among the obstacles impeding implementation of the Declaration was the absence, in annual Assembly resolutions, of precise indications concerning the Conference preparatory tasks and the inclusion of pre-conditions for its convening; paragraphs 5 and 6 served to substitute what it called pointless discussion for actual preparation. Similar views were expressed by Madagascar. Viet Nam expressed disappointment at the further postponement of the Conference.

Ethiopia, while supporting the paragraphs, felt that paragraph 5 contained a thinly veiled attempt to hold the Conference hostage to the strategic objectives of extra-regional Powers; it considered the harmonization of views, referred to in paragraph 6, as a process already commenced and continuing through the Conference. Cuba deplored what it called the stalling tactics used by those wishing to maintain their military presence in the region. Bulgaria accepted the draft as a whole as a compromise for the continued mandate of the Committee, even though it felt that the pre-conditions threatened to reduce the text's general positive thrust.

Democratic Yemen said the lack of progress in the Ad Hoc Committee had influenced the voting on the paragraphs; members of that body should, therefore, strive in 1984 to complete preparations, including organizational matters, for the Conference.

The United States said that, because it respected the long-standing consensus procedure in the Ad Hoc Committee, it had reluctantly agreed to what it considered was the text's less than satisfactory language, however, since it deplored the decision by some delegations to depart from that procedure by calling for votes on two paragraphs, it was not participating in either the First Committee or the Assembly action.

South-East Asia

In 1983, the General Assembly, in resolution 38/3 on the situation in Kampuchea, urged the countries of South-East Asia to exert renewed efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in the region, once a comprehensive political solution to the Kampuchean conflict was achieved (see Chapter VII of this section).

Confidence-building measures

In 1983, the Disarmament Commission began elaborating guidelines for confidence-building measures as elements beneficial for international peace and security and for disarmament. The Secretary-General reported on the views of Member States concerning information exchange on their military capabilities as a possible confidence-building measure, and also made a number of observations on the requirements for setting up an international satellite agency to monitor the implementation of disarmament agreements.

Disarmament Commission consideration. In pursuance of a December 1982 General Assembly resolution,⁽³³⁾ the Disarmament Commission⁽¹⁾ established on 9 May 1983 an informal, open-ended working group (Working Group IV) to elaborate guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures and for their global or regional implementation. The Working Group held 11 meetings between 13 and 27 May, under the chairmanship of Henning Wegener (Federal Republic of Germany); additional informal consultations were held through the Chairman. Proceeding on the understanding that the Commission would have two years to complete its task, the Group held a first reading of papers presented to it by the Bahamas, the Federal Republic of Germany, India and the Netherlands, as well as one by the Chairman dealing with definitions of the concept, and his compilation of issues which had evolved during the general debate on the question. The 1981 study by the Group of Governmental Experts on Confidence-building Measures⁽³⁴⁾ was also before the Working Group.

In summarizing its work, the Working Group noted that all participants agreed that confidence-building measures should not be a substitute or pre-condition for disarmament or disarmament negotiations; at the same time, they observed that disarmament measures which limited or reduced military potential had a high confidence-building value. There were varying views in the Group about: the relative importance or effectiveness of various approaches and kinds of confidence-building measures; the focus of future guidelines and the usefulness of a precise definition of confidence-building measures; and the value of openness in the military sphere—such as availability of reliable information on military activities and expenditures (see below).

The Commission recommended that the work be continued in 1984.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 15 December 1983, adopted without vote resolution 38/73 A.

Confidence-building measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/100 D of 13 December 1982, in which it requested the Disarmament Commission to consider the elaboration of guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures and for the implementation of such measures on a global or regional level and to submit a progress report on its deliberations on this item to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session,

Having considered the report of the Disarmament Commission on the work accomplished during its session in 1983 on the item "Elaboration of guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures and for the implementation of such measures on a global or regional level",

Expressing its concern about the deterioration of the international situation and the further escalation of the arms race, which both reflect and aggravate the unsatisfactory international political climate, tension and mistrust,

Desirous of strengthening international peace and security and, at the same time, creating and improving conditions conducive to further measures of disarmament,

Noting again the findings of the Comprehensive Study on Confidence-building Measures and in particular the important role that confidence-building measures can play with regard to regional and world-wide stability as well as to progress in disarmament,

Mindful of the fact that, while confidence-building measures cannot serve as a substitute for concrete disarmament measures, they play a very significant role in achieving disarmament, whether they are taken unilaterally, bilaterally or multilaterally,

Convinced of the usefulness of confidence-building measures freely arrived at by the States concerned and agreed upon, taking into account the particular conditions and requirements of the regions concerned,

Convinced of the need to reduce mistrust and fear among States through the realization of confidence-building measures, such as those recommended by consensus in the Comprehensive Study on Confidence-building Measures, including pertinent and timely information on military activities and other matters pertaining to mutual security, and measures concerning the peacetime military conduct of States, as well as through progress on concrete measures of disarmament,

Recalling that confidence reflects a set of interrelated factors of a military as well as of a non-military character and that a plurality of approaches is needed to overcome fear, apprehension and mistrust between States and to replace them by confidence,

Welcoming the convening at Stockholm on 17 January 1984 of the Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe, of which the first stage will be devoted to the negotiation and adoption of a set of mutually complementary confidence- and security-building measures designed to reduce the risk of military confrontation in Europe as characterized in the Concluding Document of the Madrid meeting of representatives of the participating States of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, held from 11 November 1980 to 9 September 1983,

1. Urges all States to encourage and assist all efforts designed to explore further the ways in which confidence-building measures can strengthen international peace and security;

2. Invites all States to consider the possible introduction unilaterally, bilaterally or multilaterally of confidence-building measures in their particular regions and, where possible, to negotiate on them in keeping with the conditions and requirements prevailing in their respective regions;

3. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue and conclude at its 1984 session the consideration of the item entitled "Elaboration of guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures and for the implementation of such measures on a global or regional level";

4. Further requests the Disarmament Commission to submit a report on its deliberations on this item, containing such guidelines, to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

5. Recommends that all States consider the inclusion of a reference to, or an agreement on, confidence-building measures, as appropriate, in any joint statements or declarations of a political nature;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Consideration of guidelines for confidence-building measures".

15 December 1993 General Assembly resolution 38/73 A Meeting 97 Adopted without vote
Approved by First Committee (A/38/641) without vote, 21 November (meeting 34);
42-nation draft (A/C.1/38/L.5); agenda item 63 (d).
Sponsors: Austria, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bolivia, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Mali, Mauritania, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Romania, Samoa, Spain, Sudan, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Yemen, Zaire.
Meeting numbers.. GA 38th session: 1st Committee 3-10, 12-31, 34; plenary 97.

In explanation of position, the USSR said that talks on confidence-building were being used to create the illusion that such measures could be achieved at the same time as an arms buildup, provided they were accompanied by, among other things, measures to establish transparency and predictability; confidence-building measures had to be established along with military detente, arms limitation and disarmament, rather than in isolation from them—a requirement, not reflected adequately in the text, which must be taken into account in the Commission's future work.

A number of delegations expressed reservations on paragraph 5. Nigeria would have abstained had a separate vote been taken on it, as the recommendation raised the status of confidence-building measures—a mere collateral of disarmament—to that of an article of faith. Argentina added that the measures should not receive the special treatment given. Mexico felt that the wording was broader than had been intended by the sponsors. Albania also said it had difficulty with that text and the final preambular paragraph. Algeria would have preferred a procedural draft in view of the ongoing work in the Disarmament Commission; it felt the text failed to mention many other measures conducive to building confidence.

A need for confidence-building measures was also mentioned in 1983 General Assembly resolutions 38/188 F, on curbing the naval arms race and extension of confidence-building measures to seas and oceans (see above, under NAVAL ARMAMENTS), and 38/196, on confidence-building in international economic relations (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter I).

Proposed information exchange on armaments and armed forces

Report of the Secretary-General. In pursuance of a December 1982 General Assembly resolution,⁽³⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in September 1983 a report⁽³⁶⁾ with later addenda containing 16 replies of Member States to an invitation to communicate their views on additional measures to facilitate the provision of objective information on military capabilities, thereby removing misperceptions and contributing to disarmament.

Three of the responding States did not think it useful to take special measures and involve the United Nations in the endeavour, while most of the others, including the Federal Republic of Germany on behalf of the 10 member States of EC, spoke of the possible use of existing United Nations machinery and the benefit that could be drawn from the Organization's experience.

The Secretary-General stated that, in view of the complexity of the subject-matter, a greater number of replies would be needed to analyse the United Nations role.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

As recommended by the First Committee, the Assembly, on 20 December, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/188 C.

Measures to provide objective information on military capabilities

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 37/99 G of 13 December 1982,
Deeply concerned about the continuing escalation of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, its extremely harmful effects on world peace and security and the deplorable waste of human and material resources for military purposes,

Recalling paragraph 105 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, which encourages Member States to ensure a better flow of information with regard to the various aspects of disarmament to avoid dissemination of false and tendentious information concerning armaments and to concentrate on the danger of escalation of the arms race and on the need for general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Noting that misperceptions of the military capabilities and the intentions of potential adversaries, which could be caused, inter alia, by the lack of objective information, could induce States to undertake armaments programmes leading to the acceleration of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and to heightened international tensions,

Aware that objective information on the military capabilities, in particular among nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, could contribute to the building of confidence among States and to the conclusion of concrete disarmament agreements and, thereby, help to halt and reverse the arms race,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Calls once more upon all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, to consider additional measures to facilitate the provision of objective information on, as well as objective assessments of, military capabilities;
3. Invites all States that have not communicated to the Secretary-General their views and proposals concerning such measures to do so as soon as possible, and those States that have already communicated such views and proposals to supplement them, as appropriate;
4. Requests the Secretary-General to ask the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies to consider the modalities of studying the question of measures to facilitate objective information on, and objective assessments of, military capabilities, in particular among nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States;
5. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the provisions of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 38/188 C

Approved by First Committee (A/38/640) by recorded vote (77-0-17), 25 November (meeting 40); 17-nation draft (A/C.1/38/L.22); agenda item 62 (i).

In explanation of vote, the USSR said the information exchange on military capabilities was desirable and possible in a general climate of international confidence; such an exchange, however, should be linked directly to concrete disarmament measures, rather than being a separate, preliminary step as was envisaged in the text. India considered that progress in disarmament depended on the exercise of political will by the major Powers, rather than on information on military expenditures or an adequate format for collecting such information.

Proposed Intergovernmental body for satellite monitoring of disarmament agreements

In 1983, the Secretary-General submitted, in pursuance of a December 1982 General Assembly resolution,(37) a report(38) on the institutional aspects involved in establishing an international satellite monitoring agency (ISMA)-an idea originally proposed by France in 1978 at the Assembly's first special session devoted to disarmament.(39) Two other studies, prepared by the Secretary-General with the assistance of the Group of Governmental Experts on the Question of the Establishment of an International Satellite Monitoring Agency, had been submitted to the Assembly in 1979(40) and 1981.(41)

The Secretary-General noted the Group's observation that ISMA would have to be established by a treaty or convention in view of its highly sensitive mission, affecting the security interests of States. Consequently, he observed that the Assembly would have to decide on a process and a legal framework leading to such establishment; that some institutional aspects would have to be negotiated between the participating States; and that, should the Assembly decide to establish ISMA, it could also identify his specific responsibilities in the framework of the negotiations.

Disarmament and international security

In its 1983 consideration of disarmament and international security, the General Assembly, in resolution 38/73 H, requested the Security Council to render operative the collective security system provided for in the Charter of the United Nations and thereby facilitate disarmament negotiations. It recommended, in resolution 38/188 H, that the 1982 report of the Independent Commission on Disarmament and Security Issues (ICDSI)(42)-a private group of individuals, also known as the Palme Commission-be taken into account in disarmament efforts, and requested the Secretary-General, with the assistance of governmental experts, to study the concepts of security.

The question of disarmament and international security was also taken up by the Assembly in resolutions 38/183 F (see above, under IMPLEMENTATION OF THE 1979 DECLARATION ON CO-OPERATION FOR DISARMAMENT) and 38/183 H (see above, under IMPLEMENTATION OF THE RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE 1978 SPECIAL SESSION).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/73 H.

Disarmament and international security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/83 A of 11 December 1979, 35/156 J of 12 December 1980, 36/97 K of 9 December 1981 and 37/100 E of 13 December 1982,

Deeply concerned over the continuing stagnation in the disarmament negotiating efforts and the ever-escalating arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race, which make the survival of mankind extremely precarious,

Gravely concerned over the present state of international affairs characterized by the continued resort to violence and the use of force, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations,

Firmly convinced that a closely interdependent world composed of many sovereign nations cannot possibly function towards peace, security and survival in a nuclear and space age without an effectively functioning organization,

Noting that the fundamental function of the United Nations in its primary purpose is the security system provided for in the Charter and that the principles of disarmament embodied in Article 11 of the Charter and flowing from it are an integral part of the system of security,

Convinced that restoring to the United Nations its essential function in accordance with the provisions of the Charter would be a significant factor in creating the conditions conducive to the cessation of the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race, and for productive negotiations on disarmament measures,

Bearing in mind that recent events have brought into sharp focus the reality that consecutive decisions of the Security Council, adopted unanimously, were ignored and bypassed by those required to comply with them and in consequence the chain of events that followed further aggravated the situation,

Determined to avert the danger of an approaching nuclear war in a world of insecurity and anarchy in which the continuing lack of collective security through the United Nations is an essential factor,

Having regard to the warning in the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization, submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session, that "it was the lack of an effective system of collective security through the League of Nations that led to the Second World War",

1. Requests the Security Council to expedite the conclusion of the agreements making armed forces available to the Security Council, as required by the Charter of the United Nations, to render operative the collective security system provided for in the Charter and thereby facilitate productive negotiations for the cessation of the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race, and for progress on disarmament;

2. Further requests the Security Council to submit a report, through the Secretary-General, to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

Report of the Commission on disarmament and security

Disarmament Commission consideration. In 1983, the Disarmament Commission(1) established an informal, open-ended working group (Working Group III), which held 11 meetings as well as informal consultations between 12 May and 1 June under the chairmanship of Curt Lidgard (Sweden), to consider the disarmament-related recommendations and proposals contained in the 1982 ICDSI report, entitled "Common security-a programme for disarmament".(42)

Established at Vienna in September 1980 under the chairmanship of Olof Palme of Sweden, ICDSI, consisting of prominent individuals from various parts of the world, had presented its report to the Assembly at its second (1982) special session devoted to disarmament. Its recommendations concerned the nuclear challenge and East-West relations, curbing the qualitative arms competition, assuring confidence among States, strengthening the United Nations security system, regional approaches to security and economic security. Also, ICDSI recognized the United Nations as the most valuable tool for common security, which should be used in a more determined way.

While differing views were expressed—particularly with regard to the ICDSI recommendations for establishing a tactical or battlefield nuclear-weapon-free zone in Europe (see above, under NUCLEAR-WEAPON-FREE ZONES)—the Disarmament Commission found the report noteworthy in that it reflected agreement among prominent individuals of different political convictions on a concrete programme aimed at halting the arms race and creating a downward spiral in armaments. The Commission also regarded the report as a timely and constructive contribution to international efforts to strengthen peace and security, and recommended that it be taken into account in disarmament efforts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

As recommended by the First Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 38/188 H by recorded vote on 20 December 1983.

Independent Commission on Disarmament and Security Issues

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/99 B of 13 December 1982, in which it noted the report of the Independent Commission on Disarmament and Security Issues entitled “Common security—a programme for disarmament”, submitted to the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling also that the Disarmament Commission, in accordance with resolution 37/99 B, considered the recommendations and proposals in the report of the Independent Commission, and that the Disarmament Commission recommended that the report be taken into account in ongoing and future disarmament efforts,

Regretting the lack of trust and confidence between States, especially between the nuclear-weapon Powers, reflected, inter alia, in the concepts of security adopted by Governments,

Bearing in mind that the Disarmament Commission held a broad discussion of the concept of common security which it found a valuable approach in the search for lasting peace and security,

Emphasizing the need for creating concepts enhancing political and economic confidence between nations and policies arrived at not against, but in co-operation with other nations, as, for instance, in the Comprehensive Study on Confidence-building Measures,

Recalling paragraph 96 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it was stated that taking further steps in the field of disarmament and other measures aimed at promoting international peace and security would be facilitated by the carrying out of studies by the Secretary-General in this field with appropriate assistance from governmental or consultant experts,

1. Welcomes the report of the Independent Commission on Disarmament and Security Issues as a timely and constructive contribution to international efforts to achieve disarmament and to maintain and strengthen international peace and security;

2. Recommends that the report of the Independent Commission on Disarmament and Security Issues be duly taken into account in ongoing and future disarmament efforts;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts,* to carry out a comprehensive study of concepts of security, in particular security policies which emphasize co-operative efforts and mutual understanding between States, with a view to developing proposals for policies aimed at preventing the arms race, building confidence in relations between States, enhancing the possibility of reaching agreements on arms limitation and disarmament and promoting political and economic security;

4. Invites all States to submit to the Secretary-General, not later than 1 April 1984, their views on the content of such a study and to co-operate with him in order to achieve the objectives of the study;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the final report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

*Subsequently referred to as the Group of Governmental Experts to Carry Out a Comprehensive Study of Concepts of Security.

In explanation of vote, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Turkey and the United States expressed doubts on the wisdom of carrying out a study, the outline of which they found vague; on the absence of sufficient consultations before the presentation of the proposal; or on discussing, in the United Nations, reports prepared by private persons. The Federal Republic of Germany also felt that the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies (see below) should have been asked to review study projects, and the United States asserted that the study should be carried out within existing United Nations resources.

India did not favour any alternative security doctrine other than that of collective security as embodied in the United Nations Charter; further, it had reservations about some of the ICDSI recommendations.

Disarmament and development

In 1983, efforts were made to incorporate the disarmament-development perspective into United Nations activities, as recommended by the Group of Governmental Experts on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development in its 1981 study.(43)

The Group had viewed the relationship as a two-way street wherein development not only benefited from but also contributed towards disarmament, and had recommended, inter alia, that the Secretary-General take appropriate action, through the existing inter-agency consultative mechanism of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) and its Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) (CCSQ(PROG)), to foster and co-ordinate the incorporation of the disarmament-development perspective in the programmes and activities of the United Nations system. The Department for Disarmament Affairs (formerly the Centre for Disarmament) and the Office of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation (DIEC) had been identified by the Group as having lead functions in that endeavour.

The Secretary-General's October 1983 report,(44) submitted to the Assembly in pursuance of a December 1982 resolution,(45) contained information received from within the United Nations system. It mentioned that the Department for Disarmament Affairs had received a growing number of requests for an elaboration of the reasoning of the 1981 study, for further investigation of the problems covered therein, and for additional information and expert advice for incorporating the disarmament-development perspective. The Secretary-General also reported that the Department, in consultation with the Office of the DIEC Director-General, planned to convene in early 1984 an ad hoc group of technical experts to act on the decisions taken by CCSQ(PROG) (first regular session, Geneva, 10-15 March 1983),(46) including a recommendation that the organs within the United Nations system should designate focal points to facilitate contacts with the Department-a proposal also made by ACC in its 1983 annual report to the Economic and Social Council.(47)

The Committee for Development Planning pointed out in its 1983 report(48) that the world's arms expenditures-over $650 billion in 1982-were greater than the combined incomes of over 2 billion people living in the world's 50 poorest countries. It said the continuing increase in armaments and military expenditure threatened world security and survival, that the grotesque cost impeded development, and that the resources released through disarmament would contribute to the economic and social advancement of all nations.

By resolution 1983/18, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to report every three years on the adverse effects of the arms race on social progress and development. The Council also called on States to reallocate the resources being spent for military purposes, in order to ensure social progress (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XIII).

The Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development(49) decided, on 20 October 1983, to defer until 1984 the question of including an item on trade and economic aspects of disarmament in the provisional agenda of a subsequent session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1983, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions-38/71 A and B-under the item on the relationship between disarmament and development, both on the recommendation of the First Committee.

Resolution 38/71 A was adopted by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the conclusions contained in the study entitled The Relationship between Disarmament and Development,

Recalling also its resolution 37/84 of 9 December 1982,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on measures taken within the United Nations system in implementation of resolution 37/84;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session based on appropriate measures taken by Member States and within the United Nations system in accordance with resolution 37/84.

The Assembly adopted resolution 38/71 B without vote.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned by the arms buildup and trends in military expenditures, the consequent waste of human and economic resources and the resulting risks for world peace and security,

Also concerned by the extent of the crisis affecting the world economy, particularly the developing countries,

Considering that the magnitude of military expenditures is now such that their various implications can no longer be ignored in the efforts pursued in the international community to secure the recovery of the world economy and the establishment of a new international economic order,

Also considering that a reduction of arms expenditures, especially by nuclear-weapon States and other militarily important States, on a mutually agreed basis would be a measure that would curb the arms buildup and would make it possible to release additional resources for use in economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries,

Bearing in mind the conclusions of the study entitled The Relationship between Disarmament and Development, as well as General Assembly resolutions 36/92 G of 9 December 1981 and 37/84 of 9 December 1982, in which the Assembly took note of those conclusions,

Noting that an investigation of the modalities of an international disarmament fund for development was undertaken in 1983 by the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research, as requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 37/84,

Recalling the recommendation of the General Assembly in that resolution that the question of the conversion of resources from military to civilian purposes and the reallocation to economic and social development of the resources released by disarmament measures should be included in the provisional agenda of the Assembly at intervals to be decided upon,

Convinced that the time has come to study measures that could be taken on the basis of the conclusions and recommendations of existing studies or studies being prepared on the question,

Noting that the envisaged initiatives include, in particular, a proposal for a conference on the various implications of the relationship between disarmament and development and a proposal on the establishment of an international disarmament fund for development,

1. Expresses its conviction that increased solidarity in the field of development would serve the cause of international peace and security and that the resources released by the reduction of arms expenditures would contribute to the growth and stability of the world economy, and particularly the economies of developing countries;

2. Invites Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General, by 1 April 1984, their views and proposals concerning the relationship between disarmament and development, in particular with regard to the following:

(a) The evaluation of the burden of armaments in the world;

(b) The impact of military expenditures on the world economic situation and development;

(c) The contribution that a reduction in arms and military expenditures, in particular by nuclear-weapon States and other militarily important States, or a contribution by those States, as appropriate, would make to development tasks;

(d) The ways and means that would enable this contribution to be made, in particular in the interests of the economic and social progress of the developing countries;

(e) The consideration of proposals relating to the convening of a conference;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the replies of Member States to the Disarmament Commission in good time;

4. Requests the Disarmament Commission to include this item in the agenda of its session to be held in 1984, to consider the replies received and to make appropriate recommendations to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session.

In explanation of position, the USSR said that, while not opposed to adopting the text which contained certain ambiguities, its position remained unchanged as regards the 1982 resolution, including its opposition to the idea of creating a disarmament-for-development fund.

The Federal Republic of Germany said the successful implementation of the text depended in part on agreements among Member States on the importance of transparency and comparability of data for achieving a reduction of military expenditures; it felt it wise for the Commission to complete the current tasks on its agenda before taking on additional work.

In resolution 38/113 on human rights and use of scientific and technological developments, the Assembly stressed the importance of implementing practical measures of disarmament and the use of resources thus released for social and economic development (for text, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS).

Military research and development

The Secretary-General, in pursuance of a December 1982 General Assembly resolution,(50) established in 1983 a group of experts to carry out a comprehensive study on the scope, role and direction of the military use of research and development, the mechanisms involved, its role in the overall arms race, and its impact on arms limitation and disarmament, with a view to preventing a qualitative arms race and to ensuring that scientific and technological achievements might ultimately be used solely for peaceful purposes.

With the participation of experts from Argentina, China, Egypt, France, the German Democratic Republic, India, Japan, Peru, Sweden, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States, the group, known as the Group of Governmental Experts on Military Research and Development, held its first session from 21 to 25 March in New York. Experts from Czechoslovakia and Ghana later joined the Group. At the first session, Rolf Björnerstedt (Sweden) was elected as Chairman and the discussion centred on the organization of work and a preliminary exchange of views on the content of the study.

The second session (New York, 5-15 July), attended by all 14 experts, focused on detailed discussion of the subject-matter, taking into account views of 28 Governments as submitted to the Secretary-General. The Group decided to ask the Secretariat to prepare a working draft of its report for consideration at the third session, due to be held in February 1984.

Parties and signatories to disarmament agreements

In October 1983, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his annual report on the status of multilateral disarmament agreements,(51) based on information received from the States depositaries of those agreements. Listing the parties to and signatories of agreements as at 31 August 1983, the report also contained similar information on the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques, the Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, and the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, of which the Secretary-General was the depositary. The last Convention, which entered into force in 1983, was also the subject of a separate report to the Assembly (see above, under CONVENTIONAL WEAPONS).

As at 31 December 1983, the following numbers of States had become parties to the agreements covered in the Secretary-General's report (listed in chronological order, with the years in which they were initially signed or opened for signature in parentheses):(52)

(Geneva) Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare (19:25): 105 parties
The Antarctic Treaty (1959): 28 parties
Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water (1963): 111 parties

Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (1967): 31 parties
Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (1968): (54) 120 parties
Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof (1971):(55) 73 parties
Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction (1972):(56) 98 parties
Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques (1977):(57) 42 parties
Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (1979):(58) 4 parties

Proposed World Disarmament Conference

The concept of a world disarmament conference was first endorsed by the General Assembly in 1965(59) and had been discussed each year since 1971. In 1983, no further progress was made towards the convening of such a conference, as the basic positions of nuclear-weapon States remained largely unchanged.

Ad Hoc: Committee activities. The 40-member Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference held two sessions in New York in 1983: three meetings between 4 and 7 April and four others between 5 and 8 July. Its 1983 annual report(60) to the Assembly contained the updated views of the five nuclear-weapon States regarding the holding of such a conference. The Committee, which had been discussing the question since it first met in 1974,(6) also informed the Assembly that, through its Chairman, it had maintained close contact with those States so as to remain currently informed of their attitudes.

According to the report, the USSR continued to support the convening of a conference, rejected what it viewed as attempts by some nuclear-weapon States to justify their unconstructive attitudes by allusions to the deteriorating international situation, and called for a decision on specific preparatory measures.

China continued to hold that, since the super-Powers had escalated their arms race and had not shown sincerity towards disarmament, the time was not ripe for a conference. France observed the absence of consensus on the question; it had no objection, therefore, to the Ad Hoc Committee's studying the possibility of spacing its meetings in view of the continuing deadlock. The United Kingdom maintained that, in the current international climate, consideration of the matter was not useful; it also doubted the usefulness of further Committee meetings. The United States continued to believe it premature to convene a conference in view of the insufficient political agreement on the fundamental disarmament issues; an unsuccessful conference would impede future efforts towards concrete and verifiable measures.

The Ad Hoc Committee reiterated its previous conclusions: that the idea of a world disarmament conference had wide support, though with varying degrees of emphasis and differences regarding conditions and aspects relevant to its convening, including the deteriorating international situation; and that no consensus on convening a conference under current conditions had been reached among the nuclear-weapon States, whose participation was widely deemed essential. It suggested that the General Assembly might renew the Committee's mandate and request the Committee to maintain close contact with the nuclear-weapon and all other States and to consider any relevant comments and observations which might be made to it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December 1983, adopted without vote resolution 38/186.

World Disarmament Conference

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2833(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, 2930(XXVII) of 29 November 1972, 3183(XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3260(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3469(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/190 of 21 December 1976, 32/89 of 12 December 1977, 33/69 of 14 December 1978, 34/81 of 11 December 1979, 35/151 of 12 December 1980, 36/91 of 9 December 1981 and 37/97 of 13 December 1982,

Reiterating its conviction that all the peoples of the world have a vital interest in the success of disarmament negotiations and that all States should be in a position to contribute to the adoption of measures for the achievement of this goal,

Stressing anew its conviction that a world disarmament conference, adequately prepared and convened at an appropriate time, could provide the realization of such an aim and that the co-operation of all nuclear-weapon Powers would considerably facilitate its attainment,

Taking note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference,

Recalling that, in paragraph 122 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it decided that, at the earliest appropriate time, a world disarmament conference should be convened with universal participation and with adequate preparation,

Recalling also that, in paragraph 23 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, the General Assembly considered it pertinent also to recall that in paragraph 122 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session it had stated that at the earliest appropriate time a world disarmament conference should be convened, with universal participation and with adequate preparation,

1. Notes with satisfaction that in its report to the General Assembly the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference stated, inter alia, the following:

"Having regard for the important requirements of a world disarmament conference to be convened at the earliest appropriate time, with universal participation and with adequate preparation, the General Assembly should take up the question at its thirty-eighth regular session for further consideration, bearing in mind the relevant provisions of resolution 36/91, adopted by consensus, in particular paragraph 1 of that resolution, and resolution 37/97, also adopted by consensus";

2. Renews the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee;

3. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to continue to maintain close contact with the representatives of the States possessing nuclear weapons, in order to remain currently informed of their attitudes, as well as with all other States, and to consider any relevant comments and observations which might be made to the Committee, especially having in mind paragraph 122 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

4. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "World Disarmament Conference".

In explanation of position, the United States said it had noted the understanding reflected in the text that such a conference should be adequately prepared and convened at an appropriate time.

Public information

Efforts to generate public understanding and support for the United Nations disarmament objectives continued in 1983, as the World Disarmament Campaign entered its second year of implementation. The first United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign was held in New York during Disarmament Week, and the Assembly decided, in resolution 38/73 D, to hold another pledging conference in 1984.

World Disarmament Campaign

The World Disarmament Campaign, aimed at informing, educating and generating public understanding and support for the disarmament objectives of the United Nations, was launched by the General Assembly on 7 June 1982, at the start of its second special session devoted to disarmament.⁽⁶²⁾ In December that year, the Assembly approved⁽⁶³⁾ the general framework for the Campaign and a 1983 programme of activities.⁽⁶⁴⁾

The August 1983 report of the Secretary-General⁽⁶⁵⁾ on the Campaign's implementation outlined the co-ordinating role of the Department for Disarmament Affairs and the participation of others, particularly the Department of Public Information. It also described: United Nations information materials, including the introduction in June of a Disarmament Newsletter; interpersonal communication, seminars and training, among them a regional conference for non-governmental organizations (NGOs) held at New Delhi, India (August), and a regional seminar for educators at Caracas, Venezuela (October); special events, such as panel discussions, exhibits and film-making activities; a publicity programme; and activities of the United Nations information centres and other filed offices.

The Secretary-General pointed to the need for additional resources, and reported that Member States' pledges to the World Disarmament Campaign Voluntary Trust Fund from the launching of the Campaign until the issuance of his current (August) report totalled some $2.9 million; in addition, various NGOs and individuals had contributed over $1 million. The Secretary-General proposed strengthening the Department for Disarmament Affairs through provision of two permanent posts for the Campaign for 1984-1985.

The Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies (see below),⁽⁶⁶⁾ mandated by the Assembly to advise the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Campaign,⁽⁶⁷⁾ expressed the view that the Campaign's effectiveness should be appraised by such means as questionnaires, and that NGOs should be asked to meet and discuss with it the Campaign's implementation, starting at its 1984 session. Support was expressed for the recommendation contained in the Secretary-General's report to strengthen the staff of the Department for Disarmament Affairs.

The first United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign was held at United Nations Headquarters on 27 October, during the 1983 Disarmament Week, and was attended by 61 States.⁽⁶⁸⁾

The Conference President, Alfonso Garcia Robles (Mexico), stated at the closing of the meeting that the pledges totalled $3,103,516-18 pledges amounting to the equivalent of $3,000,899 announced before, and 12 new pledges amounting to $102,617 made during, the 1983 Pledging Conference. He observed that the $3 million pledged represented less than what the world spent on arms in three minutes; in view of that enormous disparity, he anticipated the convening of a second pledging conference with the participation of all Member States.

Either during the Pledging Conference or at other times in the course of the year, the following pledges to the Campaign were made: Australia ($A 30,000), Bangladesh (25,000 taka), Burma ($1,500), Canada ($Can 100,000), Cuba (5,000 pesos), Czechoslovakia (300,000 koruny), Democratic Yemen ($2,000), Denmark (250,000 kroner), Egypt (40,000 pounds), Greece ($10,000), India ($100,000), Indonesia ($5,000), Japan ($50,000), Libyan Arab Jamahiriya (5,000 dinars), Nigeria (10,000 naira), Norway ($25,000), Poland (100,000 zlotych), Sri Lanka ($5,000), Tunisia ($10,000 equivalent), Uganda (300,000 shillings), Viet Nam (50,000 dong).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted two resolutions, 38/73 D and F, concerning the World Disarmament Campaign.

Resolution 38/73 D, providing for a second pledging conference, was adopted without vote.

World Disarmament Campaign

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in paragraph 15 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, it declared that it was essential that not only Governments but also the peoples of the world recognize and understand the dangers in the present situation and stressed the importance of mobilizing world public opinion on behalf of disarmament,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/152 I of 12 December 1980, 36/92 C of 9 December 1981 and 37/100 I of 13 December 1982, as well as the reports of the Secretary-General of 17 September 1981, 11 June 1982 and 3 November 1982,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 30 August 1983 on the implementation of the programme of activities of the World Disarmament Campaign,

Having also examined the part of the report of the Secretary-General dealing with the activities of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies relating to the programme of activities of the World Disarmament Campaign, as well as the final act of the 1983 United Nations Pledging Conference for the Campaign held on 27 October 1983,

1. Notes with satisfaction the implementation of the programme of activities of the World Disarmament Campaign for 1983 as described in the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Notes also with satisfaction the voluntary contributions made by Member States to the World Disarmament Campaign Voluntary Trust Fund, prior to and during the 1983 United Nations Pledging Conference for the Campaign;

3. Decides that at its thirty-ninth session there should be a second United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign, in order that all those Member States that have not yet announced their voluntary contributions may have an opportunity to do so;

4. Recommends that the voluntary contributions made by Member States to the World Disarmament Campaign Voluntary Trust Fund should not be earmarked for specific activities inasmuch as it is most desirable that the Secretary-General may enjoy full freedom to take the decisions he deems fit within the framework of the Campaign previously approved by the General Assembly and in exercise of the powers vested in him in connection with the Campaign;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to instruct the United Nations information centres and regional commissions to give wide publicity to the World Disarmament Campaign and, whenever necessary, to adapt, as far as possible, United Nations information materials into local languages;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a report covering both the implementation of the programme of activities of the World Disarmament Campaign by the United Nations system during 1984 and the programme of activities contemplated by the system for 1985;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "World Disarmament Campaign".

15 December 1983 General Assembly resolution 38/73 D Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/38/641) without vote, 25 November (meeting 40); S-nation draft (A/C.1/38/L.40); agenda item 63 (g).

Sponsors: Bangladesh, Egypt, Indonesia, Mexico, Romania, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 1st Committee 3-10, 12-32, 40; plenary 97.

In explanation of position, the Federal Republic of Germany and the Netherlands expressed reservations concerning paragraph 3, saying that too much emphasis on pledging conferences might erroneously suggest that the Campaign's success depended merely on fund-raising rather than on free, unencumbered flow of information.

The USSR said it understood paragraph 4 to mean that the Secretary-General would consult donor countries about concrete Campaign measures in their countries. For the German Democratic Republic, that paragraph meant that the Secretary-General's Campaign-related decisions would be based on the Charter of the United Nations, the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, (69) and relevant United Nations resolutions.

As recommended by the First Committee, the Assembly adopted, by recorded vote on 15 December, resolution 38/73 F.

World Disarmament Campaign: actions and activities

The General Assembly,

Aware of the growing public concern at the dangers of the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race, and its negative social and economic consequences,

Noting with satisfaction the successful beginning of the implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign and its positive impact on the mobilization on a large scale of world public opinion on behalf of peace and disarmament,

Recalling its resolutions 36/92 J of 9 December 1981 and 37/100 H of 13 December 1982, as well as the report of the Secretary-General on world-wide action for collecting signatures in support of measures to prevent nuclear war, to curb the arms race and for disarmament,

Welcoming the voluntary contributions made to the World Disarmament Campaign Voluntary Trust Fund to carry out the objectives of the Campaign,

Taking into account the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the programme of activities of the World Disarmament Campaign,

Convinced that the United Nations system, Member States, with respect for their sovereign rights, and other bodies, in particular non-governmental organizations, all have their role to play in achieving the objectives of the World Disarmament Campaign,

Taking into account the great number of various activities carried out within the framework of the World Disarmament Campaign, including action for collecting signatures in support of measures to prevent nuclear war, to curb the arms race and for disarmament,

1. Reaffirms the usefulness of further carrying out actions and activities which are an important manifestation of the will of world public opinion and which contribute effectively to the achievement of the objectives of the World Disarmament Campaign and thus to the creation of a favourable climate for making progress in the field of disarmament with a view to achieving the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control;

2. Invites once again Member States to co-operate with the United Nations to ensure a better flow of accurate information with regard to the various aspects of disarmament as well as actions and activities of the world public in support of peace and disarmament, and to avoid dissemination of false and tendentious information;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report annually to the General Assembly on the implementation of the provisions of the present resolution.

In explanation of vote, Brazil said activities such as collecting signatures did not conform to the function and purpose of the United Nations. France also had serious reservations regarding the reference to that measure, and was joined by the United Kingdom in adding that paragraph 2 was an invitation to censorship and posed the question of who would judge what was false and tendentious information. Expressing regret that a second text on the Campaign had been thought essential, the United Kingdom added that, on a subject as important as disarmament, every facet should be explored fully and debated publicly. Australia said it supported the text at face value but did not endorse State censorship or control of information available to citizens.

In 1983, in its resolution 38/183 F, the Assembly also called on Member State and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to disseminate the ideas of international co-operation for disarmament (see above, under IMPLEMENTATION OF THE 1979 DECLARATION ON CO-OPERATION FOR DISARMAMENT).

Observance of Disarmament Week (24-30 October)

Disarmament Week-proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1978(69) to start on United Nations Day, 24 October-was marked in 1983 at United Nations Headquarters at a special meeting on that day of the Assembly's First Committee, where statements were made by the Assembly President and the Secretary-General as well as by representatives of regional groups.

The President, stating that relations between societies could never be peaceful if they were based on terror, called for a bold, imaginative step to reduce tensions, to improve international relations and to promote development as well as international economic co-operation.

The Secretary-General stressed the importance of the USSR-United States bilateral negotiations on arms limitation expressed hope that provisional measures would be adopted to give them more time to achieve positive results; at the same time, he urged that the negotiations within the United Nations framework should continue with greater determination.

The Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in an annual report (70) the replies received from 17 Governments and from several programmes and agencies within the United Nations system concerning activities in connection with Disarmament Week 1982. A number of international NGOs also submitted information.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/183 L.

Disarmament Week

The General Assembly,

Gravely concerned over the escalating arms race,

Emphasizing the urgent need for and the importance of wide and continued mobilization of world public opinion in support of halting and reversing the arms race, especially the nuclear-arms race in all its aspects,

Mindful of the world-wide mass anti-war and anti-nuclear movement,

Noting with satisfaction the broad and active support by Governments and international and national organizations of the decision taken by the General Assembly at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, regarding the proclamation of the week starting 24 October, the day of the foundation of the United Nations, as a week devoted to fostering the objectives of disarmament,

Recalling the recommendations concerning the World Disarmament Campaign contained in annex V to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, in particular the recommendation that, in view of the fact that Disarmament Week has played a useful role in fostering the objectives of disarmament, the week starting 24 October should continue to be widely observed as Disarmament Week,

Recalling also its resolutions 33/71 D of 14 December 1978, 34/83 I of 11 December 1979 and 37/78 D of 9 December 1982,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on the follow-up measures undertaken by governmental and non-governmental organizations in holding Disarmament Week;

2. Expresses its appreciation to all States and international and national governmental and non-governmental organizations for their energetic support of and active participation in Disarmament Week;

3. Invites all States, in carrying out appropriate measures at the local level on the occasion of Disarmament Week, to take into account the elements of the model programme for Disarmament Week, prepared by the Secretary-General;

4. Also invites the relevant specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency to intensify activities, within their areas of competence, to disseminate information on the consequences of the arms race and requests them to inform the Secretary-General accordingly;

5. Requests Governments, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 33/71 D, to inform the Secretary-General of activities undertaken to promote the objectives of Disarmament Week;

6. Invites international non-governmental organizations to take an active part in Disarmament Week and to inform the Secretary-General of the activities undertaken;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with Paragraph 4 of resolution 33/71 D, to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a report containing the information referred to in paragraph 7 of resolution 37/78 D, as well as paragraphs 4 to 6 above.

In explanation of vote, Australia regretted the inclusion of paragraph 4, which invited IAEA, in particular, to undertake activities which, it believed, were outside the scope of the Agency's statute. France also considered the paragraph to be contrary to the balance of responsibilities and competence established within the United Nations system, and Canada also expected the agencies involved to remain within their mandates.

Peace and disarmament movements

GENERAL ASSEMBLY CONSIDERATION

In 1983, a draft resolution entitled "Peace and disarmament movements"(71) was submitted-but later withdrawn-in the General Assembly's First Committee by Australia, the Bahamas, Costa Rica, the Federal Republic of Germany, Indonesia, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Singapore, Sweden, the United Kingdom, the United States and Uruguay.

The proposal would have had the Assembly call on Member States to permit their citizens free public expression of their own views on disarmament and the exchange of such views with the Secretary-General, express regret that some groups had had difficulty in engaging in activities promoting peace and disarmament, and encourage Member States and NGOs to provide the Secretary-General with information pertinent to monitoring compliance with the commitment to further free debate on disarmament.

Czechoslovakia proposed amendments(72) to the draft consisting of an additional preambular paragraph, by which the Assembly would have emphasized that Governments should take into account the will of the peoples as reflected by the mass movements for the prevention of nuclear war and the arms race, and a new operative paragraph 1, by which it would have urged Governments of nuclear-weapon and other militarily significant States to harmonize their policies with the demands of such movements. The United States proposed sub-amendments(73) to those amendments which referred to the wishes of all people concerned, rather than the mass movements, being taken into account by Governments and, in paragraph 1, urged Governments, especially of nuclear-weapon and other militarily significant States, to redouble their efforts to achieve general disarmament and prevent nuclear and any other type of war.

The sponsors subsequently submitted a revised text(74) in which they deleted references to free exchange of disarmament-related information between citizens and the Secretary-General. Thereafter, Bulgaria and Czechoslovakia submitted amendments to the revised draft, both further modifying paragraph 1. Bulgaria's amendment(75) would have had the Assembly renew its call on Member States to facilitate the flow of accurate information on disarmament matters, both governmental and non-governmental, to and among citizens. The amendment proposed by Czechoslovakia(76) would have had the Assembly urge Governments to harmonize their policies with the demands of the mass peace and disarmament movements.

The United States, on behalf of the sponsors, withdrew the draft, stating that the proposed amendments sought to redirect the draft resolution to such an extent that they perverted the text's basic objective.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 1st Committee 3-10, 12-31, 33, 46.

Disarmament research

In 1983, the General Assembly initiated three new disarmament studies on the following subjects: unilateral nuclear disarmament measures (resolution 38/183 J), the naval arms race (resolution 38/188 G) and concepts of security (resolution 38/188 H). In addition, three studies were in progress, on conventional disarmament (see above, under CONVENTIONAL WEAPONS), nuclear-weapon-free zones (see above, under NUCLEAR-WEAPON-FREE ZONES), and military research and development (see above, under MILITARY RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT).

UN Institute for Disarmament Research

Activities of the Institute. On 1 January 1983, the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR), established in 1980(77) within the United Nations Institute for Training and Research,(78) became a Geneva-based autonomous institution, in pursuance of a December 1982 General Assembly resolution.(67)

Reporting to the Assembly through the Secretary-General,(79) the UNIDIR Director said the Institute, financed by voluntary contributions, received assistance from Australia, Canada, France and Norway, which had responded to the Assembly invitation in that regard.(67) In 1983, UNIDIR established, in accordance with a December 1982 Assembly recommendation,(80) a six-member steering group, which met at Geneva on 21 and 22 June and agreed on guidelines for investigating the modalities of an international disarmament fund for development; the group also indicated that the study would be completed by June 1984 for submission to the Assembly. Among a number of ongoing UNIDIR studies, many of which were to be completed in 1984, were those dealing with international law of disarmament, disarmament and the right to security, denuclearization of the Balkans, chemical weapons prohibition, and new technologies in the convention armaments field. Work continued on studies on the lowering of the level of armaments.

UNIDIR also provided information to the General Assembly in connection with its 1983 consideration of regional disarmament (see above,).

Activities of the Board of Trustees. The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly that the Advisor Board on Disarmament Studies (see below),(66) meeting for the first time as the UNIDIR Board of Trustees (New York, 6-13 September 1983), adopted research guidelines and project proposals, along with the Institute's draft statute.

The draft statute, annexed to the Secretary-General's report, covered the Institute's purposes, functions, Board of Trustees and other institutional arrangements such as finance and administrative support. It reflected the view of the Board that UNIDIR's activities should be financed partly from the regular budget of the United Nations, as far as basic operating and administrative costs were concerned, and partly from voluntary contributions and special-purpose grants which, it envisaged, should cover the main study programme.

ACABQ consideration. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in a November 1983 report,(81) observed that UNIDIR's administrative and financial arrangements should be defined clearly from the outset; it called for removing the ambiguities arising from an attempt to make the draft statute cover both the UNIDIR financing on a voluntary basis and the possibility of an Assembly decision to fund certain expenditures from the United Nations regular budget.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY CONSIDERATION

In the light of the ACABQ observations, a 33-nation draft resolution(82) in the First Committee, which would have had the Assembly approve the draft statute, was withdrawn. As orally proposed by its Chairman, the Committee decided, without objection: to recommend that the Assembly act in 1984 after the UNIDIR Board of Trustees submitted clarifications on the statute's provisions.

Subsequently, the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, which had been asked by the First Committee Chairman to consider the administrative implications of the draft on the question,(83) also decided without objection to defer action on the ACABQ report until 1984.(84)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted decision 38/447, as recommended by the First Committee.

Draft statute of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research

At its 103rd plenary meeting, on 20 December 1983, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, decided that the draft statute of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research should be returned to the Board of Trustees of the Institute with a request that the Board spell out the meaning of the provisions of the draft statute, so that the Assembly could take a decision on that draft statute at its thirty-ninth session.

General Assembly decision 38/447

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/38/640) without vote, 25 November (meeting 41); draft orally proposed by Chairman, agenda item 62 (j).

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 1st Committee 3-10, 12-31, 41; 5th Committee 51; plenary 103.

In 1983, the Assembly made other requests to UNIDIR: under resolution 38/181 A, to provide data on the development of South Africa's nuclear capability; and under resolution 38/73 J, to keep the Assembly informed, through the Secretary-General, on its activities relating to the regional approach to disarmament (for texts of these resolutions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS).

Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies

The Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies, revived by the Secretary-General pursuant to a December 1982 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁶⁷⁾ held its eighth and ninth sessions in New York from 6 to 13 September and from 12 to 16 December 1983.

The Board was established in 1978 to advise the Secretary-General on various aspects of United Nations studies on disarmament and arms limitation,⁽⁸⁵⁾ and had last met in 1981.

Its 1983 sessions focused on United Nations studies on disarmament, the implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign (see above), and the work and draft statute of UNIDIR, for which it acted for the first time in 1983 as Board of Trustees (see above).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted without vote resolution 38/183 O.

Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies The General Assembly,

Recalling paragraph 124 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Recalling further its resolution 37/99 K of 13 December 1982, by section III of which it requested the Secretary-General to revive the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies,

1. Expresses its satisfaction that the Secretary-General has revived the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies;
2. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the Advisory Board in 1983;
3. Requests the Secretary-General to report annually to the General Assembly on the work of the Advisory Board.

20 December 1983 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Sponsors: Algeria, Argentina, Cuba, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, India, Mali, Mexico, Pakistan, Romania, Sri Lanka, United Kingdom, Yugoslavia.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: 1st Committee 3-10, 12-31, 33, 35; Plenary 103.

In other 1983 action, the Assembly, by resolution 38/188 C, requested the Advisory Board, through the Secretary-General, to consider studying the measures to facilitate objective information and assessments of military capabilities (see above, under PROPOSED INFORMATION EXCHANGE ON ARMAMENTS AND ARMED FORCES).

Fellowships

The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly that the 1983 United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament (29 June-30 November)⁽⁸⁶⁾ consisted of lectures, seminars, research, observation of the Committee on Disarmament at Geneva and the Assembly's First Committee in New York, and a one-week course at IAEA in Vienna. Twenty-five fellows from as many countries participated in the programme, which also included study visits in the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Sweden, the USSR and the United States, at the invitation of those countries.

The Secretary-General noted that the programme, which the Assembly established in 1978 at its first special session on disarmament⁽⁶⁹⁾ to promote expertise in disarmament, especially in developing countries, had trained 104 public officials from 67 countries in its first five years of existence.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 15 December, adopted without vote resolution 38/73 C.

United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision, contained in paragraph 108 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, to establish a programme of fellowships on disarmament, as well as its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it, inter alia, decided to continue the programme and to increase the number of fellowships from twenty to twenty-five as from 1983,

Noting with satisfaction that the programme has already trained one hundred and four public officials from sixty-seven countries, most of whom are now in positions of responsibility in the field of disarmament affairs within their Governments or Permanent Missions to the United Nations, or representing their Governments at international disarmament meetings,

Bearing in mind the growing interest which continues to be manifested in the programme by an ever-increasing number of States,

Recognizing the fact that the programme of studies and activities as outlined in the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament has continued to expand,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Decides to continue the United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament;
2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to apply the same criteria of objectivity and balance in drawing up the future programme of activities as he has done so far, in accordance with the guidelines established by the General Assembly at its thirty-third session;
3. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Germany, the Federal Republic of, Japan, Sweden, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America for inviting the fellows to their countries in 1983 to study selected activities in the field of disarmament, thereby contributing to the fulfilment of the overall objectives of the programme, as well as providing additional information sources and practical knowledge for the fellows, and, in this connection, expresses the hope that other Member States will extend similar support to the programme;

4. Takes note of the decision of the Secretary-General to relocate the fellowship programme and its staff at Geneva as from 1 May 1983;

5. Notes that the expansion of the programme has led to an increase in the level of its activities;

6. Commends the Secretary-General for the diligence with which the programme has continued to be carried out;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements for the implementation of the programme for 1984, in accordance with the guidelines established for it;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the provisions of the present resolution.

Organizational aspects

Co-ordination in the UN system

Responding to a 1982 General Assembly request,⁽⁸⁰⁾ the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination in 1983 studied the question of co-ordinating disarmament activities in the United Nations system (see above, under DISARMAMENT AND DEVELOPMENT).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

As recommended by the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/188 J.

Institutional arrangements relating to the process of disarmament

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the United Nations, in accordance with the Charter, has a central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament and should, accordingly, play a more active role in this field,

Reaffirming that the international machinery should be utilized more effectively to promote the cause of disarmament,

Reaffirming also the role of the Conference on Disarmament as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum;

Stressing that the Department for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat should take full account of the possibilities offered by specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system with regard to studies and information on disarmament,

Stressing again the close relationship between matters concerning international security and disarmament and the interest in close co-operation between the units in the Secretariat dealing with them,

Convinced that all possible avenues should be effectively utilized for the cause of preventing war, in particular nuclear war, and achieving disarmament,

Reaffirming further the close link existing between disarmament and development,

Convinced that disarmament would contribute over the long term to the effective economic and social development of all States, in particular developing countries, by contributing to reducing the economic disparities between developed and developing countries and establishing the new international economic order on the basis of justice, equity and co-operation, and towards solving other global problems,

Convinced also that there is a close relationship between the development of international co-operation in various fields, such as trade, economic development, environmental protection and health and the prevention of war, in particular nuclear war, and the achievement of arms limitation and disarmament,

Reaffirming its invitation to the relevant specialized agencies to intensify activities within their areas of competence to disseminate information on the consequences of the arms race,

Taking note with appreciation of various activities carried out by United Nations organizations and agencies within the framework of the World Disarmament Campaign,

Commending the report of the World Health Organization entitled "Effects of nuclear war on health and health services", as well as appropriate efforts undertaken by other specialized agencies,

1. Invites the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to broaden further their contribution, within their areas of competence, to the cause of arms limitation and disarmament;

2. Reaffirms the necessity of ensuring constant co-ordination of activities carried out in the field of disarmament by various entities of the United Nations;

3. Invites the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the activities carried out by them in implementation of the present resolution;

4. Recommends to the Secretary-General that, in the agenda of his periodic meetings with the executive heads of the specialized agencies, he include an item relative to disarmament, in the consideration of which the Under-Secretary-General for Disarmament Affairs would participate;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session an item entitled "Contribution of the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to the cause of arms limitation and disarmament".

General Assembly resolution 38/188 J

20 December 1983 Meeting 103 114-17-12 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/38/640) by recorded vote (30-16-15), 21 November (meeting 35); 4-nation draft (A/C.1/38/L.66), orally revised; agenda item 62 (j).

Sponsors: Cuba, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Mongolia.

Meeting numbers GA 36th session: 1st Committee 3-10, 12-31, 33, 35; plenary 103.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Iceland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, China, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Ireland, Paraguay, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Spain, Sweden.

In explanation of vote, Sweden felt that unqualified recommendations to international organizations to broaden their activities to political issues could seriously disturb and hamper the support for, as well as the work in, those agencies. Similarly, Canada felt it ill-advised to introduce political issues into United Nations functional bodies, and stressed that the division of labour be respected.

Sharing these views, the United States said the text would also impede progress towards adopting concrete, effective and verifiable measures of arms control and disarmament in the competent bodies which, according to the understandings enshrined in the 1978 Final Document,(69) were the General Assembly's First Committee, the Disarmament Commission and the Committee on Disarmament. Canada agreed that arms control and disarmament matters should be discussed in those specific bodies and in IAEA. Speaking on behalf of the 10 States members of EC, Greece observed that, although the work of the specialized agencies involved certain aspects of disarmament which fell within their areas of competence, the text could detract from the United Nations central role in disarmament and the Secretary-General's responsibility for co-ordinating disarmament-related activities undertaken within the United Nations system.

Department for Disarmament Affairs

The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly in 1983(87) that, in accordance with a December 1982 Assembly request,(67) the Centre for Disarmament had been transformed into the United Nations Department for Disarmament Affairs as of 1 January 1983, and that he had appointed Under-Secretary-General Jan Martenson as its head.

The Department, whose functions included assisting the Secretary-General in discharging his disarmament-related responsibilities, consisted of the Office of the Under-Secretary-General, the Committee and Conference Services Branch, the Information and Studies Branch, and the Geneva Branch.

At its inception, the Department had at its disposal the 26 established Professional posts of its predecessor, occupied by staff members representing 23 nationalities from all geographical regions. In view of the priority attached to disarmament questions and the increased scope and volume of relevant Secretariat activities, the Secretary-General proposed measures that would result in a net growth in 1984-1985 of two established Professional posts.

In 1983 action, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General, under resolution 38/73 J, to keep it informed of the activities carried out by the Department for Disarmament Affairs concerning the regional approach to disarmament; and, under resolution 38/181 A, called on UNIDIR, in co-operation with the Department and in consultation with OAU, to provide data on the continued development of South Africa's nuclear capability (for texts of these resolutions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS).

Chapter II

Peaceful uses of outer space

Questions relating to international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space continued to be discussed during 1983 in the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Committee on outer space), in its two sub-committees the Legal Sub-Committee and the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee and in the General Assembly.

In December, the Assembly considered a number of recommendations made by the Committee and adopted a resolution (38/80) on international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space in which, among other things, it called on States to negotiate promptly to halt the militarization of outer space.

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: arms race in outer space. Other administrative and management questions: communications satellite.

Space science and technology

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee of the Committee on outer space held its twentieth session in New York from 7 to 17 February 1983.⁽¹⁾ The Sub-Committee proposed steps to implement the recommendations of the 1982 Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE-82),⁽²⁾ recommended approval of the 1984 United Nations Programme on Space Applications and reviewed the co-ordination of space activities in the United Nations system. It again considered the use of nuclear power sources in outer space and related safety requirements, examined technical aspects of the geostationary orbit, and reviewed progress in remote sensing of the Earth by satellites and space transportation systems. The Sub-Committee's recommendations were acted on by the Committee on outer space in June/July.

Implementation of the recommendations of the 1982 Conference on outer space

Plans were prepared during 1983 to carry out a number of the recommendations made by UNISPACE-82 for promoting international co-operation in the exploration and peaceful uses of outer space.⁽²⁾

Preliminary suggestions were presented in a January report⁽³⁾ by the United Nations Expert on Space Applications. The Expert recalled that in 1982 the General Assembly had decided to create an International Space Information Service, initially consisting of a directory of sources of information and data services.⁽⁴⁾ It was expected that the first directory would be available in 1984.

Meeting in February, the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, while noting that primary responsibility for establishing and operating space technology programmes in developing countries lay with the countries concerned, invited developed nations to assume greater responsibility in making contributions for implementing UNISPACE-82 recommendations. It recommended that all States should have access to the appropriate space technology they required. After reviewing a list of studies suggested by the Conference, the Sub-Committee suggested that priority be given to studies by the United Nations on remote sensing needs, the use of broadcasting satellites for educational purposes, and the possibility of closer spacing of satellites in the geostationary orbit. It proposed that groups of experts from Member States help prepare the studies. The Sub-Committee also recommended that the Secretary-General consult with funding agencies and bodies with operational activities on their plans for implementing the UNISPACE-82 recommendations and report to the Committee on outer space at its June/July session. The Sub-Committee requested the Secretary-General to support the establishment and strengthening of regional mechanisms of co-operation.

In a June report with later addenda,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General gave the plans of 12 United Nations bodies for implementing the UNISPACE-82 recommendations.

In July,⁽⁶⁾ the Committee on outer space endorsed an agreement reached in the Sub-Committee that it was important to carry out the recommendations of UNISPACE-82 as early as possible. It also endorsed the Sub-Committee's recommendation on the studies to be given priority, and its request that the Secretary-General support more vigorous regional co-operation.

Referring to those studies which fell within its competence, the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) submitted in October a note⁽⁷⁾ annexing additional information on direct broadcasting satellites for educational purposes and on the spacing of satellites in the geostationary orbit. An ITU World Administrative Radio Conference, to be held in two sessions in 1985 and 1988, was to cover all aspects of the question leading to optimum use of the orbit, including the optimum spacing practicable.

During 1983, three regional or interregional seminars⁽⁸⁾ focused on implementing UNISPACE-82 recommendations. They were held in Brazil (São José dos Campos, 2-6 May), Thailand, (Bangkok, 30 May-3 June) and Ethiopia (Addis Ababa, 4-8 July), for the member States of the Economic Commission for Latin America, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, and the Economic Commissions for Africa and Western Asia, respectively. Participants in each seminar asked that a regional meeting of experts be convened. At São José dos Campos, the participants proposed that such a meeting take up the current state of space science and the extent of co-operation. At Bangkok, they agreed that the meeting should consider the funding of a central data bank and the teaching of space science. At Addis Ababa, it was suggested that the meeting examine questions of space technology and its applications, research and education.

The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly in October⁽⁹⁾ on the progress made in implementing the UNISPACE-82 recommendations. He summarized the recommendations by the Committee on outer space, described activities planned under the Programme on Space Applications and listed nine voluntary contributors to the expanded Programme (see below).

UN activities

UN Programme on Space Applications

In addition to regional/interregional seminars (see above), training courses were given and fellowships and grants were awarded as part of the United Nations Programme on Space Applications during 1983.

Two international training courses were offered. The first international seminar on the applications of remote sensing to operational agrometeorology in semi-arid countries (Niamey, Niger, 11-29 July)⁽¹⁰⁾ was organized jointly by the United Nations, the World Meteorological Organization (WMO), the European Space Agency (ESA), and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO). It was attended by 22 senior technical personnel from 20 countries in Africa and Western Asia. The participants recommended that training courses give more time to practical exercises, urged intensified research in remote sensing as applied to agrometeorology, and called for similar courses in places with different climates.

The eighth United Nations international training course on the applications of satellite remote sensing to water resources (Rome, Italy, 19 September-7 October) was organized in co-operation with FAO, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and Italy.⁽¹¹⁾ One participant from each of 21 developing countries attended. Participants expressed the desire to spend more time on: fundamentals of remote sensing and its applications for drainage-basin morphology, surface-water monitoring and flood mapping; erosion and sedimentation; ground-water search; and remote sensing for decision-making in management and field work.

Austria awarded two training fellowships in microwave technology for a year's study at the Technical University of Graz, Austria. Consultations were conducted on fellowships to be presented to candidates from developing countries by Egypt, Greece, Indonesia, the USSR and EAS.

The United Nations Expert on Space Applications, in his January report to the Committee on outer space,⁽³⁾ outlined future activities under the Programme to translate the space-applications-related recommendations of UNISPACE-82⁽¹²⁾ into operational programmes. These included developing indigenous capabilities for education and training; promoting co-operation among Member States in space science and technology and their applications; providing technical advisory services to Member States, on request; and disseminating information on every aspect of outer space.

The Expert's report on the 1983 Programme,⁽⁸⁾ submitted in December to the Committee on outer space, included an evaluation of the effectiveness of the Programme for 1981. It was based on 59 replies to a questionnaire sent in May 1983 to 150 individuals who had taken part in seminars and training courses. The replies indicated that a high percentage of participants had continued to work in remote sensing, communications and meteorology, and that the knowledge they gained had subsequently enabled them to initiate, establish or direct study groups, national programmes, regional/international co-operation and other activities.

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee had noted in February⁽¹⁾ that voluntary contributions amounting to $459,000 would be required to finance the Programme on Space Applications in 1984. The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly in October⁽⁹⁾ that contributions had been offered by Bulgaria, China, Egypt, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Indonesia, Sweden, the USSR and ESA.

The Programme for 1984-proposed by the Expert on Space Applications,⁽¹³⁾ and recommended by the Sub-Committee and the Committee-included seminars on the application of remote sensing to forestry and to agrometeorology, and a workshop to help educators in developing countries to introduce space science into their curricula.

The Committee on outer space expressed appreciation at its June/July session for offers of contributions, seminars and fellowships.

Co-ordination in the UN system

Noting the progress achieved in co-ordinating programmes on space activities among organizations within the United Nations system, the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee in February 1983(1) continued to stress the necessity of effective consultations to avoid duplication of activities.

The Committee on outer space, which met in June/July,(6) commented that the reports submitted by United Nations bodies had helped the Committee and its subsidiary bodies to fulfil their role as a focal point for international co-operation, especially in regard to the practical application of space technology in developing countries.

The fifth Inter-Agency Meeting on Outer Space Activities, convened by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), was held at Geneva from 4 to 6 October.(14) The Meeting found that the machinery for co-ordinating practical applications of space technology had worked satisfactorily; consequently, there were no major organizational or procedural questions to bring before ACC. A draft report of the Secretary-General to the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee on the co-ordination of outer space activities for 1984, 1985 and future years was discussed. The report covered information dissemination, education, expert services and the provision of equipment related to remote sensing by satellites, communications, meteorology and navigation.(15) On other matters, the Meeting agreed that organizations should submit information for a possible paper on training in space technology and that a 1977 publication on space activities and resources should be updated. It proposed that a further Inter-Agency Meeting be held in 1984.

Remote sensing of the Earth by satellites

In February 1983, the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee(1) continued to consider remote sensing of the Earth by satellites. It noted that a supplementary list of remote sensing applications had been prepared and said that updating of the catalogue should be continued. It also noted that a seminar on rural disaster preparedness, hosted by Colombia and sponsored by ESA, FAO, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and WMO, was to be held in June. In addition, a training course on remote sensing applied to land resources, sponsored by the Federal Republic of Germany and FAO, was to be held at Munich and a training course on flood monitoring, sponsored by FAO and ESA, in co-operation with WMO, was to be held at Rome, both in October.

The Committee on outer space, at its June/July session,(6) commented on the importance of the compatibility and complementarity of remote sensing systems. It emphasized the need for continuity of data availability in a form compatible with current systems, given the investments made by many countries in ground stations, processing equipment, data archiving and software. It suggested that system operators keep this in mind when planning future systems.

Nuclear power sources and safety in spacecraft

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee in February 1983(1) discussed technical aspects and safety measures relating to the use of nuclear devices as power sources for spacecraft. Several delegations referred to the conclusion reached in 1981 by the Sub-Committee's Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space(16) that nuclear power sources could be used safely, provided that the necessary safety requirements were met. Others referred to the re-entry into the earth's atmosphere between December 1982 and February 1983 of COSMOS-1402, which had a nuclear reactor on board. In the light of that event, they felt, international safety regulations concerning the use of nuclear power sources in outer space were needed. They urged that the Legal Sub-Committee expedite its work in that area (see below). Some of these delegations said that a moratorium on the launching of nuclear reactors into orbit should be observed until international regulations were adopted. Others said that the Working Group had provided sufficient guidelines.

Meeting in June/July,(6) the Committee on outer space recommended that the Working Group be reconvened to do further work during the 1984 session of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee. The Committee endorsed a recommendation by its Sub-Committee that the use of nuclear power sources in outer space be kept as a priority item on the Sub-Committee's agenda.

Space transportation

Progress being made in space transportation systems was noted by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee at its February 1983 session.(1) Referring to activities by China, India, Japan, the USSR, the United States and ESA, the Sub-Committee observed that their progress was providing the international community with much wider possibilities for the launching of payloads. A decision by the Sub-Committee that it continue in 1984 to consider space transportation systems was endorsed by the Committee on outer space in June/July.(6)

Technical aspects of the geostationary orbit

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, in February 1983,(1) continued examining the physical nature and technical attributes of the geo-stationary orbit, in which communications satellites and other satellites maintain a position 36,000 kilometres above a selected location on the Equator. In accordance with recommendations made by UNISPACE-82,(17) the Sub-Committee said that future ITU conferences should seek to develop criteria, planning methods and arrangements for the equitable use of the geostationary orbit and the radio frequency spectrum. Their use should be based on the genuine needs of each country and the specific needs of developing countries. The Sub-Committee noted that ITU was preparing technical studies for the World Administrative Radio Conference scheduled for 1985 and 1988 to consider the use of the geostationary orbit. The Sub-Committee decided to continue examining the question at its 1984 session, a decision endorsed by the Committee on outer space at its June/July session.(6)

Space law

The Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on outer space, during its twenty-second session in New York from 21 March to 8 April 1983,(18) considered three substantive items: the legal implications of remote sensing of the Earth from space, with the aim of formulating draft principles; the possibility of supplementing the norms of international law relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space; and the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities.

At its June/July session,(6) the Committee on outer space noted the report of the Sub-Committee and recommended that it continue in 1984 to consider the substantive items before it.

Legal aspects of remote sensing of the Earth from space

A working group re-established on 22 March 1983 by the Legal Sub-Committee continued to consider from then until 7 April(18) the legal implications of remote sensing of the Earth from space, with the aim of formulating draft principles. The group, open to all members of the Sub-Committee, reviewed the 17 draft principles as they appeared at the end of the Sub-Committee's 1982 session,(19) and then discussed principles XI to XV which concerned State responsibility, access to data by a State whose territory was being sensed, notification to the United Nations of planned sensing activities, consultation with sensed States, and the need for prior approval by a sensed State before data on its natural resources could be disseminated by a sensing State. The draft principles as they appeared at the conclusion of the group's session were set out in an annex to the Sub-Committee's report. They contained notes and passages within brackets indicating the need for further consideration.

The Committee on outer space noted at its June/July session(6) that a number of issues required resolution before a final text could be prepared. It recommended that the Legal Sub-Committee retain the matter as a priority item for its 1984 session and make every effort to finalize the draft principles.

Legal aspects of nuclear power sources in spacecraft

A working group to consider supplementing the norms of international law relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space was re-established by the Legal Sub-Committee on 22 March 1983 and met between that date and 7 April.(18)

The group examined the question of notification in a case where a spacecraft with nuclear power sources on board was malfunctioning with the risk of re-entry of radioactive materials to the earth. It concentrated on the procedure and format of notification and, following discussions and informal consultations, agreed that in the event of malfunctioning the State that launched the spacecraft should inform States concerned and the Secretary-General. The group specified in general terms the parameters of the information to be furnished about the spacecraft and the radiological risk.

Working papers by Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany were submitted to the group and were annexed to the Sub-Committee's report. The Canadian paper consolidated papers previously presented by that country dealing with the submission of information by launching States, safety measures regarding radiological protection, notification prior to re-entry, assistance to States in cases of uncontrolled re-entry into the atmosphere, and State responsibility. The Federal Republic of Germany's paper discussed the uncertainty connected with the re-entry of COSMOS-1402 into the earth's atmosphere (see above) and offered recommendations for notification prior to the re-entry of a nuclear-powered satellite following malfunction.

The Committee on outer space at its June/July session(6) endorsed the procedure for notification in case of the malfunction of a nuclear-powered spacecraft, as agreed on by the Sub-Committee's working group. The Committee recommended that the Sub-Committee continue seeking to elaborate the norms of international law relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space.

Legal aspects of the geostationary orbit and definition of outer space

The Legal Sub-Committee, at its March/April 1983 session,(18) continued considering the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities, including questions relating to the geostationary orbit. Some delegations said that the definition of outer space was an urgent issue and ought to be established through a multilateral agreement. They spoke of the different legal régimes that applied to airspace and outer space and the desirability of a global and easily determinable boundary. Some of these delegations expressed support for a USSR proposal, presented in a working paper annexed to the Sub-Committee's report,⁽¹⁸⁾ which would fix the boundary at 110 kilometres above sea-level. Other delegations said they believed that a definition of outer space was currently neither necessary nor feasible, that there was no scientific basis for it, and that an arbitrary definition could give rise to difficulties and might impede technological development.

Discussing the geostationary orbit, some delegations said that the Sub-Committee should begin formulating regulations governing its use. They contended that, if the orbit was to continue being used on a first come, first served basis, the technologically less developed countries would be at a disadvantage. Others expressed the view that the technological capacity of the orbit would continue to increase and keep pace with the demand for services. They said that management of the orbit through ITU was required.

The Committee on outer space, at its June/July session,⁽⁶⁾ recommended that the Legal Sub-Committee keep matters related to the definition of outer space and the geostationary orbit on the agenda of its 1984 session.

Scientific and technical aspects of the geostationary orbit were discussed in February by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee (see above).

Requests the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space to consider, as a matter of priority, the questions relating to the militarization of outer space, taking into account that, in General Assembly resolution 37/83 of 9 December 1982, the Committee on Disarmament[†] was requested to consider as a matter of priority the question of preventing an arms race in outer space, and also taking into account the need to co-ordinate the efforts of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and the Committee on Disarmament;

16. Requests the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the outcome of its consideration of the subject referred to in paragraph 15 above;

17. Endorses the recommendation of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space that, of the study projects proposed by the United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, the following three studies be carried out on a priority basis:

(a) Assistance to countries in studying their remote-sensing needs and assessing appropriate systems for meeting such needs (United Nations, United Nations Environment Programme, United Nations Development Programme and Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations);

(b) The feasibility of using direct broadcasting satellites for educational purposes and of internationally or regionally owned space segments (United Nations, United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and International Telecommunication Union);

(c) The feasibility of obtaining closer spacing of satellites in the geostationary orbit and their satisfactory coexistence, including a closer examination of techno-economic implications, particularly for developing countries, in order to ensure the most effective utilization of this orbit in the interest of all countries (United Nations, International Telecommunication Union and other organizations);

18. Approves the recommendations of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space concerning the procedures for carrying out these studies;

19. Decides that the United Nations should bear the travel and per diem expenses of the experts to be appointed by the Secretary-General for carrying out the studies referred to in paragraph 17 above;

20. Affirms that the interference that satellite systems to be newly established may cause to systems already registered with the International Telecommunication Union shall not exceed the limits specified in the relevant provision of the International Telecommunication Union radio regulations applicable to space services;

21. Requests all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations working in the field of outer space or on space-related matters to co-operate in the implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

23. Requests the specialized agencies and other international organizations to continue and, where appropriate, enhance their co-operation with the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and to provide it with progress reports on their work relating to the peaceful uses of outer space;

24. Takes note of the invitation by the Government of Austria to hold the twenty-seventh session of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space at Vienna;

25. Decides to convene the twenty-seventh session of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space at Vienna from 11 to 22 June 1984;

26. Requests the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space to continue its work, in accordance with the present resolution, to consider, as appropriate, new projects in outer space activities and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, including its views on which subjects should be studied in the future.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, United Kingdom, United States, Abstaining: Canada, Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden.

Three amendments were put forward in the Special Political Committee: two by Mexico—one on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries—and one by the German Democratic Republic.

The Mexican amendment, approved by a recorded vote of 92 to 16, with 9 abstentions, became paragraph 14. By the original, Member States, particularly those with major space capabilities, would have been urged to contribute actively to the goal of preventing an arms race in outer space, as an essential condition for promoting international co-operation in the exploration and uses of outer space for peaceful purposes.

The amendment proposed by Mexico for the Group of 77 was in two parts, both approved by recorded votes. The first—approved by 92 votes to 16, with 9 abstentions—constituted paragraph 5 (c), which originally called for consideration of matters relating to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities, bearing in mind questions relating to the geostationary orbit, and for the establishment of a working group to give those matters deeper consideration. The second part, approved by 91 votes to 17, with 8 abstentions, made up paragraphs 15 and 16; these replaced a paragraph in which the Committee on outer space would have been requested, in its discussion on preventing an arms race in outer space, to take into account that the Committee on Disarmament had been asked, in a 1982 Assembly resolution,(20) to consider the question as a matter of priority and that the views expressed on it should be reflected more adequately in the report of the Committee's 1984 session.

The amendment sponsored by the German Democratic Republic(21) was withdrawn. It sought to add a paragraph by which the Assembly would have decided to establish an ad hoc working group of the whole to assist the Committee on outer space in its consideration of the prevention of an arms race in outer space.

In explaining their votes in the Special Political Committee, almost all speakers regretted that it had proved impossible to reach a consensus. Finland, Italy, Sweden and the United Kingdom felt that this departure from the Assembly's tradition of dealing with outer space matters by consensus might negatively affect the future work and ability of the Committee on outer space. The United States said the Committee's work programme as outlined would not lead to any significant progress. The USSR felt that, had it not been for one delegation's attitude, the situation concerning consensus would have been different.

Most of those voting negatively or abstaining could not accept the text as amended.

Some States which voted against, namely, Australia, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States—along with Canada, Finland and Sweden, which abstained—were opposed to the request made to the Committee on outer space to consider questions relating to the militarization of outer space.

They were unanimous in asserting that the Committee on Disarmament was the only body competent to discuss such issues. Sweden pointed out that the request was at variance with a provision of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly(22) naming that Committee as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum. Discussion by any other body of so specialized and complex a subject as arms control in outer space would be inappropriate, the United Kingdom and the United States felt. Pointing also to the existence of international agreements limiting military activities in outer space—among them the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies(23)—the United Kingdom believed that it would be for the Committee on Disarmament to consider, in the first instance, the desirability of supplementing those agreements.

These same countries were further opposed to the establishment of a working group to consider the utilization of the geostationary orbit. They believed that the appropriate forum for the subject was ITU, which, Australia said, enjoyed its fullest confidence in that regard. The United Kingdom was of the opinion that there was no scientific basis or practical need for the definition or delimitation of outer space—an opinion shared by Turkey, which voted in favour. Canada felt that the proposed working group, besides interfering with ITU, would seriously affect the Legal Subcommittee's work of supplementing the norms of international law on the use of nuclear power sources in outer space, a view similarly voiced by Italy and Sweden.

Australia and the United Kingdom also objected to the decision that the United Nations pay the expenses of experts to carry out certain study projects specified in the text. In accordance with usual practice, those expenses, the United Kingdom said, should be borne by the States nominating the experts.

Among those voting in favour but voicing reservations, Cuba said that it could not accept the priority accorded to satellite systems already registered with ITU rather than to newly established systems, a question it would take up with ITU. Egypt, although it voted for the amendments, would have preferred a reaffirmation of the mandate of the Committee on Disarmament as the sole forum for questions relating to the militarization of outer space. Despite its abstention on the two-part amendment, Ireland voted for the text as a whole in the belief that the Committee on outer space would continue working constructively.

Turkey abstained on the amendments because it felt that the meaning of the phrase "exclusively for peaceful purposes" in paragraph 14 was not sufficiently clear, and paragraph 15, apart from being worded ambiguously, called for work already being performed by other bodies.

The USSR said that it had voted for the resolution and for all the amendments because they reflected the interests of the majority.

Spacecraft launchings

During 1983, four countries and an intergovernmental organization provided information to the United Nations on the launching of objects into orbit or beyond, in accordance with a 1961 General Assembly resolution(24) and the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space.(25)

Twenty-two notifications of objects launched during 1983 and the latter part of 1982 were received in 1983 and distributed as United Nations documents.(26)

Information was submitted by India on 2 launchings, by Japan on 2 launchings, by the USSR on 95 launchings, by the United States on 9 launchings and by the European Space Agency (ESA) on 4 launchings. (Some of the launchings involved multiple space objects sent aloft by a single carrier rocket. Launchings during 1983 but not reported to the United Nations until 1984 are excluded from the above count.)

In January and February the USSR also furnished information on the re-entry of COSMOS-1402 (see above) and in January ESA submitted data on its geostationary satellites.

There were a total of 32 States parties to the Convention on Registration as at 31 December 1983, including Japan, which acceded during 1983.

Chapter III

Law of the sea

The first steps were taken during 1983 towards implementing the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea.

By the end of 1983, there were 132 signatories to the Convention, while eight States and the United Nations Council for Namibia, on behalf of Namibia, had ratified it.

The Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea held its first session and the Secretary-General assumed his responsibilities under the Convention through the Office of his Special Representative.

By resolution 38/59 A, adopted in December, the General Assembly called on States that had not done so to consider signing and ratifying the Convention and appealed to States to refrain from any action that would undermine it. Also in December, the Assembly, by resolution 38/59 B, paid tribute to Bernardo Zuleta, Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Law of the Sea from 1974 until his death on 2 December 1983.

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: naval disarmament. Transport: maritime transport. Natural resources: marine resources. Environment: marine ecosystems. International Court of Justice: continental shelf boundary between the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Malta; Canada-United States boundary in the Gulf of Maine.

UN Convention on the Law of the SeaSignatures and ratifications

As at 31 December 1983,(1) signatories to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea totalled 132. The Convention had been adopted in April 1982 by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea(2) and welcomed by the General Assembly in December 1982.(3) Those signing in 1983 were: Afghanistan, Antigua and Barbuda, Benin, Democratic Kampuchea, Dominica, Guatemala, Japan, Madagascar, Mali, Oman, Republic of Korea, Sao Tome and Principe, Zaire.

In 1983, the number of ratifications to the Convention—which was to enter into force 12 months after receipt of the sixtieth instrument of ratification or accession—rose to nine with the addition of: Bahamas, Belize, Egypt, Ghana, Jamaica, Mexico, Namibia (United Nations Council for Namibia), Zambia.

During 1983, statements relating to participation in the Convention were made by the Group of 77 developing countries and the USSR. In April,(4) at the first session of the Preparatory Commission (see below), the Group of 77, appealing to States which had not done so to expedite the signing of the Convention, declared its opposition to attempts by those States to apply provisions selectively while continuing to reject those relating to the international sea-bed “Area” (the sea-bed beyond national jurisdiction). In a letter of 28 April to the Secretary-General,(5) the USSR transmitted a Government statement of 23 April criticizing the United States for not signing the Convention and for announcing its intention of using discretion in matters relating to the resources of the world’s oceans.

Preparatory Commission

The Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea held its first session at Kingston, Jamaica, from 15 March to 8 April 1983 with 99 members and 17 observers in attendance. Informal meetings were held at United Nations Headquarters on 26 and 27 May. The Commission reconvened the session at Kingston from 15 August to 9 September with 82 members and 16 observers attending. An account of its proceedings was given by the Secretary-General in a November report to the General Assembly.(6)

The Commission—established by resolution I of the Conference on the Law of the Sea, adopted in April 1982(7)—was to convene between 60 and 90 days after 50 States had signed the Convention on the Law of the Sea, a requirement met on 10 December 1982 when the Convention was opened for signature.(8) Signatories to the Convention became members of the Commission; others could participate as observers if they had signed the Final Act of the Conference.

On 8 April 1983, the Commission adopted a “consensus; statement of understanding”(9) on the general features of its structure. This statement provided that the Commission would consist of the Plenary as the principal organ and four Special Commissions of equal status. In the Plenary, the Commission would deal with preparation of rules on administrative and financial matters for the organs of the International Sea-Bed Authority; implementation of resolution II of the Conference, governing investment in pioneer activities related to polymetallic nodules in the international sea-bed Area; presentation of a report on practical arrangements for establishment of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea; and all matters not specifically assigned to the Special Commissions or other subsidiary bodies. The Commission would also take up the reports of the Special Commissions.

Special Commission 1 was to consider problems that might be encountered by developing land-based producer States affected by the production of minerals from the Area. Special Commission 2 would examine the measures necessary for early entry into effective operation of the Enterprise (the organ of the Authority which was to carry out mining and other activities in the Area). Special Commission 3 was to prepare a sea-bed mining code, and Special Commission 4 would recommend practical arrangements for establishing the International Tribunal.

On 8 September, the Commission adopted a package of three suggestions by its Chairman,⁽¹⁰⁾ concerning the structure and functions of the Commission and its organs, procedures and guidelines for registration of pioneer sea-bed investors (see below, under SEA-BED MINING), and rules of procedure.

Before these suggestions were adopted, the Chairman said it was the Commission's understanding that the adoption of procedures for the implementation of Conference resolution II would be a matter of high priority for the Commission in 1984.

Under the rules of procedure,⁽¹¹⁾ each member of the Commission was to have one vote. Decisions on procedural matters were to be taken by a majority of those present and voting. Certain decisions on substantive matters were to be taken by consensus, defined as absence of any formal objection. These decisions concerned all matters which required consensus under the Convention;⁽¹²⁾ rules and procedures for the implementation of resolution II and for the establishment of adequate machinery to protect pioneer investors; regulations for exploration and exploitation of the Area; the final report on matters within the Commission's mandate for submission to the Assembly of the Authority; and cases where financial obligations not provided for in the United Nations budget were imposed on States. On other matters of substance, decisions would be taken by a two-thirds majority.

The rules of procedure also provided for the participation of observers, and established a General Committee and secretariat. In addition to observers representing States which had signed only the Final Act of the Conference, observers might include the specialized agencies of the United Nations and the International Atomic Energy Agency, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and national liberation movements. The General Committee was to consist of the Chairman and other officers of the Commission and its Special Commissions. The administrative duties of the secretariat would include publishing the reports of the Commission and a journal of the decisions taken by it, its Special Commissions and other subsidiary bodies. The United Nations Secretary-General, in agreement with the Commission, would promulgate procedures for handling confidential data on sea-bed sites.

The Chairman of the Group of Western European and Other States said the Group would have preferred to entrust questions on pioneer investments protection to a Special Commission; nevertheless, in a spirit of compromise, it agreed that such questions might be referred to the Plenary.⁽¹³⁾ The Group also favoured creating an ad hoc body to draw up procedures for implementing resolution II and a working group to draft procedures concerning the Authority.

The Commission decided that it would hold one regular four-week session a year at the seat of the Authority (Kingston) and one four-week session of its Plenary Special Commissions and other subsidiary bodies at Kingston, New York or Geneva.

Functions of the Secretary-General

Office of the Special Representative

During 1983, the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Law of the Sea began work on the activities resulting from the adoption in 1982 of the Convention on the Law of the Sea.⁽²⁾ The responsibilities thus assumed by the Secretary-General had been approved by the General Assembly later that year.⁽³⁾

Among the main activities of the Office, as described by the Secretary-General,⁽⁶⁾ were preparation of the introduction for the publication containing the texts of the Convention, the related resolutions and the Final Act of the Conference on the Law of the Sea, together with an index; the continued publishing of Conference records, projected to total 20 volumes; investigating the technical aspects of receiving charts and lists of co-ordinates delimiting maritime zones as required under the Convention; collecting national maritime legislation as a guide to the evolution of State practice in the law of the sea; and initiating studies in co-operation with the International Civil Aviation Organization and the International Maritime Organization.

The Office began publishing the Law of the Sea Bulletin; the first issue⁽¹⁴⁾ contained information about the status of the Convention, recent treaties, national legislation and other international developments related to the law of the sea.

Meetings of the Preparatory Commission at Kingston (see above) were serviced by the Office, which negotiated with the Government of Jamaica a draft agreement for the cost of using the conference complex and office space there.

An interdepartmental mechanism to review follow-up actions to the Conference was established by the Secretary-General in January 1983. A task force, convened at head-of-department level by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, carried out the review.

The review included examination of the approved plans of Secretariat units concerned with marine affairs (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter IX) and the existing activities of the Office of the Special Representative. The task force concluded that the first follow-up action to the Conference would be to present to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) a proposal for a major marine affairs programme in the United Nations medium-term plan for 1984-1989.

This proposal was submitted to CPC at the first part of its 1983 session (May/June).(15) The major programme contained two central programmes, on law of the sea affairs and on economic and technical aspects of marine affairs. Programme 1 included subprogrammes on the uniform and consistent application of the Convention, the provision of information, advice and assistance to States on implementation of the Convention, and co-operation in the United Nations system to achieve a cohesive approach to the Convention. CPC recommended adoption of the major programme, with a few revisions, to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. The Council endorsed the major programme when it adopted resolution 1983/48 on 28 July and the Assembly endorsed it on 20 December when it adopted resolution 38/227 B.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Office of the Special Representative be continued, that it be designated the core office in the Secretariat for the law of the sea and that it be responsible for implementing programme 1.

On 13 December,(16) the Fifth Committee approved by 75 votes to 2, with 18 abstentions, a net appropriation of $6,314,300 for the Office's 1984-1985 activities. The appropriation represented the sum of $5,427,300 initially proposed by the Secretary-General and an additional $887,000 which he requested in the form of revised estimates.(17) The addition reflected adjustments in staff, office, conference, travel and miscellaneous costs. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions noted(18) that the Office was to have 55 posts (30 established, 25 temporary) and that the number approved for 1982-1983 had also been 55, but all had been temporary.

Sea-bed mining

Procedures and guidelines for registering pioneer investors in sea-bed mining under resolution II, adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea in 1982,(19) were adopted by the Preparatory Commission on 8 September 1983.(10) The guidelines covered the submission of the application for registration, its content, its examination by the General Committee, and the allocation of sea-bed areas for exploration.

In deciding on the structure of its work (see above, under PREPARATORY COMMISSION), the Commission designated three of its four Special Commissions to deal with various aspects relating to the sea-bed, including arrangements for the International Sea-Bed Authority to be established under the Convention on the Law of the Sea.

Prospects for sea-bed mining were discussed in an April report(20) on mineral resources development submitted by the Secretary-General to the Economic and Social Council's Committee on Natural Resources (see ECONOMIC, AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter IX). Minerals in the sea-bed beyond national jurisdiction included polymetallic nodules containing nickel, copper, cobalt and manganese, and minor amounts of molybdenum, vanadium and titanium. Interest also had been expressed in polymetallic sulphides, rich in zinc or copper, the report added. There was virtually no current production of non-fuel minerals beyond the territorial sea.

According to the report, the development of sea-bed mining was difficult to forecast. There was no immediate or urgent industrial need for the metals, and decisions to go ahead with prototype operations were at least as dependent on economic factors as on legal arrangements. Currently, dates after 1990 were being suggested for the first venture into commercial production, the report concluded.

Pioneer investors

A number of communications relating to pioneer sea-bed investors were addressed to the Chairman of the Preparatory Commission in 1983. Pioneer investors were States and private consortia interested in exploring the international sea-bed Area before entry into force of the Convention on the Law of the Sea. Two prospective pioneer investors, India(21) and the USSR,(22) stated that they had met at New Delhi on 29 and 30 April and assured themselves that the areas in respect of which they intended to apply for registration did not overlap. Other prospective certifying States, members or observers-Belgium,(23) Canada,(24) France,(25) the Federal Republic of Germany,(26) Indonesia,(27) Italy,(28) Japan,(29) the Netherlands(30) and the United Kingdom(31) reserved their position regarding the communications by India and the USSR with most insisting that before submitting any application the Commission should be functioning effectively and that all prospective pioneer investors should negotiate in order to identify and resolve possible conflicts arising from the overlapping of areas.

The first application for registration was submitted on 20 July(32) by the USSR which said that the location of the area to be explored and its co-ordinates were being transmitted in a sealed packet to preserve their confidentiality. Receipt of the application was acknowledged by the Chairman on 25 August,(33) who stated that the packet would be deposited for safe keeping with the Secretary-General.

Other communications received by the Chairman were from India(34) and the USSR(35) announcing that they were prepared to exchange geographical co-ordinates with other prospective certifying States; from the USSR(36) stating its readiness to negotiate towards resolving conflicts arising over boundaries of the sea-bed areas; and from Canada(37) transmitting a draft "memorandum of understanding on the settlement of conflicting claims with respect to sea-bed areas" on the basis of which other prospective investors were conducting consultations with a view to reaching agreement.

On 8 September 1983, the Commission adopted proposals concerning procedures and guidelines for registering pioneer investors, as part of a package relating to the Commission's structure and functions (see section above).

Action by principal UN organs

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1983, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions concerning the law of the sea. It adopted resolution 38/59 A by recorded vote and resolution 38/59 B unanimously.

Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea

A

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/66 of 3 December 1982 regarding the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea,

Noting that the Conference was concluded at Montego Bay, Jamaica, on 10 December 1982, that the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea was opened for signature and that one hundred and nineteen signatures were affixed to it on that date,

Taking further note of the increasing and overwhelming support for the Convention, as evidenced, inter alia, by the one hundred and thirty-two signatures and nine ratifications by States and by the United Nations Council for Namibia; on behalf of Namibia, as at 31 October 1983,

Concerned at any attempt to undermine the Convention and its related resolutions,

Recognizing that, as stated in the third preambular paragraph of the Convention, the problems of ocean space are closely interrelated and need to be considered as a whole,

Convinced that it is important to safeguard the unified character of the Convention and its related resolutions and to refrain from any action to apply their provisions selectively, in a manner inconsistent with their objectives and purposes,

Noting the increasing needs of countries, especially developing countries, for information, advice and assistance in their developmental process for the full realization of the benefits of the comprehensive legal regime established by the Convention, as also recognized by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1983/48 of 28 July 1983,

Recalling that the Convention provides that the seat of the International Sea-Bed Authority shall be in Jamaica and the seat of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea shall be at Hamburg, Federal Republic of Germany,

Recalling also that in paragraph 12 of Conference resolution I of 30 April 1982, establishing the Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, it is expressly provided that the Commission shall meet at the seat of the Authority if facilities are available and as often as necessary for the expeditious exercise of its functions,

Noting also that the Preparatory Commission held its first session at Kingston, at which it elected its Bureau, concluded the elaboration of its organizational framework by allocating functions between the Plenary and Special Commissions and requested the secretariat to prepare background information and working papers in respect of the work allocated to these organs, and decided, inter alia, to hold its next regular session at Kingston from 19 March to 13 April 1984 and a session for its working groups during the summer of 1984, in New York or Geneva, as it may decide,

Recalling its approval of the assumption by the Secretary-General of the responsibilities entrusted to him under the Convention and its related resolutions and the approval of the stationing of an adequate number of secretariat staff in Jamaica for the purpose of servicing the Preparatory Commission, as required by its functions and programme of work,

Taking note also of the major programme on marine affairs, set forth in chapter 25 of the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989,

Recalling the extensive functions entrusted to the Preparatory Commission, including the administration of the scheme governing preparatory investments in pioneer activities relating to polymetallic nodules.

Recalling its approval of the financing of the expenses of the Preparatory Commission from the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking special note of the report of the Secretary-General prepared in response to paragraph 10 of General Assembly resolution 37/66,

The General Assembly

Pays tribute to His Excellency Mr. Bernardo Zuleta, Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Law of the Sea, recently deceased, whose services to the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea were decisive for the elaboration of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and for the progressive development of international law and international co-operation.

General Assembly resolution 38/59 B

14 December 1983 Meeting 96 Adopted unanimously

Draft by Guatemala (A/38/L.47); agenda item 31.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: plenary 81, 96.

In explaining its negative vote on resolution 38/59 A, Turkey said that, as it had not signed either the Convention on the Law of the Sea or the Final Act of the Conference, it objected to financing the Preparatory Commission from the United Nations regular budget and reserved its right not to contribute to, and provide payments for expenditures emanating from, the Convention's implementation. The United States spoke in like manner and said that the reference in the text to the unity of the Convention and the appeal to States to refrain from taking action which would selectively apply its provisions was neither good law nor good policy since it was inconsistent with a basic purpose of multilateral treaties-the codification of and development of customary law; States not signatories to such treaties should not be discouraged from complying with important provisions.

Several States explained their abstentions. The Federal Republic of Germany said that, since it had not made a decision on signing the Convention, it could not agree to any Assembly decision which would prejudice that position; many paragraphs of the resolution would have that effect. Speaking similarly, the United Kingdom also expressed reservations on the text's financial aspects and reiterated that the Convention's provisions regarding deep-sea mining, including the transfer of technology, were unacceptable in their current form. Although Bolivia believed that the rules set forth in the Convention were an important contribution to the law of the sea, it was unable to support the resolution as it had not signed the Convention. Belgium said it, too, had not signed the Convention and therefore could not accept the resolution's sixth preambular paragraph; it also had reservations on the fourth preambular paragraph and on paragraph 5 which, it felt, suggested that initiatives for international co-operation taken outside the Convention undermined its effectiveness; any interpretation which confused customary law and the Convention were also unacceptable. Belgium also objected to the financial considerations of continuing the law of the sea secretariat on an established basis. Italy spoke in like vein and also said it had reservations on paragraphs 3 and 4.

Albania, not participating in the vote, said that the resolution contained provisions it could not support and cited particularly the sixth preambular paragraph and paragraphs 1, 4 and 5. Argentina said its non-participation was because of the link that some States were seeking to establish between the Convention and the declaration in Conference resolution III relating to disputes between States over the sovereignty of a territory.

France said its positive vote did not alter its stand on the Convention and its various parts which was submitted at the time of its 1982 signature.

Chapter IV

International peace and security

Several resolutions adopted by the General Assembly in 1983 dealt with international peace and security. In resolution 38/190, the Assembly put forward suggestions to improve international security. By resolution 38/191, it established an Ad Hoc Committee to seek ways to implement the collective security provisions of the Charter of the United Nations. In resolution 38/81, the Assembly, urging full co-operation in United Nations peace-keeping operations, expressed concern about their difficult financial situation. By resolution 38/56, it requested the Secretary-General to set up a fund for the programme of the International Year of Peace (1986) and called for voluntary contributions. In other action, the Assembly abolished the Peace Observation Commission.

The Secretary-General, in his annual report to the Assembly (p. 3), reviewed current problems affecting international peace and security which, he said, cried out for a central instrument of co-operative effort through which Governments could control conflict and work out solutions.

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: general aspects of disarmament; international security of non-nuclear-weapon States; disarmament and international security. Human rights: human rights and international security. Legal aspects of international political relations: force in international relations; good-neighbourliness among States; dispute settlement; draft code of offences against peace and security. International organizations and international law: strengthening the role of the United Nations.

Implementation of the 1970 Declaration on international security

In December 1983, following its annual review of the implementation of its 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security,⁽¹⁾ the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/190 in which it urged States and the Security Council to take several steps to reduce international tension.

Communications. During 1983, letters were received from Member States in connection with the review of the implementation of the Declaration.

A 5 January declaration by the Political Consultative Committee of the States Parties to the 1955 Warsaw Treaty of Friendship, Co-operation and Mutual Assistance (Prague, Czechoslovakia, 4 and 5 January), transmitted by Czechoslovakia on 7 January,⁽²⁾ gave the Committee's ideas on ways of averting nuclear war, detente, solving disarmament problems, buttressing security and developing international co-operation.

By a letter of 8 April,⁽³⁾ Czechoslovakia transmitted a communique adopted by the Warsaw Treaty States Parties' Committee of Ministers for Foreign Affairs (Prague, 6 and 7 April) giving details of the meeting's discussion relating to the implementation of the initiatives advanced by the Political Consultative Committee in January. That Committee's conclusions regarding the development of the international situation were confirmed in a joint statement issued at a 28 June meeting (Moscow) of leading Party and State figures of Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland, Romania and the USSR; the statement, expressing concern at the increasing tension and further destabilization of relations between States, was transmitted by the USSR on 8 July.⁽⁴⁾ A communiqué of the regular meeting of the Foreign Ministers Committee (Sofia, Bulgaria, 13 and 14 October) was forwarded by Bulgaria on 18 October;⁽⁵⁾ the Ministers discussed the evolution of the situation in Europe, including the deployment of nuclear weapons, and other States' responses to the Prague declaration.

Several communications by the USSR dealt with its foreign policy and that of the United States. Three letters contained statements by the General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party: one of 29 March⁽⁶⁾ transmitted his replies to questions from Pravda (USSR), published on 27 March; a second dated 27 April⁽⁷⁾ transmitted an interview given to the magazine Der Spiegel (Federal Republic of Germany); and a third, of 29 September;⁽⁸⁾ forwarded a statement he had made the previous day. The transcript of a 2 April press conference given by the USSR. Minister for Foreign Affairs was transmitted on 5 April.⁽⁹⁾ A 29 December resolution of the USSR Supreme Soviet concerning the international situation and USSR foreign policy was transmitted by a letter of 30 December.⁽¹⁰⁾

Annexed to a 14 September letter⁽¹¹⁾ from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the German Democratic Republic was a statement by the General

Secretary of the Central Committee of its Socialist Unity Party and Chairman of the Council of State delivered at a Council session (Berlin, 12 September); the statement emphasized the United Nations role, particularly in the current international situation, with regard to maintaining world peace.

On 10 October,(12) Mongolia transmitted a memorandum regarding its 1981 proposal for a convention on non-aggression and non-use of force in Asia and the Pacific,(13) which, it stated, would serve as a guarantee to strengthen mutual co-operation in relations among countries of the region.

On 4 November,(14) Bulgaria transmitted a 27 October speech made at Sofia by the General Secretary of the Central Committee of its Communist Party and President of its State Council at an international trade union meeting and dialogue on the topic of peace and the trade unions.

On 5 December,(15) Romania transmitted a letter from a 12 November meeting entitled "Romania's youth wants peace", held at Bucharest, appealing to the United Nations to make greater efforts to stop the arms race, avert the danger of nuclear war and guarantee international peace.

Other 1983 letters received under this subject heading dealt with general disarmament (see Chapter I of this section) or specific situations, such as: Afghanistan, Central America, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Kampuchea, Mozambique-south Africa, and South-East Asia (see SUBJECT INDEX).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of its First Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December 1983, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/190.

Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security
The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security",

Recalling the duty of States not to intervene in the internal or external affairs of any State, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling the provisions of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting the provisions of the Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention and Interference in the Internal Affairs of States,

Alarmed by increasing tensions in international relations, the resurgence of great-Power confrontations, the revival of the cold war accompanied by the policy of competition for spheres of influence, domination and exploitation in more and more parts of the world and the intensified escalation to new levels of the arms race, particularly in nuclear weapons, all of which pose a grave threat to global peace and security,

Profoundly disturbed by the increasing recourse to the use or threat of use of force, military intervention and interference, aggression and foreign occupation; the aggravation of existing crises in the world and the outbreak of new ones; continued infringement of the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of countries; the denial of the right to self-determination of peoples under colonial and foreign occupation, and attempts to characterize erroneously the struggles of peoples for independence and human dignity as falling within the context of East-West confrontation, thus denying them the right to self-determination, to decide their own destiny and realize their legitimate aspirations; the persistence of colonialism, racism and apartheid supported by growing use of military force; the intensification and expansion in scope and frequency of manoeuvres and other military activities conceived within the context of big-Power confrontation and used as means of pressure, threat and destabilization; and the lack of solutions to the world economic crisis in which the deeper underlying problems of a structural nature have been compounded by cyclical factors and which has further aggravated the inequalities and injustices in international economic relations,

Aware of the increasing interdependence among nations and of the fact that in the present-day world there is no alternative to a policy of peaceful coexistence, détente and co-operation among States on the basis of equality, irrespective of their economic or military power, political and social systems or size and geographic location,

Noting with concern that the United Nations system of collective security has not been used effectively,

Stressing the need for the main organs of the United Nations responsible for the maintenance of peace and security, particularly the Security Council, to contribute more effectively to the promotion of international peace and security by seeking solutions to the unresolved problems and crises in the world,

1. Reaffirms the validity of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security and calls upon all States to contribute effectively to its implementation;

2. Again calls upon all States, in particular the nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, to take immediate steps aimed at promoting and using effectively the system of collective security as envisaged in the Charter of the United Nations, together with measures for the effective halting of the arms race and for the achievement of general and complete disarmament under effective international control;

3. Reiterates that the current deterioration of the international situation requires an effective Security Council and, to that end, emphasizes the great urgency of examining all existing mechanisms and working methods in order to enhance the authority and enforcement capacity of the Council, in accordance with the Charter;

4. Emphasizes, in particular, the need to consider holding periodic meetings of the Security Council in specific cases to consider and review outstanding problems and crises, thus enabling the Council to play a more active role in preventing conflicts;

5. Takes note of the fact that the Security Council has thus far failed to report to the General Assembly on steps, taken to implement the provisions of paragraphs 3 and 4 above, which have been adopted since 1980, and expresses the firm hope that the Council will do so at the thirty-ninth session of the Assembly;

6. Urges all States to abide strictly, in their international relations, by their commitment to the Charter and, to this end:

(a) To refrain from the use or threat of use of force, intervention, interference, aggression, foreign occupation and colonial domination or measures of political and economic coercion which violate the sovereignty, territorial integrity, independence and security of other States or their right freely to dispose of their natural resources;

(b) To refrain from supporting or encouraging any such act for any reason whatsoever and to reject and refuse recognition of situations brought about by any such act;

7. Invites all States, in particular the major military Powers and States members of military alliances, to refrain, especially in critical situations and in crisis areas, from actions, including military activities and manoeuvres, conceived within the context of big-Power confrontation and used as a means of pressure on, threat to and destabilization of other States and regions;

8. Urges all States, in particular the permanent members of the Security Council, to take all necessary measures to prevent the further deterioration of the international situation and, to this end:

(a) To seek, through the means provided for in the Charter, the peaceful settlement of disputes and the elimination of the focal points of crisis and tension which constitute a threat to international peace and security;

(b) To proceed without delay to a global consideration of ways and means for bringing about a revival of the world economy and for the restructuring of international economic relations within the framework of the global negotiations with a view to establishing the new international economic order;

(c) To accelerate the economic development of developing countries, particularly the least developed ones;

9. Considers that respect for and the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms in their civil, political, economic, social and cultural aspects, on the one hand, and the strengthening of international peace and security, on the other, mutually reinforce each other;

10. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial domination, foreign occupation or racist regimes and their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and urges Member States to increase their support for and solidarity with them and their national liberation movements and to take urgent and effective measures for the speedy completion of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and for the final elimination of colonialism, racism and apartheid;

11. Culls upon all States, particularly the members of the Security Council, to take appropriate and effective measures to promote the fulfilment of the objective of the denuclearization of Africa in order to avert the serious danger which the nuclear capability of South Africa constitutes to the African States, in particular the front-line States, as well as to international peace and security;

12. Welcomes the successful conclusion of the Madrid meeting of representatives of the participating States of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, held from 11 November 1980 to 9 September 1983, which has demonstrated that political will to negotiate is necessary as a contribution to the strengthening of peace and security not only in Europe but also internationally, and expresses the hope that the conference to be held at Stockholm, beginning on 17 January 1984, the Conference on Confidence- and Security-Building Measures and Disarmament in Europe, the continent with the greatest concentration of armaments and military forces, will achieve significant and positive results;

13. Affirms that the democratization of international relations is an imperative necessity, under conditions of interdependence, for the full development and independence of all States, as well as the attainment of genuine security, peace and co-operation in the world;

14. Calls upon the great Powers' to engage in constructive negotiations in good faith and to abandon policies of confrontation which have hitherto given rise to tension and mistrust;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security".

Implementation of the security provisions of the UN Charter

As it had decided in 1982,(1) the General Assembly continued in 1983 its consideration of the implementation of the collective security provisions of the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security, and by resolution 38/191 established an Ad Hoc Committee to explore ways of implementing those provisions.

In the First Committee, Cyprus put forward and subsequently withdrew a draft resolution(2) which would have had the Assembly call on the two major Powers to hold a high-level meeting in an effort to overcome current tensions, and call on other Member States, particularly those of the two major military alliances, to support such a meeting and exert efforts to relax international tension.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December 1983, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/191.

Implementation of the collective security provisions of the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/119 of 16 December 1982 on the implementation of the collective security provisions of the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Reaffirming that the primary function of the United Nations, in particular through the Security Council, is the maintenance of international peace and security,

Renewing its commitment to the fundamental principle of the Charter that all States have the duty not to threaten or use force against the sovereignty, political independence or territorial integrity of other States,

Stressing that the purposes of the United Nations can be achieved only under conditions in which States comply fully with their obligations assumed under the Charter,

Alarmed over the growing tendency of States to resort to the use of force, interference and intervention in international relations, thus ignoring the Charter and the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Concerned that the Security Council has not always been able to take decisive action for the maintenance of international peace and for resolving international problems,

Recognizing that fundamental approaches to genuine security include, inter alia, the strengthening of the Charter system of collective security,

Conscious of the important role with which the Security Council is entrusted in enhancing the collective security provisions of the Charter for the promotion and maintenance of international peace and security, in accordance with the Charter,

Regretting that the provisions of the Charter relating to collective security measures have not been fully implemented,

Taking into account, in this connection, the reports of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh and thirty-eighth sessions,

Also taking into account the note by the President of the Security Council of 12 September 1983,

Recalling the views of the Governments of the five Nordic countries on the strengthening of the United Nations,

Also recalling the Political Declaration adopted by the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983,

Having considered the item entitled "Implementation of the collective security provisions of the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security",

1. Decides to establish an Ad Hoc Committee on the Implementation of the Collective Security Provisions of the Charter of the United Nations for the purpose of exploring ways and means of implementing the said provisions;

2. Requests the Secretary-General urgently to invite the views and comments of Member States on the matter not later than 30 May 1984 and to transmit them to the Ad Hoc Committee as soon as possible;

3. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee, in considering the matter, to take due account of the views and comments of Member States, including their recommendations, and to submit a progress report to the Security Council for its consideration and comments and to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, and a final report to the Assembly at its fortieth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Implementation of the collective security provisions of the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security".

Several States explained their negative votes on the draft which had been revised three times. The USSR said that the text contradicted the Assembly's 1982 resolution(1) on the same subject, as the Security Council had been requested to study implementing the Charter's collective security provisions; paragraph 1 of the text violated the Charter as such questions were the prerogative of the Council. For Italy, the Ad Hoc Committee would be redundant and overlap the Council's responsibility. France felt that the Committee would have only a partial view of the matter which should be put before either the Council or the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization whose mandate gave priority to all aspects of maintaining international peace and security. Speaking in like manner, the German Democratic Republic pointed out that the Committee on the Charter had dealt with the issue time and again, and that it was not the lack of an institutional framework for implementing the Charter provisions but the lack of political will by certain countries which had prevented full application of the collective security system.

On the other hand, Guyana, which voted positively, saw the Ad Hoc Committee as a first step towards establishing an effective collective security system within the Charter's framework and a first attempt to give small States the confidence that their sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity were secure. Introducing the revised text, Sierra Leone pointed out that the pre-eminent role of the Security Council had been acknowledged in the text and that the sponsors had tried to make clear that implementing the Charter's collective security provisions would enhance the Council's role; setting up an ad hoc rather than a special committee emphasized the matter's urgency while demonstrating that the body was not intended to be permanent.

Review of peace-keeping operations

Concern about the difficult financial position of United Nations peace-keeping operations was expressed by the General Assembly in December 1983 when it adopted resolution 38/81.

The Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations, established by the Assembly in 1965,(1) met three times during 1983.(2) On 23 June, the Committee asked its officers to serve for another year and, on 1 August, it authorized its Working Group to discuss and elaborate on its mandate. The Working Group, meeting on 17 and 29 August, took up an informal paper which included a proposed organization of work for the Committee. However, no consensus was reached on the matter. On 1 September, the Committee, in considering its report to the Assembly, concluded that the United Nations should continue to work for a comprehensive review of peace-keeping operations.. Some members felt that the Committee's work, required reactivation and that its mandate should be renewed, while others believed that the question of renewing the mandate should be decided by the Assembly.

At the second part of its 1983 session (August/September),(3) the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) expressed the view that the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations might streamline its work.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly, on 15 December 1983, adopted resolution 38/81 by recorded vote.

Comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 2006(XIX) of 18 February 1965, 2053 A. (XX) of 15 December 1965, 2249(S-V) of 23 May 1967, 2308(XXII) of 13 December 1967, 2451(XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2670(XXV) of 8 December 1970, 2835(XXVI) of 17 December 1971, 2965(XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3091(XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3239(XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3457(XXX) of 10 December 1975, 31/105 of 15 December 1976, 32/106 of 15 December 1977, 33/114 of 18 December 1978, 34/53 of 23 November 1979, 35/121 of 11 December 1980, 36/37 of 18 November 1981 and 37/93 of 10 December 1982,

Taking account of the views expressed and issues raised on the question of peace-keeping during the debate on the item,

Reaffirming the primary responsibility of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security, Conscious of the vital role played by United Nations peace-keeping forces in support of decisions of the Security Council in discharging its primary responsibility in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

Recognizing that the presence of United Nations peace-keeping forces authorized by the Security Council in conflict areas demonstrates' the common concern of Members of the United Nations in the preservation of stability and easing of tension in those areas,

Aware of the extremely difficult financial situation of the United Nations peace-keeping forces in the light of the heavy burden incurred by troop contributors, especially those from developing countries,

Stressing the collective responsibility of Member States, in accordance with the Charter, to share equitably the financial burdens of such operations established by the Security Council, which should continue to be conducted with maximum efficiency and economy,

Urging, at the same time, that other areas of co-operation with and support for United Nations peace-keeping forces should be encouraged,

Recognizing the need to enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of United Nations peace-keeping forces,

Commending the Secretary-General for the way he is carrying out peace-keeping operations of the United Nations decided upon by the Security Council,

Convinced that the importance of the issue of United Nations peace-keeping is such that the United Nations should continue to work for a comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects,

Taking note of the report of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations,

1. Expresses its conviction that peace-keeping operations of the United Nations, conducted with the consent of the host country and with respect for its sovereignty and territorial integrity, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, are an essential function of the United Nations, though not a substitute for the peaceful settlement of disputes and therefore of a temporary nature;

2. Urges all concerned to co-operate fully in the implementation of United Nations peace-keeping operations;

3. Reaffirms and renews the mandate given to the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations by relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

4. Expresses concern about the difficult financial situation of United Nations peace-keeping operations;

5. Urges again the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations, in accordance with its mandate, to renew its efforts to work towards the completion of agreed guidelines that will govern the conduct of United Nations peace-keeping operations in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and to devote further attention to specific questions relating to the practical implementation of peace-keeping operations;

6. Requests the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations to submit a status report on its present situation, to determine the areas of possible progress and other areas where progress would be difficult to achieve or is still pending, and to consider proposals to reactivate and rationalize its work;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects".

Abstaining: Democratic Yemen, Pakistan, Seychelles, Syrian Arab Republic, Yemen.

A separate vote on the seventh preambular paragraph, stressing the responsibility of sharing equitably the financing of peace-keeping operations, was taken in both the Special Political Committee and the Assembly.

In the Committee, after Algeria, Mexico and the Syrian Arab Republic had requested the vote, the preambular paragraph was approved by a roll-call vote of 76 to 14, with 21 abstentions. The Assembly adopted the paragraph by a recorded vote of 97 to 16, with 24 abstentions.

The lo-nation draft-a revised version of a text sponsored by the same nations together with Bangladesh and Pakistan-was generally based on a draft, sponsored by Australia, Canada, Egypt, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, the Philippines and the United Kingdom, which had been withdrawn.(4) The lo-nation draft differed from that withdrawn in a number of its provisions, some of which were either reformulated or omitted. The withdrawn text would have had the Assembly: stress that peace-keeping operations must be supplemented by sustained diplomatic efforts; recommend that the Secretary-General continue promoting the peaceful settlement of disputes; stress prerequisites for effective peace-keeping-political support and co-operation, respect for the host country's national sovereignty, and agreements between the United Nations and the host country to grant peace-keeping forces privileges and immunities and provide them with facilities necessary for their task; express regret that the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations had not fulfilled its mandate; reaffirm that mandate; and recommend that its future renewal be determined in the light of a status report on the Committee's current situation.

In the Special Political Committee, a number of States explained their votes, with the majority expressing concern that they had not been adequately consulted by the sponsors during the preparation of the draft. Among issues raised was the Security Council's role in peace-keeping operations and the question of financing those operations.

Several States gave their reasons for voting against the text as a whole. The German Democratic Republic said the text prejudged the work of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations with regard to completing guidelines governing such operations, and felt that its adoption would compromise that body's effectiveness. Poland spoke similarly, but stressed that it did not question the appropriateness of peace-keeping operations conducted according to the United Nations Charter, or the usefulness of Poland's contribution to those operations. According to the USSR, the draft's sponsors had introduced many provisions not conforming to the Charter and wished to thwart the Special Committee's work on the guidelines since those guidelines would enable the Security Council to maintain the security of States, particularly small ones. For Turkey, several preambular paragraphs, including the seventh, raised problems: according to the fourth, peace-keeping forces would be called on to support Council decisions, whereas those forces had a precise mandate; the eighth and ninth were vague and involved sweeping judgements about the forces' efficiency and effectiveness. Concerning paragraph 1, Turkey was not certain that the prerequisites were appropriate in all cases or the only ones and also did not cover all situations. Albania said it opposed the dispatch of United Nations forces as, it believed, experience had shown that they could not defend peoples' freedom and independence or international peace and security. Hungary, stressing that a resolution on Charter principles relating to the international situation should be adopted by consensus, suggested that a procedural draft be formulated which could be approved in that manner, and which also would renew the Special Committee's mandate.

Pakistan, which abstained, said it had withdrawn its sponsorship of the draft as it believed that no modification could be made to the mandate, character or duration of peace-keeping operations authorized by the Security Council unless the Council decided; the revised draft had changed the spirit of the original by including paragraph 1, making peace-keeping operations dependent on the host country's consent.

Explaining its abstention on the preambular paragraph, Iraq said the aggressor should pay for the entire cost of peace-keeping operations. Tunisia thought that the aggressor should at least pay a major portion of costs. Also abstaining was Algeria which felt that the paragraph's wording was imprecise and represented a bold interpretation of Charter provisions, especially Article 43. Jordan noted that some delegations had expressed confusion over the interpretation of the wording of the paragraph.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, speaking in the Assembly, said it had not participated in either vote because it felt that the aggressor should pay the price for its aggression and therefore bear the entire costs.

Several States explained their positive votes on the text as a whole and on the preambular paragraph. Ireland said it was in favour of sharing the financial burden equitably, a view supported by Norway which would, however, have preferred to have had that obligation mentioned in an operative paragraph of the text. The United States said the question of guidelines was a non-issue; attempts to resurrect an issue which had been solved were aimed at distracting the Assembly from the real problem, the financing of the forces: and practical organizational measures to be taken on them. Stressing the serious financial situation facing peace-keeping operations, the United Kingdom said a mere procedural resolution would indicate a lack of interest and conviction by Member States; the current position imposed an unfair burden on troop contributors, particularly the least wealthy. France agreed and said it was surprising that some States which said they regretted that the Organization was unable to face its responsibilities had voted against a text calling for submission of proposals to remedy that situation. Nepal felt that the revised text placed the whole question in a proper perspective. Greece spoke similarly but added that it preferred the text prior to its revision. Mexico was among those which said that it would have been better had consultations been held on drafting the text. The Sudan said its positive vote should not be interpreted as placing aggressor and victim on the same footing. Lebanon spoke similarly but added that the seventh preambular paragraph derived from a general principle, that of collective security, to which it subscribed.

An oral amendment to the draft resolution introduced by the Syrian Arab Republic was withdrawn at the request of Mexico. The amendment would have added a preambular paragraph stating that aggressors should pay the whole costs of peace-keeping operations. Cyprus, which had voted positively in both instances, said it would have been better had this provision been included.

For its consideration of the item, the Special Political Committee also had before it two notes verbales addressed to the Secretary-General. In the first, dated 20 September,⁽⁵⁾ Canada gave its suggestions on questions related to the practical implementation of peace-keeping operations, particularly the authority of the Security Council and the role of the Secretary-General, financing, preparations by troop contributors, standardizing United Nations practice, and training aspects. In the second, dated 7 October,(6) the United Kingdom-expressing regret that certain Member States which professed support for maintaining peace and international security were withholding their assessed contributions for peace-keeping-urged that the matter be drawn to the Assembly's attention.

International Year of Peace (1986)

Following up its 1982 decision,(1) declaring 1986 as the International Year of Peace, the General Assembly decided in December 1983 by resolution 38/56 to establish a voluntary fund for the programme of the Year.

Responding to the Assembly's request,(1) the Secretary-General, in October 1983,(2) submitted to the Assembly a draft programme for the observance of the Year. As at 6 December, 13 Member States and one non-member State had transmitted proposals to the Secretary-General for the programme; 19 United Nations organizations had declared their interest in participating, several of which had initiated preparations; 123 non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council had expressed interest and two consultative meetings were held in New York and Geneva (6 and 13 June); and 28 academic and research institutions had also responded to an invitation to participate. Proposed activities included publications, lectures, seminars, conferences, research projects, television and radio programmes, and contests, and the issuance of commemorative stamps and a peace medal. The activities would be carried out by the United Nations, its specialized agencies, States, non-governmental organizations and academic institutions.

The Secretary-General noted that no voluntary contributions to finance the programme had been offered.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1983, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/56 without vote.

International Year of Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/16 of 16 November 1982, in which it declared 1986 to be the International Year of Peace,

Taking into account the guidelines for international years and anniversaries adopted by the General Assembly in its decision 35/424 of 5 December 1980,

Recognizing that the International Year of Peace, which will be linked with the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations, is especially important and will permit the United Nations and its Member States to concentrate their efforts towards promoting the ideals of peace, as evidence of their dedication to serve peace by all possible means,

Considering also that the preparations for the International Year of Peace must be carried through to ensure positive results in international co-operation for the promotion of peace during the Year,

1. Endorses the principal objectives of the International Year of Peace indicated in the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Invites all States, all organizations within the United Nations system and interested non-governmental organizations to co-operate with the Secretary-General in achieving the objectives of the International Year of Peace;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to establish a voluntary fund for the programme of the International Year of Peace and urges all States and interested organizations to contribute to that fund;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to carry out during 1984-1985 the necessary preparations for the observance of the International Year of Peace, including the organization of regional seminars devoted to promoting the objectives of the Year;

Peace Observation Commission

In a September 1983 note(1) to the General Assembly concerning the appointment of members of the Peace Observation Commission, the Secretary-General pointed out that CPC had recommended in 1982(2) that the mandate of the Commission should be terminated and consequently that reference to it should be deleted from the proposed medium-term plan for 1984-1989. By a 1982 resolution,(3) the Assembly had adopted the medium-term plan as revised by CPC, but made no specific reference to the Commission. Therefore, the Secretary-General stated, it would be desirable to determine conclusively whether the Assembly intended formally to abolish that organ.

The Commission was abolished on 23 September when the General Assembly adopted a recommendation(4) by the General Committee (decision 38/402) calling for a clarification of the Assembly's intention. (For further details, see APPENDIX III, under Peace Observation Commission.)

Chapter V

Africa

In the political sphere, much of the work of the United Nations in 1983 pertaining to Africa focused on southern Africa, in particular on ways to end the apartheid policies of South Africa. In a series of resolutions adopted in December, the General Assembly took action on ways to bring about the end of apartheid. It requested the Security Council to consider action against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations which deals with action with respect to threats to the peace, breaches of the peace and acts of aggression. The Assembly requested that the Council consider comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa, and called for a strengthening of the mandatory arms embargo imposed since 1977. Recommendations for international action against apartheid were also made by the Special Committee against Apartheid, the Commission on Human Rights, the United Nations Council for Namibia and the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, among others. Such activities included drafting a convention against apartheid in sports, special aid programmes for apartheid victims and promoting the international campaign against apartheid by informing the public. Special attention was given to political prisoners, in particular to the three members of the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC) who were executed in 1983, and women and children.

A related area of concern for the United Nations was South Africa's relations with the other States of the region, especially its aggression against Angola, Lesotho and Mozambique, which the Assembly condemned. In December, the Security Council, acting on Angola's complaint, demanded that South Africa withdraw its occupying forces from Angola. By a June resolution, the Council took action on Lesotho, requesting special economic assistance for that country for those needs (mainly security and health services, food supplies and construction) identified by a Council mission sent there in January.

In 1983, both Chad and Egypt claimed that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, had violated their territories. Chad twice brought its complaint to the Security Council, and in April the Council urged the two sides to work towards a settlement and to use the mechanism of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) for that purpose.

The Assembly in November reaffirmed the sovereignty of the Comoros over the Indian Ocean island of Mayotte. In October, it called for further co-operation between OAU and the United Nations system. The Security Council concluded its mission to investigate the origin and damages of a 1981 attack on Seychelles. During 1983, the United Kingdom and Mauritius disputed each other's claims to sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, a group of islands in the Indian Ocean. The United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa continued to provide scholarships and, in December, the Assembly appealed for increased contributions to the Programme.

South Africa and apartheid

In 1983, several United Nations bodies continued to consider ways to end apartheid-the system of laws and policies based on racial separation imposed by the Government of South Africa in 1948.

The General Assembly on 5 December adopted 11 resolutions on the issue, repeatedly condemning South Africa and calling for an end to apartheid. In a resolution on the situation in South Africa (38/39 A), the Assembly recognized the right of the oppressed people to use all means, including armed struggle, to resist the illegitimate régime of South Africa, called for assistance to liberation movements, condemned collaboration with South Africa, reiterated its appeal to the Security Council to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against that country, urged the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to refrain from assisting it, and called for promoting the international campaign against apartheid.

By another resolution (38/39 B), the Assembly commended the Programme of Action against Apartheid, adopted by the Special Committee against Apartheid in October. The Programme included recommendations for action by Governments, the United Nations system and other organizations.

In a resolution on sanctions against South Africa (38/39 D), the Assembly requested the Security Council to take measures to reinforce the arms embargo, ban military and nuclear co-operation with South Africa, impose an oil embargo and prohibit loans to and new investments in South Africa. Three further resolutions defined possible Council action in regard to military and nuclear collaboration (38/39 G), investments in South Africa (38/39 I) and an oil embargo (38/39 J). The Assembly demanded that Israel desist from its collaboration with South Africa (38/39 F), especially in the military and nuclear fields, and called for further work on drafting a convention against apartheid in sports (38/39 K).

A resolution on the effects of apartheid on southern Africa (38/39 C) included a condemnation of South Africa's aggression against Angola, Lesotho and Mozambique and its threats against other States (see subchapter below).

The Assembly endorsed the work of the Special Committee against Apartheid (38/39 E), in particular the recommendations on its work and that of the Secretariat's Centre against Apartheid. Most of the Assembly's actions were based on recommendations of the Committee, which submitted its annual report to the Assembly in September. The Committee called on Governments to terminate all economic collaboration with South Africa, including direct and indirect trade, loans and investments. States were called on to prohibit their transnational corporations from dealing with South Africa and to ban air and shipping services to and from that country. The Economic and Social Council, in a July resolution (1983/74), also called for the termination of assistance by transnational corporations to South Africa. In its report to the Assembly, the United Nations Council for Namibia described economic relations with South Africa and affirmed that economic sanctions would be effective in bringing a halt to apartheid if implemented by South Africa's major Western trading partners.

The Commission on Human Rights as well as the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination also formulated measures to end apartheid.

The Commission in February appealed for action by the international community to save the lives of three members of ANC who had been sentenced to death by South Africa; the Security Council (in resolution 533(1983) adopted in June) called for commutation of the death sentences; and the Assembly (in resolution 38/17 adopted in November) expressed its indignation at the execution of the three men on 9 June. Other measures were taken on the situation in regard to political prisoners. The Assembly (in resolution 38/11 adopted in November), the Commission and the Committee against Apartheid rejected as unacceptable a. new Constitution adopted by South Africa in November because it continued to deny political rights to the black majority.

In his annual report to the Assembly (p. 3), the Secretary-General stressed that the policy of apartheid was totally unacceptable.

A number of United Nations organizations co-operated in special aid programmes for the oppressed people of South Africa, including assistance to national liberation movements. The Assembly called for further inter-agency co-operation (resolution 38/39 A) in providing such assistance. Another source was the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, and the Assembly called for increased contributions to it (38/39 H).

Other United Nations action aimed at promoting the international campaign against apartheid was through dissemination of information to the public, co-operation with non-governmental organizations, and holding meetings, missions and observances.

General aspects

In 1983, both the Special Committee against Apartheid and the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination recommended ways for the United Nations, States and others to eradicate apartheid. The General Assembly endorsed the Committee's report in resolution 38/39 A and commended its Programme of Action in resolution 38/39 B; it also outlined policies and activities to achieve apartheid's eradication.

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report(1) to the General Assembly and the Security Council unanimously adopted in September, emphasized that Governments, organizations and individuals had a duty to take all action in their power to eradicate apartheid and to enable the South African people, through self-determination, to establish a democratic society. At stake were peace in southern Africa, the lives of the people in the region and their legitimate aspirations for political, economic and social development, as well as the commitment of the United Nations to promote international peace and security, international co-operation and human rights, and to eliminate colonialism and racism. As a result of the position taken by its Western permanent members, the Security Council had proved powerless to implement its resolutions calling for an end to apartheid, the release of South African political prisoners and the cessation of aggression by the apartheid regime against neighbouring States. In the Committee's view, the system of collective security, enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, had been seriously undermined in relation to southern Africa.

The Committee considered it essential that the United Nations review the implementation of its resolutions on apartheid and South Africa's aggression and identify the causes of non-implementation, particularly the policies of States which failed to co-operate in international action, and consider measures to secure respect for the Organization's decisions. The Committee remained convinced that the United Nations had the power and was the most appropriate course to ensure an end to apartheid. The main obstacle had been the attitude of certain Western Powers and Israel which failed to implement United Nations resolutions and provided protection and assistance to South Africa. The Committee rejected the contention of certain Western Powers that their collaboration with that country and hostility to the national liberation movement was justified by their concern for a peaceful solution of the problems posed by apartheid.

The overwhelming majority of States, the Committee found, were committed to sanctions against South Africa and to support for the national liberation movement. International action to eliminate apartheid, it said, would require: recognition that apartheid could not be reformed but must be destroyed, that the regime was the sole enemy of peace and freedom in southern Africa, and that the struggle against apartheid contributed to the objectives of the United Nations; readiness by committed States, organizations and individuals to increase moral, political and material assistance to the liberation struggle; action to ensure that collaborators with apartheid desisted from such collaboration; and full commitment of the United Nations agencies. A more action-oriented approach should be adopted by the United Nations, following three main lines: total isolation of the apartheid regime; support to the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement; and encouragement of public action in support of United Nations efforts. In addition, it suggested that efforts be made to expose and dissuade collaboration with apartheid.

In view of South Africa's efforts to deprive the African majority of citizenship rights, the Committee considered it essential that the Council and the Assembly reconsider South Africa's membership in the United Nations and the legal status of the illegitimate apartheid regime, and called for an immediate suspension of its United Nations privileges.

According to the Committee, a few Western Governments and Israel as well as many transnational corporations which sought to profit from apartheid had hindered its eradication. The Committee welcomed the intention of OAU to strengthen its offices in the major Western countries with the aim of persuading them to co-operate in action against apartheid. It commended the Secretary-General's statement to the press in Luanda, Angola, on 26 August, affirming his intention to further the objective of peace in southern Africa.

The Committee proposed to the Assembly a new Programme of Action against Apartheid,(2) outlined a work programme for itself and the United Nations Centre against Apartheid, and adopted a special report on relations between Israel and South Africa (see below).(3) Recommendations were made concerning relations with South Africa, sanctions and boycotts, military and nuclear relations, an oil embargo, transnational corporations in South Africa, the relations of IMF with South Africa, political prisoners and detained persons, the new South African constitution, women and children in South Africa, apartheid in sports, aid programmes for national liberation movements, inter-agency co-operation to help eradicate apartheid, public information, and South Africa's relations with front-line States of southern Africa (see below for further information on these subjects).

The Committee held meetings on 30 and 31 March in observance of its twentieth anniversary.

By a letter of 6 July,(4) India forwarded to the Council and the Assembly a communique on the situation in South Africa, adopted by the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries on 28 June. The Bureau condemned the South African Government for its increased acts of internal repression and terrorism, destabilization and aggression against neighbouring States, and for the hanging on 9 June of three ANC members (see below).

Action by the Conference against racial discrimination. The Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,(5) held at Geneva from 1 to 12 August (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII), formulated measures aimed at ensuring the full and universal implementation of United Nations resolutions against racism, racial discrimination and apartheid. Convened in accordance with a 1980 General Assembly resolution,(6) it reviewed activities undertaken to achieve the goals of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1973-1983), launched by the Assembly in 1973,(7) at the national, regional and international levels, and implementation of the Programme of Action adopted at the first World Conference in 1978.(8)

Although consensus was not achieved, the Second Conference adopted a Declaration and a Programme of Action for a new decade by a large majority. The Declaration stressed the need for national, regional and international action to eliminate apartheid, racism and racial discrimination, and recommended that the Assembly declare a Second Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, extending until 1993. Condemning apartheid as an institutionalized form of racism and a crime against humanity, the Conference stated that those who contributed to the maintenance of that system were accomplices in the perpetuation of that crime. The Programme of Action, approved by the Assembly in resolution 38/14, provided a set of proposals for international and national action against apartheid (see below for recommendations in specific areas) and for increased political and material assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and Namibia.

The Conference affirmed that United Nations sanctions against South Africa must be implemented by all States in order to isolate it further. It requested the Security Council to consider imposing mandatory sanctions, under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter. Assistance to and collaboration with the regime in the economic, military, nuclear and other fields constituted an impediment to the struggle against apartheid, it added.

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and Namibia and their national liberation movements for the elimination of apartheid by all available means, including armed struggle, the Conference stressed the special responsibility of the United Nations to provide them with moral, political and material assistance. It reiterated the commitment of the United Nations to the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a democratic society. It reaffirmed the international community's rejection of measures of the apartheid system which denied the black majority their legitimate rights to their land and to their citizenship of South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/39 A by recorded vote.

Situation in South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling and reaffirming its resolution 37/69 of 9 December 1982,

Condemning, in particular, the increased collaboration by the Government of the United States of America with the racist regime of South Africa, in pursuance of its policy of so-called "constructive engagement", which has encouraged the racist régime to entrench apartheid, intensify repression and escalate aggression against and destabilization of independent African States,

Condemning the increasing collaboration by Israel with the racist minority régime of South Africa, particularly in the military and nuclear fields,

Rejecting the so-called "constitutional proposals" by the racist minority regime of South Africa as designed to entrench apartheid,

Commending the unity of the oppressed people of South Africa in their opposition to the constitutional proposals as well as in their struggle for the elimination of apartheid and for the establishment of a democratic and non-racial society in a non-fragmented South Africa,

Taking note of the advance of the armed struggle for liberation undertaken by the national liberation movements in the face of brutal repression of peaceful protest,

13. Again urges the Security Council to determine that the situation in South Africa and in southern Africa as a whole, resulting from the policies and actions of the apartheid regime of South Africa, constitutes a grave and growing threat to international peace and security, and to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against the racist minority regime under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations;

Paragraph 12 was adopted by a recorded vote of 71 to 22, with 44 abstentions.

After the Assembly voted on resolution 38/39 A and the 10 others concerning apartheid, States explained their votes, giving reservations on the resolutions in general as well as on specific areas of disagreement.

Many countries objected to paragraphs in the various texts which singled out individual Member States. Some believed that those provisions were discriminatory, others mentioned the need to uphold the principle of universality, and still others objected on the grounds that the States mentioned were countries with which they had friendly relations. Countries expressing such reservations included: Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and the United States, which all voted against resolution 38/39 A; Greece, speaking for the 10 European Community (EC) members, Guatemala, Ireland and Lesotho, which abstained; Denmark (for the five Nordic countries, which either voted against or abstained); and the Bahamas, Bolivia, Burma, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Honduras, Morocco, Oman, Panama, Peru, the Philippines, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Turkey, Uruguay and Zaire, which voted in favour.

Chile, which did not participate in the vote on resolution 38/39 A, said that while it supported most of the resolutions on apartheid, it objected to singling out certain States, a practice which did not contribute to the support of the international community in the struggle against apartheid and undermined the credibility of Assembly resolutions on the subject.

Also expressing support for measures to eradicate apartheid, the Bahamas expressed the same reservations, adding that the practice would not enhance the chances of achieving the elimination of apartheid. Bolivia believed mentioning third parties by name was contrary to the friendly relations which it maintained with them. In Costa Rica's view, this practice might be discriminatory, and Morocco considered that it was not always justified. The Dominican Republic believed that the practice introduced extraneous counter-productive factors, that those paragraphs robbed the various resolutions of balance and objectivity, and that such action was at variance with the principle of universality. The Federal Republic of Germany agreed with the main thrust of the resolutions, but opposed singling out individual States and rejected the unfounded criticism directed against Western countries, suggesting that they encouraged South Africa to undertake criminal acts against its neighbours and assisted its pursuit of apartheid. According to New Zealand, singling out individual countries limited the effectiveness of the resolutions and might make them counter-productive. Having voted for all the resolutions concerning apartheid, Turkey believed that the ninth to eleventh preambular paragraphs and paragraphs 12 and 22 (b) of resolution 38/39 A, which mentioned certain States, were not balanced.

A number of States would have preferred calling for change in the apartheid system by peaceful means, rather than recognizing the right of the oppressed people to resort to armed struggle, as mentioned in paragraph 4. Austria, Canada, Denmark (for the Nordic countries) Greece (for the EC members), Honduras, Ireland, Italy, the Netherlands, Peru, Portugal and Uruguay expressed opposition to that provision. Honduras said its positive votes for the resolutions on apartheid did not signify support for the call for violent struggle, which dismissed any possibility of a peaceful solution and the duty of the international community to promote the exercise of the right of all peoples to self-determination by means of peaceful change leading to representative democracy.

Ethiopia supported paragraph 4 as appropriate and timely because it believed that a call on the masses of South Africa to give up the option of armed struggle, especially when the avenues for peaceful change had been blocked, would only be a call for their continued subjection. Similarly, Vanuatu said that the world should not be deceived by talking of peaceful change in South Africa since apartheid by its very nature was not peaceful.

Among those objecting to the language of the resolutions were Australia, Brazil, Burma, France, Guatemala, Malawi, Portugal and the United Kingdom. Australia, for example, said that it preferred practical measures rather than extravagant rhetoric to eradicate apartheid. Brazil voted in favour of all the resolutions on apartheid despite reservations about the language in some which did not seem to be conducive to the achievement of the common goals in respect of South Africa. Guatemala also felt that certain paragraphs could be improved. Despite its opposition to apartheid, the United Kingdom could not support resolution 38/39 A because of its extravagant language and extreme proposals which, it felt, debased the currency of the United Nations, making it easier for the proponents of apartheid to refuse to take account of the Assembly's views.

Ireland, Italy and the Netherlands opposed having the Assembly call on the Security Council to impose mandatory sanctions; Botswana and Lesotho expressed reservations on that paragraph. Ireland said that the formulation was inappropriate. Australia, Canada, Denmark (for the Nordic countries) and Uruguay believed that some provisions of the resolution went beyond the Assembly's responsibilities. Denmark said the Nordic countries adhered to the United Nations Charter and therefore had reservations with regard to formulations which failed to take into account that only the Council could adopt decisions binding on Member States.

In this connection, Canada objected to some recommendations in the resolutions which went beyond the competence of the Assembly, such as those calling for South Africa's exclusion from multilateral organizations. The Federal Republic of Germany, the United States and Uruguay regretted that efforts were being made to interfere with the work of independent international organizations. In particular, the United States objected to the attempt to politicize such technical bodies as IMF and IAEA. In addition, Botswana expressed reservations about paragraph 14 of resolution 38/39 A.

Greece, speaking for the EC countries, did not support calls to cut off all relations with South Africa; it said existing channels of communication should be used to permit free expression of views on all political, social and economic matters of concern to the people. Speaking similarly, Portugal believed that the total isolation of South Africa was unlikely to lead to a consensus, which must be the basis of effective international pressure to allow the South African majority to exercise fully its lawful rights.

The Netherlands did not recognize the national liberation movement of South Africa as the authentic representative of the people. Uruguay said all peoples must determine their own representation in accordance with the principle of self-determination, and added that United Nations efforts should aim at eradicating apartheid in South Africa and creating a democratic society without discrimination where the people might freely decide their own destiny.

In addition to the 11 resolutions on various aspects of apartheid, the Assembly, in resolution 38/17 on self-determination of peoples, condemned the policy of "bantustanization", the South African policy of confining homes of blacks to specific areas, and reiterated its support for the oppressed people of South Africa in its just and legitimate struggle against the racist régime.

In accordance with an Assembly decision that those having a special interest in the apartheid policies of South Africa should be heard, the Assembly's Special Political Committee, on 4 and 8 November, heard statements by 33 persons. Most of them represented non-governmental organizations and had submitted written requests to speak.⁽⁹⁾ They were:

Arnold Braithwaite, United States Peace Council; Gordon Molyneux, American-South African Peoples' Friendship Association; Philip Oke, Christian Peace Conference; Wilfrid Grenville-Grey, International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa; Jeanne M. Woods. Deborah Jackson, Wendy R. Brown and Emily M. Bass, National Conference of Black Lawyers; Vera Michelson, Capital District Coalition against Apartheid and Racism; Kaleem Shabazz; Ira L. Williams, Social Service Employees' Union Local 371; Tarig Iddinn, International Relations Committee of the National Association of Black Social Workers; Albie Sachs; Indris Naidoo; Vicki Erenstein, National Lawyers Guild; Beatrice von Roemer, International Confederation of Free Trade Unions; John R. Carlisle, Freedom in Sport; Robert Brown, All African People's Revolutionary Party; Lennox S. Hinds, International Association of Democratic Lawyers; Larry Holmes, People's Anti-War Mobilizations; Elombe Brath, Patrice Lumumba Coalition; Pierre Sutton, National Association of Black-Owned Broadcasters; David Lampel, Inner City Broadcasting Corporation and the Radio Television News Directors Association; Enrique Kirved, Chile Democrático; William Booth, American Committee on Africa; Gay J. McDougall, Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law; Stephen Paganuzzi, National Alliance against Racist and Political Repression; Romesh Chandra and James Lamond, World Peace Council; Una G. Mulzac, Liberation Bookstore, Inc.; Peter Sluiter, Holland Committee on Southern Africa and Working Group Kairos; Joseph Lowery, Southern Christian Leadership Conference; and Sylvia Hill, Southern Africa Support Project.

Chile, in a letter to the Committee Chairman of 31 October,⁽¹⁰⁾ questioned the validity of the request of Chile Democrático to speak as an organization with "a special interest" in apartheid. Consequently, the Committee on 1 November referred the request to the Legal Counsel. However, on 8 November, the Chairman read out a subsequent letter from Chile, in which it said it had no objection to the granting of the request.

These events were reported to the Assembly by the Committee on 10 November.⁽¹¹⁾ The Assembly, on an oral proposal of its President, adopted decision 38/407 without vote.

Programme of Action against Apartheid

The Special Committee against Apartheid adopted on 25 October 1983 a Programme of Action against Apartheid, which the Chairman transmitted on 26 October to the Secretary-General for the attention of the General Assembly.⁽²⁾ The Programme was aimed at isolating the apartheid régime and assisting the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements to eliminate apartheid and establish a democratic society with equal rights. It called for specific action by Governments, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations, trade unions, churches, anti-apartheid and solidarity movements, other non-governmental organizations, individuals, the Secretary-General and the Centre against Apartheid, as well as by the Committee itself. Measures recommended in the Programme to implement United Nations resolutions concerned: official relations with South Africa; sanctions and boycotts; military and nuclear relations; the arms embargo; economic relations; an oil embargo; transnational corporations; relations between South Africa and IMF; political prisoners and other detained persons; women and children; apartheid in sports; national liberation movements; inter-agency co-operation; public information; non-governmental organizations; special meetings, missions and observances; the work programme of the Committee against Apartheid; and South Africa's relations with southern African States (see below under specific topics).

In its annual report to the Assembly,⁽¹⁾ the Committee recommended that the Programme be endorsed by the Assembly and disseminated as widely as possible. The Committee urged the Assembly and the Security Council to endorse the declarations of conferences it organized or co-sponsored during 1983: the International Conference of Trade Unions on Sanctions and other Actions against the Apartheid Regime in South Africa (Geneva, 10 and 11 June), the International Conference for Sanctions against Apartheid in Sports (London, 27-29 June), the International Non-Governmental Organizations Conference on Action against Apartheid and Racism (Geneva, 5-8 July), and the International Conference on the Alliance between South Africa and Israel (Vienna, Austria, 11-13 July).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly took action on the Programme in resolution 38/39 B of 5 December, which it adopted by recorded vote.

Programme of Action against Apartheid

The General Assembly,

Seriously concerned over the grave situation in southern Africa resulting from the policies and actions of the racist régime of South Africa,

Anxious to promote more effective action by the international community to secure the speedy eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial democratic State in South Africa,

Recognizing the importance of concerted action by Governments, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals, for this purpose,

Taking note of the proclamation of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, beginning on 10 December 1983,

Having considered the Programme of Action against Apartheid, adopted by the Special Committee against Apartheid on 25 October 1983,

1. Commends the Programme of Action against Apartheid to the attention of all Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals;

2. Invites all Governments, organizations and individuals to take effective action in the light of the Programme of Action, in close co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid and the Centre against Apartheid of the Secretariat;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, to ensure the widest publicity for the Programme of Action and to instruct all United Nations offices to take appropriate action to promote its implementation.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Botswana, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Lesotho, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden.

In explanation of vote, Botswana said that it was obliged to abstain because of its geopolitical circumstances in southern Africa. Expressing its desire to continue its excellent relations with the Special Committee, France said that the non-binding terms of the resolution left it free to act on certain judicious proposals and to refrain from acting on a number of others that it deemed unacceptable.

Japan regretted that the Programme of Action was proposed without having been discussed in depth and despite the fact that a similar programme was adopted, after painstaking negotiations, at the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII); however, it appreciated the fundamental philosophy of the resolution and some elements of the Programme.

The Netherlands found some formulae in the Programme unacceptable, but believed that its policy was in consonance with the resolution. Although there was much in the Programme that it supported, New Zealand was unable to go along with the calls for legislative and other action. Ireland spoke similarly and added that the text included inappropriate proposals which did not take into account the status of the specialized agencies or which were aimed specifically at some permanent members of the Security Council. Portugal found some of the language of the Programme unacceptable, in the light of its support for peaceful change in South Africa.

Relations with South Africa

During 1983, the General Assembly continued to press for breaking off all relations between South Africa and other States as a means of isolating that country and forcing it to abandon apartheid. In addition to the Assembly's calls for strengthening the arms embargo and ending various forms of economic assistance, several other United Nations bodies called for such action, including a halt to military and nuclear relations, an oil embargo, breaking off foreign investments and loans, and ending collaboration of transnational corporations (TNCs).

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid, in both its annual report to the General Assembly⁽¹⁾ and its October 1983 Programme of Action against Apartheid⁽²⁾ (see above), made recommendations regarding relations with South Africa. During the year, it also continued to follow developments concerning military, nuclear, economic and other collaboration with that country.

The Committee repeatedly condemned the continued collaboration of certain Western States and Israel, as well as TNCs, with South Africa as an essential cause for the escalation of that country's aggression against independent African States, and the continuation of its oppression against the South African people and its illegal occupation of Namibia. The Committee emphasized that the international campaign against apartheid had been undermined by the three Western permanent members of the Security Council which had prevented effective Council action in this regard, as well as by the States which had continued collaborating with South Africa and paid little heed to Assembly resolutions. In the Committee's view, those Council members had failed to be guided by their responsibilities under the United Nations Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security.

The Committee stated that the United States policy of "constructive engagement" with South Africa negated the limited measures it had previously undertaken to dissociate itself from apartheid, and that policy-diametrically opposed to United Nations action-had facilitated South Africa's obstructive manoeuvres as regards implementation of the Security Council's 1978 resolution outlining a plan for Namibia's independence.⁽¹²⁾ This policy of "constructive engagement" was seen by South Africa as encouragement of its aggression.

Certain Western States had tried to resolve the situation in southern Africa by securing the South African Government while encouraging adjustments in its racial policies calculated to offset growing national and international opposition, thereby enabling it to gain time to entrench apartheid. The Committee rejected the contention of those States that South Africa was militarily and economically so powerful that peace could be secured only through accommodation, and rejected as well the United States policy in favour of "co-operation and peaceful coexistence" between southern African States and the regime, purportedly in the interest of South Africa's legitimate security concerns.

The Committee drew attention to the responsibility of the main trading partners of South Africa, namely, the United Kingdom, the United States, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Italy and France, and to the involvement of TNCs, mainly from those countries. Israel, it said, had continued to collaborate with South Africa, especially in the military and nuclear fields (see below), while the local authorities in Taiwan had also developed military and other relations.

In the Committee's view, the apartheid régime could not have survived but for the fact that certain countries and vested interests had blocked international action and assisted it in all serious crises. The international community should insist that the Western Powers concerned respect United Nations decisions, recognize the legitimacy of the struggle for liberation from apartheid, and cease providing comfort and encouragement to the regime. The Committee's efforts to inform public opinion in the countries concerned had contributed to solidarity, as evidenced by the fact that the large majority of States which had not supported the Assembly's 1962 call for sanctions against South Africa⁽¹³⁾ currently favoured such measures. As part of the pursuit to eliminate apartheid, the Committee said, the collaboration of certain States and foreign economic interests with South Africa should be publicized more widely, concerted action by committed States was required to end such collaboration, and it was necessary to isolate the regime totally.

In its Programme of Action,⁽²⁾ the Committee called on Governments to persuade those countries which were collaborating to desist and to implement United Nations resolutions. It stated its intention to promote an international campaign against collaboration by Governments, banks and TNSs with South Africa.

Activities of the Council for Namibia. The United Nations Council for Namibia, in its annual report to the Assembly covering the period from 1 September 1982 to 31 August 1983,⁽¹⁴⁾ stated that the United Kingdom, the United States, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Switzerland, France, Israel and the local authorities in Taiwan continued to increase their collaboration with South Africa. (The Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and Switzerland had rejected those allegations.) That collaboration had contributed to the survival of apartheid, South Africa's occupation of Namibia and its aggression against African States.

As requested by the Assembly in 1982,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Council continued to monitor the comprehensive boycott which in 1981 the Assembly had urged States to impose against South Africa in order to isolate it politically, economically, militarily and culturally.⁽¹⁶⁾ Also in 1981, the Assembly had called on States to co-operate with the Council in fulfilling that task and to supply such information as it might need.⁽¹⁷⁾ Having sent communications to all States, the Council reported that, as of 24 January 1983, it had received replies from 31 States: 17 asserted they had never had any relations with South Africa; 8 stated that they had had some but had severed them in compliance with United Nations resolutions; 4 indicated their support for the relevant resolutions; and 2 indicated that when those resolutions had been adopted, they had reserved their position on some paragraphs because of geopolitical constraints. As of 30 June 1982, 24 States had diplomatic missions in South Africa and 36 had consular and/or honorary missions; South Africa had diplomatic missions in 25 States and consular and/or honorary missions in another 33. According to the Council, most countries which had political and diplomatic relations with South Africa prior to adoption of the 1981 resolutions had made little or no effort to discontinue them. A small number of those States had taken measures to terminate such contacts.

While an overwhelming majority of States, by boycotting South Africa, had demonstrated their adherence to the principle of self-determination and independence for the Namibian people, the support accorded to the South African Government by certain States not only militated against those efforts, but encouraged the régime to step up its apartheid policies and entrench its illegal occupation of Namibia (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III). The Council called for action by the international community to avert the threat to world peace and security resulting from the situation in southern Africa. If collaboration with South Africa continued, it said, the result would be violence between the forces of oppression, racism and colonialism and those seeking justice, equality and national independence.

In its annual report, the Council reproduced the Paris Declaration on Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence. The Conference, held in Paris from 25 to 29 April 1983, was organized by the United Nations in consultation with OAU in accordance with a 1982 Assembly resolution.⁽⁸⁾ It called for an end to the assistance rendered to South Africa by certain countries in the political, economic, military, nuclear and other fields, in defiance of the international community. It noted that the United States policy of "constructive engagement" with South Africa had further encouraged it to intensify repression of the people of South Africa and Namibia, aggression against the front-line States and intransigence over Namibian independence.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. In a resolution of 15 February,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Commission on Human Rights strongly condemned all collaboration, particularly in the nuclear, military and economic fields, with South Africa and called on the States concerned to cease such collaboration. It condemned the policies of those Western and other countries whose political, economic, military, nuclear, strategic, cultural and sports relations with the regime encouraged it to persist in suppressing the aspirations of peoples to self-determination and independence.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in several 1983 resolutions, condemned relations with South Africa.

In resolution 38/39 A on the situation in South Africa, the Assembly on 5 December condemned the policies of certain Western States, especially the United States, and Israel, and of their TNSs and financial institutions that had increased collaboration with South Africa, and requested the Special Committee against Apartheid to report on such collaboration.

The Assembly, in resolution 38/36 A of 1 December, condemned the increased assistance by major Western countries and Israel to South Africa in several fields, which, the Assembly said, constituted hostile action against the people of Namibia and the front-line States since it was bound to strengthen the military capability of the régime. It requested States to take measures to isolate South Africa politically, economically, militarily and culturally, and asked the Council for Namibia to continue to follow such steps. The Council was also requested to report on all contacts with South Africa.

In resolution 38/17 of 22 November, the Assembly condemned the policy of those Western States, Israel and others whose relations with South Africa encouraged its suppression of the aspirations of peoples to self-determination and independence.

In resolution 38/50 of 7 December, the Assembly called on States, particularly certain Western States, to take measures to terminate collaboration with South Africa and to refrain from entering into other relations with it in violation of resolutions of the United Nations and OAU. States were also requested to isolate South Africa politically, economically, militarily and culturally.

In resolution 38/14 of 22 November approving the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination as recommended by the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, the Assembly called for the termination of relations with South Africa. It approved the Conference's call to refrain from action that might imply recognition of or support for the illegal occupation of Namibia.

The Assembly also took action on sanctions and boycotts against South Africa, an arms embargo, economic sanctions, an oil embargo and apartheid in sports (see below).

Communications. Several 1983 letters to the Secretary-General from Member States dealt with specific relations with South Africa. On 3 November,⁽²⁰⁾ Turkey forwarded a letter of the same date from Nail Atalay, described as the representative of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, stating that a diplomat from the South African Embassy at Athens, Greece, was refused permission to enter the Turkish-controlled area of Cyprus because of South Africa's apartheid policy and alleging that he had been holding contacts in southern Cyprus with Greek Cypriot officials. Rejecting the allegations on 9 December,⁽²¹⁾ Cyprus said it had not held contacts with anyone from the South African regime and had no relations with it. Iraq, on 16 December,⁽²²⁾ claimed that Iran, although denouncing South Africa for its apartheid policy, maintained diplomatic relations and collaborated in other ways with that regime.

Sanctions and boycotts

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid stressed the importance of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa, to be instituted by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter, as a means to isolate the apartheid régime. In its annual report to the General Assembly,⁽¹⁾ the Committee gave priority to an embargo on all military and nuclear co-operation with South Africa, an oil embargo and other economic measures (see below). It also recognized the importance of sports, cultural, consumer and other boycotts, campaigns against TNCs operating in South Africa and related actions which enabled large segments of the public to reinforce governmental action.

Since the Western permanent members of the Security Council had prevented mandatory sanctions, the Committee called on countries which had not done so to end collaboration with the régime and to exercise their influence to persuade those Council members to fulfil their responsibilities regarding the threat to international peace and security resulting from South Africa's apartheid and aggression. The Committee welcomed the decision of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU, at its June 1983 session at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, to seek a Council meeting to strengthen the arms embargo and impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions. The Committee recommended that the General Assembly call on Governments to implement United Nations resolutions on boycotts against South Africa, terminate cultural agreements with that country, and take appropriate action with respect to persons visiting there for sports and cultural activities who were named in lists prepared by the Committee.

In its October 1983 Programme of Action against Apartheid,⁽²⁾ the Committee called on Governments to support and facilitate the Council's imposition of sanctions against South Africa, and to implement all measures to isolate it politically, economically, militarily and culturally, pending mandatory sanctions by the Council. The Committee urged corporations and employers to persuade employers' organizations to work for a policy of sanctions against South Africa. With the assistance of the Centre against Apartheid, the Committee intended to promote an international campaign for sanctions.

With regard to educational, cultural, sporting and other collaboration, the Committee stated that Governments should suspend such exchanges with the regime and with organizations or institutions in South Africa which practised apartheid. Governments were urged to: abrogate arrangements with South Africa in such areas; cease cultural and academic collaboration, including research and the exchange of scientists, students and academic personalities; prevent promotion of tourism to South Africa; terminate visa-free entry privileges to South Africans; and take appropriate action with respect to those sportsmen, entertainers and others who had been named by the Committee. Noting that public organizations could contribute to strengthening the sporting and cultural boycott of South Africa, the Committee recommended that those organizations: persuade artists, musicians and entertainers to boycott South Africa; encourage authors, painters and film-makers to refuse to allow their works to be performed or exhibited in South Africa; support measures against individuals and institutions which defied the cultural boycott; and co-operate with the Committee in compiling and publicizing registers of collaborators with South Africa in the cultural field and in securing action against those violating the boycott. Writers, artists and musicians were called on not to participate in cultural events in South Africa, to ensure that their trade union supported the cultural boycott, and to give performances for assistance to South African refugees or their national liberation movement.

In this connection, the Committee, in order to facilitate appropriate action by Governments, organizations and individuals committed to ending apartheid, published on 26 October a register of entertainers, actors and others who had performed since 1981 in South Africa. The Committee intended to keep the list up to date. The Chairman of its Sub-Committee on the Implementation of United Nations Resolutions and Collaboration with South Africa, James Victor Gbeho (Ghana.), met with members of the United States-based Coalition to End Cultural Collaboration with South Africa to consult on ways to promote the cultural boycott. They agreed that a hearing on a cultural boycott organized by the Committee would be desirable in order to maximize publicity, bring together activist organizations and organizers of boycotts, and launch the cultural boycott of South Africa in the United States. The Committee, having promoted the establishment in 1982 of a Committee of Artists of the World against Apartheid, supported an international art exhibit against apartheid organized by those artists in Paris from 22 November to 30 December 1983. An exhibition by 15 artists who contributed to the Committee of Artists was held in Paris on 21 March.

The Committee against Apartheid and the Workers' Group of the Governing Body of the International Labour Organisation (ILO), in co-operation with the United Nations Council for Namibia, OAU and the Organization of African Trade Union Unity, organized at Geneva on 10 and 11 June the International Conference of Trade Unions on Sanctions and Other Actions against the Apartheid Régime in South Africa. In addition to supporting international action to eliminate apartheid through sanctions, its objective was to promote solidarity with, and assistance to, the black trade-union movement of South Africa. The Conference, in a declaration transmitted to the Secretary-General on 11 June,(23) requested the United Nations to expand sanctions against South Africa and make them mandatory. It called on Governments to promote mandatory economic sanctions and, pending Security Council action, to take unilateral and regional measures by severing political, cultural, sports, commercial and diplomatic relations. The Conference urged all workers and their trade-union organizations to bring pressure to bear on Governments to end relations and called for specific sanctions and boycotts (see below). The report of the Special Committee's representatives to the Conference was adopted by the Committee on 27 July.

A mission sent by the Committee to the front-line States of Angola, Botswana, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe to gather information on South Africa's aggression (see below) issued a report in May(24) in which it recommended that the Council adopt effective measures, under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter, to prevent further aggression by that country. In its view, comprehensive or selective mandatory sanctions would be the most appropriate and effective means to do so, and all States must be called on to end collaboration with South Africa in the political, diplomatic, economic, trade, military, nuclear and other fields. In addition, those permanent members of the Council which supported South Africa should be urged to cease their opposition to sanctions.

Action by the Conference for Namibia's independence. In its Paris Declaration on Namibia, reproduced by the United Nations Council for Namibia in its annual report to the General Assembly,⁽¹⁴⁾ the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence expressed concern that Namibia's independence continued to be obstructed by South Africa's refusal to comply with the independence plan for Namibia endorsed by the Security Council in 1978⁽¹²⁾ (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III). Expressing dismay at the Council's failure to discharge its responsibilities for the maintenance of international peace and security owing to the opposition of its Western permanent members, the Conference affirmed that sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter were the only available means to ensure South Africa's compliance with United Nations decisions and to prevent further armed conflict in the region. Therefore, the Conference called on the Council to consider further action to implement its 1978 resolution. Pending the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions by the Council, the Conference urged States to adopt economic measures against South Africa and commended those that had already done so.

The Conference's Committee of the Whole, meeting from 26 to 28 April, supported the decisions of the OAU Co-ordinating Committee for the Liberation of Africa (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 10-12 February), the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (New Delhi, India, 7-11 March) and the International Conference in Solidarity with the Front-line States (Lisbon, Portugal, 25-27 March) to urge the Council urgently to resume full responsibility for the speedy implementation of the 1978 resolution. According to the Committee of the Whole, the Council should respond to the overwhelming demand of the international community by immediately imposing sanctions, including an arms embargo (see below). In the mean time, the Committee requested Governments to apply sanctions unilaterally and collectively.

Activities of the Council for Namibia. The Council for Namibia, having considered the conclusions of the International Conference and the Committee of the Whole, concluded that it was of the utmost importance that the Security Council proceed without delay to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa. The Security Council, it said, had been repeatedly thwarted from taking that action by its three Western permanent members, which should bring their policies into accord with the wish of the international community.

Action by the Conference against racial discrimination. The need for sanctions against South Africa was also stressed in the Declaration and Programme of Action for the Second Decade to

Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1983-1993) adopted by the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discriminations.⁽⁵⁾

In the Declaration, the Conference reaffirmed that United Nations sanctions against South Africa must be implemented strictly and faithfully by all States in order to isolate it further. Assistance and collaboration in the economic, military, nuclear and other fields constituted an impediment to the struggle against apartheid. The Conference believed that it was the obligation of all Governments to develop legislation that would prevent TNCs from following those practices which assisted and supported the régime or which exploited the natural resources and people of South Africa and Namibia.

In the Programme of Action for the new decade, approved by the General Assembly (resolution 38/14), the Conference called on the Security Council to consider urgently the imposition of mandatory sanctions, in particular a ban on nuclear collaboration, an arms embargo, termination of foreign investments and loans, an oil embargo and a trade boycott (see below). The Conference called on States to refrain from any relations with South Africa which could contribute to the continuance of apartheid, and specifically to sever all sporting, cultural and scientific links.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/39 D by recorded vote.

Sanctions against South Africa

The General Assembly,

Considering that the policies and actions of the racist régime of South Africa, its military buildup and its nuclear plans constitute a grave threat to international peace and security,

Reaffirming its conviction that comprehensive and mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, universally applied, are the most appropriate and effective means by which the international community can assist the legitimate struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and discharge its responsibilities for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recalling the Paris Declaration on Sanctions against South Africa,

Considering that political, economic, military and any other collaboration with the apartheid régime of South Africa encourages its persistent intransigence and defiance of the international community and its escalating repression, aggression and destabilization,

Recognizing the urgent need for the termination of military, nuclear, economic and technological collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa, as well as the cessation of sports, cultural and other relations with South Africa,

Gravely concerned that the racist régime of South Africa has continued, despite the mandatory arms embargo imposed by the Security Council in resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, to obtain military equipment and ammunition, as well as technology and know-how to develop its armaments industry, and to acquire nuclear-weapon capability,

Deploing the attitude of those Western permanent members of the Security Council that have so far prevented the Council from adopting comprehensive sanctions against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter,

Deploing also the attitude of those States, in particular the United States of America and Israel, which have continued and increased their political, economic and other collaboration with South Africa,

Gravely concerned over the activities of those transnational corporations that continue to collaborate with the apartheid régime and of those financial institutions that have continued to provide loans and credits to South Africa, and over the failure of the States concerned to take effective action to prevent such collaboration,

Expressing serious concern over the greatly increased trade with, investments in, and loans to South Africa by the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America, the Federal Republic of Germany and Switzerland,

Commending all States that have taken effective measures, in accordance with relevant resolutions, for the elimination of apartheid in South Africa,

Expressing great appreciation to intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, in particular anti-apartheid and solidarity movements, trade unions and religious bodies, as well as city and other local authorities, that have taken action to isolate the racist régime of South Africa and to promote support for comprehensive sanctions against that régime,

Commending athletes, entertainers and others who demonstrated solidarity with the oppressed people of South Africa by complying with the boycotts of South Africa,

Commending the Special Committee against Apartheid for its activities, with the assistance of the Centre against Apartheid of the Secretariat and the co-operation of Governments and organizations, in promoting the widest possible support for sanctions against South Africa,

Taking note of the decision of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its nineteenth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 6 to 12 June 1983, calling for an early convening of the Security Council for the purpose of strengthening the arms embargo and imposing comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Again requests the Security Council to consider action under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations towards comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa and, in particular, to take measures:

(a) To monitor effectively and to reinforce the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa;

(b) To prohibit all co-operation with South Africa in the military and nuclear fields by Governments, corporations, institutions and individuals;

(c) To prohibit imports of any military equipment or component parts from South Africa;

(d) To prevent any co-operation or association with South Africa by any military alliances;

(e) To impose an effective embargo on the supply of oil and oil products to South Africa and on all assistance to the oil industry in South Africa;

(f) To prohibit financial loans to and new investments in South Africa, as well as all promotion of trade with South Africa;

2. Requests all States to take all appropriate measures to facilitate such action by the Security Council;

3. Requests all States concerned to take action against corporations and other interests that violate the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa or that are involved in the illicit supply to South Africa of oil from States that have imposed an embargo against South Africa;

4. Invites all Governments and organizations to assist, in consultation with the national liberation movements of South Africa and Namibia, persons compelled to leave South Africa because of their objection, on the grounds of conscience, to serving in the military or police force of the apartheid régime;

5. Encourages action by Governments, organizations and individuals in support of sports, cultural, consumer and other boycotts of South Africa;

6. Requests and authorizes the Special Committee against Apartheid to intensify its activities for the total isolation of the racist régime of South Africa and for promoting comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa.

The eighth and tenth preambular paragraphs were adopted by recorded votes of 71 to 22, with 40 abstentions, and 72 to 22, with 40 abstentions, respectively.

Speaking in explanation of vote, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Maldives, Morocco, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Turkey and the United Kingdom said they opposed those paragraphs singling out particular Member States for their relations with South Africa. Thailand explained that it had reservations on the eighth and tenth preambular paragraphs because they made specific references to countries with which it had diplomatic relations, and it believed that selectively naming countries was not beneficial to positive action. Turkey believed that those paragraphs were not balanced and also had a reservation with regard to the reference to a particular group of countries in the seventh preambular paragraph; a few exceptional provisions of the text also might not conform entirely to existing Turkish laws and it supported those provisions to the extent that they were compatible with those laws.

Taking the opposite view, Ethiopia said it was convinced that this resolution and those on Israel-South Africa relations and military and nuclear relations with South Africa (see below) were factual in their comments regarding the collaboration of certain countries with South Africa.

Malawi, Portugal and the United Kingdom disapproved of certain language in the resolution. Portugal said its negative vote was due to elements of verbal violence, discriminatory references and imprecise language, contradicting its policy of support for peaceful change in South Africa which required channels of communication to facilitate constructive political initiatives. The United Kingdom found the language extravagant and the proposals extreme.

According to Canada and Japan, the resolution went beyond the competence of the Assembly. In particular, Canada mentioned those recommendations involving economic sanctions. Japan believed that the resolution would pre-empt decisions of the Security Council which alone had the authority to impose such sanctions, and it opposed paragraph 1 listing possible sanctions whose implementation Japan could not ensure. In this regard, Costa Rica felt that the Assembly could urge the Council to consider a situation, but it was up to the latter to determine the course it wished to follow.

Ireland, Japan and the Netherlands questioned the effectiveness or the wisdom of imposing mandatory sanctions. Ireland supported applying certain selective measures and would have supported many of those in paragraph 1, but it had doubts over comprehensive sanctions at the current juncture; it preferred a course of steady and graduated pressure for change through carefully chosen, selective sanctions. Sharing the latter view, the Netherlands added that it wished to keep open those channels of communication through which contacts could be made to stimulate forces of peaceful change in South Africa-an approach which did not allow for the scope of action in the resolution.

Botswana said it abstained because of its own geopolitical circumstances. Speaking on behalf of the five Nordic countries, Denmark cited the reasons it mentioned in explanation of vote on resolution 38/39 A (see above).

The Assembly's call for sanctions against South Africa was reiterated in a number of other 1983 resolutions.

In resolution 38/39 A, it again urged the Security Council to determine that the situation resulting from apartheid policies constituted a threat to international peace and security and to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against the South African regime.

The Assembly, in resolution 38/36 A, repeated its call to the Council and requested the Secretary-General to seek to ensure that banks, corporations and other institutions with which the United Nations had contracts were in compliance with sanctions policies.

Besides another call for sanctions in resolution 38/36 B, the Assembly expressed dismay that the three Western permanent members of the Council had prevented measures against South Africa and stated that sanctions would ensure that country's compliance with United Nations decisions.

In resolution 38/80, the Assembly appealed to non-governmental organizations to continue to mobilize international public opinion for the enforcement of sanctions.

By decision 38/419, the Assembly recalled its 1981 resolution(16) urging States to cease all dealings with South Africa in order to isolate it totally.

Military and nuclear relations

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid, The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report to the General Assembly,(1) stated that the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa, instituted by the Security Council in 1977,(25) had failed because it was being flouted in letter and spirit by some Governments and vested interests. With the assistance of certain Western States and Israel, South Africa had expanded its military establishment. It had been able to obtain an enormous amount of military equipment and technology, to build up its domestic arms industry and to acquire nuclear capability because of the collusion of those States and a number of TNCs. Assured of protection by certain Western States from effective international action, South Africa had claimed the right to invade or subvert any African State supporting liberation, and it had demanded that neighbouring States deny asylum and humanitarian assistance to refugees from apartheid by threatening or using military, eco-conomic and other actions. In addition, the local authorities in Taiwan had developed extensive military and other relations with South Africa, and the Committee noted that the "Chief of the General Staff of the Armed Forces" of Taiwan had visited South Africa and Namibia in April 1983 and pledged co-operation with the regime.

The Committee urged the Security Council to take action, without delay, on the proposals for strengthening the arms embargo submitted in 1980(26) by the Security Council Committee established by resolution 421(1977)(27) concerning the question of South Africa, and to take mandatory action to stop nuclear collaboration with South Africa. In the Committee's view, such action was necessary in view of the violations of the arms embargo and the inadequacy of monitoring it.

In its Programme of Action adopted in October, (*) the Special Committee called on Governments to implement fully the arms embargo and in this connection outlined specific action that States should take to ensure its effectiveness. In addition to ceasing any provision to South Africa of arms, military equipment and spare parts, States were called on to: abrogate contractual arrangements with South Africa for arms and equipment; prohibit investment in, or technical assistance for, the manufacture of such items; prohibit the transfer of related technology; refrain from providing training for the South African armed forces; refrain from joint military exercises with that country; prohibit military visits and other military communications; prohibit the provision of nuclear equipment or technology that would enable South Africa to acquire nuclear weapon technology; ensure the termination of all co-operation by IAEA with South Africa, except for the inspection of nuclear facilities there under safeguards agreements; and assist persons compelled to leave South Africa because of their objections, on the grounds of conscience, to serving in the military or police forces.

Public organizations were called on to alert the public to the threat posed by South Africa's military and nuclear buildup and to campaign for an end to all forms of military and nuclear collaboration with the régime. They were urged to persuade Governments to enforce the arms embargo and to end nuclear collaboration, to expose all breaches of the embargo, and to protest any governmental action undermining it. Peace organizations were urged to take similar action.

The Committee, with the assistance of the Centre against Apartheid, planned to promote international campaigns against all forms of nuclear co-operation with South Africa.

The Sub-Committee on the Implementation of United Nations Resolutions and Collaboration with South Africa, in a report issued by decision of the Committee on 25 October on the development of South Africa's nuclear capability,(28) described flashes in 1979 and 1980 that could be ascribed to nuclear testing by South Africa and reports of co-operation in the nuclear field between that country and Israel. The Sub-Committee noted the policy of the current United States Administration of "constructive engagement" with South Africa in the nuclear field as well as the growing nuclear capability of South Africa. It stated that evidence indicated that the United States had identified its own security interests in southern Africa with those of South Africa. The report also gave updated information on South Africa's nuclear programme and facilities and its role in the world uranium market. Despite the international condemnation of South Africa and its collaborators for the development of its nuclear capability; the Sub-Committee said there was continued assistance to and relations with the nuclear programme by Western States, Israel, Japan and Taiwan, and South Africa remained a supplier of raw uranium the world market. South Africa persisted in efforts to achieve self-sufficiency in the production of armaments to suit its perception of threats to its security. Given these conditions, the Sub-Committee believed the strategy of denial to be the only logically consistent alternative.

The IAEA Director-General, by a letter of 21 October to the Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid,(29) transmitted a 14 October resolution adopted by the IAEA General Conference on South Africa's nuclear capabilities. The Conference demanded that South Africa submit all its nuclear installations to IAEA inspection and called on IAEA member States to end nuclear co-operation with South Africa and, in particular, to terminate all transfer of fissionable material and technology to it which could be used for developing nuclear arms.

The International Conference on the Alliance between South Africa and Israel (Vienna, 11-13 July), organized by the Special Committee, condemned Israel for its collaboration with South Africa, particularly military and nuclear relations (see below).

Activities of the Council for Namibia. The United Nations Council for Namibia, in its 1983 report to the General Assembly,(14) described contacts between Member States and South Africa in the military and nuclear fields since 1981, when the Assembly had requested States to cease any provision to that country of arms and related equipment.(17) It found that such contacts between the regime and the United States, the United Kingdom, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Belgium, Israel, Japan, the Netherlands, Switzerland and other countries had increased. (Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and Switzerland rejected those allegations.) The Armaments Development and Production Corporation, owned by the South African Government, had been able to produce under licence and acquire through purchases from States which violated the arms embargo a wide range of sophisticated arms and related material. Of particular concern was the growing relationship between South Africa and Israel in the military and nuclear fields. The military collaboration aggravated the instability in southern Africa, resulting from South Africa's apartheid policies, illegal occupation of Namibia and aggression against neighbouring States.

According to the Council, the most harmful blow to the international effort to obtaining South Africa's withdrawal from Namibia was the current United States policy of "constructive engagement" with South Africa, entailing a relaxation of the embargo on selling non-military items to South Africa's police and military and of the ban against visits to the United States by high-ranking South African military officers.

The Council said that during the past decade South Africa, with the collaboration of the United States, the United Kingdom, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Belgium, Israel, Japan, the Netherlands and Switzerland, had been able to become a near-nuclear State. This collaboration had taken various forms, including assistance in extracting and processing Namibian uranium, the supply of nuclear equipment, transfers of technology, provision of training and exchange of scientists.

Action by the Conference for Namibia's independence. The International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence adopted the Paris Declaration on Namibia, which was reproduced in the annual report of the Council.⁽¹⁴⁾ The Conference denounced the massive buildup of South African forces in Namibia, South Africa's recruitment and training of Namibians for tribal armies and its recruitment of mercenaries and other foreign agents in order to carry out its policies of internal repression and external aggression. The Conference called on States to co-operate in preventing the recruitment, training and transit of mercenaries for service in Namibia. It believed that South Africa's acquisition of nuclear weapons capability was intended to intimidate States in the region. The assistance to South Africa by certain Western countries and Israel in this area belied their stated opposition to apartheid and made them willing partners of its policies. Expressing concern at reports regarding military agreements between South Africa and other States, the Conference said that such arrangements would constitute a breach of the Security Council's arms embargo and would pose a threat to the security of Africa. Condemning South Africa's armed aggression and military, political and economic destabilization against States in the region, the Conference said that increased assistance was necessary to enable those States to defend their sovereignty and territorial integrity and to free themselves from economic dependence on South Africa.

The Conference's Committee of the Whole made similar statements in a report adopted on 29 April. It condemned South Africa's massive military buildup in Namibia, its recruitment of Namibians for tribal armies and the use of mercenaries to suppress the Namibian people. It condemned collaboration with South Africa in general, and in particular the nuclear collusion of the United States and Israel, and called on States to refrain from supplying South Africa directly or indirectly with installations that might enable it to produce nuclear materials, reactors or other military equipment.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. In a resolution of 18 February,⁽³⁰⁾ the Commission on Human Rights called on States where the banks, TNCs and other organizations named in a report of its Special Rapporteur, Ahmed Mohamed Khalifa, were based to end all technological assistance or collaboration in the manufacture of arms and military supplies in South Africa, and in particular to cease all collaboration with South Africa in the nuclear field (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII).

Action by the Conference against racial discrimination. The Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,⁽⁵⁾ in its Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1983-1993), called on the Security Council to consider urgently the imposition of mandatory sanctions, including the cessation of all collaboration with South Africa in the nuclear field, and the prohibition of all technological assistance or collaboration in the manufacture of arms in South Africa and the provision of military supplies to it. The Programme of Action was approved by the General Assembly in resolution 38/14.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By recorded vote on 5 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/39 G.

Military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa
The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions on military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa, in particular its resolution 37/69 D of 9 December 1982,

Recalling its resolutions concerning the denuclearization of the continent of Africa,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, 421(1977) of 9 December 1977 and 473(1980) of 13 June 1980,

Recalling that the Security Council determined in resolution 418(1977), under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, that the acquisition by South Africa of arms and related matériel constituted a threat to the maintenance of international peace and security,

Having considered the reports of the Special Committee against Apartheid, the International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa and the International Conference on the Alliance between South Africa and Israel,

Taking into account the Declarations of the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, and the resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its nineteenth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 6 to 12 June 1983,

Gravely concerned that, despite the arms embargo imposed by the Security Council, the racist régime of South Africa has continued to obtain from certain Western States and Israel military equipment and ammunition, as well as technology and know-how to develop its armaments industry and nuclear-weapon capability,

Noting with grave concern that military and nuclear collaboration by certain Western States and Israel with South Africa has enabled the racist regime to develop its arms production and become an arms-exporting country,

Recognizing that the stepped-up arms buildup and nuclear-weapon capability, as well as escalating acts of aggression by the racist régime of South Africa, constitute a grave threat to international peace and security,

Expressing alarm at the growing violation of the arms embargo, as well as the continued nuclear collaboration by the United States of America and some other Western States and Israel with the apartheid régime,

Condemning the actions of those transnational corporations that continue, through their collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa, to enhance its military and nuclear capabilities, as well as the failure of the Governments of the home countries of those corporations to take effective action to prevent such collaboration in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Considering the urgent need for mandatory decisions by the Security Council, under Chapter VII of the Charter, to prohibit any military and nuclear collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa,

1. Urges the Security Council to take mandatory decisions, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, to ensure the total cessation of all military and nuclear co-operation with the racist regime of South Africa by Governments, corporations, institutions and individuals;

2. Strongly condemns the actions of certain Western States and Israel which have provided the racist regime of South Africa with an enormous arsenal of military equipment and technology, as well as assistance in its nuclear plans, and which have allowed corporations under their jurisdiction to invest in the armaments industry in South Africa;

3. Also condemns the recent decision of the United States of America approving the request from seven corporations to provide technological and maintenance service to the nuclear installation of racist South Africa;

4. Further condemns any manoeuvres to create military pacts or arrangements with the participation of the racist régime of South Africa;

5. Calls upon all Member States:

(a) To monitor effectively and to reinforce the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa;

(b) To prohibit all military and nuclear co-operation with South Africa by Governments, corporations, institutions and individuals;

6. Calls upon all Governments that have not yet done so to terminate all military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa and to take all necessary measures for preventing corporations and enterprises under their jurisdiction from engaging in any such collaboration.

General Assembly resolution 38/39 G

Abstaining: Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Guatemala, Iceland, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Japan, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Spain, Sweden.

The tenth preambular paragraph and paragraph 3 were adopted by recorded votes of 79 to 23, with 33 abstentions, and 72 to 23, with 39 abstentions, respectively.

In explanation of their votes on the resolution as a whole, Burma, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, Morocco, Sri Lanka, Turkey and the United Kingdom said they opposed condemning particular Member States. Italy reaffirmed that it did not and would not co-operate with South Africa in the military and nuclear fields, but it opposed the references to Member States in three paragraphs. Ireland favoured calling for an end to military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa, but: it found certain references unfair, selective and arbitrary. Turkey said the seventh, eighth and tenth preambular paragraphs and operative paragraphs 2 and 3 had not been drafted in a balanced way; it also noted that certain paragraphs might be incompatible with Turkish laws.

The United States said that the text criticized its Government and ignored the facts, such as the reference in paragraph 3 to the approval by the Government of bidding by United States companies on a contract to provide technical services to a South African firm whose commercial nuclear reactors provided electricity—an approval not violating the arms embargo; the fact that it alone had been cited, although companies from a number of Member States had bid on the same contracts, obliged the United States to conclude that the paragraph was not intended to contribute to the anti-apartheid effort, but was an unjustified attempt to single it out for criticism.

Malawi, Portugal and the United Kingdom expressed reservations about some language formulations. Portugal objected to elements of verbal violence and imprecise language. For the United Kingdom, some of the language was extreme.

Speaking on behalf of the five Nordic countries, Denmark referred to the reasons it gave for their votes on resolution 38/39 A (see above).

The Netherlands said it supported strict compliance with the arms embargo and the denial to South Africa of any nuclear capacity with military applications, but rather than asking for the termination of all nuclear co-operation with South Africa, it would have preferred a call on South Africa to accede to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons⁽³¹⁾ or to accept full-scope safeguards on all its nuclear activities; in this context, it believed that paragraph 3 was unjustified because the nuclear installations involved were monitored by IAEA.

New Zealand supported the arms embargo against South Africa and the call for the cessation of any nuclear collaboration that could facilitate its development of nuclear weapons, but it believed the resolution included paragraphs that were not justified and did not serve the purposes of the resolution.

Other 1983 Assembly resolutions also dealt with military and nuclear relations with South Africa.

In resolution 38/39 A, the Assembly again requested IAEA to refrain from extending to South Africa any assistance for its nuclear plans and, in particular, to exclude that country from its technical working groups.

In resolution 38/39 D, the Assembly called for Security Council action on sanctions, including measures to prohibit co-operation with South Africa in the military and nuclear fields, to prohibit imports of military equipment or parts from that country, and to prevent co-operation by military alliances.

The Assembly, in resolution 38/36 A, condemned the military and nuclear collaboration of certain Western States and Israel with South Africa, expressed its concern at South Africa's acquisition of nuclear weapons capability, condemned the collusion by certain Western and other States, particularly the United States and Israel, with it in the nuclear field, and called on France and other States to stop supplying South Africa with installations that might enable it to produce nuclear materials or military equipment.

Again condemning the collusion of certain Western and other States in the nuclear field, the Assembly, by similar wording in resolution 38/50, called on Governments to refrain from such action and condemned States and TNCs which invested in and supplied arms and oil and nuclear technology to South Africa.

In resolution 38/54 on decolonization, the Assembly condemned all collaboration, particularly in the nuclear and military fields, with South Africa and called on States to cease such collaboration. By decision 38/419, it repeated this condemnation and stated that the continuing assistance of certain States belied their stated opposition to the racist practice of the regime and made them willing partners of its hegemonistic and criminal policies.

The Assembly took further related action in resolutions 38/181 A and B on the denuclearization of Africa (see Chapter I of this section).

Arms embargo

Security Council Committee. During 1983, the Security Council Committee established by resolution 421(1977) concerning the question of South Africa,⁽²⁷⁾ consisting of all Council members, held four closed meetings (on 28 January, 24 June, and 1 and 23 September) to study and recommend means by which the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa, imposed by the Council in 1977,⁽²⁵⁾ could be made more effective, and to seek from all States information regarding their action concerning the embargo.

In 1983, the Committee had before it two notes verbales from the United Kingdom and from Denmark. On 29 January, ⁽³²⁾ the United Kingdom stated that three of its nationals had been convicted in October 1982 on charges relating to the illegal export of rifles and machine-gun spare parts to South Africa and had been sentenced to imprisonment. On 9 May, ⁽³³⁾ the United Kingdom stated that it had examined whether the export of certain radar equipment from the United Kingdom to South Africa had involved a breach of the embargo, but determined that no breach was involved since the properly licensed equipment would be used for civil aviation. On 17 February,⁽³⁴⁾ Denmark, referring to press reports that Danish merchant vessels had violated the arms embargo, informed the Committee that the vessels in question had been time-chartered to a foreign company and were, therefore, not affected by existing law; since then, the relevant law had been amended to make it possible to prosecute any Danish shipowner found guilty of violating the arms embargo, even in cases where the vessel involved was time-chartered to a foreign company for shipping to South Africa. Both the United Kingdom and Denmark affirmed their support for the arms embargo.

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report to the General Assembly,⁽¹⁾ urged the Security Council to take action without delay on the proposals for strengthening the arms embargo submitted in 1980 by the Council's Committee on the question of South Africa.⁽²⁶⁾ Such action, it said, was necessary in view of the frequent violations of the letter and spirit of the arms embargo and the inadequacy of the monitoring procedure.

In its Programme of Action against Apartheid,⁽²⁾ the Committee called on Governments to implement fully the arms embargo against South Africa and outlined measures to ensure implementation (see above, under MILITARY AND NUCLEAR RELATIONS). Public organizations were urged to persuade Governments concerned to ensure that the arms embargo was strengthened and strictly implemented, and to organize campaigns to expose breaches of the embargo. The Committee, with the assistance of the Centre against Apartheid, planned to promote international campaigns for an effective arms embargo.

The International Conference of Trade Unions on Sanctions and Other Actions against the Apartheid Régime in South Africa, in its 11 June declaration,⁽²³⁾ endorsed the 1980 recommendations of the Security Council Committee on the question of South Africa. The Conference urged the Council to adopt them without delay, extending the embargo to comprise all products that could be used in the manufacture of arms and military equipment. Governments were urged to take measures in line with those recommendations.

Action by the Conference for Namibia's independence. The Committee of the Whole of the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence, in its Programme of Action on Namibia,⁽¹⁴⁾ called on the Security Council to adopt the necessary measures to tighten the arms embargo against South Africa and to ensure strict compliance with the embargo by all States. In this connection, the Committee called on the Council to implement, as a matter of urgency, the 1980 recommendations of the Council's Committee on the question of South Africa..

Action by the Conference against racial discrimination. The Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, in its Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1983-1993),⁽⁵⁾ called on all States to implement strictly the arms embargo and urged the Security Council to strengthen the embargo, in accordance with the 1980 recommendations of the Council's Committee. This Programme of Action was approved by the General Assembly in resolution 38/14.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In five 1983 resolutions, the General Assembly called for measures concerning the arms embargo against South Africa.

In resolution 38/17, it again demanded the immediate application of the embargo by all countries and more particularly by those that maintained military and nuclear co-operation with South Africa and continued to supply it with related Matériel.

The Assembly, in resolution 38/39 D, requested the Security Council to monitor and to reinforce the embargo, while in resolution 38/39 G, the same call was made to Member States.

Calling on the Council to tighten the embargo and to ensure strict compliance by all States, the Assembly, in resolution 38/36 A, deplored the United Kingdom's decision to supply radar equipment to South Africa, and called on the Council to implement the 1980 recommendations of its Committee on the question of South Africa. In resolution 38/181 B, the Council was requested to conclude expeditiously its consideration of those recommendations with a view to blocking existing loopholes in the arms embargo so as to render it more effective and prohibiting, in particular, all forms of collaboration with South Africa in the nuclear field.

Economic relations

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its October 1983 Programme of Action against Apartheid,⁽²⁾ called on Governments to terminate all economic collaboration with South Africa and, in particular, to: cease direct or indirect trade or commercial transactions; refrain from supplying strategic materials; refrain from extending loans, investments and technical assistance to it and companies registered there; prohibit the sale of Krugerrands; prohibit economic and financial interests under their national jurisdiction from co-operating with South Africa and companies registered there; deny tariff and other preferences to its exports and any inducements or guarantees for exports to, or investments in, South Africa; take action in international and regional agencies concerned, such as the European Economic Community, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, IMF and the World Bank, to block assistance to South Africa; and take action, separately or collectively, against TNCs and financial institutions collaborating with it.

In dealing with airlines and shipping lines, Governments were urged to refuse landing and passage facilities to aircraft belonging to South Africa or registered there; close ports to vessels flying the South African flag; prohibit airlines and shipping lines registered in their countries from providing services to and from; and deny facilities to aircraft or shipping lines proceeding to, or returning from, South Africa. With regard to emigration, the Committee recommended that Governments prohibit or discourage emigration, particularly of skilled and technical personnel, close South African recruitment offices and prohibit advertisements for employment in South Africa.

The Committee called on public organizations to campaign for the boycott of all South African products, an end to the promotion of trade with and tourism to South Africa, the boycott of South African Airways, and stopping airlines and shipping companies from providing services to and from.

Activities of the Council for Namibia. The United Nations Council for Namibia, in its annual report to the General Assembly,⁽¹⁴⁾ described economic relations and contacts with South Africa. It found that foreign participation in South Africa's economy was extensive, broad-ranging and complex, and that economic relations between South Africa and its traditional Western trading partners had been enhanced. A recent decision by the United States to relax existing restrictions on trade and other economic relations with South Africa apparently had encouraged other countries to take a similar position.

Western support for South Africa was provided in the form of investments, loans, trade, transfers of technology and expertise, according to the Council. Based for the most part on mineral resources, South Africa's economy had attracted Western capital and collaboration, thus enhancing its ability to build up its military, entrench the apartheid system and perpetuate its occupation of Namibia. In the Council's view, economic sanctions against South Africa would be effective in combating those South African policies if they were implemented by the major Western trading partners. The Council listed South Africa's main trading partners as (in descending order of trade volume in 1981) the United States, Japan, the United Kingdom, the Federal Republic of Germany, Switzerland, France, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands and Canada, and described recent reports of large contracts between them and South Africa.

The Council remarked on the slowing growth rate of the South African economy, which had expanded by over 8 per cent in 1980, 4.5 per cent in 1981 and was expected to grow by only 2 to 3 per cent in 1982. In 1981, the Government had devalued the currency and inflation rates climbed to nearly 14 per cent. The bulk of South Africa's imports were industrial and consumer goods and oil, and its main exports were natural resources, on which it depended for foreign exchange.

The Council reported that despite the 1981 General Assembly request that States prevent air and sea services to and from South Africa,⁽¹⁷⁾ Western, Asian and Latin American companies continued those services. Tourism to South Africa continued to increase and provided it with another source of foreign currency. In 1981, 697,228 tourists visited South Africa. Migration to South Africa was also rising, including people with professional and technical skills. Scientific and educational co-operation and exchanges between some countries and South Africa also continued.

Action by the Conference against racial discrimination. The Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, in its Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1983-1993),⁽⁵⁾ called on the Security Council to consider the imposition of mandatory sanctions against South Africa, including the interruption of trade relations with that country. The General Assembly approved the Programme by resolution 38/14.

Oil embargo

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. In 1983, the Special Committee against Apartheid⁽¹⁾ devoted special attention to consultations on promoting an oil embargo against South Africa. In accordance with a December 1982 General Assembly resolution,⁽³⁵⁾ the Chairman of the Committee invited 10 countries to nominate individuals to a Group of Experts on the Supply of Oil and Oil Products to South Africa which would prepare a study as a basis for the consideration of national and international measures to implement embargoes imposed or policies declared by oil-producing and oil-exporting countries with regard to South Africa's oil supply. The Group held its first session from 15 to 24 February. The Committee attached great importance to the proposed International Conference on an Oil Embargo against South Africa, authorized by the Assembly in December 1982,⁽³⁵⁾ for the purpose of considering national and international arrangements to implement embargoes or policies announced by oil-producing and oil-exporting countries. It reiterated that the Security Council should urgently consider a mandatory oil embargo, and called for action by individual Governments, pending Council action. The Committee recommended encouragement of public action in support of an oil embargo, especially in countries whose corporations and tanker fleets were involved in the supply of oil to South Africa.

In its October Programme of Action,(2) the Committee called on Governments to take measures to implement an oil embargo, including: enacting and enforcing "end-users" agreements to stop the supply of oil to South Africa directly or through third parties; prohibiting the transport of oil to it; taking action against suppliers and transporters of oil; seizing tankers owned by their nationals or registered in their countries which were used to transport oil to it; prohibiting assistance to South Africa in the construction of oil-from-coal plants; preventing the efforts of South African corporate interests to maintain or expand their holdings in oil companies or properties outside the country; and banning the participation of corporations and individuals within their jurisdiction in the South African oil industry. Public organizations were urged to campaign for an oil embargo, focusing on the role of the major oil companies supplying South Africa.

The International Conference of Trade Unions on Sanctions and Other Actions against the A Apartheid Régime in South Africa, in its declaration,(23) urged the Security Council to extend the arms embargo to include raw materials and technology that could be used in the production of nuclear energy and to oil and petroleum products. Governments were called on to adopt an oil embargo against South Africa and, as a first step, to organize under United Nations auspices an international conference of oil-exporting and oil-transporting countries. The Conference requested the Committee against Apartheid to produce, on a regular basis, lists of tankers and companies supplying oil to South Africa and to distribute the lists to unions of dock-terminal and oil transport workers.

Action by the Conference against racial discrimination. The Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, in its Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Discrimination (1983-1993)(5) as approved by the General Assembly in resolution 38/14, called on the Security Council to consider the imposition of mandatory sanctions against South Africa, including an embargo on the supply of petroleum, petroleum products and other strategic commodities that would enable South Africa to continue implementing its apartheid policy.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/39 J by recorded vote.

Oil embargo against South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling and reaffirming its resolutions 36/172 G of 17 December 1981 and 37/69 J of 9 December 1982,

Recalling further the Paris Declaration on Sanctions against South Africa,

Convinced of the need to ensure the effective implementation of embargoes imposed or policies declared by most oil-producing and oil-exporting countries with regard to the supply of their oil and oil products to South Africa, and to secure a mandatory oil embargo against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Convinced further that such action has become imperative because of increasing repression and acts of aggression by South Africa,

Commending all Governments that have imposed an oil embargo against South Africa,

Commending the Special Committee against Apartheid for its efforts, in co-operation with Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to promote an effective oil embargo against South Africa,

Condemning the activities of corporations and other interests engaged in the clandestine supply to South Africa of oil from countries which have imposed an oil embargo,

Noting the need for further consultations among oil-producing and oil-exporting countries committed to the oil embargo against South Africa on national and international arrangements to ensure the effective implementation of the oil embargo against South Africa and on an international conference for that purpose,

1. Reaffirms its recommendation to the Security Council to consider urgently a mandatory embargo on the supply of oil and oil products to South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Urges all States that have not yet done so to take effective legislative and other measures to ensure the implementation of an oil embargo against South Africa;

3. Requests all States concerned to take effective action against corporations and tanker companies involved in the illicit supply of oil to South Africa;

4. Requests and authorizes the Special Committee against Apartheid to continue its efforts, including the undertaking of missions, the holding of seminars and the publication of studies, to promote an effective oil embargo against South Africa;

5. Invites Governments, international and non-governmental organizations, trade unions and other appropriate bodies to lend their full support to the oil embargo against South Africa;

6. Renews its authorization to the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Special Committee and in the light of the conclusions reached at the meetings of permanent representatives to the United Nations of the oil-producing and oil-exporting countries committed to the oil embargo against South Africa, to organize an International Conference on an Oil Embargo against South Africa for the purpose of considering national and international arrangements to ensure the implementation of embargoes imposed or policies declared by oil-producing and oil-exporting countries with regard to the supply of oil and oil products to South Africa.

Speaking in explanation of vote, Norway supported the objective of the resolution, but felt the text inappropriate; citing its 1981 initiative to organize conference of oil-producing and oil-exporting countries which had declared it their policy not to sell oil to South Africa, Norway said that the resolution interfered with the ongoing consultations regarding such a conference and prejudiced its outcome, especially as the text spoke of the illicit transport of oil to South Africa although there was no binding decision by the Security Council in that connection.

The Netherlands explained that its positive vote was, among other things, inspired by the recommendation in paragraph 1 that the Council consider mandatory sanctions; while it hoped that recommendations could be formulated on an oil embargo, it noted that supplies to South Africa could not be labelled illicit as long as they were not prohibited by the Council.

Ireland supported an oil embargo as a means of pressuring South Africa to abandon apartheid, but had reservations about paragraphs 2 and 3, which appeared to pre-empt consideration of an oil embargo by the Council.

Botswana said it was obliged to abstain because of its geopolitical circumstances. Malawi said it abstained because it had difficulties with some demands and language formulations.

The Assembly also called for an oil embargo in resolutions on related subjects. In resolution 38/39 D, it requested the Council to consider sanctions, including an embargo on supplying oil to South Africa and on all assistance to its oil industry. In resolution 38/50, it called on oil-producing and oil-exporting countries that had not done so to take measures against the oil companies concerned so as to terminate the supply of oil and oil products to South Africa.

Foreign investments and loans

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The flow of foreign capital into South Africa increased in 1982, according to the Special Committee against Apartheid. In its 1983 report to the Assembly,⁽¹⁾ the Committee described foreign investments in and loans to South Africa. It reported that in 1982 the inflow of foreign capital totalled $2,397 million, three times the amount in 1981. The net capital outflow during the first quarter of 1983 totalled $591 million, of which 42 per cent represented long-term capital and 58 per cent short-term capital. Approximately 59 per cent of the long-term capital inflow consisted of loans raised in the international financial markets by the South African Treasury, the Transport Services and the Department of Posts and Telecommunications; the rest consisted mostly of loans to public corporations and the private sector.

South African banks borrowed approximately $5,502 million from the international financial markets as of the end of March 1983, an increase of $2,174 million from March 1982, mainly in short-term trade finance and working capital loans from foreign banks and Euromarket institutions. Most of the recipients were domestic companies and South African subsidiaries of TNCs financing their imports or exports or utilizing foreign credit lines instead of domestic overdrafts for general cash. South African banks or South African subsidiaries of foreign banks most often acted as agents for short-term trade finance and working capital loans between the recipients and the financial institution abroad.

On 15 April, the Committee held a hearing of 16 United States legislators who played a role in the campaign against apartheid, in particular in legislative action against investments in South Africa.

The Committee, in its October Programme of Action,⁽²⁾ called on Governments to terminate all economic collaboration with South Africa. Specific measures included an end to loans, investments and technical assistance to that country and companies registered there, and an end to loans by banks or other financial institutions in their countries to South Africa or South African companies. Specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations were urged to contribute to the international campaign against apartheid by withholding facilities from, or investment of funds in, banks, financial institutions and corporations that gave loans to or invested in South Africa. Among its recommendations for public organizations' participation in the campaign, the Committee called for disinvestment from companies operating in South Africa and an end to loans to it. City and local authorities were urged to withdraw investments held by them in companies with interests in South Africa. Churches and religious organizations were urged to ensure that their institutions divested from corporations with interests in the country and withdrew accounts with banks collaborating with apartheid. The Committee said that the Secretary-General should withhold facilities from, or investment of funds in, banks, financial institutions and other corporations that gave loans to or invested in South Africa. With the assistance of the Centre against Apartheid, the Committee said it should promote a campaign against collaboration by banks and TNCs (see below, under WORK PROGRAMME OF THE COMMITTEE AGAINST APARTHEID).

The International Conference of Trade Unions on Sanctions and Other Actions against the Apartheid Régime in South Africa, in its declaration,(23) called on Governments to intensify anti-apartheid action in United Nations specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations to stop dealings with banks co-operating with South Africa. The Conference urged States to pass legislation to end all investment in South Africa, withdraw pension funds and other forms of public investment from banks and companies collaborating with it, put a halt to incentives for exports to South Africa, apply pressure on national and international institutions to end co-operation with South Africa on its overseas borrowing, and refuse to transfer pensions and other State-sponsored benefit schemes to those choosing to emigrate there. Employers' organizations and companies were urged to request foreign companies which had invested in South Africa to withdraw their investments and to refrain from any co-operation in the economic and military field. The Conference urged workers and their trade unions to press Governments to stop all kinds of aid to and investment in South Africa, and take industrial actions against TNCs (see below) investing there.

Action by the Conference against racial discrimination. The Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination(5) called on the Security Council to consider imposing mandatory sanctions against South Africa, including the cessation of foreign investments in and financial loans to it. This action was included in its Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1983-1993), approved by the General Assembly in resolution 38/14.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/39 I.

Investments in South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/69 H of 9 December 1982,

Taking note of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Convinced that a cessation of all new foreign investments in, and financial loans to, South Africa would constitute an important step in international action for the elimination of apartheid, as such investments and loans abet and encourage the apartheid policies of that country,

Welcoming the actions of those Governments that have taken legislative and other measures towards that end,

Noting with regret that the Security Council has not yet taken steps towards that end, as requested by the General Assembly in its resolutions 31/6 K of 9 November 1976, 32/105 O of 16 December 1977, 33/1983 O of 24 January 1979, 34/93 Q of 12 December 1979, 35/206 Q of 16 December 1980, 36/172 O of 17 December 1981 and 37/69 H of 9 December 1982,

Again urges the Security Council to consider the matter at an early date with a view to taking effective steps to achieve the cessation of further foreign investments in, and financial loans to, South Africa.

In explanation of vote, Botswana said it was obliged to abstain on account of its geopolitical circumstances. Malawi said it had difficulties with some demands or language formulations.

Ireland believed that the international community had a vital part to play by collectively selecting and implementing measures that would be effective in bringing pressure to bear on South Africa to abandon apartheid and, for that reason, it supported ceasing investments and financial loans. Likewise, Portugal felt the resolution would help eradicate apartheid.

The Netherlands said it intended to consider in what way investments by Dutch companies in South Africa could be influenced as effectively as possible.

The Assembly took similar action in resolution 38/39 D, in which it requested the Security Council to consider action towards sanctions against South Africa, including the prohibition of financial loans and new investments.

Transnational corporations

Action by the Committee against Apartheid. In its annual report to the General Assembly,⁽¹⁾ the Special Committee against Apartheid recommended that the Assembly request the Secretary-General to deny facilities to, and to refrain from any investments in, corporations operating in South Africa. The Committee welcomed the actions taken by States and organizations to deny co-operation to TNCs and financial institutions collaborating with apartheid and recommended further concerted measures.

The Committee's October Programme of Action⁽²⁾ included the recommendation that Governments take action, separately or collectively, against TNCs and financial institutions collaborating with South Africa. Specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations were urged to deny contracts or facilities to such TNCs and institutions. The Committee said public organizations should intensify the campaign to boycott major banks collaborating with South Africa and direct campaigns at particular companies whose collaboration with it was strategically important. Corporations and employers were urged to withdraw from commercial operations there, persuade employers' organizations to work for a policy of sanctions against South Africa, and implement the 1981 Declaration of ILO concerning the policy of apartheid in South Africa.⁽³⁶⁾ With the assistance of the Centre against Apartheid, the Committee said it should promote an international campaign against collaboration by TNCs with South Africa.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission. In July 1983, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights issued a report listing banks, TNCs and other firms assisting South Africa.⁽³⁷⁾ Prepared by Special Rapporteur Ahmed Mohamed Khalifa (Egypt), the list updated information in his June 1982 report.⁽³⁸⁾

The Commission on Human Rights, in a resolution of 18 February⁽³⁰⁾ on the consequences for human rights of assistance given to colonial and racist regimes in southern Africa (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII), expressed appreciation to the Special Rapporteur for his 1982 report and called for its wide publicity. The Commission welcomed the Sub-Commission's call for annual updating of the list.⁽³⁸⁾ By decision 1982/137 of 27 May, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's action.

In a resolution of 31 August,⁽³⁹⁾ the Sub-Commission invited the Special Rapporteur to continue to update the list, and the volume and nature of assistance. The Secretary-General was requested to assist and publicize the report.

In another 18 February resolution,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Commission requested, as it had in 1982,⁽³⁸⁾ the Group of Three Commission members set up under the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid⁽⁴¹⁾ to examine whether the actions of TNCs which operated in South Africa came under the definition of the crime of apartheid, and whether legal action could be taken under the Convention (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII).

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to an October 1982 request by the Economic and Social Council,⁽⁴²⁾ the Secretary-General reported on TNC policies and practices regarding their activities in South Africa and Namibia.⁽⁴³⁾ The May 1983 report included an annex listing TNCs which operated in strategic sectors of the southern African economy, and of those that had taken measures to terminate their activities in such sectors. It examined investment policies and practices of TNCs in South Africa, their employment practices there, the involvement of TNCs in some strategic sectors of the South African economy, and recent developments regarding TNCs in Namibia. The report was based on information obtained from a questionnaire sent to 303 TNCs with approximately 1,000 affiliates in South Africa and Namibia, selected for the importance of their operations in the area or because they were operating in strategic sectors.

According to the report, foreign involvement in South Africa increased substantially in 1980 and 1981. Many TNCs expanded their activities owing to the strong economic growth experienced by the country and the investment programmes of the Government. Although a few companies had terminated their activities in South Africa, the general trend was not towards divestment. Some TNCs had improved employment practices in South Africa, but progress had not been sufficient to effect any major change in the working conditions of the black population. One of the major effects of TNC activities in South Africa was through the technology those companies supplied, in particular in strategic areas such as the electronics, computer, chemical and energy sectors. The involvement of TNCs in such sectors was helpful in building up the economic and military strength of the country.

The Secretary-General's report was taken note of by the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its June 1983 session.⁽⁴⁴⁾

Action by the Conference against racial discrimination. The Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, in its Programme of Action(5) approved by the General Assembly in resolution 38/14, called on States that had not done so to discourage or prevent all business enterprises, including TNCs, from collaborating with South Africa, as such collaboration might contribute towards the continuance of apartheid.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In 1983, the Economic and Social Council took three separate actions concerning TNC activities in South Africa and Namibia.

Two of these actions (decision 1983/104 and resolution 1983/75) related to preparations for the public hearings on those activities to be held by the Commission in 1985.

In February, the Council adopted decision 1983/104 without vote.

Ad Hoc Committee on the Preparations for the Public Hearings on the Activities of Transnational Corporations in South Africa

At its 2nd plenary meeting, on 4 February 1983, the Council, recalling its resolution 1982/70 of 27 October 1982;

- (a) Decided that the membership of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Preparations for the Public Hearings on the Activities of Transnational Corporations in South Africa shall include one member from each of the regional groups;
- (b) Authorized its President to appoint the members of the Ad Hoc Committee on the recommendation of each regional group concerning its representation.

Organization of public hearings on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions on the activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa, in particular resolution 1981/86 of 2 November 1981, in which it called for the organization of public hearings on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia,

Recalling also its resolution 1982/70 of 27 October 1982, according to which public hearings on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia, pursuant to Council resolution 1981/86, shall be conducted by the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its tenth session, which shall, as necessary, be extended for a period of one week for that purpose,

Urges regional groups to nominate their representatives to the ad hoc committee established under Council resolution 1982/70, unless they have already done so, to enable it to start work on the organization of the public hearings at the earliest possible time, but not later than the end of the year 1983, and to report to the Commission at its tenth session, so that it may conduct public hearings at its eleventh session.

Also on 29 July, the Council adopted by vote resolution 1983/74 on the recommendation of its First Committee. Activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia and collaboration of such corporations with the racist minority régime in South Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Reaffirming previous resolutions on the activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa and the collaboration of such corporations with the racist minority régime in South Africa,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the policies and practices of transnational corporations regarding their activities in South Africa and Namibia, prepared pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1982/69 of 27 October 1982,

Considering that the persistent operations of transnational corporations in Namibia in contravention of various United Nations resolutions continue to reinforce the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa and to pose a serious threat to the future political and economic independence of Namibia,

Considering that the role of transnational corporations in the strategic sectors, including military and nuclear sectors of the South African economy, has persisted in violation of United Nations resolutions,

Considering also that the continued collaboration of transnational corporations with the racist minority regime in South Africa has caused widespread concern in recent years among national and local legislators, non-governmental organizations, trade unions, academic institutions and numerous other groups,

Affirming the need for action at the international level by intergovernmental organizations in order to complement national measures,

1. Takes with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on the policies and practices of transnational corporations regarding their activities in South Africa and Namibia, prepared pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1982/69;

2. Commends those groups, bodies and institutions that have exerted pressure on transnational corporations to terminate their investments in South Africa and other forms of collaboration with the racist minority régime, and calls upon such organizations to intensify their efforts in those areas;

3. Welcomes as a positive step the policies of Governments directed towards bringing to an end the activities of their transnational corporations in southern Africa;

4. Condemns the racist minority régime in South Africa for its perpetuation of the inhuman system of apartheid and the illegal occupation of Namibia;

7. Calls upon all countries concerned to re-examine their relations with the transnational corporations operating in their territories which collaborate with the racist minority régime in South Africa;

8. Calls upon all anti-apartheid movements, religious institutions and bodies, trade unions, universities and other institutions that are shareholders of transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia to contribute to the efforts of the international community to eradicate apartheid by withdrawing their shareholdings in such transnational corporations;

9. Urges all transnational corporations to comply fully with the relevant United Nations resolutions by terminating all further investments in South Africa and Namibia and by ending their collaboration with the racist minority régime;

10. Further calls upon all States Members of the United Nations and all transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia to co-operate with the Secretary-General and the Commission on Transnational Corporations in organizing public hearings on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia;

11. Reaffirming Security Council resolution 301(1971) of 20 October 1971, in which the Council called upon States to abstain from entering into economic relations with South Africa in respect of Namibia and declared that rights, titles or contracts granted to individuals or corporations by South Africa after the termination of the mandate were not subject to protection or espousal by their States against the claims of a future lawful Government of Namibia;

12. Reaffirms that the code of conduct on transnational corporations should include effective measures against the collaboration of transnational corporations with the racist minority régime in southern Africa;

(d) To expand the annex to the report of the Secretary-General referred to in paragraph 1 above to include all transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda for the tenth session of the Commission an item entitled "Responsibilities of home countries with respect to the transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia in violation of the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations".

Meeting number. ESC plenary 41.

Both July texts originated in the Commission on TNCs, where they were sponsored by Bangladesh, on behalf of the members of the Group of 77 which were Commission members. The Commission adopted them on 29 June.

In the First Committee, the United Kingdom requested a separate vote on paragraph 14, which was retained by 31 votes to 4, with 9 abstentions. The Council also held a separate vote on paragraph 14, retaining it by 35 votes to 4, with 10 abstentions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 38/39 A of 5 December, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to deny facilities to, and to refrain from any investment in, corporations operating in South Africa.

The Assembly, in resolution 38/50 of 7 December, took note of the register indicating profits that TNCs derived from their activities in colonial Territories, prepared by the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, and requested the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to take due account of the register in connection with its consideration of related items.

IMF relations with South Africa

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report to the General Assembly,⁽¹⁾ described recent developments in relations between the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and South Africa. Noting a fall in the volume of imports to South Africa and the improvement in gold prices in July 1982, reducing the deficit in the balance-of-payments account, the Committee said that the turn-around in the balance of payments began almost immediately after the formal approval of South Africa's application for a 1.2 billion rand ($1.1 billion) loan from IMF in November 1982.⁽⁴⁵⁾ The interest rates on IMF loans were much lower than those on private loans. Despite the protest of the overwhelming majority of United Nations Member States, a loan of 1 billion special drawing rights (SDR) had been approved as a result of the weighted voting system of IMF, thus enabling South Africa to repay some private short-term foreign credits as well as to increase its foreign exchange reserves.

As a result of balance-of-payments deficits in 1981 and during the first three quarters of 1982, South Africa's short-term liabilities to the international financial markets totalled R 3.5 billion as of the end of March 1983. It was expected that South Africa would again use IMF stand-by financial facilities during 1983 to decrease a portion of its short-term foreign financial liabilities.

The Committee expressed concern over IMF assistance to that country despite repeated requests by the Assembly to end such aid. It suggested that the Assembly request the Secretary-General to enter into urgent consultations with IMF in order to secure its full co-operation in action against apartheid in accordance with Assembly resolutions.

In its October 1983 Programme of Action against Apartheid,⁽²⁾ the Committee stated that IMF should refrain from granting credits to South Africa and public organizations should campaign and press Governments for an end to IMF loans to that country.

Action of the Commission on Human Rights. The Commission on Human Rights, in a resolution of 18 February⁽³⁰⁾ on the consequences for human rights of assistance to colonial and racist regimes in southern Africa (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII), requested specialized agencies, particularly IMF and the World Bank, to refrain from granting loans to South Africa.

Action of the Conference for Namibia's independence. The International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence, in its Paris Declaration on Namibia,⁽¹⁴⁾ noted with concern the continued assistance to South Africa by certain international organizations, as exemplified by the IMF loan of SDR 1. billion. The Conference stated that such assistance did not contribute to the welfare of the vast majority of the South African people, but boosted the military capability of the regime and enabled it to continue suppression of the Namibian people and to commit aggression against its neighbours. The Conference called on IMF to terminate co-operation with and assistance to South Africa and urged its States members to take action towards that end.

Action by the Conference against racial discrimination. The Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination urged the World Bank and IMF, as well as similar institutions, to refrain from extending any credits to South Africa. This action was included in its Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1983-1993),⁽⁵⁾ approved by the General Assembly in resolution 38/14.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In resolution 1983/42 of 25 July, the Economic and Social Council deeply deplored the persistent collaboration of IMF with South Africa, in disregard of repeated General Assembly resolutions to the contrary, and called on IMF to put an end to such collaboration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In several 1983 resolutions, the General Assembly also called for an end to IMF relations with South, Africa.

In resolution 38/36 A, it deeply deplored the continued collaboration of IMF with South Africa in disregard of an October 1982 Assembly resolution,⁽⁴⁶⁾ and called on IMF to put an end to such collaboration. In resolution 38/39 A, it called on IMF to terminate credits or other assistance and requested the Secretary-General to enter into consultations: with IMF to secure its co-operation in action against apartheid.

In resolution 38/51, the Assembly regretted that the World Bank and IMF continued to maintain links with South Africa, as exemplified by that country's membership in both, and expressed the view that the two agencies should terminate all links with that Government. Condemning the persistent collaboration between IMF and South Africa, particularly the granting of the November 1982 loan, the Assembly called on IMF to rescind it. The Assembly commended those non-governmental organizations which mobilized public opinion against the IMF assistance to South Africa and called for redoubled efforts by all non-governmental organizations in that respect. The governing bodies of the World Bank and IMF were urged to formulate programmes beneficial to the peoples of colonial Territories, particularly Namibia. The Assembly urged IMF to discuss its relationship with South Africa at its annual meeting in September 1984 and recommended sending a three-member mission to IMF.

Israel-South Africa relations

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The International Conference on the Alliance between South Africa and Israel, held at Vienna, Austria, from 11 to 13 July 1983, was organized by the Special Committee against Apartheid, in cooperation with the Afro-Asian Peoples' Solidarity Organization, the Organization of African Trade Union Unity and the World Peace Council, in response to a December 1982 General Assembly request that the Committee publicize information on relations between Israel and South Africa.(47)

In the Declaration included in its report(48) and transmitted by the Acting Chairman of the Committee to the Secretary-General,(49) the Conference strongly condemned Israel for its collaboration with South Africa, especially in the military and nuclear fields (see above), in defiance of United Nations resolutions. Evidence of Israeli-South African collaboration had increased, the Conference said, and the 1963 declaration of the Organization of African Unity (OAU)(50) that Africa remain a denuclearized zone had been undermined by the development of South Africa's nuclear-weapon capability. The nuclear capabilities of both South Africa and Israel posed an enormous danger to regional and world peace.

The Conference also drew attention to the collaboration by Israel with South Africa in the conventional military field. It expressed concern over the relations of Chile, Paraguay and Uruguay with South Africa, especially in the military field, as well as over any moves for a South Atlantic military pact with the participation of South Africa.

Expressing regret at the opposition of several Western Powers to condemning collaboration by Israel with South Africa, the Conference said it considered that United States policies with regard to those two countries represented support for them against the aspirations of African States to keep the continent free from nuclear weapons, to complete the process of decolonization and to maintain regional peace and security. It urged Governments and organizations to condemn the collaboration between Israel and South Africa and exercise their influence in order to ensure that Israel desist from such collaboration. The Conference expressed the hope that no State would resume relations with Israel so long as it continued its collaboration with South Africa and did not implement United Nations resolutions in that regard.

The Conference emphasized the importance of disseminating all relevant information, especially in the Western countries, in view of the deceitful propaganda by Israel and South Africa on their collaboration and of the attitude of the United States and several other Western countries. The Committee against Apartheid was requested to continue monitoring developments in Israeli-South African relations and overseeing implementation of specific requests of the Conference.

The Committee, in its annual report to the Assembly,(1) agreed that Israel had blatantly continued, in contempt of the United Nations, to collaborate with South Africa, especially in the military and nuclear fields. That collaboration had become a serious challenge to the international community.

In September, the Committee transmitted a special report to the Assembly on recent developments concerning relations between the two countries,(3) stating that there was increasing evidence of extensive collaboration between them in the military and nuclear fields, as reported by Western, Israeli and South African media. Regular exchanges of visits between the finance and economic ministers of Israel and South Africa had expanded their economic links. On 3 March, the two countries signed an agreement designed to strengthen trade and investment ties and to provide for a freer flow of currency between them. According to the report, Israeli exports to South Africa increased from $80.75 million in 1980 to $102.93 million in 1981, but Israeli imports from South Africa decreased from $134.43 million in 1980 to $103.17 million in 1981 (excluding military sales, oil, gold and diamonds).

Collaboration had also continued in cultural, academic, scientific, sporting and other fields. Further, there were reports of contacts between Israeli officials and representatives of the so-called independent bantustans of Ciskei and Bophuthatswana.

The Committee concluded that the continued collaboration between Israel and South Africa posed grave dangers to international peace and security. It recommended that the Assembly endorse the Declaration of the Conference and urge Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to end that collaboration. Noting with regret that a number of Western countries had continued to oppose any condemnation of the collaboration, and that the United States had provided encouragement to Israel in its defiance of the United Nations, the Committee hoped that those Governments would reassess their positions and persuade Israel to disengage from racist oppression in South Africa. The Committee recommended maximum publicity of the collaboration in support of efforts to end it.

Communications. During 1983, Israel addressed four letters to the Secretary-General protesting United Nations action in regard to the International Conference on the Alliance between South Africa and Israel.

On 25 May,(51) Israel said that the Special Committee against Apartheid had not been authorized to organize the Conference and it sought assurances that the event was not a United Nations conference and that United Nations funds, facilities and services would not be misused in connection with it. Again requesting such assurances on 29 June,(52) Israel asked what financial contribution, if any, would be made by the three non-governmental organizations sponsoring the Conference and what expenses would be incurred by the United Nations. On 13 September,(53) Israel said the Conference had been turned into another manifestation of the anti-Israel campaign waged in and through the United Nations by Israel's enemies and their supporters; accordingly, Israel would withhold from its contributions to the United Nations the appropriate amount relative to the expenses incurred by the Conference, and proportionate to Israel's share within the overall contributions of Member States to the Organization. Protesting on 2 November(54) the United Nations publication of the Conference's Declaration, Israel said that the Organization, by disseminating that document, had misused international funds, further compromised the integrity of the Secretariat and exposed the United Nations as a whole to well-justified criticism.

Action by the Conference against racial discrimination. The Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,(5) in its Declaration, condemned any form of co-operation with South Africa, notably the increasing relations between Israel and South Africa, in particular those in the economic and military fields, and warned against co-operation between them in the nuclear field. It deplored the expansion of those relations when the international community was exerting efforts towards isolating South Africa completely. The Conference viewed that co-operation as a hostile and deliberate act against the oppressed people of South Africa, as well as defiance of United Nations resolutions and nations' efforts to ensure peace and freedom in southern Africa. In addition, the Conference noted with concern Israeli propaganda against the United Nations and against Governments opposed to apartheid.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 5 December, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/39 F.

Relations between Israel and South Africa

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions on relations between Israel and South Africa,

Having considered the special report of the Special Committee against Apartheid on recent developments concerning relations between Israel and South Africa,

Taking note of the Declaration of the International Conference on the Alliance between South Africa and Israel and the Declaration of the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Alarmed at the increasing collaboration by Israel with the racist régime of South Africa, especially in the military and nuclear fields, in defiance of resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council,

Considering that such collaboration is a serious hindrance to international action for the eradication of apartheid, an encouragement to the racist régime of South Africa to persist in its criminal policy of apartheid and a hostile act against the oppressed people of South Africa and the entire African continent, and constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

1. Again strongly condemns the continuing and increasing collaboration by Israel with the racist régime of South Africa, especially in the military and nuclear fields;

2. Demands that Israel desist from and terminate forthwith all forms of collaboration with South Africa, particularly in the military and nuclear fields, and abide scrupulously by the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council;

3. Calls upon all Governments and organizations to exert their influence to persuade Israel to desist from such collaboration and abide by the resolutions of the General Assembly;

4. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid to publicize, as widely as possible, information on the relations between Israel and South Africa and especially the Declaration of the International Conference on the Alliance between South Africa and Israel;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to render, through the Department of Public Information and the Centre against Apartheid of the Secretariat, all possible assistance to the Special Committee in disseminating information relating to the collaboration between Israel and South Africa;

5. Further requests the Special Committee to keep the matter under constant review and to report to the General Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate.

Speaking in explanation of its refusal to participate in the voting on the resolutions on South Africa's apartheid policies, Israel stressed that it rejected any form of racial discrimination but said that the sponsors of some of the texts, particularly of resolution 38/39 F, had relied on unsubstantiated allegations about Israel. In so doing, they sought to divert attention from the real problems of apartheid, thus undermining the purpose of the debate and subverting genuine concern for the victims of racial prejudice. The United Nations bodies established to confront the apartheid problem had instead abused their responsibilities and were submitting to external interests which pursued their own partisan goals. Israel added that it had again been singled out in the apartheid debate as the only country for specific condemnation, based on falsehoods.

Burma, Canada, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Ireland, Panama and the United Kingdom also expressed reservations about the selective singling out of individual countries in the resolution. The Dominican Republic said that this practice only introduced extraneous factors which would work against the aims of the text.

Malawi and the United Kingdom had problems with some language formulations. Canada said it opposed those recommendations which went beyond the competence of the Assembly.

The Assembly took related action in other 1983 resolutions. In resolution 38/17, it took note of the Declaration of the International Conference on the Alliance between South Africa and Israel. The Assembly, in resolution 38/39 A, endorsed the annual report of the Committee against Apartheid⁽¹⁾ and its special report on recent developments concerning relations between Israel and South Africa.⁽³⁾ In resolution 38/180 D, it strongly condemned the continuing and increasing collaboration between the two countries, especially in the economic, military and nuclear fields, which, it said, constituted a hostile act against the African and Arab States and enabled Israel to enhance its nuclear capabilities, thus subjecting the States of the region to nuclear blackmail. The Assembly, in resolution 38/69, requested the Secretary-General to continue to follow closely the nuclear and military collaboration between Israel and South Africa.

Situation in South Africa

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid described the current situation in South Africa in its 1983 report to the Assembly. (1) According to the report, South Africa had proceeded, despite international condemnation, to proclaim the so-called independence of bantustans-reserves into which African people were forcibly confined on a so-called tribal basis-in an effort to dispossess the African majority and deprive it of citizenship. Since 1976, four bantustans, with a total population of over 8 million blacks, had been established, and South Africa had announced its intention to create another in KwaNdebele in 1984. The Committee agreed with the Director-General of the International Labour Office (the secretariat of ILO), who had pointed out in his annual report on the effect of apartheid on labour and employment that the objective of the regime was to create a South Africa with no black citizens.

Racist oppression and exploitation continued unabated behind a smoke-screen of so-called reforms that were in fact manoeuvres to bolster the system, the Committee said. Leaders of black workers' groups and unions had been imprisoned under arbitrary laws. Arrests of Africans under the "pass laws" had increased and the forcible uprooting of black communities continued. Two leaders of African communities were killed by police in April for leading non-violent protests against the eviction of African communities, and several persons died in detention during the year.

The Committee noted the advance of national mobilization for unity and freedom in South Africa, encompassing trade unions, students and youth, religious bodies, community organizations and other segments of the population, despite indiscriminate killing and repression by the regime. It said that the armed struggle by the national liberation movement had advanced, especially under the leadership of ANC. The armed struggle enjoyed the support of the masses of people despite the propaganda of the Government. When the national liberation movement was obliged to resort to armed struggle, the Committee said, it took care to avoid loss of innocent lives, in contrast with the actions of the regime.

In the Committee's view, it was essential that the international community warn South Africa of the serious consequences of its policy and urge it to seek a peaceful solution in accordance with United Nations resolutions, through genuine negotiations with the leaders of the national liberation movement for the elimination of apartheid and racism and the establishment of a democratic State. The Committee called for a commitment to universal suffrage in an undivided South Africa and an unconditional amnesty for political prisoners, exiles and combatants, as well as the abrogation of bans on political organizations, so as to facilitate such negotiations.

It also considered it essential that increasing attention be given to solidarity with the struggles of people in South Africa against all manifestations of apartheid and to the denunciation of the repression of the régime. In that connection, it drew particular attention to the courage and determination demonstrated by the black workers in independent trade unions and to the repression against them. In its October Programme of Action,(2) the Committee urged trade unions to demonstrate support for black workers' unions in South Africa by mobilizing solidarity with their struggles, refusing to load or unload ships and planes, exposing collaboration between their employers and South Africa and taking industrial action to stop it, refusing to work on military or nuclear projects, ensuring that trade union and pension funds were not invested in companies with South African subsidiaries, and taking disciplinary measures against trade unionists who emigrated to South Africa, including the withdrawal of their union membership cards.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights and its subsidiary bodies. The Commission on Human Rights also considered the human rights situation in South Africa (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII). In a resolution of 15 February on the right to self-determination,(19) the Commission reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movements by all available means, including armed struggle, for the elimination of apartheid and the exercise of the right of self-determination. It condemned the régime for its repression and indiscriminate torture and killing of opponents of apartheid, including workers and schoolchildren, and the imposition of death sentences on freedom fighters. It also condemned the "bantustanization" policy as contrary to the principle of self-determination. In an 18 February resolution on violations of human rights in southern Africa,(55) the Commission affirmed that any constitutional arrangement in South Africa based on racial segregation constituted a denial of the political rights of the black population. It demanded that South Africa put an end to human rights violations, enact adequate legislation to protect the rights of working children, and cease its military attacks against neighbouring countries. The Commission, in another 18 February resolution,(40) took note of the January report(56) of its Group of Three established under the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;(41) urged States to accede to the Convention; called on States parties to the Convention to strengthen their co-operation at the national and international level in order to implement decisions of the Security Council and other United Nations bodies with a view to the prevention, suppression and punishment of the crime of apartheid; and noted the importance of measures to be taken by States parties in education for fuller implementation of the Convention.

The Commission's Group of Three and its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa considered various aspects of the situation in South Africa. The former Group (Geneva, 24-28 January) reviewed periodic reports on compliance with the Convention submitted by States parties.(56) The Ad Hoc Working Group (Geneva, 3-12 January) issued a study of violations of human rights in South Africa and Namibia and the current situation there, including information on capital punishment, treatment of political prisoners, conditions of detainees, torture, forced removals of populations, the bantustan policy, conditions of black workers, denial of trade union rights, and student movements.(57) Also in January, that Working Group issued a report on apartheid as a collective form of slavery.(58)

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, by a resolution of 5 September,(59) recommended that the Commission recognize apartheid as a slavery-like practice and endorse the call for mandatory economic sanctions against South Africa (see above).

In 1983, both the Commission and the Economic and Social Council took action on trade union rights in South Africa (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII). In a resolution of 18 February(55) the Commission, expressing concern regarding infringements of trade union rights and in particular the indiscriminate harassment, arrest and detention of black trade union leaders, demanded that South Africa respect international standards concerning those rights.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1983/156 of 27 May, noting that the consent of South Africa had been obtained, decided, in conformity with a 1950 Council resolution,(60) to transmit to the Fact-Finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association of ILO the allegations of infringements of trade union rights in South Africa submitted by the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions on 12 February 1982 and by the World Federation of Trade Unions on 13 July 1982, together with the text of the consent of South Africa. The Council also decided that the Commission's findings should be transmitted to the Council as soon as possible. By another decision (1983/157) of 27 May, the Council took note of the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts of the Commission on Human Rights on allegations regarding infringements of trade union rights in South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Various aspects of the situation in South Africa were dealt with by the General Assembly in 1983.

In resolution 38/39 A, the Assembly again proclaimed that the national liberation movements of South Africa were the authentic representatives of the people in their just struggle for national liberation and recognized the right of the oppressed people and those movements to resort to all means at their disposal, including armed struggle, in their resistance to the illegitimate racist minority régime. The Assembly demanded that South Africa: release persons imprisoned or restricted for their opposition to apartheid; allow those who had been exiled for their opposition to return; rescind bans on political and other organizations and media opposed to apartheid; and terminate political trials and repressive measures against opponents of apartheid. The Assembly commended the people of South Africa and their national liberation movements for the advance in their struggle for national liberation, also commending them, and particularly ANC, for intensifying the armed struggle. It condemned as an international crime the policy of "bantustanization" designed to dispossess the African majority of its inalienable rights and to deprive it of citizenship, as well as the forced removal of black people.

In a related area, the Assembly, in resolution 38/17, rejected South Africa's so-called reforms, especially the limited parliamentary representation for Coloured people and Asians designed to undermine the unity of the oppressed people of South Africa and buttress the apartheid system, and condemned the increasingly widespread massacres of innocent and defenceless people, including women and children, by the régime.

The Assembly, by resolution 38/19, expressed appreciation of the constructive role played by the Group of Three of the Commission on Human Rights in analysing the periodic reports of States and in publicizing the experience gained in the international struggle against apartheid.

In resolution 38/21, it condemned apartheid in South Africa and Namibia as the most abhorrent form of racial discrimination and urged Member States to adopt effective political, economic and other measures in order to secure the elimination of that policy and to achieve the implementation of United Nations resolutions.

Political prisoners and other detained persons

Action by the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission. Two 1983 resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights dealt with political prisoners in South Africa (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII). On 15 February,(19) the Commission demanded that South Africa immediately release all people detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and independence, and demanded full respect for their fundamental rights and the observance of article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,(61) under which no one should be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment. The Commission, on 18 February,(55) expressed indignation at the scale and variety of human rights violations in South Africa, in particular the increase in sentences and executions, the torture of political activists during interrogation, the ill-treatment of captured freedom fighters and other detainees, and the deaths of detainees in South African prisons under suspicious circumstances. It requested the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, to continue investigating cases of torture, ill-treatment and deaths of detainees in South Africa.

In a 5 September resolution,(62) the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities condemned South Africa's continuing campaign of repressions, detentions and persecution of those opposing apartheid and fighting for the establishment of a just, non-racial democratic system. In particular, it condemned the execution in June 1983 of three South African militants (see below) as well as the political trials and imprisonment of political prisoners. The Sub-Commission called on the Commission to investigate the situation and seek action by the General Assembly, and it reaffirmed its support for the world campaign by the Committee against Apartheid to secure the release of political prisoners in South Africa and Namibia.

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid continued to promote the campaign for the release of political prisoners in South Africa and for an end to repression against apartheid opponents.(1) The campaign included support for a declaration initiated by Archbishop Trevor Huddleston, President of the British Anti-Apartheid Movement, for the release of Nelson Mandela, the anti-apartheid leader serving a life sentence since 1964. The declaration had been signed by over 4,000 leaders of political parties, trade unions, religious bodies, members of Parliament and other leaders of public opinion in many countries. At the proposal of the Chairman of its Task Force on Political Prisoners, the Committee discussed a report on torture and ill-treatment of detainees by South Africa in 1982 (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII). In statements of 13 January and 9 February 1983, the Chairman of the Committee drew the attention of the international community to trials under South African security laws against members of the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC). On 31 May, he addressed a cable to the President of the International Red Cross expressing concern over reports on the conditions under which Mr. Mandela, Walter Sisulu and their colleagues were being kept in the Pollsmoor prison of South Africa.

The Committee recommended that the General Assembly invite Governments, organizations and institutions to lend greater support for the campaign to obtain the release of all political prisoners. It believed that the Assembly and the Security Council should urgently consider measures to prevent further executions of patriots in South Africa and to ensure that captured freedom fighters were accorded prisoner-of-war status under the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol I of 1977.

In its October Programme of Action against Apartheid,(2) the Committee called on Governments to act to achieve the release of political prisoners and an end to repression. It recommended that they: denounce the repression of apartheid opponents, including torture and ill-treatment of political prisoners, and demand an end to repression and an amnesty to those imprisoned, restricted or exiled for their opposition to apartheid; condemn the execution of freedom fighters and political prisoners, and exert all influence to prevent such executions; demand that South Africa grant prisoner-of-war status to captured freedom fighters in accordance with the Additional Protocol I; demand that South Africa abrogate bans imposed on organizations and the media for their opposition to apartheid; honour the leaders of the struggle against apartheid imprisoned by South Africa, and publicize their lives; and promote the campaign for the release of South African political prisoners.

The Committee called on public organizations to intensify the campaign for the release of those political prisoners and to educate public opinion about South Africa's repression of apartheid opponents. Suggested activities included: urging Governments to intervene to secure the release of Nelson Mandela and all political prisoners; giving special attention to the six PAC prisoners sentenced in 1963 and to women and juvenile prisoners; acting to stop the execution of captured freedom fighters and to ensure that all such combatants were granted prisoner-of-war status; organizing protests against the inhuman treatment of detainees, including the use of torture resulting in death; and assisting the victims of South Africa's laws by contributing to the International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa.

The Committee, with the assistance of the Centre against Apartheid, pledged to take measures to promote action against apartheid by Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, including action for the unconditional release of South African political prisoners.

On 11 October, the Committee held two meetings in observance of the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners.

Action by the Conference against racial discrimination. In a resolution of 12 August,(63) the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination demanded the immediate and unconditional release of Mr. Mandela and all other South African and Namibian political prisoners. It also expressed its solidarity with Mr. Mandela and the national liberation movements of South Africa and Namibia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly took similar action on 5 December in resolution 38/39 A, demanding that South Africa release persons imprisoned or restricted for their opposition to apartheid and reaffirmed that freedom fighters of South Africa should be treated as prisoners of war in accordance with Additional Protocol I to the 1949 Geneva Conventions.

Capital punishment of ANC members

On 7 June 1983, the Security Council, having been alerted to the impending execution of three members of the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC), called on the South African authorities to commute the death sentences. Despite the appeal, the three men were executed on 9 June. Three other ANC members sentenced to death remained in South African prisons. The General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Special Committee against Apartheid led international protests against South Africa's action.

Communications (February/March). In a letter to the Secretary-General of 22 February,(64) the United States, in response to a December 1982 Security Council resolution(65) urging States to use their influence to save the lives of the six political prisoners sentenced to death in South Africa in 1982, reported that it had communicated to that country its concern regarding their lives.

The Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid, on 1 March,(66) forwarded to the Secretary-General a letter of 28 January from the attorneys of three of the prisoners, Thelle Simon Mogoerane, Jerry Semano Mosololi and Marcus Thabo Motaung, who had been charged with high treason by the South African Supreme Court and sentenced to death. The attorneys, refuting charges contained in a letter of 19 October 1982(67) from South Africa concerning the three men, stated that the information about their trials contained in the South African letter was erroneous and misleading.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. The Commission on Human Rights, in a resolution of 18 February on human rights violations in southern Africa,(55) appealed to the international community to undertake urgent action to save the lives of Bobby Tsotsobe, Johannes Shabangu, David Moise, Mr. Mosololi, Mr. Mogoerane, and Mr. Motaung, sentenced to death in 1982 as a result of their opposition to apartheid.

After three of those sentences were carried out in June, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on 5 September condemned those executions (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

In a letter to the President of the Security Council dated 6 June, (68) Morocco, as Chairman of the African Group, called the Council's attention to the confirmation that day by South Africa of the death sentence on the three ANC members to be carried out three days later, despite the Council's December 1982 appeal for clemency.(65) Morocco called for urgent Council action to save their lives.

Meeting on 7 June, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 533(1983), which had been prepared during consultations.

The Security Council,

Having considered the question of the death sentences passed on 6 August 1982 in South Africa on Mr. Thelle Simon Mogoerane, Mr. Jerry Semano Mosololi and Mr. Marcus Thabo Motaung, members of the African National Congress of South Africa,

Recalling its statement of 4 October 1982 as well as its resolution 525(1982) appealing for executive clemency in this case,

Gravely concerned over the decision of the South African authorities on 6 June 1983 to refuse executive clemency in respect of the three men,

Conscious that the carrying out of the death sentences will aggravate the situation in South Africa,

1. Calls upon the South African authorities to commute the death sentences imposed on the three men;

2. Urges all States and organizations to use their influence and to take urgent measures, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations, the resolutions of the Security Council and relevant international instruments, to save the lives of the three men.

Security Council resolution 533(1983)

7 June 1983 Meeting 2452 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/15815).

Meeting number. SC 2452.

Following the execution of the three ANC members on 9 June, the Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid issued a statement expressing the deepest anguish and indignation and describing the execution as "an international crime". In its annual report to the Assembly and the Council,(1) the Committee stated that the execution was carried out in defiance of appeals by the Assembly, the Council and Governments, organizations and leaders, including leaders of Western Governments which maintained cordial relations with South Africa.

Further communication (June). In June, seven countries protested the death sentences, in communications to either the President of the Security Council or the Secretary-General. India, on 8 June,(69) transmitted a statement issued that day by its Prime Minister appealing for the commutation of the death sentences of the three ANC members and affirming India's support for their cause. Spain made a similar appeal on 9 June,(70) transmitting a telegram of 8 June from its Minister for External Affairs, who requested the Foreign Minister of South Africa to intervene with the South African President so that, for humanitarian reasons, clemency would be extended.

Five countries protested after South Africa carried out the sentences. On 13 June,(71) Viet Nam forwarded a message of 12 June from its Foreign Minister, stating that the executions had aggravated the situation in South Africa, ran counter to the fundamental national rights of the South African people, and violated principles of international law. Brazil sent a telegram on 13 June(72) expressing its repudiation and rejection of South Africa's action. Also on 13 June, (73) Pakistan forwarded a Government statement of 11 June, expressing its anguish and outrage at the action, which it said demonstrated the barbarous and inhuman nature of South Africa's policies, and calling for international support of the South African people's freedom struggle.

The Bahamas, on 30 June(74) forwarded a letter from its Foreign Minister stating that the execution was a calculated act by South Africa against its citizens who had turned to active resistance in response to its inhumanities and that, by carrying it out, South Africa had again demonstrated its disdain for the sensitivities of the international community. On 28 June,(75) Iraq transmitted a letter of 27 June from its Foreign Minister, who protested and condemned the death sentences as contrary to elementary human principles and customs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 38/17 of 22 November, expressing its indignation at the callous murder of the three ANC freedom fighters, said South Africa had committed the crime with flagrant indifference despite various appeals by the international community, thereby defying the Security Council.

South African Constitution

In 1983, the South African Government proposed changes in its Constitution to expand representation in its Parliament to certain racial groups, but not to the black majority. Despite the protest of the General Assembly, South Africa adopted the new Constitution.

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report to the Assembly,⁽¹⁾ said the proposed constitutional changes were being propagated by the apartheid régime as reforms. Those changes, offering the Coloureds (persons of mixed race) and Asians (mostly of Indian descent) limited representation in the Parliament, were introduced in that body in May for debate. They envisaged a three-chamber parliament formed by whites, Coloureds and people of Asian origin, but no representation for the African majority. Under the new structure, whites would continue to dominate. The Committee said that the changes were in fact devised to entrench apartheid and perpetuate white domination. They had been categorically rejected by Africans as well as by the majority of Coloureds and Asians because they were designed to divide the black people, stifle their political aspirations, conscript Coloureds and Asians into the army, entrench apartheid and prolong white domination. The so-called reforms were also rejected by the Opposition Progressive Federal Party. They had also been rejected, although for different reasons, by two far-right Afrikaner parties.

In January, over 300 delegates representing trade-union, civic, student and other organizations met to establish the United Democratic Front and organize opposition to the proposed new system under which, they believed, Coloureds and Asians were meant to become junior partners in apartheid and Africans would be divided into designated rural and urban areas so that their movement could be controlled by the Government. The delegates adopted a declaration pledging to fight against the proposals.

At a meeting at Hammanskraal on 11 and 12 June, the National Forum Conference, representing a wide spectrum of black leaders, also rejected the constitutional proposals. Opposition was further expressed at the launching of the United Democratic Front in Cape Town on 21 August. Peaceful demonstrations by blacks in August and September were confronted with violence by the Government, resulting in scores of people killed and hundreds injured, including children.

The new Constitution was adopted by the South African Parliament in September, and on 2 November it was proved by a national whites-only referendum.⁽⁷⁶⁾ Elections were planned for 1984, when the Constitution was to go into effect.

In view of the efforts of the Government to deprive the African majority of citizenship rights and its moves for a constitutional amendment excluding the African majority from participation in the Parliament, the Committee considered it essential that the Security Council and the General Assembly reconsider the question of membership of South Africa in the United Nations and the legal status of the illegitimate apartheid régime.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission. The Commission on Human Rights, in a resolution of 18 February,⁽⁵⁵⁾ affirmed that any constitutional arrangement in South Africa which was based on racial segregation and which denied full citizenship rights to the majority black population as a whole constituted a denial of their political rights, served to perpetuate apartheid and was unacceptable.

In a resolution of 5 September,⁽⁶²⁾ the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities noted that the South African Constitution put the juridical system and the impartiality of the judiciary into doubt, especially in cases involving the conflicting interests of the white minority and the disenfranchised black majority. Under those circumstances, the Constitution could not be considered as a just basis for a fair judicial system. (See ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII.)

Action by the Conference against racial discrimination. The Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,⁽⁵⁾ in its Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1983-1993), confirmed the international community's rejection of South Africa's so-called reforms, especially the limited parliamentary representation for Coloureds and Asians designed to split the black alliance and buttress the apartheid system. The Programme was approved by the General Assembly in resolution 38/14.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/11 by recorded vote.

Proposed. new racial constitution of South Africa
The General Assembly,

Recalling its many resolutions and those of the Security Council calling on the authorities in South Africa to abandon apartheid, end oppression and repression of the black majority and seek a peaceful, just and lasting solution in accordance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Reaffirming that apartheid is a crime against humanity and a threat to international peace and security,

Gravely concerned that the so-called "constitutional proposals" endorsed, on 2 November 1983, by the exclusively white electorate in South Africa further entrench apartheid,

Convinced that the aim of the so-called "constitutional proposals" is to deprive the indigenous African majority of all fundamental rights, including the right of citizenship, and to transform South Africa into a country for "whites only", in keeping with the declared policies of apartheid,

Aware that the inclusion in the "constitutional proposals" of the so-called "coloured" people and people of Asian origin is aimed at dividing the unity of the oppressed people of South Africa and fomenting internal conflict,

Noting with grave concern that one of the objectives of the so-called "constitutional proposals" of the racist régime is to make the "coloured" people and people of Asian origin in South Africa eligible for conscription into the apartheid armed forces for further internal repression and aggression against independent African States,

Welcoming the united resistance of the oppressed people of South Africa against these "constitutional" manoeuvres,

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa for the elimination of apartheid and for the establishment of a society in which all the people of South Africa as a whole, irrespective of race, colour or creed, will enjoy equal and full political and other rights and participate freely in the determination of their destiny,

Firmly convinced that the implementation of these "constitutional proposals" will further aggravate the already explosive situation prevailing inside apartheid South Africa,

1. Declares that the so-called "constitutional proposals" are contrary to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, that the results of the referendum are of no validity whatsoever and that the enforcement of the proposed "constitution" will inevitably aggravate tension and conflict in South Africa and in southern Africa as a whole;

2. Rejects the so-called "constitutional proposals" and all insidious manoeuvres by the racist minority regime of South Africa further to entrench white minority rule and apartheid,

3. Further rejects any so-called "negotiated settlement" based on bantustan structures or on the "constitutional proposals";

4. Solemnly declares that only the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial democratic society based on majority rule, through the full and free exercise of adult suffrage by all the people in a united and non-fragmented South Africa, can lead to a just and lasting solution of the explosive situation in South Africa;

5. Urges all Governments and organizations to take appropriate action, in co-operation with the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and in accordance with the present resolution, to assist the oppressed people of South Africa in their legitimate struggle for a non-racial democratic society;

6. Requests the Security Council, as a matter of urgency, to consider the serious implications of the so-called "constitutional proposals" and to take all necessary measures, in accordance with the Charter, to avert the further aggravation of tension and conflict in South Africa and in southern Africa as a whole.

On 22 November, the Assembly took related action, in resolution 38/17 on the self-determination of peoples. It rejected the so-called reforms, especially the limited parliamentary representation for Coloured people and Asians designed to undermine the unity of the oppressed people of South Africa and buttress the apartheid system.

South Africa, in a letter to the Secretary-General of 15 November,(77) enclosed a statement made that day by its Foreign Minister, who stated that the overwhelming endorsement of the new Constitution during the recent referendum had alarmed South Africa's enemies at the United Nations because it proposed the continuation of peaceful and evolutionary development in South Africa for the benefit of all rather than confrontation; the country's future would be determined by its peoples and not by the Assembly, he added.

Women and children

Report of the Working Group of Experts. The Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa of the Commission on Human Rights, as requested by the Commission in 1981,(78) had reported in 1982 on the effects of apartheid on black women and children,(79) and, after a second mission of inquiry in London in July/August 1982, issued a supplementary report in January 1983.(80) The Working Group concluded that black women and children were the main victims of forced transfer to the "homelands" and resettlement camps. Those women, separated most of the time from their menfolk who were working in different areas, were struggling to survive on barren land and without adequate water, sanitation, housing, food, schools or medical services. Victims of discrimination in education, black women had very few professional opportunities and most were employed in domestic service or agriculture, areas where working conditions were inhumane and wages low.

Children suffered the same effects of forced relocation, including malnutrition and disease. According to estimates, between 30 and 50 per cent of African children in rural areas died before the age of five. Education did not meet their needs even minimally. As a result of the poverty, child labour was widespread, and black children and young people were the victims of detention, interrogation, torture and "disappearances".

The Working Group paid tribute to black women who, despite their living conditions, played a role in their people's struggle for liberation and for the abolition of apartheid. United Nations bodies, non-governmental organizations and other groups were requested to give wide publicity to the living conditions of African women and children under apartheid. The Working Group called for increased assistance to women and children who were refugees from South Africa, and further research on child labour in South Africa. It denounced the manner in which the police and the courts violated the special status of juveniles and detained, imprisoned, tortured or killed African children and youths.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. In a resolution of 18 February,⁽⁵⁵⁾ the Commission on Human Rights expressed deep indignation at the fact that child labour continued in South Africa, black women and children were exploited and suffered the most from apartheid, and young black people suffered discriminatory harassment and imprisonment. The Commission demanded that South Africa put an end to the violations of the rights of the African population, especially women and children, and that it adhere to the 1973 Convention of ILO concerning minimum age for admission to employment and ensure the enactment of adequate legislation to protect the rights of working children.

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. In 1983, the Special Committee against Apartheid and its Task Force on Women and Children under Apartheid continued to devote special attention to the plight of oppressed women and children in South Africa and Namibia.⁽¹⁾ Following a recommendation of the 1982 International Conference on Women and Apartheid,⁽⁸¹⁾ a delegation of women leaders visited Belgium, France, Italy, the Netherlands and Tunisia in January and February 1983 to meet with leaders of Governments and intergovernmental and other organizations in order to promote broader awareness of the plight of women and children under apartheid and to urge support for assistance projects for them. Another such delegation visited Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Norway and Sweden from 13 to 24 June for the same purpose. On 8 March, International Women's Day, the Chairman of the Committee issued a statement drawing the attention of Governments and organizations to the plight of women oppressed by apartheid.

The Committee recommended that this plight be given special importance in the agenda of the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women, to be held in 1985, and that action against apartheid be given special attention in the programme of International Youth Year (1985). It suggested that the General Assembly support the Committee's efforts to promote assistance to those women and children and stated that it was considering sponsoring a conference on such assistance.

In its October Programme of action,⁽²⁾ the Committee urged women's organizations to mobilize women in solidarity with the struggles of the black women of South Africa against apartheid, distribute material highlighting the oppression experienced by those women and the role of women in the national liberation struggle, protest the victimization of women engaged in the struggle against apartheid, and provide material assistance for South African women refugees and the women's section of the liberation movements recognized by OAU.

On 9 August, the Committee held a meeting in observance of the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women of South Africa and Namibia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 38/17, condemned the increasingly widespread massacres of innocent and defenceless people, including women and children, by South Africa in its attempt to thwart the legitimate demands of the people, and demanded the immediate release of women and children detained in Namibian and South African prisons.

Apartheid in sports

Activities of the Conference on sports sanctions. The International Conference for Sanctions against Apartheid in Sports, organized by the Special Committee against Apartheid in co-operation with the South African Non-Racial Olympic Committee (SAN-ROC), was held in London from 27 to 29 June 1983.(82) The Conference reviewed implementation of the General Assembly's 1977 International Declaration against Apartheid in Sports,(83) the continued collaboration with apartheid sport, and progress in the campaign for the sports boycott of South Africa. In its Declaration, transmitted to the Secretary-General on 15 July by the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee,(84) the Conference expressed support to sportsmen and sportswomen who refused to collaborate with apartheid sports, recommended that the reality of apartheid and apartheid sports be given wide publicity, and requested that SAN-ROC be given maximum assistance to expand the campaign against apartheid in sports.

It also recommended that the concept of the third-party principle, which provided for sanctions against those who collaborated with South Africa, be supported by all countries, that sportsmen and women who participated in sports events in South Africa be disqualified from international competition, that States and sports bodies strictly adhere to the Olympic principle of non-discrimination in sports, and that States deny entry to representatives of sports bodies, team members or individual athletes from South Africa. In particular, it recommended that the campaign to expel apartheid sports bodies from international sports federations be pursued.

The Conference appealed to sportsmen and women to refuse to tour South Africa, not to compete against South African representatives, to refuse to take part in activities which allowed South African representation, and to support the exclusion of South Africa from international competition and from sports bodies.

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. During the second half of 1982, many Governments and organizations had reaffirmed their commitment to boycott apartheid sport, according to the 1983 report of the Special Committee against Apartheid to the Assembly,(1) while some sports bodies had continued to provide support for apartheid under the pretext of separation of sports and politics. The names of 269 sportsmen and sportswomen were included in the Committee's register of sports contacts with South Africa. After the latest addition to the register was issued on 26 April 1983 (covering July-December 1982), the Chairman of the Committee sent the revised list to Member States for action. On 25 April 1983, the Chairman issued a statement expressing satisfaction at France's decision to cancel the French rugby tour of South Africa, which had been scheduled for June. Together with the Centre against Apartheid, the Committee was considering the organization of a meeting to review the progress of the boycott of apartheid sports.

In its October Programme of Action,(2) the Committee urged Governments to implement United Nations resolutions on apartheid in sports and, in particular, to refrain from contact with sports bodies established on the basis of apartheid, withhold support from sporting events in which South African teams were participating, and encourage sports organizations to refrain from exchanges with those teams. Public organizations were encouraged to strengthen the sports boycott by pressing Governments to enforce it, including the cancellation of visa-free entry privileges to South Africans and the refusal of visas to South African sportsmen and women. They were urged to organize campaigns to expel South Africa from international sporting federations, oppose sporting tours of and from that country, persuade sporting organizations to sever relations with apartheid sport, stop media publicity of sporting events which included South African teams, counter South African propaganda promoting "multinational" sport, support measures against individuals and organizations which defied the boycott, and co-operate with the Committee in compiling the register of sports contacts with South Africa.

The Committee said that city and local authorities should withhold the use of recreational facilities or other support for sporting or cultural events with South African participation. Sportsmen and women were called on to take those actions recommended by the Conference, protest at the persecution of sportsmen and women who were struggling for non-racial sport, campaign for South Africa's expulsion from international sports federations and competitions, and co-operate with the Committee and SAN-ROC in ensuring the isolation of South Africa from international sport. The Committee affirmed its intention to promote the international campaign for the boycott of racially selected South African sports teams.

Communications. In 1983, four Governments addressed communications to the Secretary-General regarding matters relating to the sports boycott. On 14 January,(85) Jamaica transmitted a 13 January statement by its Minister for Foreign Affairs affirming that the Government condemned the action of a group of Jamaican and other West Indian cricketers who had gone to South Africa to play cricket and adding that the Jamaicans involved would be debarred by the Jamaica Cricket Board of Control for life from playing cricket at all levels; also, the other cricketers would be permanently debarred from playing in Jamaica. On 15 February,(86) Trinidad and Tobago forwarded a 14 January statement by its Minister of Sport, Culture and Youth Affairs noting that one of its nationals had participated in the tour and that similar action had been taken; the Cabinet had decided that any non-national members of the team would not be welcome in Trinidad and Tobago. On 6 May, (87) Venezuela forwarded a Government statement condemning a visit by a Venezuelan sports delegation to South Africa to compete in motor cycle races, which contradicted Venezuela's policy of maintaining no relations with South Africa. The Bahamas transmitted on 28 June(88) a resolution on apartheid in sports adopted on 25 May by its House of Assembly, affirming the Government's policy of discouraging contacts by Bahamians with South Africa, ensuring that no support would be given to national sports teams or individuals participating in events with South Africans, and denying entrance to the Bahamas to those having sporting contacts with South Africa.

Statements by Antigua and Barbuda, Barbados, Grenada and Guyana, condemning the cricket tour of South Africa by the West Indians, were issued by the Committee against Apartheid on 28 March.(89) The Deputy Prime Minister of Antigua and Barbuda said that his country would not permit those concerned to play cricket there again. The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Barbados, reiterating the Government's policy opposing all sporting contacts with South Africa, said that those who had participated would be disqualified from representing Barbados. In a Government statement, Grenada said that each was declared persona non grata and was thereby prohibited from entering Grenada. Guyana's Minister of State for Youth and Sports appealed to sportsmen and sportswomen to condemn the behaviour of the West Indian players and not to be taken in by monetary temptations offered by racists in South Africa.

Draft convention

Activities of the Committee on a convention against apartheid in sports. The Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against Apartheid in Sports, established by the General Assembly in 1976,(90) submitted a revised draft Convention to the Assembly in August 1983.(91) A mission, led by the Committee Chairman, visited Algeria, Benin, Kenya, Mozambique, Senegal, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zimbabwe from 14 May to 8 June(92) and the United Kingdom from 27 to 29 June to gather their views in regard to the draft Convention. The Committee's Working Group, set up to finalize the draft, focused its efforts on completing the remaining article.

The Chairman explained the controversy in the Committee concerning the "third-party principle" which would require States parties to the Convention to boycott countries that allowed the participation of their sportsmen, sportswomen and teams with South Africa in the same manner that South Africa was boycotted. That principle, embodied in article 10 B of the draft Convention, represented the African position. The supporters of that version felt that, without it, the Convention would be very weak. A number of Asian and Latin American States as well as the Eastern European Group expressed difficulties with that version on the grounds that it would lead to either a disruption of international sporting activities or the isolation of States parties to the Convention rather than the isolation of South Africa and its allies. They supported a version (article 10 A) by which States parties would take action to ensure that their nationals refrained from participating in sports events which included representation from a country practising apartheid. The Chairman expressed the hope that a compromise could be reached between the supporters of the different versions. The mission determined that there was general support for article 10 B by the African countries it had visited and that article 10 A was not acceptable to them; it supported Algeria's initiative to convene a meeting of African States to consider the alternative proposals concerning article 10 with a view to finding a compromise. The mission took note of the suggestion by the United Republic of Tanzania that, if all other efforts to reach a compromise failed, then the Secretary-General might be invited to join the search for an acceptable solution. In addition, it suggested that the Working Group consider various proposals put forward during the mission.

As a result of the consultations, the Chairman presented for consideration by the Working Group at its 26 July meeting amendments to 5 of the 22 articles of the proposed Convention. Those articles (4, 10, 12, 13 and 20) dealt with measures to prevent sports contact with a country practising apartheid, compliance with the Convention and the principle of non-discrimination, monitoring compliance, examination of breaches of the Convention, and amendment of it. Because the members of the Working Group expressed the desire to have time to consult their Governments concerning the proposals, the Committee was unable to complete its drafting work. Therefore, it recommended that its mandate be extended in order to continue negotiations with a view to submitting a draft Convention to the Assembly in 1984.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution. 38/39 K by recorded vote.

In explanation of vote, several countries mentioned possible conflicts between the draft Convention and their national jurisdiction.

Canada expressed support for the principle underlying the international effort to draft a convention, but added that national, legal and constitutional obstacles might preclude Canada's adherence to it. Ireland hoped that the terms of the draft would not give rise to such problems for its Government. The Netherlands said that the proposed Convention infringed-upon certain constitutionally guaranteed freedoms and was therefore not acceptable; nevertheless, it was attempting to restrict, by visa requirements, the admission of South African sportspersons wishing to participate in events in the Netherlands. While repudiating all discrimination in sports, France reserved its position on the substance of any future draft Convention. Speaking for the 10 members of the European Community, Greece said they rejected apartheid in sports and would continue to discourage sporting contacts involving racial discrimination; however, it pointed out that sport was organized on a private basis in those countries. Portugal felt the resolution was likely to contribute in a balanced way to the eradication of apartheid.

Aid programmes and inter-agency co-operation

Throughout 1983, United Nations aid programmes continued to focus on the special needs of the victims of apartheid. Some of those programmes channelled aid through national liberation movements of southern Africa, while others provided aid directly to South African refugees or for individual educational and training needs (see also below, under UN TRAINING PROGRAMME FOR SOUTHERN AFRICA). As a means of intensifying the international campaign against apartheid, the General Assembly called for concerted action within the United Nations system to aid those concerned, in particular for assistance to the victims of racism and apartheid through the national liberation movements recognized by OAU, and for increased contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa and agencies providing assistance. In addition, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to strengthen co-operation between the United Nations and OAU, particularly in regard to assistance to those victims.

National liberation movements

Report of the Secretary-General. In 1983, the United Nations continued to provide assistance to national liberation movements in Africa. Such assistance was described by the Secretary-General in a May report to the General Assembly with three later addenda.⁽⁹³⁾ The report contained information received from bodies forming part of or associated with the United Nations concerning measures they had taken to implement resolutions pertaining to the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.⁽⁹⁴⁾ The report, made in accordance with a November 1982 Assembly request,⁽⁹⁵⁾ included information from several agencies on their assistance to the national liberation movements recognized by OAU—the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC), the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC) and the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO). In addition, many had invited those movements to participate as observers at meetings.

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), for example, extended material and technical assistance to those movements in an effort to enable the refugee communities administered by them to become self-sufficient in food, and to improve the level of nutrition. Its projects were also intended to provide them with agricultural skills, by providing training or fellowships, so that their members could contribute to the agricultural development of their home countries after independence. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), at the request of ANC, organized and funded a workshop on pre-school education in the United Republic of Tanzania.

The World Health Organization (WHO) provided emergency assistance (vaccines, supplies and medicines) to refugees of movements based in Angola, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) provided assistance in housing, health, education and infrastructure to Namibian refugees, with SWAPO as the operational partner responsible for the execution of projects for the Namibians in Angola. Following specific proposals by ANC, UNHCR provided funds for agricultural equipment and vehicles for an ANC centre in the United Republic of Tanzania; ANC was the implementing agency for programmes for South African refugees in Angola and the United Republic of Tanzania.

UNDP report. The Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), in a March 1984 report to the Governing Council,⁽⁹⁶⁾ described UNDP's 1983 programmes of assistance to those national liberation movements recognized by OAU. The Administrator reported that development assistance was aimed at promoting skills and manpower development through education and training, with a view to preparing individuals for eventual administrative, technical and managerial responsibilities, as well as promoting self-reliance in countries of asylum, particularly in agriculture and food production, health care and vocational trades. Four new projects were negotiated with the concerned movements and executing agencies, and approved for financing under the UNDP indicative planning figure (IPF). A joint mission was convened in September to evaluate all projects at mid-term, and it visited all 10 ongoing projects of assistance to those movements, located in Angola, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia. The mission determined that the objectives of all projects continued in general to be valid in substance and in terms of beneficiaries, and it made recommendations for improvement.

At the end of 1983, there were 13 projects approved by the Administrator in support of the development activities of all three movements. Eleven were financed from the IPF for a total of $2,071,357 for 1983. The remaining two were financed from the Trust Fund for Assistance to Colonial Countries and Peoples, for a combined budget of $373,889 for the year. Education continued to be the main sector of UNDP assistance with eight projects accounting for nearly 66 per cent of the budget total ($2,445,246). UNESCO was the executing agency for those projects. Health was the second most important sector, with two projects executed by WHO budgeted at 24 per cent of the total. Food production ranked third in resource concentration, with one project budgeted at nearly 8 per cent of the annual total, executed by FAO.

UNCTAD report. The secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) reported in April 1983 on UNCTAD assistance to national liberation movements recognized by regional intergovernmental organizations.⁽⁹⁷⁾ It had undertaken studies in collaboration with those movements and submitted progress reports to the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board. A study of economic conditions in Namibia and South Africa emphasized, in regard to assistance to national liberation movements, the need for manpower development for future participation in governmental administration and economic management and for further in-depth examination of economic issues that would arise in a transition to majority rule. The study considered international support for transition to majority rule in Namibia to be a matter of urgency, and stressed the need to prepare a comprehensive social and economic survey of Namibia, along the lines of a 1980 study on Zimbabwe conducted by UNCTAD and financed by UNDP.

UNCTAD, by resolution 147(VI) of 2 July,⁽⁹⁸⁾ requested its Secretary-General to undertake, in consultation with OAU, a comprehensive survey of the economic and social conditions of the oppressed people of South Africa and urged the UNDP Administrator to provide adequate resources to the UNCTAD secretariat for this purpose. In taking this action, UNCTAD considered the Buenos Aires Platform, the final document of the Fifth Ministerial Meeting of the Group of 77 (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 28 March-9 April), which included a draft resolution on assistance to the peoples of Namibia and South Africa. By that text, UNCTAD would have requested its Secretary-General to intensify work on the survey of the economic and social conditions of the Namibian people and the oppressed people of South Africa, and in that regard to collaborate with the national liberation movements as well as with relevant United Nations bodies and the OAU Liberation Committee. UNDP would have been called on to attach high priority to the UNCTAD programme providing assistance to the national liberation movements recognized by OAU, and the United Nations Council for Namibia would have been requested to collaborate with UNCTAD in preparing the survey.

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. In its annual report to the General Assembly,⁽¹⁾ the Special Committee against Apartheid continued to call for assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement. While promoting humanitarian and educational assistance, the Committee stated that there was no substitute for political action for the elimination of apartheid. The Committee noted the advance of the armed struggle, which enjoyed the support of the masses, by ANC and PAC, especially under the leadership of ANC. It took note of the resolution, adopted at the nineteenth session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU (Addis Ababa, June 1983) on South Africa, which commended ANC as the vanguard of the national liberation movement of South Africa for the intensification of the armed struggle. The Committee condemned the attempts of South Africa and its supporters to label the freedom fighters as "terrorists". Stating that the actions of the national liberation movement were in sharp contrast with the barbarity of the régime because the movement avoided loss of innocent lives, it warned the white community of the consequences if the oppressed people were to retaliate in kind. The Committee believed that assistance to those people and their national liberation movement should include help in acquainting world opinion with their struggle, and moral and political assistance should include recognition of that movement as the authentic representative of the South African people in their struggle for freedom, as well as support for the campaign for the release of South African political prisoners.

At the conclusion of the observance by ANC of the "Year of Unity in Action" (8 January 1982-7 January 1983), the Committee Chairman sent a message of support to the ANC President. Noting that South Africa had continued to execute political prisoners and massacre refugees, he said that the Committee had redoubled its efforts to persuade Governments and public opinion to act against apartheid.

In its October Programme of Action,⁽²⁾ the Committee called on Governments to assist the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements by: providing them with financial and/or material assistance, directly or through OAU; providing broadcasting facilities; providing transit and travel facilities to members of the movements; encouraging public collections for assistance; contributing to the various funds and programmes for South Africa (see below); encouraging judicial organizations and the public to provide assistance to those persecuted by South Africa; granting asylum and educational and employment opportunities to South African refugees; encouraging activities of anti-apartheid movements which provided material and political assistance to apartheid victims and to liberation movements; and contributing to the projects of the movements and front-line States for assistance to refugee women and children from South Africa.

Specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations were urged to assist the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements, and to invite representatives of movements recognized by OAU to attend their conferences and seminars and to make financial provision for their participation. In addition, the Committee called on public organizations to help educate public opinion about the struggle against apartheid through such actions as dissemination of information about the liberation struggle, funding projects for South African refugees, mobilizing solidarity with the struggles of the oppressed people, and observing annually the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of the People of South Africa, the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women of South Africa and Namibia, and the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners.

Other consideration. In accordance with a July 1982 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽⁹⁹⁾ the Council President and the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid held consultations in 1983 regarding assistance to the national liberation movements by United Nations bodies. Those discussions, which had been held annually since 1980, were described in a June 1983 report to the Council.⁽¹⁰⁰⁾ In view of the frequent acts of destabilization carried out by South Africa against the front-line States—resulting in loss of life, large numbers of refugees and massive destruction—the two officers decided that assistance by the specialized agencies and other organizations to those States and the freedom fighters was critically needed.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1983/42 of 25 July, recommended that the secretariats of United Nations bodies and that of OAU consider assistance to national liberation movements recognized by OAU, with a view to strengthening co-ordination of action to ensure the best use of resources for assistance to the peoples of colonial Territories. The Council noted with satisfaction the arrangements made by several United Nations bodies which enabled representatives of those movements to participate as observers during consideration of matters concerning their countries, and called on international institutions to do likewise, including defraying the cost of participation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 38/17 of 22 November, the General Assembly called for a substantial increase in all forms of assistance given by States, United Nations organs, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to the victims of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid through their national liberation movements recognized by OAU. This call was repeated by in resolution 38/39 A of 5 December, when the Assembly pointed out that those movements were at a crucial stage in their struggle for liberation. In the same resolution, the Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Special Committee against Apartheid, authorized the continuation of funds from the regular United Nations budget to enable two movements-ANC and PAC—to maintain New York offices in order to participate in the deliberations of the Committee and other bodies.

UN Trust Fund for South Africa

The United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, established by the General Assembly in 1965(101) to provide voluntary assistance to persons persecuted under discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia, made six grants totalling $2,370,000 in 1983, according to an October report by the Secretary-General.(102) The Fund received of $1,726,033 in contributions for 1983 (see table below) and a further $221,631 had been pledged. The total income since the Fund's inception, including interest, was $17,961,982, while the total amount of grants was $17,586,828 as at 20 September 1983, leaving a balance of $375,154.

In a report annexed to that of the Secretary-General, the Committee of Trustees said it continued to encourage direct contributions to voluntary organizations providing assistance to victims of apartheid and racial discrimination. It expressed concern over the plight of political prisoners, the growing number of political trials and the persecution of apartheid opponents, including trade unionists, journalists, religious and community leaders, students and conscientious objectors. It also expressed shock over the 9 June execution by South Africa of three ANC members (see above). In view of the existing conditions, the Committee felt that additional efforts should be made to promote greater contributions to the Fund and to those voluntary organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/39 H without vote.

United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa
The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, to which is annexed the report of the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa,

Gravely concerned at the continued and increased repression against opponents of apartheid and racial discrimination in South Africa and the institution of numerous trials under arbitrary security legislation, as well as continued repression in Namibia,

Reaffirming that increased humanitarian assistance by the international community to those persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia is appropriate and essential,

Recognizing that increased contributions to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies concerned are necessary to enable them to meet the increased needs for humanitarian and legal assistance,

1. Commends the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa for their efforts to promote humanitarian and legal assistance to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia, as well as assistance to their families and to refugees from South Africa;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments, organizations and individuals that have contributed to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies engaged in rendering humanitarian and legal assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination;

3. Appeals for generous and increased contributions to the Trust Fund;

4. Also appeals for direct contributions to the voluntary agencies engaged in assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination in South Africa and Namibia.

Other UN assistance

The United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (see below) also provided educational and training assistance to South Africans, according to an October 1983 report by the Secretary-General.⁽¹⁰³⁾ During the 1982/83 school year, it granted scholarships to 613 South Africans, as compared with 447 for 1981/82. Of the 1982/83 total, 245 were new awards and 368 were extensions of previous grants.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 38/95, the Assembly called for further assistance to student refugees in southern Africa.

Inter-agency co-operation

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report to the General Assembly,^(*) stated that in view of the grave situation in southern Africa and the danger of conflict, the international community should consider a strategy for action to secure peace and freedom in the region which would require the full commitment of United Nations agencies. Emphasizing that all agencies should make their maximum contribution to the international campaign against apartheid, the Committee expressed its particular appreciation for the co-operation of ILO, FAO UNESCO and WHO. It noted with concern the assistance provided by IMF to South Africa and expressed concern over South Africa's participation in the activities of IAEA (see above).

The Committee suggested that the Assembly request the Secretary-General: to instruct the Secretariat and United Nations offices to promote the campaign in co-operation with the Committee; to deny facilities to, and to refrain from investments in, corporations operating in South Africa; to enter into consultations with IMF and IAEA in order to secure their full co-operation in action against apartheid; and to prepare, in consultation with the executive heads of United Nations agencies, proposals for concerted action by all agencies in the campaign.

In its October Programme of Action against Apartheid,⁽²⁾ the Committee called on all specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations to contribute to the maximum, within their mandates, to the campaign, in particular by: excluding South Africa; denying assistance to it; inviting representatives of South African liberation movements recognized by OAU to attend their conferences and seminars and making financial provision for their participation; providing assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and to those movements; disseminating information against apartheid (see below); providing employment within their secretariats as appropriate and assistance for education and training to the oppressed people; withholding facilities from, or investment of funds in, financial institutions and firms that gave loans to or invested in that country; refraining from purchasing South African products; denying contracts or facilities to transnational corporations and financial institutions collaborating with South Africa; prohibiting official travel by South African Airways or South Africa shipping lines; denying assistance to non-governmental organizations which collaborated with the regime and to institutions based on racial discrimination in South Africa; and co-operating with the Committee in the campaign.

The Committee urged IAEA to end all collaboration with South Africa, except with regard to inspection of nuclear facilities.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In resolution 1983/42 of 25 July, the Economic and Social Council requested the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations to intensify their support for the oppressed people of South Africa and to isolate totally the apartheid régime and mobilize world public opinion against apartheid.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly took similar action in resolution 38/51 of 7 December, when it requested those organizations to withhold from South Africa any co-operation and assistance and to discontinue support to its régime until the people of Namibia had exercised their right to self-determination and independence and until apartheid had been eradicated.

In resolution 38/39 A of 5 December, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with the executive heads of the United Nations organizations, proposals for concerted action by all the agencies in the international campaign against apartheid.

The Assembly, in resolution 38/5 of 28 October, requested the Secretary-General to strengthen political, economic, cultural and administrative co-operation between the United Nations and OAU, particularly with regard to assistance to the victims of colonialism and apartheid in southern Africa, and in this connection drew the attention of the international community to the need to contribute to the OAU Assistance Fund for the Struggle against Colonialism and Apartheid.

In a number of other 1983 resolutions, the Assembly called on IMF to terminate credits or other assistance to South Africa and, in resolution 38/39 A, also requested IAEA to refrain from extending to South Africa any facilities which might assist it in its nuclear plans (see above). In that same resolution, the Secretary-General was requested to enter into consultations with those two agencies to secure their co-operation in action against apartheid.

Other aspects

Other 1983 activities to promote the international campaign against apartheid included encouraging United Nations bodies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations as well as the public to disseminate information in this regard. The General Assembly and the Special Committee against Apartheid urged Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute to the campaign. Organizing special meetings, missions and observances was another means the Committee used for that purpose. The Committee drew up a Programme of Action against Apartheid and its work plan, which was approved by the Assembly in December.

Public information

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid continued in 1983 to encourage and promote dissemination of information against apartheid by the Centre against Apartheid and the Department of Public Information, both of the United Nations Secretariat, and by a number of non-governmental organizations, through publications in several languages and audio-visual material. In its annual report to the General Assembly,⁽¹⁾ the Committee noted the importance of the dissemination of information and of the encouragement of public action by parliaments, local authorities, religious bodies, trade unions and other groups in the campaign to isolate the apartheid regime and support the liberation struggle.

The Committee stressed the need for a wider mobilization of writers, artists, sportsmen and others in the international campaign against apartheid. It recommended that the Assembly: commend anti-apartheid movements and other organizations engaged in campaigns for the isolation of the régime and assistance to the national liberation movement of South Africa; urge Governments to lend assistance, including financial assistance, to such groups, especially in countries which continued to collaborate with South Africa; commend cities, local authorities and institutions which boycotted corporations involved in South Africa or honoured leaders of the national liberation movement, and invite others to consider such measures; and request the Secretary-General, in consultation with UNESCO, to prepare proposals for an information service against apartheid. The Committee suggested that the Secretary-General and the UNESCO Director-General be invited to initiate action to honour the memory of leaders of the oppressed peoples in their struggle against apartheid, racial discrimination and colonialism.

The Committee stated that it planned to expand the campaigns to promote: an end to military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa; a cessation of loans to South Africa; comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa; sports, cultural and other boycotts of South Africa; greater assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement; the unconditional release of South African political prisoners; treatment of captured freedom fighters as prisoners of war; and action against propaganda by South Africa and its collaborators. Special attention would be given to campaigns in support of front-line States and Lesotho which were subjected to acts of aggression, destabilization and terrorism by South Africa.

The Committee stressed the need for adequate arrangements to ensure the prompt dissemination of information to Governments and organizations concerned, as well as the media, on developments in southern Africa and on anti-apartheid activities. It believed that the Centre against Apartheid should be equipped to provide increased services in that respect.

On 7 April, the Committee held informal consultations with representatives of the mass media to discuss developments in South Africa.

In its October Programme of Action against Apartheid,⁽²⁾ the Committee called on Governments to: ensure, in co-operation with the United Nations and the national liberation movements of South Africa recognized by OAU, the widest possible dissemination of information on apartheid and the struggle for liberation in South Africa; encourage the establishment of national organizations to enlighten public opinion on apartheid; encourage information media to contribute to the campaign against apartheid; and prevent propaganda by South Africa and private organizations which advocated apartheid. Specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations were asked to contribute to the campaign by disseminating information against apartheid in co-operation with the United Nations.

The Committee suggested that public organizations pursue education programmes aimed at increasing understanding about the realities of apartheid, including South Africa's bantustan policies, the consequences of its policies in education, housing, employment, health care and land distribution, and the threat of apartheid to international peace and security. Public organizations were also urged to disseminate information about the liberation struggle. Trade unions were called on to distribute information to their officials and members in order to mobilize solidarity with workers' struggles in South Africa.

According to the Programme of Action, city and local authorities should encourage the teaching of the history, culture and struggles of the oppressed people of South Africa and ban South African propaganda from schools and libraries, churches and religious organizations should disseminate information about the inhumanity of the apartheid system, and educationalists should encourage the teaching of the anti-apartheid struggle and press for banning South African propaganda from educational institutions. In this connection, the Committee stated its intention to promote, with the assistance of the Centre against Apartheid, the international campaign against propaganda by South Africa and its collaborators.

The Latin American Regional Conference for Action against Apartheid (Caracas, Venezuela, 16-18 September) (see below, under MEETINGS, MISSIONS AND OBSERVANCES) recognized the need for ensuring public awareness of the inhumanity of apartheid and of United Nations efforts for its elimination. In its Declaration,(104) the Conference requested the United Nations and other organizations to provide Governments, organizations, institutions and media in Latin America with relevant information in the languages of the region.

The Committee continued to promote and receive voluntary contributions to produce publications in several languages. It reported that the Trust Fund for Publicity against Apartheid had received a total of $60,717 from 11 countries between 1 January and 31 May 1983.(1)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 38/39 A of 5 December, appealed to those working in the mass media and their professional associations to foster the role of the mass media in the dissemination of information commensurate with the need to eradicate apartheid. It requested the Committee against Apartheid to pay special attention to mobilizing public opinion and encouraging public action against collaboration with South Africa.

Non-governmental organizations

International NGOs Conference against Apartheid and Racism. Non-governmental organizations (NGOs) remained active in the campaign against apartheid. The International NGOs Conference of Action against Apartheid and Racism, organized by the NGO Sub-Committee on Racism, Racial Discrimination, Apartheid and Decolonization in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, was held at Geneva from 5 to 8 July 1983.

In its Declaration, transmitted by the Acting Chairman of the Committee against Apartheid to the Secretary-General on 15 July,(105) the Conference condemned racism as a weapon used to divide and exploit people and a major cause of conflict and war; denounced apartheid as a crime against humanity and a threat to international peace and security; supported the condemnation by the United Nations and OAU of certain Western and other countries as well as transnational corporations which collaborated with South Africa; and called for comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against that country and urged the Second World Conference for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination to revitalize international action in this regard.

The Conference urged the United Nations, other intergovernmental organizations and Governments to support the national liberation movements recognized by OAU and to intensify efforts to eliminate discrimination against indigenous peoples and migrant workers. It stressed the need for co-operation between the United Nations and NGOs, including peace, anti-apartheid and solidarity movements, religious bodies, trade unions and women's and youth organizations.

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Committee against Apartheid proposed that the Assembly commend the anti-apartheid and solidarity movements, religious bodies, trade unions, youth and student organizations, and other groups engaged in campaigns for the isolation of the apartheid regime and assistance to the national liberation movement of South Africa, and urge Governments to lend assistance, including financial assistance, to such groups, especially in countries which continued to collaborate with South Africa.

The Committee, in its October Programme of Action against Apartheid,(2) called on specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations to deny assistance to NGOs which collaborated with South Africa and to institutions based on racial discrimination in that country.

It called on NGOs, such as trade unions, churches, and anti-apartheid and solidarity movements, to contribute to the campaign against apartheid by: promoting programmes aimed at educating public opinion about apartheid; mobilizing opposition to South Africa's policies of aggression, destabilization and terrorism against neighbouring States; taking action to ensure implementation of the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa and an end to military collaboration with it; becoming involved in the campaign for a mandatory ban on nuclear collaboration with South Africa; urging Governments to desist from collaboration with it and to support mandatory economic sanctions; strengthening the sporting and cultural boycott of South Africa; discouraging individuals from emigrating to South Africa or visiting as tourists; campaigning for the release of South African political prisoners; and mobilizing solidarity with the black workers of South Africa (see above for specific recommendations). The Committee said it would increase co-operation with NGOs in promoting the international campaign against apartheid.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 38/39 A of 5 December, commended the movements, organizations and other groups engaged in campaigns for the isolation of the regime and assistance to the South African liberation movements recognized by OAU, and urged Governments to assist such groups, especially in countries which collaborated with South Africa.

Meetings, missions and observances

During 1983, the Special Committee against Apartheid organized or co-sponsored a number of meetings, missions and observances to promote the international campaign against apartheid.⁽¹⁾ (For further details of these events, see under the relevant subject headings in this sub-chapter.)

The Committee supported and participated in the International Conference in Solidarity with the Front-line States and for National Liberation and Peace in Southern Africa, held at Lisbon, Portugal, from 25 to 27 March.

The Committee and the Workers' Group of the Governing Body of ILO organized the International Conference of Trade Unions on Sanctions and Other Actions against the Apartheid Régime in South Africa, held at Geneva on 10 and 11 June. In its Declaration, the Conference called for mandatory economic sanctions and condemned employers and investors in South Africa who directly or indirectly helped to maintain the apartheid system.

The International Conference on the Alliance between South Africa and Israel, held at Vienna from 11 to 13 July, was organized by the Committee, as was the International Conference for Sanctions against Apartheid in Sports, held in London from 27 to 29 June.

The International NGOs Conference of Action against Apartheid and Racism, held at Geneva from 5 to 8 July, was organized by the NGO Subcommittee on Racism, Racial Discrimination, Apartheid and Decolonization, in co-operation with the Special Committee.

The Committee organized, in co-operation with Venezuela, the Latin American Regional Conference for Action against Apartheid, at Caracas from 16 to 18 September. In the Caracas Declaration for Action against Apartheid,⁽¹⁰⁴⁾ the Conference reaffirmed that South Africa's threats to and violations of the territorial integrity and independence of neighbouring States constituted a threat to international peace and security and a serious challenge to the authority of the United Nations, and it declared that apartheid was a crime against humanity. It called on the international community to exert pressure on South Africa through sanctions and provide assistance to the victims of apartheid and to their national liberation movements. The Conference called for United Nations assistance in promoting public awareness in Latin America of apartheid.

In 1983, the Committee sent six missions as part of its activities against apartheid. One mission visited the front-line States (Angola, Botswana, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia, Zimbabwe) from 7 to 21 April⁽¹⁰⁶⁾ to obtain full information on South Africa's aggression, to consult on possible action by the Committee and to promote political and material assistance to those countries. Two other missions, both delegations of women leaders, were concerned with the plight of women and children under apartheid and held consultations on providing assistance to projects prepared by the national liberation movements. The first of these missions visited Belgium, France, Italy, the Netherlands and Tunisia in January and February, and the second visited Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Norway and Sweden from 13 to 24 June.

Three missions were visits of the Committee Chairman to Governments. From 1 to 4 May, he visited Egypt at the invitation of the Afro-Asian Peoples' Solidarity Organization. At the invitation of the Minister for Foreign Affairs, he visited the German Democratic Republic from 23 to 28 May to participate in the observance of Africa Liberation Day and the Week of Solidarity with the Colonial Peoples of Southern Africa. The Chairman visited the USSR from 28 to 31 May, at the invitation of the Soviet Afro-Asian Solidarity Committee, for consultations on further co-operation in the campaign against apartheid. In addition, in January and February, the Chairman visited six Nigerian universities to inaugurate Youth Solidarity with South Africa and to launch the campaign for the release of Nelson Mandela.

The Committee organized several special observances in 1983. On 18 February, it held a meeting in memory of the Reverend Canon L.

John Collins, founder and President of the International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa. It held two meetings in observance of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination on 21 March (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII). On 30 and 31 March, four meetings were held in observance of the twentieth anniversary of the Committee's first meeting. The Committee, in an April report,(107) issued messages it had received on that occasion from the President of the General Assembly, heads of State and Government, foreign ministers, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals.

The Committee held solemn meetings in observance of the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggling People of South Africa on 16 June and the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women of South Africa and Namibia on 9 August. It observed 11 October as the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners.

In addition, on 23 May a joint statement was issued by the Acting Chairman of the Committee, the Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries and the President of the Council for Namibia on the occasion of the Week of Solidarity with the Peoples of Namibia and All Other Colonial Territories, as well as those in South Africa, Fighting for Freedom, Independence and Human Rights (23-30 May) (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter I).

The Committee, in its October Programme of Action against Apartheid,(2) called on Governments to observe annually four international days (21 March, 16 June, 9 August and 11 October), and it suggested that public organizations could play a role in educating public opinion about the struggle against apartheid by observing them.

Work programme of the Committee against Apartheid

Stressing the need to expand its activities with a view to securing greater and more concerted action for the elimination of apartheid, the Special Committee against Apartheid reported to the General Assembly(1) that it planned to intensify consultations with Governments and inter-governmental organizations and develop its co-operation with parliaments, local authorities, anti-apartheid and solidarity movements, peace movements, trade unions, religious bodies and other non-governmental organizations, and educational and other institutions. It would continue to mobilize writers, artists, entertainers, sportsmen, religious leaders and others in support of the struggle for liberation in South Africa and for the total isolation of that Government. It recognized the need to publicize more widely the collaboration by certain States and foreign economic interests with South Africa. It stated its intention to expand the campaigns to promote an end to military and nuclear collaboration; a cessation of all loans to South Africa; comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa; sports, cultural and other boycotts of South Africa; greater assistance to the oppressed people there and their liberation movement; the unconditional release of political prisoners and treatment of captured freedom fighters as prisoners of war; and action against propaganda by South Africa and its collaborators. Special attention would be given to support front-line States and Lesotho which were subjected to aggression by South Africa.

The Committee was considering the organization or co-sponsorship of several conferences and seminars. It believed that members of the Committee and the staff of the Centre against Apartheid should participate more frequently in anti-apartheid events to spread the campaign to regions and segments of public opinion which had not been active. In the Committee's view, the Centre should be equipped to provide increased and better dissemination of information about developments in southern Africa and on anti-apartheid activities. The Committee requested that the allocation of $400,000 for special projects be continued in 1984 and that it be authorized to seek and receive voluntary contributions for such projects.

In its October Programme of Action against Apartheid,(2) the Committee reiterated its work plan, including its intention to review constantly and publicize the implementation of United Nations resolutions against apartheid.

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/39 E by recorded vote.

In explanation of vote, Canada questioned the making of a special allocation from the United Nations regular budget without having examined the priority and merits of the issue within the existing programme and budgetary mechanisms for that purpose. The Federal Republic of Germany agreed in principle with the aims of the resolution, but had reservations about certain formulations in the Committee's report, as well as the financial implications of the text.

Ireland said its attitude to the recommendations in the Committee's report must be understood in accordance with its general policy on apartheid. Japan also could not accept some of the Committee's conclusions and recommendations and was concerned about paragraph 4 of the resolution which it felt gave that body an excessively wide margin of discretion; it also hoped the Committee would manage its budget efficiently. The Netherlands, New Zealand and Portugal also voiced reservations about the report.

France said its positive vote marked its desire to give expression to the excellent relations which it maintained with the Committee, although it did not approve of all of the work programme.

The Assembly took related action in three other resolutions of 5 December. In resolution 38/39 B, it invited Governments, organizations and individuals to take action in the light of the Committee's Programme of Action against Apartheid, in co-operation with the Committee and the Centre against Apartheid. The Assembly gave instructions to the Committee in resolution 38/39 A, requesting it to report on implementation of United Nations resolutions on apartheid and South Africa's aggression, to review collaboration between South Africa and other States, and to pay special attention to mobilizing public opinion against that collaboration. In resolution 38/39 F, it requested the Committee to publicize information on relations between Israel and South Africa.

South Africa and the front-line States of southern Africa

In 1983, several United Nations bodies were concerned with South Africa's relations with its neighbours-Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe. The General Assembly, the Special Committee against Apartheid, the Commission on Human Rights, the United Nations Council for Namibia and the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination dealt with the effects of those relations, mainly on security issues, but also on the economic development of those countries, the so-called front-line States.

Those bodies expressed concern over the increased aggression and destabilization by South Africa in the region. In resolution 38/39 C of 5 December, the Assembly condemned South Africa's aggression against Angola, Lesotho and Mozambique and its threats against independent States in the region. It demanded that South Africa pay compensation to independent African States for the damage caused by its acts, and called on the international community to provide assistance to countries in the area to enable them to defend themselves.

In late 1983, Angola complained to the Security Council of increased acts of aggression against its territory by South Africa-charges which were rejected by South Africa. The Council responded by adopting resolution 545(1983) on 20 December in which it demanded that South Africa withdraw unconditionally and immediately. The Council also considered that Angola was entitled to redress for material damage it had incurred. In three 1983 resolutions (38/17, 38/36 A and 38/39 C), the Assembly also condemned South Africa's aggression and occupation of Angola.

A number of times during the year Lesotho complained that South Africa had carried out armed attacks against it, but South Africa rejected those charges. As requested by the Council in 1982, the Secretary-General sent a mission to Lesotho to determine that country's needs for international assistance. In June 1983, the Council, by resolution 535(1983), endorsed the mission's recommendations for international assistance. The Assembly condemned South Africa for its aggression against Lesotho (resolutions 38/17 and 38/39 C) and called for assistance to it (resolutions 38/215 and 38/95).

Mozambique also lodged several complaints about South African attacks. The Assembly (resolution 38/17) and the Economic and Social Council (resolution 1983/42) condemned this aggression.

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report to the General Assembly,⁽¹⁾ expressed concern over the escalation of acts of aggression, destabilization and terrorism by South Africa against independent African States since 1975, the year Angola and Mozambique became independent. Evidence of the increased aggression included a sharp rise in military operations by South African forces, especially in Angola, Mozambique and Lesotho, as well as covert activities involving the use of mercenaries and subversive groups, assassination and abduction of individuals, and the destruction of bridges, road and rail lines, oil pipelines, fuel depots and power lines in several neighbouring States. Again condemning those acts, the Committee stressed that the situation in southern Africa was a threat to international peace. It urged the Security Council to take effective measures, under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter, to force South Africa to end its aggression and terminate its illegal occupation of Namibia. In the Committee's view, South Africa had been encouraged to undertake those acts by the protection afforded by major Western Powers, and even the collusion of some Western interests, against international sanctions (see above).

South Africa continued to rely on the use of force and racist alliances to arrest the process of decolonization, to restore "buffer zones" against the advance of freedom, to entrench racist domination in South Africa and perpetuate illegal occupation in Namibia. The Committee said that South Africa, in an attempt to establish its hegemony in the region, had become more brazen, as evidenced by the attack on Maputo, Mozambique, on 23 May 1983.

The Committee informed the Assembly that it was considering organizing or co-sponsoring an international conference in support of the front-line States and Lesotho.

In its Programme of Action against Apartheid,(2) adopted on 25 October and commended in resolution 38/39 B of 5 December by the Assembly to the attention of Governments, organizations and individuals, the Committee called on Governments to provide, at their request, assistance to the States subjected to South African aggression to enable them to defend their sovereignty and territorial integrity. Governments were also urged to assist the programmes of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC).

Public organizations were urged to mobilize opposition to South Africa's policies of aggression, destabilization and terrorism against neighbouring States. Such mobilization should involve: publicizing South Africa's aggression and international terrorism, including its assassinations and abductions, its use of mercenaries and support of subversive groups, and its efforts to create political and economic instability in the region; campaigning for solidarity with the front-line States and Lesotho; alerting the public to the threat posed by South Africa's military and nuclear buildup and campaigning for an end to military and nuclear collaboration with that country; providing assistance to victims of South African aggression; and upholding the right of the front-line States and Lesotho to defend their territorial integrity and security, including the securing of military assistance.

In view of the escalating aggression, the Committee decided to send a delegation to southern Africa to obtain information, consult on possible action by the Committee, and promote assistance to front-line States. The mission visited Angola, Botswana, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe from 7 to 21 April 1983, and also participated in the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence, held in Paris from 25 to 29 April (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III). It held consultations with government officials in those countries and with leaders of the liberation movements of southern Africa--the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC), the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO), and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC). In its interim report to the Committee of 25 May,(3) the mission said it was unable, for practical reasons, to visit other front-line and neighbouring States; therefore, it proposed to visit Lesotho, Mozambique and Swaziland, as well as Seychelles, and submit a final report.

Having determined that South Africa was engaged in either military aggression, support of dissident groups or economic and political destabilization in the countries it visited, the mission made recommendations to be transmitted by the Committee for consideration by the General Assembly, calling for political and moral support and material assistance for the oppressed people of South Africa and for the front-line States. It stated that the Security Council must adopt measures, under Chapter VII of the Charter, such as comprehensive or selective mandatory sanctions, to prevent breaches of the peace and acts of aggression by South Africa.

The mission agreed with the Committee that the continuing political, economic and military collaboration of certain Western States and their transnational corporations with South Africa encouraged its defiance of the international community and constituted a major obstacle to eliminating apartheid. In particular, the United States policy of "constructive engagement" with South Africa had encouraged the régime's policies. All States, in particular the major supporters of South Africa, should be called on to terminate collaboration with South Africa in accordance with United Nations resolutions. It was incumbent on the international community to demand the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of South African troops from Angolan territory, the mission said. The international community should express indignation over South Africa's acts of aggression, subversion, destabilization and terrorism against all the front-line States, and should condemn South Africa for using Namibia as a base for its aggression against neighbouring States.

In addition, the mission called on the international community to render large-scale assistance, including humanitarian, educational and financial aid, to the front-line States, the oppressed people of South Africa and Namibia and their national liberation movements. Within the United Nations system, the front-line States should be exempted from generalized budgetary cuts. SADCC deserved the support of the international community in its effort to lessen economic dependence of the front-line States on South Africa. Upholding the right of those States to seek and to receive military, financial and material aid to defend their territory, the mission suggested the possibility of rendering assistance in logistics, transportation, clearing of land-mines and training of defence personnel.

The mission, calling on the United Nations to redouble its effort to mobilize world public opinion against South Africa's policies of apartheid, aggression, destabilization and terrorism, proposed that consideration be given to assisting front-line States in developing their transmission facilities and broadcasting to counter South African propaganda. News agencies should also be asked to co-operate in that regard.

At a meeting on 19 May, the Committee considered the mission's report and decided to send a second mission to Lesotho and Mozambique. It decided to encourage and assist campaigns in support of front-line States by anti-apartheid groups in Western countries.

The Committee participated in the International Conference in Solidarity with the Front-line States and for National Liberation and Peace in Southern Africa (Lisbon, Portugal, 25-27 March).

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. In three resolutions adopted in February,⁽⁴⁾ the Commission on Human Rights condemned South Africa's acts of aggression and destabilization against African States, in particular, Angola, Botswana, Lesotho, Mozambique and Zimbabwe. It demanded the cessation of such attacks which were aimed at undermining their economies and destabilizing them (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII, under "Human rights violations-South Africa and Namibia").

Action by the Conference against racial discrimination. The Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at Geneva from 1 to 12 August 1983, adopted a Declaration and a Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1983-1993). In its Declaration,⁽⁵⁾ the Conference condemned the frequent and unjustified acts of aggression, destruction and sabotage, which South Africa, directly and through the use of mercenaries and armed bandits, continued to perpetrate against the front-line States and other independent African States in the subregion because of their opposition to apartheid, assistance to refugees and support for the liberation movements. The Conference called on all States to offer assistance to enable the front-line States and the other independent African States in the area to strengthen their defence capacity and peacefully rebuild their countries.

The Conference took similar action in its Programme of Action as approved by the General Assembly in resolution 38/14 of 22 November. It called for increased international assistance to those States subjected to threats and acts of aggression and destabilization by South Africa to enable them to strengthen their defence capacity, defend their sovereignty and territorial integrity, tight South African and other propaganda that undermined racial harmony and peace, and peacefully develop their countries.

Activities of the Council for Namibia. In its annual report to the General Assembly,⁽⁶⁾ the Council for Namibia issued the Paris Declaration on Namibia (see also TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III), adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence (Paris, 25-29 April 1983). In that text, the Conference called for increased assistance to the Namibian people and to its liberation movement—SWAPO. It called on States to stop the military buildup in Namibia by South Africa, its recruitment and training of Namibians for tribal armies and its recruitment of mercenaries in order to carry out internal repression and external aggression. The Conference condemned the aggression launched from Namibia against Angola (see below) and the continued military occupation of part of Angola by South African forces.

The Conference considered that the acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability by South Africa constituted an effort to terrorize and intimidate countries in the region. Assistance to South Africa by certain Western countries and Israel in the military and nuclear fields made them willing partners of its hegemonistic policies. Expressing concern at reports regarding the existence of military and security agreements between South Africa and certain countries in other regions, the Conference said such arrangements would constitute a breach of the arms embargo imposed by the Security Council in 1977,⁽⁷⁾ greatly aggravate the situation in southern Africa and pose a serious threat to the security of Africa as a whole. It called for vigilance by the international community to prevent any military arrangements with South Africa.

Condemning the increased acts of armed aggression and military, political and economic destabilization by South Africa, the Conference said increased assistance must be rendered to the independent States of southern Africa to enable them to defend their sovereignty and to free them from economic dependence on South Africa. In that connection, the Conference welcomed the establishment of SADCC and called for States to support it.

The Conference's Committee of the Whole, meeting concurrently with the Conference, condemned the terrorist acts by armed groups in the pay of South Africa against Czechoslovak citizens working in Angola and urged the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to obtain the release of those kidnapped. In addition to reiterating the positions taken by the Conference, the Committee specifically condemned South Africa's aggression and destabilization against Botswana, Lesotho, Mozambique, Seychelles, Zambia and Zimbabwe, aimed at intimidating them from supporting the struggle of Namibians and South Africans for independence and at disrupting and destabilizing their economies.

The Committee also called for assistance to the front-line States, including military assistance. United Nations bodies were requested to initiate a major programme of assistance to enable those States to implement United Nations resolutions supporting Namibia's struggle for independence and to withstand the economic sabotage.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/39 C by recorded vote.

Effects of apartheid on the countries of southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Gravely concerned over the acts of aggression, destabilization and subversion, as well as economic and other pressure, by the apartheid régime of South Africa against independent African States in southern Africa,

Convinced of the danger of wider conflict unless effective action is taken by the international community,

Concerned over the safety of South African refugees in neighbouring countries,

Commending the front-line States for their sacrifices in support of the struggle for freedom in South Africa and Namibia,

Condemning the pressure exerted by South Africa to force Lesotho to expel South African refugees in violation of the principles of international law,

Again condemning the racist minority régime of South Africa for its continued occupation of parts of the territory of Angola and its acts of aggression, destabilization and subversion against independent African States, particularly against Lesotho and Mozambique,

Gravely concerned about the economic blockade that South Africa has imposed against Lesotho,

Deploing the pressures exerted by the Government of the United States of America against Angola to impose on it the so-called issue of "linkage" or "parallelism" which encourages the racist minority régime of South Africa to block the negotiations for the independence of Namibia and to continue its illegal occupation of parts of the territory of Angola and escalate its aggression against that country,

1. Condemns the acts of aggression by the apartheid régime of South Africa against Angola, Lesotho and Mozambique and its threats against independent African States in southern Africa;

2. Demands that all troops of the apartheid régime of South Africa be immediately and unconditionally withdrawn from Angola and that South Africa respect fully the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of independent African States;

3. Fully supports the right of the Government of Angola to take measures in accordance with Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations in order to guarantee and safeguard the territorial integrity and national sovereignty of Angola;

4. Expresses its full support for the people and Government of Mozambique in their struggle to preserve their national independence and sovereignty and urges all

States to provide political, diplomatic and material support to Mozambique;

5. Further strongly condemns the racist minority regime of Pretoria for its acts of destabilization, armed aggression and economic blockade against Lesotho and strongly urges the international community to extend maximum assistance to Lesotho to enable that country to fulfil its international humanitarian obligations towards refugees, and to use its influence on the racist régime to desist from terrorist acts against Lesotho;

6. Demands that the racist regime of South Africa pay full compensation to Angola, Lesotho and other independent African States for the damage to life and property caused by its acts of aggression;

7. Calls upon the international community to provide assistance to independent African States in the subregion to enable them to defend their sovereignty and territorial integrity, counter the hostile South African acts of aggression and rebuild their economies;

8. Urges the Security Council to consider, as a matter of urgency, the means to ensure peace in southern Africa.

Against: Paraguay, United States.

Abstaining: Germany, Federal Republic of, Guatemala, Malawi, United Kingdom.

Of those countries speaking in explanation of vote, most mentioned reservations they had on the last preambular paragraph or their objection to singling out a particular State. Australia, Austria, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Portugal, Sri Lanka, Turkey and the United Kingdom made such remarks. Austria believed that the arbitrary singling out of Member States was unjustified and counter-productive. Canada did not wish to be associated with the criticism contained in that paragraph. Italy spoke similarly and expressed reservations concerning other wording but endorsed the basic aim of the text. Turkey said it did not believe that the paragraph reflected accurately the statement made at the most recent Security Council meetings by the country mentioned. While expressing support for the front-line States, the United Kingdom said it could not accept, among other things, what it described as the inaccurate, one-sided and unjustified reference to the United States.

New Zealand had reservations about the language of one of the preambular paragraphs. Malawi objected to some language or wording formulations of the resolution, as did France which deplored the excessive or inaccurate language in a number of paragraphs, particularly the inappropriate use of language that dealt with areas which it said were properly within the Security Council's competence.

Australia opposed the selective naming of States, particularly in instances in which unproved charges were made; it also opposed endorsement of armed struggle. The Federal Republic of Germany expressed reservations on the same provisions--the last preambular paragraph and paragraph 1.

The Assembly called for support to front-line States in other resolutions. In resolution 38/36 A, it condemned the use of Namibian territory by South Africa to launch attacks against neighbouring States, particularly the aggression against and occupation of Angola, in order to intimidate those States and to prevent them from supporting the legitimate struggle of the Namibian and South African peoples for independence. The Assembly called on the international community urgently to extend support, including military support, to the front-line States to enable them to defend themselves against the aggression; called on States to assist SADC in promoting regional economic co-operation and development; requested the Secretary-General to continue to develop an assistance programme for front-line States; and requested United Nations bodies to co-operate in that programme.

In resolution 38/51, the Assembly urged United Nations bodies to extend material assistance to the front-line States so that they could support the struggle of the people of Namibia for independence and resist the violation of their territorial integrity by South African forces directly or, as in Angola and Mozambique, through puppet traitor groups. The Assembly, in resolution 38/17, condemned South Africa's use of armed terrorist groups to oppose the national liberation movements and Governments of southern Africa, reaffirmed its solidarity with those movements and countries that were victims of South Africa's aggression and destabilization, and called on the international community to support those countries in strengthening their defence capacity and development.

Angola-South Africa armed incidents and South African occupation of Angola

In August 1983, Angola said that South Africa had carried out more air, artillery and infantry attacks, resulting in loss of lives and destruction of property. In addition, South Africa continued to occupy parts of its territory. South Africa rejected those allegations, but acknowledged that it undertook reconnaissance missions at times to monitor hostile activities since Angola allowed its territory to be used as a springboard for attacks against Namibia. Meeting at Angola's request, the Security Council adopted resolution 545(1983) on 20 December, demanding that South Africa withdraw all its occupation forces from Angola.

The General Assembly also denounced South Africa's action against Angola. In three 1983 resolutions (38/17, 38/36 A and 38/39 C), it condemned the aggression against and occupation of that country.

Activities of the Council for Namibia. The aggression launched from Namibian territory against Angola and the continued military occupation of part of Angolan territory by South African forces was condemned by the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence in its Paris Declaration on Namibia.⁽⁶⁾ The Conference expressed support for the people and Government of Angola in efforts to safeguard their national independence and territorial integrity and demanded the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of South African troops from Angola.

The Council for Namibia reported that, since the invasion of Angola by South Africa in 1975, increasing use had been made of special military units for repeated acts of aggression against that country and Zambia, and it named five units involved in those attacks, the biggest and most active of which operated almost entirely inside Angola. For several years, South Africa had been engaged in a systematic campaign of destabilization of the neighbouring States, the Council stated. Using Namibia as a launching pad, it had repeatedly committed acts of aggression against Angola, causing loss of life and extensive destruction of property. Women and children and other innocent civilians had been its constant victims. Despite numerous United Nations resolutions, an estimated 5,500 South African troops had occupied parts of southern Angola for more than a year, as far as 250 kilometres from the Namibian border.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. The Commission on Human Rights, in a resolution of 15 February, (8) demanded that South Africa end its unprovoked acts of aggression and withdraw its occupation forces from Angola. In a resolution of 18 February on human rights violations in southern Africa,(9) the Commission again demanded the immediate withdrawal of those forces (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION (July)

The Economic and Social Council took similar action in resolution 1983/42 of 25 July, condemning South African armed attacks on Namibian refugee camps and settlements in Angola. It requested United Nations organs and international organizations to ensure the protection and safety of those refugees.

Communications (August). In a telegram of 15 August 1983 to the Secretary-General, (10) Angola said that South Africa had carried out more air, artillery and infantry attacks, and had occupied the town of Cangamba; noting the loss of civilian lives and the destruction of public utilities, Angola said that the hypocrisy of certain Western countries, particularly the members of the Security Council, had allowed South Africa to act with impunity. South Africa rejected these allegations in a letter of 22 August,(11) but acknowledged that it undertook reconnaissance flights to monitor hostile activities against Namibia since, South Africa said, Angola allowed its territory to be used as a spring-board for armed attacks there; South Africa added that the Angolan civilian population was reacting to atrocities perpetrated against it by Cuban and SWAPO forces and it was the forces of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA), not of South Africa, which had captured Cangamba.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (November/December)

The General Assembly, in resolution 38/17 of 22 November, strongly condemned the continued occupation of parts of southern Angola and the aggression carried out by South African troops against Cangamba, 500 kilometres from the Namibian border, and demanded the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of those troops. In resolution 38/36 A of 1 December, the Assembly condemned South Africa for its persistent acts of subversion and aggression against Angola, including occupation, and called on it to cease all such acts and withdraw all troops. The Assembly took similar action in resolution 38/39 C of 5 December, demanding that all troops be immediately and unconditionally withdrawn and that South Africa respect the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of independent African States. In addition, the Assembly supported Angola's right to act in accordance with Article 51 of the United Nations Charter (on the right of self-defence) in order to guarantee and safeguard its territorial integrity and national sovereignty.

Communications (December). The Secretary-General or the President of the Security Council received three letters during December 1983 concerning the presence of South African troops in Angola.

Angola, 5 December,(12) forwarded a copy of a White Paper prepared by its Government, listing and describing acts of aggression against it by South Africa from 1975 to 1982.

On 15 December,(13) South Africa forwarded two letters from its Minister for Foreign Affairs. The first, dated 22 November, dealt with the question of implementation of the Security Council's independence plan for Namibia outlined in resolution 435(1978),(14) in particular the electoral system (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III). In the second letter, of 15 December, the Minister said his Government was prepared to begin, on 31 January 1984, a disengagement of forces which from time to time conducted military operations against SWAPO in Angola, on the understanding that this would be reciprocated by Angola, which would assure that its own forces, SWAPO and Cubans there would not exploit the resulting situation.

Angola: on 31 December,(15) transmitted a letter of that date from its President and a list of acts of aggression by South African armed forces against Angola that took place from 16 to 28 December. The President said that, in order to contribute to a peaceful solution to the Namibia problem, Angola would not oppose a 30-day truce beginning 1 February 1984, if the Secretary-General obtained the agreement of SWAPO, and if South Africa withdrew its forces from Angola and promised to initiate the implementation, within 15 days after that period, of resolution 435(1978), without extraneous considerations. As for setting the date for a cease-fire in Namibia between SWAPO and South Africa, the President said the matter involved only those two parties, and the Secretary-General had a mandate from the Council to proceed with the necessary consultations.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

Angola, by a letter of 14 December 1983 to the President of the Security Council,(16) requested an urgent meeting of the Council to deal with the situation resulting from South Africa's occupation since 1981 of parts of southern Angola, including the increase in acts of aggression and violence. The Council held live meetings on Angola's complaint, from 16 to 20 December.

The Council invited Angola, Argentina, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Canada, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Mozambique, Nigeria, Portugal, Somalia, South Africa, Turkey, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia, at their request, to participate in the discussion without vote. The Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples was invited to participate, at his request, in accordance with rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.^a

Addressing the Council on 16 December, Angola said that South Africa's acts of aggression, beginning in 1975, had escalated in 1981 to a full-scale war, and the latest attack had occurred that day. The war was being supported by certain United Nations Members, without whose backing the South African troops would be unable to carry out destabilizing attempts. The Council had acted on Angola's complaints against South Africa live times since 1976 but, due to the negative vote of a permanent member, had failed to take action after a massive invasion in 1981.⁽¹⁷⁾ As a result, five South African battalions were occupying southern Angola. In regard to South Africa's 15 December letter (see above), Angola said Pretoria spoke of a disengagement of forces but not withdrawal and linked that withdrawal to other issues, which Angola rejected, stressing that it would not compromise on its territorial integrity and that South African troop withdrawal was a non-negotiable issue.

South Africa said its security operations in Angola had one objective only—the protection of Namibia against terrorist attacks by SWAPO, which had intimidated its political opponents and had been responsible for the assassination of political leaders and the death of others. South Africa would defend the people of Namibia and would not allow SWAPO bands to establish sanctuaries in Angola. After the United Nations had failed to respond to South Africa's proposals for a peaceful solution, South Africa had attempted to resolve the problem directly with Angola at meetings in December 1982 and February 1983 in Cape Verde. South Africa informed Angola of its position that an overall solution to the problems of the region would require the withdrawal of Cubans from Angola. Despite Angola's rejection of this position, South Africa was still prepared to examine the possibility of peaceful coexistence. According to South Africa, the solution could be found by Angola's ensuring that its territory was not used for launching terrorist attacks against its neighbours.

Many speakers in the Council, including Argentina, Brazil, China, the German Democratic Republic, Guyana, India, Mozambique, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Pakistan, Poland, Somalia, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia, Zambia and Zimbabwe, stressed that South Africa's aggression against Angola violated international law and the United Nations Charter. Yugoslavia said that South Africa, by defying Charter principles and international law, posed a direct challenge to the United Nations and the Council. Noting that previous Council action condemning South Africa had not inhibited it from further aggression, Ethiopia said that South Africa should be told that it would not be allowed to violate international law with impunity.

Argentina, China, Guyana, the Netherlands, Portugal, Turkey, the USSR and Yugoslavia expressed concern over the implications of South Africa's aggression for international peace and security. Many of them believed that the situation endangered the security of the region.

Cuba, Guyana, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Nicaragua, Somalia, Turkey, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zimbabwe said that South Africa's aggression demonstrated its intention to occupy Angola, destabilize that Government or sabotage its economy.

According to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, South Africa had persisted in its aggression, occupying Angolan territory permanently and undermining the country's social and economic progress, and, through its friends, was able to prevent the Council from compelling it to comply with the will of the international community, end its occupation of Namibia and stop its aggression against neighbouring countries. Comparing Angola's situation with its own, Nicaragua said that, in both cases, a major Power was carrying out aggression and destabilization, through its policeman in the area and with the use of mercenary troops; South Africa had steadily increased its aggression, encouraged by statements by the United States. In Turkey's view, South Africa was trying to achieve domination of its neighbours and to eliminate resistance to its policies of racial discrimination and occupation of Namibia. The United Republic of Tanzania believed that the occupation of Angola was intended to destroy its civilian infrastructure and economy and to establish a protective buffer for South Africa's apartheid system.

According to Egypt, South Africa, by supporting the terrorists opposing the Angolan Government, was seeking to impose its colonialist and racist policies, and the main reason for South Africa's continued aggression was its dissatisfaction with the policies of the legitimate Government of ^aRule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

Angola. Mozambique believed that South Africa's attacks were due to its view that the attainment of independence by African countries threatened its apartheid policies and its very survival.

Botswana said South Africa's attack was an attempt to intimidate Angola and to deny its people the right to choose its political system. Pakistan and Turkey also said South Africa was using intimidation to carry out its policies in southern Africa.

Cuba, Guyana, Nicaragua, the USSR and Zambia expressed the view that the situation was aggravated by the support that the United States or certain other Western countries provided to South Africa. The USSR said that South Africa was benefiting from their patronage and that they were impeding the Council's adoption of effective measures against the aggressor; South Africa and the United States were attempting to cover up their imperialist policy in Africa by claims that the conflict in southern Africa represented an East-West confrontation.

According to the Netherlands, Zambia and Zimbabwe, South Africa had not provided a satisfactory explanation for its action against Angola. Zambia said that South Africa had no valid reason whatsoever for its occupation, but only wanted to perpetuate its occupation of Namibia and the apartheid system. In Zimbabwe's opinion, South Africa's explanation was unacceptable to the oppressed masses of Namibia and offensive to the peoples of Africa, since Angola posed no threat to South Africa and the SWAPO freedom fighters were not in Angola but in Namibia.

Many countries, including China, Cuba, Ethiopia, France, the German Democratic Republic, Guyana, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Poland, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zimbabwe, believed that the offer of South Africa for a disengagement of its troops in Angola was a manoeuvre to link the issue with the removal of Cuban troops from Angola or to disguise its real intentions. China said that South Africa, while stepping up its aggression, had feigned the easing of tension by proposing so-called disengagement in Angola, and was attempting to legitimize its occupation of Namibia. Cuba said that the problem was not the presence of its forces in Angola, which were there under a sovereign agreement between two independent Governments, but the South African occupation of parts of Angola; it added that its forces would remain until there was no longer danger to Angolan security. Also stressing that the problem centred on the occupation of Angola by South African forces, France regretted that South Africa had again linked the independence of Namibia with a matter which was exclusively germane to Angola's sovereignty. Nigeria said Angola could not legitimately be held hostage to a settlement in Namibia.

The German Democratic Republic said the latest attacks revealed South Africa's intention to deceive world public opinion by statements of alleged readiness to conduct a dialogue with its neighbours and to conclude a non-aggression treaty. India also felt that South Africa was attempting to divert attention to issues that were either fabrications or had no direct bearing on the question under consideration. According to Pakistan, the South African disengagement offer was most likely tactical in nature and limited in objective, and it made conditions which, if accepted, would amount to the United Nations endorsing South Africa's lawless actions.

Malta noted South Africa's record of delay and prevarication, and hoped that its offer marked the beginning of a change of attitude; however, it regretted that the offer coincided with the latest military offensive against Angola. The Netherlands expressed reservations about the wording of South Africa's offer, which it said was imprecise regarding whether South Africa intended to withdraw its forces completely from Angola; if accomplished, that would be a significant step towards avoiding deeper turmoil.

Argentina, Brazil, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Poland, Somalia, Turkey, the USSR, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia expressed the view that the Council should adopt measures against South Africa under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter if it failed to withdraw from Angola.

Calling on the Council to impose comprehensive, mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said that South Africa had continuously attempted to fabricate pretexts to justify its aggression and, through its friends, to prevent the Council from adopting measures which might compel it to comply with the will of the international community, end its occupation of Namibia and stop its aggression against neighbouring countries. Noting that the Council's repeated condemnation had been ineffective and its call for compensation to Angola ignored, Somalia called on the Council to fulfil its responsibility for restoring international peace and security by adopting further sanctions against South Africa. Poland said the Council should carry out its primary responsibility for restoring international peace and security, and not remain indifferent in the face of South Africa's threat to continue military actions against Angola.

Mauritania said the Council should call on South Africa's allies to withhold all technological, financial and political support for South Africa's occupation of Angolan territory, and it stressed the responsibility of the Western Powers to restrain South Africa and to help in the reconstruction of Angola.

Portugal and Somalia were among those stressing the responsibility of the United Nations in preserving international peace and security. Portugal said that the need for a just settlement was essential because of the legal, political and moral imperatives of United Nations principles, and it added that the Council needed to reaffirm its belief in those principles by supporting the legitimate demands of Angola.

The Chairman of the Committee on colonial countries said that the latest acts of aggression revealed South Africa's plan to block all avenues towards a negotiated settlement for the independence of Namibia, adding that it was incumbent on the international community to redress and prevent the recurrence of such criminal acts, through the application of the provisions of Chapter VII of the Charter.

On 20 December, the Council adopted resolution 545(1983).

The Security Council,

Having heard the statement of the Permanent Representative of Angola to the United Nations,

Deeply concerned at the continued occupation of parts of southern Angola by the South African military forces in flagrant violation of the principles and objectives of the Charter of the United Nations and of international law,

Gravely concerned at the massive loss of human life and extensive destruction of property brought about by the continuing attacks against and military occupation of the territory of Angola,

Recalling its resolutions 387/(1976), 428(1978), 447(1979), 454(1979) and 475(1980),

Bearing in mind that in accordance with Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter, all Member States shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

Conscious of the need to take effective measures to maintain international peace and security in view of the continued violation of the Charter by South Africa,

1. Strongly condemns South Africa's continued military occupation of parts of southern Angola which constitutes a flagrant violation of international law and of the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola;

2. Declares that the continued illegal military occupation of the territory of Angola is a flagrant violation of the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Angola and endangers international peace and security;

3. Demands that South Africa should unconditionally withdraw forthwith all its occupation forces from the territory of Angola and cease all violations against that State and henceforth scrupulously respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola;

4. Considers, moreover, that Angola is entitled to appropriate redress for any material damage it has suffered;

5. Culls upon all Member States to desist from any action which would undermine the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of Angola;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to monitor the implementation of the present resolution and report to the Security Council accordingly;

7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 545(1983)

20 December 1983 Meeting 2508 14-0-1

14-nation draft (S/16226).

Sponsors: Angola, Botswana, Guyana, Jordan, Malta, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Togo, United Republic of Tanzania, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Meeting numbers. SC 2504-2508.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: China, France, Guyana, Jordan, Malta, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Poland, Togo, USSR, United Kingdom, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

In explanation of vote, the United States, stressing its deep concern with the escalating violence in southern Africa, particularly cross-border violence, said that its policy was based on the belief that negotiated solutions were both possible and essential and it would do nothing to jeopardize the delicate point in the ongoing negotiating process, in which the United States was playing an active role; South Africa's commitment to begin a disengagement of its forces from Angola represented a new step in the process which could contribute to negotiations on southern Africa and underscored the validity of the involvement of the Western contact group (Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States-which were attempting to open a dialogue with South Africa on Namibian independence).

The United Kingdom, though expressing support for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Angola, had reservations on the last preambular paragraph and paragraph 2, which it believed did not fall within the provisions of Chapter VII of the Charter or constituted a finding or decision which had specific consequences under the Charter; in addition, the United Kingdom found the wording of paragraph 2 unfortunate and pointed out that it should in no way be taken as a justification for further intervention by foreign forces in the internal affairs of Angola.

Speaking of the resolution as a whole, Guyana said it would have preferred language that was more categorical and unequivocal, and it noted that paragraph 4, in particular, represented a retreat from the terms of Security Council resolution 387(1976),(18) in which South Africa had been called on to meet the just claims of Angola for full compensation for the damage and destruction inflicted on it.

Lesotho-South Africa armed incidents and dispute

In 1983, both the Security Council and the General Assembly considered the situation between Lesotho and South Africa, following a December 1982 attack by South African forces on Lesotho.⁽¹⁹⁾ In response to a December 1982 Council resolution, ⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General sent a mission to Lesotho to determine that country's needs for international assistance. By resolution 535(1983) adopted in June 1983, the Council endorsed the mission's report and requested Member States, international organizations and financial institutions to assist Lesotho in those areas identified in the report (10 projects, including strengthening Lesotho's police services, expansion of hospital and health facilities and a new international airport). Throughout the year, Lesotho and South Africa continued to exchange charges against each other. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) continued to assist South African refugees living in Lesotho (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XXI).

Communications (February-June). On 8 February 1983,⁽²¹⁾ South Africa transmitted a letter of that date from its Foreign Minister, rejecting as one-sided the Security Council's 1982 resolution⁽²⁰⁾ by which the Council had condemned South Africa for its aggression against Lesotho and demanded that it pay compensation for the damage. Stating that Lesotho pursued a policy of harbouring terrorists and should bear the financial responsibility for damages resulting from that policy, the Minister also expressed his Government's willingness to conclude non-aggression pacts with its neighbours.

Lesotho, in a letter of 28 March,⁽²²⁾ said South Africa had instigated a series of armed attacks and acts of sabotage in Lesotho on 26 and 27 March. On 30 March,⁽²³⁾ South Africa transmitted the text of a message sent by its Foreign Affairs Department to the Foreign Ministry of Lesotho on 28 March, rejecting Lesotho's charges and adding that South Africa would not be held responsible for the actions of dissident elements within Lesotho. In regard to the Council's 29 June consideration of Lesotho's complaint (see below), South Africa, by a letter of that date,⁽²⁴⁾ forwarded a joint press statement issued on 3 June after a meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the two countries, in which they affirmed their agreement that neither would permit any elements to use their territory to plan subversion against the other and that they expected that unnecessary traffic delays at border posts would be cleared up that day.

Report of the mission to Lesotho. As a first step towards carrying out the Security Council's 1982 resolution,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General dispatched a mission to Lesotho from 11 to 16 January 1983. The mission's report,⁽²⁵⁾ dated 9 February, contained an account of its consultations with the Government concerning Lesotho's need for international assistance. The report listed 10 projects, at an estimated cost of $46 million, for which international assistance was sought. Those projects (including strengthening police services, establishing a fire brigade, improving health care, constructing a maize silo, an afforestation programme and funding for an airport) were aimed at providing for the emergency needs arising directly from the South African attack of 9 December 1982⁽¹⁹⁾ and for the urgent needs arising from Lesotho's vulnerability to political and economic pressures pursuant to its refugee policies (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter III, under "Economic assistance-Lesotho").

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

When the Security Council met to consider the mission's report on 29 June, Lesotho, addressing the Council at its invitation, expressed appreciation of the report and endorsed its contents. In addition to acts of aggression and destabilization against it, Lesotho had been struggling for a long time under difficult economic circumstances to fulfil its obligation to receive and provide for the welfare of South African refugees, including a number of economic pressures applied by South Africa in an attempt to force Lesotho to close its borders to the victims fleeing apartheid. Despite the Council's 1982 resolution, South Africa had continued its attacks against Lesotho in 1983, the most recent of which occurred on 26 June. In addition, a deliberate slow-down in the flow of traffic between the two countries had been engineered by South Africa to exacerbate the economic difficulties of Lesotho and undermine its political stability. Under these circumstances, Lesotho stressed the importance it attached to the new international airport which would provide it with an alternative route to the outside world. Lesotho urged that the United Nations execute the provisions in the mission's report.

On 29 June, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 535(1983), prepared during consultations among its members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 527(1982),

Having examined the report of the Mission to Lesotho appointed by the Secretary-General in accordance with resolution 527(1982),

Having heard the statement of the Charge d'affaires of the Permanent Mission of the Kingdom of Lesotho expressing the deep concern of his Government at the frequent aggressive acts by South Africa against the territorial integrity and independence of Lesotho,

Reaffirming its opposition to the system of apartheid and the right of all countries to receive refugees fleeing from apartheid oppression,

Convinced of the importance of international solidarity with Lesotho,

1. Commends the Government of Lesotho for its steadfast opposition to apartheid and its generosity to the South African refugees;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for having arranged to send a mission to Lesotho to ascertain the assistance needed;

3. Endorses the report of the Mission to Lesotho under resolution 527(1982);

4. Requests Member States, international organizations and financial institutions to assist Lesotho in the fields identified in the report of the Mission to Lesotho;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to give the matter of assistance to Lesotho his continued attention and to keep the Security Council informed;

6. Decides to remain seized of the question.

Security Council resolution 535(1983)

29 June 1983 Meeting 2455 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/15846).
Meeting number. SC 2455.

Communications (July-October). On 1 July 1983,(26) South Africa forwarded to the Security Council President a letter of the same date from its Foreign Minister. He stated that South Africa rejected the Council's inferences that South Africa was involved in frequent aggressive acts against Lesotho or that terrorist groups operating from Lesotho were synonymous with refugees fleeing from apartheid; in its view, Lesotho was again engaged in a charade calculated to solicit foreign aid to prop up its unelected Government against internal opposition.

From August to October, the Secretary-General received five letters from Lesotho and South Africa. The Foreign Minister of Lesotho appealed to the Secretary-General on 17 August(27) to use his good offices to urge South Africa to exercise restraint on its demands concerning the return of certain refugees whom South Africa claimed were a security threat and to lift restrictions on the movement of people and arms to Lesotho; should those efforts fail, Lesotho would request the international community to help it deal with the refugees, currently estimated at 3,000. On 7 September,(28) Lesotho forwarded a 2 September letter from its Foreign Minister who, thanking the Secretary-General for a visit by his representative, said South Africa continued to cause unacceptable economic suffering for Lesotho's citizens and a deterioration of the security situation; therefore Lesotho and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) had reluctantly agreed to begin resettling in third countries some of those refugees residing in Lesotho, in an attempt to achieve normalization of Lesotho-South Africa relations and to improve the welfare of the refugees.

On 11 October,(29) the South African Foreign Minister denied Lesotho's charges of 2 September and expressed regret that Lesotho had made those charges at a time when the two countries were holding official talks to address certain bilateral problems, especially security issues, including certain border control measures which would be relaxed when South Africa's security concerns were met. On 19 October,(30) South Africa forwarded a message of 18 October from its Foreign Minister to his counterpart in Lesotho, stating that Lesotho's recent address to the General Assembly contained false allegations and inaccuracies, and could further retard progress towards mutually constructive relations.

Lesotho, on 20 October,(31) forwarded its Foreign Minister's reply to South Africa. Lesotho reiterated its allegations that South Africa was allowing its territory to be used for launching attacks against Lesotho and that South African border controls were causing suffering among the peaceful and law-abiding Lesotho citizens, and it denied South African charges concerning the reason some refugees were leaving Lesotho.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In several 1983 resolutions, the General Assembly took action related to the Lesotho-South Africa dispute. In resolutions 37/17 and 38/39 C, it condemned South Africa for its acts of destabilization, armed aggression and economic blockade against Lesotho and urged the international community to extend maximum assistance to Lesotho to enable it to fulfil its international humanitarian obligations towards refugees and to use its influence on South Africa to desist from its terrorist acts.

In resolution 38/215, the Assembly outlined measures for economic assistance to Lesotho and, in resolution 38/95, dealt with assistance to South African student refugees.

Mozambique-South Africa armed incidents

In 1983, Mozambique addressed three letters to the Secretary-General charging South Africa with attacks against its territory, The Economic and Social Council in July (resolution 1983/42) and the General Assembly in November (resolution 38/17) and December (38/39 C) condemned South Africa's actions.

Communications. On 25 May,(32) Mozambique stated that, two days earlier, approximately 16 South African aircraft had bombed an area near Maputo, killing six civilians and wounding 40 others; it added that South Africa was using indiscriminate violence against neighbouring countries to divert the attention of the international community from the conflict in South Africa. On 26 May, the German Democratic Republic(33) and Pakistan(34) forwarded statements by spokesmen of their Foreign Ministries condemning the 23 May air raid. The German Democratic Republic said it was further evidence of South Africa's aggressive destabilization policy against the free peoples of southern Africa. Pakistan called on the international community to ensure that South Africa would not repeat such acts.

On 26 August,(35) Mozambique forwarded a 24 August communiqué in which the Government said that a group of armed bandits, as part of South Africa's destabilization strategy, had attacked a mining installation on 21 August, killing two Soviet geologists and two Mozambican workers, and kidnapping 24 Soviet geologists, two Mozambican women and two Mozambican children. On 18 October,(36) Mozambique said that on the previous day three explosive devices placed by South African agents in a residential building in Maputo had exploded and wounded at least five people; this attack, like most others, had occurred at a time when South Africa was experiencing internal problems.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1983/42 of 25 July, strongly condemned the blatant aggression of South Africa in its 23 May bombing attack on Mozambique and the frequent acts of destabilization carried out by it against the frontline States, which had resulted in heavy loss of life, the creation of large numbers of refugees and massive destruction.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 38/17 of 22 November, the General Assembly also condemned South Africa for that bombing attack and the acts of territorial encroachment and espionage against Mozambique, as well as its attack on 17 October against the office of the African National Congress at Maputo.

Questions involving the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

In 1983, the Security Council met for two series of meetings (in March/April and in August) at the request of Chad which claimed that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had committed aggression against its territory. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya rejected the charges on both occasions. After the first series of meetings, the Council on 6 April called on the parties to settle their differences peacefully, based on the United Nations principle of respect for States' political independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity. In that regard, the Council also appealed to both parties to make use of the mechanism of the Organization of African Unity (OAU).

Egypt also claimed that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had violated its territory. The latter responded that Egypt was involved in hostile action against it.

Chad-Libyan Arab Jamahiriya dispute

Communications (March). In March 1983, the President of the Security Council received four letters concerning the Chad-Libyan Arab Jamahiriya dispute. On 16 March,(1) Chad requested an urgent meeting of the Council to consider the serious situation prevailing in Chad as a result of what it called the occupation by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya of the Chadian territory known as the "Aouzou Strip" and of repeated acts of aggression by that country. On 17 March,(2) Chad transmitted a message by its President, Hissein Habré, stating that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya was stepping up its military attacks on northern Chad with the aim of expanding the occupied zone and of imposing a new government on Chad, and calling on the international community to end the illegal occupation.

Denying Chad's allegations, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, also on 17 March,(3) stated that the Aouzou sector was an integral part of its territory, and that the charges constituted interference in its internal affairs and were aimed at diverting world public opinion from the fighting in Chad between the rebel forces controlling the capital, led by Hissein Habré, and the forces of the legitimate Government led by Goukouni Weddey.

Chad responded on 21 March,(4) transmitting the text of a government memorandum concerning what it called the occupation of 150,000 square kilometres of Tibesti (northern Chad) and reviewing its historical claim to the area under dispute.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March/April)

The Security Council considered Chad's complaint on 22 and 31 March and on 6 April. At their request, Benin, Chad, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Ethiopia, Gabon, Ghana, Guinea, Iran, the Ivory Coast, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Niger, Senegal, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Republic of Cameroon were invited to participate without the right to vote.

On 31 March, Chad submitted a draft resolution(s) by which the Council would have requested the parties to settle their dispute forthwith and by peaceful means, noted that they were willing to settle the dispute peacefully, appealed to them to make use of the machinery available for doing so, particularly through OAU, and remained seized of the question. Most provisions of the draft were subsequently included in the Council's statement on the matter (see below).

Addressing the Council, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Chad summarized Chad's historical argument for its claim to the Aouzou sector and said that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya's occupation had become effective in 1973 and was becoming increasingly flagrant. The situation not only endangered the existence of Chad as a sovereign State, but it could seriously endanger the peace and security of that part of Africa. Chad had called on the Council because it desired to resolve the problem peacefully and to obtain assistance in recovering its territorial integrity. It was requesting that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya withdraw completely. At a later meeting, Chad said that the problem was of a juridical nature and suggested that the Council refer the parties to the International Court of Justice (ICJ). Both bilateral and regional efforts had proved futile so far to find a peaceful solution because the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had refused to discuss the substance of the problem, namely the occupation, Chad added.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya did not see any reason for convening the Council because, in its view, the letter submitted by the delegation of Hissein Habré did not emanate from the legitimate Government of Chad; the legitimate Government recognized by OAU was that of Goukouni Weddey. Since 1966, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had attempted to effect a national reconciliation between warring factions in Chad to protect that country's interests. Mr. Habré had refused to participate in such attempts and had formed an illegal Government which OAU refused to recognize. For the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the question of Chad had been resolved by the 1979 Lagos Agreement, which established the Government of National Unity and was signed by most of the Chadian political group leaders including Mr. Habré. In response to Mr. Goukouni, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had sent armed forces to assist in putting an end to the rebellion led by Mr. Habré, who received the help of imperialist forces. Affirming that there had never been any sovereignty over the Aouzou sector by Chad, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya rejected any claim to its land and any consideration of that issue; if there were a border dispute, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya was not against discussing this with any State, it said. A good-offices commission formed by OAU to negotiate between the two countries on any bilateral dispute was still in existence, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya pointed out. It affirmed that when there was a national régime in Chad representing all its people and recognized by OAU, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya would be ready to consider any dispute with it. It was ready to begin immediate talks with the legitimate Government of Mr. Goukouni.

Chad responded that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had evaded the substance of the problem, namely the occupation. In reference to the description of the Chad Government as rebels, it pointed out that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had sent a delegation to N'Djamena in March 1983 to discuss State matters with Chad. At that time, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had stipulated three conditions to be met before it would hand over political opponents to Chad: Chad must proclaim itself an Arab Islamic Republic, even though it was a non-religious republic; Chad must form a strategic alliance with the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya in order to destabilize the neighbouring countries of the Niger, Nigeria and the United Republic of Cameroon; and the current frontier between the two countries would be obliterated. Those conditions were rejected.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya stated that it had never imposed any conditions on Chad or on any other country, and that it respected the territorial integrity of Chad. It warned of a conspiracy by imperialism, joined by Egypt and the Sudan, against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

During the Council's debate, most of the 24 speakers stressed the need to find a peaceful solution. The majority suggested that OAU was the appropriate body for solving the dispute or that a solution could be found within the regional framework. Benin, China, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, France, Ghana, Guinea, Jordan, Malta, the Netherlands, Poland, the Syrian Arab Republic and Zimbabwe made such proposals. China, for example, expressed hope that the two countries would settle their differences through peaceful negotiations and it appreciated the efforts made by OAU in that regard. In Ghana's view, the correct modality for addressing disputes between African countries was within OAU, and it believed the Council should refer the issue back to that body. Zimbabwe said it was encouraged by the desire of the parties to seek a peaceful solution to the dispute and by their willingness to avail themselves of the regional mechanisms for settlement.

A group of countries, including Benin, Iran, Jordan, Nicaragua, the Niger and Togo, believed that bilateral negotiations should be initiated as soon as possible. In addition to proposing that the OAU mechanism could be useful, Benin invited the parties to undertake a dialogue and pointed out that they would be given an opportunity to do so in June at the OAU summit (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 21-23 June). The Niger was grateful that the two countries had expressed their willingness to resort to dialogue. According to Togo, the territorial dispute could be settled through bilateral negotiations, with or without the mediation of third parties. Jordan hoped that Chad would respond positively to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya's offer to hold discussions, and it called on the two to exercise restraint in the interest of regional peace and stability. Poland welcomed the statement by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya expressing its readiness to discuss the border dispute on both a bilateral and regional level. Egypt, on the other hand, said the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya did not demonstrate any readiness to resolve the issue, despite the forthcoming position of Chad.

A number of countries—France, Gabon, Guinea, the Ivory Coast, the Niger, the Sudan, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Zaïre—felt that a solution should be in accordance with the principle of respect for the national borders existing at the time the countries achieved independence, a principle that had been adopted by OAU in 1964. Ethiopia, France, Guinea, the Netherlands, Nicaragua and Zaïre were among those which said the problem was essentially a territorial or border dispute. In the Netherlands' view, the Council should distinguish between the border dispute and the legitimacy of the Government; the Council could call on the Governments concerned to solve the issue by peaceful means, but the choice of a government was the sole prerogative of the people of the country. Guinea and the United Republic of Cameroon expressed a similar opinion.

Gabon, the Netherlands, Senegal and Zaïre called for an end of foreign intervention in Chad. Gabon appealed to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to withdraw its troops, thereby enabling Chad to extend its sovereignty over its entire territory. France, Gabon, the Sudan and Zaïre said the current situation could lead to a threat to the peace and security of the region.

Several countries—France, Gabon, Guinea, Senegal, the Sudan and the United Republic of Cameroon—supported Chad's claim to the territory under dispute. Senegal said that, as a member of the OAU ad hoc committee set up to seek a peaceful solution in the current dispute, it had studied the historical facts and juridical documents left by the colonial Powers and had determined that Chad had legitimate reasons to claim sovereignty over the Aouzou Strip. According to the United Republic of Cameroon, the problem had been clearly presented to the Council by Chad. Democratic Yemen and Iran took the opposite view and supported the claim of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to the territory in question.

Among those which stated that the problem had originated through imperialist designs were Benin, Democratic Yemen, Iran, Poland and the Syrian Arab Republic. Benin believed that the Council had been seized of the problem in an attempt by the current leaders in N'Djamena, Chad, to legitimize their authority and as a result of the manoeuvres of international imperialism, which was waging a campaign against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. Iran said some countries were trying to undermine the position of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya in OAU and they desired to see that body weakened; in addition, some countries were trying to justify an increase in military aid to countries in the region. According to the Syrian Arab Republic, imperialist circles, principally the United States, had engaged in political incitement against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, to the extent of attempting to cast doubt on its sovereignty over its own territory; the willingness of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to enter into consultations with Chad over the issue indicated that the crisis was artificial.

Similarly, Democratic Yemen and Nicaragua felt that the current situation was linked to the United States campaign against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. Democratic Yemen added that the move confirmed that the United States had resorted to maligning the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by prompting its supporters in the region to make groundless complaints, in an attempt to divert the attention of the international community from the main source of tension-imperialism headed by the United States. Nicaragua said the Council did not have a substantive role to play in the territorial dispute because there was no evidence that the situation on the border was posing any threat; the current difficulties could be part of the United States campaign against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

Many speakers made proposals for Council action. Egypt, Senegal, the Sudan and Zaïre said it should call on the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to abide by international law and withdraw its troops from Chadian territory. In the view of the Sudan, the Council needed to take such action in order to fulfil its obligation to maintain international peace and security by safeguarding the independence and sovereignty of Chad. In addition to urging the Council to call for the withdrawal of Libyan troops, Zaïre suggested that a neutral force be sent to the Aouzou Strip to preserve peace and security pending a settlement.

Ethiopia and Malta urged the Council to exercise restraint on this issue. Ethiopia said the Council must use caution and respect OAU efforts to find a solution by calling on the parties to settle their disputes by peaceful means. Noting that OAU would discuss the issue in June, Malta said the Council should refrain from taking a definite stand until OAU efforts to find a solution at the regional level had been concluded.

France, the Ivory Coast, the Netherlands and Zaire suggested that the two countries submit the problem to ICJ. The Ivory Coast said the Council could not stand idle in the face of the dispute and adjourn without recommending the use of one of the means for peaceful settlement provided by the Charter, while the Netherlands expressed a preference for an explicit recommendation that the parties submit their dispute to ICJ. France said the Council could play a constructive role by appealing to them through its President; on the basis of that appeal, OAU could resume its mediation efforts with a view to a final settlement.

Following the debate and consultations among Council members, the President, on their behalf, issued the following statement on 6 April.(6)

"The Security Council has heard and taken note of the statements made by the Foreign Minister of Chad, and by the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, in the debate on the letter dated 16 March 1983 from the representative of Chad.

"The members of the Council express their concern that the differences between Chad and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya should not deteriorate and therefore call on the parties to settle these differences without undue delay and by peaceful means, on the basis of the relevant principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and the Charter of the Organization of African Unity, which demand respect for political independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

"In this connection, the members of the Council have taken note with appreciation of the willingness expressed by both parties to discuss their differences and to resolve the peacefully and urge both sides to refrain from any actions which could aggravate the current situation.

"The members of the Council also note that the Organization of African Unity, the regional organization, is already seized of this matter. They appeal to both parties to make fullest use of the mechanism available within the regional organization for the peaceful settlement of disputes, including the Good Offices Committee established by the Organization of African Unity and of those provided in Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations."

Communications (April-August). During April to August 1983, Chad and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya exchanged further charges concerning the border dispute, in letters addressed to the President of the Security Council.

On 8 April,(7) Chad said that while the Council was considering its complaint against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Libyan aircraft were overflying Chadian territory near the trail formerly used to supply Libyan troops in northern Chad, in violation of the statement adopted two days earlier by the Council. Responding on 12 April,(8) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya rejected those allegations and stressed that its aircraft did not over-fly any part of Chad's territory and that it would continue to work for the achievement of national reconciliation in Chad under the legitimate Government of Goukouni Weddey. Chad made a further similar charge on 19 April,(9) stating that on 16 April Libyan aircraft overflew northern Chad. On 19 May,(10) Chad said that a week earlier Libyan army units attacked the Chad National Armed Forces in the Ounianga-Kébir region causing great loss of life and was extending its attacks throughout the northern region of the country. Reaffirming on 23 May(11) its readiness to co-operate with African States for the achievement of peace and security in Chad, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya rejected Chad's charges and said it had no connection with events in that country; what was occurring there was a war between the legitimate Government and the rebels under Hissein Habré.

Chad forwarded a 23 June message from its President,(12) who said the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had launched a large-scale operation against Chad that day, and appealed to the Council President to do everything possible to come to the aid of Chad and to ensure the restoration of its legitimate rights, in particular the right to live in peace. On 27 June,(13) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya rejected the accusations, reaffirmed its desire to see the security and stability of Chad respected and reiterated that the ongoing conflict in Chad was among nationals of Chad and in Chadian territory.

On 5 July,(14) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya informed the Council President that its head of State had on 29 June sent a letter to the current OAU Chairman, in which he reaffirmed his country's commitment to neutrality towards the ongoing internal conflict in Chad and proposed that OAU send a fact-finding mission to the town of Faya-Largeau to establish that all allegations about Libyan intervention in Chad were untrue and were but a justification of intervention by certain colonialist Powers and African States in the internal affairs of Chad. In a 20 July statement,(15) a spokesman for the Bureau for Foreign Liaison of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya asserted that a recent radio statement by the Minister of Information under Mr. Habré revealed the plan of aggression being implemented by him at the behest of imperialists, reactionaries and Zionists, which involved introducing foreign forces into Chad from the United States, France and Zaire, thus posing a threat to the peace, security and territorial integrity of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya; consequently, it reserved its right to take any measure that would enable it to thwart the plan.

Referring to that statement on 27 July,(16) Chad noted OAU's June endorsement of the Council's 6 April statement by reactivating its ad hoc committee on the border dispute, and said that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya was provoking a new civil war in Chad and was trying to justify itself by asserting that the Aouzou region was an inseparable part of Libyan territory. In a message of 29 July,(17) the Foreign Minister of Chad rejected Libyan charges that Chad was attempting to settle the border dispute by force and stated that Libyan aggression was forcing Chad to defend itself; nevertheless, Chad hoped to obtain a settlement of the dispute, which would require that the Libyan Government put an end to its direct interference in the internal affairs of Chad. In a 31 July message,(18) the President of Chad said that Faya-Largeau had been liberated the previous day from Libyan forces by the Chad National Armed Forces and some 40 Libyan soldiers had been taken prisoner; since then, the Libyan Air Force had bombed the town, causing human and material losses. In two further messages, dated 2 August,(19) the President of Chad charged the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya with stepping up aerial bombing of Chad, specifically of Faya-Largeau which had been razed to the ground, and requested an urgent meeting of the Council to consider the situation.

In a statement of 1 August,(20) the Bureau for Foreign Liaison of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, rejecting charges by the United States that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya was attacking Chad, stated that the extension of fighting to Faya-Largeau as a result of United States intervention and French arms constituted a threat to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya; it considered that the United States should end its intervention and support to the rebel régime in order to enable OAU to find a settlement to the Chad problem. On 3 August,(21) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya rejected Chad's 29 and 31 July allegations and charged the United States and France with direct intervention in the affairs of Chad and of supporting the rebellion, thereby endangering peace and security in the region.

The President of Chad, in a 4 August message,(22) stated that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had bombed the town of Oum Chalouba that day and the day before, causing loss of human lives, thus escalating its invasion. On 11 August,(23) Chad submitted photographs as evidence of its statements about Libyan intervention.

In addition to Chad and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, four other countries sent letters to either the Secretary-General or the President of the Council concerning the situation in Chad.

On 8 August,(24) the USSR transmitted a TASS statement of 4 August stating that the USSR condemned certain acts in the area, such as United States military aircraft bringing forces into Chad, the increased flow of American and French weapons to that country, and the movement of United States vessels to the region in preparation to intervene. Responding to that letter and the 5 July letter from the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya,(14) the United States on 10 August(25) said that those statements were designed to divert attention from the fact that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, which was equipped by the USSR, was primarily responsible for tension and conflict in Chad and the surrounding area; at the request of Chad, the United States had provided logistical support in monitoring the situation, to help that country defend itself.

The Sudan, on 18 August,(26) said that 116 Sudanese nationals captured by Chad at Oum Chalouba had been victims of Libyan designs and exploitation and had been forced to participate in the war which the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya was waging against Chad.

On 19 August,(27) the Congo transmitted the Declaration of Brazzaville on the situation in Chad, adopted on 16 August by the heads of State and Government of Central Africa. By that text, they requested the OAU Chairman to establish contact with all the parties concerned with a view to achieving a cease-fire, the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Chad, and prohibition of all countries from interfering in its internal affairs.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (August)

Convening at the request of Chad,(19) the Security Council met on 3, 11, 12, 16 and 31 August 1983. Benin, Chad, the Congo, Egypt, Guinea, Iran, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Niger, Senegal, Somalia, the Sudan and the United Republic of Cameroon were invited at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

Opening the debate, Chad said that since 31 July the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had stepped up its aggression against Chad's territory, bombing Faya-Largeau and causing many civilian casualties. Flouting the Council's 6 April statement, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had expanded its attacks by occupying successively six eastern towns, which Chadian forces had regained. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya's covert intention was to destabilize the Government, perpetuate its illegal 'occupation of the Aouzou Strip, annex the entire country and use it as a base for aggression against other neighbouring States. In order to arrive at a peaceful settlement, Chad reiterated its willingness to maintain talks with the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya which it said had been assisted by the USSR in establishing a large and sophisticated military arsenal. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya remained a major obstacle to the work of national reconciliation among the people of Chad and to its socio-economic development.

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and Co-operation of Chad, speaking on 11 August, said that over the previous few days Libyan aggression against his country had increased with bombing, artillery and ground attacks, resulting in more than 200 deaths. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had never concealed its intention to occupy all of Chad and thus force it to merge with the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. Its interference in the internal affairs of Chad was demonstrated by its attempts to obstruct Chad's participation in international conferences. Thanks to the defence capacity that had been provided by friendly countries, Chad had been able to shoot down a Libyan bomber in Chadian territory and capture its pilot. The Lagos Agreement of August 1979, cited by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya as the foundation for the legal Government of Chad, had been rendered invalid. The Secretary reiterated Chad's request that the Council condemn the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya for its armed aggression, order it to cease its attacks and withdraw its forces, and call on it to end its interference in Chad's affairs.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya denied that it had intervened in Chad's affairs and that it had sent planes or troops there. It declared its neutrality towards Chad and proposed that OAU send a fact-finding mission there to verify the situation. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya believed that the best solution was to leave the matter to OAU, whose Chairman was currently undertaking consultations on the matter. Reiterating its commitment to the restoration of peace in Chad and to reconciliation among the various factions in that country, in accordance with the 1979 Lagos Agreement, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said that it was ready to settle any problems with the legitimate Government of Chad under Goukouni Weddey. The cause of the deterioration in the situation in Chad was foreign intervention, especially by the United States and France, which were airlifting equipment and military advisers to Hissein Habré's forces. The sending of French troops could not be viewed within the framework of the treaty of co-operation between France (the former colonial Power) and Chad because it was nothing but military intervention in the civil war. In addition, Zaïre had sent 2,000 troops to support Mr. Habré and Sudanese forces and Belgian and French mercenaries were transported to Chad with the help of the United States. Stating that the presence of imperialist and colonialist forces in an African country represented a direct threat to itself and its neighbours, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya called for the immediate termination of intervention in Chad and for the withdrawal of Zaïrian and other forces and of United States and French military advisers.

Zaïre said its forces were in Chad at the request of OAU and the legal Government of Mr. Habré, and were involved because external forces committed aggression against what OAU considered was a legitimate Government. France said it had responded to Chad's request, as provided by the 1976 co-operation agreement between the two countries and in conformity with international law enshrined in the Charter, to assist that country in exercising its right to self-defence. The United States said it had joined some other countries in responding to Chad's appeal for help in its self-defence, but the Sudan denied the Libyan charge that its forces were involved in Chad.

Most speakers acknowledged that the situation had deteriorated, but differing opinions were expressed about the causes and the solution to the problem.

The USSR, remarking on the airlift of military equipment from France and an increasing flow of United States weapons to Chad, said the situation involved ever more interference by certain Western countries which wanted to set up a new imperialist bridgehead in Africa and thus establish their sphere of influence, a policy which had failed. China said the situation had been further complicated as a result of super-Power meddling. According to Benin, the conflict, with the participation of non-African forces, had been foreseeable following Mr. Habré's seizure of power; Chad's problems were those inherited from colonization and the ills of young independence. Iran said that United States and French military assistance to Chad had only contributed to the conflict, and it hoped that some super-Powers that always found it in their interests to create conflicts in the area would refrain from contributing to this one.

Guyana regretted the manner in which developments were being manipulated by outside forces whose interests were unrelated to those of Chad or to Africa as a whole. Similarly, Pakistan believed that external interference, in disregard for respect for Chad's political independence and territorial integrity, was the central issue constituting the international dimension of the crisis, and that this issue, if drawn into the East-West confrontation, would become insoluble. Zimbabwe said the situation had escalated, mainly as a result of the increasing involvement of external factors and forces in the area, and the involvement undermined attempts at national reconciliation and frustrated OAU efforts to bring about a peaceful settlement.

A group of countries, including China, the Congo, France, Guinea, Guyana, Liberia, Pakistan, Senegal, Togo, the United Kingdom and the United Republic of Cameroon, called for the end of foreign intervention in Chad.

Egypt, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Liberia, the Netherlands, Somalia, the Sudan, the United States and Zaïre believed that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya was involved in the intervention in Chad or aggression against it. In Egypt's view, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya intended to interfere in the internal affairs of Chad, to impede national reconciliation, to overthrow the legitimate Government, and to assist opponents of that Government. The Ivory Coast believed that the direct participation of the Libyan Air Force in Chad fully justified the presence of friendly States and provision of military assistance.

The Netherlands drew a distinction between the presence of French troops in Chad, which, it said, had been requested by the Government for its self-defence, and the armed intervention of a neighbouring State. Calling on the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to withdraw its forces unconditionally and to refrain from interfering in Chad's internal affairs, Somalia said that events there demonstrated the Libyan policies of expansionism and destabilization. Questioning the wisdom of certain speakers who believed that the issue should be referred to OAU instead of raised again before the Council, Zaïre pointed out that the matter raised in April before the Council concerned a border dispute between Chad and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, but since then the problem concerned armed attacks by the latter.

Some countries, including Liberia, Pakistan, Senegal, the Sudan, Togo, the United Kingdom and the United Republic of Cameroon, felt the situation had implications for the security of small countries and/or the region. Liberia stated that failure of the Council to act decisively would not only encourage the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to intensify its aggression but would also increase the risk that the conflict would spread. The United Republic of Cameroon said that despite the latest OAU efforts to find a solution, the situation had deteriorated to the extent that Chad was experiencing a real war with international ramifications.

A number of speakers expressed support for the current Government of Chad under Mr. Habré, including Egypt, Guinea, Kenya, Liberia, the Netherlands, the Niger, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Zaïre.

Among the proposals for a settlement of the situation, many countries urged that OAU be used as a regional framework. Benin, China, France, Iran, the Netherlands, Somalia, the Sudan, the USSR, the United Kingdom and Zimbabwe believed OAU had a role to play in this regard. Iran, the Sudan and Togo believed negotiations between the two countries could be helpful.

The Congo said that the Declaration of Brazzaville on the Chad situation, adopted by the heads of State and Government of Central Africa,⁽²⁷⁾ was an attempt at diplomatic action aimed at demonstrating Africa's concern with a problem that Africa had the right and duty to solve, and it advocated mutual respect, non-intervention and anti-imperialism. In the view of the Niger, the armed penetration into Chad's territory disturbed the peace and stability of the region and thus called for a counter-offensive, including the assistance of friends. As an alternative to the OAU committee dealing with the problem, the Sudan suggested that the matter be taken up by ICI. Togo appealed to both countries to apply the Council's April statement, and Zimbabwe said that statement remained valid and relevant.

Stressing the importance of respect for the sovereignty of Chad, Senegal rejected any idea that Chad be partitioned as a solution to the situation.

Many countries called for action by the Security Council. Egypt, France, Guyana, Kenya, the Netherlands, the United Republic of Cameroon and the United States mentioned the Council's responsibility under the Charter to maintain international peace and security. The United States said that, after four weeks of Council meetings without agreement on action, the Council had demonstrated its futility as an effective instrument in that regard and that the Charter had been violated; the Council's response should have been unequivocal and immediate, condemning the Libyan aggression and demanding the immediate withdrawal of its forces.

Guyana, the Ivory Coast, Pakistan, the United Kingdom and the United States urged the Council to call for compliance with international or United Nations principles governing international relations. Speaking at the last 1983 meeting on Chad's complaint, on 31 August, the United Kingdom said the Council should not remain inactive because at stake were the principles of the inadmissibility of external intervention and force, the inviolability of national boundaries, and non-interference in the internal affairs of States; furthermore, there would be implications for the Council's credibility.

Egypt, Liberia, Pakistan, Senegal, the United Kingdom and the United States believed that the Council should call for an end to aggression and the withdrawal of armed forces intervening in Chad, while Benin suggested that it call for the withdrawal of non-African forces. Egypt, Kenya and the United States said the Libyan aggression should be specifically condemned. In addition to that condemnation and a call for withdrawal of Libyan forces, Kenya said the Council should devise ways to bring about a government of national unity in Chad under Mr. Habré. The Council's support for OAU initiatives in solving the problem was proposed by the Netherlands, Pakistan and Zimbabwe.

Several countries—Guyana, the Netherlands, Pakistan and the United Kingdom—felt that the Council should continue to follow the situation. Guyana said this should be done by sending a fact-finding mission to the area, while the Netherlands believed that the Council should at least request the Secretary-General to keep the Council informed of developments.

Speaking at the end of the debate, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said that some speakers, led by the United States, had attempted to divert attention from the strife in Chad, presenting it as a conflict between the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Chad in order to use the Council as a forum for propaganda against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya; it would be preferable for the Council to call on the imperialist and colonialist forces to withdraw and allow the people of Chad to solve their problems by themselves or through OAU initiatives.

Also speaking at the conclusion of the debate, Chad said it had submitted a draft resolution to the eight members of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries which were also members of the Council. However, faced with the lack of political will on the part of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, they were unable to arrive at a compromise text. The result was a serious evasion of responsibility by the non-aligned Council members and a grave precedent for the future of the Movement and the Council. Chad agreed in principle with the suggestion that the issue be referred to OAU, but said the suggestion had been made by a group acting as spokesman of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, which had blocked the functioning of the OAU ad hoc committee on the dispute. As a result, Chad had asked the Council to adopt a suitable text. Despite the Council's inaction, Chad continued to believe in that body's responsibility to restore peace. For this reason, Chad considered that the Council's debate remained open.

France stated that, bearing in mind the current initiative by OAU in regard to Chad, the Council, without evading its responsibilities in the matter, should not take a position at that time.

Meeting numbers. SC 2462, 2463, 2465, 2467, 2469.

Communication (September). The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on 13 September,(28) transmitted a letter from its head of State to the President of the Security Council. Drawing a parallel between the situations in Chad and Lebanon, he said that the United States and France were militarily involved in the assault on Muslims in northern Chad and this would make it necessary for Muslims to come to the help of their brothers; he requested that the world conscience, the Council and the General Assembly take action for the withdrawal of United States and French forces from Chad and Lebanon.

Egypt-Libyan Arab Jamahiriya dispute

Three letters concerning a dispute between Egypt and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya were received by the President of the Security Council in 1983. Egypt, on 25 February, (29) forwarded a message from its Minister for Foreign Affairs, who said that Egypt, having responded to a request by the Sudan to carry out reconnaissance flights over the Sudanese-Libyan border since there were troop movements and concentrations there, had determined that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had sent some of its aircraft into Egyptian airspace but had desisted after Egypt had protested. Responding on 7 March,(30) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, denying that there were Libyan troop concentrations or movements against the Sudan or other countries, said that the aircraft sent by Egypt were United States reconnaissance aircraft and this emphasized Egypt's involvement in hostile military action in conjunction with a foreign State against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. Egypt responded on 10 March,(31) stating that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, driven by frustration in finding its efforts to interfere in the internal affairs of a neighbouring State exposed and foiled, was attempting to discredit Egypt by irresponsible allegations.

Chagos Archipelago

Two 1983 letters addressed to the President of the General Assembly dealt with the question of sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, a group of islands in the centre of the Indian Ocean.

The United Kingdom, on 17 November,(1) referred to the address made on 27 September to the Assembly by the Prime Minister of Mauritius, who mentioned his country's "just and legitimate claim over the Chagos Archipelago"; the United Kingdom stated that sovereignty over the Archipelago was vested in its Government which had undertaken to cede those islands to Mauritius when they were no longer required for defence purposes. Responding on 5 December,(2) Mauritius reiterated its claim and said that the United Kingdom, in contradiction to the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,(3) had detached the Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965 before Mauritius gained independence in 1968.

Comorian island of Mayotte

In 1983, the General Assembly, in resolution 38/13, reaffirmed the sovereignty of the Comoros over the Indian Ocean island of Mayotte and invited France to honour its commitment concerning respect for the unity of the Comoros.

As requested by the Assembly in December 1982,(1) the Secretary-General submitted a report, dated 21 October 1983,(2) on the question. In that report, he provided the responses to requests he had addressed to the Comoros, France and the Organization of African Unity (OAU) for information. The Comoros replied that there had been no real change in the situation since the Assembly's 1982 consideration of the subject and added that France was showing a lack of interest and had not taken any concrete measures to return the island to the Comoros. France, on the other hand, said it was pursuing a constructive political dialogue with the Comoros with a view to finding a solution acceptable to all parties. It mentioned that it had appointed at the end of 1982 an individual who would be entrusted with the task of ensuring continuity in that dialogue, in close co-operation with the Comorian authorities. OAU reported that there not been any major development in the search for a solution since the November 1981 meeting of its Ad Hoc Committee of Seven.(3) At that time, the Committee had recommended that a mission contact the French authorities in order to consider the modalities for the return of Mayotte to the Comoros.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/13 by recorded vote.

Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration,

Recalling also its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 3161(XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3291(XXIX) of 13 December 1974, 31/4 of 21 October 1976, 32/7 of 1 November 1977, 34/69 of 6 December 1979, 35/43 of 28 November 1980, 36/105 of 10 December 1981 and 37/65 of 3 December 1982, in which it, inter alia, affirmed the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros,

Recalling, in particular, its resolution 3385(XXX) of 12 November 1975 on the admission of the Comoros to membership in the United Nations, in which it reaffirmed the necessity of respecting the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago, composed of the islands of Anjouan, Grande-Comore, Mayotte and Mohéli,

Recalling further that, in accordance with the agreements between the Comoros and France, signed on 15 June 1973, concerning the accession of the Comoros to independence, the results of the referendum of 22 December 1974 were to be considered on a global basis and not island by island,

Convinced that a just and lasting solution to the question of Mayotte is to be found in respect for the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago,

Bearing in mind the wish expressed by the President of the French Republic to seek actively a just solution to that problem, ²Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

France regretted that the question was on the Assembly's agenda because it believed that its consideration undermined the Charter, in particular Article 2, paragraph 7, on the non-intervention by the United Nations in domestic matters within a State's jurisdiction. France believed that the wording of paragraph 1 of the resolution was inaccurate in law, and pointed out that it had adopted a law in 1976 giving the island a special status which did not close the door on any future development regarding its status. Accordingly, France had engaged in constructive dialogue with the Comoros and it intended to work out specific proposals likely to promote a satisfactory solution to the matter. Contacts between the two Governments were being intensified, including a meeting in September between their two Presidents.

The Comoros reaffirmed its sovereignty over Mayotte and outlined the historical origins of the issue. It pointed out that the people of Mayotte had the same language, culture and religion as the other islands of the Comoros. In addition, the Assembly in 1975 had admitted the Comoros to the United Nations as a sovereign State composed of four islands, including Mayotte.⁽⁴⁾ Renouncing commitments to carry out the results of a 1974 referendum on self-determination in the Comoros, France had held two referendums in Mayotte in 1976 to give an appearance of legality to its decision to dismember the Comoros and occupy Mayotte. Later that year, the Assembly had declared those results null and void, and affirmed that the French occupation of Mayotte constituted an encroachment on the national unity of the Comoros.⁽⁵⁾ Other international organizations had also affirmed the sovereignty of the Comoros over Mayotte.

In later action, on 22 November, the Assembly, in resolution 38/17 on the right of peoples to self-determination, took note of the contacts between the Comoros and France in the search for a solution to the problem of the integration of Mayotte in the Comoros.

Malagasy islands question

In 1983, the General Assembly again did not debate the question of the Malagasy islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India, deciding instead to include the item in the provisional agenda of its 1984 session.

This question, pertaining to the status of four Indian Ocean islands located north and west of Madagascar, had been on the Assembly's agenda each year since 1979, when the Assembly invited France to negotiate with Madagascar on the reintegration of the islands with Madagascar.⁽¹⁾ However, the Assembly had not discussed the question since 1980.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the Special Political Committee's recommendation, the General Assembly adopted decision 38/422 without vote. The decision was taken after the Committee Chairman had held consultations with the interested delegations, in particular those of France and Madagascar, and in view of talks currently under way between the two countries.

Commission of Inquiry on Seychelles

On 24 June 1983,⁽¹⁾ Seychelles requested the President of the Security Council to terminate the work of the Commission of Inquiry established by the Council in 1981⁽²⁾ to investigate the mercenary aggression of 25 November 1981 against that country.⁽³⁾ Seychelles paid tribute to the Council for its assistance in dealing with the attack and requested it to continue operation of the Special Fund, set up in 1982 for the economic reconstruction of Seychelles,⁽⁴⁾ and to maintain the item of Seychelles on the Council's agenda.

After holding consultations with the Council members, the President, on 8 July (1983),⁽⁵⁾ reported that the Council had agreed that the Commission of Inquiry had fulfilled its mandate.

On 3 August,⁽⁶⁾ Seychelles forwarded a press release issued by its President, on 22 July, an-

UN Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

Under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, a total of 808 persons held scholarships during the year ended 30 September 1983, according to a report of the Secretary-General dated 19 October.⁽¹⁾ During that period, 263 new awards were granted and 545 were extended. Most of those scholarships, 613, were given to South Africans (see above, under SOUTH AFRICA AND APARTHEID, "Other UN assistance"), followed by 159 for persons from Zimbabwe. The remainder were provided to 23 persons from Namibia (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III), 8 from Guinea-Bissau, 3 from Sao Tome and Principe and 2 from Cape Verde. New scholarships were granted only to students from Namibia and South Africa. The awards were given for a wide variety of professional, commercial and technical studies. Those receiving scholarships attended educational institutions in many regions: 403 studied in Africa, 285 in North America, 70 in Asia, 46 in Europe and 4 in Latin America and the Caribbean. The Programme was financed by voluntary contributions from States, organizations and individuals; in addition, the Programme received offers of scholarships for training in their own countries from 23 States.

Drawing attention to the increasing demand for educational opportunities by the people of South Africa and Namibia and the rapidly increasing costs of higher education and training, the Secretary-General appealed for greater financial and other support to the Programme.

For the biennium ended 31 December 1983, the Programme had a total income of $8,379,548, of which $7,124,827 was donated by Governments. Expenditures for that period amounted to $7,896,660--$7,727,939 for fellowships and grants and the remainder for operating expenses. The net excess of income over expenditure after adjustments for the previous period was $532,888.

Financial contributions

Thirty-eight States contributed a total of $3,791,427 to the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa in 1983 (see table below). Because of inflation and rising scholarship costs, the 1983 contributions and pledges represented, in real terms, a decline in resources over the previous year when contributions and pledges totalled $3,624,033.

Co-operation between OAU and the UN system

In 1983, co-operation continued in a number of political and economic areas between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU), with the General Assembly again calling for a strengthening of those activities.

The Secretary-General, in a report dated 1 August on co-operation between the two organizations,⁽¹⁾ gave a brief account of a meeting between the OAU General Secretariat and the secretariats of organizations within the United Nations system, convened in accordance with a November 1982 Assembly resolution.⁽²⁾ Held at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 21 to 23 April 1983, the meeting adopted conclusions and recommendations for co-operation in several areas, including implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, adopted by OAU at Lagos, Nigeria, in 1980 as the major framework for the continent's development plans.⁽³⁾ In regard to the Lagos Plan, the secretariats of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) and of OAU concentrated on two areas—the preparation of a treaty establishing an African economic community and the strengthening of the existing regional economic communities and institutions and the establishment of others.

A major achievement in the work of the two secretariats was the establishment of a Preferential Trade Area for eastern and southern African States (PTA), grouping together 18 OAU/ECA member States. The objective of PTA was progressively to establish regional common markets and eventually a continental common market. Recommendations for co-operation were also made in the areas of the use of water resources; human resources development; the role of media and literacy in development; the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1980-1990) (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter VIII); refugee problems; natural disasters; and assistance to national liberation movements.

In an addendum to his report,⁽⁴⁾ dated 18 August, the Secretary-General described the work of 15 United Nations agencies and bodies co-operating with OAU in such areas as the situation in southern Africa, food and agriculture, energy, industrial development, natural and human resources, environment, transport and communications, science and technology, trade and finance, population, development planning and statistics, public administration and management, and health services.

The Niger, in a letter dated 6 July,⁽⁵⁾ requested the Secretary-General to circulate to the General Assembly the resolutions adopted by the nineteenth ordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU, held at Addis Ababa from 6 to 12 June 1983. Several of the resolutions stressed or called for co-operation with the United Nations, particularly those dealing with Western Sahara, the Palestine question, sanctions against South Africa, preparations for the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa (1984), implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action, realization of the objectives of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (1987), and the sixth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development; other resolutions dealt with Namibia, the Chad-Libyan Arab Jamahiriya dispute, the OAU mission to Chad, Lesotho, the Middle East, southern Africa, African candidatures to international organizations, and the OAU budget.

Meeting number. GA 38th session: plenary 39.

The Assembly dealt with co-operation between the United Nations and OAU in a number of other resolutions. In resolution 38/40 of 7 December, the Assembly urged the two organizations to co-operate with a view to implementing the OAU decisions on Western Sahara (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter IV), adopted by the OAU June summit at Addis Ababa. The Assembly, in resolution 38/51 of 7 December, recommended that organizations of the United Nations system should broaden contacts with the colonial peoples and their national liberation movements (see above) directly or through OAU, and assist them in their struggle to exercise self-determination and independence.

In resolution 38/55 of 7 December, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to publicize the work of the United Nations regarding decolonization through several means, including maintaining a close working relationship with OAU by periodic consultations and by exchanging information. Regarding the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa (see Chapter I of this section), the Assembly, in resolution 38/181 A of 20 December, requested the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research, in co-operation with the Department for Disarmament Affairs and in consultation with OAU, to provide data on the development of South Africa's nuclear capability. Concerning industrial development, the Assembly, in resolution 38/192 of 20 December, welcomed efforts by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) to assist the African countries and intergovernmental organizations in the formulation of national and subregional programmes for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1980-1990), which was aimed at mobilizing support for the industrialization of the continent. Also welcomed were UNIDO's efforts in maintaining co-ordination with the OAU secretariat, the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) and other relevant international organizations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council also mentioned co-operation between the United Nations and OAU in two resolutions. In resolution 1983/42 of 25 July, it requested United Nations organizations to continue to co-operate with OAU in implementing the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,(6) and to render, in consultation with OAU and the Council for Namibia, increased assistance to the people of Namibia for their liberation struggle. It recommended that a separate item on assistance to national liberation movements (see above) recognized by OAU should be included in the agenda of high-level meetings of the secretariats of OAU and United Nations organizations, with a view to strengthening co-ordination to ensure the best use of available resources for assistance to colonial peoples.

In resolution 1983/70 of 29 July, the Council welcomed UNIDO efforts to assist African countries and intergovernmental organizations in the formulation of national and subregional programmes for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, and to maintain co-ordination with the secretariats of OAU, ECA and other international organizations.

Chapter VI

Americas

During 1983, both the Security Council and the General Assembly addressed serious situations in Central America and Grenada.

The Council met in March, May and September to consider Nicaragua's complaints of aggression against it. In May, by resolution 530(1983), the Council urged the Contadora Group-Colombia, Mexico, Panama and Venezuela-to spare no effort to find solutions to the problems affecting the Central American region, while in November, by resolution 38/10, the Assembly urged States to refrain from military operations that might hamper the Group's negotiating efforts.

Following internal political unrest in Grenada and the intervention therein by the United States and several Caribbean countries, the Council considered the question in October; a draft resolution, calling for the withdrawal of foreign troops, was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent member, the United States. However, in November, the Assembly, by resolution 38/7, made that call and requested that free elections be quickly organized.

Details of these subjects as well as a brief account of communications concerning the relations between Nicaragua and several States-Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras and the United States-and between Belize and Guatemala can be found in this chapter.

Central America situation

Communications. Throughout 1983, the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council received numerous communications on the situation in Central America.

On 11 January,(1) Panama transmitted information on a meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the Contadora Group (Isla Contadora, Panama, 8 and 9 January). The Ministers expressed concern about foreign interference in Central American conflicts, noted that it was undesirable for those conflicts to form part of East-West confrontation, appealed to all Central American countries to negotiate to reduce tension, and reviewed various peace initiatives and their effects.

On 22 February,(2) Nicaragua forwarded the final communique of the Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Countries (Managua, Nicaragua, 10-14 January), in which the Ministers denounced armed attacks and economic destabilization being carried out against Nicaragua.

El Salvador, in a letter of 8 April,(3) asserted that generalized conflict existed in Central America and that this must be approached through multilateral negotiations on limiting the arms race in Central America, eliminating arms traffic, and strengthening regional economic relations and democratic and pluralist institutions.

On 22 April,(4) Panama transmitted an information bulletin issued on 21 April following consultations by the Foreign Ministers of the Contadora Group with those of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua, who for the first time had joined in an effort to establish a dialogue.

Panama, on 13 May,(5) transmitted a communique of 12 May in which the Contadora Group asked that in its deliberations the Security Council strengthen the principles of self-determination and non-interference in the affairs of other States, the obligation not to allow the territory of a State to be used for committing acts of aggression against other States, the peaceful settlement of disputes and the prohibition of the threat or use of force to resolve conflicts.

The Presidents of the Contadora Group drew up the Cancún Declaration on Peace in Central America (Cancún, Mexico, 17 July), the text of which was transmitted by the Group to the Secretary-General on 19 July.(6) In the Declaration, the Presidents expressed deep concern over the rapidly deteriorating Central American situation and offered general peace proposals, which included controlling the arms race, eliminating foreign advisers, creating demilitarized zones, prohibiting the use of some States' territory for the destabilization of other States, eradicating traffic in arms, prohibiting other forms of aggression or interference in States' internal affairs, and concluding regional peace agreements.

Support for the Declaration was expressed in several communications. It was endorsed at Caracas, Venezuela, on 25 July by the Presidents of Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru and the Foreign Ministers of Argentina and Spain; this information was transmitted by Venezuela on 2 August.⁽⁷⁾ On 28 July,⁽⁸⁾ India forwarded a communique adopted at a 27 July meeting in New York of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Countries, welcoming the Declaration, asking the Contadora Group to continue its efforts, and urging the United States not to conduct naval manoeuvres off the coasts of Central America. In a letter of 1 August,⁽⁹⁾ Panama gave details of a meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the Contadora Group with their counterparts from Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua (Panama City, 28-30 July) at which those countries stated their support for the Declaration. On 10 August,⁽¹⁰⁾ Honduras quoted a note it had sent to the Contadora Group in which it rejected statements by the Foreign Minister of Nicaragua that the Group had continued to press militaristic intentions and paid only lip-service to the Cancún Declaration; Honduras also stated its resolve to achieve regional peace and security.

In a 19 July communiqué annexed to identical letters of 20 and 21 July, ⁽¹¹⁾ Nicaragua called for negotiations to settle the conflicts and put forward a six-point proposal, including a non-aggression agreement between Nicaragua and Honduras, a halt in the supplying of arms by any country to forces fighting in El Salvador, cessation of military support to the forces opposed to any of the Central American Governments, commitments to respect the self-determination of the Central American peoples, ending of acts of aggression and economic discrimination against any Central American country, and suspension of foreign military exercises and the building of foreign military bases in the region.

Panama reported on 12 September⁽¹²⁾ a further meeting between the Foreign Ministers of the Contadora Group and those of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua (Panama City, 7-9 September) at which a Document of Objectives-embodiment diverse viewpoints, identifying areas of agreement, and setting out basic commitments for establishing peace, democracy, security and development in Central America-was formulated. The Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his contacts with the representatives of the Contadora Group and the Central American countries, and annexed to a 9 December note to the Council⁽¹³⁾ a communication from the Contadora Group's Foreign Ministers to the General Assembly of the Organization of American States (OAS), pointing out that the Document contained 21 basic points for achieving peace, the co-operation necessary for economic and social development, and the strengthening of democratic institutions in Central America. A proposal embodying norms for implementing the undertakings in the Document, prepared by the Group (Panama City, 20 and 21 December, was transmitted by Panama on 22 December.⁽¹⁴⁾

On 26 September,⁽¹⁵⁾ Nicaragua transmitted a note sent to the Presidents of the Contadora Group by the co-ordinator of the Governing Junta of National Reconstruction of Nicaragua, saying that, despite aggressive acts against it by the United States, Nicaragua had decided to ratify the Document of Objectives.

On 3 October,⁽¹⁶⁾ Honduras transmitted a 1 September letter it had sent to the countries with which it maintained diplomatic relations; a 29 September letter to the Contadora Group ratifying the Document of Objectives and declaring that Nicaragua, in asking that the United Nations General Assembly discuss the Central American situation (see below), had violated its commitment not to resort to international organizations as long as the Group was searching for a solution; and a statement it had made to the OAS Permanent Council (Washington), D. C., July) charging Nicaragua with numerous attacks on Honduras and throughout the region.

Costa Rica, in a letter of 27 September,⁽¹⁷⁾ said that it was opposed to the inclusion of an item concerning Central America on the agenda of the General Assembly and that it supported the dialogue among Central American Governments in the framework of the Contadora Group.

On 13 October,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his endeavours to keep in contact with the Contadora Group, outlined its recent activities and transmitted to the Council the Document of Objectives. The Secretary-General conveyed to the Council on 9 December⁽¹³⁾ a resolution on peace efforts in Central America, approved in November by the OAS General Assembly. He observed that there had been developments which, if taken advantage of, would make it possible to have hope for improvement in the region's situation. The OAS resolution had been forwarded by Honduras in a letter of 21 November.⁽¹⁹⁾

Three other communications on the Central American situation were received during the year. On 26 April,⁽²⁰⁾ Colombia transmitted the text of a letter it had sent that day to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya about the overflight of Colombian territory by Libyan aircraft; Colombia repudiated any use of the authority and inviolability of treaties or the principle of good faith among States to further the unauthorized carriage of war matériel for unspecified purposes. Nicaragua charged in a letter of 26 October(21) that the United States had ignored all Nicaraguan peace initiatives and that the United States Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) was planning to provoke attacks against both Honduras and Costa Rica in order to blame Nicaragua and have a pretext for unleashing greater aggression against it. In a government statement of 25 October, transmitted the following day,(22) the USSR referred to what it called the aggressive actions of the United States against Nicaragua, said Nicaragua was threatened by a direct invasion of United States forces, and added that the United States showed a lack of interest in a political solution to the problems of Central America.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 May, the Security Council, appealing urgently to interested States to co-operate with the Contadora Group, commended its efforts to solve the problems affecting Central America and urged the Group to spare no effort in that regard. These actions were incorporated in resolution 530(1983) (see below, under HONDURAS-NICARAGUA DISPUTE AND ARMED INCIDENTS).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly took up the Central American situation after the Nicaraguan Foreign Minister had requested, on 28 September,(23) that the subject be placed on the Assembly's agenda. On 21 October,(24) Honduras transmitted a letter of 17 October from its Foreign Minister to those of the Contadora Group, in which he contended that the Assembly's discussion would obstruct that Group's peace efforts.

On 11 November, the Assembly adopted by consensus resolution 38/10.

The situation in Central America: threats to international peace and security and peace initiatives

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 530(1983) of 19 May 1983 in which the Council encouraged the efforts of the Contadora Group and appealed urgently to all interested States in and outside the region to co-operate fully with the Group, through a frank and constructive dialogue, so as to resolve their differences,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations relating to the duty of all States to refrain from the threat or use of force against the sovereignty, territorial integrity or political independence of any State,

Also reaffirming the inalienable right of all peoples to decide on their own form of government and to choose their own economic, political and social system free from all foreign intervention, coercion or limitation,

Considering that the internal conflicts in the countries of Central America stem from the economic, political and social conditions obtaining in each of those countries and that they should not, therefore, be placed in the context of East-West confrontation,

Deeply concerned at the worsening of tensions and conflicts in Central America and the increase in outside interference and acts of aggression against the countries of the region, which endanger international peace and security,

Mindful of the necessity of promoting the achievement of peace on a sound basis, which would make possible a genuine democratic process, respect for human rights, and economic and social development,

Noting with deep concern that in recent weeks armed incidents, border clashes, acts of terrorism and sabotage, traffic in arms and destabilizing actions in and against countries of the region have increased in number and intensity,

Noting with great concern the military presence of countries from outside the region, the carrying out of overt and covert actions, and the use of neighbouring territories to engage in destabilizing actions, which have served to heighten tensions in the region,

Deeply concerned at the prolongation of the armed conflict in countries of Central America, which has been aggravated by increasing foreign intervention,

Bearing in mind the progress achieved in the meetings that the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Contadora Group have held with the Foreign Ministers of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua in identifying issues of concern and proposing appropriate procedures for the consideration of those issues,

Recalling the Cancún Declaration on Peace in Central America issued by the Presidents of Colombia, Mexico, Panama and Venezuela on 17 July 1983, which contains an appeal for political commitments on the part of countries situated in and outside the region with the aim of achieving lasting peace in the area,

Bearing in mind the Cancún Declaration and the endorsement by the States of Central America of a Document of Objectives, which provides a basis for an agreement on the negotiations, that should be initiated at the earliest possible date with the aim of drawing up agreements and adopting the necessary procedures for formalizing the commitments and ensuring appropriate systems of control and verification,

Appreciating the broad international support expressed for the efforts of the Contadora Group to secure a peaceful and negotiated settlement of the conflicts affecting the region,

1. Reaffirms the right of all the countries of the region to live in peace and to decide their own future, free from all outside interference or intervention, whatever pretext may be adduced or whatever the circumstances in which they may be committed;

2. Affirms that respect for the sovereignty and independence of all States of the region is essential to ensure the security and peaceful coexistence of the Central American States;

3. Condemns the acts of aggression against the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of the States of the region, which have caused losses in human life and irreparable damage to their economies, thereby preventing them from meeting the economic and social development needs of their peoples; especially serious in this context are:

- (a) The attacks launched from outside Nicaragua against that country's strategic installations, such as airports and seaports, energy storage facilities and other targets whose destruction seriously affects the country's economic life and endangers densely populated areas;

(b) The continued losses in human life in El Salvador and Honduras, the destruction of important public works and losses in production;

(c) The increase in the number of refugees in several countries of the region;

4. Urges the States of the region and other States to desist from, or to refrain from initiating, military operations intended to exert political pressure, which aggravate the situation in the region and hamper the efforts to promote negotiations that the Contadora Group is undertaking with the agreement of the Governments of Central America;

5. Notes with satisfaction that the countries of the region have agreed to take measures leading to the establishment and, where appropriate, the improvement of democratic, representative and pluralistic systems which will guarantee effective popular participation in decision-making and ensure the free access of various currents of opinion to honest and periodic electoral processes based on the full observance of civil rights, emphasizing that the strengthening of democratic institutions is closely linked to evolution and advances achieved in the sphere of economic development and social justice;

6. Expresses its firmest support for the Contadora Group and urges it to persevere in its efforts, which enjoy the effective support of the international community and the forthright co-operation of the interested countries in or outside the region;

7. Welcomes with satisfaction the Cancún Declaration of the Presidents of Colombia, Mexico, Panama and Venezuela and the Document of Objectives endorsed by the Governments of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua, which contains the basis for the start of negotiations to ensure harmonious coexistence in Central America;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in pursuance of Security Council resolution 530(1983), to keep the Council regularly informed of the development of the situation and of the implementation of that resolution;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

10. Decides to keep under review the situation in Central America, threats to security which may occur in the region and the progress of peace initiatives.

General Assembly resolution 38/10

11 November 1993 Meeting 53 Adopted by consensus

E-nation draft (A/38/L.13/Rev.1); agenda item 142.

Sponsors: Congo, Ethiopia, Guyana, Nicaragua, Sao Tome and Principe, Upper Volta.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: plenary 47-53.

After the text had been revised during consultations, amendments⁽²⁵⁾ put forward by Costa Rica were not pressed to a vote. They proposed inserting, after paragraph 4, two paragraphs by which the Assembly would have urged Central American countries to establish democratic systems and to halt the arms race in the region.

Nicaragua, introducing the draft resolution, said it would make a significant contribution to strengthening the initiative of the Contadora Group, and would make those countries which paid lip-service to peace efforts while leading Central America towards ever more devastating wars give more thought to the situation.

Explanations of position were made by several States. Honduras said that the resolution was not fully in accord with the Document of Objectives, that it overlooked, for example, the aim of slowing down the arms race, failed to give appropriate emphasis to the obligation to refrain from fomenting acts of subversion, and omitted to mention the commitment to guarantee civil and other rights as well as the situation of ethnic minorities that had suffered the violation of their most fundamental rights. Turkey said that, while it supported the efforts of the Contadora Group, it had reservations with respect to paragraph 1, which tended to ignore certain important principles of international law, and to paragraph 8, feeling that the Assembly should not remind the Secretary-General of his duties to the Council. Finland said that it supported the initiatives of the Contadora Group and was particularly concerned about the refugee situation in Central America, and that the principles of non-interference and non-intervention should not be violated.

Nicaragua situation

The situation in Nicaragua was taken up by the Security Council in March, May and September 1983, each time at the request of Nicaragua, which complained of aggressive acts against it.

Nicaragua, in a 5 December letter to the Secretary-General,⁽²⁶⁾ transmitted the texts of three decree-laws, granting amnesty to Nicaraguans of Miskito Indian origin, promulgating a general amnesty, and setting 1985 as the year for national elections.

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities recommended on 31 August⁽²⁷⁾ that the Commission on Human Rights express its concern about the undeclared war threatening Nicaragua (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII).

Costa Rica-Nicaragua dispute and armed incidents

From May to November 1983, the Secretary-General and/or the President of the Security Council received letters concerning aspects of the situation between Costa Rica and Nicaragua.

Costa Rica, on 6 May,⁽²⁸⁾ transmitted the text of a message sent on 4 May to the President of the OAS Permanent Council, asking the co-operation of OAS in guaranteeing its neutrality in the current internal Nicaraguan conflict; the text of a declaration of 27 April proclaiming neutrality was appended. On 17 November,(29) Costa Rica transmitted a presidential proclamation made public that day on its permanent, active and unarmed neutrality. Nicaragua, in a letter of 18 November,(30) welcomed Costa Rica's declaration of neutrality as a constructive gesture amid the crisis affecting the Central American region.

On 13 May,(31) Panama transmitted a 12 May communique about a meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the Contadora Group (Panama City, 11 and 12 May) at which they considered a Costa Rican request to OAS to set up a peace force to monitor the border between Costa Rica and Nicaragua. The Foreign Ministers decided to send an observer commission to the area to establish the facts, evaluate the circumstances and submit recommendations.

On 31 May,(32) Panama transmitted the text of an information bulletin issued after a meeting held from 28 to 30 May at Panama City by the Foreign Ministers of the Contadora Group and of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua. The Group heard the report of the observer commission which had visited Costa Rica and Nicaragua the previous week, and agreed that the commission should continue to act as an advisory group on border problems. It also decided to establish a technical group to analyse various proposals for regional coexistence.

In a letter of 16 September,(33) Costa Rica transmitted remarks by its Foreign Minister, who declared that Nicaragua, in a statement to the Security Council on 13 September (see below, under HONDURAS-NICARAGUA DISPUTE AND ARMED INCIDENTS), had sought to discredit Costa Rica by baselessly asserting that aircraft from its territory had made two incursions into Nicaragua on 9 September.

Nicaragua charged in a series of letters that attacks on its territory were being carried out by what it described as mercenary forces based in Costa Rica. On 28 September,(34) it submitted two notes of protest from its Foreign Minister to the Foreign Minister of Costa Rica, denouncing mercenary attacks on the villages of Cárdenas and Sapoa and the customs post of Peñas Blancas. On 30 September,(35) Nicaragua transmitted a communique of 29 September by its Foreign Ministry stating that mercenary attacks launched from Costa Rica were increasing and asking that the observer commission revisit the border. A letter from Nicaragua of 6 October(36) transmitted a note to the Foreign Minister of Costa Rica, dated 4 October, calling attention to attacks in which fuel tanks in the port of Benjamin Zeledón had been blown up on 2 October and two high-voltage pylons near the border, one in Nicaragua and the other in Costa Rica, had been destroyed on 27 September.

On 10 October,(37) Nicaragua transmitted a note dated 7 October charging that mercenaries operating from Costa Rica had attacked the Nicaraguan post of El Naranjo; Nicaragua said that, although it was aware that the mercenaries were operating without the authorization of the Costa Rican Government, it could not overlook the increasing seriousness of the attacks. Nicaragua, on 21 November,(38) transmitted a note dated 18 November, reporting a counter-revolutionary attack on the village of Cárdenas and a concentration of counter-revolutionaries in the Peñas Blancas sector who were preparing to attack Nicaraguan positions. On 23 November,(39) Nicaragua transmitted a note dated 22 November, stating that mercenary groups, numbering between 700 and 1,200 individuals, in Costa Rican territory were planning to launch a series of attacks against Nicaraguan villages and frontier posts.

El Salvador-Nicaragua relations

By a letter of 3 October to the Security Council President,(40) Nicaragua transmitted a 28 September note from its Foreign Minister to the Foreign Minister of El Salvador, stating that a crop-spraying plane had been stolen from Nicaragua and flown to El Salvador on 26 September, and asking El Salvador to apprehend the pilot and return the plane.

Honduras-Nicaragua dispute and armed incidents

Communications (January-March). During the early months of 1983, Nicaragua charged, in a number of letters to the President of the Security Council, that it was being attacked by counter-revolutionary units operating from Honduras with the support of the United States. Letters from Honduras during the same period reported alleged attacks by Nicaraguan armed forces on Honduran villages, army patrols and fishing boats. Most of the letters conveyed protest notes that had been exchanged between the Foreign Ministers of the two countries.

On 5 January(41) and 10 January,(42) Nicaragua transmitted protest notes of 4 and 8 January to the United States regarding a series of attacks against Nicaragua by armed units from Honduras and reiterating a request for a dialogue to bring about peace in Central America. An announcement of United States-Honduran military manoeuvres, scheduled for 1 to 6 February, was denounced as a provocation by Nicaragua in a letter of 19 January.(43)

Attacks which took place between 31 December 1982 and 7 February 1983 and the United States-Honduran manoeuvres were reported by Nicaragua in a letter of 16 February.(44) On 25 March, (45) Nicaragua forwarded the texts of three protest notes addressed to Honduras—one dated 22 March and two dated 24 March—a message issued on 21 March to the Nicaraguan people about what was termed a new phase of aggression by the United States against Nicaragua, and a Nicaraguan Defence Ministry communique of 23 March. In a letter of 29 March,(46) Nicaragua denounced attacks on 27 March by counter-revolutionaries and the Honduran army on the Nicaraguan observation posts of Loma del Suspiro and Loma el Espino; on a Red Cross ambulance, killing the driver; and on the village of San Fernando. Nicaragua, in a letter of 31 March,(47) reported an attack by counter-revolutionaries on 28 March on the Kum observation post and attacks of 29 March on the village of Teotecacinte, wounding one person, and in the frontier zone, in the sector of Kum; the 29 March attacks were also reported in a Nicaraguan press communique dated 30 March, transmitted the next day.(48)

Letters of 6 January,(49) 20 January(50) and 7 February(51) contained protest notes from Honduras to Nicaragua about incursions on 26 December 1982 and 13 January and 3 February 1983, respectively, into Honduran territory by Nicaraguan forces, resulting in the kidnapping of two persons, an attack on an army patrol, and the attempted kidnapping of another person. Replying to the Nicaraguan complaint about joint United States-Honduran military manoeuvres,(43) Honduras said in a 21 January letter transmitted three days later(52) that it had invited Nicaragua and the other Central American countries to witness the exercises, which were designed solely to provide training for the Honduran armed forces.

On 9 February,(53) Honduras forwarded a protest note it had sent to Nicaragua concerning a 7 February attack on a Honduran fishing vessel in Honduran territorial waters by a Nicaraguan air force plane; on 25 March,(54) it transmitted a similar protest against the Nicaraguan seizure of two Honduran fishing vessels and their crews on 20 March. The Honduran Foreign Minister invited his Nicaraguan counterpart in a letter of 18 February(55) to visit the frontier area between the two countries and see for himself that no camps of counter-revolutionaries existed there. In a letter of 25 March,(56) Honduras reported a Nicaraguan army buildup along the frontier and termed it a threat to peace.

Other letters on the situation, dated 28 March, were received from Viet Nam(57) and Suriname.(58) Viet Nam condemned the United States and Honduras for what it said were acts of aggression against Nicaragua, while Suriname declared its concern about the infiltration of armed groups into Nicaragua, which it said were aimed at destabilizing the Government.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (March)

On 22 March (59) Nicaragua requested that the Security Council meet urgently to consider what it said was a grave increase in aggressive acts against it, thereby endangering international peace. The Council held eight meetings between 23 and 29 March regarding the Nicaraguan complaint.

Meeting numbers. SC 2420-2427.

The following States were invited, at their request, to participate in the deliberations without the right to vote: Algeria, Argentina, Barbados, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, German Democratic Republic, Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Honduras, Hungary, India, Iran, Italy, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Spain, Syrian Arab Republic, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia.

The debate on the item focused on bilateral and multilateral tensions in Central America, the relations between Nicaragua and its neighbours, and the influence of other States on the region's conflicts.

Nicaragua told the Council that it was facing a new escalation of aggression by the United States, which was supporting a massive infiltration of military units into Nicaragua from Honduras. It said the escalation had begun early in the year with the concentration of counter-revolutionary forces previously scattered in camps along the border. It believed that actions in the Nicaraguan Atlantic region might be a diversion, preparatory to a more strategic blow in its Pacific area. It feared that Honduran forces were about to become more directly involved in the conflict, since the Honduran army was massing troops in the Jalapa and Choluteca areas and the troops in Honduran territory had opened fire on the Vado Ancho and Zopilota observation posts in Nicaragua on 22 and 24 March. Nicaragua appealed to the United States to cease its aggressive stance, its threatening military manoeuvres and its secret but widely recognized war against Nicaragua, and to reconsider such peace initiatives as those put forward by the Contadora Group, or by the Mexican and Venezuelan Governments which in September 1982 had offered to sponsor negotiations between Nicaragua and Honduras. It declared it was urgent that Nicaragua and Honduras discuss their bilateral problems and then go forward to the more complex regional problems.

Honduras stressed that it was not involved in a dispute with Nicaragua and that the problem was exclusively Nicaraguan and related to increasing internal tensions between its Government and opposition groups. It stated that Honduran forces had been mobilized because of threatening declarations by Nicaragua and armaments currently in Nicaragua, which included two armoured divisions of Soviet origin. It maintained that there were no military camps for counter-revolutionary Nicaraguan forces in Honduran territory, declared that it had an independent policy and was not aligned with the United States, and asked if Nicaragua was prepared for a dialogue under the auspices of any organization to end the tensions in the region. Honduras said it wanted negotiations but, while Nicaragua maintained that those negotiations must be bilateral, Honduras believed the problem to be regional.

The United States said Nicaragua was suffering from an obsession concerning the hostility of the United States towards it, and recalled United States assurances to that country that it had absolutely no intention of engaging in a large-scale military invasion of it. The United States added that the Nicaraguan Government, since its accession to power, had built a military machine unequalled in Central America; sought to destabilize the Government of El Salvador by sending arms into that country, by training and supporting guerrillas there and by directing guerrilla actions from Nicaragua; repeatedly violated Honduran territory with the covert shipment of arms over its borders and fomented guerrilla forces inside Honduras; and systematically violated the rights of Costa Rica by attempts to deny it use of the San Juan River. The United States proposed that peace be achieved in Central America by adherence to the conditions set forth by the democratic States of the region in October 1982 at San José, Costa Rica. Among those conditions in the so-called Final Act were an end to foreign support to terrorists and subversive elements operating for the violent overthrow of other countries; an end to arms trafficking; a limitation of all armaments and forces to those required for defence; the withdrawal of all foreign military advisers and troops under fully verifiable and reciprocal conditions; respect for human rights, including fundamental freedoms such as freedom of speech, assembly and religion and the right to organize political parties; and the establishment of democratic, representative institutions through free and regular elections.

The USSR said the facts demonstrated that armed intervention was being conducted against Nicaragua from Honduran territory and that the United States was the prime mover behind that intervention. The situation that had arisen in the area, it said, posed a threat to international peace and security. It recalled that a year earlier the United States had blocked the adoption of a draft resolution by which the Council, according to the USSR, would have condemned intervention in the internal affairs of the States of Central America and called for a renunciation of the threat or use of force.⁽⁶⁰⁾ Thus, the United States had reserved its right to have recourse to armed force in its struggle against the Nicaraguan revolution. The USSR charged that the current invasion of Nicaragua by mercenaries, prepared and instigated by the United States, was a direct consequence of that policy. Moreover, it said it was not talking about an isolated operation against Nicaragua, but the overall policy of the United States of stepping up international tension and escalating threats to independent States in various parts of the world—actions aimed at non-aligned and other developing countries which pursued an independent foreign and domestic policy.

A number of countries expressed fear that the conflict might spread to other States in the region.

Colombia said it was concerned that the region might become the stage for international confrontation. The United Republic of Tanzania appealed to all parties to refrain from further action which could only intensify the conflict in the region. Referring to the rapidly and dangerously deteriorating situation in the Central American and Caribbean regions in particular and in Latin America in general, Zimbabwe said that the least the Council could do was to tell all concerned that interference in Nicaragua's affairs was a grave violation of the United Nations Charter.

Barbados stated that, if only the right formula were discovered, there would be a first-rate opportunity to nip in the bud a situation which, if allowed to escalate, promised almost unlimited tragedy for the immediate region and possibly beyond. Brazil emphasized that there was still time to reverse the escalation of violence in Central America and that the resolution of the current conflict had to follow the path of moderation, constructive dialogue and political understanding.

The crisis was traced by several countries to the interventionist policies of a super-Power.

China said an important cause of the current tension around Nicaragua and the deteriorating situation in the whole of Central America lay in the intervention by a super-Power. Jordan said countries must avoid cold-war policies, promote detente and cease using small States to implement their policies. Guatemala said the problems of armed struggle in Central America were the result of foreign interference, and expressed its desire to take part in a meeting of Central American Foreign Ministers to seek a solution.

According to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nicaragua and other countries were the victims of United States policy; that policy was supported by its military bases all over the world, which were used for provocation, aggression and intervention. Malta said that, as a small country suffering from the same confrontation-mania that seemed to be the hallmark of present-day super-Power rivalry, it sympathized with Nicaragua, and that the Central American region, like many other parts of the world, cried out for sustained economic and social progress and equally for a new spirit of dialogue, quiet diplomacy and regional initiatives.

Viet Nam said the deteriorating regional situation was due to the efforts of the United States to maintain or reinstate compliant dictatorships in that part of the world which it regarded as its own backyard. Democratic Yemen condemned the exertion by the United States of all kinds of pressure and aggressive acts against the people of Nicaragua. The Syrian Arab Republic called for an end to acts of aggression by the United States aimed at destabilizing the States of the region, particularly Nicaragua. Poland said that an escalation of actions by the United States, reflected in terrorist activities, hostile propaganda, acts of intimidation and the infiltration of foreign-trained mercenaries, was aimed at the destabilization of Nicaragua.

Mongolia contended that current acts of aggression by the United States against Nicaragua were part of its broader strategic aims in Central America and the Caribbean. The German Democratic Republic said the policy of the United States was directed against any progressive development in the area. Bulgaria stated that Nicaragua was the target of an armed attack, organized by United States imperialism, and appealed for its immediate cessation. Czechoslovakia said it had received the reports of the escalating aggression by the United States with deep concern as to its impact on international peace and security. Iran asked if it was not time to let oppressed peoples determine their destiny without interference by the United States and its lackeys, or by other super-Powers.

Several States held that the dispute was the result of the process of change in developing countries.

Pakistan said attempts by outside parties to distort or thwart that process in the service of their own objectives was a familiar phenomenon of recent times. India observed that the principles of non-alignment laid down that every State had the right to pursue its own political and social system without any interference, and called for a peaceful solution to the conflict.

Yugoslavia declared that it was obvious that the causes of the conflict were to be found in the historical contradictions that affected Central America and the Caribbean as a whole, and that the longer social injustice and direct or indirect foreign domination existed the more exacerbated would be the conditions in which changes occurred.

Ghana recalled that the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries had been set up to help newly independent countries avoid being drawn into the ideological and military conflicts of the super-

Powers; it saluted Nicaragua and wished it success in its struggle against poverty, disease and underdevelopment.

Hungary said that social injustice, inequality and poverty in Central America cried out for revolutionary changes, and that the dispute could only be solved by satisfying the demands of the people and putting an end to all outside interference.

Some countries supported the peace initiatives of the Contadora Group.

An increase in tension and a definite deterioration in the political climate in Central America were endangering international peace and security, Panama said. That was why Panama had joined other countries, in particular Colombia, Mexico and Venezuela, in an effort to bring about negotiations. Panama was confident that good judgement would prevail and that the course of negotiations would be followed. It was the only course that could ensure a peaceful and just future for the peoples of the region.

Bolivia, stating the need for respect for the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of other countries, said it endorsed the Contadora proposals, as did Guyana, which added that it was dangerous, unrealistic and self-serving to seek to explain domestic impulses for change in Central America in terms of East-West confrontation.

Argentina recalled that on various occasions and in different forums it had expressed its agreement with certain peace initiatives, in particular the Mexican-Venezuelan proposal and that of the Contadora Foreign Ministers put forward on 9 January (see above). For more than two years, Mexico said, it had made constant efforts to promote détente and coexistence in Central America and the Caribbean; it again appealed urgently for direct negotiations between the Governments involved, with international participation, to avoid a conflict of grave proportions.

The Contadora initiative was hailed by Cuba as a genuine effort to find a just and lasting solution to the conflicts in the region. Ecuador said that it hoped the steps being taken by the Group would be successful, that the use of force and any foreign interference in Nicaragua would be prohibited, and that the peoples of Central America would be allowed to decide their destinies free of violence and pressure. Appealing for moderation, France said it supported the Contadora principles, particularly the condemnation of interference.

Discussions on a regional basis were urged by other States.

Costa Rica said that it had endeavoured to promote discussion at the regional level and that this was the proper time for such discussion. The Dominican Republic reaffirmed its support for an immediate meeting of all the parties involved in the dispute. El Salvador agreed, and said the situation in Central America did not bode well for stability and that foreign interests were directing ideological groups in support of their own military interests. Grenada said it was committed to the holding of meaningful dialogue at any time.

Peru said it was time every country committed itself to peace. Peru proposed, as a basis for the establishment of a dialogue, that countries undertake to avoid ideological and political polarization; exclude all interests foreign to the area; respect the principles and norms embodied in the United Nations Charter; by decision of the Security Council, bring about an immediate cessation of acts of hostility on the border between Honduras and Nicaragua, while the Council perhaps adopted other helpful measures; and agree to curb the arms race in the area. Mauritius said the way to a solution was through direct dialogue and regional co-operation, which the Council could sanction.

However, Venezuela said that peace in Central America could not be reached through the Council and that the interests of the super-Powers inhibited Council action. It declared that talks among the countries of the region without foreign interference were essential, and offered to assist in their commencement. Zaire said the Council should not decide the substance of the question, which could run the risk of further heightening tension; it should merely take note of the initiatives of the parties and encourage them to co-operate in seeking a solution.

Events currently taking place in Nicaragua underscored the need to seek solutions for the entire area, Spain said. The Netherlands said it attached special importance to the peace initiatives proposed by the countries in the region, adding that in its view OAS might be helpful in finding a solution. Belgium said it supported the peace initiatives made, in particular by the countries of the region, and opposed actions that could only poison a disquieting situation.

The Federal Republic of Germany said the problem was one for the whole region and it wished that Nicaragua was ready to discuss the issues at a regional conference. Italy agreed, adding it was clear that the countries of Central America were confronted with common problems requiring common solutions.

Uruguay noted that Nicaragua had referred to a bilateral dialogue with qualified witnesses, together with a regional dialogue also with qualified witnesses, and that Honduras had referred to a regional dialogue which could include bilateral aspects and to which there could also be qualified witnesses. It concluded that there remained the problem of defining more precisely the machinery and the procedures to be followed, as well as the order and the arrangement of topics.

The United Kingdom proposed that the Council consider asking the Secretary-General to use his good offices to bring about a dialogue on the bilateral and multilateral problems of Central America.

A satisfactory basis for the peaceful resolution of the problems affecting the area was to be found in the 1982 San José Final Act, the Philippines said.

Togo welcomed the statements of the parties with regard to their willingness to negotiate peace in the region. Cyprus said it could not but strongly condemn the resort to violence and intervention, as it too was a victim of aggression and continuing occupation.

Communications (April/May). In April and May 1983, Nicaragua and Honduras addressed a number of letters to the President of the Security Council, each complaining about further armed attacks against its territory.

On 4 April,(61) Nicaragua said that during the previous week counter-revolutionary forces had attempted further penetration of its territory from Honduras and that attacks by Honduran troops were increasing; it charged the United States with directing, supporting and financing these operations.

Notes of protest concerning armed attacks by counter-revolutionaries or Honduran forces were addressed by the Foreign Minister of Nicaragua to the Foreign Minister of Honduras. These charges were contained in notes dated 8 April (transmitted on 11 April), (62) 17 April (21 April), (63) 19 April (21 April), (64) 19 April (25 April),(65) 20 April (21 April),(66) 23 April (25 April), (67) 25 April (26 April),(68) and 27 April (28 April).(69)

The text of a protest note of 2 May from the Foreign Minister of Nicaragua to the Secretary of State of the United States was transmitted on the same date.(70) Nicaragua charged that on 30 April a force of approximately 1,200 mercenaries had invaded Nicaragua and that fighting had been continuing since then with units of the Honduran army providing direct support. It added that it held the United States and Honduras responsible for the consequences flowing from the aggressive policy pursued by the United States against Nicaragua and from its systematic rejection of Nicaragua's proposal for a bilateral dialogue.

A letter from Nicaragua of 9 May(71) enclosed extracts from a 4 May press conference by the United States President and a newspaper article published in The Washington Post on 8 May; Nicaragua stated that the President's revelations contained virtually a declaration of war against Nicaragua and the newspaper article revealed the scope of United States assistance to counter-revolutionaries.

Protest notes of 15, 19 and 20 April and 3 May from the Honduran Foreign Minister to his Nicaraguan counterpart were transmitted by Honduras on 15 April,(72) 20 April,(73) 21 April(74) and 4 May,(75) respectively. In them, Honduras charged that on 14 April two Nicaraguan patrol boats shelled two Honduran fishing vessels near the Babel and Media Luna keys in Honduran jurisdictional waters; protested the alleged harassment of a Honduran fishing vessel by a Nicaraguan patrol boat in Honduran territorial waters, which had led to an armed skirmish between Nicaraguan and Honduran patrol boats; charged that on 19 April regular troops of the Nicaraguan army had harassed Honduran communities in the border region; and rejected the allegations against Honduras contained in Nicaragua's note of 2 May to the United States(70) and asserted that the Honduran armed forces had complied strictly with their mandate to defend the territorial integrity of Honduras, despite the intention of contending forces in neighbouring countries to involve them in their internal struggles.

The Lao People's Democratic Republic, on 4 April,(76) transmitted a statement made on 29 March by the spokesman for its Foreign Ministry, strongly condemning alleged military provocations by the Honduran army, with the support of the United States, in the Nicaraguan-Honduran border area and calling on the United States to desist from all intervention in the internal affairs of the countries of Central America. By a letter of 13 May,(77) the German Democratic Republic declared its support for proposals made by Nicaragua, especially the assumption of a role of good offices of the Secretary-General according to a mandate of the Security Council, which could contribute to commencing a bilateral dialogue between Nicaragua and Honduras and between Nicaragua and the United States.

The question of negotiations was also discussed in several other letters. On 4 April,(78) Nicaragua reiterated its call for dialogue at the highest level with the Governments of Honduras and the United States, called on the countries of the Contadora Group to use their good offices to begin that dialogue, declared its support for the role of the Secretary-General and suggested that the dialogue take place at the United Nations. Responding on 8 April,(79) the United States expressed support for regional efforts, including those in OAS, to address the complex, interrelated and multilateral problems in Central America; it commented that the problems did not lend themselves to simple solutions on the basis of bilateral talks and urged members of the Security Council to support ongoing efforts aimed at achieving a regional solution. Also referring to the Nicaraguan letter, Honduras on 11 April(80) reiterated its commitment first to exhaust regional efforts within the context of the inter-American system. In a letter of 13 April,(81) Nicaragua reaffirmed the right of a Member State to come before the Council for the consideration and settlement of disputes with other States, and stated that Nicaragua had brought its case before the Council under Articles 34 and 35 of the Charter and would continue to do so whenever necessary.

France said in a letter of 6 April(82) that it supported the proposal made in the Council on 29 March by the United Kingdom that the Secretary-General undertake a mission of good offices in Central America with the purpose of recommending a procedure for bringing about a meeting of the parties to the dispute. Replying on 11 April,(83) Honduras pointed out that action was pending with regard to OAS resolutions on its request that the Governments of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua should hold a meeting as soon as possible for the purpose of initiating a process of global and regional negotiations.

Nicaragua, in a letter of 19 April,(84) informed the Council that it would take part, beginning 20 April, in a round of negotiations with the Contadora Group Foreign Ministers.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 5 May,(85) Nicaragua requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council in view of what it said was a new stage of the invasion by counter-revolutionary forces operating out of Honduras and supported by the United States. The complaint was taken up by the Council at seven meetings between 9 and 19 May.

The following States were invited, at their request, to participate in the deliberations without the right to vote: Algeria, Argentina, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Honduras, India, Iran, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mali, Mauritius, Mexico, Panama, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Spain, Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia.

At the request of Zimbabwe in a letter of 16 May,(86) the Council also extended an invitation under rule 39 of its provisional rules of procedure^a to the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania.

Opening the debate, Nicaragua said the aggression against it was increasing, and it had come before the Council to appeal for respect for the principle of non-intervention in the internal affairs of sovereign States. Its declaration that the United States was waging a war against Nicaragua was not a figure of speech, it said, and the war was no less real because it had not been declared. Fearing a loss of credibility, the United States was shielding itself by neither confirming nor denying covert actions. Nicaragua warned that the danger of regionalizing the war was increasing because the United States used some States and affected the neutrality of others in order to attack Nicaragua. It said it would continue to work to strengthen the initiative of the Contadora Group. It appealed to the United States to direct its influence towards negotiated solutions, and reiterated its willingness to hold an immediate, unconditional dialogue with that country in order to find solutions.

^aRule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

Honduras said that once again Nicaragua had given distorted information which, if not analysed correctly, might jeopardize the Council's task. In 1979, upon assuming power, the Sandinist Front of National Liberation had pledged before OAS that it would respect human rights in Nicaragua, promote civil justice and hold free elections. Those promises had become mere words and the people of Nicaragua were suffering under a totalitarian Government maintained by force. To the Nicaraguan Government, OAS was no longer the proper body to deal with differences between nations; Nicaragua was avoiding regional discussions. Honduras pointed out that Nicaragua had not presented any clear evidence to prove its allegations of participation by the Honduran army in acts of aggression. On the other hand, it said, Nicaragua was carrying out an interventionist policy in neighbouring States by promoting traffic in weapons. The problems of Nicaragua were basically internal problems, Honduras said, and were arising from the growing opposition of the Nicaraguan people to the regime. Honduras said it should be noted that Honduras and Nicaragua had agreed not to take steps in the United Nations while the Contadora Group was carrying out its initiative. That agreement had been violated by Nicaragua. Honduras urged the Council to recommend that the Foreign Ministers of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua, with the participation of other Latin American countries, meet for a dialogue to cover regional problems and reach a solution.

The United States, citing Nicaragua's invocation of the principle of non-intervention, said that, since its current leaders came to power, they had fomented war in the region, destroying the peace in El Salvador, Honduras and other neighbouring States. The United States did not invade small countries on its borders and there was no United States invasion of Nicaragua. There was fighting in Nicaragua, but the problem was not international; Nicaraguans were fighting among themselves for control of their country's destiny. Nicaragua had made a non-substantive response to an eight-point peace proposal offered by the United States in 1982; the proposal had called for an end to Nicaraguan support for guerrillas in neighbouring countries, limits on arms and foreign military advisers, a joint pledge of non-intervention, arms-limit verification measures, resumption of United States economic assistance, implementation of cultural exchange programmes, and the reaffirmation of Nicaraguan commitments to pluralism, free elections and a mixed economy. Nicaragua's insistence on bilateral rather than multilateral talks underlined its desire to resolve its external problems while avoiding the issue of its export of revolution, war and misery, the United States added.

The USSR reiterated that the facts showed that armed intervention against Nicaragua was under way, directed and financed by the United States. Further, the United States had virtually admitted the charges made against it. Although it had stated its preparedness to negotiate with Nicaragua, the United States had put forward pre-conditions to negotiations known to be unacceptable, for example, the demand made of Nicaragua that it confirm its commitment to so-called pluralism and a mixed economy, the USSR added; it was the duty of the Council to follow closely the situation in Nicaragua and to take all necessary measures to safeguard its security and integrity.

A number of countries supported the peace efforts of the Contadora Group, including Argentina, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Greece, Guatemala, India, Mali, Spain, Venezuela and Yugoslavia. Argentina felt that the deep-rooted causes of the crisis lay in both the anachronistic political and socio-economic situations and the persistent violations of the principle of non-interference in States' internal affairs; it said the Contadora Group deserved unreserved support. Colombia urged Nicaragua and Honduras to conduct negotiations, using the Contadora framework, and added that to avoid a worsening of the situation the Group had tried to bring all the countries of the region to the bargaining table. Costa Rica said the Council should not weaken regional or subregional mechanisms, and should leave the peace initiative in the hands of the Contadora Foreign Ministers.

Speaking similarly, Guatemala added that the intervention of other countries or organizations could only be counter-productive. Spain said that the Central American crisis was closely related to the processes of change in the region, which stemmed from social and economic imbalances, and that it hoped the Group would find a solution.

Venezuela said that, although it was ready to continue to take part actively in the Group's peace initiatives, it had decided not to take a position on the draft resolution before the Council (see below), which involved matters under discussion and might affect the Group's mediation function.

Several other countries supported the efforts of the Contadora Group, while urging that the Secretary-General also use his good offices to try to achieve a solution. Among them were the Congo, Grenada, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mexico, Sao Tome and Principe, the Syrian Arab Republic and Zimbabwe.

Some countries, including China, Cuba, Ethiopia, Grenada, Iran, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Seychelles, Togo, the USSR and Viet Nam, referred to foreign interference in the region and said it was making a solution more difficult to achieve. China opposed any outside interference whatever. Cuba said the United States was using the same weapons against Nicaragua as it used against Cuba-economic aggression, a blockade of international sources of credit, and mercenary bands financed by the CIA; Cuba supported any effort to reach a negotiated solution. Grenada said that it did not comprehend the historic opposition of the United States to any attempts by the peoples of Latin America to liberate themselves, and that real democracy could not be predicated on an imperial creed. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said there was no East-West conflict in Central America-the conflict was between United States imperialism and the peoples of the world. Seychelles warned that the current foreign interference from Honduras could lead to a major military confrontation. Togo said the Nicaraguan situation was complicated by rivalries among the great Powers, each of which believed the other was trying to expand its influence in the region and was taking steps to oppose that expansion.

Whether the Security Council should have a role in attempting to settle the crisis was discussed by El Salvador, Panama, Poland and Uganda.

El Salvador felt that the Council was not the appropriate forum in which to try to resolve the situation, that regional problems should be resolved in a regional framework, and that any attempt to compartmentalize interrelated problems with a bilateral approach would distort the region's political reality. The Council had sufficient grounds for taking a decision on the problem, Panama declared, and the seriousness of the situation called for one. Poland said it was essential that the Council act, since the situation constituted a dangerous threat to regional and international security. Uganda said it hoped that the Council would not leave the Contadora Group to carry out alone the task of evolving a viable framework for peace; the responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security rested primarily with the Council.

The United Kingdom hoped that the Central American nations would be able to discuss their problems in multilateral talks. It observed that there had never been a multilateral international meeting at which bilateral discussions had not taken place on the side. It recalled that Colombia had spoken of bringing all the countries of the region to the table and seeking global solutions, while being in no way opposed to bilateral negotiations. If the region's countries agreed that they were ready for multilateral talks, but found difficulty in agreeing on certain modalities, it might be reasonable to ask the Secretary-General to sort out the modalities, the United Kingdom added. Multilateral talks also were backed by Guatemala.

On 19 May, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 530(1983).

The Security Council,

Having heard the statements of the Minister for External Relations of the Republic of Nicaragua,

Having also heard the statements of the representatives of various States Members of the United Nations in the course of the debate,

Deeply concerned, on the one hand, at the situation prevailing on and inside the northern border of Nicaragua and, on the other hand, at the consequent danger of a military confrontation between Honduras and Nicaragua, which could further aggravate the existing critical situation in Central America,

Recalling all the relevant principles of the Charter of the United Nations, particularly the obligation of States to settle their disputes exclusively by peaceful means, not to resort to the threat or use of force and to respect the self-determination of peoples and the sovereign independence of all States,

Noting the widespread desire expressed by the States concerned to achieve solutions to the differences between them,

Commending the appeal of the Contadora Group of countries, Colombia, Mexico, Panama and Venezuela, in its 12 May 1983 communiqué, that the deliberations of the Council should strengthen the principles of self-determination and non-interference in the affairs of other States, the obligation not to allow the territory of a State to be used for committing acts of aggression against other States, the peaceful settlement of disputes and the prohibition of the threat or use of force to resolve conflict,

Considering the broad support expressed for the efforts of the Contadora Group to achieve solutions to the problems that affect Central American countries and to secure a stable and lasting peace in the region,

1. Reaffirms the right of Nicaragua and of all the other countries of the area to live in peace and security, free from outside interference;

2. Commends the efforts of the Contadora Group and urges the pursuit of those efforts;

3. Appeals urgently to the interested States to co-operate fully with the Contadora Group, through a frank and constructive dialogue, so as to resolve their differences;

4. Urges the Contadora Group to spare no effort to find solutions to the problems of the region and to keep the Security Council informed of the results of these efforts;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council informed of the development of the situation and of the implementation of the present resolution.

Security Council resolution 530(1983)

19 May 1983 Meeting 2437 Adopted unanimously

B-nation draft (S/15770), orally revised.

Sponsors: Guyana, Jordan, Malta, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Togo, Zaire, Zimbabwe
Meeting numbers. SC 2431-2437.

Following the adoption of the resolution, Nicaragua said it had come before the Council to explain the serious consequences of the invasion of Nicaragua from Honduran territory by mercenaries directed and financed by the United States. It believed that the resolution was important and that, if taken into account, it should succeed in ending the invasion. Nicaragua said it wanted to have normal relations with the United States, but would never bow to pressure, threats or invasions. It hoped the United States would accept the dialogue that Nicaragua had always proposed.

The United States said its policies had been maligned and misrepresented by Nicaragua. It had responded, and stood by its response; when Nicaragua showed a willingness to fulfil its obligations and promises, there need be no further problems between it and the United States.

Honduras supported the efforts of the Council to find a peaceful solution; it urged Nicaragua to participate in the talks of the Contadora Group, and to understand the meaning of dialogue as an opportunity to listen to the other side's arguments and to adopt an attitude of wanting to reach an agreement. Honduras would never be the cause of a military confrontation between Honduras and Nicaragua.

France said that the countries of the region should themselves seek peaceful and negotiated solutions, and that any action should deal particularly with the causes of the problems of Central America, which were of an economic and social nature; everything should be done to prevent tensions from becoming an element of the East-West conflict.

Guyana said that, as the Council had an obligation to make an effective response to the situation, it would have preferred a more forthright and unequivocal response to the aggression against Nicaragua.

Communications (May-September). Between May and September, Nicaragua and Honduras addressed numerous letters to the Security Council President containing allegations of further armed attacks. The allegations were contained in protest notes addressed by the Foreign Minister of one country to the Foreign Minister of the other.

Nicaragua sent notes to Honduras, protesting against alleged acts of aggression by counter-revolutionary forces based in Honduras and expressing readiness to find a solution through bilateral talks, on 13 May (transmitted on 13 May),(87) 16 May (17 May),(88) and 23 May (24 May).(89)

Nicaragua, on 27 May,(90) conveyed the text of a note of 25 May, rejecting Honduran charges that Nicaraguan forces had violated Honduran territory on 24 May, attacked a vehicle between Trojes and Cifuentes, and left five Hondurans dead and one wounded.

On 31 May,(91) Honduras transmitted the text of a note dated 30 May, charging that Nicaraguan troops on 24 May had fired on a Honduran passenger vehicle travelling to Trojes and killed six civilians. Also on 31 May,(92) Panama transmitted information to the Secretary-General about a meeting (Panama City, 28-30 May) held by the Foreign Ministers of the Contadora Group with those of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua; the Ministers reviewed the regional situation and agreed that the Group's observer commission should continue to act as an advisory group on border problems.

Nicaragua, on 1 June,(93) transmitted the texts of notes of 31 May and 1 June, protesting the alleged harassment of Nicaraguan diplomats accredited to Honduras and rejecting charges by that country of violations of its territory by Nicaraguan forces. In two letters of 7 June,(94) Nicaragua conveyed notes dated 4 and 6 June, protesting the alleged participation on 2 and 5 June, respectively, by Honduran armed forces in attacks on Nicaraguan armed forces in Nicaragua.

Honduras, in two letters of 22 June,(95) submitted notes dated 14 and 21 June, protesting alleged attacks on 8 and 18 June, respectively, by the Nicaraguan army on Honduran territory.

Also on 22 June,(96) Honduras transmitted a press communique of 21 June, reporting the deaths of three United States journalists-Richard Cross, William McWhirter and Dial Torgerson-in Honduras when their car was hit by anti-tank grenades fired from Nicaraguan territory and the death of a Honduran civilian who was nearby. Another letter of the same date(97) forwarded the text of a Honduran note of 21 June to Nicaragua, protesting the attack in which the journalists and civilian were killed. Responding that day,(98) Nicaragua said that McWhirter was alive and in the United States, that the Honduran accusation was a pretext for a military attack on Nicaragua, and that it at no time had attacked Honduran territory. Nicaragua, also on 22 June,(99) transmitted a note dated 20 June, adding that it had confined itself to intercepting and expelling those who had invaded its territory.

On 1 July,(100) Honduras transmitted a note dated 30 June in which it said an investigation had shown that the deaths of Cross and Torgerson had been caused not by anti-tank grenades but by anti-tank and anti-personnel mines laid on the highway by Nicaraguan forces.

On 5 July,(101) Nicaragua conveyed a note of 30 June, rejecting Honduran notes dated 20, 21 and 24 June in which Honduras attributed several border incidents to Nicaragua, and, on the same date,(102) transmitted a note of 3 July, protesting against alleged attacks by the Honduran army and mercenaries on 25 and 26 June and 1 July. Nicaragua, on 21 July,(103) transmitted a note of 20 July, charging violations of its airspace on 19 July by aircraft coming from Honduran territory and an attack by two Honduran naval vessels on a Nicaraguan patrol boat on 20 July.

Honduras, on 25 July, (104) transmitted a note of 21 July, alleging that Nicaraguan army units had penetrated Honduran territory on 10 July at a place known as Munguía, in the municipality of Duyure, burning a house, and on 14 July through the El Carao sector, municipality, of Concepción de Maria, causing the death of a civilian, and that a Nicaraguan patrol boat and two aircraft on 210 July had attacked a Honduran patrol boat, wounding a sailor. Nicaragua rejected these charges in a note of 28 July, transmitted on 1 August.(105)

Nicaragua transmitted on 17 August(106) a note dated 15 August, protesting against an alleged violation of its airspace by a Honduran air force plane on 14 August and charging an attack the same day on the frontier post of Las Manos by Honduran soldiers. Nicaragua forwarded on 1 September(107) a note dated 30 August, charging that counter-revolutionaries from Honduran territory had kidnapped from the village of Catarina on 28 August three Nicaraguan citizens, killing two of them, that an aircraft, coming from Honduran territory, flew over the towns of San José de Cusmapa and La Sabana on 29 August and that mercenaries attacked the frontier village of San Pedro de Potrero Grande on 30 August, killing two persons. Nicaragua transmitted on 9 September(108) a note of the same date, reporting that on 8 September a Nicaraguan naval craft came upon a Honduran fishing boat fishing illegally in Nicaraguan waters and, with the assistance of another Nicaraguan vessel, captured it; the note also stated that on the same date three Honduran vessels attacked two Nicaraguan boats in Nicaraguan territorial waters and that Honduran aircraft conducted threatening manoeuvres against the Nicaraguan vessels.

Honduras, on 12 September,(109) transmitted notes of 2 and 9 September, protesting against an alleged attack on 29 August by a Nicaraguan patrol on two Honduran fishermen and the seizure of one of them with his boat, and charging that on 6 September Nicaraguan soldiers had entered Honduran territory and taken 135 head of cattle and 40 horses from a farm.

Nicaragua, on 12 September,(110) transmitted a note of 10 September to the United States, protesting against a 9 September attack on the port of Corinto by two aircraft, originating from Honduras and dropping what it said were bombs made in the United States. A letter of 13 September(111) from Nicaragua annexed what it described as documentary proof that the pilots who allegedly had bombed Managua international airport on 8 September had been provided with facilities by the United States.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (September)

On 12 September,(112) Nicaragua requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider what it said was a new escalation of aggressive acts against it by counter-revolutionary forces trained and financed by the United States. The Council met on 13 September to consider Nicaragua's complaint.

Meeting number.. SC 2477.

Nicaragua, the only speaker, said it was again resorting to the Council to alert the world to the escalation in aggression it had suffered during the preceeding few weeks. Stating that there had been hundreds of attacks and violations of its territory since the Council met to consider the question in May, Nicaragua summarized the incidents, which included bombing attacks and reconnaissance missions by aircraft originating from Honduras and Costa Rican airspace, and said they had led it to conclude that military actions were being staged against it from the north and south, co-ordinated by the CIA. It regretted that war continued to be at the heart of United States policy towards Central America and Nicaragua. Nicaragua observed that, as long as ultra-conservative sectors of the current United States Administration, believed that its national interest was incompatible with the independence of the Central American republics, those sectors would pursue misguided policies and place peoples in grave danger. Nicaragua recalled that on 19 July it had put forward a six-point peace proposal(11) (see above), which the United States had described as a positive step; since then, however, there had been no further response.

The Council President announced that the Council would remain seized of the matter.

Communications (September-December). The President of the Security Council received numerous communications from Honduras and Nicaragua between September and December. Most of these transmitted notes which had been exchanged between their respective Foreign Ministers.

In a letter of 20 September,(113) referring to the Council meeting of 13 September, Honduras said Nicaraguan accounts of alleged reconnaissance flights by aircraft from Honduran airspace and of imaginary air-sea engagements between Honduran and Nicaraguan forces testified to a disorientation campaign, designed to give the idea that other Central American countries were intervening in Nicaragua's internal conflict.

Nicaragua transmitted notes of protest dated 26 September (transmitted on 26 September), (114) 4 October (5 October) (115) and 13 October (13 October) (116) from its Foreign Minister to that of Honduras concerning alleged attacks by mercenaries, supported by Honduran forces, on Nicaraguan territory. Nicaragua, on 5 October,(117) conveyed a note dated 4 October in which it reported the shooting down in the Los Cedros sector, north of Rio Blanco, of a twin-engine military plane allegedly carrying 4,000 pounds of supplies for the mercenaries, and, two days later,(118) transmitted a note of 6 October in which it said that, according to three surviving crew members, the plane had taken off from the Honduran base El Aguacate, which had been converted by the CIA into a jumping-off point for operations against Nicaragua. On 10 October,(119) transmitting a note of 7 October, Nicaragua alleged attacks on the latter date on the village of San Fernando and the sector of El Horno and reconnaissance in the sector of Guapinol by unidentified aircraft coming from Honduras. On 11 October,(120) Nicaragua transmitted a note of the same date from its Foreign Minister to the Secretary of State of the United States, charging that mercenaries on 10 October carrying out plans prepared by the CIA had sabotaged a 1.6-million-gallon oil tank in the port of Corinto, causing a fire.

Honduras, on 29 September,(121) rejected Nicaragua's 26 September charges of Honduran army support of attacks on Nicaragua. On 29 September(122) and 4 October,(123) Honduras transmitted notes of 28 and 30 September, respectively, alleging Nicaraguan attacks on Honduran territory on 26 September in the El Espino sector, on 18 September at the village of Tapalchi, on 19 September in the Trojes sector, and on 21 September in the village of Las Vegas. Honduras, by a letter of 18 October (124) conveying a note of 11 October, rejected Nicaragua's 6 October charge that a twin-engine aircraft shot down in Nicaraguan territory had taken off from a Honduran base. On 20 October,(125) Honduras transmitted a note of 17 October, protesting against an alleged violation of its territorial waters on 15 October by six heavily armed Nicaraguan vessels. Also on 20 October (126) Honduras forwarded a note of 18 October: charging that on 11 October a Nicaraguan aircraft bombed the village of La Ilaya and killed three persons.

Nicaragua charged in a 20 October note, transmitted on 21 October,(127) that on 18 October mercenaries coming from Honduran territory destroyed the village of Pantasma, killing 47 persons. On 24 October,(128) Nicaragua conveyed a note of 22 October alleging that the day before a high-speed launch coming from Honduras attacked the freighter Anita, the dock installations and the district of El Cocal at Puerto Cabezas, and killed one person. On 29 October,(129) Nicaragua transmitted a note of 28 October alleging that on that date Honduran armed forces attacked the observation post of Loma Portobanco in the Santo Tomás del Nance sector and that, in addition, two Nicaraguan coastguard vessels in Nicaraguan territorial waters were attacked by four Honduran coastguard vessels.

On 2 November,(130) Nicaragua transmitted a note of 31 October protesting against an alleged 30 October attack by Honduran army personnel and mercenaries on the Nicaraguan frontier post of Murrupuchi as well as overflights by unidentified aircraft of the Momotombo geothermal station, the Puerto Corinto sector and the village of El Viejo. Also on 2 November,(131) Nicaragua transmitted a note of 1 November charging that on that date two Honduran patrol boats fired on two Nicaraguan coastguard vessels in Nicaraguan territorial waters.

On 3 November,(132) Nicaragua conveyed a note of 2 November charging that two Honduran coastguard vessels, escorted by a helicopter and protecting three high-speed launches manned by mercenaries, had attacked three Nicaraguan coastguard vessels in Nicaraguan territorial waters and that three aircraft coming from Honduras had penetrated Nicaraguan airspace, the first flying over Ojo de Agua, the second over Jalapa and Murrupuchi and the third towards Wiwilí.

In a letter of 7 November,(133) Nicaragua enclosed notes of 5 and 6 November concerning, respectively, a series of alleged violations of Nicaraguan airspace by aircraft coming from Honduras on 4 November and the seizing and burning of a Nicaraguan fishing boat in its territorial waters by the Honduran navy on 6 November. On 11 November,(134) Nicaragua annexed two notes dated 10 November; in the first, it denied the charges made in a note of 9 November (see below) that its army had attacked the village of La Guaruma on 4 November, and, in the second, it denounced alleged attacks by mercenaries on the border posts of El Kum and Wasla in which six persons were killed on 9 November.

By two letters of 14 November,(135) Nicaragua transmitted, respectively, a note of 11 November protesting against an alleged attack on the frontier post of Murrupuchi that morning by a combined force of Honduran soldiers and mercenaries, and a note of 12 November denying an attack on the Honduran customs post of Cifuentes by the Nicaraguan army on that same day. Also on 14 November,(136) Nicaragua conveyed a note of 12 November protesting the detention on 11 November by Honduran police of two members of the Nicaraguan Embassy in Honduras.

Nicaragua, in a letter of 15 November,(137) sent a note of the same date protesting against an alleged 14 November mortar attack by Honduran troops on the Murrupuchi frontier post. On 16 November,(138) Nicaragua transmitted a note of 15 November charging that a Honduran coastguard vessel on 13 November had attacked a Nicaraguan patrol boat in its territorial waters. On 22 November,(139) Nicaragua submitted a note of 21 November protesting alleged attacks the day before by mercenaries on its frontier posts of Murrupuchi and Santoo Tomás del Norte. Nicaragua, on 24 November,(140) transmitted a note of 23 November protesting against the 22 November machine-gunning of three of its frontier posts by a helicopter, which it said came from Honduran territory. On 6 December,(141) Nicaragua conveyed a note of 5 December protesting three alleged Honduran sea and air attacks on 4 and 5 December on Nicaraguan coastguard and fishing vessels in which the captain of one of the fishing boats was killed. On 21 December,(142) Nicaragua transmitted a note of 20 December alleging that mercenaries had attacked the village of Francia-Sirper on the latter date, kidnapping most of the population.

Honduras, on 26 October,(143) transmitted a note of 24 October protesting against the alleged capture on 9 October by Nicaraguan forces of two Honduran citizens who were fishing off Guipo Island, in Honduran territorial waters, and the penetration on the same day by about 80 Nicaraguan soldiers, travelling in four motor boats, of Honduran territory in the district of Guapinol.

On 1 November,(144) Honduras conveyed a note of 30 October protesting an alleged attack on 28 October by two Nicaraguan patrol boats on two Honduran patrol boats in Honduran territorial waters. Honduras, on 2 November,(145) transmitted a letter of protest of 1 November charging that on the latter date two Nicaraguan patrol boats sailing in Honduran waters opened fire on two Honduran patrol vessels, which were obliged to return fire. On 4 November,(146) Honduras transmitted a note of 2 November in which it alleged that on 26 October eight mortar shells fired from Nicaraguan territory hit the village of Quebrada El Oro and that on 29 October a Nicaraguan army patrol entered the village of El Crique de la Lodoza and kidnapped a citizen.

On 8 November,(147) Honduras transmitted a communication of 7 November alleging that on 2 November Nicaraguan troops burst into the village of Camalotal, firing shots and killing one person, and that on the same day there was an exchange of shots between three Honduran vessels and three Nicaraguan patrol boats in Honduran territorial waters.

Honduras, in two letters of 14 November,(148) transmitted notes of 9 and 11 November, protesting, respectively, against an alleged artillery attack on 4 November by the Nicaraguan army on the Honduran military outpost in the village of La Guaruma and against another alleged attack on 11 November by Nicaraguan forces on the Honduran customs post of Cifuentes.

On 15 November,(149) Honduras transmitted a note of 14 November in which it protested against an alleged violation on 13 November of its territorial waters by six Nicaraguan fishing vessels, one of which, heavily armed, exchanged fire with two Honduran patrol boats. Honduras, on 15 December,(150) conveyed a note of 12 December in which it said that the sea and air incidents of 4 and 5 December to which Nicaragua had referred(141) and which allegedly occurred in Nicaraguan territorial waters had actually taken place in Honduran waters and that Honduran naval and air force units had acted in self-defence.

On 23 December,(151) Honduras transmitted a note of the same date in which it rejected Nicaraguan charges of a 20 December attack by mercenaries on Francia-Sirper(142) as unfounded and said that more than 2,000 Miskito inhabitants of that village had escaped from Nicaraguan repression and fled to Honduras.

Nicaragua-United States relations

From March to November 1983, letters concerning relations between Nicaragua and the United States were sent to the President of the Security Council.

On 24, March,(152) Mongolia transmitted excerpts from a speech by the General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party at a 23 March friendship rally between that country and Nicaragua at Ulan Bator, Mongolia, and from a joint Mongolian-Nicaraguan communiqué of 24 March, stating that hostile acts by the United States against Nicaragua and other States of the region had intensified, demanding an end to those acts, and further stating that Nicaraguan proposals were a sound basis for settling problems in Central America and the Caribbean basin.

On 16 June, (153) Nicaragua transmitted a communiqué issued on 15 June after a visit by a

United States Ambassador-at-Large. According to the communique, the Ambassador denied the need for bilateral discussions and spoke of United States support for the steps being taken by the Contadora Group. Nicaragua said it found no basis for believing that the Ambassador's travels would be effective; rather, they seemed to form part of a propaganda campaign aimed at neutralizing the Contadora effort and favouring an aggressive approach.

On 16 November, (154) Nicaragua transmitted a communique issued after a meeting held the previous day with the United States Ambassador. Nicaragua informed him that, with the danger of larger-scale aggression, it was taking measures to guarantee the safety of all foreign citizens, including those of the United States.

Belize-Guatemala dispute

By a telegram of 7 June, (155) the Prime Minister of Belize transmitted to the Secretary-General a communication sent that day to the Foreign Minister of Guatemala, charging it with a violation of Belizean territory on 5 June when a Guatemalan civilian was murdered by gunmen who had crossed into Belize from Guatemala.

Responding by a letter to the President of the Security Council on 10 June, (156) Guatemala said it did not recognize the independence of Belize or the frontiers with it, and would not recognize them until a solution was found to the territorial dispute between Guatemala and the United Kingdom which, with Belize, had unilaterally fixed those frontiers; consequently, it regarded any incident occurring therein involving Guatemalans as falling under the jurisdiction of Guatemala. The incident might have been a common crime or a public disturbance, it added.

Grenada situation

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

In October 1983, following a period of serious internal political unrest in Grenada, during which the Prime Minister, some members of the Cabinet and a number of civilians were killed, military forces from the United States and several Caribbean countries intervened.

At the request of Nicaragua, the Security Council considered the situation in Grenada at meetings held from 25 to 28 October; a draft resolution, (1) calling for the immediate withdrawal of foreign troops, was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent Council member-the United States. However, this call was upheld by the General Assembly in November when it adopted resolution 38/7.

Meeting numbers. SC 2487, 2489, 2491.

In the early hours of 28 October, the Council voted on the draft resolution sponsored by Guyana, Nicaragua and Zimbabwe. The vote was 11 to 1, with 3 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: China, France, Guyana, Jordan, Malta, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Poland, USSR, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Togo, United Kingdom, Zaire.

By the draft, the Council would have deplored the intervention as a violation of international law and the independence of Grenada; deplored the deaths of civilians caused by the invasion; called for the immediate withdrawal of the foreign troops; and requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council within 48 hours on the implementation of the resolution.

The Council met in response to a letter of 25 October from Nicaragua to the Council President, in which it requested an urgent meeting to consider the situation in Grenada.(2) On the same day, Nicaragua submitted a second letter with the same request,(3) and Grenada(4) and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya(5) sent letters supporting it.

Several other letters were sent to the Council President on 25 October.

Saint Lucia(6) requested that the Council delay a decision on dealing with the Grenada situation, since OAS was to meet the next day to consider the same subject. Saint Lucia(7) also transmitted a statement by the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States (OECS) secretariat. OECS had met on 21 October to take up the situation arising out of the killing of the Grenadian Prime Minister and several Cabinet ministers. It feared that the situation would worsen. Moreover, it had been concerned that an extensive military buildup in Grenada had created a threat to OECS and neighbouring countries. Under the treaty establishing OECS, member Governments had decided to take action.

The United States(8) pointed out that OECS had called on several countries, including Barbados, Jamaica and the United States, to respond to a deteriorating situation in Grenada, which OECS deemed a threat to peace in the eastern Caribbean. United States forces were to work with OECS and the people of Grenada in "restoring government and order" and to evacuate those United States and other foreign nationals who wished to leave, and would remain only so long as their presence was required.

Belize(9) conveyed a statement from its Prime Minister stating that an emergency meeting of the heads of Government of the 12 Caribbean countries on 22 and 23 October in Trinidad and Tobago had agreed to suspend Grenada from the Caribbean Community (CARICOM), but that four countries—the Bahamas, Guyana, Trinidad and Tobago, and Belize itself—had opposed the call to invade Grenada.

The following States were invited, at their request, to participate in the deliberations of the Council without the right to vote: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Barbados, Benin, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cape Verde, Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Dominica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Hungary, India, Iran, Jamaica, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nigeria, Peru, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

At the request of Jordan in a letter dated 27 October,(10) the Council also extended an invitation under rule 39 of its provisional rules of procedure^b to the League of Arab States.

A large majority of the countries taking part in the Council debate condemned the invasion as a violation of the United Nations Charter, under which States were obliged to refrain from the threat or use of force in their international relations. Those countries included: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Benin, Bolivia, Bulgaria, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ecuador, Ethiopia, France, German Democratic Republic, Grenada, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, India, Iran, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malta, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Poland, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Syrian Arab Republic, USSR, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Algeria said that an invasion undertaken for the purpose of re-establishing order or even democracy presented a frontal attack on the principle of non-intervention and non-interference, and opened the way to breaches of the peace of varying kinds which were completely uncontrollable. China termed the United States intervention an outright act of hegemonism. Once again the marines had struck to subdue a small, weak and developing country, Ethiopia said, the invasion being but the latest manifestation of the policy of domination and force followed by the current United States Administration.

In France's opinion, the justifications put forward for the intervention did not seem admissible; international law authorized intervention only in two eventualities—in response to a request from the legitimate authorities of a country, or upon a decision of the Security Council.

Grenada stated that its current situation was of an entirely internal and domestic nature, and that it had not threatened and was not threatening the use of force against any country. Furthermore, it contended that no danger to United States citizens existed in Grenada, that the OECS treaty provided no justification for the intervention, and that the Council must condemn what had taken place and call for the withdrawal of foreign forces from Grenada.

Speaking similarly, Guyana recalled that the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations(11) proclaimed the principle that States should refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said the United States had committed aggression against a small country and that this aggression must be condemned.

Mexico said the invasion totally lacked justification, and urged the Council to take measures to have foreign troops withdrawn immediately. Nicaragua said the United States by its invasion had violated several treaties and conventions to which it was a party. The Syrian Arab Republic expressed the view that the invasion of Grenada came as no surprise for, ever since Grenada chose a popular, progressive regime, the United States had made it known that it was trying to topple that régime.

The USSR observed that Grenada had for a long time been the object of United States threats, that the invasion violated international law and the Charter, and that, if the Council did not rebuff the aggression, no small nation not to the liking of the United States would find itself safe.

Yugoslavia felt it had to reject any use of force, interference, intervention and the suppression of the rights of peoples freely to decide on the manner of their development.

A number of countries, including Antigua and Barbuda, Barbados, Chile, Dominica, Jamaica, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, and the United States, spoke in favour of the intervention.

Antigua and Barbuda declared that the state of affairs in Grenada had constituted a serious threat to the security and peace of the region, that the OECS countries would ensure that an interim Government was established to carry out free elections, and that, when this was done and the constitutional rights of the people had been restored, assistance would no longer be required and would be withdrawn. The action taken was perfectly legal, Barbados said; the Governor-General of Grenada had formally called on the members of OECS to come to aid it. Chile was certain that the invasion would not have occurred had it not been for an exaggerated arms buildup in Grenada, the establishment of a disproportionate naval and military infrastructure, and the presence of USSR and Cuban advisers and agents, constituting a threat to other nations in the area. The Prime Minister of Dominica said that OECS, Barbados, Jamaica and the United States had undertaken a pre-emptive defensive strike to remove a dangerous threat to peace and security in the area and to restore normalcy to Grenada.

The United States said that the murder of the Prime Minister of Grenada, five Cabinet ministers and 12 other political leaders had created one of the bloodiest struggles for power that the world had seen in some time. United States troops were involved in a joint action to protect its citizens, to facilitate the evacuation of those citizens who wished to leave, to provide support for eastern Caribbean forces as they assisted Grenada in restoring order and establishing functioning governmental institutions, and to put an end to an acute threat to peace and security in the entire eastern Caribbean. The United States had responded to an urgent appeal by OECS for assistance, and believed that its support was justified and consistent with the United Nations Charter and that of OAS..

During the debate, several other countries presented their views of the situation. Brazil deplored the recourse to armed force, even though internal events in Grenada had provoked disquiet in neighbouring countries. The Dominican Republic agreed and also pointed out that it had suffered at various times the ignominy of occupation by foreign troops. Egypt remarked that experience in other regions—for example, in the Middle East—taught that the use of force and violence could not resolve problems, but only lead to perpetuating and exacerbating them. Guatemala said the main responsibility for what was happening in Grenada fell on those who sought to impose a Government without popular support, who prevented the holding of elections, and who propagated the principle of self-determination in order to extract a country from one sphere of economic influence and place it in another.

Although Barbados, Jamaica, the United States and the member States of OECS were its friends, Singapore found it could not condone the action in Grenada, because in the long run it undermined the moral and legal principles of the Charter. Trinidad and Tobago considered it most unfortunate that a solution involving the non-use of force proposed at the emergency meeting of CARICOM on 22 and 23 October was not pursued. Venezuela reiterated its commitment to the self-determination of peoples, and said therefore that it could not approve any form of intervention by foreign armed forces in the internal affairs of a State.

Three countries—Togo, the United Kingdom and Zaire—abstained in the vote on the resolution.

The United Kingdom said it did not support the military operation carried out in Grenada and had taken no part in it; that it could not, however, go along with a text that did not take adequate account of the concerns of OECS., Barbados, Jamaica and the United States; that it was grateful that the Governor-General of Grenada, the only remaining constitutional authority in the island, had survived the events of recent days; and that the common aim should be the emergence of a constitutional Grenadian Government freely elected by the Grenadian people.

Zaire pointed out that it had always condemned aggression and coups, whatever their origin. Unfortunately, by its passivity and even its division, the Council had sometimes rewarded force and violations of the Charter. Therefore, Zaire was happy that those who in the past had refused on fallacious pretexts to condemn aggression were now asking the Council to condemn it. Against this ambivalence, Zaire rejected aggression by those States which violated the Charter and by those which had divided the world into exclusive zones of influence.

On 27 October, the United States objected to the credentials of the Grenada representative, and requested the Council to seek a report from the Secretary-General on the question. He submitted a report on 31 October.⁽¹²⁾ He said a communication dated 26 October had been received from the Governor-General of Grenada stating that no one was authorized to speak before the United Nations without his express permission; currently, he had given no such authorization. The Secretary-General had obtained oral confirmation by radio and had asked for written confirmation. Meanwhile, he would not understand the Governor-General's communication as removing the Permanent Representative from his post but as seeking to limit his authority. He would only be able to formulate an opinion as to who was authorized to speak on behalf of Grenada in the Council after the arrival of the letter which he had requested from the Governor-General.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In November, the General Assembly took up the situation in Grenada after Nicaragua had requested on 31 October⁽¹³⁾ that the item be included in the agenda.

General Assembly resolution 38/7

2 November 1983 Meeting 43 198-9-27 (recorded vote)

^aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

Before adoption of the text as a whole, an amendment by Belgium, adding paragraph 5, was adopted by a recorded vote of 71 to 23, with 41 abstentions.

At the request of the United States, a recorded vote on each operative paragraph was taken: paragraph 1 was adopted by 106 votes to 8, with 25 abstentions; paragraph 2 by 126 to 4, with 8 abstentions; paragraph 3 by 142 to none, with 1 abstention; paragraph 4 by 108 to 9, with 21 abstentions; and paragraph 6 by 122 to 3, with 14 abstentions.

A draft resolution,(14) submitted by the Bahamas and Trinidad and Tobago, was not pressed to a vote. By this draft, in addition to the calls for strict respect for the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Grenada, the immediate withdrawal of foreign troops, and the holding of free elections at an early date, the Assembly would have regretted that force was used as a solution to the problem in Grenada; urged the immediate establishment of a broad-based civilian interim administration, pending elections, the deployment in Grenada of a security presence from members of CARICOM and the Commonwealth, and the setting up of a fact-finding mission which would report to the Secretary-General; called on Member States and the United Nations system to assist in the rehabilitation of Grenada and in the continuation of its social and economic development; requested Member States to co-operate in the above measures; and asked the Secretary-General to use his good offices to secure as a matter of urgency the implementation of the resolution.

Following the adoption of resolution 38/7, many States explained their votes. Several said they voted for the resolution out of respect for the fundamental principles of the Charter, international law, non-intervention and non-use of force. Those countries were Australia, Austria, Finland, Italy, Malaysia, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Thailand and Uruguay.

Other States that voted for the resolution, including the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic and the USSR, emphasized that they opposed the intervention not only as a violation of international law-and the Charter but as a reflection of the aggressive, dangerous, imperialistic policy being followed by the United States.

Cuba said that the vote might help to stop such acts of aggression.

In explanation of its negative vote, Antigua and Barbuda said that foreign forces had been present in Grenada and that the intervention had been carried out to rescue the people from their tyranny. Barbados did not consider its participation in the operation an act of aggression but a response to a request from the sole legal authority remaining in Grenada, the Governor-General, while El Salvador maintained that the root of the problem lay in the intervention by Cuba, the presence of hundreds of Cuban advisers, and the pursuit by Cuba of expansionist aims of an ideological nature. The United States said it was proud to have participated in the liberation of the people of Grenada and in the restoration of their sovereignty, their human rights and their rights to democratic government.

Explaining its abstention, Belgium reaffirmed its attachment to the rules laid down in the United Nations Charter, but said its vote had been influenced by the fact that debate on the draft had been arbitrarily terminated by the adoption, by a recorded vote of 60 to 54, with 24 abstentions, of a motion of closure, made by Democratic Yemen. Canada said the resolution had addressed itself in generally satisfactory form to what had happened but was deficient in regard to such priorities as the full re-establishment of constitutional government and the resumption of economic development in Grenada. The Philippines regretted the military action, but said it had been distressed by the lack of balance in the text and the absence of any mention of the other parties which by their subversive deeds had provoked the United States response.

Some countries explained their position on the Belgian amendment. The Ivory Coast, though supporting free elections, abstained because it felt the amendment did not change the essence of the draft. Albania said it had intended to vote in favour of the resolution as a whole, but in view of the amendment it had decided not to take part in the voting. The Congo said it had voted against the amendment because it seemed to endorse, in a veiled manner perhaps, an act of aggression and military occupation. India, the Upper Volta and Vanuatu indicated that they had voted in favour of the resolution but abstained on the amendment because the elections might be held before the withdrawal of the occupying troops; for a similar reason, the Syrian Arab Republic said it had voted against the amendment.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to the Assembly's request, contained in resolution 38/7, the Secretary-General submitted a report dated 6 November following a 30-hour visit by Secretariat officials to Grenada.(15) The report pointed out that the most essential aspect of the situation in Grenada was the non-existence of any political machinery for performing the normal functions of government. The Governor-General had informed the Secretary-General's representative that, based on the 1973 Constitution of Grenada, he had decided to provide for an interim arrangement that would enable the country to administer its affairs pending the return to full constitutional government by way of general elections. According to the report, the OECS multinational force, drawn from seven Caribbean countries (Antigua and Barbuda, Barbados, Dominica, Jamaica, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines), numbered about 300, and the number of United States troops, which had reached 8,000, had been reduced to 5,000.

Grenada continued to maintain relations with Cuba, but the Governor-General had declared all its diplomatic personnel to be personae non grata and ordered them to leave Grenada within 24 hours.

The Cuban Government said that 784 Cuban nationals had been in Grenada before the intervention, most of them involved in the construction of an airport at Point Salines.

Communications (October/November). Numerous letters transmitting statements, communiques, messages and notes on the Grenada situation were received by the President of the Security Council or the Secretary-General during October and November.

The leader of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, in a message dated 25 October,(16) stated that the intervention by the United States and reactionary Latin American States was a return to the era of barbarism. Nicaragua, in a communique of 25 October from its Ministry of External Relations,(17) condemned the United States invasion as a manifestation of imperial arrogance.

On 26 October,(18) Brazil transmitted a note of the same date deploring the recourse to armed force by some OECs members, the United States, Barbados and Jamaica, which violated the principle of non-intervention embodied in the United Nations and OAS Charters, even though Brazil understood that the internal situation in Grenada could provoke legitimate disquietude in neighbouring countries.

Also on 26 October,(19) India enclosed a statement issued that day by its Government declaring that the invasion of Grenada could not be justified and that it could only aggravate and perpetuate regional instability and conflict. The USSR transmitted on 26 October the text of a TASS statement of the same date(20) condemning the United States aggression against Grenada. Yugoslavia, by a government statement of 26 October, forwarded the same day,(21) said internal upheaval could not be the pretext for foreign, especially military, intervention.

On 27 October, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea transmitted a statement issued that day by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs denouncing the United States intervention in Grenada,(22) and Madagascar transmitted a message by its President dated 26 October condemning it.(23) The German Democratic Republic conveyed on 27 October(24) a statement by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs decrying the long-prepared plot and military action against Grenada. Suriname declared on 27 October(25) that Grenada was the victim of unprovoked armed aggression; it appealed to the international community to take measures to remedy the situation.

Benin, on 28 October,(26) transmitted the text of a statement issued the day before by its National Executive Council, demanding the unconditional withdrawal of the invading troops. Botswana annexed to a letter of 28 October(27) a press release issued on the same date by its Department of External Affairs registering its revulsion at the use of force against Grenada. Also on 28 October,(28) Democratic Yemen transmitted a 26 October statement by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs condemning the aggression of the United States. Ethiopia annexed to a letter of 28 October(29) a press release issued on 26 October by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, in which it condemned the action and said it would no doubt exacerbate the tense situation in the area.

Also on 28 October,(30) the Lao People's Democratic Republic transmitted a statement of 27 October by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs demanding the cessation of all acts of interference in Grenada's internal affairs.

India, on 28 October,(31) forwarded the text of a communique adopted by the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Countries meeting in urgent session (New York, 26 and 28 October). The Bureau recalled that the heads of State or Government of non-aligned countries, at their seventh summit at New Delhi in March, had expressed their concern at the continuing colonialist policies in the Caribbean region, condemned the intervention in Grenada and urged the immediate withdrawal of all foreign forces.

On 31 October,(32) Kuwait forwarded a statement of 27 October by its Deputy Prime Minister, Minister for Foreign Affairs and Minister of Information., saying Kuwait found no legal grounds for the invasion of Grenada by the United States and other countries.

On 1 November,(33) Afghanistan transmitted a statement of 27 October in which it condemned the aggression against Grenada. In two letters of 1 November,(34) Venezuela transmitted communiques dated 25 and 31 October in which it said, respectively, that it could not condone any form of foreign military intervention in the internal affairs of another State and that the presence of foreign armed units in an independent American State on the pretext of maintaining peace was altogether unacceptable.

Cuba, in a letter of 2 November,(35) annexed statements of 28 October and 1 November by its Ministry of External Relations. The first statement denied assertions by the United States that nearly 500 Cubans were fighting in the mountains of Grenada; it added that Cuban workers in Grenada had been building an airport for strictly civilian use. The second statement said that the International Committee of the Red Cross was encountering obstacles in arranging for the evacuation of Cuban dead and wounded from Grenada.

Also on 2 November,(36) Mozambique enclosed a communiqué dated 27 October, declaring that there would be peace in the Caribbean and Central America only when States in and outside the region, big or small, respected other States' independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

On 10 November,(37) Iran transmitted a communiqué issued by its Foreign Ministry on 27 October declaring that the United States had once again revealed its aggressive character and calling on the free peoples of the world to resist it.

On 30 November, the USSR complained of criminal acts against its diplomatic mission in Grenada (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter III).

American anniversaries

The General Assembly had decided in December 1982 to take up in 1983 an item on the observance of the quincentenary of the discovery of America.(1)

On 20 December 1983, the General Assembly, in adopting decision 38/456, decided to resume its thirty-eighth session, at a date to be announced, to consider several agenda items, including the observance of the quincentenary.

The Assembly, also in December 1982, had taken note of the decision of the Latin American Group to take measures to commemorate the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Simón Bolívar on 24 July 1783.(2) Three communications were addressed to the Secretary-General in connection with the observance, each transmitting a Declaration issued at Caracas, Venezuela, on 24 July 1983.

On 2 August,(3) Venezuela transmitted the text of a Declaration made by the heads of State of Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela, a representative of the President of Panama, and His Majesty King Juan Carlos I of Spain. Also on 2 August,(4) a "Manifesto to the Peoples of Latin America", examining such matters as Latin American unity, contemporary realities, integration efforts, solidarity, human rights, peace and violence, and democracy, freedom and pluralism, was issued by the Presidents of Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela, and a representative of the President of Panama, and transmitted by their representatives to the United Nations. On 4 August,(5) Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela conveyed a Declaration on Subregional Integration by their Presidents entitled "The fatherland that is ours: the Americas".

Chapter VII

Asia and the Pacific

Several areas of international tension in Asia and the Pacific occupied the attention of the United Nations during 1983.

The Security Council met in September to consider the shooting down by the USSR of a passenger aircraft belonging to the Republic of Korea; a draft resolution on the incident was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent Council member, the USSR. (See also PART TWO, Chapter X.)

In Korea, the United Nations Command continued to monitor the 1953 Armistice Agreement between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea.

The focus of attention in South-East Asia continued to be the situation in Kampuchea. In pursuance of its mandate to assist in seeking a settlement of that situation, the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea sent two missions to live capitals and to Geneva for consultations, and the General Assembly, in October, restated its view of the principal components of a just and lasting solution.

In western Asia, the situation in and around Afghanistan continued to be dealt with by the Secretary-General and the General Assembly. The Secretary-General and his Personal Representative continued contacts with Afghanistan, Iran and Pakistan in a search for a political solution. The Assembly, in November, reiterated its call for an immediate foreign troop withdrawal from Afghanistan and the establishment of conditions to permit the Afghan people to exercise self-determination.

With respect to south-western Asia, the Iran-Iraq conflict, ongoing since 1980, was again taken up by the Security Council. Through its President, the Council in February 1983 called for an immediate cease-fire. In addition, in October, it called for an immediate cessation of all military attacks on civilian targets and of all hostilities in the Gulf region; it requested the Secretary-General to consult with the parties on ways to sustain and verify the cessation of hostilities, including the possible dispatch of United Nations observers.

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: zones of peace—Indian Ocean region and South-East Asia. Regional economic and social activities: Asia and the Pacific. Refugees and humanitarian assistance: East Asia; South Asia; Oceania; South-west Asia.

Attack on Korean Air Lines aircraft

An incident involving the shooting down by the USSR of a civil airliner of Korean Air Lines (KAL) by a USSR military aircraft: with the loss of all 269 persons on board, was considered by the Security Council at six meetings between 2 and 12 September 1983.

Meeting numbers. SC: 2470-2474, 2476.

The Council convened at the urgent request of the Republic of Korea. The request was made by a letter of 1 September, circulated by the Council President in a note of the same date.⁽¹⁾ The letter reported that KAL flight 007, a Boeing 747 with 240 civilian passengers and a crew of 29, had been shot down by USSR fighter planes at about 1830 hours, Greenwich mean time, on 31 August; the flight was at the time en route from New York to Seoul, after refueling at Anchorage, Alaska. The letter strongly condemned what it called an unprovoked barbaric act by the USSR, in violation of basic norms of international law and practice in international civil aviation.

The passengers had included nationals from various States, as follows: United States, 47; China, 44; Japan, 28; Philippines, 15; Canada, 10; Thailand, 8; Australia, 4; India, 1; Sweden, 1; and United Kingdom, 1; and 13 Hong Kong residents.

In association with the Republic of Korea, similar requests for a Council meeting were made, also on 1 September, by the United States,⁽²⁾ Canada⁽³⁾ and Japan,⁽⁴⁾ and on 2 September by Australia.⁽⁵⁾

The following States were invited, at their request, to participate in the deliberations without the right to vote: Australia, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Chad, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Fiji, German Democratic Republic, Federal Republic of Germany, Guatemala, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Japan, Kenya, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, New Zealand, Nigeria, Paraguay, Philippines, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Spain, Sudan, Sweden, Thailand, Venezuela.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

On 12 September 1983, at the conclusion of the discussion of the incident, the Security Council voted on a draft resolution⁽⁶⁾ sponsored by 17 nations: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Colombia, Fiji, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, Malaysia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Paraguay, Philippines, Thailand, United Kingdom, United States. The vote was 9 to 2, with 4 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: France, Jordan, Malta, Netherlands, Pakistan, Togo, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire.
Against: Poland, USSR.

Abstaining: China, Guyana, Nicaragua, Zimbabwe.

Owing to the negative vote of a permanent member, the USSR, the draft was not adopted.

By the operative provisions of the text, the Council would have deplored the destruction of the airliner and the tragic loss of civilian life; declared such use of armed force against international civil aviation incompatible with norms governing international behaviour and elementary considerations of humanity; urged compliance with the Convention on International Civil Aviation (Chicago, United States, 1944); and welcomed the decision to convene an urgent meeting of the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) on the incident. The Security Council would have further urged all States to co-operate with ICAO to strengthen the safety of, and prevent the recurrence of the use of armed force against, international civil aviation, and to facilitate a full investigation of the tragedy, which it would have invited the Secretary-General to conduct and report on within 14 days.

Before its introduction by the Netherlands, the preambular part of the text had been revised to transpose two paragraphs so that the question of appropriate compensation followed, rather than preceded, the mention of a need for an explanation of the facts of the incident based on impartial investigation, and to add a paragraph on the importance of the principle of territorial integrity and the need for applying only internationally agreed procedures in response to airspace intrusions.

Before the vote, the USSR announced its intention to vote against the draft resolution. Having restated what it insisted were the facts surrounding the gross provocation against its sovereignty by United States ruling circles through the KAL aircraft (see below), the USSR asserted that the action to be taken by the Council in this instance should be the prohibition of the use of civil aircraft for intelligence purposes in violation of other countries' airspace.

China said it would abstain because of what it referred to as a serious dispute over certain aspects of the incident. Guyana wished the draft had given consideration to such questions as to how and why the aircraft had come to overfly USSR territory and whether it was exclusively civilian, as well as to the international community's concerns of the need for an impartial approach to the matter and for the truth, the acceptance of responsibility where it properly lay, and the need to reduce tension in super-Power relations and for universal respect for international law. Guyana felt that the draft prejudged the results of the investigation called for, which, to be truly impartial, should have no pre-set time-limit. After the vote, Zimbabwe said it was not satisfied that all the facts had been made known, and that factors not relevant to the incident had been brought to bear on the Council's deliberations.

France stated before the vote that, at the proposed ICAO Council meeting, it would put forward specific measures, including the mandatory requirement that military authorities alert civilian authorities on discovering a civil aircraft in a dangerous situation, speedy installation of compatible civil and military radio equipment, introduction of additional precautionary steps in interception procedures, and an amendment to the Chicago Convention containing a commitment to abstain from the use of force against civil aircraft, within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations. Recalling that, at a diplomatic conference at Rome, Italy, 10 years previously, it had proposed the measure regarding abstention of the use of such force—which had failed to obtain the required majority—France warned that, in the light of the recent air tragedy, those who might again refuse to adopt that rule would have to answer to public opinion.

Jordan said that its vote proceeded solely from the draft's humanitarian and technical aspects, explaining that it found it difficult to support those provisions which it perceived as containing elements beyond the issue at hand, a prejudgement of the proposed investigation, a moral condemnation and an ideological undertone of East-West rivalry. Malta's vote rested on assurances that its primary concern, the protection of civil aviation, would be assiduously pursued at the ICAO meeting.

At the 2 September meeting, the Republic of Korea stated that it was not possible for the USSR authorities to have confused KAL 007 with anything other than a civilian passenger plane; it had been clearly marked as such, flying a route the world knew to be one regularly travelled by KAL Boeing 747s. The shooting down was a criminal act which threatened the very foundation of international order in civil aviation and, if unpunished, could lead to its repetition. Accordingly, the Republic of Korea demanded from the USSR a full account of the incident; an apology and complete compensation for the loss of the aircraft and the persons on board; punishment for those directly responsible; a guarantee of unimpeded access to the crash site for ICAO, other international organizations and KAL, as well as for the Republic of Korea, to which any remains or aircraft debris that might be recovered should be returned; and specific guarantees by the USSR against repetition of its action.

The United States said that, according to irrefutable information available to it, the airliner had strayed into USSR airspace over the Kamchatka Peninsula, the Sea of Okhotsk and Sakhalin Island; it had been under constant tracking from 1600 hours, when it came to the attention of USSR radar personnel, until 1838 hours, when it disappeared from the radar screens—having been shot down at 1826 hours by a USSR pilot who reported that he had fired a missile, destroyed the target (with which he had made visual contact 14 minutes before) and was breaking away; the United States claimed that at least eight USSR fighter planes had reacted to the airliner at one time or another throughout the two-and-a-half-hour period.

The USSR asserted that convening the Council was unjustifiable and unnecessary. For its views on the incident, it quoted a 2 September statement by TASS (the official USSR news agency) to the effect that, on the night of 31 August/1 September, an unidentified plane had intruded into USSR airspace by up to 500 kilometres for more than two hours; it had been flying without navigational lights and had not reacted to radio signals from USSR ground dispatcher services, with which it had at no time tried to make contact; military aircraft ordered aloft had also repeatedly attempted contact by means of generally accepted signals in an effort to escort the plane to the nearest airfield—all of which had been ignored; following warning shots fired on its path over Sakhalin, the plane left USSR airspace and headed towards the Sea of Japan, disappearing from USSR radar screens 10 minutes later.

The USSR questioned why United States monitoring services and those of Japan—which evidently had had the flight under continuous observation—had neither tried to get the plane back to its assigned route nor alerted their USSR counterparts. In the light of these facts and of instances of deliberate violations of its airspace by the United States, the USSR said, it could not regard the intrusion of KAL 007 as other than planned, and part of a major United States intelligence operation. It accused that country of involving the Council in a provocative anti-Soviet spectacle to obtain another pretext to justify its policy aimed at thermonuclear world war.

On 6 September, the United States played a tape recording before the Council of what it claimed were communications between the USSR pilot who downed the airliner and his ground control. According to the United States, the recording established that the USSR had decided to shoot down the airliner, shot it down and then lied about it; that, contrary to USSR statements, the interceptor pilot had seen the airliner's navigation lights, reporting that fact to its ground control on three occasions, and had made no attempt either to communicate with the airliner or to signal it to land in accordance with accepted international practice.

On the same date, Japan said that in view of the regrettable USSR attitude—its failure to offer a satisfactory explanation of the incident, to respond to Japan's requests for co-operation in a search operation and its attempt to shift responsibility for the incident to others including Japan—it was making public a recording of the uncoded communications between the interceptor pilot and his ground control shortly before and after he had fired on the airliner, as recorded by Japan's Air Self-Defence Forces. The portion of the recording played back in the Council quoted the interceptor pilot as saying that the "target" was flashing its navigation lights; he had "fired"; and that the target had been destroyed. That piece of evidence, Japan said, demonstrated the truth of the matter. On 7 September, Japan explained that, because the visibility of its air traffic surveillance radar was limited to airspace over and around Japan, it had been impossible to ascertain that the KAL aircraft was off course.

In subsequent statements, the USSR cast doubt on the authenticity of the tape played by the United States and pointed to discrepancies in the translation from Russian. The USSR also expressed astonishment that no publicity had been given to recorded conversations between the KAL pilot and United States and Japanese navigational services, and stated that this fact indicated that these recordings either contained unpalatable material or were being doctored. It said that an investigation conducted by a USSR governmental commission established that the invasion of USSR airspace by KAL 007 was a carefully planned intelligence operation directed from the United States and Japan.

The facts as established by the commission, the USSR said, were that an unidentified aircraft had come within range of USSR radar stations precisely where United States RC-135 reconnaissance planes were regularly on duty and where one such plane had been observed, some two hours earlier, carrying out manoeuvres at an altitude of 8,000 metres in an area contiguous to the unidentified aircraft's entry point; about the same time three

United States warships were reported to have appeared close to USSR waters. Both planes merged on the radar screen for about 10 minutes, after which one set out towards Alaska and the other towards Petropavlovsk-Kamchatskiy.

At Kamchatka, the plane proceeded directly over the main USSR nuclear strategic base, failing in the process to reply to signals from USSR ground services and interceptor planes that were tracking it, but emitting short, co-ordinated signals characteristic of intelligence transmissions. The plane's behaviour became provocative as it flew over Sakhalin. Besides ignoring signals, it suddenly changed its course, speed and height, flying round extremely sensitive military installations in southern Sakhalin. Since it failed to respond even to four bursts of warning shells and tracer shots of up to 120 rounds, tried to escape and generally moved towards Vladivostok, the interceptors were ordered to abort the flight with missiles—an action fully in keeping with USSR State border regulations.

The USSR observed that the United States, rather than answer questions raised by the incident, was engaging in a noisy concern for human life and security of civil aviation to camouflage its deliberate use of a civil aircraft for intelligence purposes, in disregard for human lives and international law. Its intelligence operation having been stymied, the United States, according to plan, was turning the incident into a major political provocation against the USSR. Responsibility for the tragedy rested with the United States, the USSR insisted.

The 51 States which participated in the debate all expressed sorrow or regret over the heavy loss of life and extended their condolences and sympathy to the bereaved families. The majority voiced outrage at what they called the deliberate destruction of an unarmed, clearly identifiable civil aircraft and condemned the action, with some calling it murder, massacre or sheer lawlessness. Maintaining that no conceivable circumstance could justify such action, they invoked internationally agreed procedures governing airspace intrusions, whether intentional or not, such as those laid down by the 1944 Chicago Convention, to which the USSR was party. They called on the USSR for a full accounting of the circumstances surrounding the incident, for an immediate investigation by the Secretary-General and ICAO so that responsibilities might be determined, and for steps to be taken to improve regulations designed to ensure against similar incidents. Like the Republic of Korea, the majority sought punishment of those directly responsible for the shooting down of the aircraft and demanded compensation for the loss of life and property.

To impress on the USSR the gravity and determination with which it viewed the incident, Canada said it had announced its decision to suspend, for a period of 60 days, the right of the USSR airline, Aeroflot, to use Canada's Montreal (Quebec) and Gander (Newfoundland) airports. Canada also reserved the right under international law to claim compensation for the loss of Canadian lives—as did the United Kingdom—and believed that the USSR should assist the bereaved families in such humanitarian ways as instituting a co-ordinated search for the victims' remains, organizing memorial services and providing the families with any information available.

In the view of Fiji and the Federal Republic of Germany, the right of a State to enforce respect for its airspace and sovereignty was limited by the principle of proportionality. Sharing that view were Belgium, Canada, Ecuador, Guatemala, the Philippines, logo, the United States and Zaire, all of which considered the USSR action unjustifiably disproportionate to the cause. The United States said no conceivable assumption of peril posed by a single commercial airliner to USSR security could have justified the action. Similarly, Belgium commented that to accept that certain circumstances justified an action that had cost 269 lives would create a permanent insecurity in international civil aviation. Whatever a State's security requirements might be, Italy said, it was essential that they be fulfilled without endangering the lives of innocent, defenceless civilians.

Elementary considerations of humanity were invoked by the Federal Republic of Germany, Sweden and the United States, which added that, in the view of the International Court of Justice, those considerations were even more exacting in peace than in war. Sweden stated that, in interception of civil aircraft, respect for human life took precedence over protection of territory in times of peace. For Colombia and Zaire, the same held true even in times of conflict.

Sweden drew attention, however, to the well-known fact that the USSR had severe rules to protect its State boundaries, not precluding the use of force even against civilian aircraft—rules which, Sweden added, were not in accordance with generally accepted norms of international law. Singapore demanded that the USSR bring its rules into conformity with those governing international civil aviation.

Pakistan, along with Malaysia, pointed out that, in an age of extensive air travel, passenger safety should be guaranteed not only by technical and legal means but also by exercising compassion and forbearance and by avoiding drastic measures. Since airspace intrusions, especially by accident, could not be ruled out, resorting to irreversible acts of violence—which could have grave consequences—must be.

Egypt and Jordan felt that the current atmosphere of mutual distrust and suspicion and heightened tension could not be excluded from the circumstances leading to the tragedy. Nigeria saw the incident as a symptom of a deeper malaise in the international situation, observing that recently, the super-Powers had appeared to embark on a collision course, thereby endangering the very existence of mankind. The affair was an illustration of the danger of stockpiling deadly armaments, according to Liberia, which felt that the tendency of the two Powers to over-react when provoked should be checked. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, recalling that it had lost a civil aircraft under similar circumstances in 1973,(7) pointed to the risk of a recurrence of the tragedy which the use of reconnaissance planes in conjunction with civilian flights could cause. For Sierra Leone, the tragedy demonstrated the need for confidence-building measures to reduce international tension. The United Kingdom hoped that the appalling action by the USSR was not intended to signal its intentions towards international relations as a whole.

Australia believed that attempts by the USSR and others to deny the Republic of Korea its legitimate place in the international community and its rights under international law had contributed to the circumstances leading to the tragedy.

Several States-Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Sweden and Zaire-expressed concern over the consequences for detente and international peace and security. Jordan declared its lack of enthusiasm over what it said had become the internationalization of the incident, thus making it part of the East-West cold war. Singapore appealed to the USSR and others not to turn the tragedy into a new bout of such confrontation.

Spain voiced hope that efforts in various forums to achieve detente would continue despite the incident. Instead of using it for casting aspersions on a specific party, the international community should ensure the safety of international aviation, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya advised. If current Council meetings led to the assurance of such safety, to a restoration of trust and to detente, the sacrifice of life would not have been completely in vain, Colombia said. Paraguay expressed a similar sentiment.

Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic and Poland were emphatic in stating that, if anyone was responsible for the tragedy, it was the United States. That country, they asserted, had orchestrated the tragedy with cold-blooded calculation, sacrificing innocent lives for political ends, and was currently exploiting the incident for an inflammatory anti-USSR campaign, aimed at exacerbating international tensions and justifying the escalation of United States military build up.

Bulgaria said it could not but conclude that KAL 007 had been deliberately used for intelligence activities over USSR territory of high strategic importance, given the exclusion by The New York Times of 3 September of the possibility of navigational malfunction, the aircraft's unresponsiveness to warnings, and the failure of those who knew of its intrusion to alert it or the USSR. The German Democratic Republic said it was clear why those who had asked the Council to convene failed to explain how an aircraft with the most sophisticated navigational facilities could have deviated so unacceptably from its course and had not reacted to signals; the aircraft's behaviour, the German Democratic Republic asserted, was part of its spying orders.

Like the USSR, Poland doubted the authenticity of the tape played by the United States. No proof had been given of its connection to the incident and only a small portion of the information allegedly monitored had been provided; that information in no way confirmed that the USSR pilot knew KAL 007 was a civilian aircraft, for at no time did he describe it as such. Poland asked why, if the USSR pilot had seen the KAL plane, as the United States claimed, might one not assume that that plane had also seen the USSR pilot and wonder why the KAL plane did not then respond according to generally accepted rules.

The presence of a United States spy plane flying parallel to KAL 007 had had a direct bearing on the incident, Bulgaria stated. In the opinion of the German Democratic Republic, the current Council meeting should contribute to halting United States provocative military manoeuvres along the borders of sovereign States and so cease exposing civil aviation to danger.

Poland urged those who sincerely regretted the incident to do their utmost to create conditions to prevent its repetition and refrain from using the tragedy for the further deterioration of the international atmosphere and from creating even more serious consequences. It hoped that emotions would calm down and sober minds prevail, and that even in the United States a higher concern for peace would prevail over primitive anti-communist and narrow imperialist interests.

Communications. In the course of the Security Council meetings, a number of communications transmitting the official statements of their Governments or stating their position on the incident were addressed to the Council President or to the Secretary-General requesting their communication to the President for circulation: from Chile(8) and Thailand(9) on 2 September; Greece(10) and Tunisia(11) on 6 September; Jamaica(12) and Malawi(13) on 7 September; Barbados,(14) India(15) and Indonesia(16) on 8 September; Austria,(17) Belize,(18) Brazil(19) and Nepal(20) on 9 September; and Canada(21) on 13 September. The communications generally reflected the majority position in the Council debate. The letter from Thailand included a call on the USSR to conduct an immediate search for possible survivors. Those from Austria and India stated that, in an atmosphere of international tension charged with mistrust, there was an ever-present risk of error leading to calamity and hence urged the international community to address itself to eliminating the causes of mistrust.

In addition, Japan transmitted on 7 September⁽²²⁾ a statement issued the same day by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, rebutting the USSR charges that Japanese air traffic controllers, aware that KAL 007 was inside USSR airspace, did nothing to warn or stop the flight. According to the statement, the full radio exchange between the aircraft and Tokyo International Air Control at Narita showed that no warning was possible: no sooner had the air controllers realized the aircraft's identity than it had been shot down. Japan demanded a retraction of the charges, which it concluded were not only groundless but also an attempt to shift part of the blame onto Japan.

Mongolia, by a letter of 9 September⁽²³⁾ considered it absurd that the USSR should be held responsible for the incident, since it had acted solely to ensure the security of its borders; Mongolia blamed the United States for sending the aircraft into USSR airspace for intelligence purposes and charged the Western press with exploiting the incident for an anti-USSR campaign.

On 16 September⁽²⁴⁾ Israel, condemning the downing of the aircraft as wanton and brutal, recalled that an El-Al Israel airliner had experienced a similar fate in 1955 at the hands of Bulgarian Security Forces with the loss of 58 people on board; it also stated that, at the Council meeting of 6 September 1983, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had introduced a matter extraneous to the Council's agenda, the correct presentation of which could be found in Israel's March 1973 letter.⁽⁷⁾ Responding on 21 September⁽²⁵⁾ the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya noted the "Zionist" entity's failure to mention that the extraneous matter was its downing of a Libyan passenger airliner in 1973,⁽⁷⁾ causing 108 deaths. On 27 September 1983,⁽²⁶⁾ in transmitting excerpts of its 1973 letter, Israel said it was astonished that there should have been circulated, as a United Nations document, a letter in which Israel was referred to by other than its official name and requested that, in future, proper caution be exercised in this regard.

Korean question

During 1983, the President of the Security Council received, and circulated to the Council several communications from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea concerning military operations in the Korean peninsula. He also received a report of the United Nations Command concerning maintenance of the 1953 Korean Armistice Agreement.

Communications. By a letter of 8 February 1983,⁽²⁸⁾ the Democratic People's Republic of Korea transmitted a communique of the Supreme Command of the Korean People's Army (KPA) protesting "Team Spirit 83", a joint military exercise that was being conducted by the United States and the Republic of Korea on the Korean peninsula. Denouncing it as an open military provocation and a grave threat to peace in Asia and the world, the communique added that the Supreme Command had issued a war alert for the duration of the exercise. Claiming this to be a gross distortion of the facts, the Republic of Korea, in a letter of 11 February,⁽²⁹⁾ noted that not only had such an exercise been held yearly since 1976 but that prior notification had been provided to the Democratic People's Republic on 15 December 1982, followed by an invitation to send observers, which was quickly rejected.

By a letter of 19 May 1983,⁽³⁰⁾ the Democratic People's Republic of Korea transmitted a 21 April memorandum from its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, charging the United States with forming a tripartite military alliance with the Republic of Korea and Japan, thereby further aggravating the situation in the Korean peninsula and the Asian region. Replying by a letter of 9 June,⁽³¹⁾ the Republic of Korea described the memorandum as replete with distortions and falsehoods; it denied the existence of the so-called tripartite alliance, saying the allegation was a further instance in which the Democratic People's Republic had burdened the Council with propaganda, and reiterated that inter-Korean dialogue was the only practical means of achieving the peaceful unification of Korea.

By a letter of 16 May, ⁽³²⁾ the Democratic People's Republic of Korea accused the United States of planning to deploy neutron bombs on the Korean peninsula-quoting The Washington Post of 2 May in support of its contention-and converting the Republic of Korea into a nuclear base, in violation of the 1953 Armistice Agreement and international law. That allegation was based on mere speculation, the Republic of Korea said in a letter of 23 May,⁽³³⁾ charging that this latest propaganda manoeuvre was designed to conceal an invasion planned against the Republic of Korea, as reported by two military officers who had defected from the Democratic People's Republic.

Report of the United Nations Command. A report of the United Nations Command concerning maintenance of the 1953 Korean Armistice Agreement between 17 December 1981 and 31 December 1982 was submitted by a letter of 20 April 1983 from the United States,⁽³⁴⁾ on behalf of the unified command established pursuant to a 1950 Security Council resolution.⁽³⁵⁾

The report stated that the KAP/Chinese People's Volunteers side continued to conduct hostile acts against the Command and the Republic of Korea, totalling more than 11,800 violations of the Agreement. An appendix gave details of two 1982 incidents submitted by the Command to the Military Armistice Commission. One was described as occurring on 21 April, in which two guardposts north of the military demarcation line simultaneously opened fire on a guardpost south of it, resulting in one of the most intense fire exchanges across the line in recent years; about an hour later, 15 armed KPA soldiers were observed some 300 metres south of the line. The other incident took place on 15 May: two armed KPA infiltrators, who apparently came in by sea, approached to within 10 metres of a Command observation post; in the ensuing exchange of fire, one of the infiltrators was killed; his body was returned, on request, on 18 May.

The report also stated that Joseph T. White, a private first class (Pfc.) in the Command's military police force, had crossed over north of the demarcation line on 28 August. Repeated requests for an interview with him or for a telephone link with his family in the United States were denied by KPA, which said that he had defected and insisted that the matter not be brought up again.

In June, the Command informed the Democratic People's Republic of Korea that the Commission would periodically call meetings for the sole purpose of negotiating specific tension-reducing measures. The Democratic People's Republic had yet to respond positively to that initiative and to others that had been repeatedly put forward. The report concluded that, for most of the reporting period, KPA had used the Commission to dispense distorted political propaganda; namely, that tension was caused by the United States and the Republic of Korea and that, to remove the tension, United States forces should be withdrawn and the Agreement replaced by a peace treaty.

The Democratic People's Republic of Korea, by a letter of 7 July,⁽³⁶⁾ described the report as full of fabrications and as slanderous with respect to Pfc. White, maintaining that the Commission was not the forum for arranging contact with him—a matter which was for him alone to decide. The letter reiterated that it was the United States that aggravated tensions in the Korean peninsula, with its provocative military exercises, its reconnaissance flights which regularly violated the airspace of the Democratic People's Republic and other hostile acts.

South-East Asia

Kampuchea situation

The situation in and around Kampuchea and Democratic Kampuchea's representation in the United Nations continued to occupy the attention of the Organization in 1983.

The Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea dispatched two missions in May and June/July to five capitals and to Geneva for consultations, in pursuance of its mandate to assist in seeking a settlement of the situation. In October, the General Assembly, by resolution 38/3, restated its view of the principal components of a just and lasting solution—withdrawal of all foreign forces, restoration and preservation of the country's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, the people's right to determine its destiny, and a commitment by all States to non-interference in Kampuchea's internal affairs.

Numerous communications were received throughout the year on various aspects of the situation and related issues, including the alleged use of chemical weapons, the situation along the common borders of Democratic Kampuchea, Thailand and Viet Nam, general aspects of peace and security in South-East Asia and the China-Viet Nam dispute.

Communications (January-October). A number of the communications received by the Secretary-General between January and October 1983 concerned incidents on the common borders of Democratic Kampuchea, Thailand and Viet Nam, with Democratic Kampuchea claiming Vietnamese attacks on the civilian population in the border areas, calling for humanitarian aid for the victims, and urging the international community to condemn Viet Nam and compel it to withdraw its troops from Kampuchea. Thailand complained of numerous armed incursions into its territory by Vietnamese forces operating from Kampuchea and reaffirmed the right to defend its territory and to protect its nationals. Viet Nam repeatedly rejected Thailand's allegations as fabrications, serving only to undermine the process of dialogue and promote the expansionist schemes of China, which was trying to reimpose the Pol Pot régime on the Kampucheans.

The Viet Nam News Agency, in a statement of 30 December 1982 transmitted on 3 January 1983,⁽¹⁾ referred to a Radio Beijing report quoting Thai newspaper accounts of Thailand's instructions that the Secretary-General be informed of Vietnamese encroachments on Thailand's border, shelling its territory and causing death and injury to civilians; the Agency rejected the report as fabrication aimed at undermining relations between Thailand and Viet Nam when the atmosphere was becoming less strained. By a letter of 7 January,(2) Thailand protested what it claimed to be more than an hour-long artillery barrage on 31 December 1982, 7 kilometres into Thai territory by Vietnamese forces in Kampuchea, killing four Thai children and seriously injuring eight others. Viet Nam also rejected this allegation on 14 January 1983,(3)

By a further letter of 2 February and a later addendum,(4) Thailand charged that Vietnamese forces, in the course of an attack on the Kampuchean civilian encampment at Nong Chan, about a kilometre from the Kampuchea-Thailand border, fired 30 artillery shells into Prachinburi province, killing a Thai civilian, injuring two others, damaging property and killing livestock; the attack on Nong Chan forced some 47,000 Kampucheans to flee to Thailand. Viet Nam, rejecting the charge by two communications—a Viet Nam News Agency statement of 4 February transmitted the same day,(5) and a note verbale of 8 February(6)—countercharged that Khmer reactionary forces, aided by China and the United States, were using Thai territory to stage attacks into Kampuchea in an attempt to reimpose the genocidal Pol Pot régime.

On 7 February,(7) Democratic Kampuchea transmitted two statements dated 3 February, one from President Samdech Norodom Sihanouk and the other from its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, condemning attacks on the Nong Chan refugee camp between 31 January and 2 February, which were said to have reduced the camp to ashes and left its 30,000 inhabitants homeless. In a 21 February statement transmitted on 28 February,(8) President Sihanouk denounced another Vietnamese attack on civilian populations in the Nong Chan area on 4 February and called for the expulsion of Viet Nam from the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries.

The Foreign Ministers of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN), in a joint statement of 1 April which Thailand transmitted the same day,(9) condemned what they said were unprovoked and indiscriminate attacks by Vietnamese forces against Kampuchean civilians, and Vietnamese incursions into Thailand; they demanded immediate cessation of the attacks and respect for Thailand's sovereignty and territorial integrity, and called on the international community to assist the Kampuchean victims. President Sihanouk, in a further statement of 1 April transmitted on 5 April,(10) charged that, on 31 March, Vietnamese troops had attacked civilians in the Phnom Chhat area; he urged the international community to condemn such attacks and compel the Vietnamese troops to leave Kampuchea.

A statement of 5 April by Viet Nam's Foreign Ministry, transmitted the same day,(11) denied charges by Thailand, the United States and ASEAN that Vietnamese forces had attacked refugee camps along the border area and had intruded into Thai territory; support given to the armed forces of Kampuchea by the volunteer troops of Viet Nam, the statement continued, was in keeping with a treaty between the two countries, and the tense border situation was due to Thailand's collusion with China in opposing the People's Republic of Kampuchea. Democratic Kampuchea's President Sihanouk, in a 4 April statement transmitted three days later,(12) denounced Viet Nam's 3 April bombardment of the civilian population of O Smach-Sihanouk Borei, near the Kampuchea-Thailand border.

On 14 April,(13) Thailand alleged further violations against its territory: on 1 and 2 April, armed incursions by some 500 and 100 Vietnamese troops into Prachinburi province, resulting in the death of 5 Thai soldiers and injury to 14 others in the skirmish that ensued; and on 3 and 4 April, the shelling of Surin province and attacks on the civilian population of O Smach-Sihanouk Borei in Kampuchea, forcing some 25,000 Kampucheans to take refuge in Surin. Condemning these incursions and attacks, China's Foreign Ministry, in a 5 April statement transmitted the same day,(14) urged the international community to condemn them likewise. Also deploring these events were the Foreign Ministers of the European Community (EC)—in a statement of 25 April transmitted by the Federal Republic of Germany on 28 April(15)—who reiterated the demand made in a joint EC-ASEAN declaration of March that Viet Nam withdraw its troops from Kampuchea and that the Kampucheans' right to self-determination be given effect under relevant United Nations resolutions.

By a letter of 6 May, (16) Thailand reported further Vietnamese violations of its territory: on 8 April, the shooting down of a Thai A-37 reconnaissance aircraft over Thai territory adjacent to the Kampuchea-Thailand border, killing its pilot and co-pilot; and between 5 and 21 April, over 20 violations including seven armed incursions into Thai territory, four clashes with Thai soldiers and over 100 Vietnamese shells landing on Thai territory—resulting in injury to three persons and destruction of property and livestock. Refuting these as distortional allegations, Viet Nam, on 12 May,(17) said that in early April, the forces of the People's Republic of Kampuchea and Vietnamese volunteer troops were forced to counter-attack in the face of Thailand's increased support of sabotage activities and incursions into Kampuchea by the remnants of the Pol Pot clique and other Khmer reactionaries.

On 6 October,(18) Thailand complained that, on over 60 separate occasions between May and August, its land, airspace and waters had been blatantly violated by Vietnamese forces, causing death, serious injuries and destruction of property; these included shelling, armed robbery, firing at a Thai patrol boat and fishing boat and seizing the latter, and two separate attacks on villagers by heavy-calibre machine-gun fire.

Military activity other than border incidents were addressed by Democratic Kampuchea in three communications. A communiqué issued by its Council of Ministers on 30 April and transmitted on 9 May,(19) besides denouncing Viet Nam's attacks on the refugee camps of Nong Chan, Phnom Chhat and O Smach-Sihanouk Borei along the Kampuchea-Thailand border, also denounced a Vietnamese partial troop withdrawal as a manoeuvre to deceive world opinion. A letter of 11 May(20) attached a list of crimes allegedly committed by the Vietnamese army against the Kampuchean civilian population between 2 February and 20 April. A communiqué issued on 9 May by the Military High Command of the National Army of Democratic Kampuchea, transmitted on 20 May,(21) assessed military operations during the dry season (October 1982-April 1983) as being successful and reported 16,600 of the enemy killed or wounded.

Charges concerning chemical weapons use in the conflict between Democratic Kampuchea and Viet Nam continued to be received in 1983, and information was provided for transmittal to the Group of Experts to Investigate Reports on the Alleged Use of Chemical Weapons (see also Chapter I of this section, under CHEMICAL WEAPONS USE).

Democratic Kampuchea sent three such communications. On 23 February,(22) it submitted a list of cases involving the alleged use of chemical toxins and poison-gas shelling by Vietnamese forces in four provinces, on 23 and 29 December 1982 and between 16 January and 12 February 1983. A letter of 12 April(23) cited additional cases involving drinking-water poisoning and aerial spraying of toxic chemicals. Earlier, a Foreign Ministry statement of 16 March, transmitted on 21 March,(24) denounced what it said was the intensified use of chemical weapons by the Vietnamese against Kampuchean civilians during the 1982-1983 dry season; photographs of Vietnamese soldiers reportedly captured in gas masks were attached.

Democratic Kampuchea also transmitted three statements claiming flagrant violations of its territorial integrity by Viet Nam aimed ultimately at what it referred to as the Vietnamization of Kampuchea.

By the first, issued on 10 January and transmitted on 20 January,(25) the Foreign Ministry of Democratic Kampuchea condemned what it called Hanoi's annexation of parts of Kampuchea's sea waters, as evidenced by a so-called agreement of 7 July 1982 between Viet Nam and its puppet régime in Phnom Penh on the "historical waters of the two countries" and by a 12 November 1982 Vietnamese statement referring to "its territorial sea baseline", which included large tracts of Kampuchean sea waters. Democratic Kampuchea regarded those actions as flagrant violations of its sovereignty and rejected them as null and void. By the second statement, dated 23 July and transmitted two days later,(26) a Foreign Ministry spokesman similarly rejected a so-called treaty between Hanoi and Phnom Penh governing border transit, labelling it a manoeuvre by Hanoi to legalize its occupation of Kampuchea. The third statement, dated 13 October and transmitted a day later,(27) accused Viet Nam of systematically settling its nationals in Kampuchea, whose numbers had reached several hundred thousand; it denounced this population transfer and regarded as null and void any agreement on their settlement in Kampuchea.

On 25 February,(28) the Lao People's Democratic Republic transmitted two statements issued at the end of a conference held at Vientiane on 22 and 23 February with the People's Republic of Kampuchea and Viet Nam; the second statement contained a proposal for the yearly partial but conditional withdrawal of Viet Nam's volunteer forces from Kampuchea in 1983. China's Foreign Ministry, by a statement of 1 March transmitted the same day,(29) denounced the proposal as a hoax and reiterated that the key to a settlement of the Kampuchea situation lay in the total and unconditional withdrawal of Viet Nam's troops. The Ministry summed up China's proposals for a settlement: Viet Nam must declare such withdrawal; the USSR must cease support of Viet Nam's aggression against Kampuchea; on withdrawal of the first batch of troops, China would resume negotiations for improved relations with Viet Nam; after total troop withdrawal, the Kampucheans should choose a government in free elections under United Nations supervision; and, jointly with other countries, China would commit itself to non-interference and to respect Kampuchea's independence and non-aligned status.

The Foreign Ministry of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, in a statement of 6 April transmitted by the Lao People's Democratic Republic on 18 April,(30) charged Thailand with armed provocation against Kampuchea, causing heavy loss of life and property; it also accused China, the United States and the ASEAN leaders of aiding the Pol Pot régime.

The ASEAN Foreign Ministers, in a joint statement released on 21 September at Jakarta and transmitted by Indonesia on the same date,(31) appealed to the international community, particularly to Viet Nam and the five permanent members of the Security Council, to intensify efforts towards a just solution of the Kampuchea situation so as to restore Kampuchea's status as an independent and sovereign State.

An appeal for humanitarian assistance to Kampuchians was made by the Vice-President of the Council of Ministers and Minister for Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea in a 25 June message to the Secretary-General; it was transmitted on 13 July⁽³²⁾ by the Lao People's Democratic Republic. That country also transmitted on 7 October⁽³³⁾ an open letter of 12 September from intellectuals and religious people of the People's Republic, appealing for condemnation of international support for the so-called Coalition Government of Kampuchea and for its expulsion from the United Nations; along with the letter was a white paper outlining the policy of the People's Republic towards Vietnamese residents in Kampuchea.

Activities of the Committee of the Conference on Kampuchea. As authorized by the General Assembly in October 1982,⁽³⁴⁾ the 10-member Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea held five meetings between 24 January and 20 September 1983. It dispatched a mission on 25 May to Washington, D.C., for consultations with the United States Department of State, and another to Tokyo, Beijing (China), Bangkok (Thailand), London and Geneva from 19 June to 6 July. At Geneva, the mission met with the President of the International Conference on Kampuchea.

The Committee's report on its 1982-1983 activities⁽³⁵⁾ noted that the missions, in their consultations with the respective Governments, underscored the international community's concern over the continuing Kampuchea conflict and sought the widest possible participation in and support for efforts towards a comprehensive political settlement. They stressed that such a settlement must be based on two principles: the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea and the right of the Kampuchians to determine their own destiny. They also reiterated that the settlement should take account of the legitimate security concerns of the region, including a commitment by all States to non-interference in Kampuchea's internal affairs.

The consultations dealt with the partial troop withdrawal announced by Viet Nam, the latest military attacks on Kampuchean civilian encampments along the Kampuchea-Thailand border, a Thai proposal for a 30-kilometer withdrawal of Viet Nam's troops from that border, China's five-point proposal of 1 March;⁽²⁹⁾ and a declaration adopted by the Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Non-Aligned Countries (New Delhi, India, 3-5 March), which included a call for foreign troop withdrawal from Kampuchea. The Governments had reaffirmed their support for the objectives laid down by the International Conference and the relevant Assembly resolutions, as well as for initiatives for a negotiated settlement. At Bangkok, the mission was briefed on the results of the ASEAN Ministerial Meeting (Bangkok, 24 and 25 June), with the ASEAN Foreign Ministers reiterating their willingness to engage in consultations with Viet Nam so as to achieve such a settlement.

At Geneva, in addition to reporting to the Conference President on its consultations, the mission discussed current developments in Kampuchea, including reports of Vietnamese measures that could alter the country's demographic character.

Concluding its report, the Committee appealed to those Member States which had not participated in the International Conference to cooperate, and to all parties to pursue the process of dialogue and refrain from actions that could further complicate the situation.

Report of the Secretary-General. In his report to the General Assembly,⁽³⁶⁾ submitted pursuant to the 1982 Assembly resolution on the Kampuchea situation,⁽³⁴⁾ the Secretary-General stated that he had maintained close contact with the States most directly concerned and with other interested parties, in the exercise of his good offices. He had held extensive discussions with the Foreign Minister of Viet Nam, as well as with those of Indonesia, Malaysia and Singapore at the March 1983 Conference of Foreign Ministers of non-aligned countries. His Special Representative, Rafeeuddin Ahmed, had visited South-East Asia in June/July to consult with Governments. Thereafter, the Secretary-General had continued discussions in New York with the President of Democratic Kampuchea, the Deputy Prime Minister of Malaysia, the Foreign Ministers of China, Indonesia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam and with other interested Governments.

In addition, diplomatic exchanges and bilateral consultations had continued among the South-East Asian countries on possible approaches to a dialogue and negotiations. The Secretary-General reported that these had fostered a climate of better understanding. However, despite the emergence of tentative elements of convergence, there remained significant differences. The situation in the region also remained relatively tense, particularly along the Kampuchea-Thailand border.

Reiterating his conviction that continued absence of progress towards genuine negotiations could only generate further tension and thus a deterioration of the situation, the Secretary-General considered it essential that initiatives at various levels be pursued with renewed vigour. He restated his determination to continue to exercise his good offices in this regard.

The Secretary-General also stated that he had continued to implement the humanitarian assistance programme for Kampuchea, which included operations within that country, at the border and within Thailand.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following consideration of the situation in Kampuchea and the Secretary-General's report, the General Assembly, on 27 October 1983, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/3.

The situation in Kampuchea

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/22 of 14 November 1979, 35/6 of 22 October 1980, 36/5 of 21 October 1981 and 37/6 of 28 October 1982,

Recalling the Declaration on Kampuchea and resolution 1(I) adopted by the International Conference on Kampuchea, which offer the negotiating framework for a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean problem,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 37/6,

Noting the increasing effectiveness of the coalition with Samdech Norodom Sihanouk as President of Democratic Kampuchea, Deploping that foreign armed intervention and occupation continue and that foreign forces have not been withdrawn from Kampuchea, thus causing continuing hostilities in that country and seriously threatening international peace and security,

Gravely concerned that the continued deployment of foreign forces in Kampuchea near the Thai-Kampuchean border and the renewed attack on civilians by those forces, in violation of humanitarian principles, have aggravated tension in the region,

Greatly disturbed that the continued fighting and instability in Kampuchea have forced Kampucheans to flee to the Thai-Kampuchean border in search of food and safety,

Recognizing that the assistance extended by the international community has continued to reduce the food shortages and health problems of the Kampuchean people,

Emphasizing that it is the inalienable right of the Kampuchean people who have sought refuge in neighbouring countries to return safely to their homeland,

Emphasizing further that no effective solution to the humanitarian problems can be achieved without a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean conflict,

Seriously concerned about reported demographic changes being imposed in Kampuchea by foreign occupation forces,

Convinced that, to bring about durable peace in South-East Asia, there is an urgent need for a comprehensive political solution to the Kampuchean problem that will provide for the withdrawal of all foreign forces and ensure respect for the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and neutral and non-aligned status of Kampuchea, as well as the right of the Kampuchean people to self-determination free from outside interference,

Convinced further that, after the comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean question through peaceful means, the countries of the South-East Asian region can pursue efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in South-East Asia so as to lessen international tensions and to achieve lasting peace in the region,

Reaffirming the need for all States to adhere strictly to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, which call for respect for the national independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States, non-intervention and non-interference in the internal affairs of States, non-recourse to the threat or use of force and peaceful settlement of disputes,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 34/22, 35/6, 36/5 and 37/6 and calls for their full implementation;

Reiterates its conviction that the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea, the restoration and preservation of its independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, the right of the Kampuchean people to determine their own destiny and the commitment by all States to non-interference and non-intervention in the internal affairs of Kampuchea are the principal components of any just and lasting resolution of the Kampuchean problem;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea and requests that the Committee continue its work, pending the reconvening of the Conference;

4. Authorizes the Ad Hoc Committee to convene when necessary and to carry out the tasks entrusted to it in its mandate;

5. Reaffirms its decision to reconvene the Conference at an appropriate time, in accordance with Conference resolution 1(I);

6. Renews its appeal to all States of South-East Asia and others concerned to attend future sessions of the Conference;

7. Requests the Conference to report to the General Assembly on its future sessions;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to consult with and assist the Conference and the Ad Hoc Committee and to provide them on a regular basis with the necessary facilities to carry out their functions;

9. Expresses its appreciation once again to the Secretary-General for taking appropriate steps in following the situation closely and requests him to continue to do so and to exercise his good offices in order to contribute to a comprehensive political settlement;

10. Expresses its deep appreciation once again to donor countries, the United Nations and its agencies and other national and international humanitarian organizations that have rendered relief assistance to the Kampuchean people, and appeals to them to continue to provide emergency assistance to those Kampucheans who are still in need, especially along the Thai-Kampuchean border and in the holding centres in Thailand;

11. Reiterates its deep appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts in co-ordinating humanitarian relief assistance and in monitoring its distribution, and requests him to intensify such efforts as are necessary;

12. Urges the countries of South-East Asia, once a comprehensive political solution to the Kampuchean conflict is achieved, to exert renewed efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in South-East Asia;

13. Reiterates the hope that, following a comprehensive political solution, an intergovernmental committee will be established to consider a programme of assistance to Kampuchea for the reconstruction of its economy and for the economic and social development of all States in the region;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "The situation in Kampuchea".

Abstaining: Algeria, Benin, Cape Verde, Finland, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, India, Iraq, Lebanon, Madagascar, Malawi, Mexico, Panama, Sao Tome and Principe, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Zimbabwe.

A number of States explained their votes. Mongolia said that the text, in addition to erroneously recognizing the representatives of those responsible for the genocide of the Kampuchians, reflected only the position of one group of countries of South-East Asia; its adoption would constitute not only interference in Kampuchea's internal affairs but an obstacle to dialogue between the parties concerned. That interference, the German Democratic Republic asserted, was the real source of tension and threat to the region's peace and stability, a reality not taken into account in the text.

Nicaragua reaffirmed the position of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, which supported a comprehensive political solution of the situation in South-East Asia, the withdrawal of all foreign troops as a guarantee of the independence and sovereignty of the region's States including Kampuchea, and creating a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in the region; based on its rejection of forces wanting to establish regimes representing terror, violence and exploitation instead of economic progress, Nicaragua, like the non-aligned Movement, did not recognize the Pol Pot régime as Kampuchea's legitimate Government and rejected any United Nations action that might lead to its acceptance.

On the other hand, a number of States saw the resolution as a confirmation of those principles which they believed essential to a settlement of the Kampuchean conflict—the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea, the restoration of the sovereign independence of that country, the right of its people to self-determination, non-intervention in its internal affairs and dispute settlement by negotiation rather than force.

Sierra Leone, which in the past had abstained on every resolution on Kampuchea, voted for the current one because it essentially addressed the various interests at stake; its vote further signified confidence in Samdech Norodom Sihanouk and belief that the Organization could play a constructive role in bringing peace to Kampuchea and to South-East Asia as a whole.

Despite its affirmative vote, Sweden made clear it was not prepared to subscribe to every formulation in the text, in particular to changes in the preambular section from previous formulations. Bolivia, Brazil, Ireland, Mali and Rwanda expressed reservations on the fourth preambular paragraph, believing it prejudged the question of which was the legitimate Government of Kampuchea. That paragraph was neither in keeping with the realities in Kampuchea nor with Mali's policy in recognizing States, Mali observed; had a separate vote been taken on the paragraph, it would have abstained. Rwanda, which also would have abstained on the paragraph, made clear, as did Ireland, that its affirmative vote implied no change in its position on Kampuchean representation. On this point, Sierra Leone reiterated its resolve not to become an accomplice of those responsible for Kampuchea's nightmarish experience nor in its repetition.

Other action. In earlier related action, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1983/155, endorsed a February resolution of the Commission on Human Rights on self-determination as it applied to Kampuchea (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII, under "Self-determination of peoples").

Further communications. Referring to General Assembly resolution 38/3 on the situation in Kampuchea, a spokesman for the Foreign Ministry of Viet Nam, in a statement of 28 October transmitted the same day,⁽³⁷⁾ criticized the Assembly for again opposing the Kampuchean people's right to self-determination and interfering in that country's internal affairs, in disregard of the Kampuchean reality. As with past resolutions adopted without the participation and consent of the People's Republic, Viet Nam rejected the resolution as null and void.

A 28 October declaration by the Foreign Ministry of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, transmitted by the Lao People's Democratic Republic on 1 November⁽³⁸⁾ called the text ill-judged and worthless and rejected all resolutions which it said guaranteed neither an end to the threat of aggression against the three Indo-Chinese countries—the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the People's Republic of Kampuchea and Viet Nam—nor the independence and sovereignty of all the countries of the region; the declaration stated that the United Nations could play no part in resolving the region's problems as long as it recognized the genocidal Pol Pot criminals hiding behind the flag of the so-called Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea.

Participation and representation of Democratic Kampuchea in UN bodies

The question of Democratic Kampuchea's representation in United Nations bodies was again raised in 1983.

In a statement submitted to the President of the Economic and Social Council on 25 July by the German Democratic Republic,⁽³⁹⁾ 17 States—Afghanistan, Benin, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, the Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Viet Nam—said they considered illegal the presence of Democratic Kampuchea's delegation at the Council's July session, the only existing Kampuchean State being the People's Republic of Kampuchea.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, in a declaration of 21 October transmitted by Viet Nam that day,⁽⁴⁰⁾ stated that the realities of the Kampuchea situation had proved United Nations decisions on Kampuchea's representation groundless and unjust. Since their deliverance in 1979 from the genocidal regime of "Democratic Kampuchea" imposed by the Pol Pot-Ieng Sary-Khieu Samphan clique, the Kampuchean people under the People's Republic were well on the road to reconstruction and development, with famine suppressed, a national assembly established and order and security throughout the country ensured by an effective and popular government. The declaration demanded restoration of Kampuchea's seat to its rightful representatives, drawing attention in this respect to a provisional solution arrived at in March by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to leave vacant Kampuchea's seat in that Movement.

The validity of Democratic Kampuchea's credentials to the 1983 General Assembly session was also questioned at a September meeting of the Credentials Committee. The USSR claimed that there was no such country and that only the State of the People's Republic of Kampuchea existed, set up by free democratic elections and as such was the legitimate representative of the Kampucheans. China, Colombia, Indonesia, Portugal and the United States, on the other hand considered the credentials in question to be in full accord with relevant provisions of the Assembly's rules of procedure.

Democratic Kampuchea's credentials were approved by virtue of General Assembly resolution 38/2, approving the first report of the Credentials Committee (see Chapter XI of this section).

International security in South-East Asia

A number of letters addressed to the Secretary-General during 1983 concerned general aspects of relations among the nations of South-East Asia. Most were circulated as documents under the General Assembly's agenda item on the "Question of peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia"—an item which the Assembly considered at three meetings in November.

On 25 February,⁽²⁸⁾ the Lao People's Democratic Republic transmitted two statements issued jointly with the People's Republic of Kampuchea and Viet Nam at Vientiane on 23 February, the first of which reaffirmed the three countries' solidarity and mutual co-operation and their policy of peace, friendship and good neighbourliness with the rest of South-East Asia, the USSR, the United States and the world at large.

By a statement of 15 March transmitted two days later,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Democratic Kampuchea rejected Viet Nam's proposal for a regional conference on Kampuchea, put forward at the Conference of Foreign Ministers of non-aligned countries (New Delhi, 3-5 March).

A spokesman for the Foreign Ministry of Viet Nam, in a statement of 9 April transmitted two days later,⁽⁴²⁾ condemned the United States for stepped-up military assistance to Thailand, which, according to Western reports, included shipment of anti-aircraft missiles and long-range artillery, to help Thailand resist alleged Vietnamese attacks at the border areas.

The Lao People's Democratic Republic transmitted two communiques, both issued jointly by its Foreign Minister and those of the People's Republic of Kampuchea and Viet Nam: the first at an extraordinary conference held on 12 April at Phnom Penh and transmitted two days later,⁽⁴³⁾ and the second at the end of a conference, also at Phnom Penh, on 19 and 20 July and transmitted on 26 July.⁽⁴⁴⁾

By the earlier communique, the three Ministers unanimously assessed the solidarity and mutual cooperation reaffirmed in February by their countries(28) as a success and as an important contribution to peace and stability in South-East Asia and the world. Noting the March decision of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to leave Kampuchea's seat vacant, the Ministers appealed to the United Nations to rescind its recognition of Democratic Kampuchea. They welcomed the ASEAN proposal for a dialogue put forward by Malaysia on 8 March, insisting, however, that the agenda and participation be based on equality and mutual respect and agreement; announced that the partial withdrawal of Vietnamese voluntary units for 1983 would take place in May; and urged an end to armed conflict at the Kampuchea-Thailand border, reiterating their 1982 proposal(45) for the establishment of a safety zone in the area.

In the later communique, the Ministers reiterated their proposal for a dialogue without precondition between their countries and ASEAN; the position of the People's Republic of Viet Nam that the annual partial withdrawal of Vietnamese volunteers from Kampuchea was contingent upon the security and stability in Kampuchea, particularly along the Kampuchea-Thailand border; the imperative that any proposal to reduce tension along that border stemmed from the principle of equal security for both sides; and the proposal for the Red Cross societies of Kampuchea and Thailand to examine, directly or through an intermediary, the humanitarian problem of Kampuchean refugees along the border, based on respect for the two countries' independence, sovereignty and security.

On 15 July,(46) Indonesia transmitted a joint communique issued by the ASEAN Ministerial Meeting at Bangkok, on 24 and 25 June, which in part reviewed the Kampuchea situation. By the communique, the ASEAN Foreign Ministers reiterated their call for a comprehensive political settlement as provided for by the 1981 Declaration of the International Conference on Kampuchea.(47) They held that Viet Nam's partial troop withdrawal, to be credible, should be part of a total troop withdrawal, expressed concern over reported demographic changes being imposed in eight Kampuchean provinces by the occupying Vietnamese forces, and deplored the attacks by those forces, between January and April, on civilian encampments along the Kampuchea-Thailand border which had caused over 40,000 Kampucheans to flee into Thailand, adding to that country's already heavy burden of providing refuge to some 170,000 Indo-Chinese refugees. The Ministers thus approved of Thailand's proposal for a withdrawal of Viet Nam's forces 30 kilometres from the border.

China-Viet Nam dispute

Between February and October 1983, the Secretary-General received several communications from China and Viet Nam, each continuing to charge the other with aggressive acts along their common border and holding the other responsible for the consequences.

A 12 February statement by the Viet Nam News Agency, transmitted four days later,(48) claimed violation of Viet Nam's sovereignty by China which, with United States companies, was exploring and extracting oil and gas from Viet Nam's territorial waters of Oanh Ca, in the Gulf of Bac Bo (Tonkin). Responding by a statement of 18 February transmitted four days later, (49) the New China News Agency (Xinhua) asserted that exploration in China's territorial sea was a matter entirely within its sovereignty. China accused Viet Nam of illegally claiming not only a large portion of the Beibu (Tonkin) Gulf, but also two islands in the area, called Xisha and Nansha by China; China, referring to its Foreign Ministry statement of 28 November 1982,(50) again declared that the maritime boundary in the Gulf as described by Viet Nam was null and void and that the islands which it persistently claimed were an inalienable part of China's territory.

On 11 April,(51) China transmitted a Foreign Ministry note of the day before, protesting more than 70 instances during March of armed provocations by Vietnamese troops along their common border, including three incursions into Chinese territory. Claiming that some 4,000 rounds of shells were fired in the process, killing or wounding 14 of its nationals, China stated that Viet Nam, contrary to its widely publicized intentions to normalize relations with China, had intensified its armed provocations.

By a statement of 29 August, transmitted on the same date,(52) a spokesman for Viet Nam's Foreign Ministry proposed a cessation of armed conflict along the border area from 30 August to 8 October, to allow celebration of Viet Nam's National Day on 2 September and China's on 1 October, thereby contributing to creating a favourable atmosphere for both sides to settle their abnormal relations. In reply, a representative of China's Foreign Ministry, during a visit to the Embassy of Viet Nam at Beijing on 30 August, stated that what China wanted was a lasting peace at the border, not merely during National Day celebrations or the Lunar New Year festival (Têt). The reply, transmitted by a letter of 7 September,(53) agreed that both sides should celebrate their festivals in peace provided Viet Nam refrained from military provocations and incursions into Chinese territory.

On 17 October, China transmitted a memorandum of 11 October from its Foreign Ministry,(54) protesting to the Vietnamese Embassy against Viet Nam's continued armed intrusions along the border areas and detailing more than 30 separate incidents from the end of August to the end of September, during the period of Viet Nam's proposed cease-fire; the incidents included shelling, direct firing on civilians, intercepting fishing boats in the Beibu Gulf and opening fire on two others in waters near Guangxi, resulting in the death and wounding of many Chinese border inhabitants and property damage.

Western and south-western Asia

Afghanistan situation and

Afghanistan-Pakistan armed incidents

As it had decided in November 1982,(1) the General Assembly again took up in November 1983 the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security. By resolution 38/29, it called anew for immediate foreign troop withdrawal, reaffirmed the Afghan people's right to determine their own form of government, and requested continued efforts by the Secretary-General for a political solution. Meanwhile, the Foreign Ministers of Afghanistan and Pakistan, meeting in another round of discussions at Geneva in April and June through the intermediary of the Secretary-General's Personal Representative, continued defining the contents of a comprehensive settlement. Throughout the summer, consultations were held with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) in the light of agreement reached that arrangements for ascertaining the voluntary and unimpeded return of refugees would start without delay.

Communications. In 1983, a majority of the communications addressed to the Secretary-General relating to the situation in Afghanistan concerned allegations and counter-allegations of armed incidents along the Afghanistan-Pakistan border.

Continued violations of its airspace and territory by Afghanistan were reported by Pakistan in letters of 21 January(2) and 26 July(3). The first cited incidents between August and December 1982, including six instances of shelling of the Chitral and Kurram Agency areas and 22 airspace intrusions, 2 of them serious: on 7 September, when four Afghan helicopters flew 4 miles into Pakistan in the Kurram Agency area and rocketed Afghan refugee camps, injuring two children and killing livestock; and on 29 December, when another Afghan helicopter fired at a border checkpoint at Domandai, Baluchistan, subsequently engaging it in an exchange of fire. Similar violations, numbering more than 30, from January to June 1983, were cited by the second letter, the most serious one on 9 April, when 14 shells were fired from Afghanistan on several Pakistani villages some 4 to 8 kilometres inside Pakistan near Chaman, injuring a child and damaging houses. Categorically rejecting these allegations as fabrications, Afghanistan, by a letter of 4 August,(4) said they were intended to cover up Pakistan's aggression against Afghanistan and armed interference in its internal affairs.

By a letter of 2 September,(5) Pakistan reported a violation of its airspace on 300 August, in which two Afghan helicopter gunships flew some 1,000 yards into Pakistan territory and fired on the village of Kotri, injuring a girl and livestock. Likewise rejecting this charge by a letter of 19 September,(6) Afghanistan stated that its Air Force was under strict orders to avoid flights over a 20-mile strip from the Durand line; it countercharged that it was from Pakistan-controlled areas that aggressive acts were repeatedly launched against Afghanistan, citing as an example an incident on 9 April, in which the Afghan village of Jurbaq came under heavy fire from the Pakistan side of the line, while an armed group drove across into Afghan territory for subversive operations.

On 21 September,(7) Pakistan drew attention to what it described as an ominous escalation of violations of its airspace by Afghanistan, listing 10 incidents on 18 and 19 September, involving from one to seven Afghan aircraft, intruding from 16 to 42 nautical miles into Pakistan's airspace. By letters of 5 October⁽⁸⁾ and 7 October,⁽⁹⁾ Pakistan reported other territorial violations: on 22 September, when Afghan artillery fired 10 shells into Pakistan, injuring seven refugees; and on 4 October, when six Afghan aircraft bombed and strafed an area about a kilometre inside Pakistan, killing three persons and seriously injuring two others—followed by a second airspace violation over the same area some hours later.

Defining these latest allegations as slanderous and baseless, Afghanistan, in a letter of 13 October,⁽¹⁰⁾ explained that it was Pakistan's custom to resort to propaganda campaigns whenever it needed to divert public attention from national problems, to drag the current General Assembly session into yet another unwarranted debate of the so-called Afghanistan question, to cover up what Pakistan had been turned into—a springboard for an undeclared war against Afghanistan—and to justify continued United States military aid to Pakistan. On 22 December, Afghanistan lodged a protest with the Embassy of Pakistan in Kabul against what it claimed to be repeated subversive and provocative acts staged from a Pakistani military outpost, directed at Afghan customs and civil installations in the border area of Torkham; the protest note, an unofficial translation of which was transmitted on 28 December,⁽¹¹⁾ mentioned an 18 December incident, in which bandits, under cover of heavy-weapons and artillery fire, raided and plundered those installations, causing heavy property damage and some deaths.

Several communications focused on the situation within Afghanistan, including the alleged use of chemical and toxin weapons in that country.

An open letter of 26 March from the National Fatherland Front of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan, transmitted on 31 March,⁽¹²⁾ drew attention to what it called unprecedented interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs by the United States Administration: on its so-called Afghanistan Day, the letter said, that Administration had staged a propaganda campaign aimed at instigating bands of hirelings to commit further crimes against the Afghan people; the letter asked the Secretary-General to use his authority to stop such interference. A statement from the same source, transmitted on 1 November,⁽¹³⁾ urged Afghans abroad, particularly those who had been deceived into engaging in subversive activities against their country, to avail themselves of the 1981 general amnesty decree,⁽¹⁴⁾ which allowed them to return in honour.

By a letter of 20 December,⁽¹⁵⁾ Afghanistan transmitted information on the proceedings of a recently held national convention, including messages and a resolution it had adopted. The convention of tribal and religious leaders and retired government officials and generals reaffirmed the objectives of the Afghan revolution, called a halt to the undeclared war against Afghanistan, reaffirmed support for the continued presence of USSR contingents in Afghanistan until all aggression against it had stopped, and, while supporting the talks with Pakistan currently being held at Geneva through the Secretary-General's intermediary, expressed hope for a direct negotiation as the shortest way to a settlement.

Letters were also received from the USSR on 4 February,⁽¹⁶⁾ and Canada on 18 March,⁽¹⁷⁾ concerning a November 1982 United States report⁽¹⁸⁾ alleging chemical weapons use by the USSR in South-East Asia and Afghanistan (see Chapter I of this section, under CHEMICAL WEAPONS USE).

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a November 1982 General Assembly request, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly and the Security Council in September 1983 a report on activities he had undertaken with respect to the Afghanistan situation.⁽¹⁹⁾

The Secretary-General stated that he had continued promoting a political solution through negotiations. His Personal Representative, Diego Cordovez, had consulted with representatives of Pakistan, Afghanistan and Iran (21 January-7 February), in efforts to define the substantive contents of a comprehensive settlement and to determine the procedural steps required to give impetus to the diplomatic process. The consultations focused on the four items previously identified for consideration: withdrawal of foreign troops, non-interference and non-intervention, international guarantees, and voluntary return of refugees. Understandings were reached on the nature and operation of a policy mechanism to be articulated in the settlement and on provisions to ensure its effective implementation.

The Secretary-General had visited the USSR in March, exchanging views on the situation with President Yuri Andropov and Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, who strongly favoured a political settlement.

Through the intermediary of his Personal Representative, a second round of discussions had been held at Geneva in two phases (11-22 April and 12-24 June), in which the Foreign Ministers of Afghanistan and Pakistan had taken part and of which Iran had been kept informed. Substantial progress had been made in defining the contents of a settlement, its principles and objectives, the interrelationship among its four elements and the provisions, including time-frames, for its implementation. It had been agreed that arrangements to ascertain the voluntary and unimpeded character of the return of refugees would start without delay. Consultations for this purpose had accordingly been held throughout the summer with UNHCR.

Concluding, the Secretary-General said that he had not sent his Personal Representative on another visit to Afghanistan, Iran and Pakistan at the end of summer, as requested, because the time had not been suitable for the purposes which the interlocutors had set themselves to achieve. However, the presence in New York of the Foreign Ministers of those countries at the 1983 Assembly session would provide an opportunity for discussions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following consideration of the situation in Afghanistan, the General Assembly, on 23 November 1983, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/29.

The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security",

Recalling its resolutions ES-6/2 of 14 January 1980, 35/37 of 20 November 1980, 36/34 of 18 November 1981 and 37/37 of 29 November 1982,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the obligation of all States to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of any State,

Reaffirming further the inalienable right of all peoples to determine their own form of government and to choose their own economic, political and social system free from outside intervention, subversion, coercion or constraint of any kind whatsoever,

Gravely concerned at the continuing foreign armed intervention in Afghanistan, in contravention of the above principles, and its serious implications for international peace and security,

Noting the increasing concern of the international community over the continued and serious sufferings of the Afghan people and over the magnitude of social and economic problems posed to Pakistan and Iran by the presence on their soil of millions of Afghan refugees, and the continuing increase in their numbers.

Deeply conscious of the urgent need for a political solution of the grave situation in respect of Afghanistan,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, and the status of the diplomatic process initiated by him,

Recognizing the importance of the initiatives of the Organization of the Islamic Conference and the efforts of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries for a political solution of the situation in respect of Afghanistan,

1. Reiterates that the preservation of the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and non-aligned character of Afghanistan is essential for a peaceful solution of the problem;

2. Reaffirms the right of the Afghan people to determine their own form of government and to choose their economic, political and social system free from outside intervention, subversion, coercion or constraint of any kind whatsoever;

3. Calls for the immediate withdrawal of the foreign troops from Afghanistan;

4. Calls upon all parties concerned to work for the urgent achievement of a political solution, in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution, and the creation of the necessary conditions which would enable the Afghan refugees to return voluntarily to their homes in safety and honour;

5. Renews its appeal to all States and national and international organizations to continue to extend humanitarian relief assistance with a view to alleviating the hardship of the Afghan refugees, in co-ordination with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

6. Expresses its appreciation and support for the efforts and constructive steps taken by the Secretary-General, especially the diplomatic process initiated by him, in the search for a solution to the problem;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue those efforts with a view to promoting a political solution, in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution, and the exploration of securing appropriate guarantees for the non-use of force, or threat of force, against the political independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and security of all neighbouring States, on the basis of mutual guarantees and strict non-interference in each other's internal affairs and with full regard for the principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to keep Member States and the Security Council concurrently informed of progress towards the implementation of the present resolution and to submit to Member States a report on the situation at the earliest appropriate opportunity;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security".

As in the past, Afghanistan objected to including the so-called question of Afghanistan in the Assembly's agenda. It stated that, if there was any desire for success of the negotiations with Pakistan through the Secretary-General's good offices, the current harmful exercise should be abandoned once and for all.

Afghanistan described the draft as a gross violation of the Charter of the United Nations and flagrant interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs; the sponsors had arrogated the right to advise on the social, economic and political system the Afghan people should adopt. They had already chosen a system, Afghanistan asserted, under which a comprehensive programme of reforms was resolutely being implemented, despite the undeclared war unleashed on the Afghan revolution. Afghanistan regretted Pakistan's efforts to dissemination of its 1981 amnesty decree(14) ghans living in Pakistan, and said that the numbers of so-called refugees had been grossly exaggerated. The limited USSR contingents in Afghanistan were in that country at its request, solely to repel armed aggression from outside. Afghanistan declared that the resolution would in no way be binding on it, reiterating that no realistic and acceptable solution could come from such one-sided resolutions.

Sharing Afghanistan's objection to the Assembly debate, Democratic Yemen said the draft served only to intensify tension rather than create security and stability in south-west Asia. Declaring its recognition of the legitimacy of the Government of Afghanistan, Democratic Yemen condemned action aimed at undermining Afghanistan's independence and sovereignty. It reaffirmed support for Afghanistan's proposals(20) to settle its differences with neighbouring countries and called on them to respond to those proposals.

Malawi and Nicaragua said they were in complete agreement with the principles embodied in the text and focused upon in consultations: non-use of force or threat of the use of force against any State, non-interference in its internal affairs, withdrawal of foreign troops, the right to self-determination and the return of Afghan refugees in safety and honour. Malawi expressed concern, however, at the complete disregard for these principles and doubted the Assembly's ability to give them practical effect with respect to Afghanistan; saying the situation had reached a stalemate, Malawi called for a change in strategy. Nicaragua's concern was that the Assembly debate, rather than facilitate dialogue, had encouraged inflexibility. Both States reiterated their belief in a settlement by negotiation, with Malawi appealing for support of the Secretary-General's efforts in this regard and Nicaragua adding that dialogue should be based on an objective recognition of political realities in the region, including ideological pluralism and social transformation.

Bolivia, Iran, Italy and Mexico, voicing the international community's deep concern over continued USSR occupation of Afghanistan, saw the draft as laying down the principles on which an acceptable solution should be based. Their votes reflected their adherence to the Charter principles and restated their firm belief that the cause of freedom, independence, self-determination and respect for human rights should ultimately prevail.

Clarifying its stand on paragraph 2, Bolivia said its support for the right to self-determination neither prejudged the legitimacy of the Government of Afghanistan nor questioned its programmes for social change and development. Iran said the exercise of that right by the Afghan people required withdrawal of all foreign troops and the return of the Afghan mujahideen (freedom lighters). Iran found the text wanting in that it ignored the Islamic nature of the struggle of the Moslem Afghans and shied away from naming the aggressor forces; "restoration" rather than "preservation" was more appropriate in paragraph 1; paragraph 3, if implemented, would make paragraph 4 redundant, since the Afghans, a mature people with a great cultural heritage, were completely capable of handling their own affairs; paragraph 7 provided for an exercise that remained futile as long as negotiations were carried out with the puppet régime of the USSR. Iran restated its rejection of any efforts, including negotiations, in which the true representatives of the Afghan people took no active part.

On 7 December,(21) Afghanistan, referring to its 23 November statement in the Assembly, which it had made in exercise of the right of reply but had been unable to conclude, forwarded the full text of that statement to the Assembly President.

Other action. The Commission on Human Rights, by a resolution of 16 February 1983 on the right of peoples to self-determination as it applied to Afghanistan, reaffirmed the right of the Afghan people to self-determination; it also affirmed the right of the Afghan refugees to return to their homes in safety and honour and appealed for humanitarian relief assistance to be extended to them, in co-operation with UNHCR (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII, under "Self-determination of peoples").

Iran-Iraq armed conflict

During 1983, the Security Council, through a statement issued by its President in February, called for an immediate cease-fire in the continuing armed conflict between Iran and Iraq. In October, by resolution 540(1983), the Council further called for an immediate cessation of all military operations against civilian targets and, affirming the right of free navigation and commerce in international waters, also called for a cessation of hostilities in the Gulf region, including all navigable waterways, offshore installations and ports.

A mission was dispatched to the two countries by the Secretary-General in May to inspect civilian areas reported to have been subjected to military attacks by the other.

In December, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the conflict to its resumed session in 1984.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (February)

The Security Council met in informal consultations on 21 February 1983 to consider the recent escalation of the conflict between Iran and Iraq, following which the President, on behalf of Council members, made the statement below:(1)

"The members of the Council express their deep concern at the serious situation between Iran and Iraq which gravely endangers international peace and security and at the fact that resolutions 479(1980), 514(1982) and 522(1982) have not yet been implemented.

"The members of the Council continue to urge that all concerned be guided by Member States' obligations under the Charter: to settle their international disputes by peaceful means and in such a manner that international peace and security and justice are not endangered and to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State.

"The members of the Council express their profound regret at the continuation and the escalation of the conflict and deplore the grave human losses and the considerable material damage resulting therefrom. They reaffirm the necessity of implementing the Council's previous resolutions on the subject which were unanimously adopted.

"The members of the Council urgently call once again for an immediate cease-fire and an end to all military operations as well as the withdrawal of forces up to internationally recognized boundaries with a view to seeking a peaceful settlement in accordance with the principles of the Charter.

"The Council remains seized of this question and urges all Member States to exert all efforts to assist in the restoration of peace and security in the region.

"The members of the Council request the Secretary-General to continue his efforts, in consultation with the parties concerned, with a view to achieving a peaceful settlement and to keep the Council informed."

Communications (February-June). In communications from Iran and Iraq received during the first half of 1983, each accused the other of deliberately attacking civilian and residential areas, with Iran underscoring what it perceived to be United Nations indifference to Iraq's crimes against humanity, and Iraq insisting on Iran's responsibility for the continuation of the war.

Referring to Iran's 21 December 1982 letter(2) alleging an Iraqi attack on the civilian population of Dezful, Iraq, by a letter of 2 February 1983,(3) rejected the allegation as propaganda and submitted a list of incidents of armed aggression against Iraq from 1 October to 15 November 1982. By a telegram of 7 February 1983, transmitted on the same date,(4) the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq drew attention to a large-scale attack launched by Iran against the Iraqi province of Misan, Al-Shib district, on the night of 6 February; the Minister called on the international community to condemn the attack, and demand that it stop, and welcomed any United Nations action towards an honourable settlement of the conflict. A 25 January message from the President of Iraq, transmitted on 14 February,(5) drew attention to a communique issued jointly by Iran, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the Syrian Arab Republic which, the President said, contained a formal policy seeking the overthrow of his Government.

Iran, in a letter of 24 February,(6) quoted a statement attributed to the Commander of Iraq's Fourth Army, as reported by the 18 February issue of the Lebanese weekly Al-Hawadeth, according to which Iraq would redraw the borderline to incorporate the western highlands of Iran into Iraqi territory. Iraq, by a letter of 3 May,(7) described the alleged quotation as but a wretched attempt by Iran to distort the truth and thus evade peaceful settlement of the dispute between them. Iran transmitted, on 27 February, (8) a list of 9,405 Iranian citizens reported missing since the outbreak of the conflict in 1980,(9) with a request that the Secretary-General draw the list to the attention of the Commission on Human Rights at its 1983 session.

By a message of 15 February, transmitted on 2 March,(10) Iraq's President called on the Iranians to give up their quest for Iraq's so-called liberation and conversion to a Moslem State and so end a war Iran could not win. Iraq's Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs, in a letter of 11 April transmitted the same day,(11) charged that, against the urgings of the Security Council President,(1) Iran had launched another large-scale attack at the border area on the night of 10 April; the Minister called on the United Nations to condemn this latest aggression, stating that to remain silent would encourage Iran's aggression.

In a statement to the first extraordinary session of the Regional Organization for the Protection of the Marine Environment, transmitted on 20 April,(12) Iran protested recent Iraqi attacks on Iranian offshore oilfields, causing two oil spillages which had polluted the marine environment. Responding on 5 May, (13) Iraq explained that the spillage from Iran's offshore Noruz 3 oil well occurred on 27 January when a merchant vessel collided with the well and that the other spillage was indeed the result of military action in a war zone so declared by Iraq but in which Iran had nevertheless continued oil explorations; Iraq recalled Iran's rejection of a proposed partial ceasefire under United Nations supervision so that the oil wells might be repaired.

Iran reported, on 22 April(14) and 26 April,(15) that the city of Dezful had come under Iraqi missile attack on 20 and 24 April, resulting in the death of more than 58 civilians, injury to 110 others and destruction of over 200 houses and shops—the last attack having been the forty-eighth on Dezful since the outbreak of hostilities in 1980. Iran further reported on 27 April(16) that the Pol-e-Dokhtar region had been bombarded on 25 April, killing 21 civilians and injuring 100 more. Referring to these charges as hypocrisy and deception, as well as to Iran's statement at a 25 April press conference that it had no intention of retaliating against Iraqi cities, which were within striking range, Iraq countercharged on 2 May(17) that artillery bombardment of its cities of Khanaqin, Mandali, Zurbatiyah, Badra and Al Basrah had been daily occurrences since the withdrawal of its forces in June 1982 to internationally recognized boundaries.

By a letter of 5 May, (18) Iran stated that, as announced on Iraqi television on 2 May, Iraq's Minister of Culture and Information had stated that, in retaliation for shelling its cities, Iraq would bombard those of Iran. Replying on 12 May,(19) Iraq challenged Iran to reaffirm to the United Nations, if it could, that Iranian bombardment of Iraqi cities had not been a daily procedure.

Iran subsequently confirmed, by three letters, that densely populated areas of several cities had been bombarded by Iraq: the first, dated 13 May,(20) described surface-to-surface missile attacks on Andimeshk and Dezful (12 May); the second, dated 25 May,(21) mentioned barrages on civilian targets in Sar-e-Pol-e-Zahab, a town 25 to 30 kilometres from the Iraqi border (18 May) and on residential quarters of the city of Abadan (18 and 21 May); and the third, also of 25 May,(22) told of an attack that day on civilian targets in the town of Baneh. In all, more than 34 people were reported killed, 283 wounded and more than 200 houses and shops destroyed.

On 6 June, (23) Iraq stated that on 10 April an Iranian force of some 120,000 had mounted a two-pronged offensive into Iraqi territory between Al-Tib and Al-Fakkah towards the town of Al-Amarah, but had been pushed back on 16 April, sustaining heavy losses as it withdrew, including 15,000 dead, many prisoners, 41 tanks destroyed, and some 80 armoured carriers captured along with miscellaneous weapons and equipment and many tanks and transport vehicles in working order.

A letter of 7 June from Iraq's President to the people of Iran, transmitted two days later,(24) proposed cessation of hostilities in the Gulf area to allow movement of merchant vessels of both countries and others, the temporary truce to be overseen by a mutually agreed international body. Iraq asserted in a 10 June letter(25) that, as a result of the war imposed by Iran and of its refusal to abide by Security Council decisions, Iran bore responsibility for the tremendous losses Iraq had suffered, both human and economic, and should compensate Iraq accordingly.

Report of the Secretary-General (June). In response to requests made by Iran and Iraq on 2 and 12 May 1983, the Secretary-General dispatched a mission to the two countries in late May to inspect civilian areas which both claimed had been subjected to military attack by the other. The mission's report was transmitted to the Security Council by the Secretary-General, together with his report of 20 June.(26)

The Secretary-General reported that, as agreed with the two Governments, the mission was to determine whether civilian areas had been subjected to damage or destruction by military means, to assess the extent of such damage, and to indicate the type of munitions used. While not instructed to verify casualties and property damage, the mission kept in view the correlation between the extent of damage and the probable extent of loss of life, given the population at the time of damage.

The mission toured war zones in Iran from 21 to 26 May and in Iraq from 28 to 30 May according to itineraries drawn up by the two Governments; the zones included areas which had sustained recent as well as past war damage. The mission relied essentially on government information, supplemented by information ascertained by its own observations. Statistics on casualties provided by the two Governments were included in the mission's report without comment.

In Iran, 12 towns and cities were inspected. The mission observed that in general the extent of damage claimed appeared plausible or reasonably accurate. Evidence examined at Dezful, Andimeshk and Pol-e-Dokhtar, all located some 80 to 85 kilometres from the border, led the mission to conclude that Scud-B surface-to-surface (and, a year earlier, Frog) missiles, aerial bombardment and machine-gun fire had been the instruments of attack. The towns and cities close to the border (between 2 and 35 kilometres from it) - Musian, Dehloran, Abadan, Khorramshahr, Hoveyze, Susangerd, Sar-e-Pol-Zahab and Qasr-E-Shirin - had been besieged or occupied by Iraq at the outbreak of hostilities and been retaken in 1982; some had remained under attack. The mission reported large areas as having been razed to the ground, leading it to conclude that, in addition to aerial bombardment (with cluster bombs in three cases), artillery fire, and direct fire when the towns changed hands, high-explosive charges and engineering equipment must have been used to level those areas. Baneh, also close to the border and attacked as recently as the day before the mission's visit, showed evidence of aerial bombardment with cluster bombs, resulting in no major property damage however.

The inspection in Iraq took the mission to seven cities and towns: Zurbatiyah, Mandali, Khanaqin, Kirkuk, Az Zubayr, Al Faw and Abu al Khasib. Aerial bombardment and artillery shelling with BM-21 rockets and 203-mm and 175-mm extended-range artillery were identified as the means of attack. Because the reported attacks on civilian targets in Kirkuk had taken place early in the conflict, physical verification of the munitions used was not possible. Moderate damage was reported for Zurbatiyah and Mandali and light for Al Zubayr. In the mission's opinion, oil installations had been the target in the border towns of Khanaqin and Al Faw, both of which had been heavily damaged, and a fertilizer factory at Abu al Khasib. Kirkuk, Az Zubayr and Abu al Khasib had maintained the same population levels while others had been evacuated. Mandali and Al Faw appeared deserted.

Before its visit to Iraq, the mission had been welcomed and its safety assured by Iraq's Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs, in a statement made on 25 May and transmitted two days later.⁽²⁷⁾ Commenting on the mission's findings in a memorandum transmitted on 29 June,⁽²⁸⁾ Iran's Foreign Ministry said they showed how much greater had been the damage to Iran. On 14 July, ⁽²⁹⁾ Iraq criticized that memorandum as containing discrepancies, contradictions and deliberate distortions, adding that Iran, by its refusal to abide by the Council's decisions, was to be held solely responsible for the continuation of the war and resultant destruction.

Communications (August-October). Communications from August to October continued to bring to the Secretary-General's attention attacks on civilian targets in Iran and Iraq, with almost every letter from Iran reiterating that the continued indifference of the Security Council and the international community had encouraged Iraq's violations of international humanitarian law. For its part, Iraq felt that Iran was solely to blame for the war's prolongation by its refusal to abide by the international community's will as reflected in the decisions of the Council and the General Assembly.

By a letter of 3 August,⁽³⁰⁾ Iran cited a statement of the previous day attributed to the Iraqi Minister of Culture and Information that, if Iran continued to bombard civilian targets, Iraq would obliterate Iran's cities - a policy Iraq had pursued to the utmost during its two-year occupation of certain Iranian territories, as witnessed by the mission dispatched to Iran in May. On 4 August,⁽³¹⁾ Iraq transmitted excerpts of Iranian military communiques and official statements attesting to Iran's military offensive begun on 21 July, and quoted an Agence France Presse report of 29 July that large numbers of Iraqi dissidents in Iran had taken part, for the first time.

Subsequent Iraqi attacks during August and early September, mainly on civilian targets, were reported by Iran in five letters, dated as follows: 12 August,⁽³²⁾ an aerial bombardment (10 August) of the town of Gilan Gharb by cluster bombs and strafing; 17 August,⁽³³⁾ a missile attack on Andimeshk (13 August), followed on 1 September by photographs of the resultant destruction; 18 August,⁽³⁴⁾ an aerial bombardment (13 August) of the villages of Najaf and Krand, and a chemical-bomb attack on the war zone of Val Fajr-2; 26 August,⁽³⁵⁾ an air raid (23 August) on the village of Vavan-Sardasht in West Azarbaijan; and 7 September,⁽³⁶⁾ repeated bombardment of the city of Marivan in Kurdistan (27 and 30 August, 1 and 2 September) and an attack on Khanaqah village (28 August) by cluster bombs and napalm dropped from two Mirage fighter planes. The toll was placed at 153 dead, with 1,048 wounded, some 550 houses and shops destroyed, 400 livestock killed, a village harvest burned and four plantations devastated.

Iraq, by a letter of 12 September,⁽³⁷⁾ referred to these accusations as Iran's futile efforts to gain sympathy for its position, in the face of incontrovertible evidence provided by its own military⁽³¹⁾ of its pursuance of the war against Iraq and intervention in Iraq's internal affairs.

On 22 September,⁽³⁸⁾ Iran stated that Iraqi bombardment of civilian areas had continued unabated and had recently subjected several cities to repeated long-range artillery strikes and air raids: Abadan (6 and 8 September), Sardasht (8 and 11 September), Marivan (7-10 September) and Piranshahr (12 September); casualties included 16 persons killed, more than 46 others injured, 20 houses destroyed and scores damaged, and some 100 livestock killed. Iran emphasized that it reserved the right to resort to retaliatory measures within the limits permitted by Islamic codes. On 29 September,(39) Iran drew attention to a Radio Baghdad announcement, made two days earlier, of Iraq's intention to launch attacks aimed at demoralizing the enemy—a declaration which in Iran's experience meant resuming bombardments of residential targets.

In a communique of 13 October, transmitted the next day,(40) Iran's Foreign Ministry said it had successfully stopped the oil spillage from its offshore Noruz oil well, damaged by Iraq in January,(12) and that repair was under way of its other offshore oil installations damaged in subsequent attacks; in the light of recent Iraqi threats on those installations, however, the Ministry felt duty-bound to warn the Gulf States of the grave danger thus posed to the region's marine environment, stressing that Iran should not be expected to compromise in order to remedy the deliberate mischief of others. Another aerial bombardment of the civilian populations of Marivan (11 October) and Baneh (15 October) was reported by Iran on 19 October,(41) which it said had claimed the lives of 23 people, injured 70 and destroyed several residential quarters; Iran added that these crimes against civilians were the main reason for the continuing conflict.

On 20 October,(42) Iraq charged Iran of staging a large-scale attack aimed at occupying Penjween, in northern Iraq, warning that it reserved the right to strike at the aggressor wherever necessary to make it understand that, by prolonging the war against the will of the Security Council and the international community, Iran would not achieve its aims. Responding on 23 October,(43) Iran countercharged that it was Iraq which had totally disregarded the international community's will by starting the war, instead of exhausting every peaceful means possible to settle its dispute; talk about respect for that will was nothing but sheer hypocrisy.

By a letter of 28 October,(44) Iran stated that Iraqi forces, unable to gain the upper hand on the battlefield, had again resorted to inhumane surface-to-surface missile attacks on the civilians of Dezful and Masjid Soleiman, as well as of Marivan, killing more than 120 civilians, wounding some 450 and destroying a large number of houses and shops; Iran invited the Secretary-General to dispatch his representative to the area to witness what it called the realities so that the fact-finding mission's report(26) might be updated.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

Meeting on 31 October 1983, the Security Council adopted resolution 540(1983) below.

The Security Council,

Having considered again the question entitled "The situation between Iran and Iraq",

Recalling its relevant resolutions and statements which, inter alia, call for a comprehensive cease-fire and an end to all military operations between the parties,

Recalling the report of the Secretary-General of 20 June 1983 on the mission appointed by him to inspect civilian areas in Iran and Iraq which have been subject to military attacks, and expressing its appreciation to the Secretary-General for presenting a factual, balanced and objective account,

Also noting with appreciation and encouragement the assistance and co-operation given to the Secretary-General's mission by the Governments of Iran and Iraq,

Deplored once again the conflict between the two countries, resulting in heavy losses of civilian lives and extensive damage caused to cities, property and economic infrastructures,

Affirming the desirability of an objective examination of the causes of the war,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his mediation efforts with the parties concerned, with a view to achieving a comprehensive, just and honourable settlement acceptable to both sides;

2. Condemns all violations of international humanitarian law, in particular, the provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 in all their aspects, and calls for the immediate cessation of all military operations against civilian targets, including city and residential areas;

3. Affirms the right of free navigation and commerce in international waters, calls on all States to respect this right and also calls upon the belligerents to cease immediately all hostilities in the region of the Gulf, including all sea-lanes, navigable waterways, harbour works, terminals, offshore installations and all ports with direct or indirect access to the sea, and to respect the integrity of the other littoral States;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to consult with the parties concerning ways to sustain and verify the cessation of hostilities, including the possible dispatch of United Nations observers, and to submit a report to the Security Council on the results of these consultations;

5. Culls upon both parties to refrain from any action that may endanger peace and security as well as marine life in the region of the Gulf;

6. Calls once more upon all other States to exercise the utmost restraint and to refrain from any act which may lead to a further escalation and widening of the conflict and, thus, to facilitate the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to consult with the parties regarding immediate and effective implementation of the present resolution.

Security Council resolution 540(1983)

31 October 1983 Meeting 2493 12-0-3

3-nation draft (S/16092).

Sponsors: Guyana, Togo, Zaire.

Meeting number: SC: 2493.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: China, France, Guyana, Jordan, Netherlands, Poland, Togo, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: None

Abstaining: Malta, Nicaragua, Pakistan.

Speaking before the vote on the draft resolution, Pakistan said it had hoped that the Council would come up with a text to engage both parties in a process combining immediate containment of hostilities with prospects for a comprehensive peace settlement to follow. Instead, the Council had before it, as in the past, a draft that could hardly have a meaningful impact on the war, thus leaving one of the parties as disenchanted and aggrieved as ever. For that reason and to preserve its impartial role as a member of the Islamic Peace Committee, Pakistan said it would abstain. However, it urged the States of the region, particularly Iran and Iraq, to demonstrate sensitivity to the threat of great-Power confrontation which the war could precipitate, and hasten to make peace in the interests of their own survival and independence.

Malta also believed that a sustained effort during the Council's informal consultations, might have succeeded in bringing the two sides together in constructive dialogue-an approach that, although time-consuming, would have offered better possibilities than the mere passage of a draft-especially since one side maintained that the Council had not given it reasonable hearing and that there had not been sufficient consultation. Nicaragua, which had hoped that the Council would be guided by a conciliatory approach to include the stand taken by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, felt that the draft lacked a guarantee of effectiveness and even cast doubt on the parties' ability, to bring about a relaxation of tension.

The Netherlands-hoping that the resolution would be a first step to meaningful United Nations involvement in the search for a mutually acceptable settlement-reiterated that some co-operation by the conflicting parties was indispensable. The Netherlands believed that if both immediately stopped attacking civilian targets and ceased hostilities in the Gulf region, and if other States refrained from acts which might widen the conflict, favourable conditions for negotiations could be established.

As with previous Council resolutions on the subject, the USSR said its support stemmed from the concern shared by the majority over the continued conflict and from its interest in eliminating hotbeds of tension near its frontiers. The USSR also stressed its continued opposition to exploitation of the conflict by external forces and to armed intervention for whatever reason, even to ensure freedom of navigation in the Gulf. China stated that bringing the parties together to negotiate was of paramount consideration to the Council and that the resolution was consistent with China's position that the conflict be settled peacefully.

Report of the Secretary-General (December). In a report⁽⁴⁵⁾ on his efforts to implement Security Council resolution 540(1983), the Secretary-General stated that, in transmitting that resolution to Iran and Iraq, he had informed them of his intention to send, with their concurrence, a small mission of senior Secretariat officials to Teheran and Baghdad for the consultations envisaged in the resolution.

The Secretary-General noted that Iraq, by a letter of 1 November,⁽⁴⁶⁾ had welcomed the resolution and had indicated readiness to co-operate in ensuring a cease-fire, but had warned against partial implementation on the premise that the resolution was an integrated and indivisible whole. Iran conveyed its position on 11 December⁽⁴⁷⁾ that, while it had decided at the Council consultations to respond positively, the Council's action had remained in the same unbalanced tradition it had followed since the beginning of Iraq's war of aggression, so that Iran had no alternative but to continue to dissociate itself from the resolution; the situation in the region could not be termed "hostilities" as in paragraph 4, but a defensive war of liberation whose purpose was to reverse the consequences of the war initiated by Iraq.

The Secretary-General drew attention to Iran's request⁽⁴⁴⁾ for another mission to inspect civilian areas recently subjected to Iraqi military attacks in order to update the first mission's report.⁽²⁶⁾ Iran had reiterated this request in several letters (see below), three of which reported chemical weapons use by Iraq, and requested that an expert on the subject be included in the proposed mission. Iraq had been unable to accept the proposal for the mission to visit Iraq also, and had addressed letters stating that its own civilian areas had been militarily attacked (see also below) and had rejected allegations of its use of chemical weapons in Iran.

In view of the Iraqi position that Iran's request be considered in the context of paragraph 2 of the resolution-an integrated and indivisible resolution to be implemented as such--the Secretary-General said there were practical difficulties in acceding to Iran's request. Nevertheless, he would continue efforts to bring about a cessation of hostilities. Apart from intensive discussions he and his Special Representative, Olof Plame, had held with the Foreign Ministers of both parties in September, the Secretary-General expected the January 1984 meeting of the Organization of the Islamic Conference to provide him an opportunity to discuss with both countries' heads of State the steps that could facilitate a peaceful solution.

Other communications November and December). On 2 November,⁽⁴⁸⁾ Iran stated that on 29 October the towns of Masjid Soleiman and Behbahan had been bombarded, the latter also having been attacked a few days earlier; casualties totalled some 474 students killed or wounded, 100 household units destroyed, and another 94 people killed (among them 74 students between the ages of 12 and 15). Iraq, by a letter of 3 November,(49) stated that Iran had launched a new large-scale military attack on Penjween for the purpose of occupying it and called this act, occurring only three days after adoption of resolution 540(1983), a flagrant challenge to the will of the Council and the United Nations.

Photographs which Iran said showed the destruction caused by Iraqi attacks on the towns of Dezful, Marivan and Andimeshk in October(41) were transmitted by Iran by a letter of 3 November.(50) On the same date,(51) Iran claimed that on numerous occasions in the past weeks Iraqi forces had used chemical weapons at the front, reiterating in this regard its request for a representative of the Secretary-General to examine the medical and military evidence of such attacks. Continued attacks, including some with chemical weapons, on civilian targets in Andimeshk, Masjid Soleiman, Behbahan, Nahavand and in two villages near Baneh were reported by Iran on 9 November,(52) which, it said, had resulted in 79 dead and 611 injured, a number of them sustaining blindness, severe skin burns and lung injury; more than 240 houses were also damaged or destroyed. Iran issued a reminder that this was not how peace could be achieved and that it was time the Council stopped encouraging Iraq to commit such atrocities. By a further letter of 9 November,(53) Iran stated that shrapnel from two Iraqi artillery rounds fired into the Piranshahr area on 25 October and the injuries caused showed evidence of chemical weapons use, as did several photographs attached. Additional incidents of such use were reported by Iran on 16 November:(54) a chemical bomb dropped on a village near Baneh (21 October), three rounds of chemical shells fired at the front line (30 October) and, in previous attacks, the use of mustard gas and compounds containing arsenic.

On 29 November,(55) Iraq categorically rejected Iran's allegations as a manoeuvre to divert international attention from Iran's refusal to halt its war of aggression and its rejection of Council resolutions. On 27 December,(56) Iran complained that the United Nations had ignored the numerous cases reported to it of Iraqi violation of international humanitarian law; since the evidence, particularly of chemical weapons use, faded with time, Iran charged the Council with obstructing acquisition of such evidence.

By two letters, dated 14 November(57) and 15 November,(58) Iraq transmitted what it said were excerpts of official communiqués, issued by the Iranian military between 20 October and 4

November and by the Iraqi military between 1 October and 6 November, giving evidence of current Iranian occupation of Iraqi territory and attacks, mostly on civilian installations in Iraq. Iran replied on 22 November(59) that it was important for the United Nations to examine whether Iraq had evidence to support those allegations and reiterated its request that another fact-finding mission be dispatched to both countries. Iran transmitted 10 photographs on 25 November(60) showing what it said was damage inflicted by Iraqi missile attacks on civilian sectors of Behbahan, Dezful, Marivan and Masjid Soleiman on 1 September and between 21 and 27 October.

Responding on 28 November(61) to Iran's allegations of Iraqi bombardment of civilian areas and use of chemical weapons, Iraq labelled these as attempts by Iran to use the United Nations for propaganda purposes, deliberately ignoring significant facts and developments which were further elaborated by Iraq.

By three further letters of 28 November, Iraq cited a 26 October speech attributed to the Ayatollah Khomeini exhorting exportation of the Iranian revolution, as well as other Iranian statements which it said were proof of Iran's premeditated aggression against Iraq;(62) reported aerial bombardment of its communications installations, disrupting Iraq's international communications services;(63) and transmitted excerpts of official Iraqi military communiqués between 7 and 25 November attesting to the shelling of civilian targets in Iraq and putting the number of dead at four and wounded at seven, in addition to 6 houses destroyed and a number of civilian installations damaged.(64)

On 5 December,(65) Iran stated that eight Iraqi dissidents had defected to Iran, bringing the number of defectors to 1,589 since 23 October 1982. Referring to an Iraqi television broadcast of 3 December alleging Iranian attacks on Iraqi civilian targets and warning of retaliatory action, Iran stated on 6 December(66) that Iraq was fabricating excuses for a new wave of barbaric attacks on civilian centres in Iran. To correct what it called Iran's distortion of the facts, Iraq, on 14 December,(67) transmitted the full text of the broadcast in question and said that Iran's letters of 22 November,(59) 25 November(60) and 6 December(66) sought to fragment the process adopted by the United Nations for resolving the conflict.

Rejecting Iraqi charges of Iranian involvement in recent bomb attacks in Kuwait, Iran by a letter of 14 December(68) said those allegations were part of an orchestrated attempt by Iraq and its allies, particularly France and the United States, to escalate the war into a regional one and thereby pave the way for super-Power intervention in the Gulf region. On 15 December,(69) Iran accused Iraq of further atrocities against civilians in the Iranian border towns of Andimeshk, Behbahan, Ramhormoz and Dezful, which had left 33 dead, 287 wounded and some 65 houses destroyed; it was the moral and legal obligation of the United Nations, Iran added, to react strongly and without delay to these atrocities in order to deter Iraq from further carrying out its savage designs. Replying on 23 December,(70) Iraq said its view of such allegations had been set forth in its 29 November letter.(55) Earlier, on 16 December,(71) Iran again accused Iraq of extending the war to the Gulf area by its aerial attack on 8 December of two merchant ships, one Greek and one Cypriot, on approaching Iranian ports, and warned of retaliation in kind.

Following a reported televised announcement on 24 December by Iraq of its intention to strike back at civilian targets in Iran for that country's alleged recent bombardment of Iraqi villages and towns, Iran confirmed on 28 December(72) that its city of Masjid Soleiman had been attacked by ground-to-ground missiles three days earlier, in the early evening to ensure the maximum number of casualties: 32 people were dead, 92 others injured, 50 residential units destroyed, 250 shops or houses damaged and 18 automobiles smashed.

Referring to Iran's communications of 20 April(12) and 14 October(40) alleging Iraqi attacks on its offshore oilfields which had resulted in the pollution of the marine environment-in violation of what Iran cited as article 35 of the Geneva Convention on the safety of the environment and the Kuwait Regional Convention on Co-operation for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Pollution and its protocol-Iraq, on 23 December,(73) challenged the existence of the Geneva Convention cited and contended that the Kuwait Convention did not apply in cases of armed conflict. Also on 23 December,(74) Iraq transmitted excerpts of official communiques from its military, giving details of Iranian shelling of civilian targets in Iraq between 25 November and 19 December, resulting in one dead and five wounded, destruction of some 26 houses and damage to a number of civilian installations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

Inclusion in the agenda of the 1983 session of the General Assembly of an item entitled "Consequences of the prolongation of the armed conflict between Iran and Iraq" had been requested by Iraq in a letter of 29 July.(75) In an enclosed memorandum, Iraq explained that Iran had stood alone against the will of the international community, which had widely endorsed the Assembly's 1982 resolution(76) affirming the necessity of an immediate cease-fire. As the only body encompassing all members of that community, the Assembly must once again express its view, Iraq stated, and take steps with regard to Iran's policy of prolonging the conflict and rejecting settlement by peaceful means.

The Assembly's action on the request was embodied in decision 38/456 of 20 December, by which it decided to consider that item, among others, at its resumed session in 1984 (see Chapter XI of this section, under GENERAL ASSEMBLY).

Other action. In 1983, other action relating to the Iran-Iraq conflict included a resolution adopted by the West Asian Regional Preparatory Meeting on the International Conference on the Question of Palestine (Sharjah, United Arab Emirates, 25-29 April),(77) by which the Meeting, convinced of the need to bring the conflict to an end without delay, called for redoubled efforts by the international community to restore peace to the region.

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights, in a 3 September resolution on the exploitation of child labour, recommended for adoption by the Commission a draft resolution among whose provisions was a call on Iran to cease immediately the use of children in its armed forces (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII, under "Rights of the child").

Chapter VIII

Mediterranean

In 1983, the United Nations focused its attention on several political issues concerning the Mediterranean region: the question of Cyprus, complaints by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya against the United States, and strengthening security and co-operation in the region.

The Security Council twice extended the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), by resolutions 534(1983) and 544(1983). In May 1983, when it resumed its thirty-seventh (1982) session, the General Assembly adopted resolution 37/253, calling for implementation of United Nations resolutions on Cyprus, in addition to demanding immediate withdrawal of all occupation forces from that country. On 15 November, the Turkish Cypriot community issued a declaration purporting to create an independent State in northern Cyprus, naming it the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus". Meeting on 18 November, the Council adopted resolution 541(1983), deploring the declaration, considering it as legally invalid and calling for its withdrawal. In December, the Assembly, by decision 38/456, deferred consideration of the Cyprus question to its resumed thirty-eighth (1983) session, to be held in 1984.

At the request of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Council convened in February and in August 1983 to consider complaints by that country of military threats and provocations against it by the United States.

The Assembly, by resolution 38/189 adopted in December, encouraged Mediterranean States to intensify co-operation aimed at reducing tension and strengthening security in that region and urged all other States to co-operate towards that end.

Cyprus question

Searching for an intercommunal settlement on Cyprus, representatives of the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities continued to meet during 1983, under the mission of good offices of the Secretary-General, entrusted to him by the Security Council, with the last 1983 meeting taking place on 14 April. On his recommendation, the Council in June and again in December extended the stationing of UNFICYP in Cyprus, each time for six months, so that it could continue monitoring the cease-fire lines drawn in 1974(1) between the Cyprus National Guard in the south and the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces in the north. On both occasions, the Council requested the Secretary-General to continue his good offices mission.

At the first part of its resumed 1982 session, held in May 1983, the General Assembly considered the Cyprus question for the first time since 1979. The Assembly demanded the immediate withdrawal of all occupying forces from Cyprus and reiterated that the Council should examine the implementation, within a specified time-frame, of its relevant resolutions and, if necessary, adopt measures under the Charter of the United Nations for ensuring implementation of United Nations resolutions on Cyprus.

The major political development of the year, which had negative consequences for the resumption of the intercommunal talks, was the declaration issued on 15 November by the Turkish Cypriot community, purporting to create an independent State within the Republic of Cyprus, naming it "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus". The Council deplored the declaration, considered it as legally invalid and called for its withdrawal; it further called on all States not to recognize any Cypriot State other than the Republic of Cyprus and again requested the Secretary-General to continue his good offices mission.

Cyprus and Turkey addressed a number of communications to the Secretary-General on the Cyprus question. Those from Turkey transmitted letters from representatives of the Turkish Cypriot community and were signed by Rauf R. Denktas as "President of the Turkish Federated State of Kibris" (Kibris being the Turkish-language name for Cyprus), by Kenan Atakol as "Minister for Foreign Affairs and Defence of the Turkish Federated State of Kibris" or by Nail Atalay as "representative of the Turkish Federated State of Kibris". As from 15 November, "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" replaced "Turkish Federated State of Kibris" in these designations.

Communications (January-April). Communications from the two sides between January and April concerned property expropriation, with Cyprus reiterating its determination to take legal action against any individual or entity expropriating Greek Cypriot properties; allegations of territorial sea and airspace violations by Turkey; allegations of Cypriot support of Armenian terrorist activities against Turkish diplomats; and Greece's position on the Cyprus question.

On 8 February, Turkey transmitted a letter of the same day from Mr. Atalay,(2) who stated that the alleged violation of the 12-mile territorial sea of Cyprus by Turkish warships on 3 December 1982(3) deserved no reply, since the area in question was under the control and sovereignty of what he referred to as the Turkish Federated State of Kibris; unilateral actions by the Greek Cypriot administration, including extending its territorial sea from 3 to 12 miles, were devoid of legality and hence not binding on the Turkish Cypriot side.

Referring to a Cypriot protest of 29 December 1982(3) against the issuance of "definitive possession certificates" to Turkish Cypriots, Mr. Atalay explained on 22 February(4) that the certificates were aimed at finalizing rehabilitation of the 50 per cent of the Turkish Cypriot population who had moved from the south to the north as a result of past armed conflict in Cyprus and who, under law, were entitled to settlement in property equal in value to property they had left behind. The certificates in no way jeopardized anyone's right to equal property in the south or to compensation in full, and their issuance was without prejudice to a final political solution of the Cyprus question. A statement said to elaborate the legality of the issue was annexed to the letter.

Cyprus, by letters of 17 March(5) and 22 March,(6) further protested the continuing illegal expropriation of properties belonging to non-Turkish Cypriots in occupied Cyprus, drawing attention to a confiscation there of 32 houses owned by Maronite Cypriot families and to the assignment of 27 hotels and other tourist installations to a so-called Tourism Ministry. Responding to the earlier letter—which had also accused Turkey of evading its responsibilities by simply transmitting communications on the Cyprus situation from Mr. Atalay, who served Turkey's interests rather than those of Cyprus-Turkey, on 28 March,(7) and such attacks had no bearing on the issues at hand and should not be allowed if diplomatic discourse was to continue. As to the Cypriot protests against so-called property expropriation, Mr. Atalay, on 19 April,(8) reiterated his position as set forth on 22 February,(4) and, on 25 April,(9) stated that the Maronite houses had been legally requisitioned and renovated for public use, without prejudice to the owners' rights.

On 4 April(10) Cyprus cited two instances of violations of its airspace by Turkey on 22 March, each involving two F-4 jet fighters originating from southern Turkey; in the second instance, the fighters appeared to have launched air-to-surface rockets and opened machine-gun fire. Such warlike actions and the continued occupation of 40 per cent of Cypriot territory, Cyprus said, was proof of Turkey's interest, not in a political solution of the Cyprus problem, but in expansionist goals. Responding on 18 April,(11) Mr. Atalay stated that the military air exercises referred to had taken place within the Turkish Federated State of Kibris, over which the Greek Cypriot administration had no right of say.

Cyprus drew attention on 5 April(12) to what it described as Turkey's propaganda campaign alleging that Cyprus was aiding and abetting terrorist activities against Turkish diplomats by Armenian organizations in Cyprus. Calling the allegations unfounded and denying the existence of such organizations—as an investigation by UNFICYP had confirmed—Cyprus concluded that the campaign was intended to cover up new aggression planned against it. In reiterating these statements on 19 April,(13) Cyprus stated that the Secretary-General and Member States would doubtless act to end Turkey's threats against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Cyprus.

Earlier, a letter of 18 April from Mr. Denktas, forwarded the same day by Mr. Atalay through Turkey,(14) had warned that certain developments, including a joint decision by Greece and the Greek Cypriot leadership to resort again to the United Nations, would adversely affect the ongoing intercommunal negotiations. The letter referred to a "destructive statement" by the President of Greece during a recent visit to Athens by the President of Cyprus to the effect that the independence attained by Cyprus would allow it to develop as a State, without dismissing the hope of union with Greece under certain conditions. That visit, the letter said, had again underlined the fact that the expansionist aims of Greece continued to guide the Greek Cypriot leadership.

Report of the Secretary-General (May). In his report on the question of Cyprus(15) to the resumed 1982 session of the General Assembly, held in May 1983, the Secretary-General updated information contained in reports submitted to the Assembly's 1980(16) and 1981(17) sessions. Consideration of the question having been deferred at those sessions, those reports had remained before the Assembly.

The Secretary-General noted that, since January 1982, the intercommunal talks, within the framework of the mission of good offices entrusted to him by the Security Council, had continued regularly under the auspices of his Special Representative, Hugo J. Gobbi, in an atmosphere that had remained co-operative and constructive. Using the 1981 "evaluation paper" as a method of discussion,(18) the interlocutors of the two sides had systematically discussed the elements identified as "points of coincidence" (on which the positions of the parties largely coincided) and "points of equidistance" (on which substantial differences remained to be bridged). Discussed during 1982 were elements relating to the constitutional aspect; freedom of movement and of settlement and the right of property; organs of the federal Government and transitional provisions, including a re-examination of general constitutional provisions; and the territorial aspect.

The talks had continued into 1983 on various other aspects, with the pace adjusted by consent, in connection with the February presidential elections in Cyprus and thereafter as required. The latest meeting had taken place on 14 April.

With a view to promoting the negotiating process, the Secretary-General had maintained personal contacts with both sides, meeting with President Spyros Kyprianou and Mr. Denktas separately in 1982 on three occasions. He further met with President Kyprianou on 8 March and 24 April 1983, and expected further meetings with Mr. Denktas. The Secretary-General stated his intention to strengthen his personal involvement within the framework of his mission of good offices, in particular to give fresh impetus to the negotiating process and to encourage the parties to develop an overall synthesis covering the remaining major unresolved issues.

UNFICYP had continued to supervise the cease-fire lines, to provide security for civilians in the buffer zone between those lines and to discharge certain humanitarian responsibilities (see below, under PEACE-KEEPING OPERATIONS).

The Secretary-General and his Special Representative had continued efforts to assist in overcoming procedural difficulties that were preventing the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus from carrying out its humanitarian task.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (May)

Pursuant to a December 1982 decision,(19) the General Assembly took up the question of Cyprus at the first part of its resumed 1982 session, held from 10 to 13 May 1983.

As recommended by its General Committee,(20) the Assembly on 10 May decided to consider the question directly in plenary meeting, on the understanding that it would, when considering the item, invite the Special Political Committee to meet to afford representatives of the two Cypriot communities an opportunity to express their views; the Committee's report on those views would be taken into account by the Assembly.(21)

The Assembly President informed the Committee of that decision, also on 10 May.(22)

Prior to these actions, Mr. Atalay, by a letter of 27 April transmitted by Turkey on the same date,(23) had requested that the item be allocated, not to the plenary Assembly in accordance with past procedure, but to a Main Committee, so as to provide both sides full participation in the debate on an equal footing. Cyprus replied on 6 May(24) that to revise a well-established procedure would disturb the delicate balance struck in 1974 through arduous negotiations and lend support to Turkey's effort to undermine the sovereignty of States Members of the United Nations.

On 10 May,(25) Mr. Atalay said that the procedure decided upon by the Assembly was unacceptable to the Turkish Cypriot side as it was inconsistent with the acknowledged principle of equality between the parties to the Cyprus dispute—a principle which he said had been endorsed and confirmed, respectively, by high-level meetings in 1977(26) and 1979.(27) A debate on the question would be inherently incomplete, since the Assembly would be precluded from becoming fully acquainted with the views of the Turkish Cypriot community.

The Special Political Committee reported(28) to the Assembly that, on 10 May 1986, it had heard a statement by a representative of the Greek Cypriot community, which was reproduced in the meeting record.

Acting on an oral proposal by the President, the Assembly adopted decision 37/455.

10. Calls for meaningful, result-oriented, constructive and substantive negotiations between the representatives of the two communities, under the auspices of the Secretary-General, to be conducted freely and on an equal footing, on the basis of relevant United Nations resolutions and the high-level agreements, with a view to reaching as early as possible a mutually acceptable agreement based on the fundamental and legitimate rights of the two communities;

11. Calls for respect of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all Cypriots, including the freedom of movement, the freedom of settlement and the right to property, and the instituting of urgent measures for the voluntary return of the refugees to their homes in safety;

12. Considers that the de facto situation created by the force of arms should not be allowed to influence or in any way affect the solution of the problem of Cyprus;

13. Calls upon the parties concerned to refrain from any unilateral action which might adversely affect the prospects of a just and lasting solution of the problem of Cyprus by peaceful means and to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General in the performance of his task under the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council as well as with the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus;

14. Calls upon the parties concerned to refrain from any action which violates or is designed to violate the independence, unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Cyprus;

15. Reiterates its recommendation that the Security Council should examine the question of implementation, within a specified time-frame, of its relevant resolutions and consider and adopt thereafter, if necessary, all appropriate and practical measures under the Charter of the United Nations for ensuring the speedy and effective implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations on Cyprus;

16. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General, as expressed in his report, to pursue a renewed personal involvement in the quest for a solution of the problem of Cyprus and in view of this, requests the Secretary-General to undertake such actions or initiatives as he may consider appropriate within the framework of the mission of good offices entrusted to him by the Security Council for promoting a just and lasting solution of the problem and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session on the results of his efforts;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-eighth session the item entitled "Question of Cyprus" and requests the Secretary-General to follow up the implementation of the present resolution and to report on all its aspects to the General Assembly at that session.

Prior to adoption of the draft resolution as a whole, paragraphs 7 and 15 were adopted by recorded votes of 89 to 5, with 27 abstentions, and by 86 to 8, with 25 abstentions, respectively.

In announcing its intention to vote against the draft as a whole, Turkey said it could support only the reaffirmation of the principle of the inadmissibility of acquisition of territory by force, and stressed that its forces in Cyprus were not of occupation but of protection. Turkey explained in detail why the text was unacceptable to the Turkish Cypriot community and why, if adopted, it could not be taken into consideration in the intercommunal negotiations and would lead to a re-evaluation of that community's position.

Turkey's main objections were that: implementation of paragraph 2 could result in the annihilation of the Turkish Cypriot community; paragraphs 3, 4 and 11 were incompatible with provisions of the 1977(26) and 1979(27) high-level agreements; paragraph 7 could be interpreted as making troop withdrawal a condition for continuing the negotiations, thereby offering the Greek Cypriot community and Greece an opportunity to sabotage or prolong those negotiations; the Secretary-General's opening statement at the formal resumption of the intercommunal talks in 1980(29) and the 1981 "evaluation paper"(18) were not cited as part of the basis for the negotiations; paragraph 9 contradicted the Secretary-General's evaluation of the talks; paragraph 13 did not correspond entirely to legal realities-the Secretary-General's mission of good offices had been entrusted to him by a Council resolution and not also by Assembly resolutions, a mission which paragraph 16, owing to its ambiguity, was liable to prejudice; and paragraph 15 contained an inopportune recommendation.

Turkey said the draft was totally defective, for nowhere did it mention the principal objective of the intercommunal talks: a sovereign, independent, territorially integrated and non-aligned Republic of Cyprus, which should also be bicomunal, bizonal and federal, as specified in the high-level agreements and in the Secretary-General's 1980 statement.

Somalia said it cast a negative vote because, apart from believing that more time should have been allowed for the Secretary-General's efforts and the intercommunal talks to bear fruit, it felt that certain provisions with which it disagreed rendered the text unbalanced.

Among those explaining their abstentions, Denmark and Tunisia likewise noted a lack of balance; Denmark added that only direct negotiations between the parties could lead to a settlement. The United Kingdom would have liked the provisions of the 1960 treaties and arrangements (pertaining to the independence of Cyprus) more accurately reflected in paragraph 2, stated that its position regarding paragraph 4 was in accordance with point 7 of the 1979 high-level agreement, and considered paragraph 15 inappropriate; however, it wanted to place on record its support for certain elements, paragraph 16 in particular, remarking that the Secretary-General's intention to strengthen his personal involvement in the negotiating process deserved the international community's whole-hearted support. Japan and Jordan voiced such support, with Jordan saying that the Secretary-General should be given sufficient time to find a formula acceptable to both communities and that in the mean time it was necessary to avoid any course that might prove prejudicial to the negotiations' outcome.

Cyprus, reiterating that the objective of its Government had always been sovereignty, independence and freedom, quoted a paragraph from a resolution recently adopted by its House of Representatives. That paragraph stated, among other things, that the House rejected any solution resulting in the abolition of the Republic of Cyprus, in the annexation of its territory, in whole or in part, by another State, or in the declaration of any part of that territory as a separate State. Cyprus went on to say that the Assembly's vote for the current resolution would be a vote for justice for a small State that had been brutally invaded by a neighbouring State at least 80 times larger in area, population and military power. Although that vote could not undo the injustice done to Cyprus, it would show once more the Assembly's firm stand for the beliefs and principles for which the United Nations had been established and its readiness to continue upholding them until their universal application was realized.

Of the other States explaining their affirmative votes, Barbados said it found nothing in the text that was inconsistent with its commitment to a just settlement through negotiation and to the total demilitarization of Cyprus; nor did it share the pessimistic view that the literal content of the text would seriously damage its fundamental intent. For Colombia, its vote was a demonstration of solidarity with: the principles of sovereign equality of States, non-interference and dispute settlement by means other than force; the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative; the Cypriot refugees and people; and the Government of Cyprus. Sierra Leone, the Sudan and Venezuela expressed similar views.

Mongolia, Romania and Spain saw the draft as reflecting their belief in the need to solve the Cyprus problem through negotiations based on respect for the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and unity of the Republic of Cyprus; Romania, adding the need to respect the non-aligned status of Cyprus, emphasized that it took the reference to troops to mean all foreign armed forces. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said its vote signified its desire to help the two communities find a just solution and should in no way be interpreted as favouring either one.

Despite their affirmative votes on the text as a whole, some States expressed certain reservations, among them Austria, the Sudan and Uruguay, all of which had abstained in the separate votes on paragraphs 7 and 15. In the Sudan's view, the international community should lay stress on points of agreement between the two sides rather than on those dividing them.

Uruguay believed that the emphasis on troop withdrawal as essential for a speedy solution might prove a limiting factor to the negotiations. Paragraph 7, containing that provision, seemed ambiguous to France, which noted that, while foreign intervention and occupation existed in Cyprus, that situation should not slow down efforts towards a settlement.

Austria voiced serious misgivings on the Council action recommended in paragraph 15. France, which abstained on that paragraph, questioned the mixing of Council and Assembly jurisdictions, an observation similarly made by Uruguay.

The preambular paragraph on an international conference should have been completely deleted, Uruguay felt, while France wondered whether it was opportune to hold such a conference just when the Secretary-General had announced strengthening his personal involvement in the search for a solution.

Principles governing international relations and essential norms of the functioning of the United Nations, reaffirmed in the resolution, were cited by Portugal in support of the text; they were the same reasons, however, that prevented it from subscribing to certain affirmations in the preambular section and to paragraph 15, against which it had voted. Egypt said its central concern was encouragement of the negotiating process, and therefore it would have preferred the resolution to have been drafted in more conciliatory terms.

Communications (May). On 9 May 1983, the day before the General Assembly resumed its 1982 session to consider the Cyprus question, Mr. Atakol addressed a letter transmitted, also on 9 May, by Mr. Atalay through Turkey,⁽³⁰⁾ charging that the Greek Cypriot side had sought another recourse to the Assembly in a campaign to internationalize the Cyprus question, to justify its allegation of lack of progress in the intercommunal negotiations. Having summarized developments since the talks resumed in 1980 until their adjournment on 14 April 1983, Mr. Atakol concluded that the lack of progress was due to deleterious tactics by the Greek Cypriot side.

Referring to what it called Turkey's lecture about norms of diplomatic behaviour within the United Nations, as contained in that State's 28

March letter,⁽⁷⁾ Cyprus said on 16 May⁽³¹⁾ that it was ironic that such a lecture should come from a country which had initiated the practice of circulating, as official documents, communications containing innuendoes about duly accredited representatives of Cyprus to the United Nations, from a fictitious entity set up in contempt of Assembly and Council resolutions.

On 18 May,⁽³²⁾ Cyprus drew attention to what it said was an explicit indication of Turkey's expansionist designs on Cyprus—the issuance by Turkey's Ministry of Culture and Tourism of a museum entrance ticket depicting the territories of Turkey and Cyprus as if they were a single entity.

By a letter of 23 May,⁽³³⁾ Cyprus pointed to a series of what it described as ominous statements by Mr. Denktas, who had made clear his intention to proclaim occupied Cyprus an independent and sovereign "State".

Report of the Secretary-General (June). In his June 1983 report to the Security Council on the United Nations operation in Cyprus covering 1 December 1982 to 31 May 1983,⁽³⁴⁾ the Secretary-General brought up to date the record of UNFICYP activities, of developments on the resumed intercommunal talks within the framework of the 1979 high-level agreement⁽²⁷⁾ and of progress regarding his mission of good offices.

The Secretary-General stated, as he had in his report to the General Assembly in May,⁽¹⁵⁾ that he had pursued the good offices mission. The intercommunal talks had continued in Nicosia, with their frequency adjusted to take account of the February presidential elections in Cyprus and thereafter as necessary. The 1981 "evaluation paper"⁽¹⁸⁾ had continued to serve as a structured, substantive method of discussion. An open agenda pattern, adopted at the beginning of 1983, had been helpful in conducting the discussions. The latest meeting of the talks had taken place on 14 April 1983.

The Secretary-General's Special Representative had come to United Nations Headquarters for consultations in December 1982 and May 1983. In addition to a general exchange of views with President Kyprianou on 8 March and 24 April 1983, the Secretary-General had met in New York in May with the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Cyprus, Nicos A. Rolandis, in connection with the Assembly debate on the Cyprus question then in progress, and also with Mr. Atakol, who had conveyed the views of the Turkish Cypriot community.

Following adoption of Assembly resolution 37/253, the leaders of the Turkish Cypriot community announced their decision not to attend the intercommunal meeting scheduled for 31 May.

The Secretary-General continued to hold the view that the intercommunal talks represented the best means of pursuing an effective negotiating process aimed at achieving an agreed, just and lasting settlement. He thus reiterated the hope that talks could be resumed as soon as possible on the existing and mutually accepted basis which remained valid, and appealed to the parties to show the utmost restraint and to assist him in his efforts. As to strengthening his personal involvement in the negotiations, the Secretary-General made clear that his effort was intended to be within the framework of the good offices mission; it would seek to carry forward the work done during the current phase of negotiations without affecting matters previously agreed upon, be inseparable from the intercommunal talks and involve extensive consultations between him and all concerned.

The Secretary-General regretted that, despite renewed efforts by the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus, the procedural difficulties preventing it from embarking on its work remained unresolved.

At the Secretary-General's request, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), as Co-ordinator of United Nations Humanitarian Assistance for Cyprus, had continued to assist the displaced and needy in the island (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XXI).

UNFICYP continued to maintain calm and promote normalization in the island (see below, under PEACE-KEEPING OPERATIONS). In the light of the situation on the ground and of political developments, the Secretary-General concluded that the continued presence of UNFICYP remained necessary and recommended to the Council, with the concurrence of the parties, that it extend the UNFICYP mandate for a further period of six months.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

The Security Council met twice on 15 June 1983 to consider the Secretary-General's report and recommendation for the extension of the mandate of UNFICYP. At their request, Canada, Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote; Mr. Atalay was invited to participate in conformity with rule 39^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

On the same date, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 534(1983).

The Security Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 1 June 1983,

Noting the concurrence of the parties concerned in the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council should extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting also that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island

it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 June 1983,

Reaffirming the provisions of its resolution 186(1964) and other relevant resolutions,

Reiterating its support of the ten-point agreement for the resumption of the intercommunal talks which was worked out at the high-level meeting on 18 and 19 May 1979 at Nicosia under the auspices of the Secretary-General,

1. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force established under resolution 186(1964) for a further period, ending on 15 December 1983;

2. Notes with satisfaction that the parties have resumed the intercommunal talks within the framework of the ten-point agreement and urges them to pursue these talks in a continuing, sustained and result-oriented manner, avoiding any delay;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 30 November 1983.

Security Council resolution 534(1983)

15 June 1983 Meeting 2453 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/15828).

Meeting numbers. SC 2453, 2454.

In the debate, Cyprus stated that the previous six months had seen a deterioration of the situation in the island. Turkey had further consolidated its incorporation of occupied Cyprus by proceeding with a series of illegal steps initiated the previous year: it had established a so-called central bank, had continued issuing "definitive certificates of ownership" entitling persons to properties belonging to Greek Cypriots and had introduced the Turkish lira, as of 24 May, as the official tender in occupied Cyprus. Turkey had also refused to attend the talks or respond to the Secretary-General's invitation to a meeting to discuss his intention to pursue his renewed personal involvement. Turkey's argument for its refusal was the internationalization of the Cyprus question, which it claimed was contrary to the spirit of the intercommunal talks. Having given its consent to the renewal of the UNFICYP mandate, Cyprus said it extended its full co-operation in the continuation of free and result-oriented negotiations under the Secretary-General's auspices and appealed to Turkey to do likewise.

Greece observed that perpetuation of the Cyprus problem and its development into a major international anomaly had made it ritual for the Council to hear government views twice yearly, at the renewal of the UNFICYP mandate; thus it was with regret that Greece had asked once again to speak on the matter. Concurring with the consent given by Cyprus, Greece said it was time that an all-out effort be made in the search for a solution and urged that advantage be taken of the continued personal involvement of the Secretary-General. Greece hoped Turkey would co-operate.

Mr. Atalay stated that the Turkish people of Cyprus, for whom he was speaking, had empowered him to consent to extending the mandate of the Force until 15 December 1983, despite certain objections to the enabling resolution, and to pledge continued co-operation for the successful execution of its task. He reiterated the hope for a revision of its mandate and modus operandi according to realities in Cyprus. He further hoped that the troop-contributing States which had departed from their traditional posture of impartiality by voting for Assembly resolution 37/253 would return to that posture, so essential to peace-keeping.

Mr. Atalay regretted the references, in the Secretary-General's report, to the Greek Cypriot administration as the "Government of Cyprus". The object of the talks under the Secretary-General's good offices, Mr. Atalay declared, was to establish a government—currently non-existent—that would constitutionally and legitimately represent both the Turkish Cypriot and Greek Cypriot peoples; such references prejudged the outcome of the talks and prejudiced their chance of success. To refer to the Turkish Cypriot component as merely the "Turkish Cypriot community" was an injustice to a people legally and morally entitled to equal status with the Greek Cypriots. Mr. Atalay pointed to the same inequitable attitude with respect to designating leaders of the two Cypriot peoples.

Agreeing with the Secretary-General's assessment that the best means towards a settlement of the Cyprus question were the intercommunal talks, Mr. Atalay stressed the Turkish Cypriots' determination to continue those talks and reiterated their hope that the Greek Cypriot leadership would come to the negotiations with the resolute intention of developing a bizonal federal system in Cyprus, based on the high-level agreements of 1977 and 1979, the Secretary-General's 1980 statement and the 1981 "evaluation paper". The repeated assertion of the Greek Cypriot leadership was that sovereignty belonged exclusively to its people; the Turkish Cypriot people's assertion, however, was that sovereignty in Cyprus could come only from an equal partnership between the two communities.

Turkey agreed to the extension of the UNFICYP mandate and supported the Turkish Cypriot community's request that it be brought into line with prevailing conditions in Cyprus. It held the view that, unless the troop-contributing States whose impartiality had been called into question reconsidered their action, their contribution could no longer serve the cause of peace and understanding in Cyprus. Turkey echoed the objections to the references and designations in the Secretary-General's report cited by Mr. Atalay, as well as those in the Council resolution just adopted, invoking what it called the principle of equality of the two communities. Turkey said it encouraged the resolve of the Turkish Cypriot community not to leave the negotiating table and emphasized that, whatever the reassessment of its position owing to Assembly resolution 37/253, it would in no way weaken that resolve. Turkey also restated those elements cited by Mr. Atalay on which negotiations must be based.

Canada, though reaffirming its commitment to UNFICYP's extended mandate, was concerned over the failure, for more than 19 years, to achieve the primary objective of the Force: to facilitate achievement of a negotiated settlement and a return to peaceful conditions. Despite stable conditions provided by UNFICYP and maintained by United Nations efforts, Canada said, the two communities and others involved in the dispute had displayed a regrettable lack of will to make the difficult compromises required for a successful political settlement. Making known that its patience and resources were not boundless, Canada called on the parties to enter into serious and fruitful discussions so that progress might become evident before the end of the mandate period.

Communications (June-October). In a series of communications, Cyprus drew attention to accelerated partitionist moves by Turkey and its instruments and called for their speedy arrest. For its part, Turkey claimed that such partition rhetoric was an attempt to cloud the issue of Greece's attempts to annex the whole of Cyprus.

On 21 June 1983,(35) Cyprus denounced new Turkish actions said to be directed against the Maronite Cypriots of Asomatos, one of three Maronite villages in occupied Cyprus where homes had been confiscated to house Turkish officers. Cyprus charged that, as part of a long term plan to turn the area into a military camp, Turkey's occupation forces had begun levelling a number of houses so as to force the remaining 31 inhabitants to abandon their homes.

By a letter of 22 June,(36) Cyprus drew attention to a 17 June resolution of the so-called Turkish Cypriot Legislative Assembly, affirming the right of the Turkish people in the occupied areas of Cyprus to self-determination. Cyprus called this an affront to the international community's verdict, as contained in the General Assembly's May resolution and the Security Council's June resolution.

Responding by a letter of 1 July, transmitted on 11 July by Mr. Atalay through Turkey,(37) Mr. Atakol asserted that the Turkish Cypriot people, co-founder partner of the Republic of Cyprus and one of two equal parties to the Cyprus dispute, could not be relegated to the position of an ethnic minority in a non-existent Cypriot nation. He reaffirmed that the Turkish Cypriots were ready, as they had always been, to re-establish a binational republic in the form of a bizonal federal one, as agreed in 1977 and 1979.

By a letter of 20 June to the President of the General Assembly, transmitted by Mr. Atalay through Turkey on 5 July,(38) Mr. Denktas expressed the regret of the Turkish people of Cyprus over the Assembly President's exclusion of the Turkish Cypriot zone from his visit to Cyprus between 7 and 9 June, as well as over certain remarks he had made during that visit which were anti-Turkish Cypriot in tone.

On 25 July,(39) Cyprus reported that, while memorial services were being held in Cyprus on the occasion of the ninth anniversary of its invasion, Turkey's envoy, in a speech at Morphou in occupied Cyprus, had declared that Morphou and Lefka would never be returned to their rightful owners. Denouncing this declaration as harmful to the intercommunal talks, Cyprus warned that, unless such interventions ceased, the Secretary-General's quest for a just and lasting solution would be seriously jeopardized. Responding on 22 September,(40) Mr. Atalay emphasized that the focus of the intercommunal talks had never been nor would be the status of any particular piece of territory within northern Cyprus but the fundamental question of the bizonality of a federal republic.

In a letter of 27 July,(41) Cyprus stated that, in addition to his recent secessionist declarations and actions, Mr. Denktas, on instructions from Turkey, had accelerated preparations for a unilateral declaration of independence of occupied Cyprus, including a national flag and anthem. On 17 August,(42) Cyprus protested against what it called new aggressive acts by Turkey on 9 August, when F-4 jet fighters originating from Turkey twice violated Cypriot airspace; in one instance, they had appeared to launch air-to-surface rockets and open machine-gun fire. Those military exercises, Mr. Atalay explained on 22 September,(43) had taken place entirely within the territory and airspace of northern Cyprus, under the sovereignty of the Turkish Federated State of Kibris.

On 26 September,(44) Cyprus stated that, as reported by Turkish Cypriot papers, the so-called cabinet of Ankara's puppet regime in occupied Cyprus had decided to prepare a draft law on a proposed national flag—a decision made to coincide with a meeting between President Kyprianou and the Secretary-General on 14 September in New York. Mr. Atalay stated in a letter of 10 October, transmitted the following day,(45) that the Turkish Cypriot people were determined not to have the Greek national anthem imposed on them and would never accept the Greek flag as the flag of Cyprus. Refuting allegations that Turkey had designs to annex the island, Mr. Atalay pointed to a 1970 book, Democracy at Gunpoint: the Greek Front, by Andreas Papandreu, Prime Minister of Greece, in which the author had admitted that 20,000 Greek troops had been sent to Cyprus in 1964.

Greece agreed on 18 October(46) that it had dispatched the troops, but stressed that it had done so at the request of the legal Government of the Republic of Cyprus, to avert a Turkish invasion that eventually took place in 1974. Had those Greek troops remained in Cyprus, the Turkish invasion might have been thwarted, Greece added.

Report of the Secretary-General (December). In a December 1983 report,(47) submitted to the Security Council in response to its request in resolution 534(1983), the Secretary-General gave an account of the United Nations operation in Cyprus from 1 June to 30 November.

The Secretary-General reported that, during the period under review, the search for a settlement of the Cyprus problem had sustained a set-back, despite intensive efforts on his part in co-operation with the parties. As indicated in his previous report,(34) difficulties had arisen in connection with the adoption of General Assembly resolution 37/253. The Turkish Cypriot community held that the resolution tended to undermine the basis of the intercommunal negotiations, and the Turkish interlocutor declined thereafter to attend the intercommunal talks. Hence, no meeting of the talks had been held during the reporting period.

In order to give fresh impetus to the negotiations, the Secretary-General had met with the leader of the Turkish Cypriot community, Mr. Denktas, on 4 July at Geneva. In further contacts at appropriate levels in New York and, through his Special Representative, at Nicosia, the Secretary-General had conveyed to both sides, on 8 and 9 August, informal and confidential soundings on resuming negotiations on the major outstanding issues arising from the "evaluation paper", within the framework of certain "indicators" designed to narrow the gap between the positions of the two sides; the indicators agreed upon would be referred to the intercommunal talks for negotiation. Following further clarifications with President Kyprianou on 14 and 30 September, the Permanent Representative of Greece to the United Nations and the Foreign Minister of Turkey on 30 September, and Mr. Denktas on 1 October, both sides accepted the Secretary-General's personal involvement in his mission of good offices and declared their readiness to resume the intercommunal negotiations on the existing and mutually agreed basis.

The Secretary-General consented to lend his good offices to arrange for a high-level meeting suggested by Mr. Denktas on 3 October, which President Kyprianou had indicated willingness to attend. The meeting was to clarify the intentions of the two sides for a federal solution and pave the way for a resumption of the talks. Accordingly, the Secretary-General's Special Representative had returned to Cyprus on 14 November to initiate arrangements. The following day however, Mr. Denktas had informed the Secretary-General of the proclamation by the Turkish Cypriot community of a "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus"; at the same time, he expressed readiness to resume negotiations at any time and indicated that his proposal for a high-level meeting remained in effect. (For the Secretary-General's account of his activities following that proclamation and adoption of Security Council resolution 541(1983) on 18 November, see below, under ACTION BY THE TURKISH CYPRIOT COMMUNITY.)

The Secretary-General noted that the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus remained unable to overcome the procedural issues which had prevented it from performing its substantive task. One of the three Committee members had travelled to Cyprus on 13 November to try to resolve those issues but left on 30 November, as further progress on the humanitarian problem had proved impossible; he would resume his efforts at short notice when circumstances so warranted.

The Secretary-General concluded that the continued presence of UNFICYP remained indispensable and recommended that its mandate be extended for a further period of six months. He subsequently informed the Council that, as of 15 December, Cyprus, Greece and the United Kingdom had indicated their concurrence in the proposed extension.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 15 December 1983, the Security Council met to consider the Secretary-Generals report and recommendation that the mandate of UNFICYP be further extended. At their request, Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote; Mr. Atalay was invited to participate under rule 39^b of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

On the same date, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 544(1983).

The Security Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 1 December 1983,

Noting the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council should extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting also that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 December 1983,

Reaffirming the provisions of its resolution 186(1964) and other relevant resolutions,

1. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force established under resolution 186(1964) for a further period, ending on 15 June 1984;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 31 May 1984;

3. Calls upon all the parties concerned to continue to co-operate with the Force on the basis of the present mandate.

Security Council resolution 544(1983)

15 December 1983 Meeting 2503 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/16217).
Meeting number. SC 2503.

In the debate, Pakistan stated that extending the UNFICYP mandate required a simple procedural resolution; it regretted, therefore, that the adopted text contained elements having no direct bearing on such an extension. The third and fourth preambular paragraphs, to which the Turkish Cypriot representative had objected, remained unaltered. Pakistan had also suggested deletion of "other relevant resolutions" in the latter paragraph because the phrase implicitly included Council resolution 541(1983), against which it had voted and which the Turkish Cypriot community had rejected. The text, unlike past resolutions on the mandate's extension, made no reference to the intercommunal talks and to the important agreements which had been reached on the Cyprus issue within and outside the United Nations. For the first time, the Council had adopted a resolution on UNFICYP which did not enjoy the agreement of all the parties, Pakistan said.

Cyprus stated that it had agreed to the mandate's renewal because it believed the presence of UNFICYP was indispensable to the maintenance of peace and security in Cyprus—conditions in which the search for a just and lasting settlement of the Cyprus problem could best be pursued. Cyprus drew attention to its good faith by its prompt response to the Secretary-General's soundings for a resumption of the intercommunal talks, acceptance of his personal involvement in the negotiations and of the methodology proposed for advancing them, and readiness to attend the high-level meeting proposed by Mr. Denktas—all of which had been described in the Secretary-General's report as constructive. In contrast, Cyprus observed, Turkey's attitude after Assembly resolution 37/253 been adopted was one of delay in meeting with the Secretary-General and refusal to accede to his request for written comments on the methodology proposed for resuming the talks.

Greece welcomed the mandate's extension with particular satisfaction because of what it described as the highly explosive situation created by the presence of 30,000 Turkish troops on Cypriot territory. In expressing appreciation to the Force, the troop-contributing countries and the Secretary-General for their efforts in promoting conditions conducive to a just and viable solution, Greece reiterated that such a solution hinged on Turkish troop withdrawal.

Mr. Atalay said the Turkish people of Cyprus had hoped for a Council resolution that would fulfil two overriding objectives of the moment: to extend the UNFICYP mandate and to support the Secretary-General's good offices mission. He recalled that for the past 20 years they had consistently given consent to such extensions after registering strong reservations on the texts' references to the so-called Government of Cyprus. Not only had the current resolution made those same references, he noted, but had also omitted, on the insistence of the Greek Cypriot side, those paragraphs normally referring to the intercommunal talks. For these reasons, among others, the "Government of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" rejected the resolution in its entirety. Mr. Atalay said that, henceforth, that "Government" alone would decide on the principle, scope and modalities of its co-operation with UNFICYP.

That rejection was regarded as justified by Turkey, which itself characterized the resolution as not designed to reduce tension and facilitate understanding. Turkey also supported Mr. Atalay's statement concerning future co-operation with UNFICYP. Despite deployment of UNFICYP since 1964, the Turkish Cypriot community had been subjected to severe harassment until the arrival in 1974 of the Turkish peace force, Turkey said, adding that the force would remain in Cyprus until attainment of a final solution guaranteeing the rights and security of the Turkish Cypriot community. While acknowledging that UNFICYP demonstrated United Nations interest in Cyprus and fulfilled a political function to which Turkey and the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" were not opposed, the manner in which that political interest was expressed and directed, Turkey asserted, was not consistent with basic principles of law and justice.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 20 December 1983, the General Assembly, by decision 38/456 on the suspension of its thirty-eighth (1983) session, deferred consideration of the Cyprus question, among other agenda items, to its resumed session, at a date to be announced (see Chapter XI of this section).

Shortly before the Assembly convened its 1983 session, Mr. Denktas, by a letter of 16 September, transmitted that day by Mr. Atalay through Turkey,(48) had stated that the intended presence of Mr. Kyprianou at the head of the Greek Cypriot delegation would be unconstitutional and would bear no relevance to the situation in Cyprus, either de jure or de facto; consequently, everything said or done in the name of the Republic of Cyprus by that delegation would be ultra vires and as such considered null and void by the Turkish people of Cyprus and their legitimate representatives.

Other action. The Commission on Human Rights, by a decision of 8 March 1983, postponed the debate on the question of human rights in Cyprus to its 1984 session. On 21 March 1983, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination reiterated the hope that the unacceptable state of affairs in Cyprus, due to the foreign occupation of part of its territory, would be brought to an end so that Cyprus would be able to exercise its obligations under the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination on the whole of its national territory. (See ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII.)

Action by the Turkish Cypriot community

Communications (November). By a letter of 15 November 1983, transmitted the same day by Mr. Atalay through Turkey,(49) Mr. Denktas announced that the Turkish Cypriot people, exercising their right to self-determination, had proclaimed an independent and non-aligned "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus". A declaration embodying the proclamation and explaining why it had become imperative for Turkish Cypriots to take that step, and a resolution approving the declaration and establishment of the "Republic" were enclosed, both adopted by a "Legislative Assembly" on 15 November. The Secretary-General was assured that the proclamation would facilitate, rather than hinder, re-establishment of the partnership between the two peoples within a federal framework, that the Turkish Cypriots desired the continuation of his good offices mission and were ready to resume negotiations, and that Mr. Denktas' proposal for a new summit meeting remained valid.

On 16 November,(50) Turkey transmitted separately to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President a statement made the previous day by its Minister for Foreign Affairs that "President Denktas" had received Turkey's Ambassador to inform him officially of the proclamation, and that, following an examination of the situation, Turkey had decided to recognize the new "Government".

A press release of 17 November, transmitted by Mr. Atalay through Turkey,(51) outlined what was referred to as a peace package of constructive and practical goodwill measures from the "President of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" to his Greek Cypriot counterpart. These concerned the resettlement of Varosha (a community near the port of Famagusta, just inside the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces' cease-fire line) by Greek Cypriots and the reopening of the Nicosia international airport to civilian traffic, each under an interim United Nations administration,

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 15 November 1983, Cyprus,(52) Greece(53) and the United Kingdom(54) requested the Security Council President to convene an urgent meeting of the Council to consider the situation in Cyprus. Cyprus also asked the Council to take urgent and effective action to deal with the grave development created by the latest secessionist move by Turkey and its instruments in Cyprus.

Accordingly, the Council convened on 17 November. Algeria, Australia, Canada, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Greece, India, Romania, Seychelles, Sri Lanka, Turkey and Yugoslavia were invited at their request to participate without the right to vote; Mr. Denktas was invited to participate in accordance with rule 39^c of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

On 18 November, following consideration of the matter at four meetings, the Council adopted resolution 541(1983).

The Security Council,

Having heard the statement of the Foreign Minister of the Government of the Republic of Cyprus,

Concerned at the declaration by the Turkish Cypriot authorities issued on 15 November 1983 which purports to create an independent State in northern Cyprus,

Considering that this declaration is incompatible with the 1960 Treaty concerning the establishment of the Republic of Cyprus and the 1960 Treaty of Guarantee,

Considering, therefore, that the attempt to create a "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" is invalid, and will contribute to a worsening of the situation in Cyprus,

Reaffirming its resolutions 365(1974) and 367(1975),

Aware of the need for a solution of the Cyprus problem based on the mission of good offices undertaken by the Secretary-General,

Affirming its continuing support for the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus,

Taking note of the Secretary-General's statement of 17 November 1983,

1. Deplores the declaration of the Turkish Cypriot authorities of the purported secession of part of the Republic of Cyprus;

2. Considers the declaration referred to above as legally invalid and calls for its withdrawal;

3. Calls the urgent and effective implementation of its resolutions 365(1974) and 367(1975);

4. Requests the Secretary-General to pursue his mission of good offices, in order to achieve the earliest possible progress towards a just and lasting settlement in Cyprus;

5. Calls upon the parties to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General in his mission of good offices;

6. Calls upon all States to respect the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and non-alignment of the Republic of Cyprus;

7. Calls upon all States not to recognize any Cypriot State other than the Republic of Cyprus;

8. Calls upon all States and the two communities in Cyprus to refrain from any action which might exacerbate the situation;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council fully informed.

Security Council resolution 541(1983)

18 November 1983 Meeting 2500 13-1-1

Draft by United Kingdom (S/16149).

Meeting numbers. SC 2497-2500.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: China, France, Guyana, Malta, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Poland, Togo, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: Pakistan.

Abstaining: Jordan.

Explaining its vote, Pakistan said that certain considerations had determined its position and had motivated it to propose amendments to the provisional text, designed to provide balance and a comprehensive perspective of events since 1963. Those considerations included: preservation of the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and unity of Cyprus within a bicomunal, bizonal and federal framework; promotion of the intercommunal talks and support for the Secretary-General's initiatives; and the Council's responsibility, at this current critical turn of events, to promote a united Cyprus within the framework specified—an objective achievable only through reconciliation of the two communities and the intercommunal talks. Pakistan regretted that not only had the amendments been ignored, but an essential element present in the provisional text—namely, the reference to the intercommunal negotiations—had also been omitted from the final text, thus robbing it of an explicit mandate for the Secretary-General to promote the intercommunal talks and conciliation.

Jordan felt that the text failed to take account of the internal aspect of the Cyprus problem, namely, the substance of the dispute between the two communities. Its abstention stemmed from the unacceptability of this continued one-dimensional approach, as well as from the unilateral step taken in northern Cyprus.

For China, the text reflected its consistent support for the preservation of the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and non-aligned status of Cyprus. China believed that, as long as both sides set store by the country's overall interests and continued to negotiate in a spirit of mutual understanding, they should be able to find a just and acceptable solution. The USSR considered the text adequate to meet the situation created by the Turkish Cypriot action. It felt, however, that the Zurich-London agreements (embodied in the treaties cited in the preambular section) that had been imposed on the Republic of Cyprus were a serious curtailment of that State's sovereignty; the guarantees envisaged had been used to serve interests alien to the Cypriot people and had failed to prevent armed intervention and acts aimed at splitting the State.

The Secretary-General informed the Council when it convened on 17 November that, on learning of the proclamation of a "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" from the 15 November letter,⁽⁴⁹⁾ he had authorized the United Nations spokesman to issue a statement on his behalf. By the statement, the Secretary-General deeply regretted the move as contrary to Council resolutions on Cyprus and at variance with the high-level agreements of 1977 and 1979; it was bound to affect adversely the Cyprus situation and complicate his efforts to promote an agreed, just and lasting settlement under his good offices mission. He was in consultation on this serious development with all concerned, including the Council President, and appealed to all involved to exercise utmost restraint and refrain from any action that might further aggravate the situation.

Referring to the assurances by Mr. Denktas that his proposal for a high-level meeting remained valid and that he attached importance to the continuance of the negotiations, the Secretary-General said that the chances of success of such efforts depended primarily on the parties' co-operation. He was determined to pursue his search for a settlement, to weather the current crisis and to induce the parties to return to negotiations. To that end, he would take utmost advantage of the current presence in New York of the high-ranking representatives of all concerned.

Cyprus stated that the proclamation of the so-called "Republic" within the territory of the Republic of Cyprus involved international aggression against the territorial integrity, sovereignty and unity of the Republic of Cyprus and interference in its domestic jurisdiction. The declaration, for which Cyprus held Turkey solely responsible, was a nullity, and all States were duty-bound not to recognize any Cypriot State other than the Republic of Cyprus. But for Turkey's military presence, the action would have been impossible. The resultant explosive situation in the eastern Mediterranean posed a threat to international peace and security and a serious challenge to United Nations effectiveness. Cyprus appealed to the Council urgently to discharge its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations and adopt effective measures to reverse the unacceptable situation.

Greece called the declaration a breach of the 1960 Treaty of Guarantee signed by Turkey-along with Greece and the United Kingdom-whereby it had undertaken to guarantee the territorial integrity and security of the Republic of Cyprus and its Constitution, article 185 of which expressly excluded separatist independence and provided that the Republic's territory was indivisible. Greece called on all Member States to join in an unequivocal condemnation of Turkey's act and to refrain from recognizing the product of illegality and force. It called on Turkey immediately to withdraw its army of occupation and declared it would continue, with all the means at its disposal, to pursue efforts aimed at re-establishing freedom and legality in Cyprus.

The proclamation, Turkey explained, was to enable the Turkish community to join the Greek community on an equal footing in a bicomunal, bizonal and federal framework that should be the Republic of Cyprus. The only way to achieve that goal was through intercommunal negotiations under the Secretary-General's good offices mission. There were only two possible courses within that context, however: negotiations between the two co-founder communities, or negotiations between two independent States of Cyprus, to be held with their prior consent. In Turkey's view, a Council resolution should call for a resumption of negotiations, without making judgements based on a distortion of historical facts and a prejudiced interpretation of juridical reality, and take account of the Turkish Cypriot community's willingness to negotiate and continue co-operating with UNFICYP. Saying it would always protect the Turkish community, Turkey assured the Council that all that was necessary for a rapid solution was the smallest show of good will by the Greek Cypriot community and Greece: acceptance of the Turkish Cypriot community as an equal partner in an independent, sovereign, bicomunal, bizonal, federal and non-aligned Republic of Cyprus.

Whether the Council accepted it or not, Mr. Denktas said, it was a fact that the Turkish Cypriot people had finally asserted their rights and hoped that the Council would regard them as in full charge of their destiny-because 'they were. He reiterated their intention to continue negotiations under the Secretary-General's good offices, a process their statehood would help because of the equality of the parties. Claiming that the destruction and denial of its vested partnership had created the Cyprus problem and prevented a solution, he declared that the Turkish Cypriot people did not divide Cyprus; it had been divided when they were thrown out of the Government. He urged the Council to give Cyprus a chance to establish a bizonal, bicomunal federalism by not heeding the demand to condemn and not recognize their statehood. Only with its recognition would the Greek Cypriots feel the need to negotiate for a federal solution, as foreseen by the 1977 and 1979 agreements, the Secretary-General's 1980 opening statement and the 1981 "evaluation paper"—all by which the Turkish Cypriot people stood.

Following adoption of the resolution, Mr. Denktas restated that there existed no Government of the Republic of Cyprus. Rather, the Government in the south represented Greek Cypriots and that in the north, Turkish Cypriots; together, bicommunally, they made up the Government of Cyprus. He reiterated his invitation to the Greek Cypriot side to sit down at the table in order to re-establish a federal system. He insisted that the Turkish Cypriots were not seceding from the Republic and would not do so, if given the chance to re-establish such a system, with the help of the Secretary-General's good offices.

The majority of speakers in the debate—including Algeria, Australia, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, France, Guyana, India, the Netherlands, Nicaragua, Poland, Seychelles, Sri Lanka, Togo, the USSR, the United Kingdom, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zimbabwe—viewed the Turkish Cypriot proclamation with profound concern. They deplored and condemned it as an illegal and unacceptable act that violated the United Nations Charter, contravened the Council and General Assembly resolutions on the Cyprus question and the declarations of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, and was incompatible with the United Kingdom and Togo added—with the 1960 Treaties of Establishment and of Guarantee of the Republic of Cyprus and its Constitution. They demanded withdrawal forthwith of the proclamation and asked the Council to declare it null and void. In declaring or urging non-recognition of the entity proclaimed, they reaffirmed their full support for the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and non-aligned status of the Republic of Cyprus under President Kyprianou. They held that there could be no alternative to negotiations and peaceful dialogue, and called for a resumption of the intercommunal talks as a matter of urgency and on the two communities to co-operate in good faith with the Secretary-General.

Some States—Algeria, Guyana, the Netherlands and Sri Lanka among them—regarded the action as further complicating the situation in Cyprus and as a set-back in efforts towards a solution. So did the USSR, which also observed, along with France, that it subverted the foundations of and prospects for a just political settlement. Others, including Algeria, Egypt, India, Poland and Yugoslavia, said the action constituted a new flash-point of tension in the eastern Mediterranean, with far-reaching implications for world peace and security.

There could be no justifying the action, the USSR said, especially as it was taken just when new initiatives were being put forward for resuming the intercommunal talks. India, while granting that the legitimate rights of the Turkish Cypriot community should be respected and defended, failed to see the force of the arguments advanced for the action. Guyana felt that not even past excesses could justify it.

Democratic Yemen called the Turkish community's invocation of the right to self-determination as the legal basis for its proclamation a distortion of the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (55) which declared that all peoples had that right—not on the basis of faction, religion or sect, however, but of national unity and territorial integrity. Moreover, Democratic Yemen pointed out, no people could exercise that right under occupation or foreign domination. Sri Lanka observed that few States could claim ethnic, linguistic and religious homogeneity, or that they were free from problems attendant to their minority populations; thus, the territorial integrity of many States would be in peril if self-determination were interpreted in the colonial context as a right to secede.

Yugoslavia pointed to the increasing use of force and resultant occupation, with every fait accompli being forced on the international community and used as justification for another. It advised against coming to terms with such a practice and warned against its consequences for every member of the international community. Guyana, which said the Council had an obligation to discourage the use of force in international relations and be unequivocal in its rejection of such lawlessness, considered the Council's response to the Turkish Cypriot declaration inadequate. It believed that the Council should categorically condemn the action, declare that the United Nations would not accord recognition to the entity created and appeal directly to Member States not to recognize it.

The United Kingdom said the Council's responsibilities required it to address itself to the future. Noting that, amidst the gloom cast by the Turkish Cypriot action, both communities had expressed support for the Secretary-General's mission of good offices and for the 1977 and 1979 agreements, the United Kingdom also said that it was even more necessary to bring the two sides together in resumed talks. The solution in Cyprus lay forward, Guyana stressed, and, while neither side could be expected to forget the past—which could not be invoked in defence of the status quo or of ambitions inconsistent with the Charter and United Nations resolutions-both had an obligation to prevent it from influencing their perceptions of current intentions.

Action by Secretary-General. Referring to the suggested measures in the "peace package" offered by Mr. Denktas on 17 November,(51) concerning the resettlement of Varosha and the reopening of the Nicosia international airport, the Secretary-General reported (56) that, in important respects, they followed the line of measures he had discussed with the parties in 1980(57) and 1981,(58) pursuant to points 5 and 6 of the 1979 high-level agreement; under the mandates entrusted to him, he had the authority to take on the suggested responsibilities. The Secretary-General had authorized his spokesman to make a statement to this effect on 18 November.

He had discussed the matter with Mr. Denktas on 19 November and with Turkey's Foreign Minister on 22 November; pointing out that initial steps in respect of Varosha could be worked out between the United Nations and the Turkish Cypriots, since they involved making territory currently under Turkish Cypriot control part of the UNFICYP buffer zone. Following clear signals of encouragement from the Turkish Government to the effect, inter alia, that the designated area of Varosha would be placed under provisional United Nations administration, a draft United Nations declaration on Varosha was conveyed to Mr. Denktas on 9 December by the Secretary-General's Acting Special Representative, with the understanding that the area west of Dherinia Avenue would be placed under United Nations administration and settled by Greek Cypriots in two or more successive phases.

Further communications. During the Security Council deliberations in November, a number of communications on the Cyprus situation were addressed to the Council President or to the Secretary-General: on 16 November by France(59) and by Greece, on behalf of the 10 members of the European Community;(60) on 17 November by Nicaragua;(61) on 18 November by Bulgaria,(62) Hungary, (63) Portugal (64) and Sierra Leone;(65) on 21 November by Mongolia(66) and Viet Nam;(67) and on 23 November by Jamaica.(68) The communications transmitted official statements reflecting the majority position in the Council debate-which was staunchly for the rescission of the Turkish Cypriot proclamation, for a united State under the Government of the Republic of Cyprus, and for the resumption of negotiations between the two communities under the Secretary-General's good offices mission.

On 9 December,(69) Cyprus drew attention to statements attributed to the Prime Minister-elect of Turkey, as reported by The Christian Science Monitor of 30 November, which it characterized as provocative; he reportedly had said, among other things, that if a solution based on a loose federation was not achieved, northern Cyprus would irrevocably remain independent and separated from the rest of the island. Mr. Denktas, by a letter of 9 December, transmitted by Mr. Atalay through Turkey on 20 December,(70) quoted a statement attributed to the Greek Prime Minister, and reported on 24 November in an Athens newspaper, Ethnos, that Greece's proposal was for a unitary Cyprus-not a federation or confederation-to be negotiated only after the departure of the Turkish force from Cyprus. Mr. Denktas observed that it was such statements that had prevented the inter-communal talks from producing tangible results.

By a letter of 22 December transmitted that day,(71) Mr. Atalay provided certain quotations to refute what he said was the Greek Cypriot administration's protracted misrepresentation of facts as to who had invaded Cyprus, with a request that his letter be annexed to his statement to the Council on 15 December, in the hope that that administration would refrain from displaying indifference to factual accuracy.

Peace-keeping operations

The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), established by the Security Council in 1964,(72) continued throughout 1983 to monitor, patrol and supervise the cease-fire lines of the Cyprus National Guard and of the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces. It also provided security for civilians in the area between the lines; used its best efforts to discharge its functions with regard to the security, welfare and well-being of the Greek Cypriots living in northern Cyprus; continued regular visits to Turkish Cypriots residing in the south; and supported United Nations relief operations.

The Secretary-General reported to the Council that UNFICYP liaison and co-operation with the military authorities of both sides had been excellent at all levels and had been effectively maintained with the civilian authorities. Under new guidelines superseding those issued by the Turkish Cypriot authorities in December 1979, all serious restrictions on the movement of United Nations troops in the north, as identified by a Secretariat Survey Team in 1980,(73) had been removed, thereby increasing the number of routes open for UNFICYP travel. However, a Turkish Cypriot decision on 5 August to deny the Swedish contingent, when in uniform, access to the north had impaired UNFICYP operations until 1 October, when the restriction was lifted. Some minor incidents involving restrictions on the freedom of movement of UNFICYP by both the National Guard and the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces had arisen from misunderstandings at the local level.

UNFICYP monitored the buffer zone between the 180-kilometre-long cease-fire lines through a system of 139 observation posts, 71 of them permanently manned (as at 30 November). During 1983, the frequency of shooting incidents diminished significantly and none involved exchanges of fire between the two sides. There continued to be a number of incidents related to attempts by both sides to construct new fortifications forward of the cease-fire lines and to improve existing positions; UNFICYP was successful in restoring the status quo ante in all instances where such activities were considered provocative. Adjustments that had been made in August to the perimeter fence in north-western Varosha were withdrawn, following United Nations representations, and the original perimeter fence restored; some houses in the area that had appeared to be under preparation for occupancy remained unoccupied. Overflights of the buffer zone from the north and south of the cease-fire lines by both military and light civil aircraft continued to cause concern; UNFICYP protested all overflights to those concerned. Disputes over delineation of the cease-fire lines were reported; none, however, were of forces from either side crossing the lines.

UNFICYP continued to improve markings and barriers surrounding known or suspected minefields, and undertook three mine-clearing projects, two of them major, during which it received excellent co-operation from both sides.

In the discharge of its humanitarian responsibilities, UNFICYP monitored permanent transfers of Greek Cypriots from north to south and of Turkish Cypriots from south to north, to ensure that such transfers were voluntary. During the 12 months ended 30 November 1983, 53 Greek Cypriots and 11 Maronite Cypriots had transferred to the south—with the number of Greek Cypriots residing in the north falling to 879—while 11 Turkish Cypriots had transferred to the north. Other UNFICYP assistance was in support of such activities as agriculture in the buffer zone, water collection and distribution, anti-mosquito spraying, and what had come to be known as the Nicosia Master Plan project, which was entering its second phase, as well as a country programme covering 1983-1986 and including a variety of projects—both assisted by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and designed to benefit the two communities equitably. Under the Plan's second phase, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) would continue providing UNDP-financed inputs to the project and technical supervision and back-stopping.

Assistance from the International Labour Organisation, UNDP and UNHCR to the ceramics industry continued, as did assistance from UNDP and the World Health Organization for fellowship training in the prevention and control of thalassaemia (Mediterranean anaemia). Continued assistance in the control of animal infertility diseases was envisaged by UNDP.

Relief supplies were distributed or delivered by UNFICYP. During the 12 months ended 30 November 1983, this amounted to 1,275 tons of food, clothing, gas and diesel oil, of which 971 tons went to Greek Cypriots and Maronites and 304 tons to Turkish Cypriots, all in the north. The World Food Programme was a major contributor of food.

The UNFICYP Civilian Police continued to support UNFICYP military units and operated in liaison with both the Cyprus and the Turkish Cypriot police, contributing to maintenance of law and order between the cease-fire lines and to the protection of civilians. It also assisted in the control of civilian movement between the lines.

This information on UNFICYP activities was provided in two 1983 reports by the Secretary-General, covering the periods 1 December 1982 to 31 May 1983(34) and 1 June to 130 November 1983.(47)

In both reports, the Secretary-General concluded that the presence of the Force was necessary to help maintain calm and create conditions for pursuing a peaceful solution. Acting on his recommendations, the Security Council twice in 1983 extended the UNFICYP mandate for a six-month period, first until 15 December 1983 and then until 15 June 1984.

Composition of UNFICYP. As at 30 November 1983, UNFICYP had a strength of 2,348—the same as at 30 November 1982(74)—including 34 civilian police, and was composed of contingents from eight States (see table below). (47)

During the year ended 30 November 1983, two members of the Force died, bringing the total of fatal casualties to 127 since the inception of UNFICYP in 1964.

UNFICYP financing

UNFICYP continued to be financed by voluntary contributions and by troop-contributing Governments. Contributions received in 1983 from 29 Governments totalled $16,715,424 (see table below). The full 12-month cost of the Force was estimated at approximately $101.1 million-excluding regular troops' pay and allowances and normal matériel costs-much of which was borne by the troop contributors.

As at 15 December 1983, the accumulated deficit from the operation's inception in 1964 stood at $111.3 million.⁽⁷⁵⁾ Because of that deficit, payments to troop-contributing Governments (which had been absorbing costs in the order of $36.2 million every six-month period) as at that date had met claims only up to the end of June 1977.

Expressing concern over this situation, which placed a disproportionate burden on the troop-contributing countries, the Secretary-General, in his reports of June⁽³⁴⁾ and December⁽⁴⁷⁾ 1983 on the United Nations operation in Cyprus, appealed to Governments for voluntary financial contributions and to those which had not contributed in the past to review their positions and begin contributing.

He repeated that appeal by letters of 24 June⁽⁷⁶⁾ and 22 December,⁽⁷⁵⁾ sent to all Member States following each renewal of the UNFICYP mandate. In both letters, he explained that in recent years the rate of accumulation of the deficit had been growing, while for each six-month period voluntary contributions had been averaging $8.8 million compared to expenses ranging from $11 million to between $14 million and $15 million.

In a paper on the financing of United Nations peace-keeping operations, submitted on 7 October,⁽⁷⁷⁾ the United Kingdom expressed the view that it was reasonable to expect all Member States to share the burden of maintaining UNFICYP; the United Kingdom hoped that those which had not contributed to its cost would review their position and make a positive commitment to peace by contributing generously.

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya- United States dispute

In 1983, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, by a number of communications to the President of the Security Council, complained of military threats and intensified provocations against it by the United States, conducted along its coastline and close to its borders with neighbouring countries. The Council convened in February and August to consider those complaints. They were rejected by the United States as misrepresentations of the purposes of its naval deployment in international waters, of its joint military exercises with friendly countries, and of its actions to assist Chad, at that country's request (see Chapter V of this section).

Communications (February). By a letter of 18 February 1983,(1) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya charged that a serious situation was developing as a result of military threats and provocations against it by the United States, referring in particular to the dispatch of AWACS (Airborne Warning and Control System) aircraft to one of its neighbouring States and the stationing of the aircraft-carrier Nimitz and other naval vessels near its coastline. A message in support of that complaint was addressed by the President of Benin to the Libyan President and transmitted to the Secretary-General on 22 February.(2) On the same day,(3) the United States rejected the Libyan charge and affirmed its right to free passage in international waters and to conduct training exercises with friendly Governments.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (February)

In response to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya's request of 19 February, (4) that the Security Council consider what it described as the deteriorating situation near its shores that could jeopardize the security and peace of the Mediterranean region and the world, the Council convened in four meetings on 22 and 23 February.

Meeting numbers SC 2415-2418.

Invited, at their request, to participate in the discussions without the right to vote were: Algeria, Benin, Bulgaria, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Hungary, Iran, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Viet Nam. In accordance with rule 39^d of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, also invited were: the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States to the United Nations, as requested by Jordan on 22 February;(5) and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania, as requested by Togo on 23 February.(6)

In its statement to the Council, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya complained about recent events which it said were the latest in a series of United States provocations and threats against it since the Libyan revolution of 1969, which ended the presence of United States military bases and oil monopolies in that country. Those events included two violations of Libyan territorial waters near Benghazi on 19 January 1983; constant spying activities by United States AWACS in the eastern part of the country, obstructing and jamming civil communications; movement of the aircraft-carrier Nimitz and support vessels towards the Libyan coast near the Gulf of Sidra, on 13 February; 13 airspace violations three days later over the Gulf area between Tripoli and Benghazi; and deployment of the Sixth Fleet, on 17 February, at the limit of Libyan territorial waters, 22 kilometres from latitude 32°N. Such actions were illustrative of United States terrorist policy that threatened international peace and security, and peoples' freedom and independence.

Referring to United States official explanations that its naval and air activities were related to a so-called Libyan military buildup near the borders of the Sudan, and that the sending of AWACS to Egypt was part of a joint Egypt-United States manoeuvre (see Chapter V of this section), the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya denied any mobilization on its borders with either the Sudan or Egypt, saying it had no desire to interfere in those countries' affairs, and drew attention to Egypt's denial of the alleged joint manoeuvre. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya called on the Council to condemn these acts of aggression by the United States and declared that it would not be intimidated.

The United States said it had been aware for some time of Libyan efforts against the President of the Sudan and of concentrations of Libyan aircraft close to the borders of the Sudan and Egypt. That situation, of concern to those countries, had led the United States to move up the date of an already scheduled AWACS training exercise and to deploy its naval forces in international waters in the eastern Mediterranean, whose presence at times seemed to have proved a deterrence to Libyan adventurism in the region. Citing instances of what it called the long-standing pattern of Libyan misconduct world-wide, the United States charged it was the Libyan foreign policy of subversion and destabilization that posed a continuing threat to peace and security. The United States said it rested its case on the factual record and on its adherence to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations in the cause of international peace and security.

Most speakers in the debate--among them Benin, Bulgaria, China, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ghana, Hungary, Jordan, Madagascar, Poland, the Syrian Arab Republic, the USSR and Zimbabwe--deplored or condemned what they agreed were United States provocations against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, interference or meddling in the internal affairs of States, and threats to use force, including, as Zimbabwe said, the dispatch of sophisticated military equipment to northern Africa. They regarded these actions as exacerbating tension in a highly explosive region and seriously jeopardizing international peace and security.

International law entitled no one to threaten or use force to achieve changes in relations between States, Czechoslovakia said. Poland commented ^dSee footnote a on p. 249.

similarly, citing Member States' obligations under the Charter. Only patience and self-restraint by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had avoided an open conflict, Hungary said, while Zimbabwe cautioned that, since the United States had only partially withdrawn its sophisticated equipment from the area, the Council should remain seized of the situation until it had changed for the better.

For Madagascar, as also for Algeria, the confrontation was of serious concern to the region because of its potential for precipitating super-Power confrontation.

Nicaragua characterized United States actions against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya as wide-ranging—from rhetorical denunciations to destabilization measures, constant international propaganda campaigns, economic boycotts, and military threats and aggression. Nicaragua attributed the hasty United States military deployment in the Mediterranean to a foreign policy based on imperial power and military confrontation with third world peoples struggling to achieve or preserve political independence—a policy the United States pursued in other areas as well, Poland added. Those familiar with that policy, Democratic Yemen said, had confirmed that the anti-Libyan campaign, on the eve of the summit conference of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, was intended to deflect the conference from confronting United States aggressive policy.

To explain what it called a systematic campaign of threats and intimidation against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the USSR said the United States found unpalatable Libyan anti-imperialistic policy and firm opposition to United States and Israeli attempts to force a capitulationist peace on the Arab peoples.

Viet Nam accused the United States of fabricating a Libyan threat against the Sudan and of pointedly ignoring the 12-mile territorial limit set by the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea⁽⁷⁾ in order to engage in hostile activities against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. The new acts of provocation were the culmination of a campaign of subversion, intimidation and destruction, intended to divide the Arab States so as to impose United States imperialistic domination throughout the Middle East region.

In Bulgaria's view, the recent events in the Mediterranean Sea were the result of a well-thought-out strategy to paralyse progressive change in the Middle East, to perpetuate exploitation of the region's natural riches by capitalist monopolies and to impose imperialistic supremacy at the crossroads of the three main continents of the old world.

Ethiopia pointed to the high priority that the United States attached to the containment of so-called Libyan adventurism, which Ethiopia took to mean the overthrow of the legitimate Libyan Government; it was pursuit of that objective which had led the United States to deploy its colossal might on the northern shores of Africa, rather than the alleged conflict between two neighbouring African countries. This was not to say that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had no differences with some of its neighbours; however, those differences were being exploited to serve as a pretext for United States intervention in and ultimate domination of the region, just as it had previously exploited Ethiopia's strained relations with Somalia.

National sovereignty and security were the responsibility of each State, said Jordan, which also shared Pakistan's view that the maintenance of international peace and security was an international responsibility to be exercised by the United Nations through the Security Council.

It was Malta's belief that the safeguarding of peace and security in the Mediterranean rested with the countries of the region themselves; superimposing extraneous elements, it felt, could exacerbate rather than alleviate local tensions. Ghana suggested that the United States should take friendly cognizance of the sensitivity of all developing countries to strong-arm tactics by the great Powers.

A number of States, among them Bulgaria, Cuba, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Viet Nam and Zimbabwe, strenuously objected to the United States arrogating to itself the role of world policeman. The German Democratic Republic said the non-aligned countries of Africa, Asia and Latin America had embarked on a road of independent development, were capable of solving their problems, and resolutely opposed interference in their internal affairs by imperialistic Powers through pressure. According to Bulgaria, the ambitions of a large State to assume the role of arbiter in a region thousands of kilometres away was of grave concern to the international community. Cuba said the United States persisted in acting as world policeman, although it neither had the right nor had been asked to do so.

The United States movements in the Gulf of Sidra and the danger they posed to the countries in the area, Algeria stated, confirmed the correctness of its own foreign policy, as endorsed by the non-aligned Movement: to make of the Mediterranean a zone of peace and security. Algeria considered invalid the argument that a Power from outside the region was carrying out manoeuvres jointly with a country within it; that such intervention should have occurred in the Arab world, which was also a part of the African world, was deplorable, because it undermined the regional organizations—the natural forums for examining and peacefully solving the region's problems. In that connection, China hoped that the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the League of Arab States could play a mediating role.

The Sudan confirmed that, during the previous week, it had witnessed an escalation of armed Libyan presence on its north-western frontier in the form of MIG-23s and long-range bombers; it had also uncovered a Libyan-backed plan to overthrow the Government of the Sudan and impose Libyan hegemony, which was confirmed by reports that suicide squads had been charged with assassinating certain Presidents, including its own. In the face of such a dangerous situation, the Sudan said, it had used every means at its disposal to defend itself, in co-operation with friendly countries and within the context of its defence treaty with Egypt. It was incumbent on the Council to follow the situation closely and put an end to such practices and to the Libyan policy of intervening in the internal affairs of its neighbouring countries. The Sudan stated that it would not have voiced its differences with the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya before the Council had it not been for its concern to place things in proper perspective and to settle those differences—a process which should have been undertaken within the regional organizations to which the two belonged.

Egypt's participation in the debate also proceeded from its concern that matters be put in perspective and the facts clarified. Its statements concerning recent developments had been deliberately made so as not to aggravate matters and raise tensions. Egypt stated that it was fully committed to defending the Sudan in accordance with a mutual defence treaty; it affirmed that both were fully entitled to exercise the right of sovereignty within their respective borders and take defensive measures against aggression or threat of aggression. All they wished from the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya was a commitment to the consolidation of peace and security in the region and to peaceful settlement of disputes.

Israel, by a letter of 25 February,(8) objected to offensive references to it, in the course of the Council deliberations, by no fewer than 14 speakers (see Chapter IX of this section, under MIDDLE EAST SITUATION).

Communications (May-September). By a letter of 10 May,(9) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya charged that repeated United States violations of Libyan territorial waters and airspace constituted deliberate provocation and a threat to Libyan security and to that of the region. Rejecting this charge on 24 May,(10) the United States asserted that its recent flight operations from its aircraft-carrier Nimitz, near the Libyan coast, were entirely routine, conducted only in international airspace and preceded by the filing of a notice to operate within the relevant flight information region; neither the participating vessels nor the aircraft had violated Libyan territorial waters or airspace.

On 18 July,(11) Democratic Yemen, Iran, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the Syrian Arab Republic drew attention to a United States announcement concerning manoeuvres by its rapid intervention forces to be held in the Middle East and Africa in August. They regarded this action to be a serious danger to the security and independence of the region's States and a direct intervention in their internal affairs, and they condemned the existence of those forces, whose goal was to terrorize peoples, to strengthen régimes friendly to the United States, to impose its political and economic hegemony, to support imperialistic monopolies and to sow discord among neighbouring peoples and States so as to facilitate domination over them. To rectify what it called misinformation and baseless allegations, the United States on 22 July(12) stated that the purpose of the joint military exercises, involving military forces of the United States and other nations in the Middle East, was to review and enhance the participants' defensive capabilities, adding that its forces were participating at the invitation of host Governments and would withdraw at the end of the manoeuvres; they did not involve contested land, air or sea space.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya again drew the Security Council's attention on 5 August(13) to what it termed the dangerous situation created by the increasing tension provoked by the United States in the Mediterranean and Africa by publishing threatening official communiqués and by dispatching units of the United States Sixth Fleet to waters near the Libyan coast, military advisers and equipment to Chad, and two AWACS spy aircraft to a country bordering on the Jamahiriya to keep Libyan airspace under observation.

The leader of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, in a letter, also of 5 August, transmitted the following day,(14) warned that United States troop landings in Egypt, Oman, Somalia and the Sudan posed a direct threat to Libyan security and a threat of the utmost gravity to the Arab region and the Horn of Africa. Responsibility for any breakdown of international security in the region, he said, lay with the United States and with the Council if it did not call a halt to those landings.

Intensified United States acts of provocation and intimidation were reported on 8 August(15) by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, which requested that the Council urgently convene to consider the situation. Responding on 10 August,(16) the United States stated that the purposes and scope of the joint training activities had been clearly set forth in its letter of 22 July(12) and in advance announcements by several participating Governments. It also stated that the exercises threatened no country in Africa or the Middle East and were not in response to any situation or activity that might be taking place in any neighbouring country or countries.

On 13 September,(17) Democratic Yemen transmitted a letter from its Minister for Foreign Affairs protesting United States military manoeuvres in Egypt, Oman, Somalia and the Sudan as a breach of the security and stability of those States.

Earlier, the Foreign Minister of the Sudan, in a message transmitted on 11 August,(18) said that the conduct of the joint Sudan-United States training exercises was a sovereign right consistent with international law, the Charter of the United Nations and other international and regional instruments; he called the 5 August letter of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya(14) a malicious misinterpretation of the intent of those exercises. Somalia, by a letter of 12 August,(19) rejected the Libyan assertion(14) that the military exercises in question constituted a threat to international security; it took exception to the liberty taken by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to speak on Somalia's behalf and made clear its opposition to the Council's discussion of Somalia in the context of the Libyan communication. Democratic Yemen's allegations(17) were similarly rejected by Somalia, on 23 September,(20) which added that by permitting a super-Power to establish naval and military bases in Democratic Yemen, that country had endangered the peace and tranquillity of its neighbours and of the region.

On 15 August,(21) referring to what it called the tendentious Libyan misrepresentations concerning the joint military exercises, Egypt stated that they were of limited duration and in no way related to current developments in the region, were not directed towards any State, were intended solely to enhance Egypt's defensive capabilities, and were a legitimate, sovereign right-indeed a duty-that threatened no one. Those misrepresentations were futile attempts by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to divert attention from its destabilization designs in the region and continued interference in Chad's internal affairs.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (August)

In response to the request made by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya on 8 August 1983, (15) the Security Council convened in three meetings between 11 and 16 August to consider that country's complaint of intensified United States acts of provocation against it.

Meeting numbers. SC 2464, 2466, 2468.

The following were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussions without the right to vote: Afghanistan, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, German Democratic Republic, India, Iran, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Viet Nam.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya informed the Council that the United States had recently been engaged in large-scale troop landings in three countries bordering on the Jamahiriya, posing a direct threat to its sovereignty and security. The United States, it asserted, was currently exploiting the civil war in Chad as a pretext to mass its forces in preparation for aggression against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. It was ready, as it had always been, to enter into dialogue, but the United States had continually refused. It called on the Council to condemn and put an end to the policy of aggression and provocation relentlessly pursued by the United States against the Jamahiriya.

The United States declared that the issue confronting the Council was unprovoked Libyan aggression against Chad, which the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, together with the USSR, was attempting to obfuscate with diversionary allegations of United States interference in the affairs of African nations. If that aggression went unpunished, the Council would be revealed as impotent, and a brutal new colonialism would threaten even more urgently the security of north and north-central Africa. The United States accused the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya of conducting a foreign policy of subversion and destabilization that respected no State's independence, territorial integrity and right to peace and security; and of pursuing expansionist goals by providing economic and military aid to radical Governments, bribing officials, helping international terrorists as well as guerrilla groups working to overthrow Governments, and assassinating exiled opponents and officials of target Governments. It was that lawlessness which threatened international peace and security and violated rational, civilized behaviour, and which should be vigorously opposed. The United States reiterated that all of its actions designed to assist Chad to exercise its inherent right of self-defence were consistent with international law and the Charter of the United Nations.

The majority of States speaking in the debate deplored anew what they perceived as a United States campaign of intimidation against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and policy of intervention in the internal affairs of States. They called on the Council to end such activities and reiterated their solidarity with the Jamahiriya's firm stand.

Iran demanded that the United States leave the Mediterranean unconditionally and let the people of the region sort out their differences without mediation and observation. It called on the Council to remind the United States that it was neither the United Nations nor a United Nations peace-keeping force and to condemn its provocations against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

The Syrian Arab Republic said the United States allegation of Libyan intervention in Chad was intended to pave the way for sending more AWACS spy planes and other military assistance to that country in an attempt to tighten the vice around the Libyan revolution.

Remarking that tension was being increased around the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by the daily provocative flights of United States military aircraft in search of a pretext for confrontation, the USSR restated its view that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya bore the brunt of imperialistic attack because it pursued an independent foreign policy that did not seek advice from Washington. Sharing a similar view were Afghanistan, Democratic Yemen, Poland, Viet Nam and the Lao People's Democratic Republic, which believed that the obvious reason for the heavy-handed tactics of the United States was the pursuit by the Jamahiriya and other progressive countries of a policy of peace, independence, co-operation and non-alignment and the refusal to submit to pressure.

Poland saw the dispatch of military equipment to north Africa and the exercises held there by United States rapid deployment forces as neo-colonialist attempts to interfere in the complicated affairs of countries like Chad. The number of advisers and mercenaries to those countries was increasing, as were the flow of arms and the number of African States being dragged into military or political intervention.

Zimbabwe said charges and countercharges between the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the United States were symptomatic of a dangerously escalating situation that could lead to open conflict, with grave consequences for peace and security in north Africa, the Mediterranean and other regions. Both parties should be told in no uncertain terms that the Council, while affirming every nation's right to pursue its own interests, required every United Nations Member to refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of other States in the pursuit of such interests.

Malta said the people of Chad should be left alone to resolve their problems and requested the Council to urge speedy cessation of hostilities, withdrawal of all foreign forces and promotion by OAU of national reconciliation within Chad and good relations with its neighbours. It was only natural for the region's States to take the initiative to safeguard their own peace and security, Malta stressed; the road to peace lay not in the brandishing of military hardware but in dialogue among equals, aided by the relevant regional organization and backed by the Council.

The escalation of tension and conflict in the Mediterranean and north African regions, India said, was the result of increased recourse to the threat or use of force and to military intervention, in violation of the Charter. The non-aligned Movement had always been opposed to all forms of foreign aggression, subjugation, dependence, interference and pressure, as well as to great-Power policies tending to perpetuate world division into blocs or spheres of influence.

The Sudan recalled that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, while preparing to launch aggression against the Sudan, hastened to complain to the Council about United States provocations and threats said to jeopardize Libyan security and safety and aimed at toppling its regime. This time, while directly intervening in Chad with flagrant use of force, it had once more come before the Council claiming that Libyan security and safety were being threatened, to divert attention from its armed intervention in Chad. The Sudan explained that its military exercises were aimed solely at enhancing its defence capabilities. It stressed its commitment to a policy of co-operation and good-neighbourliness, as substantiated by its record of good relations with its neighbours, excepting the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, which it hoped would work for respect for law, principles and international covenants in word and deed.

Zaire agreed with the Sudan's analysis of the complaint by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and added that that country, having annexed the Aouzou Strip belonging to Chad, had proceeded to subject Chad to torture, displacement and murder, using internationally prohibited weapons such as phosphorous bombs and napalm, recruiting mercenaries and assisting rebels and insurgents. Zaire concluded that the Libyan complaint was unfounded and a mere ruse to divert attention from the real aggressor, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

International security of the Mediterranean countries

During 1983, the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly the views of Governments concerning the strengthening of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region. Recognizing the close link between that region's security and international peace and security, the Assembly, in December, encouraged the Mediterranean States to intensify co-operation aimed at reducing tension and strengthening security in the region, and urged all other States to co-operate towards that end.

By a letter of 25 March,(1) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya stated that it attached particular importance to the transformation of the Mediterranean region into a zone of peace and co-operation and shared the international community's initiatives in that regard. That objective could not be achieved, however, unless international action was taken to end continued United States naval, air and military presence in the region, aggressive designs against Arab States stemming from a strategic co-operation agreement between the United States and Israel, the development of Israel's nuclear weapons programme, and the threat of Israeli attack on nuclear installations set up for peaceful purposes in any Arab country.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a General Assembly request of December 1982,(2) the Secretary-General submitted two 1983 reports on strengthening security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region. The first, dated 22 July, with subsequent addenda,(3) transmitted the replies received during 1983 from eight States containing their views on the subject. The second report, dated 30 September,(4) was an analysis based on six of those replies and on others previously received from 21 other States.(5)

The Secretary-General reported that many States regarded the Mediterranean as strategically significant and therefore its transformation into a zone of peace and co-operation as urgent, given the threat to world peace and stability posed by the crises in that region. While the concept of such a zone needed precise definition, there was agreement that this should not constitute an impediment to strengthening regional security and co-operation. To that end, specific political and security measures were suggested, among them settlement of existing conflicts, co-ordinated reduction of armed forces, non-deployment of nuclear weapons in non-nuclear-weapon States, non-use by nuclear-weapon States of nuclear weapons against States which had renounced such weapons on their territories, withdrawal of foreign fleets and military bases, and non-adherence to military pacts and treaties. Institutional measures were also proposed, and reference was made to economic and technical co-operation. The general view was that strengthened security and co-operation among the Mediterranean States would enhance world stability.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 20 December 1983, adopted resolution 38/189 without vote.

Strengthening of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/102 of 9 December 1981 and 37/118 of 16 December 1982 on the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security",

Mindful of the importance of strengthening peace and security in the Mediterranean and of the resultant impact on international peace and security,

Noting the provisions relating to the Mediterranean in the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, signed at Helsinki on 1 August 1975, and those of the Concluding Documents of the meetings of representatives of the participating States of the Helsinki Conference, held at Belgrade from 4 October 1977 to 8 March 1978 and at Madrid from 11 November 1980 to 9 September 1983,

Noting the declarations of the successive meetings of the non-aligned countries concerning the Mediterranean, as well as official declarations on, and contributions to, peace and security in the Mediterranean made by individual countries,

Taking note of the analytical report of the Secretary-General,

1. Recognizes:

(a) That the security of the Mediterranean is closely linked with international peace and security;

(b) That further efforts are necessary for the reduction of tension and of armaments and for the creation of conditions of security and fruitful co-operation in all fields for all countries and peoples of the Mediterranean, on the basis of the principles of sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity, security, non-intervention and non-interference, non-violation of international borders, non-use of force or threat of use of force, the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force, the peaceful settlement of disputes and respect for sovereignty over natural resources;

(c) The need for just and viable solutions to existing problems and crises in the area, on the basis of the provisions of the Charter and of relevant resolutions of the United Nations, the withdrawal of foreign forces of occupation and the right of peoples under colonial or foreign domination to self-determination and independence;

Chapter IX

Middle East

In 1983, the situation in the Middle East continued to occupy the attention of the Security Council, the General Assembly and several other United Nations bodies. Aside from the annual debate in the Assembly on the Middle East situation as a whole, the major aspects considered were the Palestine question, the situation in Lebanon and between other individual Arab States and Israel, the situation in the territories occupied by Israel, and Palestine refugees. The United Nations continued to maintain two major peace-keeping operations in the region financed by special assessments on Member States.

Details on these subjects together with the full texts of the related resolutions or decisions adopted can be found under the relevant subject headings on the following pages. For texts of resolutions and decisions of major organs mentioned but not reproduced in this chapter, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: Nuclear-weapon-free zones-Middle East; nuclear weapons and Israel. Africa: Israel-South Africa relations. Mediterranean countries: Libyan Arab Jamahiriya-United States dispute. Disasters and emergency relief: Lebanon. Regional economic and social activities: Western Asia. Human rights. Refugees and humanitarian assistance: Lebanon.

Middle East situation

General aspects

The situation in the Middle East was again considered in 1983 as an item on the agenda of the General Assembly's regular session and, in December, the Assembly adopted five resolutions (38/180 A-E) on different aspects of the situation. Three of these (38/180 A-C) are dealt with elsewhere in this chapter (see INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS).

Communications. By a letter of 4 January 1983,⁽¹⁾ Israel drew attention to statements made by Arab and other countries on 20 December 1982, in connection with the Assembly's consideration of the Middle East situation and the Palestine question, and asserted that the statements indicated that the countries in question maintained their attitude with regard to Israel's right to exist.

By a letter of 14 January,⁽²⁾ Israel submitted complaints about what it described as terrorist incidents, for which the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) had claimed responsibility, in which explosive devices had been used against civilian targets.

By letters of 25 (February)⁽³⁾ and 3 November,⁽⁴⁾ Israel said that it objected to offensive references made about it by speakers in the Security Council during consideration of the dispute between the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the United States (see Chapter VIII of this section), the situation in Grenada (see Chapter VI of this section) and the question of Namibia (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III).

On 24 March,⁽⁵⁾ the Federal Republic of Germany transmitted the conclusions adopted at a meeting of heads of State and Government of the European Community (EC) at Brussels, Belgium, on 22 March. The meeting expressed concern at the continued lack of progress towards peace between Israel and its neighbours, and reaffirmed EC's previous position on a settlement, built on the right to a secure existence for all States in the region, including Israel, and justice for all the peoples, including the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination. Welcoming the September 1982 peace initiatives⁽⁶⁾ of the United States and of the Arab Summit Conference at Fez, Morocco, the EC members expressed regret that no initiatives had succeeded in ending the fighting; they called for a cease-fire, cessation of all military operations and withdrawal of forces to internationally recognized frontiers, and for a just settlement negotiated in accordance with Security Council resolutions and acceptable to both parties.

On 21 April,⁽⁷⁾ the Federal Republic of Germany and Thailand transmitted the joint declaration of the Fourth Meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Association of South-East Asian Nations and EC, held at Bangkok, Thailand, on 24 and 25 March, which stressed the urgency for a Middle East peace settlement and called on all parties to the conflict to seize the opportunity for progress towards that end. The hope for a lasting Middle East peace settlement was reiterated in a letter of 22 June,⁽⁸⁾ by which the Federal Republic of Germany transmitted the conclusions adopted at a meeting of the EC heads of State and Government at Stuttgart on 19 June.

On 21 November,(9) the Sudan transmitted a letter of the same date from the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States to the United Nations, in reply to a 16 November address to the General Assembly by Chaim Herzog, President of Israel, who had called for negotiations without pre-conditions. The Observer stated that, by annexing Jerusalem, the Golan Heights and Arab lands and cities, it was Israel which had established preconditions.

By a letter of 6 December 1983,(10) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya expressed concern that an agreement between the United States and Israel, reached during the visit of the Israeli Prime Minister to Washington at the end of November, would endanger peace and security in the Arab region.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a September report to the General Assembly and the Security Council,(11) the Secretary-General submitted his observations on the Middle East situation. He noted that developments in the Middle East during the previous year had given little cause for hope for a solution and had made a comprehensive settlement even more difficult. Preoccupation with events in Lebanon (see below, under INCIDENTS AND DISPUTES BETWEEN ARAB COUNTRIES AND ISRAEL) had overshadowed the consideration of other major aspects of the Middle East problem; delay in getting to its roots, he warned, could create a far more fundamental crisis.

Israeli withdrawal from the occupied territories, realization of the rights of the States in the area to live in peace within secure boundaries, and the future and rights of the Palestinians were still the main elements of the conflict, the Secretary-General stated. Lack of mutual recognition and communication had created a dangerous impasse. The June 1982 Israeli invasion of Lebanon(12) and its aftermath had again shown that the use of force could not resolve the Middle East conflict, but only complicate it.

The safety and survival of all the parties, he concluded, could be achieved only through an agreed settlement which took account of the basic aspirations and vital interests of each, based on principles outlined in Security Council resolution 242(1967),(13) and which recognized the rights of the Palestinian people. He hoped that, confronted with the increasing dangers of the conflict which threatened the security of the region and beyond, the major Powers would find it possible to work with each other in the search for a just and durable Middle East peace, with the Council providing a practical framework and becoming a key instrument, and other means of approaching the problem, for example, through the institution of a suitable negotiating process, including, in an appropriate form, an international conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Under the agenda item "The situation in the Middle East", the General Assembly, on 19 December 1983, adopted five resolutions, all by recorded vote. Three of them dealt with: the situation in the Syrian Golan Heights (38/180 A) (see below, under INCIDENTS AND DISPUTES BETWEEN ARAB COUNTRIES AND ISRAEL); the Palestinian cultural heritage (38/180 B); and the status of Jerusalem (38/180 C) (see below, under PALESTINE QUESTION).

Resolution 38/180 D, dealing with the Middle East situation in general, was as follows:

The General Assembly,

Having discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Reaffirming its resolutions 36/226 A and B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982 and 37/123 F of 16 December 1982,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, 497(1981) of 17 December 1981, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982, 511(1982) of 18 June 1982, 512(1982) of 19 June 1982, 513(1982) of 4 July 1982, 515(1982) of 29 July 1982, 516(1982) of 1 August 1982, 517(1982) of 4 August 1982, 518(1982) of 12 August 1982, 519(1982) of 17 August 1982, 520(1982) of 17 September 1982 and 521(1982) of 19 September 1982,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 12 October 1982,

Welcoming the world-wide support extended to the just cause of the Palestinian people and the other Arab countries in their struggle against Israeli aggression and occupation in order to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights, as affirmed by previous resolutions of the General Assembly relating to the question of Palestine and to the situation in the Middle East,

Gravely concerned that the Arab and Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, still remain under Israeli occupation, that the relevant resolutions of the United Nations have not been implemented and that the Palestinian people is still denied the restoration of its land and the exercise of its inalienable national rights in conformity with international law, as reaffirmed by resolutions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to all the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem,

Reiterating all relevant United Nations resolutions which emphasize that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law and that Israel must withdraw unconditionally from all the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Reaffirming further the imperative necessity of establishing a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region, based on full respect for the Charter and the principles of international law,

Gravely concerned also at recent Israeli actions involving the escalation and expansion of the conflict in the region, which further violate the principles of international law and endanger international peace and security,

Recognizing the great importance of the time factor in the endeavours to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms its conviction that the question of Palestine is the core of the conflict in the Middle East and that no comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region will be achieved without the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights and the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from all the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories;

2. Reaffirms further that a just and comprehensive settlement of the situation in the Middle East cannot be achieved without the participation on an equal footing of all the parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people;

3. Declares once more that peace in the Middle East is indivisible and must be based on a comprehensive, just and lasting solution of the Middle East problem, under the auspices of the United Nations and on the basis of relevant resolutions of the United Nations, which ensures the complete and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and which enables the Palestinian people, under the leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organization, to exercise its inalienable rights, including the right to return and the right to self-determination, national independence and the establishment of its independent sovereign State in Palestine, in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations relevant to the question of Palestine, in particular General Assembly resolutions ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980, 36/120 A to F of 10 December 1981, 37/86 A to D of 10 December 1982 and 37/86 E of 20 December 1982;

4. Welcomes the Arab Peace Plan adopted unanimously at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez, Morocco, on 25 November 1981 and from 6 to 9 September 1982;

5. Condemns Israel's continued occupation of the Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, the principles of international law and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and demands the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from all the territories occupied since June 1967;

6. Rejects all agreements and arrangements which violate the recognized rights of the Palestinian people and contradict the principles of just and comprehensive solutions to the Middle East problem to ensure the establishment of a just peace in the area;

7. Deplores Israel's failure to comply with Security Council resolutions 476(1980) of 30 June 1980 and 478(1980) of 20 August 1980 and General Assembly resolutions 35/207 of 16 December 1980 and 36/226 A and B of 17 December 1981, determines that Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem and to declare it its "capital" as well as the measures to alter its physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and status are null and void and demands that they be rescinded immediately, and calls upon all Member States, the specialized agencies and all other international organizations to abide by the present resolution and all other relevant resolutions, including Assembly resolutions 37/86 A to E;

8. Condemns Israel's aggression, policies and practices against the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories and outside these territories, particularly Palestinians in Lebanon, including the expropriation and annexation of territory, the establishment of settlements, assassination attempts and other terrorist, aggressive and repressive measures, which are in violation of the Charter and the principles of international law and the relevant international conventions;

9. Strongly condemns the imposition by Israel of its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan Heights, its annexationist policies and practices, the establishment of settlements, the confiscation of lands, the diversion of water resources and the imposition of Israeli citizenship on Syrian nationals, and declares that all these measures are null and void and constitute a violation of the rules and principles of international law relating to belligerent occupation, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

10. Considers that the agreements on strategic co-operation between the United States of America and Israel signed on 30 November 1981, together with the recent accords concluded in this context, would encourage Israel to pursue its aggressive and expansionist policies and practices in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, would have adverse effects on efforts for the establishment of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and would threaten the security of the region;

11. Calls upon all States to put an end to the flow to Israel of any military, economic and financial aid, as well as of human resources, aimed at encouraging it to pursue its aggressive policies against the Arab countries and the Palestinian people;

12. Strongly condemns the continuing and increasing collaboration between Israel and the racist regime of South Africa, especially in the economic, military and nuclear fields, which constitutes a hostile act against the African and Arab States and enables Israel to enhance its nuclear capabilities, thus subjecting the States of the region to nuclear blackmail;

13. Reaffirms the call for the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East as specified in paragraph 5. of the Geneva Declaration on Palestine, adopted on 7. September 1983 by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine under the auspices of the United Nations and on the basis of relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council periodically on the development of the situation and to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a comprehensive report covering the developments in the Middle East in all their aspects.

Israel rejected the resolution as unbalanced, impeding a peaceful solution of the Arab-Israel conflict by presenting that conflict as the root of all Middle East problems and the sole danger in the region to world peace, and contradicting Security Council resolution 242(1967),⁽¹³⁾ the only agreed basis for a negotiated settlement. The United States said it opposed resolutions that hindered the peace process, contributed to a continued diplomatic deadlock and eroded confidence in the Assembly's role in solving the Middle East problems.

Portugal dissociated itself from any appeal it considered prejudicial to joint efforts and in particular from any resolution which, because of its language, measures advocated, discriminatory references or legal implications, might harm constructive efforts. Finland regretted especially that the principles of Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973)⁽¹⁴⁾ were not reaffirmed; it particularly reserved its position on elements in the preamble and paragraphs 10 and 11, and voiced reservations on paragraph 13.

Although the text corresponded to a large extent to its position, Austria said it had abstained in view of some formulations. Sweden had strong reservations on paragraphs 10 and 11 and felt that the resolution lacked balance. Spain could not support paragraphs 10, 11 and 12, but believed that paragraphs 4, 6 and 13 did not exclude other ways for a peaceful and negotiated Middle East solution. New Zealand was disappointed that the resolution did not reflect the balance of resolution 242(1967) and was not well calculated to contribute to a negotiated settlement. Honduras found both positive and negative elements in the text.

Though voting in favour, Brazil and the Philippines voiced reservations on some provisions. Mexico and Thailand said they would have abstained had there been separate votes on paragraphs 6 and 10; Thailand felt that they prejudged the outcome of agreements, which a sovereign State had the right to conclude. Peru cautioned that the wording of paragraphs 6, 10 and 11 could be misinterpreted; in its understanding, references to relations between specific States and others were strictly linked to the Palestine question as the core of the Middle East problem. It would also have liked to see specific references to resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973), as a basis on which the parties could reach an understanding.

Greece said it voted in favour on the basis of its attachment to the principle of the United Nations Charter, Article 2, paragraph 4, stating that Member States should refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State. Bolivia and Togo said they voted in favour in keeping with their position on the Middle East situation; its position, Bolivia added, was based on respect for the territorial integrity of all States and the rejection of the forceful acquisition of territory. Malta remarked that its support did not mean that it agreed with every provision.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya reaffirmed its opposition to allusions that would give some semblance of legitimacy to Israeli occupation of Palestinian territories or recognize the Zionist entity. Iran spoke similarly, terming that entity an artificially forged State.

By a separately adopted paragraph of resolution 38/6, on co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to implement United Nations resolutions relevant to the Middle East situation and to the Palestine question (see Chapter XI of this section).

Also under the agenda item on the situation in the Middle East, the General Assembly, on 19 December, adopted resolution 38/180 E by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Recalling its resolutions 36/226 A of 17 December 1981 and 37/123 F of 20 December 1982, in which it stated, inter alia, its concern over certain factors which exacerbate the situation in the Middle East,

Deeply concerned at recent developments in the Middle East and the critical situation confronting the region resulting from the continued escalation of Israel's policy of aggression, expansion and annexation in the region,

Expressing grave concern over the continued supply of modern arms and war materials to Israel, augmented by substantial economic aid, without which Israel's policy of aggression and of flouting United Nations resolutions could not be maintained,

Deeply aware that the recent reported agreements following the memorandum of understanding between the United States of America and Israel will increase Israel's intransigence and its war potential and escalate its expansionist and annexationist policies in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, at a time when it is defying United Nations resolutions,

1. Declares, accordingly, the international responsibility of any party or parties that supply Israel with arms or economic aid that augment its war potential;

2. Expresses deep concern at and condemns all steps which may result in augmenting the capability of Israel and contributing to its policy of aggression against countries in the region;

3. Demands that all States, particularly the United States of America, in the light of the said agreements, refrain from taking any step that would support Israel's war capabilities and consequently its aggressive acts, whether in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967 or against countries in the region;

4. Culls upon all States to review, in the light of the present resolution, any agreement, whether military, economic or otherwise, concluded with Israel.

Rejecting the resolution, Israel said it was beyond the Assembly's authority to dictate the nature of bilateral relations, which, it said were solely within the jurisdiction of the States involved; the sponsors' audacity was heightened by the fact that the Arab States which considered themselves in confrontation with Israel-Iraq, Jordan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Saudi Arabia and the Syrian Arab Republic had over the past decade contracted for the delivery of armaments worth over $100 billion. The United States-Israel understanding had as its sole objective the promotion of peace and security, while the resolution sought to perpetuate regional instability and tension. In a 16 December letter,⁽¹⁵⁾ Israel gave what it said was a breakdown of figures of arms purchases by Arab States. Were they as sincerely interested in mutual disarmament as was Israel, they would have entered into a direct dialogue.

The United States rejected the resolution as an inadmissible intrusion into the right of a State to conduct relations with another; its relationship with Israel was central to the pursuit of peace and not aimed against any State in the region.

Finland said that the arms race in the region was not the sole responsibility of the countries mentioned in the resolution, which was too one-sided and sweeping in order to contribute effectively to the search for a halt to that arms race and for a peaceful settlement. In the opinion of Honduras, the text lacked positive elements. Portugal dissociated itself from any act or appeal prejudicial to joint efforts, and in particular to discriminatory references or legal implications that might harm constructive efforts. Though expressing doubts as to whether the United States-Israel agreement would contribute to a peaceful settlement, New Zealand did not consider it appropriate to judge agreements between sovereign States, a point taken up by Singapore. This latter view was also shared by the Philippines and Thailand, which added that any Assembly action questioning that right might have ramifications beyond the Middle East situation. Colombia said it could not accept a text condemning only one of the parties in the Middle East. Ecuador, too, could not agree to condemning specific agreements or to accepting suggestions to sever relations with Israel. Rather than promoting peace, Venezuela believed that certain paragraphs were disruptive and could lead in the opposite direction. Bolivia did not agree with the drafting style and some of the text's content. Austria had reservations in particular on paragraph 4.

Though voting in favour, Greece dissociated itself from that paragraph. Turkey stressed that its affirmative vote reflected concern over Israel's tendency to use every opportunity to achieve its aggressive aims; the reference to "international responsibility" in paragraph 1 was inappropriate. Seychelles voted in favour for reasons of principle. While concurring with the resolution's thrust, Malta said it did not agree with all provisions.

Though condemnation and denunciation might not be the best way to proceed, Egypt felt that the resolution reflected genuine concern over the developments in the Middle East, including the recent United States-Israel agreement, as a result of which doubts and preoccupations had arisen.

Iran reserved its right with regard to any paragraph which recognized an artificially forged State, the Zionist entity.

The agreement between the United States and Israel was also dealt with by the Assembly in its resolution 38/180 D (see above).

Iran did not press to a vote a draft resolution⁽¹⁶⁾ by which the Assembly would have: considered the strategic alliance between Israel and the United States as a factor of escalation of Middle East tension threatening international peace and security; condemned the recent United States-Israeli aggression in the region, as well as any attempted use or threat of use of force, resulting from the alliance, against the States of the region and aimed at destroying the Palestinians' struggle to regain their rights in their homeland; and requested the Secretary-General to seek Member States' views and to prepare a study on the consequences of the alliance, particularly on the Palestinians.

Persons detained by Israel

In 1983, the General Assembly again took up the case of the Palestinian Ziad Abu Eain, this time in connection with the release of Palestinian prisoners held in Israel and southern Lebanon. The Assembly and the Economic and Social Council had first considered this case in 1981,⁽¹⁷⁾ and in January 1982 the Secretary-General had reported on implementation of the Assembly's demand that Abu Eain be released.⁽¹⁸⁾

Information on persons detained by Israel in the Israeli-occupied territories was provided by the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories (see below, under TERRITORIES OCCUPIED BY ISRAEL). Cases of arrest and detention of staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East in Lebanon by Israeli authorities were reported on by the Secretary-General (see below, under PALESTINE REFUGEES).

In March 1983,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed the human rights of persons detained by Israel (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII).

Communications. On 5 May,⁽²⁰⁾ Jordan transmitted a letter of 3 May from the PLO observer, to which a letter was attached from the Committee to Defend the Rights of Prisoners at Ansar (Insar) Detention Camp in southern Lebanon, expressing appreciation for the humanitarian role played by the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and listing a number of violations of prisoners' rights by Israeli authorities.

By a letter of 18 November,⁽²¹⁾ the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People protested the arrest by Israeli authorities of Mohammed Mi'ari and Maysara Sayyid, representatives of two non-governmental organizations based in Israel, on the grounds that they had violated security laws because they had attended the International Conference on the Question of Palestine (see below, under PALESTINE QUESTION).

In a letter of 13 December,⁽²²⁾ Saudi Arabia stated that an ICRC press release issued that day reported that Israel had violated a written agreement, negotiated by ICRC, between PLO and Israel for the simultaneous freeing of six Israeli prisoners and about 100 prisoners detained in Israel itself, as well as all others (some 4,300) in southern Lebanon. Although registered for release, some prisoners from Insar Camp and other military command posts in southern Lebanon had not been freed, among them Ziad Abu Eain, who had been taken to an Israeli prison.

Israel, on 16 December,⁽²³⁾ submitted a press statement of 14 December by its Ministry of Defence pointing out that the Red Cross representative in Israel, in a letter of 29 November to the Ministry, had admitted that the original mistake which prevented the release of Abu Eain, sentenced to life imprisonment for the murder of two Israeli youths in Tiberias in May 1979, derived from an oversight in the Red Cross list by which its representatives at Ben Gurion Airport near Tel Aviv had acted. ICRC claimed that its oversight had been compounded by an error by the Israel Defence Forces (IDF) at the airport. However, due to the absence of Abu Eain's name from the list, the Red Cross and IDF had agreed that another prisoner also sentenced to life imprisonment would be sent to Algeria; thus, Israel had fulfilled its commitment to release 63 prisoners. The Ministry emphasized that the prisoner exchange had at the last moment been moved up by 24 hours; despite the pressures of short notice, IDF had abided by the agreement and, if during the release of 4,500 detainees and 63 prisoners in exchange for six Israeli soldiers some snags had occurred, Israel was not prepared to change what had been implemented.

Speaking on 30 November before the Special Political Committee (SPC), the PLO observer charged that Israeli authorities had kidnapped Abu Eain at the airport as he was about to depart for Algeria. He had been imprisoned again and subjected to torture. Immediate action was required to force Israel to observe the agreement and release him.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Under the agenda item on the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, the General Assembly, on 15 December, adopted resolution 38/79 A by recorded vote. The Assembly took this action on the recommendation of SPC.

The General Assembly,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization relative to the fate of Ziad Abu Eain,

Taking note of the report of the International Committee of the Red Cross of 13 December 1983,

1. Condemns Israel for the fact that one prisoner, Ziad Abu Eain, who had been registered before embarkation by delegates of the International Committee of the Red Cross at Tel Aviv Airport, was taken at the last minute by the Israeli authorities;

2. Demands the immediate release of Ziad Abu Eain, as well as the other prisoners who were duly registered to be freed from Insar Camp and other military command posts in southern Lebanon but have not in fact been released, and the securing of their transfer to Algiers in conformity with the agreement reached through the good offices of the International Committee of the Red Cross;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 38/79 A

15 December 1983 Meeting 98 110-2-29 (recorded vote)

Approved by SPC (A/38/718) by recorded vote (75-3-30), December (meeting 47); 19-nation draft (A/SPC/38/L.35), amended in Assembly by Saudi Arabia (A/38/L.48); agenda item 69.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bahrain, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, India, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Mali, Mauritania, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Qatar Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, United Arab Emirates, Yemen.

Meeting numbers. GA 38th session: SPC 36-42, 45-48; plenary 98.

Recorded vote, in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Austria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Bolivia,^a Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, Iceland, Jamaica, Lesotho, Liberia, Malawi, Nepal, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Sri Lanka, Swaziland, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay, Zaire

^aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

The draft was amended in the Assembly by Saudi Arabia to add the second preambular paragraph, and to replace the original paragraphs 1 and 2—which would have, respectively, condemned Israel for having kidnapped Ziad Abu Eain, and demanded his immediate release with those adopted. The amendments were adopted by recorded votes: the second preambular paragraph by 115 to 2, with 17 abstentions; paragraph 2 by 107 to 2, with 24 abstentions; and paragraph 1 by 106 to 2, with 26 abstentions.

Speaking before the Committee vote, Israel said that the release of more than 4,500 prisoners for six Israeli prisoners, not counting the condemned criminals whose names had been on the list given to ICRC at the airport, proved that it had honoured the agreement. Regarding Abu Eain, there had been confusion over the several lists; the definitive one was drawn up by ICRC and he was not included.

The United States said that, since the information provided was diametrically opposed, the Committee needed an independent detailed statement from ICRC.

PLO pointed out that ICRC had confirmed that Abu Eain's name had been on its list; furthermore, The Jerusalem Post of 7 December cited numerous sources involved in the exchange, all of which confirmed that he had been listed.

Sri Lanka noted that the draft did not fall within the terms of reference of the Committee on Israeli practices in the occupied territories; since Sri Lanka was a member of that Committee, its vote would have a bearing on the Committee's work and, in the longer term, on the human rights and interests of the inhabitants of the occupied territories.

Austria hoped that not freeing Abu Eain was simply a mistake and requested Israel to free him as soon as possible.

In the Assembly, Argentina explained that its vote was based on the 13 December ICRC press communique and on the humanitarian nature of the resolution which it hoped would help ensure the success of the exchange of prisoners; however, paragraph 1 should have confined itself to reflecting the fact that one of the parties had failed to abide by the exchange agreement.

In the absence of full clarification, Canada could not adopt a position on either party and also could not accept the emotive and condemnatory language of paragraph 1.

In other action, also taken on 15 December, the Assembly in resolution 38/83 I called again on Israel to release all detained Palestine refugees.

Credentials of Israel

By a letter of 19 October 1983 to the General Assembly President,(24) 50 States conveyed their reservations on the credentials of Israel, citing the following reasons: Israel was continuing its flagrant and persistent violation of the United Nations Charter and international law and flouted with impunity United Nations resolutions on the Middle East situation and the Palestine question.

On 20 October,(25) Israel responded that the completely unfounded attack on its credentials was an attempt to abuse the credentials procedure and was one more manifestation of the obsessive hatred of States bent on Israel's destruction, in violation of international law and the Charter; the approach by the 50 States was liable to affect adversely the ability of the United Nations to perform its primary functions for maintaining international peace and security.

On 24 October, by a recorded vote, the Assembly decided not to act on an amendment by Iran⁽²⁶⁾ to reject the credentials of Israel (see Chapter XI of this section).

Palestine question

The Palestine question continued in 1983 to be a concern of the General Assembly and of its Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian rights). An International Conference on the Question of Palestine adopted in September a Declaration and a Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights. The Assembly, in one of five December resolutions on the Palestine question, endorsed the Conference's call for an international peace conference on the Middle East (38/58 C). It urged United Nations agencies and organizations to take into account the recommendations of the five regional preparatory meetings of the Conference (38/58 D); again endorsed the 1976 recommendations of the Committee on Palestinian rights (38/58 A); and requested the expansion of United Nations public information activities on the Palestine question (38/58 E). In a fifth resolution (38/58 B), the Assembly dealt with the United Nations Secretariat's Division for Palestinian Rights. The status of Jerusalem and restitution of Palestinian cultural property were the subjects of two other December resolutions (38/180 C and B), adopted under the agenda item on the situation in the Middle East (see above).

United Nations bodies also continued to examine the situation in the territories occupied by Israel (see under TERRITORIES OCCUPIED BY ISRAEL) and to provide and encourage assistance to Palestinians (see below and under PALESTINE REFUGEES).

Communications. By a letter of 4 January 1983,⁽¹⁾ Israel drew attention to statements made on 20 December 1982 by Arab and other countries, during the General Assembly's consideration of the Palestine question and the Middle East situation (see above).

On 16 February,⁽²⁾ Mongolia transmitted a message of 15 February from its President to the Chairman of the National Council of Palestine, expressing support for the struggle of the Palestinian people for their inalienable rights and for national independence.

By a letter of 26 August,⁽³⁾ Israel stated that it would withhold from its contributions to the United Nations the amounts proportionate to the expenses incurred by the anti-Israel activities of the Committee on Palestinian rights and the Division for Palestinian Rights which, it said, were designed to exacerbate tensions and polarize the situation in the Middle East.

In connection with the August/September International Conference on the Question of Palestine (see below), several letters were addressed to the Secretary-General. On 11 August,⁽⁴⁾ Israel protested against the holding of an exhibition sponsored by the Conference secretariat on United Nations premises in New York. In reply, the Secretary-General informed Israel on 19 August⁽⁵⁾ that he had asked for the exhibition's closure because the proper procedures for holding exhibitions at Headquarters had not been fully observed. On 25 August,⁽⁶⁾ Israel strongly protested the release of a series of studies prepared for the Conference which, it said, were propaganda serving the cause of international terror, not the cause of international peace. On 27 September,⁽⁷⁾ it stated that numerous irregularities had accompanied the preparations for and holding of the Conference, further compounded by placing PLO on an equal footing with participating States.

Two messages to the Conference participants expressed support for the rights of the Palestinians and their struggle for national independence. On 30 August,⁽⁸⁾ the USSR transmitted a message of 29 August from the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR and the Council of Ministers of the USSR; on 5 September,⁽⁹⁾ Bulgaria forwarded a message from the General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Bulgarian Communist Party and President of the State Council.

International Conference on the Question of Palestine. In pursuance of two 1982 General Assembly resolutions,⁽¹⁰⁾ an International Conference on the Question of Palestine was convened at Geneva from 29 August to 7 September 1983.

The Conference⁽¹¹⁾ adopted the Geneva Declaration on Palestine and the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights. In the Declaration, the Conference reaffirmed that a just solution to the Palestine question, the core of the Middle East problem, was crucial. It emphasized that the time factor was important in achieving a solution, and expressed its conviction that partial solutions were inadequate and that delays in seeking a comprehensive solution did not eliminate tensions in the region.

The Conference considered that various peace proposals presented in 1982,(12) such as the Arab peace plan adopted by the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference at Fez, should serve as guidelines for concerted international efforts. These guidelines included: attainment by the Palestinians of their legitimate rights, including the rights to return, to self-determination and to establish their own independent State in Palestine; equal participation of PLO, the representative of the Palestinians, in all efforts on the Middle East; the need to end Israel's occupation of and to secure its withdrawal from the territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem; the need to reject Israeli policies and practices in those territories and any de facto situation created by Israel contrary to international law and United Nations resolutions, particularly the establishment of settlements; the need to reaffirm as null and void all Israeli measures altering the character and status of Jerusalem, including the expropriation of land, and in particular the so-called "Basic Law" on Jerusalem and its proclamation as the capital of Israel; and the right of all States in the region to exist within secure and internationally recognized boundaries, with justice and security for all, the pre-condition of which was the recognition and attainment of Palestinian rights.

To give effect to these guidelines, the Conference considered it essential that an international peace conference on the Middle East be convened (see below).

The Programme of Action enumerated national and international measures to be taken in the political, economic and information fields. It invited the Security Council to establish promptly an independent, sovereign Palestinian State in Palestine through the implementation of United Nations resolutions and by facilitating the organization of an international peace conference.

Reservations and statements of position on the Declaration and the Programme by 17 States were annexed to the Conference report.(11)

The Declaration and the Programme, which were summarized in the Secretary-General's Middle East report,(13) were transmitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council by the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights on 10 October.(14)

As authorized by the Assembly in 1981,(15) that Committee acted as Preparatory Committee for the Conference; its activities in that regard during its second session (13 meetings from 4 February to 27 July 1983 in New York and one meeting on 29 August at Geneva were summarized in a report to the Assembly.(16) Reviewing the question of the Conference date and venue, the Preparatory Committee decided on 20 June to change the original dates set in 1982(17) (16-27 August) to 29 August-7 September.

In preparation of the Conference, the Committee organized five regional meetings: for Africa, at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania (29 March-1 April);(18) for Latin America, at Managua, Nicaragua (12-15 April);(19) for Western Asia, at Sharjah, United Arab Emirates (25-29 April);(20) for Asia, at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia (3-7 May);(21) and for Europe, at Geneva (4-8 July).(22)

Activities of the Committee on Palestinian rights. The Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, in 1983, continued to follow developments in the Israeli-occupied territories and action by Israel which the Committee regarded as violations of international law or of United Nations resolutions. The Committee brought such actions, including Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, exploitation by Israeli authorities of Arab-owned lands and other matters affecting the rights of the Palestinians (for details, see below, under TERRITORIES OCCUPIED BY ISRAEL), to the attention of the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council.

In its annual report to the Assembly,(23) the Committee found that there was abundant evidence that its recommendations made in 1976,(24) endorsed by the Assembly the same year,(25) had been clearly understood by nations and peoples in all regions, and that those recommendations were seen to be fair, legally founded and peaceful, and should therefore be lasting when implemented. The Committee felt that the International Conference had given a new impetus to the attainment of Palestinian rights as a prerequisite for an overall Arab-Israeli settlement. Considering the Conference's Declaration and Programme of Action to be of great value for a settlement of the Palestine question, the Committee appealed to the Assembly and to the Security Council to endorse them and to support their implementation. The Committee endorsed the Conference's recommendation for an international peace conference on the Middle East (see below) and recommended resolute action by all nations, particularly those in the region, through the Council, in the search for durable and comprehensive peace. Among the Committee's recommendations regarding the Secretariat's Division for Palestinian Rights was continued expansion of the Division's efforts concerning seminars.

The Committee met at United Nations Headquarters on 29 November 1983 in observance of the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People, commemorated each year in accordance with a 1977 Assembly resolution.(26) The New York meeting and a similar one at Geneva were addressed by a number of United Nations officials and government representatives.

With the Committee's participation, the Eighth United Nations Seminar on the Question of Palestine, which had as its central theme the inalienable rights of the Palestinians, was held at Jakarta, Indonesia, from 9 to 13 May 1983. The Seminar's comments on various aspects of the question.-including restoration of Palestinian rights and Israeli policies in the occupied territories (see below, under TERRITORIES OCCUPIED BY ISRAEL)-were annexed to the Committee's annual report.

The Committee also acted as the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on the Question of Palestine (see above).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions (38/58 A and B) dealing with the work of the Committee on Palestinian rights, both under the agenda item on the question of Palestine.

On 13 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 38/58 A by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3376(XXX) of 10 November 1975, 31/20 of 24 November 1976, 32/40 of 2 December 1977, 33/28 of 7 December 1978, 34/65 A and B of 29 November 1979 and 34/65 C and D of 12 December 1979, ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980, 35/169 of 15 December 1980, 36/120 of 10 December 1981, ES-7/4 of 28 April 1982, ES-7/5 of 26 June 1982, ES-7/9 of 24 September 1982 and 37/86 A of 10 December 1982,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People for its efforts in performing the tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly;

2. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee contained in paragraphs 94 to 98 of its report and draws the attention of the Security Council to the fact that action on the Committee's recommendations, as repeatedly, endorsed by the General Assembly, at its thirty-first session and subsequently, is long overdue;

3. Requests the Committee to keep under review the situation relating to the question of Palestine as well as the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights adopted by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine and to report and make suggestions to the General Assembly or the Security Council, as appropriate;

4. Requests the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, established under General Assembly resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948, as well as other United Nations bodies associated with the question of Palestine, to co-operate fully with the Committee and to make available to it, at its request, the relevant information and documentation which they have at their disposal;

5. Authorizes the Committee to continue to exert all efforts to promote the implementation of its recommendations, to send delegations or representatives to international conferences where such representation would be considered by it to be appropriate, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session and thereafter;

6. Decides to circulate the report of the Committee to all the competent bodies of the United Nations and urges them to take the necessary action, as appropriate, in accordance with the Committee's programme of implementation;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Committee with all the necessary facilities for the performance of its tasks.

The United States considered all five resolutions on the Palestine question (38/58 A-E) to be without merit and obstructive to the peace process; it felt that they attempted to dictate the outcome of negotiations and called for costly activities by various United Nations bodies to propagate partial and partisan views of the Palestinian issue.

Finland abstained on both resolutions (38/58 A and B) saying that they lacked balance; it considered the attainment of Palestinian rights to be part of and within the framework of a comprehensive Middle East solution based on Security Council resolutions 242(1967)(27) and 338(1973)(28) a view also shared by Norway.

Speaking for the EC members on all the resolutions on Palestine, Greece reiterated their reservations on elements in the Geneva Declaration, and notably the Programme of Action, which were not in accordance with their position regarding the principles for a comprehensive peace settlement.

Uruguay said its affirmative vote was consistent with its joining in the Conference's consensus; the five resolutions were essentially inspired by the Declaration and Programme of Action, on certain elements of which, however, it had reservations. Such reservations were also voiced by Peru.

Trinidad and Tobago reaffirmed its reservations on the implications of certain language of the Declaration and the Programme of Action. Reservations on parts of the Declaration and the Programme were also voiced by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, which affirmed that its positive vote did not alter its position on any references which might be construed as legitimizing the Zionist occupation of Palestine or as recognizing the Zionist entity. A similar position was held by Iran. Albania voiced reservations on the references to some previous United Nations resolutions.

Bolivia stated that its positive vote was in keeping with its desire to co-operate in the efforts to establish conditions for peace. Ecuador declared its support for any measure designed to settle the Palestine question.

In resolution 38/17, the Assembly condemned the constant and deliberate violations of the fundamental rights of the Palestinians, as well as Israel's expansionist activities in the Middle East, which, it determined, constituted an obstacle to the achievement of self-determination and independence by the Palestinians and a threat to peace and stability in the region.

Proposed peace conference

The Geneva Declaration on Palestine, adopted on 7 September by the Conference on the Palestine question (see above),⁽¹¹⁾ called for an international peace conference on the Middle East based on the Charter of the United Nations and relevant United Nations resolutions, with the aim of achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict. An essential element of a solution would be the establishment of an independent Palestinian State in Palestine. The peace conference should be convened under United Nations auspices, with the participation of all parties to the Arab-Israeli conflict, including PLO, as well as the United States, the USSR and other concerned States, on an equal footing. The Security Council would have primary responsibility to create institutional arrangements on the basis of United Nations resolutions in order to guarantee and carry out the accords of the peace conference.

In its 1983 report, ⁽²³⁾ the Committee on Palestinian rights recommended that action be taken to convene a peace conference, and appealed to all parties concerned, the USSR and the United States to co-operate.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Under the agenda item on the question of Palestine, the General Assembly, on 13 December, adopted resolution 38/58 C by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 36/120 C of 10 December 1981, in which it decided to convene, under the auspices of the United Nations, an International Conference on the Question of Palestine on the basis of its resolution ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980,

Recalling also its resolution 37/86 C of 10 December 1982 in which it, inter alia, reiterated the responsibility of the United Nations to strive for a lasting peace in the Middle East through a just solution of the problem of Palestine,

Having considered the report of the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held at Geneva from 29 August to 7 September 1983,

Convinced that the Conference, in adopting by acclamation the Geneva Declaration on Palestine and the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights, made an important and positive contribution to the attainment of a comprehensive, just and durable peace in the Middle East through a just solution of the problem of Palestine, the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict,

Conscious of the importance of the time factor in achieving a just solution of the problem of Palestine,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the International Conference on the Question of Palestine;

2. Endorses the Geneva Declaration on Palestine, adopted by acclamation on 7 September 1983;

3. Welcomes and endorses the call for convening an International Peace Conference on the Middle East in conformity with the following guidelines:

(a) The attainment by the Palestinian people of its legitimate inalienable rights, including the right to return, the right to self-determination and the right to establish its own independent State in Palestine;

(b) The right of the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people, to participate on an equal footing with other parties in all efforts, deliberations and conferences on the Middle East;

(c) The need to put an end to Israel's occupation of the Arab territories, in accordance with the principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force, and, consequently, the need to secure Israeli withdrawal from the territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

(d) The need to oppose and reject such Israeli policies and practices in the occupied territories, including Jerusalem, and any de facto situation created by Israel as are contrary to international law and relevant United Nations resolutions, particularly the establishment of settlements, as these policies and practices constitute major obstacles to the achievement of peace in the Middle East;

(e) The need to reaffirm as null and void all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, which have altered or purported to alter the character and status of the Holy City of Jerusalem, including the expropriation of land and property situated thereon, and in particular the so-called "Basic Law" on Jerusalem and the proclamation of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel;

(f) The right of all States in the region to existence within secure and internationally recognized boundaries, with justice and security for all the people, the sine qua non of which is the recognition and attainment of the legitimate, inalienable rights of the Palestinian people as stated in subparagraph (a) above;

4. 5. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Security Council, urgently to undertake preparatory measures to convene the Conference;

6. Invites the Security Council to facilitate the organization of the Conference;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report on his efforts no later than 15 March 1984;

8. Decides to consider at its thirty-ninth session the report of the Secretary-General on the Conference.

Abstaining: Belgium, Costa Rica, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Solomon Islands, United Kingdom.

The United States felt that the resolution was unhelpful to the peace process. In Israel's view, the guidelines for the conference were contrary to and undermined Security Council resolution 242(1967),(27) the only basis for a peaceful settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict. Though acknowledging that Israel's right to exist was implicitly recognized in resolution 38/58 C, Canada said it could not support it because it repeated certain one-sided elements in the Geneva Declaration.

Greece said the EC members had reservations on certain elements in the Programme of Action, also adopted at the Geneva Conference, that were not in accordance with their position on a comprehensive peace settlement. Norway also could not endorse the Declaration and Programme of Action. Supporting in principle the idea of a Palestine settlement under United Nations auspices, New Zealand doubted the practicality of such a proposal until all parties concerned were prepared to participate with realistic expectations. In Costa Rica's opinion, the guidelines for the conference (in paragraph 3) prejudged its results and jeopardized the possibility of the parties to the conflict entering peace negotiations.

Finland, Sweden, and Trinidad and Tobago reiterated their reservations on the Geneva Declaration and Programme of Action.

Brazil would have preferred a more careful and less detailed wording of the conference guidelines, and cautioned that the Secretary-General might not be given enough time to report on the organization of the conference as he was requested in paragraph 7.

Albania did not agree that the United States and the USSR should be invited to participate in the conference; it feared that the super-Powers would try to manipulate it for their own purposes. Jordan believed that paragraph 4 went beyond what was agreed on in the Geneva Declaration.

The Syrian Arab Republic held a similar view and would have preferred paragraph 6 to reflect more explicitly the call in the Declaration on the Security Council to create institutional arrangements based on relevant United Nations resolutions; these were shortcomings, it felt, which weakened the text and attenuated the Geneva Declaration.

Spain stressed that its support for the convening of a conference did not imply exclusion of other peace plans. Portugal expressed the conviction that a peace conference was premature as conditions guaranteeing the presence of all parties did not currently exist.

Uruguay said its affirmative vote was consistent with its participation in the Geneva consensus and its desire for peaceful solutions. Bolivia believed that the resolution complemented Security Council resolutions 242(1967)(27) and 338(1973)(28) which had established the guidelines for a negotiated solution. Reaffirmation of those resolutions, the Dominican Republic believed, would have given resolution 38/58 C greater objectivity and consistency.

Colombia saw in the resolution a contribution to the search for a final settlement but believed that, in order to create the necessary climate for final negotiations, the regional and extraregional causes of the conflict must be borne in mind. Malawi believed that any serious consultations should be encouraged. Ecuador supported any measure designed to settle the Palestine question.

Singapore would have liked to see reflected the recognition of Palestinian rights and the preservation of Israel's right to exist; any action denying the rights of one side or destroying the existence of the other, it believed, would be doomed to failure.

Iran and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on the other hand, rejected any recognition as a party to negotiations of what they called the illegitimate entity of Zionism in occupied Palestine.

Honduras explained that it did not participate in the vote in conformity with its principle that the guidelines for and participation in any international peace conference must be based on the free and unanimous consent of the States directly concerned.

PLO regarded the resolution as an encouragement to find a solution through the United Nations.

The call for a conference was repeated in Assembly resolution 38/180 D of 19 December 1983.

Explaining its vote on that resolution, Mexico said it supported the holding of a conference as an important factor for world peace and the appropriate framework for parties to find satisfactory formulae for accommodation, provided there was the necessary political and diplomatic will.

Jerusalem

Communications. On 1 March 1983,(29) Jordan transmitted a letter of 31 January from the Minister for Occupied Territories Affairs to the Minister of Waqf and Islamic Religious Affairs of Jordan, on the activities of the "Temple Mount Fund" organization which he charged sought the demolition of the Al-Aqsa Mosque in Jerusalem, on the pretext of working on the restoration of the so-called "Third Temple" and restoring Temple Mount to Jewish sovereignty.

By a letter of 14 March,(30) Jordan gave an account of what it described as Israeli assaults on the Al-Aqsa Mosque from June 1967, culminating in an act of desecration on 11 March 1983, when approximately 45 settlers equipped with large amounts of weapons and explosives had attempted to reach the Mosque through a secret tunnel. Jordan alleged that Israel had continually persisted in committing and encouraging such acts against the Mosque and the other Holy Places in Jerusalem.

On 16 March,(31) Iran transmitted a government communiqué condemning what it called Israel's latest attempt to destroy the Mosque.

By a letter of 6 December,(32) Israel gave details of a bomb explosion on a civilian passenger bus in Jerusalem on the same day, for which PLO claimed responsibility; the crime was intended to divert attention from the fighting between PLO rival gangs, it added. On 7 December,(33) Israel pointed out that responsibility for that explosion, which had killed 4 and injured 46 people, was claimed by PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat, as well as by the rival faction of PLO under Abu Musa. Reference to the 6 December explosion was also made by the Israeli Prime Minister in a message of 8 December to the Secretary-General, transmitted by Israel on the same date.(34)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1983, under the agenda item on the situation in the Middle East, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/180 C by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/120 E of 10 December 1981 and 37/123 C of 16 December 1982, in which it determined that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, which had altered or purported to alter the character and status of the Holy City of Jerusalem, in particular the so-called "Basic Law" on Jerusalem and the proclamation of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, were null and void and must be rescinded forthwith,

Recalling Security Council resolution 478(1980) of 20 August 1980, in which the Council, inter alia, decided not to recognize the "Basic Law" and called upon those States that had established diplomatic missions at Jerusalem to withdraw such missions from the Holy City,

1. Declares once more that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Holy City of Jerusalem is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

2. Deplores the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980);

3. Calls once again upon those States to abide by the provisions of the relevant United Nations resolutions, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Against: Israel.

Abstaining: Dominican Republic, Guatemala, United States.

Explaining its vote, Israel said only the Jewish people had regarded Jerusalem as the centre of their national and spiritual life. Reunited since 1967, the city enjoyed unprecedented freedom and prosperity, with the adherents of all faiths guaranteed free access to and worship at their Holy Places.

Ecuador considered null and void Israeli measures which could modify the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and status of the Palestinian and Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, a city holy to the three great religions. New Zealand did not recognize Israel's annexation of Jerusalem and did not recognize Jerusalem as the capital of Israel; it supported the principle of the city's internationalization, incorporated in the 1947 Assembly resolution on the future of Palestine.(35) Portugal expressed its support for all provisions that could bring success to a negotiated, comprehensive and peaceful Middle East solution, which it felt applied particularly to resolution 38/180 C.

Speaking on behalf of the EC members, Greece stressed the importance they attached to Security Council resolution 478(1980), by which the Council had decided not to recognize the "Basic Law" on Jerusalem.(36)

Greece said its vote was based on its attachment to the Charter principle that all Members should refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, and to the principles of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (Helsinki Final Act), signed on 1 August 1975 at Helsinki, Finland. Singapore expressed support for all efforts to restore the rights of the Palestinians and a return to a just and durable Middle East peace. Spain believed that a Middle East solution must be based, among other things, on Israel's withdrawal from all territories occupied since 1967 and on respect for Palestinian rights. Colombia spoke similarly. Bolivia regarded as null and void Israel's actions relating to the occupied territories.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya reaffirmed its opposition to all allusions giving some semblance of legitimacy to Israeli occupation of the Palestinian territories or recognizing the Zionist entity. Iran also reserved its position on any paragraphs which constituted recognition of what it called an artificially forged State.

Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem and declare it its capital, as well as the measures to alter its physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and status, were declared as null and void by the Assembly in another 19 December resolution (38/180 D). The Assembly demanded that they be rescinded immediately and called on Member States, specialized agencies and international organizations to abide by all United Nations resolutions on Jerusalem. Among the guidelines established in the Declaration of the International Conference on the Question of Palestine⁽¹¹⁾ and endorsed by the Assembly in a 13 December resolution (38/58 C), in relation to the proposed international peace conference on the Middle East (see above), was a guideline stressing the need to reaffirm as null and void all measures by Israel altering the character and status of Jerusalem, including the expropriation of land and property, and in particular the "Basic Law" and the proclamation of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel. By a resolution of 15 December (38/83 K), the Assembly called for the establishment of a university at Jerusalem for Palestine refugees (see below, under PALESTINE REFUGEES).

Other action. Among the recommendations in the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights, adopted by the Conference on the Palestine question (see above), was that States should fully comply with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and its specialized agencies, including those rejecting Israel's annexation and declaration of Jerusalem as its capital.⁽¹¹⁾ tine (see above). The Seminar⁽²³⁾ concluded that the question was among the most difficult to solve. It confirmed that the occupation and Judaization of Jerusalem and Israel's unilateral acts to annex the city should continue to be condemned and declared null and void and without legal effect, and that the Security Council should enforce its decisions. Israeli practices, the Seminar concluded, were impeding the decolonization of Jerusalem which was inseparable from the emergence of Palestine as a State. The status of Jerusalem as envisaged in United Nations resolutions remained the basis of a solution.

Aid programmes for Palestinians

During 1983, United Nations assistance—particularly education and training—continued to be provided to Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza and neighbouring Arab States, much of it financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). This was in addition to aid supplied by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) (see below, under PALESTINE REFUGEES) and to humanitarian assistance to Palestinians in Lebanon (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapters III and XXI).

Action relating to assistance for Palestinians was taken in 1983 by the UNDP Governing Council, the Industrial Development Board of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD). Intensified efforts to provide economic and social assistance to the Palestinians were requested by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1983/43 of 25 July. A co-ordinated programme of such assistance, taking into account the recommendations of the five regional preparatory meetings of the International Conference on the Question of Palestine and United Nations resolutions, was called for by the General Assembly in resolution 38/58 D of 13 December. Inter-agency co-ordination of assistance to Palestinians was the subject of Assembly resolution 38/145, adopted on 19 December.

UNDP action. Reporting in April 1983⁽³⁷⁾ to the Governing Council, the UNDP Administrator reviewed the progress in implementing the programme of assistance to the Palestinian people. He reported that, on the basis of regular consultations with the parties concerned, UNDP had developed by the end of 1982 nine new project proposals for the West Bank and Gaza, which were annexed to his report. The proposals, which would involve the private sector to a greater degree than previous projects, included assistance to community centres, specialized training for the glass and ceramics industry, and assistance to private medical institutions. In addition, extensions and new phases of ongoing projects in the fields of health manpower development, the development and strengthening of health institutions, specialized training in agricultural development, and children's institutions were to start in 1983. All but one project under way or envisaged were located in the West Bank and Gaza.

The Governing Council, on 24 June,(38) recommended that urgent efforts be made, with all parties concerned, to meet the economic and social needs of the Palestinians. Following the Administrator's recommendation, the Council reiterated its 1982 appeal(39) to Governments and inter-governmental organizations to provide for that purpose at least an additional $8 million for the 1982-1986 programming cycle to supplement the funds available from UNDP Special Programme Resources. This appeal was endorsed by the General Assembly on 13 December 1983 in resolution 38/145 (see below).

In his annual report for 1983,(40) the Administrator noted that under the assistance programme, which had commenced field operations in 1980, 6 of the 14 projects approved had been completed in 1983, all of them, except one in the Syrian Arab Republic, in the West Bank and Gaza. Five more projects were under implementation at the end of the year. At the end of 1983, all funds available from UNDP central resources for the programme, amounting to $7.5 million, were fully committed. Projects established during the year were in the pipeline, awaiting receipt of contributions from Governments and intergovernmental institutions, following appeals for contributions by the Council and the Assembly.

UNHCO action. Following consideration of a March 1983 report by the UNIDO Executive Director on technical assistance to the Palestinian people,(41) the Industrial Development Board, on 13 May, adopted a conclusion on such assistance.(42) The Board took note of the efforts of UNIDO in approving a number of technical co-operation projects and in finding ways to implement them. It expressed concern at the destruction of Palestinian industrial production capacities by the Israeli army in Lebanon following the Israeli invasion in June 1982,(43) and urged the UNIDO secretariat to assist in reactivating such capacities in the occupied territories and in establishing new capacities for the Palestinians, and to intensify efforts in providing technical assistance to them in co-operation with PLO. The Board called on Israel to give UNIDO access to the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967 to enable it to implement its technical co-operation projects for the Palestinians, and requested the Executive Director to submit in 1984 proposals for expanding its technical assistance programme.

UNCTAD action. On 2 July 1983, at its sixth session, UNCTAD adopted, by a roll-call vote of 84 to 2, with 20 abstentions, resolution 146(VI) on assistance to the Palestinian people.(44) The Conference requested the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to set up a special economic unit to monitor and investigate the policies of the Israeli occupation authorities hampering the economic development of the occupied Palestinian territories (see below, under TERRITORIES OCCUPIED BY ISRAEL), and to report periodically to the Trade and Development Board and the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, on progress in implementing the resolution.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May 1983, the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council a report on assistance to Palestinians provided or planned by United Nations organizations and agencies.(45) Acting on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, the Council on 25 July adopted by a roll-call vote resolution 1983/43.

Assistance to the Palestinian people

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 37/134 of 17 December 1982,

Recalling also Council resolution 1982/48 of 27 July 1982,

Noting with deep concern that the continued detention of Palestinian civilians in Al Ansar Camp by the Israeli invasion army has deprived many of their dependants of their sole source of income, in addition to having other adverse economic and social consequences,

Noting also the need to provide economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to the Palestinian people;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the Governments and United Nations bodies which provided humanitarian assistance to the Palestinian victims of the Israeli invasion of Lebanon;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the assistance provided by United Nations bodies to the Palestinian people;

4. Deplores the non-compliance of Israel with Economic and Social Council resolution 1982/48;

5. Calls upon the Israeli occupation authorities to facilitate the efforts of all United Nations bodies intending to implement assistance projects for the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories;

6. Requests the 'competent programmes, organizations, agencies and organs of the United Nations system to sustain and intensify their efforts, in co-operation with the Palestine Liberation Organization, in providing economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people;

7. Also requests that United Nations assistance to the Palestinians in the Arab host countries should be rendered in co-operation with the Palestine Liberation Organization and with the consent of the Arab host Governments concerned;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/43

25 July 1983 Meeting 39 48-1-1 (roll-call vote)

Approved by Third Committee (E/1983/114) by vote (35-1), 18 July (meeting 12); draft by Bangladesh, for Group of 77 (E/1983/C.3/L.3), orally revised; agenda item 22. Meeting number. ESC: 39.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

IN favour: Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Bangladesh, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, China, Colombia, Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, India, Japan, Kenya, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mali, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Thailand, Tunisia, USSR, United Kingdom, Venezuela.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Liberia.

Before the vote, Israel urged Council members not to adopt the draft, for the following reasons: The third preambular paragraph referred to the continued detention of Palestinian civilians in Al Ansar (Insar) Camp (see above, under PERSONS DETAINED BY ISRAEL), whereas there were only members of the PLO terrorist organization in that camp whose release would threaten Israel's security. It was inappropriate to mention Israel in the context of the reference in paragraph 2 to humanitarian assistance to the Palestinian victims of the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, since there had been civil war in Lebanon for eight years, involving considerable destruction and heavy loss of life. Paragraph 4 deploring Israel's non-compliance with a 1982 Council resolution(46) totally disregarded Israel's position on the matter. The wording of paragraph 5 implied that the Israeli authorities were not facilitating United Nations efforts to provide assistance to the Palestinians; nothing could be further from the truth-Israel had co-operated fully with UNDP, the most important of the agencies.

Speaking for the 10 member States of the European Economic Community (EEC), Greece said they would continue to provide humanitarian assistance to the Palestinians, particularly to those in Lebanon who had suffered from the 1982 Israeli invasion; assistance would be given directly and through the Community, as well as through United Nations agencies and bodies.

Norway stated its support particularly for the activities of the specialized agencies but stressed that its attitude towards PLO remained unchanged.

Speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, the German Democratic Republic said the resolution should have condemned Israel and its protector, the United States, and should have urged Israel to withdraw its troops from the occupied territories; appealing to Israeli occupation forces to facilitate implementation of assistance projects would not bring liberation of the Palestinians nearer.

Action by the Conference on the Palestine question. In September 1983, taking up recommendations made at the five regional preparatory meetings, the International Conference on the Question of Palestine,(11) in its Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights (see above), called for measures to alleviate the Palestinians' economic and social burdens resulting from continued Israeli occupation of their territories, and for increased contributions to the programmes and projects of United Nations bodies providing humanitarian, economic and social assistance to those people. The Conference referred in particular to: the appeal of the UNDP Governing Council for an additional $8 million during 1982-1986 to help meet the needs of the Palestinians (see above); the proposed establishment within UNCTAD of a Special Economic Unit on Assistance to the Palestinian People; and the setting up of a special legal aid fund to assist them in securing their rights under conditions of occupation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1983, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions (38/58 D and 38/145) dealing with assistance to the Palestinian people.

Under the agenda item on the question of Palestine, the Assembly, on 13 December, adopted resolution 38/58 D by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held at Geneva from 29 August to 7 September 1983,

Taking note of the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights,

Bearing in mind its resolution 38/145 of 19 December 1983 on assistance to the Palestinian people,

Urges the meeting of specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to be convened in 1984, referred to in General Assembly resolution 38/145, to, take into account the recommendations of the five regional preparatory meetings of the International Conference on the Question of Palestine and the United Nations resolutions concerning economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people in developing a co-ordinated programme of economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people, and to ensure the implementation of that programme.

Against: Israel, United States.

Israel rejected the resolution on the grounds that it sought to accord legitimacy to the International Conference, thus serving the narcissistic excesses of the PLO propagandists and their fellow travellers; if implemented, the proposed recommendations would pour additional money down what appeared to be a bottomless drain.

Speaking for the EC member States, Greece said they understood that the resolution dealt only with economic and social assistance. Even though UNDP was already involved in co-ordinating assistance and a general meeting of specialized agencies seemed unnecessary, Canada said it voted in favour in support of the principle of international assistance to the Palestinians. Finland voted in favour with reservations as it felt the resolution was unbalanced.

Costa Rica believed that the United Nations system must play its part in assisting the Palestinians.

On 19 December, the Assembly, acting on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 38/145 by recorded vote.

Assistance to the Palestinian people

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/134 of 17 December 1982, Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/43 of 25 July 1983,

Recalling further the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights, adopted by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine,

Noting the need to provide economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people,

1. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/43;

2. Endorses also decision 83/11 of 24 June 1983 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, in which the Council called upon Governments and intergovernmental organizations to provide additional special contributions to the Programme amounting to at least 8 million dollars during the third programming cycle, so as to ensure the implementation of the United Nations Development Programme assistance programme for the Palestinian people;

3. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To convene in 1984 a meeting of the relevant programmes, organizations, agencies and organs of the United Nations system to develop a co-ordinated programme of economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people and to ensure its implementation;

(b) To provide for the participation in the meeting of the Palestine Liberation Organization, the Arab host countries and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

(c) To utilize existing inter-agency mechanisms to prepare proposals for assistance projects to be considered at the meeting;

4. Requests that the meeting should look into the most effective inter-agency machinery to co-ordinate and intensify United Nations assistance to the Palestinian people;

5. Requests the relevant programmes, organizations, agencies and organs of the United Nations system to intensify their efforts, in co-operation with the Palestine Liberation Organization, to provide economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people;

6. Also requests that United Nations assistance to the Palestinians in the Arab host countries should be rendered in co-operation with the Palestine Liberation Organization and with the consent of the Arab host Government concerned;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

^aLater advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Israel, stating that it was endeavouring to help Palestinian Arabs and had improved their standard of living, said it continued to favour legitimate aid to those living in the administered territories and had co-operated with UNDP and other United Nations bodies to assist the Arab populations of Judaea, Samaria and Gaza. Recent UNDP

Governing Council decisions had tended to intensify such co-operation; but it would continue to oppose co-operation with PLO. The international community should dissociate itself from the so-called International Conference.

The United States, pointing out that it would have supported a resolution on humanitarian assistance and that it had contributed more than $1 billion to UNRWA, said the approved text mentioned PLO which the United States did not recognize and which, by refusing to recognize Israel, had impeded the Middle East peace process.

Jordan expressed support for any assistance to the Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza and to Palestinian refugees, but stressed that this did not imply endorsement of the imbalance in paragraphs 5 and 6; it had sole responsibility for the initiation, planning and organization of social and economic services to all Jordanian citizens, and any assistance to them must be subject to its acceptance.

Expressing support for the resolution because of its substance, Australia voiced reservations to the reference to the Conference, in which it had not participated.

Speaking for the EC members, Greece said they would continue to offer assistance to the Palestinians directly and through the Community, and to the competent United Nations agencies which could best decide on channels through which to assist the Palestinians. Japan stressed that assistance to the Palestinians by UNDP and other United Nations bodies should be provided by the same procedure as that to national liberation movements, in close co-operation with the countries concerned. Norway said it agreed to assisting the Palestinians, but its position towards PLO remained unchanged.

The USSR said its vote was based on its position of principle regarding the need for a just and comprehensive Middle East settlement.

Commenting on the United States statement, the PLO observer said no amount of money contributed to UNRWA could compensate the Palestinians for the occupation of their homeland.

The Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee decided on 17 November,(47) by 75 votes to 2, with 20 abstentions, to include in the 1984-1985 budget $218,000 to establish within the UNCTAD secretariat a Special Economic Unit (Palestinian People). The Secretary-General, in his revised budget estimates,(48) stated that to establish the Unit two new Professional posts were requested, at the P-5 and P-3 levels, together with one General Service post.

Palestinian cultural property

In 1983, the General Assembly took up the question of the restitution of Palestinian cultural property, seized by Israel during its June 1982 invasion of Lebanon,(43) a question first addressed by the Assembly in December 1982.(49)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Under the agenda item on the situation in the Middle East, the Assembly, on 19 December 1983, adopted resolution 38/180 B by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Recalling also the Constitution of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and all other relevant international instruments concerning the right to cultural identity in all its forms,

Having learned that the Israeli army, during its occupation of Beirut, seized and took away archives and documents of every kind concerning Palestinian history and culture, including cultural articles belonging to Palestinian institutions-in particular the Palestine Research Centre-archives, documents, manuscripts and materials such as film documents, literary works by major authors, paintings, objects d'art and works of folklore, research works and so forth, serving as a foundation for the history, culture, national awareness, unity and solidarity of the Palestinian people,

1. Condemns those acts of plundering of the Palestinian cultural heritage;

2. Calls upon the Government of Israel to make full restitution, through the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, of all cultural property belonging to Palestinian institutions, including the archives and documents removed from the Palestine Research Centre and arbitrarily seized by the Israeli forces;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Israel said the resolution ignored the fact that it had returned the files and that the so-called Palestine Research Centre's true function was not research but the production of anti-Israel propaganda and the collection of intelligence data for use by terrorists against Israel and Jewish civilian targets in Israel and throughout the world.

Finland felt that it was unclear whether that property had been returned or not. Sweden spoke similarly. Recalling the support part of the EC members for the 1982 resolution,(49) Greece said they also noted that there was now some uncertainty about the facts.

The Philippines had reservations on the formulation of some of the resolution's provisions. Greece explained that it voted in favour on the basis of its attachment to Article 2, paragraph 4, of the United Nations Charter, on the non-use of force against other States, and to the principles in the Helsinki Final Act. Ecuador condemned Israeli policies that violated the rights of the inhabitants of the occupied territories (see below, under TERRITORIES OCCUPIED BY ISRAEL). Singapore said it supported all efforts aiming at restoring legitimate Palestinian rights. Portugal declared its support for any resolution that could bring success to the Middle East peace efforts. Similar positions were taken by Bolivia, Colombia and Spain.

Iran reserved its rights regarding any paragraphs that recognized an artificially forged State, the Zionist entity. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya also opposed all allusions giving a semblance of legitimacy to Israeli occupation of the occupied Palestinian territories or recognizing that entity.

Public information

Expanded information activities of the United Nations Secretariat, in particular of its Department of Public Information (DPI) relating to the Palestine question, were recommended by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine in September 1983. The General Assembly took up these recommendations in a December resolution.

Conference on the Palestine question. The International Conference on the Question of Palestine,(11) in its Programme of Action (see above), stated that the dissemination of information world-wide and the role of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) remained vital in heightening awareness of the rights of the Palestinians to self-determination and the establishment of an independent Palestinian State. It called on DPI, in co-operation with the Committee on Palestinian rights, to: co-ordinate all United Nations information activities on Palestine through the Joint United Nations Information Committee; expand publications and audio and visual coverage of the Palestine question; publish newsletters and articles on Israeli violations of human rights in the occupied territories, (see below, under TERRITORIES OCCUPIED BY ISRAEL); organize fact-finding missions for journalists to the area; and disseminate information on the Conference results. The Conference also called on United Nations bodies to organize meetings, symposia and seminars on topics relating to specific problems of the Palestinians by establishing closer liaison with NGOs, the media and other interested groups. Organizations were urged to increase international awareness of the economic and social burdens borne by the Palestinians as a result of continued Israeli occupation, to intensify their support of Palestinian rights, to investigate the conditions and Israeli policies in the occupied territories, and to disseminate information.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Under the agenda item on the question of Palestine, the General Assembly, on 13 December 1983, adopted resolution 38/58 E by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held at Geneva from 29 August to 7 September 1983,

Convinced that the world-wide dissemination of accurate and comprehensive information and the role of non-governmental organizations and institutions remain of vital importance in heightening awareness of and support for the: inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination and to the establishment of an independent sovereign Palestinian State,

Requests that the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, in full co-operation and co-ordination with the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, should:

(a) Disseminate all information on the activities of the United Nations system relating to Palestine;

(b) Expand publications and audio-visual coverage of the facts and developments pertaining to the question of Palestine;

(c) Publish newsletters and articles in its relevant publications on Israeli violations of the human rights of the Arab inhabitants of the occupied territories, and organize fact-finding missions to the area for journalists;

(d) Organize regional encounters for journalists;

(e) Disseminate appropriate information on the results of the International Conference on the Question of Palestine.

Against: Canada, Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, United Kingdom.

Canada felt the resolution proposed duplicating machinery already in place for disseminating information on Palestine and implied that DPI, which received its mandate from the Assembly, must submit its programmes to a selective and non-representative Committee; it also stated that it could not support resolutions which took little account of the concerns of one party, and voiced reservations on the objectives of the Conference. Israel rejected the resolution as a drain on United Nations funds and another blow to the credibility of the United Nations Secretariat which, it felt, had been forced to abandon legitimate functions for extraneous interests.

Norway could not endorse the outcome of the Conference. Speaking for the EC member States, Greece said they trusted that DPI would continue to be guided by impartiality and would maintain its normal decision-making process; unnecessary burdens on the United Nations budget should be avoided. Reservations about the cost of information activities were also voiced by New Zealand. Costa Rica abstained on the grounds that Assembly resolution 38/58 B on the Division for Palestinian Rights (see above) already contained the necessary provisions on information.

Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, and Uruguay reaffirmed their reservations on certain parts of the Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the Conference, while Finland stated its general reservations on the resolution.

Malawi said it voted in favour to promote the peace-building process. In the opinion of Honduras, the resolution could help achieve Palestinian rights.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya affirmed that its positive vote did not alter its position on any references that might be construed as legitimizing the Zionist occupation of Palestine or as recognition of the Zionist entity. Iran held a similar position.

In resolution 38/58 B of the same date, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to ensure the continued co-operation of DPI and other Secretariat units in enabling the Division of Palestinian Rights to perform its tasks and in covering the various aspects of the Palestine question. It also requested him to expand the Division's work programme through closer contacts with the media and wider dissemination of the Division's information material, increased contacts with NGOs and the convening of symposia and meetings in different regions to heighten awareness of the Palestine question.

Among the recommendations of the Committee on Information, endorsed by the Assembly in resolution 38/82 B of 15 December, was the preparation of a detailed account of the coverage by widely representative world media of developments from June to December 1982 affecting the Palestinians, to be submitted to the Assembly in 1983.

Incidents and disputes between Arab countries and Israel

The 1981 bombing by Israeli aircraft of a nuclear research centre near Baghdad, Iraq, was again taken up by the General Assembly in December 1983. The Security Council, on several occasions throughout the year, dealt with the situation in Lebanon and in the Syrian Golan Heights and extended the mandate of the United Nations peace-keeping forces there. Israel and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya exchanged several communications referring to discussions in the Council and the Assembly.

Armed incident involving Iraqi nuclear facilities

The 1981 bombing by Israeli aircraft of a nuclear research centre near Baghdad(1) was again the subject in 1983 of a General Assembly resolution (38/9). The Secretary-General reported on implementation of a November 1982 resolution on the issue and transmitted a study by a Group of Experts reviewing the consequences of the attack.

Communication. On 12 August 1983,(2) Iraq transmitted to the Secretary-General a message from its President to the World Assembly for Peace and Life against Nuclear War (Prague, Czechoslovakia, 21-26 June), stating that the attack by Israel on peaceful Iraqi nuclear installations using conventional weapons must be regarded as equivalent to an attack using nuclear weapons; an attack such as Israel's entailed the risk of exposure to radiation and the possible outbreak of nuclear war.

Report of the Secretary-General. In September 1983,(3) the Secretary-General reported on the implementation of a November 1982 General Assembly resolution on armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations.(4) In response to a note requesting Israel to inform him of action it had taken, Israel, on 29 June, had replied that it had no policy of attacking nuclear facilities; that the resolution, which demanded that it withdraw its officially declared threat to repeat its armed attack against nuclear facilities, was one-sided and biased; and that it would be regrettable if the Assembly were required to deal once again with the issue since attempts should be made to address essential Middle East issues. The Secretary-General also reported that he had appointed a Group of Experts to study the consequences of the Israeli attack (see below).

Israel reiterated this statement in a 13 September letter.(5)

Study by Group of Experts. In October 1983, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly a study on the consequences of the Israeli attack on the Iraqi nuclear installations,(6) prepared by a six-member Group of Experts appointed in accordance with the Assembly's November 1982 resolution.(4) In meetings held from 18 to 22 April at Vienna and from 11 to 15 July in New York, the Experts reviewed economic, legal, health and other consequences of the attack, carried out by 14 Israeli air force planes. Stating that it had not been possible to assess accurately the extent of the damage, they concluded that the virtual total destruction of the Tammuz-1 reactor and damage to other parts of the Tuwaitha Nuclear Research Centre had resulted in losses of several hundred million dollars of investment and had set back the Iraqi nuclear research and training programme by at least five years. No radiological health problems had been caused, although some could have occurred had the bombs struck the irradiated fuel stored at the site and there could have been an appreciable risk of health consequences had the reactor been operational.

According to the Experts, the more general consequences of the attack included its potentially serious damage to international norms and institutions: it represented a challenge to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT)(7) and the safeguards system of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA); it undermined international legal constraints on acts of aggression including those of the Charter of the United Nations; it introduced new risks and uncertainties, threatening further peaceful nuclear development and co-operation; and it violated the 1974 Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States(8) and the 1974 Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order.(9)

Noting that Iraq was a party to NPT, the Experts felt that, if Israel became a party, accepted full-scope safeguards and complied with the Assembly's demand to refrain from its threat to repeat such attacks, the situation would substantially improve. They hoped that the incident would give new impetus to efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East, to the establishment of additional legal instruments against attacks on peaceful nuclear facilities, and to the improvement of international mechanisms for obtaining redress for damages.

On 31 October 1983,(10) Israel stated that the report was biased, predetermined conclusions having dictated the choice of facts and arguments; also, while Iraq had been invited to make its views known to the Group, Israel had not been invited to do so. The report omitted reference to Israel's statement that it had no policy of attacking nuclear facilities and, in dealing with the issue of the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East, made no reference to the principle of free and direct negotiations among the States of the region. Israel urged that United Nations energies be devoted to supporting positive international initiatives and that an effort be made to prevent Iraq's misuse of the United Nations and IAEA as forums for repeated extraneous political issues.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 November 1983, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/9.

Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security”;

Recalling the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions of the International Atomic Energy Agency,

Taking note also with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General,

Viewing with deep concern Israel's continued refusal to comply with those resolutions,

Reiterating its alarm over the information and evidence regarding the acquisition and development of nuclear weapons by Israel,

Recalling Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter of the United Nations, which enjoins all Member States to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

Noting that serious radiological effects would result from an armed attack with conventional weapons on a nuclear installation, which could also lead to the initiation of radiological warfare,

1. Reiterates its condemnation of Israel's continued refusal to implement Security Council resolution 487(1981), unanimously adopted by the Council on 19 June 1981;

2. Notes that the statements made so far by Israel have not removed apprehensions that its threat to repeat its armed attack against nuclear facilities, as well as any similar action against such facilities, will continue to endanger the role and activities of the International Atomic Energy Agency and other international instruments in the development of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes and in safeguarding against further proliferation of nuclear weapons;

3. Considers that any threat to attack and destroy nuclear facilities in Iraq and in other countries constitutes a violation of the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Reiterates its demand that Israel withdraw forthwith its threat to attack and destroy nuclear facilities in Iraq and in other countries;

5. Once again requests the Security Council to consider the necessary measures to deter Israel from repeating such an attack on nuclear facilities;

6. Reaffirms its call for the continuation of the consideration, at the international level, of legal measures to prohibit armed attacks against nuclear facilities, and threats thereof, as a contribution to promoting and ensuring the safe development of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes;

7. Expresses its deep appreciation to the Secretary-General and the Group of Experts on the Consequences of the Israeli Armed Attack against the Iraqi Nuclear Installations for their comprehensive study;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled “Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security”.

Abstaining: Australia, Bahamas, Barbados, Chile, Colombia, Fiji, Guatemala, Haiti, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Malawi, Paraguay.

The United States said the resolution went far beyond the content of unanimously adopted Security Council resolution 487(1981);(11) to adopt measures two and a half years later was unnecessary and unproductive and detracted from the attention that should be given to a practical and realistic search for a peaceful settlement to the problems of the region. Its negative vote, the United States added, also reflected the view that the Secretary-General's study was superfluous and certain aspects of it were open to question; it treated the existence of a state of war between Israel and Iraq in the most cursory fashion, referred to an Israeli “threat” not mentioned previously and made no reference to specific Israeli declarations on the subject.

Also casting a negative vote, Israel said it would have voted for paragraph 6, had there been a separate vote, in keeping with its position that it had no policy of attacking nuclear facilities and fully supported international efforts to arrive at an early arrangement on the status of such facilities.

Chile believed that many paragraphs went beyond the item under discussion or presupposed intentions that were not sufficiently supported, and that the Security Council should decide whether further action was needed; the item should not be kept permanently on the Assembly's agenda.

Canada felt that the text had improved over the previous year's resolution,(4) in particular by omitting references to “acts of aggression” which, if taken in connection with Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter, could have severe consequences.

The United Kingdom regarded the last preambular paragraph as too categorical in its assertions; it also had reservations on the wording of paragraphs 2 to 6, stressing that it did not regard paragraph 6 as either prejudicing the issue of whether further legal measures to prohibit armed attacks against nuclear facilities were needed, or prejudging the forum for discussion of the subject.

The Federal Republic of Germany considered the text too complex to be constructive and believed other international bodies would be more suitable for discussing the subject. It expressed doubts on the concept of radiological warfare as contained in the last preambular paragraph; as to paragraph 6, it felt that the outcome of the work of the Committee on Disarmament, in seeking a solution to the question of prohibiting military attacks on nuclear facilities, including the scope of such prohibition, should not be prejudged.

Belgium reserved its position in particular on the preamble, saying it referred to problems which had nothing to do with the condemned action. France could not accept the use in the future of certain elements of the resolution's operative part to harm the principle of United Nations universality.

The United Kingdom remarked on the risks of the item's becoming another subject of ritual debate. Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and Norway held a similar position. For the Federal Republic of Germany, repeated condemnation of Israel was not likely to promote conditions in which the problems resulting from a two-year old event could eventually be solved. The Netherlands pointed out that the Security Council was already seized of the question by virtue of paragraph 7 of its resolution 487(1981) and that IAEA was fully competent to deal with the matter.

Iraq responded that the reason behind the request again to include the item in the Assembly agenda was that the Israeli attack had not been an isolated act and that there had been a threat, officially stated a number of times, to repeat that act; it was the Assembly's duty to see to it that that threat was not carried out and was withdrawn in a meaningful way, not in the senseless statement that Israel had no policy of attacking nuclear facilities. Iraq also pointed out that Israel had refused to comply with the Security Council's requests; the point of the resolution was that action must be taken to make Israel realize that it could not with impunity carry out, or threaten to repeat, such an attack.

Other action. The IAEA General Conference decided to withhold Agency research contracts to Israel if it did not withdraw by 1984 its threat to attack nuclear facilities in Iraq and other countries (see also PART II, Chapter I).

Lebanon situation

Military activity in Lebanon, in the aftermath of the June 1982 Israeli invasion, was again a focus of attention in the Security Council in 1983. On 23 November, by resolution 542(1983), the Council repeated its call for strict respect for Lebanon's sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity, and requested the parties concerned immediately to accept a cease-fire and to observe the cessation of hostilities. As reported by the Secretary-General in December, a cease-fire agreement was reached on 26 November and on 20 December PLO troops were evacuated from Tripoli. In 1983, the mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) was extended three times, in January, July and October.

Armed incidents and military activity

Communications (February-September). On 16 February 1983,(12) Egypt transmitted excerpts from a statement by its Deputy Prime Minister before the National Security Committee, the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Arab Affairs of the People's Assembly, expressing concern at Israeli measures being taken against Palestinians in southern Lebanon.

Mongolia, on 18 May,(13) transmitted a statement of 16 May by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs condemning actions of the Israeli military against the Lebanese people and criticizing United States-Israeli proposals for peace with Lebanon, saying they were in fact a gross violation of Lebanon's sovereignty and would lead to that country's dismemberment, transforming it into a United States-Israeli military base.

Concern over the situation in Lebanon was expressed at two meetings of the heads of State and Government of EC (Brussels, Belgium, 22 March; Stuttgart, Federal Republic of Germany, 19 June). In March, they reaffirmed their support for a sovereign and independent Lebanon and for its Government, and called for re-establishment of its unrestricted authority over the whole of its territory. They expressed support for United States efforts to achieve that objective, as well as for the peace-keeping role of the United Nations and multinational forces, and called on all concerned to conclude negotiations without further delay. In June, they called for the complete and prompt withdrawal of foreign forces, except for those whose presence was requested by the Lebanese Government, as a pre-condition for restoring full sovereignty and final peace in Lebanon. In their view, the signing of an Israel-Lebanon agreement on 17 May was a step to be followed by others; they considered, however, that peace would not become a reality unless the security and legitimate interests of the other States and peoples of the region were taken into account. These conclusions were transmitted by the Federal Republic of Germany in letters of 24 March(14) and 22 June.(15)

On 2 September,(16) Lebanon transmitted a letter of the same date from its Minister for Foreign Affairs and Emigration to the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States informing him of Israel's decision to withdraw in the next few days its troops from parts of Mount Lebanon and asking for help in securing the withdrawal of all non-Lebanese forces from Lebanese territory.

By a letter of 9 September,(17) Lebanon stated that since 2 September military action had been escalating and the Lebanese army had had to intervene so as to protect its own positions, maintain law and order in greater Beirut, open international lines of communication and protect the civilian population in various localities from armed elements controlled and directed from abroad. Shelling had been extensive and had spared neither Beirut nor localities in Mount Lebanon. Casualties had been numerous and destruction enormous. The efforts by the League of Arab States, the United Nations and many friendly Governments had not enabled Lebanon to restore its sovereignty and authority over all of its territory, or to prevent the resurgence of hostilities. Stressing that that situation could not be allowed to continue without endangering international peace and security and imperilling its fate, Lebanon urged the Security Council to declare a cease-fire and take whatever measures deemed necessary to implement it, in accordance with the Charter.

On 13 September,(18) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted a letter from its head of State stating that the situation in Lebanon had become so explosive as to make peace and security almost impossible; the situation was being aggravated by the internationalization of the conflict and the introduction of extraneous parties under the name of peace-keeping forces from France, the United States and other countries.

Reports of the Secretary-General (September). On 5 September, the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on the situation in the Beirut area.(19) On the basis of information from the Observer Group Beirut (OGB)—50 United Nations military observers deployed by the Council in August 1982(20) at the request of Lebanon and set up as an arm of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO) to monitor the situation following intensification of military activities in and around Beirut—he summarized developments relating to the withdrawal of the Israel Defence Forces (IDF) from the area.

Preparations for the withdrawal of IDF had been observed by OGB from late July 1983, and an increasing number of convoys had been noted on the Beirut-Damascus highway, consisting largely of trucks carrying accommodation and heavy equipment, water tanks and stores. On 3 September, OGB had observed heavy IDF traffic moving west on the highway and south towards Khalde and Damur. That evening, Israeli forces with tanks and armoured personnel carriers had closed off and secured various road junctions in eastern and southern Beirut. No IDF traffic had been observed on the Damascus highway after dawn on 4 September. Early that morning, OGB heard jet aircraft overhead, and it had been reported that IDF had also used other routes to the south. After IDF movement ceased, OGB patrols had sought to verify the situation. Although their task had been made extremely difficult by the hostilities which immediately developed, OGB had been able to confirm that IDF check-points on the main roads around Beirut had been removed.

In the early hours of 4 September, intensive mortar, artillery and automatic weapons fire began east, north and south of Beirut, and in particular on and around the Beirut-Damascus highway. OGB teams observed armed groups operating in some of those areas, especially on the Ridge Line between Alayh and Suq Al-Gharb, in the Shouf mountains. During the daylight hours on 4 September, the north-western edge of the Shouf overlooking Beirut was engulfed by smoke and artillery fire. Similarly, the town of Khalde to the south of Beirut, was also largely obscured by smoke and fire. Artillery fire from the north and north-east of Beirut continued throughout the evening and night of 4/5 September, the principal targets being Beit Meri, Broummana, Dazi, the western area of Beirut International Airport, Babdun, Aynas and Aley. On the morning of 5 September, heavy shelling was noted around the headquarters of the Lebanese army at Yarze. OGB had not observed any change in deployment of the multinational force, which had come under occasional fire.

OGB had also closely observed the Palestine refugee camps in the Sabra and Shatila areas, where the atmosphere had remained calm, although they were hit by some shells on 5 September.

OGB had maintained close liaison with the Lebanese army, which had deployed throughout Beirut during the preceding week. On 4 September, OGB observed the movement of Lebanese army units, under fire from armed groups, towards Khalde. That evening, OGB was informed that the army had entered Khalde, sustaining light casualties, and had also moved troops and equipment east on the Beirut-Damascus highway.

In his report on the situation in the Middle East, submitted to the Council and the General Assembly on 30 September,(21) the Secretary-General stated that, following the June 1982 Israeli invasion of Lebanon,(22) which had radically altered the situation in which UNIFIL had to function, the Security Council had instructed the Force, as interim tasks, to maintain its positions in its area of deployment and to provide protection and humanitarian assistance to the local population to the extent possible.(23) With the Council's approval, UNIFIL continued to carry out these interim tasks.

The Secretary-General reported that, following the Israeli withdrawal from the Beirut area, fighting had broken out in some areas evacuated by those forces. On 8 September 1983, he had appealed to all concerned to support efforts to achieve a cease-fire and to help restore national unity with the participation and co-operation of all the Lebanese parties. He had also asked the United Nations Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon to try to alleviate the suffering of the afflicted people in the area and to help provide them with emergency humanitarian assistance (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter III). He had further instructed OGB to continue to follow closely the events in the area and to facilitate such efforts.

Concluding his 5 September report, the Secretary-General stated that, throughout the preceding several days, shells had impacted close to OGB headquarters and its teams had been compelled to limit their patrols, but had been instructed to maintain, to the extent possible, intensified patrolling activity; though being small in numbers and unarmed, the observers were an important independent source of information and their presence represented the concern of the international community.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (September)

As requested by Lebanon on 9 September,(17) the Security Council convened on 12 September to consider the escalating military action. Lebanon, at its request, was invited to participate: in the discussion without the right to vote.

Speaking before the Council, Lebanon again called for a cease-fire, an immediate and effective cessation of all hostilities and the withdrawal of all illegitimate foreign forces. This call was repeated in a draft resolution it submitted to the Council,(24) by which the Council would also have called on all parties to refrain from all acts that violated Lebanon's sovereignty and territorial integrity and endangered its people's safety and unity. It would have authorized the Secretary-General to deploy immediately, in consultation with the Lebanese Government, United Nations observers to monitor the situation, and would have requested all parties to co-operate fully with the observers. The Council would have called on all involved to facilitate the activities of ICRC, the United Nations Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon, and United Nations agencies, and to enable them to evacuate the dead and wounded and provide food, medical supplies and humanitarian assistance. It would have called on all States and parties to support Lebanon in its efforts to ensure the complete and immediate withdrawal of all non-Lebanese forces whose presence did not have the Government's approval. The Secretary-General would have been requested urgently to initiate consultations on additional steps, including possible deployment of United Nations forces, to assist the Government in ensuring peace and public order and securing the full protection of civilians in all areas of hostilities, and to report to the Council on the implementation of the resolution within 72 hours.

As the Council did not act on the draft, Lebanon, by a letter of 19 September,(25) voiced concern that the Council should have been unable, with a tragedy of such magnitude, to respond with a positive contribution to peace in Lebanon. It expressed the hope that the draft would be submitted to a vote at an appropriate time when a positive response was likely or if any Council members felt that further action was necessary in the light of new developments.

Communications (November). On 8 November,(26) the USSR transmitted a TASS statement of 4 November accusing the United States of intending to conduct a large-scale military operation in Lebanon.

On 9 November,(27) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted a letter of the same date from its head of State stating that the multinational forces in Lebanon had completed their task and their continued presence only aggravated the already dangerous situation there.

By a letter of 11 November,(28) Iran rejected United States accusations that in October Iran had destroyed the headquarters of the United States Marines in Beirut; those accusations, it said, were a premeditated move to confuse the situation in the region and divert world public opinion from the discontent of the Lebanese people regarding the presence of those forces in their country.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

At two meetings on 11 November, the Security Council, in resuming consideration of the Secretary-General's 12 October report(29) on UNIFIL (see below), returned to the situation in Lebanon. The Council invited Israel, Lebanon, the Sudan and the Syrian Arab Republic, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

At the start of the second meeting, the President made the following statement on behalf of the Council members:(30)

"The members of the Security Council wish to express their profound concern at the recent and current developments in northern Lebanon which have caused and are still causing widespread suffering and loss of human life. The members appeal to all parties concerned to exercise the utmost restraint and seek freely to attain, and to respect, an immediate cessation of hostilities, to settle their differences exclusively by peaceful means and to refrain from the threat or use of force. The members of the Council highly appreciate the work of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and of the International Committee of the Red Cross in providing emergency humanitarian assistance to Palestinian and Lebanese civilians in and around the city of Tripoli. The members of the Council will continue to follow the situation in Lebanon with the greatest attention."

During the Council's discussions, the USSR alleged that Israel, jointly with the United States, was preparing for new aggression in the Near East and a large-scale military operation in Lebanon, thus further exacerbating tension there. Public threats and a new campaign of provocation against the Syrian Arab Republic were being accompanied by an unprecedented concentration of the United States fleet near the coast of Lebanon; the United States intended further to extend its area of interference, in co-operation with the Israeli aggressor which had firmly entrenched itself on Lebanese soil.

The Syrian Arab Republic also stressed that those provocations presaged joint aggression against it, its forces and Lebanon, threatening regional and international security. Israel had isolated southern Lebanon from the rest of the country, thus putting the final touches on its expansionist schemes. With regard to its forces in Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic stated that they would not be withdrawn until the last Israeli soldier had been withdrawn unconditionally, and the independence and unity of Lebanon, as an integral part of the Arab nation, had been guaranteed. It also called for withdrawal of the multinational forces from Lebanon and for a rejection of the 17 May agreement imposed on Lebanon under the shadow of occupation.

Rejecting the allegations, the United States said its forces were in Lebanon at the invitation of the Lebanese Government and would remain there until their tasks were discharged; their purpose, along with the forces of three other countries, was to assist that Government in rebuilding its domestic institutions and in extending its sovereignty throughout its territory, which must ultimately involve the withdrawal of all non-Lebanese forces.

Lebanon stated that it held firm to its sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity and to the unity of its people. The events taking place on Lebanese territory were proof that the war that had been raging for nine years was not internal, but one of regional ambitions and conflicting international interests. Confirming that the multinational forces, UNIFIL and the international observers were present at its request, Lebanon reiterated its determination to ensure the withdrawal of all unauthorized non-Lebanese forces, with the Council being called on to assist.

Israel stated that, since the 18 October Council meeting on UNIFIL (see below), large-scale killings had taken place in Lebanon, affecting primarily innocent civilians; however, when Arabs were killing Arabs, the United Nations had been informed by various Arab representatives over the years that it should not become interested in such events since they were "family affairs". With regard to the 17 May agreement it had signed with Lebanon, Israel pointed out that it provided for full Israeli withdrawal to the international boundary between the two countries, within the context of the agreement and subject to the fulfilment of all its provisions.

In Jordan's view, Israel, in its statement, had avoided the main problem that was threatening international peace and security—it did not respect the Council and its decisions.

At a meeting on 23 November, urgently requested by France in a letter of 22 November,⁽³¹⁾ the Council unanimously adopted resolution 542(1983), prepared during Council consultations.

The Security Council,

Having considered the situation prevailing in northern Lebanon,

Recalling the statement made on this question by the President of the Security Council on 11 November 1983,

Deeply concerned by the intensification of the fighting, which continues to cause great suffering and loss of human life,

1. Deplores the loss of human life caused by the events taking place in northern Lebanon;

2. Reiterates its call for the strict respect for the sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Requests the parties concerned immediately to accept a cease-fire and scrupulously to observe the cessation of hostilities;

4. Invites the parties concerned to settle their differences exclusively by peaceful means and to refrain from the threat or use of force;

5. Pays tribute to the work done by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and by the International Committee of the Red Cross in providing emergency humanitarian assistance to the Palestinian and Lebanese civilians in Tripoli and its surroundings;

5. Calls upon the parties concerned to comply with the provisions of the present resolution;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to follow the situation in northern Lebanon, to consult with the Government of Lebanon, and to report to the Security Council, which remains seized of the question.

Security Council resolution 542(1983)

23 November 1983 Meeting 2501 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/16179).
Meeting numbers. SC 2475, 2495, 2496, 2501.

As requested by the Council, the Secretary-General reported on 21 December(32) that, on 26 November, a cease-fire agreement had been reached by the parties involved in recent fighting in the Tripoli area and that, on 20 December, PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat and his troops had been evacuated from Tripoli (see below).

Communications (December). On 4 December,(33) the Syrian Arab Republic transmitted a letter of the same date from its Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs, complaining of an escalation of military operations by the United States in northern Lebanon and requesting measures to halt hostile United States policy in Lebanon and the Middle East.

Also on 4 December,(34) the United States said that aircraft from its Sixth Fleet had that day carried out air strikes against Syrian anti-aircraft concentrations which had been the source of attacks against United States aircraft on 3 December.

The Syrian Arab Republic replied on 6 December(35) that the air strikes against the positions of its troops in Lebanon had not been carried out in self-defence but were an act of aggression.

On the same date,(36) the USSR transmitted a TASS statement of 5 December condemning the United States 4 December raid.

On 9 December,(37) Viet Nam transmitted a statement of 8 December by the spokesman for its Foreign Ministry, condemning the escalation of United States military operations in Lebanon and the Middle East, carried out as part of a United States-Israel joint plan to bring pressure on Arab countries in the hope of compelling them to accept a solution detrimental to their interests and to the national interests of the Palestinians.

On 12 December,(38) Bulgaria transmitted a declaration of the Bulgarian Telegraph Agency, charging the United States with trying, through its air raid, to force the Lebanese people to accept the Israel-Lebanon agreement, which ran counter to the Lebanese people's interests, and to establish favourable conditions for open armed aggression against the Syrian Arab Republic.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 38/17 of 22 November 1983, strongly condemned the massacre of Palestinians and other civilians at Beirut, as well as the Israeli aggression against Lebanon, as endangering stability, peace and security in the region. In resolution 38/83 I of 15 December, on protection of Palestine refugees, the Assembly dealt also with the Palestinian refugees in Lebanon. (For texts of these resolutions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Other action. The Commission on Human Rights, on 7 March 1983,(39) adopted a resolution on persons detained by Israel during the conflict in Lebanon. (See also above, under PERSONS DETAINED BY ISRAEL, and ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII.)

PLO troop withdrawal

Late in December 1983, PLO forces were evacuated from Lebanon.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

In a statement(40) made during consultations of the Security Council on 3 December 1983, the Secretary-General indicated that, on humanitarian grounds, he had authorized the flying of the United Nations flag alongside the national flag of the ships which were to evacuate the armed PLO elements, numbering some 4,000, from Tripoli. The Lebanese Government, which had been fully consulted, had no objection to that practice.

Also on 3 December, the Council President made the following statement:(41)

"With reference to the statement made public by the Secretary-General today, and after consultations with the members of the Council, I confirm, as President of the Security Council, that his statement has the support of the members of the Council."

Communications. By a letter of 7 December,(42) Israel pointed out that responsibility for a bomb explosion on a passenger bus on 6 December at Jerusalem (see above, under JERUSALEM) was claimed by PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat. In this connection, it recalled that Arafat had asked that the United Nations flag be put at his disposal, supposedly on humanitarian grounds, to enable him and his terrorists to escape from Tripoli and that the Security Council had acceded to his request.

On 8 December,(43) Israel transmitted a message of the same date from its Prime Minister to the Secretary-General requesting that he cancel the arrangements to give PLO safe conduct under the United Nations flag, in view of the bomb explosion, for which PLO had claimed responsibility.

By a letter of 17 December,(44) France announced that, in agreement with the Greek Government, it had decided to assist in the evacuation of Palestinian fighters from Tripoli to Yemen and Tunisia.

On 21 December,(45) Greece stated that, as requested by the PLO Chairman and for humanitarian reasons, it had made five vessels available for the evacuation of PLO forces from Tripoli on 20 December. The operation had been carried out in collaboration with France, after consultations with the other Governments concerned, specifically Israel, Italy, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Kingdom and the United States. The Greek vessels had flown the United Nations flag in addition to the national flag throughout the operation.

By a letter of 23 December,(46) Israel stated that the escape of Yasser Arafat and his troops from Tripoli without assurances that they would abandon the path of terror should be viewed as a dangerous precedent by all those committed to combating international terrorism.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Security Council in resolution 542(1983) of 23 November (see above), the Secretary-General reported on 21 December(32) that, on 20 December, the United Nations Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon and Special Representative of the Secretary-General had received confirmation that Yasser Arafat and his PLO forces had that day sailed from Tripoli in five Greek ships escorted by French naval units. The Greek ships had flown the Greek and United Nations flags and, in the territorial waters of Lebanon, the Lebanese flag. The evacuation had proceeded without incident. On 17 December, 94 seriously wounded PLO armed elements had left for Larnaca, Cyprus, on an Italian ship under the auspices of ICRC.

With regard to the Israeli Prime Minister's 8 December request to cancel the arrangements to give PLO safe conduct under the United Nations flag, the Secretary-General stated that he had not been able to accede to that request since the humanitarian reasons on which his decision was based had remained valid; he had been informed by the Permanent Observer of PLO that on 8 December Arafat had publicly stated that PLO opposed and strongly condemned any action against civilians.

Peace-keeping operation

UNIFIL activities

During 1983, the Security Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon three times, in January, July and October-by resolutions 529(1983), 536(1983) and 538(1983), respectively-as had been recommended by the Secretary-General in his reports on the activities of the Force. UNIFIL had been established by the Council in 1978.(47)

Report of the Secretary-General (January). In a report of 13 January, (48) the Secretary-General described the activities of UNIFIL since the previous extension of the Force's mandate in October 1982.(49) He stated that UNIFIL had continued to carry out its interim humanitarian and administrative tasks endorsed by the Council(23) after the June 1982 Israeli invasion of Lebanon, and to do its best to maintain peace and order in its area of deployment and prevent activities likely to militate against a peaceful atmosphere. Stressing that it was essential that armed incursions, harassment, arbitrary arrests and other such activities did not occur, he reported that with the assistance of UNIFIL and the Lebanese battalion attached to it, the Lebanese gendarmerie was playing an increasingly active role in maintaining law and order in the UNIFIL area.

The Secretary-General emphasized that UNIFIL would be able to hand over its responsibilities to the Lebanese authorities only after the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon. When current negotiations concerning such withdrawal were completed, it would be possible to define in detail UNIFIL's future role. A withdrawal of UNIFIL before the Lebanese Government was in a position to take over with its own security forces would have grave consequences and would be a serious blow to the early restoration of the Government's authority in southern Lebanon, and could lead to violent incidents between the various factions in the UNIFIL area, which would once again jeopardize the safety of the civilian population. In the mean time, UNIFIL's presence was an important factor in ensuring the well-being and prosperity of the civilian population in the area.

For those reasons, the Secretary-General recommended an extension of UNIFIL's mandate, mentioning in that context that Israel had expressed the view that the Force should not be extended for more than two or three months.

Annexed to the report was a letter of 13 January 1983, by which Lebanon asked that UNIFIL's zone of operation be extended to the whole of Lebanese territory for the purpose of confirming the withdrawal of all non-Lebanese forces and armed elements from Lebanon, restoring international peace and security and assisting the Government in re-establishing its effective authority. Lebanon emphasized that it did not wish or envisage any involvement of UNIFIL in any conflict between armed Lebanese elements; it sought a UNIFIL role which would support the Lebanese army in restoring government authority throughout the country.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

The Security Council, by resolution 529(1983) of 18 January, extended UNIFIL's mandate for six months.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978), and all subsequent resolutions on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon,

Recalling further its resolutions 508(1982) and 509(1982),

Having taken note of the letter of the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the President of the Security Council and to the Secretary-General of 13 January 1983, and of the statement he made at the 2411th meeting of the Council,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General and taking note of his observations,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further interim period of six months, that is, until 19 July 1983;
2. Calls upon all parties concerned to co-operate with the Force for the full implementation of the present resolution;
3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council on the progress made in this respect.

Security Council resolution 529(1983)

18 January 1983 Meeting 2411 13-0-2

Draft by Jordan (S/15564).

Meeting number: SC 2411.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: China, France, Guyana, Jordan, Malta, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Togo, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Poland, USSR.

Prior to the vote, the President, with the consent of the Council, invited Israel, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. Following adoption of the resolution, the Secretary-General stated that he would do his utmost to make UNIFIL's presence as effective as possible in carrying out its interim tasks. In particular, he said, UNIFIL would assist the Lebanese Government in assuring the security of all inhabitants of its area without discrimination, and would try to prevent local armed groups from operating there unless authorized by the Central Government. He pointed out that, with the departure of the Nigerian contingent in January 1983 and the detailing of 482 men of the French infantry battalion to the multinational force in Beirut,⁽⁵⁰⁾ UNIFIL was well below its authorized strength of 7,000.

Lebanon believed that extending UNIFIL's mandate for six months would give it a stability it could not enjoy in a shorter time and allow it to carry out the tasks awaiting it. Reaffirming its 13 January request with regard to UNIFIL's role, Lebanon said it went along with the draft which had been submitted and thus relinquished its initial request in the light of the existing situation, as it wished to facilitate the Council's task and enable it unanimously to extend UNIFIL's mandate, which must not be interrupted or renewed in a spirit of resignation.

Jordan said UNIFIL remained essential in the implementation of the two main purposes for which it had been formed: to ensure the withdrawal of the invading Israeli forces and enable the Lebanese Government to exercise full sovereignty over its territory. In view of Israel's practices in Lebanon, which sought to prolong the Lebanese ordeal and contributed to depriving the country of its sovereignty and independence, and its attempts to prevent UNIFIL from discharging its responsibilities, Jordan considered it necessary for the Council to denounce those practices and adopt all measures to implement the purposes of the United Nations Charter in order to deter the aggressor and preserve international peace and security.

The Netherlands said that UNIFIL was still a stabilizing element in southern Lebanon; its withdrawal could have grave consequences and be a set-back for the Lebanese Government's efforts to restore peace and reassert its authority. The Netherlands urgently called on Israel to respect UNIFIL's mandate and stop hindering it from performing its duties. Only when the negotiations in progress on the withdrawal of all foreign forces or armed elements from Lebanon were completed, the Netherlands said, would it be possible to define the future role of UNIFIL as envisaged by Lebanon; the Netherlands could not accept any new UNIFIL mandate in which the peace-keeping operations of the Force were not clearly defined and it was of the opinion that any new mandate should be directed to restoring Lebanon's sovereignty and territorial integrity. Based on the belief that a Lebanon once again restored to prosperity and peace with all its neighbours would also advance peace and security in the Middle East, the Netherlands said it would continue its participation in UNIFIL.

Israel emphasized that the resolution did not change UNIFIL's mandate, subject, however, to the Secretary-General's observation in his October 1982 report on UNIFIL⁽⁵¹⁾ in which he stated that the events in Lebanon had radically altered the circumstances in which UNIFIL was established and under which it had functioned since March 1978;⁽⁴⁷⁾ in the new circumstances, UNIFIL had outlived its usefulness and its presence was no longer called for in southern Lebanon. Israel believed that security arrangements should be arrived at through the ongoing negotiations between the two countries which were also aimed at ensuring that Lebanon's sovereignty and territorial integrity would be restored within its internationally recognized boundaries, while at the same time permanently precluding the possibility of hostile action against Israel and its citizens from Lebanese soil.

The United States believed that the renewal of UNIFIL's mandate reaffirmed international support for the goal of restoring the Lebanese Government's sovereignty throughout its territory and of securing the withdrawal of all external forces, and that it was a positive element in negotiations between the Government and other parties in the Middle East. It was not yet possible, however, to define precisely the role UNIFIL might be called upon to play in the arrangements under negotiation.

The USSR pointed out that references to resolutions 508(1982)⁽⁵²⁾ and 509(1982),⁽⁵³⁾ demanding an end to all military actions in Lebanon and immediate and unconditional Israeli withdrawal, were contained in all Council decisions extending UNIFIL's mandate since June 1982. It was the Council's duty to strive for implementation of those decisions, and it would be inadmissible to depart from previous decisions on the necessity of unconditional withdrawal of the Israeli forces whose presence in Lebanon could not be equated with that of Arab forces under an agreement with the Lebanese Government and in keeping with decisions taken at pan-Arab meetings. It would be illegal to give United Nations forces unaccustomed functions which might lead to their interfering in the internal affairs of Lebanon in contravention of the United Nations Charter.

Nicaragua hoped the resolution would be a positive element in consolidating the role of the United Nations with regard to the Middle East and would lead to alleviating or halting the sufferings of the peoples of Palestine and Lebanon.

Pakistan considered the presence of UNIFIL a critical factor in restoring peace and tranquillity.

Malta hoped that the negotiations under way would reap rapid and positive results and that Israel would start its overdue troop withdrawal.

In Zimbabwe's view, the continuation of Israel's occupation of Lebanon in defiance of the Council's decisions and the presence and activities of its troops made the extension of UNIFIL's mandate necessary.

Report of the Secretary-General (July). In his report to the Council covering UNIFIL activities from 19 January to 12 July 1983,⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Secretary-General stated that during the six months under review the UNIFIL area of deployment had been generally quiet. UNIFIL had continued to operate its check-points and to patrol its area, with a view to contributing to maintaining order and ensuring the security of the population. It had continued its interim tasks, protecting and assisting the local population.

After the 1982 invasion, he reported, the capability of UNIFIL to achieve its objectives had been contingent on the co-operation of the Israeli authorities controlling the area. A major problem had been the increased activities of local groups, armed and uniformed by Israel, whose activities led to a number of incidents involving UNIFIL, the worst of which had resulted in the death of a Fijian soldier on 29 May 1983.

The report pointed out that UNIFIL had continued to co-operate with the Lebanese authorities as well as UNRWA, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and ICRC in assisting the local population, particularly in implementing vaccination programmes, health and hygiene surveys and training activities. During the reporting period, the UNIFIL hospital in Naqoura had treated more than 4,000 patients.

The Secretary-General observed that, despite the difficulties encountered by the Force, its presence in southern Lebanon was generally recognized as an important element of stability. The situation in the UNIFIL area had been comparatively less tense and disturbed than elsewhere in the region, and the population of the area was increasing and its economy prospering. However, in the existing circumstances, UNIFIL's activities were inevitably in the nature of a holding action, pending further developments and decisions of the Security Council.

Although, as a result of the Israeli invasion, the circumstances under which the Force was established had been radically altered, the task of assisting the Lebanese Government in ensuring the return of its effective authority in southern Lebanon remained especially relevant. A withdrawal of UNIFIL from its area before the Government could assume effective control would be a serious blow to the prospect of an early restoration of the Government's authority in southern Lebanon, as well as to the welfare of the inhabitants. For these reasons, the Secretary-General considered it essential that UNIFIL's mandate be extended on an interim basis for a three-month period, as requested by Lebanon in a letter of 5 July.⁽⁵⁵⁾

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

The mandate of UNIFIL was extended for a further three months by the Security Council when it adopted resolution 536(1983) on 18 July.

The Security Council,

Having heard the statement of the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Lebanon.

"Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978), and all subsequent resolutions on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon,

Recalling further its resolutions 508(1982), 509(1982) and 520(1982), as well as all its other resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Reiterating its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries,

Having taken note of the letter of the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the President of the Security Council of 5 July 1983,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General and taking note of his observations and recommendation expressed therein,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further interim period of three months, that is, until 19 October 1983;

2. Calls upon all parties concerned to co-operate with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) and the relevant decisions of the Security Council;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the progress made in this respect.

Security Council resolution 536(1983)

18 July 1983 Meeting 2456 13-0-2

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/15871).

Meeting number. SC 2456.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: China, France, Guyana, Jordan, Malta, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Togo, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: None

Abstaining: Poland, USSR.

Prior to the resolution's adoption, the President, with the consent of the Council, invited Lebanon, at its request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

Lebanon said it was not requesting a change in the nature of UNIFIL's mandate or a new redeployment by asking the Council to renew the Force's mandate for another interim period of three months, during which it hoped that war and destruction would end. By sending troops to serve with UNIFIL, Lebanon had met the commitments required of it by the Council. In addition, it had explored all possibilities to ensure total withdrawal of all unauthorized foreign forces from the country, and was exerting maximum efforts to build a strong army, reform public institutions, maintain internal unity and lay the foundations of a stable and strong State. Lebanon needed the concerted attention of the Council to enable it to disengage from the vortex of political conflicts in the region and thus save not only itself but also the cause of peace in the Middle East. Though the problems facing Lebanon were clearly greater than those addressed by a renewal of UNIFIL's mandate, the Council, by its renewal, would reaffirm its commitment to Lebanon's independence, sovereignty and unity.

The United States also felt that renewal of the mandate would be a reaffirmation of that commitment and one of securing the withdrawal of all unauthorized external forces.

France fully supported Lebanon's request and the Government's attempts to restore its authority throughout the whole of its territory. Expressing concern over the situation of the civilian population in particular the Palestinians in Lebanon, especially in the southern part, France urgently appealed to Israel not to limit UNIFIL's opportunities for action.

According to the USSR, the United States and Israel were striving to impose on Lebanon conditions for a settlement aimed at turning the country into an American-Israeli protectorate. A settlement could not be achieved through separate deals such as the one-sided agreement signed on 17 May 1983 or arm-twisting, but by strict compliance with the Council's demands for unconditional Israeli withdrawal. Israel was continuing to provoke incidents with UNIFIL personnel, posing a threat to their life and security. These acts were a violation of previous Council decisions, particularly resolution 523(1982),(49) which insisted that there should be no interference under any pretext with the operations of UNIFIL and that it should have full freedom of movement in discharging its mandate; it was the Council's duty to ensure respect for its decisions. In the light of the Secretary-General's recommendations and Lebanon's request for renewal of UNIFIL's mandate, and bearing in mind that the goals and functions of UNIFIL would continue to be determined by the 1978 mandate(47) and subsequent Council decisions, the USSR did not object to an extension.

The Netherlands believed that UNIFIL still had a stabilizing effect and played a useful humanitarian role, and its presence indicated that it might be available for duties connected with a future Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon as provided for in the May agreement between the two countries. However, implementation of the agreement was still very much in doubt, for, in order to attain Lebanon's objective that all external forces withdraw from its territory as soon as possible, the co-operation of all concerned was necessary. Bearing in mind that UNIFIL had for more than a year been largely prevented from carrying out its tasks and that it was not likely that it would be able to assume useful functions in the future, the Netherlands concluded that prolongation of UNIFIL, based on the current mandate should not be indefinite. Barring entirely new circumstances that would enable it to reconsider its position, the Netherlands said its battalion would be withdrawn from Lebanon as of 19 October.

The United Kingdom believed that the Force was no longer carrying out a conventional or traditional United Nations peace-keeping role; however, it was playing a helpful, protective and humanitarian role. The United Kingdom expressed concern that the troop contributors were being asked to undertake something different from the conventional peace-keeping role, and to do so in difficult and dangerous conditions. It believed that to withdraw UNIFIL would be to remove an element of stability in Lebanon.

Report of the Secretary-General (October). On 12 October,(29) the Secretary-General reported that, during the three months since his 12 July report,(54) the UNIFIL area had continued to be generally quiet and UNIFIL activities had remained essentially unchanged. Events in the Aley and Shouf regions had had no direct impact on the UNIFIL area of deployment, except for an influx of displaced persons from those regions. UNIFIL had continued to carry out its interim tasks, protecting and assisting the local population and trying to prevent activities likely to hamper the restoration of the Lebanese Government's authority in the area. In addition, UNIFIL had continued to co-operate with UNRWA, UNICEF and ICRC.

The activities of local groups armed and uniformed by the Israeli forces had been limited and, with UNIFIL assistance, the Lebanese internal security forces had continued to play an active part in maintaining law and order in the area.

Despite the circumstances, the Secretary-General stated, UNIFIL remained an important stabilizing element in southern Lebanon, its presence also representing the United Nations commitment to support Lebanon's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity and to help bring about the withdrawal of the Israeli forces. A withdrawal of UNIFIL before the Lebanese national army and security forces were in a position to assume effective control of the area, he added, would seriously harm the prospect of restoring the Lebanese Government's authority there, as well as the security and welfare of the population. It was particularly important to avoid such a development at a time when the Lebanese Government and people, following the recent cease-fire in the Aley and Shouf regions, were exerting their best efforts for national reconciliation.

After quoting a 10 October letter from Lebanon requesting that the UNIFIL mandate be extended for a further six months, the Secretary-General recommended to the Security Council that the mandate be extended for another interim period, stressing the need for all parties to co-operate with the Force in performing its task.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

The Security Council, by resolution 538(1983) of 18 October, extended UNIFIL's mandate for six months, until 19 April 1984.

The Security Council,

Having heard the statement of the representative of Lebanon.

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) and all subsequent resolutions on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon,

Recalling further its resolutions 508(1982), 509(1982) and 520(1982), as well as all its other resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Reiterating its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and taking note of the conclusions and recommendations expressed therein,

Taking note of the letter of the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further interim period of six months, that is, until 19 April 1984;

2. Culls upon all parties concerned to co-operate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate, as defined in resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) and the relevant decisions of the Security Council;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the progress made in this respect.

Security Council resolution 538(1983)

18 October 1983 Meeting 2480 13-0-2

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/16046).

Meeting number. SC 2480.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: China, France, Guyana, Jordan, Malta, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Togo, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Poland, USSR.

Prior to the resolution's adoption, the President, with the consent of the Council, invited Israel, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

Lebanon said the presence of UNIFIL was a consecration of the United Nations commitment to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon and to the assurance of the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the south, and constituted a fundamental factor for stability in the region. Renewal of UNIFIL's mandate for a further six months would enable the Lebanese authorities to restore legitimacy in the south up to the internationally recognized boundaries and to find solutions to bring about the withdrawal of all unauthorized forces from all Lebanese territory.

The Netherlands said that, since the June 1982 Israeli invasion,(22) it had become practically impossible for UNIFIL to carry out its original mandate, and its capability to carry out its interim tasks was 'necessarily contingent on the co-operation of the Israeli authorities who, as the occupying Power, controlled the area. The situation in southern Lebanon had not changed to the extent that the original peace-keeping functions of UNIFIL might be restored within the foreseeable future. However, it still hoped that the Council, in agreement with the Lebanese Government, might devise a more meaningful role for UNIFIL. In view of these considerations, the Netherlands stated that it had decided not to withdraw from UNIFIL altogether as it had indicated in July (see above), but to retain a limited contingent; however, it must be recognized that the international community could not be expected to continue supporting Lebanon indefinitely.

France emphasized that Israel had not withdrawn from southern Lebanon and had an operational battalion in the UNIFIL zone; it hoped that this was only temporary and that there, as everywhere else in Lebanon, the country's unity, integrity and independence would be restored. It believed that the Council would be called upon to give UNIFIL, in addition to the missions it was already carrying out, new tasks in the area. The Force had demonstrated its usefulness by restoring security to the countryside; similarly, it seemed that the observers with UNTSO could be invited to carry out other missions in other areas.

The USSR believed the further extension of the UNIFIL mandate was testimony to the continuing explosive situation in Lebanon. Israel continued to occupy a considerable portion of Lebanese territory and its recent so-called redeployment of its forces was aimed essentially at long-term entrenchment along new lines and at the perpetuation of its occupation, and ultimately annexation, of southern Lebanon. Along with Israel, the so-called multinational force was consolidating its position; on the pretext of ensuring the defence of that interventionist corps, an armada of the United States and its allies of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) was lying off the Lebanese coast. The USSR held it imperative that Israel withdraw unconditionally from Lebanon and that neither United States troops nor any foreign troops accompanying them remain on Lebanese soil. With regard to UNIFIL, the USSR agreed with the Secretary-General that, in the difficult circumstances of Israeli occupation, the Force remained an important element of stability in its area of operations.

The United Kingdom felt that it could not be right simply to continue extending the UNIFIL mandate without giving thought to how it could be updated to reflect the changed circumstances.

The Syrian Arab Republic believed that if the Council wished to carry out its duties towards the people of Lebanon, it must without delay fulfil its commitments under resolution 509(1982)(53) and put an end to any attempt to distort that resolution. There were serious attempts to put the Syrian forces, which were part of the Arab peace-keeping forces, on the same level as the Israeli invading forces; these attempts were rejected by Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and the other Arabs, and they had already been rejected by the majority of the Council members.

Israel declared that it was determined to proceed towards implementing the May agreement aimed at restoring Lebanese sovereignty; however, it had now become clear that the Syrian Arab Republic and PLO had no intention of respecting that sovereignty. Israel's withdrawal from the Shouf mountains was a first step towards total withdrawal and had been announced well in advance to give the Lebanese Government and army a chance to extend their control. The Syrian Arab Republic and its proxies had prevented it from doing so, having turned Lebanon into a battleground, exploiting enmity between groups and encouraging all-out war. Israel hoped that the cessation of hostilities and the cease-fire would endure, leading to true reconciliation free of outside intervention. Under no circumstances would Israel agree to return to the state of affairs prevailing 16 months previously, when Lebanese territory had been used as a base for terrorist operations against Israeli citizens.

Composition

As at 12 October 1983, the composition of UNIFIL was as follows:(29)

Infantry battalions
Fiji	625
Finland	495
France	147
Ghana	550
Ireland	655
Netherlands	731
Norway	605
Senegal	559
Headquarters camp command
Ghana	154
Ireland	83
Logistic units
France	793
Italy	41
Norway	199
Sweden	143
	5,780

In addition, the Force was assisted by 73 unarmed military observers of UNTSO. The Lebanese army unit serving with UNIFIL to help maintain order in UNIFIL's area of operation was at a strength of 166 all ranks, following the transfer to Beirut in June of the greater part of the unit for training purposes.

Nigeria discontinued its participation in UNIFIL in January 1983. The French infantry battalion remained at reduced strength, in accordance with a temporary arrangement whereby the greater part of the battalion was released to the French authorities. The Norwegian battalion moved into the area vacated by the Nepalese battalion in November 1982.(50)

Following the departure of the Nigerian battalion, a readjustment of the areas of responsibilities of various units took place. The areas held by the Fijian, Finnish, Irish and Senegalese battalions were enlarged, and the reduced French infantry unit was deployed in the central sector of UNIFIL's area of operation. The military observers of UNTSO continued to man the five observation posts along the armistice demarcation line and to maintain teams at Tyre, Metulla and Château de Beaufort, in addition to four mobile teams.

Between 19 October 1982 and 12 October 1983, 13 members of the Force died, including four as a result of firing. Since UNIFIL's establishment in 1978, 96 members of the Force had died, 41 as a result of firing or mine explosions, 42 in accidents and 13 from natural causes. Also, some 120 had been wounded.

Financing

In December 1983, the General Assembly appropriated $159,421,666 gross ($157,640,833 net) for UNIFIL for the period 19 December 1982 to 18 December 1983. For UNIFIL operation from 19 December 1983 to 18 April 1984, the Assembly appropriated $46,964,000. For the period from 19 April to 18 December 1984, the Secretary-General was authorized to enter into commitments at a monthly rate of $11,741,000 gross ($11,581,000 net), should the Council decide to continue the Force's mandate and subject to the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).

The Assembly apportioned the expenses for the Force among all Member States in accordance with a special scale used for this purpose since the establishment of the Second United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF II) in 1973.⁽⁵⁶⁾ It again invited States to make voluntary contributions and requested the Secretary-General to ensure that UNIFIL be administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy.

The Assembly made these appropriations on the recommendation of ACABQ, which, in a November 1983 report, approved the Secretary-General's cost estimates contained in a report also submitted in November.

On 7 October,⁽⁵⁷⁾ the United Kingdom submitted a paper on the financing of United Nations peace-keeping operations, including UNIFIL. The United Kingdom stated that it shared the Secretary-General's concern that the shortfall in the UNIFIL Special Account could jeopardize the functioning of UNIFIL; it noted with particular regret that some members of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations were among the States withholding contributions. In conclusion, the United Kingdom expressed the hope that Member States and in particular the Committee members would give priority to the question of the financing of peace-keeping operations and that States withholding contributions would reconsider their policy.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a 1 November report to the General Assembly,⁽⁵⁸⁾ the Secretary-General noted that as at 30 September, contributions totalling $610.7 million had been received for UNIFIL, out of $805.8 million apportioned among Member States for the periods from inception of the Force on 19 March 1978 to 18 October 1983. The balance due of $195.1 million included $154.4 million apportioned among Member States which had stated that they did not intend to pay and $19.5 million transferred to the UNIFIL Special Account. Accordingly, only $21.2 million of the unpaid balance could be considered collectible, leaving a shortfall of $173.9 million. As at 30 September, voluntary contributions to the Suspense Account, established in accordance with a 1979 Assembly resolution⁽⁵⁹⁾ to facilitate reimbursement to Governments contributing troops, equipment and supplies to the Force, amounted to only $18,356.

The Secretary-General estimated the costs of UNIFIL for the six-month period from 19 October 1983 to 18 April 1984 inclusive at $70,446,000 gross ($69,486,000 net), based on a Force strength of 5,200 troops. Should the Security Council decide to renew the Force's mandate beyond 18 April 1984 with its existing strength and responsibilities, the Assembly was requested to authorize commitments for UNIFIL for the period to 18 December 1984 at a rate not to exceed $11,741,000 gross ($11,581,000 net) per month.

Expressing concern that the shortfall placed an increasingly heavy burden on the troop-contributing countries, particularly the less wealthy, and, if not remedied, could jeopardize the functioning of the operation, the Secretary-General appealed to all Member States to pay their assessments without delay and to make voluntary contributions.

In his three reports on UNIFIL to the Security Council (see above), the Secretary-General had kept the Council informed of the accumulating shortfall and had also made similar appeals for payment of assessments and voluntary contributions.

ACABQ recommendations. ACABQ, in a report of 17 November 1983,⁽⁶⁰⁾ stated that it had no objection to the estimate for UNIFIL for the current six-month period. It recommended that the Assembly authorize $23,482,000 gross ($23,162,000 net) for the operation of UNIFIL for the period 19 October-18 December 1983. For the period 19 December 1983-18 April 1984, ACABQ also concurred with the Secretary-General's estimate and recommended that the Assembly appropriate $46,964,000 gross ($46,324,000 net). In administering this appropriation, the Committee added, the Secretary-General should have the usual flexibility to revise apportionments between objects of expenditure.

With regard to requirements for the period 19 April-18 December 1984, ACABQ recommended approval of the Secretary-General's request that he be authorized to enter into commitments at a rate not to exceed $11,741,000 gross ($11,581,000 net) per month, i.e. on the basis of the cost estimate for the six-month period ending 18 April 1984. The Secretary-General's authority would be subject to obtaining the prior concurrence of ACABQ for the actual level of commitments to be entered into for each mandate period that might be approved subsequent to 19 April 1984.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1983, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions (38/38 A and B) dealing with the financing of UNIFIL.

On 5 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 38/38 A by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 427(1978) of 3 May 1978, 434(1978) of 18 September 1978, 444(1979) of 19 January 1979, 450(1979) of 14 June 1979, 459(1979) of 19 December 1979, 474(1980) of 17 June 1980, 483(1980) of 17 December 1980, 488(1981) of 19 June 1981, 498(1981) of 18 December 1981, 501 (1982) of 25 February 1982, 511(1982) of 18 June 1982, 519(1982) of 17 August 1982, 523(1982) of 18 October 1982, 529(1983) of 18 January 1983, 536(1983) of 18 July 1983 and 538(1983) of 18 October 1983,

Recalling its resolutions S-8/2 of 21 April 1978, 33/14 of 3 November 1978, 34/9 B of 17 December 1979, 35/44 of 1 December 1980, 35/115 A of 10 December 1980, 36/138 A of 16 December 1981, 36/138 C of 19 March 1982 and 37/127 A of 17 December 1982,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations is required,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of peace-keeping operations decided upon in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Also on 5 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 38/38 B by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having regard to the financial position of the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, as set forth in the report of the Secretary-General, and referring to paragraph 7 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General is continuing to face growing difficulties in meeting the obligations of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon on a current basis, particularly those due to the Governments of troop-contributing States,

Recalling its resolutions 34/9 E of 17 December 1979, 35/115 B of 10 December 1980, 36/138 B of 16 December 1981 and 37/127 B of 17 December 1982,

Recognizing that, in consequence of the withholding of contributions by certain Member States, the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon have, in effect, been drawn upon to the full extent to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting expenses of the Force,

Concerned that the application of the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial

Regulations of the United Nations would aggravate the already difficult financial situation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, Decides that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations shall be suspended in respect of the amount of $5,599,876, which otherwise would have to be surrendered pursuant to those provisions, this amount to be entered in the account referred to in the operative part of General Assembly resolution 34/9 E and held in suspense until a further decision is taken by the Assembly.

General Assembly resolution 38/38 B

Introducing the drafts, Ireland emphasized that UNIFIL continued to confront very serious financial difficulties. Under the Charter, responsibility for maintaining peace was shared by all Member States and the withholding of contributions was not consistent with the Charter.

Lebanon said the UNIFIL deficit threatened the normal operation of the Force, whose maintenance for the coming six months was particularly important; any withdrawal before the Lebanese army and security services were in a position to assume effective control of the southern part of the country would once again prevent the Lebanese Government from re-establishing its authority and would compromise the peace efforts by certain friendly countries.

The USSR stated that it did not participate in the financing of UNIFIL based on its position of principle that all costs related to the consequences of the armed aggression against Lebanon must be borne by the aggressor. A similar position was held by Democratic Yemen, Mongolia, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen. Iraq added that the cost of UNIFIL must under no circumstances be covered by the regular United Nations budget. Hungary said it did not consider itself under any obligation to finance UNIFIL. Albania reiterated its refusal to take part in the Force's financing.

Viet Nam, which did not participate in the vote, also said the peace-keeping forces had not performed their function but on the contrary had exacerbated the situation and added to insecurity in the region and throughout the world.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, explaining its non-participation, said that after the invasion of Lebanon the Force had not deterred the Zionist entity from committing continued acts of aggression, thus proving its ineffectiveness. UNIFIL's presence could not solve the problem in the region; the solution would be for the aggressor to cease its actions and, with the Power supporting it, shoulder responsibility for its acts.

Algeria, Benin and Iran said they did not participate in the vote in accordance with their established positions.

Voting in favour, Israel expressed the view that peace-keeping operations should be limited in time and could not be a substitute for the peaceful settlement of disputes; the extended presence of UNIFIL was merely the necessary consequence of the hostility of the neighbouring States towards Israel. Cyprus reaffirmed the importance it attached to United Nations peace-keeping forces.

Israel-Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

Communications. By a letter of 16 September 1983,(61) Israel said that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had introduced extraneous matters during the Security Council discussion on 6 September of the downing of a Korean airliner (see Chapter VII of this section). Israel added that a correct presentation of those matters was contained in a letter that it had sent in 1973(62) (which referred to an incident that year in which 106 persons died when a Libyan airliner crashed after being shot at by Israeli fighter aircraft over the Sinai).

In a letter of 21 September 1983,(63) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said the letter from the Zionist representative had failed to mention the extraneous matter referred to in the Security Council-namely, the iniquitous aggression by the Zionist entity in shooting down the Libyan airliner-because it was ashamed to recall that crime.

In reply, Israel, on 27 September,(64) transmitted excerpts from its 1973 letter. It added that it was astonished that the Libyan letter had been circulated as a United Nations document, since it referred to Israel by a designation other than its official name.

By a letter of 8 December 1983,(65) Israel quoted from a statement made earlier that day by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya in the General Assembly's debate on the Middle East, describing it as an outburst of racist and religious incitement and asking the Secretary-General to ensure that such an outrage was not repeated.

In response, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, in a letter of 14 December,(66) said the Zionist representative had forgotten that the entity he represented continued to disregard all United Nations resolutions and that steps should be taken to ensure that the representative did not repeat his insults against the Arab nation and the United Nations.

Israel-Syrian Arab Republic

Communications. On 19 and 20 January 1983,(67) the Syrian Arab Republic transmitted to the Security Council President and the Secretary-General, respectively, a letter of 19 January from the Vice-Chairman of the Council of Ministers and Minister for Foreign Affairs, drawing attention to the seriousness of repeated hostile declarations by Israel, threatening to use force against anti-aircraft defence facilities on Syrian territory.

Israel, by letters of 21 and 24 January to the Council President and the Secretary-General, respectively,(68) responded that the Syrian Arab Republic had engaged in a deliberate policy of beefing up its military arsenal through the introduction of long-range Soviet missiles, capable of penetrating deep into the airspace of neighbouring countries, and Israel, which over the past decades had been uninterruptedly the target of Syrian hostility, had reasons to be concerned.

By a letter of 27 January,(69) the Syrian Arab Republic stated that Israel was trying to camouflage its military preparations; Israel's huge military arsenal had as its sole objective the pursuit of aggression, occupation, expansion and annexation and the realization of its "strategic interest".

Peace-keeping operation

UNDOF activities

The United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF), established by the Security Council in 1974,(70) continued in 1983 to supervise the observance of the cease-fire between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic in the Golan Heights area and to ensure, in accordance with its mandate, that there were no military forces in the area of separation. On the Secretary-General's recommendation, the Council extended UNDOF's mandate twice during the year, in May and November, by resolutions 531(1983) and 543(1983).

Reports of the Secretary-General. With the mandate of UNDOF expiring on 31 May and 30 November 1983, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council two reports on the activities of the Force for the six-month periods from 19 November 1982 to 20 May 1983(71) and 21 May to 21 November 1983.(72)

In both reports, the Secretary-General stated that UNDOF had continued to perform effectively with the co-operation of the parties and that, during the periods under review, the situation in the Israel-Syria sector had remained quiet, without serious incidents.

As at 21 November, UNDOF maintained 34 positions and 14 outposts, and conducted 29 patrols daily and 25 at irregular intervals. It continued to conduct fortnightly inspections of armaments and forces in the area of limitation, and to clear land-mines.

The Secretary-General stated that, despite the prevailing quiet in the sector, the Middle East situation as a whole continued to be potentially dangerous and was likely to remain so without a comprehensive settlement. In the circumstances, he considered the continued presence of UNDOF to be essential and recommended, with the assent of the Syrian Arab Republic and the agreement of Israel, that the Council extend its mandate for further periods of six months each.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council renewed UNDOF's mandate twice during 1983. On 26 May, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 531(1983), by which it extended the mandate for six months.

The Security Council,
Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, Decides.

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973);.

(b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 30 November 1983;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 531(1983)

26 May 1983 Meeting 2445 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/15793).
Meeting number. SC 2445.

On 29 November, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 543(1983), by which it extended the UNDOF mandate for a further six months.

The Security Council,
Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, Decides..

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973);

(b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 31 May 1984;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 543(1983)

29 November 1983 Meeting 2502 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/16187).
Meeting number. SC 2502.

Following adoption of each resolution, the President made the following statement on behalf of the Council:(73)

'As is known, the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force states, in paragraph 26, that 'despite the present quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the Middle East as a whole continues to be potentially dangerous and is likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem can be reached.' That statement of the Secretary-General reflects the view of the Security Council."

Composition

As at 21 November 1983, the composition of UNDOF was as follows:(72)

Austria	530
Canada	220
Finland	395
Poland	145
United Nations military observers	6
	1,296

In addition, UNTSO observers assigned to the Israel-Syria Mixed Armistice Commission assisted UNDOF as required.

UNDOF financing

The financing of UNDOF from 1 December 1982 to 30 November 1983, totalling $34,372,996, had been dealt with by the General Assembly in November 1982.(74)

In a paper on the financing of United Nations peace-keeping operations, submitted on 7 October 1983,(57) the United Kingdom drew attention to the shortfall in payments (see below) to UNDOF taken together with UNEF until the latter's liquidation in 1980; the policy of certain Member States in withholding contributions to peace-keeping forces was undermining the United Nations ability to carry out its basic tasks, it stated.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an October 1983 report to the General Assembly on the financing of UNDOF,(75) the Secretary-General stated that, as at 30 September, a total of $588.9 million in contributions for UNDOF together with UNEF II had been received for the period from inception in 1974(70) to 30 November 1983. The balance due from Member States amounted to $79.1 million, $15.2 million of which was estimated to be collectible. The balance of $63.9 million comprised the amount of $27.9 million apportioned to Member States which had stated that they did not intend to pay for UNDOF and $36 million of assessed contributions due from China between 25 October 1971 and 31 December 1981, transferred to a special account in accordance with a 1981 Assembly resolution.(76)

According to the Secretary-General, there was a shortfall of approximately $4.3 million in the UNDOF Special Account in respect of the period from 25 October 1979 to 30 November 1983. The shortfall of UNDOF for periods before 24 October 1979, together with UNEF II until its liquidation in 1980, was estimated at $59.6 million. In the circumstances, troop contributors had not been reimbursed fully or on time; they had again conveyed to the Secretary-General their very serious concern over the situation, which placed a heavy burden on them.

Appropriations for UNDOF for the period after 30 November 1983 were estimated at $2,914,916 gross ($2,880,000 net) per month.

ACABQ recommendations. ACABQ, in a report of 17 November 1983,(77) recommended that the Secretary-General's cost estimate for UNDOF for the period from 1 December 1983 to 30 November 1984 be approved; it added that requirements for that period should not exceed $34,979,000 gross, or $34,560,000 net (i.e. $606,000, or 1.7 per cent, higher than the cost for the preceding 12 months). The Committee further recommended that the Secretary-General be permitted the usual flexibility to transfer credits between items of expenditure, should that be necessary in the interest of good management and efficiency.

ACABQ also recommended that the staffing proposals-one new P-3 post and one new local-level post-be approved. It noted the Secretary-General's statement that in the event of a finalization of plans for relocating UNDOF's headquarters before 30 November 1984, the matter would be brought to its attention should additional funds be needed.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, adopted two resolutions (38/35 A and B), dealing with the financing of UNDOF.

On 1 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 38/35 A by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as well as the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 350(1974) of 31 May 1974, 363(1974) of 29 November 1974, 369(1975) of 28 May 1975, 381(1975) of 30 November 1975, 390(1976) of 28 May 1976, 398(1976) of 30 November 1976, 408(1977) of 26 May 1977, 420(1977) of 30 November 1977, 429(1978) of 31 May 1978, 441(1978) of 30 November 1978, 449(1979) of 30 May 1979; 456(1979) of 30 November 1979, 470(1980) of 30 May 1980, 481(1980) of 26 November 1980, 485(1981) of 22 May 1981, 493(1981) of 23 November 1981, 506(1982) of 26 May 1982, 524(1982) of 29 November 1982, 531(1983) of 26 May 1983 and 543(1983) of 29 November 1983,

Recalling its resolutions 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973, 3211 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3374 C, (XXX) of 2 December 1975, 31/5 D of 22 December 1976, 32/4 C of 2 December 1977, 33/13 D of 8 December 1978, 34/7 C of 3 December 1979, 35/44 of 1 December 1980, 35/45 A of 1 December 1980, 36/66 A of 30 November 1981 and 37/38 A of 30 November 1982,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963 and other resolutions of the Assembly,

I

Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section II, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution 3211 B (XXIX) the amount of $17,186,496 gross ($16,983,996 net) authorized and apportioned by section III of Assembly resolution 37/38 A for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1983, inclusive;

II

1. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account an amount of $17,489,500 for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 December 1983 to 31 May 1984, inclusive;

2. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, without prejudice to the positions of principle that may be taken by Member States in any consideration by the General Assembly of arrangements for the financing of peacekeeping operations, to apportion the amount of $17,489,500 among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in Assembly resolution 3101(XXVIII) and the provisions of section II, paragraphs 2 (b) and 2 (c), and section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 3374 C (XXX), section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 31/5 D, section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 32/4 C, section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 33/13 D, section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 34/7 C, section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 35/45 A, section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 36/66 A and section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 37/38 A, in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for the years 1983, 1984 and 1985;

3. Decides that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided in paragraph 2 above, their respective share in the estimated income of $10,000 other than staff assessment income approved for the period from 1 December 1983 to 31 May 1984, inclusive;

4. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 2 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of $199,500 approved for the period from 1 December 1983 to 31 May 1984, inclusive;

III

Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force at a rate not to exceed $2,914,916 gross ($2,880,000 net) per month for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1984 inclusive, should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 543(1983), the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

IV

1. Stresses the need for voluntary contributions to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force is conducted with a maximum of efficiency and economy.

Also on 1 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 38/35 B by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having regard to the financial position of the Special Account for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as set forth in the report of the Secretary-General, and referring to paragraph 5 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General is continuing to face growing difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Forces on a current basis, particularly those due to the Governments of troop-contributing States,

Recalling its resolutions 33/13 E of 14 December 1978, 34/7 D of 17 December 1979, 35/45 B of 1 December 1980, 36/66 B of 30 November 1981 and 37/38 B of 30 November 1982,

Recognizing that, in consequence of the withholding of contributions by certain Member States, the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force have, in effect, been drawn upon to the full extent to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting expenses of the Forces,

Concerned, that the application of the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations would aggravate the already difficult financial situation of the Forces, Decides that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations shall be suspended in respect of the amount of $5,191,637, which otherwise would have to be surrendered pursuant to those provisions, this amount to be entered into the account referred to in the operative part of General Assembly resolution 33/13 E and held in suspense until a further decision is taken by the Assembly.

Abstaining: Algeria, Congo, Iraq, Poland, Romania, Yemen.

Separate votes on the two draft resolutions were taken in the Committee at the request of the USSR. Introducing them, Canada said they took into account the special responsibilities of the permanent members of the Security Council and the ability of developed countries to make relatively larger contributions to the financing of peace-keeping operations; the sponsors felt that broad international participation was essential for the success of those operations.

Explaining its non-participation in the vote, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said the presence of such forces in the area would not solve the problems caused by Zionist aggression; the aggressor and the States supporting the Zionist entity in its aggression should bear the responsibility. Iran said the presence of UNDOF in the Middle East was due solely to the Zionist occupation and the refusal to recognize the rights of the Palestinians. International law placed the responsibility for such situations on the aggressor and its supporters. It was the task of the super-Powers and the permanent Council members to lead the struggle for the maintenance of peace. Benin said it did not participate in the vote in accordance with its well-known position of principle on the financing of United Nations peace-keeping forces.

Casting a negative vote on both resolutions, Albania said it objected to the dispatch of United Nations forces, because reality had shown that they could not serve to defend the freedom and independence of people or international peace and security. In the opinion of Democratic Yemen, the United Nations forces in the Middle East had gone beyond their defined functions and their operations were solely the result of actions by the Zionist entity. The Syrian Arab Republic said UNDOF was a result of that entity, the occupation of Arab territories and the refusal to recognize Palestinian rights; resolution 38/35 A made no distinction between aggressor and victim, which, under international law, must be compensated for damage done by the aggressor.

Abstaining on both texts, Iraq could not support the inclusion in the regular United Nations budget of expenditure which should be borne by the Zionist entity as the party solely responsible.

Abstaining on resolution 38/35 A, the USSR said that, while supporting UNDOF operations, it regarded them only as a step towards the main objective: the complete liberation of Arab territories occupied by Israel. It considered the proposed expenditure for the period from 1 December 1983 to 30 November 1984 too high in relation to that for the previous period; the increase for several expenditures was unjustified and would require an excessive increase in Member States' contributions. Nor was there in the USSR's opinion any justification for the Secretary-General's proposal to assign to additional permanent posts the functions which could be performed by existing staff through better organization. Voting against resolution 38/35 B, the USSR opposed departures from the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, saying that the surplus balances in the Special Account for UNEF and UNDOF should be reimbursed to Member States.

Voting in favour, the United States reaffirmed its support for United Nations peace-keeping operations.

Israel said it voted in favour in view of the importance it attached to UNDOF operations. It could not be seriously claimed that Israel should defray the cost of UNDOF; Israel would pay its share, as it had always done for all United Nations peace-keeping operations whether it approved of them or not.

Territories occupied by Israel

During 1983, the situation in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of previous armed conflict in the Middle East was again considered by the General Assembly and its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories. The territories consisted of the West Bank of the Jordan River (including East Jerusalem), the Golan Heights and the Gaza Strip.

The Assembly, in December, adopted eight resolutions (38/79 A-H) dealing with specific aspects of the report of the Committee. By the first (38/79 A), it demanded the release of Ziad Abu Eain and other prisoners registered to be freed by Israel (see above, under MIDDLE EAST SITUATION); by another (38/79 E), it demanded that Israel rescind the imprisonment of the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and the expulsion of the Islamic Judge of Hebron (see below). The Assembly demanded information from Israel about the results of the investigations of the assassination attempts against three Palestinian mayors (38/79 H), and condemned Israeli policies against Palestinian educational institutions (38/79 G). Also censured were Israel's policies on the Syrian Golan Heights (38/79 F). The Assembly strongly condemned a number of Israeli policies and practices and demanded that Israel desist from them (38/79 D). By two other resolutions, the Assembly reprimanded Israel for its failure to comply with the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention) (38/79 B) and determined that Israel's actions in the occupied territories violated the Convention (38/79 C) (see below).

The situation in the occupied territories was also the subject of the International Conference on the Question of Palestine (see above, under PALESTINE QUESTION), and the Secretary-General dealt with the situation there in his September report on the Middle East and Palestine.⁽¹⁾ The occupation of the territories, in particular Israel's policy of establishing settlements there (see below), was also considered by the Security Council during several meetings in February, May and July/August. Because of the negative vote of a permanent member (United States), a draft resolution to have the Council denounce Israeli measures in the occupied territories, in particular its settlements policy, was not adopted when the Council met in July/August. In April, the Council expressed concern at the alleged mass poisoning of West Bank schoolchildren and requested an inquiry.

Communications. During the year, a number of communications were addressed to the Secretary-General and to the President of the Security Council concerning Israeli measures in the territories, including Jerusalem (see above, under PALESTINE QUESTION).

On 7 January,⁽²⁾ Jordan transmitted letters of 5 and 6 January from the observer for PLO charging that Israeli authorities had intensified their activities against Palestinians in the West Bank, that Israeli troops had mounted a large-scale arrest campaign and that Palestinian prisoners had been tortured.

On 13 January, ⁽³⁾ Jordan transmitted letters of 10 and 12 January from the PLO observer containing further charges concerning repressive Israeli measures against Palestinians in the West Bank, which included the closing of a number of schools, confiscation of books, arrest of students, imposition of curfews and attacks against Palestinian property.

In a letter of 22 March, ⁽⁴⁾ the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People expressed the Committee's deep concern at what he called recent violations by Israel of the legal and human rights of the Palestinians in the occupied territories and Jerusalem, such as the closing of Palestinian schools and universities, firing at Palestinian demonstrators, attacks against the Al-Aqsa Mosque in Jerusalem, curfews and other oppressive measures in refugee camps.

By a letter of 29 March,⁽⁵⁾ Iraq, as Chairman of the Arab Group of Member States, drew the Council's attention to what it described as the increasing deterioration of the situation in the occupied territories, including Jerusalem, with an intensified Israeli campaign of repression against Palestinian and Syrian civilians.

On 1 July⁽⁶⁾ and 13 July,⁽⁷⁾ Jordan transmitted to the Council President letters of 29 June and 12

July, respectively, from the PLO observer complaining about Israeli actions against Palestinians in the occupied territories, including those in refugee camps and under detention.

By a letter of 11 July,⁽⁸⁾ Israel stated that there had been various attempts in the past months to disrupt order by violent means in areas it referred to as Judaea and Samaria; to illustrate its point, Israel gave a sample of instances of violence directed against civilian Jewish targets.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission. The Commission on Human Rights (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII) dealt with violations of human rights in the occupied territories in two resolutions adopted on 15 February 1983.^(9, 10) In another resolution of the same date, on the right to self-determination, the Commission condemned Israel's continued occupation of the Palestinian and other Arab territories, as well as its aggression and practices against the Palestinians in those territories. The Commission condemned in the strongest terms the September 1982 massacre of Palestinians in the Sabra and Shatila refugee camps⁽¹²⁾ and requested the General Assembly to declare 17 September a day to commemorate the victims. It reaffirmed the right of the Palestinians to self-determination, rejected the plan of "autonomy" within the framework of the 1978 Camp David accords (formally called A Framework for Peace in the Middle East, Agreed at Camp David (United States), and Framework for the Conclusion of a Peace Treaty between Egypt and Israel) and declared that those accords had no validity in so far as they purported to determine the future of the Palestinians and of the territories occupied since 1967.

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, by a resolution of 31 August 1983,⁽¹³⁾ strongly affirmed that the perpetuation of Israeli occupation of the territories could only be a source of increasing human rights violations and tension. The Sub-Commission recommended that the Commission condemn Israel for its continued occupation of Palestinian and other Arab territories and for its persistence in colonizing those territories aimed at changing their demographic composition, institutional structure and status; and call on Israel to withdraw from them.

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. In its annual report, approved on 19 August 1983 and transmitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli practices), established in 1968,⁽¹⁵⁾ presented information on the situation of the civilian population, on Israeli administration in the territories, Israel's annexation and settlement policies (see below), and treatment of detainees. The report, with an annexed map showing Israeli settlements established, planned or under construction, covered the situation since the adoption of the Committee's previous report in August 1982.⁽¹⁶⁾ As in previous years, the Committee worked without the co-operation of Israel.

During the reporting period, the Committee held three series of meetings. At the first, from 13 to 15 December 1982 in New York, it reviewed its mandate and decided on the organization of its work. At the second series of meetings, between 30 May and 11 June 1983, beginning at Geneva and moving to Amman (Jordan), Damascus (Syrian Arab Republic) and Rafah (Egypt), the Committee heard the testimony of persons living in the occupied territories and conducted consultations with a representative of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Syrian Arab Republic on the situation in the occupied Syrian territory. At Egypt's request, the Committee visited Rafah for hearings on Israeli practices regarding Palestinian refugees in Egypt. During a third series of meetings, from 8 to 19 August, it examined communications and adopted its report.

In its conclusions, the Committee noted that the imposition of the so-called "civil administration" and "village leagues" had caused serious problems in maintaining public order, and the dissolution of elected municipal councils in the principal towns of the West Bank and their replacement by military governors had further complicated life for the population. The Committee also noted a tendency by the occupation authorities to put pressure on Arabs to leave their homes and emigrate-parallel to a policy of expulsion on other pretexts.

The Committee stated that hardly a day went by in the territories without some incidents involving violence being reported which were, for the most part, directed against the military presence.

Violence by Israeli settlers also had increased considerably, culminating in the events at Hebron (Al-Khalil) (see below). While the settlers, all of whom were armed and subject to no authority other than the Israeli Government, went unpunished, the population of the territories were the subject of severe reprisal measures if they attempted to react to the acts perpetrated against them. The Committee reiterated its conviction that Israel, under the fourth Geneva Convention, remained fully responsible for the acts of the settlers.

The right to freedom of education was impeded by several measures by the authorities, including the requirement established in late 1982 that non-local academics sign a commitment concerning allegiance to PLO-a requirement that had led to the automatic expulsion of some 28 professors and teachers -and the repeated closure of schools and universities. The Committee hoped for urgent action to curtail the cycle of violence provoked by denial of that right.

Information received by the Committee indicated that recourse of the population to judicial remedies had rarely given satisfaction and, other than the granting of temporary injunctions and similarly dilatory remedies, had not provided any firm or long-lasting safeguard of the interests of the population. The Committee felt that the judicial authorities appeared to be completely subjected to the discretion of the military occupation authorities.

As for the treatment of detainees, the Committee noted that a camp for the detention of young persons, mostly arrested for stone-throwing, had been established. The camp, known as Far'a camp, had been the subject of several reports reflecting the inhuman conditions in which detainees were kept. In spite of avowed Israeli intentions to improve those conditions, the Committee noted no improvement; on the contrary, hunger-strikes and other acts of protest had recurred in most prisons and places of detention during the last year.

The overall picture, the Committee stated, reflected a further deterioration of the human rights situation in the territories, with the treatment of the population becoming harsher in all respects. In the West Bank, including Jerusalem, and the Gaza Strip, there was a constant cycle of repressive measures, resistance and reprisals. In the Golan Heights, Israel continued to deny the population their rights. The majority of Syrians expelled after the Israeli occupation in 1967 were still being denied the right to return to their homes, a right they should be given in accordance with international law (see also below, under GOLAN HEIGHTS). In all, the situation of civilians in the territories was more intolerable than ever, a fact which, the Committee noted, had given rise to protest movements in Israel.

The Committee reiterated that the expropriation of Arab land, the establishment of Jewish settlements and the transfer of civilians to the territories violated the fourth Geneva Convention, which remained the principal international instrument in humanitarian law applicable to the territories.

The Committee concluded that Israel's policy was designed to implement its sovereignty over the territories and that the right to self-determination had been disregarded. In certain cases, as in the Golan Heights, outright efforts of annexation were being undertaken. The responsibility of the international community, the Committee believed, was more urgent than ever; it called for urgent action to prevent further deterioration and protect the very basic rights of the civilians in the territories.

In October, following the Assembly's December 1982 request,(17) the Secretary-General reported on the facilities he had continued to provide to the Committee, including coverage of its activities in the form of press releases, news bulletins, and radio and television specials.(18)

Recommendations of the Conference on the Palestine question. The International Conference on the Question of Palestine,(19) in its Declaration on Palestine (see above, under PALESTINE QUESTION), stressed the need to end Israel's occupation of the Arab territories, to secure Israel's withdrawal from them, and to oppose and reject Israeli policies in the occupied territories as major obstacles to peace in the Middle East.

In its Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights, the Conference recommended that all States: consider Israel's continued presence in the territories as exacerbating instability in the region and endangering international peace and security; oppose and reject Israel's expansionist policies in the territories, in particular the alteration of their geographic nature and demographic composition, and the attempt to alter, through domestic legislation, the legal status of those territories; declare null and void such measures as the annexation and expropriation of land and water resources, and the alteration of demographic, geographic, historical and cultural features; alleviate the economic and social burdens borne by the Palestinians as a result of continued Israeli occupation; review the situation of Palestinian women in the territories; review economic, cultural, technical and other relations with Israel, to ensure that the agreements governing them would not be construed as implying recognition of any modification of the legal status of the territories, or an acceptance of Israel's illegal presence there; express concern that the laws applicable in the territories had been totally eclipsed by military orders designed to establish a new "legal régime"; and express concern that Palestinians and other Arabs in the territories were deprived of juridical and other kinds of protection, and that they were victims of repressive legislation, involving mass arrests, torture, destruction of houses and expulsion of people from their homes, flagrantly violating human rights.

The Conference invited the Security Council to ensure Israel's withdrawal from the Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, in accordance with a specific timetable; to guarantee the safety and legal and human rights of the Palestinians pending Israeli withdrawal; and to keep under constant attention Israeli actions against the Palestinians which violated United Nations resolutions, particularly a 1947 General Assembly resolution(20) guaranteeing all persons in Palestine equal and non-discriminatory rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Under the agenda item on the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, the General Assembly, on 15 December 1983, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/79 D. Paragraph 6 was approved in the Committee by a recorded vote of 85 to 20, with 10 abstentions.

The United States considered the text to be of an extremely biased and polemical nature; it objected in particular to what it felt was the extraordinary expense of the Committee's activities.

In Sweden's opinion, the text went beyond the Assembly's competence. Though endorsing the condemnation of Israeli policies and practices, Sweden was not convinced that the language used was in all cases fully justified by established facts. Austria said it had abstained owing to certain unacceptable phrases.

Israel's continued occupation of Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, was also condemned by the Assembly on 19 December in resolution 38/180 D on the Middle East, by which the Assembly demanded the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from all territories occupied since June 1967 and condemned Israel's aggression, policies and practices against the Palestinians in and outside these territories, particularly Palestinians in Lebanon, including the expropriation and annexation of territory, the establishment of settlements, assassination attempts, and other terrorist, aggressive and repressive measures.

In resolution 38/58 C of 13 December, endorsing the call for convening an international peace conference on the Middle East (see above, under PALESTINE QUESTION), the Assembly also acknowledged the need to put an end to Israel's occupation of the Arab territories and the need to secure Israeli withdrawal from the territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem.

Settlements policy

Israel's policy of establishing settlements in the occupied territories and incidents involving Israeli settlers were considered by the Security Council during several meetings in February, May, July and August 1983. The International Conference on the Question of Palestine in September, in its Programme of Action (see above, under PALESTINE QUESTION), invited the Council to take urgent action to bring about a cessation of the establishment of settlements, among other Israeli actions. Israel's settlements policy was dealt with also by the General Assembly, the Committee on Israeli practices, the Committee on Palestinian rights and the Commission on Human Settlements (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVII).

Communications (January). By a letter of 21 January,(21) the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights expressed the Committee's concern at what he called Israel's continuing violation of human rights of the Palestinians in the occupied Arab territories by its persistent establishment of settlements in the West Bank and other repressive measures.

On 24 January, (22) Jordan transmitted a letter of 8 January from its Minister for Occupied Territories Affairs to the Minister for Foreign Affairs detailing what were termed the latest Israeli acts of confiscation and annexation of Palestinian lands in the occupied West Bank and Jerusalem during December 1982.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (February)

At the urgent request of Jordan, in a letter of 8 February 1983,(23) as Chairman of the Group of Arab States, the Security Council met on 11, 14 and 16 February to resume consideration of the situation in the occupied territories, in particular Israel's settlements policy.

Meeting numbers. SC 2412-2414.

The President, with the consent of the Council, invited Algeria, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Greece, India, Iran, Kuwait, Lebanon, Morocco, the Niger, Senegal, the Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, the United Arab Emirates, Yemen and Yugoslavia to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

At Jordan's request, in a letter of 11 February,(24) the Council that day also decided that an invitation under rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure,^a should be accorded to the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States to the United Nations.

Virtually all speakers during the debate expressed concern at Israel's continued settlements policy. They agreed that such policy violated international law-particularly The Hague Convention on the Laws and Customs of War on Land of 1907, and the 1949 fourth Geneva Convention (see below)-defied United Nations resolutions and exacerbated the situation in the occupied territories. The view that Israel's settlements policy could not be reconciled with the principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war, as specified in Council resolution 242(1967),(25) was widely held; that principle was reaffirmed by the Netherlands, Nicaragua, Poland and the United Kingdom, among others.

Opening the debate, the Syrian Arab Republic charged that Israel's settlements policy was accompanied not only by expropriation, expulsion, deportation and oppression, but also by notions of superiority and racial discrimination; it warned that Israel's persistence in changing the demographic and geographical nature of the occupied territories could only aggravate tension.

Speaking similarly, Turkey added that Israel's policy reduced the chances for a just solution to the Palestine question. The United Kingdom said it opposed the policy as it was against the interests of peace, conflicted with the interests of the Arab inhabitants of the territories and ignored their rights. Each construction or expansion of a settlement, the Netherlands felt, would increase the resentment of the inhabitants; Israel's stated intention further to expand its settlement programme could only undermine the basis for dialogue and trust, which were essential for any constructive negotiations.

In defiance of unanimous condemnation by world opinion, China stated, Israel had accelerated the expansion of settlements in the West Bank, had approved the establishment of four additional settlements and had declared its intention to settle hundreds of thousands of Israelis within five years; in order to realize that wild scheme, Israeli authorities were expropriating large tracts of land, seizing and demolishing civilian dwellings and displacing thousands of Palestinians.

Poland and others said the expanded construction of new settlements, the expropriation of Arab property and such methods as the demolition and sealing of habitations and commercial premises were an integral part of Israel's policy of creeping annexation. Guyana agreed and said such annexation, combined with violent oppression of the rights of the Arab population, was designed to force their acquiescence to perpetual second-class citizenship.

In Zimbabwe's opinion, the policy was part of an overall expansionist plan to settle the Middle East question through extermination and expulsion of the Palestinians. Iran reiterated that Israel intended to annex the West Bank and Gaza, a view shared by Kuwait, which said that this was being achieved by destroying their Palestinian and Arab character. Also, in the opinion of the German Democratic Republic, the growing number of Israeli settlements was an essential part of the de-Arabization of the territories; the process of "creeping annexation" of the West Bank and Gaza had already made considerable headway.

Jordan said that Israel's military attempts and diplomatic manoeuvres could not camouflage the reality of its occupation, or the fact that it was denying the Palestinians their right to Self-determination; to legitimize its occupation, it had created new faits accomplis by, among other measures, intensifying its settlement activities.

India charged that all of Israel's actions in the occupied territories were proof that it had every intention to perpetuate its illegal occupation over the West Bank and Gaza, to add to its illegitimate annexation of the Golan Heights (see below), and that it had no desire to contribute to a fair and durable solution of the Palestinian problem.

In Pakistan's view, Israeli policies in the territories had the single objective of annexation in order to build a "greater Israel".

Egypt said Israel had first camouflaged its settlements policy under the pretext of security, then it had used religious arguments and historical claims under the label of "liberated" or "administered" territories; currently it was trying to swallow up the rest of the occupied territories whose inhabitants were being transformed by force from full-fledged to third-class citizens.

The USSR stated that since 1967 Israel had been waging in the territories a campaign of colonial plunder, preparing the ground for final absorption; by its settlements policy, Israel was moving towards converting the land belonging to the Arabs into ghetto-type enclaves or a kind of bantustan reduced to the role of agrarian appendage to the Israeli economy.

Greece said the settlements policy had resulted in untold human suffering and loss of life; the situation in the territories could not be isolated from the problem of the self-determination of the Palestinians and from the realization of their rights, including the right to create their own State.

Israel's settlements policy, a natural corollary of its aggressive and expansionist policy, Democratic Yemen stated, was aimed at creating a new fait accompli that made it impossible to implement United Nations resolutions on the Palestinians' rights to return and to self-determination; in addition to the continued occupation of the West Bank, Gaza and the Golan Heights, there was an occupation of what was now called the "North Bank", i.e., Lebanon.

Lebanon, on the other hand, stressed that the situation in the occupied territories could in no way be compared to the situation in some parts of Lebanon.

Several speakers saw in Israel's settlements policy an obstacle to peace prospects in the Middle East. Among those expressing that view were Malta and Turkey. Israel's policies in the West Bank and Gaza might well be considered a time bomb threatening the entire region, said Kuwait. Yugoslavia considered Israel's continued aggression, expansion and annexation of Arab territories to be a threat to peace and security of the region and of the world. A similar position was held by Greece and Jordan, among others.

In Malta's opinion, Israel should be asked to desist from its unacceptable policies and should be persuaded to join the search for justice for the Palestinians, within a settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Pakistan believed that any progress towards peace in the Middle East was unimaginable unless Israel halted all settlement in the West Bank; even the United States, in putting forward its peace proposals, had acknowledged that a halt to Israeli settlements was indispensable for the continuation of peace efforts. By building further settlements, the United Arab Emirates stated, Israel aimed to disrupt and sabotage all such efforts; from the course taken, it was evident that Israel sought the capitulation of the Palestinians into accepting the occupation of their territories and enslavement by Israel.

France called on Israel not to compromise the chances for peace by regrettable initiatives such as establishing settlements against the unanimous international opinion. The United Kingdom felt an added urgency for appealing to Israel to freeze its settlements and to create no new obstacles to the peace process; it was the common responsibility of the Council members to urge the parties to seize the opportunity for peace that appeared to exist at the moment. Strong support for the call for an immediate settlement freeze, made by the United States President on 1 September 1982, was declared by the Netherlands, which cautioned that a continuation of Israel's policy would constitute one of the most serious obstacles to a peaceful Middle East settlement, the need for which was more pressing than ever.

As a pre-condition for a peace settlement, a number of speakers, among them Greece, Guyana, India, Kuwait, Nicaragua, Poland, the Syrian Arab Republic, Yugoslavia and Zimbabwe, called for complete and immediate Israeli withdrawal from all territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, as requested by the Council in several resolutions. The USSR said the aggressor must comply with the Council's demand for unconditional withdrawal, and the Council must erect a solid barrier to Israel's annexationist designs, as provided for by the United Nations Charter.

In the case of further non-compliance by Israel with the Council's demands, several countries, among them the United Arab Emirates, called for strict Council action. It was the Council's duty to take appropriate measures when an occupying Power failed to meet its obligations under international law, Turkey stated. It was imperative that Israel be restrained without prevarication, India felt. China said the Council must unequivocally condemn Israel's aggressive and expansionist conduct, consider measures to stop Israeli expansion in the occupied territories and compel Israel to withdraw from them. The Council was duty-bound to end the dispersal and continuous violations of the human rights of the Palestinians, said Yugoslavia. In Yemen's view, the Council had no other option but to recognize the rights of the Palestinians.

Israel's recent actions in the occupied West Bank and the annexationist threats hanging over the occupied territories had made effective Council action in accordance with the Charter more urgent, Guyana and others believed. In the face of Israel's open defiance of Council decisions, Pakistan stated, the Council could not escape its responsibilities to act firmly and decisively under the Charter. As long as Israel's allies were not willing to compel Israel to comply with those decisions, Zimbabwe said, the Council had no other option but to implement Chapter VII of the Charter; the existence of a threat to peace by Israel's policy had already been ascertained. Nicaragua pointed out that on 15 February 1983,(9) in a resolution on human rights violations in the occupied territories (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII), the Commission on Human Rights had requested the General Assembly once again to appeal to the Council to adopt against Israel the measures provided for in Chapter VII. Kuwait called on the Council to shoulder its responsibilities and implement the provisions of the Charter.

Cuba, Nicaragua, the Syrian Arab Republic and others called for sanctions against Israel. In addition, the Syrian Arab Republic said, the Council must expel Israel from the United Nations as a non-peace-loving State.

Algeria felt that the time had come for the Council to revise its position and co-ordinate its action with the General Assembly, so that the Palestinians could return to the land from which they had been ousted and recover their property.

Iran condemned any compromise with or concession to what it called the Zionist regime.

PLO said the Council must invoke all the power vested in it by the Charter to compel Israel to accept and carry out the Council's decisions and, in the case of failure, the Council should prescribe the remedies detailed in the Charter.

Communications (March). On 1 March 1983,(26) Jordan transmitted a letter of 16 February from its Minister for Occupied Territories Affairs to the Minister for Foreign Affairs, detailing what were termed Israel's settlement activities in the West Bank and Jerusalem during January, which included confiscation of land, establishment of new settlements and consolidation of the settlement machinery.

By another letter of 1 March,(27) Jordan transmitted a report issued in January by its Ministry of Labour on the effects of Israeli settlements on the situation of Arab workers in the occupied territories.

On 23 March,(28) Jordan transmitted a report by the Minister for Occupied Territories Affairs, detailing what was described as the latest information on Israel's settlement activity during February in the territories, including Jerusalem.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (May)

The Security Council considered the situation in the occupied territories at another meeting on 20 May, urgently requested on 13 May by Qatar in its capacity as Chairman of the Arab Group.(29)

Meeting number. SC 2438.

In addition to the States previously invited, the Council invited Mali and Qatar, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

Statements were made by India, Jordan, Qatar (for the Arab Group), the Syrian Arab Republic and PLO.

Opening the debate, Qatar stressed that the situation in the occupied territories continued to deteriorate and said it was the international community's desire for compromise that had encouraged Israel to scorn the United Nations and in particular the Council; the Arab Group maintained that the only way of countering Israel's challenge and intransigence was to remove the restrictions which had prevented the imposition of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter.

The Syrian Arab Republic said the latest statistics indicated that Israel had expropriated 60 per cent of the territories on the West Bank; Israel falsely invoked external security as justification for building settlements and moving in alien settlers, while removing Arabs from the area between Nablus and Jerusalem; if the Council wished to regain credibility, it must impose mandatory sanctions or expel Israel from the United Nations as a non-peace-loving country.

As Chairman of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, India said that recent events in the territories again documented the increasing number of acts of colonization, brutality and repression by the Israeli authorities which threatened international peace and security; the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Countries, at a meeting on 19 May in New York, had stated that the Council should take effective action not only to prevent further bloodshed and misery in the territories but also to find a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the Palestine question.

In Jordan's opinion, the situation was extremely explosive, with Israel's colonization programme continuing unabated; the Council and particularly its permanent members had a special responsibility to halt that policy.

In disregard of United Nations calls for a settlement freeze, PLO stated, Israel planned 16 additional settlements during the coming year in various parts of Palestine and the Golan Heights; and even if there was a freeze on new settlements, Israel could still expand the population of existing ones and connect them by highways so that they could be converted into big towns and cities. Israel was escalating its genocide and repression, PLO charged, because the Palestinian National Council had reiterated its adherence to United Nations resolutions whose implementation Israel feared.

Communications (May-July). On 25 May,(30) Jordan transmitted what it described as the latest information on Israeli settlement activities during March and April.

By a letter of 18 July, (31) the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights expressed the Committee's deep concern over the reported intention of Israel to establish Jewish settlers in the centre of Hebron, despite local Arab resistance.

On 26 July,(32) Jordan complained about an attack that day against Arab civilians by armed Israeli settlers in Hebron, who had broken into the Islamic University in the city and fired at students and staff, killing three persons and wounding 40 others; the attack, following a similar one on 7 July, confirmed that such acts, prepared by the Israeli occupation authorities, were part of a comprehensive plan to force the Arab population to abandon their homes and land to Israeli settlers.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (July/August)

Consideration of the situation in the occupied territories was resumed by the Security Council at live meetings held between 28 July and 2 August. In a letter of 27 July,(33) Democratic Yemen, as Chairman of the Arab Group, had requested that the Council meet immediately.

Meeting numbers. SC 2457-2461.

In addition to the countries previously invited, the Council invited Afghanistan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Djibouti, Iraq, Israel, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mauritania, Oman, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, the Sudan and Tunisia, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

On 2 August, the Security Council voted on a draft resolution,(34) sponsored by Algeria, Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen. The vote was 13 to 1, with 1 abstention, as follows:

In favour: China, France, Guyana, Jordan, Malta, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Poland, Togo, USSR, United Kingdom, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Zaire.

Owing to the negative vote of a permanent member, the draft was not adopted.

By the draft, the Council would have determined that Israel's settlement policies had no legal validity, were a serious obstacle to Middle East peace and contravened article 49 (6) of the fourth Geneva Convention. It would have called on Israel to abide by that provision, to rescind its previous measures, to desist from any action changing the legal status and geographical nature and materially affecting the demographic composition of the territories and, in particular, not to transfer parts of its own civilian population into the territories and to force transfers of Arab populations from there. It would have strongly deplored Israel's persistence in pursuing those policies and would have called on it to dismantle existing settlements and cease planning and establishing new ones. Further, the Council would have: rejected all Israeli illegal actions, especially those resulting in the expulsion, deportation and forcible transfers of Arabs; condemned the recent attacks against Arab civilians, especially that in Al-Khalil (Hebron); called on all States not to provide Israel with any assistance to be used in connection with its settlements; and reaffirmed its determination, in the event of Israeli non-compliance, to examine ways in accordance with relevant Charter provisions to secure implementation of the resolution.

Introducing the draft on behalf of the League of Arab States, Jordan said that, despite the Council's attempts to deal with the matter, Israel's arbitrary measures against the Arab population had intensified and its settlement activities increased, jeopardizing peace and security in the area and internationally; the elements of the draft, which reflected the past positions of the Council, were basic principles for dealing with the deteriorating situation.

The United States stressed that it shared the anguish about the loss of life and destruction of property in the West Bank and disapproved of Israel's settlements policy; the draft, however, did not adequately address the recent criminal attacks against Israeli settlers and contained unacceptable elements, in particular the implication that Israel had carried out forcible large-scale transfers of the Arab population, an allegation for which there was not sufficient evidence. The future of Israeli settlements was a key issue that needed to be addressed in negotiations; as emphasized by the United States President on 1 September 1982, a settlements freeze would foster the kind of atmosphere needed for peace. The United States, however, did not believe that it was practical or appropriate to call for a dismantling of existing settlements, nor could it accept continuing the sterile argument as to whether the settlements were legal or not, an argument that had dominated discussions to the detriment of the basic issue, namely, how to bring about a just and peaceful solution to the conflict over the occupied territories.

Zaire felt that the text, like previous ones, would not lead to action, which undermined the Council's credibility. The paragraph condemning attacks against the Arab civilian population was not balanced; murder, whether by Israelis or by Arabs, could not be tolerated. The latter view was also shared by the Netherlands.

On the other hand, Guyana saw the draft as a genuine attempt to deal with a deteriorating situation; Israel must be held responsible for the recent incidents in the occupied territories, which could only lead to greater tension.

The USSR said that the United States, by voting against a text representing the united view of all Arab nations and a minimum action, had blocked the path to a just Middle East peace and sanctioned an annexation by Israel of the West Bank. The argument that there was no evidence to support the allegation of mass deportation or forcible transfers was based either on misinformation or misinterpretation, said PLO; Israel's settlements policy was meant to facilitate the acquisition of territory so that it might become a bargaining chip in so-called negotiations.

Condemning the attack of 26 July, France stated that Israel, as the occupying Power responsible for protecting the Palestinian civilian population, must prevent such tragedies. Calling for respect of democratic freedoms and for cessation of the escalation of violence and repression, France noted that Israel's policy of fait accompli in the territories was harmful to peace efforts and that its settlements were without legal basis and created an atmosphere of tension.

Malta said there could no longer be any doubt that Israel was embarking on an insidious effort to take over the West Bank and the Gaza Strip; in just three years, the number of both settlements and settlers had more than doubled.

The actions set forth in the draft were urgent and immediate tasks, Nicaragua said. In Poland's opinion, the text constituted the least the Council could do, and an end must be put to the deteriorating situation before the policy of faits accomplis in annexing Arab territories achieved its sinister long-range objectives. Among the non-members, Yugoslavia called for adoption of the draft bearing in mind the urgency of the situation. Similarly, Djibouti said the Council, as the guardian of peace and security, must take the necessary measures so that Israel would cease its inhuman and barbaric practices against the Palestinians in the occupied territories.

The Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States remarked that, out of pragmatic considerations and to achieve a compromise, the draft sought not to achieve justice for the Palestinians but to mitigate flagrant injustices; not only was Israel's settlements policy illegal, but it was making Jews cannon-fodder for the expansionist, revisionist objectives of the Government.

Most of the 38 speakers during the debate again denounced Israel's settlements policy as illegal and contrary to international law, as well as an obstacle to a Middle East peace settlement. Israel's claims that, far from constituting an obstacle to peace, the settlements were vital for its security and, as an effective early warning system, a deterrent to war, were rejected by a number of countries, among them Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Jordan, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania and Saudi Arabia. Jordan alleged that Israel's settlements policy was a tactic designed to undermine and abort peace efforts. Mauritania said prospects for peace in the Middle East and the rest of the world were threatened if Israel's practices continued with impunity, a position also held by a number of other countries.

The view that Israel's settlements policy was a step towards assimilation and annexation of the occupied territories was reiterated by many speakers, including Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Democratic Yemen, the German Democratic Republic, Guyana, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia and the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States. Widely held also was the opinion that the establishment or expansion of settlements and the violation of human rights of the Arab population of the territories were two complementary trends. In that context, most speakers condemned the events at Hebron.

Jordan, which opened the debate, charged that those events, as well as systematic Israeli terrorism in the West Bank, Gaza and the Golan Heights, were a step towards emptying those areas. The suppression at Al-Khalil was but the other half of Israel's expansionist policy. As part of the official occupation machinery, the settlers played a central role of organizing and implementing terrorist activities in a deliberate manner conducive to a psychological and social climate in which it was difficult for the Arab citizens to stay, in preparation for a wide-scale evacuation. The incident of 26 July was just one example of Israel's feverish quest to expel indigenous Arabs and replace them with Jewish settlers.

The premeditated and cold-blooded attack against the Islamic University of Hebron and the repression at Bir Zeit, Jerusalem, Nablus and elsewhere were designed to help achieve Israel's openly proclaimed objective of creeping colonization of the West Bank and Gaza, charged Mauritania.

A similar view was expressed by Qatar and others. As the Palestinians had refused to acquiesce to repressive measures, the confiscation of land and limitation of freedoms, and to gradual Judaization, Qatar said, Israel was determined to liquidate them physically.

Nicaragua stated that the situation was becoming more critical day by day; the appeals of the Israeli Government to the settlers not to take the law into their own hands had no credibility, because punishment of the guilty was practically non-existent and the sentences imposed were ridiculously out of proportion to the seriousness of the crimes.

The Sudan said that the recent events in the territories were part of Israel's scheme to drive out indigenous Arabs and to Judaize the territories in full. A similar view was expressed by several others, among them Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Djibouti, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo and the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States. The Syrian Arab Republic added that while official Israeli circles and their mouthpieces in the United States were vigorously striving to absolve the ruling classes in Israel of responsibility for the settlers' crimes, each settler was keen on implementing the official settlements policy on which Israel had been based since its beginning.

In the opinion of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the arming of settlers was a concrete expression of the ideas of fanatical Zionists calling for the expulsion of all gentiles, from Israel.

The German Democratic Republic said the violence against Palestinian students at Hebron demonstrated anew that the aggressive policy pursued by Israel and its accomplices was aimed at preventing the Palestinians from exercising their inalienable rights, particularly the right to an independent State.

China charged that it was the recent Israeli decision to establish a settlement in Al-Khalil that had further aggravated tension. Facts revealed that the terrorist tactics used by the Israeli authorities to persecute the indigenous inhabitants of the occupied territories were entirely premeditated with the express aim of changing the demographic composition so as to legitimize the Israeli settlements scheme.

A similar position was held by others, including Morocco and Pakistan. Morocco believed that there was an organic relationship between the oppression of Arabs and the establishment of illegal Israeli settlements; the events at Al-Khalil had coincided with the Israeli decision to build settlements in the heart of that city. Pakistan considered that the tragic death of Palestinians in Hebron was a manifestation of the deteriorating situation in the occupied territories for which Israel must assume full responsibility. The settlements had become the main source of violence and conflict; that the settlers were allowed to carry arms was a constant source of harassment and provocation to Arab inhabitants, inevitably leading to tension and clashes.

In Bahrain's opinion, the continuous violence in the occupied territories was an inevitable result of Israel's occupation and aggressive expansionist policy, and of its systematic terrorization of the inhabitants carried out in full view of the Israeli army and security forces.

In Turkey's view, the occurrences in Al-Khalil were yet another manifestation of the fact that Israel was adamant in the pursuit of its policies of repression, thus further aggravating the plight of the Palestinians and the Middle East situation.

Saudi Arabia complained that the Israeli authorities were oblivious to the fact that Al-Khalil and most of the towns of Gaza and the West Bank were under constant curfew; thus, Jewish settlers could rampage through Arab areas, setting fires, engaging in sabotage and committing murder, encouraged and supported by the Israeli authorities.

Afghanistan charged that the Israeli Government did virtually nothing to prevent armed settlers from engaging in cynical attacks. The Israeli authorities had implied that the recent violence against Palestinians was justified because of an attack on a Jewish settler; reports from different sources had indicated that the wounded settler, attacked by unidentified persons, was not attended by the Israeli military, which had thought he was an Arab; had he been taken promptly to the hospital he would have been saved.

Kuwait alleged that the act of aggression at Al-Khalil had been committed by armed Israeli settlers in full view of the Israeli Government, which was not merely content with establishing settlements and importing tens of thousands of Jews to settle therein; it implanted armed bands among the settlers, with whom it co-ordinated action.

Egypt also held Israel directly responsible for the aggression against the students of Al-Khalil University, adding that the ensuing arbitrary measures by the Israeli occupation authorities reaffirmed the plight of Palestinians in the territories and the extent of the danger to which they were exposed. In view of Israel's persistence in building settlements and the terrorism by armed groups of settlers, the Arab inhabitants had no recourse but to exercise their natural right to defend what remained of their properties, territories and homeland.

The killing at Hebron and the building of Israeli settlements was also denounced by Iran.

PLO recalled that on 10 July Israel's Deputy Prime Minister had told reporters that the Israeli cabinet had decided on a two-stage plan for the construction of a Jewish quarter at Hebron, projecting a settlement in the coming three years of 500 Jewish families in the commercial heart of the city, which would entail the eviction or expulsion of the population or its elimination should it insist on defending its right to stay.

Israel, on the other hand, stressed that the murder at Hebron was unreservedly condemned by its Government and people; it would do everything possible to apprehend the culprits for their crimes. However, while condemning the murder of Arabs, the Council did not condemn the murder of Jews. Referring to its settlements policy, Israel defended the right of Jews to live in any part of the "Land of Israel"; they did not regard themselves as foreigners in Judaea or Samaria or any other part of the "Land of Israel". It could not be accepted that Jews should be prohibited from settling in areas which were the very heart of their homeland; however, it had never been Israel's aim to exercise control over the lives and activities of the Arab inhabitants of Judaea and Samaria, with whom Jews sought to live as equals. It was Israel's policy that no single Palestinian Arab resident of these areas legally holding claim to land should be made homeless by the establishment of Jewish villages, many of which had been established on Jewish-owned land expropriated in 1948 by Jordan or Egypt, land that had been barren for centuries. With regard to article 49 of the fourth Geneva Convention, Israel pointed out that it banned forcible transfers, not voluntary acts of individuals taking up residence; no Arab inhabitants had been displaced by the establishment of Jewish villages.

In the view of the United Kingdom, the latest atrocity at Hebron was one of a series that would not be stopped until the underlying causes had been removed. Israel's settlements policy undermined confidence that it was ready to negotiate freely about the final state of the occupied territories; the United Kingdom called on Israel to put an end to that damaging policy and to declare an immediate settlements freeze.

The call for a settlements freeze was also supported by the Netherlands, which added that the events at Hebron were evidence of the dangerous consequences of Israel's settlements policy, a major source of tension; each construction or expansion of a settlement would only increase the strong and justified resentment of the inhabitants.

In the opinion of the USSR, the Council could not remain indifferent to the illegal acts systematically perpetrated by Israel on Arab soil. The Council should in particular be mindful of the fact that in resolution 465(1980)(35) it had declared that there was no legal validity to the steps taken by Israel to alter the physical character, demographic composition and institutional structure or status of the occupied territories. At that time, the Council had called on Israel to rescind those measures, to dismantle the existing settlements and in particular to cease, on an urgent basis, the establishment, construction and planning of new ones. Israel's response to those minimal demands was the annexation of eastern Jerusalem and the Golan Heights, further aggressive sorties against neighbouring Arab States and the invasion of Lebanon, in addition to the construction of dozens of new settlements on the West Bank and in the Gaza Strip where it continued methodically to carry out plans to locate thousands of new settlers. The United States gave in to every new demand Israel made, at the expense of the Arabs; a further step in that direction was the current United States position that the Israeli settlements on Arab lands were legal.

China said the worsening situation demanded an unequivocal response from the Council, which should strongly condemn the Israeli authorities for engineering the incidents at Al-Khalil, stop all expansionist activities in the occupied territories and compel Israel to withdraw from them.

Jordan believed that Israel would not have gone so far in its expansionist policies had the Council been able to discharge its responsibilities as outlined in the Charter and had the great Powers shouldered their duties with regard to Israel's intransigence and persistence in creating settlements in the territories and in terrorizing the Arab citizens in order to force them to flee their homes, as was the case in Al-Khalil. The credibility of any peace initiative, it added, would depend on a clear acknowledgement of the situation and clear rejection of Israeli settlements.

Pakistan called on the Council to reaffirm that the settlements were illegal and to make yet another effort to compel Israel to respect its resolutions; Israel could be restrained only if the Council could fulfil its responsibility to censure Israel's conduct and condemn its policies of repression and violence.

Poland said the recurrence of acts of terror and violence, such as the ones at Hebron, should be a grim reminder that the Council should fulfil its responsibility and take effective and urgent action by declaring the illegality and inadmissibility of Israeli settlements, which had become a deadly weapon in Israel's annexation policy.

The time had come for the Council, as the primary body for maintaining international peace and security, to take the necessary action under Chapter VII of the Charter, Nicaragua stated.

The call for such action was also supported by several non-members of the Council, including Afghanistan and the Syrian Arab Republic. Unless the Council effectively forced Israel to cease its illegal activities, Afghanistan warned, there would be an increasing danger of violence and armed clashes. The Council's failure to take mandatory action had served to encourage Israel to continue Judaizing the occupied territories, said the Syrian Arab Republic, which called on the United States to enable the Council to take effective steps in accordance with Chapter VII to evacuate the aggressors from the occupied territories, unconditionally, and to enable the Palestinians to exercise their rights to self-determination and to the establishment of an independent State under PLO leadership.

Saudi Arabia called once more on the international community not to permit Israel to disregard United Nations resolutions. As for the latest events at Al-Khalil, it urged the Council to condemn explicitly the Israeli acts and to declare null and void all settlements measures by Israel. There should also be a statement to the effect that the Council would be forced to take measures in accordance with the Charter to implement its resolutions.

Bahrain appealed to the Council to discharge its responsibilities under the Charter and fulfil its obligations to protect the population of the territories from the aggression by armed Israeli bands; it should not be difficult for the Council to compel Israel to implement its resolutions.

Kuwait said the Council must reaffirm its resolutions with regard to the illegality of the Israeli settlements and must exert a new effort to compel Israel to respect those resolutions as well as the international covenants which obliged the occupying Power not just to protect the lives of civilians in their occupied territories but also not to make any changes in their demographic nature and legal status; above all, it was required to put an end to the Israeli occupation and to give the Palestinians the opportunity to exercise their rights. Kuwait called on the countries assisting Israel, foremost the United States, to cease supporting it and to stop putting obstacles in the way of the Council, so that it might carry out its mandate by condemning Israel and imposing the appropriate sanctions.

Qatar urged the Council to give rein to the will of the international community, which Israel had thus far been able to obstruct, and to discharge its responsibility.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya called on the Council to shoulder its responsibilities under the Charter and condemn Israeli practices and policies, take concrete steps to deter the aggressor, affirm the illegality of settlements, and condemn the States which assisted Israel in its settlements policy and violation of human rights.

The Sudan said it was incumbent on the Council, which was responsible for the maintenance of international peace and security, to take measures in accordance with the Charter that would put an end to the Israeli practices falling outside international law and United Nations resolutions.

Turkey firmly believed that it was the duty of the international community to remind Israel of its responsibilities under the 1949 Geneva Conventions; it was incumbent on the Council to take measures to prevent Israel from further violating international law and the inalienable rights of the Palestinians.

Democratic Yemen said if the Council was to uphold the seriousness of its resolutions and shoulder its responsibilities under the Charter, it was called upon to condemn Israel's expansionist policies and practices and take immediate steps to deter the aggressor and put an end to Israel's flouting of Council resolutions, especially resolutions 465(1980)(35) and 476(1980)(36) which emphasized the illegality of the Israeli settlements.

Egypt stressed that the Council could not afford to disregard the plight of the Palestinians under Israeli occupation. The terrorists of Al-Khalil should be arrested and brought to trial to prevent the repetition of such actions. The deteriorating situation in the occupied territories required explicit and decisive Council action, with the international community holding Israel completely responsible.

The Council must face up to the explosive situation in the territories and a repetition of the events at Hebron must be prevented, said Mauritania. There must be a thorough examination of the terrorism of which the Palestinians were victims, and the latest cold-blooded crimes-for which the responsibility of the occupying authorities could neither be denied nor even limited-must be vigorously condemned.

Speaking for the non-aligned countries, India called for determined and urgent Council action to prevent further bloodshed and misery. The Council should condemn the recent incidents at Hebron and other cities and fix responsibility for these atrocities on the occupying Israeli forces. It should again declare the illegality and inadmissibility of Israeli settlements practices and secure the annulment of all measures taken by Israel in that direction. Lastly, the Council should strive to find a comprehensive, just and lasting solution to the Palestine question on a priority basis.

Cuba felt that the time had come for the Council to exercise its responsibilities under the Charter and take appropriate action to put a timely end to the misdeeds of the Israeli occupying forces and promote a just and lasting Middle East settlement, especially its root cause-the Palestine problem.

Bangladesh held it imperative for the Council to proceed urgently, with all the authority and resources at its disposal, to implement its resolutions and decisions; recent developments in the occupied territories had demonstrated that a lack of firm and expeditious Council action only aggravated the situation.

In Yugoslavia's view, the Council should reaffirm that the Israeli settlements were illegal and inadmissible, as well as make one more effort and exert pressure to halt such Israeli policy.

Again stressing the importance of implementing the recommendations of the Committee on Palestinian rights, Senegal, speaking on the Committee's behalf, said that the acts of violence in recent months indicated the urgent need to rectify the situation that had continued for too long, a situation whose consequences for international peace and security were more incalculable than ever.

The German Democratic Republic felt that the recent events in the West Bank underscored the urgent need for immediate and unconditional Israeli withdrawal and for a just solution to the Middle East problem, the core of which was the Palestine question; it was time that the Council rose to its responsibility for preserving peace and security and that it took resolute measures for immediate cessation of Israeli aggression and occupation. Several other speakers took a similar position.

According to PLO, the Council had the power under the Charter to ask for an immediate termination of the occupation, on whose illegality there was unanimity. If a Member State refused to comply, the Council could apply the Charter provisions; there was no room in the United Nations for people rejecting the Council's decisions, especially when that rejection brought so much misery and bloodshed. PLO expected from the Council action in very clear-cut language demanding that Israel withdraw immediately and unconditionally from the occupied territories; as stated in a message from its Chairman, PLO called on the international community, represented in the Council, to condemn Israel's racist practices, to seek to put an end to them and to support the inalienable rights of the Palestinians.

The answer lay in the Council and in the collective will to deter Israel from persisting in breaching the Council's resolutions and the United Nations Charter, the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States said.

Communications (Au St-November). By a letter of 2 August 1983,(37) Greece transmitted a government statement deploring the attack of 26 July and expressing the hope that Israel would arrest and punish the culprits and ensure that such criminal acts against the Arab population would not be repeated.

By letters of 5 August,(38) 26 August,(39) 20 October(40) and 11 November,(41) Jordan transmitted what it said was information on Israel's settlement activities from May through October.

Recommendations of the Conference on the Palestine question. The International Conference on the Question of Palestine,(19) in its Declaration adopted in September (see above, under PALESTINE QUESTION), considered that the various proposals consistent with international law, such as the Arab peace plan adopted at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference at Fez in September 1982,(42) should serve as guidelines for concerted international effort to resolve the Palestine question. These guidelines stressed the need to oppose and reject Israeli policies in the occupied territories, including Jerusalem, and any de facto situation contrary to international law and United Nations resolutions, in particular the establishment of settlements, as major obstacles to a Middle East peace.

In its Programme of Action, the Conference recommended that States should not encourage migration to the occupied territories until Israel had put a definitive end to its illegal settlements policy. The Conference invited the Security Council to take urgent action to bring about an immediate and complete cessation of the establishment of settlements, to consider urgently the reports of the Security Council Commission established in 1979,(43) which had examined the situation concerning the settlements, and to reactivate that Commission.

Similar recommendations had also been made at the regional preparatory meetings for the Conference.

Activities of the Committee on Palestinian rights. In its 1983 report to the General Assembly,(44) the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People stated that it had continued to follow closely developments in the occupied territories, in particular the establishment and enlargement of Israeli settlements, the annexation of vast areas of Arab-owned land, and other violations by Israel of the rights of the Palestinians. In communications throughout the year to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President, the Committee had expressed its concern over those Israeli policies. In addition to its letters of protest, the Committee had urged the Council to reactivate, as a matter of priority, its 1979 Commission to examine the situation relating to Israeli settlements. The Committee recalled that the Commission had unanimously adopted its latest report as far back as November 1980,(45) but the report had not been considered by the Council.

The Committee pointed out that, during 1983, Israel had pursued its settlements policy despite international censure, United Nations decisions and public and parliamentary questioning within Israel itself. The Committee stated that the policy constituted a network of settlement, programmes and several other administrative and economic procedures designed to force individual and mass transfers from the West Bank and Gaza, with the objective of evacuating the indigenous Arab population. The Committee noted that the number of Israeli settlers in the West Bank and East Jerusalem had increased from 91,000 in April 1979 to some 140,000 in 1982; it was Israel's declared policy to place up to 400,000 non-indigenous, colonial settlers there within five years and 1.4 million Jews over the coming 30 years. By the end of 1982, approximately 153 settlements were estimated to have been established in the West Bank and East Jerusalem; this represented an area of some 2,453 square kilometres, or 44 per cent of the total West Bank territory. Four more new settlements had been approved on 16 January 1983. A close look at Israeli settlement activities revealed that the intention was to fragmentize the demographic, geographic, economic and social unity of the occupied territories.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In two of its 15 December resolutions on the report of the Committee on Palestinian rights, the General Assembly also dealt specifically with Israel's settlements policy. By the first (38/79 C), it deplored Israel's persistence in establishing settlements. By the second (38/79 D), it condemned: the establishment of settlements on Arab lands and transfer of an alien population thereto; and the arming of Israeli settlers and the perpetration of violence by them against Arab civilians. The Assembly also reaffirmed that Israel's measures to change the occupied territories were null and void.

In a 13 December resolution (38/58 C), the Assembly endorsed as a guideline for convening an international peace conference on the Middle East (see above, under PALESTINE QUESTION) the need to oppose Israeli policies and practices, in particular establishing settlements, as one of the major obstacles to achieving Middle East peace. In a resolution of 19 December (38/166), the Assembly rejected Israeli plans and actions to change the demographic composition of the occupied territories, particularly the increase and expansion of settlements, and other actions displacing Palestinians therefrom; and recognized the need for a comprehensive report on the impact of the Israeli settlements on the living conditions of the Palestinians, to be submitted by the Secretary-General in 1984.

Explaining in the Special Political Committee its abstention on the draft which became resolution 38/79 C, the United States said that the text diverted attention from the fundamental question of whether settlements advanced or hindered the peace process; to persist in arguing about the legality of the settlements policy was to embark on an unproductive debate. The immediate adoption of a settlements freeze by Israel could create the confidence needed for wider participation in peace talks; parallel and positive action by the Arabs would be required if the peace process was to succeed, the United States added.

Sweden, which also abstained, saw in Israel's settlements policy a flagrant violation of international law; the most constructive action Israel could take to improve peace prospects would be to dismantle the settlements.

Fourth Geneva Convention

The applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949 (fourth Geneva Convention), to the Israeli-occupied territories was reaffirmed in 1983 by the General Assembly (in resolutions 38/79 B and C) and by the Commission on Human Rights.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. In one of two resolutions on human rights violations in the occupied Arab territories, adopted on 15 February 1983,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that the fourth Geneva Convention was applicable to all those territories, including Jerusalem. Condemning Israel's failure to acknowledge its applicability, the Commission called on Israel to abide by and respect the obligations arising from that and other international instruments, and urged once more all States parties to ensure respect for and compliance with the Convention in the occupied territories.

In another resolution of 15 February,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Commission reaffirmed that the Convention continued to apply to Syrian territory occupied by Israel. (For further details, see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XVIII.)

Recommendations of the Conference on the Palestine question. The International Conference on the Question of Palestine,⁽¹⁹⁾ in its Programme of Action adopted in September (see above, under PALESTINE QUESTION), recommended that all States act in accordance with their obligations under international law, especially with regard to the 1949 Geneva Conventions which required the parties to respect those Conventions in all circumstances, and in particular ensure respect by Israel for the Conventions in the occupied territories; and strive for the adoption of international measures so that Israel would implement in the West Bank and Gaza the provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention, in the light of a 1980 Security Council resolution⁽³⁵⁾ determining that all Israeli measures to change the character, composition, structure or status of the territories had no legal validity and violated the Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1983, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions (38/79 B and C) demanding that Israel comply with the Convention, both under the agenda item on the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories. On 15 December, the Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted resolution 38/79 B by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3092 A (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3240 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3525 B (XXX) of 15 December 1975, 31/106 B of 16 December 1976, 32/91 A of 13 December 1977, 33/113 A of 18 December 1978, 34/90 B of 12 December 1979, 35/122 A of 11 December 1980, 36/147 A of 16 December 1981 and 37/88 A of 10 December 1982,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March 1980 in which, inter alia, the Council affirmed that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Considering that the promotion of respect for the obligations arising from the Charter of the United Nations and other instruments and rules of international law is among the basic purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Geneva Convention,

Noting that Israel and those Arab States whose territories have been occupied by Israel since June 1967 are parties to that Convention,

Taking into account that States parties to that Convention undertake, in accordance with article 1 thereof, not only to respect but also to ensure respect for the Convention in all circumstances,

1. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

2. Condemns once again the failure of Israel as the occupying Power to acknowledge the applicability of that Convention to the territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

3. Strongly demands that Israel acknowledge and comply with the provisions of that Convention in Palestinian and other Arab territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

4. Urgently calls upon all States parties to that Convention to exert every effort in order to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem.

Also on 15 December 1983, the Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted resolution 38/79 C by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/5 of 28 October 1977, 33/113 B of 18 December 1978, 34/90 C of 12 December 1979, 35/122 B of 11 December 1980, 36/147 B of 16 December 1981 and 37/88 B of 10 December 1982,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March 1980,

Expressing grave anxiety and concern at the present serious situation in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, as a result of the continued Israeli occupation and the measures and actions taken by the Government of Israel, the occupying Power, designed to change the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of those territories,

Considering that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to all Arab territories occupied since June 1967, including Jerusalem,

1. Determines that all such measures and actions taken by Israel in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, are in violation of the relevant provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and constitute a serious obstruction of efforts to achieve a just and lasting peace in the Middle East and therefore have no legal validity;

2. Strongly deplores the persistence of Israel in carrying out such measures, in particular the establishment of settlements in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem;

3. Demands that Israel comply strictly with its international obligations in accordance with the principles of international law and the provisions of the Geneva Convention;

4. Demands once more that the Government of Israel, the occupying Power, desist forthwith from taking any action which would result in changing the legal status, geographical nature or demographic composition of the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

5. Urgently calls upon all States parties to the Geneva Convention to respect and to exert every effort in order to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in all Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem.

Against: Israel
Abstaining: United States.

At the request of the United States, the Special Political Committee adopted paragraph 1 of the draft that became resolution 38/79 B separately, by a recorded vote of 114 to 1. Explaining its support of that paragraph and its abstention on the text as a whole, the United States stressed that it attached great importance to the Convention, which should be applied consistently to all situations of war or military occupation without regard to the nature of the conflict; the text as a whole, however, was a sterile, ritualistic condemnation of Israel.

Israel said the first text was irrelevant and redundant, as the principles of the Convention were applied in practice to the population of the territories; its position, Israel added, was supported by well-known authorities in the field of international law. The second text was in essence a repetition of the first, with encumbering variations.

Sweden expressed its conviction that the Convention was fully applicable to all Israeli-occupied territories.

In resolution 38/79 D of 15 December, the Assembly condemned Israel's continued and persistent violations of the Convention, in particular those designated by the Convention as "grave breaches", which the Assembly declared were war crimes and an affront to humanity.

The Convention's applicability was reaffirmed in two other Assembly resolutions: a 19 December resolution (38/144) on permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied territories; and resolution 38/79 G of 15 December, by which the Assembly also condemned Israel's repression against and closing of Palestinian universities, in clear contravention of the Convention, and demanded that Israel comply with it and rescind all measures against educational institutions (see below).

Golan Heights

In 1983, the General Assembly (in resolutions 38/79 F and 38/180 A) and the Commission on Human Rights dealt with the situation in the Syrian Golan Heights. The Golan Heights, a part of the Syrian Arab Republic near the borders with Israel and Lebanon, had been occupied by Israel since 1967.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. On 15 February 1983,(46) the Commission on Human Rights declared once more that Israel's December 1981 decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan Heights(47) was an act of aggression and that it had no validity. The Commission called on Israel to rescind that decision and emphasized the necessity of total and unconditional Israeli withdrawal from the occupied territories as an essential prerequisite for a Middle East peace. The Commission determined that the continued occupation and effective annexation of the Golan Heights by Israel, as well as the inhuman treatment of the Syrian population, gravely violated the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights,(48) the fourth Geneva Convention and United Nations resolutions. The Commission reaffirmed that the Hague Convention of 1907 and the fourth Geneva Convention continued to apply to Israeli-occupied Syrian territory. It strongly deplored the negative vote of a permanent member of the Security Council which had prevented the adoption of measures under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly, the Secretary-General submitted in October 1983 a report(49) on implementation of a December 1982 resolution(50) in which the Assembly had condemned Israel for refusing to heed demands to rescind its 1981 decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Golan Heights, and calling on Member States not to recognize such measures. He reported that in reply to his note verbale of 10 March 1983, Israel had stated on 27 September that its position was set out fully in December 1981.(51) As at 12 October 1983, eight Member States had replied to the Secretary-General's request for relevant information.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1983, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions dealing with the situation in the Golan Heights. On 15 December, under the agenda item on the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, the Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted resolution 38/79 F by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned that the Arab territories occupied since 1967 have been under continued Israeli military occupation,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981 and General Assembly resolutions 36/226 B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982 and 37/88 E of 10 December 1982,

Recalling its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 3414(XXX) of 5 December 1975, 31/61 of 9 December 1976, 32/20 of 25 November 1977, 33/28 and 33/29 of 7 December 1978, 34/70 of 6 December 1979 and 35/122 E of 11 December 1980, in which it, inter alia, called upon Israel to put an end to its occupation of the Arab territories and to withdraw from all those territories,

Reaffirming once more the illegality of Israel's decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan Heights, which has resulted in the effective annexation of that territory,

Reaffirming that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations and that all territories thus occupied by Israel must be returned,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

1. Strongly condemns Israel, the occupying Power, for its refusal to comply with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, particularly Council resolution 497(1981), in which the Council, inter alia, decided that the Israeli decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan Heights was null and void and without international legal effect and demanded that Israel, the occupying Power, should rescind forthwith its decision;

2. Condemns the persistence of Israel in changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Arab Golan Heights;

3. Determines that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken or to be taken by Israel, the occupying Power, that purport to alter the character and legal status of the Syrian Arab Golan Heights are null and void and constitute a flagrant violation of international law and of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and have no legal effect;

4. Strongly condemns Israel for its attempts and measures to impose forcibly Israeli citizenship and Israeli identity cards on the Syrian citizens in the occupied Syrian Arab Golan Heights and calls upon it to desist from its repressive measures against the population of the Syrian Arab Golan Heights;

5. Calls once again upon Member States not to recognize any of the legislative or administrative measures and actions referred to above;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Against: Israel.

Abstaining: United States.

Israel said that the text bore witness to the relentless hostility of Syrian leaders and their refusal to contemplate negotiations on the basis of Security Council resolution 242(1967);(25) the text rejected any thought of peace and ignored the causes for Israel's presence in the Golan Heights.

The United States called on Israel to fulfil its obligations to the population in the Golan Heights, but remarked that the resolution went beyond the Security Council's 1981 resolution declaring Israel's decision null and void.(52)

Sweden considered the annexation of the Golan Heights to be a flagrant violation of international law; it stressed that its support for the draft did not alter its opposition to the February 1982 resolution(53) mentioned in the preamble.

The Syrian Arab Republic said that the occupation authorities were imposing Israeli identity by force on the Golan Heights population. Israel's 1981 decision extending its law there was calculated to establish a Greater Israel from the Euphrates to the Nile, and Israeli statements that the Golan Heights were an indivisible part of Israel confirmed those intentions.

On 19 December 1983, under the agenda item "The situation in the Middle East", the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/180 A by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 30 September 1983,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Reaffirming its resolutions 36/226 B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982 and 37/123 A of 16 December 1982,

Recalling its resolution 3314(XXIX) of 14 December 1974, in which it defined an act of aggression, inter alia, as "the invasion or attack by the armed forces of a State of the territory of another State, or any military occupation, however temporary, resulting from such invasion or attack, or any annexation by the use of force of the territory of another State or part thereof" and provided that "no consideration of whatever nature, whether political, economic, military or otherwise, may serve as a justification for aggression",

Reaffirming the fundamental principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming once more the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem,

Noting that Israel's record, policies and actions establish conclusively that it is not a peace-loving Member State and that it has not carried out its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting further that Israel has refused, in violation of Article 25 of the Charter, to accept and carry out the numerous relevant decisions of the Security Council, in particular resolution 497(1981), thus failing to carry out its obligations under the Charter,

1. Strongly condemns Israel for its failure to comply with Security Council resolution 497(1981) and General Assembly resolutions 36/226 B, ES-9/1 and 37/123 A;

2. Declares once more that Israel's continued occupation of the Golan Heights and its decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan Heights constitute an act of aggression under the provisions of Article 39 of the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolution 3314(XXIX);

3. Declares once more that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan Heights is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

4. Declares all Israeli policies and practices of, or aimed at, annexation of the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, to be illegal and in violation of international law and of the relevant United Nations resolutions;

5. Determines once more that all actions taken by Israel to give effect to its decision relating to the occupied Syrian Golan Heights are illegal and invalid and shall not be recognized;

6. Reaffirms its determination that all relevant provisions of the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 1907, and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, continue to apply to the Syrian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, and calls upon the parties thereto to respect and ensure respect of their obligations under these instruments in all circumstances;

7. Determines once more that the continued occupation of the Syrian Golan Heights since 1967 and their annexation by Israel on 14 December 1981, following Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on that territory, constitute a continuing threat to international peace and security;

8. Strongly deplores the negative vote by a permanent member of the Security Council which prevented the Council from adopting against Israel, under Chapter VII of the Charter, the "appropriate measures" referred to in resolution 497(1981) unanimously adopted by the Council;

9. Further deplores any political, economic, financial, military and technological support to Israel that encourages Israel to commit acts of aggression and to consolidate and perpetuate its occupation and annexation of occupied Arab territories;

10. Firmly emphasizes once more its demand that Israel, the occupying Power, rescind forthwith its illegal decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Syrian Golan Heights, which resulted in the effective annexation of that territory;

11. Reaffirms once more the overriding necessity of the total and unconditional withdrawal by Israel from all the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, which is an essential prerequisite for the establishment of a comprehensive and just peace in the Middle East;

12. Determines once more that Israel's record, policies and actions confirm that it is not a peace-loving Member State, that it has persistently violated the principles contained in the Charter and that it has carried out neither its obligations under the Charter nor its commitment under General Assembly resolution 273(III) of 11 May 1949;

13. Calls once more upon all Member States to apply the following measures:

(a) To refrain from supplying Israel with any weapons and related equipment and to suspend any military assistance that Israel receives from them;

(b) To refrain from acquiring any weapons or military equipment from Israel;

(c) To suspend economic, financial and technological assistance to and co-operation with Israel;

(d) To sever diplomatic, trade and cultural relations with Israel;

14. Reiterates its call to all Member States to cease forthwith, individually and collectively, all dealings with Israel in order totally to isolate it in all fields;

15. Urges non-member States to act in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution;

16. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other international institutions to conform their relations with Israel to the terms of the present resolution;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Israel said the text was a blatant attempt to harm Israel and legitimize Arab, in particular Syrian, aggression, for which the Golan Heights had served as a launching pad. Instead of condemning the Syrian Arab Republic, Israel was castigated; attempts to vilify it as a non-peace-loving State were ridiculous in the light of the sacrifices it had already made for peace. Instead of calling for negotiations and conciliation, the text grotesquely called on States to refrain from supplying Israel with the necessary means of defence and sought to isolate it so that Arab warmakers were emboldened to strike across its borders.

The United States said such ritualistic exercises failed to make a positive contribution to resolving the Middle East conflict, hardened the positions of the parties and made negotiations between Israel and its Arab neighbours less likely.

In spite of its full support for the text's central theme, Sweden opposed paragraphs 12 to 16, because of their content as well as the fact that they could not be reconciled with the division of responsibilities between the Assembly and the Security Council.

In Finland's view, the text, in particular paragraphs 8 and 12 to 14, did not respect the Charter provisions on the competence of the main organs of the United Nations.

Speaking for the States members of EC, Greece said they had repeatedly stressed the need for a balanced approach; they also could not accept formulations criticizing a permanent Security Council member for exercising its right.

Though stating its support for all provisions which could bring success to peace efforts and its adherence to the rule that nullified any unilateral decision which might change the legal status of territories subjected to military occupation, Portugal dissociated itself in particular from discriminatory references or legal implications that might harm peace efforts.

New Zealand said it was disappointed that the text did not adequately reflect the balance of principles embodied in Council resolution 242(1967) and was not well calculated to contribute to a negotiated settlement.

Although abstaining, Ecuador reiterated support for the condemnation of attempts to legalize the acquisition of territory by force through a unilateral declaration.

Peru believed that certain statements and recommendations in the resolution tended to prejudice the efforts to achieve a Middle East solution within the framework of the United Nations and that the measures proposed were not the best way to begin a peace process but could lead to even greater scorn for international law and an even greater erosion of the Organization's effectiveness.

Brazil felt that Israel's complete isolation would be of no advantage to the peace process, but could, on the contrary, be a pretext for Israel to act with still greater contempt for the rule of law and for the principles of mutually respectful relations among peoples.

Urging Israel to return the Golan Heights to the Syrian Arab Republic, Bolivia said it could not agree with the drafting style and part of the text's content. In Thailand's opinion, the text did not present a complete picture and lacked balance. Speaking similarly, Singapore added it could not support texts which impinged on the sovereign right of third countries having diplomatic relations with Israel. A like view was held by Honduras and the Philippines. Colombia could not accept resolutions that condemned the conduct of only one party. Egypt said it fully supported the view that Israel's decision on the Golan Heights was null and void and that it must withdraw; however, it could not subscribe to certain negative aspects, in particular paragraph 13. Venezuela also voiced serious reservations on certain paragraphs, saying that, rather than promoting peace and understanding, they were disruptive. Though fully supporting the restitution of the Golan Heights to the Syrian Arab Republic, Argentina believed that the areas of competence of the main bodies of the United Nations must be respected. Mexico and Spain had reservations on paragraphs 12 to 14; in Mexico's view, they dealt with questions that might fall under the jurisdiction of another United Nations body. In addition, Spain reserved its position on the eighth preambular paragraph.

Israel's actions in the Golan Heights negated the principles of the 1949 fourth Geneva Convention, Security Council resolution 242(1967) and other United Nations resolutions, Nepal felt. However, Nepal reserved its position on paragraphs 8, 9 and 12 to 14 and on the fourth and eighth preambular paragraphs, adding that the measures called for were a prerogative of the Security Council.

Greece said it would have voted against paragraph 14 and would have abstained on paragraphs 8, 13 (c) and 13 (d), had separate votes been taken. Togo would have abstained in separate votes on paragraphs 8 and 12.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya reaffirmed its opposition to all direct or indirect allusions that would give a semblance of legitimacy to Israeli occupation. Iran reserved its rights with regard to any provisions that might directly or indirectly constitute recognition of what it called the Zionist entity, an artificially forged State.

West Bank officials

In 1983, the General Assembly again called on Israel to allow the return of three West Bank officials so that they could resume the functions for which they had been elected and appointed. Israel had deported the three Palestinian officials in 1980,(54) on the ground that they had systematically engaged in inciting the local Arab population to acts of violence and subversion, abusing their public offices. The Assembly also considered again the 1980 assassination attempt against the Mayors of Nablus, Ramallah and Al Bireh.(55)

Expulsion of Hebron and Halhul

Mayors and of the Islamic Judge of Hebron

Report of the Secretary-General. In June 1983,(56) the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly of Israel's response to its December 1982 demand that Israel rescind the illegal expulsion and imprisonment of the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and the expulsion of the Sharia (Islamic) Judge of Hebron.(57) He reported that, in reply to his note verbale of 10 March 1983, Israel had stated on 24 May that its position in that matter remained the same as in former years and that it would like to draw the Secretary-General's attention to the fact that the three officials had never recanted their statements and actions and had never committed themselves to desist from inciting anti-Israel hatred. In addition, Israel charged that they were engaged in a continuous anti-Israel propaganda campaign throughout the world, in co-ordination with and with the assistance of PLO.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Under the agenda item on the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, the General Assembly, on 15 December 1983, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/79 E.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 468(1980) of 8 May 1980, 469(1980) of 20 May 1980 and 484(1980) of 19 December 1980 and General Assembly resolutions 36/147 D of 16 December 1981 and 37/88 D of 10 December 1982,

Deeply concerned at the expulsion by the Israeli military occupation authorities of the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and of the Sharia Judge of Hebron,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, in particular article 1 and the first paragraph of article 49, which read as follows:

"Article 1

"The High Contracting Parties undertake to respect and to ensure respect for the present Convention in all circumstances."

"Article 49

"Individual or mass forcible transfers, as well as deportations of protected persons from occupied territory to the territory of the occupying Power or to that of any other country, occupied or not, are prohibited, regardless of their motive . . .",

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

1. Demands once more that the Government of Israel, the occupying Power, rescind the illegal measures taken by the Israeli military occupation authorities in expelling and imprisoning the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and in expelling the Sharia Judge of Hebron and that it facilitate the immediate return of the expelled Palestinian leaders so that they can resume the functions for which they were elected and appointed;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as soon as possible on the implementation of the present resolution.

Israel said the three Palestinians had openly incited Palestinian Arabs to acts of violence and subversion against Israel. Following expulsion, they had had full recourse to the Israel judicial system and the orders against them had been upheld by the Supreme Court; their belligerent behaviour attested to their total lack of remorse.

The United States said the text omitted any reference to factors contributing to the deportation; that was, however, contrary to the fourth Geneva Convention and they should be allowed to return.

Prosecution in assassination attempts

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1983,(58) the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on implementation of a December 1982 resolution(59) concerning the 1980 assassination attempts against the Mayors of Nablus, Ramallah and Al Bireh. In reply to his note verbale of 10 March 1983, the Secretary-General stated, Israel, on 27 September, had drawn his attention to its statement before the Special Political Committee in December 1982.(60)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Under the agenda item on the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, the General Assembly, on 15 December 1983, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/79 H.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 471(1980) of 5 June 1980, in which the Council condemned the assassination attempts against the Mayors of Nablus, Ramallah and Al Bireh and called for the immediate apprehension and prosecution of the perpetrators of those crimes,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 36/147 G of 16 December 1981 and 37/88 G of 10 December 1982,

“Protected persons are entitled, in all circumstances, to respect for their persons. They shall at all times be humanely treated, and shall be protected especially against all acts of violence or threats thereof...”,

Reaffirming the applicability of that Convention to the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

1. Expresses deep concern that Israel, the occupying Power, has failed for three years to apprehend and prosecute the perpetrators of the assassination attempts;

2. Demands once more that Israel, the occupying Power, inform the Secretary-General of the results of the investigations relative to the assassination attempts;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Against: Israel.

Abstaining: United States.

Expressing sympathy for the victims and condemning those responsible, the United States said it could not support a text maligning the Israeli legal process and implying, without offering evidence, that the Israeli authorities were not making any effort to apprehend and prosecute the would-be assassins.

The United Arab Emirates said that the Israeli authorities had ordered that the identity of the criminals not be revealed and the security services had not been empowered to pursue investigations since such acts were fundamental to Israel's settlements policy; it was clear that the military authorities were involved in the affair, since terrorists could not act in the occupied territories without the authorities' consent.

West Bank students

The alleged mass poisoning of Palestinian schoolgirls in the West Bank was the subject of several communications in 1983. Following informal consultations, the President of the Security Council made a statement on 4 April requesting the Secretary-General to inquire into the problem and report on the findings. In pursuance of that request, the World Health Organization (WHO) conducted an independent investigation.

Communications (March/April). On 29 March,(61) Jordan transmitted to the President of the Security Council a letter of the same date from the Deputy Permanent Observer of PLO, alleging that more than 1,000 Palestinian schoolgirls in the West Bank had been poisoned as part of a new phase in Israel's campaign against the Palestinians, and calling on the United Nations to form an international medical committee to investigate, document and report on the poisoning.

The illness among Arab schoolgirls in the West Bank was the subject of a number of other communications.

On 30 March,(62) the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights stated that local residents believed the illness to have been induced by some kind of poison, perhaps gas, in the girls' classrooms. Pending results of investigations, by ICRC and the United Nations, among others, the Chairman urged the Secretary-General to exercise his office to ascertain the full extent, cause and perpetrators of that event.

By a letter dated 31 March,(63) Iraq, as Chairman of the Arab Group, requested an urgent Security Council meeting to discuss the situation.

On 3 April,(64) Israel rejected the charges by Iraq and Jordan as unfounded, and asserted that extensive clinical, laboratory and environmental analyses by Israeli medical authorities had yielded no traces of poisoning. Nevertheless, it added, the Ministry of Health had requested international health authorities, among them WHO, to assess independently the causes of the phenomenon.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 4 April, the Security Council President issued the following statement on behalf of the Council members:(65)

"The members of the Security Council have met in informal consultations with great concern on 4 April 1983 to discuss cases of mass poisoning in the occupied Arab territory of the West Bank as referred to in document S/15673.

"The members of the Security Council request the Secretary-General to conduct independent inquiries concerning the causes and effects of the serious problem of the reported cases of poisoning and urgently to report on the findings."

By a letter of 5 April,(66) Israel rejected the Council's statement, asserting that it did not take into account the investigations by Israeli medical authorities and other medical teams, and that it contained an unwarranted reference to cases of mass poisoning; the request for an independent inquiry by the Secretary-General was therefore unjustified.

Report of the Secretary-General. In pursuance of the Security Council's request of 4 April, the Secretary-General submitted on 10 May a report(67) indicating that he had contacted the Director-General of WHO and had requested that an independent inquiry be conducted. In his report annexed to the Secretary-General's report, the Director-General gave an overview of WHO's investigations and findings. In his conclusions, he stated that the WHO inquiry had not been able to indicate any specific cause of the reported health emergency; however, the initial medical records and interviews with cases in the first outbreak and with local health and other authorities suggested that an environmental agent could have provoked at least some cases.

The Director-General recommended that, in view of the anxiety under which the population lived in the occupied territories and given the susceptibility of girls during adolescence, everything possible should be done to protect the local population from unnecessary alarm. For that purpose, WHO presence should be made available in the event of any suspected recrudescence of the ill-defined health emergency, so that all could feel reassured. He added that although it appeared unlikely that the patients would suffer any significant sequelae, there should be provision for clinical follow-up by WHO should any of them or their families so request.

Referring to the Director-General's conclusions as well as to the findings of several other medical authorities, Israel, in a letter of 25 August,(68) stated that they were fully corroborated by the conclusions reached in medical literature on similar phenomena in other countries. Israel noted with regret the Council's silence on the matter since the publication of the Director-General's and other reports.

Economic and social conditions

Both the current and future economic and social conditions of Palestinians in the occupied territories were studied by the Organization in 1983. The living conditions of Palestinians were the subject of reports by the Secretary-General and UNTAD. The General Assembly, in December, adopted resolution 38/166 on the subject.

Living conditions of Palestinians

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in December 1982,(69) the Secretary-General submitted in June 1983 a report on the living conditions of Palestinians in the occupied territories, prepared with the help of three experts.(70) Since permission to visit the occupied territories had not been granted by the Israeli Government, the experts had had to rely on secondary information sources. From 11 February to 24 March, they had visited Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, where they had had discussions with government and United Nations officials. Discussions had also been held with PLO officials at Damascus and Amman. Meetings had been held with five professors who had been expelled from universities in the West Bank in October 1982, the former Mayors of Halhul and East Jerusalem, the head of the PLO Palestinian Fund, and Palestinians living outside the territories. The experts had also gathered information from several United Nations organizations.

In their report, the experts considered physical factors such as housing, infrastructure, land and settlements, and water resources; economic factors such as employment, income, gross domestic product and gross national product, capital formation, consumption and savings, taxation, sectoral structure of the economy, agriculture and industry; and social and cultural factors, including education and health care.

Summarizing their findings, the experts stated that the shortages of basic facilities in the territories were quite evident and infrastructural facilities were not commensurate with the growing needs of the Palestinian communities. They observed a tendency to segregate services provided to Israeli settlements and Palestinian towns and villages in certain sectors, such as postal services, telecommunications, agriculture and industry. There was pressure on the Palestinian communities to obtain other services, such as water and electricity, from a common network serving the Israeli settlements as well as Israel. The continual expropriation of land by the occupying authorities had reduced the land available to the Palestinian residents; the increase in the establishment of Israeli settlements and their location on the periphery of Arab towns and villages had become an obstacle to the growth and expansion of the latter.

Though the economy of the occupied territories had improved, it continued to be handicapped by lack of long-term planning and programming designed to generate development for the benefit of the indigenous population. The trend had been towards further integration of the economy with that of Israel, thus exposing it to a high rate of inflation. The level of taxation was a burden to the Arab population, as certain elements of the Israeli tax system were not in consonance with the underdeveloped nature of the economy of the territories. Local employment had been falling in the agricultural and industrial sectors and rising in all other sectors. More workers from the territories were commuting to Israel, where their conditions of employment had not shown any appreciable improvement. That almost two thirds of the labour force was in one way or another working in and for the Israeli economy was a deterrent to initiating employment opportunities within the territories that would serve indigenous economic interests.

Agriculture continued to be hindered by loss of land through continuing expropriation, lack of capital for improving production methods and shrinkage in markets. The structure of industry had not shown any significant change over the years of occupation; it was dominated by small enterprises, a high proportion of which were in sub-sectors executing orders for Israeli enterprises. The industrial sector was handicapped by a lack of capital for improving buildings and equipment, difficulties in importing new technology, export restrictions and competition from Israeli products.

The social and cultural conditions of the Palestinians in the territories had continued to deteriorate. The traditional family pattern was breaking down owing to pressures caused by incomes that were inadequate to meet escalating costs of living. Daily activities had been disrupted by frequent curfews, the ever-present possibility of confrontation with Israeli settlers and restrictions in movement, association and expression. Arab residents were deprived of many Arab-language books and periodicals, and there had been instances where Israeli settlers had interfered with their freedom of worship.

Although school facilities had kept pace with increased enrolment, the content of education did not seem to be progressing along the lines of curricula development in Egypt and Jordan. Many books were revised for or barred from use in the educational system in the territories, which followed the Jordanian system in the West Bank and the Egyptian system in Gaza. West Bank universities had had many set-backs during the preceding years, including the dismissal and deportation of professors and new regulations affecting financial support from abroad. The closing of universities in the wake of demonstrations and frequent arrests and interrogation of students suspected of participating in them also had interfered with the quality of education.

With regard to the health sector, the availability of hospital beds had not kept pace with population growth or the numbers seeking hospital care. Reporting of health data did not follow a uniform pattern for the territories. The efficiency of the health care system continued to be hampered by limitations in equipment, qualified staff and distribution of drugs, with some shortcomings having been remedied to some extent through inputs from international organizations and local voluntary associations as well as the Red Crescent Society.

UNCTAD report and Trade and Development Board action. The economic and social conditions in the occupied territories were also considered in a May 1983 report⁽⁷¹⁾ submitted to the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD. The report, prepared by P. G. Sadler, former Director of the Institute for the Study of Sparsely Populated Areas, University of Aberdeen, United Kingdom, and Bakir Abu Kishk, Director of Bir Zeit University Research Centre, was a follow-up to a similar one submitted in 1981.⁽⁷²⁾ Entitled "Palestine: options for development", the 1983 report gave an overview and statistical data on population and manpower, land, water resources, agriculture, industry, foreign trade, balance of payments, housing, education, electricity, transport and health care delivery. In addition, it examined constraints to the economy and future development prospects, concluding that the main preoccupation of an independent Palestinian State would be with the enormous difficulties of providing resources for reconstruction, absorbing a large number of returning exiles and employing the substantial labour force currently employed in Israel but residing in the occupied territories.

In taking note of the report of Sessional Committee I, the Board, on 20 October,⁽⁷³⁾ took note of the consultants' report. It also took note of an oral report by an UNCTAD secretariat representative on action taken to implement UNCTAD resolution 146(VI) on assistance to the Palestinian people (see above, under PALESTINE QUESTION). The representative stated that provision had been made in the proposed United Nations programme budget for 1984-1985 for setting up within UNCTAD a Special Economic Unit on assistance to the Palestinians, as requested by that resolution; the matter was under consideration by the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1983, acting on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/166.

Living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Vancouver Declaration on Human Settlements, 1976, and the relevant recommendations for national action adopted by Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements,

Recalling further its resolution 37/222 of 20 December 1982,

Taking note of resolution 6/2 adopted by the Commission on Human Settlements on 4 May 1983,

2. Takes note also of the statement made on 1 November 1983 by the observer of the Palestine Liberation Organization;

3. Rejects the Israeli plans and actions intended to change the demographic composition of the occupied Palestinian territories, particularly the increase and expansion of the Israeli settlements, and other plans and actions creating conditions leading to the displacement and exodus of Palestinians from the occupied Palestinian territories;

4. Expresses its alarm at the deterioration in the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967 as a result of the Israeli occupation;

5. Affirms that the Israeli occupation is contradictory to the basic requirements for the social and economic development of the Palestinian people in the occupied West Bank and the Gaza Strip;

6. Calls upon the Israeli occupation authorities to give United Nations experts access to the occupied Palestinian territories;

7. Recognizes the need for a comprehensive report on the impact of the Israeli settlements on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare and submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, through the Economic and Social Council, a comprehensive report on the current and future impact of the Israeli settlements on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories, including a comparison between the living conditions of the latter and those of the residents of the Israeli settlements.

Against: Israel, United States.

Israel rejected the resolution as biased and based on false allegations; by perpetuating lies, the Arab States discredited the significant achievements made by the Palestinian Arab inhabitants of the areas. Rather than the comparative study called for in paragraph 8, a study should be made comparing living conditions in the territories before and after 1967. For example, agricultural production had doubled between 1970 and 1980 and the area under irrigation by Arab farmers had increased by 60 per cent since 1968. Moreover, Israel was encouraging and facilitating industrial development and free trade. Israel said the assertion of a demographic change was ludicrous in view of the fact that in the midst of 1,186,000 Arabs there were only a few thousand Israelis whose presence created the form of coexistence essential to peace between the two peoples.

The United States believed that the text would further exacerbate tensions; the report called for would cost $81,000, not one cent of which would find its way to needy Palestinians. Belgium hoped that implementing paragraph 8 would not involve extra 1983-1985 budget allocations, a view shared by the United Kingdom.

Chile stated that it did not share all views expressed in the text; political matters had no place in a text of a humanitarian nature.

Canada stressed the need to improve living conditions in the territories; it also noted that language which it had had difficulties with in previous years had been omitted from the text.

Norway pointed out that it understood the phrase "occupied Palestinian territories" to mean territories occupied by Israel since 1967.

Speaking on 1 November before the Committee, PLO said that, although the Secretary-General's report was not complete, it illustrated the steady deterioration of the Palestinians' living conditions. Israeli occupation was based on the exploitation of the material and human resources of the territories. The Palestinians were denied their inalienable rights because of Israeli occupation and would not be able to ensure their economic development until they had regained their national rights.

Mediterranean-Dead Sea canal project

In 1983, Israel's plan of March 1981(74) to construct a 67-mile hydraulic structure to channel water from the Mediterranean Sea to the Dead Sea for electric power generation, was the subject of a resolution of the General Assembly (38/85) and a decision of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP). The effects of the project, under which part of the conduit would pass through the Gaza Strip, occupied by Israel since 1967, were studied by experts appointed by the Secretary-General. A report on the environmental consequences of the project was submitted by the UNEP Executive Director.

Report of the UNEP Executive Director. As requested by the UNEP Governing Council in May 1982,(75) the UNEP Executive Director submitted in February 1983 a report on the environmental consequences of Israel's project.(76) Summarizing the findings, which were based on background studies, reports from Jordan and a workshop held at Nairobi, Kenya (31 January and 1 February)-Israel not having replied to the request for technical information-the report enumerated the following possible adverse environmental consequences: accidental contamination of regional aquifers and their water resources; disturbance of farmland in the coastal lands of the Gaza Strip; and changes in level, stratification and chemistry of the Dead Sea water which would cause inundation of land around its shores and would affect the potash industry.

UNEP Council action. Taking note of the Executive Director's report, the UNEP Governing Council, on 23 May 1983,(77) recalled that the Assembly, in a December 1982 resolution,(78) had demanded that Israel not construct the canal and cease all action or plans towards implementation of the project, and had called on States, specialized agencies and organizations not to assist in the project preparations and execution. The Council requested the Executive Director to facilitate the Secretary-General's work in monitoring and assessing, on a continuing basis, all aspects-especially ecological ones-of the adverse effects on Jordan and the territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, arising from the project's implementation.

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with the December 1982 Assembly resolution,(78) the Secretary-General, in October 1983, submitted to the Assembly a report on Israel's decision to build the canal.(79) Annexed was a report of four United Nations experts who, during their visit to Jordan from 28 June to 6 July, had held discussions with government officials and others concerned and had visited various areas around the Dead Sea, particularly the potash works at its southern end. In their report, the experts dealt with the legal dimensions, and the impacts on potash production, agriculture, settlements, infrastructure, recreation and health care facilities, archaeological sites, and environment in Jordan.

The experts observed that, from the evidence available, it appeared that the Israeli proposal to divert water from the Mediterranean into the Dead Sea, was, from a strictly technical point of view, feasible. Given engineering techniques already available, safeguards could probably be built into the project to minimize the risk: of rupture of the conduit through seismic activity, and consequent leakage into aquifers through which the pipeline would pass.

However, they cautioned, in so far as the proposed route crossed the Gaza Strip, principles of international law relating to belligerent occupation would be applicable; specifically, a permanent installation constructed in an occupied territory for the benefit of the occupying State would encounter "unsurmountable legal obstacles".

In the experts' view, Jordan would suffer appreciable harm, at least with respect to its vital potash industry. Under prevailing legal views, Jordan's consent would be an essential pre-condition for implementing the project. Losses in other sectors appeared very difficult to assess except in broad qualitative terms; however, the experts stated, there were uncertainties relating to such matters as the potential effects of the mixing of the waters of the Mediterranean with those of the Dead Sea and impacts on agriculture. The experts concluded by suggesting that a broader approach to the question would make possible a much higher level of use and the net gains of each co-riparian would be much greater than was likely to result from the current approach.

In reply to the experts' report, Israel submitted on 8 August supplementary material on the project, which was transmitted to the Assembly as an addendum to the Secretary-General's report.(80)

By another addendum, dated 7 December,(81) the Secretary-General confirmed, in answer to the concern expressed in the Special Political Committee, that he had received Israel's answer on 8 August, as a result of his efforts to obtain Israel's co-operation in implementing the December 1982 Assembly resolution demanding that Israel not construct the canal.(78) Israel's response had been received, unfortunately, after the experts had completed their work; the publication of that response had been made without prejudice to the experts' position as reflected in their report, and did not imply any evaluation of the information provided by Israel.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/85.

Israel's decision to build a canal linking the Mediterranean Sea to the Dead Sea

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/150 of 16 December 1981 and 37/122 of 16 December 1982,

Recalling the rules and principles of international law relative to the fundamental rights and duties of States,

Bearing in mind the principles of international law relative to belligerent occupation of land, including the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and reaffirming their applicability to all Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Recognizing that the proposed canal, to be constructed partly through the Gaza Strip, a Palestinian territory occupied in 1967, would violate the principles of international law and affect the interests of the Palestinian people,

Confident that the canal linking the Mediterranean Sea with the Dead Sea, if constructed by Israel, will cause direct, serious and irreparable damage to Jordan's rights and legitimate and vital interests in the economic, agricultural, demographic and ecological fields,

Noting with regret the non-compliance by Israel with General Assembly resolution 36/150,

1. Deplores Israel's non-compliance with General Assembly resolution 37/122 and its refusal to receive the team of experts;

2. Emphasizes that the canal linking the Mediterranean Sea with the Dead Sea, if constructed, is a violation of the rules and principles of international law, especially those relating to the fundamental rights and duties of States and to belligerent occupation of land;

3. Demands that Israel not construct this canal and cease forthwith all actions taken and/or plans made towards the implementation of this project;

4. Calls upon all States, specialized agencies and governmental and non-governmental organizations not to assist, directly or indirectly, in the preparation and execution of this project and strongly urges national, international and multinational corporations to do likewise;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to monitor and assess, on a continuing basis and through a competent expert organ, all aspects-juridical, political, economic, ecological and demographic-of the adverse effects on Jordan and on the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, arising from the implementation of the Israeli decision to construct this canal and to forward the findings of that organ on a regular basis to the General Assembly;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-ninth session the item entitled "Israel's decision to build a canal linking the Mediterranean Sea to the Dead Sea".

Introducing the draft, Jordan stated that it sought to avoid the undesirable effects of implementing the Israeli project, which would seriously damage Jordan's economic, political, ecological and other rights and interests and was contrary to the principles of international law relative to belligerent occupation of territory.

Israel said it could not support a text which gave no indication of any effort having been made to examine objectively the actual situation. Moreover, the Committee had not requested clarifications from Jordan on its project for a canal linking the Red Sea to the Dead Sea, implementation of which would have exactly the same effects as the Israeli project.

Education

As requested by the General Assembly, the Secretary-General submitted in October 1983 a report⁽⁸²⁾ on implementation of a December 1982 resolution⁽⁸³⁾ demanding that Israel rescind all measures against educational institutions in the occupied territories. Replying to a note verbale of 10 March 1983, Israel, on 27 September, rejected what it called accusations in that resolution, adding that since 1967 the number of pupils and classes had increased considerably and academic activity on the university campuses and at other educational institutions was conducted without Israeli interference. However, when security was likely to be endangered by virulent demonstrations outside the confines of the campus, authorities were obliged by international law to restore public order and safety; Israel's actions could in no way be interpreted as a "systematic Israeli campaign of repression against and closing of universities".

By a letter of 4 November,⁽⁸⁴⁾ the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights expressed the Committee's concern at Israel's decision to close down Bethlehem University in the West Bank, based partly on an exhibition entitled "Palestinian Heritage" held at the University. Israel's repressive policy, the Chairman added, could only aggravate the extremely tense situation in the occupied territories and increase the threat to international peace and security; it was therefore urgent that the strictest respect for United Nations resolutions be ensured, in particular those aimed at enabling Palestinians to exercise their rights.

The Committee on Israeli practices in the occupied territories, in its 1983 report,⁽¹⁴⁾ also provided information on measures affecting the right to freedom of education, including attempts to apply a 1980 Military Order, which required professors and students to obtain a permit to teach and attend universities. The Committee noted that schools and universities in the territories had been repeatedly closed by the authorities, causing serious disruption in the academic life. In its conclusions, the Committee expressed the hope that the attention it had focused in its report on measures affecting the right to freedom of education might lead to a realization of the need for urgent action by the occupying authorities to curtail the cycle of violence provoked by the denial of that right.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1983, under the agenda item on the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/79 G.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Deeply shocked by the most recent atrocities committed by Israel, the occupying Power, against educational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territories,

1. Reaffirms the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

2. Condemns Israeli policies and practices against Palestinian students and faculties in schools, universities and other educational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territories, especially the policy of opening fire on defenceless students, causing many casualties;

3. Condemns the systematic Israeli campaign of repression against and closing of universities in the occupied Palestinian territories, restricting and impeding the academic activities of Palestinian universities by subjecting the selection of courses, textbooks and educational programmes, the admission of students and the appointment of faculty members to the control and supervision of the military occupation authorities, in clear contravention of the Geneva Convention;

4. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply with the provisions of that Convention, rescind all actions and measures against all educational institutions, ensure the freedom of those institutions and refrain forthwith from hindering the effective operation of the universities and other educational institutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution before the end of 1984.

Israel reiterated that since 1967 vast improvements had taken place in the educational system in the areas under its administration. The number of pupils had increased from 200,000 to 400,000. There had been no universities and only a few institutes of higher learning, while there were four university-level institutions in 1983 and vocational training had taken a great leap forward. Terrorist-oriented disruptions in high schools and universities, however, were PLO policy, and Israel would do its utmost to stop them. The text completely ignored all that; its emphasis was not on education but on attempts to sabotage it.

Sweden said that the text, as those adopted in previous years, contained generalizations which were too sweeping. The United States also found the condemnatory language unacceptable, but agreed that there were aspects of Israeli policy towards academic institutions in the territories which were open to criticism.

By two other resolutions of 15 December, pertaining to Palestine refugees, the Assembly appealed for grants and scholarships for higher education and vocational training (38/83 D), and emphasized the need for the establishment of a university at Jerusalem (38/83 K).

Permanent sovereignty over resources

Reports of the Secretary-General. In June 1983, the Secretary-General submitted, in accordance with a December 1982 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁸⁵⁾ two reports: one on the permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories,⁽⁸⁶⁾ and the other on the implications, under international law, of United Nations resolutions on permanent sovereignty over natural resources, on the occupied territories, and on Israel's obligations concerning its conduct in those territories.⁽⁸⁷⁾

Annexed to the first report was another prepared by consultants under the supervision of the Natural Resources and Energy Division, United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development. The consultants' report was based on data in reports of United Nations organs and agencies; information from Governments, PLO and specialized research organizations; and other published material. As efforts to obtain access to the occupied territories had been unsuccessful, the consultants stated, the information presented was limited; every effort had been made, however, also to use Israeli sources and to obtain first-hand information from the territories, through co-operation with and fact-finding missions organized by various United Nations agencies, including UNRWA, and United Nations experts visiting neighbouring countries.

The report dealt with national sovereignty and political institutions; judicial protection; natural resources, including land, water and mineral resources; human resources; economic policies; and cultural resources and values. Concerning follow-up and implementation, the consultants proposed, pending a settlement of basic political issues, certain practical interim measures, among them: land conservation should guide United Nations-sponsored technical co-operation; developments affecting permanent sovereignty over resources in the territories should be monitored; an in-depth study could be made, with a focus on the policies relating to water, but also dealing with the quarrying industry and other resources; and the Assembly could consider ways to increase the opportunities for marketing Palestinian products, could call for a strengthening of bilateral technical co-operation programmes in the territories and could request the United Nations to encourage such assistance and prepare suitable projects.

Annexed to the Secretary-General's second report was one prepared by legal expert Blaine Sloan, Professor of International Law and Organization at Pace University School of Law, White Plains, New York. It examined the development of the principle of permanent sovereignty over natural resources and analysed United Nations resolutions, in particular as they applied to the occupied territories and to Israel's obligations as an occupying Power. Among the implications of United Nations resolutions, the expert considered the following: The primary right of peoples and nations to permanent sovereignty over their natural resources was a right freely to use, control and dispose of such resources; full exercise of that right could take place only with the restoration of control over the occupied territories to the States and peoples concerned; the occupying Power was under an obligation not to interfere with the exercise of permanent sovereignty by the population; under the law of belligerent occupation, natural resources could not be used by the occupying Power beyond the limits imposed by the Regulations respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, annexed to Convention IV of The Hague of 1907, and the 1949 fourth Geneva Convention, i.e., land and other resources could not be taken for settlements or be permanently acquired for any purposes; and the right to reparation for any loss or damage to natural resources as a result of violations of the rules of belligerent occupation could be reinforced.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1983/178 of 28 July 1983, adopted without vote, the Economic and Social Council took note of the two reports.

Permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories

At its 40th plenary meeting, on 28 July 1983, the Council took note of the reports of the Secretary-General on permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories and on the implications, under international law, of the United Nations resolutions on permanent sovereignty over natural resources, on the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories and on the obligations of Israel concerning its conduct in those territories.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1983, acting on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 38/144.

Permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/135 of 17 December 1982, Recalling also its previous resolutions on permanent sovereignty over natural resources,

Bearing in mind the relevant principles of international law and the provisions of the international conventions and regulations, in particular Convention IV of The Hague of 1907, and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, concerning the obligations and responsibilities of the occupying Power,

Bearing in mind also the pertinent provisions of its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, and 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories;

2. Commends the report of the Secretary-General on the implications, under international law, of the United Nations resolutions on permanent sovereignty over natural resources, on the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories and on the obligations of Israel concerning its conduct in these territories;

3. Condemns Israel for its exploitation of the national resources of the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories;

4. Reaffirms that Convention IV of The Hague of 1907 and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, are applicable to the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories;

5. Emphasizes the right of the Palestinian and other Arab peoples whose territories are under Israeli occupation to full and effective permanent sovereignty and control over their natural and all other resources, wealth and economic activities;

6. Also reaffirms that all measures undertaken by Israel to exploit the human, natural and all other resources, wealth and economic activities in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories are illegal, and calls upon Israel to desist immediately from such measures;

7. Further reaffirms the right of the Palestinian and other Arab peoples subjected to Israeli aggression and occupation to the restitution of, and full compensation for the exploitation, depletion and loss of and damage to, their natural, human and all other resources, wealth and economic activities, and calls upon Israel to meet their just claims;

8. Calls upon all States to support the Palestinian and other Arab peoples in the exercise of their above-mentioned rights;

9. Calls upon all States, international organizations, specialized agencies, business corporations and all other institutions not to recognize, or co-operate with or assist in any manner in, any measures undertaken by Israel to exploit the national resources of the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories or to effect any changes in the demographic composition, the character and form of use of their natural resources or the institutional structure of those territories;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to elaborate on his report in order to cover also, in detail, the resources exploited by the Israeli settlements and the Israeli-imposed regulations and policies hampering the economic development of the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including a comparison between the practices of Israel and its obligations under international law;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit the detailed report to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, through the Economic and Social Council.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Burma, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden, United Kingdom.

Israel rejected its condemnation in the text which, it added, presented a distorted picture, sought to impose an irrelevant decision of no practical significance, was motivated solely by hostility to Israel, and was intentionally based on distorted information and a predetermined decision to deny any positive achievements in the territories. The situation there was in complete contrast to what could be inferred from the text, the adoption of which would not affect the existing situation in any way. Paragraph 10 was a further example of the United Nations legal services being abused to produce one-sided reports to satisfy political aims, regardless of the true state of affairs; Israel had been trying to develop the resources of the territories and improve the standard of living there.

The United States considered the expenditure of United Nations resources for a further report to be unjustified, and felt that the text was wholly political and raised issues which could be solved only by direct negotiations between the parties concerned. With regard to the financial implications, the United Kingdom hoped that there would be some offsetting savings.

Chile did not support paragraph 3, saying it would not contribute to co-operation. Zaire also had reservations on that paragraph, stating that it seemed to condemn Israel as a country, whereas the general practice was to condemn the policy of a country. Portugal reserved its position on paragraph 7.

Austria stressed that it supported the text's general thrust but agreed with its specific wording only in so far as it conformed to international law. Japan hoped that the problem of the natural resources in the territories would be solved expeditiously, in conformity with international law. Turkey expressed its support for the text in accordance with its well-known views on the Middle East and Palestine questions. The USSR expressed full support for the Palestinians' and other Arab peoples' right of sovereignty over natural resources in occupied Arab lands.

Introducing the draft, Senegal emphasized that the right of peoples and nations to permanent sovereignty over their natural resources had been accepted as a principle of international law, whose validity had been recognized by the Assembly in 1972.⁽⁸⁸⁾

Palestine refugees

UN Agency for Palestine refugees

In 1983, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) continued to provide assistance to Palestine refugees in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and the Israeli-occupied territories of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. It maintained its own schools, training establishments, clinics and health centres, and it procured and distributed food rations to needy refugees.

In December, the General Assembly adopted 11 resolutions relating to UNRWA and Palestine refugees. Resolution 38/83 A dealt with assistance to Palestine refugees and resolution 38/83 B with the Working Group on the financing of UNRWA. The other resolutions were on the following topics (for details, see below): assistance to displaced persons (38/83 C); refugee protection (38/83 D); property rights (38/83 E); food aid to Palestine refugees (38/83 F); scholarships for higher education and vocational training (38/83 G); a proposed University of Jerusalem for Palestinian students (38/83 H); proposed repatriation of displaced refugees (38/83 I); and Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip (38/83 J) and in the West Bank (38/83 K).

UNRWA activities

In the aftermath of the Israeli invasion of Lebanon in June 1982,⁽¹⁾ UNRWA continued in 1983 its emergency relief programme there, providing shelter, food and other supplies to Palestine refugees, regardless of whether or not they were registered with the Agency. During the year, UNRWA started a comprehensive programme of reconstructing UNRWA installations, camp infrastructure and refugee housing.
