The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for a further year and asked him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 2001 and to report to the Commission in 2002, applying a gender perspective. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Special Rapporteur and to approve the allocation of resources to send human rights monitors to locations that would facilitate improved information on the human rights situation in Iraq. The Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision on 24 July (decision 2001/250).

Communications. The Commission had before it notes verbales from Iraq on Iraqi missing persons [E/CN.4/2001/122] and on Kuwaiti missing persons [E/CN.4/2001/124]. Iraq also submitted a document on the sanctions imposed on it [E/CN.4/2001/127] (see p. 298), which, it stated, constituted a violation of international law.

Iraq, in a 31 May note verbale [E/CN.4/2002/4], asserted that Commission resolution 2001/14 lacked objectivity and contained fallacies designed to distort the facts and mislead Commission members.

Subcommission action. On 16 August [E/CN.4/2002/2 (dec. 2001/115)], the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights appealed to the international community and to the Security Council for the embargo provisions affecting the humanitarian situation of the Iraqi population to be lifted and urged the international community and all Governments, including Iraq, to alleviate the suffering of Iraqis, particularly by facilitating the delivery of food, medical supplies and the wherewithal to meet their basic needs.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In response to General Assembly resolution 55/115 [YUN 2000, p. 761] and the Commission's April request, Special Rapporteur Andreas Mavrommatis (Cyprus) submitted to the Assembly a September report [A/56/340] covering the period from 1 December 2000 to 15 July 2001. He stated that he continued to receive written allegations, reports and communications claiming human rights violations by the Government of Iraq. The allegations related to torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; extrajudicial killings and arbitrary executions; the imposition of the death sentence for crimes that were not serious enough to justify it; persecution on account of political affiliation, ethnicity and religious affiliation; forced population transfers (Arabization); arbitrary arrest and detention; and the lack of fair trial and due process of law. He also received information regarding the humanitarian situation in Iraq as a result of the sanctions regime imposed on the country, the violation of women's rights, and Kuwaitis unaccounted for since Iraq's occupation of Kuwait.

The Special Rapporteur urged the Government to continue its dialogue with the United Nations, remove restrictions on the exercise of religious freedom, revise laws regarding the death penalty and consider a moratorium on executions, ensure that no person was relocated against his or her will, investigate the fate of all missing persons, join the work of the Tripartite Commission and its Technical Subcommittee, established to facilitate work on the issue of missing Kuwaitis (see p. 293), pay attention to allegations of human rights violations against women and examine all allegations of human rights violations. Annexed to the report were a list of letters from the Special Rapporteur to the Government and replies thereto received as at 22 July and sample correspondence between the Special Rapporteur and the Government regarding religious persecution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/56/583/Add.3], adopted resolution 56/174 by recorded vote (100-2-63) [agenda item 119 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Iraq

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other human rights instruments,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Mindful that Iraq is a party to the International Covenants on Human Rights, other international human rights instruments and the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of victims of war,

Recalling its previous resolutions and those of the Commission on Human Rights on the subject, and taking note of the most recent, Commission resolution 2001/14 of 18 April 2001,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 686(1991) of 2 March 1991, in which the Council called upon Iraq to release all Kuwaitis and nationals of other States who might still be held in detention, Council resolution

687(1991) of 3 April 1991, Council resolution 688(1991) of 5 April 1991, in which the Council demanded an end to repression of the Iraqi civilian population and insisted that Iraq cooperate with humanitarian organizations and that the human rights of all Iraqi citizens be respected, Council resolutions 986(1995) of 14 April 1995, 1111(1997) of 4 June 1997, 1129(1997) of 12 September 1997, 1143(1997) of 4 December 1997, 1153(1998) of 20 February 1998, 1175(1998) of 19 June 1998, 1210(1998) of 24 November 1998, 1242(1999) of 21 May 1999, 1266(1999) of 4 October 1999, 1281(1999) of 10 December 1999, 1302(2000) of 8 June 2000, 1330(2000) of 5 December 2000, 1352(2001) of 1 June 2001 and 1360(2001) of 3 July 2001, in which the Council authorized States to permit imports of Iraqi oil in order to allow Iraq to purchase humanitarian supplies, and Council resolution 1284(1999) of 17 December 1999, in which the Council, by means of a comprehensive approach to the situation in Iraq, inter alia, removed the ceiling for the allowable import of Iraqi oil in order to increase the amount of revenue available for the purchase of humanitarian supplies, laid down new provisions and procedures designed to improve the implementation of the humanitarian programme and to further achievement in meeting the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi population and reiterated the obligation of Iraq to facilitate the repatriation of all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals referred to in paragraph 30 of Council resolution 687(1991),

Taking note of the concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Committee on the Rights of the Child and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women on the recent reports submitted to them by Iraq, in which these treaty-monitoring bodies point to a wide range of human rights problems and express the view that the Government of Iraq remains bound by its treaty obligations, while pointing to the adverse effect of sanctions on the daily life of the population, in particular women and children,

Reaffirming that it is the responsibility of the Government of Iraq to ensure the well-being of its entire population and the full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, concerned about the dire situation in Iraq, which affects the population, in particular children, as stated in the reports of several United Nations human rights treaty bodies, and appealing to all concerned to fulfil their mutual obligations in the management of the humanitarian programme established by the Security Council in its resolution 986(1995),

1. Welcomes the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Iraq and the observations, conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

2. Notes with dismay that there has been no improvement in the situation of human rights in the country;

3. Strongly condemns:

(a) The systematic, widespread and extremely grave violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law by the Government of Iraq, resulting in all-pervasive repression and oppression sustained by broad-based discrimination and widespread terror;

(b) The suppression of freedom of thought, expression, information, association, assembly and movement through fear of arrest, imprisonment, execution, expulsion, house demolition and other sanctions;

(c) The repression faced by any kind of opposition, in particular the harassment and intimidation of and threats against Iraqi opponents living abroad and members of their families;

(d) The widespread use of the death penalty in disregard of the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the United Nations safeguards;

(e) Summary and arbitrary executions, including political killings and the continued so-called clean-out of prisons, the use of rape as a political tool, as well as enforced or involuntary disappearances, routinely practised arbitrary arrests and detention and consistent and routine failure to respect due process and the rule of law;

(f) Widespread, systematic torture and the maintaining of decrees prescribing cruel and inhuman punishment as a penalty for offences;

4. Calls upon the Government of Iraq:

(a) To abide by its freely undertaken obligations under international human rights treaties and international humanitarian law to respect and ensure the rights of all individuals, irrespective of their origin, ethnicity, gender or religion, within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction;

(b) To put an end to all summary and arbitrary executions and to ensure that capital punishment will not be imposed for crimes other than the most serious and will not be pronounced in disregard of the obligations assumed under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the provisions of United Nations safeguards;

(c) To bring the actions of its military and security forces into conformity with the standards of international law, in particular those of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

(d) To cooperate with United Nations human rights mechanisms, in particular by inviting the Special Rapporteur to visit the country and allowing the stationing of human rights monitors throughout Iraq pursuant to the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights;

(e) To establish the independence of the judiciary and abrogate all laws granting impunity to specified forces or persons killing or injuring individuals for any purpose beyond the administration of justice under the rule of law as prescribed by international standards;

(f) To abrogate all decrees that prescribe cruel and inhuman punishment or treatment, including mutilation, and to ensure that torture and cruel punishment and treatment no longer occur;

(g) To abrogate all laws and procedures, including Revolution Command Council Decree No. 840 of 4 November 1986, that penalize free expression, and to ensure that the genuine will of the people shall be the basis of authority of the State;

(h) To ensure free exercise of political opposition and to prevent intimidation and repression of political opponents and their families;

(i) To respect the rights of all ethnic and religious groups and to cease immediately its continued repressive practices aimed at the Iraqi Kurds, Assyrians and Turkmen, including the practice of forced deportation and relocation, and to ensure the personal integrity and freedoms of all citizens, including the Shi'a population;

(j) To cooperate with the Tripartite Commission and its Technical Subcommittee to establish the whereabouts and resolve the fate of the remaining several hundred missing persons, including prisoners of war, Kuwaiti nationals and third-country nationals, victims of the illegal Iraqi occupation of Kuwait, to cooperate with the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances of the Commission on Human Rights for that purpose, to cooperate with the high-level coordinator of the Secretary-General for Kuwaitis and third-country nationals and Kuwaiti property, to pay compensation to the families of those who died or disappeared in the custody of the Iraqi authorities, through the mechanism established by the Security Council in resolution 692(1991) of 20 May 1991, to release immediately all Kuwaitis and nationals of other States who may still be held in detention and inform families about the whereabouts of arrested persons, to provide information about death sentences imposed on prisoners of war and civilian detainees and to issue death certificates for deceased prisoners of war and civilian detainees;

(k) To cooperate further with international aid agencies and non-governmental organizations to provide humanitarian assistance and monitoring in the northern and southern areas of the country;

(l) To continue to cooperate in the implementation of Security Council resolutions 986(1995), 1111(1997), 1143(1997), 1153(1998), 1210(1998), 1242(1999), 1266(1999), 1281(1999), 1302(2000), 1330(2000), 1352(2001) and 1360(2001), as well as to cooperate, together with all concerned, in the implementation of the humanitarian sections of Security Council resolution 1284(1999), to continue its efforts to ensure fully the timely and equitable distribution, without discrimination, to the Iraqi population, including in remote areas, of all humanitarian supplies purchased under the oil-for-food programme, to address effectively the needs of persons requiring special attention, such as children, pregnant women, the disabled, the elderly and the mentally ill, among others, further to facilitate the work of United Nations humanitarian personnel in Iraq by ensuring the free and unobstructed movement of observers throughout the country, as well as their free access, without any discrimination, to all the population, and to ensure that involuntarily displaced persons receive humanitarian assistance without the need to demonstrate that they have resided for six months at their places of temporary residence;

(m) To cooperate in the identification of the minefields existing throughout Iraq, with a view to facilitating their marking and eventual clearing;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all necessary assistance in carrying out his mandate, and decides to continue the examination of the situation of human rights in Iraq at its fifty-seventh session, under the item entitled "Human rights questions", in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights.

Myanmar

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 55/112 [YUN 2000, p. 764], the Secretary-General, in March [E/CN.4/2001/33], reported on consultations (5-9 January) held by his Special Envoy, Razali Ismail, with the Government of Myanmar on the situation of human rights in that country. The Secretary-General welcomed the ongoing dialogue between the Government and opposition leaders, including Aung San Suu Kyi, the General-Secretary of the National League for Democracy (NLD), and called on both parties to work towards national reconciliation.

In October [A/56/505], the Secretary-General updated information regarding consultations (1-4 June, 27-30 August) held by his Special Envoy. He was encouraged by the growing indications that a climate of understanding between the Government and Aung San Suu Kyi and NLD was taking root. However, the process was still at the confidence-building stage and much more needed to be done to make it irreversible. The Secretary-General urged the Government to continue releasing the remaining political detainees and to further restore freedom of activity for legitimate political parties. Further consultations were held during the year (27 November-3 December).

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 2001/15], the Commission, welcoming the Myanmar Government's release of democratic political activists, the partial reopening of the university, cooperation with ICRC and the Government's establishment of a preparatory process for a human rights committee, deplored the continuing pattern of gross and systematic human rights violations in the country; the lack of independence of the judiciary; widespread discrimination against minorities; violation of women's and children's human rights; and severe restrictions on the freedoms of opinion, expression, assembly and association, and on freedom of movement. It called on Myanmar to establish a constructive dialogue with the UN system; continue to cooperate with the Secretary-General or his representative and with all UN representatives; and consider becoming a party to human rights instruments. The Government was urged to implement the Special Rapporteur's recommendations; ensure full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms; establish democracy; allow all citizens to participate freely in the political process; release political detainees; improve conditions of detention; ensure the well-being of all political leaders; fulfil its obligations under the Convention on the Rights of the Child, contained in General Assembly resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560], and under the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895]; prosecute and punish those who violated women's human rights and carry out human rights education and gender-sensitization training; halt the use of weapons against civilians; end forced labour; cease laying landmines; end enforced displacement of persons; and restore the independence of the judiciary and end impunity.

The Commission asked the High Commissioner to cooperate with the Director-General of the International Labour Organization (ILO) with a view to identifying ways in which their offices might collaborate to improve the human rights situation in Myanmar and requested the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to the attention of the UN system.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for a further year and asked him to report to the Assembly in 2001 and to the Commission in 2002, keeping a gender perspective in mind. It asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur and to continue his discussions with the Government and with anyone he might consider appropriate to assist in implementing Assembly resolution 55/112 [YUN 2000, p. 764], as well as the Commission's current resolution. The Economic and Social Council, on 24 July, endorsed the Commission's decisions regarding the Special Rapporteur's mandate and submission of reports, the continuation of the Secretary-General's discussions and its request to the High Commissioner (decision 2001/251).

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to the Commission's April request, Special Rapporteur Paulo Sergio Pinheiro (Brazil) submitted to the General Assembly an August report on the human rights situation in Myanmar [A/56/312], covering developments between 1 January and 14 August. During that period, he visited the country briefly (3-5 April) to establish direct contact with the Government and the people of Myanmar, including their political and civil society leaders. In preparation for the visit, he had travelled to Japan, Malaysia and Thailand to understand the perspectives of those countries on the human rights and humanitarian situation in Myanmar and their corresponding national policies.

The Special Rapporteur observed some positive movement in the area of civil and political rights, but was aware that problems remained. The Government had disseminated human rights standards for public officials through a series of workshops, established a governmental Committee on Human Rights, released political detainees, reopened NLD branches, continued international monitoring of prison conditions and carried on its dialogue with the Commission on Human Rights. While he welcomed the release of more than 160 prisoners from jails and guest houses, the Special Rapporteur stated that there were many other unresolved cases. Noting the reopening of NLD offices, the Special Rapporteur called for further steps in that direction to achieve national reconciliation, including through full respect for the rights to association, participation and free expression.

The Special Rapporteur received reports about the situation of ethnic minorities, particularly those living in zones of counter-insurgency operations (Shan, Mon, Kayah and Kayin States), where the impact of armed conflict, human rights abuses—torture, arbitrary executions, deliberate killings, indiscriminate use of landmines, pressure to join military force—and the combined effects of poverty, lack of basic social infrastructure and practices of local authorities had instilled people with fear. With regard to children, the problem of child soldiers, low levels of primary school enrolment and tuberculosis and malaria remained major concerns. The Special Rapporteur was convinced that humanitarian aid was essential; however, the Government was responsible for creating a positive environment whereby aid could be given and effectively reach the most vulnerable members of the population.

In a later report [E/CN.4/2002/45], the Special Rapporteur described his fact-finding mission to Myanmar (9-20 October) and presented information received by him up to 15 December. While welcoming several positive developments in the country, the Special Rapporteur observed that progress was fragile given the fact that human rights violations occurred within the context of long-standing insurgencies, ethnic and otherwise, and the suppression of the re-emerging democracy movement since 1988. Serious human rights violations still occurred, especially in areas of conflict between the army and armed groups, but on a different scale than before. The Special Rapporteur called for enhancing the country's human rights capacity to an extent that corresponded to the need for the prevention and monitoring of human rights violations and for the State agents involved to be held accountable; the unconditional release of all political prisoners; non-discriminatory conditions for the exercise of basic political freedoms; minimum standards for the treatment of prisoners; reform of the education sector; prevention of and curative action for HIV/AIDS; action to combat violence against women; maximum restraint in military activities; and more adequate attention to the humanitarian situation. Annexed to the report were a description of humanitarian cases and a list of persons who reportedly received prison terms for communicating human rights information to the United Nations.

Communication. By a 5 November letter [A/C.3/56/7], Myanmar transmitted to the Secretary-General a memorandum that detailed steps taken by the Government to improve human rights and to cooperate with UN mechanisms.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 December [meeting 92], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/56/583/Add.3], adopted resolution 56/231 without vote [agenda item 119 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Myanmar

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter of the United Nations and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments,

Aware that, in accordance with the Charter, the United Nations promotes and encourages respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states that the will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government, and therefore expressing its grave concern that the Government of Myanmar has still not implemented its commitment to take all necessary steps towards democracy in the light of the results of the elections held in 1990,

Recalling its resolution 55/112 of 4 December 2000 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/58 of 3 March 1992, in which the Commission, inter alia, decided to nominate a special rapporteur with a given mandate, and taking note of Commission resolution 2001/15 of 18 April 2001, in which the Commission decided to extend for one year the mandate of its Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar,

Recalling also the observation made by the former Special Rapporteur that the absence of respect for the rights pertaining to democratic governance is at the root of all major violations of human rights in Myanmar,

Still gravely concerned about the human rights situation in Myanmar, especially the suppression of the exercise of political rights and freedom of thought, expression, association and movement in Myanmar, and about restrictions placed on Aung San Suu Kyi and other members of the National League for Democracy, inter alia, on their freedom to function and to communicate with the outside world,

Gravely concerned that the legal system is effectively used as an instrument of oppression, inter alia, through the intimidation and detention of lawyers,

Recognizing that the systematic violations of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights by the Government of Myanmar have had a significant adverse effect on the health and welfare of the people of Myanmar,

Welcoming the three visits to Myanmar by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General during the past year, and the visits by the Special Rapporteur, as well as by the high-level team of the International Labour Organization, and the cooperation extended to them by the Government of Myanmar,

Cautiously encouraged by signs of progress in the ongoing political process in Myanmar, as reported by the Special Rapporteur, especially the release of political prisoners and the relaxation of some of the constraints governing the operation of legal political parties, but still concerned at the slow speed of the process,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Myanmar for his interim report as well as his oral presentation;

2. Welcomes the assistance extended to the Special Rapporteur by the Government of Myanmar during his exploratory visit in April 2001 and his first fact-finding mission in October 2001, which enabled him to establish direct contacts with the Government and all other relevant sectors of society, and calls upon the Government to continue to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur, to allow him to conduct further field missions, without preconditions, and to implement fully his recommendations;

3. Also welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the visits to the country of his Special Envoy for Myanmar, strongly endorses his efforts to help facilitate the national reconciliation process among all interested parties in Myanmar, and encourages the Government of Myanmar to establish a constructive and regular dialogue with the Secretary-General in order to make better use of his good offices;

4. Deplores the continued violations of human rights in Myanmar, including extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, enforced disappearances, rape, torture, inhuman treatment, forced labour, including the use of children, forced relocation and denial of freedom of assembly, association, expression, religion and movement;

5. Welcomes the initiation of confidence-building contacts between the Government and Aung San Suu Kyi, General-Secretary of the National League for Democracy, and hopes that such talks will be extended at an appropriate time to include, among others, representatives of ethnic minorities, thereby facilitating broad-based and inclusive national reconciliation and the restoration of democracy;

6. Expresses its concern at the slow progress in the talks between the Government of Myanmar and Aung San Suu Kyi, General-Secretary of the National League for Democracy, and urges that the increasing development and progress of the confidence-building measures ensure the irreversibility of the process towards democracy;

7. Recognizes the steps taken by the Government of Myanmar to allow some political functions to be resumed by the opposition, including the reopening of some branch offices of political parties and the cessation of the negative media campaign, but expresses deep concern at the unnecessary and discriminatory stringent restrictions that continue to hamper political parties' freedom of assembly, association, expression, information and movement, as noted by the Special Rapporteur, as well as at the use by the Government of intimidatory methods such as arbitrary detention and abuse of the legal system, and calls for an early restoration of political rights and freedoms;

8. Notes the dissemination of human rights standards for public officials through a series of human rights workshops, and encourages the Government of Myanmar to widen participation in these workshops to ensure that this information, and its practical implementation, can benefit all citizens of Myanmar;

9. Also notes the establishment by the Government of Myanmar of a national human rights committee, and encourages it to bring this committee into conformity with the Principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights annexed to General Assembly resolution 48/134 of 20 December 1993 (the Paris Principles);

10. Welcomes the release from detention of a number of democratic political activists, and strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to release all remaining detained political leaders and all political prisoners, including journalists, to ensure their physical integrity and to permit them to participate in the process of national reconciliation;

11. Notes with satisfaction the continued cooperation with the International Committee of the Red Cross, allowing the Committee to communicate with and visit detainees in accordance with its modalities of work, and hopes that the programme will be pursued further;

12. Welcomes the reopening of most university courses, but remains concerned that enjoyment of the right to education continues to be limited, often for political reasons, by the reduction in the length of the academic year, the division of the student population and its dispersal to distant campuses and the inadequate allocation of resources;

13. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to take urgent and concrete measures to ensure the establishment of democracy in accordance with the will of the people as expressed in the democratic elections held in 1990 and, to this end, to extend the talks initiated with Aung San Suu Kyi, General-Secretary of the National League for Democracy, to encompass a genuine and substantive dialogue with all the leaders of political parties and of ethnic minorities, with the aim of achieving national reconciliation and the restoration of democracy, and to ensure that political parties and non-governmental organizations can function freely, and in this context notes the existence of the committee representing the People's Parliament;

14. Recalls the resolution adopted by the International Labour Conference at its eighty-eighth session, held from 30 May to 15 June 2000, recommending that international organizations reconsider any cooperation with Myanmar and that Governments, employers and workers take appropriate measures to ensure that the Government of Myanmar could not take advantage of such relations to perpetuate or extend the system of forced or compulsory labour referred to by the Commission of Inquiry established to examine the observance by Myanmar of the International Labour Organization Convention concerning forced or compulsory labour (Convention No. 29) of 1930;

15. Welcomes the recent visit to Myanmar undertaken by the high-level team of the International Labour Organization, with the objective of assessing the practical implications and impact of measures taken by the Government to eradicate the practice of forced labour and the cooperation that was extended to the team by the Government of Myanmar;

16. Notes with regret that the conclusion of the high-level team was that there was only moderately positive evolution in the situation, since there have been only uneven efforts to disseminate the orders, since the orders have not been observed by the military at the local level and since, despite widespread instances of forced labour, there have been no criminal prosecutions, and that much more will have to be done to address adequately the situation, including movement towards national reconciliation;

17. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to implement, in close cooperation with the International Labour Organization, concrete legislative, executive and administrative measures to eradicate the practice of forced labour, in conformity with the relevant recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, and in this context endorses the recommendations of the high-level team, including the establishment of a long-term representation of the International Labour Organization in Myanmar and the creation of an ombudsman, and encourages the Government of Myanmar to pursue the dialogue with the Director-General of the International Labour Organization to this end;

18. Deplores the continued violations of human rights, in particular those directed against persons belonging to ethnic and religious minorities, including summary executions, rape, torture, forced labour, forced portage, forced relocations, use of anti-personnel landmines, destruction of crops and fields and dispossession of land and property, which deprives those persons of all means of subsistence and results in large-scale displacement of persons and flows of refugees to neighbouring countries, with negative effects for those countries, and an increasing number of internally displaced persons;

19. Urges the Government of Myanmar to end the systematic enforced displacement of persons and other causes of refugee flows to neighbouring countries and to create conditions conducive to their voluntary return and full reintegration in conditions of safety and dignity and to allow the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel to assist in the return and reintegration process;

20. Deplores the continued violations of the human rights of women, especially women who are internally displaced or belong to ethnic minorities or the political opposition, in particular forced labour, trafficking, sexual violence and exploitation, including rape;

21. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to implement fully the recommendations made by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, in particular the request to prosecute and punish those who violate the human rights of women, and to carry out human rights education and gender-sensitization training, in particular for military personnel;

22. Deplores the recruitment of children as soldiers, in particular children belonging to ethnic minorities, and strongly urges the Government of Myanmar and all other parties to the hostilities in Myanmar to end the use of children as soldiers;

23. Notes that the Government of Myanmar is starting to address the growing incidence of infection with the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS), while recognizing that much still needs to be done, particularly in the area of HIV/AIDS prevention, and urges the Government of Myanmar to recognize fully the severity of the situation and the need to take necessary action against the disease, in cooperation with all relevant political and ethnic groups, and through the development of the United Nations joint plan of action on HIV/AIDS, to be delivered through non-governmental organizations or international agencies with a view to reaching the communities most affected and most vulnerable to HIV/AIDS infection;

24. Urges the Government of Myanmar to promote and protect the human rights of people living with HIV/AIDS and guard against the marginalization and discrimination that they may experience and to ensure that the health-care system receives sufficient funding to enable health workers to provide the highest possible standard of health care;

25. Expresses its grave concern at the high rates of malnutrition among pre-school-aged children, which constitutes serious violations of their rights to adequate food and the highest attainable standard of health and may have serious repercussions for the health and development of the affected children;

26. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to ensure full respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including economic and social rights, and to fulfil its obligation to restore the independence of the judiciary and due process and to end the impunity of and bring to justice any perpetrators of human rights violations, including members of the military, and to investigate and prosecute alleged violations committed by government agents in all circumstances;

27. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his discussions on the situation of human rights and the restoration of democracy with the Government of Myanmar, to submit additional reports to the General Assembly during its fifty-sixth session on the progress of those discussions, and to report to the Assembly at its fifty-seventh session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-eighth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

28. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-seventh session.

Forced labour

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 3 May, the Economic and Social Council deferred consideration of an April request by ILO [E/2001/48] to include an additional agenda item entitled "Measures to be taken for the implementation by Myanmar of the recommendations of the International Labour Organization Commission of Inquiry on forced labour" (decision 2001/216).

On 25 July [meeting 42], the Council adopted resolution 2001/20 [draft: E/2001/L.21] without vote [agenda item 14 (b)].

Developments concerning the question of the observance by the Government of Myanmar of the International Labour Organization Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29)

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the resolution adopted by the International Labour Conference at its eighty-eighth session, held in June 2000, on action to secure compliance with the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry established by the International Labour Organization to examine the observance by Myanmar of its obligations in respect to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), in which the Conference recommended the inclusion of the item on the agenda of the Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of the conclusions adopted by consensus by the International Labour Conference at its eighty-ninth session, held in June 2001,

1. Takes note of the outcome of the discussion of the Committee on the Application of Standards during the eighty-ninth session of the International Labour Conference, held in June 2001;

2. Also takes note of the understanding concluded between the International Labour Office and the authorities of Myanmar regarding an objective assessment to be carried out by an International Labour Organization high-level mission with respect to the practical implementation and actual impact of the framework of legislative, executive and administrative measures reported by Myanmar within the overall objective of the complete elimination of forced labour in law and practice;

3. Further takes note of the fact that the International Labour Organization Governing Body will examine the report of this mission at its two hundred and eighty-second session, to be held in November 2001;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Economic and Social Council informed of further developments in this matter.

Report of ILO high-level team. In May, the Government of Myanmar agreed to receive an ILO high-level team to assess the implementation of measures that took effect in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 764] to ensure its compliance with the ILO Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29). The team visited the country for three weeks beginning on 17 September, when it conducted investigations, met with various NGOs and carried out interviews. Its work was complemented by meetings and interviews in Thailand and by information received from two researchers stationed in Bangladesh.

The team noted that orders prohibiting forced labour had been issued in November 2000. However, they did not specify either the kinds of tasks for which the requisition of labour was prohibited or the manner in which the same tasks would henceforth be performed. Although a procedure existed for prosecuting cases of forced labour, the team noted that there had been widespread instances of forced labour of all kinds, but no prosecutions. The team received accounts of serious reprisals taken by the military against those who complained about forced labour. There were no indications of the current use of forced labour on civil infrastructure projects but it was apparent that there was a strong correlation between the presence of military camps and the practice, whether or not the troops were engaged in military activities.

In November, the ILO Governing Body considered that efforts by the Myanmar authorities to disseminate the orders against forced labour should be strengthened and expressed concern regarding the limited impact of the new legislation, particularly the persistent impunity with regard to criminal prosecution of those who had committed violations. It urged Myanmar to undertake urgent efforts to rectify the situation. The ILO Director-General was requested to continue the dialogue with Myanmar, assist the Government with a view to giving effect to recommendations of the team, including establishing a form of ombudsman, and to report to the Governing Body in 2002.

Cyprus

In response to a 2000 Commission request [YUN 2000, p. 766], the Secretary-General, in a February report on the human rights situation in Cyprus [E/CN.4/2001/31], described activities carried out under his good offices mission (see p. 391) and by the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (see p. 393) and the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus.

On 20 April [dec. 2001/102], the Commission decided to retain the item on its agenda, on the understanding that action required by previous resolutions would continue to remain operative, including its request to the Secretary-General to report on their implementation.

The former Yugoslavia

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 2001/12], by a roll-call vote of 41 to none, with 11 abstentions, the Commission noted that while varying degrees of progress had been made in the human rights situation in all States and by all parties to the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina [YUN 1995, p. 544]—Bosnia and Herzegovina (composed of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Republika Srpska), Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY)—additional efforts were required in several areas. All States and parties to the 1995 Agreement were urged to cooperate with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 (ICTY) (see p. 1198), established by the Security Council in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 440].

The Commission welcomed the establishment in Bosnia and Herzegovina of the State-level and Federation Governments comprised of non-nationalist parties, but strongly condemned the attempt by the Croatian Democratic Union of Bosnia and Herzegovina extremists to undermine legitimately elected and constitutional bodies, as well as violent attacks by Bosnian Croat extremists in Mostar and other places against representatives of the international community. Noting progress on refugee returns in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Commission condemned the continued harassment of returning minority refugees and internally displaced persons and recurrent instances of religious discrimination. It called on the authorities to establish a fully staffed and funded judiciary that protected the rights and fundamental freedoms of all citizens, adopt an effective and fair election law, cooperate fully with ICTY, promote an independent media, expand and improve the State Border Service to stem illegal immigration and trafficking in persons and implement the actions mandated by the Peace Implementation Council in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 338].

Welcoming political changes in FRY and the commitment of the Government to investigate past human rights abuses, the Commission called on the authorities to respect the rights of all persons belonging to any of its national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities. It expressed concern at the continued detention in Serbia of political prisoners of Kosovar Albanian and other origins.

The Commission condemned human rights violations in the FRY province of Kosovo that had affected all ethnic groups and urged ethnic leaders in Kosovo to take action at the community level to prevent ethnic violence and to engage in and support efforts to create conditions for the safe, sustainable and dignified return of displaced minority communities.

The Chairperson of the Commission was requested to appoint for one year a special representative to examine the human rights situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina and FRY. The Commission's requests to the special representative regarding reporting methods were approved by Economic and Social Council decision 2001/219.

José Cutileiro (Portugal) was appointed Special Representative of the Commission on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina and FRY and assumed his functions in June.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In June, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 2001/219 (draft: E/2001/L.7, orally corrected) by recorded vote (28-0-10) [agenda item 2].

The situation of human rights in parts of South-Eastern Europe

At its 9th plenary meeting, on 4 June 2001, the Economic and Social Council, having taken note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2001/12 of 18 April 2001, approved the decision of the Commission:

(a) To request the Chairperson of the Commission on Human Rights to appoint for one year a special representative of the Commission with a mandate to examine the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia; in reporting on the human rights situation in Kosovo, the Special Representative should:

- (i) Consult closely with the international civilian presence, particularly representatives of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe;
- (ii) Closely monitor the situation, paying particular attention to those areas that remain a source of concern, including cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, the release of unjustly detained prisoners, including Kosovar Albanians, the identification of persons missing as a result of conflict, the protection of minorities, trafficking in persons and the right of return of refugees and internally displaced persons;

- (iii) Cooperate closely with the offices of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in Belgrade and Sarajevo and with her Special Envoy on persons deprived of liberty in connection with the Kosovo crisis in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia so as to avoid duplication of effort;

(b) To request the Special Representative to submit an interim report on her/his findings to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session and a report to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-eighth session.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2001/219:

In favour: Andorra, Argentina, Austria, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Costa Rica, Croatia, Czech Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, France, Georgia, Germany, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Malta, Mexico, Norway, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Saudi Arabia, Uganda, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Angola, Benin, Cameroon, China, Cuba, Egypt, Nepal, Russian Federation, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In an addendum [E/CN.4/2001/47/Add.1] to a previous report [YUN 2000, p. 768], Special Rapporteur Jiri Dienstbier (Czech Republic) described developments from December 2000 to March 2001 in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and FRY.

An issue that had emerged recently in Bosnia and Herzegovina concerned irregular migration and related human rights matters. The number of irregular migrants apprehended was increasing, with some 28,000 migrants, mostly from Asia and the Middle East, entering the country in 2000, while only 5,000 left legally. Bosnia and Herzegovina appeared to be a main trafficking route to Western Europe. There was a legal vacuum with respect to migration and asylum issues, despite a law that established a legal framework for the admission and stay of aliens, as well as criteria and procedures for determining refugee status and the granting of asylum. The Special Rapporteur emphasized the need for regional cooperation in finding solutions that respected the rights of refugees and migrants.

During his mission to Croatia (26 February–1 March), the Special Rapporteur expressed concern that some serious problems continued, especially regarding discrimination in property restitution and the provision of alternative housing. He also expressed concern over the fairness of trials of ethnic Serbs for war crimes. Referring to mass demonstrations in support of Mirko Norac, a former Croatian Army General charged with war crimes committed in the Gospić area, the Special Rapporteur strongly condemned the rise of nationalism and right-wing extremism. He also condemned attacks on journalists and called for an investigation into a 1 March assault of two reporters and for the prosecution of those responsible.

During a visit to FRY (7-18 March), the Special Rapporteur observed dramatic political changes in Serbia following the ousting of President Slobodan Milosevic in 2000. However, he remained deeply concerned about the continuing violence in the Presevo valley region of southern Serbia. He also expressed concern at the slowness with which the new FRY and Serbian authorities were moving to release political prisoners remaining from the Milosevic era. Although the FRY Parliament adopted an amnesty act in February, affecting some 28,000 Serbs charged with crimes related to the evasion of military service and 100 to 200 of 500 Kosovar Albanian detainees convicted in unfair trials, further steps were needed to release the remaining Kosovar Albanian detainees.

During the brief reporting period, ethnic violence in Kosovo—organized Kosovar Albanian attacks on Kosovo Serbs and other minorities—had intensified to an alarming degree. The divided city of Mitrovica continued to be a flashpoint for ethnic violence against ethnic Serbs and Albanians. One reason violence persisted was the continued struggle of the United Nations Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) to establish the rule of law. Longstanding efforts to bring judicial norms in Kosovo in conformity with international human rights standards had still not borne fruit. The Special Rapporteur called for an urgent review of security procedures for minorities in Kosovo and a much more aggressive approach by the International Security Force in Kosovo (KFOR) and UNMIK.

In February, the Montenegrin legislature adopted a new referendum law, amendments to the election law and rules for election campaign coverage by State-run media, in anticipation of parliamentary elections scheduled for April, as well as for a possible subsequent referendum. Although the Special Rapporteur welcomed the timely creation of a legal framework, he expressed concern at the politicizing of public discussion on basic human rights issues, such as provisions on the right to vote and the applicable majority in the referendum law, which had led to the polarization of public opinion along political lines instead of focusing on the compliance of the drafted norms with international standards. Although efforts had been made to address the problem of trafficking, there was no adequate overall government policy to combat the phenomenon or to provide republic-wide protection for trafficking victims. The Special Rapporteur welcomed the establishment of the Human Rights Centre at the University of Montenegro.

Reports of Special Representative. In response to the Commission's April request, Special Representative José Cutileiro submitted to the General Assembly an October report [A/56/460] describing his visits to the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (24-27 July) and FRY (27 August-4 September).

The Special Representative observed that in Bosnia and Herzegovina some persons in positions of power were associated with ethnic cleansing, elements of which had been adjudicated as constituting war crimes and crimes against humanity. He called for the arrest and transfer to The Hague of those indicted by ICTY. Regarding reconciliation, a truth and reconciliation commission, to draw conclusions on the nature of the circumstances that produced ethnic mistrust and misunderstandings, was being discussed. The absence of a multi-ethnic, professional police force and an independent judiciary had led to numerous incidents of impunity and disregard for the rule of law. Endemic corruption within governmental structures was of grave concern and militated against progress. Allegations of differential access to employment, social welfare, health services, public utilities and education continued. Bosnia and Herzegovina was predominantly a country of destination in terms of the trafficking of people, although there was increasing evidence that it was becoming a country of origin. The majority of those trafficked were from the Republic of Moldova, Romania and Ukraine and were mostly women and children. The Special Representative called for the development of an integrated and multisectoral approach to irregular migration, engaging the expertise of all of the international agencies that were involved, in close partnership with the State.

Although progress had been made in FRY to address a number of historical human rights violations, the pace of institutional reform remained slow and ad hoc. The Special Representative believed that institutional reform should consist of an effective separation of legislative, executive and judicial powers, with human rights and the rule of law as its foundation. In Serbia (excluding Kosovo), the low salaries of judges left the judicial process susceptible to corruption and abuse. Political appointments affected the quality of justice and the integrity of an independent judiciary. On 11 May, FRY acceded to the 1995 European Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities. Ethnic Albanian Kosovars in detention in Serbia were released under the amnesty act; the Special Representative, however, believed that the convictions of a very large number of those held in detention were based on evidence and trials that did not comply with minimum standards of due process. He was deeply concerned by the slow progress in carrying out exhumations and forensic analysis of remains discovered in Kosovo and other parts of Serbia, and urged authorities to cooperate on the issue. For many of the estimated 400,000 refugees and 200,000 internally displaced persons living in FRY, prospects of immediate or longer-term return to their places of former residence remained bleak. The Special Representative welcomed steps to amend the Citizenship Act of 1997 to allow refugees to obtain dual citizenship. Regarding the situation of displaced persons from Kosovo, he expressed deep concern that the current climate of violence and insecurity for ethnic Serbs and other minorities in Kosovo meant that few people were able to return to their homes. The Special Representative welcomed efforts to develop national ombudsman offices and independent and functional national human rights institutions, but cautioned against the creation of a multiplicity of national and municipality structures that were not adequately funded and were autonomous. Regarding southern Serbia, the Special Representative was encouraged by an agreement reached in May between Yugoslav and Serb authorities, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and representatives of the ethnic Albanian community that led to the end of most of the violence in the Presevo valley region and the municipality of Medvedja in the border area with Kosovo. Since June, complaints of ill-treatment by police of ethnic Albanians in southern Serbia had been infrequent. Nevertheless, the Special Representative was concerned that more visible progress needed to be made in fulfilling commitments under the Covic Plan—the core of an agreement on a peaceful solution to the conflict presented by the Government comprising a series of measures to improve the social, economic and political rights of ethnic Albanians in southern Serbia (see also p. 346)—relating to the reintegration of ethnic Albanians into employment in the public service sector and the local economy and the more effective representation of ethnic Albanians in municipal executive bodies.

The most pressing human rights concerns in Kosovo remained those faced by ethnic Serb and other minority communities. Many did not enjoy effective and safe access to health and social services, schools or employment opportunities. Kosovo's judicial system faced major challenges in building a post-conflict legal system. UNMIK had created a functional court system, which still needed substantial changes, and had improved the legal basis upon which executive orders to detain were made, including the commission of an independent detention review committee. The Special Representative was concerned by the lack of adequate consultation and transparency regarding legislation governing pre-trial detention, supervision of the media, terrorism, border control, the rights of detainees and restrictions on the sale of private property in minority areas.

In Montenegro, the continued uncertainty as to its future constitutional status hampered efforts to reform government institutions. Noting cases of accused persons held in pre-trial detention beyond the maximum period prescribed by national law and international standards, the Special Representative urged the authorities to bring the protracted cases to a conclusion in accordance with due process of law. He recommended abolishing criminal custodial sanctions for expression-related matters and special criminal law protection accorded to public figures and symbols. The Special Representative noted that there was some discrepancy between the formal legal guarantees and the actual situation for minorities. Ethnic Albanians and Muslims/Bosniaks were underrepresented in the civil service and in the police force and there were virtually no ethnic Albanian employees in the judicial or internal affairs bodies. The national educational curriculum had not been fully adapted to reflect the needs and cultural values of the different ethnic communities. As to the trafficking in human beings, the victim protection programme adopted earlier in the year, as well as the activities of the National Coordinator against Trafficking, had brought concrete results. The Special Representative urged the authorities to strengthen law enforcement measures and increase criminal sanctions for those involved in trafficking people.

In a later report covering developments up until mid-December [E/CN.4/2002/41], the Special Representative expressed the hope that amendments to the property laws in Bosnia and Herzegovina would rectify the uneven implementation of property restitution. The reduction in the number of persons de-authorized to act as police officers because of improper activities was a positive sign; however, the persistent lack of a multi-ethnic and professional police force and an independent judiciary undermined the rule of law. Nationalism—Bosniak, Serb and Croat biases—and corruption continued to undermine the political and legal systems. The Government had adopted a national plan of action to combat trafficking in persons, which remained a serious problem. Overall, the extent to which corruption featured in the economy and in society remained an obstacle to building a country where human rights were respected and violations redressed by State and Entity agents.

FRY was still in a state of transition, with many institutional changes made but with much still to be done to consolidate those efforts. Institutional reforms necessary to establish the rule of law, reform the judiciary and police, combat organized crime and establish the basis for a free media had moved slowly. While a package of laws on judicial reform had been adopted, legislation governing labour, local self-government, a national human rights institution and the media was still pending. Of equal concern was the process by which legislation for reform was drafted and adopted. The Special Rapporteur remained concerned about specific allegations of human rights violations by members of the police force, including allegations of police ill-treatment and brutality. Progress had been made in strengthening the legislative framework to promote and protect ethnic minorities and creating greater public awareness of minority rights through a tolerance campaign launched in November. The Special Representative welcomed the release from detention of ethnic Kosovo Albanians under the amnesty act passed earlier in the year. He expressed deep concern that the current climate of violence and insecurity for ethnic Serbs and other ethnic minorities in Kosovo meant that few people were able to return to their homes. In the print media, the Special Representative welcomed the repeal by the Serbian Parliament in February of the oppressive information law of 1998 and the payment of compensation to the owners and editors of the print media who had been fined under the law. In the electronic media, the draft law on public broadcasting had not yet been adopted. In May, an agreement was reached between the Federal and Serbian authorities that ended most of the violence in the Presevo valley region of southern Serbia. Respect for human rights in terms of police behaviour had improved substantially in southern Serbia, but a number of complaints of human rights violations by police were recorded during the last months of the year.

Significant developments in self-governance were noted in Kosovo following the election of a Kosovo-wide legislative assembly on 17 November. The first organized return to Kosovo of internally displaced ethnic Serbs, comprising 54 individuals to an isolated Serb village, took place in August, but the current situation did not permit any larger-scale return programmes. The Special Representative noted the establishment of an Office of Returns and Communities with its director under the direct supervision of the Secretary-General's Representative. The Kosovo Ombudsperson had become active in addressing human rights problems that fell under his mandate. Generally, the Special Representative remained concerned by the slow progress in the human rights situation and physical protection of ethnic minorities in Kosovo; the quality of the rule of law; and the extent to which human rights standards and practices were integrated into the work of UNMIK and KFOR.

Uncertainty about the future constitutional status of Montenegro continued to hamper any real progress to reform government institutions, including reforms to improve human rights promotion and protection. Specific areas requiring attention were the right to life, the right to a trial within a reasonable time or release pending trial, freedom of the media and the right to freedom of expression, underrepresentation of minorities in the civil service and media-incited animosity against minority groups. Although trafficking in persons continued, positive developments were the adoption of a national plan of action against trafficking, the appointment of a national governmental coordinator in charge of trafficking issues and the creation of a government inter-agency task force to combat the problem.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/56/583/Add.3], adopted resolution 56/172 without vote [agenda item 119 (c)].

Situation of human rights in parts of South-Eastern Europe

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and the 1967 Protocol thereto, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities, the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement, accepted humanitarian rules, as set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and, for participating States of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Helsinki Final Act of 1 August 1975,

Bearing in mind all resolutions on this subject, in particular Commission on Human Rights resolution 2001/12 of 18 April 2001 and General Assembly resolution 55/113 of 4 December 2000, as well as all Security Council resolutions and presidential statements,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 1160(1998) of 31 March 1998, 1199(1998) of 23 September 1998, 1203(1998) of 24 October 1998, 1239(1999) of 14 May 1999, 1244(1999) of 10 June 1999 and the general principles annexed thereto, 1345(2001) of 21 March 2001, 1367(2001) of 10 September 2001, all previous General Assembly resolutions on the subject, as well as the statement made on 24 March 1998 by the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights at the fifty-fourth session of the Commission, Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1998/79 of 22 April 1998, 1999/2 of 13 April 1999 and 2000/26 of 18 April 2000 and the re- port of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights of 27 September 1999 on the situation of human rights in Kosovo, and taking note of the periodic report of 11 October 2001 of the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia,

Underlining the obligation of all authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and all parties in Kosovo to cooperate fully in the implementation of Security Council resolution 1244(1999) and the general principles on a political solution to the Kosovo crisis adopted on 6 May 1999, annexed to that resolution, and welcoming the Common Document signed on 5 November 2001 by the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo and the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia,

Expressing its full support for and encouraging efforts towards the full implementation of commitments contained in the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"),

1. Emphasizes the need to ensure respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms and to do everything possible to further the process of reconciliation and regional cooperation;

2. Welcomes all efforts by countries of the region to overcome the effects of past conflicts, and also the efforts of the international community, which have helped the countries of the region to make great strides towards peace and stability;

3. Also welcomes moves by all parties in the region to establish and maintain a constructive dialogue with their neighbours, an essential element of regional stability, and urges them to continue these efforts;

4. Notes that varying degrees of progress have been made in the human rights situation in all States, but that further efforts are required in several areas;

5. Also notes the progress in the region, and encourages further free, fair, inclusive and democratic elections throughout the region as an important element of the rule of law and the promotion and protection of human rights;

6. Urges all parties to condemn ethnic violence and intolerance and to oppose actively, in a manner consistent with internationally recognized human rights standards, advocates or perpetrators of any form of violence as a means to secure peace and the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and encourages parties to use dialogue to address their differences;

7. Urges all authorities in the region to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, and in particular to comply with their obligation to arrest immediately and transfer to the custody of the Tribunal all indicted persons, as well as to comply with requests by the Tribunal for access to information and witnesses;

8. Emphasizes the need to prevent and end violations of human rights, including cases of arbitrary detention, as well as the continued detention of political prisoners and cases of discrimination on the basis of ethnic origin, nationality, language or religion;

9. Also emphasizes the need for sustained progress on all issues that have an impact on the enjoyment of human rights, in particular, legal reform, impunity, protection of all persons belonging to minorities and the fight against organized crime and trafficking in persons;

10. Stresses the need for enhanced efforts to foster and effect the prompt and voluntary return and integration of displaced persons and refugees in safety and with dignity;

11. Underlines the importance of consistent efforts to establish the fate of missing persons, and encourages all States and parties to provide information to organizations involved in this effort, including through the tracing mechanisms of the International Committee of the Red Cross, and to cooperate fully with organizations such as the International Committee of the Red Cross and the International Commission on Missing Persons that are involved in the effort to determine the identities, whereabouts and fate of missing persons;

12. Encourages the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and the Council of Europe to enhance their cooperation in the region, including within the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe;

13. Encourages the international community to continue providing voluntary contributions to meet the pressing human rights and humanitarian needs of the region;

14. Welcomes the appointment of the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, and calls upon all authorities and all concerned parties to cooperate fully with the Special Representative as he carries out his work.

Russian Federation

Republic of Chechnya

Report of High Commissioner. In February [E/CN.4/2001/36], the High Commissioner reported on the implementation of a resolution adopted by the Commission in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 773] on the situation in Chechnya.

The report summarized information received from the Government regarding criminal cases and charges filed by the military procuracy for alleged crimes by the military against civilians in Chechnya. No similar information was received regarding alleged violations by Ministry of Interior troops and militia, who were under the responsibility of the civilian procuracy. The High Commissioner stated that the reports, which came from a variety of sources, including inter-governmental organizations, Russian and international NGOs and members of the State Duma, indicated that further efforts were needed before adequate conditions for the respect of human rights existed in Chechnya.

The High Commissioner continued to receive reports of serious human rights violations carried out by Chechen fighters against federal and local authorities and against civilians, and urged those responsible to cease such attacks. Other areas of concern were the major gap between the large number of complaints submitted to various government agencies and bodies and the relatively small number of court proceedings, and the economic, social and cultural rights of the Chechen people.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2001/24], by a roll-call vote of 22 to 12, with 19 abstentions, the Commission, strongly condemning the continued use of indiscriminate force against civilians by Russian military forces, federal servicemen and State agents, called on the Government of the Russian Federation to comply with its international human rights and humanitarian law obligations in its operations against Chechen fighters and to protect civilians. It also condemned terrorist activities, attacks and breaches of international humanitarian law perpetrated by Chechen fighters and called for the release of all hostages. All parties to the conflict were called on to halt the fighting and indiscriminate use of force and to seek a political solution with the aim of achieving a peaceful outcome. The Russian Federation was called on to establish urgently a national broad-based and independent commission of inquiry to investigate alleged human rights violations and breaches of international humanitarian law committed in Chechnya; ensure criminal investigations and prosecutions of all violations of international humanitarian law and human rights; ensure the return of the Assistance Group of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to Chechnya; protect internally displaced persons; allow unimpeded access of humanitarian personnel to Chechnya and neighbouring republics; and disseminate, and ensure that the military had knowledge of, the basic principles of human rights and international humanitarian law. The Commission asked the Special Rapporteurs on the question of torture, on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, and on internally displaced persons to carry out missions to Chechnya. The High Commissioner was asked to report to the Commission in 2002 and to keep it and the General Assembly informed of further developments.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2001/23], adopted decision

2001/258 by recorded vote (24-4-20) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Situation in the Republic of Chechnya of the Russian Federation

At its 40th plenary meeting, on 24 July 2001, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2001/24 of 20 April 2001, approved the Commission's request to the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to report to the Commission at its fifty-eighth session on the implementation of Commission resolution 2001/24 and to keep the General Assembly informed of further developments as appropriate.

In favour: Andorra, Austria, Bulgaria, Canada, Croatia, Czech Republic, Denmark, Fiji, France, Germany, Honduras, Italy, Malta, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Portugal, Romania, Saudi Arabia, South Africa, Suriname, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: China, Cuba, Russian Federation, Venezuela.

Abstaining: Angola, Argentina, Bahrain, Bolivia, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Costa Rica, Egypt, Ethiopia, Indonesia, Japan, Nepal, Nigeria, Peru, Republic of Korea, Rwanda, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda.

Middle East

Lebanon

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 2001/10], by a roll-call vote of 33 to 1, with 19 abstentions, the Commission called on Israel to release Lebanese civilians who had been imprisoned and held as hostages for bargaining purposes and to comply with the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims, particularly the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention). Israel was also called on to submit to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon all the maps of the landmine fields laid throughout areas occupied by civilians. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to Israel's attention and to call on Israel to comply with its provisions. He was asked to report to the General Assembly in 2001 and to the Commission in 2002.

The Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's requests to the Secretary-General on 24 July (decision 2001/248).

Communication. On 5 April [E/CN.4/2001/54], Israel refuted Lebanon's allegations that it had failed to disclose information regarding the location of mines in southern Lebanon and hand over maps of the minefields.

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to a 2000 Commission request [YUN 2000, p. 773], the Secretary-General stated that he had asked Israel for information on the extent of the implementation of the Commission's 2000 resolution on the human rights situation in southern Lebanon and western Bekaa, but had received no reply [E/CN.4/2001/32].

In July [A/56/217], the Secretary-General reported that he had asked Israel for information on the implementation of the Commission's resolution regarding Lebanese detainees in Israel (see p. 734) and had received no reply.

Territories occupied by Israel

During 2001, the question of human rights violations in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission on Human Rights and by the Human Rights Inquiry Commission, established by the Commission (see below). Political and other aspects were considered by the General Assembly, its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli Practices) and other bodies (see PART ONE, Chapter VI).

Reports of Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 2000 Commission resolution [YUN 2000, p. 775], the Secretary-General reported that he had brought that resolution, which concerned the occupied Syrian Golan, to the attention of all Governments, the Committee on Israeli Practices, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations [E/CN.4/2001/28]. The UN Department of Public Information provided press coverage for all meetings of the Committee on Israeli Practices, and distributed information through documents, press releases, briefings and UN information centres and services.

In response to a further 2000 Commission resolution [YUN 2000, p. 774], the Secretary-General stated that he had brought the Commission's resolution on the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories to the attention of the Government of Israel and all other Governments, the Committee on Israeli Practices and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, as well as to the specialized agencies, UNRWA, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, requesting information pertaining to Israel's implementation of the resolution. He had received no reply from Israel [E/CN.4/2001/27].

The Secretary-General submitted to the Commission in January a list of all United Nations reports issued since 28 April 2000 on the situation of the population living in the occupied Arab territories [E/CN.4/2001/29].

Inquiry Commission. The Human Rights Inquiry Commission, which was established on 2 January in response to a 2000 resolution [YUN 2000, p. 776] adopted by the fifth special session of the Commission on Human Rights, submitted its report [E/CN.4/2001/121] to the Commission in March. Following its first meeting (Geneva, 14-16 January), at which it considered organizational matters, the three-member Inquiry Commission visited the occupied Palestinian territories and Israel from 10 to 18 February. It concluded that the Israeli Defence Force (IDF) had engaged in the excessive use of force at the expense of life and property in Palestine. Although IDF carried out only a small number of extrajudicial executions (estimated at 11 at least) or targeted political assassinations, the Commission accorded special attention to them because they had been officially acknowledged, promoted and condoned. Having considered the implications of Jewish settlements in the West Bank (including East Jerusalem) and Gaza on human rights and humanitarian law, the Commission reaffirmed that the settlements constituted a major violation of international humanitarian law and identified the presence of settlements and settlers as a primary cause of many human rights violations in the occupied territories. Measures of closure, curfew or destruction of property in the territories constituted violations of the Fourth Geneva Convention and human rights obligations binding on Israel. The Palestinian refugees within the territories seemed worse off than the Palestinian refugee diaspora in neighbouring countries. Further, the deterioration of their circumstances throughout the West Bank and Gaza had been accentuated by the recent heightened tensions and violence (see p. 406).

The Inquiry Commission made a series of recommendations to address the root causes of the situation, deter further violence, end the destruction of lives, property and livelihoods and establish a climate conducive to the emergence of a just and durable peace for the peoples of Israel and Palestine. It listed safeguards and procedures that needed to be observed while negotiations aimed at a comprehensive, just and durable peace were pursued.

On 23 March [E/CN.4/2001/145], Egypt, as Chairman of the Council of Arab Permanent Representatives in Geneva Members of the League of Arab States, stated that the Council found unacceptable a paragraph of the Inquiry Commission's report that recommended the application of article 1 D of the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520] to ensure that a regime of protection under UNHCR authority was extended to Palestinian refugees. The Council asserted that the Palestinian refugee issue was governed by relevant UN resolutions, that UNRWA was responsible for carrying out relief and work programmes for Palestinian refugees and that the Convention's article did not apply to persons who were receiving protection or assistance from the UN system other than UNHCR.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In March [E/CN.4/2001/30], Special Rapporteur Giorgio Giamelli (Italy) updated information contained in his report following his mission to the region in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 775]. He stated that certain human rights violations had graduated from sporadic or incidental occurrences to a level of regularity. Radio and print media had reported Israeli military officers admitting that the army had operationalized a policy of extrajudicial executions against Palestinians it suspected of committing attacks against Jewish settlers or Israeli soldiers in the occupied Palestinian territories. Housing and property demolition had emerged as a consistent pattern, with some 773 family homes destroyed by Israeli forces between September 2000 and February 2001. Israel's alleged use of torture and prison conditions in general remained of concern to the human rights community. The Special Rapporteur also cited violations of the rights to food and press freedom. Consequences of ongoing violations resulted in losses for the Palestinian economy, violations of children's human rights, damage and destruction of health facilities and territorial and social fragmentation of the occupied Palestinian territories. As to the use of force, the Special Rapporteur noted that the roles and responsibilities on the Palestinian side, while outside his mandate, remained unclear and difficult to ascertain. He urged international protection for the Palestinians in the occupied territories, measures to restore confidence and rekindle hope in a durable peace, and respect for international law.

In March, the Special Rapporteur resigned and John Dugard (South Africa), who had served as the Chairperson of the Human Rights Inquiry Commission (see p. 735), was appointed to replace him in July.

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 2001/6], by a roll-call vote of 29 to 2, with 21 abstentions, the Commission called on Israel to comply with UN resolutions on the occupied Syrian Golan and demanded that it rescind its decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on that occupied territory. It also called on Israel to desist from changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan and to desist from imposing Israeli citizenship and identity cards on citizens of the Syrian Golan and from its repressive measures against them. The Secretary-General was requested to bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of all Governments, UN organs, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, to give the resolution wide publicity and to report in 2002.

Also on 18 April [res. 2001/7], by a roll-call vote of 28 to 2, with 22 abstentions, the Commission condemned Israel's recourse to force and urged the Government to ensure that its security forces observed international standards regarding the use of force. Deploing the practice of extrajudicial killings of certain Palestinians carried out by Israeli security forces, the Commission urged the Government to respect international law and cease that practice. It also called on Israel to end the expropriation of Palestinian homes in Jerusalem, end the practice of torture against Palestinians during interrogation, desist from all human rights violations in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, respect the bases of international law, the principles of international humanitarian law and its international commitments and agreements, and withdraw from the Palestinian territories. Israel was also urged to implement the recommendations of the Human Rights Inquiry Commission (see p. 735). The Commission requested the Special Rapporteur, acting as a monitoring mechanism, to follow up on the implementation of its recommendations and to report thereon to the General Assembly in 2001 (see p. 737) and to the Commission in 2002; the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's request on 24 July (decision 2001/246). The Secretary-General was asked to bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of the Government of Israel and all other Governments, competent UN organs, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, to disseminate it as widely as possible and to report in 2002 on its implementation by Israel. He was also asked to provide the Commission with all UN reports issued between its sessions that dealt with conditions in which the Palestinians were living under Israeli occupation.

On the same date [res. 2001/8], by a roll-call vote of 50 to 1, with 1 abstention, the Commission, expressing grave concern at the continuing Israeli settlement activities in the occupied Arab territories, including East Jerusalem, and at closures of and within the Palestinian territories, and condemning all acts of terrorism, urged Israel to comply with the Commission's previous resolutions; to cease its policy of expanding the settlements and related activities in the occupied territories; to forgo and prevent any new installation of settlers; and to ensure that the Israeli security forces protected Palestinians from violence perpetrated by Israeli settlers. All parties were urged to create conditions to allow the resumption of the peace process.

Communications. During the year, the Commission received communications regarding the situation in the occupied Palestinian territories, including from Palestine describing Israeli violence against Palestinian civilians [E/CN.4/2001/3, E/CN.4/2001/136, E/CN.4/2001/142, E/CN.4/2002/11, E/CN.4/2002/126-128, E/CN.4/2002/131], from the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitting a resolution on the humanitarian situation in the occupied territories, adopted by the joint meeting of the Red Crescent/Red Cross National Societies in the Member States of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, 21-22 April) [E/CN.4/2001/166], and from Israel regarding information pertaining to a gunshot fired at the vehicle of the High Commissioner during her visit in 2000 [E/CN.4/2002/6].

Report of Special Rapporteur. By an October note [A/56/440], the Secretary-General transmitted the report of Special Rapporteur John Dugard on the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine. During his mission to the occupied Palestinian territories in August, the Special Rapporteur had met with Palestinian and Israeli NGOs, international agencies and the Palestinian Authority (PA). He did not meet with Israeli authorities as the Government had made it clear that it would not cooperate because of objections to his mandate. Since the Special Rapporteur's mandate required him to investigate human rights violations in the occupied Palestinian territories within the context of military occupation, the report focused on military occupation as the root cause of the conflict in the occupied Palestinian territories and Israel, as the cause of the violation of human rights and humanitarian law in the region. The Special Rapporteur described the violence and loss of life since the start of the second intifada in September 2000, during which over 530

Palestinians had been killed and over 15,000 injured and more than 150 Israelis had been killed. He observed that both Israelis and Palestinians had violated important norms of humanitarian law and international law, and asserted that the failed attempts to end the violence (see p. 405) suggested that the time had come for an international monitoring presence. In his view, the principal cause of the second intifada and of the escalating violence was the continuing occupation, the signs of which had intensified. The Special Rapporteur described expanded settlement activity, the demolition of Palestinian houses, restrictions on freedom of movement in the occupied territories imposed by Israel through closures and checkpoints and the Israeli occupation of Orient House, the political headquarters of the Palestinians in East Jerusalem (see p. 411). The Special Rapporteur concluded that it was incumbent on the international community to ensure that Israel and the PA agreed to an international presence to ensure that a ceasefire held. In view of Israel's continued refusal to accept the Fourth Geneva Convention as the governing law, he recommended that the high contracting parties to the Convention convene to consider the applicability of the Convention (see p. 425). The Special Rapporteur called for the dismantling of settlements and attention to Israel's violation of freedom of movement in the occupied Palestinian territories. There was a need to rebuild confidence on both sides, he stated. However, until Israel indicated a willingness to terminate the occupation, it was unlikely that the Palestinians would accept its good faith in negotiations aimed at a permanent settlement.

The General Assembly, on 19 December, took note of the Secretary-General's note transmitting the Special Rapporteur's report (decision 56/429).

Communication. In December comments on the Special Rapporteur's report [E/CN.4/2002/129 & Corr.1], Israel stated that he had disregarded its attempts to end the current situation. Israel reiterated its objections to the Special Rapporteur's mandate, refuted his assertion that occupation was the root cause of the conflict, and disagreed with his examination of human rights violations and with his description of the occupation. Israel also claimed biases in the presentation of the facts, legal conclusions and recommendations.

Chapter I

Development policy and international economic cooperation

In 2001, the world economy took an unexpectedly severe and widespread downturn. Following an unprecedented period of growth, the slowdown began in the developed economies, particularly North America, but quickly spread around the world through global trade, finance and investment links. The pervasive slowdown, aggravated by the terrorist attacks against the United States in September, led to a substantial decline in global growth from 4 per cent in 2000 to about 1.4 per cent in 2001. Growth in the developed economies was the lowest in a decade, as was annual average growth in the developing countries, with the exception of the year following the Asian crisis. The economies in transition exhibited greater resilience but their average growth also declined during the year.

The global decline took on a particular significance in the context of increasing economic globalization and interdependence, which were important themes of deliberations within the major UN organs in 2001. The General Assembly's second high-level dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership, which took place in September, focused on responding to globalization by promoting the integration of developing countries into the world economy and enhancing their integration into the emerging global information network. The Assembly also addressed the role of the United Nations in the context of globalization, as well as the importance of promoting global partnerships, particularly with the private sector. The Economic and Social Council adopted agreed conclusions on the role of the United Nations and the importance of relevant partnerships in promoting development, particularly through access to and transfer of information technologies. In April, the Commission on Sustainable Development examined the impact of economic globalization on sustainable development, with particular reference to developing countries. Also in April, the Committee for Development Policy considered economic governance responsibilities in the context of a globalizing world.

In May, the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (LDCs)

adopted the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, an updated set of commitments and measures for improving the lives of the 600 million people living in 49 LDCs worldwide.

Development and international economic cooperation

A number of UN bodies addressed development and international economic cooperation issues during 2001, including the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

The Assembly, by decision 56/453 of 21 December, deferred consideration of the launching of global negotiations on international economic cooperation for development and included the item in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh (2002) session.

Also on 21 December, the Assembly took note of the reports of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on its discussion of macro-economic policy questions [A/56/558] (decision 56/435) and of sustainable development and international economic cooperation [A/56/560] (decision 56/436).

Economic and Social Council consideration. On 1 May, the Economic and Social Council held its fourth special high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund) [E/2001/72]. It had before it a note by the Secretary-General containing background information on selected aspects of international cooperation in strengthening financing for development [E/2001/45] (see p. 882).

Globalization and interdependence

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/212 [YUN 2000, p. 783], the Secretary-General submitted an October report on the role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence

[A/56/445]. The report analysed the increasing linkages and interdependencies among trade, finance, knowledge, technology and investment and their effect on growth and development and explored policy responses. Prepared in collaboration with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and other organizations of the UN system, the report also addressed policy coherence and consistency for the prevention and management of financial crises.

The Secretary-General observed that the report's conclusions and recommendations should be seen in the context of the preparatory processes for two major conferences: the November ministerial meeting of the World Trade Organization (WTO) (see p. 1432) and the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development (see p. 882). The key challenge to be met in those and other international policy forums was to place development at the centre in considering how globalization was managed. Development goals should shape the framework of globalization rather than allowing the blind forces of globalization to define the development outcome.

That would require not only ensuring greater policy coherence at the global and national levels, but also making the international trade, finance and technology regimes much more responsive to development. The United Nations had an important role to play in promoting policy coherence and strengthening coordination at the international level. In that regard, the Economic and Social Council could be encouraged to deepen its dialogue with the Bretton Woods institutions and WTO and could encourage the UN system to develop integrated policy responses and a set of mutually reinforcing actions to address globalization, with a view to strengthening efforts to achieve the outcomes of the major UN conferences of the 1990s and the goals set during the Millennium Assembly in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 47]. To build the capacity in developing countries and economies in transition to deal with the challenges of globalization, additional efforts were called for by the international community in terms of financial resources and technical assistance. Financial support through official development assistance (ODA) should be concentrated on key areas such as physical infrastructure, development of human resources and institutional and managerial capacity-building.

Governments needed to foster an environment to enable the private sector in developing countries and economies in transition to be integrated more effectively into the globalization of economic activities. In that regard, the provision of technical and financial assistance by the international community and the active participation of the private sector were crucial to address structural deficiencies that hindered the ability of developing countries to participate in the knowledge-based global economy.

The report further observed that institutional arrangements for economic governance had fallen far behind the realities of globalization. Global institutional structures could be usefully adapted and evolved in the functioning of financial markets, international capital flows, intellectual property and patent regimes, competition policy and bankruptcy law, taxation and trade policies, and regulation and supervision of banks and financial institutions. Also, given the linkages and interdependence in the driving forces of globalization and its impact on growth and development, Governments needed to cooperate in establishing fair and equitable trade, investment, technology and knowledge regimes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/568], adopted resolution 56/209 without vote [agenda item 105].

Role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 53/169 of 15 December 1998, 54/231 of 22 December 1999 and 55/212 of 20 December 2000 on the role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Takes note also of the deliberations of the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Financing for Development, to be held at Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002;
3. Stresses the importance of continued substantive consideration of the item on globalization and interdependence;
4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on globalization and interdependence, bearing in mind, inter alia, the outcome of the International Conference on Financing for Development;
5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the item entitled "Globalization and interdependence".

Development through partnership

In accordance with resolution 55/193 [YUN 2000, p. 785], the General Assembly held its second high-level dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership (20-21 September), the first having been held in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 772]. The dialogue was originally scheduled for 17 and 18 September, as decided by Member States [A/55/955] and agreed to by the Assembly in decision 55/479 of 31 May. The dialogue was rescheduled and somewhat compressed in format as a result of the 11 September terrorist attacks in the United States.

The theme of the dialogue, "Responding to globalization: facilitating the integration of developing countries into the world economy in the twenty-first century", was considered to be particularly important and timely in the context of the current global economic slowdown. In a report on the dialogue [A/56/482], the Assembly President stated that the two-day discussions, which were held in both plenary meetings and two ministerial round tables/informal panels, could be summarized as follows: globalization was a reality that had to be accepted, but while it could be a formidable multiplier of growth and prosperity, it did not automatically translate into more trade and faster growth for all countries, nor did it protect gains already made; while the international community had done much to promote the integration of developing countries into the world economy, it had to address the legitimate concerns of those that were not yet able to enjoy the benefits of globalization, and give priority to correcting the imbalances in the international economic system that disadvantaged developing countries; in addition to an enabling environment, vulnerable countries needed to be supported through capacity-building in areas such as trade, investment finance and technology, and additional ODA and deeper and wider debt relief were critical for the poorest countries; the benefits of information and communication technologies had to be harnessed and directed towards the long-term, comprehensive development of developing countries to ensure their successful integration into the global economy; globalization was an interactive process that needed to be harnessed and directed, as its benefits were also the results of policy choices; because of their low per capita income and particular vulnerabilities, the least developed, small island developing, landlocked and transit developing countries and African countries should be the focus of attention of the international community; and all countries should be able to engage in a more participatory governance at national, regional and international levels.

On 21 December, the Assembly, by decision 56/438, took note of the President's summary of the high-level dialogue.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/560/Add.3], adopted resolution 56/190 without vote [agenda item 97 (c)].

High-level dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/165 of 21 December 1993, 49/95 of 19 December 1994, 50/122 of 20 December 1995, 51/174 of 16 December 1996, 52/186 of 18 December 1997, 53/181 of 15 December 1998, 54/213 of 22 December 1999 and 55/193 of 20 December 2000,

Reaffirming its resolution 55/2 of 8 September 2000, entitled "United Nations Millennium Declaration",

Recalling the Agenda for Development and the relevant provisions regarding its follow-up and implementation, and the need to give impetus to international economic cooperation for development so as to follow up on the Agenda effectively,

Reaffirming the importance of continuing the dialogue to be conducted in response to the imperative of solidarity, mutual interests and benefits, genuine interdependence, shared responsibility and the partnership in promoting international economic cooperation for development,

Recognizing, in this context, the importance of an enabling environment and sound economic policy at both the national and the international level,

Noting the need to ensure the integrated and coordinated follow-up and implementation by the United Nations system of the outcome of major United Nations conferences and summits,

1. Reaffirms the importance of continued constructive dialogue and genuine partnership to promote further international economic cooperation for development;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in close consultation with Governments, all relevant parts of the United Nations system and other relevant stakeholders, to propose the modalities, the nature and the timing of such constructive dialogue and genuine partnership for the promotion of international economic cooperation for development for consideration by the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development and international economic cooperation", the sub-item entitled "High-level dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership", and requests the Secretary-General to submit to it at that session a consolidated report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Private sector partnerships

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 55/215 [YUN 2000, p. 785], the Secretary-General submitted an October report on cooperation between the United Nations and all relevant partners, in particular the private sector [A/56/323]. The comprehensive review, which was based on consultations with Member States, UN entities, business associations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), observed that, over the preceding 10 years, non-State actors had become engaged to an unprecedented degree in most areas of UN activities, ranging from policy dialogue, standard-setting and normative work to operational activities, advocacy and information work. That engagement offered opportunities for increased effectiveness, but also created some strategic and practical challenges. In particular, cooperation should be viewed as a means of achieving UN goals and enhancing performance, not as an end in itself. The potential private sector contribution to development was multifaceted and needed to be harnessed in a focused and effective manner. Partnerships should focus not only on the mobilization of funds, but also on mobilizing the core competencies, comparative advantages and investment expertise of the private sector.

The report provided examples of the variety of partnerships between the United Nations, the private sector and other non-State actors, particularly a number of cooperative initiatives in support of the goals of the Millennium Declaration, adopted by the General Assembly in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 49].

The Global Compact, a multi-stakeholder initiative introduced by the Secretary-General in 1999 and officially launched as an operational initiative in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 989], had emerged as an overall value framework for cooperation between the United Nations and the business community. The Compact, a set of nine universally agreed principles in the areas of environment, labour and human rights, offered a useful point of reference for good corporate citizenship when choosing business partners, stated the report. The Secretariat would establish a working group to consider, among other things, the development of an inter-agency network of private sector focal points, aimed at improving internal learning, information-sharing and outreach capacities for cooperation with non-State actors. Special efforts were needed to ensure that cooperation with the business community and other non-State actors paid particular attention to the needs and priorities of developing countries and countries with economies in transition.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December [meeting 84], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/76 [draft: A/56/L.33 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 39].

Towards global partnerships

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the central role of the United Nations, in particular the General Assembly, in the promotion of partnerships in the context of globalization,

Underlining the intergovernmental nature of the United Nations,

Reaffirming its resolve to create an environment, at the national and global levels alike, that is conducive to development and the elimination of poverty,

Recalling the objectives formulated in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, particularly in regard to developing partnerships through the provision of greater opportunities to the private sector, non-governmental organizations and civil society in general so as to enable them to contribute to the realization of the goals and programmes of the Organization, in particular in the pursuit of development and the eradication of poverty,

Stressing that efforts to meet the challenges of globalization could benefit from enhanced cooperation between the United Nations and all relevant partners, in particular the private sector, in order to ensure that globalization becomes a positive force for all,

Encouraging the private sector to accept and implement the principle of good corporate citizenship, that is, bringing sustainable development principles, which are based on the three pillars of economic development, social development and environmental protection, to bear on a conduct and policy that are premised on profit incentives, in conformity with national laws and regulations, and in this context drawing the attention of Member States to multi-stakeholder initiatives, in particular, the Global Compact Initiative of the Secretary-General, the Global Alliance for Vaccines and Immunizations, the multi-stakeholder dialogue process of the Commission on Sustainable Development and the Information and Communication Technologies Task Force,

Recalling the central role and responsibility of Governments in national and international policy-making,

Underlining the fact that cooperation between the United Nations and all relevant partners, in particular the private sector, shall serve the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations and make concrete contributions to the realization of the goals contained in the Millennium Declaration and in the outcomes of major United Nations conferences and summits and their reviews, in particular in the area of development and the eradication of poverty, and shall be undertaken in a manner that maintains the integrity, impartiality and independence of the Organization,

Emphasizing that all relevant partners, in particular the private sector, can contribute in several ways to addressing the obstacles confronted by developing countries in mobilizing the resources needed to finance their sustainable development, and to the realization of the development goals of the United Nations through, inter alia, financial resources, access to technology, management expertise, and support for programmes, including through the reduced pricing of drugs, where appropriate, for the prevention, care and treatment of the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) and other diseases,

Underlining the fact that the resources contributed by the relevant partners, in particular the private sector, should be a complement to, not a substitute for, governmental resources,

Taking into account ideas expressed in the report of the Secretary-General of 27 March 2000, entitled "We the peoples: the role of the United Nations in the twenty-first century", with regard to enhanced cooperation with the private sector,

Recalling its resolution 55/215 of 21 December 2000,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and its numerous valuable examples of cooperation between the United Nations and all relevant partners, in particular the private sector, which have contributed and should continue to contribute to the realization of the goals and programmes of the Organization, in particular in the pursuit of development and the eradication of poverty;

2. Stresses that the principles and approaches that govern such partnerships and arrangements should be built on the firm foundation of United Nations purposes and principles, as set out in the Charter, and invites the United Nations system to continue to adhere to a common approach to partnership which, without imposing undue rigidity in partnership agreements, includes the following principles: common purpose, transparency, bestowing no unfair advantages upon any partner of the United Nations, mutual benefit and mutual respect, accountability, respect for the modalities of the United Nations, striving for balanced representation of relevant partners from developed and developing countries and countries with economies in transition, and not compromising the independence and neutrality of the United Nations system in general and the agencies in particular;

3. Stresses also the need for international cooperation to strengthen the participation of enterprises, especially small and medium-sized enterprises, business associations, foundations and non-governmental organizations from developing countries and countries with economies in transition, in particular in partnerships with the United Nations system;

4. Stresses further the need for Member States further to discuss partnerships and to consider, in appropriate intergovernmental consultations, ways and means to enhance cooperation between the United Nations and all relevant partners, inter alia, from the developing countries, to give them greater opportunities to contribute to the realization of the goals and programmes of the Organization;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to seek the views of relevant partners, in particular the private sector, on how to enhance their cooperation with the United Nations;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution, containing proposals of modalities for enhanced cooperation between the United Nations and all relevant partners, in particular the private sector, for consideration by the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session;

7. Decides to include in the agenda of its fifty-eighth session the item entitled "Towards global partnerships".

Business and development

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/204 [YUN 1999, p. 746], the Secretary-General, in October, submitted his fourth biennial report on business and development [A/56/442], in which he reviewed trends in entrepreneurial development, the related issues of property rights, knowledge acquisition and regulatory framework and governance, and the question of socially responsible business behaviour. The report stated that entrepreneurship development had become a priority for many policy makers in both developed and developing countries, in market as well as transition economies. Encouraging entrepreneurship was increasingly perceived as a policy option leading to a higher level of economic development, increased productivity, job creation and promotion of more broad-based participation in productive activities, particularly by the poor and by women. UN efforts to promote entrepreneurship—including those of the International Trade Centre, UNCTAD and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization—focused primarily on problems faced by small and medium-sized enterprises regarding access to markets, finance, business skills and technology. The report noted that the question of business responsibility constituted the core of the Global Compact Initiative, which stressed that pure economic utility and advantage could go hand in hand with business support for human rights, freedom of association and the right to collective bargaining, elimination of compulsory or child labour and discriminatory hiring practices, and environmental protection.

Overall, trends indicated that the structure in which there was one predominant actor (government) and one predominant treasury (public budget) was being replaced with a constellation of actors, public and private, each with its own capacity and treasury, forming ad hoc alliances to solve ad hoc problems. Government organizations, businesses, individuals and formal and informal organizations of civil society could be part of such a constellation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/559], adopted resolution 56/185 without vote [agenda item 96 (a)].

Business and development

Reaffirming its resolution 54/204 of 22 December 1999,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the sub-item entitled "Business and development";

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the relevant United Nations organizations, to submit to it at its fifty-seventh session a follow-up report on the continuing implementation of resolution 54/204.

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on sectoral policy questions (dealing with business and development and industrial development cooperation) would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464).

Implementation of the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation and the International Development Strategy

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/560/Add.4], adopted resolution 56/191 without vote [agenda item 97 (d)].

Implementation of the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance and continuing validity of the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, and of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990,

Recalling its resolutions 45/234 of 21 December 1990, 46/144 of 17 December 1991, 47/152 of 18 December 1992, 48/185 of 21 December 1993, 49/92 of 19 December 1994, 51/173 of 16 December 1996, 53/178 of 15 December 1998, 54/206 of 22 December 1999 and 55/190 of 20 December 2000, and the Agenda for Development,

Recalling also the results of all the major United Nations conferences and summit meetings held since the beginning of the 1990s,

Reaffirming the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in particular the targets and commitments relating to development and poverty eradication,

Recalling the outcomes of the special session of the General Assembly to review and address the problem of human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS), the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, and the special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda,

Emphasizing the importance of the other development-oriented meetings to be convened under the auspices of the United Nations in 2002, including the International Conference on Financing for Development, the special session of the General Assembly on children and the World Summit on Sustainable Development,

1. Expresses regret that the consultations foreseen in resolution 54/206 could not be held;

2. Decides to consider the issue of further development of a new international development strategy during the fifty-seventh session of the General Assembly, on the basis of the outcomes of the aforementioned meetings and keeping in mind the outcome of the review of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session with an overview of the challenges and constraints as well as progress made towards achieving the major development goals and objectives adopted by the United Nations during the past decade;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development and international economic cooperation", a sub-item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade".

Coercive economic measures

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/200 [YUN 1999, p. 748], the Secretary-General submitted an October report on the elimination of economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion [A/56/473], which summarized information on the subject received from 13 Governments.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/558/Add.1], adopted resolution 56/179 by recorded vote (100-1-46) [agenda item 95 (a)].

Unilateral economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, which states, inter alia, that no State may use or encourage the use of unilateral economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights,

Bearing in mind the general principles governing the international trading system and trade policies for development contained in relevant resolutions, rules and provisions of the United Nations and the World Trade Organization,

Recalling its resolutions 44/215 of 22 December 1989, 46/210 of 20 December 1991, 48/168 of 21 December 1993, 50/96 of 20 December 1995, 52/181 of 18 December 1997 and 54/200 of 22 December 1999,

Gravely concerned that the use of unilateral coercive economic measures adversely affects the economy and development efforts of developing countries in particular and has a general negative impact on international economic cooperation and on worldwide efforts to move towards a non-discriminatory and open multilateral trading system,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Urges the international community to adopt urgent and effective measures to eliminate the use of unilateral coercive economic measures against developing countries that are not authorized by relevant organs of the United Nations or are inconsistent with the principles of international law as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and that contravene the basic principles of the multilateral trading system;
3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the imposition of measures of this nature and to study the impact of such measures on the affected countries, including the impact on trade and development;
4. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 56/179:

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Oman, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkmenistan, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Albania, Andorra, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Malta, Marshall Islands, Monaco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, San Marino, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkey, Ukraine, United Kingdom.

Also on 21 December, the Assembly decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh (2002) session an item on the elimination of unilateral extraterritorial coercive economic measures as a means of political and economic compulsion (last considered in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 789]) and to continue to consider the item at odd-numbered sessions (decision 56/455).

Cuban embargo. On 27 November, the Assembly adopted resolution 56/9 on the necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States against Cuba (see p. 252).

Sustainable development

Commission on Sustainable Development

The Commission on Sustainable Development held the second part of its ninth session in New York from 16 to 27 April [E/2001/29]; an organizational meeting had been held on 5 May 2000. The session included a multi-stakeholder dialogue on sustainable energy and transport (see p. 933) and a high-level segment on a number of sustainable development issues and preparations for the World Summit on Sustainable Development, to be held in 2002. From 30 April to 2 May, the Commission convened the first organizational session acting as preparatory committee for the Summit (see p. 749).

The Commission adopted decisions on: energy for sustainable development [dec. 9/1] (see p. 932); protection of the atmosphere [dec. 9/2] (see p. 963); transport [dec. 9/3] (see p. 947); information for decision-making and participation [dec. 9/4]; international cooperation for an enabling environment [dec. 9/5] (see p. 748); the draft programme budget for the 2002-2003 biennium for the Division of Sustainable Development of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs [dec. 9/6]; and documents considered by the Commission at its ninth session [dec. 9/7].

By decision 2001/229 of 19 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report on its ninth session.

International cooperation for an enabling environment

In the context of the call in Agenda 21 [YUN 1992, p. 672], adopted at the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED), for the international community to provide a supportive international climate for achieving environment and development goals, the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report on international cooperation for an enabling environment for sustainable development [E/CN.17/2001/5]. The report addressed the impact of globalization on sustainable development and related policy implications, with particular reference to developing countries. Special attention was given to trade and finance, which, supported by technological advances in information and communication, were the areas where globalization manifested itself most profoundly. The report also reviewed approaches and initiatives in international cooperation to facilitate the transition to sustainable development in the context of globalization.

Also before the Commission was the report of the Ad Hoc Intersessional Working Group on Information for Decision-making and Participation and on International Cooperation for an Enabling Environment (New York, 12-16 March) [E/CN.17/2001/17], which contained possible elements for draft decisions by the Commission on the two cross-sectoral themes being considered at the ninth session.

In a 27 April decision [E/2001/29 (dec. 9/5)], the Commission made recommendations for international cooperation and national action, within the framework of Agenda 21, for promoting an enabling environment for sustainable development. Among other things, the Commission called for the urgent fulfilment of all financial commitments of Agenda 21 and for supportive measures to promote access to and transfer of environmentally sound technologies.

Information for decision-making and participation

The Commission on Sustainable Development had before it a report of the Secretary-General on information for decision-making and participation [E/CN.17/2001/4], an issue that cut across all the other issues highlighted in Agenda 21. The report discussed changes in information, particularly technology, since UNCED, identified issues for discussion and policy recommendations, and reflected the discussions that had taken place in an international expert meeting on information for decision-making and participation (Ottawa, Canada, 25-28 September 2000).

Noting that the revolution in information technology had exploded into the "new knowledge economy", the report observed that there were two main challenges: to create a more level playing field for decision makers in all countries by improving data collection, standardization, access and participation by civil society; and to understand the full potential of new technologies by assembling useful information on sustainable development in more comprehensive integrated frameworks that allowed multiple points of access and responded to the needs of many users. Recommendations for Commission action concerned three key issues: bridging the data gap within and between countries; improving the availability of and access to information; and new information technologies.

In an addendum [E/CN.17/2001/4/Add.1], the Secretary-General reviewed the Commission's work programme on indicators of sustainable development. The Commission also considered a March report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.17/2001/14] on national reporting activities since the Commission's seventh (1999) session and the report of the Ad Hoc Intersessional Working Group on Information for Decision-making and Participation and on International Cooperation for an Enabling Environment [E/CN.17/2001/17] (see p. 747).

In a 27 April decision [E/2001/29 (dec. 9/4)], the Commission called on international organizations to take action to improve the functioning, coherence and coordination of data collection and information on sustainable development, and on countries, particularly developed ones, in cooperation with international organizations, to assist with training and capacity-building on information technology, particularly in developing countries. The need for the Commission to keep under review the full range of indicators of sustainable development was reiterated. The Commission also made recommendations for activities at the national level, including ensuring access to environmental information, public participation in decision-making and access to judicial and administrative proceedings in environmental matters, collecting and providing access to relevant information for decision-making for sustainable development and fostering sustainable development in cooperation with international organizations by providing needed technological infrastructure, particularly to developing countries.

In-depth evaluation

By a March note [E/AC.51/2001/2], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the in-depth evaluation of sustainable development. The report proposed that the Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA) should promote dialogue between members of the Commission on Sustainable Development and government representatives engaged in other intergovernmental processes. It further recommended that the Secretariat should make proposals to the Commission and other relevant bodies on the format, scope and calendar of reporting on sustainable development issues to intergovernmental bodies so that reporting could more effectively facilitate the preparations of government representatives for the annual or biennial sessions. To reduce the burden placed on countries to report to an increasing number of intergovernmental forums, DESA and members of the Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development should develop procedures to limit requests for national information to that not readily available elsewhere in the UN system. The involvement of UN organizations, in particular those with regional or national offices, in support of implementing national sustainable development strategies needed to be more effectively organized.

At its forty-first session (New York, 11 June-6 July) [A/56/16 & Corr.1], CPC recommended approval of the evaluation's recommendations and emphasized that national monitoring of nationally owned strategies should be encouraged.

Follow-up to UNCED

World Summit on Sustainable Development (2002)

In 2001, the Commission on Sustainable Development acting as the Preparatory Committee for the World Summit on Sustainable Development began preparations for the 10-year review in 2002 of the implementation of Agenda 21—a programme of action for sustainable development worldwide, which was adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 672]. The first such review was carried out by the General Assembly at its nineteenth special session in 1997, when it adopted the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 [YUN 1997, p. 792].

In accordance with Assembly resolution 55/199 [YUN 2000, p. 793], the Commission, acting as preparatory committee, held its organizational session in New York from 30 April to 2 May [A/56/19] to assess the state of preparations for the World Summit and take action on a number of organizational issues. The Commission had before it reports of the Secretary-General on progress in preparatory activities at the national, regional and international levels [E/CN.17/2001/PC/23] and on suggested arrangements for involving NGOs and other major groups in the Summit and its preparatory process [E/CN.17/2001/PC/22]. It also considered reports of the Secretary-General on issues regarding setting the agenda and determining possible main themes for the Summit, including those on demographic dynamics and sustainability [E/CN.17/2001/PC/2]; information and institutions for decision-making [E/CN.17/2001/PC/3]; the participation of major groups in sustainable development [E/CN.17/2001/PC/4]; combating poverty [E/CN.17/2001/PC/5]; health and sustainable development [E/CN.17/2001/PC/6]; education and public awareness for sustainable development [E/CN.17/2001/PC/7]; changing consumption patterns [E/CN.17/2001/PC/8]; sustainable human settlements development and environmentally sound management of solid wastes [E/CN.17/2001/PC/9]; finance and trade [E/CN.17/2001/PC/10]; transfer of environmentally sound technologies, cooperation and capacity-building and environmentally sound management of biotechnology [E/CN.17/2001/PC/11]; protection of the atmosphere [E/CN.17/2001/PC/12]; agriculture, land and desertification [E/CN.17/2001/PC/13]; sustainable mountain development [E/CN.17/2001/PC/14]; review of progress in forests since UNCED [E/CN.17/2001/PC/15]; oceans and seas [E/CN.17/2001/PC/16]; water as a key resource for sustainable development [E/CN.17/2001/PC/17]; the global status of biodiversity [E/CN.17/2001/PC/18]; management of toxic chemicals and hazardous and radioactive wastes [E/CN.17/2001/PC/19]; energy and transport [E/CN.17/2001/PC/20]; and sustainable tourism development [E/CN.17/2001/PC/21].

In a 2 May resolution [A/56/19 (res. 2001/PC/1)], the Commission underlined the critical importance of the regional preparations for the World Summit, scheduled to take place from August to November 2001, and invited the Secretary-General, the Secretariat and relevant intergovernmental processes to take specific action in preparation for the Summit. The Commission also recommended to the General Assembly for adoption a draft resolution containing the draft provisional rules of procedure of the Summit [E/CN.17/2001/PC/24].

In other action, the Commission adopted decisions on specific modalities of future (2002) sessions of the Preparatory Committee [dec. 2001/PC/1] and arrangements for accreditation and participation in the Summit and its preparatory process of NGOs and other major groups [dec. 2001/PC/3].

On 21 December, the Assembly, by decision 56/441, took note of the report of the Commission acting as the Preparatory Committee on its organizational session.

Report of Secretary-General. In a September report to the General Assembly on progress in preparations for the World Summit [A/56/379], the Secretary-General stated that a consensus had emerged that the Summit, to take place in Johannesburg, South Africa, from 2 to 11 September 2002, would be a turning point in moving the global society to a sustainable future. The tempo of preparatory activities in recent months had accelerated, with many more events being planned or envisaged by stakeholders at various levels. By August, more than 40 Member States had established national preparatory committees, and national assessment reports had been received from 11 countries, with many more under way. In addition, a number of countries had launched initiatives to help raise awareness, mobilize support and enhance the sense of ownership of the preparatory process, including: 101 ways to promote sustainable development; sustainable development visions for the twenty-first century; children's Agenda 21 posters; and national progression targets.

Regional and subregional preparations focused on stakeholder consultations, intergovernmental preparatory meetings, which would be held from September to November 2001, and eminent persons' round tables, which had been held in all five regions. At the international level, intergovernmental preparations were progressing, mainly within the framework of the United Nations, while a broad range of international preparatory initiatives had been undertaken by NGOs and other major groups.

Regional meetings. High-level meetings were held in 2001 in each of the regions in preparation for the Summit. The Economic Commission for Europe Regional Ministerial Meeting (Geneva, 24-25 September) adopted a ministerial statement [E/CN.17/2002/PC.2/5/Add.1]; the African Preparatory Conference (Nairobi, Kenya, 17-18 October) adopted the African ministerial statement [E/CN.17/2002/PC.2/5/Add.4]; the Regional Preparatory Conference of Latin America and the Caribbean (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 23-24 October) adopted the Rio de Janeiro Platform for Action on the Road to Johannesburg, 2002 [E/CN.17/2002/PC.2/5/Add.2]; the Arab Ministers responsible for development affairs, planning and environment (Cairo, Egypt, 24 October) adopted the Arab Declaration to the World Summit on Sustainable Development [E/CN.17/2002/PC.2/5/Add.3]; and the High-level Regional Meeting for the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Phnom Penh, Cambodia, 28-29 November) adopted the Phnom Penh Regional Platform on Sustainable Development for Asia and the Pacific [E/CN.17/2002/PC.2/8].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 December [meeting 92], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/561/Add.1], adopted resolution 56/226 without vote [agenda item 98 (a)].

World Summit on Sustainable Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/199 of 20 December 2000 and the decisions adopted by the Commission on Sustainable Development acting as the Preparatory Committee for the World Summit on Sustainable Development at its organizational session,

Encouraging countries and relevant regional and international organizations to support the preparatory processes,

Welcoming national preparations for the Summit, including those at the local level, through the establishment of preparatory committees, with the participation of Governments and other stakeholders, the undertaking of national assessments and the initiation of other preparatory activities, encouraging all countries to intensify that work, and calling upon the United Nations system to support such activities,

Welcoming also the activities of major groups related to the preparations for the Summit, and encouraging them to carry out further preparatory activities,

Welcoming further the valuable contributions from the preparatory activities undertaken at the sub-regional and the regional level, as well as from other relevant initiatives undertaken at the international level,

Encouraging new initiatives that would contribute to the full implementation of Agenda 21, the Rio Declation on Environment and Development and other relevant outcomes of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development by strengthening commitments at all levels, including by reinvigorating, at the highest political level, global commitment and partnerships, especially between Governments of the North and the South, on the one hand, and between Governments and major groups on the other,

Expressing its appreciation for the work undertaken by South Africa and Indonesia as the host Governments, respectively, of the Summit and the fourth session of the Preparatory Committee at the ministerial level,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on progress in preparatory activities for the World Summit on Sustainable Development;

2. Approves the provisional rules of procedure of the World Summit on Sustainable Development, as recommended by the Commission on Sustainable Development acting as the Preparatory Committee for the Summit at its organizational session;

3. Decides that the Summit shall be open to all States Members of the United Nations and States members of the specialized agencies, with the participation of observers in accordance with the established practice of the General Assembly and its conferences and with the rules of procedure of the Summit;

4. Also decides that the Summit shall be held in Johannesburg, South Africa, from 26 August to 4 September 2002, with the participation of heads of State and Government during the period 2 to 4 September;

5. Reiterates that the Summit, including its preparatory process, should ensure a balance between economic development, social development and environmental protection since they are interdependent and mutually reinforcing components of sustainable development;

6. Invites countries to be represented at the highest political level at the Summit;

7. Requests the Commission on Sustainable Development acting as the Preparatory Committee for the Summit to decide on all remaining issues related to the organization of work of the Summit, including specific details of the series of events to be held in partnership with stakeholders, the short multi-stakeholder event involving the highest level of representation from major groups and Governments, and the round-table meetings to be held at the level of heads of State or Government;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to launch a public information campaign to raise global awareness of the Summit, including through reprioritization of the budget of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat and voluntary contributions;

9. Invites donors to continue providing extrabudgetary resources, in particular through voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund, in support of the preparatory activities for the Summit and the Summit itself, and to support the travel and participation of representatives of developing countries, in particular from the least developed countries, and encourages voluntary contributions to support the participation of major groups from developing countries;

10. Encourages all countries to complete their national assessment reports, and in that regard calls upon relevant regional and international organizations to further step up their efforts to assist developing countries in the elaboration of those assessment reports;

11. Encourages, at the national level, the active involvement of all Government agencies responsible for economic development, social development and environmental protection, and invites them to provide co-ordinated inputs and contributions to the preparatory process of the Summit;

12. Encourages the active involvement of all relevant regional and international agencies and organizations, and invites them to provide inputs and contributions to the preparatory process of the Summit;

13. Encourages effective contributions from and the active participation of all major groups, as identified in Agenda 21, at all stages of the preparatory process, in accordance with the rules and procedures of the Commission on Sustainable Development, as well as its established practices for the participation and engagement of major groups;

14. Reiterates the invitation to all intergovernmental processes relevant to the Summit to submit their progress reports to the Commission acting as the Preparatory Committee at its second session, to be held from 28 January to 8 February 2002, and their final results to the Commission acting as the Preparatory Committee at its third session, to be held from 25 March to 5 April 2002, so that they can be fully considered in the preparatory process;

15. Reiterates the role of the Commission on Sustainable Development acting as the Preparatory Committee in the global intergovernmental process for the preparations for the Summit, and in that context recalls the mandate and role of its Bureau, as stipulated by the General Assembly in its resolution 55/199 and by the Commission on Sustainable Development acting as the Preparatory Committee in the decisions adopted at its organizational session;

16. Welcomes the initiatives undertaken by the Secretary-General to raise international awareness of the Summit;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the outcome of the Summit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session, and decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the sub-item entitled "Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21", taking into account the outcome of the Summit.

Inter-Agency Meeting

An Inter-Agency Meeting on Sustainable Development of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) (New York, 22-23 March) [ACC/2001/1] was convened in place of the seventeenth meeting of the Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development (IACSD), since 2001 was to be a transition year for ACC, based on a review of its subsidiary machinery (see p. 1365). With a view to strengthening and improving the effectiveness of future inter-agency work in the area of sustainable development, the meeting agreed that IACSD could be transformed from an ACC standing committee into a more flexible inter-agency group on sustainable development, which would provide for the more direct involvement of organizations that had task manager responsibilities in connection with the implementation of Agenda 21. Meeting once a year, instead of twice, the new group would focus on substantive and policy issues, practical implementation of intergovernmental mandates in the area of sustainable development, and coordination of inter-agency support to the Commission on Sustainable Development. The new flexible approach would allow for a stronger and more direct involvement in the group of those international organizations which were not part of the ACC structure, but whose activities were highly relevant to sustainable development and/or which had been assigned task manager responsibilities (including secretariats of conventions, the World Tourism Organization and regional commissions), and the more substantive involvement of international and regional developmental and financial institutions. The annual meetings would allow a stocktaking of overall progress achieved in sustainable development on the basis of reports of individual task managers/lead organizations, address specific problems and collectively identify future work priorities.

Tourism

By a May note [E/2001/61], the Secretariat transmitted to the Economic and Social Council the text of the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism, which was adopted at the thirteenth session of the General Assembly of the World Tourism Organization (Santiago, Chile, 1 October 1999). In January [E/2001/3], the Secretary-General had proposed that an item on the Code be included in the Council's agenda. A letter and explanatory memorandum from the Secretary-General of the World Tourism Organization were also submitted for the Council's consideration.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2001/37 [draft: E/2001/L.32] without vote [agenda item 13 (p)].

Global Code of Ethics for Tourism

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling subparagraph (c) of its decision 109(LIX) of 23 July 1975, in which the Council decided that the World Tourism Organization might participate, on a continuing basis, in the work of the Council in areas of concern to that organization,

Recalling also article III of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/156 of 19 December 1977 in which, inter alia, the General Assembly stipulated that the activities of the World Tourism Organization and the activities in respect of or related to tourism of the United Nations and other organizations within the United Nations system shall be coordinated by the Economic and Social Council through consultations and recommendations,

Having considered the note by the Secretariat bringing to its attention a significant result achieved at the thirteenth session of the General Assembly of the World Tourism Organization, held in Santiago on 1 October 1999, namely, the adoption by consensus of the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism,

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 56/212 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/571], adopted resolution 56/212 without vote [agenda item 12].

Global Code of Ethics for Tourism

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/156 of 19 December 1977, by which it approved the Agreement on Cooperation and Relationships between the United Nations and the World Tourism Organization,

Reaffirming paragraph 5 of its resolution 36/41 of 19 November 1981, in which it decided that the World Tourism Organization might participate, on a continuing basis, in the work of the General Assembly in areas of concern to that organization,

Recalling the Manila Declaration on World Tourism of 10 October 1980 adopted under the auspices of the World Tourism Organization, the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and Agenda 21 adopted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development on 14 June 1992, and taking note of the Amman Declaration on Peace through Tourism adopted at the Global Summit on Peace through Tourism on 11 November 2000,

Considering that the Commission on Sustainable Development, at its seventh session, held in April 1999, expressed interest in a global code of ethics for tourism and invited the World Tourism Organization to consider the participation of informed major groups in the development, implementation and monitoring of its global code of ethics for tourism,

Recalling its resolution 53/200 of 15 December 1998 on the proclamation of 2002 as the International Year of Ecotourism, in which, inter alia, it reaffirmed Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/40 of 30 July 1998, recognizing the support of the World Tourism Organization for the importance of ecotourism, in particular the designation of the year 2002 as the International Year of Ecotourism, in fostering better understanding among peoples everywhere, in leading to greater awareness of the rich heritage of various civilizations and in bringing about a better appreciation of the inherent values of different cultures, thereby contributing to the strengthening of world peace,

Recognizing the important dimension and role of tourism as a positive instrument towards the alleviation of poverty and the improvement of the quality of life for all people, its potential to make a contribution to economic and social development, especially of the developing countries, and its emergence as a vital force for the promotion of international understanding, peace and prosperity,

1. Takes note with interest of the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism adopted at the thirteenth session of the General Assembly of the World Tourism Organization, which outlines principles to guide tourism development and to serve as a frame of reference for the different stakeholders in the tourism sector, with the objective of minimizing the negative impact of tourism on environment and on cultural heritage while maximizing the benefits of tourism in promoting sustainable development and poverty alleviation as well as understanding among nations;

2. Emphasizes the need for the promotion of a responsible and sustainable tourism that could be beneficial to all sectors of society;

3. Invites Governments and other stakeholders in the tourism sector to consider introducing, as appropriate, the contents of the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism in relevant laws, regulations and professional practices, and, in this regard, recognizes with appreciation the efforts made and measures already undertaken by some States;

4. Encourages the World Tourism Organization to promote effective follow-up to the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism, with the involvement of relevant stakeholders in the tourism sector;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to follow up developments related to the implementation of the present resolution based on the reports of the World Tourism Organization and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session.

Eradication of poverty

Global campaign

ACC action. The new ACC High-level Committee on Programmes, at its first session (Vienna, 26-27 February) [ACC/2001/6], addressed the role of the UN system in follow-up to the Millennium Summit, convened by the General Assembly in September 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 475]. The High-level Committee recommended that a global campaign on poverty eradication be mounted to mobilize world opinion and engage political leaders in achieving the Millennium Declaration target of halving the proportion of people living in extreme poverty by 2015. It called for broadening the poverty paradigm beyond the numerical target of reducing the number of people living below the level of $1 a day to include social, educational, nutritional, health and cultural dimensions, as well as such qualitative aspects as empowerment. It also recommended that: UN organizations prepare an analysis of their contributions to the Millennium Summit's poverty target; the World Bank and other funding entities collaborate on an annual review of flows of concessional funding for programme elements linked to the global campaign; and a comprehensive review be undertaken of the global funding requirements for reducing poverty by half by 2015. In addition, the UN system's capacity to achieve and monitor progress in poverty eradication should be strengthened through improved data as a common basis for analysis, as well as through closer interactions among officials throughout the system involved in work relevant to poverty eradication.

At its first regular session of 2001 (Nairobi, 2-3 April), ACC endorsed the High-level Committee's proposals [ACC/2001/4].

Note by Secretariat. The Secretariat submitted to the Economic and Social Council a June note on a global campaign for poverty eradication [E/2001/84]. The note outlined approaches and measures being developed within the UN system to lay the groundwork for Council action in relation to the launching of such a campaign, as recommended by the General Assembly in resolution S-24/2 [YUN 2000, p. 1013], adopted at its twenty-fourth special session, which conducted the five-year review of the implementation of the outcome of the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113]. Drawing on the proposals endorsed by ACC in April, the note addressed the importance of improving the effectiveness of UN system activities to help Governments achieve and monitor progress towards the poverty-related goals set out in the outcomes of the twenty-fourth special session and the Millennium Summit. In particular, it was imperative for UN organizations to internalize poverty reduction goals and consolidate their activities in order to enhance the overall coherence of the system's poverty eradication work, including analytical, statistical and programme planning activities. In addition, a major advocacy effort to engage political leaders and mobilize world opinion in achieving the 2015 target embodied in the Millennium Declaration should be a central component of the global campaign. (See also below and p. 1003.)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION.

On 26 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2001/42 [draft: E/2001/L.42] without vote [agenda item 14 (b)].

Global campaign for poverty eradication

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling that the General Assembly invited the Council to consolidate the ongoing initiatives and actions established pursuant to the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) and the recommendations contained in the outcome document of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, with a view to launching a global campaign to eradicate poverty,

Reaffirming its commitment to promote a coordinated and integrated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits,

Having considered the note by the Secretariat on a global campaign for poverty eradication;

1. Decides to keep the matter under review in the context of its work on coordinated follow-up to the major United Nations conferences and summits;

2. Invites the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council in 2002 on this matter.

Millennium Declaration road map. In a September report to the General Assembly [A/56/326], the Secretary-General presented a road map towards the implementation of the United Nations Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49]. A section of the report on development and poverty eradication: the millennium goals, which focused on sustainable development through poverty eradication, emphasized the importance of halving the number of people currently living on $1 a day or less.

The Assembly took note of the road map in resolution 56/95 of 14 December (see p. 1279).

UN Decade for Eradication of Poverty

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/210 [YUN 2000, p. 796], the Secretary-General submitted a July report on the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) [A/56/229 & Corr.1]. The report contained a comprehensive review and evaluation of progress towards achieving the goals of the Decade and the Millennium Declaration target of halving by the year 2015 the proportion of the world's people living on less than $1 a day, including resource requirements and possible funding sources. A review of UN system activities in support of national efforts towards achieving those goals was contained in an annex and addendum [A/56/229/Add.1] to the report.

The report found that, despite progress in reducing overall poverty, progress was mixed when examined at the regional and national levels. While it was likely that the 2015 poverty reduction target would be achieved for the world as a whole, many countries, particularly those in sub-Saharan Africa, were not likely to achieve it at the national level. Countries that were not on track to achieve the target and other millennium development goals would need to accelerate economic growth and promote social development, taking into account the multidimensional nature of poverty and the need to achieve pro-poor growth. Despite the best efforts of developing countries to mobilize fully domestic financial resources for poverty eradication, ODA would remain a critically important additional source of development financing for many countries, particularly LDCs, if they were to have a good chance of achieving the 2015 target. The report noted that a global campaign for poverty eradication would provide valuable focus and coordination to efforts at all levels to achieve the Millennium Declaration goal as well as the goal eventually to eradicate poverty within the framework of the Decade.

The report also summarized consultations with 38 Member States and other relevant stakeholders on the proposal to establish a world solidarity fund for poverty eradication. In general, there was broad support for the fund as a mechanism for the international community to contribute, on a voluntary basis, to poverty eradication and promote human resources in the poorest regions of the world, particularly in LDCs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/566], adopted resolution 56/207 without vote [agenda item 103].

Implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006), including the proposal to establish a world solidarity fund for poverty eradication

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/196 of 22 December 1992, by which it established the International Day for the Eradication of Poverty, as well as its resolution 48/183 of 21 December 1993, by which it proclaimed 1996 the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty,

Recalling also its resolution 50/107 of 20 December 1995 on the observance of the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty and the proclamation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006), as well as the declarations and programmes of action of the major United Nations conferences and summits, their follow-up and the need for their implementation, as they relate to the eradication of poverty,

Recalling further the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted by heads of State and Government on the occasion of the Millennium Summit,

Recalling its resolution 55/210 of 20 December 2000, entitled "Implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006), including the initiative to establish a world solidarity fund for poverty eradication",

Expressing its deep concern that the number of people living in extreme poverty in many countries continues to increase, with women and children constituting the majority and the most affected group, in particular in African countries and the least developed countries,

Recognizing that, while the rate of poverty in some countries has been reduced, some developing countries and disadvantaged groups are being marginalized and others are at risk of being marginalized and effectively excluded from the benefits of globalization, resulting in increased income disparity among and within countries, thereby constraining efforts to eradicate poverty,

Recognizing also that for the poverty eradication strategy to be effective it is imperative for developing countries to be integrated into the world economy and equitably share the benefits of globalization,

Recalling the commitment made by the heads of State and Government at the Millennium Summit to eradicate extreme poverty, in particular the commitment to halve, by 2015, the proportion of the world's people whose income is less than one dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger,

Bearing in mind the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development, the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development and the Political Declaration adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-fourth special session, entitled "World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world", held at Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000, as well as the objectives of the World Food Summit, held at Rome from 13 to 17 November 1996,

Recognizing that, while it is the primary responsibility of States to attain economic and social development and to achieve the development and poverty eradication goals as set out in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the international community should support the efforts of the developing countries to eradicate poverty and ensure basic social protection and to promote an enabling international environment,

Expressing concern at the recent economic slowdown, particularly its adverse impact on the economies of developing countries, which could hinder the realization of agreed development goals, in particular the eradication of poverty,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006),

1. Stresses that the United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) should contribute to achieving the targets of halving, by 2015, the proportion of the world's people whose income is less than one dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger, through decisive national action and strengthened international cooperation;

2. Reaffirms, as set out in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, that success in meeting the objectives of development and poverty eradication depends, inter alia, on good governance within each country, and that it also depends on good governance at the international level, on transparency in the financial, monetary and trading systems and on commitment to an open, equitable, rule-based, predictable and non-discriminatory multilateral trading and financial system;

3. Recognizes that success in meeting the objective of poverty eradication requires an enabling environment that encourages, inter alia, sustainable development, including economic growth that favours the poor and that upholds human rights, including the right to development, democratic principles and the rule of law, at all levels;

4. Also recognizes the responsibility of Governments to adopt policies aimed at preventing and combating corrupt practices at the national and international levels;

5. Calls upon all countries to formulate and implement outcome-oriented national strategies and programmes, setting time-bound targets for poverty reduction, including the target of halving, by 2015, the proportion of people living in extreme poverty, which requires the strengthening of national action and international cooperation;

6. Calls for strengthened efforts at all levels to implement fully and effectively the United Nations Millennium Declaration, as well as the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations and all agreements and commitments adopted at the major United Nations conferences and summits and their follow-up, as they relate to the eradication of poverty, with a view to achieving tangible results;

7. Stresses the importance of tackling the root causes of poverty and the necessity of meeting the basic needs of all, and in this context emphasizes the fundamental role in the eradication of poverty of strong and sustained economic growth that favours the poor, creates substantive expansion in productive opportunities and employment, increases incomes, promotes equitable income distribution and minimizes environmental degradation;

8. Also stresses the importance of increasing access to and control over resources, including land, skills, knowledge, capital and social connections, for the poor, in particular women, and of improving access for all to basic social services;

9. Recognizes the importance of the adoption of appropriate policy responses to the challenges of globalization at the national level, in particular by pursuing sound and stable domestic policies, including sound macroeconomic and social policies, inter alia, those contributing to increased income of the poor, in order to realize the objective of the eradication of poverty;

10. Urges the strengthening of international assistance to developing countries in their efforts to alleviate poverty, inter alia, by creating an enabling environment that would facilitate the integration of developing countries into the world economy, improving their market access, facilitating the flow of financial resources and implementing fully and effectively all initiatives already launched regarding debt relief for developing countries, and emphasizes that the international community should consider further measures that would lead to effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable solutions to the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries so that they can share equally in the benefits of globalization, cope with its negative effects, avoid being marginalized in the process of globalization and achieve full integration into the world economy;

11. Reaffirms that, within the context of overall action for the eradication of poverty, special attention should be given to the multidimensional nature of poverty and the national and international conditions and policies that are conducive to its eradication, fostering, inter alia, the social and economic integration of people living in poverty, thus empowering them to participate in decision-making with regard to the policies that affect them, the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, including the right to development, bearing in mind the relationship between all human rights and development, and an efficient, transparent and accountable public service and administration;

12. Recognizes that the eradication of poverty and the achievement and preservation of peace are mutually reinforcing;

13. Reaffirms that the causes of poverty should be addressed in an integrated way, taking into account the importance of the need for the empowerment of women and sectoral strategies in such areas as education, development of human resources, health, human settlements, rural development, productive employment, population, environment, freshwater, food security and migration, and the specific needs of disadvantaged and vulnerable groups, and in such a way as to increase opportunities and choices for people living in poverty and to enable them to build and strengthen their assets so as to achieve social and economic development; and in this regard encourages countries to develop their national poverty reduction policies in accordance with their national priorities including, where appropriate, through poverty reduction strategy papers;

14. Welcomes the efforts made by the United Nations system to assign priority to the eradication of poverty and to enhance coordination, and in this regard encourages the organizations of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, and other partners in development to continue to support all Member States, members of specialized agencies and United Nations observers in carrying forward their own strategy for the achievement of the objectives of the Decade;

15. Also welcomes the holding of the International Conference on Financing for Development at Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002, and encourages Governments and stakeholders to take concrete initiatives and actions in support of financing for development;

16. Further welcomes the convening of the World Summit on Sustainable Development, to be held at Johannesburg, South Africa, from 26 August to 4 September 2002, as a significant opportunity to renew our commitment to sustainable development, the international development goals, Agenda 21, and the principles contained in the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development;

17. Notes the outcome of the Fourth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, held at Doha from 9 to 13 November 2001;

18. Recognizes the importance of the expansion of international trade as an engine of growth and development and, in this context, the need for expeditious and complete integration of developing countries and countries with economies in transition into the international trading system, in full cognizance of the opportunities and challenges of globalization and liberalization and taking into account the circumstances of individual countries, in particular the trade interests and development needs of developing countries;

19. Also recognizes the critical need for countries to undertake economic, institutional and regulatory reforms to support wide trade liberalization and to create an enabling environment in which trade can truly serve as an engine for economic growth and development, and in this regard calls upon the international community to continue to support the capacity-building efforts of developing countries, taking into account their national circumstances;

20. Reaffirms that all Governments and the United Nations system should promote an active and visible policy of mainstreaming a gender perspective in all policies and programmes aimed at the eradication of poverty, at both the national and the international level, and encourages the use of gender analysis as a tool for the integration of a gender dimension into planning the implementation of policies, strategies and programmes for the eradication of poverty;

21. Expresses its appreciation to the developed countries that have agreed to and have reached the target of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for overall official development assistance, and calls upon the developed countries that have not yet done so to strengthen their efforts to achieve the agreed target as soon as possible and, where agreed, within that target, to earmark 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of their gross national product for the least developed countries;

22. Stresses the important role played by official development assistance in complementing domestic efforts to meet the development needs of developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, and in this regard acknowledges the official development assistance made available to developing countries and the efforts that developing countries have made to eradicate poverty;

23. Calls for the full, speedy and effective implementation of the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, and in this regard stresses the need for the donor community to provide the additional resources necessary to fulfil the future financial requirements of the Initiative, welcomes the agreement that financing for heavily indebted poor countries should be reviewed analytically and separately from International Development Association replenishment requirements but immediately after meetings for the thirteenth replenishment of the Association, and calls upon all donors to participate fully in this process;

24. Calls upon the heavily indebted poor countries to take, as soon as possible, the policy measures necessary to become eligible for the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative and to reach the decision point;

25. Welcomes the recognition by the Joint Ministerial Committee of the Boards of Governors of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund on the Transfer of Real Resources to Developing Countries of the need to take into account worsening global growth prospects and declines in terms of trade, when updating Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative debt sustainability analysis at completion point;

26. Recognizes the difficulties faced by heavily indebted middle-income developing countries in meeting their external debt and debt-servicing obligations, and notes the worsening situation in some of them in the context, inter alia, of greater liquidity constraints, which may require debt treatment through various national and international measures designed to assist those countries in making their debt burden sustainable in the long term and in combating poverty effectively;

27. Calls upon the developed countries, by means of intensified and effective cooperation with developing countries, to promote capacity-building and facilitate access to and transfer of technologies and corresponding knowledge, in particular to developing countries, on favourable terms, including concessional and preferential terms, as mutually agreed, taking into account the need to protect intellectual property rights, as well as the special needs of developing countries, by identifying and implementing practical steps to ensure the achievement of progress in this regard and to assist developing countries in their efforts to eradicate poverty in an era influenced in large measure by technology;

28. Stresses that the goal of halving extreme poverty by 2015 will not be achieved without serious efforts to address the development needs of the least developed countries and to support their efforts in improving the lives of their people, and in this regard welcomes the adoption of the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, at the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held at Brussels from 14 to 20 May 2001, and calls upon the national Governments of the least developed countries and their development partners to implement fully the commitments undertaken in Brussels;

29. Emphasizes the role of microcredit as an important anti-poverty tool that promotes production and self-employment and empowers people living in poverty, especially women, and therefore encourages Governments to adopt policies that support microcredit schemes and the development of microfinance institutions and their capacities, and calls upon the international community, in particular the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and international and regional financial institutions involved in the eradication of poverty, to support and explore the incorporation of the microcredit approach into their programmes and the further development, as appropriate, of other microfinance instruments;

30. Welcomes the New Partnership for Africa's Development launched at Abuja in October 2001, whose objectives are, inter alia, to promote sustained economic growth and development, including human development, so as to eradicate poverty in Africa on the basis of African leadership and enhanced partnership with the international community, and calls upon the developed countries and the United Nations system to support this partnership and complement the efforts undertaken by Africa to overcome the challenges it faces;

31. Emphasizes the critical role of both formal and non-formal education, particularly basic education, and training, in particular for girls, in the empowerment of those living in poverty, and in this context welcomes the Dakar Framework for Action adopted at the World Education Forum, as well as the strategy for poverty eradication of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and invites the organs and bodies of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund, to continue to promote the inclusion of education in anti-poverty strategies;

32. Recalls the commitments of the United Nations conferences and summits to eliminate gender disparity in primary and secondary education by 2005 and to promote universal primary education in all countries by 2015, and in this regard urges Member States to take immediate measures to remove obstacles to young girls' school attendance and to reduce drop-out rates;

33. Reaffirms the role of United Nations funds and programmes, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, in assisting the national efforts of developing countries, inter alia, in the eradication of poverty, and the need for their funding in accordance with relevant United Nations resolutions;

34. Also reaffirms the importance of agreeing on a mutual commitment of interested developed and developing country partners to allocate, on average, 20 per cent of official development assistance and 20 per cent of the national budget, respectively, to basic social programmes, and welcomes the efforts made to implement the 20/20 initiative, which emphasizes that promoting access for all to basic social services is essential for sustainable and equitable development and is an integral part of the strategy for the eradication of poverty;

35. Recognizes the devastating effect of the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) epidemic on human development, economic growth and poverty reduction efforts in many countries, in particular sub-Saharan African countries, and urges Governments and the international community to give urgent priority to the HIV/AIDS crisis, in particular addressing the special needs of developing countries through strengthened cooperation and assistance as well as through the implementation of commitments undertaken, as agreed in the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS, adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth special session in June 2001;

36. Calls upon Member States and the international community to support and participate in the global efforts for poverty eradication at the global, regional and country levels in order to ensure that the development and poverty reduction goals, as set out in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, are realized, and also calls upon the international community to support those efforts and to strengthen the resources available to the United Nations in order to enhance its capacity to support and coordinate all relevant initiatives in this regard and play its role of facilitator and advocate;

37. Encourages the continuing examination in all relevant intergovernmental forums of ways and means to integrate poverty reduction objectives and strategies into discussions on international financial and development issues;

38. Welcomes favourably the proposal to establish a world solidarity fund for poverty eradication and the promotion of human and social development in developing countries, in particular among the poorest segments of their population;

39. Requests the Secretary-General, with a view to establishing the fund, to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report containing his recommendations on mechanisms, modalities, terms of reference, mandates and governance for the operationalization of the fund, bearing in mind the voluntary nature of contributions from Member States, international organizations, the private sector, relevant institutions, foundations and individuals and the need to avoid duplication of existing United Nations funds;

40. Also requests the Secretary-General, in the context of the follow-up to the United Nations Millennium Declaration, to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a comprehensive report containing an evaluation of progress made towards achieving the goals of the Decade, including best practices, lessons learned and obstacles, as well as in the achievement of the 2015 targets for poverty reduction, and recommendations for further action to achieve the 2015 targets, including the identification of resource requirements and possible sources of funding;

41. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the item entitled "Implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006)".

Science and technology for development

Commission on Science and Technology for Development

In accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 2001/209 of 31 January, the Commission on Science and Technology for Development held its fifth session in Geneva from 28 May to 1 June 2001 [E/2001/31]. The session had as its main substantive theme "National capacity-building in biotechnology", with particular attention to agriculture, agro-industry, health and the environment. The Commission also heard country reports on technology and innovation policies presented orally by a number of States, and had before it notes by the Secretariat on activities concerning the coordination of science and technology for development [E/CN.16/2001/5], implementation of and progress made on decisions taken at the Commission's fourth (1999) session [E/CN.16/2001/3] and the budget and intersessional activities [E/CN.16/2001/4]. The Commission recommended three draft resolutions and two draft decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. It brought to the Council's attention a decision [E/2001/31 (dec. 5/1)] by which it decided to include the Chairman's summaries of the discussions at its fifth session in the report of the session.

National capacity-building and biotechnology

The Commission had before it a synthesis report by the Secretary-General [E/CN.16/2001/2], which provided an overview of the outcomes of three panels convened during its intersessional period 1999-2001 in relation to its main substantive theme of national capacity-building in biotechnology. The panels discussed capacity-building in biotechnology (Tehran, Iran, 11-13 April 1999) [E/CN.16/2001/Misc.1], legal and regulatory issues in biotechnology (Geneva, 3-5 July 2000) [E/CN.16/2001/Misc.2] and public awareness and participation in science policy-making in biotechnology (Tunis, Tunisia, 14-16 November 2000) [E/CN.16/2001/Misc.3]. The panels covered issues of human resources development through basic science education and research and development; the transfer, commercialization and diffusion of biotechnology; public awareness and participation in science policy-making; bioethics, biosafety and biodiversity; and legal and regulatory matters. The three panels also proposed a number of recommendations to Governments and the international community in terms of policy options and needed initiatives and strategies for national capacity-building in biotechnology. The Commission also considered a note by the UNCTAD secretariat that reviewed several key issues in biotechnology, especially modern gene technology and its applications in the areas of crop agriculture and medicine [E/CN.16/2001/Misc.7].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development [E/2001/31], adopted resolution 2001/31 without vote [agenda item 13 (b)].

Science and technology for development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the role of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development as a forum for improving the understanding of science and technology issues and for the formulation of recommendations and guidelines on all science and technology matters within the United Nations system,

Reaffirming the need to enhance the capability of United Nations organizations active in science and technology, in particular the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to effectively address emerging issues in science and technology,

Recognizing the vital role of new and innovative technologies in raising the productivity and competitiveness of nations and the need, inter alia, for policy guidance and for measures promoting public awareness of science and technology and the transfer and diffusion of such technologies to developing countries,

Taking note with appreciation of the synthesis report of the Secretary-General on the Commission on Science and Technology for Development panels on national capacity-building in biotechnology, the comprehensive note prepared by the secretariat on the implementation of and progress made on decisions taken at the fourth session of the Commission, the note by the secretariat on the budget and intersessional activities of the Commission, the note by the secretariat on activities of the Commission regarding the coordination of science and technology for development and other intersessional activities within the United Nations system, including the outcome of the World Science Conference and other relevant documentation submitted to the Commission for consideration at its fifth session,

Welcoming the establishment by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development of the Science and Technology for Development Network, which provides information on science and technology activities and programmes within the United Nations system and among intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and builds awareness of scientific and technological developments that are particularly important for developing countries and countries with economies in transition,

Taking note of the Plan of Action adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its tenth session, held at Bangkok from 12 to 19 February 2000, which noted, inter alia, the widening technology gap between developed and developing countries and stressed the need to promote greater access, transfer and diffusion of technology to developing countries in order to strengthen competitiveness based on the innovative capacities of enterprises in these countries,

Recalling key proposals on science and technology contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted on 8 September 2000 by the heads of State and Government on the occasion of the Millennium Summit and the declaration adopted at the Summit Conference of the Group of Eight industrialized countries, held in Okinawa, Japan, from 19 to 24 July 2000,

Recalling also the Havana Programme of Action adopted by the Group of 77 and China at the South Summit, held in Havana from 10 to 14 April 2000, which noted with concern the threat of increasing technological marginalization of the South and decided to make science and technology a priority item on the national agenda as well as in the area of South-South cooperation,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 55/185, which called upon the Secretary-General to strengthen the Commission and its secretariat within the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development by providing it with the necessary resources to enable it to carry out its mandate of assisting the developing countries with their national development efforts in the field of science and technology in an optimal manner,

Activities as follow-up to the earlier work of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development

A. National capacity-building in biotechnology

Recognizing that biotechnology has an outstanding potential to support national efforts towards food security, health, environmental sustainability and increased competitiveness,

Realizing that modern biotechnology may be associated with new risks and unexpected impacts on health and the environment and that it raises a number of socio-economic and ethical concerns with regard to gene manipulation, in particular, human genes, and needs to be used and managed taking into account the precautionary approach contained in principle 15 of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development,

Realizing also that many developing countries cannot easily access modern biotechnologies and that their transfer, absorption and protection are necessary to ensure the benefits mentioned above,

Bearing in mind that many developing countries cannot adequately protect their traditional knowledge and biological resources and that their protection is also necessary to ensure the benefits mentioned above,

Cognizant that there is a close relationship between the development and transfer of biotechnologies and adequacy of the information and communication technologies infrastructure to facilitate access to information on recent advances,

Taking into account the work of its three panels on biotechnology and the agreed recommendations on the sustainable use of biological resources of the Commission on Trade in Goods and Services and Commodities of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Aware of the work under the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety of May 2000, to the Convention on Biological Diversity, and the enabling activities of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Global Environmental Facility,

1. Decides to recommend the following actions for consideration by Governments, the international community and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in order to assist developing countries, in particular least developed countries, and countries with economies in transition to strengthen their indigenous capacity to produce, promote, monitor, assess, manage and regulate biotechnology:

(a) Governments are encouraged to undertake the following actions in order to establish integrated, consistent policy regimes supporting development in biotechnology:

- (i) Coordinate their national policies in education, science and technology, health, environment and agriculture, taking into account biotechnology-driven priorities and needs, also, where appropriate, at the regional level;
- (ii) Mobilize and leverage public funding and encourage private sector funding for building scientific capacities and all related infrastructures;
- (iii) Create the necessary conditions for the creation and assimilation of scientific and technological know-how;
- (iv) Support centres of excellence and networks of key institutions in order to develop and retain national capacity while harnessing the expertise of nationals based overseas;
- (v) Ensure that the biotechnology sector is included in the relevant national capacity needs assessments and subsequent strategies and that action plans are developed;
- (vi) Ensure that there is a vehicle, such as a focal point or national commission for coordination and enhancement of activities, including national capacity needs assessments and national capacity-building;
- (b) The international community is invited to:
  - (i) Coordinate efforts to assist developing countries and countries with economies in transition to engage in capacity-building, to establish and strengthen the necessary legal and regulatory regimes for biotechnology and to access relevant information and obtain and apply modern biotechnologies suited to their needs;
  - (ii) Foster information exchange and networking, including through public-private sector partnerships involving government, academia and private enterprise;

- (iii) Assist the national authorities of developing countries, including focal points/commissions in formulating frameworks for legal and regulatory regimes for managing and regulating biotechnology, and assist in the implementation of the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety to the Convention on Biological Diversity;

- (iv) Assist the national authorities of developing countries, and institutions within the United Nations system, including the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to undertake national capacity needs assessments as well as the above-mentioned tasks;

(c) The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, within its mandate, as defined in the Plan of Action adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its tenth session, is requested to:

- (i) Coordinate and liaise, in its work on biotechnology, with other international organizations working in biotechnology, inter alia, the United Nations regional economic and social commissions;
- (ii) Use its newly created electronic network for science and technology to make available information on legal and regulatory frameworks to national authorities, as well as other relevant balanced information on developments in biotechnology to policy makers and diplomats, the public, non-governmental organizations, journalists and the private-business sector;
- (iii) Assist the developing countries, in particular least developed countries, to develop strategies and national plans, including through the undertaking of national capacity needs assessments, using extrabudgetary resources;
- (iv) Develop special programmes and organize workshops, using extrabudgetary resources, to contribute to ongoing programmes for training scientists, diplomats and journalists in science and technology diplomacy, policy formulation and regulatory matters to assist developing countries, in particular least developed countries, in international negotiations and international norms and standard-setting;
- (v) Initiate or contribute to studies on the specific problems faced by developing countries in the areas of technology transfer, capacity-building, regulation and biosafety using extrabudgetary resources;
- (vi) Collaborate with the Bureau of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development to ensure the implementation of its recommendations, including mobilization of extrabudgetary funds;

2. Requests the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, within its mandate as coordinator of the science and technology activities in the United Nations system, to:

- (a) Encourage the national authorities in charge of science and technology, and when appropriate at the regional level, to coordinate their strategies, and to provide substantive support in this regard;

(b) Propose concrete guidelines to facilitate development of, access to and dissemination of information, new technologies and technology-based products on affordable terms, including preferential terms;

(c) Encourage partnerships among interested parties, including through international cooperation;

B. New substantive theme and other activities

Recalling the ministerial declaration adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2000, in which the Council stressed the central role of information and communication technologies in creating a global knowledge-based economy, in accelerating growth, increasing competitiveness, promoting sustainable development, eradicating poverty and facilitating the effective integration of all countries into the global economy,

Recognizing that information and communication technologies present opportunities and challenges and can lead to a further widening of disparities between and within countries,

Heeding the call of the Council in the above-mentioned ministerial declaration for members of the international community to work cooperatively to bridge the digital divide and to foster "digital opportunity",

Recalling resolution 1/1 of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development,

Also recalling the intersessional programme of work of the Commission for 1997-1999 on information and communication technologies and its publication Knowledge Societies: Information Technology for Sustainable Development, as well as its guidelines for national information and communication technology strategies and its conclusions drawn from twenty-nine different coalitions of resources regarding infrastructure and applications of information and communication technologies, remembering its conclusion that, although the cost of using information and communication technologies is still high, the cost of not doing so is likely to be even higher,

Recognizing that the competitiveness of a nation depends on the productivity of its enterprises and that their productivity depends in large measure on investment in new technologies, such as information and communication technologies and access to information available through the Internet,

1. Decides to follow up its work on information and communication technologies through its Bureau or, if necessary, through the creation of a subcommittee of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development:

(a) To ensure that its previous findings and recommendations are brought to the attention of the main players in bridging the digital divide, such as the Information and Communication Technologies Task Force, the Digital Opportunity Task Force of the Group of Eight and the task force on information and communication technology of the Group of Fifteen;

(b) To assist in the implementation of the outcome of the review by the Council of the mandates and activities of its subsidiary bodies dealing with information and communication technologies with a view to establishing modalities to provide the United Nations and Governments with comprehensive, practical and action-oriented advice on policies and programmes and on new developments in the field of information and communication technologies;

(c) To oversee the inclusion of such information in the new Science and Technology for Development Network and strengthen information technology networks at the regional, subregional and interregional levels by linking them with the newly established network;

2. Calls upon the Commission and its secretariat to interact closely with the Information and Communication Technologies Task Force in order to promote greater information exchange and coordination of activities in information and communication technologies. Such interaction should include participation of the secretariat in all the meetings of the Task Force and reporting back to the Commission on the outcome of those meetings;

3. Decides to choose, as the substantive theme for the intersessional period 2001-2003, the theme "Technology development and capacity-building for competitiveness in a digital society". It is expected that the work of the Commission during the above-mentioned period will be carried out in a multidisciplinary manner, with a synergistic view to scientific and technological, economic and commercial, as well as ethical, social and educational aspects;

C. Coordination of science and technology for development in the United Nations system

Requests the secretariat of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development to continue its efforts to use the newly established Science and Technology for Development Network as a gateway to disseminate information on activities on science and technology for development and to update information on scientific and technological developments that are particularly important for developing countries.

In other action, the Council, by decision 2001/308 of 26 July, took note of the Commission's report on its fifth session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the sixth (2003) session. On the same date, by decision 2001/309, the Council extended the mandate of the Gender Advisory Board (an expert group established in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 850] to facilitate the Commission's discussions on the gender implications of science and technology for developing countries) for a further four years. The Council endorsed the nomination of Brazil and Tunisia for membership on the Board, thus filling the two vacancies on the Board with Commission members in order to ensure continued linkages between the two bodies. It also decided that the Commission should assess, at its sixth session, the desirability of continuing the work of the Board and the potential for obtaining external resources to do so.

Coordination mechanisms

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 55/185 [YUN 2000, p. 801], the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council a report on strengthening the coordinating role of the Commission in support of efforts by developing countries to obtain, effectively utilize and benefit from science and technology [A/56/96-E/2001/87]. The Secretary-General presented a number of proposals designed to strengthen the Commission's coordinating role and improve the interaction and coordination on science and technology activities in the UN system. Recommendations for action by the Commission and UN organizations included: establishment of a new trust fund to ensure the provision of adequate resources; creation of an inter-agency network for science and technology; assisting in the formulation of national science and technology policies, strategies, assessments and activities; undertaking joint science and technology studies; coordination of technical cooperation in science and technology; and greater Commission involvement in the follow-up to major UN conferences and increased collaboration with other functional commissions of the Council.

By decision 2001/310 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report.

Also on 26 July, the Council, by decision 2001/307, deferred to its resumed session in 2001 consideration of a draft resolution recommended by the Commission [E/2001/31] containing proposals for strengthening the Commission's work. By the draft, the Council would have recommended that the Commission: meet annually, establish a working group to study ways to improve the Commission's role in the UN policy-making process on science and technology issues, and study the feasibility of establishing an international mechanism for supporting research and development in developing countries, especially in the fields of health, education and agriculture. By decision 2001/323 of 20 December, the Council again deferred consideration of the draft to its resumed organizational session for 2002.

Trust Fund

On 26 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development [E/2001/31], adopted resolution 2001/32 without vote [agenda item 13 (b)].

Special Trust Fund for Activities in the Area of Science and Technology for Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting the growing importance of the work on science and technology for development to be implemented within the Commission on Science and Technology for Development,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 55/185 of 20 December 2000, in which the Assembly recognized the need for adequate resources, including the provision of new and additional resources from all sources, to be devoted to fostering science and technology for development,

Taking into account the current situation with resources, in particular extrabudgetary resources, available to implement the mandate received by the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development from the Commission on Science and Technology for Development through the Economic and Social Council, as well as from the Council and the General Assembly,

1. Recommends that a special trust fund for activities in the area of science and technology for development be established within the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development with a view to assisting in implementing various mandates received or to be received by the Conference in the area of science and technology for development;

2. Also recommends that the Trust Fund for Special Activities on Science and Technology for Development, established by the Secretary-General on 4 April 1985 to disseminate science and technology information, be closed, and resources currently available be transferred to the newly created trust fund referred to in paragraph 1 above;

3. Invites contributions to the newly established trust fund.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/558/Add.3], adopted resolution 56/182 without vote [agenda item 95 (c)].

Science and technology for development

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the role of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development in coordinating the activities of the United Nations system in the area of science and technology for development,

Cognizant of the role of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development as the secretariat responsible for the substantive servicing of the Commission,

Bearing in mind the cross-cutting nature of science and technology within the United Nations system and the need, inter alia, for effective policy guidance and better coordination,

Recognizing the importance of establishing and strengthening partnership and networking among the public and private sectors and academic institutions of all countries to build, transfer and strengthen the technological capabilities and skills needed, in particular for developing countries,

Stressing that the pace of globalization is influenced in large measure by the development of science and technology and that developing countries and countries with economies in transition need to become well equipped, inter alia, through international assistance, with the knowledge of science and technology and the practical skills and institutional structures associated with technology management, which are among the essential tools for enabling them to benefit from the opportunities offered by globalization and avoid the risk of marginalization in the process of globalization,

Recognizing the need to address the obstacles faced by developing countries in accessing technologies, while taking into account the need to protect intellectual property rights and the special needs of developing countries,

Recognizing also that information and communication technologies are among the critical determinants for creating a global knowledge-based economy, accelerating growth, increasing competitiveness, promoting sustainable development, eradicating poverty and facilitating the effective integration of all countries into the global economy,

Recognizing further the need for dissemination of research knowledge, technologies and expertise in the field of biotechnology, in particular in the areas of agriculture, pharmaceuticals and health care, that could benefit mankind,

Welcoming the establishment of the Information and Communication Technologies Task Force, which will provide overall leadership in the United Nations role in helping to formulate strategies for the development of information and communication technologies, and under whose initiative the United Nations will lend a truly global dimension to efforts to bridge the global digital divide, foster digital opportunity and thus firmly put information and communication technologies in the service of development for all, while bearing in mind the power of information and communication technologies for advancing the internationally agreed development goals of the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on strengthening the coordinating role of the Commission in support of efforts by developing countries to benefit from science and technology,

1. Invites the Economic and Social Council to consider, no later than at its substantive session of 2002, ways and means to strengthen the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, inter alia, through increasing the frequency of its meetings, including their annualization, and through the implementation of the recommendations set out in the report of the Secretary-General, while taking its mandate and budgetary constraints into consideration, and in that regard takes note of the recommendation of the Commission to the Council that the Commission should meet annually;

2. Also invites the Economic and Social Council to consider favourably the request of the Commission to establish a working group, to meet during the regular sessions of the Commission, for the purpose of evaluating the work of the Commission, with a view to strengthening the role of the Commission in the United Nations system in the area of science and technology for development and increasing its effectiveness;

3. Stresses the importance of facilitating access to and transfer of knowledge and technology on concessional, preferential and favourable terms to the developing countries, as mutually agreed, taking into account the need to protect intellectual property rights and the special needs of developing countries, with the objective of enhancing their technological capacities, capabilities, productivity and competitiveness in the world market;

4. Also stresses the need for all Governments to ensure the necessary conditions, including the creation of transparent legal and regulatory frameworks, to facilitate the acquisition and development of technology, to enhance innovation capacity, to improve the absorptive capacity of local enterprises and to build up supply capabilities;

5. Further stresses the importance of identifying and tackling barriers to and unjustifiable restrictions on the transfer of technologies, in particular to developing countries, inter alia, with a view to addressing such constraints while creating specific incentives for the transfer of technologies, including new and innovative ones;

6. Encourages the United Nations system to take advantage of the coordinating role and expertise of the Commission in the area of science and technology for development, where possible, in the follow-up to and preparation for major international conferences and summits;

7. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to ensure that the Commission and its secretariat within the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development are provided with the necessary resources to enable it to better carry out its mandate;

8. Takes note of the proposal of the Commission for a study regarding the feasibility of establishing an international mechanism for supporting and enhancing research and development within the developing countries and in areas critical to the developing countries, especially in the fields of health, education and agriculture;

9. Calls upon the United Nations system and the international community to strengthen South-South co-operation initiatives, as well as subregional and regional cooperation, in the field of science and technology;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, at its fifty-eighth session, a report on the impact of new biotechnologies, with particular attention to sustainable development, including food security, health and economic productivity, with the inclusion of proposals on the aspects of the transfer of such technologies, in particular to developing countries and countries with economies in transition, while taking into account the need to protect intellectual property rights and the special needs of developing countries, as well as on addressing constraints on the adequate utilization of such technologies.

Information and communication technologies

ICT Task Force. In response to the ministerial declaration of the 2000 high-level segment of the substantive session of the Economic and Social Council [YUN 2000, p. 799], in which the Council called for the creation of an information and communication technologies (ICT) task force, the Secretary-General submitted a February report [E/2001/7] in which he described the work of the Group of High-level Advisers on ICT that he had established in 2000, which was composed of representatives of Governments, the private sector, foundations, NGOs and the academic community and chaired by José María Figueres-Olsen, former President of Costa Rica and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on ICT.

The major conclusion to be drawn from the consultations of the Group was that the initiative to establish an ICT Task Force was considered very timely and enjoyed broad support, including from the private sector. The report summarized a number of elements that the Group had identified as being key to the role that the Task Force should play in harnessing ICT for development. It also outlined the overall objectives and presented a general strategic framework for the Task Force.

With regard to the Task Force's composition, the Secretary-General stated that he would appoint the members following consultations with regional groups. He proposed a membership of 37, comprising 18 representatives of Member States, 8 representatives of the private sector, 4 representatives of the non-profit sector, including academia and NGOs, 6 representatives of UN organizations and the President of the Economic and Social Council (ex officio).

By decision 2001/210 of 13 March, the Council requested the Secretary-General to undertake the necessary steps to establish the Information and Communication Technologies Task Force and to submit a report on the implementation of its decision to the Council's 2001 substantive session.

At its first meeting (New York, 19-20 November), the ICT Task Force adopted the draft Plan of Action as a framework for guidance for its work. It also set up six working groups on ICT policy and governance; national and regional e-strategies; human resource development and capacity-building; resource mobilization; low-cost connectivity and access; and business enterprise and entrepreneurship. In other action, it approved the setting up of, initially, four regional networks (in Africa, Latin America, Asia and for the Arab countries). Members agreed that the Task Force was not a funding agency but that it could help develop a "matchmaking" function. To that end, it could make proposals available on a web-based platform for consideration by potential partners.

Economic and Social Council consideration. At its coordination segment (2-4 July) [A/56/3/Rev.1], the Council considered the theme "The role of the United Nations in promoting development, particularly with respect to access to and transfer of knowledge and technology, especially information and communication technologies, inter alia, through partnerships with relevant stakeholders, including the private sector". The deliberations further advanced the work started by the Council's ministerial declaration of 2000 and served as an input to the consultations of the General Assembly on enhancing UN cooperation with all relevant partners, in particular the private sector (see p. 743).

In a May report on the theme of the coordination segment [E/2001/59], the Secretary-General explored the issue in an integrated manner, with a view to strengthening the development role of the UN system, the effectiveness of its development activities and its support for national development strategies and programmes by promoting access to and transfer of knowledge and technology, especially ICT, through building partnerships, in particular with the private sector.

Also before the Council was the Secretary-General's progress report [E/2001/91] on the implementation of the Council's 2000 ministerial declaration, which also responded to the Council's March 2001 request for a report on the establishment of the ICT Task Force (see above).

The Council also considered a 1 June letter from Italy [A/56/86-E/2001/79] transmitting the findings and recommendations of the Third Global Forum: Fostering Democracy and Development through E-Government (Naples, 15-17 March) and a 20 July letter from China [A/56/211-E/2001/103] transmitting the findings and recommendations of the International Symposium on Network Economy and Economic Governance (Beijing, 19-20 April), the International Symposium on Government and E-Commerce Development (Ningbo, 23-24 April) and the second High-level Forum on City Informatization in the Asia-Pacific Region (Shanghai, 24-26 May).

In the agreed conclusions of the coordination segment [A/56/3/Rev.1 (agreed conclusions 2001/1)], the Council stated that, while knowledge and technological development were among the critical determinants of economic growth and sustainable development, the majority of the world population still lived in poverty and many had not reaped the full benefits of the ICT revolution. The fact that the potential of ICT and other technologies was not being adequately harnessed threatened to further marginalize the economies and peoples of the majority of developing countries. The Council said that ways and means to provide and improve effective access to and transfer of knowledge and technology to developing countries had to be developed. In that context, it welcomed the forthcoming World Summit on the Information Society (see below) and the establishment of the ICT Task Force (see p. 762) as a major step towards strengthening the UN system's role in bridging the digital divide.

The Council called for strengthening of the UN system's crucial catalytic role in promoting technology transfer and access to knowledge to developing countries and countries with economies in transition, especially through partnerships with the private sector. To that end, the Council recommended that the UN system undertake activities to support national efforts for technological development, to establish ICT infrastructure and to put ICT in the service of development; improve coordination, complementarity and mutual links among knowledge networks of individual organizations of the UN system, especially through the ICT Task Force; ensure that approaches and principles governing partnerships were built on the foundation of UN development goals; assist in the establishment of legal and institutional frameworks to facilitate the acquisition, adaptation and utilization of ICT; strengthen programmes for education, institutional capacity-building and human resources development for ICT; and assist in the building of local, national and regional networks of partnerships, as well as partnerships among chambers of commerce and industry organizations. The private sector should be encouraged towards accepting the principle of good corporate citizenship and the UN system should design special programmes for LDCs and Africa and provide assistance to small and medium-sized enterprises and NGOs in developing countries. In addition, the Council called for the development of mechanisms for monitoring, measuring and evaluating the effectiveness of knowledge and technology transfer partnerships in terms of their performance, especially in relation to achieving socioeconomic goals.

ITU action. The International Telecommunication Union (ITU) Council, at its 2001 session, endorsed the convening of the World Summit on the Information Society in two phases: in Geneva from 10 to 12 December 2003 and in Tunis in 2005. The plan for the Summit resulted from consultations among UN agencies in response to a 1998 resolution of the ITU Plenipotentiary Conference.

At its second regular session (New York, 19-20 October) [ACC/2001/5], ACC was briefed by the ITU Secretary-General on the preparations for the World Summit.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/558/Add.3], adopted resolution 56/183 without vote [agenda item 95 (c)].

World Summit on the Information Society

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the urgent need to harness the potential of knowledge and technology for promoting the goals of the United Nations Millennium Declaration and to find effective and innovative ways to put this potential at the service of development for all,

Recognizing also the pivotal role of the United Nations system in promoting development, in particular with respect to access to and transfer of technology, especially information and communication technologies and services, inter alia, through partnerships with all relevant stakeholders,

Convinced of the need, at the highest political level, to marshal the global consensus and commitment required to promote the urgently needed access of all countries to information, knowledge and communication technologies for development so as to reap the full benefits of the information and communication technologies revolution, and to address the whole range of relevant issues related to the information society, through the development of a common vision and understanding of the information society and the adoption of a declaration and plan of action for implementation by Governments, international institutions and all sectors of civil society,

Recalling the contributions to international consensus in this field achieved by the Millennium Declaration and the agreements reached at other international conferences and summits in recent years,

Taking note of the action plan presented by the Secretary-General of the International Telecommunication Union to the Administrative Committee on Coordination for the holding of the World Summit on the Information Society and the creation, by the Administrative Committee on Coordination, of a high-level Summit organizing committee, chaired by the Secretary-General of the International Telecommunication Union and consisting of the heads of United Nations bodies and other international organizations interested in participating in the process leading to the Summit,

Considering that the Summit is to be convened under the patronage of the Secretary-General of the United Nations, with the International Telecommunication Union taking the lead role in its preparation, in cooperation with interested United Nations bodies and other international organizations as well as the host countries,

Recalling the ministerial declaration concerning information and communication technologies, adopted by the Economic and Social Council at the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2000, and the subsequent work done in this regard, including the creation of the Information and Communication Technologies Task Force, as well as the welcoming of the forthcoming Summit by the Council in its agreed conclusions 2001/1,

Recognizing the need to harness synergies and to create cooperation among the various information and communication technologies initiatives, at the regional and global levels, currently being undertaken or planned to promote and foster the potential of information and communication technologies for development by other international organizations and civil society,

1. Welcomes the resolution adopted by the Council of the International Telecommunication Union at its 2001 session, in which the Council endorsed the proposal of the Secretary-General of the International Telecommunication Union to hold the World Summit on the Information Society at the highest possible level in two phases, the first in Geneva from 10 to 12 December 2003 and the second in Tunis in 2005, pursuant to resolution 73 adopted by the Plenipotentiary Conference of the International Telecommunication Union at its 1998 session, held in Minneapolis, United States of America;

2. Recommends that the preparations for the Summit take place through an open-ended intergovernmental preparatory committee, which would define the agenda of the Summit, finalize both the draft declaration and the draft plan of action, and decide on the modalities of the participation of other stakeholders in the Summit;

3. Invites the International Telecommunication Union to assume the leading managerial role in the executive secretariat of the Summit and its preparatory process;

4. Invites Governments to participate actively in the preparatory process of the Summit and to be represented in the Summit at the highest possible level;

5. Encourages effective contributions from and the active participation of all relevant United Nations bodies, in particular the Information and Communication Technologies Task Force, and encourages other inter-governmental organizations, including international and regional institutions, non-governmental organizations, civil society and the private sector to contribute to, and actively participate in, the intergovernmental preparatory process of the Summit and the Summit itself;

6. Invites the international community to make voluntary contributions to the special trust fund established by the International Telecommunication Union to support the preparations for and the holding of the Summit, as well as to facilitate the effective participation of representatives of developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, in the regional meetings to be held in the second half of 2002, in the preparatory meetings to be held in the first half of 2002 and in 2003, and in the Summit itself;

7. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations to inform all heads of State and Government of the adoption of the present resolution;

8. Invites the Secretary-General of the International Telecommunication Union to submit to the General Assembly, at its fifty-seventh and fifty-eighth sessions, through the Economic and Social Council, for information, a report on the preparations for the Summit.

back in the form of a significant decline in the growth of global output and trade. While the previous global economic slowdown was set off by financial turmoil in some developing countries and economies in transition, the current one had started with a retrenchment in economic activity in the developed economies, particularly the United States, during the second half of 2000. The downturn had radiated to a large number of countries, both developing and developed, in particular those that relied heavily on the export of high-technology products. Overall, the growth of gross world product (GWP) declined from over 4 per cent in 2000 to about 2.5 per cent in 2001 and the expansion of international trade was expected to decelerate to 5.5 per cent in 2001 from about 12 per cent in 2000. While no major acceleration in inflation was forecast for 2001, global labour markets—which, in many developing countries and economies in transition, were only beginning to recover from the 1997-1998 setback—had weakened as a result of the economic slowdown.

In the developed economies, growth in gross domestic product (GDP) was expected to decelerate to 1.9 per cent in 2001, compared to 3.6 per cent in 2000. Although the slowdown in the United States was the most pronounced in the developed economies, a general weakening became more prominent in many other countries of the group in early 2001. In the United States, growth for 2001 was expected to be only 1.8 per cent, a steep decline from 5 per cent in 2000.

The Japanese economy was also having a dampening effect on the outlook for the developed economies. It grew 1.7 per cent in 2000, but indicators pointed to a slowdown in a broad range of activities and GDP was expected to grow by less than 1 per cent in 2001.

Although remaining initially resilient compared with Japan and the United States, the developed countries of Europe also showed signs of weakening as 2001 progressed. After registering 3.4 per cent in 2000, growth in the euro zone was expected to moderate to 2.7 per cent in 2001, while growth rates in other European economies, including Denmark, Sweden and Switzerland, were also moderating. The impacts of the external slowdown on the United Kingdom and of the appreciation of its currency vis-à-vis the euro were not significant in early 2001, but a broader-based deceleration in growth over the course of the year was unavoidable. There was also a slowdown in Australia and Canada and, to a lesser extent, in New Zealand in early 2001. Declining investment spending in the former two economies led the slowdown.

Economic surveys and trends

The World Economic and Social Survey 2001 [Sales No. E.O.II.C.1], prepared in mid-2001 by the Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), stated that, with recovery from the 1997-1998 international financial crises still incomplete, the world economy was experiencing another set-

The outlook for the economies in transition pointed to growth slowing from a remarkable 6.1 per cent in 2000 to about 3.6 per cent in 2001. The deceleration was most marked in the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), where growth rates of 7.9 per cent in 2000—the best collective economic performance since transition—fell to 3.7 per cent in 2001. For other transition economies, weakening growth was expected to make the challenges of economic restructuring and addressing macroeconomic imbalances even more difficult to implement.

The outlook for many developing economies also deteriorated in 2001, following a period of dramatic improvement in per capita GDP growth rates in 2000. The slowdown in developed economies was being transmitted to developing countries through several channels, such as reduced exports, weakening commodity prices, stagnant capital inflows and tighter credit conditions in international and local capital markets. For the developing countries as a whole, GDP growth was expected to slow from 5.7 per cent in 2000 to 4.1 per cent in 2001. In spite of the adverse external environment, aggregate GDP growth in Africa was expected to accelerate to 4.25 per cent in 2001 from just over 3 per cent in 2000. However, that growth rate would not be sufficient to reduce poverty by a significant margin in the short term.

In Eastern and Southern Asia, the rapid recovery of many economies in 1999 and most of 2000 was halted abruptly by the sudden slowdown of the United States economy. Combined GDP growth rates for the region (excluding China) were expected to drop from 6.9 per cent in 2000 to 4.1 per cent in 2001. Industrial production in the economies of East Asia, particularly ICT-related production, registered an absolute decline or no growth.

The outlook for China and India was more positive. China's GDP growth was expected to be resilient, though moderating from 8 per cent in 2000 to 7.3 per cent in 2001. India was expected to maintain a 6 per cent growth rate, in spite of serious fiscal imbalances. Elsewhere in the region, including the economies of Bangladesh, Nepal, Pakistan and Sri Lanka, growth in 2001 was expected to moderate by 1 to 2 percentage points.

After recovery in 2000, economic growth in Latin America and the Caribbean was expected to slow from 3.8 per cent in 2000 to 3.1 per cent in 2001. In a number of economies—including Mexico and most countries of Central America and the Caribbean—growth was expected to decelerate sharply because of close trade linkages with the United States. Others, such as Brazil, that had improved their economic fundamentals were less affected; a few, including Ecuador and Venezuela, could even expect their recovery to accelerate. The focus of regional uncertainty remained concentrated on Argentina, where market confidence was low and the economy was hindered by unsustainable public debt and weak domestic private-sector demand.

In Western Asia, GDP was expected to increase by 2.6 per cent, down from 5.7 per cent in 2000, due to decreasing oil revenues. In addition, the escalating conflict between Israel and the Palestinian Authority was causing losses for both the economies directly involved and neighbouring countries.

The Trade and Development Report, 2001 [Sales No. E.01.II.D.10], published by UNCTAD, examined the principal factors behind the sharp downturn in the world economy and near-term economic prospects. The Report noted that expectations remained quite high that a short downturn in the United States could be corrected by appropriate monetary and fiscal action. However, there were doubts that traditional macroeconomic policies would carry the day, given the high level of private indebtedness. In view of its pivotal role in bolstering global demand in recent years, the prospects for the United States economy were a matter of worldwide concern.

According to a report on the world economic situation and prospects [Sales No. E.02.II.C.2], prepared jointly by DESA and UNCTAD, a pervasive slowdown in the world economy during 2001, aggravated by the terrorist attacks against the United States in September, resulted in the lowest growth of GWP in a decade. During the year, GWP grew little more than 1 per cent and the volume of world trade stagnated. The weakness became more widespread as the year progressed, with three quarters of the world's economies registering lower economic growth than in the previous year. Meanwhile, more than a dozen economies, accounting for more than two thirds of the world output and including the world's three largest economies, were falling into recession. The decade-long economic expansion in North America came to an end with declines in GDP in both Canada and the United States. Most Western European economies had joined the global contraction by the end of the year. The deepening slowdown in external demand compounded many domestic structural problems for the Japanese economy, which was not expected to recover soon. The economies in transition, especially the CIS countries, weathered the global slowdown relatively well in 2001, achieving their second best rate of overall growth since transition started. Nonetheless, as export demand faltered and commodity prices dropped, growth decelerated and was expected to slide further.

Growth in the developing countries fell to 2.3 per cent in 2001 from 5.8 per cent in 2000, abruptly halting their recovery from the crises of 1997-1998. In countries accounting for two fifths of the population of the developing world, output per capita increased by less than 3 per cent, compounding the challenge of reducing the number of people living in poverty. In several developing countries, output registered an absolute decline and output per capita fell in West Asia, East Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean when averaged for the regions as a whole. Africa was less adversely affected, with average growth changing little from the previous year. The largest developing countries—China and to a lesser extent India—were among those best able to sustain their growth in the face of the slowdown.

Human Development Report 2001

The Human Development Report 2001, prepared by the United Nations Development Programme, addressed the question of how to make new technologies work for human development. It looked specifically at how new technologies affected developing countries and poor people and suggested ways in which technology could be used to empower people, allowing them to harness technology to expand the choices in their daily lives. The Report also suggested policies to ensure that the potential benefits of technology were rooted in a pro-poor development strategy. The Report pointed out that while many of the high-tech marvels that dazzled the rich North were inappropriate for the poor South, it was also true that research and development addressing specific problems facing poor people—from combating disease to developing distance education—had proved how technology could be not just a reward of successful development but a critical tool for achieving it. The challenge, therefore, was to help identify global and national policies and institutions that could best accelerate the benefits of technological advances while carefully safeguarding against the new risks that inevitably accompanied them.

In addition to providing a critical analysis of a different theme each year, the Report assessed the state of human development across the globe. In 2001, it ranked 162 countries in its human development index—12 fewer than in 2000 due to a lack of reliable data—by combining indicators of life expectancy, educational attainment and adjusted per capita income, among other factors. Of the 162 countries listed, 48 were in the high human development category, 78 in the medium category and 36 in the low category.

In 2001, the Report introduced a new technology achievement index, which aimed to measure how well a country was creating and diffusing technology and building a human skill base by combining a variety of indicators, including the number of patents granted, technology exports, telephone and electricity use, and levels of schooling, among others. Of the 72 countries covered by the new index, 18 were characterized as leaders, 19 as potential leaders, 26 as dynamic adopters and 9 as marginalized with regard to technological progress.

Committee for Development Policy

The Committee for Development Policy, at its third session (New York, 2-6 April) [E/2001/33], debated the broad theme of improving economic governance at the national, regional and international levels, focusing special attention on the issue of governance responsibilities in a globalizing world. Noting that globalization had redrawn the boundaries of economic activity, making it more difficult to separate national and multilateral interests, the Committee called for bold initiatives in a number of key areas of governance, including the enhanced participation of developing countries in multilateral governance; greater transparency and accountability at all levels of governance; the formulation of “core principles” with regard to governance responsibilities; a greater involvement of people in national and local development; and the development of open and innovative partnerships among various actors and at different levels, such as between donor and recipient Governments and institutions, between the public and the private sectors, and among Governments, social partners and civil society. The Committee recommended better coordination to ensure the maximum efficiency and effectiveness of external assistance, both financial and technical. Developing countries needed to ensure ownership over their development programmes and processes and efficient use of the resources deployed. There was also a need to effectively mobilize national and subnational capabilities and capacities, such as those of the informal sector, whose knowledge and resources should be increasingly incorporated into the formal economy. The Committee further stressed the need to secure adequate resources, especially ODA, and to reduce high debt burdens.

The Committee also examined issues related to its work in the area of LDCs, including methodologies used for addition to or graduation from the LDC list (see p. 769), and the role of the UN system in supporting sustainable development in African countries (see p. 847). With regard to its programme of work, the Committee proposed that the main theme of its next session be "Effectiveness of external assistance", with a special focus on Africa.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council deferred to its resumed session of 2001 consideration of the Committee's report on its third session (decision 2001/291). In October, the Council, in resolution 2001/43, welcomed the Committee's proposals regarding its future work programme (see p. 774).

Public administration

In 2001, the Economic and Social Council renamed the Group of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance the Committee of Experts on Public Administration. The Committee did not meet in 2001; its next meeting was scheduled for 2002.

Report of Secretary-General. In July, the Secretary-General, in response to Economic and Social Council decision 1998/220 [YUN 1998, p. 792], submitted to the Council and the General Assembly a five-year assessment of progress made in the implementation of Assembly resolution 50/225 [YUN 1996, p. 750] on public administration and development [A/56/127-E/2001/101 & Add.1]. The report took stock of current trends and challenges affecting public administration, reviewed public administration responses to those challenges and analysed the lessons learned. The analysis was supplemented by a summary of national responses to a questionnaire addressed to government officials responsible for public administration.

Based on the recommendations of the Group of Experts at its fifteenth (2000) meeting [YUN 2000, p. 805], the Secretary-General also presented an agenda for capacity-reinforcement and the role of the United Nations, including: strengthening advocacy, particularly through restructuring and revitalizing the Group of Experts; building common understanding with regard to core issues of public administration; enhanced information-sharing and exchange of experiences; building strategic capacities and essential skills; reinforcing core public service values; providing assistance in institution-building; and improving coordination of development assistance. The report concluded that administrative and management reform was a continuous and multifaceted process. It placed special emphasis on the need to assist developing countries and countries with economies in transition in reinforcing their capacity to govern. The capacity to manage continuous reform and change in an orderly fashion should become a key component of capacity-building efforts, stated the report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 2001/313 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council deferred consideration of public administration and development to its resumed 2001 session.

On 20 December [meeting 46], the Council adopted resolution 2001/45 [draft: E/2001/L.46/Rev.2] without vote [agenda item 13 (k)].

Restructuring and revitalization of the Group of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 50/225 of 19 April 1996 and 53/201 of 15 December 1998 on public administration and development,

Recognizing that efficient, effective and transparent public administration, at both the national and international levels, has a pivotal role to play in the implementation of the key objectives of the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and in that context stressing the need to strengthen national public-sector administrative and managerial capacity-building, in particular in developing countries and countries with economies in transition,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 50/227 of 24 May 1996 and 52/12 B of 19 December 1997 on the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields,

Recalling also its resolutions 1998/46 of 31 July 1998 and 1999/51 of 29 July 1999 on further measures for the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields,

Reaffirming its decision 2000/231 of 27 July 2000, by which it endorsed the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Group of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance at its fifteenth meeting,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the five-year assessment of the progress made in the implementation of resolution 50/225 on public administration and development;
2. Adopts the text contained in the annex to the present resolution;
3. Decides to consider, at its organizational session for 2002, the nominations for the membership of the Committee of Experts on Public Administration;
4. Also decides to bring the present resolution to the attention of the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session.

ANNEX*Group of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance

1. The Group of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance shall be renamed the Committee of Experts on Public Administration and shall continue to be a subsidiary body of the Economic and Social Council, without change in its mandate.

2. The Committee shall comprise twenty-four experts, who will serve in their personal capacity. The experts shall be nominated by the Secretary-General, in consultation with member States, and approved by the Economic and Social Council. The membership will be drawn from the interrelated fields of public economics, public administration and public finance, and will reflect an adequate geographical and gender balance. The term of office of members shall be four years.

3. The Committee shall meet biennially for a period not exceeding ten working days.

4. The Economic and Social Council should provide guidance on an appropriate work programme for the Committee. The Committee shall submit its report directly to the Council at its substantive session. The report should include the proposals of the Committee on its work programme, for examination and approval by the Council.

5. In disseminating information on the work of the Committee, the United Nations Online Network in Public Administration and Finance should be fully utilized.

6. In undertaking its responsibilities, the Committee should, in addition to holding its meetings, explore the scope for effective preparations for its deliberations. The Secretariat should provide assistance in that regard.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/571], adopted resolution 56/213 without vote [agenda item 12].

Public administration and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/225 of 19 April 1996, adopted at the resumed fiftieth session on the question of public administration and development,

Recognizing that efficient, effective and transparent public administration, at both the national and international levels, has a pivotal role to play in the implementation of the key objectives of the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

1. Welcomes the establishment of the United Nations Public Administration Online Network as a powerful tool made available to Member States for the exchange of information and experience in public administration;

2. Recommends that the Network be expanded to strengthen the capacity of national ministries and institutions of public administration, to access information, experience and practice in public administration, and to receive online training;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to assist Member States, in particular developing countries and countries with economies in transition, upon their request, in their process of reform, by fostering information-sharing, as appropriate, and the exchange of experience; assisting in building essential capacity and essential skills; providing assistance in institution-building; and improving the coordination of development assistance in this field;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to study the possibility of periodically bringing together high-level policy makers responsible for public administration reform, under the auspices of the United Nations, to discuss issues of common interest and share valuable experience and practice, and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the results of that study;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to keep under constant review the developments in this field in Member States and to highlight changes and trends as well as successes in this area, with particular emphasis on the role of public administration in the implementation of the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and to summarize his findings in a report to be submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session, through the Economic and Social Council.

Also on 21 December, the Assembly took note of the five-year assessment of progress in implementing resolution 50/225 (decision 56/447).

Least developed countries

The special problems of the officially designated LDCs were considered in several United Nations forums during 2001 and particularly by the Third UN Conference on LDCs (see below). The Conference culminated in the adoption of the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the LDCs for the decade 2001-2010. The first such conference had taken place in 1981 [YUN 1981, p. 406] and the second in 1990 [YUN 1990, p. 369].

In December, the General Assembly established the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States.

The number of officially designated LDCs remained at 49 in 2001.

The full list of LDCs comprised: Afghanistan, Angola, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Kiribati, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, Niger, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sudan, Togo, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Yemen, Zambia.

Third UN Conference on LDCs

As decided by the General Assembly in resolution 52/187 [YUN 1997, p. 839], the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (LDC-III) took place in Brussels, Belgium, from 14 to 20 May [A/CONF.191/13]. With the participation of 159 countries, the high-level Conference reviewed the socio-economic progress in LDCs during the 1990s and progress in international support measures, particularly in the areas of ODA, debt relief, investment and trade. On 20 May, the Conference unanimously adopted the Brussels Declaration, by which the participating Governments reaffirmed their commitment to the development of the 49 LDCs, and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, a set of national and international commitments on policies and measures for accelerating the development process in those countries.

During the Conference general debate, 96 Member States, 25 UN bodies and specialized agencies, 6 intergovernmental organizations and 22 NGOs made statements. A special event on "The challenge of eradicating poverty" was convened on 14 May [A/CONF.191/L.2]. In addition, a series of interactive events were held on: governance, peace and social stability [A/CONF.191/L.1]; enhancing productive capacities: the agricultural sector and food security [A/CONF.191/L.4]; intellectual property and development: an instrument for wealth creation [A/CONF.191/L.6]; enhancing productive capacities: the role of health [A/CONF.191/L.8]; education [A/CONF.191/L.10]; international trade, commodities and services/tourism [A/CONF.191/L.12]; energy [A/CONF.191/L.13]; human resources development and employment [A/CONF.191/L.17]; enhancing productive capacities: the role of investment and enterprise development [A/CONF.191/L.21]; infrastructure development [A/CONF.191/L.22]; transport [A/CONF.191/L.24]; and financing growth and development [A/CONF.191/L.27].

UNCTAD, as the UN focal point for LDCs, was responsible for Conference preparations, follow-up and monitoring, and the UNCTAD Secretary-General served as Secretary-General of the Conference.

In an August report [A/56/297 & Corr.1], the UN Secretary-General provided the General Assembly with an assessment of the Conference outcomes and an account of the preparatory process.

On 21 December, the Assembly, by decision 56/444, took note of the report.

Brussels Declaration. In the Brussels Declaration [A/CONF.191/12], Governments expressed their commitment to the eradication of poverty and the improvement of the quality of lives of people in LDCs by improving their abilities to build a better future for themselves and develop their countries. They recognized that the primary responsibility for development in LDCs rested with those countries, but their efforts needed support from Governments and international organizations through genuine partnerships, including with the civil society and the private sector. Particular concern was expressed with regard to the HIV/AIDS pandemic and other communicable diseases, the welfare of people, trade, financing of development, declining ODA flows and external debt. The Governments reaffirmed their commitment to the development of the 49 LDCs and to the improvement of the lives of the more than 600 million people living in those countries.

Programme of Action. The Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010 [A/CONF.191/11] had as its aim the significant improvement of the human conditions of the more than 600 million people in 49 LDCs during the decade. Against the backdrop of lack of progress in socio-economic development in LDCs and in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the 1990s [YUN 1990, p. 370], it provided a framework for a strong global partnership to accelerate sustained economic growth and sustainable development in LDCs, to end marginalization by eradicating poverty, inequality and deprivation in those countries, and to enable them to integrate beneficially into the global economy. Its overarching goal was to make substantial progress towards halving the proportion of people living in extreme poverty and suffering from hunger by 2015 and promoting the sustainable development of LDCs. The Programme of Action included a framework for partnership based on seven mutual commitments by LDCs and their development partners that focused on the following areas: fostering a people-centred policy framework; good governance at national and international levels; building human and institutional capacities; building productive capacities to make globalization work for LDCs; enhancing the role of trade in development; reducing vulnerability and protecting the environment; and mobilizing financial resources. With the support of their development partners, LDCs would strive to attain a GDP growth rate of at least 7 per cent per annum and to increase the ratio of investment to GDP to 25 per cent per annum.

Regarding Conference follow-up, the Programme of Action acknowledged the critical need for an effective mechanism to support implementation, follow-up, monitoring and review at the national, regional and global levels. At the national level, each LDC, with the support of its development partners, would translate actions contained in the Programme of Action into specific measures within their national development framework and poverty eradication strategy. Regarding intergovernmental follow-up at the global level, the General Assembly was invited to continue monitoring implementation of and to consider conducting a comprehensive review of the Programme of Action. The Assembly was also invited, towards the end of the decade, to consider holding a fourth UN Conference on LDCs.

Conference preparations

As decided in General Assembly resolution 53/182 [YUN 1998, p. 794], preparations for LDC-III were undertaken in three sessions of the Intergovernmental Preparatory Committee, all of which were held in New York. The first session took place in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 808]. At its second session (5-9 February) [A/CONF.191/3], the Committee conducted the first formal reading of the draft Programme of Action and considered other matters relating to preparations for the Conference. At the conclusion of its third and final session (2-6 April) [A/CONF.191/5], the Committee completed its second reading of the draft Programme of Action and transmitted it to the Conference for finalization.

The preparatory process also included a high-level panel for the review of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the LDCs for the 1990s [A/CONF.191/IPC/16], three expert-level regional preparatory meetings, several inter-agency consultations and a number of issue-oriented pre-Conference events. At the country level, preparations focused on the formulation of national action plans, submitted by 46 (out of 49) LDCs, containing commitments to a wide range of policy actions and support of poverty eradication.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 July [meeting 107], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/279 [draft: A/55/L.88 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 102].

Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/187 of 18 December 1997, in which it decided to convene the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries at a high level in 2001, as well as its resolutions 53/182 of 15 December 1998, 54/235 of 23 December 1999 and 55/214 of 20 December 2000,

1. Endorses the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Brussels from 14 to 20 May 2001;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session an item entitled "Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010".

Conference follow-up

Trade and Development Board. The UNCTAD Trade and Development Board, at its forty-eighth session (Geneva, 1-12 October) [A/56/15], had before it a report on progress in the implementation of the elements of the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action that fell within the purview of UNCTAD [TD/B/48/16]. The report stated that UNCTAD was developing a "road map" as a general guideline to enable different stakeholders to identify practical ways to implement the various commitments contained in the Programme of Action with properly sequenced priorities and coordinated actions at the national, regional and global levels.

The Board also considered an August report by the UNCTAD secretariat [TD/B/48/14] that reviewed the availability of data and indicators needed to monitor implementation of the Programme of Action. The data available to monitor progress towards the goals were woefully inadequate in terms of the coverage of LDCs, their quality and their timeliness, the report stated. The data problem was particularly acute in relation to the goal of halving the proportion of people living in extreme poverty by 2015. Furthermore, when data were available, it was apparent that the majority of LDCs were off-track in terms of the development goals contained in the Programme of Action.

The Trade and Development Board resolved to consider changing UNCTAD's intergovernmental machinery to increase the focus of its work on LDCs as an important part of implementing the Programme of Action. It recommended that UN agencies and other international organizations be made aware of the need for improvements in the international data available to monitor progress towards implementation of the Conference outcomes, especially in relation to the overarching goal of poverty eradication [A/56/15 (dec. 467(XLVIII))].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2001/300 of 26 July, decided to consider creating an annual agenda item on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the LDCs at its resumed (2001) session.

On 24 October, the Council decided to establish, under the regular agenda item entitled "Integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the major United Nations conferences and summits", a regular sub-item entitled "Review and coordination of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010". It further decided to consider, at a substantive session before 2005, devoting a high-level segment to the review and coordination of the implementation of the Programme of Action and to consider later in the decade further options for such review and coordination (decision 2001/320).

Report of Secretary-General. As requested in the Programme of Action, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a November report [A/56/645 & Add.1 & Add.1/Corr.1,2] containing his recommendations for a follow-up mechanism for coordinating, monitoring and reviewing implementation of the Programme of Action. The report stated that arrangements for system-wide follow-up to the 1990 Programme of Action for LDCs had not been as effective as envisaged, particularly with regard to monitoring implementation at the national level and throughout the UN system. Follow-up at the global level, which was entrusted to UNCTAD, could not be fully accomplished, mainly because the scope of the Programme of Action was beyond the mandate of any single organization. Taking into account the wider scope of the new Programme of Action, the effectiveness of existing arrangements had to be improved, including through clearer and more rational allocations of responsibility for monitoring and follow-up.

The Secretary-General recommended the establishment of an Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States, to be located at UN Headquarters in New York. The High Representative would be at the Under-Secretary-General level and would report directly to the Secretary-General. The Office would be responsible only for coordination, advocacy and reporting. Analytical and technical cooperation functions would continue to be carried out by other UN organizations, including UNCTAD. The new Office would not replace the UNCTAD Office of the Special Coordinator for the Least Developed, Landlocked and Island Developing Countries, as had been suggested in the Programme of Action, but would involve the transfer of several posts from that Office. Member States were urged to continue contributing to the existing UNCTAD Trust Fund for LDCs, which, the Secretary-General stated, should continue to be an important vehicle for promoting technical cooperation activities and capacity-building.

The key functions of the Office of the High Representative would be: to assist the Secretary-General in ensuring the full mobilization and coordination of all parts of the UN system in the follow-up and monitoring of the Programme of Action at the country, regional and global levels; to provide support to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly in assessing progress and in conducting the annual review of the implementation of the Programme of Action; to support implementation of the Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation between Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and the Donor Community [YUN 1995, p. 876] and the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (SIDS) [YUN 1994, p. 783]; to support group consultations of and undertake advocacy work on behalf of LDCs, landlocked developing countries and SIDS; and to help mobilize resources for implementation of the Programme of Action for the LDCs and other programmes and initiatives for landlocked developing countries and SIDS. Resource requirements for creating the new Office were presented in the addendum to the report. The programme budget implications of establishing the Office of the High Representative, as contained in a statement by the Secretary-General to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/C.5/56/29], were reviewed by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) in December [A/56/716]. ACABQ stated that net appropriations of up to $1,220,700 would be required in 2002-2003 for the new Office.

Trade issues. The Fourth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization (WTO) (Doha, Qatar, 9-13 November) [A/C.2/56/7] adopted a Ministerial Declaration, which reaffirmed the commitments undertaken at LDC-III and agreed that WTO should take into account, in designing its work programme for LDCs, the trade-related elements of the Brussels Declaration and Programme of Action. WTO Ministers endorsed the Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance to LDCs (IF) as a viable model for LDCs' trade development and urged development partners to increase significantly contributions to the IF Trust Fund as well as other trust funds in favour of LDCs.

LDC Ministerial Meeting. By a 20 November letter [A/C.2/56/5], Bangladesh transmitted to the Secretary-General the declaration and decision adopted by the Eleventh Annual Ministerial Meeting of the LDCs (New York, 15 November). The LDC Ministers, recognizing the importance of strengthened coordination and greater participation of LDCs in the implementation of the LDC-III Programme of Action, decided to establish a coordination mechanism to be called the Coordination Bureau of the LDCs. The new Bureau would begin work on 1 January 2002.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 December [meeting 92], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/569], adopted resolution 56/227 without vote [agenda item 106 (b)].

Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/279 of 12 July 2001, in which it endorsed the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010,

Emphasizing the importance of a highly visible, efficient and effective follow-up and monitoring arrangement for the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, as well as of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation between Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and the Donor Community, and relevant paragraphs of the United Nations Millennium Declaration for those countries,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the follow-up mechanism for coordinating, monitoring and reviewing the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010,

1. Decides to establish the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States, having the functions recommended by the Secretary-General in his report;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take immediate measures to make the Office of the High Representative operational as soon as possible;

3. Calls upon the Secretary-General to enhance the operational capacity of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development as well as that of other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in their activities aimed at supporting recipient countries, especially developing countries, and in particular the least developed countries, landlocked developing countries and small island developing States;

4. Reiterates its invitation to the organizations of the United Nations system and other multilateral organizations to mainstream the implementation of the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010 within their programmes of work as well as in their intergovernmental processes;

5. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to review the title and functions of its current Office of the Special Coordinator;

6. Invites Member States to extend all necessary support and cooperation to the Office of the High Representative;

7. Underlines the importance of optimal coordination between the Office of the High Representative and the various organizations of the United Nations system and other multilateral organizations;

8. Invites the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, and other relevant multilateral organizations, to provide full support to and cooperation with the Office of the High Representative;

9. Decides that the provisions of the present resolution shall be implemented within the approved level of the budget for the biennium 2002-2003, and requests the Secretary-General to seek voluntary contributions for the Office of the High Representative;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

LDC list

Committee for Development Policy. At its third session (New York, 2-6 April) [E/2001/33], the Committee for Development Policy, the body responsible for adding countries to or graduating them from the LDC list, in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2000/34 [YUN 2000, p. 807], re-examined its 2000 recommendation that Maldives be graduated from the list [ibid.]. Following its review, the Committee confirmed that, on the basis of current criteria, Maldives remained eligible for graduation. However, it recommended that the transition period for Maldives be extended until the next triennial review of the list in 2003 before a decision was taken by the General Assembly on the country's graduation. The extension would make it possible for the Committee to obtain adequate information from development partners and multilateral organizations about the potential impact of post-graduation transition, including an assessment of the implications of graduation for Maldives, as requested by the Council.

Also in resolution 2000/34, the Council had endorsed the Committee's recommendation that Senegal be added to the LDC list.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 April [meeting 98], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/253 [draft: A/55/L.80, orally revised] without vote [agenda item 12].

Report of the Committee for Development Policy

Recalling its resolutions 46/206 of 20 December 1991 and 52/210 of 18 December 1997,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1998/39 of 30 July 1998 on the status of the least developed countries and 1999/67 of 16 December 1999

on the report of the Committee for Development Policy,

Recognizing that the decision to include any country in the list of the least developed countries should be made with its due consent,

Having considered the recommendations of the Economic and Social Council contained in its resolution 2000/34 of 28 July 2000,

Endorses the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council that Senegal be added to the list of the least developed countries.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2000/34 [YUN 2000, p. 807], the Secretary-General submitted a report on ensuring a smooth transition of countries graduating from LDC status [E/2001/94 & Corr.1]. The report outlined differences in interpretations of the period of transition from LDC status as well as the benefits, including multilateral trade, finance for development and technical cooperation, associated with LDC status. It also reviewed the case of Botswana, the only country to have graduated from the LDC list.

The report recommended that the three-year pre-graduation transition period be maintained, but also stressed the importance of the post-graduation transition period as crucial to the positive development prospects of the country. In addition, the benefits of LDC status, which varied among donors and were generally related to trade preferences and volume of ODA, should be reduced gradually upon graduation, according to the specific needs of the country.

The report concluded that the Secretariat would be better able to evaluate the potential consequences of graduation more precisely and to identify concrete measures for ensuring a smooth transition once information was received from multilateral organizations and development partners on their likely response to a country's graduation, as suggested by the Committee for Development Policy.

UNCTAD report. In July [E/2001/CRP.5 & Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council a note by the UNCTAD secretariat on the benefits associated with LDC status and the question of graduation from the LDC list, including an assessment of the implications of graduation for Maldives and three other potential graduation cases—Cape Verde, Samoa and Vanuatu. The report reviewed the benefits available to countries with LDC status in terms of multilateral trade, finance for development and technical cooperation. It concluded that, although there was strong evidence that the comfort of "smooth transition" was almost always secured because graduality in granting concessions was generally built into rules and practices, there might be situations in which additional measures were desirable to warrant smoother transition. While the notion of smooth transition connoted the idea of a phasing out of the concessions, concerned LDCs preferred alternative, more differential concessions based on the recognition of the diversity of their problems.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 October [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2001/43 [draft: E/2001/L.49] without vote [agenda item 13 (a)].

Report of the Committee for Development Policy

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1998/46 of 31 July 1998, in which it decided that the Council should decide on an appropriate programme of work for the Committee for Development Policy,

Recalling also its resolution 2000/34 of 28 July 2000 on the report of the Committee on its second session,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 46/206 of 20 December 1991 on the report of the Committee and criteria for identifying the least developed countries,

Taking note with appreciation of the presentation by the Chairman and other members of the Bureau of the Committee and of the report of the Committee on its third session,

Noting that the Committee had received insufficient information to carry out a thorough re-examination of its recommendation to graduate Maldives from the list of the least developed countries, as requested by the Council in resolution 2000/34,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on ensuring a smooth transition of countries graduating from least developed country status and the note by the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the benefits associated with the least developed countries status and the question of graduation,

Having considered the memorandum submitted by the Government of Maldives,

1. Requests the Committee for Development Policy to continue its work on the re-examination of its recommendation to graduate Maldives from the list of least developed countries at its fourth and fifth sessions and to submit a progress report to the Economic and Social Council at its next substantive session and the final recommendations to the Council at its 2003 substantive session, taking into account the information referred to in preambular paragraphs 6 and 7 of the present resolution and further information to be provided by relevant development partners and multilateral organizations;

2. Calls upon the relevant development partners and multilateral organizations to make available to the Committee the relevant information on their likely response to a country's graduation before the fourth session of the Committee in 2002;

3. Decides to extend the transition period of Maldives until the next triennial review of the list of the least developed countries in 2003, as recommended by the Committee;

4. Urges the international organizations, bilateral donors and graduating or near graduating countries to initiate a debate concerning the treatment of graduating countries with a view to ensuring that the graduation of a country from the list of the least developed countries should not result in disruption to its development plans, programmes and projects and the importance of ensuring a smooth transition from least developed country status for countries that become eligible for graduation;

5. Reiterates the importance of consulting with relevant Member States in the preparation and use of country vulnerability profiles as well as the continuing need for transparency, objectivity and accuracy in those processes;

6. Requests the Committee to continue its work on the methodology to be used for the identification of the least developed countries, where appropriate in association with other international organizations working on environmental and economic vulnerability issues, and to report to the Council in 2002 on the criteria it proposes to use in the triennial review of the list of the least developed countries scheduled for 2003;

7. Also requests the Committee, at its fourth session, to examine and make recommendations regarding the theme chosen for the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2002 of the Council;

8. Welcomes the proposals made by the Committee regarding its future programme of work;

9. Invites the Chairman and, as necessary, other members of the Committee to continue the practice of reporting orally to the Council on the work of the Committee.

Island developing countries

Implementation of Programme of Action

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/202 [YUN 2000, p. 813], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/56/170] on progress in implementing the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (SIDS), adopted in 1994 at the Global Conference on the subject [YUN 1994, p. 783]. The report summarized the input received from a number of UN organizations on their implementation activities, information on activities at the regional level by non-UN regional intergovernmental bodies and at the national level by a number of Governments. The report also discussed efforts by the UN system to enhance the capacity of SIDS to utilize the benefits of globalization, especially information and communication technologies (ICT) and described work being carried out on the development of a vulnerability index for SIDS. The report stated that a number of UN bodies had been engaged in assisting SIDS in their efforts to deal with globalization and trade liberalization, particularly within the context of WTO negotiations, but insufficient attention had been paid to the priority area of ICT. While the issue of vulnerability was being addressed by several UN bodies and intergovernmental organizations, it was clear that work had not progressed to a stage where a definitive ruling could be made on the application of a vulnerability index or indices. The report concluded that it would be important for SIDS to undertake impact assessments of all national implementation activities in order to enable an accurate assessment of overall implementation of the Programme of Action.

Alliance of Small Island States

By a 2 February letter [E/CN.17/2001/11], Samoa transmitted to the Secretary-General the report of the third Alliance of Small Island States workshop on climate change, energy and preparations for the ninth (2001) session of the Commission on Sustainable Development (Nicosia, Cyprus, 15-19 January). Concluding that the importance of the energy sector in the SIDS regions had increased significantly in recent years and that energy played a critical role for the sustainable development of SIDS, the workshop proposed strategies and made recommendations concerning a wide range of energy-related issues, including accessibility, rural energy, financing the energy sector, efficiency, advanced fossil and nuclear fuel technologies, renewable energy, transportation and international cooperation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/561/Add.5], adopted resolution 56/198 without vote [agenda item 98 (e)].

Further implementation of the outcome of the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/122 of 19 December 1994 on the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,

Recalling also its resolutions 51/183 of 16 December 1996, 52/202 of 18 December 1997, 53/189 of 15 December 1998, 54/224 of 22 December 1999 and 55/202 of 20 December 2000,

Recalling further the Declaration of Barbados and the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States adopted by the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,

Recalling the Declaration and review document adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-second special session,

Recalling also the report of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on its tenth session,

Recognizing that, within the context of the challenges of development, small island developing States can experience specific problems arising from small size, remoteness, geographical dispersion, vulnerability to natural disasters, fragile ecosystems, constraints on transport and communication, isolation from markets, vulnerability to exogenous economic and financial shocks, limited internal markets, lack of natural resources, limited freshwater supply, heavy dependence on imports and limited commodities, depletion of non-renewable resources and migration,

Recognizing also the efforts of small island developing States to achieve sustainable development and the need to continue to enhance their capacities to participate effectively in the multilateral trading system,

Noting the report of the first workshop of the Alliance of Small Island States on the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety, held in Saint Kitts and Nevis from 4 to 6 December 2000, and the report of the third workshop of the Alliance of Small Island States on climate change, energy and preparations for the ninth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development, held in Cyprus from 15 to 19 January 2001,

Noting also the significant efforts to implement the Programme of Action at the local, national, regional and international levels and the need for regional and global institutions to continue to supplement the efforts being made at the national level, including through necessary financial support in partnership with the international community,

Acknowledging the efforts of small island developing States to convene, in cooperation with the Small Island Developing States Unit of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat, a series of capacity-building workshops targeted at issues of specific relevance to small island developing States,

Welcoming the preparatory activities undertaken at the national and regional levels for the World Summit on Sustainable Development,

Expressing its appreciation to the Government of Jamaica for hosting the first workshop of the Alliance of Small Island States on trade, sustainable development and small island developing States from 12 to 15 December 2001,

Noting the current efforts of the Alliance of Small Island States to organize an interregional preparatory meeting of small island developing States for the World Summit on Sustainable Development, to be held in Singapore from 7 to 11 January 2002, and calls upon all relevant international organizations actively to support the meeting,

Emphasizing the continuing need for the financing of projects that were presented within the context of the implementation of the Programme of Action, inter alia, at the meeting of representatives of donor countries and small island developing States, held in New York from 24 to 26 February 1999,

Noting with appreciation the contribution made by some donor countries towards further implementation of the Programme of Action, and underlining the need for those efforts to be intensified and supplemented by other donor countries and agencies,

Emphasizing the need to complete, without delay, the quantitative and analytical work on the vulnerability index mandated in the review document of the twenty-second special session of the General Assembly, taking into account Economic and Social Council resolution 2001/43 of 24 October 2001, in particular paragraph

6 thereof, and emphasizing the relevance of such work to the work of the Committee for Development Policy on criteria for the identification, including designation and graduation, of least developed countries and its importance to relevant small island developing States,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reiterates the urgent need for strong and effective implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and of the Declaration and review document adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-second special session to assist those States in their efforts to enhance their capacities to achieve sustainable development;

3. Welcomes efforts made at the national, sub-regional and regional levels to implement the Programme of Action;

4. Invites the relevant organs and agencies of the United Nations system and the regional commissions and organizations, within their respective mandates, to reflect measures for the implementation of the Programme of Action in their programmes;

5. Invites donors, as well as all relevant organs and agencies of the United Nations and other regional and international organizations, to provide appropriate support to the interregional preparatory meeting of small island developing States for the World Summit on Sustainable Development;

6. Invites all relevant stakeholders, non-governmental organizations and the private sector to participate fully in the activities identified for the further implementation of and effective follow-up to the Programme of Action;

7. Urges all relevant organizations to finalize, as a matter of urgency, the work on the development of a vulnerability index, taking into account the particular circumstances and needs of small island developing States;

8. Welcomes the strengthened Small Island Developing States Unit, and requests the Secretary-General to consider ways to strengthen the Unit further, inter alia, by establishing the Small Island Developing States Information Network within the Unit and by assisting small island developing States with, inter alia, project implementation advice and assistance in the identification of short- and long-term capacity needs through coordination with regional and international institutions, and to make proposals in that regard;

9. Calls upon the Secretary-General to consider further cost-effective ways and means of increasing and improving the United Nations system-wide coordination and dissemination of information on activities in support of small island developing States and the Programme of Action, through the Small Island Developing States Unit, including concrete measures for improving coordination within the United Nations system;

10. Welcomes the contributions of donor countries to the strengthening of the Small Island Developing States Unit and the Small Island Developing States Information Network, and encourages other Member States to make contributions, in particular in support of the Network;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session, under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development", the sub-item entitled "Further implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States";

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Unit for Landlocked Developing Countries and SIDS

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/249 [YUN 1999, p. 1289], the Secretary-General submitted a July note [A/56/208] transmitting the report of the UNCTAD Secretary-General on the effectiveness of the functioning of the Unit for Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States. The report stated that, following the Assembly's decision in resolution 54/249 to re-establish the Unit, the activities of the Office of the Special Coordinator for Least Developed, Landlocked and Island Developing Countries as they related to the needs and problems of 30 landlocked developing countries and 44 SIDS had expanded and intensified, with a view to improving the participation and accelerated integration of the two groups of countries into the global economy, through internationally agreed support measures and special recognition on grounds of vulnerability.

In October [A/56/434], the Secretary-General reported on the resources available to the Office of the Special Coordinator for the biennium 2000-2001. The General Assembly, by decision 56/444 of 21 December, took note of the two documents.

With regard to the follow-up to the Third UN Conference on LDCs [A/56/645 & Add.1 & Add.1/Corr.1,2], the Secretary-General recommended that the General Assembly establish an Office of the High Representative for the LDCs, Landlocked Developing Countries and SIDS (see p. 772). The new Office would be responsible for implementation of the Programme of Action, while the UNCTAD Office of the Special Coordinator would continue to provide support to least developed, landlocked and small island developing countries in the areas of its expertise.

Landlocked developing countries

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/199 [YUN 1999, p. 784], the Secretary-General, by an October note [A/56/427], transmitted a progress report of the UNCTAD secretariat on specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries. The report presented the conclusions and recommendations of the fifth Meeting of Governmental Experts from Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Representatives of Donor Countries and Financial and Development Institutions (New York, 30 July-3 August), which considered problems related to infrastructure and non-physical barriers in lowering transport costs and increasing transit efficiency. It also described UNCTAD activities with regard to the development of transit systems in landlocked and transit developing countries, including assistance in drafting or negotiating bilateral or regional agreements and efforts to improve transport information systems.

Ministerial communiqué. On 19 November [A/C.2/56/4], the Lao People's Democratic Republic transmitted to the Secretary-General the ministerial communiqué adopted at the second annual ministerial meeting of the Group of Landlocked Developing Countries (New York, 14 November).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/558/Add.1], adopted resolution 56/180 without vote [agenda item 95 (a)].

Specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 44/214 of 22 December 1989, 46/212 of 20 December 1991, 48/169 of 21 December 1993, 50/97 of 20 December 1995, 52/183 of 18 December 1997 and 54/199 of 22 December 1999 and the Global Framework for Transit Transport Co-operation between Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and the Donor Community, as well as the relevant parts of the Agenda for Development,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in which Heads of State and Government recognized the particular needs and problems of the landlocked developing countries and urged both bilateral and multilateral donors to increase financial and technical assistance to this group of countries to meet their particular development needs and to help them to overcome the impediments of geography by improving their transit transport systems, and resolved to create an environment, at the national and global levels alike, that is conducive to development and to the elimination of poverty,

Recognizing that the lack of territorial access to the sea, aggravated by remoteness and isolation from world markets, and prohibitive transit costs and risks impose serious constraints on the overall socio-economic development efforts of the landlocked developing countries,

Recognizing also that sixteen of the landlocked developing countries are also classified by the United Nations as least developed countries and that their geographical situation is an added constraint on their overall ability to cope with the challenges of development,

Recognizing further that most transit countries are themselves developing countries facing serious eco-conomic problems, including the lack of adequate infrastructure in the transport sector,

Noting the importance of continuing to strengthen the existing international support measures with a view to addressing further the problems of landlocked developing countries,

Emphasizing the importance of further strengthening effective and close cooperation and collaboration between landlocked developing countries and their transit neighbours, at regional, subregional and bilateral levels, inter alia, through cooperative arrangements in developing efficient transit transport systems in landlocked and transit developing countries, and noting the important role of the activities of the regional commissions in that regard,

Welcoming the holding in New York from 30 July to 3 August 2001 of the fifth Meeting of Governmental Experts from Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Representatives of Donor Countries and Financial and Development Institutions,

Expressing its appreciation to donor countries for participating in the fifth Meeting of Governmental Experts and for the generous contribution that facilitated the participation of experts from landlocked and transit developing countries,

Taking note of the Vientiane Plan of Action on measures designed to improve the transit transport systems of the Lao People's Democratic Republic, adopted at the first Specific Consultative Meeting on the Transit Transport Systems of the Lao People's Democratic Republic, held at Vientiane on 14 and 15 December 2000 under the auspices of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Noting the outcome of the Fourth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, held at Doha from 9 to 13 November 2001,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the progress report of the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries;

2. Welcomes the agreed conclusions and recommendations for future action adopted by the fifth Meeting of Governmental Experts from Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Representatives of Donor Countries and Financial and Development Institutions;

3. Reaffirms the right of access of landlocked countries to and from the sea and freedom of transit through the territory of transit countries by all means of transport, as set forth in article 125 of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea;

4. Also reaffirms that transit countries, in the exercise of their full sovereignty over their territory, have the right to take all measures necessary to ensure that the rights and facilities provided for landlocked countries, including landlocked developing countries, in no way infringe upon their legitimate interests;

5. Calls upon the landlocked developing countries and their transit neighbours to implement measures to strengthen further their cooperative and collaborative efforts to deal with transit transport issues, including bilateral and, as appropriate, subregional cooperation, inter alia, by improving the physical infrastructure and non-physical aspects of transit transport systems, strengthening and concluding, where appropriate, bilateral and subregional agreements to govern transit transport operations, developing joint ventures in the area of transit transport and strengthening institutions and human resources dealing with transit transport, and, in this respect, notes that South-South cooperation also plays an important role in this field;

6. Appeals once again to all States, international organizations and financial institutions to implement, as a matter of urgency and priority, the specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries agreed upon in the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, the outcomes of recent major United Nations conferences relevant to landlocked developing countries and the Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation between Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and the Donor Community and to take fully into account the agreed conclusions and recommendations of the fifth Meeting of Governmental Experts from Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Representatives of Donor Countries and Financial and Development Institutions;

7. Expresses its appreciation for the financial and technical assistance made available by some donors to landlocked and transit developing countries in the form of grants or concessional loans for the construction, maintenance and improvement of their transport, storage and other transit-related facilities, including alternative routes and improved communications;

8. Invites donor countries, the United Nations Development Programme and multilateral financial and development institutions to provide landlocked and transit developing countries with appropriate financial and technical assistance in the form of grants or concessional loans for the construction, maintenance and improvement of their transport, storage and other transit-related facilities, including alternative routes and improved communications, to promote subregional, regional and interregional projects and programmes, and, in this regard, to consider, inter alia, improving the availability and optimal use of different transport modes and intermodal efficiency along transport corridors;

9. Emphasizes that assistance for the improvement of transit transport facilities and services should be integrated into the overall economic development strategies of the landlocked and transit developing countries and that donor countries should consequently take into account the requirements for the long-term restructuring of the economies of the landlocked developing countries;

10. Notes the important role that the simplification, harmonization and standardization of transit procedures and documentation as well as the application of information technologies have played in enhancing the efficiency of transit systems, and calls upon the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in close cooperation with other relevant organizations of the United Nations system, to continue to assist landlocked and transit developing countries in those areas, in accordance with their mandates;

11. Invites those countries that have not done so to consider ratifying or acceding to international agreements and conventions related to transit trade and transport, and invites landlocked and transit countries to consider concluding bilateral or subregional intergovernmental agreements regarding various aspects of transit transport;

12. Invites the international community to continue to provide technical and financial support to landlocked and transit developing countries to assist with effective implementation of their cooperation agreements and arrangements on transit transport, taking into account the fact that many landlocked and transit developing countries have concluded bilateral and regional arrangements and are making efforts to implement them;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to convene in 2003 an International Ministerial Meeting of Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Donor Countries and International Financial and Development Institutions on Transit Transport Cooperation, within the existing resources of the budget for the biennium 2002-2003 and with voluntary contributions, to review the current situation of transit transport systems, including the implementation of the Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation of 1995, and to formulate, inter alia, appropriate policy measures and action-oriented programmes aimed at developing efficient transit transport systems, which would be held for two days and would be preceded by a three-day meeting of senior officials to finalize the substantive preparations;

14. Invites Member States, members of the specialized agencies and United Nations observers, including landlocked and transit developing countries and donor countries, and international financial and development institutions, including relevant regional and sub-regional economic organizations and commissions, to participate in the International Ministerial Meeting and its preparatory process;

15. Requests the Secretary-General, in close cooperation with and with the full involvement of the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, as appropriate, to provide substantive and organizational support, within the existing resources of the budget for the biennium 2002-2003 and with voluntary contributions, for the International Ministerial Meeting, and requests that, in this context, the necessary preparations be undertaken at the sub-regional and regional levels, as appropriate, with the involvement of all major stakeholders, including the private sector;

16. Decides to consider the precise timing and venue of the International Ministerial Meeting at its fifty-seventh session, taking into consideration the generous offer made by the Government of Kazakhstan to host the meeting;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to convene in 2003, prior to the International Ministerial Meeting and within the existing resources for the biennium 2002-2003, the sixth Meeting of Governmental Experts from Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Representatives of Donor Countries and Financial and Development Institutions, including relevant regional and sub-regional economic organizations and commissions, and decides that that meeting shall serve as a preparatory committee for the International Ministerial Meeting, in both substantive and organizational aspects;

18. Also requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in close cooperation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, as appropriate, to seek voluntary contributions to facilitate the preparations for the International Ministerial Meeting, including the participation of representatives of landlocked and transit developing countries at the meeting;

19. Notes with appreciation the contribution of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to formulating international policies and measures dealing with the particular problems of landlocked developing countries, inter alia, through technical cooperation programmes, and urges the Conference, inter alia, to keep under constant review the evolution of transit transport infrastructure facilities, institutions and services, to monitor the implementation of agreed measures, inter alia, by means of a case study as necessary, to promote regional and sub-regional cooperation, to build consensus on cooperative arrangements, to mobilize international support measures, to collaborate in all relevant initiatives, including those of the private sector and non-governmental organizations, and to serve as a focal point for cross-regional issues of landlocked developing countries;

20. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, as appropriate, to take appropriate measures, within the existing resources of the budget for the biennium 2002-2003 and with voluntary contributions, for the effective implementation of the activities called for in the present resolution, and to provide the Office of the Special Coordinator for Least Developed, Landlocked and Island Developing Countries of the Conference with adequate resources so as to allow it to continue to support landlocked developing countries, to the extent of its mandate, including in the effective preparations for the International Ministerial Meeting;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution and to submit it to the Trade and Development Board and to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session;

22. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session, under the item entitled "Macroeconomic policy questions", a sub-item entitled "Preparations for the International Ministerial Meeting on Transit Transport Cooperation";

23. Also decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-eighth session, under the item entitled "Macroeconomic policy questions", a sub-item entitled "Specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries".

Chapter II

Operational activities for development

In 2001, the United Nations system continued to provide development assistance to developing countries and countries with economies in transition, primarily through the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the central United Nations funding body for technical assistance. UNDP's income in 2001 totalled $2,828 million, up from $2,555 million in 2000. That included, for the first time in eight years, a slight increase in regular resources. Total expenditure for all programme activities and support costs reached $2,725 million in 2001 as compared with $2,514 million the previous year. Other technical cooperation, totalling $51.1 million, was provided through the executive programme of the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs, $105.7 million through the United Nations Fund for International Partnerships and $28.6 million through the UN Capital Development Fund. In addition, some $8.9 million had been spent as at 31 March under the UN Development Account.

In 2001, the United Nations conducted a triennial comprehensive policy review of UN system operational activities for development. The review analysed the advances made in and challenges facing UN development cooperation, particularly in view of new global economic trends, and made recommendations on the role and responsibilities of the UN system for development. The review also provided an opportunity for the United Nations to assess its own progress in fulfilling the goals of the United Nations Millennium Declaration, which included set targets for operational activities for development. In December, the General Assembly adopted a far-reaching outline for future development activities of the UN system.

UNDP and its associated funds and programmes continued to make progress in enhancing their overall development impact. UNDP activities were focused on six major goals—sustainable human development, poverty reduction, the environment, gender equality, special development situations and support of the UN system.

The United Nations Office for Project Services, which continued to operate under the self-financing principle with no assessed budget financing, had a total value of project and loan portfolios of $3.7 billion in 2001, comprising $1.4 billion in project value and $2.3 billion in loans under its supervision. Total project delivery was $505 million.

The United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme, administered by UNDP, continued to grow in 2001, with over 5,000 volunteers carrying out some 5,400 assignments. Growth was strongest in the number of volunteers serving in UN peacekeeping operations. The United Nations observed 2001 as the International Year of Volunteers; UNV served as focal point for the related activities. The Assembly, in December, made recommendations on ways Governments and the UN system could support volunteering.

The High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries (TCDC), in May/June, reviewed progress made in implementing the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing TCDC and progress in implementing the new directions strategy for TCDC. In December, the Assembly noted the expanded use of South-South cooperation and urged developing countries to intensify technical and economic cooperation at the regional and interregional levels, particularly in information and communication technologies.

System-wide activities

Operational activities segment of the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council, at its 2001 substantive session (Geneva, 2-26 July) [A/56/3/Rev.1], considered the question of operational activities of the United Nations for international development cooperation at meetings on 5, 6, 9 and 10 July. As the Council had decided on 31 January (decision 2001/205), the theme for the operational activities segment was "Triennial policy review of operational activities for development". A high-level meeting on operational activities was held on 5 and 6 July. On 6 July, the Council held an informal dialogue with the heads of UN funds and programmes. On 5 and 10 July, the Council considered follow-up to policy recommendations of the General Assembly and the Council, and the reports of the Executive Boards of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)/United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the World Food Programme (WFP). The Council, on 10 July, considered the question of economic and technical cooperation among developing countries. On 19 July, it held an informal dialogue with the UN system country teams from China and the United Republic of Tanzania. Among the documents before the Council were the May interim report of the Secretary-General on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities of the UN system for development [E/2001/66]; a report on progress in implementing the multi-year funding frameworks (MYFFs) and evaluating the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) [A/56/70-E/2001/58 & Add.1,2]; and a conference room paper containing a consolidated list of issues on which the funds and programmes sought the Council's guidance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 10 July [meeting 21], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2001/1 [draft: E/2001/L.17] without vote [agenda item 3 (a)].

Triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, which sets out priorities and goals to be reached by the international community up to the year 2015,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 47/199 of 22 December 1992, 50/120 of 20 December 1995 and 53/192 of 15 December 1998 on the triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

Recalling further its resolutions 1999/5 and 1999/6 of 23 July 1999 and 2000/19 and 2000/20 of 28 July 2000,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system and on progress in the implementation of the multi-year funding frameworks and evaluation of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, when finalizing his report on the triennial policy review for submission to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, to take into account the views and comments expressed by Member States during the operational activities segment of the substantive session of 2001 of the Economic and Social Council and to make appropriate recommendations;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General, when finalizing his report on the triennial policy review, to provide an analysis of the current state of the implementation of resolution 53/192 and other related resolutions on operational activities;

3. Invites the Secretary-General, in accordance with the coordination, guidance and oversight roles of the Council in the implementation by the United Nations system of the triennial policy review of operational activities, to make recommendations, when finalizing his report on the triennial policy review, on the possible themes that could be discussed at the substantive sessions of 2002 and 2003 of the Council, taking into account the necessary preparatory work for the following triennial policy review.

Triennial policy review

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 53/192 [YUN 1998, p. 802] and Economic and Social Council resolution 2001/1 (see above), reported, in August [A/56/320], on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system, summarizing the more detailed analysis of the implementation of resolution 53/192 on the 1998 triennial policy review, which was presented in an addendum to the report [A/56/320/Add.1]. The Secretary-General highlighted the conclusions of that analysis, outlined the challenges facing UN development cooperation, and made recommendations on the UN role and responsibilities for development for consideration by the Assembly. It was supplemented by the Secretary-General's report on progress in the implementation of MYFFs and evaluation of UNDAF [A/56/70-E/2001/58], and reports containing comprehensive statistical data for 1999 [A/56/70/Add.1-E/2001/58/Add.1] and preliminary statistical data for 2000 [A/56/70/Add.2-E/2001/58/Add.2] operational activities for development.

The Secretary-General stated that the review, the first of its kind since the adoption of the United Nations Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49], identified time-bound targets and offered a frame of reference for UN system operational activities for development. Recent global conferences and the Millennium Declaration had helped to define and focus the UN development agenda.

The operational activities for development of the UN system needed to respond to a continuously changing global context. The Council, at its 2001 substantive session, had identified globalization, liberalization, technological change and the need for developing countries to integrate into the world economy as the major challenges for development, as well as for the role and content of UN operational activities. The UN development system was called upon to assist developing countries in addressing globalization and in taking advantage of the opportunities it created to reduce poverty. New technologies, such as information and communication technologies, also provided opportunities for economic development and empowerment, and could help countries to overcome or mitigate traditional development gaps. The UN system could play a key role in bridging the digital divide by promoting the transfer of technology to developing countries and accelerating access to information technology knowledge.

Thus, the scope of UN development cooperation continued to expand and included situations of conflict and post-conflict conditions. Demands for support also arose in new areas such as: strengthening capacity-building and enabling developing countries to integrate in the world economy; adapting international development goals to the national context; and responding to new political, humanitarian and socio-economic challenges, including governance, humanitarian assistance, peace-building and conflict prevention. The UN development system was expected to adapt and respond flexibly to the new development challenges and intensify its internal coordination, while ensuring a coherent and integrated response to national development needs. The system needed to challenge itself also by upgrading the capacities of its country teams to make optimal use of resources and the comparative advantages of UN system organizations.

The goals set by the Millennium Declaration and the development process required considerable financial resources, both domestic and international. However, although the UN system was still viewed as a valuable partner, the UN development system would have to play its role in a more intensely competitive environment, with a broader development agenda and with reduced resources.

The reform process launched in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1389], aimed at a more effective and efficient use of resources through better management, had begun to have a positive impact on the effectiveness and relevance of UN operational activities. By that process, a more integrated approach to development cooperation was achieved through inter-agency modalities, including the establishment of the United Nations Development Group, the streamlining of the strategic direction of operational activities through collaboration and programmatic coherence, the introduction of processes, such as the common country assessment (CCA) and UNDAF, measures to strengthen the UN resident coordinator system and UN country teams, as well as common premises and integrated information services. The introduction of MYFFs and the reinforcement of results-based management were steps towards more efficient programming, monitoring and evaluation. The availability of resources for operational activities was essential for sustaining those reforms on a predictable and assured basis.

However, resources remained insecure, unstable, stagnant, volatile and vulnerable, and the introduction of MYFFs had not managed to reverse the negative trends in core funding, while financial support for development cooperation still came from a limited number of donors. A renewed commitment to financing UN development cooperation on a more secure and predictable footing was needed. The forthcoming International Conference on Financing for Development (see p. 886) provided an opportunity to achieve a breakthrough in that area.

The report reviewed the impact of management reforms, introduced in recent years to achieve greater coherence and coordination in UN development cooperation, which focused on intergovernmental oversight of operational activities, lessons learned from their impact evaluation, strategic frameworks for programming and field-level coordination.

It concluded that, to become more relevant in facing the global challenges, UN development support should aim at closer integration with national development policies and programmes. Its focus should shift to integration into national efforts, shared programmes within the system and with Governments and other stakeholders, increased attention to the substantive content of development support, capacity-building and greater development impact on recipient countries.

The challenge of integrating development cooperation in national development efforts required the interaction of a variety of interlocutors at the intergovernmental level; the Economic and Social Council could provide the forum for a substantive dialogue among key stakeholders on the overall direction and orientations of development cooperation, and provide guidance to the UN system and the governing bodies of its organizations. Participation in the Council's operational activities segment would have to be at a high level and extended to a wider range of stakeholders. The dialogue on development cooperation at the Council's operational activities segment should encourage a greater harmonization of policies, instruments and procedures of all external partners as a basis for more effective integration of all external assistance into national development.

The review also examined the strategic frameworks developed by the international community to help developing countries define their comprehensive country strategies, in particular CCA and UNDAF. The role and implementation of those two instruments over the past three years were evaluated in an addendum to the report [A/56/320/Add.1] and in more detail in a separate report [A/56/70-E/2001/58]. Experience in a number of countries where CCA and UNDAF had been applied showed that notable advances had been made, the system was working more coherently at the country level and UNDAF could be a major tool for inducing greater coherence and synergy in UN system operational activities at the country level. However, the degree of government involvement in countries where the process was launched had been uneven, and the involvement of other national development partners appeared to be limited. To be relevant in development terms, UNDAF should serve not only as a framework for UN system country programmes, but also as a broader instrument to assist programme countries in achieving their own development goals. That required greater involvement of the Government and other national partners in all stages of formulation and implementation, a better dialogue with all relevant external partners, good quality technical work to accompany those processes, adequate monitoring and the building of national capacities in coordination functions. The review noted the concern over the multiplicity of country-level coordination frameworks and the burden they might place on programme countries, UN system staff and other multilateral and bilateral institutions, resulting in higher transaction costs. Progress could be made by ensuring coherence and consistency among them.

Concerning impact evaluations of UN system support in capacity-building and poverty eradication, the review showed that, while the system could play an important role in poverty reduction, with support to capacity-building being an important element in that process, the resources available for poverty eradication were still inadequate. Although capacity-building was a central objective of operational activities for the entire UN system, it was still seen as an area reserved to UNDP. Moreover, the impact evaluations showed that poverty eradication as a central goal of the UN system could be linked, in a more structural way, to the development role played by each system organization. The absence of a clear link left a certain lack of clarity regarding the way to tackle poverty eradication. Poverty eradication needed to be conceived not as a remedial or compensatory initiative but as the outcome of policies and programmes that promoted inclusive economic growth and overall social development.

The review examined several issues related to field-level coordination. It noted that greater efforts were needed to achieve further progress in the simplification and harmonization of the multiplicity of rules, procedures and modalities specific to each organization. It also noted that, while the functioning of the resident coordinator system had improved, there was still room for more participation by UN specialized agencies, as well as for the introduction of innovations to enhance the system's capacity to involve and interact with other partners, to encourage a sense of belonging to the UN system as a whole, and to further involve the broader donor community in the work of the resident coordinator system and facilitate closer complementarity in the country work of all external partners. The review noted the progress made over the past three years in enhancing the efficiency of programme delivery through the process of common premises and shared services.

In terms of monitoring and evaluation, the review revealed that, despite the move towards strategic and policy-oriented monitoring, there was little institutional memory within the system on the impact of its operational activities and there was a need to enhance its capacity to learn from past experiences. The involvement of specialized agencies was another area of concern, and the importance of enhancing that involvement in the country-level dialogue between the UN system and the Government and other national partners was underlined. Providing adequate resources, including budgetary support to specialized agencies, was also important in helping those agencies without direct field representation in recipient countries to enable national stakeholders to have access to their services. The potential for greater collaboration between the UN development system and regional development banks should be more fully explored. Considerable scope also existed for tripartite collaboration among the UN development system, the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund) and regional development banks.

Other dimensions of operational activities, such as the interrelationships among conflict prevention, relief, rehabilitation and development, needed further clarification, as did the mainstreaming of the gender perspective. In addition, technical and economic cooperation among developing countries, when further integrated into operational activities for development, had a greater impact on development efforts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/56/562/Add.1], adopted resolution 56/201 without vote [agenda item 99 (a)].

Triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/211 of 22 December 1989, 47/199 of 22 December 1992, 50/120 of 20 December 1995, 52/203 of 18 December 1997, 52/12 B of 19 December 1997 and 53/192 of 15 December 1998, as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 1999/5 and 1999/6 of 23 July 1999, and 2000/19 and 2000/20 of 28 July 2000, and taking note of agreed conclusions 2001/1 of the Council of 4 July 2001, the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of the substantive session of the Council of 18 July 2001, Council resolution 2001/41 of 26 July 2001 and other relevant resolutions,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration of 8 September 2000 and its importance for international development cooperation, including the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, and in particular the development and poverty eradication goals and targets contained therein,

Reaffirming that the operational activities for development of the United Nations system have an important role to play in enabling developing countries to continue to take a lead role in the management of their own development process in a continuously changing global context,

Reaffirming also that the fundamental characteristics of the operational activities of the United Nations system should be, inter alia, their universal, voluntary and grant nature, their neutrality and their multilateralism, as well as their ability to respond to the development needs of developing countries in a flexible manner, and that the operational activities of the United Nations system are carried out for the benefit of recipient countries, at the request of those countries and in accordance with their own policies and priorities for development,

Stressing that national plans and priorities constitute the only viable frame of reference for the national programming of operational activities for development of the United Nations system and that programmes should be based on such development plans and priorities and should therefore be country-driven,

Bearing in mind that the effectiveness of operational activities should be assessed by their impact on poverty eradication, economic growth and sustainable development of recipient countries as set out in the commitments, goals and targets of the Millennium Declaration and of the major United Nations conferences,

Welcoming the efforts undertaken so far to rationalize and improve the functioning and impact of United Nations funds, programmes and specialized agencies,

Recognizing that globalization, technological change and the need for the integration of the developing countries and other recipient countries into the world economy represent major challenges and, at the same time, opportunities for their development,

Recognizing also that new technologies, including information and communication technologies, present an opportunity to accelerate development, especially in developing countries, but that the access to those technologies is uneven and that a digital divide still prevails,

Noting that, while the scope of operational activities of the organizations of the United Nations system includes situations where a more flexible response capacity of the system is required, the focus of operational activities should be on actions that have a long-term impact on poverty eradication, economic growth and sustainable development,

Recognizing the urgent and specific needs of low-income countries, in particular the least developed countries,

Emphasizing that developing countries are responsible for their development processes, and in this context stressing the responsibility of the international community, in partnership, to assist developing countries in their national development efforts,

Recognizing that the United Nations development system should take into account the specific needs and requirements of the countries with economies in transition and other recipient countries,

Recalling the role of the Economic and Social Council in providing coordination and guidance to the United Nations system to ensure that policies formulated by the General Assembly, in particular during the triennial policy review of operational activities, are implemented on a system-wide basis in accordance with Assembly resolutions 48/162 of 20 December 1993 and 50/227 of 24 May 1996,

Noting with deep concern the failure to provide the United Nations development system with a critical mass of the core resources required to enable long-term development cooperation towards attaining development goals and targets and towards providing a more integrated development support,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system and on progress in the implementation of the multi-year funding frameworks and evaluation of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework;

2. Reaffirms its resolutions 47/199, 50/120, 53/192 and the parts relevant to operational activities for development of its resolution 52/12 B, and stresses the need to implement fully, on the basis of lessons learned, all the elements of those resolutions in a coherent and timely manner, keeping in mind their interlinkages;

3. Stresses the primary responsibility of national Governments for their countries' development, and recognizes the importance of national ownership of development programmes;

4. Emphasizes that recipient Governments have the primary responsibility for coordinating, on the basis of national strategies and priorities, all types of external assistance, including that provided by multilateral organizations, in order to integrate effectively such assistance into their development process;

5. Emphasizes also the need for all organizations of the United Nations development system to enhance their coordination in accordance with their mandates, mission statements and the relevant decisions of their governing bodies, in order to avoid overlapping and duplication and to enhance their complementarity;

6. Emphasizes further the need to fulfil the commitments, goals and targets set in the United Nations Millennium Declaration and by the major United Nations conferences, and in that context reiterates the importance of continuously monitoring progress made in that direction;

7. Stresses that the United Nations development system, in order to ensure national ownership of its operational activities for development, should integrate its country-level operations with national policies and programmes for development and poverty eradication, including, as appropriate, national poverty reduction strategies, under the leadership of the Government;

8. Also stresses that the United Nations development system should assist programme countries in addressing the goals and targets identified in the Millennium Declaration and in the outcomes and commitments of relevant major United Nations conferences, in the context of the current challenges and opportunities of globalization;

9. Welcomes the efforts undertaken so far to improve the functioning and the impact of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, and in this regard encourages the organizations of the United Nations system to continue those efforts, with a view to improving further the effectiveness and increasing the relevance of such activities;

I

Role of operational activities in the context of a globalizing world

10. Stresses the need for all organizations of the United Nations development system, in accordance with their respective mandates, to focus their efforts at the field level in accordance with the priorities identified by recipient countries and the goals, targets and commitments set in the Millennium Declaration and by the major United Nations conferences;

11. Recognizes, in this context, the need for all organizations of the United Nations system to assist programme countries to respond more effectively to the economic and social impact of globalization and to support their efforts to integrate into the world economy, to accelerate their economic growth and development and to reduce their poverty;

12. Calls upon the organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen and adapt their strategies and activities and enhance their coordination and collaboration, in order to enhance their supportive role in meeting the commitments, goals and targets of the Millennium Assembly and major United Nations conferences, in particular the development and poverty eradication goals and targets;

13. Encourages the United Nations system to support national efforts to acquire the capacities and infrastructure required to mobilize information and communication technologies and put them at the service of development, and encourages all organizations of the system to collaborate with the recently established Information and Communication Technologies Task Force;

II

Funding for operational activities for development of the United Nations system

14. Stresses that core resources, inter alia, because of their untied nature, are the bedrock of the operational activities of the United Nations system, and in this regard notes with serious concern the overall decline or stagnation in core resources available to many United Nations funds and programmes, in particular the United Nations Development Programme;

15. Strongly reaffirms that the impact of operational activities for development of the United Nations system must be enhanced by, inter alia, a substantial increase in core or regular resources on a predictable, continuous and sustained basis, commensurate with the increasing needs of developing countries, as well as through the full implementation of resolutions 47/199, 48/162, 50/120, 53/192 and the parts relevant to operational activities for development of resolution 52/12 B;

16. Notes the efforts of the executive boards and secretariats of the United Nations Development Programme and United Nations Population Fund and of the United Nations Children's Fund to establish multi-year funding frameworks that integrate programme objectives, resources, budgets and outcomes, with the objective of increasing core resources and enhancing their predictability, and in this regard invites them to continue to develop and refine the frameworks as a strategic resource management tool;

17. Stresses, in this regard, the continued need for funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations development system to continue to report on the overall results achieved to their executive boards or governing bodies and to the Economic and Social Council;

18. Notes with regret that, although significant progress has been achieved with regard to the governance and functioning of the United Nations development system, there has not been, as part of that overall process of change, a significant increase in core resources for operational activities for development;

19. Underlines the need to avoid over-dependence on a limited number of donors, emphasizes the importance of shared responsibility in a spirit of partnership, taking into account established official development assistance targets, including targets established at the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, and calls upon donors and countries in a position to do so to increase their contributions to the core or regular resources of United Nations funds and programmes;

20. Appreciates, in this context, the efforts of countries, including donor and programme countries, that have increased or maintained their high level of contributions to the core resources of United Nations funds and programmes, and of those that have made multi-year pledges to core resources;

21. Notes the increase in non-core resources, including cost-sharing, trust funds and non-traditional sources of financing, as a mechanism to supplement the means of operational activities for development, contributing to an increase in total resources, while recognizing that non-core resources are not a substitute for core resources;

22. Reaffirms the need for priority allocation of scarce grant resources to programmes and projects in low-income countries, in particular the least developed countries;

23. Requests that the establishment of new trust funds by United Nations funds and programmes be done in accordance with their mandates, mission statements and the relevant decisions of their governing bodies, and that such new trust funds, to the extent possible, be multi-donor in nature and not detrimental to core or regular resources;

24. Notes, in this context, the contributions of private sources, which can supplement but cannot substitute for contributions of Governments, to finance or extend programmes implemented within existing guidelines of United Nations funds and programmes;

25. Stresses the need for continuous overall improvement in the effectiveness, efficiency, management and impact of the United Nations system in delivering its development assistance, and welcomes steps that have been taken to that end;

26. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, for consideration by the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session, a report presenting options alternative to the current modality of the annual United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, including a regular pledging event, taking into account the funding sessions convened under the multi-year funding frameworks, the needs of other agencies of the United Nations system, appropriate timing and options to enhance public support for operational activities for development of the United Nations system, including through the proposed options;

27. Requests the Economic and Social Council to consider, at its substantive session of 2003, the conclusions reached at the present triennial policy review on resources for operational activities for development, reviewing the progress made on the issue of funding of development cooperation activities of the United Nations system;

III

Capacity-building

28. Stresses that capacity-building and its sustainability should be explicitly articulated as a goal of technical assistance provided by operational activities of the United Nations system, with the aim of strengthening national capacities, and that the technical skills profiles of country offices should be regularly assessed to ensure effective capacity-building of the recipient countries, and requests United Nations organizations to review their efforts in the field of capacity-building and to report, through the Secretary-General, to the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 2002, on the results achieved in this area;

29. Also stresses the importance of disseminating, to the fullest extent possible, the expertise acquired through the technical assistance provided by operational activities for development of the United Nations system in the programme countries;

30. Reiterates that the United Nations system should use, to the fullest extent possible and practicable, available national expertise and indigenous technologies in the implementation of operational activities, and also reiterates its call for the development of common guidelines at the field level for the recruitment, remuneration and training of national project personnel, including national consultants, for the formulation and implementation of development projects and programmes supported by the United Nations development system;

31. Requests the United Nations system to enhance the capacity of national Governments to coordinate the external assistance received from the international community, including from the United Nations system;

32. Calls upon the organizations of the United Nations development system to support the strengthening of the capacity of Governments to establish databanks and carry out poverty assessments at the country level;

IV

Common country assessment and United Nations Development Assistance Framework

33. Notes that, while progress has been made since the introduction of the common country assessment and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework in its pilot phase, there still is a need to continue to improve the preparatory process and the quality of those instruments, inter alia, on the basis of the recommendations of the external evaluation of the common country assessment and the Framework, as reflected in the report of the Secretary-General and his recommendations, with a view to ensuring their effectiveness;

34. Requests the United Nations system to conduct the common country assessment and the Framework processes as efforts to improve support for national development priorities and policies, and stresses that full governmental participation and leadership is required at all stages of those processes;

35. Stresses the need to ensure the full and active participation of the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system in the preparation of the common country assessment and the Framework;

36. Encourages the United Nations system to ensure full and active system-wide collaboration and coherence in developing the common country assessment and the Framework processes;

37. Recognizes the need to ensure that lessons learned in the elaboration of the common country assessment and the Framework are systematically shared within the United Nations system and with Governments of programme countries as well as other development partners;

38. Also recognizes the common country assessment as a common analytical instrument for the United Nations development system which takes into account national priorities and needs as well as the commitments, goals and targets set in the Millennium Declaration and by the major United Nations conferences;

39. Further recognizes that the common country assessment can also be used by recipient countries in formulating their own national policies;

40. Recognizes that the Framework, where it exists, is the common planning framework for the development operations of the United Nations system at the country level, consisting of common objectives and strategies of cooperation, a programme resource framework and proposals for follow-up, monitoring and evaluation;

41. Urges the organizations of the United Nations system to ensure consistency and complementarity of country programmes and other similar instruments used in individual organizations of the system with the approved Framework;

42. Notes the role that the Framework should play to facilitate the contribution of the United Nations system to the integrated and coordinated implementation of the Millennium Declaration and the outcomes of major United Nations conferences and summits at the country level and to provide a more coherent and integrated response by the United Nations system to national development priorities;

43. Also notes the importance of closer consultation in the formulation of the common country assessment and the Framework, among national Governments, relevant United Nations development agencies, including specialized agencies, and other relevant stakeholders;

44. Encourages greater cooperation among the World Bank, regional development banks and all funds and programmes, taking into account their respective competencies, mandates and comparative advantages, with a view to achieving increased complementarity and better division of labour, as well as enhanced coherence in their sectoral activities, building on the existing arrangements and in full accordance with the priorities of the recipient Government, and in this regard emphasizes the importance of ensuring, under the leadership of national Governments, greater consistency between the strategic frameworks developed by the United Nations funds, programmes and agencies and the Bretton Woods institutions, and the national poverty reduction strategies, including the poverty reduction strategy papers, where they exist;

45. Urges the organizations of the United Nations system, when the common country assessment and the Framework are undertaken, to ensure that measures are adopted to simplify and harmonize country assessment procedures and programming so as to reduce transaction costs and avoid additional procedural requirements and workload for recipient countries and United Nations country teams;

46. Encourages bilateral donors and the United Nations system to coordinate their efforts more actively at the field level, under the leadership of recipient Governments, inter alia, by using the common country assessment;

47. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with Member States, to undertake an evaluation of the progress of the common country assessment and Framework processes and their impact on the field of operational activities, as an integral part of the next triennial policy review of operational activities, and to submit a report, through the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2004, on the results of such an evaluation, including lessons learned and recommendations made, for consideration by the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session;

V

Evaluation of operational activities for development

48. Emphasizes the importance of the monitoring and evaluation of operational activities of the United Nations system in order to enhance their effectiveness and impact, and reiterates that the monitoring and evaluation process of operational activities, including, where appropriate, joint evaluations by the United Nations system, should be impartial and independent, under the overall leadership of the Government;

49. Reiterates the need to strengthen the capacities of the recipient countries to perform effective programme, project and financial monitoring, as well as impact evaluations of operational activities funded by the United Nations, and underlines the importance of promoting, under the leadership of Governments, greater collaboration on questions relating to evaluation among recipient Governments and the United Nations development system, in particular the members of the United Nations Development Group, at the country level;

50. Recognizes that a comprehensive and participatory approach to monitoring and evaluation calls for a closer involvement of national authorities and civil society in the monitoring and evaluation of the effectiveness and impact of operational activities, in order to ensure that the results of those evaluations are utilized to improve operational activities for development and their impact;

51. Notes that coordination activities, though beneficial, represent transaction costs that are borne by both recipient countries and the organizations of the United Nations system, and emphasizes the need for their continuous evaluation and for an analysis and assessment of costs compared with the total programme expenditures on operational activities for development in order to ensure maximum efficiency and feasibility;

52. Takes note of the impact evaluations of capacity-building and poverty eradication undertaken according to resolution 53/192, and requests the organizations of the United Nations system to review the conclusions of those evaluations and the lessons learned and to incorporate them, in the light of their own experience, into their operational activities for development;

53. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide, in the context of the triennial comprehensive policy review, an overall assessment of the effectiveness of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system and of the functioning of the United Nations development system at the country level, and to submit to the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 2002, in consultation with Member States and on the basis of the experience acquired with the impact evaluation studies, suggestions on how to strengthen the modalities and enhance the approach for such an assessment, in particular in the areas identified in the present resolution;

54. Reiterates the need for recipient Governments concerned to be fully and effectively involved in the assessment of the effectiveness of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system;

55. Requests the United Nations system at the country level to support those Governments that intend to undertake capacity-building impact evaluations themselves, as and when required;

56. Reiterates the need for the United Nations system to strengthen its efforts, in consultation with recipient countries, to ensure that the lessons learned from both monitoring and evaluation exercises are systematically applied to programming processes at the operational level and that evaluation criteria are built into all projects and programmes at their design stage, requests the Secretary-General to carry out an impartial and independent assessment of the extent to which the United Nations funds, programmes and agencies at the field level learn lessons from their evaluations and to formulate proposals on how to improve the feedback mechanisms at the field level, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2003 in this regard;

VI

Simplification and harmonization of rules and procedures

57. Reaffirms that simplification and harmonization of procedures, as well as their decentralization, should support improved organizational efficiency and effectiveness and be responsive to the needs of recipient countries;

58. Notes the progress achieved in the harmonization of programming cycles, the harmonization of the programme approval process and the simplification and harmonization of rules and procedures, with the assistance of the United Nations Development Group, and calls upon the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system to continue to improve coordination efforts by taking further steps to enhance and ensure the sustainability of that process;

59. Emphasizes that the simplification and harmonization of rules and procedures should aim at reducing, where appropriate, the complexities and diversity of requirements, which still place an enormous burden on the recipient countries through high transaction costs, and that innovations in this area should achieve, in their implementation, the objective of reducing the administrative and financial costs to the recipient country as well as to the United Nations system;

60. Requests the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system to examine ways to simplify further their rules and procedures and, in this context, to accord the issue of simplification and harmonization high priority and to take concrete steps in the following areas: the decentralization and delegation of authority; the financial regulations; the procedures for implementing programmes and projects and, in particular, the requirements in terms of monitoring and reporting; the common shared services at country offices; and the recruitment, training and remuneration of national project personnel;

61. Requests the funds and programmes of the United Nations system to submit to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2002 a programme of work for full simplification and harmonization in the above-mentioned areas, to be completed before the end of 2004, including provisions to phase out redundant rules and procedures, benchmarks, responsibilities, as well as a timetable to monitor the progress made towards reaching that target;

62. Requests the Executive Committee of the United Nations Development Group to facilitate the definition of the above-mentioned agenda and its implementation;

63. Requests the funds and programmes to provide, in their annual reports to the Economic and Social Council, specific information on the progress achieved in reaching the above-mentioned target;

64. Invites the executive boards and governing bodies of the funds, programmes and specialized agencies to assess regularly the progress achieved in the area of simplification and harmonization of rules and procedures;

65. Requests the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination to address the requirements for further simplification and harmonization of procedures;

VII

Resident coordinator system

66. Reaffirms that the resident coordinator system, within the framework of national ownership, has a key role to play in the effective and efficient functioning of the United Nations system at the country level, including in the formulation of common country assessments and United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks, and is a key instrument for the efficient and effective coordination of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, and requests the United Nations system, including the funds and programmes, the specialized agencies and the Secretariat, to enhance support to the resident coordinator system;

67. Appreciates efforts, including through the United Nations Development Group, to improve further the resident coordinator system and the progress achieved so far in broadening the pool of resident coordinators, improving their gender balance, using competency assessments to select resident coordinator candidates, and implementing improved staff training and annual performance appraisals, and urges the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system to make further efforts in that direction, including through appropriate training and recruitment of qualified staff with the required professional skills and backgrounds;

68. Encourages the funds, programmes and specialized agencies to make full use of the United Nations Staff College as an institution for system-wide knowledge management, training and learning;

69. Encourages enhanced dialogue, feedback, participation and interaction between the resident coordinator on the one hand, and the specialized agencies, small technical agencies, the regional commissions and organizations of the United Nations system without field level representation on the other, including through a wider use of information and communication technologies;

70. Encourages the international financial institutions and other development partners to support the resident coordinator system, including through enhanced dialogue, in addressing national development objectives;

71. Recognizes the need for the resident coordinator system to interact more effectively and substantively with the Government of the recipient country, as well as with civil society and other relevant stakeholders, as appropriate;

72. Requests the resident coordinator system to assist Governments in their efforts towards implementation of the commitments, goals and targets set in the Millennium Declaration and by the major United Nations conferences, and encourages further work by the country-level theme groups;

73. Requests all organizations of the United Nations system, including those with no field-level representation and the regional commissions, to continue to improve and strengthen the resident coordinator system through their support to and active participation in that system, on the basis of their respective mandates and in close consultation with the national Government;

VIII

United Nations Development Group

74. Recognizes the progress achieved towards a more coherent United Nations performance in the development field in the past three years, as reflected by a new culture of shared responsibility, cooperation and coordination among the members of the United Nations Development Group, and in particular the role of the Executive Committee of the Group;

75. Requests the member organizations of the United Nations Development Group, in particular the member organizations represented in its Executive Committee, to continue to support and actively participate in the work of the Group;

IX

Planning, programming and implementation

76. Decides that, with the agreement of the host country, the United Nations development system should assist national Governments in creating an enabling environment in which the links among national Governments, the United Nations development system, civil society, national non-governmental organizations and the private sector involved in the development process are strengthened, with a view to seeking new and innovative solutions to development problems, in accordance with national policies and priorities;

77. Encourages greater cooperation among the World Bank, regional development banks and all funds and programmes with a view to achieving increased complementarity and better division of labour as well as enhanced coherence in their sectoral activities, building on the existing arrangements and in full accordance with the priorities of the recipient Government;

78. Recognizes that the diversity of programming procedures of the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system results from the diversity of their mandates and the decisions of their respective governing bodies, and, that notwithstanding, calls upon those organizations to intensify their efforts to utilize all avenues for stronger cooperation and coordination at the headquarters level, which should complement similar coordination efforts at the country level, and urges them to keep countries fully informed of decisions taken at headquarters;

79. Notes the progress achieved in the area of common premises and shared services at the country level within the United Nations system, reaffirms the need to take fully into account cost-benefit studies as called for in relevant resolutions, and encourages further implementation of such initiatives, where appropriate, while ensuring that there will be no additional burden imposed on host countries;

80. Recognizes that the utilization of advanced information and communication technologies could also provide the necessary platform for more coordination and cohesion at the field level;

81. Encourages the use of information technologies as a means to support more effectively the delivery of development cooperation by the United Nations system, and therefore calls for the urgent harmonization of the information technology platforms utilized by the United Nations system, at both the field and headquarters levels;

X

Humanitarian assistance

82. Reiterates that the phases of relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development are generally not consecutive but often overlap and occur simultaneously, and notes the urgent need to develop, through a strategic framework, when appropriate, a comprehensive approach to countries in crisis, notes that the development of such a comprehensive approach must involve national authorities as well as the United Nations system, donors and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and that national authorities must take a leading role in all aspects of the recovery plan, notes in this context the need for an early application of developmental tools in humanitarian emergencies, and takes note with appreciation of the recommendations included in the report of the Secretary-General in this regard;

83. Expresses its appreciation to those countries which have substantially contributed to humanitarian assistance during natural and man-made disasters;

84. Stresses that contributions to humanitarian assistance should not be provided at the expense of development assistance and that sufficient resources for humanitarian assistance should be made available by the international community;

XI

Gender

85. Welcomes the progress achieved in gender mainstreaming in operational activities, and encourages further work in the areas of equitable access to financial and productive resources to ensure a reversal in the feminization of poverty;

86. Encourages the continuing efforts to improve the gender balance on appointments within the United Nations system at the headquarters and the country level in positions that affect operational activities;

87. Calls for renewed and accelerated efforts in gender mainstreaming in the framework of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system in all fields, in particular in support of poverty eradication, and encourages the empowerment of women as a priority for operational activities for development;

XII

Regional dimensions of operational activities

88. Reiterates the growing need for incorporating the regional and subregional dimensions, where appropriate, in the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, and encourages the resident coordinators, in close consultation with Governments, to secure the greater involvement of the regional commissions, taking into account their agreed mandates and work programmes, in the common country assessment and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, as appropriate;

XIII

South-South cooperation/economic and technical cooperation among developing countries

89. Reiterates that South-South cooperation, including technical and economic cooperation among developing countries, offers viable opportunities for the development of developing countries, and in this context requests the executive boards of the funds and programmes to review, with a view to considering an increase, the allocation of resources for activities involving technical cooperation among developing countries;

90. Requests the United Nations system to take appropriate measures to improve the effective incorporation of technical cooperation among developing countries into their programmes and projects, and to intensify efforts towards mainstreaming the modality of technical cooperation among developing countries, including through support for the activities of the Special Unit for Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, and encourages other relevant international institutions to take similar measures;

XIV Follow-up

91. Reaffirms that the governing bodies of the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system should take appropriate action for the full implementation of the present resolution, and requests the executive heads of those funds, programmes and specialized agencies to submit a yearly progress report to their governing bodies on measures taken and envisaged for the implementation of the present resolution, as well as appropriate recommendations;

92. Invites the executive boards of the funds and programmes of the United Nations system to ensure that the heads of those funds and programmes include in their annual reports to the Economic and Social Council, prepared in accordance with Council resolution 1994/33 of 28 July 1994, a thorough analysis of problems encountered and lessons learned, with emphasis on issues arising from the implementation of the reform programme of the Secretary-General, the triennial policy review and the follow-up to the Millennium Declaration and major United Nations conferences, so as to allow the Council to fulfil its coordinating role;

93. Reiterates the provisions of its resolutions 48/162, 50/227 and 52/12 B which detail the respective functions of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the executive boards of the funds and programmes of the United Nations system, and encourages the Economic and Social Council, within the context of its institutional role, to provide overall guidance to the United Nations system on operational activities for development;

94. Requests the Secretary-General, after consultation with the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, to submit a progress report to the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 2002, on an appropriate management process, containing clear guidelines, targets, benchmarks and time frames for the full implementation of the present resolution;

95. Invites the Economic and Social Council, during the operational activities segment of its substantive sessions of 2002 and 2003, to examine the operational activities of the United Nations system in order to evaluate the implementation of the present resolution with a view to ensuring its full implementation;

96. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session, through the Economic and Social Council, a comprehensive analysis of the implementation of the present resolution in the context of the triennial policy review, and to make appropriate recommendations.

Internal oversight mechanisms

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-fifth session, considered the Secretary-General's note [A/C.5/55/23] on enhancing the internal oversight mechanisms in operational funds and programmes, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/244 [YUN 1999, p. 1274]. The Secretary-General said that the issuance of the report requested in that resolution, updating his 1997 report [YUN 1997, p. 855] on enhancing the internal oversight mechanisms in operational funds and programmes, had been postponed to March 2001 to allow for consultations with funds and programmes on the 1997 recommendations. However, the preliminary information indicated that improvements in oversight functions had been made since 1997. The Secretary-General noted the establishment by UNDP of the Management Review and Oversight Committee, with the participation of the UN Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS), which periodically reviewed UNDP's accountability framework and reported to its Executive Board. The Secretary-General intended to make a number of recommendations in his March report for improving the internal oversight functions, including the establishment by all funds and programmes of similar oversight committees.

The Secretary-General's March report [A/55/826 & Corr.1] on enhancing the internal oversight mechanisms in operational funds and programmes was based on the analysis of responses received from funds and programmes with respect to changes in their oversight mechanisms since the 1997 report relating to auditing, evaluation, monitoring (programme performance), inspection, investigation, coordination of oversight activities, monitoring implementation of recommendations and reporting of allegations.

The new information from the funds and programmes indicated that, overall, their internal oversight mechanisms had improved, especially with regard to intensified cooperation between them and OIOS and the adoption of new oversight procedures. Many of the 1997 recommendations were being implemented through differing but viable organizational arrangements for oversight. However, gaps remained concerning other crucial recommendations, including recommendation 3 [YUN 1997, p. 856] relating to budgetary provisions for investigation services provided by OIOS, which had not been implemented. In addition, most funds and programmes depended on OIOS for their complex investigations because they did not employ professional investigators, had not established their own independent investigations units and had not developed confidential reporting procedures to protect those who made reports in good faith or were the subject of such reports. Regarding the auditing function, some of the funds and programmes had separate audit units functioning with sufficient operational independence, which enabled them to improve the extent and depth of their coverage.

To further enhance the oversight coverage of those funds and programmes, while guaranteeing OIOS the resources for its services, particularly regarding investigations and audit services, the Secretary-General proposed a new set of recommendations.

Recommendation 1A called for the establishment of a budgetary provision for all aspects of oversight coverage at each existing entity and the creation of new entities to ensure that the responsibility and source of funding for oversight were clearly identified.

Recommendation 1B called for the establishment of a mechanism to reimburse OIOS fully for investigations and audit services and, in special cases, for other services it provided to funds and programmes. That would require each fund and programme to enter into a memorandum of understanding specifying the level of service to be provided, based on a standard cost of service, including indirect costs incurred (travel, equipment and training, among others).

Recommendation 2 called for the establishment of an oversight committee at each entity, with appropriate terms of reference and with OIOS representation, to strengthen information exchange and coordination on internal oversight.

The Assembly, in resolution 55/259 of 14 June (see p. 1282), deferred until its fifty-sixth session consideration of the Secretary-General's March report and requested him to seek updated views on the report from the funds and programmes.

Financing of operational activities in 2000

Expenditures of the UN system on operational activities, excluding loans and grants through the World Bank Group, totalled $6.5 billion in 2000 [A/56/70/Add.2-E/2001/58/Add.2], the most recent year for which figures were available, as compared with $6 billion in 1999 and $5.3 billion in 1998. Of the 2000 amount, $1,917.6 million was distributed in development grants by UNDP or UNDP-administered funds, $1,553.3 million by specialized agencies and other organizations from extrabudgetary sources, $1,491.1 million by WFP, $885 million by UNICEF, $469.6 million by specialized agencies and other organizations from regular budgets (mostly the World Health Organization (WHO)) and $134.1 million by UNFPA.

By region, $2,156 million of the total development grants, excluding those by the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) and self-supporting programmes, went to Africa, $1,351 million to Asia and the Pacific, $1,311 million to Latin America and the Caribbean, $301 million to Europe and $838 million to Western Asia. Some $493 million went to interregional and global programmes and other countries not classified elsewhere, including those of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS).

Contributions for operational activities from Governments and other sources, excluding contributions to IFAD and government "self-supporting" contributions, reached $7.2 billion in 2000, as compared to $6.9 billion in 1999 and $5.7 billion in 1998.

The UNDP Administrator, in an August report on UN system technical cooperation expenditure in 2000 [DP/2001/30 & Corr.1 & Add.1], stated that the delivery of $6.5 billion in technical cooperation in 2000 was the highest ever, up by 7.4 per cent from 1999, due mainly to the spectacular growth rate of 32.6 per cent recorded by the executing and specialized agencies. As a group, they surpassed the $2 billion mark for the first time and achieved the highest share of expenditures at 31.4 per cent. The significant increase in the delivery figure for that group was generated by WHO, which represented 39 per cent of the total expenditure.

In terms of sector distribution, 26 per cent of the aggregate, or $1.7 billion, was deployed for humanitarian assistance, 21 per cent, or $1.4 billion, for health, and 10 per cent, or $631.1 million, for agriculture.

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, on 14 September [E/2001/35 (dec. 2001/17)], took note of the Administrator's report.

At the 2001 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (New York, 7 November) [A/CONF.196/3], Governments made pledges to UN programmes and funds concerned with development. The Conference noted that several Governments were not in a position to announce their contributions, but proposed to communicate their announcement of such contributions to the Secretary-General as soon as they were in a position to do so.

The Secretary-General provided a statement of contributions pledged or paid at the 2000 Pledging Conference, as at 30 June, to 29 funds and programmes [A/CONF.193/2]. The total amounted to some $1,067 million, of which $450 million was pledged to UNDP.

Technical cooperation through UNDP

The UNDP Administrator, in his annual report for 2001, which included the results-oriented annual report (ROAR) [DP/2002/15 & Add.I,2], said that UNDP's vision, as outlined by the Administrator in his Business Plans, 2000-2003 [YUN 1999, p. 802], and its contribution to the implementation of the millennium development goals, set out in General Assembly resolution 55/2 [YUN 2000, p. 49], in particular the commitment to halve global poverty by 2015, were translated into concrete results in 2001 throughout UNDP activities, notably in Brazil, Burkina Faso and Gujarat, India.

That new vision was achieved through a worldwide knowledge-management system, comprising nine subregional resource facilities (SURFs) established in Addis Ababa (Ethiopia), Bangkok (Thailand), Beirut (Lebanon), Bratislava (Slovakia), Harare (Zimbabwe), Kathmandu (Nepal), Port of Spain (Trinidad and Tobago), Dakar (Senegal) and Panama. SURFs provided timely, high-quality substantive support to all country offices, including policy advisory services to programme countries, technical backstopping to country offices, access to substantive programme-related information, networking and information-sharing, and identification, documentation and dissemination of best practices in UNDP focus areas. A survey of the performance of SURFs and of the 37 existing knowledge networks on areas from microfinance to community governance showed a growing rate of client satisfaction as country offices had begun to share knowledge and expertise. The expert network had facilitated and extended the organization's expert capacity and outreach. In 2001, over 1,400 referrals were fielded by the SURFs and networks, with an average response time of under three days.

With regard to conflict and post-conflict situations, the Administrator created the Bureau for Crisis Prevention and Recovery in 2001 to respond better to the demands placed on the organization and to allow UNDP to play its role fully in partnership with international and national actors. The Bureau ensured proactive and responsive systems for handling special development situations.

Advocacy was central to UNDP activities through policy advice and the promotion of dialogue on key global and national issues. The Human Development Report 2001 [Sales No. E.01.III.B.1] (see p. 767) contributed to the international debate on development issues. With UNDP support, national human development reports took the Report's approach to the national level by promoting the mainstreaming of the human development concept in national policy dialogue.

UNDP continued to build strategic partnerships with the UN system, international financial institutions, civil society organizations, foundations and the private sector. One of the most notable partnership developments with the UN system in 2001 was the compact agreed between DESA and UNDP for the mutual reinforcement of their distinct but complementary roles, particularly in pursuing the millennium development goals. Cooperation with the Bretton Woods institutions, in particular the World Bank, developed significantly as the organizations worked together on poverty reduction strategies. UNDP further developed cooperation with regional development banks, especially the African Development Bank and the Asian Development Bank, and also strengthened its partnership with the United Nations Foundation (see p. 810). UNDP focused on promoting South-South cooperation, using information and communication technology (ICT) for development and engaging with civil society and private sector partners. There was a concerted effort in 2001 to develop policy-based partnerships with civil society organizations (CSOs) from both North and South, which were important in building UNDP's profile as a policy and advocacy organization. CSO consultations addressed such issues as globalization, trade, poverty reduction strategies, pro-poor budgeting and the millennium development goals. UNDP stepped up efforts to mobilize and engage the business sector, developing a comprehensive toolkit for collaboration with that sector. It also prepared a strategy for introducing the Secretary-General's Global Compact [YUN 2000, p. 989] at the country level, which included outreach and advocacy, policy dialogue, partnership projects and learning. UNDP facilitated the introduction of the Compact in some 20 countries in 2001. In addition, UNDP developed concrete partnership projects with the business sector, particularly in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Iran and Malaysia.

In November 2001, the Administrator was called upon to lead the early recovery effort in Afghanistan (see p. 265). UNDP supported the Secretary-General's Special Representative, assisted the Afghan Interim Administration and strengthened the organization's presence in the country. It also assisted the Deputy Special Rep-representative for Relief, Recovery and Reconstruction.

UNDP regular resources experienced an important turnaround in 2001 (see p. 805). In addition to increased pledges, including multi-year pledges, most donors made payments according to schedules communicated to the organization, with major donors making early payments, resulting in a much-improved liquidity position. In 2001, UNDP established the thematic trust funds as a flexible co-financing instrument designed to attract additional funding in the areas of democratic governance, poverty reduction, crisis prevention and recovery, ICT, energy and environment and HIV/AIDS, so as to facilitate greater substantive alignment of UNDP activities around those areas. The facility allowed programmable funds, not readily available either from regular resources or from other multi-bilateral funding at the country level, to be channelled into a consistent set of development interventions across countries and regions, particularly the least developed countries and Africa.

UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board

In 2001, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board held two regular sessions (26 January and 29 January–6 February, and 10–14 September) and an annual session (11–22 June), all in New York [E/2001/35].

At the first regular session, the Board adopted seven decisions, including one that gave an overview of the Board's action taken at that session [E/2001/35 (dec. 2001/7)]. Other decisions dealt with UNDP's role in crisis and post-conflict situations (see p. 802); technical cooperation among developing countries (see p. 818); follow-up to the recommendations contained in the reports of the Board of Auditors for 1998–1999 on UNDP, UNFPA and the United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) (see pp. 808, 1000 and 814, respectively); and proposed financial regulations concerning contributions from non-governmental sources (see p. 809).

The Executive Board, at its annual session, adopted five decisions. In addition to an overview decision summarizing the action taken during that session [dec. 2001/12], the Board adopted decisions on the annual report of the UNOPS Executive Director (see p. 812), the UNDP/UNFPA programming process (see p. 799) and the UNFPA information and communication strategy and strategic plan for HIV/AIDS for 2001–2005 (see p. 996).

At its second regular session, the Board adopted five decisions, including an overview decision [dec. 2001/17]. The others concerned UNDP budget estimates for 2002–2003 (see p. 808), the UNOPS revised budget for 2000–2001 and budget estimates for 2002–2003 (see p. 813), assistance to Myanmar (see p. 794) and UNFPA budget estimates for 2002–2003 (see p. 999).

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2001/226 of 10 July, took note of the Board's reports on its first regular and annual sessions.

UNDP/UNFPA reports

In June [dec. 2001/12], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of the Administrator's 2000 annual report, including the ROAR for that year [YUN 2000, p. 824].

By decision 2001/226 of 10 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the annual reports of the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director to the Council [E/2001/10].

UNDP operational activities

Country programmes

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, at its first regular session in February [dec. 2001/7], took note of the report on assistance to Myanmar [DP/2001/5] and requested the Administrator, taking into account the findings of the independent assessment mission to Myanmar, to submit a proposal for continued UNDP assistance to that country (see p. 794). The Board approved the first country cooperation framework (CCF) for Turkey and the second CCFs for Bangladesh, Belarus, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cambodia, Croatia, Georgia, Latvia, Lithuania, Mauritius, the Russian Federation, St. Helena, Saudi Arabia and Uganda. It took note of the first extensions of CCFs for Burundi, Kuwait, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Rwanda and the Syrian Arab Republic. It approved second CCF extensions for Eritrea, Estonia and the Republic of Moldova; a second extension of the first regional cooperation framework for Europe and CIS; and the second global cooperation framework. The Board took note of country reviews for Lesotho, Lithuania, Nepal and Yemen and the first regional cooperation framework for the Arab States.

At its annual session in June [dec. 2001/12], the Board approved the second CCFs for the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Tajikistan and the second extension of the first CCF for Ukraine. It took note of the first extensions of CCFs for Algeria, Lesotho and Namibia, and reports on field visits to Honduras [DP/2001/CRP.6] and to Bosnia and Herzegovina [DP/2001/CRP.7].

At its second regular session, the Board, on 14 September [dec. 2001/15], took note of the proposals made in the Administrator's note on future assistance to Myanmar [DP/2001/27] and approved continued funding of UNDP project activities for Myanmar from target for resource assignment from the core (TRAC) funding (approximately $22 million). It authorized the Administrator to approve, on a project-by-project basis, human development index (HDI) project extensions up to $50 million if additional funding from non-core resources became available, and to mobilize non-core resources for HDI activities proposed for the 2002-2004 programme planning period.

On the same date [dec. 2001/17], the Board approved the second regional cooperation framework for Asia and the Pacific, the first sub-regional cooperation framework for the Caribbean and the second extension of the first CCF for Argentina. It approved second CCFs for Bhutan, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Chad, Chile, China, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Gambia, Guatemala, Indonesia, Lesotho, Malawi, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, Peru, the Republic of Moldova, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Swaziland, Togo, the United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay and Zambia, and took note of country review reports for Brazil, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Egypt, Ghana, Guyana and the Republic of Moldova, as well as a report on Nauru: earmarkings from TRAC [DP/2001/31]. The Board took note of the first extensions of CCFs for Benin, the Comoros, Côte d'Ivoire, Fiji, Ghana, India, Kiribati, the Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Micronesia, Niue, Palau, Papua New Guinea, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Tonga, Tuvalu and Vanuatu.

UNDP performance analysis by goal

The Administrator reported in the ROAR for 2001 [DP/2002/15 & Add.1,2] on UNDP's performance in its six goals: creating an enabling environment for sustainable human development; reduction of poverty; environmentally sustainable development; advancement of women and gender equality; special development situations; and UNDP support to the United Nations. The report also provided an analysis of three sub-goals: under goal 3, sustainable environmental management and energy development to improve conditions for the poor; under goal 4, advancement of women by implementing global commitments; and under goal 6, increasingly collaborative, efficient and effective operational activities for development.

The Administrator, in his summary of the 2001 ROAR general conclusions, said that the emerging picture from all six goals was that the achievement of sustainable and pro-poor development required UNDP to be more proactive in influencing policies, laws and socio-economic practices. That in turn called for more outcome-oriented and consensual partnerships with civil society and the private sector and with Governments. Integral to that aim was the need to ensure national ownership in order to sustain capacity-development efforts, to prompt policy change and to implement policy commitments.

Policy advice and capacity development currently constituted the main forms of UNDP cooperation, but each had distinct challenges. Obtaining high levels of performance in results through policy advice required national commitment at the highest levels, combined with the ability to sustain such results over an extended period of time. Capacity development, on the other hand, which was central to ownership and sustainability, demanded sustained and relatively costly support over long periods.

Effective partnership management was emphasized in the report. However, there was still a sizeable gap in many cases between good results at the output levels within each goal of the strategic results framework and their contribution to realizing larger development outcomes, reflecting the challenges of marshalling other development partners in order to achieve the envisaged outcomes. Similarly, UN country teams needed to move past coordination of programmes to actual joint efforts to realize mutually reinforcing development results. UNDP should make a concerted effort to cultivate partnerships in the international community that contributed to lasting development outcomes at the country level, rather than simply generating agency-specific outputs.

In 2001, results-based management principles were incorporated throughout UNDP's programming, and guided major initiatives to simplify business practices and reduce transaction costs. The main instruments in UNDP programming had been revised to reflect a results-driven approach, as had evaluation policies and tools. With better strategic planning and assessment of performance, UNDP was better equipped to respond to changing needs and priorities. While results orientation was taking hold in the organization, the potential for informing policy change and managerial supervision had yet to be fully realized. UNDP was receiving increasing requests from Governments and development partners to share its experiences as they initiated their own performance management systems. UNDP should develop its in-house capacity to respond to that demand. Its experience in results-based management could potentially be transformed into distinct support to programme Governments, the UN family and the wider development community. Within the organization, greater attention was paid to realigning resources and activities to influence greater change in policy, laws and socio-economic practices in the context of strengthening the capacities of institutions and societies to manage their own development processes. Serious challenges remained in a number of areas, notably gender, and the organization needed to attach high priority to partnerships if its good performance at the output level was to translate into strong and sustained progress towards outcomes.

Creating an enabling environment for SHD

In 2001, UNDP support for creating an enabling environment for sustainable human development (SHD) confirmed its emphasis on assistance to democratic transition. UNDP supported governance initiatives in 145 countries through the coordination of donor support to electoral processes, the facilitation of national dialogue and the promotion of civil society participation in political reform. However, its mixed performance in achieving lasting change suggested that greater attention was required in such areas as building national commitment to post-election reforms, and emphasized the need for closer partnerships with local actors in civil society and government.

The ROAR 2001 indicated that national human development reports (NHDRs) were being used in a growing number of instances in setting public policy, in orienting public representatives and officials and in school curricula development. Country offices were using NHDRs to advocate changes to policy and laws to make them more pro-poor and pro-women, and there was greater use of gender-disaggregated data in NHDRs and other UNDP publications, particularly in Latin America and the Caribbean where such data had been integrated into 23 NHDRs.

Support to ICT for development had become increasingly sophisticated, while the demand to establish basic connectivity and more conventional uses remained. Innovative application of ICT for democratic governance included increasing people's access to data on financial and productive resources, land registration, tax administration, small business registration and public-resource management.

UNDP cooperation in local governance expanded in 2001, with 42 country offices reporting sharp increases in strategic interventions in decentralization. Interaction with other UN organizations in subnational governance was more evident, particularly with the United Nations

Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) in local development planning to promote accountable fiscal devolution. Regional programmes provided value-added contributions to provincial and municipal governance, notably in Asia and the Pacific.

Despite those achievements, lasting results were sometimes mixed, even when UNDP delivered its own outputs at reasonable levels, due, in part, to a number of constraints in governance, including uneven national commitment. Those constraints pointed to the need to establish and manage productive partnerships, especially in situations where there was a growing volume of activity, as in local governance, and in more nascent and sensitive areas, such as in fighting corruption and in promoting human rights for marginalized or minority communities. Further attention was needed in three areas: human security and youth at risk; the application of performance-based methods of assessment in UNDP support to greater efficiency in public administrations; and interventions supporting globalization, private sector reform and regional development cooperation. Reported results in those areas increased on average by 60 per cent.

Reduction of poverty

UNDP's commitment in 2001 to supporting the preparation of national poverty reduction strategies, including poverty reduction strategy papers (PRSPs), was clearly demonstrated by its collaboration with Governments and other partners to strengthen national poverty reduction strategies in 85 countries. Involvement in the PRSP process increased from 11 countries in 1999 to 36 in 2001, with over half of those in sub-Saharan Africa. Country offices fully or partially achieved 90 per cent of their annual output targets for 2001, which contributed to the achievement of 78 per cent of outcomes.

UNDP enhanced the participation of stakeholders in poverty reduction processes in 25 countries. It chaired or co-chaired national steering committees on reducing poverty, and facilitated the review of interim PRSPs by CSOs and non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

Almost half of the results in poverty monitoring linked monitoring with efforts to promote policy change or inform policy formulation, up from a quarter in 1999, thus reflecting the increasing integration of assessments and monitoring within the policy process and UNDP's commitment to support the assessment of progress towards achieving the millennium development goals. Also within the poverty goal, there was evidence of the impact of UNDP's work on HIV/AIDS in sub-Saharan Africa. The sub-goal addressing national anti-poverty strategies, pro-poor macroeconomic policies, poverty monitoring and HIV/AIDS accounted for 60 per cent of UNDP results in poverty reduction.

The other sub-goal that addressed the human, physical and financial asset base of the poor included activities to promote greater access by the poor to key physical and financial assets, basic social services, systems of risk management, ICT for poverty reduction and support for sustainable livelihoods. The United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme continued to be an important partner in UNDP's poverty reduction efforts.

UNDP needed to pay more attention to the pro-poor and pro-women focus of HIV/AIDS and ICT interventions because, despite its efforts to mainstream HIV/AIDS issues into strategies for reducing poverty and gender inequities in some countries, it did not systematically address those areas in 2001. The regional variation in UNDP's HIV/AIDS work highlighted the need for greater sharing of experience and knowledge between countries and within UNDP and for greater South-South cooperation. Another cause for concern was the low level and unstructured nature of the organization's engagement in access to assets. Many partnerships in that area were limited to traditional arrangements for resource mobilization and project implementation. Reporting on cross-cutting issues, such as those between poverty reduction and environment, was not strong, and, while UNDP was developing capacity to generate gender-disaggregated data, there was a need to integrate gender analysis much more systematically and purposefully in its support of poverty reduction. Work on basic social services and on strengthening systems of risk management had tapered off, and a major effort was needed to revive UNDP's contribution in those areas and in efforts to support pro-poor economic growth.

Environmentally sustainable development

Country offices reported results in environmentally sustainable development to reduce human poverty in 139 States, reflecting a high demand for UNDP services in energy and environmental management. Overall, country offices fully or partially achieved 81 per cent of their annual output targets for 2001, reflecting a 71 per cent rate of progress against intended outcomes.

The majority of UNDP outputs addressed national policy and regulatory frameworks for environmental management (60 offices), building institutional frameworks (71 offices) and the development of national capacity for participation in global conventions (68 offices). Capacity development was extended beyond central government ministries to local levels, and efforts were made to integrate international environmental obligations into plans and policies for domestic macroeconomic development and poverty reduction. Only eight country offices, however, reported on environmentally sustainable development with explicit reference to promoting gender equality and empowering women. There were only a few upstream efforts to influence national policies to enhance energy access for the poor. On the other hand, positive results were achieved in sustainable energy development, including several interventions in renewable energy, with funding provided by the Global Environment Facility.

Links between UNDP deliverables in the environment goal and larger development results remained weak, with an unclear sharing of roles and responsibilities within partnerships. Activities needed to be intensified in the monitoring of environmental conditions (17 offices) and in regional environmental management initiatives (21 offices).

Gender equality and advancement of women

Most of UNDP's cooperation for advancement in the status of women and gender equality was related to policy-setting, institution-building, advocacy and monitoring, achieving 66 per cent of outcomes and 65 per cent of outputs. The remaining outcomes and outputs focused on the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170] and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895], as well as violence against women.

Joint UNDP/United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) interventions, which included support to national policy formulation and institution-building, were reported by 51 offices (57 per cent of the total number of offices). Ninety countries in which UNDP supported programmes (58 per cent of the total) reported gender-specific programmes in 2001, as compared to 75 countries in 2000. However, an additional 29 programme countries (19 per cent) reported gender considerations in programmes within other goals, compared to 37 in 2000. Overall, across all other goals of the strategic results framework, activities with actual results reflecting gender considerations were reported in 119 countries, compared with 112 in 2000.

Forty per cent of all programme countries reported support for the collection of gender-disaggregated data to enhance national reporting and capacity for gender analysis in the 2001

ROAR. The trend for more comprehensive support to the empowerment of women and gender equality continued. Gender-auditing mechanisms for improved implementation of gender policies and law enforcement to ensure women's access to economic decision-making were developed. Moreover, there was an increasing trend in the linking of national plans of action, institutional capacity-development, data collection and implementation of the Convention.

Most gender-mainstreaming interventions were reported under goal 1 (governance) and goal 2 (poverty), while goal 3 (environment), goal 5 (special development situations) and goal 6 (UNDP support to the United Nations) lagged behind. However, interventions relating to the empowerment of women and gender equality in special development situations were increasingly reported under goal 4.

UNDP regional programmes focused on enhancing dialogue and advocacy at regional levels and helped to strengthen partnerships with NGOs and regional and subregional organizations.

In general, the quality of reporting on gender mainstreaming remained weak, which might warrant a review by UNDP of its approach to cooperation in that area.

Knowledge networks and electronic communication enabled UNDP to strengthen its capacity-development support on gender equality, particularly through its UNDP gender-knowledge network, Gender Beat, an electronic newsletter, and the gender-mainstreaming electronic discussion. Regional gender-knowledge networks were further developed along with cross-regional linkages. New areas of intervention included gender-sensitive budgeting, the gender dimension of poverty strategies, social policy and monitoring millennium development goals.

Despite the marginal increase in the number of programme countries reporting gender results in other goals, there was little insight into ways to mainstream gender analysis and gender perspectives effectively. The uncertain progress required a reappraisal of available capacity and current tools and methodologies used to mainstream gender considerations. A UNDP/UNIFEM workshop was held in Ecuador to address that concern.

Special development situations

Sixty-three offices reported in 2001 under the goal of reducing the incidence of and recovery and transition from complex emergencies and natural disasters, compared to 54 in 2000. The development dimension of countries going through or emerging from conflict situations was an increasingly prominent feature of UNDP work, especially in disaster management, human security and community-based recovery. Although UNDP continued to work towards greater integration between community-based activities in post-conflict situations, specifically in the generation of livelihood opportunities, sustainable recovery processes and the reintegration of war-affected populations were still limited. It actively coordinated partners, both among UN organizations and bilateral donors and NGOs, in guiding multi-sectoral recovery programmes and in designing transition programmes in the aftermath of a crisis. UNDP was increasingly the lead player in the rapid design of transition programmes. Most of its work under this goal was in capacity development of institutions, strategy-setting and policy options, empowerment and social cohesion, capacity development data and pilot interventions.

UNDP, with UNV inputs, supported UN activities in major peacekeeping operations, notably in East Timor and the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, but also in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Eritrea and Sierra Leone. It worked closely with bilateral donor countries in demining, disarmament and demobilization. Support was also provided for special development operations, including mine action and/or justice reform, in Angola, Cambodia, the Congo, Croatia, El Salvador, Yemen and other countries. Technical cooperation in strengthening the capacity for sustainable mine-action programmes remained important for poverty reduction. The opening up of productive land for agriculture facilitated the resumption of productive activities by poor rural communities in Cambodia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Thailand.

In countries in special development situations, there were relatively few reported examples where UNDP country offices were able to mainstream gender, poverty and environmental concerns. Eleven per cent of country offices that reported mentioned gender as part of their programme and attempted to incorporate gender into at least one of their outcomes. With the wider range of activities in situations of complex emergencies, it was important to reflect gender issues adequately, since women and children were usually the most vulnerable in conflict and disaster situations. The 2001 reports showed that was an area not receiving enough attention, and the Bureau for Conflict Prevention and Recovery was preparing specific guidelines to redress that shortcoming.

Fourteen per cent of country offices reported on improving coordination in the most challenging of environments. Such emergencies called for a quick and more flexible approach than that implied by the normal CCA/UNDAF process, as the UN plan for the coordination of development aid in a complex emergency context drawn up for the Congo had demonstrated.

A coherent and effective UN system

The results reported in 2001 under the goal of a coherent and effective UN system were similar to those in 2000, confirming some progress in reforms and some new initiatives by a few countries. The advances, however, were not widespread or systemic enough to have a major effect on development results at the country level.

Some 129 country offices (87 per cent of the total) reported positive change for about 50 per cent of outcomes, while annual targets were fully or partially achieved for about 80 per cent of outputs. Divergence between the high rate of output-target achievement and the low level of progress towards outcomes might indicate that offices were focusing more on process than on expected results. With greater inter-agency coherence, emphasis was expected to shift from improving processes to strategic results shared by UN country teams and national counterparts. To that end, steps taken to make collaboration beyond CCA/UNDAF more concrete included the establishment by the United Nations Development Group (UNDG) of programme and management groups to focus on harmonization and simplification issues among UNFPA, UNICEF, UNDP and WFP. The UNDP Group, which included the Special Unit for Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, UNCDF, UNDP, UNIFEM and UNV, undertook a comparative review of current results-oriented approaches as a step towards closer interaction. Piloting of UN common services at the country level was also under way.

Monitoring the implementation of the global agenda for development was the primary focus of UN country teams in 2001. Integrated support for achieving global goals, however, had not become an important component of follow-up actions. It was expected that millennium development goals would provide a framework and impetus for fostering greater cohesion in UN system activities at the country level. The major challenge was relating the pursuit of those goals to in-country needs and priorities for human development.

Programme planning and management

Reform measures

The UNDP Administrator, in a December report (DP/2002/7), addressed the implementation of the Secretary-General's reform programme and the provisions of the comprehensive triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system for 2001 (see p. 781). The areas covered in the report were: structures and mechanisms; funding and resources; the resident coordinator system; implementation of CCA and UNDAF; harmonization of programming periods and procedures; gender mainstreaming within UNDP; evaluation; and cooperation with the World Bank (see below under each topic). The report also included a discussion of follow-up to international conferences and the Millennium Declaration, and to special economic, humanitarian and disaster relief assistance.

The Administrator reported that UNDG had been restructured to mirror the new United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination (formerly the Administrative Committee on Coordination) (see p. 1364), which should strengthen relations between UNDG and UN system organizations that were not members of UNDG. Five United Nations Houses were designated in 2001 (Japan, Kyrgyzstan, Namibia, Paraguay, Trinidad and Tobago), and funding had been secured for a pilot programme to facilitate the implementation of common services at the country level.

The Administrator also reported that the strengthening of the resident coordinator system remained a top priority for UNDP. The selection process introduced in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 830] had resulted in a wider pool of resident coordinators, with emphasis on increasing candidates from organizations other than UNDP and the number of female candidates. As at June 2001, of 115 resident coordinators, some 22 (19 per cent) were from organizations other than UNDP and 30 (26 per cent) were women. In late 2001, UNDG determined that 50 per cent of the candidates proposed by all organizations for the resident coordinator assessment should be women.

In terms of the implementation of the CCA/UNDAF, an external evaluation of UNDAFs was undertaken in 2001 by DESA in preparation for the formulation of the Secretary-General's report on the comprehensive triennial policy review of operational activities (see p. 781). On 6 July, the UNDG Executive Committee endorsed 22 recommendations as a follow-up to that assessment, and urged all resident coordinators and UN country teams to review them and the implications for their work at the country level. During the year, CCA and UNDAF were further complemented by the adoption of common strategies on poverty reduction and girls' education and by the issuance of guidelines on joint programmes.

UNDP was designated by the Secretary-General to coordinate country-level assistance from the UN system to monitor progress towards development goals set out in the United Nations Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49]. UNDP led the UNDG effort to clarify and define the framework of the millennium development goals, targets and indicators. A guidance note on reporting on the millennium development goals at the country level was adopted by UNDG in November. Reports had been piloted in 13 countries, the first of which, in the United Republic of Tanzania, had been submitted to the Economic and Social Council.

In its efforts to link relief, rehabilitation and development in post-conflict situations (see p. 801), UNDP was introducing the transition recovery programme concept, which involved the mobilization of transition recovery teams, with a view to supporting UN country teams in initiating appropriate and timely support for early recovery.

Programming process

The UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director, as requested by the Executive Board in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1006], submitted an April report on progress and future options in the programming process [DP/2001/12-DP/FPA/2001/7]. The report reflected the common understanding and vision of UNDG organizations on the harmonization of the programme approval process. It established a number of principles to guide the elaboration of a future programme approval process and presented two options for harmonizing that process. The first would begin with a jointly undertaken and finalized CCA to be used as a basis for drafting the UNDAF, which would be approved by the host Government and the UN country team and submitted to UNDG by the end of January of the last year of the programming cycle. Draft country programme outlines would subsequently be prepared by UNDG partner agencies, highlighting the main components of the proposed country programmes, for presentation to the respective Executive Boards; the Boards would approve resource allocation and authorize the finalization of the country programmes. The time frame for completing that process was 17 months. The second option would follow the same steps as the first, but, after approval of the UNDAF by the host Government and the UN country teams, agency-specific strategy notes would be drafted for submission to the individual Executive Boards for review. That would be followed either by finalization and submission of the final country programmes to the January sessions of the Executive Boards for final approval on a no-objection basis or by the presentation of an omnibus report to the Executive Boards reflecting Board comments on the respective programmes. That report would also contain financial allocations and an intended results matrix for each country programme for Board approval. The time frame for the second option would be 20 months.

UNDP and UNFPA expressed a preference for the first option, as it would meet the principle of simplifying the current process so as to reduce the burden imposed on programme countries and UN country teams. In that regard, the Administrator, in June [DP/2001/CRP.II], presented a number of proposals designed to ensure that the introduction of new instruments and methods of work did not add to the transaction costs faced by programme countries and country offices. Those proposals included elimination of the advisory note in all countries, first introduced in the 1996 programming guidelines [YUN 1996, p. 780], which preceded the preparation of the CCA. In those countries without a CCA or UNDAF, alternative analyses would form the basis of consultations with the Government and other local partners. Assuming that option 1 (above) on the proposed new programming approval process would be adopted by the Executive Board, the Administrator suggested that the programming period of a country would be agreed on by the UN country team and the respective Government; the country programme outline, although similar to a CCF, would be shorter, with cross references and hypertext links; the final country programme document would consist mainly of a results matrix, showing planned outcomes and indicators and key outputs, and would be fully aligned with the strategic results framework and updated annually; and multi-country CCFs for countries that shared similar characteristics and that had relatively small programmes and wished to proceed in that way. He also proposed a standardized format for the notes by the Administrator on which the Board based its decisions regarding countries in special circumstances that were unable to prepare a CCF, and the presentation, together as short summary reports at each session of the Board, of one-year CCF extensions approved by the Administrator and reported to the Board, and those for two or more years submitted to the Board directly for approval.

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, on 22 June [dec. 2001/11], emphasized that the programming process should be country-led and country-driven, based on national priorities and needs. It encouraged programme countries to use the CCA/UNDAF process, on a pilot basis, as a common planning framework for UN operational activities at the country level, from 2002. The Board decided that the common programming process would be based on the existing common planning framework and that national Governments would develop the country outlines of the respective organizations in consultation with relevant UN agencies and other partners. The draft country outlines, highlighting priorities, strategies, outcomes and proposed budget, would be presented to the annual session of the Executive Board, and, where applicable, the CCA/UNDAF would be made available for information. The Executive Board would review the draft country outlines, on which the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director would assist the Government in finalizing the country programmes, which would be posted on the World Wide Web by October of the last year of the country programme, and approved in January of the following year on a no-objection basis, unless at least five members requested the Board's special consideration.

The Board requested the Administrator and the Executive Director to report in 2003 on tools to monitor progress and evaluate outcomes/results of country programmes with a view to further harmonizing and standardizing the programming process, and in 2004 on progress in implementing its decision. UNDG was asked to refine the programming process further, taking into account the comments of the respective Executive Boards.

In December [DP/2002/7], the Administrator and the Executive Director informed all country teams of the new common programming procedures and provided guidance to them on the preparation of country programme outlines and country programmes. With the adoption of a common programming procedure for UNDP and UNFPA, it was expected that the UNICEF and WFP Executive Boards would consider a harmonized programme approval process in 2002.

UNDP Business Plans, 2000-2003

At its January/February session [E/2001/35], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board had before it an update of the UNDP Business Plans, 2000-2003 [DP/2001/CRP.2], which presented results achieved in 2000.

Among those results were the restructuring of the Bureau for Development Policy (BDP) to focus on policy advice and its transformation into a service-oriented, decentralized unit, the establishment of a National Human Development Report Unit at headquarters, and the preparation of the strategy on UNDP's role in post-conflict situations (see p. 801). Other significant developments included the creation of the new Bureau for Resources and Strategic Partnerships and the formulation of a strategy for partnership with the private sector. Partnership surveys were launched to better assess partners' perception of UNDP's role and performance. A headquarters-wide functional review was undertaken, leading to a redefinition of functions and posts, the launch of a 360-degree feedback programme, and the introduction of results and competency assessment as a replacement for the performance appraisal review system.

On 5 February [dec. 2001/7], the Executive Board took note of the update.

A December report [DP/2002/CRP.2], describing results achieved in 2001, indicated that the transformation of BDP proceeded as planned.

One of its core programmes, the Office to Combat Desertification and Drought, was relocated to Nairobi, Kenya, and 13 staff were redeployed to the field and 31 policy specialists were outposted. Headquarters staff was reduced by 39 per cent and further reductions and outpostings were planned. Thematic trust funds were established to attract additional funding in the areas of governance, poverty reduction, crisis prevention and recovery, ICT, energy and environment, and HIV/AIDS, with a view to facilitating greater alignment of UNDP activities around those themes. Thirty-seven knowledge networks were currently active, seven of them representing UNDP's core thematic areas of governance, poverty, environment, information technology, HIV/AIDS, microfinance and NHDRs. UNDP strengthened its partnerships with other UN organizations, in particular through participation in UNDG and its programme and management groups, and maintained its cooperation with the Bretton Woods institutions. A partnership facility was created to develop new partnerships and strengthen existing ones at the country level. UNDP mobilized $450,000 for that purpose. Partnership surveys conducted in 17 countries revealed that UNDP had a positive image at the country level and was seen as a valuable partner. However, organizational effectiveness and responsiveness could be improved. Only 52 per cent of the respondents had a positive assessment of UNDP's operational performance. Responsiveness and client orientation also emerged as a weak area.

UNDP's downsizing and workforce renewal continued in 2001. Through a large-scale voluntary separation package, some 415 agreed separations took place in country offices and an additional 20 were planned. At the same time, a new generation of 19 professionals was hired through the leadership development programme. At headquarters, the net staff reduction was expected by year-end to reach 22 per cent of the targeted 25 per cent reduction. The results and competency assessment was redesigned to strengthen results orientation and better define competencies and development needs. An exercise was conducted in 2001 to interconnect programme, management and performance assessment instruments, with the objective of encouraging country offices to use a single results-based management system to plan, monitor and report on their work. Strategic results frameworks (SRFs) were used to plan for development outcomes, while management results were captured through the scorecard/management-results framework. UNDP finalized an ICT strategy for the period 2002-2005 to strengthen its country offices network through reliable and efficient tools to communicate and share data, experience and knowledge.

Country office performance was a priority for the organization in 2001. The New Horizons initiative, a package of corporate support to country offices, helped to align the structures and capacity of those offices with the transformational agenda set out in the Business Plans. Some $14 million was disbursed for country offices support and over 125 missions were fielded. Country offices were also able to realign their human and financial resources with the service lines of the new UNDP business model: coordination with the UN system; advocacy and advisory services; and development services. The accent put on the need to reduce operational costs resulted in a substantial increase in the cost-recovery scheme in 2001. Staff capacity was strengthened in organizational development, resulting in a strong, internal consulting capacity at headquarters and in country offices.

The report concluded that the first two years of implementation of the Business Plans had focused on the internal reforms necessary to build a new UNDP. Special emphasis was given to downsizing, restructuring and aligning resources and staff capacities with organizational requirements both at headquarters and in country offices. Further work in that area was expected, along with the re-engineering of business processes and the development of a new ICT platform.

UNDP role in crisis and post-conflict situations

In response to the Executive Board's request [YUN 2000, p. 832], UNDP submitted a report on the role of the organization in crisis and post-conflict (CPC) situations [DP/2001/4 & Corr.1]. UNDP found that the increased incidence and risk of violent conflict and natural disaster in programme countries had led to an increase in the demand for its services in CPC environments. Since 1997, funding from TRAC line 1.1.3 had provided a financial backbone for UNDP CPC activities, providing $155 million in assistance for 250 projects across all regions, of which 43 per cent had been allocated to community recovery projects, 25 per cent to disaster mitigation and response, 11 per cent to peace processes, 8 per cent to mine action, 7 per cent to institutional support and 3 per cent to coordination and preparation of strategic frameworks. UNDP was also successful in mobilizing non-core funds estimated at $100 million to $150 million each year. While UNDP had been active in CPC situations for several decades, the environment in which it was operating had changed. Reforms at the United Nations, calls for a shift to a "culture of prevention", a new system-wide approach to peace missions and a growing body of experience on the shortcomings of the current handling of transition processes were some of the forces that required UNDP to update its strategy for dealing with such situations.

The lessons learned and experiences gained posed two challenges. The first was the need for improved coherence in all UNDP activities, particularly within its portfolio of development activities for CPC situations and between its CPC activities and that of the work of the organization in its wider poverty eradication efforts. The second challenge was the issue of an effective UNDP response to challenges in prevention, recovery and coordination of the CPC environment. The role of UNDP in CPC situations was strictly limited to addressing the development dimensions of those situations, within the broader mission of enabling sustainable social and economic development. With its emphasis on local capacity-building, needs identification and management, the work in that area did not differ significantly from activities in the regular work programme. However, the way in which UNDP operated had to differ in such circumstances. Reforms to corporate systems that involved staff competencies, deployment, resource management and mobilization and programming procedures were under way to bolster the operational performance of the organization. Better-integrated headquarters backstopping for country offices and closer oversight by senior managers would ensure greater discipline in regard to corporate policies coupled with incentives to reward staff that performed well in those duty stations. Those reforms complemented the 2001 change management process launched by the Administrator in his Business Plans (see above). The commitment of the Executive Board was also required to support the realignment of such programmes through financial and in-kind resources and political support. With those measures in place, UNDP would be in a position to take a strong leadership role in international aid operations in CPC situations and to support programme countries effectively in their efforts towards building durable peace and sustainable development.

On 5 February [dec. 2001/1], the Executive Board took note of the report on the UNDP role in CPC situations. The Board recognized that crisis prevention and disaster mitigation should be integral parts of sustainable human development strategies and that UNDP had relevant operational experience in CPC situations. The Board reiterated its concern about the low level of UNDP core resources and requested the Administrator to take steps to augment those resources. UNDP was encouraged to promote the importance of a long-term development perspective, and, in its capacity as manager of the resident coordinator system, it was requested to strengthen its coordinating role and its cooperation with other UN entities.

In December [DP/2002/7], the Administrator reported that, in its effort to link relief, rehabilitation and development in post-conflict and natural disaster situations, UNDP was introducing a transition recovery programme concept involving the dispatch of transition recovery teams to support UN country teams in initiating appropriate and timely support for early recovery. Within the UN system, UNDP was responsible for providing capacity-building assistance to mine-affected countries and addressing the socio-economic aspects of landmine contamination. In 2001, UNDP undertook capacity-building activities in 16 countries and raised over $30 million to support them. UNDP continued to strengthen regional, national and local capacities in natural disaster prevention, preparedness, mitigation and recovery. In 2001, that included support to over 50 programmes at the country and regional levels.

UNDP funding

Multi-year funding framework

In August [DP/2001/25], UNDP provided an update on the multi-year funding framework (MYFF) and its revised 2000-2003 integrated resources framework (IRF) [YUN 1999, p. 806], which brought together all funding sources covering programme, programme support, management and administration and support to UN operational activities. The revision took into account actual performance in 2000 and updated projections for 2001-2003. The report presented the revised IRF and highlighted some implications for UNDP. As agreed in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 833], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board considered the revised IRF in conjunction with the 2002-2003 biennial budget. Based on the levels of voluntary contributions to regular resources in 1999 and 2000, the projections for 2002 and 2003 of $1 billion and $1.1 billion, respectively, were adjusted to $800 million and $900 million, respectively. Those figures would become the revised income projections for 2002-2003, amounting to a regular resource base of $1.7 billion for the biennium, reflecting a two-year delay in achieving the initial voluntary-contribution targets. However, based on recent increases by the majority of donors, the level of voluntary contributions was expected to increase in 2001 following annual declines over eight consecutive years.

Total income projections underlying the IRF for 2000-2003 amounted to $9.4 billion, comprising: $5.6 billion in donor resources, of which $3 billion was projected for voluntary contributions to regular core resources and $2.6 billion for third-party co-financing, and $3.8 billion for programme-country cost-sharing. The net support budget covering all budgetary categories was 21 per cent of total donor resources.

The erosion of regular resources over the past years had impaired UNDP's ability to produce the development outcomes envisioned in the CCFs and in the strategic results framework of the MYFF. The funding shortfall also threatened the organization's ability to sustain a strong global platform and a universal country presence on behalf of the UN system and the wider international community. It was therefore crucial to place UNDP on a stable financial footing in terms of both regular and other resources.

In September [dec. 2001/17], the Executive Board took note of the report on the update on the MYFF and revised IRF.

Programming arrangements

In response to an Executive Board request [YUN 1999, p. 808], the Administrator, in April [DP/2001/CRP.10], issued a conference room paper on issues and principles for possible improvements in the current arrangements for programme financing. The purpose of the paper was to initiate the consultative process leading to a Board decision in 2002 that would confirm or replace the current programming arrangements, as outlined in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 895], for 2004 and beyond. The current system used the TRAC resource distribution model, with each recipient country allocated a base amount (TRAC line 1.1.1), a possible additional allocation (TRAC line 1.1.2) and a special allocation for countries in special development circumstances to be assigned on the basis of need (TRAC line 1.1.3). The Administrator outlined the principles and issues to be considered in future improvements to current programming arrangements around the themes: a focus on the poorest countries, and performance and flexibility.

In June [dec. 2001/12], the Board took note of the paper.

Evaluation

The UNDP Administrator, in a July report [DP/2001/26], described progress achieved by the organization in three strategic areas of evaluation: aligning monitoring and evaluation practices with results-based management (RBM) principles; strengthening substantive accountability; and promoting organizational learning and partnerships. The report also presented the organization's substantive performance results from evidence on macro-level performance based on project evaluation data, and completed evaluations from UNDP and its associated funds and programmes. The report presented future strategic directions to meet the challenges for the role of evaluation in contributing to organizational and development effectiveness.

UNDP achieved positive results in advancing RBM tools and methodologies across all levels of its operations. It made progress in refining the strategic results framework, in improving the methodology on which the 2000 ROAR was prepared, and in aligning monitoring and evaluation practices with results-oriented approaches designed to achieve a more transparent and verifiable assessment of performance. UNDP drew on the experience and lessons learned through country-office operations in furthering those RBM methodological innovations. Both accountability and organizational learning had contributed to the UNDP culture of performance. UNDP initiated the development of a knowledge-management strategy to serve as a driving force for improved organizational and development effectiveness.

The report pointed out UNDP efforts to understand how organizational effectiveness was translated into development impact. An element of that challenge was investing in partnerships, working with other evaluation agencies and building evaluation capacity in developing countries.

In response to a 1998 Board decision [YUN 1998, p. 824], the Administrator submitted a June note containing an executive summary of the evaluation of UNDP's non-core resources and the Administrator's comments thereon [DP/2001/CRP.12].

The report noted that, while UNDP had experienced a sharp decline in core expenditure over the past decade, its non-core resources (government and third-party cost-sharing, and trust funds) had emerged as a substantial funding source, representing 75 per cent of its total expenditures. Non-core resources were not driven by need, but responded to supply and demand factors: on the supply side, by donors pursuing their respective political mandates and promoting their own projects in the thematic areas of their choice; and on the demand side, by requests of Governments to finance their own programmes and projects. From the evidence, non-core funding would continue to grow and to pressure the traditional institutional aid environment. UNDP would therefore have to change and adapt to a situation that was competitive and focused on results and effectiveness. That left little choice for the organization but to position itself, or the funds would go elsewhere. UNDP's ability to do that was closely linked to the further upgrading of its technical and managerial capacity and the use of performance-driven incentives.

The evaluation recommended strengthening the links between core and non-core funding, particularly in the country-level programming process, addressing the core/non-core funding imbalance, re-examining the relationship between core and non-core funding and devising a more balanced approach to their use. UNDP should have the flexibility to attract additional funding centrally to finance global or regional concerns not adequately covered by core funding and to adopt a competitive positioning strategy to attract and manage those funds. The organization should adopt a differentiated approach to resource mobilization that was specific to and consistent with the social, economic and political conditions in each region, in strong partnerships with key bilateral and multilateral agencies. The organization should also adapt systems to increase its efficiency and accountability, making it an attractive organization with which to do business.

The Administrator, in his general remarks, expressed broad agreement with the recommendations of the evaluation.

Also in June [DP/2001/CRP.13], UNDP submitted to the Executive Board an evaluation of direct execution, which assessed UNDP's experience as an executing agent. Direct execution constituted a very small portion of UNDP business (just 5 per cent of total UNDP project value between 1995 and 2000), but commanded great attention, especially when national execution was the norm. That raised a number of questions, including the ability of direct execution to produce sound project performance with tangible results, to support national ownership and capacity-building, and to allow for greater accountability.

The evaluation found that direct execution projects had generally delivered sound results, as evidenced in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the United Republic of Tanzania. However, sustainability for the most part was limited, owing to the short-term, crisis nature of a number of country programmes that were not linked to a longer-term or development strategy. The strengths of direct execution projects resided in UNDP's capacity for quick response, and their flexibility, especially in crisis and post-conflict situations and other special situations. They created an enabling environment for applying innovative solutions and approaches, reflected clear lines of responsibility, limited the potential for corruption and undue political influence through the transparency of decision-making, and allowed UNDP direct control over project inputs. However, their weakness lay in increased start-up costs, the current inability of the UNDP systems to support the financial management requirements of such projects adequately, and delays and inefficiencies in decision-making caused by current review and approval processes at headquarters.

The findings of the evaluation pointed to important challenges for UNDP in the direct delivery of services and to questions of execution in general. A consensus had emerged that it was time for UNDP to carry out a fundamental rethinking of execution in the broader sense, including using direct delivery to support the service delivery and operational priorities as expressed in the Administrator's Business Plans. The evaluation made a number of recommendations for policy reform and improvement, management and administration and support.

The Administrator, in his remarks on the recommendations, stated that the changes outlined were far-reaching and ambitious, and attention should be paid to the sequencing of measures so that future policies for service delivery were adequately supported by approvals, systems and procedures when launched.

The Board, in September, decided to postpone consideration of the item on evaluation to its first 2002 session.

Information technology for development

In June [DP/2001/CRP.8], UNDP reported on its role in information and communication technology (ICT) for development, highlighting the opportunities and challenges of ICT in development, UNDP's activities and strategy in relation to ICT and its modalities for programme support, monitoring and funding.

The report pointed out that ICT for development was a priority area for UNDP and one of its strategic initiatives in the second global cooperation framework. Since 1993, it had been active in ICT for development and had developed considerable expertise. UNDP had a particular development and organizational niche to assist developing countries with their ICT for development strategies. Its comparative advantage as a policy advisory and operational organization enabled it to assist countries and to bring a development perspective to bear on the formulation of national ICT strategies. As a cross-cutting issue, ICT had a direct impact on all of the critical developmental areas that UNDP supported and promoted, enabling the integration of ICT into such areas as poverty alleviation and democratic governance. Its efforts to help developing countries build strategic cross-sectoral policy frameworks to address broad development goals offered another entry point for introducing ICT as an enabler for development.

UNDP had helped deploy the first Internet nodes in more than 45 countries, trained more than 25,000 organizations and institutions and created awareness about ICT potential. It had also assisted in the formulation of national ICT strategies and the deployment of ICT to enhance, among other areas, democratic governance, gender equity, the creation of jobs and economic opportunities and programmes to extend public access. Through partnerships and global, regional and local programmes, UNDP had promoted the development of infrastructure, connectivity and access, deployment of ICT to increase the effectiveness of government and governance mechanisms, the creation of jobs, commerce, trade exchanges, education and training. It also assisted countries with policy advice.

The UNDP ICT-for-development strategy was undergoing a major shift in direction and scope. Aside from streamlining its activities, a more upstream policy focus and support to national strategies were expected to complement the downstream project focus to enable countries to leverage better the potential of ICT for development. It was also seeking to promote new and innovative mechanisms for financing and partnerships to promote ICT access, deployment and innovative solutions. UNDP had established the ICT for Development Thematic Trust Fund to fund country-level ICT-for-development programmes and critical interventions at the global and regional levels, in support of the services provided at the country level.

On 22 June [dec. 2001/12], the Executive Board took note of the report on UNDP's role in information technology for development.

Contribution to HIV/AIDS plan

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/36 [YUN 1999, p. 1149], UNDP reported in May [DP/2001/16] on its contribution to the development of the UN system strategic plan for HIV/AIDS for 2001-2005, which was endorsed by the Programme Coordination Board of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) in April, and to the implementation of the plan. The report described the UNDP strategy on HIV/AIDS and its actions, particularly in governance and capacity-building, and in the social and economic dimensions of the epidemic. It also addressed the role of the resident coordinator in supporting the UN response at the country level.

In 2000, UNDP made HIV/AIDS one of its organizational priorities. As a co-sponsor of UNAIDS, UNDP supported countries in addressing the governance challenge of the epidemic, such as mobilizing actors and institutions beyond the health sector; promoting community-led action to reduce vulnerability to and risk of HIV infection; supporting Governments to ensure that the full power of the State was brought to bear on the crisis; raising domestic and international resources; integrating HIV/AIDS priorities in the mainstream of development planning; and ensuring a coordinated response. UNDP's shift towards a more focused strategy on HIV/AIDS was clearly producing results at the country level. It was assisting Governments to formulate national HIV/AIDS strategies, build their capacity to implement such strategies and support the strengthening of decentralized structures to manage local action.

Five areas for related support services were defined. Under advocacy and policy dialogue, UNDP promoted action-oriented advocacy for leadership at all levels, political commitment and mobilization of actors across all sectors, as in Botswana, where it supported the publication of the national human development report focusing on the impact of HIV/AIDS on human development. Its capacity development services included the planning, management, implementation and decentralization of multisectoral, gender-sensitive national HIV/AIDS plans through processes involving all government sectors and non-governmental and private sector stakeholders. In Angola, Botswana, Gabon, Malawi, Namibia and Swaziland, UNDP sponsored policy-oriented studies to provide information to Governments on how to deal with the impact of HIV/AIDS on specific sectors. Under mainstreaming, UNDP supported government efforts to integrate HIV/AIDS priorities into development planning, particularly in Burkina Faso and Cameroon, where HIV/AIDS interventions formed part of the national poverty reduction strategies. In the area of human rights, the aim was to promote human rights as an essential aspect of the response to HIV/AIDS, thereby removing discrimination against those infected. In Angola, the Gambia, Honduras and Rwanda, UNDP supported associations and networks of people living with HIV/AIDS. Information and multimedia technology services provided for awareness-raising interventions and large-scale publicity to increase the visibility of the epidemic and decrease the stigma.

UNDP used a number of modalities and instruments for programme support, monitoring, coordination, partnership and funding. Among them were the global cooperation framework, which was used to align the UNDP response to the crisis at the global, regional and national levels; the resident coordinator to spearhead a cohesive response by the UN system and other donors; modalities and partnerships for active collaboration with a wide range of partners at the global and national levels; UN Volunteers to participate in projects at the community, national and regional levels; monitoring results by the strategic results framework and ROAR; global and regional support activities; and financial assistance.

On 22 June [dec. 2001/12], the Board decided to resume in 2002 consideration of UNDP contributions to the UN strategic plan for HIV/AIDS for 2001-2005.

Financing

The Administrator, in his annual review of the financial situation [DP/2002/25 & Add.1], reported that for the first time in eight years UNDP was able in 2001 to reverse the long downward trend in its regular resources. However, while encouraging, the growth remained modest in relation to the targets set by the Executive Board and what was actually required to maximize the impact of the organization's work, particularly in the least developed countries. The overall level of funding reached $2.6 billion, up by 9 per cent, compared to the 2000 level of $2.4 billion, due primarily to growth in other resources, such as third-party co-financing, which represented 30 per cent of aggregate income, and programme country cost-sharing, which represented 41 per cent of aggregate income, reflecting increased political will and support by UNDP partner countries.

Compared to 2000, total regular resources income increased by 2 per cent to $665 million, while total expenditure remained stable at $703 million. The resource balance, exclusive of operational reserves, was reduced by 41 per cent.

Voluntary contributions to regular resources increased by 3 per cent to $651.8 million. Contributions received from the top 15 non-programme country donors (Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Norway, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, United Kingdom, United States) totalled $998 million, or 96 per cent of total resources. Improvements were recorded in payment performance, resulting in an increase in UNDP's cash flow and minimizing the organization's need to draw against the regular resources operational reserve.

Total expenditure under regular resources remained at the 2000 level of $703 million. Programme expenditures in 2001 fell by 12.1 per cent to $333 million, compared to $378 million the previous year. In terms of the percentage share of programme expenditure among regions, Latin America and the Caribbean recorded the highest share of programme delivery, accounting for 50 per cent or $1.1 billion of aggregate figures; Africa, $313 million or 14 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, $304 million or 14 per cent; the Arab States, $227 million or 11 per cent; and Europe and CIS, $145 million or 7 per cent.

The percentage share for execution modalities showed that national execution still represented 60 per cent of the overall UNDP figure, followed by UNOPS, 13 per cent, direct execution, 10 per cent, and other agencies, 8 per cent. Programme support to implementing agents decreased to $34 million, compared to $42 million in 2000.

As at 31 December, the balance of unexpended resources for regular resources activities was at its lowest level since 1984 at $45.3 million, a decline of 41 per cent from the 2000 figure of $76 million. At the end of 2001, UNDP held cash and investments for regular resources totalling $278 million, inclusive of the operational reserve of $152 million.

For the other resources activities, which comprised mainly government and third-party cost-sharing, government cash-counterpart contributions, trust funds, management services agreements, the Junior Professional Officer programme and the reserve for field accommodation, representing the bulk of all activities managed by UNDP, overall income increased from $1.8 billion in 2000 to $2.1 billion in 2001. Overall expenditure also increased by 13 per cent ($219 million) to $1.8 billion. Contributions received totalled $1.9 billion, of which 57 per cent accounted for programme country cost-sharing. Third-party co-financing increased by 9 per cent from $712 million in 2000 to $781 million in 2001.

In September [dec. 2001/17], the Executive Board took note of the UNDP annual review report on the financial situation for 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 834].

Regular funding commitments to UNDP

In May [DP/2001/18], UNDP submitted a report on the status of regular funding commitments to the organization and its associated funds and programmes for 2001 and onward. According to provisional data for 2000, total net income for the year was $634 million, some $47 million below the net income figure of $681 million recorded for 1999. Current estimates for gross contributions to regular resources for 2001, using the UN official exchange rate as at 1 May 2001, were just over $670 million, a projected increase of 6 per cent over the level of regular resources in 2000. The shortfall in 2000 came about even though 11 members of the Development Assistance Committee of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD/DAC) increased their contributions in local currency, 4 of them by 20 per cent, and another 4 announced additional contributions to regular resources for 2000 at or after the Ministerial Meeting on UNDP [YUN 2000, p. 836]. The shortfall was mainly due to the reduction in contribution levels of three OECD/DAC donors and non-payment of 2000 pledges by two donors. The exchange rate was also a significant factor, particularly the continued strength of the United States dollar. On a positive note, 36 programme countries contributed to UNDP regular resources in 2000, including 11 that increased their contribution and 18 that commenced or resumed payments. In 2000, 19 countries provided fixed payment schedules. While 15 major donors announced specific payment schedules for their 2000 voluntary contributions, the cash flow of voluntary contributions from major donors in 2000 was again sub-optimal. By the beginning of December 2000, 20 per cent of contributions pledged in 2000 remained unpaid, as compared to 22 per cent in 1999. UNDP was able to engage in hedging for only a relatively small amount of anticipated contributions in non-dollar denominated contributions, owing in part to the lack of definitive information concerning amounts and/or payment schedules early in the year for several contributors. Throughout 2000, UNDP experienced significant cash-flow problems, forcing it to draw some $38 million from the operational reserve at the end of November.

In a June update [DP/2001/CRP.8] to the May report (above), UNDP reported that estimates for the gross contributions to UNDP regular resources for 2001, using the UN official exchange rate as at 1 June 2001, amounted to $660 million, a projected increase of 2.3 per cent over the 2000 level. Although that represented a significant shortfall in relation to agreed targets, it should not obscure the positive increase in commitments to UNDP regular resources made by 25 countries in 2001. Moreover, nine OECD/DAC donors and eight programme countries had made multi-year pledges.

Overall, compliance with payment schedules had improved in the first part of 2001, resulting in a rise in contributions to $164 million in April, compared with $50 million in April 2000. Projections for contributions to regular resources in 2001 indicated that the seven-year downward trend would be halted in 2001, marking a return to growth in the regular resource base. The 2000 Ministerial Meeting on UNDP had resulted in widespread endorsement that the UNDP reform process was on the right track, and subsequent communication with political leaders had provided an impetus to rebuilding political will for the organization. The MYFF/ROAR process had demonstrated clear results, and the Business Plans, 2000-2003, were strengthening UNDP's performance. All those factors provided an important stimulus to resource mobilization, resulting in a large number of countries announcing increases in contributions in 2001. Nevertheless, despite the positive signs of increased political support, the regular resource situation remained critical.

In June [dec. 2001/12], the Executive Board took note of the reports on the status of regular funding commitments.

Follow-up to Ministerial Meeting on UNDP

The Executive Board considered a report [DP/2001/CRP.3] on follow-up to the 2000 Ministerial Meeting on UNDP [YUN 2000, p. 836], which had endorsed the Secretary-General's vision of the role of the United Nations in development and of the part played by UNDP in that context and had expressed concern about UNDP's resource situation and the importance of rebuilding its core resource base.

Building on specific suggestions made by Ministers during the meeting, UNDP proposed follow-up actions to build on the new momentum of political support at the country and regional levels and at the Executive Board level. Foremost among those proposals was the acceleration of national efforts to rebuild regular resources to agreed targets through consultations between Governments and UNDP on the support UNDP could provide to efforts at the country level to rebuild greater political and financial support for UNDP. At regional and international forums, the importance of the United Nations in development and of the specific role of UNDP should be highlighted. The Administrator recommended that consideration be given to holding a follow-up Ministerial Meeting in September 2001. In addition, the secretariat should review with the Board the structuring of a dialogue around priority issues in order to promote high-level participation in the Board's sessions. The Administrator should report to the Board on progress in addressing UNDP's performance in the context of the implementation of the Business Plans, 2000-2003. Other recommendations called for Governments to increase contributions to regular resources to achieve a more durable solution to UNDP core funding problems, and to adopt a standard schedule of contributions. They were urged to communicate, as early as possible, their contributions to regular resources for 2001 and following years, and their preferred payment-schedule option. Regarding non-core contributions, the report proposed that the Administrator report to the Board on new initiatives in the development of a non-core strategy, and on the presentation and relationship of regular resources to different types of other resources in the 2002-2003 biennial support budget.

The Board, in February [dec. 2001/7], took note of the report on the follow-up to the Ministerial Meeting.

Audit reports

At its January/February session, the Executive Board considered the Administrator's report [DP/2001/7] on follow-up to the Board of Auditors' report for 1998-1999 [YUN 2000, p. 1316], which contained a summary of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors for the 1998-1999 biennium, listed by area of audit, with the status of follow-up action, including target dates for completion. The Administrator said that progress had been made in many areas and efforts were being made to address outstanding issues.

Also before the Board was another report [DP/2001/CRP.5], which provided information on steps taken by UNDP to address the qualified opinion of the Board of Auditors on the 1998-1999 financial statements relating to national execution and bank reconciliation. In relation to national execution, UNDP reported that, while the audit coverage of nationally executed projects had improved appreciably, a number of aspects remained to be dealt with, including the issues of timing and national capacity constraints, which led to late or non-submission of audit certificates. To increase the level of audit coverage, the Administrator had instructed resident representatives, effective 2000, to ensure that an audit was conducted for all UNDP projects with estimated expenditures over $100,000. Concerning the qualification on UNDP 1998-1999 financial statements of $723 million in national execution expenditure in 30 countries, the Administrator had instructed that resident representatives of those countries ensure, retroactively, an increase of the audit coverage for that period. Country offices were to discuss with government counterparts the need to carry out an interim audit and to complete the final audit once the 12-month expenditure reports were ready in order to meet the 30 April deadline. Those instructions were effective as from 1 February 2001, and government counterparts were to be encouraged to use local private audit firms, if necessary, to meet that deadline.

As to the bank reconciliation, UNDP reported that the $5.8 million of disbursements shown in the bank statement but not in the UNDP accounting records had been reconciled and cleared and only $0.7 million remained to be cleared. UNDP was sure that there was no risk of loss to the organization from that outstanding amount and was continuing efforts to reconcile the items.

On 1 February [dec. 2001/3], the Executive Board noted that considerable progress had been made by UNDP in implementing the recommendations of previous reports of the Board of Auditors and that action was being taken to address all recommendations in the report for 1998-1999. The Executive Board welcomed the measures described in the document [DP/2001/CRP.5] and urged the secretariat to ensure the timely delivery of compliant and accurate financial statements according to UN accounting standards.

In April [DP/2001/13], the Administrator submitted a report on UNDP internal audit and oversight activities for 2000 provided by its Office of Audit and Performance Review (OAPR).

In 2000, the number of internal audit reports declined significantly, to 46 from 76 in 1999, due to extensive recruitment of audit resources for activities of limited duration and the shift from compliance audits to the broader management audits. The number of control self-assessment sessions also declined, from 33 in 1999 to 18 in 2000. However, national execution audit reports increased 14 per cent, from 1,231 in 1999 to 1,401 in 2000, owing to a corresponding increase in the number of national execution projects. The number of investigation cases declined slightly, from 25 new cases in 1999 to 20 in 2000. OAPR conducted an audit of global and regional projects and followed up the principal findings of audits completed in 1999. The Office contracted a public accounting firm to conduct an audit of the Electricity Network Rehabilitation Programme in northern Iraq, funded by the oil-for-food programme for Iraq (see p. 300). The Office provided internal audit services to 39 country offices. A total of 39 internal audit and 4 special audit reports were issued, containing 1,542 recommendations, of which 94 per cent were accepted by auditees and the remaining 6 per cent were being pursued.

During 2000, OAPR received and reviewed 1,401 project audit reports of national execution expenditures for 1999, covering 113 of the 140 countries with national execution expenditures exceeding $100,000. Of the 113 countries assessed, 55 had offices rated satisfactory, 52 were marginally deficient and 6 were deficient. The 27 countries that did not submit audit reports before the end of 2000 were also rated deficient. In general, the reports revealed recurring issues in the areas of personnel, procurement, finance, project design and implementation, and inventory. Many of the problems were attributed to a lack of awareness of proper procedures. For all countries assessed, OAPR received or requested action plans to address the audit findings. In all, 53 investigation cases remained active during 2000, of which 42 concerned UNDP.

In June [dec. 2001/12], the Executive Board took note of the report on internal audit and oversight activities of UNDP.

Budget estimates for 2002-2003

In June [DP/2001/21], the Administrator submitted budget estimates for the 2002-2003 biennium. He proposed a nominally reduced budget in net terms of $502.6 million for 2002-2003, $15.7 million less than the net approved budget for 2000-2001 [YUN 1999, p. 810]. The proposals resulted in a decrease of the gross budget from $585.4 million for 2000-2001 to $566.9 million for 2002-2003.

The proposals incorporated total net volume reductions of $43.1 million and net cost increases of $24.6 million. The estimates also incorporated a more realistic projection of income that offset the gross support budget of $64.3 million in 2002-2003, down from $67.1 million in 2000-2001.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) submitted its comments on the budget estimates for 2002-2003 in a June report [DP/2001/24], which the Executive Board noted in September [dec. 2001/17].

The Board took note [dec. 2001/13] of the Administrator's report on the biennial budget estimates for 2002-2003, which was an integral part of the IRF of the MYFF. It also noted the Administrator's proposals on the financial framework and the related UNDP resource plan. The Board approved gross appropriations in the amount of $566,889,700 for the 2002-2003 biennial support budget and resolved that the income estimates of $64,327,000 should be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in estimated net appropriations of $502,562,700. The Administrator was authorized to redeploy resources between appropriation lines up to a maximum of 5 per cent of the appropriation line to which the resources were redeployed.

The Board took note of the Administrator's report on the 2002-2003 budget estimates for the United Nations Capital Development Fund (see p. 822) and the United Nations Development Fund for Women [DP/2001/21], and approved gross appropriations for each of those funds in the amounts of $13,685,500 and $12,337,500, respectively [dec. 2001/13].

Revision of Financial Regulations and Rules

The Executive Board, at its first regular session, had before it two proposals from the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director, as requested by the Board [YUN 2000, p. 1005], concerning common Financial Regulations for both organizations relating to contributions from non-governmental sources [DP/FPA/2001/3-DP/2001/9]. The first proposed common regulation would replace the current UNFPA Financial Regulations 4.1 and 4.9 and UNDP Financial Regulation 5.02, and would expand the sources from which contributions could be received and explicitly require that, for UNDP, such contributions be consistent with UNDP's purposes. The second proposed common regulation and corresponding new rule, replacing UNFPA Financial Regulation 4.11 and UNDP Regulation 5.09, would retain the threshold for reporting those contributions to the Executive Board at $100,000 for both organizations.

On 31 January [dec. 2001/6], the Board approved the proposed changes to the common financial regulations, which were annexed to its decision.

The Administrator, in August [DP/2001/CRP.18], proposed amendments to UNDP Financial Rule 116.04 so that nationally executed projects exceeding an annual expenditure of $100,000 would be audited annually instead of biennially. He also proposed amending Financial Rule 125.11 authorizing the Treasurer to establish guarantee facilities to facilitate UNDP commercial financial operations through measures such as bank-issued guarantees and/or bank-issued commercial letters of credit, with the proviso that there be no borrowing of funds by UNDP in connection with such issuance.

In September [dec. 2001/17], the Board took note of the amendment to the UNDP financial rules.

Other technical cooperation

UN activities

Department of Economic and Social Affairs

The Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), responsible for UN technical cooperation activities, had more than 950 technical cooperation projects under execution in a dozen substantive sectors, with a total project expenditure of some $51.1 million. Projects financed by UNDP represented $21.6 million; those by trust funds, $27.7 million; and those by UNFPA, $1.8 million.

On a geographical basis, DESA's executive programme included expenditures of $25.3 million in interregional and global programmes; $10.1 million in Africa; $6.9 million in Asia and the Pacific; $6.7 million in the Middle East; $1.3 million in the Americas; and $0.8 million in Europe.

Distribution of expenditures by substantive sectors was as follows: Associate Expert programme, $16.6 million; economic policy, $9.4 million; energy, $7.8 million; public administration, $7 million; water, $2.7 million; social policy, $2.2 million; programme support, $2 million; statistics, $1.6 million; infrastructure, $0.8 million; minerals, $0.6 million; population, $0.2 million; public finance and the private sector, $0.1 million; and advancement of women, $0.1 million. Of the total delivery of $51.1 million, the Associate Expert programme comprised 32 per cent; economic policy, 18 per cent; energy, 15 per cent; and public administration, 14 per cent.

On a component basis, DESA delivery in 2001 included $38 million for project personnel, $6.1 million for subcontracts, $2.9 million for training, $3.5 million for equipment and $0.6 million for miscellaneous expenses.

Development Account

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolutions 53/220 A and B [YUN 1999, pp. 1305 & 1306], reported in April [A/55/913] on implementation of projects financed from the Development Account, financed by savings from budget efficiencies in the regular programme budget. The Secretary-General reviewed the 23 projects approved since the establishment of the Account in 1998 and falling under the first and second tranches with a total value of $26.1 million. The review revealed a number of reporting weaknesses, including a focus on activities rather than outputs; insufficient quantifiable information or other data to gauge progress; insufficient information on proposed new scheduling; lack of information on the institutional environment of projects and the prospects for their sustainability after the completion of Development Account funding; lack of clarity on coordination arrangements; and inadequate compliance with the guidelines established for reporting progress.

In 2000, OIOS conducted an audit of the implementation of projects financed from the Account. OIOS recommended that the programme manager clarify the requirement of low-cost implementation, particularly by proposing a financial ceiling for individual projects; that joint implementation of projects should be encouraged and included in the selection criteria; and that cooperation frameworks created by Account projects should be maintained after activities were completed. Programme support contributed by each entity should be accounted for as efficiency gains. Project proposals would have to include all costs, whether financed from the Development Account or not.

ACABQ, in its first report on the proposed programme budget for 2002-2003 [A/56/7], noted that, of the $26.1 million approved since the establishment of the Development Account, a total of $8.9 million had been spent for projects funded from the 1998-1999 and the 2000-2001 programme budgets as at 31 March 2001, leaving a balance of $17.2 million. It also noted that no proposals had been made for transfer to the Account for 2002-2003. ACABQ requested the Secretary-General, in his next report on the issue, to provide a thematic impact analysis of the projects, and to include in his description of each project the date of commencement, the projected date of completion and the implementing agency.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 December [meeting 92], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/56/653], adopted resolution 56/237 without vote [agenda item 122].

Development Account

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/12 B of 19 December 1997 and 52/220 and 52/221 A of 22 December 1997,

Reaffirming its resolutions 52/235 of 26 June 1998, 53/220 A of 7 April 1999, 53/220 B of 8 June 1999 and 54/15 of 29 October 1999,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of projects financed from the Development Account, including the observations of the Office of Internal Oversight Services in section V thereof, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Expresses concern at the low implementation rate of the projects undertaken through the Development Account;

2. Urges a more expeditious and effective rate of implementation of projects, and requests that project proposals include all costs, including support costs, and whether or not they are financed from the Development Account;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his next report the date of commencement, the implementing agency and the anticipated dates of completion of all ongoing projects and to provide explanations for any schedule changes in the completion of these projects;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to intensify efforts to enhance efficiency measures that may result in sustainable savings, with a view to augmenting the Development Account, in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 54/15;

5. Reaffirms that projects financed from the Development Account should be implemented in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolutions 53/220 A and 53/220 B;

6. Welcomes the fact that the implementation of the approved projects financed from the Development Account has a developmental impact on a country, is cost-effective, in particular through the use of information and communication technology, and is jointly designed and carried out by several entities of the United Nations;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to monitor the implementation rate of the projects, with a view to identifying those projects that are underperforming and the causes, and to submit proposals to correct this situation or to redeploy funds from such projects to those that are delivering results;

8. Decides to continue to keep the implementation of the Development Account under review, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the subject to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session.

UN Fund for International Partnerships

ACABQ, in a March report [A/55/7/Add.9], recommended that the General Assembly note the Secretary-General's report [YUN 2000, p. 1328], submitted pursuant to Assembly decision 53/475 [YUN 1999, p. 1318], on the status, as at December 2000, of the United Nations Fund for International Partnerships (UNFIP), established in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1297] to manage the process of grant allocations through the United Nations Foundation (UNF), a public charity founded by Robert Edward Turner to channel a gift to the United Nations of 18 million shares of Time Warner stock valued at some $1 billion. ACABQ said that it would provide further comments in the context of additional information provided in the 2002-2003 programme budget.

By decision 55/471 of 12 April, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on UNFIP and ACABQ's related comments and recommendations.

In his report on activities as at the end of 2001 [A/57/133], the Secretary-General provided data on the outcome of the ninth and tenth funding cycles, as well as on progress in each programmatic focus area. The UNF Board of Directors approved a total of $105.7 million in the ninth and tenth funding rounds (36 grants totalling $70.6 million during the ninth funding cycle, and 17 grants amounting to $35.1 million during the tenth). Three intersessional requests were also approved, bringing the total for 2001 to $111.9 million. By sector, grants totalling $36.8 million were awarded for projects concerning the environment; $32.2 million for children's health; $19.2 million for peace, security and human rights; $18.4 million for population and women; and $5.2 million for institutional capacity-building. Total funding since the inception of the UNFIP-UNF partnership to the end of 2001 amounted to $423 million.

UNFIP also served as facilitator for partnerships with the private sector and foundations. In 2001, it organized a dialogue between the Secretary-General and leading representatives of companies and foundations on the Secretary-General's "Call to Action for HIV/AIDS" and established an interim facility to receive contributions to the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Malaria and Tuberculosis. In December, the "Mother-to-Child Transmission, plus care for positive mothers" initiative, a $100 million five-year programme, was launched with the support of a group of nine major foundations. During the year, UNFIP increased its outreach with partners to implement the millennium development goals, identifying 150 foundations to assist the UN system. A particular effort was made to include more African, Asian and European affiliates.

UN Office for Project Services

The United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) continued to respond to requests for project services, operating in accordance with the self-financing principle with no assessed budget financing, and executing programmes on behalf of UN organizations.

2001 activities

The UNOPS Executive Director, in his annual report on UNOPS activities in 2001 [DP/2002/19], provided an overview of performance as compared with financial targets set in the 2000-2001 UNOPS business plan, reviewed UNOPS activities during the year and addressed issues involving services and new client-centred business processes. Information was also given on the status of the organizational reform process initiated in 1995 and measures taken to reduce budget estimates for 2002.

The total value of the UNOPS project and loan portfolios for 2001 amounted to $3.8 billion, comprising $1.4 billion in project value and $2.3 billion in loan value. Project delivery totalled $505 million, compared with the UNOPS business plan target of $616 million. The shortfall stemmed from unexpected changes in the UNOPS business environment, including delay or postponement of a number of large management services agreements, in particular for projects in Argentina, Ecuador, Peru and Turkey. Actual requests for UNOPS services by a few UN entities turned out to be smaller than what was initially agreed to. Disbursements authorized by UNOPS under the IFAD loan portfolio totalled $195.5 million.

Total income was $47.2 million, which was $9.6 million, or 17 per cent, less than the $56.8 million projected. Of that total, $37.9 million was generated from project income, $7 million from delivery of loan administration and other services, and $2.3 million from miscellaneous sources.

Administrative expenditures totalled $52.8 million, which was $2.5 million, or 5 per cent, less than the approved amount of $55.3 million. Of that total, $34.5 million was for staff costs, $11.3 million for equipment, communications, travel and operating expenses, and $7 million in reimbursements to UNDP and the United Nations for support services at the country level. As UNOPS expenditures exceeded income, it had to draw down $5.6 million from its operational reserve. UNOPS took a number of cost-cutting measures to reduce expenditures, including discontinuation of staff recruitment, cutbacks in information technology investments and deferral of various activities and expenses.

In reviewing the Office's operational activities, the Executive Director reported that UNOPS found new ways of working with clients. With the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), it helped evaluate the environmental impact of major projects before launching, such as the evaluation of combined heat and power plants in Poland. UNOPS continued to establish "execution partnerships" in projects it implemented for clients, with clear division of labour resulting in cost-effectiveness. The management of financial risks through a range of contracting tools, insurance arrangements and training continued to be part of the UNOPS services offerings. UNOPS expanded the range of potential risks it managed to cover financial risks relating to project inputs and outputs. In that regard, an intellectual property audit of projects was used to assess possible risks associated with third-party rights in works for hire, including software, multimedia presentations and reports.

Among its noteworthy undertakings, UNOPS resumed operations in Afghanistan after a short suspension resulting from the events of 11 September (see p. 60).

On behalf of UNDP and Japan, UNOPS helped the population of the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia by employing local contractors to supply housing for 800 families and assisted the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) (see p. 348) in the rehabilitation of a brick factory, two municipal waste-management systems and city parks. Working with the Mine Action Coordination Committee, UNOPS helped in the removal of 25,000 landmines, 8,500 cluster bombs and 14,000 other unexploded devices.

At the request of the Office of the Iraq Programme and UNICEF, UNOPS managed a $150 million fund for improving water and sanitation in urban areas in northern Iraq, and implemented a mine-action programme in the country.

In East Timor, UNOPS, on behalf of the United Nations Transitional Administration for East Timor (see p. 272), awarded construction contracts worth $1.4 million to 28 local companies. On behalf of UNDP and Portugal, it managed three projects in electricity, water and sanitation, as well as six emergency infrastructure projects, funded by Japan.

The UN Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention sought UNOPS assistance in corruption and human-trafficking prevention projects in Colombia, the Czech Republic, Lebanon, Nigeria, the Philippines, Poland and South Africa. The Intergovernmental Authority on Development, a subregional organization of seven Eastern African countries, selected UNOPS to provide project services for a disaster preparedness initiative, including procurement and the hiring of consultants. UNOPS was also selected to develop, in partnership with the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), a programme to make geographic information, including satellite data, accessible at reduced cost to UN organizations and other agencies involved in humanitarian assistance, crisis response and post-disaster recovery.

During the year, UNOPS worked with the International Labour Organization to introduce local economic development agencies in about 20 countries. Seven new agreements were signed with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). In Zambia, UNOPS agreed to provide administrative support in recruiting personnel and advising on a strategy for dealing with the refugee situation. It also worked with UNDP in support of national execution in Guatemala.

Within the organization, UNOPS implemented project management training to improve employee tools and skills, and developed a programme to ensure that the staff remained abreast of current management and business techniques. The funds control system was overhauled, with a new Web-based application enabling portfolio managers to input and download information at any time and to provide clients with up-to-date financial reports. The UNOPS web site was improved, allowing UNOPS staff to post invitations to bid, expressions of interest, requests for proposals, contract awards and vacancy announcements.

On 14 June [E/2001/35 (dec. 2001/10)], the UNDP Executive Board took note of the Executive Director's report on UNOPS activities. It also noted the drawdown of $6.8 million from the UNOPS operational reserve in 2000, consisting of $3 million in previously approved non-recurring expenditures and a shortfall in 2000 income of $3.8 million. The Board requested the Executive Director to keep the parameters of the UNOPS financial model under review and report on trends as part of the report on budget estimates for the current and future bienniums (see below).

UNDP/UNOPS relationship

The UNOPS Executive Director and the UNDP Administrator, in June [DP/2001/CRP.15], submitted an evaluation of the relationship between UNDP and UNOPS, specifically the progress achieved in implementing the recommendations made in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 840].

Concerning the recommendation that overlaps between UNDP and UNOPS in the area of crisis and post-conflict situations be corrected, there was ample opportunity for future collaboration between the organizations in that area, with UNDP ensuring cooperation among UN entities, including in areas of project execution and provision of services. In terms of the delineation of responsibilities, the UNDP-UNOPS Operations Working Group had established a sub-working group to review the functions performed by UNDP on behalf of UNOPS at headquarters and country office levels. Some progress was made on work relating to country office services, but progress was limited on headquarters central services. The recommendation that the Users Advisory Group be maintained and convened at least once a year was not carried out in 2001, pending intended realignment by UNOPS of its organizational structure.

The recommendation that direct execution by UNDP be used as an execution modality only when no other executing agency was capable of doing so was already being followed by UNOPS. Another recommendation was that the respective responsibilities of UNDP and of the executing/implementing entity be clearly defined for each project in a project management matrix. UNOPS reported that the model project management matrix was expected to be finalized shortly and would be forwarded to all resident representatives with the letter outlining the role of the UNOPS resident representative. Financial reporting had improved, enabling UNOPS to provide all partners with financial reports by the end of 2001. Action had been taken also on a number of administrative issues.

On 22 June [dec. 2001/12], the Executive Board decided to postpone consideration of the overall UNDP/UNOPS relationship to its second regular session in September. At that session [dec. 2001/17], the Board stressed its responsibility for providing strategic direction to UNDP and UNOPS on follow-up to the evaluation of their relationship, and requested an OIOS report on the matter, together with the Secretary-General's related comments and those of UNDP and UNOPS, by mid-November 2001.

Budget estimates

In July [DP/2001/28 & Add.1], the UNOPS Executive Director issued the revised budget estimates for the 2000-2001 biennium, based on actual delivery, income and expenditure for 2000 and on projections for 2001.

Actual total income for 2000 amounted to $48.5 million and actual administrative expenses totalled $55.3 million. The 2001 target for project delivery was increased from $590 million to $616 million; the total income target therefore rose from $51.6 million to $56.8 million and administrative budget provisions were increased from $51.6 million to $55.3 million.

The Executive Director also submitted budget estimates for 2002-2003, which envisaged a total project delivery of $1.3 billion, with income estimated at $97.3 million. Total income for the biennium was projected to be $116.2 million and administrative expenses $113 million.

The Executive Director also reviewed the level of the operational reserve, which, currently targeted at 4 per cent of the combined expenditure on administrative and project budgets of the previous year, appeared sufficient to meet requirements originally included in the definition of the reserve. That view was confirmed by the external consultant firm KPMG. However, two issues needed further consideration: the level of funding for medical and dental benefits for retired staff members; and the fluctuations in the level of the reserve that derived from the single-year basis of the calculation formula. UNOPS was working with the UN Secretariat and UNDP to establish the level of those medical and dental obligations, which the Executive Director proposed to fund, in the meantime, from the UNOPS Account and project accounts, requiring a modification of Financial Regulation 8.3 (a) (iv). Concerning the level of the reserve, KPMG had recommended that the current formula be replaced with one that moved from the existing single-year calculation of the reserve level to a three-year moving average of expenditure on administrative and project budgets. The new proposal would take 4 per cent of the average of the project delivery and administrative expenditures for 1998, 1999 and 2000.

In September [DP/2001/29], ACABQ noted that the 2000-2001 revised estimates and the 2002-2003 projections were affected by the shortfall of project income in 2000, resulting in the cancellation or delay of approved project budgets. ACABQ was of the opinion that the experience should be analysed with a view to refining procedures for adjusting UNOPS fixed assets to take account of such fluctuations. The termination or postponement of project budgets should be managed through consultation of all parties concerned so as to minimize the financial consequences and their impact on UNOPS. ACABQ also suggested that the nature and profile of UNOPS contracts for personal services should be re-examined, as should the structure of its business portfolio. ACABQ urged the UNOPS Executive Director and the UNDP Administrator to review expeditiously the question of the future status of UNDP personnel working with UNOPS and the respective liabilities of both organizations and to keep the Executive Board informed. It requested the Executive Director, in the context of the 2004-2005 estimates, to give his views on presenting future estimates biennially. ACABQ recommended approval of the revised 2000-2001 budget, budget estimates for 2002-2003, the staffing level proposed for 2000-2001 and the proposals regarding the operational reserve.

On 14 September [dec. 2001/17], the Executive Board took note of the ACABQ report.

On 13 September [dec. 2001/14], the Executive Board approved the revised budget estimates for 2000-2001 in the amount of $110.6 million and the budget estimates for 2002-2003 in the amount of $113 million. It also approved the staffing level as proposed for 2000-2001, a modification to UNOPS Financial Regulation 8.3 (a) (iv) on the use of the operational reserve, and the proposal to change the basis for calculating the level of that reserve to 4 per cent of the rolling average of the combined administrative and project expenditures for the three previous years.

Audit reports

The Executive Board had before it an overview [DP/2001/8] of the implementation of the recommendations relating to UNOPS as contained in the first report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors on UN funds and programmes for the biennium ended 31 December 1999 [YUN 2000, p. 1317]. The Executive Director reported that efforts to address both the financial and management issues raised in that report were under way.

On 1 February [dec. 2001/4], the Executive Board took note of the follow-up report to the recommendations of the Board of Auditors and requested the Executive Director to provide in 2002 an updated overview, including follow-up action completed.

In April [DP/2001/15], the Executive Director issued his annual report on UNOPS internal audit and oversight activities, which included an external audit performed by the UN Board of Auditors; an internal audit performed by OAPR; and internal management oversight.

OAPR conducted audits and management reviews of headquarters and field activities. In 2000, a total of 34 audit reports were issued containing 207 recommendations. Of those recommendations, 113 were in finance, 36 in management, 27 in administration (including contracts and procurement), 12 in personnel, 12 in programme and 7 in policy. UNOPS agreed with 107 of the recommendations and provided its response on action taken or contemplated to implement them.

The Executive Director indicated his intention to establish an internal management oversight unit within UNOPS to address control, quality assurance, standards issues and relations with internal and external oversight bodies.

In June [dec. 2001/12], the Executive Board took note of the report on UNOPS internal audit and oversight activities.

UN Volunteers

UNV activities

The UNDP Administrator, in a report to the Executive Board [DP/2002/18], provided information on the United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme—administered by UNDP—in 2001, the thirtieth year of its operation.

The number of volunteers grew from 4,780 in 2000 to 5,090 in 2001, representing 160 nationalities working in 140 countries. The number of assignments carried out in 2001 increased to 5,432, up from 5,181 in 2000. The majority of volunteers (66 per cent) were from developing countries. The number of women serving as volunteers increased from 1,694 in 2000 to 1,833 in 2001.

By programme area, one third of all UNV assignments supported activities in sustainable human development, 20 per cent in poverty reduction, 30 per cent in special development situations and 12 per cent in support to the UN system, while around 3 to 4 per cent were devoted to activities related to the environment and to gender.

In a report on the review of the financial situation in 2001 [DP/2002/25 & Add.1], the Administrator stated that income recorded in 2001 for UNV increased by $5 million, or 27.2 per cent, compared to 2000. Programme expenditure in 2001 decreased marginally by $0.2 million, or 2.5 per cent, as compared to 2000. The balance of the operational reserve as at 31 December 2001 was $1.8 million.

The Secretary-General, as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 54/245 A [YUN 1999, p. 365], reported on the participation of UNVs in peacekeeping operations [A/55/697]. He concluded that the UNV programme had proved capable of expeditiously identifying and deploying qualified UNVs to peacekeeping missions and field operations. During the current period of unprecedented expectations and demands from the United Nations, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations was committed to extending its collaboration with the programme by exploiting the potential for increased use of UNVs wherever feasible, in particular for those functions that were not normally available in the Secretariat.

The General Assembly, on 14 June, deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's report until its fifty-sixth session (decision 55/480).

International Year of Volunteers

As proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 52/17 [YUN 1997, p. 889], the International Year of Volunteers was observed in 2001 (IYV 2001). UNV served as focal point for the relevant activities [DP/2002/18].

UNV launched an extensive advocacy campaign aimed at promoting greater awareness of the role that volunteers played in social and economic development; stimulating discussion on the concept of volunteerism; and publicizing the Year and its objectives. As focal point, UNV established a team to facilitate coordination of IYV 2001, and mobilized resources to support its activities related to the Year. It established an interactive IYV web site in four languages, to which more than 21,000 organizations and individuals had access to exchange views and experiences on policy issues, supportive legislation and good practice pertaining to volunteering. Drawing on the material posted on the web site, UNV published a monthly electronic newsletter to over 14,000 subscribers. To reach those without access to the Internet, information materials were distributed through UNDP country offices, civil society groups and NGO liaison organizations. In partnership with researchers, UNV launched a comparative study on the volume and value of volunteering in countries of different income levels, and issued a report on volunteering and the United Nations in December.

At the national level, UNV assisted developing countries in their preparations for IYV 2001, including in the formation of national steering committees. By the end of the year, 125 national and 14 city IYV committees had been established. At the global level, UNV supported and participated in a number of important international meetings and workshops, and worked with various intergovernmental bodies to ensure that due recognition was given to the contributions of volunteers in their work programmes and conference decisions. It also involved the private sector in raising awareness of the diverse and significant contributions of volunteers worldwide. The Secretary-General invited a group of eminent persons, representing different regions and facets of volunteer involvement, to support a range of activities undertaken during the Year, thus heightening awareness of volunteers' contributions.

Responding to General Assembly resolution S-24/2 [YUN 2000, p. 1013], the Commission for Social Development, at its thirty-ninth session (13-23 February) [E/2001/26], considered the role of volunteerism in the promotion of social development, on the basis of the Secretary-General's note on the subject [E/CN.5/2001/6]. The Commission [E/2001/26 (res. 39/2)], welcoming the work of UNV as the focal point for the Year in liaising with national committees for the Year, encouraged Governments to support voluntary action for social development by creating a favourable environment.

Support for volunteering

In August [A/56/288], the Secretary-General issued a report on support for volunteering. Noting the economic and social benefits derived from those activities, he described how volunteering could play a role in poverty reduction, environmental protection and regeneration, health, and disaster management and mitigation. He also addressed the role of Governments and the UN system in promoting volunteerism.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 76], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/38 [draft: A/56/L.27 & Add.1, orally revised] without vote [agenda item 108].

Recommendations on support for volunteering

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/17 of 20 November 1997, in which it proclaimed the year 2001 as the International Year of Volunteers, based on Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/44 of 22 July 1997, and its resolution 55/57 of 4 December 2000, in which it requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on ways in which Governments and the United Nations system could support volunteering, and bearing in mind Commission for Social Development resolution 39/2 of 23 February 2001,

Recalling also the outcome document of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly entitled "World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world", in which the General Assembly recommended the promotion of the involvement of volunteers in social development, inter alia, by encouraging Governments, taking into account the views of all actors, to develop comprehensive strategies and programmes by raising public awareness about the value and opportunities of volunteerism and by facilitating an enabling environment for individuals and other actors of civil society to engage in voluntary activities, and the private sector to support such activities,

Recalling further paragraphs 73 and 179 (f) of the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women, paragraph 42 of the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium adopted at the twenty-fifth special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) in June 2001, and paragraphs 32 (i) (b) and 41 (ii) (a) of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010 adopted at the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries in May 2001,

Recognizing the valuable contribution of volunteering, including traditional forms of mutual aid and self-help, formal service delivery and other forms of civic participation, to economic and social development, benefiting society at large, communities and the individual volunteer,

Recognizing also that volunteerism is an important component of any strategy aimed at, inter alia, such areas as poverty reduction, sustainable development, health, disaster prevention and management and social integration and, in particular, overcoming social exclusion and discrimination,

Recognizing further the existing contribution of the organizations of the United Nations system to supporting volunteering, including the work of United Nations Volunteers around the world, by promoting volunteerism, including by placing volunteers,

Aware of the need to approach voluntary activities strategically as a means of enhancing resources, addressing global issues and improving the quality of life for everyone,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on support for volunteering;

2. Also welcomes the work of the United Nations Volunteers as the focal point for the International Year of Volunteers in supporting national International Year of Volunteers committees and in collecting and disseminating information on the Year, including through its web site;

3. Expresses its appreciation regarding the support to the International Year of Volunteers extended by States, international organizations and civil society, including non-governmental organizations, especially at the local, national and regional levels;

4. Commends the ongoing contributions of all volunteers to society, including in extraordinary conditions such as disasters;

5. Encourages all people to become more engaged in voluntary activities;

6. Lays down in the annex to the present resolution the recommendations on ways in which Governments and the United Nations system could support volunteering;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take specific measures, in particular within the mandates of the United Nations Volunteers and the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, to disseminate widely the present resolution and the annex;

8. Calls upon all Governments and organizations of the United Nations system to give these recommendations due consideration;

9. Decides that on 5 December 2002, International Volunteer Day for Economic and Social Development, two plenary meetings at the fifty-seventh session of the General Assembly shall be devoted to the outcome of the International Year of Volunteers and its follow-up under the agenda item entitled "Social development, including questions relating to the world social situation and to youth, ageing, disabled persons and the family";

10. Requests the Secretary-General, in his report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the outcome of the International Year of Volunteers and its follow-up, to include proposals for an integrated and coordinated follow-up, to be pursued in the relevant parts of the United Nations system, as well as on cross-cutting issues, building on his report to the Assembly at the present session and taking into account the present resolution, the discussions held during the present session and other relevant contributions.

ANNEX

Recommendations on ways in which Governments and the United Nations system could support volunteering

I. General considerations

1. In these recommendations, the terms volunteering, volunteerism and voluntary activities refer to a wide range of activities, including traditional forms of mutual aid and self-help, formal service delivery and other forms of civic participation, undertaken of free will, for the general public good and where monetary reward is not the principal motivating factor.

2. Actions by Governments and the United Nations system are mutually reinforcing but are treated separately below for the sake of clarity.

3. There is not one universal model of best practice, since what works well in one country may not work in another with very different cultures and traditions.

4. Support for voluntary activities does not imply support for government downsizing or for replacing paid employment.

5. It is not just targeted measures that have an impact on volunteering; general social and economic policy measures can also influence citizens' opportunities and willingness to volunteer.

6. Neglecting to factor volunteering into the design and implementation of policies could entail the risk of overlooking a valuable asset and undermine traditions of cooperation that bind communities together.

7. It is important to ensure that opportunities for volunteering in all sectors are open both to women and men, given their different levels of participation in different areas, and recognizing the potential positive effect of volunteering on the empowerment of women.

II. Government support

1. It is recommended that Governments further support voluntary activities by creating a favourable environment, including through the following policies and measures, and taking into account the local cultural context.

(a) Increasing public awareness of the vital contribution of volunteerism to the social and economic functioning of their communities through, inter alia, public information activities and public events

(i) Highlight the contribution of volunteering; organize briefings and seminars for policy makers and the media. Official papers on the status of volunteering and the issues that need to be addressed can be published and widely disseminated. High-profile events and campaigns can be organized on national days and on International Volunteer Day for Economic and Social Development on 5 December. Negative stereotyping of volunteers can be challenged. The promotion of volunteering can be achieved through special programmes and public service announcements or by joint initiatives such as award schemes;

(ii) Encourage the media to play a supportive role in public awareness-raising activities;

(iii) Disseminate the results of studies and surveys on the contribution of volunteerism, where they exist, through the media, schools, non-governmental organizations and other channels.

(b) Taking general measures concerning encouragement and facilitation, preparation, training and recognition of volunteers

(i) Provide, in a way complementary to the support from other sources, an adequate human and physical infrastructure for volunteering. This could include, inter alia, awareness-raising campaigns, development of a volunteer centre infrastructure, establishment of focal points or the use of pilot schemes and the promotion of on-line volunteering. Specific campaigns in the area of, for example, mass immunization, literacy, or low-cost housing, could include budgetary provision for the encouragement and facilitation, orientation and training, monitoring and recognition of volunteers;

- (ii) Facilitate the establishment and functioning of volunteer centres, which provide a valuable stimulus to formal service volunteering through advocacy, monitoring and encouraging new initiatives. National volunteer centres provide effective leadership in the formal volunteer movement, while regional and local centres ensure linkages with the grass-roots communities and organizations. Legal and fiscal frameworks are important factors in the sustainability of such centres and financial support may also be desirable;
  - (iii) Provide or facilitate specialized training and the formation of professional volunteer managers and trainers in the area of formal service volunteering, including by introducing formal credentials and standards;
  - (iv) Encourage public sector workers to volunteer, for instance by facilitating measures, recognition, career enhancement incentives and the establishment of a dedicated special unit. This sets a positive example for society and helps to strengthen the sense of collective responsibility.
- (c) Enabling fiscal, legislative and other frameworks, including for community-based organizations and not-for-profit organizations engaged in volunteering
- (i) Introduce enabling legislation. The goal is to encourage or inspire citizens to volunteer but allow the choice to rest with the individual or organization; it can also facilitate employee volunteering. It can provide tax incentives and subsidies for organizations, as well as coverage and protection against risks, in a way fitting the particular society;
  - (ii) Facilitate partnership-building around volunteer-based activities of civil society, including arrangements for joint planning, implementation and monitoring. This could incorporate employee volunteer activities of the private sector.
- (d) Encouraging and undertaking research in the various aspects of volunteerism and its impact on society
- (i) Ensure that consideration of the issues regarding volunteering is based on a sound appreciation and analysis of the parameters, profile and trends of volunteering in the particular country context. Studies on volunteering can be undertaken by independent public policy research and/or academic institutions. Governments can also initiate research themselves, in partnership with other stakeholders;
  - (ii) Establish the economic value of volunteering to help to highlight one important aspect of its overall contribution to society and thereby assist in the development of informed policies which take into account the different levels of participation of women and men, youth and older people in different fields of volunteering.
- (e) Ensuring citizens' access to information on opportunities for volunteering
- (i) Facilitate the establishment of national databases on volunteer opportunities in collaboration with community-based organizations and not-for-profit organizations;

- (ii) Disseminate information through the media, schools, and other channels with particular attention given to ensuring that information is accessible also to disadvantaged segments of the population. Encourage media companies to support and expand the concept of pro bono public service announcements on behalf of volunteer-based organizations and activities.
- (f) Addressing the possible impact of general social and economic policy measures upon citizens' opportunities and willingness to volunteer
- (i) Take into account the possible impact of general social and economic policy upon citizens' opportunities to volunteer. Such a "volunteer check" could pertain to measures related to labour, for example, such as the length of the work week and the age of retirement, which have an impact on the profile of volunteering. Legal and fiscal measures could also be reviewed to assess whether they impinge negatively on the status of volunteer-involving organizations, including issues related to juridical status, rights to associational activities, and resource mobilization. Subsequently, legal and administrative hindrances to volunteering, where they exist, can be reduced;
  - (ii) Give due weight to local ownership and citizen participation, to bring public services closer to communities and to open space for greater citizen engagement expressed through channels such as parental involvement in schools and community involvement in natural resource management;
  - (iii) Recognize that transport, communication and other infrastructure, such as public spaces, enhance the capacity of people to organize for voluntary activities. This is especially true of geographically dispersed populations and of people living in poverty, as well as older persons and people with disabilities. It is desirable that the impact of such infrastructure on levels of volunteering be factored into the planning process.
- (g) Integrating volunteerism into national development planning, recognizing the potential contribution of volunteerism to the achievement of sustainable development goals
- (i) Extend the notion of volunteerism as an additional valuable component of national development planning to development cooperation policy. Recognizing and building strategically on rich, local traditions of voluntary self-help and mutual aid can open the way to building up a new constituency in support of development efforts. Forging a link in the mind of the general public in countries providing development assistance between domestic volunteering in those countries and volunteering in countries receiving assistance can also help enlist public support for development cooperation.
- (h) Participation of all population groups
- (i) Consider all means available for more people to become involved in voluntary activities and to be drawn from a broader cross-section of society, including youth, older persons and people with disabilities and persons belonging to minorities, targeting opportunities for voluntary activities to facilitate the active participation of those groups which have little or no access to the benefits of engaging in volunteering;

- (ii) Promote volunteering within educational establishments and youth services; develop specific programmes to encourage youth volunteering; put in place systems to recognize and accredit volunteering by youth; and work with the media to present an attractive image of volunteering. This can have a significant impact on the level of youth participation and constitute a sound investment in a country's human resources.

III. Support by the United Nations system

1. It is recommended that the relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions, further support voluntary activities by creating a favourable environment, including through:

- (a) Awareness-raising
  - (i) Raise awareness internally and with their partners as regards the role of volunteerism in the various areas in which they are active and can sensitize their constituencies as to the implications in terms of activities undertaken. At the political level, strategically manage and support volunteering and incorporate it into the agenda of their meetings;
- (ii) Undertake research and disseminate information about the cross-cutting link between volunteerism and major global concerns, including through technical and popular publications, workshops and Internet sites. This would serve also to extend recognition to volunteers and their organizations, which could be complemented by awards and other measures, including raising the profile of International Volunteer Day.
- (b) Recognition of the contributions of volunteers
  - (i) Enhance and expand the current practice of extending special recognition to volunteers and volunteer-involving organizations across the United Nations system.
- (c) Involving volunteers in their programmes, interlinking with national initiatives
  - (i) Include volunteers in their activities, supporting, inter alia, the establishment of volunteer schemes to address a range of global concerns. Where they exist, national and local volunteer centres could benefit substantially from the specialized expertise and networks of the United Nations system;
  - (ii) Actively encourage staff of the United Nations system to volunteer, utilizing their special skills and experiences.
- (d) Long-term planning for the enhancement of social capital by including all segments of society in volunteering
  - (i) Make a strategic choice for the involvement of all segments of society, including youth, older persons and people with disabilities and persons belonging to minorities, targeting opportunities for voluntary activities to facilitate the participation of those groups that have little or no access to the benefits of engaging in volunteering. In this way, building on societal norms and networks will enhance the social capital of the society concerned, strengthen its capacity for development and have a lasting impact on its well-being.

- (e) Assisting in building national capacities, including in the field of training
  - (i) Assist countries, upon request, in building national capacities, including in the field of training, and further support Governments in their actions to promote volunteerism as a strategic tool to enhance economic and social development;
  - (ii) Recognize the continuing role of the United Nations Volunteers as the volunteer arm of the United Nations system, placing volunteers in development and humanitarian programmes and promoting online volunteering. Build on the acquired experience of the United Nations Volunteers in enhancing the recognition, facilitation, networking and promotion of volunteering, deriving from its role as focal point for the International Year of Volunteers.

Economic and technical cooperation among developing countries

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board considered the second cooperation framework for technical cooperation among developing countries (TCDC) (2001-2003) [DP/CF/TCDC/2] at its January/February session. The second framework, which built on lessons learned in implementing the first framework, emphasized the need for developing countries to build and share capacities essential to participation in multilateral processes, to adapt domestic policy and institutional arrangements to the requirements of the new global economic system, and to protect and promote the development interests of the South by acquiring the knowledge and skills to compete in the current socio-economic environment. The second framework focused on the activities of the UNDP Special Unit for TCDC on issues that called for South-South solutions in international development cooperation, including initiatives to mainstream the practical use of the TCDC modality in UNDP and the UN system. Those efforts would be supported by improved online services linking the TCDC information service, WIDE, to other databases in the UN system, including the subregional resource facilities (SURFs).

The total core resources likely to be available for the programme in 2001-2003 were estimated at $5 million. The Special Unit for TCDC planned to mobilize an additional $15 million in non-core resources under the Voluntary Trust Fund for the Promotion of South-South Cooperation.

In February [dec. 2001/7], the Executive Board approved the second TCDC cooperation framework (2001-2003). In another decision [dec. 2001/2], it noted the lessons learned from the first cooperation framework, including the need for synergy between, and complementarity with, other UNDP efforts in that area, and for a more systematic assessment of the impact of TCDC and the need to focus on facilitating South-South capacity-building processes. The Board welcomed the Administrator's efforts to enhance and mainstream TCDC within UNDP and recognized the unique role of the Special Unit for TCDC in those efforts. It appreciated the contribution made to the South-South Trust Fund by donors and encouraged all partners to increase support for TCDC, in particular through innovative models of South-South cooperation. The Board reiterated its concern about the low level of UNDP core resources, which affected the resources allocated to the Special Unit. It requested the Administrator to review the allocation of additional resources for TCDC activities.

High-level Committee on TCDC

The High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, at its twelfth session (New York, 29 May–1 June) [A/56/39], considered a biennial progress report (1999–2000) on the implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action [YUN 1978, p. 467] and its own decisions at previous sessions [TCDC/12/1 & Corr.1], and a progress report on the implementation of the new directions strategy [YUN 1995, p. 902] [TCDC/12/2]. It also held a thematic discussion on the role of TCDC in science and technology for development.

The Committee adopted three substantive decisions. In the first [A/56/39 (dec. 12/1 A)], it encouraged developing countries that had not done so to put in place a national TCDC policy, including a clear delineation of the TCDC focal point's role. It requested the TCDC Special Unit to organize sub-regional orientation workshops to facilitate greater understanding of TCDC. The Unit, in collaboration with other organizations, should promote the use of southern research and development capacities for increased agricultural productivity, and catalyse TCDC programmes designed to enhance the sharing of knowledge on science and technology. The Committee asked the UNDP Administrator to support the mainstreaming of the TCDC modality through, among other things, the use of national planning mechanisms and regional and international mechanisms, and urged the international community to provide support so that developing countries could respond to the challenges resulting from globalization. It commended the Unit for establishing an Internet-based information source, known as WIDE.

The High-level Committee, in another decision [dec. 12/1 B], noted that more developing countries were initiating and sponsoring technical and economic cooperation among developing countries (ECDC) activities and that developed countries' support to TCDC and ECDC had increased. The Committee requested UN system and other relevant organizations to take additional steps to integrate TCDC and ECDC modalities into their regular cooperation programmes in line with the new directions strategy. It encouraged the Special Unit to document and disseminate innovative and successful TCDC and ECDC practices. The Committee welcomed the strategic orientation and programme focus of the second cooperation framework for TCDC (above) and called for increased support to the Special Unit in implementing the framework. The Special Unit was requested to assist in documenting and disseminating the special problems and needs of developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, small island developing States and landlocked developing countries, through WIDE.

In a decision on the overall framework for promoting and applying TCDC [dec. 12/2], the Committee decided to review in 2003 the revised guidelines for the review of policies and procedures concerning TCDC and the common results framework. The guidelines had been applied on an experimental basis since 1993 and revised in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 891]. Welcoming the promotion of South-South cooperation in the Administrator's Business Plans, the Committee called on him to promote the effectiveness of the TCDC focal point mechanism, especially at the regional and national levels, and to ensure that the separate identity of the TCDC Special Unit was maintained. The Committee decided to review periodically the impact and functioning of the Special Unit in promoting and coordinating TCDC on a global and system-wide basis.

The Executive Board, in June [dec. 2001/12], took note of the High-level Committee's decisions adopted at its twelfth session.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2001/227 of 10 July, took note of the Committee's report on its twelfth session.

South-South cooperation

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 54/226 [YUN 1999, p. 819], reported in October [A/56/465] on the state of South-South cooperation during the 1998–2000 period, especially in trade, investment and monetary and financial arrangements.

He stated that South-South cooperation was gaining importance in promoting developing countries' participation in the international economic system. It diversified and expanded development partnerships and economic links and generated momentum towards more equitable forms of global interdependence. Developing countries had put forward numerous policy decisions, declarations and plans of action covering various aspects of South-South cooperation, the latest of which, the Tehran Consensus [A/56/358], adopted by the Group of 77 and China in August, proclaimed the following objectives: consolidating the South-South platform; building stronger southern institutions at the global level; bridging the knowledge and information gap; building broad-based partnerships; and mobilizing global support for advancing South-South cooperation. Regional economic groups were being energized and new groups were being formed to promote objectives, such as free trade, investment cooperation, transport integration, harmonized social action and integrated resource use. The World Bank estimated that the number of such cooperation arrangements had increased from 39 in 1970 to 82 by 1997. One third of global trade currently took place among regional trade groups. The formation of growth triangles or cooperative subregions was continuing. China, Mongolia and the Russian Federation were cooperating in a Euro-Asia Continental Land Bridge Programme focused on trade growth and transport integration, and the Malawi-Zambia-Mozambique growth triangle promoted trade and investment.

Preferential trade agreements also increased in number and significance. In 2000, 20 new agreements were added to the 214 already in existence, the most notable of which was the United States Trade and Development Act of 2000, which granted concessional terms to imports from 48 African and 25 Caribbean countries. Three fourths of global trade was currently governed by such agreements, which also focused on investment measures, competition policy and trade in services. Developing countries were making efforts to pool their resources and capacities—institutional, intellectual, technical and financial—to address common issues, as illustrated by the South Centre, an intergovernmental entity, and the Third World Network, which were involved in research and analysis on the implications of globalization for developing countries. Successful South-South partnering was exemplified by the Africa-Asia Business Forum, launched by UNDP and funded primarily by Japan, as a follow-up to the second Tokyo International Conference on African Development (Durban, South Africa, July) (see p. 898) to advance trade and investment cooperation between African and Asian firms.

The Secretary-General concluded that regional arrangements designed to achieve exchange-rate stability and manage crises should incorporate mechanisms to ensure regional surveillance, information-sharing and early warning. Domestic reforms were still needed to provide a sound basis for regional cooperation. While developing countries had advanced economic and technical cooperation among themselves, a more systematic and objective assessment of those frameworks and relevant cooperation arrangements was needed. It was incumbent upon the international community and the donor community to provide the necessary support, including financial resources, to South-South cooperation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/562/Add.2], adopted resolution 56/202 without vote [agenda item 99 (b)].

Economic and technical cooperation among developing countries

The General Assembly,

Stressing that South-South cooperation, as an important element of international cooperation for development, offers viable opportunities for developing countries in their individual and collective pursuit of sustained economic growth and sustainable development, in accordance with relevant General Assembly resolutions and recent United Nations conferences, and for ensuring their effective and meaningful participation in the newly emerging global economic system,

Recognizing that developing countries have the primary responsibility for promoting and implementing economic and technical cooperation among themselves, and reiterating the need for the international community to support the efforts of the developing countries to expand South-South cooperation through the modality of economic and technical cooperation among developing countries,

Reaffirming its resolution 33/134 of 19 December 1978, in which it endorsed the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, resolution 46/159 of 19 December 1991 on technical cooperation among developing countries, resolution 49/96 of 19 December 1994 on a United Nations conference on South-South cooperation and resolutions 50/119 of 20 December 1995, 52/205 of 18 December 1997 and 54/226 of 22 December 1999 on economic and technical cooperation among developing countries, as well as other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council on economic and technical cooperation among developing countries,

Recalling the principles and objectives embodied in the Caracas Programme of Action, adopted at the High-level Conference on Economic Cooperation among Developing Countries, held at Caracas in May 1981, the San José Declaration and Plan of Action, adopted by the Group of 77 at the South-South Conference on Trade, Investment and Finance, held at San José from 13 to 15 January 1997, the Bali Declaration and the Bali Plan of Action on Regional and Sub-regional Economic Cooperation of the Developing Countries, adopted by the Group of 77 High-level Conference on Regional and Subregional Economic Cooperation of the Developing Countries, held in Bali, Indonesia, from 2 to 5 December 1998, and the Declaration of the South Summit and the Havana Programme of Action, adopted by the South Summit of the Group of 77, held at Havana from 10 to 14 April 2000, which accorded South-South cooperation high priority in order for developing countries to meet new development challenges, as well as other relevant declarations and plans of action,

Taking note of the Ministerial Declaration adopted by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Group of 77 at their twenty-fifth annual meeting, held in New York on 16 November 2001, in which the increased importance and relevance of South-South cooperation was emphasized,

Taking note also of the Tehran Consensus, adopted at the Tenth Meeting of the Intergovernmental Follow-up and Coordination Committee on Economic Cooperation among Developing Countries of the Group of 77, held at Tehran from 18 to 22 August 2001, which called for consolidating the South-South platform, building stronger South institutions at the global level, bridging the knowledge and information gap, building broad-based partnerships and mobilizing global support for South-South cooperation,

1. Endorses the report of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries on its twelfth session and the decisions adopted by the High-level Committee at that session;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the state of South-South cooperation;

3. Notes with satisfaction the significant increase and expanded use of South-South cooperation by developing countries as an important and effective instrument of international cooperation, and in this connection urges developing countries in a position to do so to intensify technical and economic cooperation initiatives at the regional and interregional levels in areas such as health, education, training, agriculture, science and new technologies, and in particular information and communication technologies;

4. Reiterates that South-South cooperation should be viewed not as a substitute for but rather as a complement to North-South cooperation, and, in that connection, notes with appreciation the increasing number of developed countries and development foundations supporting South-South cooperation activities through a variety of triangular arrangements, including direct support or cost-sharing arrangements, joint research and development projects and third-country training programmes;

5. Emphasizes the need for concerted action by developing countries and their development partners, including relevant international organizations, with a view to strengthening cooperation and collaboration among developing countries at the subregional, regional and interregional levels;

6. Notes with appreciation the contributions made by a number of countries to the Voluntary Trust Fund for the Promotion of South-South Cooperation and to the Perez-Guerrero Trust Fund for Economic and Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, and invites all countries to contribute to the trust funds in support of a revitalized South-South platform that is designed to benefit developing countries, especially the least developed, landlocked and small island developing countries;

7. Recognizes the need to strengthen institutions of the South, including policy research and development institutions and centres of excellence, especially at the regional and interregional levels, with a view to making more effective use of the institutional capacity of the South through, inter alia, improved South-South knowledge-sharing, networking, capacity-building and flow of information and policy analysis and coordination among developing countries on major development issues of common concern;

8. Requests all organizations and agencies of the United Nations development system to make concerted and intensified efforts to effectively mainstream the use of South-South cooperation by giving such cooperation appropriate consideration in the design, formulation and implementation of their regular programmes;

9. Calls upon all relevant United Nations organizations and multilateral institutions to consider increasing allocations of human, technical and financial resources for South-South cooperation, and in this context takes note of decision 2001/2 of the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Population Fund, in which the Board requested the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to consider reviewing, in the context of the successor programming arrangements, the allocation of additional resources for activities involving technical cooperation among developing countries, taking into account the overall financial situation and the need for appropriate resources for other activities;

10. Recognizes the need for raising public awareness of and support for South-South cooperation as a dynamic form of international development cooperation which can give real content to the concept of ownership and partnership, and, for this reason, takes note of the Tehran Consensus proposal to launch the first international decade on South-South cooperation and the United Nations day for South-South cooperation;

11. Requests the Secretary-General, through coordination of the Special Unit for Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries of the United Nations Development Programme and in consultation with relevant organizations and agencies of the United Nations system and other relevant institutions in the South, to include in the report to be submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session concrete measures for promoting and facilitating South-South cooperation, taking into account all relevant initiatives and proposals in this regard;

12. Reiterates its request to the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to ensure that the separate identity of the Special Unit for Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries is maintained and that the Unit is supported so that it may fully implement its mandate and responsibilities as a focal point of the United Nations system for South-South cooperation;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-eighth session the sub-item entitled "Economic and technical cooperation among developing countries", and requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the Special Unit for Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to submit to it at that session a comprehensive report on the state of South-South cooperation and the implementation of the present resolution.

UN Capital Development Fund

Contributions to the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) regular resources in 2001 amounted to $24.3 million, a modest increase from the 2000 contributions of $23.9 million [DP/2002/25]. Total resources, including miscellaneous income and other (non-core) resources, amounted to $28.6 million. In applying its funding formula, the Fund reduced its new approvals downwards to $10.6 million from an original target of $20 million. Programme expenditure (including support costs paid to implementing agents) totalled $34.4 million. Total expenditure in 2001 represented an overall project delivery of 70 per cent, compared to $43.2 million or 85 per cent in 2000. UNCDF unexpended resources as at 31 December were $58.9 million, compared with $70.9 million a year earlier, including $33 million in the operational reserve.

UNCDF presented its first results-oriented annual report (ROAR) in 2001 [DP/2001/17], covering activities in 2000. The report presented an analysis of UNCDF performance assessed against its strategic results framework for 2000-2003. Progress in the sub-goals on local governance and micro-finance was conclusive, confirming the Fund's comparative advantage in those areas. While the assessment was positive overall, improvement was needed in measuring the organization's performance in natural resources management. Although the number of new donors, including programme countries, increased, core resources were still below target and, because of the shortfall in available resources, the Fund could not meet all the demands from programme countries.

The Executive Board, in June [dec. 2001/12], took note of the ROAR and postponed consideration of the evaluation of the impact of the Fund's programmes to 2004. In September [dec. 2001/13], the Board took note of the Administrator's report on the 2002-2003 biennial budget estimates for UNCDF [DP/2001/21] and approved a gross appropriation of $13.7 million.

Chapter III

Humanitarian and special economic assistance

In 2001, the United Nations, through the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), continued to coordinate the response of humanitarian agencies, particularly those of the UN system, to alleviate human suffering in disasters and emergencies, promote preparedness and prevention, and facilitate sustainable solutions. The 2001 consolidated inter-agency appeals process was launched globally under the theme "Women and war". During the year, appeals were launched for Angola, Burundi, the northern Caucasus, the Congo, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Eritrea, Ethiopia, the Great Lakes region and Central Africa, the Maluku islands of Indonesia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, South-Eastern Europe, the Sudan, Tajikistan, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and West Africa. The total sought amounted to $2,559 million, of which $1,415 million was received, meeting 55.3 per cent of requirements. In addition, an inter-agency appeal covering Afghanistan for 2001, which sought $332.6 million, received contributions of $150 million, or 45.1 per cent of requirements. In September, a donor alert for Afghanistan, appealing for $662 million and covering October 2001 to March 2002, replaced the appeal; it received contributions of $496 million, or 75 per cent of requirements.

OCHA reported contributions to cover assistance in 2001 for natural disasters totalling $332 million, excluding in-kind contributions and services, for 49 situations in 36 countries and two regions. Through the Response Coordination and Emergency Services Branches, OCHA mobilized and coordinated assistance to 67 natural disasters.

The United Nations mine-action policy document, which continued to guide UN agencies and their partners in implementing their mine-action responsibilities, was further developed in 2001. In October, the Secretary-General presented the United Nations mine-action strategy for 2001-2005, intended to turn the policy into concrete action. He also outlined the United Nations policy on information management for mine action.

During the year, preparations were under way for the final review and appraisal in 2002 of the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s.

Coordination

Humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council

During the humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council, held from 11 to 13 July with the theme "Strengthening the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations" (decision 2001/206 of 31 January), the Council held panel discussions on emergency humanitarian assistance for groups with special needs and on natural disaster preparedness and response measures (decision 2001/225 of 2 July).

The Council had before it a June report of the Secretary-General [A/56/95-E/2001/85] on strengthening the coordination of UN emergency humanitarian assistance, submitted pursuant to requests by the General Assembly in resolutions 46/182 [YUN 1991, p. 421] and 55/164 [YUN 2000, p. 848] and by the Council in resolution 1995/56 [YUN 1995, p. 927]. Noting that the year 2001 marked the tenth anniversary of the adoption of resolution 46/182 with the goal of improving the efficiency and effectiveness of UN humanitarian operations in the field, the Secretary-General presented an overview of the changes in humanitarian environments over the preceding decade and progress and constraints in strengthening humanitarian coordination. With regard to the period 2000-2001, the report discussed the context and challenges of providing humanitarian assistance during that period.

The UN system, in consultation with affected Governments, had conducted lessons-learned exercises to chart the course to better prevention and response. A recurring theme of those evaluations was the need for strong contingency planning, strengthened national disaster management capacity and disaster response co-ordination mechanisms, which included information management as well as regional cooperation. Inter-agency efforts included a series of initiatives, such as the inter-agency contingency planning guidelines prepared by the Inter-Agency Standing Committee (IASC) to deal with environmental or natural disasters, civil unrest and conflict, or the related refugee outflows and internal displacement. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) had brought on board three regional disaster response advisers for Latin America, Asia and the Pacific, who provided technical support to UN country teams and, through them, to the regional and national authorities, for the preparation of contingency plans and the coordination of natural disaster response. Two more advisers were foreseen for the Caribbean and Central America and for Southern Africa. Inter-agency response was also effected through joint missions.

Some key issues in the coordination of humanitarian assistance included the protection of civilians in armed conflict, internal displacement, gender and children. Representatives of the Senior Inter-Agency Network on Internal Displacement, while visiting Afghanistan, Angola, Burundi, Eritrea and Ethiopia (October 2000 to May 2001), confirmed serious gaps in the UN humanitarian response to the needs of internally displaced persons. In response, OCHA planned to establish a small, inter-agency, non-operational Internally Displaced Persons Unit to advise the Emergency Relief Coordinator (ERC) on and ensure an improved coordinated response to the needs of internally displaced persons. The Unit would support and complement the advocacy efforts of the Secretary-General's Representative on internally displaced persons (see p. 652). IASC focused on providing support to UN country teams to bring the international community's attention to the needs and problems of women and girls in conflict and post-conflict situations. In 2001, the consolidated appeals process was launched globally under the theme "Women and war". IASC reviewed the guidelines and training tools for the process to ensure that they carried appropriate mainstreamed messages concerning gender; its electronic resource package aimed to assist humanitarian coordinators and field staff in mainstreaming gender into the 2002 consolidated appeals process. In response to the Economic and Social Council's agreed conclusions 1999/1 [YUN 1999, p. 824], steps were taken to reflect the growing political commitment towards child protection. Security Council resolutions 1261 (1999) and 1265 (1999) [ibid., pp. 672 & 649], which included the protection of children in the mandates of UN peacekeeping operations for the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and Sierra Leone, respectively, allowed for the appointment of child protection advisers as an integral part of the missions. Nonetheless, sustained access to all children affected by armed conflict remained elusive,

In reviewing progress and constraints in strengthening coordination, the Secretary-General stated that a key task for the ERC remained that of advocating respect for the humanitarian agenda and the principles of humanitarian action, particularly in peacekeeping operations. Other challenges included strengthening his leadership as the inter-agency focal point on internally displaced persons and engaging more actively in negotiations for access to vulnerable populations. IASC needed to be strengthened to maintain its central role as a key coordination and consultative mechanism among its core members and standing invitees. Continuous efforts had been made to improve the consolidated appeals process as a process and a coordination tool. However, a few key challenges remained, such as better prioritizing the needs outlined in consolidated appeal documents. At a retreat on the appeals process and coordination in humanitarian emergencies (Montreux, Switzerland, March), donors expressed support for the process. However, statements of support needed to be accompanied by further coordination among donors, said the Secretary-General. Despite growing donor interest in better coordinated and consolidated plans, there continued to be a tendency to favour bilateral assistance, which, at times, eclipsed multilateral funding, making the coordination of international response more difficult. Contributions to the consolidated appeals had steadily declined from $1.96 billion in 1994 to $1.2 billion in 2000, leaving goals, particularly those relating to rehabilitation, unmet and urgent needs unaddressed. OCHA intended to carry out an analysis of donor funding patterns and the strategic coherence of the appeals process to identify ways to address imbalances. Linkages were needed between the consolidated appeals process and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) to ensure an integrated strategy in the recovery phase. The UN country team in the Republic of the Congo had devised an innovative approach, combining the essential elements of the consolidated appeals process, the common country assessment and UNDAF into a single "United Nations Plan", which responded to challenges in the transition phase with a single planning document.

Recommendations were made on strengthening the coordination and response role of regional, national and local actors. There was a need to engage the entire community in responding to any disaster and, to strengthen the role of regional bodies and national actors, the international community should promote decentralization of humanitarian assistance management.

International actors should focus on strengthening indigenous preparedness capabilities to facilitate increased responsibility for and ownership of humanitarian response at the regional and national levels. Building partnership and trust with Governments and local authorities was key to providing more effective assistance.

Among the key challenges facing humanitarian operations was access, particularly in complex emergencies. Negotiating access raised problems of its own and was an extremely intricate and time-consuming process, with no certain guarantees. Member States had a vital role to play in supporting access negotiations by providing additional leverage or undertaking complementary diplomatic and political action. Another challenge was the development in humanitarian emergencies of "war economies"—alternative structures that emerged and gained total control of economic assets—which were often the instigators and promoters of violence; that was particularly true if the resources controlled by those structures related to illegal trade, such as narcotics. Other "war economies" could develop, such as arms trafficking or the misappropriation and sale of humanitarian assistance. Other challenges were sanctions regimes, the need to link relief and development, and administrative procedures. Regarding the last, OCHA had recommended changes to address the shortcomings, including enhanced delegation of authority for recruiting personnel and conducting financial transactions and procurement in the field.

The Secretary-General made recommendations to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council regarding further strengthening coordination of humanitarian assistance, prevention, preparedness and response mechanisms, and groups with special needs.

Summarizing the debate on the Secretary-General's report, the Council Vice-President stated that the Council reaffirmed the value and significance of the guiding principles laid down in Assembly resolution 46/182 and supported the strengthening of the tools and mechanisms established therein. They highlighted the need to increase national and regional capacities for preparing for and responding to natural disasters and called for greater collaboration and partnership between the UN system and regional, national and local actors. Members placed strong emphasis on the primary responsibility of the State concerned to protect and assist civilian populations, particularly the vulnerable and displaced, and agreed that Governments and parties to conflict should facilitate the access of humanitarian workers to those in need. They also attached the highest importance to strengthening measures to enhance the security of humanitarian personnel.

The Vice President also summarized the panel discussions.

On 13 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report (decision 2001/228).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and the guiding principles contained in the annex thereto, other relevant General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions and agreed conclusions of the Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Taking note also of the note by the Secretary-General on enhancing the functioning and utilization of the Central Emergency Revolving Fund, submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session pursuant to its resolution 54/95 of 8 December 1999,

Recognizing the importance of the Revolving Fund as a cash-flow mechanism for a timely, prompt, effective and coordinated response by the organizations of the United Nations system,

Recognizing also that the pattern of utilization has been uneven in recent years and that there is a need to ensure that the Revolving Fund is used where the needs are greatest and most urgent,

1. Welcomes the holding of the fourth humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council during its substantive session of 2001;

2. Invites the Economic and Social Council to continue to consider ways to enhance further the humanitarian affairs segment of future sessions of the Council;

3. Emphasizes the importance of discussion of humanitarian policies and activities in the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council;

4. Calls upon relevant organizations of the United Nations system, other relevant international organizations, Governments and non-governmental organizations to cooperate with the Secretary-General and the Emergency Relief Coordinator to ensure timely implementation of and follow-up to agreed conclusions of the humanitarian affairs segment of the substantive session of the Economic and Social Council;

5. Welcomes the progress made by the Emergency Relief Coordinator and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat in strengthening the coordination of humanitarian assistance of the United Nations;

6. Expresses its deepest appreciation to those Governments that have contributed to the Central Emergency Revolving Fund;

7. Encourages better use of the Revolving Fund, and in that context endorses the proposal of the Secretary-General to expand the utilization of the Fund to include humanitarian assistance for natural disasters, humanitarian assistance for new requirements in protracted emergencies and emergency staff safety arrangements for United Nations and associated personnel;

8. Decides that the expanded utilization of the Revolving Fund shall follow the same procedures and terms of reference that have been established in resolution 46/182 for advances and reimbursement of the resources of the Fund;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to inform Governments regularly about the use of the Revolving Fund and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the utilization of the Fund and on further possible improvements in its terms of reference in order to enhance its functioning and utilization, inter alia, in relation to the great need for urgent assistance in many underfunded, so-called forgotten emergencies;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session, through the 2002 substantive session of the Economic and Social Council, on progress made in strengthening the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations, including the implementation of and follow-up to relevant agreed conclusions of the Council and progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the item "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance" would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464).

UN and other humanitarian personnel

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/175 [YUN 2000, p. 1348], the Secretary-General submitted a September report on the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and protection of UN personnel [A/56/384 & Corr.1] (see p. 1347).

In resolution 56/217 of 21 December, the Assembly strongly condemned any act or failure to act that obstructed or prevented humanitarian and UN personnel from discharging their humanitarian functions, or which entailed their being subjected to threats, the use of force or physical attack.

Resource mobilization

Central Emergency Revolving Fund

In 2001, the Central Emergency Revolving Fund (CERF), established in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 584] as a cash-flow mechanism for the initial phase of humanitarian emergencies, granted 24 advances, amounting to $25.7 million.

In December, the General Assembly, having considered a 2000 report of the Secretary-General on enhancing the functioning and utilization of CERF [YUN 2000, p. 850], adopted resolution 56/107 (see p. 825), in which it requested the Secretary-General to propose further possible improvements to enhance the use of the Fund.

Consolidated appeals

The consolidated appeals process continued to coordinate and facilitate the capacity of the UN system to meet its inter-agency resource requirements. In 2001, the United Nations and its humanitarian partners issued 19 consolidated appeals that sought some $2.8 billion for assistance to Afghanistan, Angola, Burundi, the northern Caucasus, the Congo, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Eritrea, Ethiopia, the Great Lakes region and Central Africa, the Maluku crisis (Indonesia), Sierra Leone, Somalia, South-Eastern Europe, the Sudan, Tajikistan, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and West Africa.

Contributions to the consolidated appeals process fell from $1.96 billion in 1994 to $1.2 billion in 2000, and the share of requirements met showed a steady downward trend, from 80 per cent in 1994 to 59 per cent in 2000. The 2001 mid-year review placed particular focus on the impact of underfunding. As at 22 May, six months after the 2001 consolidated appeals were launched, only 23 per cent of the $2.8 billion requested had been funded. In addition, some crises were almost ignored and in others emergency food aid received the bulk of contributions, while non-food sectors, such as agriculture, health, education and water and sanitation, remained underfunded. Donors were urged to work more closely together to address the requirements in a more balanced way.

White Helmets

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/98 [YUN 1999, p. 829], the Secretary-General submitted an August report on the "White Helmets" initiative [A/56/308], which was established by Argentina to provide expertise on a standby team basis from various national volunteer corps to support immediate relief, rehabilitation, construction and development activities. The report, which covered the period from July 1999 to July 2001, provided an overview of progress made in collaboration with various partners, particularly the Government of Argentina, through the White Helmets Commission of Argentina. It highlighted programme activities undertaken in the context of the United Nations Volunteers (see p. 814) and White Helmets Commission partnership.

(For information on the International Year of Volunteers, see p. 814.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/102 [draft: A/56/L.50 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (d)].

Participation of volunteers, "White Helmets", in the activities of the United Nations in the field of humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and technical cooperation for development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 50/19 of 28 November 1995, 52/171 of 16 December 1997 and 54/98 of 8 December 1999,

Reaffirming also its resolutions 46/182 of 19 December 1991, 47/168 of 22 December 1992, 48/57 of 14 December 1993, 49/139 A and B of 20 December 1994, 50/57 of 12 December 1995 and 51/194 of 17 December 1996 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1995/56 of 28 July 1995 and 1996/33 of 25 July 1996,

Recognizing that recent events emphasize the need for the international community, in addressing the growing magnitude and complexity of natural disasters and other humanitarian emergencies, to rely not only on the formulation of a well-coordinated global response within the framework of the United Nations but also on the promotion of a smooth transition from relief to rehabilitation, reconstruction and development,

Recalling that prevention, preparedness and contingency planning for emergencies at the global level depend, for the most part, on the strengthened local and national response capacities as well as on the availability of financial resources, both domestic and international,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, prepared in pursuance of its resolution 54/98 on the participation of volunteers, "White Helmets", in activities of the United Nations in the field of humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and technical cooperation for development;

2. Encourages voluntary national and regional actions aimed at making available to the United Nations system, through the United Nations Volunteers and other agencies, national volunteer corps such as the White Helmets on a standby basis, in accordance with accepted United Nations procedures and practices, in order to provide specialized human and technical resources for emergency relief and rehabilitation;

3. Expresses its appreciation for the commendable progress of the White Helmets initiative as a singular voluntary international effort to provide the United Nations system with voluntary expertise to respond, in a quick and coordinated manner, to humanitarian relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development, while preserving the non-political, neutral and impartial character of humanitarian action;

4. Recognizes that the White Helmets, in close cooperation with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and as an operational partner of the United Nations system, are an efficient and viable mechanism for making pre-identified and trained homogeneous teams available to the United Nations, in support of immediate relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development activities, in the light of the increasing number, growing magnitude and complexity of natural disasters and other emergencies;

5. Calls upon Member States to promote the facilitation of cooperative actions between the United Nations system and civil society, through national volunteer corps, in order to strengthen the United Nations capacities for early and effective response to humanitarian emergencies, and invites them to make the commensurate financial resources available through the special financing window of the Special Voluntary Fund of the United Nations Volunteers, or in coordination with it;

6. Encourages Member States to identify and support their respective national focal points for the White Helmets in order to continue to provide the United Nations system with an accessible global network of rapid response facilities in case of humanitarian emergencies;

7. Recognizes with appreciation the progress made by the States members of the Common Market of the South and associated partners in the strengthening and broadening of the White Helmets humanitarian assistance concept within a regional framework, and encourages Member States in other regional associations to consider implementing that concept in their efforts aimed at extending humanitarian assistance cooperation;

8. Invites Member States, international financial institutions, regional organizations and the United Nations system to consider ways and means to ensure the integration of the White Helmets initiative into their programme activities, particularly those related to humanitarian and disaster relief assistance;

9. Invites the Secretary-General, on the basis of the experience acquired, to consider further the potential use of White Helmets as a resource for preventing and mitigating the effects of emergencies and post-conflict humanitarian emergencies and, in this context, to maintain an adequate structure for the White Helmets liaison functions, taking into account the outgoing reforms process;

10. Recommends that the Secretary-General encourage relevant agencies of the United Nations system to explore opportunities for collaboration with White Helmets, taking into account the success of coordinated actions carried out, inter alia, with the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Volunteers;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the consideration of the possible strengthening and broadening of consultative mechanisms to promote further and operationalize the concept, as referred to in paragraphs 9 and 10 above, and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session, under the item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance", on the actions taken in conformity with the present resolution.

Mine clearance

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/120 [YUN 2000, p. 851], the Secretary-General, in an October report [A/56/448], presented information on key developments, achievements and challenges encountered by the mine-action community in 2001, with an emphasis on cross-cutting issues of concern to all partners, such as global coordination and resource mobilization; assistance to national and local authorities; emergency assistance; information management; quality control; training and standards; and advocacy. Significant progress was made in mine action over the preceding 12 months, particularly in terms of strategic planning, operational support, coordination and information management. At the same time, new landmines continued to be laid in several countries.

The UN mine-action policy document, "Mine action and effective coordination: the United Nations policy", which continued to guide UN agencies and their partners in implementing their mine-action responsibilities, was further elaborated in 2001, through the development of a five-year strategy for UN mine action covering the period 2001-2005 [A/56/448/Add.1], intended to turn the policy into concrete action, and the completion of the UN policy on information management for mine action, prepared by the Meeting of Mine Action Programme Directors and Advisers and approved by the Inter-Agency Coordination Group on Mine Action [A/56/448/Add.2].

Global coordination for mine-related activities within the UN system was the responsibility of the Mine Action Service, which relied on two mechanisms, the Inter-Agency Coordination Group on Mine Action and the Steering Committee on Mine Action. The former was a UN inter-agency forum, while the latter promoted coordinated UN initiatives with those of other partners and included the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), the Geneva International Centre for Humanitarian Demining, the International Campaign to Ban Landmines and other non-governmental organizations (NGOs), in addition to UN mine-action entities. At May and September meetings, the Steering Committee addressed the landmine problems in Eritrea and Kosovo (Federal Republic of Yugoslavia), the emergency response plan, explosive remnants of war and the possibility of using a universal mine-action logo in support of advocacy initiatives. The Mine Awareness Working Group, composed of mine-awareness practitioners, mainly from the field, but also representing the United Nations, ICRC, NGOs, independent expert bodies and others, held its first meeting in May. During the year, significant changes were made to the annual portfolio of mine-related projects, designed for sharing information and mobilizing resources; in an attempt to present the country projects in a broader humanitarian and socio-economic context and to define the UN support strategy for each affected region, it included country briefs, intended to help the understanding of the linkages among individual projects, as well as between mine-action projects and other humanitarian and development activities. In 2001, $1.25 million was advanced to the Mine Action Service from CERF to support emergency activities in Eritrea and Kosovo. Through the Adopt-A-Minefield campaign, based on a partnership agreement between the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the United Nations Association of the United States of America, $2.7 million was transferred to UNDP by the end of May for clearance tasks in Afghanistan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cambodia, Croatia and Mozambique. The campaign grew to include two new satellite partnerships in Canada and the United Kingdom. The Database of Mine Action Investments, which tracked the flow of resources to mine-action programmes, indicated that funding had regularly increased over the preceding four years. Of an estimated $200 million invested in mine-action assistance by the international community annually, about 40 per cent was channelled through the UN system and used primarily to finance field activities. A total of $151 million had been requested for the 2001 portfolio, of which $74 million was raised by 30 April.

UNDP supported mine-action programmes in 16 countries. During the year, new programmes were launched to assist in Albania, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Guinea-Bissau, Lebanon and Thailand, while assistance continued to more established programmes in Angola, Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cambodia, Chad, Croatia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mozambique, Somalia and Yemen. Emergency mine-action assistance for southern Lebanon, the temporary security zone between Eritrea and Ethiopia, Kosovo, Afghanistan and northern Iraq was channelled through the United Nations. Other areas of concern from a humanitarian point of view included Angola, Burundi, the DRC, the Russian Federation (Ingushetia), Sri Lanka and the Sudan.

To handle situations where landmines were an obstacle to humanitarian relief efforts and/or peacekeeping deployment, the United Nations developed a plan for a rapid emergency mine-action response capability, which focused on early reconnaissance, leading to the establishment of an appropriately configured coordination capacity in the early stages of an emergency and a range of mine-action capabilities to address the immediate threat in each situation. In that context, mine-action start-up kits were being developed.

An annex to the report listed contributions by donors to the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Action as at 31 July, which totalled $79.7 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/219 [draft: A/56/L.63/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 38].

Assistance in mine action

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/7 of 19 October 1993, 49/215 of 23 December 1994, 50/82 of 14 December 1995, 51/149 of 13 December 1996 and 52/173 of 18 December 1997, on assistance in mine clearance, and its resolutions 53/26 of 17 November 1998, 54/191 of 17 December 1999 and 55/120 of 6 December 2000, on assistance in mine action, all adopted without a vote,

Considering mine action to be an important component of United Nations humanitarian and development activities,

Reaffirming its deep concern at the tremendous humanitarian and development problems caused by the presence of mines and other unexploded ordnance that constitute an obstacle to the return of refugees and other displaced persons, to humanitarian aid operations and to reconstruction and economic development, as well as to the restoration of normal social conditions, and that have serious and lasting social and economic consequences for the populations of mine-affected countries,

Bearing in mind the serious threat that mines and other unexploded ordnance pose to the safety, health and lives of local civilian populations, as well as of personnel participating in humanitarian, peacekeeping and rehabilitation programmes and operations,

Reiterating its dismay at the high number of victims of mines, especially among civilian populations, including women and children, and recalling in this context Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1995/79 of 8 March 1995, 1996/85 of 24 April 1996, 1997/78 of 18 April 1997, 1998/76 of 22 April 1998, 1999/80 of 28 April 1999, 2000/85 of 27 April 2000 and 2001/75 of 25 April 2001, on the rights of the child, and resolutions 1996/27 of 19 April 1996, 1998/31 of 17 April 1998, 2000/51 of 25 April 2000 and decision 1997/107 of 11 April 1997, on the human rights of persons with disabilities,

Deeply alarmed by the number of mines that continue to be laid each year, as well as the presence of a large number of mines and other unexploded ordnance as a result of armed conflicts, and thus convinced of the necessity and urgency of a significant increase in mine-clearance efforts by the international community with a view to eliminating the threat of landmines to civilians as soon as possible,

Noting the inclusion in Amended Protocol II to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects of a number of provisions of importance for mine-clearance operations, notably the requirement of detectability, and provision of information and technical and material assistance necessary to remove or otherwise render ineffective existing minefields, mines and booby traps, and noting also that Amended Protocol II to the Convention entered into force on 3 December 1998,

Noting also the conclusions and recommendations adopted at the Second Annual Conference of the States Parties to Amended Protocol II to the Convention, held in Geneva from 11 to 13 December 2000,

Recalling that the States parties to the First Review Conference of the States Parties to the Convention declared their commitment to keep the provisions of the Protocol under review in order to ensure that the concerns regarding the weapons it covers are addressed, and that they would encourage the efforts of the United Nations and other organizations to address all problems related to landmines,

Noting that the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction entered into force on 1 March 1999 and that the Convention has been accepted formally by one hundred and twenty-two States and signed but not yet ratified by an additional twenty States,

Noting also the conclusions of the Third Meeting of the States Parties to the Convention, held in Managua from 18 to 21 September 2001, taking note of the reaffirmed commitments that were made, among other things, to provide assistance for mine clearance and rehabilitation, the social and economic reintegration of mine victims and mine-awareness programmes and to eradicate anti-personnel mines, and taking note also of the work of the intersessional programme established by States parties to the Convention,

Stressing the need to convince mine-affected States to halt new deployments of anti-personnel mines in order to ensure the effectiveness and efficiency of mine-clearance operations,

Recognizing the important role that the international community, in particular States involved in the deployment of mines, can play in assisting mine clearance in mine-affected countries by providing necessary maps and information and appropriate technical and material assistance to remove or otherwise render ineffective existing minefields, mines and booby traps,

Concerned at the limited availability of safe and cost-effective mine-detection and mine-clearance equipment, as well as the need for effective global co-ordination in research and development to improve the relevant technology, and conscious of the need to promote further and more rapid progress in this field and to foster international technical cooperation to this end,

Concerned also at the limited availability of the technical, material and financial resources needed to meet the cost associated with mine-clearance activities in mine-affected countries,

Recognizing that, in addition to the primary role of States, the United Nations has an important role to play in the field of assistance in mine action,

Reaffirming the need to reinforce international cooperation in the area of mine action and to devote the necessary resources to that end,

Concerned at the critical financial situation of the Mine Action Service of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat,

Welcoming the mine-action coordination centres already established under the auspices of the United Nations, as well as the creation of international trust funds for mine clearance and other mine-action activities,

Noting with satisfaction the inclusion in the mandates of several peacekeeping operations of provisions relating to mine-action work carried out under the direction of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, in the context of such operations,

Commending the action already taken by the United Nations system, donor and recipient Governments, the International Committee of the Red Cross and non-governmental organizations to coordinate their efforts and seek solutions to the problems related to the presence of mines and other unexploded ordnance, as well as their assistance to victims of mines,

Welcoming the role of the Secretary-General in increasing public awareness of the problem of landmines,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance in mine action;

2. Calls, in particular, for the continuation of the efforts of the United Nations, with the assistance of States and institutions as appropriate, to foster the establishment of mine-action capacities in countries where mines constitute a serious threat to the safety, health and lives of the local population or an impediment to social and economic development efforts at the national and local levels, emphasizes the importance of developing national mine-action capacities, and urges all Member States, in particular those that have the capacity to do so, to assist mine-affected countries in the establishment and development of national capacities in mine clearance, mine awareness and victim assistance;

3. Invites Member States to develop and support national programmes, in cooperation with the relevant bodies of the United Nations system where appropriate, to promote awareness of landmines, especially among women and children;

4. Expresses its appreciation to Governments, regional organizations and other donors for their financial and in-kind contributions to mine action, including contributions for emergency operations and for national capacity-building programmes;

5. Appeals to Governments, regional organizations and other donors to continue, and whenever possible increase, their support to mine action through further contributions, including contributions through the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Action, to allow for the timely delivery of mine-action assistance in emergency situations;

6. Encourages all relevant multilateral and national programmes and bodies to include, in coordination with the United Nations, activities related to mine action in their humanitarian, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development assistance activities, where appropriate, bearing in mind the need to ensure national ownership, sustainability and capacity-building;

7. Stresses the importance of international support for emergency assistance to victims of mines and for the care and rehabilitation and social and economic reintegration of the victims, and also stresses that such assistance should be integrated into broader public health and socio-economic strategies;

8. Encourages Governments, relevant United Nations bodies and other donors to take further action to promote gender- and age-appropriate mine-awareness programmes, victim assistance and child-centred rehabilitation, thereby reducing the number of child victims and relieving their plight;

9. Emphasizes again the important role of the United Nations in the effective coordination of mine-action activities, including those by regional organizations, and especially the role of the Mine Action Service of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat, and stresses the need for the continuous assessment of this role by the General Assembly;

10. Emphasizes in this regard the role of the Mine Action Service as the focal point for mine action within the United Nations system and its ongoing collaboration with and coordination of all the mine-related activities of the United Nations agencies, funds and programmes;

11. Notes with appreciation the mine-action strategy covering the period 2001-2005 submitted by the Secretary-General, requests him to optimize it by seeking and taking into account the views of Member States and taking into consideration the impact of the landmine problem on rehabilitation, reconstruction and development, with a view to ensuring the effectiveness of assistance in mine action by the United Nations, emphasizes in this respect the importance of further multisectoral assessments and surveys better to define the nature, scope and impact of the landmine problem in affected countries and to support the establishment of clear priorities and national plans of action, notes with appreciation in this regard the ongoing development by the United Nations of International Mine Action Standards to support the safe and effective conduct of mine-action activities, emphasizes the need for an inclusive process to be followed in the development of such standards, and encourages the Secretary-General to circulate the completed standards as a United Nations document to all Member States;

12. Takes note with appreciation of the Information Management Policy for Mine Action submitted by the Secretary-General, and emphasizes in this context the importance of developing a comprehensive information management system for mine action, following an inclusive process, under the overall coordination of the Mine Action Service and with the support of the Geneva International Centre for Humanitarian Demining, in order to facilitate the coordination of field activities and the setting of priorities therein;

13. Welcomes in this respect the development of an Electronic Mine Information Network to support the role of the United Nations as a repository of mine-related information and to serve as a gateway to all relevant data made available by Member States and regional, governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations for mine action;

14. Also welcomes recent approaches with regard to the establishment of mine-action coordination centres, encourages the further establishment of such centres, especially in emergency situations, and also encourages States to support the activities of mine-action coordination centres and trust funds established to coordinate assistance in mine action under the auspices of the Mine Action Service;

15. Encourages the ongoing development of an emergency response plan by the United Nations to respond to emergency mine-action requirements, and emphasizes the need for such a plan to build upon all existing capacities;

16. Urges Member States and regional, governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations to continue to extend full assistance and cooperation to the Secretary-General and, in particular, to provide him with information and data, as well as other appropriate resources that could be useful in strengthening the coordination role of the United Nations in mine action, in particular in the fields of mine awareness, training, surveying, detection and clearance, scientific research on mine-detection and mine-clearance technology and information on and distribution of medical equipment and supplies;

17. Emphasizes in this regard the importance of recording the location of mines, of retaining all such records and making them available to concerned parties upon cessation of hostilities, and welcomes the strengthening of the relevant provisions in international law;

18. Calls upon Member States, especially those that have the capacity to do so, to provide the necessary information and technical, financial and material assistance, as appropriate, and to locate, remove, destroy or otherwise render ineffective existing minefields, mines, booby traps and other devices in accordance with international law, as soon as possible;

19. Urges Member States and regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations that have the ability to do so to provide, as appropriate, technological assistance to mine-affected countries and to promote scientific research and development on humanitarian mine-action techniques and technology so that mine-action activities may be carried out more effectively at lower costs and through safer means and to promote international collaboration in this regard;

20. Encourages Member States and regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations to continue to support ongoing activities to promote appropriate technology, as well as international operational and safety standards for humanitarian mine-action activities;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the progress achieved on all relevant issues outlined both in his previous reports to the Assembly on assistance in mine clearance and mine action and in the present resolution, including the progress made by the International Committee of the Red Cross and other international and regional organizations as well as national programmes, and on the operation of the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Action and other mine-action programmes;

22. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to study how to secure a more sound financial basis for the Mine Action Service and to present options to this effect to the General Assembly;

23. Also invites the Secretary-General further to study ways and means of increasing public awareness of the impact of the problem of landmines and other unexploded ordnance on affected countries and to present options to this effect to the General Assembly;

24. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the item entitled "Assistance in mine action".

Humanitarian activities

Africa

Angola

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Angola, launched in 2000 for a total of $226 million to cover January to December 2001, was revised during the year to $233.2 million. Some 50 per cent ($116.6 million) was met.

The general humanitarian situation in Angola did not improve during 2001. Displacement reached triple projected levels and resettlement stagnated, putting further strain on overstretched emergency programmes. Food security worsened for many vulnerable populations, in terms of both availability and access to food, as a result of factors that included late and irregular rains, lack of suitable land and inputs, and declining living standards. Guerrilla and counter-insurgency warfare had a serious impact on civilians living in militarily contested areas, and widespread insecurity affected the delivery of humanitarian assistance. By year's end, despite numerous widespread emergency interventions, noticeable improvements in humanitarian conditions occurred for only a few population groups. OCHA launched a further consolidated inter-agency appeal covering 2002.

Eritrea

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Eritrea, which was launched in February, initially sought $157.5 million. That amount was revised to $133.2 million in October. The donor community covered 60 per cent ($79.9 million) of the requirements.

Following the arrival of the peacekeepers of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea in late 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 174] and the establishment of a Temporary Security Zone along the southern border with Ethiopia (see p. 195), thousands of internally displaced persons began to return to their home areas from camps. During 2001, thousands of Eritrean refugees, some of whom had spent the last 20 to 30 years in neighbouring countries, also returned. Although many parts of the country received good rains, drought continued to affect more than 524,000 persons as at mid-September. Significant progress was made in stabilizing the humanitarian situation of the most vulnerable groups through the implementation of emergency relief interventions to internally displaced persons in camps, returned refugees and other war- and drought-affected communities. A further consolidated appeal was launched to cover assistance requirements for 2002.

Ethiopia

The total funding requirement for the 2001 UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Ethiopia, launched in February and totalling $203.3 million, was revised later in the year to $250.8 million. Some 40.8 per cent ($102 million) was received.

In addition to the border conflict with Eritrea (see p. 191), lingering internal localized conflicts in Ethiopia had an overall negative effect on economic and development efforts. Furthermore, Ethiopia, one of the world's poorest countries, was subject to drastic weather patterns, which included cyclical periods of drought and regular onsets of heavy rain. It was also periodically subject to pest infestations and seasonal peaks of communicable diseases. In 2001, a significant portion of the war-affected population in the north returned home, with the exception of those in areas where landmines and property damage hindered a return. However, the drought-affected caseload, notably the assumed 80,000 drought-displaced as well as those dispersed from refugee camps in the Somali region, remained significant and required further assistance. A further appeal was launched to assist the country in 2002.

Great Lakes region and Central Africa

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Great Lakes region and Central Africa, launched in 2000 and covering January to December 2001, sought a total of $475.7 million ($28.1 million for the regional appeal itself, and $448 million for Burundi, the Congo, the DRC, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania). There was no appeal for Rwanda in 2001. Of the total sought, $248.2 million, or 52.2 per cent, was received as at October.

Despite some positive political developments in the Great Lakes region, the humanitarian situation continued to be of serious concern. In addition to the complex political and military environment (see p. 115), it continued to be plagued by chronic drought and flooding, and the possibility of sudden-onset natural disaster in the form of volcanic or seismic activity in the vicinity of Lake Kivu. Across the region, the needs of vulnerable populations remained acute. Some 1,130,458 people from the region were refugees, and a further 3,012,925 were displaced within their own countries. However, not only those populations were at risk; host communities faced additional demands on their own meagre resources, livelihoods were threatened by insecurity, and access to the most basic social services, such as health and education, was limited. A further appeal was launched to cover humanitarian needs in the region in 2002.

Burundi

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Burundi, covering January to December 2001, which, when launched in 2000, sought $102 million, was revised in May 2001 to $111.5 million. Some 47.8 per cent ($53.3 million) of that amount was met.

The plight of 432,000 Burundians in internal displacement sites continued to dominate the humanitarian agenda. In addition, assistance was needed for 200,000 displaced persons, surviving under ad hoc arrangements, making the delivery of assistance more difficult. More than 380,000 had sought refuge in neighbouring countries, mainly the United Republic of Tanzania. Following persistent drought since 1998, food insecurity remained high. An unprecedented malaria epidemic, with 1 million cases reported at its height in November 2000, also reached high-altitude regions of the country, where natural resistance was low. Transmission of HIV and other infectious diseases continued to rise. Although the proposed Transitional Government in Burundi, scheduled to take office on 1 November, was a significant step forward (see p. 151), the security situation remained volatile, with a general increase in armed banditry and continued fighting in traditional zones of insecurity, particularly in areas close to the Tanzanian border; humanitarian actors had irregular access to those areas. An appeal was launched for assistance in 2002.

Congo (Republic of the)

Within the UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Great Lakes region and Central Africa covering January to December 2001, an appeal was launched for the Republic of the Congo totalling $32.5 million, of which 37.2 per cent ($12.1 million) was received.

A UN Plan for 2001-2002 assessed the status of development in the Congo and listed the goals that the UN country team had set to respond to the situation. In order to support the population directly and provide capacity-building assistance to consolidate peace and reduce poverty, the goals were to: revive productive and income-generating activities; re-establish basic social services and infrastructure; meet emergency needs and establish early warning systems; and support efforts to promote democracy and human rights. The team also drew up a common humanitarian action plan that comprised scaled-down emergency assistance (should stabilization within the country continue), a continued presence for early warning and potential resurgence of humanitarian needs, and refugee assistance.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the DRC, issued in 2000, which sought $139.5 million to cover January to December 2001, was revised in September to $122.9 million. Assistance covering 66.7 per cent ($82 million) of that amount was received.

Political developments and the military disengagement observed in the DRC since January (see p. 117) did not lead to significant improvements in the dire humanitarian situation. Humanitarian space shrank along the eastern borders as a result of renewed fighting and overwhelming distrust between protagonists of all sides. However, civilians in the relatively peaceful central and western areas awaited economic and institutional reconstruction. In other areas, expanded access as a follow-up to disengagement from the conventional lines brought NGOs and agencies closer to displaced and hosting communities. In eastern DRC, the killing in April of six ICRC relief workers in Ituri and the massive influx of armed forces in May in areas of the Kivu provinces limited the activities of humanitarian agencies and led to an increased recourse to air interventions. A further appeal was launched to cover 2002.

In December (resolution 56/100) (see p. 852), the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to keep under review the economic situation in the DRC with a view to promoting participation in and support for a programme of financial and material assistance to enable the country to meet its urgent needs in terms of economic recovery and reconstruction.

Uganda

The Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Uganda, launched in 2000, which sought $78.7 million for January to December 2001, was revised in September to $80 million. The donor community met 43.2 per cent ($33.5 million) of requirements.

In 2001, several initiatives were under way in Uganda to reconcile internal differences and seek rapprochement with neighbouring countries. Against that backdrop, 717,532 refugees, displaced persons and drought victims remained in camps, without sufficient land, shelter, income and other basic rights. Some 5,950 abducted children remained missing. In addition to funding shortfalls, planning, implementation and monitoring of emergency and recovery assistance were constrained by the lack of government policy and strategy concerning the status and rights of displaced Ugandan citizens, daily security incidents in Katakwi, Karamoja and other affected areas, heightened security risks to staff, vehicles and equipment due to repeated rebel incursions in Gulu, Kitgum, Adjumani, Yumbe, Moyo, Bundibugyo, Kasesse and Kabarole and attacks by Karamojong warriors on neighbouring districts in Katakwi, Soroti and Kumi, and military escorts for convoys that were irregular due to lack of fuel supplies, armoured vehicles and personnel. A further appeal was launched to cover 2002.

United Republic of Tanzania

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the United Republic of Tanzania, launched in 2000, which sought $110.4 million for January to December 2001, received funding to cover 82.2 per cent ($91 million) of requirements.

Tanzania continued to receive refugees from Burundi and the DRC, as well as small numbers from Rwanda. However, the overall refugee caseload dropped from 543,145 to 509,655, as a result of a re-registration exercise undertaken in September.

Somalia

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/168 [YUN 2000, p. 860], the Secretary-General, in a September report [A/56/389], reviewed the current situation in Somalia and the humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance provided by the United Nations and its partners over the preceding year.

Somalia's long history of civil strife and economic stratification had resulted in some of the world's highest rates of mortality, morbidity and malnutrition. The socio-political map remained divided between the relatively stable environments in north-west and north-east Somalia and insecurity in the south (see p. 207), where civilians still suffered intermittent violence and the continuing instability restricted aid programming. Over the preceding year, emergency conditions across the country abated significantly, owing to positive environmental conditions and good harvests. However, gains were insufficient to break the seasonal cycle of boom and bust for poor and middle-income households. During the period under review, more than $100 million had been disbursed in aid (some $50 million through the UN system). UN agencies had adopted a humanitarian development strategy to increase access to essential social services and build an enabling environment for peace and reconciliation. However, Somalia remained one of the most difficult operating environments in the world, with restricted and unpredictable access owing to insecurity, the lack of presence of international partners in much of southern and central Somalia, limited or late funding, and community expectations and needs that heavily outweighed the capacity of many agencies. The Secretary-General described activities undertaken by the UN system in the areas of food security and rural development, health services and nutrition, water facilities and sanitation, education, human rights and gender, repatriation and reintegration, economic development and coordination, and UN staff security. The Secretary-General stated that the international community would continue efforts to ensure a coordinated political and aid approach in Somalia allowing for humanitarian access and neutrality.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Somalia, launched in 2000, which requested $129.6 million to cover the period January to December 2001, was revised to $140.4 million. Of that amount, 21.7 per cent ($30.5 million) was met. A further consolidated appeal was issued for 2002.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/106 [draft: A/56/L.54 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Assistance for humanitarian relief and the economic and social rehabilitation of Somalia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/160 of 18 December 1992, 48/201 of 21 December 1993, 49/21 L of 20 December 1994, 50/58 G of 20 December 1995, 51/30 G of 13 December 1996, 52/169 L of 16 December 1997, 53/1 M of 8 December 1998, 54/96 D of 8 December 1999 and 55/168 of 14 December 2000 as well as the resolutions and decisions of the Economic and Social Council on emergency assistance to Somalia,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 733(1992) of 23 January 1992 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, in which the Council, inter alia, urged all parties, movements and factions in Somalia to facilitate the efforts of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and humanitarian organizations to provide urgent humanitarian assistance to the affected population in Somalia, and reiterated the call for the full respect of the security and safety of the personnel of those organizations and guarantee of their complete freedom of movement in and around Mogadishu and other parts of Somalia,

Recalling further the statement by the President of the Security Council of 31 October 2001, in which the Security Council reiterated its support for the outcome of the Somalia National Peace Conference, held in Arta, Republic of Djibouti, and the establishment of the Transitional National Assembly and the Transitional National Government, and encouraged the Government to continue, in the spirit of constructive dialogue, the process of engaging all groups in the country, including in the north-eastern and north-western areas, with a view to preparing for the installation of permanent governance arrangements through the democratic process,

Noting the cooperation between the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States, the European Union, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the countries members of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and its Partners Forum, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and others in their efforts to resolve the humanitarian, security and political crisis in Somalia, and bearing in mind the respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and unity of Somalia,

Noting with appreciation the continued efforts made by the Secretary-General to assist the Somali people in their efforts to promote peace, stability and national reconciliation,

Commending the initiative of the President of the Republic of Djibouti aimed at restoring peace and stability in Somalia, and noting with appreciation the efforts of the Government and people of Djibouti in hosting and facilitating the Somalia National Peace Conference,

Welcoming the outcome of the Arta peace process, led by Djibouti and sponsored by the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, which provides for the establishment of a transitional national parliament and the formation of a transitional national government,

Noting with appreciation that the mandate provided in the three-year transitional national charter emphasizes priorities, including reconciliation, demobilization of armed militia, restitution of properties to their lawful owners, holding of a national census, formulation of a new constitution, democratization, rehabilitation, recovery and reconstruction,

Welcoming the efforts of the Transitional National Government of Somalia to promote national reconciliation within Somalia, recognizing that progress has been achieved in some regions in re-establishing economic and administrative stability, and urging the Government, political and traditional leaders and factions to make every effort to complete, without preconditions, the peace and reconciliation process through dialogue and the involvement of all parties in a spirit of mutual accommodation and tolerance,

Noting with concern that the lack of effective civil institutions in Somalia continues to impede sustained comprehensive development and that, while the environment has become more conducive to some reconstruction and development-oriented work in certain parts of the country, the humanitarian and security situation has remained fragile in other parts,

Reaffirming its support for the joint strategy for targeted assistance of the United Nations system that is focused on the rehabilitation and reconstruction of infrastructure and on sustainable community-based activities, as well as for the importance it attaches to the need for effective coordination and cooperation among the United Nations agencies and their partners,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Deeply appreciative of the humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation support rendered by a number of States and relevant organizations to alleviate the hardship and suffering of the affected Somali population,

Recognizing that, while the humanitarian situation remains fragile in some parts of Somalia, there is a need to continue the ongoing rehabilitation and reconstruction process alongside the national reconciliation process, without prejudice to the provision of emergency relief assistance wherever and whenever required, as security allows,

Noting with appreciation that the prospects for humanitarian, rehabilitation and development activities have been more favourable in some parts of the country, owing to the formation of stronger administrative structures, the commitment shown to re-establishing the rule of law in general and the leadership shown by some regional authorities and by civil society groups in attempting to establish an inclusive alternative to the faction-ridden past of Somalia,

Noting with appreciation also the efforts of the United Nations system aimed at working directly with Somali communities at the local level, whenever possible, and emphasizing the need for coordination with the Transitional National Government and with local and regional authorities,

Welcoming the continued focus of the United Nations, in partnership with Somali elders, other local leaders and skilled local counterparts at the grass-roots level, concerned Somali organizations and professionals in the diaspora and non-governmental organizations, on a programme of assistance, including both humanitarian and developmental approaches, given the varying conditions in different areas,

Re-emphasizing the importance of the further implementation of its resolution 47/160 to rehabilitate basic social and economic services at the local and regional levels throughout the country,

1. Expresses its gratitude for the further implementation of its resolution 47/160 to rehabilitate basic social and economic services at the local and regional levels throughout the country;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continued and tireless efforts to mobilize assistance to the Somali people;

3. Welcomes the ongoing efforts of the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States, the European Union, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the countries members of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and its Partners Forum, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and others to contribute positively to the reconciliation process in Somalia;

4. Also welcomes the strategy of the United Nations focusing on the implementation of community-based interventions aimed at rebuilding local infrastructures and increasing the self-reliance of the local population, and the ongoing efforts by the United Nations agencies, their Somali counterparts and their partner organizations to establish and maintain close coordination and cooperation mechanisms available for the implementation of relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes;

5. Notes with appreciation the holistic and prioritized approach of the United Nations system to addressing the continuing crisis in some parts of Somalia, while making long-term commitments to rehabilitation, recovery and development activities in more stable parts;

6. Emphasizes the principle that the Somali people have the primary responsibility for their own development and for the sustainability of rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance programmes, and reaffirms the importance it attaches to the creation of workable arrangements for collaboration between the United Nations system and its partner organizations and their Somali counterparts for the effective execution of rehabilitation and development activities in those parts of the country in which peace and security prevail;

7. Urges all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to continue to implement further its resolution 47/160 in order to assist the Somali people in embarking on the rehabilitation of basic social and economic services, as well as institution-building aimed at the restoration of civil administration at all levels in all parts of the country in which peace and security prevail;

8. Strongly urges all political groups in Somalia, in particular those which have remained outside the Arta peace process, to participate in the ongoing peace process and to establish a constructive dialogue with the Transitional National Government in order to achieve national reconciliation that allows for transition from relief to reconstruction and development and preserves economic and administrative progress achieved in many regions;

9. Calls upon all parties, individual political leaders and factions in Somalia to respect fully the security and safety of personnel of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and of non-governmental organizations, and to guarantee their complete freedom of movement and safe access throughout Somalia;

10. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize international humanitarian, rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance for Somalia;

11. Calls upon the international community to provide continuing and increased assistance in response to the United Nations Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance for Somalia;

12. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the critical situation in Somalia, to take all necessary measures for the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session.

Sudan

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/96 J [YUN 1999, p. 836], the Secretary-General, in a September report [A/56/412], reviewed the situation in the Sudan and described humanitarian assistance provided by the United Nations and its partners during the period 15 July 1999 to 15 July 2001.

Ongoing armed conflict between the military forces of the parties to the conflict and their allied militias, both in the south and in the so-called transitional zone between the northern and southern parts of the country, continued to threaten already fragile coping mechanisms among communities. The humanitarian situation for the war-affected and the displaced was compounded by natural disasters in many parts of the country. For the war-affected areas of the south, the principal umbrella and vehicle for the implementation of humanitarian relief activities continued to be the Operation Lifeline Sudan (OLS) access agreements, endorsed by the Government of the Sudan, the rebel Sudan People's Liberation Movement and Liberation Army, and the United Nations. A network of OCHA field coordination offices in key locations throughout the Sudan, staffed by national field officers, provided overall coordination of the humanitarian operation. The Secretary-General's Special Envoy for Humanitarian Affairs for the Sudan visited the country four times during the reporting period to discuss the assistance programme, including OLS. The Secretary-General described the security situation and its effect on humanitarian relief efforts, efforts to gain access to affected populations, assistance to internally displaced persons, relief food assistance and non-food assistance—household food security, nutrition and health, water and environmental sanitation, emergency education, rights, child protection and peace-building, and refugee assistance. He stated that, in view of the situation in the Sudan, increased humanitarian access, safety and protection of civilians, adequate resources and guaranteed security for humanitarian workers remained the core conditions of the assistance programme.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Sudan, launched in 2000 to solicit $194.2 million to cover the period January to December 2001, was revised to $252 million. Some 61.8 per cent ($155.7 million) of that amount was received. OCHA issued a further appeal for 2002.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/112 [draft: A/56/L.60 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Emergency assistance to the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 54/96 J of 17 December 1999 and its previous resolutions on emergency assistance to the Sudan,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 on strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian emergency assistance of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind its resolution 55/175 of 19 December 2000 on the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and protection of United Nations personnel,

Welcoming agreed conclusions 1998/1 of the Economic and Social Council, adopted by the Council at the humanitarian segment of its substantive session of 1998, in which, among other things, the Council reaffirmed that international cooperation to address emergency situations should be provided in accordance with international law and national laws, and that the affected State has the primary role in the initiation, organization, coordination and implementation of humanitarian assistance within its territory,

Welcoming also agreed conclusions 1999/1 of the Economic and Social Council, in which the Council addressed the theme of "International cooperation and coordinated responses to humanitarian emergencies, in particular in the transition from relief to rehabilitation, reconstruction and development", during its second humanitarian segment,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on humanitarian assistance to the Sudan,

Welcoming the decision of the Government of the Sudan to provide access to the Nuba Mountains and recent efforts towards its implementation, noting in that regard the results of the inter-agency needs-assessment mission undertaken by the United Nations, and calling upon all parties to continue to cooperate with the United Nations in meeting the needs identified in that assessment,

Noting with concern existing obstacles to the delivery of humanitarian assistance, welcoming the agreements reached by the parties to Operation Lifeline Sudan, among them the Rome protocol, and noting the arrangements reached on 15 August 2001 between the Government of the Sudan and the United Nations inter-agency mission on the modalities of access for the Operation, aimed at facilitating delivery of relief assistance to affected populations, as well as the progress made by the Emergency Relief Coordinator and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat in strengthening the coordination of the Operation,

Urging United Nations agencies, non-governmental organizations and donor countries to continue contributing and channelling their humanitarian assistance to all affected populations in the Sudan through Operation Lifeline Sudan,

Expressing concern at the continued conflict in the Sudan and its negative impact on the humanitarian situation,

Noting the ongoing peace efforts under the auspices of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, and the initiative of Egypt and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya for achieving a negotiated and lasting peace in the Sudan,

Noting with appreciation the contributions for the inter-agency appeal for Operation Lifeline Sudan and the progress made in the Operation, and noting also that considerable relief needs still remain to be addressed, including assistance to combat diseases such as malaria and assistance for logistic needs, emergency recovery, rehabilitation and development,

Expressing concern at the damaging consequences of floods and drought that have occurred in various parts of the Sudan in recent years,

Calling for an early resolution to the conflict, and expressing concern that its continuation further increases the suffering of the civilian population and undermines the effectiveness of international, regional and national humanitarian assistance,

Reaffirming the need for all parties to continue to facilitate the work of humanitarian organizations in implementing emergency assistance, in particular the supply of food, medicine, shelter and health care, and to ensure safe and unhindered access to all affected populations,

Recognizing the need in emergency situations to ensure the smooth transition from relief to rehabilitation and development so as to reduce dependence on external food aid and other relief services,

1. Acknowledges with appreciation the cooperation by the Government of the Sudan with the United Nations, including the agreements and arrangements achieved to facilitate relief operations with a view to improving the conditions for United Nations assistance to the population in the affected areas, encourages the continuation of that cooperation, and calls upon all parties to the conflict to agree to comprehensive and permanent humanitarian ceasefire arrangements in order to ensure the delivery of relief assistance;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the donor community, United Nations agencies and governmental and non-governmental organizations for the contributions so far made to the humanitarian needs of the Sudan, and calls upon them to continue their assistance, in particular by responding to the consolidated appeal and providing support for programmes in the Nuba Mountains;

3. Stresses the need for Operation Lifeline Sudan to be operated and managed with a view to ensuring its efficiency, transparency and effectiveness, with the full involvement and cooperation of the Government of the Sudan, taking cognizance of the relevant Operation Lifeline Sudan agreements reached by the parties, as well as consultations in the preparation of the consolidated annual inter-agency appeal for the Operation;

4. Recognizes the need for Operation Lifeline Sudan to be conducted in strict adherence to the principles of neutrality and impartiality and within the principles of national sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Sudan, and within the framework of international cooperation, in accordance with the relevant provisions of international law;

5. Calls upon the international community to continue to contribute generously to the emergency needs, recovery and development of the Sudan, and urges all parties to the conflict to facilitate the achievement of those objectives;

6. Urges the international community to give assistance for the rehabilitation of transportation means and infrastructure vital for the provision of relief supplies in the Sudan and their cost-effectiveness, and in that context stresses the importance of continued cooperation by all the parties involved so as to facilitate and improve the delivery of relief supplies;

7. Calls upon the donor community and the organizations of the United Nations system to provide financial, technical and medical assistance, guided by the actions called for by the General Assembly in its relevant resolutions, to combat such diseases as malaria and other epidemics in the Sudan;

8. Welcomes the recent visit, upon invitation from the Government of the Sudan, of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons, as well as the commitment of the Government to continue its efforts to address the problem of internally displaced persons;

9. Urges the international community to continue to support national and international programmes of rehabilitation, voluntary resettlement and reintegration of returnees and internally displaced persons, as well as assistance to refugees;

10. Stresses the imperative of ensuring the safety and security of humanitarian personnel, as well as safe and unhindered access for providing relief assistance to all affected populations, and the importance of strict observance of the principles and guidelines of Operation Lifeline Sudan, and of international humanitarian law reaffirming the necessity for humanitarian personnel to respect the national laws of the Sudan;

11. Recognizes the need for a peaceful resolution to the conflict, and urges the parties to work towards that end;

12. Urges all parties involved to continue to offer all feasible and necessary assistance, including facilitating the movement of relief supplies and personnel, so as to guarantee the success of Operation Lifeline Sudan in all affected parts of the country, with special emphasis on national capacity-building in the humanitarian field for governmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as on meeting emergency relief needs;

13. Calls upon all parties to respect international humanitarian law on the protection of civilians during times of war, and in that connection condemns attacks against civilians and attacks against and detention of humanitarian personnel, including the incidents leading to the deaths of fifteen humanitarian workers in the last two years, and calls for appropriate investigations into all allegations surrounding such incidents;

14. Recalls the signing by the Government of the Sudan of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction, urges all parties to the conflict to desist from using them, calls upon the international community to refrain from supplying mines to the region, and urges the international community and United Nations agencies to provide appropriate assistance related to mine action in the Sudan;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize and coordinate resources and support for Operation Lifeline Sudan, and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session on the emergency situation in the affected areas and the recovery, rehabilitation and development of the Sudan.

West Africa

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for West Africa, issued in March to cover January to December 2001 for a total of $65 million to assist Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone in particular and the subregion in general, was revised to $62 million. The donor community covered 32 per cent ($19.7 million) of that amount.

In early 2001, the West African subregion, including Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone, continued to be battered by escalating political and economic instability. Insecurity in the border areas of the Mano River Union States (Guinea, Liberia, Sierra Leone) (see p. 159) caused further displacement of refugees, and their sudden return to already overcrowded host communities and camps for internally displaced persons in Sierra Leone. The emergence of internally displaced persons and vulnerable host communities had compounded Guinea's refugee burden. Ethnic polarization, cross-border insurgency and economic stagnation in Liberia had left the population impoverished and vulnerable. In Côte d'Ivoire, a tense political and ethnic environment continued to trigger the exodus of foreigners, most of them migrant workers from Burkina Faso and Mali. Increasingly complex and massive displacement patterns, related security risks for both the humanitarian actors and beneficiaries, and lack of humanitarian access rendered humanitarian assistance efforts expensive and of limited impact. Although there were a number of positive political movements towards the end of the year, the situation in the subregion remained volatile. OCHA launched a further appeal to cover 2002.

Sierra Leone

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Sierra Leone, which originally requested $78.1 million to cover January to December 2001, was revised to $74.2 million. Of that amount, 80.2 per cent ($60 million) was received.

The significant progress made in the peace process in Sierra Leone (see p. 163), particularly through the disarmament and demobilization programme, altered the operating environment for humanitarian operations. Increased security enabled the resettlement of some 45,000 internally displaced persons and permitted the delivery of essential humanitarian assistance. However, the deterioration of the situation in neighbouring Guinea and Liberia led to the premature repatriation of Sierra Leonean refugees, who remained displaced within the country. OCHA issued a further appeal for 2002.

Asia

Afghanistan

The UN Consolidated Appeal for Afghanistan, launched in 2000 to cover January to December 2001 in the amount of $229.2 million, was revised to $332.6 million. In September, the Consolidated Appeal was replaced by a Donor Alert (below). Some $150 million (45.1 per cent) of the Consolidated Appeal's requirements were met.

On 4 September, the United Nations and its partners issued a report entitled "The deepening crisis", which was a plan of action to support critically vulnerable Afghans for the upcoming winter period and beyond. It highlighted the needs of 5 million people who were already affected by three years of drought and many years of fighting, as well as a huge human rights deficit (see p. 712). Assistance included food distribution, shelter assistance in camps for internally displaced persons and assistance to help people to stay in their homes. In view of the rapidly deteriorating humanitarian situation in Afghanistan, following the events of 11 September (see p. 60), the United Nations and its partners developed a Donor Alert to support an inter-agency emergency humanitarian assistance plan for Afghans in Afghanistan and in neighbouring countries, which replaced the 2001 Consolidated Appeal on 27 September. The plan, which presented a new set of requirements linked to recent events and possible future developments in Afghanistan (see p. 255), covered the period from October 2001 to March 2002 and sought $584 million to ensure the delivery of humanitarian assistance and protection programmes for up to 7.5 million Afghans. The Donor Alert was later revised to $662 million, of which 75 per cent, or $496 million, was met.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 55/174 B [YUN 2000, p. 864], the Secretary-General, in a December report [A/56/687], described developments in Afghanistan during the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 and the assistance provided by the UN system and its partners.

The Secretary-General stated that the humanitarian situation had become increasingly alarming as a result of the effects of a severe drought, significant human rights abuses and the continuing conflict in 17 of the 28 provinces in the country. Relations with the Taliban authorities had been characterized by a series of adverse developments since early 2001, including the arrests of humanitarian staff. The economy continued to be constrained by the war and political crisis. The Secretary-General described efforts by the UN system and its partners to provide assistance for food aid and security, health, water and sanitation, education, mine action, food and agriculture, rural and urban rehabilitation, voluntary repatriation, drug control, and human rights and gender issues. He concluded that the overall situation was very serious and, given the scale and magnitude of the food crisis, there was a need for a concerted international response to avert a catastrophe. Moreover, he said, there were huge rehabilitation and development needs, which were only marginally met by the current assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/220 B [draft: A/56/L.62 & Add.1] without vote [agenda items 20 (f) and 43].

Emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/174 B of 19 December 2000 and all its previous relevant resolutions,

Strongly welcoming the successful conclusion of the agreement reached among various Afghan groups in Bonn, Germany, on 5 December 2001,

Expressing its grave concern at the decades of conflict in Afghanistan, which has caused massive loss of life, extensive human suffering, destruction of property, serious damage to the economic and social infrastructure, refugee flows and other forcible displacements of large numbers of people,

Mindful of the fact that Afghanistan is highly vulnerable to natural disasters and that it is currently affected by the worst drought in living memory,

Remaining deeply concerned at the problem of millions of anti-personnel landmines and unexploded ordnance, which constitutes a great danger for the civilian population and a major obstacle to the return of refugees and displaced populations, to the resumption of agricultural activities, to the provision of humanitarian assistance and to future rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts,

Noting with deep concern that the majority of the Afghan people are still unable to enjoy fully their human rights and fundamental freedoms owing to policies and practices, particularly of the Taliban, aimed at discriminating against or marginalizing parts of the population, in particular women and children, a situation which is exacerbated by the effects of war, poverty and profound underdevelopment,

Expressing its deep concern at widespread violations of international humanitarian and human rights law committed by Afghan groups, and in this regard reminding all Afghan groups of their commitment to respect human rights in the country as contained in the Bonn agreement,

Deeply disturbed by the continuing security threat to humanitarian personnel and United Nations and associated personnel, including locally recruited staff,

Expressing its appreciation to the Afghan staff of the United Nations and other humanitarian organizations, who have continued to provide assistance to vulnerable populations throughout the current crisis,

Noting with grave concern that limited access to certain areas of Afghanistan and inadequate conditions for the delivery of aid threatens the well-being of internally displaced persons and vulnerable sections of the civilian population,

Recognizing that a secure environment is absolutely necessary for the safe and effective delivery and distribution of humanitarian assistance,

Welcoming the timely preparation of operational plans by the United Nations in response to the latest humanitarian crisis, and affirming the urgent need to reinforce international emergency assistance to Afghanistan in order to alleviate the human suffering and restore basic services,

Recognizing the need to develop and implement a comprehensive strategy and process for a seamless connection between humanitarian relief and the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Afghanistan in a timely manner, with particular emphasis on all aspects of sustainable development, including vulnerability reduction and mitigation, and the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Stressing the importance of a well-coordinated approach to implementing such a strategy, and welcoming in this respect the appointment of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan as the coordinator for the United Nations system,

Noting with deep concern that a significant number of Afghan refugees remain in neighbouring countries, as conditions in many parts of Afghanistan are still not conducive to a safe and sustainable return of the majority of refugees, and acknowledging that those refugees constitute a continuing socio-economic burden for the host countries,

Expressing its gratitude to all Governments that have rendered assistance to Afghan refugees, as well as to the Governments of neighbouring countries that continue to host Afghan refugee populations, and at the same time once again calling upon all parties to continue to fulfil their obligations for the protection of refugees and internally displaced persons and to allow international access for their protection and care,

Expressing its appreciation to the United Nations system and to all States and international and non-governmental organizations that have responded positively and continue to respond, where conditions permit, to the humanitarian needs of Afghanistan, as well as to the Secretary-General for his efforts in mobilizing and coordinating the delivery of appropriate humanitarian assistance,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and endorses the observations contained therein;

2. Stresses that the responsibility for the solution of the humanitarian crisis lies above all with the Afghan people themselves, and urges them to attach the highest priority to national reconciliation;

3. Urges all Afghan groups to call a complete halt to the use of landmines and to cooperate fully with the United Nations Mine Action Programme;

4. Calls upon all relevant organizations of the United Nations system to continue to coordinate closely their humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan on the basis of the principles laid out in the Strategic Framework for Afghanistan, and appeals to donor countries as well as other humanitarian organizations to cooperate closely with the United Nations, taking into account the priorities and requirements outlined in the donor alert and subsequent appeals;

5. Stresses the coordinating role of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan for the United Nations system in the development and implementation of a strategy and process for a seamless connection between humanitarian relief and the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Afghanistan, including the cooperation of the United Nations system with the international community, in particular those countries actively engaged in humanitarian assistance and reconstruction efforts in Afghanistan, as well as the international financial institutions;

6. Supports the efforts of the Emergency Relief Coordinator in coordinating humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan, underlines the continuing relevance of coordination structures in place for Afghanistan, encourages agencies to build upon them in response to the current crisis, and also encourages the humanitarian community to strengthen the coordination of their assistance to Afghanistan through existing mechanisms, including donor coordination through the Afghan Support Group;

7. Welcomes the designation by the Secretary-General of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to lead the early recovery efforts in Afghanistan, and invites the relevant United Nations organizations and agencies, as well as the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the Islamic Development Bank, the Asian Development Bank and relevant non-governmental organizations, to develop jointly, in close collaboration with the interim authority and Afghan civil society, a comprehensive strategy and process for the early recovery and reconstruction efforts in Afghanistan, to be implemented where and when conditions permit;

8. Encourages, in this regard, all parts of the United Nations system to work together closely on the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in order to ensure a smooth transition from relief to development in Afghanistan;

9. Calls upon the international community to ensure, within the implementation of such a comprehensive strategy for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Afghanistan, adequate and effective measures, inter alia, for demining, disaster reduction and the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of combatants;

10. Strongly condemns all acts of violence and intimidation directed against United Nations and other humanitarian personnel, and regrets the loss of life and physical harm suffered among the Afghan staff;

11. Urges all Afghan groups to respect international humanitarian law, to ensure the safety, security and free movement of all United Nations and humanitarian personnel, as well as their safe and unimpeded access to all affected populations, and to protect the property of the United Nations and of humanitarian organizations, including non-governmental organizations, against, inter alia, looting and theft, so as to facilitate their work;

12. Encourages the Afghan groups to facilitate the operations of the United Nations and other humanitarian organizations, and urges them to cooperate fully and without discrimination on grounds of gender, nationality or religion with the United Nations and associated bodies, as well as with other agencies and humanitarian organizations, to refrain from all interference in the delivery of humanitarian relief supplies and to guarantee the secure and uninterrupted supply of humanitarian aid to all vulnerable populations;

13. Strongly condemns discrimination against women and girls as well as ethnic and religious groups, including minorities, which adversely affects, inter alia, international relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in Afghanistan, and emphasizes the importance of actively involving all elements of Afghan society, in particular women, in the development and implementation of relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes;

14. Calls upon all Afghan groups to respect fully the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all, without discrimination of any kind, including on the basis of gender, ethnicity or religion, and in accordance with their obligations under international law, and to protect and promote the equal rights of women and men;

15. Urges all Afghan groups to refrain from the recruitment or use of children in armed conflicts contrary to international standards and to take all necessary measures for the demobilization and social reintegration of war-affected children;

16. Stresses the responsibility of all Afghan groups to facilitate the provision of efficient and effective remedies to the victims of grave violations and abuses of human rights and international humanitarian law and to bring the perpetrators to justice in accordance with international standards;

17. Appeals to all States and to the international community to ensure that all humanitarian assistance and future rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes integrate a gender perspective, that they actively attempt to promote the participation of both women and men, and that women benefit equally with men from those programmes;

18. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments that continue to host Afghan refugees, urges the Governments concerned to fulfil their obligations under international refugee law with respect to the protection of refugees and the right to seek asylum, and calls upon the international community to do likewise;

19. Recognizes the large number of refugees in neighbouring countries, and calls upon the international community to consider providing further assistance in support of Afghan refugees;

20. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of neighbouring States hosting United Nations agencies for their cooperation, and calls upon them to continue to facilitate the work of those United Nations humanitarian operations which are temporarily based on their territory in order to ensure an efficient delivery of emergency aid into Afghanistan;

21. Urgently appeals to all States, the United Nations system and international and non-governmental organizations to continue to provide, in close collaboration with the interim authority and Afghan civil society, when conditions on the ground permit, all possible humanitarian, financial, technical and material assistance for the Afghan population, especially in the areas most affected by the drought, as well as assistance to promote the voluntary, safe and dignified return of refugees and internally displaced persons;

22. Calls upon the international community to respond generously to the donor alert, future consolidated appeals as well as long-term interventions towards rehabilitation and reconstruction, and in this respect invites Member States to participate actively in the ministerial level meeting on reconstruction assistance to be held in Japan in January 2002;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the actions taken pursuant to the present resolution.

In resolution 56/220 A of 21 December, the Assembly called on the international community to provide assistance to alleviate the urgent humanitarian needs of Afghanistan and to support post-conflict rehabilitation and reconstruction.

East Timor

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/172 [YUN 2000, p. 867], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/56/338] covering developments in East Timor from January to June 2001.

The humanitarian situation in East Timor continued to improve. Although many people remained vulnerable, it was generally accepted that the humanitarian phase had shifted to a more normalized development situation. Capacity development was the core development challenge facing East Timor, particularly in the areas of human resources development, enhancing the policy and legal framework, managing the changing role of international personnel and managing the linguistic transition. The establishment of a fully functional civil service managed by East Timorese staff had progressed significantly (see p. 272). However, the East Timorese and their development partners faced enormous challenges in transforming an administration that was essentially international in character into a sustainable national administration.

With regard to the health sector, data collected in March indicated that 80 per cent of the population had access to permanent health-care facilities. However, ongoing monitoring suggested that utilization of health services was low and highly variable, with below 40 per cent of facilities properly utilized. The shift from emergency relief to a development phase had allowed the development of non-emergency medical services. Only moderate success had been achieved in education, primarily due to teacher shortages and a lack of school furniture. The central areas of the justice system—the court system, prosecution services, public defender services and prison services—had seen significant progress. The trend towards improvement in public safety had continued. In agriculture, a joint donors' mission (26 March–7 April), with the participation of the World Bank, the United States Agency for International Development, the Australian Agency for International Development, Portugal, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), UNDP, the United Nations Office for Project Services and the Japanese International Cooperation Agency, called for an integrated approach to support the agricultural sector in terms of cross-sectoral rural development. While measures to rehabilitate the infrastructure were advancing at a fast pace, progress towards the development of long-term sustainability had been hampered by a fundamental lack of capacity. In 2001, donors' meetings were held in Canberra, Australia, and Oslo, Norway. In Canberra (June), donors endorsed the second national budget of East Timor.

During the year, an appeal was launched to cover 2002.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/104 [draft: A/56/L.52 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Assistance for humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and development for East Timor

The General Assembly,

Recalling all of its relevant resolutions on the situation in East Timor,

Recalling also its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and the guiding principles contained in the annex to that resolution,

Recalling further all of the relevant Security Council resolutions and decisions on the situation in East Timor, in particular resolutions 1272(1999) of 25 October 1999, 1319(2000) of 8 September 2000 and 1338 (2001) of 31 January 2001,

Recalling the establishment by Security Council resolution 1272(1999) of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor, whose mandate includes the coordination and delivery of humanitarian, rehabilitation and development assistance, support for capacity-building for self-government and assistance in the establishment of conditions for sustainable development,

Welcoming the response of the United Nations, other intergovernmental organizations, Member States and non-governmental organizations, with the coordination of the Transitional Administration since 1 January 2000, and in cooperation with the East Timorese people, in terms of addressing the humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and development needs of East Timor,

Welcoming also the passing of the immediate emergency and humanitarian phase in East Timor, while noting continuing vulnerabilities, including the need to strengthen the preparedness and response capacity for addressing humanitarian emergencies, and the remaining challenges of rehabilitation, reconstruction and development,

Acknowledging the continuing progress made in the transition from relief to development in East Timor and, in this regard, the important role played by the Transitional Administration in supporting the resilient and determined efforts of the East Timorese people themselves,

Emphasizing the need for continued international assistance to East Timor to support the transition from relief and rehabilitation to development, and recognizing the significant challenges that are to be faced in this regard in preparation for independence and in the post-independence period, inter alia, in the sectors of public administration, education, health, agriculture and infrastructure,

Welcoming the efforts of the Government of Indonesia and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in providing humanitarian assistance to the East Timorese refugees in the province of East Nusa Tenggara, West Timor, and in facilitating their return to East Timor, and in this respect recognizing the importance of the international community in assisting the efforts of the Government of Indonesia to implement programmes for the resettlement and repatriation of East Timorese refugees,

Welcoming also the initiation by Indonesia of criminal proceedings against the perpetrators of the deplorable killing of three personnel of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees at Atambua on 6 September 2000, bearing in mind the importance of the independence of the national judiciary, and expressing the hope that the final sentences for those found guilty will be commensurate with the serious nature of the crimes,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Encourages the United Nations, other intergovernmental organizations, Member States and non-governmental organizations, with the coordination of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor, and in close consultation and cooperation with the East Timorese people, to continue to collaborate to address the remaining longer-term vulnerabilities of East Timor, including in the area of preparedness and response capacity for addressing humanitarian emergencies, and to support the transition from relief and rehabilitation to development;
3. Emphasizes the importance of continuing close consultation with and participation of East Timorese institutions and civil society, including local non-governmental organizations, in the planning and delivery of rehabilitation, reconstruction and development assistance to East Timor;
4. Urges United Nations organizations, the international community and non-governmental organizations to continue their efforts aimed at the enhanced ownership and participation of all East Timorese, including women and vulnerable groups, in the rehabilitation, reconstruction and development of East Timor, and in this regard stresses the need for continued international assistance to support local capacity-building, inter alia, in areas such as education, health, agriculture and rural development, the judiciary, governance and public administration, security and law and order;
5. Welcomes the convening of donor meetings for East Timor in Tokyo in December 1999, Lisbon in June 2000, Brussels in December 2000, Canberra in June 2001 and Oslo in December 2001, which focused on the national budget and the transition towards independence in East Timor in four key areas, political, public administration, public finances, and economic and social reconstruction, and urges the international community to fulfil its pledges to meet the external requirements for rehabilitation, reconstruction and development activities for East Timor;

6. Also welcomes the official launching of the joint appeal for East Timorese refugees, presented by the Government of Indonesia and the United Nations in Jakarta on 27 November 2001;

7. Further welcomes the successful holding, on 30 August 2001, of the elections for the East Timor Constituent Assembly and the appointment, on 20 September 2001, of the all-East Timorese Second Transitional Government;

8. Acknowledges that the establishment of an effective and functioning governmental administration is crucial to fostering a stable and secure social, economic and political environment in East Timor, and in this regard urges the international community to continue to support efforts aimed at institution-building and the training of civil servants, in particular in the areas of public finances, the judiciary, senior management and the development and maintenance of the central administrative systems of government;

9. Welcomes the continuing response to food aid needs by the international community, and calls upon the United Nations, other intergovernmental organizations, Member States and non-governmental organizations to assist the East Timorese in ensuring sustainable development in the areas of agriculture, livestock and fisheries;

10. Recommends that outstanding infrastructure needs remain an essential focus of international assistance in such areas as the reconstruction and rehabilitation of public buildings, educational facilities, roads and public services, including water and sanitation and the supply of electricity;

11. Commends the rapid international response in terms of providing health services to the general population, including the early deployment of immunization and disease prevention programmes, and reproductive health care and child nutrition programmes, while recognizing the need for further assistance to rebuild hospitals and train health-care professionals and enhance capacity-building to meet the challenge to public health posed by diseases such as tuberculosis, malaria and the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS);

12. Welcomes the ongoing reopening of schools, the supply and distribution of educational materials, and teacher training, while emphasizing the need for capacity-building, particularly in the area of secondary and higher education, and for continued attention to the rehabilitation needs, including psychosocial support, of children affected by the violence;

13. Acknowledges the efforts of the Government of Indonesia, in cooperation with the Transitional Administration, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Organization for Migration and other humanitarian organizations, to facilitate organized and spontaneous returns of East Timorese refugees from West Timor, and encourages the Government of Indonesia to continue its efforts to establish effective security in and around the refugee camps in West Timor in order to facilitate safe and voluntary returns of refugees;

14. Reaffirms the need to ensure safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel and assistance to all those in need, recognizes in this regard the continuing implementation by the Government of Indonesia of Security Council resolution 1319(2000), encourages the Government to continue its efforts in that regard in full cooperation with Member States, the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations, and underscores the importance of continued international assistance to support the efforts of the Government of Indonesia and relevant organizations to meet the needs of East Timorese refugees in West Timor, inter alia, by assisting their voluntary repatriation or resettlement, and by contributing to humanitarian assistance needs in the camps in West Timor;

15. Urges the United Nations to continue to address the rehabilitation, reconstruction and development needs of East Timor;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution for consideration by the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session.

Indonesia

Maluku

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the crisis in Maluku, Indonesia, amounting to $10.8 million and covering January to December 2001, received 30.8 per cent ($3.3 million) of requirements.

The crisis began in 1999 when violence erupted between Christians and Muslims and, although small-scale interaction between the two groups had increased, segregation remained deep. The military presence had been reduced by half without negative implications. Humanitarian actors had adjusted to the improved environment by decreasing direct assistance, focusing more on capacity-building, and by enabling people to take charge of either food production or generation of income to purchase basic needs. The focus shifted towards rehabilitation, particularly in North Maluku where the security environment was more conducive.

Tajikistan

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/45 [YUN 2000, p. 870], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/56/470], covering developments in the humanitarian situation in Tajikistan from 15 July 2000 to 15 July 2001.

Despite significant improvements in peace and security during the reporting period, the humanitarian situation continued to deteriorate owing to the prevailing drought, severe economic conditions and insufficient livelihoods for over half of the Tajik population. Food production continued to follow the declining trend of preceding years. Although efforts had been made to rehabilitate health-care facilities, health care remained sub-standard. Access to other basic social services, such as water, sanitation and education, was limited by the absence of essential supplies and proper maintenance. Urgent assistance was needed to rehabilitate the collapsing irrigation infrastructure, maintain and renovate agricultural equipment, produce and procure quality cereal seeds and establish an adequate rural finance system.

During the reporting period, 1,835 Tajiks repatriated voluntarily, with the assistance of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). As a result of continued fighting in Afghanistan, some 10,000 Afghans sought refuge on the border between Tajikistan and Afghanistan; UNHCR and OCHA coordinated inter-agency assistance.

In general, the operating environment for the United Nations and international organizations had improved slightly, although recent insecurity limited the number of accessible areas. Operating in three of Tajikistan's four regions, the UNDP Reconstruction, Rehabilitation and Development Programme made significant contributions to social and economic recovery. At the World Bank-led consultative group meeting (Tokyo, 16 May), donors pledged $439 million in support of economic reform and investment programmes for the 2001-2002 biennium. The Secretary-General observed that the provision of increased humanitarian and development assistance was crucial to maintaining and strengthening the achievements of the UN post-conflict peace-building efforts and to keeping Tajikistan on the road to stabilization, democratic development and economic reform.

The Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Tajikistan, launched in 2000, which initially sought $82 million to cover January to December 2001, was revised to $78 million. Of that amount, 75 per cent ($58.5 million) was received. A further appeal was issued for 2002.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 27 November [meeting 65], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/10 [draft: A/56/L.15 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and rehabilitation in Tajikistan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/30 J of 25 April 1997, 52/169 I of 16 December 1997, 53/1 K of 7 December 1998, 54/96 A of 8 December 1999 and 55/45 of 27 November 2000,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Welcoming the progress made by Tajikistan in consolidating peace and stability, and noting the significantly improved security environment in the country,

Recognizing with satisfaction that the United Nations has played a successful and important role in the peace process, and believing that the Organization should continue to provide assistance to Tajikistan in post-conflict peace-building.

Welcoming in this regard the efforts of the United Nations Tajikistan Office for Peace-building aimed at the consolidation of peace, national recovery and reconstruction, promotion of the rule of law and the strengthening of democratic institutions,

Noting with regret that the humanitarian situation has not improved, owing to the severe economic deterioration and the prevailing drought, and that significant humanitarian needs continue to exist throughout Tajikistan,

Recognizing that, until the economy is able to support the Tajik population, humanitarian operations will remain a critical factor in consolidating the achievements of the peace-building process in Tajikistan,

Expressing regret that, despite the widely recognized importance of humanitarian assistance in maintaining and consolidating the achievements of the peace-building efforts, the donor response to the 2001 consolidated inter-agency appeal has not yet reached its target,

Stressing that international funding for humanitarian operations is particularly important since such operations remain the principal means by which hundreds of thousands of Tajiks meet their basic needs,

Noting with concern the lack of support especially for important sectors such as health, education, water and sanitation, which must receive immediate funding if social catastrophe is to be avoided in Tajikistan,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Welcomes the continued role of the United Nations in post-conflict peace-building in Tajikistan and the efforts of the United Nations Tajikistan Office for Peace-building in this regard;
3. Stresses that Tajikistan has entered a new phase of post-conflict peace-building, which requires continued international economic assistance;
4. Recognizes that humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance remains crucial, not only to sustain life but also to promote development and prevent renewed conflict;
5. Welcomes with appreciation the efforts undertaken by the Secretary-General in drawing the attention of the international community to the acute humanitarian problems of Tajikistan and in mobilizing assistance for the post-conflict rehabilitation, recovery and reconstruction of the country;
6. Welcomes the results achieved at the consultative group meeting of donor countries, held in Tokyo on 16 May 2001;
7. Expresses its appreciation to the States, the United Nations, the European Union, the World Bank and other intergovernmental organizations and all relevant humanitarian organizations, agencies and non-governmental organizations, including the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, that have responded and continue to respond positively to the humanitarian needs of Tajikistan;
8. Encourages Member States and others concerned to continue to provide assistance to alleviate the urgent humanitarian needs of Tajikistan and to offer support to Tajikistan for the post-conflict rehabilitation and reconstruction of its economy;

9. Emphasizes the importance of further cooperation and assistance from the authorities in facilitating the work of humanitarian organizations, including non-governmental organizations, welcomes in this regard the establishment of the National Coordination Committee on Humanitarian Assistance by the Government of Tajikistan, and urges the authorities to simplify and streamline without delay the relevant internal bureaucratic procedures and requirements for the delivery of humanitarian assistance;

10. Warmly welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to continue the United Nations humanitarian programme in Tajikistan by issuing a consolidated inter-agency appeal for humanitarian assistance to Tajikistan for 2002, taking into account current developments in the region, and urges Member States to fund fully programmes included in the appeal;

11. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to re-evaluate all United Nations humanitarian assistance activities in Tajikistan with a view to preparing a common humanitarian strategy that would support the relief and recovery operations during the transitional period from relief to development, with a major focus on promoting self-reliance and sustainable development;

12. Stresses the need to ensure the security and freedom of movement of humanitarian personnel, and of United Nations and associated personnel, as well as the safety and security of their premises, equipment and supplies;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the humanitarian situation in Tajikistan and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

14. Decides to consider at its fifty-seventh session the question of the situation in Tajikistan under the item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance".

Europe

Northern Caucasus (Russian Federation)

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Northern Caucasus, issued in 2000, which sought $44.9 million to cover January to December 2001, was revised in June to $42.5 million. The donor community met 89.3 per cent ($38 million) of requirements.

In 2001, the overall situation in the northern Caucasus remained difficult due to the persistent extreme insecurity and high level of poverty in Chechnya. Resource transfers from the federal to the regional level to restore socio-economic life were lower than planned. Insecurity, lack of documents and sufficient shelter, and a dearth of basic services discouraged displaced people from returning to Chechnya. Overall, more people left Chechnya than returned there.

In Ingushetia, there was stability in terms of security and a government structure. However, the social and physical infrastructure was overburdened by the continued presence of displaced persons. In April, the Government stopped registering new arrivals, thereby hampering their access to the Government's humanitarian assistance. Tension increased between host families and internally displaced persons, and a growing number of internally displaced persons faced eviction from spontaneous settlements and host families. In addition, the flow of people leaving Chechnya to go to Ingushetia reached 8,000 by October. A further appeal was launched for 2002.

South-Eastern Europe (Albania and the former Yugoslavia)

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for South-Eastern Europe (Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM)), issued in 2000, which sought $429.2 million to cover January to December 2001, was revised to $413.2 million. The donor community covered 53.4 per cent ($220.5 million) of that amount.

In 2001, the general trend towards stability and development continued in South-Eastern Europe, allowing UN agencies to make progress on return and local integration programmes for refugees and internally displaced persons, and to support the transition from relief assistance towards development programming. However, violent conflict in FYROM early in the year (see p. 368) led to the displacement of some 140,000 persons both within the country and into neighbouring territories. Conflict between ethnic Albanian armed groups and State security forces also escalated in southern Serbia. The United Nations responded with programmes to address the needs of new caseloads generated by the conflicts. By October, peace processes were under way in both countries, and agencies were assisting returns, addressing the enormous needs in conflict-affected areas and working to rebuild community confidence. Other parts of the region enjoyed relative stability, accompanied by political progress and steps towards recovery of civil society.

Albania was characterized by chronic underdevelopment, which affected all segments of the population. In Bosnia and Herzegovina, minority returns increased by nearly 90 per cent, largely prompted by the implementation of property laws. In contrast to the positive side of the return trend, new humanitarian needs were created by the returns due to limited economic opportunities in the country. Organized and spontaneous returns to Croatia increased, as the Government removed many legislative barriers, gave return clearance for former habitual residents and simplified the return procedure. However, the returnees faced difficulties related to housing and employment or income-generating opportunities. After seven months of conflict and displacement, the humanitarian situation in FYROM stabilized in the autumn. Significant resources were required to help stabilize the situation further, allow for the return of refugees and displaced persons, care for those unable to return and maintain emergency preparedness. In FRY, excluding Kosovo, high rates of unemployment and inflation placed 2 million people at or below the poverty line. Already facing depleted health, education and social welfare services, a large segment of the population was unable to meet basic needs, especially during the harsh winter months. The conflict in FYROM resulted in the influx of some 10,000 refugees into FRY, mainly into southern Serbia. While the overall humanitarian situation had improved in the Kosovo province of FRY, unemployment remained high. Poor infrastructure, high crime and lack of respect for the rule of law, coupled with the volatility of the region in general, meant that high unemployment and related pressure for labour migration were likely to continue. Much of Kosovo's economy was geared towards and dependent on the presence of the international community and was considered unsustainable. There were still residual humanitarian needs, particularly related to the influx of some 81,000 mainly ethnic Albanian refugees from FYROM, minority returnees and isolated minority communities. A further appeal for the region was launched to cover 2002.

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/169 [YUN 2000, p. 872], the Secretary-General, in a September report [A/56/361], reviewed humanitarian, socio-economic and human rights developments in FRY during the period 1 July 2000 to 15 July 2001. He described assistance provided by the United Nations and its partners relating to coordination, winterization efforts, food aid, shelter, health, water and sanitation, education and child welfare, agriculture, durable solutions, environmental damage, mine action and human rights.

During the period under review, the domestic and international political context of FRY changed dramatically, strengthening the prospects for making real progress in addressing the root causes of large-scale humanitarian needs. However, the process of development was unlikely to be linear and significant obstacles remained regarding durable solutions. Meeting the basic needs of vulnerable groups within the refugee, displaced and resident populations remained a priority for humanitarian agencies, as did the provision of transitional support to essential services such as health, education and social welfare in order to meet immediate needs, maintain services at a minimum and strengthen the reform process. A donors' conference, co-hosted by the World Bank and the European Commission (Brussels, 29 June), proposed a programme for reform and development, which received strong support.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/101 [draft: A/56/L.49 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Humanitarian assistance to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991, and reaffirming that humanitarian assistance should be provided in accordance with the guiding principles contained in the annex to that resolution,

Recalling also its resolutions 54/96 F of 15 December 1999 and 55/169 of 14 December 2000, concerning humanitarian assistance to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia,

Deeply appreciative of the humanitarian assistance and the rehabilitation support rendered by a number of States, in particular major contributors, international agencies and organizations and non-governmental organizations to alleviate the humanitarian needs of the affected population in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, in particular the emergency assistance provided by the European Union and various countries,

Recognizing the role of the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe and the stabilization and association process for the western Balkans in assisting the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in its efforts in further promoting democratic and economic reforms and in intensifying regional cooperation,

Deeply appreciative of the humanitarian assistance given to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia through the United Nations consolidated inter-agency appeal for South-Eastern Europe, and the humanitarian assistance provided by many Member States outside the framework of the consolidated appeal, through non-governmental organizations, regional organizations and initiatives and bilateral channels,

Welcoming the fact that, at the donor conference hosted jointly by the World Bank and the European Commission in Brussels on 29 June 2001, the programme for reform and development of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia received strong support and confirmed that meeting the basic needs of vulnerable groups within the refugee, displaced and resident populations remains a priority for humanitarian agencies,

Deeply concerned at the continuing urgency of the humanitarian situation in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, aware of the magnitude of the humanitarian requirements of the country, and recognizing the need to ensure effective links between relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development efforts in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia,

Aware of the weakness of the economy and basic services, which exacerbates further the situation of socially and economically vulnerable segments of the population, including refugees and internally displaced persons, and which is coupled with a continuing decrease in basic social services capacity, especially in the health sector,

Acknowledging that a large number of refugees remain in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and that assistance requirements will include, as appropriate, local integration,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Taking note also of the biweekly reports on the humanitarian situation in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, prepared in Belgrade by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat,

Recognizing the role of the United Nations in helping the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to resolve the humanitarian problems that confront it and in coordinating the efforts of the international community to provide humanitarian assistance to the country,

1. Calls upon all States, regional organizations, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other relevant bodies to provide humanitarian assistance to alleviate the humanitarian needs of the affected population in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, bearing in mind in particular the special situation of women, children, the elderly and other vulnerable groups;

2. Also calls upon all States, regional organizations, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other relevant bodies to offer support to the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in its efforts to ensure the transition from relief to the long-term goals of the rehabilitation, reconstruction and development of the country;

3. Welcomes the continued commitment of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, and encourages it to cooperate further with the United Nations system and humanitarian organizations to address the humanitarian needs of the affected population, including refugees and internally displaced persons, and urges the relevant authorities and the international community to support programmes that will ensure that the humanitarian needs of refugees and internally displaced persons in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia are met and to pursue durable solutions to their plight, in particular voluntary repatriation and reintegration, stresses the need to create conditions that are conducive to their safe return, and emphasizes in this regard the importance of regional cooperation in the search for solutions to the plight of refugees;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize the timely provision of international humanitarian assistance to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia;

5. Emphasizes the importance of strengthening the coordination of humanitarian assistance to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, inter alia, through the mechanisms of a consolidated inter-agency appeal, and recognizes in this regard especially the role of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat;

6. Encourages the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Council of Europe and other organizations to enhance their cooperation in the provision of humanitarian assistance to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia;

7. Requests the United Nations and the specialized agencies to continue their efforts to assess the humanitarian needs, in cooperation with the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, relevant international and regional organizations and bodies and interested States, with a view to ensuring effective links between relief and longer-term assistance to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, taking into account the work already carried out in this field and the need to avoid duplication and the overlapping of efforts;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to it at its fifty-seventh session, under the item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance", a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

African economic recovery and development

Economic and Social Council consideration

In accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 2000/303 [YUN 2000 p. 1372], the Council's high-level segment in 2001 (16-18 July) was devoted to "The role of the United Nations in supporting the efforts of African countries to achieve sustainable development" [A/56/3/Rev.1]. The high-level segment comprised a policy dialogue and exchange of views on important developments in the world economy and international economic cooperation; the African Forum for Investment Promotion, which included three round tables on the investment climate in African countries, financing of investment and infrastructure needs; a panel of eminent personalities on the theme "The nexus between peace and development"; and the high-level ministerial discussion on the high-level segment's theme. Following the segment, a panel discussion took place on the Charter for the Public Service in Africa, adopted at the third Biennial Pan-African Conference of Ministers of Civil Service (Windhoek, Namibia, 5-6 February) [A/56/63-E/2001/21].

The Council had before it an extract from the report of the Open-ended Ad Hoc Working Group on the Causes of Conflict and the Promotion of Durable Peace and Sustainable Development in Africa (see p. 111); the Charter for the Public Service in Africa; the report of the Inter-Agency Mission to West Africa [E/2001/56] (see p. 160); the World Economic and Social Survey 2001 (see p. 765); the report of the Committee for Development Policy (CDP) on its third session (see p. 848); the report of the Secretary-General on the role of the United Nations in supporting the efforts of African countries to achieve sustainable development (see p. 848); and a statement submitted by the NGO African Services Committee [E/2001/NGO/2].

Ministerial declaration. On 18 July, the high-level segment adopted a ministerial declaration on the role of the United Nations in support of the efforts of African countries to achieve sustainable development. The Ministers called on the UN system and the international community to support the New African Initiative, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-seventh ordinary session (Lusaka, Zambia, 9-11 July) [A/56/457] (the Initiative was launched and its name changed to the New Partnership for Africa's Development at an implementation meeting of African leaders (Abuja, Nigeria, 23 October)) (see p. 899). They also called for UN efforts to integrate peace and development, develop human capital, strengthen measures to improve agricultural development and food security, support industrialization, mobilize resources for development, harmonize and coordinate development assistance to Africa, and strengthen public-private partnerships to support initiatives in health, education, science and technology, transport, energy supply, and information and communications. The Ministers emphasized the role that sustainable use and management of resources could play in achieving sustainable development. Expressing the belief that the preparatory process for the final review and appraisal in 2002 of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s (see p. 849) presented an opportunity for an assessment of the role of the United Nations and the international community in supporting Africa's priorities, including a comprehensive review of initiatives on Africa, the Ministers suggested that the General Assembly, in considering the final review, should take into account how best to improve the effectiveness of UN support for Africa's priorities and initiatives. The Secretary-General was requested to review the structures charged with follow-up at the Secretariat level.

In a statement made at the opening of the high-level segment, the Secretary-General stated that the United Nations would fully support the New African Initiative and expressed the need to put an end to the multiplicity of initiatives on Africa.

CDP action. In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2000/34 [YUN 2000, p. 807], CDP, at its third session (New York, 2-6 April) [E/2001/33], examined the role of the UN system in supporting the efforts of African countries to achieve sustainable development. The Committee was of the view that the main challenge for Africa was to reappropriate its own development strategy and policies. Sustained growth would be possible if a majority of African people became empowered in the development process. The Committee recommended that the UN system coordinate closely its own activities in order to assist African countries in developing their indigenous coordination capabilities by strengthening appropriate mechanisms at the local, national and regional levels. It urged the UN system to resolve existing coordination failures by establishing clear priorities aimed at implementing carefully designed and integrated development programmes and projects; ensuring the active participation of the African countries in the selection, design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation phases of programmes and projects; developing partnerships among donor agencies, technical assistance experts, host government agencies at the national and local levels, and the recipient countries' civil society; and introducing transparent and publicly accountable monitoring and evaluation procedures. The UN system should also play a leading role in facilitating the inflow of foreign direct investment (FDI) and other long-term private flows to Africa, and re-examine the effectiveness of the current official development assistance (ODA) system based on voluntary contributions by Member countries. Efforts should be made to design innovative mechanisms to reverse the decline in voluntary contributions, possibly through some form of mandatory contributions, and to increase aid effectiveness.

Report of Secretary-General. In a June report on the role of the UN system in supporting the efforts of African countries to achieve sustainable development [E/2001/83], the Secretary-General stated that the United Nations had to play a key role in forging a partnership between Africa and the international community in order to put the continent on the path to sustained growth and improved living conditions. The challenge was to build on African ownership and sound economic policies, which could be achieved with an adequate mix of resource flows, debt relief and much-improved market access for African exports, combined with support for the diversification of the region's economies and the replication of success stories implemented by, or in collaboration with, the UN system.

Having described the current situation in Africa, the UN role in forging a new partnership for growth in Africa and the challenges of sustainable development in Africa, the Secretary-General presented a series of policy conclusions and recommendations to assist the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council in its deliberations (see p. 847). He stated that there should be better integration of UN system support with national development policies and programmes and a shift of inter-agency coordination increasingly to the regional level; further reinforcement of system-wide support for capacity-building in Africa; consistency and harmonization of the country programming framework of the United Nations and of the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund); urgent mobilization of resources to address the HIV/AIDS pandemic and other diseases and to strengthen health systems; encouragement of public-private partnerships; improved governance; and UN support for national and regional strategies to diversify African economies.

Follow-up to the Millennium Summit

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/162 [YUN 2000, p. 62] on the follow-up to the outcome of the Millennium Summit (the United Nations Millennium Declaration contained in resolution 55/2 [ibid., p. 49]), the Secretary-General submitted, in September, the "road map" towards the Declaration's implementation [A/56/326] (see p. 1278). Section VII of the road map dealt with meeting the special needs of Africa, one of the key objectives identified in the Declaration; the road map addressed the challenges posed by extreme poverty, devastating debt burdens, disease, conflict and wavering international interest. Although some of those problems were general to developing countries, Africa suffered particularly from its marginalization in the process of globalization. However, African leadership had galvanized local and international support in the following areas: supporting the New African Initiative; strengthening democratic governance; building peace-keeping capacity further, in cooperation with regional organizations; working for sustainable development; and forming partnerships to combat HIV/AIDS. The Assembly took action on the road map in resolution 56/95 (see p. 1279).

New Agenda for the Development of Africa

The United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s (UN-NADAF), adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 46/151 [YUN 1991, p. 402], continued to be implemented by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), among others.

During the year, consideration of UN-NADAF centred on its final review and appraisal, scheduled to take place in 2002 in accordance with Assembly resolution 51/32 [YUN 1996, p. 832].

UNCTAD action. At its twenty-seventh executive session (Geneva, 19 July) [A/56/15], the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB) considered a report by the UNCTAD Secretary-General on UNCTAD's contribution to the implementation of UN-NADAF [TD/B/EX(27)/2]. The report summarized specific UNCTAD activities, including advisory services and technical cooperation, in each of UNCTAD's mandated sectors—international trade, services development, debt and debt management, international investment and enterprise development, the UNCTAD/UNDP Global Programme on Globalization, Liberalization and Sustainable Human Development, and the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative on Africa.

Final review and appraisal (2002)

CPC action. At its forty-first session (New York, 11 June–6 July) [A/56/16], the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) requested that the final evaluation of UN-NADAF should, among other things, present an assessment of the activities carried out by all partners concerned in the areas covered by the New Agenda and provide a critical analysis, which would make it possible to identify successes, obstacles and failures; highlight lessons learned; and indicate the impact and implications of UN-NADAF activities on Africa's development. It also requested that concrete proposals on the successor arrangements to UN-NADAF be put forward and include effective coordination measures at the international, regional, subregional and national levels.

Note of Secretary-General. In an August note [A/56/270], the Secretary-General discussed preparations for the UN-NADAF final review and appraisal.

As part of the independent evaluation of UN-NADAF and related initiatives requested by the Assembly in resolution 55/216 [YUN 2000, p. 875], the Secretary-General had established a panel of 12 independent personalities from Africa and the international community to oversee the evaluation (see p. 850). The Secretary-General proposed that the Assembly establish an ad hoc committee of the whole to carry out the final review and appraisal. The Assembly did so by resolution 56/218 (see p. 850).

UNCTAD action. At its forty-eighth session (Geneva, 1–12 October) [A/56/15], TDB had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report entitled Economic Development in Africa: Performance, Prospects and Policy Issues [TD/B/48/12], which stated that poverty had increased in the continent and that gross domestic product growth rates were half the annual average growth target of 6 per cent set by UN-NADAF; real per capita incomes were currently 10 per cent below the levels reached in 1980; savings and investment rates remained far below levels required for sustainable growth in the region and for attaining the objective of reducing poverty by half by the year 2015; Africa's share of world trade had fallen dramatically in the past decade, and the continent's terms of trade were 50 per cent lower than in 1980, owing mainly to commodity dependence; FDI remained at less than 1 per cent of world totals and was not expected to fill the resource gap; despite the Enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative, African countries remained highly indebted; and ODA had fallen to historically low levels, representing about one third of UN targets.

In agreed conclusions of 12 October [A/56/15 (agreed conclusions 468(XLVIII))], TDB stated that only a few African countries had met the UN-NADAF targets. Greater coherence among policies regarding African development was needed in order to place the continent on a sustainable growth path to achieve the internationally agreed target of reducing poverty by half by the year 2015. The Board called for renewed and strengthened efforts by developed countries to meet as soon as possible the agreed ODA target of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product (GNP) and the agreed target of earmarking 0.15 per cent to 0.20 per cent of GNP for the least developed countries. Over the longer term, private capital flows and domestic savings should replace official financing, thereby reducing aid dependence. Regarding Africa's debt burden, the Board urged the effective implementation of the Enhanced HIPC Initiative for eligible African countries. Measures to deal with resource requirements should be incorporated into a comprehensive development approach, which could increase considerably the capacity of African countries to export and to augment their share in international trade transactions. Improved market access should be supplemented with specific capacity development programmes to help countries diversify exports and improve competitiveness. The international community should study ways to deal with the problem of declining commodity prices and their impact on African development. The Board encouraged continued attention to external factors and to the shortcomings of domestic markets and enterprises, human capital and physical infrastructure, institutions and income distribution.

Panel meeting. The Panel of Eminent Personalities on the Independent Evaluation of UN-NADAF held its first meeting (New York, 27-28 November) to discuss and endorse the plans and the methodology of the evaluation. A support team to the Panel had visited seven African countries (Botswana, Egypt, Ethiopia, Kenya, Nigeria, South Africa, United Republic of Tanzania), where they met with government officials and representatives of regional and subregional organizations and UN system organizations with a view to obtaining information on the extent of implementation of UN-NADAF priorities and the reasons for the slow or lack of progress in certain priority areas. The Panel was briefed by representatives of African missions, the donor community and UN system organizations on recent developments in Africa and on various initiatives that might have contributed to implementing UN-NADAF priorities. The support team was scheduled to carry out additional field missions in Asia, Latin America, Europe and North America to collect information on the role of the donor community in implementing UN-NADAF.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Final review and appraisal of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s

The General Assembly,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General on the final review and appraisal of the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s,

Reaffirming its resolutions 46/151 of 18 December 1991, the annex to which contains the New Agenda, and 51/32 of 6 December 1996, which states that the final review and appraisal of the New Agenda will be conducted in 2002,

Reaffirming also its resolutions 48/214 of 23 December 1993, 49/142 of 23 December 1994, 53/90 of 7 December 1998 and 55/216 of 21 December 2000 on the implementation of the New Agenda,

Reaffirming further its resolutions 54/234 of 22 December 1999 and 55/217 of 21 December 2000 on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, and recalling its requests in resolutions 54/234 and 55/216 to conduct the final review and appraisal of the New Agenda and related initiatives on the basis of a report by the Secretary-General on an independent high-level quality evaluation,

Mindful of the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2001 of the Economic and Social Council on the role of the United Nations in support of the efforts of African countries to achieve sustainable development, adopted on 18 July 2001, with particular reference to paragraph 26, and the agreed conclusions 1999/2 adopted by the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 1999, on coordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system related to the theme "Development of Africa: implementation and coordinated follow-up by the United Nations system of initiatives on African development",

Mindful also of the report of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, in particular paragraph 60,

1. Decides to establish an ad hoc committee of the whole of the General Assembly as the most appropriate mechanism to conduct the final review and appraisal of the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and related initiatives;

2. Decides also to convene an organizational session of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole in June 2002 for one working day to consider and adopt the necessary arrangements for its work regarding, inter alia, the final review and appraisal of the implementation of the New Agenda and related initiatives on Africa, and decides that the Ad Hoc Committee should establish its bureau at the highest appropriate level, to be composed of a chairman, the President of the General Assembly, assisted by three vice-chairmen and a rapporteur, appointed by the President in consultation with Member States;

3. Decides further that the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole should meet in substantive session for a period of five working days, from 9 to 13 September 2002, and for three working days from 7 to 9 October 2002, during the fifty-seventh session of the General Assembly, to conduct the final review and appraisal of the implementation of the New Agenda and related initiatives on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General on the independent high-level quality evaluation, as mandated in Assembly resolutions 54/234 and 55/216 and in agreed conclusions 1999/2 of the Economic and Social Council, and on other documents that the Ad Hoc Committee will have decided to make use of at its organizational session in June 2002, as well as on proposals by the Secretary-General on the modalities of the United Nations future engagement with the New Partnership for Africa's Development;

4. Decides that a high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly should be held on 16 September 2002 to consider how to support the New Partnership for Africa's Development, in line with paragraph 5 of the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2001 of the Economic and Social Council, which called on the United Nations system and the international community to support the New African Initiative, now called the New Partnership for Africa's Development, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, at its thirty-seventh ordinary session, held at Lusaka from 9 to 11 July 2001, and that preparations for the plenary meeting should be made during the fifty-sixth session of the General Assembly;

5. Urges Member States and organs and bodies of the United Nations system to ensure that they are represented at the highest appropriate level on, and to participate actively in the work of, the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole and in the plenary meeting;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the organs and organizations of the United Nations system concerned, to ensure the necessary preparations for the meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the work of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole, including on the plenary meeting, and on the implementation of the present resolution.

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the UN-NADAF final review and appraisal would remain for consideration during its resumed fifth-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464).

UN System-wide Special Initiative on Africa

CPC action. In response to a 2000 CPC request [YUN 2000, p. 877], the Secretary-General transmitted to CPC's forty-first session (New York, 11 June–6 July) [A/56/16] the independent evaluation [E/AC.51/2001/6 & Corr.1] of the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative on Africa, covering activities since the Initiative's launch in March 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 832]. The evaluation, prepared by three independent experts, concluded that the Initiative had achieved only modest success as a vehicle to encourage coordination among UN agencies. The Initiative's more lasting value was its role in encouraging cooperation within the UN system, and especially with the World Bank. Among other things, the experts said that the Initiative was overly ambitious and too imprecise; the lack of incentives, combined with inadequate consultation, left the Initiative without a sense of ownership from key constituencies; and it was subject to uncertain support from top UN leadership. The experts recommended that the United Nations might support a set of interlocking dialogues involving African countries and regional institutions, donors, the agencies and programmes of the UN system and other multilateral development agencies. The existence of the Initiative as a continuing special initiative should be brought to a close at a time considered appropriate by UN decision-making bodies.

In June comments on the independent experts' report [E/AC.51/2001/7], the Secretary-General stated that, with the exception of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which considered the implications of the report to be far-reaching and indicated that it might refer the matter to its Governing Body before making any comments, UN system organizations—FAO, UNDP, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the World Health Organization (WHO) and the World Bank—agreed that the Initiative should be brought to a close. Those organizations generally agreed that, since the objectives of the Initiative were being absorbed more effectively by existing and planned coordinating mechanisms that were more country-based and responded to Africa's development challenges, the continuation of a special initiative did not provide any value-added. Regarding the framework for a new approach, a number of agencies agreed on the need for dialogue, but cautioned against the creation of yet another structure, and suggested the establishment of benchmarks and indicators to gauge progress in inter-agency coordination.

CPC members raised doubts about the quality and validity of the evaluation report. It was felt that the duration of two months for the evaluation was inadequate and only 6 of 53 countries in Africa had been visited. While the report referred to the Initiative's inability to bring in additional financial resources, it had failed to mention those resources that had actually been mobilized through its efforts. Referring to the comments provided by the Secretary-General on the evaluation, the Committee noted that only eight agencies had submitted comments, although 17 agencies had provided inputs and favourable comments in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 877]. The Committee requested that a more detailed examination of the Initiative be conducted in the context of the final evaluation of UN-NADAF.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/166 [YUN 2000, p. 878], the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/56/269], described assistance provided by the UN system to the DRC in its economic recovery and reconstruction process in the context of recent political change and continuing conflict (see p. 116).

Against a background of limited resources, UN system agencies had continued their cooperation programmes by focusing on humanitarian activities to benefit the most vulnerable groups. Development efforts were targeted at various aspects of poverty reduction in the areas of health, agriculture, local development and employment generation, HIV/AIDS control and the promotion of good governance, including human rights and national capacity-building. An appropriate response to the crisis had been hampered by inadequate funding, difficult access to displaced persons for security reasons and past decisions of the national authorities, some of which had been overturned by the new President, Joseph Kabila. In agriculture, FAO and UNDP collaborated on food security, and, in the context of an emergency agriculture programme in Bas-Congo, FAO, UNHCR and the World Food Programme (WFP) developed synergies in their support for refugees, displaced persons and host populations. UNICEF provided assistance to the most vulnerable groups in the areas of health, food, child protection and assistance to displaced persons. In the health sector, WHO and UNDP helped to rehabilitate the health system in six health zones of several provinces, national immunization days were realized through a broad partnership and HIV/AIDS control was supported. Integration programmes were organized by UNHCR.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Special assistance for the economic recovery and reconstruction of the Democratic Republic of the Congo

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/169 A of 16 December 1997, 53/1 L of 7 December 1998, 54/96 B of 8 December 1999 and 55/166 of 14 December 2000,

Recalling also all resolutions of the Security Council and all statements by its President relating to the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Recalling further the Ceasefire Agreement signed in Lusaka and the Kampala disengagement plan and the obligations of all signatories to those agreements and the obligations deriving from Security Council resolution 1304(2000),

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and all States in the region,

Alarmed at the plight of the civilian population throughout the country, and calling for its protection,

Gravely concerned at the deteriorating economic, social and humanitarian situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular in the eastern Congo, and at the effect of the continued fighting on the inhabitants of the country, especially women and children,

Deeply concerned at the increased rate of infection with the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS), in particular among women and girls in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Expressing its deep concern at the dire consequences of the conflict for the humanitarian and human rights situations,

Gravely concerned at the negative impact of war on the promotion of the sustainable and overall development of the country,

Urging all parties to respect and protect human rights and respect international humanitarian law, in particular, the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Deeply concerned at the continued extensive destruction of life and property and the severe damage to infrastructure and the environment suffered by the Democratic Republic of the Congo, as well as the reports of the illegal exploitation of its natural resources,

Bearing in mind the fact that the Democratic Republic of the Congo hosts thousands of refugees from neighbouring countries, which places a great burden on its limited resources, and hoping that conditions will be created that will facilitate a safe and voluntary return of refugees,

Recalling that the Democratic Republic of the Congo is a least developed country with severe economic and social problems arising from its weak economic infrastructure and aggravated by the ongoing conflict,

Bearing in mind the close interrelationship between ensuring peace and security and the ability of the country to meet the humanitarian needs of its people and to take effective steps towards the rapid revitalization of the economy, and reaffirming the urgent need to assist the Democratic Republic of the Congo in the rehabilitation and reconstruction of its damaged economy and in its efforts to restore basic services and the infrastructure of the country,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Welcomes the opening of the Inter-Congolese Dialogue on 15 October 2001, and calls upon all Congolese parties to make every effort to promote the process and ensure the success of a fully inclusive dialogue in a spirit of consensus;
3. Urges all parties concerned in the region to cease military activities, cease any support for armed groups and any recruitment, training and use of child soldiers, calls upon those States which have not done so to withdraw from the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in accordance with the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement, the Kampala disengagement plan and relevant Security Council resolutions, and urges all parties to engage in a process of political dialogue and negotiation and to create the conditions necessary for the speedy and peaceful resolution of the crisis;
4. Encourages the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to continue and develop its cooperation with the United Nations, its specialized agencies and other organizations in addressing the need for rehabilitation and reconstruction;
5. Also encourages the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to pursue sound macro-economic policies and to promote good governance and the rule of the law, and urges it to exert all efforts for economic recovery and reconstruction despite the ongoing armed conflict;
6. Stresses the link between the peace process and the economic recovery of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, welcomes economic reforms undertaken by its Government, and encourages it to carry on with this process for the benefit of the entire Congolese people;
7. Also stresses the importance of the restoration of river traffic, welcomes in this regard the reopening of the Congo and the Oubangi Rivers, and expresses its support for the establishment of the Congo River Basin Commission;

8. Renews its urgent appeal to the executive boards of the United Nations funds and programmes to continue to keep under consideration the special needs of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

9. Welcomes the continued and increased efforts of the Secretary-General, the United Nations system and its agencies, programmes and funds in ensuring that the gender perspective is mainstreamed in the reconstruction agenda of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

10. Urges all parties to respect fully international humanitarian law and to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel to all affected populations throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the safety of United Nations and humanitarian personnel, and in that regard stresses that the reopening of the Kisangani-Kindu rail and river link would facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance, as well as the resupplying of humanitarian personnel;

11. Calls upon the international community to continue to provide support to the humanitarian relief activities within the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

12. Invites Governments to continue to provide support to the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

13. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue to consult urgently with regional leaders, in coordination with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, about ways to bring about a peaceful and durable solution to the conflict, in accordance with the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement and relevant Security Council resolutions;

(b) To continue to consult with regional leaders, in coordination with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, in order to convene, when appropriate, an international conference on peace, security and development in Central Africa and in the Great Lakes region, under the auspices of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, to address the problems of the region in a comprehensive manner;

(c) To keep under review the economic situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo with a view to promoting participation in and support for a programme of financial and material assistance to the country to enable it to meet its urgent needs in terms of economic recovery and reconstruction;

(d) To submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the actions taken pursuant to the present resolution.

Djibouti

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/96 C [YUN 1999, p. 851], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/56/264] in which he described the situation in Djibouti and progress made in providing assistance for reconstruction and development. The country's development challenges were related to the economic and financial crisis, and recurring emergency situations, including drought, flood and epidemics, combined with large-scale destruction of livestock, water points, health and educational facilities as a result of the internal conflict in the country, had led to the need for further emergency and humanitarian assistance. UN agencies increasingly focused on social development in Djibouti, through activities related to health, food security, rehabilitation and reconstruction, environmental conservation, refugee repatriation, governance, human rights, gender mainstreaming and the integration of NGOs and civil society in development. The Secretary-General called on the international community for financial support to enable him to provide technical assistance to implement urgent socio-economic programmes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/108 [draft: A/56/L.56 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Economic assistance for the reconstruction and development of Djibouti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 54/96 C of 8 December 1999 and its previous resolutions on economic assistance to Djibouti,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Recalling further the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries on 20 May 2001, as well as the mutual commitments undertaken on that occasion and the importance attached to follow-up and the implementation of the Programme of Action,

Aware that Djibouti is included in the list of least developed countries and that it is ranked 137th out of the 162 countries studied in the Human Development Report 2001,

Noting that the economic and social development efforts of Djibouti are constrained by the extremes of the local climate, in particular cyclical droughts, and that the implementation of reconstruction and development programmes requires the deployment of substantial resources which exceed the capacity of the country,

Noting also that the situation in Djibouti has been made worse by the drought situation in the Horn of Africa, and noting further the presence of tens of thousands of refugees and persons displaced from their countries, which has placed serious strains on the fragile economic, social and administrative infrastructure of Djibouti and caused security problems in the country, in particular in the city of Djibouti,

Noting with satisfaction that the Government of Djibouti is continuing to implement a structural adjustment programme, and convinced of the necessity to support that financial recovery programme and to take effective measures to alleviate the consequences, in particular the social consequences, of that adjustment policy, so that the country may achieve lasting economic results,

Noting with gratitude the support provided to relief, demobilization and rehabilitation operations by various countries and by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Declares its solidarity with the Government and the people of Djibouti, who continue to face critical challenges owing, in particular, to the scarcity of natural resources, harsh climatic conditions and the continuing critical situation in the Horn of Africa;

3. Notes with concern the cyclical drought phenomenon in Djibouti, which is wreaking a major humanitarian disaster upon tens of thousands of people, particularly those who are vulnerable, and requests the international community to respond to the appeal launched by the Government;

4. Encourages the Government of Djibouti, despite difficult economic and regional situations, to continue its serious efforts towards the consolidation of democracy;

5. Notes with satisfaction the implementation of a structural adjustment programme by Djibouti, and in that context appeals to all Governments, international financial institutions, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to respond adequately to the financial and material needs of the country;

6. Also notes with satisfaction the general peace agreement concluded between the Government and the opposition on 12 May 2001;

7. Considers that the process of demobilization, reintegration and employment of demobilized soldiers is essential not only for national rehabilitation but also for the success of agreements with the international financial institutions and for the consolidation of peace, and that it requires substantial resources that exceed the capacity of the country;

8. Expresses its gratitude to the intergovernmental organizations and the specialized agencies of the United Nations for their contributions to the national rehabilitation of Djibouti, and invites them to continue their efforts;

9. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continued efforts to make the international community aware of the difficulties faced by Djibouti;

10. Notes with gratitude Djibouti's support for regional peace efforts and its commitment to worldwide efforts to fight terrorism;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue, in close cooperation with the Government of Djibouti, his efforts to mobilize resources necessary for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Djibouti;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session on the progress made with regard to economic assistance to Djibouti and the implementation of the present resolution.

Other economic assistance

Central America

In a July report [A/56/158], submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 54/96 E [YUN 1999, p. 852], the Secretary-General described the activities of UNDP and other UN organs, organizations and programmes carried out between August 1999 and April 2001 to support the efforts of Central American countries to implement a new sustainable development strategy in the region. The report also discussed efforts made by the Central American Governments and people to recover from natural disasters and to utilize the reconstruction process as an opportunity to transform their societies within the context of the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America (ALIDES), established in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 389].

The UNDP programme for subregional cooperation in Central America, which was launched in 1996 within the ALIDES framework [YUN 1996, p. 154], focused on peace and democratic governance, economic and social development, and environmental sustainable development. The UNDP programme and the national programmes of UN agencies were reviewed during the preparations and conclusions of the Regional Consultative Group for strengthening integration and cooperation in Central America (Madrid, Spain, 8-9 March). With regard to peace and democratic governance, at the regional level the UNDP project entitled "State of the region" continued to carry out systematic follow-up on the process of human development and integration in Central America. At the national level, the UN system in El Salvador, Guatemala and Nicaragua continued to promote the consolidation of peace and consensus-building on the reforms needed to address the root causes of the Central American conflict. UNDP support was also provided to Costa Rica, Honduras and Panama. Bilateral donors had granted financial resources to UNDP to strengthen democratic institutions at the national level in Guatemala and Honduras. UNDP/Guatemala initiated programmes in the area of human rights, justice and reconciliation. Economic and social development programmes were carried out throughout the region to alleviate poverty, improve agricultural development, health and nutrition, public finance and economic growth and reduce environmental vulnerability.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/105 [draft: A/56/L.53 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

International assistance to and cooperation with the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America

The General Assembly,
Reaffirming the resolutions in which it emphasizes and acknowledges the importance of international, bilateral and multilateral economic, financial and technical support, cooperation and assistance for peace-keeping and peace-building in Central America following the armed conflicts in the region, in particular its resolutions 49/21 I of 20 December 1994, 50/58 B of 12 December 1995, 50/132 of 20 December 1995, 52/169 G of 16 December 1997 and 54/96 E of 15 December 1999, which provide a frame of reference for international assistance to and cooperation with the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America, in support of national efforts to make the region a zone of peace, freedom, democracy and development,

Noting that the Central American countries have achieved significant progress towards the consolidation of democracy and good governance, the strengthening of civilian Governments, respect for human rights and the rule of law and the promotion of State and economic reforms, sustainable development and regional integration, reflecting the desire of the Central American peoples to live and prosper in a climate of peace and solidarity,

Stressing the importance and effectiveness of the commitments undertaken by the Central American Presidents at various regional presidential summits, in particular those which constitute the global framework for promoting and consolidating peace, freedom, democracy and sustainable human development in Central America,

Stressing also the consolidation of the Centre for Coordination of the Prevention of Natural Disasters in Central America, which is of great value for the sub-region in the development of more effective strategies to mitigate the impact of natural disasters,

Recognizing the extreme vulnerability of the poorest sectors of the population, in particular women and children, and the inadequacy of existing local and national institutions to deal with recurrent natural disasters,

Noting that the various natural phenomena which have affected the region are one of the factors that have put at risk the biodiversity of Central America,

Noting also the holding of the meeting of the Regional Consultative Group for the transformation and modernization of Central America, co-hosted by the Inter-American Development Bank and the Government of Spain, in Madrid on 8 and 9 March 2001, at which the main theme was the revision of the regional strategy for strengthening regional integration and cooperation and their contribution to poverty reduction and the acceleration of sustainable growth,

Taking into account that the Governments of the region have designated the period 2000-2004 as the Quinquennium for the Reduction of Vulnerability to and the Impact of Natural Disasters in Central America and that the Presidents of the region adopted the Strategic Framework for the Reduction of Vulnerability and Disasters in Central America, on 19 October 1999, in the Declaration of Guatemala II which contains guidelines for the elaboration, updating, improvement and development of regional plans for the reduction of vulnerability to and the impact of natural disasters, the integrated management and conservation of water resources and the prevention and control of forest fires,

Stressing that the achievement of the national priorities in the political, economic, social, cultural, environmental, public safety and regional integration fields, which are set out in the programme of the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America, is essential for reducing the vulnerability of the region to natural disasters and for promoting sustainable development,

Considering the necessity of ensuring the elimination of anti-personnel mines from Central American territory as well as the rehabilitation and reintegration of mine victims in their communities in order to restore normal conditions for the integral development of that region,

Recognizing the valuable and effective contribution made by the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and by the various governmental and non-governmental mechanisms, the donor community and the Regional Consultative Group for the transformation and modernization of Central America and the importance of the political dialogue and cooperation taking place between the European Union and Central America and the joint initiative of the industrialized countries of the Group of Twenty-four and the Group of Three (Colombia, Mexico and Venezuela) in the progress made towards consolidating peace, freedom, democracy and the implementation of the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America,

Reaffirming the need to continue focusing attention on the situation in Central America, with a view to overcoming the underlying causes of the armed conflicts which have impeded the development of the region and avoiding a reversal of the achievements,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reiterates the importance of supporting and strengthening the efforts of the Central American countries to implement the Strategic Framework for the Reduction of Vulnerability and Disasters in Central America, and the projects and programmes of the Quinquennium for the Reduction of Vulnerability to and the Impact of Natural Disasters in Central America, in accordance with the process of transformation and sustainable development for the region, which contain basic guidelines for the prevention and mitigation of damage, with special emphasis on the most vulnerable groups and sectors, as identified by levels of poverty and marginality;

3. Notes the efforts and achievements relating to mine clearance in Central America, and appeals to the organs of the United Nations system, in particular the Mine Action Service of the Department of Peace-keeping Operations of the Secretariat, the Organization of American States, as well as the international community, to continue providing the material, technical and financial support needed by the Central American Governments to complete mine-clearance, mine-awareness and victim assistance activities in the region, in conformity with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and with the provisions of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction that relate to international cooperation and assistance;

4. Stresses the need for the international community to maintain its cooperation and assistance, including provision of financial resources, both bilateral and multilateral, with the Central American countries to support the promotion of sustainable development and the consolidation of peace, freedom and democracy in the region;

5. Notes with appreciation the revision of the sub-regional cooperation programme in Central America of the United Nations Development Programme, launched in 1996, and of the national programmes of other United Nations agencies on the basis of the regional strategy entitled "Strategy for the transformation and modernization of Central America", the main objectives of which are the reduction of social, economic and environmental vulnerabilities, the transformation of productive sectors, sustainable management of natural resources, and the increased participation of civil society in development;

6. Notes with satisfaction the progress achieved in the establishment of a Meso-American Biological Corridor, which is being developed with assistance from the United Nations Development Programme's own funds, the Global Environment Facility through the World Bank, the United Nations Environment Programme, the Inter-American Development Bank, the German Agency for Technical Cooperation and the United States Agency for International Development;

7. Supports the decision of the Central American Governments to concentrate their efforts on the implementation of updated programmes with strategies to achieve sustainable human development in previously determined priority areas, which help to consolidate democracy and resolve social inequalities and extreme poverty;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and all States, international financial institutions and regional and subregional organizations to continue providing the support needed to attain the objectives of the programme for the sustainable development of Central America, including those which are being pursued within the framework of the Quinquennium for the Reduction of Vulnerability to and the Impact of Natural Disasters in Central America;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

10. Decides to consider at its fifty-eighth session the question of international assistance to and cooperation with the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America.

Haiti

In response to Economic and Social Council decision 2000/235 [YUN 2000, p. 879], the Secretary-General submitted a May report [E/2001/67] on steps taken by the Haitian Government, the UN system and the international community towards elaborating a long-term programme of support for Haiti and on practical modalities for its implementation.

The Secretary-General described the UN development system's principal activities in Haiti in 2000 and observed that significant progress had been achieved in terms of preparing instruments to improve the coordination of UN operational activities with the Government of Haiti. The UN system country team had concluded in April the United Nations Development Assistance Framework for the period 2002-2006. Its overall objective was to promote sustainable human development through action to combat poverty and social exclusion, the strengthening of the rule of law, and the protection, observance and achievement of human rights. At the same time, the Government had focused on formulating its medium- and long-term strategic development framework, using, among other sources, the UN system's common country assessment document to provide data and indicators for planning Haiti's development programmes. The resident coordinator would continue to advocate action to strengthen the operational links between the UN system, the Bretton Woods institutions and the donor community.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2001/25 [draft: E/2001/L.35] without vote [agenda item 7 (f)].

Long-term programme of support for Haiti

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1999/11 of 27 July 1999 and its decision 2000/235 of 27 July 2000,

Taking note of the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General on the long-term programme of support for Haiti,

Welcoming the key role being played by the Organization of American States and the Caribbean Community in supporting the efforts of the Haitian Government and people to resolve the political, social and economic crisis,

Requests the Secretary-General to report to it at its substantive session of 2002 on progress achieved in elaborating a long-term programme of support for Haiti and on the practical modalities for its implementation.

Third States affected by sanctions

In a June note [E/2001/90], submitted in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2000/32 [YUN 2000, p. 879] and General Assembly resolution 55/157 [ibid., p. 1271], the Secretary-General drew attention to his 2000 report on the implementation of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions [ibid., p. 1270].

On 26 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's note (decision 2001/315).

States affected in the Balkans

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/170 [YUN 2000, p. 880], the Secretary-General submitted a November report on economic assistance to the Eastern European States affected by the consequences of severing their economic relations with FRY [A/56/632]. The report summarized information provided by seven States and 11 UN organizations, programmes and funds describing action they had taken to assist the affected States.

Although the limited number of replies was insufficient to make a conclusive assessment, the Secretary-General noted that recent analyses by international bodies in the region indicated that the affected countries continued to face varying economic difficulties and adjustment problems. Those difficulties stemmed from internal and external factors, including the long-term consequences of the developments in the Balkans during the preceding decade. The recent democratic changes in FRY (see p. 345) had strengthened the prospects for resuming and enhancing regional cooperation, particularly with regard to traditional economic links throughout the Balkans and the rest of Europe. However, ensuring the lasting stability and sustainable development of South-Eastern Europe would require the continued and concerted efforts of the countries of the region and the international development actors.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/110 [draft: A/56/L.58 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Economic assistance to the Eastern European States affected by the developments in the Balkans

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 54/96 G of 15 December 1999 and 55/170 of 14 December 2000,

Recalling also the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe, adopted in Cologne, Germany, on 10 June 1999, and endorsed at the Sarajevo Summit of 30 July 1999, and emphasizing the crucial importance of its implementation,

Stressing the importance of the regional cooperation initiatives, assistance arrangements and organizations, such as the South-East European Cooperative Initiative, the South-East European Cooperation Process, the Central European Initiative, the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization and the Danube Commission, as well as the Stabilization and Association process and other arrangements for the Eastern European States with the European Union,

Noting the leading role played by the high-level steering group for South-Eastern Europe, under the joint chairmanship of the European Commission and the World Bank, in guiding the donor coordination process for the economic reconstruction, stabilization, reform and development of the region, in close cooperation with the Stability Pact,

Mindful of the positive results of the two regional funding conferences for South-Eastern Europe organized by the European Commission and the World Bank in cooperation with the Stability Pact, held in Brussels on 29 and 30 March 2000 and in Bucharest on 25 and 26 October 2001, and of the progress achieved in mobilizing and coordinating support of the donor community and international financial institutions for reconstruction and development efforts in South-Eastern Europe,

Welcoming the democratic changes in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and their positive effects on peace, stability and development in South-Eastern Europe,

Welcoming also the positive results of the International Donors Conference for the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, co-hosted by the World Bank and the European Commission in Brussels on 29 June 2001, and the progress achieved in mobilizing and coordinating support of the donor community and international financial institutions for the reconstruction and development of Yugoslavia,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and the conclusions contained therein,

1. Expresses concern at the persistence of special economic problems confronting the Eastern European States affected by the developments in the Balkans, in particular their impact on regional trade and economic relations and on the navigation along the Danube and on the Adriatic Sea;

2. Welcomes the support already provided by the international community, in particular by the European Union and other major donors, to the affected States to assist them in coping with their special economic problems during the transition period following the developments in the Balkans, as well as in the longer-term process of economic recovery, structural adjustment and development in the region;

3. Also welcomes the progress made in the implementation of the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe, the objective of which is to strengthen countries in South-Eastern Europe in their efforts to foster peace, democracy, respect for human rights and economic prosperity, in order to achieve stability in the whole region, and in its follow-up activities, aimed, inter alia, at economic reconstruction, development and cooperation, including economic cooperation in the region and between the region and the rest of Europe;

4. Invites all States and the relevant international organizations, both within and outside the United Nations system, in particular the international financial institutions, to continue to take into account the special needs and situations of the affected States in providing support and assistance to their efforts for economic recovery, structural adjustment and development;

5. Emphasizes the importance of a well-coordinated and timely donor response to the external funding requirements of the process for economic reconstruction, stabilization, reform and development in the Balkans, as well as financial support to other affected countries of Eastern Europe;

6. Encourages the affected States of the region to continue and enhance the process of multilateral regional cooperation in the fields of transport and infrastructure development, including the resumption of full navigation on the Danube, as well as to foster conditions favourable to trade, in such areas as customs, investment and private sector development, including privatization, in all the countries of the region;

7. Invites the relevant international organizations to take appropriate steps, consistent with the principle of efficient and effective procurement and with the agreed measures for procurement reform, in order to broaden access for interested local and regional vendors and to facilitate their participation in the international assistance efforts for the reconstruction, recovery and development of the region;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Disaster relief

The scale and number of natural disasters continued to grow in 2001. Asia was struck by more natural disasters than any other continent during the year, among them consecutive dzuds, or periods of devastating cold, in Mongolia, a devastating earthquake in India, serious floods in Bangladesh, Cambodia and Viet Nam, and a volcanic eruption in the Philippines. In the first 10 months of the year, natural disasters killed 20,871 people and affected 57.8 million others in the region.

Southern Africa witnessed a series of extensive floods and droughts in 2001. Heavy rains caused severe flooding in Angola, Malawi, Mozambique, Zambia and Zimbabwe, while other areas of Mozambique, Zambia and Zimbabwe were parched by drought after long spells without rain. Flooding in southern Angola added to the disruption caused by the civil war, and nearly 50 per cent of Malawi's 27 districts were flooded and 130,000 people were displaced. When the rivers Shire (Malawi) and Zambezi (Zimbabwe) burst their banks, flood waters rose drastically in the four central and southern provinces of Mozambique and more than 500,000 people were affected, of whom more than 230,000 were displaced. Central and East Africa were affected by both man-made and natural disasters that caused appalling levels of human suffering. West Africa experienced climatic changes manifested in natural disasters, including flooding and drought, and forced migration southwards from the Sahel, due to desertification and lack of cultivable land.

The Latin America and Caribbean region was hit hard in 2001. Within one month, two earthquakes shook El Salvador, followed by an earthquake in Peru, then drought affected Central America, and, during the hurricane season, hurricanes Iris and Michelle wrought havoc in Central America and the Caribbean.

The year was relatively calm in the Pacific in terms of natural disasters, reflecting the prolonged but weakening La Niña phase. However, at the end of February, tropical cyclone Paula adversely affected Fiji and Vanuatu. Five weeks later, tropical cyclone Sose struck the same islands of central and southern Vanuatu. Outer-island communities in Vanuatu were again affected by the eruption of Lopevi Volcano in June.

During the year, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), through the Response Coordination Branch and the Emergency Services Branch, mobilized and coordinated assistance to 67 natural disasters.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/99 [draft: A/56/L.14 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (a)].

Emergency response to disasters

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations, including the guiding principles of humanitarian assistance contained therein,

Recalling its resolutions 44/236 of 22 December 1989, 54/30 of 22 November 1999 and 54/219 of 22 December 1999,

Welcoming the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction,

Deeply concerned by the fact that natural disasters in every corner of the globe continue to claim high numbers of casualties and cause immense material damage and that the frequency and magnitude of these catastrophes place an ever-increasing material and moral burden on nations,

Reiterating the importance of mounting prompt and effective relief operations in the aftermath of such deadly calamities in the future,

Welcoming the ongoing efforts, led by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, aimed at promoting preparedness for disaster response at the international, regional and national levels, including, in collaboration with the International Search and Rescue Advisory Group, initiatives to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of international urban search and rescue assistance in the aftermath of natural disasters,

1. Expresses its solidarity with the peoples of the countries that have been struck by natural calamities as they cope with the consequences of these disasters;

2. Expresses its appreciation to all States of the international community, international agencies and organizations and non-governmental organizations and individuals that are providing emergency relief to the areas affected by natural disasters;

3. Notes with satisfaction the progress achieved by the Governments of Turkey and Greece, in cooperation with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, on the formation of a joint Hellenic-Turkish standby disaster response unit, which will be operational in the near future, with no financial implications for the programme budget of the United Nations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, through the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, to continue work on the modalities for the utilization of the standby disaster relief unit by the United Nations system;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

International cooperation

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/163 [YUN 2000, p. 848], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/56/307] in which he described international cooperation to mitigate the effects of natural disasters. OCHA, the focal point within the UN system to promote and coordinate disaster response preparedness among the UN humanitarian agencies and other partners, had carried out an independent review of the UN disaster assessment and coordination system, which had engendered useful recommendations to improve the system further. To strengthen response preparedness, OCHA established offices for regional disaster response advisers in South America, Asia and the Pacific. In response to an increase in disasters affecting entire regions, UN agencies with mitigation responsibilities, such as UNDP, FAO, WFP, the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) and the World Bank, had increased their disaster reduction capacities and funding. The UN disaster assessment and coordination team system remained one of the most effective and participatory international rapid response tools available to the Emergency Relief Coordinator. In the first half of 2001, six missions were undertaken, including in response to the severe winter in Mongolia, floods in the Russian Federation and earthquakes in El Salvador, India and Peru. The International Search and Rescue Advisory Group took major steps during the year to speed up the response of international urban search and rescue teams in the event of an earthquake.

With regard to the transition from relief to recovery after a major emergency, external strengthening of capacities from an early stage was necessary to ensure a smooth process. The concept of transitional recovery teams had been introduced by UNDP, which had further strengthened the capacity of its country offices and the resident coordinator system to initiate support to the early recovery efforts of national authorities. At the country level, UNDP had supported more than 50 national capacity-building programmes in natural disaster prevention, preparedness and mitigation.

The Secretary-General recommended that the secretariat of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction (see p. 861), in collaboration with OCHA, UNDP and other partners, take the lead in developing an inventory of existing disaster mitigation capacity and inform the Assembly of progress made.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/103 [draft: A/56/L.51 & Corr.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (a)].

International cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, from relief to development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991, the annex to which contains the guiding principles for the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations system, and its resolutions 52/12 B of 19 December 1997, 54/219 and 54/233 of 22 December 1999 and 55/163 of 14 December 2000, and recalling agreed conclusions 1999/1 of the Economic and Social Council and Council resolution 1999/63 of 30 July 1999,

Recognizing the importance of the principles of neutrality, humanity and impartiality for the provision of humanitarian assistance,

Emphasizing that the affected State has the primary responsibility in the initiation, organization, coordination and implementation of humanitarian assistance within its territory, and in the facilitation of the work of humanitarian organizations in mitigating the consequences of natural disasters,

Emphasizing also the responsibility of all States to undertake disaster preparedness and mitigation efforts in order to minimize the impact of natural disasters,

Welcoming the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction,

Emphasizing the importance of raising awareness among developing countries of the capacities existing at the national, regional and international levels that could be deployed to assist them,

Emphasizing also the importance of international cooperation in support of the efforts of the affected States in dealing with natural disasters in all their phases, including prevention, preparedness, mitigation and recovery and reconstruction, and of strengthening the response capacity of affected countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on international cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, from relief to development and on strengthening the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations;

2. Expresses deep concern at the increasing number and scale of natural disasters, resulting in massive losses of life and property worldwide, in particular in vulnerable societies lacking adequate capacity to mitigate effectively the long-term negative social, economic and environmental consequences of natural disasters;

3. Calls upon all States to adopt, where required, and to continue to implement effectively necessary legislative and other appropriate measures to mitigate the effects of natural disasters, inter alia, by disaster prevention, including building regulations and appropriate land use, as well as disaster preparedness and capacity-building in disaster response, and requests the international community in that context to continue to assist developing countries, where appropriate;

4. Stresses, in that context, the importance of strengthening international cooperation in the provision of humanitarian assistance in support of the efforts of the affected States in dealing with natural disasters in all their phases, from relief and mitigation to development, including through the provision of adequate resources, and encourages the effective use of multilateral mechanisms;

5. Also stresses that humanitarian assistance for natural disasters should be provided in accordance with and with due respect for the guiding principles contained in the annex to resolution 46/182, and should be determined on the basis of the human dimension and needs arising out of the particular natural disasters;

6. Recognizes that economic growth and sustainable development contribute to improving the capacity of States to mitigate, respond to and prepare for natural disasters;

7. Reaffirms that disaster reduction forms an integral part of sustainable development strategies and needs to be considered in the development plans of all vulnerable countries and communities, and also reaffirms that within such preventive strategies, disaster preparedness and early warning systems must be strengthened further at the country and regional levels, inter alia, through better coordination among relevant United Nations bodies and cooperation with Governments of affected countries and regional and other relevant organizations with the aim of maximizing the effectiveness of natural disaster response and reducing the impact of natural disasters, particularly in developing countries;

8. Emphasizes the importance of enhanced international cooperation, including with the United Nations and regional organizations, to assist developing countries in their efforts to build capacities, and to predict, prepare and respond to natural disasters;

9. Stresses the need for partnership among Governments of the affected countries, relevant humanitarian organizations and specialized companies to promote training in, access to and use of technologies to strengthen preparedness for and response to natural disasters, and to enhance the transfer of current technologies and corresponding know-how, in particular to developing countries, on concessional and preferential terms, as mutually agreed;

10. Encourages the further use of space-based and ground-based remote-sensing technologies for the prevention, mitigation and management of natural disasters, where appropriate;

11. Also encourages in such operations the sharing of geographical data, including remotely sensed images and geographic information system and global positioning system data among Governments, space agencies and relevant international humanitarian organizations, as appropriate, and notes in that context the work being done by the International Charter on Space and Major Disasters and the Global Disaster Information Network;

12. Stresses that particular international cooperation efforts should be undertaken to enhance and broaden further the utilization of national and local capacities and, where appropriate, regional and subregional capacities of developing countries for disaster preparedness and response, which may be made available in closer proximity to the site of a disaster, more efficiently and at lower cost;

13. Welcomes the role of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat as the focal point within the overall United Nations system for the promotion and coordination of disaster response preparedness among the United Nations humanitarian agencies and other humanitarian partners;

14. Also welcomes the establishment of the positions of regional disaster response advisers by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, as well as the initiative of the United Nations Development Programme to establish regional disaster reduction adviser positions, and encourages the further development of those initiatives in a coordinated and complementary manner in order to assist developing countries in capacity-building for disaster prevention, preparedness mitigation and response;

15. Takes note of the initiatives taken by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and by the International Search and Rescue Advisory Group to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of international urban search and rescue assistance in the aftermath of natural disasters;

16. Encourages the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs to continue its efforts to promote greater international cooperation to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of urban search and rescue assistance;

17. Encourages further cooperation between the United Nations system and regional organizations in order to increase the capacity of those organizations to respond to natural disasters;

18. Encourages States that have not signed or ratified the Tampere Convention on the Provision of Telecommunication Resources for Disaster Mitigation and Relief Operations, adopted at Tampere, Finland, on 18 June 1998, to consider doing so;

19. Invites the United Nations system to explore further the concept of transitional recovery teams for providing assistance for bridging relief assistance and development cooperation;

20. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with relevant organization partners, to continue progress on compiling a directory of disaster mitigation capacity existing at the national, regional and international levels and developing the Directory of Advanced Technologies for Disaster Response as a new part of the Central Register of Disaster Management Capacities;

21. Also requests the Secretary-General to complete the project of issuing a global report on disaster reduction as undertaken by the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction;

22. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to consider mechanisms to improve the international response to natural disasters, inter alia, by addressing any geographical and sectoral imbalances in such a response, where they exist, as well as by more effective use of national emergency response agencies, taking into account their comparative advantages and specializations, as well as existing arrangements, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session under the item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance", with a view, inter alia, to contributing towards the comprehensive report on the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, to be submitted to the Assembly at that session under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development".

International Strategy for Disaster Reduction

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/219 [YUN 1999, p. 861], the Secretary-General submitted a May report [A/56/68-E/2001/63 & Corr.1] on the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction (ISDR). The Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction and the ISDR secretariat served as the main mechanisms for the implementation of the Strategy.

The Inter-Agency Task Force (Geneva, 3-4 May) identified priority issues in disaster reduction to be addressed by the international community. A review of the Task Force working groups [YUN 2000, p. 882] suggested that start-up activities in terms of the identification of their membership, agreement on their work programme and the determination of the substantive issues to be addressed required considerable effort on the part of the lead agencies. Moreover, the convening of meetings had been constrained by the lack of resources.

The ISDR secretariat had developed a framework for action to implement the Strategy, which identified four main objectives: increasing public awareness; promoting commitment on the part of public authorities; stimulating interdisciplinary and intersectoral partnerships, and expanding risk reduction networking; and improving scientific knowledge of the causes of natural disasters and the effects of natural hazards and related technological and environmental disasters on societies. The framework also incorporated the continuation of international cooperation to reduce the impact of El Niño and other climatic variables and the strengthening of disaster reduction capacities through the development of early warning systems. The Task Force, which had endorsed the framework, had succeeded in identifying priority areas for action relevant to disaster reduction, including climate variability, early warning, vulnerability and risk, as well as wild land fires. It had also sought to launch initiatives on those areas through its working groups.

The report described activities taken by partner agencies and organizations to support the Strategy.

The Secretary-General recommended that the framework serve as the basic guide to implement the Strategy. He proposed that the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly launch a 10-year review of the implementation of the outcome of the 1994 Yokohama World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction [YUN 1994, p. 851], beginning in 2002, to ensure that a comprehensive assessment was made of progress in disaster reduction, with a view to identifying ways to further strengthen the efforts of the international community in support of that objective. The formula for constituting the Inter-Agency Task Force should be modified in order to provide for increased participation of regional organizations and ensure the continued membership of key UN agencies. The key strategic agencies that participated in the Task Force should be increased from eight to a maximum of 14. Similarly, the number of regional organizations should be increased to a maximum of eight. Half of the members representing regional organizations and NGOs should be rotated on a biennial basis, beginning in January 2002. Donors were urged to increase their contributions to the Trust Fund for the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction. The Secretary-General intended to report to the Assembly's sixty-first session in 2006 on the implementation of his recommendations to determine what modifications might be necessary in the Strategy, taking into account the recommendations emanating from the proposed 10-year review of the Yokohama conference process.

A further meeting of the Inter-Agency Task Force (Geneva, 15-16 November) reviewed achievements made in implementing its work plan for 2001.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2001/35 [draft: E/2001/L.19/Rev.1] without vote [agenda item 13 (h)].

International Strategy for Disaster Reduction

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 44/236 of 22 December 1989, 49/22 A of 2 December 1994, 49/22 B of 20 December 1994, 53/185 of 15 December

1998, 54/219 of 22 December 1999 and 55/163 of 14 December 2000, and reiterating its resolution 1999/63 of 30 July 1999 entitled "International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction: successor arrangements",

Recalling also the forward-looking platform for international concerted disaster reduction, as developed by the World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction and as expressed in the Yokohama Strategy for a Safer World: Guidelines for Natural Disaster Prevention, Preparedness and Mitigation and its Plan of Action, as well as the Geneva mandate on disaster reduction and the strategy document entitled "A safer world in the twenty-first century: risk and disaster reduction",

Emphasizing the multisectoral, interdisciplinary and cross-cutting nature of natural disaster reduction, and stressing that continued interaction, cooperation and partnerships among the institutions concerned are considered essential to achieve jointly agreed objectives and priorities,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, including the conclusions and recommendations contained therein,

Having also considered the current institutional arrangements, as established by the General Assembly in its resolution 54/219, with the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction and the inter-agency secretariat for the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, and taking into account the assessment after the first period of operations,

Recognizing that disaster reduction is an important element contributing to the achievement of sustainable development and that it should be taken into account in the preparatory process of the World Summit on Sustainable Development to be held at Johannesburg, South Africa, in 2002,

Reiterating that natural disasters damage the social and economic infrastructure of all countries, although the long-term consequences of natural disasters are especially severe for developing countries and hamper their sustainable development,

Welcoming the emphasis placed on natural disaster reduction in the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, adopted at Brussels in May 2001,

Recognizing that disaster reduction should be regarded as an important function of the United Nations and should receive continued attention,

Stressing the need for the international community to demonstrate the firm political determination required to utilize scientific and technical knowledge to reduce the vulnerability to natural disasters and environmental hazards, taking into account the particular needs of developing countries,

1. Expresses its deep concern at the increasing number and scale of natural disasters, which have resulted in massive loss of life and long-term negative social, economic and environmental consequences for vulnerable societies worldwide, in particular in developing countries;

2. Reaffirms that the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction should perform the functions as indicated in the report of the Secretary-General, in particular to serve as a main forum within the United Nations system for devising strategies and policies for disaster reduction and to ensure complementary action by agencies involved in disaster reduction, mitigation and preparedness, and decides to review the activities of the Task Force in 2003;

3. Decides that the Task Force should be modified in order to provide for the increased participation of regional organizations and to ensure the continued membership of key United Nations agencies;

4. Recognizes that the framework for action for the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, as endorsed by the Task Force, constitutes the basic guide for the implementation of the Strategy, and that the framework shall be periodically reviewed, according to the evolving needs in the field of natural disaster reduction;

5. Urges all relevant bodies within the United Nations system to cooperate fully within the context of the framework;

6. Stresses that the inter-agency secretariat for the implementation of the Strategy should be consolidated to perform its functions effectively, in particular to serve as the focal point within the United Nations system for the coordination of disaster reduction and to ensure synergies among disaster-reduction activities of the United Nations system and regional organizations and activities in socio-economic and humanitarian fields;

7. Calls upon Governments to continue to cooperate and coordinate their efforts with the United Nations system, other international organizations, regional organizations, non-governmental organizations and other partners, as appropriate, in order to ensure effective synergies in the field of natural disasters, and urges the Strategy secretariat to develop such synergies, as appropriate;

8. Underlines the importance of adequate financial and administrative resources for the effective functioning of the Task Force and the Strategy secretariat, under the direct authority of the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs;

9. Calls upon Governments to establish national platforms or focal points for disaster reduction, urges the United Nations system to provide appropriate support for those mechanisms, and invites the Secretary-General to strengthen the regional outreach of the Strategy secretariat in order to ensure such support;

10. Invites Governments and relevant organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen national participation, in particular of disaster-prone countries, in the Strategy, including through national multisectoral and interdisciplinary platforms, in order to achieve sustainable development goals and objectives, with the full utilization of scientific and technical knowledge, including through capacity-building at all levels and the development and strengthening of global and regional approaches that take into account regional, sub-regional, national and local circumstances and needs, as well as the need to strengthen coordination of national emergency response agencies;

11. Recognizes the urgent need to develop further and make use of the existing scientific and technical knowledge to reduce vulnerability to natural disasters, and emphasizes the need for developing countries to have access to technology to tackle natural disasters effectively;

12. Encourages the international community to provide the necessary financial resources to the Trust

Fund for the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction and to provide adequate scientific, technical, human and other resources to ensure adequate support for the Strategy secretariat and for the Task Force and its working groups;

13. Requests the relevant organizations of the United Nations system to support the implementation of the goals of the Strategy, including by seconding technical staff to the Strategy secretariat;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on disaster reduction to the preparatory process for the World Summit on Sustainable Development to be held at Johannesburg, South Africa, in 2002;

15. Takes note of the proposal of the Secretary-General to review the implementation of the Yokohama Strategy for a Safer World: Guidelines for Natural Disaster Prevention, Preparedness and Mitigation and its Plan of Action, within the context of the framework for action for the implementation of the Strategy;

16. Reiterates the need to continue international cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon, within the framework for the Strategy, as requested by the Council in its resolutions 1999/46 of 28 July 1999 and 2000/33 of 28 July 2000 and by the General Assembly in its resolutions 52/200 of 18 December 1997, 53/185, 54/220 of 22 December 1999 and 55/197 of 20 December 2000;

17. Recognizes the importance of early warning as an essential element in the culture of prevention, and encourages renewed efforts at all levels to contribute to natural hazard monitoring and impact prediction, the development and transfer of technology, capacity-building for disaster preparedness, the detection of natural hazards and the issuance and communication of early warning, as well as education and professional training, public information and awareness-raising activities, and stresses the need for appropriate action in response to early warning;

18. Reaffirms the need to strengthen the international framework for the improvement of early warning systems and disaster preparedness by developing an effective international mechanism for early warning, including the transfer of technology related to early warning to developing countries, which ensures that vulnerable people receive appropriate and timely information, and by expanding and improving existing systems, in particular those under the auspices of the United Nations, as an integral part of the Strategy;

19. Decides to maintain the annual observance of the International Day for Natural Disaster Reduction on the second Wednesday of October, as a vehicle to promote a global culture of natural disaster reduction, including prevention, mitigation and preparedness;

20. Invites the General Assembly to give full consideration to the report of the Secretary-General at its fifty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/56/561/Add.2], adopted resolution 56/195 without vote [agenda item 98 (b)].

International Strategy for Disaster Reduction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/236 of 22 December 1989, 49/22 A of 2 December 1994, 49/22 B of 20 December 1994, 53/185 of 15 December 1998 and 54/219 of 22 December 1999 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/63 of 30 July 1999, and taking note of Council resolution 2001/35 of 26 July 2001,

Recalling also the forward-looking platform for international concerted disaster reduction, as developed by the World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction and as expressed in the Yokohama Strategy for a Safer World: Guidelines for Natural Disaster Prevention, Preparedness and Mitigation and its Plan of Action, as well as the Geneva mandate on disaster reduction and the strategy document entitled "A safer world in the twenty-first century: risk and disaster reduction",

Emphasizing the multisectoral, interdisciplinary and cross-cutting nature of natural disaster reduction, and stressing that continued interaction, cooperation and partnerships among the institutions concerned are considered essential to achieve jointly agreed objectives and priorities,

Having considered the current institutional arrangements, as established in its resolution 54/219, with the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction and the inter-agency secretariat for the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, and taking into account the assessment after the first period of operations,

Recognizing that disaster reduction is an important element that contributes to the achievement of sustainable development and that it should be taken into account in the preparatory process for the World Summit on Sustainable Development, to be held at Johannesburg, South Africa, from 26 August to 4 September 2002,

Reiterating that natural disasters damage the social and economic infrastructure of all countries, although the long-term consequences of natural disasters are especially severe for developing countries and hamper their sustainable development,

Welcoming the emphasis placed on natural disaster reduction in the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010, adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held at Brussels from 14 to 20 May 2001,

Recognizing that disaster reduction should be regarded as an important function of the United Nations and should receive continued attention,

Stressing the need for the international community to demonstrate the firm political determination required to utilize scientific and technical knowledge to reduce vulnerability to natural disasters and environmental hazards, taking into account the particular needs of developing countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction;

2. Expresses its deep concern at the increasing number and scale of natural disasters, which have resulted in massive loss of life and long-term negative social, economic and environmental consequences for vulnerable societies throughout the world, in particular in developing countries;

3. Reaffirms that the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction should perform the functions as indicated in the report of the Secretary-General, in particular those of serving as a main forum within the United Nations system for devising strategies and policies for disaster reduction and ensuring complementarity of action by agencies involved in disaster reduction, mitigation and preparedness, decides to review the activities of the Task Force in 2003, and decides also that the inter-agency secretariat for the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction should develop collaborative links with appropriate regional disaster reduction organizations;

4. Decides that the Task Force should be modified in order to provide for the increased participation and continued membership of regional intergovernmental organizations and key United Nations agencies;

5. Recognizes that the framework for action for the implementation of the Strategy, as endorsed by the Task Force, constitutes the basic guide for the implementation of the Strategy, and that the framework shall be periodically reviewed, according to the evolving needs in the field of natural disaster reduction, and urges all relevant bodies within the United Nations system to cooperate fully within the context of the framework;

6. Stresses that the inter-agency secretariat for the Strategy should be consolidated and enhanced to perform its functions effectively, in particular to serve as the focal point in the United Nations system for the coordination of disaster reduction and to ensure synergies among the disaster-reduction activities of the United Nations system and regional organizations and activities in socio-economic and humanitarian fields;

7. Calls upon Governments to continue to cooperate and coordinate their efforts with the United Nations system, other international organizations, regional organizations, non-governmental organizations and other partners, as appropriate, in order to ensure effective synergies in the field of natural disasters, and urges the inter-agency secretariat for the Strategy to develop such synergies, as appropriate;

8. Invites, therefore, all Governments and relevant international organizations to give appropriate consideration to the issue of natural disaster reduction in their preparations for the World Summit on Sustainable Development;

9. Underlines the importance of adequate financial and administrative resources for the effective functioning of the Task Force and the inter-agency secretariat for the Strategy, under the direct authority of the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs;

10. Calls upon Governments to establish national platforms or focal points for disaster reduction, urges the United Nations system to provide appropriate support for those mechanisms, and invites the Secretary-General to strengthen the regional outreach of the inter-agency secretariat for the Strategy in order to ensure such support;

11. Invites Governments and relevant organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen national participation, in particular of disaster-prone countries, in the implementation of the Strategy, including through national multisectoral and interdisciplinary platforms, in order to achieve sustainable development goals and objectives, with the full utilization of scientific and technical knowledge, including through capacity-building at all levels and the development and strengthening of global and regional approaches that take into account regional, subregional, national and local circumstances and needs, as well as the need to strengthen the coordination of national emergency response agencies;

12. Calls upon Governments to continue to cooperate and coordinate their efforts in the field of natural disasters within the framework for action for the implementation of the Strategy, in line with their respective skills and capacities, from prevention to early warning, response, mitigation, rehabilitation and reconstruction, including through capacity-building at all levels, and the development and strengthening of global and regional approaches that take into account regional, subregional, national and local circumstances and needs, as well as the need to strengthen the coordination of national emergency response agencies in natural disasters;

13. Recognizes the urgent need to develop further and make use of the existing scientific and technical knowledge to reduce vulnerability to natural disasters, and emphasizes the need for developing countries to have access to technology so as to tackle natural disasters effectively;

14. Calls upon Governments and United Nations agencies to collaborate more closely in the sharing of disaster response and mitigation information, to take full advantage of United Nations emergency information services such as ReliefWeb, as well as the Internet, and to consider other methods for the sharing of information;

15. Calls upon the inter-agency secretariat for the Strategy and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to facilitate the development of better linkages with all relevant actors, including the private sector and financial institutions, in the development of disaster management strategies;

16. Encourages the international community to provide the necessary financial resources to the Trust Fund for the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction and to provide adequate scientific, technical, human and other resources to ensure adequate support for the inter-agency secretariat for the Strategy and for the Task Force and its working groups;

17. Requests the relevant organizations of the United Nations system to support the implementation of the goals of the Strategy, including by seconding technical staff to the inter-agency secretariat for the Strategy;

18. Endorses the proposal of the Secretary-General to review the implementation of the Yokohama Strategy for a Safer World: Guidelines for Natural Disaster Prevention, Preparedness and Mitigation and its Plan of Action, within the context of the framework for action for the implementation of the Strategy;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to optimize further and disseminate through all available channels, including handbooks and information systems, the information necessary for the effective management of international cooperation in the fields of disaster prevention, early warning, response, mitigation, rehabilitation and reconstruction;

20. Reiterates the need to continue international cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon, within the framework for action for the implementation of the Strategy, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in its resolutions 1999/46 of 28 July 1999 and 2000/33 of 28 July 2000 and by the Assembly in its resolutions 52/200 of 18 December 1997, 53/185 of 15 December 1998, 54/220 of 22 December 1999 and 55/197 of 20 December 2000;

21. Recognizes the importance of early warning as an essential element in the culture of prevention, and encourages renewed efforts at all levels to contribute to natural hazard monitoring and impact prediction, the development and transfer of technology, capacity-building for disaster preparedness, the detection of natural hazards and the issuance and communication of early warning, as well as education and professional training, public information and awareness-raising activities, and stresses the need for appropriate action in response to early warning;

22. Reaffirms the need to strengthen the international framework for the improvement of early warning systems and disaster preparedness by developing an effective international mechanism for early warning, including the transfer of technology related to early warning to developing countries, which ensures that vulnerable people receive appropriate and timely information, and by expanding and improving existing systems, in particular those under the auspices of the United Nations, as an integral part of the Strategy;

23. Decides to maintain the annual observance of the International Day for Natural Disaster Reduction on the second Wednesday of October, as a vehicle to promote a global culture of natural disaster reduction, including prevention, mitigation and preparedness;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, including criteria and modalities for the selection of the non-permanent members of the Task Force, and on the progress made in the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development".

El Niño

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/197 [YUN 2000, p. 884], the Secretary-General, in a May report [A/56/76-E/2001/54], reviewed ongoing activities designed to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon, a disruption of the ocean-atmosphere system in the tropical Pacific that had important consequences for weather and climate worldwide.

The Working Group on Climate and Disasters of the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction (Geneva, 10-11 April), set up in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 882] and led by WMO, established two priority areas: a review of sectoral monitoring and warning systems and the continuation of the mandate of the Inter-Agency Task Force on El Niño. Pursuant to Assembly resolution 52/200 [YUN 1997, p. 927], a number of activities were carried out at the global, regional and national levels, aimed at reducing the impact of future El Niño phenomena and similar climatic variables.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Working Group continue to gather information on how climate information was generated and distributed and consider how to improve distribution and transfer of the information. It should also continue advocacy and education activities and ensure that the experience gained from the 1998 intergovernmental meeting of experts in Guayaquil, Ecuador [YUN 1998, p. 873], and other events be made available to interested parties. The Working Group should continue to support studies to establish shortfalls in the coverage of climate monitoring, and explore further applications of climate monitoring information and forecasts.

Communication. On 2 October [A/C.2/56/2], Ecuador transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a memorandum of cooperation it had signed with WMO to strengthen cooperation and to initiate activities relating to the establishment of the International Research Centre for the El Niño/Southern Oscillation Phenomenon. The Government of Ecuador would deposit $385,000 in a WMO trust fund account as a contribution to the activities leading to the establishment of the centre.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/561/Add.2], adopted resolution 56/194 without vote [agenda item 98 (b)].

International cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/200 of 18 December 1997, 53/185 of 15 December 1998, 54/220 of 22 December 1999 and 55/197 of 20 December 2000 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1999/46 of 28 July 1999 and 1999/63 of 30 July 1999, and taking note of Council resolution 2000/33 of 28 July 2000,

Noting that the signing of the memorandum of cooperation between Ecuador and the World Meteorological Organization constitutes a major step in the process for the establishment of an international centre for the study of the El Niño phenomenon,

Noting also the contributions made by regional and global climate-study organizations and specialized Internet information services, which have led to improved scientific understanding and prediction capabilities in the area of climate variability,

Reaffirming the importance of developing strategies at the national, subregional, regional and international levels that aim to prevent, mitigate and repair the damage caused by natural disasters that result from the El Niño phenomenon,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Commends the measures adopted by the host country for the establishment of an international centre for the study of the El Niño phenomenon, and encourages the Government of Ecuador to continue its efforts aimed at the completion of that process;

3. Encourages the centre, once established, to strengthen its links with other relevant regional and global climate-study organizations, as well as with Internet information services, in order to ensure an effective and efficient use of the available resources;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General and the relevant United Nations organs, funds and programmes, in particular those taking part in the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, and encourages the international community, to adopt, as appropriate, the necessary measures to support the establishment of the above-mentioned research centre at Guayaquil, Ecuador, and invites the international community to provide scientific, technical and financial assistance and cooperation for that purpose, as well as to strengthen, as appropriate, other centres devoted to the study of the El Niño phenomenon;

5. Welcomes the establishment of the working group on climate and disasters, and invites the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction and the inter-agency secretariat for the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction to ensure functional synergies among the working groups dealing with climate variability, social and economic vulnerability, and the effectiveness of early warning systems;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the full implementation of its resolutions 52/200, 53/185, 54/220 and 55/197 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1999/46, 1999/63 and 2000/33;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution, under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development".

Disaster assistance

Africa

Central African Republic

A UN inter-agency flash appeal for the Central African Republic, launched in June, sought $4.9 million to cover the period 1 July to 30 September for emergency needs resulting from the torrential rainfall of 26 February to 1 March. The population of Bangui and surrounding areas had been hard-hit by the floods and were facing additional hardship caused by continuing armed conflict between loyalist forces and those supporting a coup attempt. The target population was set at 80,000 people.

Horn of Africa

The situation in the drought-affected areas in the Horn of Africa (Djibouti, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia and northern parts of the United Republic of Tanzania) remained critical in 2001 following three consecutive years of poor rains and the total failure of rains in April 2000. In Ethiopia, while recent rains in the Somali region had been encouraging, the import ban on live-stock from the Horn imposed by Gulf countries represented a potentially serious setback for the prospect of a quick economic recovery in the mainly pastoral lowlands. In many areas of Kenya, significant rains were still required, as the short season rains were largely below normal and poorly distributed in time and space. Important food aid relief operations were needed in some areas of Tanzania following four years of inadequate harvests. Insufficient rainfall in drought-affected areas of Djibouti and Eritrea in 2000 justified continued humanitarian assistance in 2001. Although the rains were satisfactory in Somalia, it was important that recovery efforts be sustained to enable those affected to rebuild their livelihood.

OCHA issued a UN emergency consolidated appeal for the region totalling $353 million for January to December 2001 to cover the basic needs of 12.8 million drought-affected people.

Djibouti

A UN inter-agency donor alert for the drought in Djibouti, prepared by the UN country team to complement the emergency appeal for the Horn of Africa (above), sought $11.2 million.

Kenya

In 2001, over 4 million people were suffering from the effects of the drought in Kenya. A majority of the population in pastoral, agro-pastoral and marginal agricultural areas had been reduced to near destitution and dependence on food aid.

A UN inter-agency donor alert for the drought in Kenya, issued in February and seeking $123 million for January to December 2001, was revised in July to $184 million.

Mozambique

Mozambique entered 2001 under the threat of floods in Zambezia province due to heavy rain in Zambia, which forced the authorities to release water from the Kariba dam. The Zambezi River burst its banks on 3 January, flooding farmland in the north-western province of Tete. Later in January, a tropical storm brought heavy rain to Quelimane, the capital of Zambezia, and other areas of the province. Further heavy rain in neighbouring countries and high discharges from dams led to 52 deaths, 81,394 persons displaced and 406,565 people affected around the Zambezi River valley by the end of February.

In March, a UN inter-agency appeal for flood relief in Mozambique was launched for $10.7 million to cover the period March to May 2001.

Asia

Democratic People's Republic of Korea

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK), launched in November 2000, which sought $384 million for January to December 2001, received 67.4 per cent ($248.4 million) of requirements.

Improvements in the political climate between the DPRK and the Republic of Korea did not have a significant impact on the humanitarian situation in the DPRK in 2001, which was still critical following a period of economic decline and a series of natural disasters and erratic weather patterns. Large sectors of the population of 23 million people were vulnerable due to inadequate food availability, which was compounded by the poor quality of and limited access to basic health, water, sanitation and education services. A further appeal was launched to cover 2002.

Mongolia

Two consecutive dzuds—a Mongolia-specific winter disaster caused by extreme cold and heavy snowfall—in 1999/2000 and 2000/01 undermined the welfare and food security of the Mongolian herding community through large-scale death and debilitation of livestock. The indirect causes of the disaster were mainly over-concentration of stock and overgrazing of pastures in some areas and inadequate winter hay preparation. The continuing dzuds seriously increased the level of malnutrition and rates of morbidity and mortality among more vulnerable groups, the health and education systems had come under strain and the massive mortality of livestock had caused huge socio-economic and financial damage, not only to herders but to the whole country.

A UN appeal sought contributions worth $7.1 million in cash and $4.7 million in kind to assist beneficiaries in 73 counties.

Latin America and the Caribbean

Belize

On 8 October, category-four strength hurricane Iris swept through Belize, with highly destructive 233 kilometre (km) per hour winds. The hurricane took its highest toll on the poorest part of the country where, in a matter of days, it deprived many of the vulnerable Mayan and Garinagu families living in the districts of Toledo and Stann Creek of their traditional means of livelihood, their homes, schools and health centres. A UN international appeal launched on 17 October sought $1.4 million for assistance projects.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 27 November [meeting 65], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/11 [draft: A/56/L.16 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Emergency assistance to Belize

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/169 of 11 December 1987, 43/202 of 20 December 1988, 44/236 of 22 December 1989, 45/185 of 21 December 1990, 46/149 of 18 December 1991, 46/182 of 19 December 1991, 48/188 of 21 December 1993, 49/22 A of 2 December 1994 and 55/165 of 14 December 2000,

Having been made aware of the extensive damage caused by powerful hurricane Iris during its landfall and passage through Belize on 8 October 2001,

Mindful of the human suffering caused by the displacement of thousands of people and the disrupted delivery of health and social services,

Aware of the devastation to the infrastructure of southern Belize and to the agricultural, fisheries and tourism sectors of Belize,

Conscious of the negative ecological impact of the hurricane on the coastal region and the inland rain-forest,

Noting the enormous efforts required to alleviate the devastation caused by this natural disaster,

Cognizant of the efforts of the Government and people of Belize to relieve the suffering of the victims of hurricane Iris,

Conscious of the rapid response being made by the Government of Belize, the agencies and bodies of the United Nations system, international and regional agencies, non-governmental organizations and private individuals to provide relief,

Recalling the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, and in this regard underlining the importance of efforts aimed at strengthening early warning, prevention and preparedness mechanisms for natural disasters and measures to strengthen capacity-building at the local, national and regional levels, with an emphasis on risk reduction,

Aware that the extent of the disaster and its medium-term and long-term effects will require, as a complement to the efforts being made by the Government and people of Belize, a demonstration of international solidarity and humanitarian concern to ensure broad multilateral cooperation in order to facilitate the transition from the immediate emergency situation in the affected areas to the process of reconstruction,

1. Expresses its solidarity and support to the Government and people of Belize;

2. Expresses its appreciation to all States of the international community, international agencies and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations that are providing emergency relief assistance to Belize;

3. Urges Member States, as a matter of urgency, to contribute generously to the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts of Belize;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the international financial institutions, agencies and bodies of the United Nations system, to assist the Government of Belize in identifying medium-term and long-term needs and in mobilizing resources, as well as to help with the efforts towards rehabilitation and reconstruction of the affected areas in Belize;

5. Encourages the Government of Belize, in conjunction with relevant partners, further to develop strategies aimed at preventing and mitigating natural disasters, in accordance with the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to make all necessary arrangements to continue mobilizing and coordinating humanitarian assistance from the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system with a view to supporting the efforts of the Government of Belize.

Bolivia

Heavy rains during the first half of 2001 caused floods and landslides in the western and northern regions of Bolivia, affecting some 357,250 people and causing serious damage to roads, crops and houses. The floods also destroyed important agricultural productive infrastructure, such as productive land, small irrigation systems and roads, and caused crop damage estimated at $121 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 February [meeting 91], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/241 [draft: A/55/L.74 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Assistance to Bolivia as a result of the flooding experienced in recent months

The General Assembly,

Distressed by the floods, torrents, cave-ins, landslides and inundation caused mainly by the torrential rains that have fallen in recent months, resulting in severe economic damage and loss of human lives in the territory of Bolivia,

Recognizing the large-scale relief and humanitarian assistance efforts being made by the Government and people of Bolivia to alleviate the suffering of the disaster victims and meet their immediate needs,

Noting the enormous efforts that have been made by the people and Government of Bolivia to build peace and democracy and achieve a favourable environment for promoting economic growth and furthering human development,

Aware of the grave consequences of natural disasters, which may present a serious obstacle to economic and social development in the developing countries, and which require considerable amounts of human and financial resources to overcome their negative effects, and considering it essential that the international community offer all its technical and financial support and assistance in order to supplement national efforts to undertake, as soon as possible, the process of rehabilitation, reconstruction and development in the areas afflicted by these natural disasters,

1. Expresses its solidarity and support to the Government and people of Bolivia in these difficult times;

2. Welcomes the valuable support of the international community in the work of rescuing and providing emergency relief to the stricken population;

3. Urges all Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations and organs of the United Nations system, together with international financial institutions and non-governmental organizations, to continue responding generously to Bolivia in its emergency, rehabilitation and reconstruction tasks and programmes, in order to maintain the present political stability and prevent the effects of this natural disaster from becoming an impediment to the economic and social development of Bolivia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to make every effort to continue mobilizing and coordinating the humanitarian assistance being provided by the specialized agencies and other organizations and organs of the United Nations system in support of the efforts of the Government of Bolivia.

El Salvador

An earthquake measuring 7.6 on the Richter scale shook El Salvador on 13 January, affecting some 1.1 million people, of whom 43 per cent were under 18 years of age. By 24 January, the death toll had reached 726 and 360 people were still missing. Over 114,000 homes were damaged and close to 75,000 were totally destroyed. The agricultural and fishing sectors were greatly affected, especially the infrastructure that supported production and processing. The affected population in rural areas needed assistance to rehabilitate 30,772 farm dwellings.

An appeal for humanitarian assistance and initial rehabilitation activities, launched in February, requested $35 million to benefit some 200,000 people.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 January [meeting 90], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/240 [draft: A/55/L.72 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Assistance to El Salvador as a result of the earthquake of 13 January 2001

The General Assembly,

Deeply distressed by the lamentable loss of hundreds of human lives and the thousands of victims wounded and left homeless, together with the serious damage to infrastructure in El Salvador, as a result of the earthquake of 13 January 2001,

Recognizing the large-scale relief and humanitarian assistance efforts being made by the Government and people of El Salvador to alleviate the suffering of the disaster victims and meet their immediate needs,

Recognizing also the demonstrations of support and solidarity offered by the international community to the people and Government of El Salvador in this emergency situation,

Noting the enormous efforts that have been made by the people and Government of El Salvador to build peace and democracy and achieve a favourable environment for promoting economic growth and furthering human development,

Aware of the grave consequences of natural disasters, which may present a serious obstacle to economic and social development in the developing countries, and which require considerable amounts of human and financial resources to overcome their negative effects, and considering it essential that the international community offer all its technical and financial support and assistance in order to supplement national efforts to undertake, as soon as possible, the process of rehabilitation, reconstruction and development in the areas afflicted by these natural disasters,

1. Expresses its solidarity and support to the Government and people of El Salvador in these difficult times;

2. Welcomes the valuable support of the international community in the work of rescuing and providing emergency relief to the stricken population;

3. Urges all Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations and organs of the United Nations system, together with international financial institutions and non-governmental organizations, to continue responding generously to El Salvador in its emergency, rehabilitation and reconstruction tasks and programmes, in order to maintain the present political stability and prevent the effects of this natural disaster from becoming an impediment to the economic and social development of El Salvador;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to make every effort to continue mobilizing and coordinating the humanitarian assistance being provided by the specialized agencies and other organizations and organs of the United Nations system in support of the efforts of the Government of El Salvador.

Peru

On 23 June, an earthquake measuring 6.9 on the Richter scale hit southern Peru. The epicentre of the quake was offshore, causing a tsunami to hit 100 km of coastline between Ocoña and Quilca, flooding low-lying areas as far as 1 km inland. On 5 July, after more than 100 aftershocks, a second earthquake measuring 6 on the Richter scale hit the same area, and several aftershocks later, on 7 July, there was a third earthquake, measuring 6.5 on the Richter scale, with an epicentre 100 km to the south-west of Ocoña. As at 16 July, an estimated 222,423 people were affected by the disaster, with 78 dead, 2,723 injured and 64 missing. A total of 24,973 homes had been destroyed and 36,374 damaged. The disaster affected the health and education infrastructure, communications and the agriculture and fishery sectors.

A UN inter-agency appeal for the victims of the earthquake, issued in July, sought $4.4 million for immediate support and rehabilitation for six to eight months.

Chernobyl aftermath

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/97 [YUN 1999, p. 870], the Secretary-General, in an October report [A/56/447], described the activities undertaken by UN funds, programmes and specialized agencies during the preceding two years to optimize the international humanitarian response to the evolving consequences of the 1986 Chernobyl disaster [YUN 1986, p. 584]. The report also analysed the continuing consequences of the nuclear accident 15 years after it had occurred.

International assistance efforts were ongoing in the areas of health, socio-psychological rehabilitation, economic rehabilitation and employment, and environmental protection. Public awareness of the consequences of the disaster was a central focus of UN activities throughout the reporting period, culminating in a series of events to commemorate the fifteenth anniversary of the disaster. UN efforts to assist the victims continued to be plagued by a persistent lack of resources. In an attempt to enhance international funding, the UN Coordinator of International Cooperation on Chernobyl in March 2001 appealed to the Member States contributors to the Chernobyl Shelter Fund to support assistance programmes. A set of new projects aimed at providing developmental assistance (see below) would be presented to the donor community.

An inter-agency mission to study the human consequences of Chernobyl was carried out in July and August. The mission was deployed jointly by UNDP and UNICEF, with support from WHO, OCHA and others. On the basis of the best available data, the mission concluded that there was clear evidence of direct health effects due to radiation exposure, including 2,000 cases to date of thyroid cancer. There was little consensus on what the full effects would be, and many cancers were not expected to occur for several decades. The conditions of life of a significant portion of the rural population continued to decline due to a complex interaction between environmental, health, psychosocial and economic disadvantages. The accident imposed a heavy burden on national budgets through the cost of clean-up, compensation and recovery. During the reporting period, it became evident that the needs related to Chernobyl had gradually passed the emergency response stage and were of a developmental nature. The mission proposed a strategy for a new phase of activities, aimed to help restore life to normal for the majority of the inhabitants over a 10-year period. An overarching development strategy, as well as projects focused on affected communities, would emphasize sustainable household incomes, community-based primary health care and environmental education. The goal was, as far as possible, to give people control over their lives and communities control over their own futures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/109 [draft: A/56/L.57 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (c)].

Strengthening of international cooperation and coordination of efforts to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 45/190 of 21 December 1990, 46/150 of 18 December 1991, 47/165 of 18 December 1992, 48/206 of 21 December 1993, 50/134 of 20 December 1995, 52/172 of 16 December 1997 and 54/97 of 8 December 1999, as well as resolution 55/171 of 14 December 2000 on closure of the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, and taking note of the decisions adopted by the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system in the implementation of those resolutions,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolutions 1990/50 of 13 July 1990, 1991/51 of 26 July 1991 and 1992/38 of 30 July 1992 and Council decision 1993/232 of 22 July 1993,

Conscious of the long-term nature of the consequences of the disaster at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, which was a major technological catastrophe in terms of its scope and complexity and created humanitarian, environmental, social, economic and health consequences and problems of common concern, requiring for their solution wide and active international cooperation and coordination of efforts in this field at the international and national levels,

Expressing profound concern at the ongoing effects of the consequences of the accident on the lives and health of people, in particular children, in the affected areas of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine, as well as in other affected countries,

Acknowledging the importance of the national efforts being undertaken by the Governments of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine to mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster,

Emphasizing that it is important for the authorities of the affected countries to cooperate fully in and facilitate efforts to mitigate the consequences of the Chernobyl catastrophe, including the efforts by non-governmental organizations in providing humanitarian assistance, and appreciating the progress already made in this regard,

Noting with appreciation the contribution made by States and by organizations of the United Nations system to the development of cooperation to mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, the activities of regional and other organizations and those of non-governmental organizations, as well as bilateral activities,

Recognizing the importance of continuing international support to the national efforts of the Governments and civil societies of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine, as the most affected countries, to mitigate and minimize the persisting negative effects of the Chernobyl disaster on the sustainable development of the affected areas as a result of the radiological, health, socio-economic, psychological and environmental consequences of the disaster,

Welcoming the increased role played by the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations resident coordinators and the United Nations country teams in Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine in helping to address both the developmental and the humanitarian consequences of the catastrophe,

Noting the United Nations needs-assessment mission to the affected areas of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine in July and August 2001, as well as the visit of the Deputy United Nations Coordinator of International Cooperation on Chernobyl to those countries in October 2001, and emphasizing the need to consider incorporation of their findings and outcomes into the new United Nations strategy to mitigate the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General concerning the implementation of resolution 54/97,

1. Reaffirms that the United Nations plays an important catalytic and coordinating role in the strengthening of international cooperation to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, and commends the contribution made by all other relevant multilateral mechanisms to this end;

2. Welcomes the practical measures that have been taken by the Secretary-General and the United Nations Coordinator of International Cooperation on Chernobyl to strengthen coordination of the international efforts in that area, especially the appointment by the Secretary-General of the Assistant Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and Regional Director for Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States as Deputy United Nations Coordinator of International Cooperation on Chernobyl;

3. Also welcomes the efforts undertaken by the agencies of the United Nations system, members of the Inter-Agency Task Force on Chernobyl to implement a new developmental approach to studying, mitigating and minimizing the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, and requests the Inter-Agency Task Force on Chernobyl to continue further its activities to that end;

4. Emphasizes the importance of full cooperation and assistance by the authorities of the affected countries in facilitating the work of humanitarian organizations, including non-governmental organizations, to mitigate the humanitarian consequences of the Chernobyl catastrophe, notes the measures already taken by the Governments of the affected countries in this regard, and encourages them to take further measures to simplify their relevant internal procedures and to identify ways in which their systems of granting exemption from customs and other duties can be made more effective with regard to goods provided free of charge as humanitarian assistance by humanitarian organizations, including non-governmental organizations;

5. Acknowledges the difficulties faced by the most affected countries in minimizing the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, and invites States, in particular donor States and all relevant agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system, in particular the Bretton Woods institutions, as well as non-governmental organizations, to continue to provide support to the ongoing efforts of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine to mitigate the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, including through the allocation of additional funds to support medical, social, economic and ecological programmes related to the disaster;

6. Notes the appeal by the United Nations Coordinator to the donor community to consider allocating additional resources to the humanitarian aspects of the Chernobyl disaster;

7. Stresses the need for coordinated international cooperation in studying the consequences of the Chernobyl catastrophe, and invites Member States and all interested parties to take part in and to promote the activities of the International Chernobyl Centre for nuclear safety, radioactive waste and radioecology as an important mechanism of scientific research in the unique conditions of the Chernobyl zone and the Shelter facility;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts in the implementation of the relevant General Assembly resolutions and, through existing co-ordination mechanisms, in particular the United Nations Coordinator, to continue to maintain close cooperation with the agencies of the United Nations system, as well as with regional and other relevant organizations, while implementing specific Chernobyl-related programmes and projects;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to consider possible ways to strengthen further the coordination, analytical and technical capacities of the United Nations in the field, as well as at Headquarters, as described in the report of the Secretary-General, with due regard to the existing administrative and budgetary procedures of the Organization;

10. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session, under a separate sub-item, a report containing a comprehensive assessment of the implementation of all aspects of the present resolution and proposals for innovative measures for optimizing the effectiveness of the response of the international community to the Chernobyl disaster.

Chapter IV

International trade, finance and transport

The collapse in growth of international trade, exacerbated by the disruption caused by the 11 September terrorist attacks in the United States, was the key feature of the economic slowdown of 2001. The international economic environment deteriorated, particularly for many developing countries and countries in transition. Net financial flows to those countries remained at a low level, the external financing conditions for them were more stringent and total flows of foreign direct investment fell. Developments during the year underlined the high degree of interdependence between developed and developing countries, as well as the need for further reforms in the international trade and financial systems.

Preparations for the International Conference on Financing for Development gathered momentum. In March, the General Assembly accepted Mexico's offer to host the Conference and, in July, decided that it would be held in Monterrey from 18 to 22 March 2002. Also in July, the Assembly decided that, in addition to States Members and observers of the United Nations and specialized agencies, Conference participation should include all relevant stakeholders, the business sector and civil society.

In other action on financial issues, the Assembly, in December, stressed the importance of continued substantive consideration of the international financial system and the external debt crisis in the context of development.

The high-level meeting between the Economic and Social Council and the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund), which took place in May, considered development financing, in particular poverty eradication, official development assistance and debt; and public and private responsibility in the prevention of financial crises. In November, the Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization (WTO) launched a work programme addressing the challenges facing the multilateral trading system.

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) issued a number of publications during the year, including the Trade and Development Report, 2001, which focused on the reform of the international financial architecture. Other major publications included World In- vestment Report 2001: Promoting Linkages and the E-Commerce and Development Report 2000. The Trade and Development Board, UNCTAD's governing body, reviewed the work of its three subsidiary bodies—the Commission on Trade in Goods and Services, and Commodities; the Commission on Investment, Technology and Related Financial Issues; and the Commission on Enterprise, Business Facilitation and Development. It also carried out a review of UNCTAD's technical cooperation activities.

The International Trade Centre, operated jointly by UNCTAD and WTO, increased its technical cooperation activities, providing support to 124 developing countries and transitional economies, including 42 least developed countries. It extended capacity-building to national networks and launched an e-facilitated trade development strategy.

International trade

The Trade and Development Report, 2001 [Sales No. E.01.II.D.10] observed that world trade in 2000 grew at twice the rate for 1999 and considerably faster than world output, stimulated by the resilience of the United States economy, a pickup in economic activity in the European Union (EU) and Japan, strong recovery in Latin America and the transition economies, and sustained growth in Asia. All regions recorded an expansion in trade volumes, which was particularly marked in the developing countries, where the volume of imports increased by more than 11 per cent. In Latin America and the transition economies, imports grew by more than 10 per cent; in Asia they continued to grow; and in Africa, less affected by the volatility in global markets, imports grew at a slower rate. Import growth also accelerated, but more slowly, in the developed countries. Imports into the United States again grew faster than into other developed economies and demand picked up significantly in some EU countries despite the weakness of the euro; overall growth for the euro zone exceeded 10 per cent in 2000. Japan also had an accelerated growth in import volume, due in part to a rebound in investment spending, especially on equipment related to information and communication technology (ICT). The strong expansion in global import demand in 2000 was accompanied by a correspondingly robust global export performance, with the exception of countries in Africa and Latin America whose exports were concentrated in a small number of non-oil primary commodities. A rapid turnaround in export volume growth was registered in the Middle East and the transition economies, and higher growth to other regions continued to power recovery in Asia and parts of Latin America, aided by currency depreciation. For Asian economies, an additional factor was the revival of intraregional trade, which also contributed to the fast growth of Chinese exports. Export volume also accelerated in developed countries, particularly in the euro zone, which benefited from the competitive edge given by the weakness of the euro. Strong growth also helped to revive the Japanese economy in 2000. The trade imbalances among major economic regions, due to growth differentials between the United States and other developed countries and to the strong dollar, increased in 2000. However, world trade expansion was expected to moderate, due to the slowdown in world industrial production towards the end of 2000 and the beginning of 2001 and more stable oil prices.

The World Economic and Social Survey 2001 [Sales No. E.01.II.C.1] noted that international trade continued to play an important role in the recovery from the 1997-1998 financial crises for most of 2000. However, the same trade linkages also globalized the slowdown that began in the last part of the year. The deceleration in economic growth and import demand of the developed economies, led by retrenchment in the United States, had an adverse impact on their trading partners and its negative effects were multiplied through trade to a widening circle of developing and transition economies. The strong momentum of international trade in 1999 lasted throughout much of 2000 and lifted world trade growth from 5.2 to 12.3 per cent, despite the deceleration during the last quarter of the year.

In a joint report on the world economic situation and prospects [Sales No. E.02.II.C.2] issued by the Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA) and UNCTAD and based on information available as at 30 November, it was observed that world trade had decelerated dramatically over the course of 2001, growing by less than 1 per cent in terms of export volume, from growth of over 11 per cent in 2000. The slowdown emanated primarily from the decline in global demand for ICT-related products, particularly in major developed economies. As the weakness in the global economy intensified in the second half of the year, exacerbated by the terrorist attacks in the United States of 11 September, a general reciprocal reduction in import demand across nations led to a sharp dwindling in all trade categories: manufactured goods, primary commodities and services. The aggregated imports of developed countries' economies registered virtually no growth and there was a sharp decline in the growth of imports in many developing countries. However, import demand was robust in most economies in transition. Export performance was weak across major developed countries. Although it varied in developing countries, a large number of them suffered a decline in the volume of exports combined with a drop in the prices of their exports. Many transition economies maintained a double-digit growth of exports, partly because of the relatively low exposure of their exports to the markets of major developed countries.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 55/182 [YUN 2000, p. 895], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/56/376], prepared in collaboration with UNCTAD, on international trade and development. It discussed developments in the multilateral trading system and other issues raised in resolution 55/182, including: the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (LDCs) (LDC-III) (see p. 770) and improved market access for LDCs; landlocked countries; small island developing States; the Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance to LDCs (IF); regional integration developments; Africa; volatility of short-term capital flows and effects of financial crises on the international trading system; debt; electronic commerce (e-commerce); trade supporting services; and investment.

With regard to preparations by Governments for the Fourth Ministerial Conference of WTO to be held in November (see p. 874), the report stated that the meeting of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) Council at ministerial level (Paris, 16-17 May) recognized that efforts to strengthen the multilateral trading system required broad-based and balanced negotiations and the strengthening of WTO as a rules-based institution. The eleventh Group of 15 (G-15) summit of developing countries (Jakarta, Indonesia, 25-31 May) called for greater inclusiveness, internal transparency and effective participation of all members in the WTO decision-making process, and urged developed countries to promote substantial liberalization in agriculture, textiles and other sectors. A Meeting of the Ministers Responsible for Trade of LDCs (Zanzibar, United Republic of Tanzania, 22-24 July) called on the Fourth Ministerial Conference to agree on: binding commitment on duty-free and quota-free market access for all products from LDCs; facilitating the accession of LDCs into WTO; implementation of the commitments made in the Marrakesh Declaration [YUN 1994, p. 868] and other ministerial decisions; and full implementation of the commitments undertaken at LDC-III in May (see p. 770).

With regard to WTO work, the report gave the status of negotiations on agriculture and services, and described implementation of WTO agreements, discussions on the interaction between trade and competition policy, and the outcome of consultations on trade-related investment measures. As to UNCTAD activities, the report stated that the secretariat had assisted developing countries in understanding the key trade and development-related issues in multilateral trade and organized a series of expert meetings (see below).

WTO Ministerial Conference. On 19 November [A/C.2/56/7], Qatar transmitted to the Secretary-General the Ministerial Declaration of the Fourth Ministerial Conference of WTO (Doha, Qatar, 9-13 November). The Conference discussed its work programme regarding implementation-related issues and concerns; agriculture; services; market access for non-agricultural products; trade-related aspects of intellectual property rights; the relationship between trade and investment; interaction between trade and competition policy; transparency in government procurement; trade facilitation; WTO rules; dispute settlement understanding; trade and environment; e-commerce; small economies; trade, debt and finance; trade and transfer of technology; technical cooperation and capacity-building; LDCs; and special and differential treatment (see also p. 1432).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/56/558/Add.1], adopted resolution 56/178 without vote [agenda item 95 (a)].

International trade and development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 55/182 of 20 December 2000 on international trade and development,

Taking into account the ongoing preparations for the International Conference on Financing for Development, to be held at Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002, which will consider, inter alia, trade in the context of financing for development,

Noting the outcome of the Fourth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, held at Doha from 9 to 13 November 2001,

Welcoming the outcome of the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held at Brussels from 14 to 20 May 2001, in particular with regard to trade and development,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations on international trade and development, the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations on unilateral economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries, the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries, the report of the Trade and Development Board on its forty-eighth session and the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations on measures taken to initiate the preparatory process for the final review and appraisal of the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s,

1. Welcomes the decision by the Trade and Development Board to conduct the midterm review of the outcome of the tenth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at Bangkok from 29 April to 3 May 2002, and, in this regard, expresses deep appreciation to the Government of Thailand for offering to host the meeting;

2. Stresses the importance of continued substantive consideration of the sub-item on trade and development, under the item entitled "Macroeconomic policy questions";

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session, under the item entitled "Macroeconomic policy questions", a sub-item entitled "International trade and development";

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution and developments in the multilateral trading system.

Trade policy

Trade in goods and services, and commodities

The Commission on Trade in Goods and Services, and Commodities held its fifth session in Geneva from 19 to 23 February and on 23 March [TD/B/48/6].

At its twenty-sixth executive session in April [A/56/15], the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB) took note of the Commission's report and approved the recommendations.

Agriculture. For its consideration of major agricultural concerns of developing countries: impact of the reform process in agriculture on LDCs and net food-importing developing countries (NFIDCs) and ways to address their concerns in multilateral trade negotiations, the Commission had before it the report of the 2000 Expert Meeting on the subject [YUN 2000, p. 898] and an

UNCTAD secretariat note on the outcome of the Meeting and comments on the Meeting's report from the EU, Morocco and Saudi Arabia [TD/B/COM.1/36 & Add.1].

In agreed recommendations, the Commission stated that LDCs and NFIDCs should identify specific areas where technical cooperation was required from development partners, particularly with regard to enhancing agricultural productivity, infrastructure-building, market information dissemination and export market development. It encouraged financial institutions to ensure coherence between their programmes and WTO reform commitments in LDCs and NFIDCs, and invited them and bilateral donors to examine the establishment of a special fund for technical and financial assistance. International organizations were invited to examine the long-term impact of food aid on domestic production and trading opportunities of agricultural products in LDCs and NFIDCs. The Commission recommended that UNCTAD provide analysis and technical assistance to developing countries to facilitate their participation in the WTO negotiations on agriculture and analyse the impact of new developments in world agricultural trade and of the reform process on key staples of developing countries, as well as ways to reduce the cost disadvantages in agricultural trade faced by landlocked developing countries and small island developing States.

Services. For its analysis of ways to enhance the contribution of specific services sectors to the development perspectives of developing countries: national experiences with regulation and liberalization: examples in the construction services sector and its contribution to the development of developing countries, the Commission had before it the report of the 2000 Expert Meeting on the subject [YUN 2000, p. 899] and an UNCTAD secretariat note containing policy proposals based on the expert discussions and comments by Mauritius on the Expert Meeting report [TD/B/COM.1/37 & Add.1].

In agreed recommendations, the Commission underlined the importance of the ongoing General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS) negotiations in addressing problems faced by developing country construction and engineering firms in competing in world markets. It recommended to Governments that consideration be given to regional and subregional trade and cooperation promotion among developing countries in the construction services sector, and invited international funding agencies and bilateral donors to address the measures impeding local firms, in particular small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), from participating in their projects. The Commission agreed that UNCTAD should promote establishment of linkages among stakeholders in the international market for construction services and work with the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law to assess the feasibility of model laws supporting the functioning of domestic construction services sectors. UNCTAD should also continue supporting the participation of developing countries in multilateral trade negotiations on trade in services and assist African countries in identifying the impact of further liberalization in that sector.

Resources. For its consideration of the sustainable use of biological resources: systems and national experiences for the protection of traditional knowledge (TK), innovations and practices, the Commission had before it the report of the 2000 Expert Meeting on the subject [YUN 2000, p. 899] and an UNCTAD secretariat note that highlighted important areas for policy action that had emerged from the Meeting's discussions [TD/B/COM.1/38].

In agreed recommendations, the Commission encouraged Governments to raise awareness of the role and value of TK and implement national legislation for its protection; promote the commercialization of TK-based products and services and the sustainable use of genetic resources; and support local and indigenous communities. It recommended that cooperation between inter-governmental organizations working in the field of TK protection be promoted, in particular in LDCs, and agreed that UNCTAD should organize workshops to exchange national experiences and examine strategies on TK-related issues; support initiatives to protect the development of traditional medicine; and assist member States and local and indigenous communities in exploring policies to harness TK for trade and development.

Market access. For its analysis of market access issues facing developing countries: impact of anti-dumping and countervailing actions, the Commission had before it the report of the 2000 Expert Meeting on the subject [YUN 2000, p. 899] and an UNCTAD secretariat note containing recommendations for further action based on the experts' discussions and comments from Malaysia and the United States on the Expert Meeting report [TD/B/COM.1/39 & Add.1,2].

The Commission recommended that UNCTAD should conduct comparative analyses on the technical difficulties identified by developing countries regarding anti-dumping and countervailing measures. It should also design and implement a technical assistance programme to support developing countries in improving understanding of anti-dumping and countervailing duty rules and procedures and capacity to administer anti-dumping and countervailing remedies.

Subsidiary bodies. In 2001, a number of expert meetings took place, all in Geneva, on issues to be considered by the Commission in 2002.

The Expert Meeting on Ways to Enhance the Production and Export Capacities of Developing Countries of Agriculture and Food Products, including Niche Products, such as Environmentally Preferable Products (16-18 July) [TD/B/COM.1/41] had before it an UNCTAD background note on the subject [TD/B/COM.1/EM.15/2], which discussed trends in world trade in food and agricultural products; production and export constraints of developing countries; quality and product differentiation; specialty and other niche products; organic products; and steps required to enhance production and export capacities.

The Meeting recommended that: Governments should support the development of the agriculture sector and promote organic agriculture and trade; the business sector should, among other things, emphasize professional organizations and cooperation among producers and exporters; the international community should support the efforts of developing countries, particularly LDCs, to develop supply capacities, improve market access and entry conditions and derive benefits from organic agriculture and trade; and UNCTAD should contribute to the development of the supply capacity of developing countries and assist them in deriving advantage from growing markets for agricultural products.

The Expert Meeting on Energy Services in International Trade: Development Implications (23-25 July) [TD/B/COM.1/42] had before it an UNCTAD note on the subject [TD/B/COM.1/EM.16/2], which addressed sectoral markets of energy and energy services; international trade in energy services and trade barriers; energy services in GATS; the ongoing debate in WTO; and the implications for developing countries. Noting the role of energy in sustainable development and the limited access to commercial energy of many developing countries, the Expert Meeting made suggestions with regard to policy strategies, international trade negotiations, analytical work and follow-up actions.

The Expert Meeting on Consumer Interests, Competitiveness, Competition and Development (17-19 October) [TD/B/COM.1/43] had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note transmitting the report of four regional meetings on the subject (Cartagena, Colombia, 23-25 July; Accra, Ghana, 20-21 August; Goa, India, 10-11 September; Bishkek, Kyrgyzstan, 1-2 October) [TD/B/COM.1/EM.17/2 & Add.1-4]. The Expert Meeting made a number of recommendations for action by Governments at the national and regional levels. It also made recommendations for action by UNCTAD, including the convening of expert meetings on the protection of consumers and regulation of public services.

Trade promotion and facilitation

In 2001, UN bodies continued to assist developing countries and transition economies in promoting their exports and facilitating their integration into the multilateral trading system. The International Trade Centre was the main originator of technical cooperation projects in that area.

International Trade Centre

During 2001, the International Trade Centre (ITC), under the joint sponsorship of UNCTAD and WTO, increased the scale of technical cooperation in terms of value, by 11 per cent to $12.6 million, and number of partner countries, to 124 developing countries and transition economies, including 42 LDCs [ITC/AG(XXXV)/189 & Add.1 & Add.1/Corr.1 & Add.2]. The Centre's goals during the year were to: facilitate the integration of developing and transition economy enterprises into the multilateral trading system; support national efforts to design and implement trade development strategies; strengthen key trade support services, both public and private; improve export performance in sectors of critical importance and opportunity; and foster international competitiveness within the business community as a whole and the SME sector in particular. ITC increased technical support to LDCs through a more active participation in IF at both the planning and implementation stages, extended capacity-building to national networks, upgraded support to the strategy aspect of export development and supported e-trade capacity-building by launching an e-facilitated trade development strategy. The Centre's activities relating to facilitating integration into the multilateral trading system continued to be directed towards clarifying the business implications of the system from the developing country perspective through the implementation of two multi-year programmes: the World Trade Net Programme and the Joint ITC/UNCTAD/WTO Integrated Technical Assistance Programme in Selected Least Developed and Other African Countries.

During the year, ITC delivered technical assistance through a three-track approach: the development of specialized tools for global use and national product-networks; multi-agency, capacity development programmes; and tailor-made trade development projects. Institutions, trade support professionals and enterprise managers from an increasing number of countries joined its specialized trade support networks. With regard to Africa, a major new effort was launched to increase the participation of African suppliers in the procurement programmes of African-based aid agencies, and the Centre laid the foundation for the development of intra-African trade in business and professional services. Under a partnership with the Agence intergouvernementale de la francophonie, ITC extended initial capacity-building support to Burundi, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Comoros, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Guinea, Mali, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal and Togo. At the national level in Africa, ITC provided technical support in quality certification, public procurement, export-led poverty reduction, national and sectoral strategy development, training and consultancy development.

Trade development projects in the Arab region were directed towards specific national capacity-building requirements: integration into the multilateral trading system (Tunisia) and trade information (Algeria and Egypt). ITC's programme in Central and Eastern Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States highlighted enterprise-level support, and export-readiness assistance was provided to enterprises in Armenia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan and Romania. Export-led poverty reduction was a central area of activity in the Asia region and a major programme of training and consultancy capacity-building in international purchasing and supply chain management was under way. Under ITC's South-South Trade Promotion Programme, in Latin America and the Caribbean, funding possibilities for trade-related technical assistance were limited; trade development projects were active only in Bolivia, Brazil and Central America. Priority was therefore given to developing small, regional projects involving trade-related poverty reduction programmes that generated replicable models. Long-term initiatives to promote technical and economic cooperation among developing countries were begun and the development of commercial relationships within the Asian business community, and between Asia and Africa, was promoted.

The ITC State Secretariat for Economic Affairs (Switzerland) Executive Forum on National Export Strategies (Montreux, Switzerland, 26-29 September) highlighted the theme "Is your trade support network working?" The Forum, which was attended by teams from 23 developing and transition economies, focused on such issues as resource rationalization, client segmenting and prioritizing, network leadership and coordination and performance measurement. ITC's first Regional Executive Forum (Nairobi, Kenya, 26-28 November), which was attended by eight national teams from Eastern and Southern Africa, focused on the theme "Rethinking export strategy".

JAG action. The ITC Joint Advisory Group (JAG) held its thirty-fourth session in Geneva from 30 April to 4 May [ITC/AG(XXXIV)/188]. It had before it reports on ITC activities in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 900], a summary of technical co-operation projects operational in 2000 [ITC/AG(XXXIV)/185/Add.1] and the report of the ITC Global Trust Fund's Consultative Committee [ITC/AG(XXXIV)/186].

The Group fully endorsed the three-track approach to providing technical assistance, emphasized ITC's efforts to join other organizations in trade development programmes, and encouraged ITC to remain an active advocate of coordination and partnership building and to continue its work as the key link between UNCTAD and WTO technical assistance programmes. The Group reiterated that it was important for ITC to continue its support to enterprise competitiveness, maintain its focus on the needs of the SME sector and remain responsive to changes in the international commercial environment. Stressing the need of the business community to acquire e-competency and e-trade capability, several representatives welcomed the ITC e-facilitated trade development strategy. While commending ITC on the effective management of its limited resource base, the Group expressed concern about its overall resource situation and the number of demand-driven projects that remained unimplemented owing to the absence of funds. Some representatives recommended that the Centre be more active and structured in its efforts to develop new sources of funding.

Pledges of trust fund contributions to ITC were announced by Canada, China, Denmark, Finland, France, India, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland.

TDB, at its twenty-seventh executive session in July [A/56/15], took note of the JAG report.

ITC administrative arrangements

In accordance with the arrangements approved in General Assembly decision 53/411 B [YUN 1998, p. 888], the Secretary-General, in February, submitted an outline of the proposed programme budget for ITC for the 2002-2003 biennium [A/55/797], which contained the ITC budget for the first year of activities for the biennium and a projection of requirements for the second year. Requirements, expressed in Swiss francs (SwF) at 2002-2003 rates, were estimated at SwF 30,221,800 for 2002 and SwF 30,322,800 for 2003. Since SwF 500,000 from various sources was expected to be available to ITC annually, the annual contribution of each organization (the United Nations and WTO) was estimated at SwF 14,860,900 and SwF 14,911,400 for 2002 and 2003, respectively.

Having considered the Secretary-General's report, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in May [A/55/7/Add.10], recommended approval of the budget outline for ITC.

By decision 55/483 of 14 June, the Assembly took note of the proposed 2002-2003 programme budget and concurred with ACABQ's observations and recommendations.

ACABQ, having considered the proposed programme budget for 2002-2003 for ITC [A/56/6/Add.1 (Sect. II B)], submitted to the Assembly a December report [A/56/7/Add.3] in which it noted that the ITC requirements for 2002-2003 had been updated to an estimated SwF 60,555,700, representing an increase in real terms of 3.1 per cent instead of the 3.7 per cent indicated in the outline. The biennial contribution of each organization was SwF 30,277,900 ($17,203,350 for the UN contribution, $287,250 more than the figure in the outline).

The Assembly, in resolution 56/255, section IX (see p. 1320), approved an amount of $18,022,600 for the 2002-2003 biennium.

Enterprise, business facilitation and development

The Commission on Enterprise, Business Facilitation and Development held its fifth session in Geneva from 22 to 26 January [TD/B/48/3].

At its twenty-sixth executive session in April [A/56/15], TDB took note of the Commission's report and approved the recommendations.

Small and medium-sized enterprises. For its consideration of enhancing the competitiveness of SMEs in the context of foreign direct investment in developing countries, the Commission had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report on the subject [TD/B/COM.3/34], which reviewed the mandates of UNCTAD in the area of enterprise development and internationalization and identified topics for the Commission to take up during the four years leading to the eleventh session of UNCTAD. The topics identified explored ways and means for Governments and international organizations to promote the survival and competitiveness of domestic firms, by targeting foreign investors; using innovative financial mechanisms; adopting enterprise policies consistent with international commitments on trade and investment; and assisting SMEs to acquire information and communication technologies to enter global markets. The Commission also considered the report of the Expert Meeting on the Relationships Between SMEs and Transnational Corporations (TNCs) to Ensure the Competitiveness of SMEs [YUN 2000, p. 901].

The Commission's discussion highlighted the positive impact of TNC-SME linkages on national growth and development. It agreed that SMEs should be more competitive and TNCs should contribute to the local economy of developing countries by working with SMEs for their managerial and technological upgrading and by entering into public-private partnerships to work together with Governments, other TNCs and local business organizations to create support institutions. It called on Governments and the international community to take various actions to assist SMEs and TNCs to form linkages. The Commission recommended that UNCTAD collect and disseminate national best practices stimulating TNC-SME linkages in collaboration with other development actors; conduct regional workshops on successful linkage programmes; promote TNC-SME linkages within the framework of existing technical assistance programmes in order for SMEs to become more competitive; and undertake further research on financing SMEs.

Electronic commerce. For its consideration of capacity-building in electronic commerce: impact of the new economy on traditional sectors of developing countries: electronic commerce and tourism, the Commission had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on the subject [TD/B/COM.3/35], which outlined the main reasons why e-commerce should continue to be a major issue on UNCTAD's development agenda and discussed specific policy questions in e-tourism and e-commerce in general. It also considered the report of the 2000 Expert Meeting on Electronic Commerce and Tourism [YUN 2000, p. 901].

The Commission, noting the low level of participation in e-commerce by developing countries and the importance of e-tourism, stressed that attention should be given to e-tourism development. It made a number of recommendations for action by Governments and the international community. The Commission stated that UNCTAD should contribute to strengthening the ability of developing countries to develop and implement policies on e-commerce by carrying out studies, disseminating information, organizing expert meetings and assisting them in capacity-building. It should also assist transition economies in studying e-commerce issues and implementing policies.

Human resources development. For its consideration of human resources development (HRD) and training in trade-supporting services:

key to growth with special potential for LDCs, the Commission had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on the subject [TD/B/COM.3/36], which outlined the main reasons why HRD in trade-supporting services should continue to be a major issue on the UNCTAD development agenda, focused on specific policy questions and presented areas of future work for UNCTAD. It also considered the report of the 2000 Expert Meeting on Human Resources Development and Training in Trade-supporting Services: Key to Growth with Special Potential for LDCs [YUN 2000, p. 901].

The Commission recognized the need to accord the highest priority to the HRD issue, agreed that HRD initiatives should be consistent with broader national policies for education and training and the overall trade strategy, and emphasized that exchange of national experiences and dissemination of best practices would enhance cooperation among countries. It called on Governments and the international community to take specific actions in the area of HRD and training in trade-supporting services and stated that UNCTAD should promote awareness-raising and dissemination of best practices among government officials, private sector companies, business associations and academic institutions through holding workshops, producing and disseminating printed materials and maintaining web pages on HRD in trade-supporting services, among other initiatives.

Subsidiary bodies. In 2001, a number of expert meetings took place, all in Geneva, on issues to be considered by the Commission in 2002.

The Expert Meeting on Electronic Commerce and International Transport Services: Best Practices for Enhancing the Competitiveness of Developing Countries (26-28 September) [TD/B/COM.3/38] examined the impact of e-commerce on international transport services. It had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report on the subject [TD/B/COM.3/EM.12/2]. In agreed conclusions and recommendations, the Meeting, emphasizing the importance of e-commerce to transport services and developing countries' participation in global trade, urged Governments and enterprises to adapt their legal infrastructure to the requirements of e-transactions, taking into account international rules and guidelines, and to improve access to the Internet. It requested the international community to develop transport and telecommunications infrastructures and strengthen services providers, and recommended that UNCTAD monitor developments related to e-commerce and international transport services and disseminate information on best practices for developing countries.

The Expert Meeting on Improving the Competitiveness of SMEs in Developing Countries: The Role of Finance, including E-Finance, to Enhance Enterprise Development (22-24 October) [TD/B/COM.3/39] had before it an UNCTAD note on the subject [TD/B/COM.3/EM.13/2]. The Meeting discussed opportunities for e-finance and highlighted solutions for the supply side (banks and other financial institutions) and the demand side (SMEs). It examined best practices facilitating SME access to finance and made recommendations to Governments, the public and private sectors, development agencies, international financial institutions and UNCTAD. It also recommended that the Commission on Enterprise, Business Facilitation and Development select a topic for the following two years to develop coherent approaches to SME finance, e-finance and non-financial business support services.

The Expert Meeting on Mainstreaming Gender in Order to Promote Opportunities (14-16 November) [TD/B/COM.3/40] had before it an UNCTAD note on the subject [TD/B/COM.3/EM.14/2]. The Meeting made recommendations and suggested policy options to Governments, the international community and UNCTAD on mainstreaming gender in commodities, trade in services, FDI policy, enterprise development and ICT policy.

Commodities

The Trade and Development Report, 2001 [Sales No. E.01.II.D.10] stated that in 2000 world non-oil commodity prices recovered slightly from sharp declines in 1998 and 1999. Faster growth in the major economic regions resulted in increases in demand for a large number of commodities, leading to lower stock levels and higher prices in some cases. Those increases were sufficient to offset acute declines in the prices of certain key commodities, notably cocoa, coffee and rice. The combined adverse effects of the persistent weakening of some non-oil commodity prices and the increase in oil prices generated severe balance-of-payments problems and welfare losses for oil-importing developing countries heavily dependent on the production and export of a few commodities.

Underlying the improvement in prices were divergent trends among various commodity groups. The lingering effects of the decline in demand during 1998-1999 left producers and exporters of a number of commodities—including cocoa, coffee, rice and tropical logs—with a large stock overhang. For some commodities, particularly nickel and zinc, the fall in stocks that began in late 1999 continued throughout 2000, as a result of strong demand. Changes in the stock levels of agricultural commodities, on the other hand, were mixed.

Prices of minerals, ores and metals as a group increased by 12 per cent from 1999, on account of nickel, copper, aluminium and tungsten. The marked rebound in prices of base metals and other industrial raw materials was the outcome of strong demand, cutbacks in production and a reduction in inventories. The prices of agricultural commodities in 2000 showed large variations, reflecting changes in the balance of supply and demand as well as in stock levels. Prices of key agricultural products remained weak owing to production increases and large inventories. Continued high output of commodities such as coffee, cocoa and rice resulted in a further build-up of stocks and exerted downward pressure on prices. Despite an increase in demand, cocoa prices reached a record low because of a large oversupply, which led to a further build-up of stocks. The 7 per cent increase in tea prices was due to a reduction in supply volumes, particularly from India and Kenya. The 6 per cent rise in food prices, the first increase since 1996, reflected a sharp recovery in sugar prices, which rose more than expected because of a large draw-down in stocks. Although wheat prices recovered slightly, the prices of rice and vegetable oilseeds and oils fell.

The annual average price of crude oil increased by 58 per cent to $27.6 a barrel in 2000, the highest level since 1985, and monthly average oil prices reached a peak of $31.5 a barrel in September 2000. As the price hikes began to be felt in many oil-importing countries, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) increased its production quota by 1.7 million barrels per day (BPD) in April 2000 and adopted a production scheme to keep the price per barrel within the $22-$28 range. Thus, as prices rose above the $28 limit, OPEC raised its production target in July and October. Prices reached a peak in September and again in November, but dropped sharply in December to their lowest level in eight months. To prevent a slide below its target price band, OPEC cut production quotas of members, on a pro rata basis, by 1.5 million BPD as of February 2001.

A joint UNCTAD/DESA report on the world economic situation and prospects [Sales No. E.02.II.C.2], prepared on the basis of information available as at 30 November 2001, observed that oil prices had exhibited considerable volatility in the final months of the year. For the year as a whole, the price of Brent crude oil averaged $24.5 per barrel but was expected to decline to about $20 in 2002. Prior to the terrorist attacks of 11 September, oil prices in 2001 fluctuated within the OPEC target of $22 and $28 per barrel.

Non-oil commodity prices fell by 2.5 per cent on average in 2001. The recovery in the prices of foods and grains, which began in the second quarter of 2000, ended towards the end of 2001. Trends, however, were divergent: sugar prices fell in the third quarter of 2001 due to increased stocks; banana prices increased by about 45 per cent; maize and wheat rose; rice declined; tropical beverages continued to slide; cocoa recovered; tea and coffee were weak; and vegetable oilseeds and oils weakened during the first half of 2001 but improved in the third quarter. The combined price index of agricultural raw materials recorded a 5 per cent decrease in the third quarter of the year, with cotton declining by about 12 per cent in 2001 and natural rubber declining significantly. Prices of minerals, ores and metals declined by at least 8 per cent during the year.

Individual commodities

Cocoa. On 2 March, the United Nations Conference on Cocoa, 2000, at its second session (Geneva, 26 February-2 March 2001), adopted the International Cocoa Agreement, 2001 [TD/COCOA.9/7]. The Agreement was opened for signature in New York on 1 May and would remain open until 31 December 2002. As at 31 December 2001, Brazil, Cameroon, Côte d'Ivoire and Togo had signed the Agreement.

Jute. On 13 March, the United Nations Conference on Jute and Jute Products (Geneva, 12-13 March) adopted the Agreement establishing the Terms of Reference of the International Jute Study Group, 2001 [TD/JUTE.4/6]. On 11 October, the International Jute Organization completed the process of its liquidation and would be succeeded by the International Jute Study Group in early 2002. As at 31 December, Bangladesh had indicated its definitive acceptance of the Agreement and Switzerland had indicated that it would apply it provisionally.

Common Fund for Commodities

The 1980 Agreement establishing the Common Fund for Commodities [YUN 1980, p. 621], a mechanism intended to stabilize the commodities market by helping to finance buffer stocks of specific commodities, as well as commodity development activities such as research and marketing, entered into force in 1989 and the Fund became operational later that year.

As at 31 December 2001, the number of parties to the Agreement stood at 108.

Finance

Financial policy

The Trade and Development Report, 2001 [Sales No. E.01.II.D.10] stated that the second half of 2000 was marked by crises and financial support packages for Argentina and Turkey and by movements of financial indicators such as increases in yield spreads on the international bonds of some developing countries, pointing to perceptions of increased risk. In emerging markets, shifts in monetary conditions and pressures on exchange rates were gradual or absent, except during periods of political unrest in some countries. However, the year was also notable for sharp falls in equity prices. In Asia, there were few major changes since early 2000 in exchange-rate policy or regimes of exchange control, but in Latin America there was a trend towards full dollarization. The range of currency regimes in developing and transition economies continued to span the spectrum from rigid pegs (in Argentina and Hong Kong (China)) and dollarization (in Ecuador and El Salvador) to various types of floating.

Among major financial indicators, sharp falls in indices of equity prices were reported in 2000 after rises of more than 50 per cent for all major regions in 1999; the decline was largest in Asia. While those declines were partly fuelled by increased economic uncertainty, they also reflected a strengthening of the links between equity prices in emerging markets and in major developed countries, which was evident, for example, in increased correlations between emerging-market indices and the NASDAQ (National Association of Securities Dealers Automated Quotation System) index. In part, that was a response to the growing importance in emerging stock markets of firms belonging to the technology, media and telecommunications sector.

In Asian emerging-market economies, there was little change in monetary conditions. The main exceptions were Indonesia and the Philippines, where conditions tightened slightly; several countries in the region experienced currency depreciations. In Latin American emerging markets, monetary conditions were subject to great variation; there was a sharp tightening in Argentina in response to its financial crisis, monetary conditions eased in Brazil and Chile, while in Colombia gradual tightening was followed by stabilization and in Mexico short-term interest rates were subject to substantial fluctuation. Turkey was struck by a financial crisis in the last quarter of 2000, as creditors' confidence broke down in an exchange-rate-based stabilization programme that relied heavily on capital inflows. In other emerging-market economies, exchange and interest rates were subject to only small movements. The principal exception was South Africa, where the rand depreciated more than 20 per cent during the year.

The World Economic and Social Survey 2001 [Sales No. E.01.II.C.1] said the slowdown of the world economy in 2000 was triggered by escalating monetary tightening in major developed economies, particularly the United States. In mid-1999, the United States Federal Reserve began to tighten monetary policy with the aim of moderating demand in order to pre-empt a resurgence of inflation. Central banks in most other developed economies followed suit and interest rates were raised by 150 to 200 basis points within a year. Monetary policy in most developed economies maintained that stance until at least the end of 2000 and in the euro zone until May 2001. As more signs of a sharp slowdown emerged in the beginning of 2001, many developed countries started to ease monetary policy by reducing policy interest rates. The United States Federal Reserve led that adjustment with five cuts in interest rates, totalling 250 basis points, in the first five months of the year.

The majority of world equity markets registered substantial losses in 2000 and during the first quarter of 2001. By March 2001, the NASDAQ index had fallen by more than 65 per cent from its peak a year earlier. The downturn also spread to broader United States stock indices, to most other developed country stock markets and to smaller equity markets, with many Asian emerging-market countries suffering the most. The declining values in global equity markets had an adverse impact on consumer and investment sentiment, leading to reduced consumption and corporate investment. In the second half of 2000, corporate borrowing tightened up as yield spreads in bond markets rose and banks raised their standards for business loans, particularly in the United States. Yield spreads for external borrowing by developing countries also widened markedly. International bond issuances by major developing countries and transition economies faltered in the last quarter of 2000, largely because of the economic and political turmoil in Argentina and Turkey.

In a joint DESA/UNCTAD report on the world economic situation and prospects [Sales No. E.02.II.C.2], based on information available as at 30 November 2001, it was observed that the lower exposure of developing countries to short-term capital flows and the adoption of more flexible exchange-rate regimes meant that external shocks through international financial channels in 2001 were smaller than in the 1997-1998 international financial crises. Nevertheless, a few countries, notably Argentina and Turkey, suffered from a combination of, and interaction between, domestic and international financial difficulties in 2001. Despite some large depreciations, there was a greater degree of stability in the exchange rates of developing countries and transition economies than in the previous few years. However, the adverse developments on both the current and capital accounts meant that a number of developing economies in Latin America, highly dependent on external financing, were facing a balance-of-payments shock.

Financial flows

The World Economic and Social Survey 2001 [Sales No. E.01.II.C.1] stated that there was a sharp rise in the net outward transfer of financial resources from developing countries as a group in 2000. The net outward transfer from countries in Eastern and Southern Asia moderated significantly and the net inward transfer of financial resources to Latin America increased. There was a swing to a large outward net transfer from Western Asia, which substantially exceeded the increase in import demand. The net inward transfer of resources to Africa as a whole was also reversed. Inward resource transfers to oil-importing African countries to finance their trade deficits continued, while the net transfer to the heavily indebted poor countries (HIPC)s was the smallest in several years. Those developments were mirrored in the subdued net financial flows to developing countries, with both private and official flows declining.

The Trade and Development Report, 2001 [Sales No. E.01.H.D.10] said that a major factor in the decline in net private financial flows to developing and transition economies since 1997 was the contraction of bank lending. The contraction in lending of the banks reporting to the Bank for International Settlements slowed in the first two quarters of 2000, reflecting developments in East and South Asia, net repayments by which were responsible for a larger part of the decline in net total lending to developing and transition economies in 1999. After a period of relative buoyancy in the aftermath of the financial crises of the late 1990s, net flows of foreign direct investment (FDI) to developing and transition economies decreased in 2000. However, much of the contraction was accounted for by a limited number of recipients; for some Asian countries, the rise in FDI that followed the region's financial crisis largely had run its course and the figures for the Republic of Korea were reduced by an increase in outward FDI. For Argentina, the figure fell back from a level boosted in the previous year by the proceeds of a single privatization project. FDI flows to Brazil remained high. Capital flows to developing and transition economies in the form of private equity took two forms: international equity issues and foreign investment in local equity markets.

A joint DESA/UNCTAD report on the world economic situation and prospects [Sales No. E.02.II.C.2], based on information available as at 30 November 2001, noted that there was a net financial flow to developing countries and transition economies of almost $37 billion in 2001. Almost all of the net inflow was accounted for by net official financial flows, mainly because of the rise in assistance to countries in financial difficulties. FDI remained the mainstay of net private financial inflows, although it declined from its 2000 level, mainly as the result of the drop in world economic growth and, in particular, in cross-border mergers and acquisitions (M&As). The M&As-led decline in FDI flows affected mostly developed countries, with flows to developing countries relatively unchanged. Portfolio investment and other investment, mainly bank credit, were the sources of substantial net private financial outflows from developing countries and transition economies.

The issue of the net transfer of resources between developing and developed countries was also addressed by the Secretary-General in a July report to the General Assembly (see p. 883).

International financial system

High-level meeting of Economic and Social Council and Bretton Woods institutions. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 55/186 [YUN 2000, p. 908] and Economic and Social Council decision 2001/207 of 31 January, the fourth special high-level meeting between the Council and the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund (IMF)) took place in New York on 1 May [A/56/3/Rev.1]. The meeting addressed two themes: development financing, in particular poverty eradication, official development assistance (ODA) and debt; and towards a development-friendly international financial system: public and private responsibility in the prevention of financial crises. It had before it a note by the Secretary-General on selected aspects of international cooperation in strengthening financing for development [E/2001/45], which also presented some questions on the two themes for discussion. In an informal summary of the high-level meeting [E/2001/72], the Secretary-General summarized the main aspects of the statements made and exchanges of views that took place and provided a synopsis of the discussions, from which the following main themes emerged: global economic outlook and achievement of goals of the Millennium Summit [YUN 2000, p. 47]; poverty eradication: the role of ODA, debt relief and trade; growth sustainability; strengthening the international financial system; participation in decision-making; and financing for development.

In concluding remarks, the IMF Deputy Managing Director observed that a balance needed to be struck between the multiple goals and priorities and the insufficient resources and limited instruments available, and that greater coherence and accountability were needed. He stated that IMF reform efforts placed an emphasis on: realigning the conditionality review process to make it more efficient and open; adapting the Fund's facilities to make them more conducive to pressing needs; and strengthening its role in surveillance and assessment of external vulnerability.

The Managing Director of the World Bank highlighted key constraints to development and the Bank's efforts in addressing them. He noted that the HIPC Initiative, combined with traditional debt relief and bilateral debt forgiveness, would provide $55 billion in debt relief for 22 countries, and that the Bank was also taking action in other areas that posed constraints to development, such as post-conflict reconstruction and HIV/AIDS. He further observed that, to take advantage of trade as a lever for development, market access needed to be improved and the capacity of developing countries to participate in trade negotiations strengthened.

In his closing remarks, the President of the Council stated that financial and monetary issues and the integration of developing and transition economies into the global economy remained crucial questions to be addressed for economic growth and development. Increased ODA, sound national policies and unhindered market access also remained critical issues. He observed that responsibility for development was incumbent upon a larger number of stakeholders, beyond Governments and international institutions, and the potentially devastating contagion effect of financial crises made it imperative to seek new ways of interaction, of sharing responsibility and of broadening participation between the public and the private sector.

By decision 2001/305 of 26 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's note on the special high-level meeting [E/2001/72].

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 55/186 [YUN 2000, p. 908], the Secretary-General submitted a July report on international financial architecture and development, including net transfer of resources between developing and developed countries [A/56/173]. The report summarized recent developments in financial flows and net transfer of financial resources to developing countries and examined the main actions taken and concerns raised on policy issues addressed in resolution 55/186. It also sought to consolidate further a broader global agenda for a new international financial architecture, situating it within the preparatory process for the International Conference on Financing for Development, to be held in 2002 (see p. 886). In that regard, the report discussed international standards and codes; exchange-rate and capital account regimes; multilateral surveillance and monitoring; terms and conditions for international assistance; and private sector involvement in crisis prevention and resolution.

The Secretary-General stated that amid dramatic increases in global trade, direct investment and capital flows, there had been a growing tendency for economic changes in any country to reflect developments worldwide. The responsibility for achieving a more stable international financial system lay with national policy makers; developing and transition economies should be encouraged in their efforts to strengthen their financial sectors and pursue sound macro-economic policies, and the major industrialized countries, which played a key role in setting the international economic environment for development, should pay more attention to the coherence of their policies with the global development objectives and priorities that they endorsed. The effectiveness of international institutions would be fundamental to a stable global economic and financial system, and emphasis should be placed on enhancing consistency, coherence and complementarity among different bodies dealing with financial, trade and developmental issues. More effective cooperation among international bodies required improved coordination at the national level among different ministries of government; and cooperation among regional groups of countries could complement activities at the global level. As the private sector accounted for the overwhelming share of international financial flows, it had important responsibilities in crisis prevention and resolution. In that regard, enhanced dialogue and active and regular contact on policy issues aimed at more stable private sector activity, particularly in emerging markets, could be developed, and a closer collaboration with civic groups and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) representing civil society was vital. Enhanced global governance required complementary and enhanced exchanges among all parties concerned, and the United Nations should bring its own perspective to identifying emerging issues and policy gaps and facilitate dialogue and consensus-building on global economic, financial and development problems.

By an addendum [A/56/173/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted a note by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) on financial stability and market efficiency: a global public goods (GPG) perspective. The paper suggested four concrete ways to achieve more successful cooperation in the finance area: to root the design of international cooperation in national policy goals and conditions and look at GPGs as public goods that required international cooperation but still should have positive utility for all nationally; to encourage broader participation in international financial policy-making as a means to reduce collective action and information as well as burden-sharing problems; to engage more actively the epistemic community in exploring possible production paths of the GPG financial stability and market efficiency; and to finance needed capacity-building in developing countries out of the seigniorage earned by the central banks of industrial countries as an integral part of their efforts to provide sound money.

By a second addendum [A/56/173/Add.2], the Secretary-General transmitted information on work undertaken by UNCTAD in support of the promotion of long-term private financial flows, especially FDI. The report noted that UNCTAD activities aimed to improve the understanding of developing and transition economies about policy options in international investment flows, and to strengthen their abilities to formulate and implement measures and action programmes to attract and benefit from FDI.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/558/Add.2], adopted resolution 56/181 without vote [agenda item 95 (b)].

Towards a strengthened and stable international financial architecture responsive to the priorities of growth and development, especially in developing countries, and to the promotion of economic and social equity

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/186 of 20 December 2000, entitled "Towards a strengthened and stable international financial architecture responsive to the priorities of growth and development, especially in developing countries, and to the promotion of economic and social equity",

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "International financial architecture and development, including net transfer of resources between developing and developed countries";

2. Takes note also of the deliberations of the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Financing for Development, which is to be held at Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002;

3. Stresses the importance of continued substantive consideration of the sub-item on the international financial system and development;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the international financial system and development, bearing in mind, inter alia, the outcome of the International Conference on Financing for Development;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session, under the item entitled "Macroeconomic policy questions", the sub-item entitled "International financial system and development".

Debt problems of developing countries

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/184 [YUN 2000, p. 912], the Secretary-General submitted an August report on the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries, including those resulting from global financial instability [A/56/262]. The report described the overall debt situation of developing and transition economies, the recent evolution of conventional debt indicators and changes in the pattern of external financing of developing countries and in the nature of their external debt problems. It also considered developments in external debt owed to official creditors and progress made in the context of the IMF/World Bank HIPC Initiative and the Paris Club (group of creditor countries). It also described developments in financial obligations of developing country debtors vis-à-vis private creditors and international capital markets, and discussed how to involve the private sector in the prevention and resolution of financial crises.

The Secretary-General observed that the year 2000 had seen some improvements in the external debt situation of developing countries and transition economies. With the total stock of debt virtually unchanged in nominal terms and gross national product (GNP) growth rates exceeding 5 per cent in both developed and transition economies, debt to GNP ratios improved in all regions. However, cross-country differences in growth in export earnings were particularly large in 2000 owing to the differential effects of commodity price developments, strong growth in the United States and recovery in East Asia. Moreover, debt service continued to represent a heavy burden for many developing countries, in particular in sub-Saharan Africa and Latin America, as well as among transition economies, and arrears on interest payments actually rose in Latin America and East Asia. For all developing and transition economies taken together, the stock of reserves rose by $67 billion, or more than 9 per cent, in 2000, entailing considerable costs because they were borrowed at rates well above the interest earned on them.

As to official debt, of the 41 HIPC, only two (Bolivia and Uganda) had reached completion point (receiving the full extent of debt relief possible under the Initiative) by mid-2001. Twenty-three countries, 19 from Africa and 4 from Latin America, reached the decision point (entitled to interim assistance); the majority of them were receiving enhanced debt relief from Paris Club creditors. Most of the countries that had not reached decision point by mid-2001 were engaged in armed conflicts, and consideration was being given to accommodating their circumstances by shortening the time required for reaching the decision and completion points of the Initiative. In the Brussels Declaration adopted at LDC-III (see p. 770), Governments undertook to make progress towards cancelling outstanding official bilateral debt within the enhanced HIPC Initiative. In 2000, the first countries to conclude new Paris Club flow rescheduling agreements on Cologne terms [YUN 1999, p. 896] were Mauritania and the United Republic of Tanzania. Cameroon, Chad, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Madagascar, Malawi and the Niger followed in the first half of 2001. Four HIPCs (Benin, Burkina Faso, Mali and Senegal) had their existing Paris Club agreements topped up to Cologne terms through supplementary debt relief, and two HIPCs, Honduras and Mozambique, benefited from a moratorium on debt service. Of the HIPCs that had yet to reach decision point, Ethiopia obtained a flow rescheduling in April 2001. Operations in connection with the provision of enhanced debt relief under the HIPC Initiative accelerated the pace of debt renegotiations in the Paris Club during the second half of 2000 and first half of 2001. New Paris Club agreements on non-concessional terms were concluded for eight countries (Ecuador, Gabon, Georgia, Kenya, Nigeria, Pakistan, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Ukraine) up to July 2001.

As to commercial debt, the report analysed private capital flows, recent bond restructuring exercises, and official lending and private sector involvement in crisis resolution.

The Secretary-General stated that while some progress had been made, problems remained unresolved in most areas. While the enhancement of HIPC had brought some improvement in its implementation, fundamental changes were needed, including measures to accelerate the provision of debt relief by facilitating the process of preparing and implementing Poverty Reduction Strategy Papers, which constituted a high hurdle for many countries. Some Governments of the Group of Seven major industrialized countries (G-7) had proposed or taken action to impose a moratorium on debt-service payments by HIPCs that had reached decision point; such action deserved further consideration. The Secretary-General underscored the importance of an independent assessment of debt sustainability that was not restricted to HIPCs but also encompassed other debt-distressed low-income and middle-income countries. He also stressed the need for contingency measures and safeguards for countries about to reach completion points in order to prevent them from falling back into the debt trap because of adverse changes in exogenous factors, including their export and borrowing prospects. A crucial factor for the success of the HIPC Initiative was the additionality of debt relief in comparison with overall pre-debt-relief transfers. That required ODA to be raised in accordance with the needs of recipient countries. Moreover, to ensure that the Initiative did not lead to reduction in multilateral financing to other poor countries, donors should provide the resources to maintain past levels of lending to those countries. Although Paris Club practices had evolved over time, they still fell short of addressing debt problems in a way that would ensure graduation from lengthy and repetitive rescheduling. An important step towards a rethinking of approaches of official debt relief in the Paris Club context could be to broaden the debt eligible for write-off.

The Secretary-General concluded that the international community had not yet made significant progress in providing orderly debt workout mechanisms to ensure that creditors and investors bore the consequences of the risks they had taken, and that the burden of crises was distributed equitably between debtors and creditors and among different classes of creditors.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/558/Add.4], adopted resolution 56/184 without vote [agenda item 95 (d)].

Enhancing international cooperation towards a durable solution to the external debt problems of developing countries

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 51/164 of 16 December 1996, 52/185 of 18 December 1997, 53/175 of 15 December 1998, 54/202 of 22 December 1999 and 55/184 of 20 December 2000 on enhancing international cooperation towards a durable solution to the external debt problems of developing countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries, including those resulting from global financial instability;

2. Takes note also of the deliberations of the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Financing for Development, which is to be held at Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002;

3. Stresses the importance of the continued substantive consideration of the sub-item on external debt crisis and development;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the external debt crisis and development, bearing in mind, inter alia, the outcome of the International Conference on Financing for Development;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session, under the item entitled "Macroeconomic policy questions", the sub-item entitled "External debt crisis and development".

Financing for development

International Conference on Financing for Development (2002)

The Preparatory Committee for the High-level International Intergovernmental Event on Financing for Development held two sessions and a resumed session in 2001. On the Committee's recommendation, the General Assembly, in March, decided that the event would be named the International Conference on Financing for Development and accepted Mexico's offer to host the Conference; in July, it decided that the Conference would be held in Monterrey from 18 to 22 March 2002.

Preparatory Committee meetings. The Preparatory Committee held two sessions in 2001, all in New York: the second (12-23 February) [A/55/28/Add.1], the third (2-8 May) [A/55/28/Add.2 & Corr.1] and the resumed third (15-19 October) [A/56/28 & Corr.1]. The Committee's organizational and first sessions were held in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 916].

At its second session, convened in accordance with General Assembly resolution 55/213 [YUN 2000, p. 917], the Committee had before it the reports of the five regional consultative meetings on financing for development [ibid., p. 916] and the reports of the Committee's two hearings, one with civil society organizations and the other with the business community [ibid.]. It also considered a report of the Secretary-General [A/AC.257/12] containing recommendations for consideration by the Committee on: mobilizing domestic financial resources for development; mobilizing international resources for development: FDI and other private flows; trade; increasing international financial cooperation for development through, inter alia, ODA; debt; and addressing systemic issues: enhancing the coherence and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems in support of development.

In addition to recommending to the Assembly the adoption of a draft resolution on the preparations for the substantive preparatory process and the Conference itself (see below), the Preparatory Committee decided to accredit 10 additional NGOs not in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to the high-level intergovernmental event, including its preparatory process.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 March [meeting 97], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Preparatory Committee for the High-level International Intergovernmental Event on Financing for Development [A/55/L.77], adopted resolution 55/245 A without vote [agenda item 101].

Preparations for the substantive preparatory process and the International Conference on Financing for Development

Recalling its resolutions 54/196 of 22 December 1999 and 55/186 and 55/213 of 20 December 2000,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General and all other inputs submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the High-level International Intergovernmental Event on Financing for Development for consideration at its second session,

Welcoming the continuous and important progress made in consultations with the major institutional stakeholders, in particular the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and the World Trade Organization, with regard to their involvement in the process of financing for development,

Encouraging Governments and all other relevant stakeholders to continue considering concrete initiatives in support of the financing for development preparatory process and the high-level international intergovernmental event, within the framework of the substantive agenda,

Further encouraging the deepening of the efforts of all relevant stakeholders, including at the regional level, as well as by civil society and the business sector, in support of the financing for development preparatory process and the high-level international intergovernmental event, within the framework of the substantive agenda,

Recalling the holistic nature of the financing for development preparatory process and the need to take into account other ongoing processes of relevance to the substantive agenda for the financing for development process,

Reiterating its appreciation to Governments for the support provided to the Trust Fund for extrabudgetary contributions to the financing for development process,

1. Decides that the high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development will take the form of an international conference, under the auspices of the United Nations, at the highest political level, including at the summit level, and accepts with gratitude the generous offer of Mexico to host this conference, to be named the International Conference on Financing for Development, on the understanding that the specific timing and location of the Conference will be announced by the host country during the third session of the Preparatory Committee for the High-level International Intergovernmental Event on Financing for Development;

2. Stresses the importance of effective preparations for the Conference, and welcomes the preparatory activities carried out so far, including the substantive interactive dialogue and contribution of all stakeholders during the second session of the Preparatory Committee;

3. Decides that the Preparatory Committee will hold its third session for a period of one week from 2 to 8 May 2001, and that it will hold a resumed third session for a period of another full week during October or November 2001;

4. Invites Governments to submit to the coordinating secretariat, not later than 15 April 2001, a concise identification of possible initiatives or themes, consideration of which may serve as a means to focus further the substantive preparatory work, within the framework of the substantive agenda, on the understanding that a compilation of such submissions should be available to the Preparatory Committee at its third session;

5. Decides that the Preparatory Committee, at its third session, from 2 to 8 May 2001, taking into account all inputs submitted to it at its second session and the dialogue held therein, as well as the above-mentioned compilation of submissions and other relevant inputs, will consider in greater depth issues contained in a working paper prepared by the Facilitator, which will serve as a means to focus further the discussions of the substantive preparatory work, within the framework of the substantive agenda, and in this regard encourages active participation by all relevant stakeholders in the consideration of these issues;

6. Also decides that the Preparatory Committee, at its resumed third session, in October or November 2001, will consider a concise first draft prepared by the Facilitator, reflecting the progress made at its third session and taking into account all other relevant inputs received thereafter by the Preparatory Committee, within the framework of the substantive agenda;

7. Requests the Bureau of the Preparatory Committee to explore ways and means to deepen the efforts of all relevant stakeholders, including at the regional level, as well as those made by civil society and the business sector, in support of the financing for development preparatory process, within the framework of the substantive agenda, and to submit proposals for consideration and a decision by the Preparatory Committee.

At its third session, convened in accordance with resolution 55/245 A, the Committee (renamed the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Financing for Development), in addition to the documents considered at its second session, had before it the third report of its Bureau [A/AC.257/22 & Corr.1], which addressed modalities for participation of key institutional and non-institutional stakeholders, arrangements for the Conference and other organizational matters; the report of the Bureau's task force on modalities for engaging the business community in the financing for development process [A/AC.257/22/Add.1]; a working paper by the Facilitator on issues related to the six headings of the Conference's substantive agenda and interlinkages between them [A/AC.257/24]; and a note by the Secretary-General transmitting a compilation of initiatives or themes submitted by Governments to further focus the discussions of the preparatory work within the framework of the substantive agenda [A/AC.257/23 & Add.1].

The Preparatory Committee recommended to the Assembly the adoption of a draft resolution (see below). It also decided to accredit an additional 13 NGOs not in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to the Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 July [meeting 109], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Financing for Development [A/55/L.82], adopted resolution 55/245 B without vote [agenda item 101].

Preparations for the substantive preparatory process and the International Conference on Financing for Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 54/196 of 22 December 1999, 55/186 and 55/213 of 20 December 2000 and 55/245 A of 21 March 2001, and decision 1/1 of the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Financing for Development,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Bureau of the Preparatory Committee as well as all other inputs submitted to date for the consideration of the Preparatory Committee at its third session,

Welcoming the progress made in consultations with the major institutional stakeholders, in particular the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and the World Trade Organization, with regard to their involvement in the process of financing for development,

Encouraging Governments and all other relevant stakeholders to continue considering concrete initiatives in support of the financing for development preparatory process and the International Conference on Financing for Development, within the framework of the substantive agenda,

Further encouraging the deepening of the efforts of all relevant stakeholders, including at the regional level, as well as by civil society and the business sector, in support of the financing for development preparatory process and the Conference, within the framework of the substantive agenda,

Recalling the holistic nature of the financing for development preparatory process and the need to take into account other ongoing processes of relevance to the substantive agenda for the financing for development process,

Reiterating its appreciation to Governments for the support provided to the Trust Fund for extrabudgetary contributions to the financing for development process,

1. Stresses the importance of a successful outcome of the International Conference on Financing for Development, as reflected by the heads of State and Government in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and expresses appreciation to those heads of State and Government who responded to the letter addressed to them by the Secretary-General in compliance with resolution 55/213;

2. Also stresses the importance of effective preparations for the Conference, and welcomes the preparatory activities carried out so far, including the substantive interactive dialogue and contribution of all stakeholders during the third session of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference;

3. Expresses its gratitude to the host country, Mexico, for its announcement regarding the venue and timing of the Conference, and decides that the International Conference on Financing for Development shall be held in Monterrey, capital of the state of Nuevo León, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the preparatory process and the Conference with all the support needed, including a secretariat commensurate with the level of the event and adequate staff and other resources, and including the launching of a global public awareness campaign with as much support as possible from public/private partnerships in order to ensure, in collaboration with the authorities of the host country, the successful realization of the Conference and public awareness of its outcome;

5. Requests the coordinating secretariat to provide the Preparatory Committee on a regular basis with all relevant information on the progress of the global public awareness campaign;

6. Invites all relevant stakeholders to continue their active involvement in support of the financing for development preparatory process, including through staff support from the major institutional stakeholders to the financing for development coordinating secretariat, and in this context invites the coordinating secretariat to continue to provide support to the Facilitator, including in the preparation of the concise first draft of the outcome document mandated in resolution 55/245 A, taking into account the substantive interactive dialogue and all other relevant inputs received by the Preparatory Committee within the framework of the substantive agenda;

7. Requests that the first draft of the outcome document be submitted to the Preparatory Committee in mid-September 2001 for its consideration at its resumed third session, to be held from 15 to 19 October 2001;

8. Encourages Governments, as well as all relevant stakeholders, including the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the World Trade Organization, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Development Programme, the regional development banks and all other relevant regional bodies, to continue considering concrete initiatives in support of the financing for development preparatory process and the International Conference on Financing for Development, within the framework of the substantive agenda, including through the organization of expert panels and round tables, and in that regard requests the coordinating secretariat to bring information on such work to the attention of the Preparatory Committee at its resumed third session;

9. Reaffirms the importance of continuing to strengthen ways and means to deepen the efforts of all relevant stakeholders, including at the regional level, as well as by civil society and the business sector, in support of the financing for development preparatory process and the Conference, within the framework of the substantive agenda, and in that regard, having considered the report of the task force established by the Bureau of the Preparatory Committee to consider modalities for engaging the business community in the financing for development process:

(a) Expresses its satisfaction with the informal discussion with business sector interlocutors on 2 May 2001, and in that context requests the coordinating secretariat, in full consultation with the Bureau, to advise on, assist in and monitor a programme of work developed with the business sector that draws on its perspectives relevant to the substantive agenda items. This programme of work may run from May 2001 until the Conference, and may include workshops, seminars, round tables, forums and other forms of input. The secretariat should bring the outcomes to the attention of the Preparatory Committee;

(b) Decides to invite the participation of business sector entities, as follows:

(i) Business sector entities that are in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council as non-governmental organizations will participate according to the existing rules;

(ii) Business sector entities that are not in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council will be accredited on an ad hoc basis in a similar manner to non-governmental organizations, using the following procedure. They shall provide the name of and information about the company or organization, such as annual reports and a business prospectus, to the coordinating secretariat which shall distribute the names of and information about these entities to members of the Preparatory Committee which will decide accreditation on a non-objection basis;

(c) Decides that the modalities for their participation in the Conference shall be finalized when the format of the Conference is decided upon by the Preparatory Committee at its resumed third session;

(d) Encourages other initiatives to involve the business sector at national and regional levels and to inform the Preparatory Committee thereof;

10. Decides that the format of the Conference should include a high-level official meeting, to be held on 18 March 2002; a segment at the ministerial level, to which delegations shall be invited to send fully integrated delegations, with representatives from all relevant national ministries, to be held on 19 and 20 March 2002; and a segment at the summit level, with the participation of heads of State or Government, to be held on 21 and 22 March 2002;

11. Decides also that the Conference shall include the participation of States Members of the United Nations, States members of the specialized agencies and observers, in accordance with the established practice of the General Assembly;

12. Decides further that the Conference shall also include the participation of all relevant stakeholders, including the business sector and civil society;

13. Requests, in reference to paragraphs 11 and 12 above, that the Bureau of the Preparatory Committee prepare a proposal for the consideration and decision of the Preparatory Committee, at its resumed third session, on the specific format and rules of procedure of the Conference, as well as possible round tables or other suitable arrangements for the various segments;

14. Agrees that the Preparatory Committee, taking into account the dialogue held during its third session, will decide on the nature of the outcome of the International Conference on Financing for Development no later than at its resumed third session in order to guide the Facilitator in the continued intergovernmental negotiations and in the preparation of the draft outcome documents.

At its resumed third session, convened in accordance with resolution 55/245 A (see p. 886), the Committee had before it the final report of the High-level Panel on Financing for Development [A/55/1000]; the list of additional NGOs recommended for accreditation to the preparatory process and the Conference [A/AC.257/10/Add.4]; a list of business entities/organizations recommended for accreditation [A/AC.257/30]; a draft outcome document prepared by the Facilitator [A/AC.257/25]; a note by the Secretary-General on technical notes related to issues falling under the Conference's substantive agenda [A/AC.257/27 & Add.1-10]; the fourth report of the Committee's Bureau on preparations for the Conference [A/AC.257/29 & Add.1 & Add.1/Corr.1]; and a September note by the Secretary-General [A/AC.257/26] updating activities planned or undertaken pursuant to Assembly resolution 55/245 B, including the launch of a global public awareness campaign, initiatives by Governments and other relevant stakeholders and the development of a programme of work with the business sector.

The Panel recommended strategies for the mobilization of resources required to accelerate equitable and sustainable growth in developing countries and transition economies, and to fulfil the poverty and development commitments enshrined in the United Nations Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49]. It discussed domestic resource mobilization, private capital flows, trade, international development cooperation and systemic issues.

The Preparatory Committee recommended to the Assembly for adoption draft decisions on the format of the Conference and on the provisional rules of procedure (see below). It also adopted and brought to the Assembly's attention decisions on the accreditation of intergovernmental organizations [dec. 3/1], additional NGOs [dec. 3/2] and business entities/organizations [dec. 3/3]; and decisions on the provisional agenda for its fourth session, to be held in January 2002 [dec. 3/4], and on the preparation of the draft outcome document of the Conference [dec. 3/5].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/570], adopted resolution 56/210 without vote [agenda item 107].

International Conference on Financing for Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/205 of 20 December 1991, 48/187 of 21 December 1993, 50/93 of 20 December 1995, 52/179 of 18 December 1997, 53/173 of 15 December 1998, 54/196 of 22 December 1999 and 55/213 of 20 December 2000 on the high-level international intergovernmental consideration of financing for development,

Recalling also its resolution 55/245 A of 21 March 2001, on convening an International Conference on Financing for Development, in which it accepted with gratitude the generous offer of Mexico to host the Conference, which is to be held at Monterrey from 18 to 22 March 2002,

1. Takes note of the deliberations of the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Financing for Development at its first, second and third substantive sessions;

2. Stresses the importance of continued substantive consideration of the item on financing for development;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the outcome of the International Conference on Financing for Development;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the item entitled "High-level international intergovernmental consideration of financing for development".

On the same date, the Assembly decided that the format of the International Conference on Financing for Development would be as set out in the annex to its decision (decision 56/445) and recommended for adoption by the Conference the provisional rules of procedure, which were annexed to its decision (decision 56/446). On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the item on high-level international intergovernmental consideration of financing for development would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464).

Investment, technology and related financial issues

The UNCTAD Commission on Investment, Technology and Related Financial Issues held its fifth session in Geneva from 12 to 16 February [TD/B/48/4].

At its twenty-sixth executive session in April [A/56/15], TDB took note of the Commission's report and approved its recommendations.

Mergers and acquisitions. For its consideration of the impact of international investment flows on development: mergers and acquisitions (M&As)—policies aimed at maximizing the positive and minimizing the possible negative impact of international investment, the Commission had before it the report of an Expert Meeting on the subject [YUN 2000, p. 917]; an UNCTAD secretariat note transmitting the outcome of that Expert Meeting [TD/B/COM.2/29]; and a note submitted to that Meeting by the UNCTAD secretariat on the impact of cross-border M&As on development and policy issues [TD/B/COM.2/EM.7/2 & Corr.1].

In a series of recommendations, to Governments, the international community and UNCTAD, the Commission stated that national policies or guidelines on M&As should reflect a long-term developmental perspective and measures should be considered to maximize their benefits and minimize their social cost. International cooperation should be strengthened in the area of competition policies and consideration should be given to assisting developing countries, particularly LDCs, in developing and implementing national and regional policies and formulating policies and measures concerning cross-border M&As. UNCTAD should continue to analyse trends in cross-border M&As and their share in FDI flows and related policy responses and their impact on development. It should also elaborate guidelines, with a view to providing recommendations to deal with the challenges posed by the impact of cross-border M&As on national market structures, level of employment and competition policy.

Home country measures. For its consideration of home country measures, the Commission had before it the report of the 2000 Expert Meeting on the subject [YUN 2000, p. 917] and an UNCTAD secretariat note [TD/B/COM.2/30], which summarized that Meeting's key issues and policy proposals. In recommendations to Governments and the international community, the Commission stated that Governments should emulate best practices in the area of home country measures (measures aimed at promoting outward investment and technology transfer) and apply them in a cooperative spirit. Home countries, particularly developed ones, should further develop efforts to encourage FDI flows, particularly to and between developing countries and especially to LDCs; and host countries should take advantage of opportunities arising from home country measures and seek to develop linkages between their own investment promotion efforts and home country measures offered by home countries. The international community should further examine what measures Governments should take to implement the provisions of international agreements on transfer of technology, and international support measures could be useful in facilitating FDI flows to developing countries, including through the improvement of the enabling environment. UNCTAD, within the mandate from UNCTAD X [YUN 2000, p. 891], should analyse all aspects of agreements relevant to transfer of technology and design technical co-operation activities to assist countries in making effective use of home country measures.

Investment policy reviews. For its consideration of investment policy reviews: exchange of national experience, the Commission had before it the Investment and Innovation Policy Review of Ethiopia [UNCTAD/ITE/IPC/Misc.4] and the Investment Policy Reviews of Ecuador [UNCTAD/ITE/IPC/Misc.2], Mauritius [UNCTAD/ITE/IPC/Misc.1] and Peru [UNCTAD/ITE/IIP/Misc.19].

Subsidiary bodies. In 2001, two expert meetings took place, both in Geneva. The Expert Meeting on International Arrangements for Transfer of Technology: Best Practices for Access to and Measures to Encourage Transfer of Technology with a View to Capacity-building in Developing Countries, Especially in LDCs (27-29 June) [TD/B/COM.2/33] had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on the subject [TD/B/COM.2/EM.9/2] and the Compendium of International Arrangements on Transfer of Technology: Selected Instruments [Sales No. E.OI.II.D.28]. The experts highlighted the important role of technology in economic development and noted that more should be done to implement international instruments to enhance the transfer of technology and technological capabilities to developing countries, in particular to LDCs. They examined best practices that could contribute to technology transfer and capacity-building and recommended that UNCTAD provide assistance to developing countries to negotiate technology transfer provisions in international instruments and explore ways to implement international commitments effectively.

The Expert Meeting on the Impact of FDI Policies on Industrialization, Local Entrepreneurship and the Development of Supply Capacity (5-7 November) [TD/B/COM.2/35] had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on the subject

[TD/B/COM.2/EM.10/2], which explored policy issues for countries wishing to attract and benefit from FDI. The experts examined policy issues related to: the link between FDI and industrialization, export competitiveness and supply capacity development; the role of corporate strategies and other considerations of foreign investors; targeting FDI in the context of development strategies; and local entrepreneurship and supply capacity development. They made recommendations on the role of Governments and the international community and agreed that UNCTAD should continue to analyse the international systems of production and assist developing countries in assessing their capabilities to define policy goals in line with their situation in the international market, and in implementing FDI targeting and linkage programmes consistent with their industrialization and development strategies.

Competition law and policy

The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy held its third session in Geneva from 2 to 4 July [TD/B/COM.2/32]. It considered consultations on competition law and policy, including the model law and studies related to the provisions of the 1980 Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices (known as the Set) [YUN 1980, p. 626]; and the UNCTAD work programme on competition law and policy, including technical assistance, advisory and training programmes. It had before it a report on the model law [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/23] containing possible elements for a new article on competition and regulation, as requested by the Fourth United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set [YUN 2000, p. 901], and UNCTAD secretariat reports on: technical assistance, advisory and training programmes [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/20]; experiences gained on international cooperation on competition policy issues and the mechanisms used [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/21]; and competition policy and the exercise of intellectual property rights [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/22].

In agreed conclusions, the Group of Experts recommended the strengthening of UNCTAD's work programme and the intergovernmental machinery addressing competition law and policy issues. It invited member States to assist UNCTAD on a voluntary basis in its activities by providing experts, training facilities or financial resources, and requested the UNCTAD secretariat to study the possibility of formulating a model co-operation agreement on competition law and policy, based on the Set, and to expand its activities. The secretariat was also asked to prepare for the Group's next session: a study on the relationship between competition, competitiveness and development; an updated review of technical assistance; a preliminary report on ways in which international agreements on competition might apply to developing countries, enabling them to introduce and enforce competition law and policy; and a study of the roles of dispute mediation mechanisms and alternative arrangements.

International standards of accounting and reporting

The Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting held its eighteenth session in Geneva from 10 to 12 September [TD/B/COM.2/34]. Having considered the report of the ad hoc consultative group of experts on accounting by small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) [TD/B/COM.2/ISAR/12], the Group, in agreed conclusions, stated that the report needed further refinement and requested the ad hoc consultative group to continue its work. It reconfirmed the need for guidance on an accounting framework for SMEs that took into consideration the fact that one uniform set of accounting rules would not suit the needs of large, medium-sized and small enterprises. The Group also made recommendations on environmental accounting and reporting and on the assessment of professional qualification requirements. The secretariat was encouraged to work with the members of the Group during the intersessional periods to identify topics for discussion.

Taxation

By decision 2001/208 of 31 January, the Economic and Social Council approved the holding of the tenth meeting of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters in Geneva from 10 to 14 September instead of in New York from 23 to 27 April.

By decision 2001/314 of 26 July, the Council deferred to its resumed session of 2001 consideration of the sub-item "International co-operation in tax matters".

The tenth meeting of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters was held in Geneva from 10 to 14 September [E/2002/6]. It discussed revision and updating of the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries and the Manual for the Negotiation of Bilateral Tax Treaties between Developed and Developing Countries; transfer pricing; new financial instruments; taxation of e-commerce; mutual assistance in tax collection; and technical training.

The Group of Experts recognized the need for developing countries and transitional economies to improve their ability to develop, implement and administer transfer-pricing rules in accordance with article 9 of the United Nations and OECD Model Conventions, and, to that end, recommended enhancing policy advice, technical assistance and international cooperation on transfer-pricing issues. It also recommended steps whereby developing countries and economies in transition could avoid or reduce the cost of resolving disputes with multinational companies over the arm's-length principle. In the light of the potential importance of e-commerce taxation for developing countries and economies in transition, the Group recommended that the United Nations undertake a study of the tax issues involved.

By decision 2001/325 of 20 December, the Council deferred to its substantive session of 2002 consideration of the report of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on its tenth meeting.

Transport

Maritime transport

The Review of Maritime Transport 2001 [Sales No. E.O.II.D.26] stated that world seaborne trade recorded its fifteenth consecutive annual increase in 2000, reaching a record high of 5.88 billion tons. The annual growth rate increased to 3.6 per cent compared to 0.9 per cent in 1999. Global maritime trade growth in 2001 was expected to decline to 2 per cent. Total maritime activities measured in ton-miles increased to 22,940 billion in 2000, from 21,930 billion in 1999.

The world merchant fleet expanded to 808.4 million deadweight tons (dwt) at the end of 2000, a 1.2 per cent increase over 1999. New-building deliveries were up by 9.6 per cent to 44.4 million dwt and tonnage broken up and lost declined by 27.7 per cent to 22.2 million dwt, leaving a net gain of 9.4 million dwt. The fleet of oil tankers and dry bulk carriers, which together made up 70.1 per cent of the total world fleet, increased by 1.1 per cent and 2 per cent respectively. There was an 8.8 per cent increase to 69.2 million dwt in the container ship fleet and a 6.9 per cent increase to 18.5 million dwt in the liquefied gas carrier fleet. Registration of ships by developed market-economy countries and major open-registry countries accounted for 25.2 and 48.5 per cent of the world fleet, respectively. Open registries increased their tonnage by 1.9 per cent and two thirds of that beneficially owned fleet was owned by market economies and developing countries. Developing countries' share reached 19.4 per cent or 157 million dwt, 115.7 million of which was registered in Asia.

Transport of dangerous goods

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/62 [YUN 1999, p. 905], the Secretary-General submitted an April report on the work during 1999-2000 of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods [E/2001/44]. In accordance with Council resolution 1999/65 [YUN 1999, p. 906], the Committee, as from 1 January 2001, had been reconfigured into the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals.

The report stated that the Committee had adopted amendments to the eleventh revised edition of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods: Model Regulations and the third revised edition of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods: Manual of Tests and Criteria, published by the secretariat in accordance with resolution 1999/62. Those amendments concerned packaging and tank provisions; listing and classification; new provisions for carriage in bulk in tanks; and new provisions for construction, testing and approval of gas receptacles and multiple-element gas containers. All main legal instruments or codes governing the international transport of dangerous goods were amended, with effect from 1 July 2001, and many Governments transposed the provisions of the Model Regulations into their own legislation for domestic traffic for application as from 2001.

The Committee adopted a programme of work for the biennium 2001-2002, and continued to contribute to the development of a globally harmonized system of classification and labelling of chemicals in cooperation with other organizations, in particular the International Labour Organization (ILO) and OECD. It recommended a draft resolution on its work for adoption by the Council (see below).

In 2001, in accordance with resolution 1999/65, the Committee's two subsidiary bodies held two sessions each, in Geneva: the Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods held its nineteenth (2-6 July) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.3/38] and twentieth (3-11 December) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.3/40 & Add.1,2] sessions; the Subcommittee of Experts on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals held its first (9-11 July) [ST/SG/AC.10/

C.4/2] and second (12-14 December) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.4/4] sessions.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2001/34 [draft: proposed orally] without vote [agenda item 13 (g)].

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals during the biennium 1999-2000,

1. Expresses its appreciation for the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals;

2. Decides to approve the programme of work of the Committee for the biennium 2001-2002 as contained in paragraph 31 of the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Urges the Secretary-General to publish the eleventh revised edition of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods: Model Regulations in Arabic, as well as the third revised edition of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods: Manual of Tests and Criteria in Arabic, French and Spanish, without delay;

4. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To circulate the new and amended recommendations to the Governments of member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and other international organizations concerned;

(b) To publish the twelfth revised edition of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods: Model Regulations, and amendments to the third revised edition of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods: Manual of Tests and Criteria in all the official languages of the United Nations, in the most cost-effective manner, not later than the end of 2001;

(c) To give further consideration to the possibility of publishing the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods on CD-ROM, if possible as a navigable version, for example, by commercial arrangement with external contractors;

5. Decides to defer further consideration of the report of the Secretary-General to its resumed substantive session of 2001.

On 20 December [meeting 46], the Council adopted resolution 2001/44 [draft: E/2001/L.52] without vote [agenda item 13 (g)].

Work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 2001/34 of 26 July 2001,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals during the biennium 1999-2000, in particular regarding the adoption of new and amended provisions for inclusion in the eleventh revised edition of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods: Model Regulations and in the third revised edition of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods: Manual of Tests and Criteria;

2. Invites all Governments, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and other international organizations concerned to transmit to the secretariat of the Committee their views on the work of the Committee, together with any comments that they may wish to make on the amended recommendations;

3. Invites all interested Governments, the regional commissions, the specialized agencies and international organizations concerned, when developing or updating appropriate codes and regulations, to consider taking into account the recommendations of the Committee;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to it in 2003 on the implementation of its resolution 2001/34 and the present resolution.

UNCTAD institutional and organizational questions

UNCTAD programme

In 2001, the Trade and Development Board (TDB)—the executive body of UNCTAD—held three sessions, all in Geneva: the twenty-sixth (10 April) and twenty-seventh (19 July) executive sessions and the forty-eighth regular session (1-12 October) [A/56/15]. In April, the Board took note of the reports of its subsidiary bodies; reviewed experience in implementing the recommendations on improving the functioning and the structure of the intergovernmental machinery of UNCTAD; and considered a progress report on the preparatory process for LDC-III (see p. 770). In July, TDB considered UNCTAD's contribution to the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s (NADAF) (see p. 849); the report of the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget on its thirty-seventh session (see p. 895); and the report of the Joint Advisory Group on ITC on its thirty-fourth session (see p. 877). In October, the Board adopted a decision on the Programme of Action for LDCs for the Decade 2001-2010 [dec. 467(XLVIII)] (see p. 771) and agreed conclusions on UNCTAD's contribution to the final review and appraisal of the implementation of NADAF: economic development in Africa: performance, prospects and policy issues [agreed conclusions 468(XLVIII)] (see p. 849). It also adopted a decision on UNCTAD's technical cooperation activities and their financing [dec. 469(XLVIII)] (see below) and took action on the preparatory process for the 2002 midterm review of UNCTAD X (see p. 896).

Technical cooperation

In a July report [TD/B/48/5 & Add.1,2], the UNCTAD Secretary-General provided an overview of technical cooperation activities in 2000, noting that the main features were the emphasis on capacity-building; closer interaction with research and deliberative work; a continuation of focus on LDCs; and an increased level of contributions. UNCTAD's expenditures amounted to $24.1 million in 2000, a small decrease from the previous year, which was attributable to a decreased level of expenditures in Europe due to completion of a number of projects. Of that amount, $5.8 million was financed by UNDP, $15.8 million was from trust fund contributions and $2.5 million was from the programme budget.

By region, approximately $5.2 million went to Africa, $4.5 million to Asia and the Pacific, $1.4 million to Latin America and the Caribbean, $0.8 million to Europe and $12.2 million went to the interregional programme. The LDCs' share of technical cooperation expenditures in 2000 amounted to 43 per cent, up from 40 per cent in 1999.

By programme, the Division for Services Infrastructure for Development and Trade Efficiency accounted for 40.2 per cent of total expenditures. The Divisions on International Trade in Goods and Services, and Commodities, on Globalization and Development Strategies, and on Investment, Technology and Enterprise Development represented, respectively, 17.6, 9.7 and 13.7 per cent of total expenditures. The balance (18.7 per cent) was represented by the Office of the Special Coordinator for Least Developed, Landlocked and Island Developing Countries (10.1 per cent) and by activities reported for the secretariat as a whole (8.6 per cent).

As requested in the Plan of Action [TD/386] adopted at UNCTAD X [YUN 2000, p. 890], the UNCTAD secretariat, in an August note [TD/B/48/8 & Add.1], submitted the indicative plan of technical cooperation programmes for 2002, including information on: ongoing projects expected to continue in 2002; projects proposed by the secretariat to implement the mandates of UNCTAD X and LDC-III and mandates given to UNCTAD by the General Assembly; and projects proposed as a result of specific requests received from beneficiaries. All projects included in the plan placed emphasis on capacity-building, in accordance with paragraph 166 of the Plan of Action.

In an October decision [A/56/15 (dec. 469 (XLVIII))], TDB requested the UNCTAD secretariat to continue to work on consolidation and clustering of technical cooperation activities and, in combined international efforts, to assist developing countries to derive full benefits from trade and reduce poverty through mainstreaming trade into development strategies and enhanced partnership with other agencies involved in delivering trade-related technical assistance, especially for LDCs. It invited bilateral and multilateral donors to consider increasing their contributions to UNCTAD trust funds for developing countries, particularly in favour of Africa, and called for further geographical diversification of consultants and experts. TDB requested that comments made by the Working Party at its thirty-eighth session (see below) be taken into account in the preparation of future reports on technical cooperation activities.

Evaluations

A July progress report on the implementation of the three-year Trade Point Programme Strategy [TD/B/WP/143], approved in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 911], stated that further progress had been achieved in the gradual externalization of the Programme, including by building capacities and structures in the Trade Point community that would enable them to take over the Trade Point Programme and transferring the Electronic Trading Opportunities (ETO) system to a non-profit entity. The World Trade Point Federation was formally created and was in the process of defining its future directions, and extrabudgetary funding was made available for the preparation of a business development plan aimed at facilitating that task.

In July, an independent evaluation team submitted an evaluation of the Trainmar programme [TD/B/WP/144], which was in its twenty-second year. The evaluation stated that, although the Trainmar methodology of course design and delivery was sound, it failed to take into account modern developments in pedagogic technology and the flexibility required by changes in the organization of international commerce and supply chain management, and by the differences in the development of the various parts of the network. Most of the courses were outdated and the basic curriculum needed restructuring. Effective implementation would depend on multidisciplinary support of the programme in maritime transport, global logistics and commerce. After more than 20 years, programme implementation had little managerial foundation and the recom-mentations that followed from previous reviews had been implemented only to a limited extent. Moreover, there was overlap of purpose and contents between Trainmar and other UNCTAD training programmes, as well as with those of other organizations. The evaluation team saw no prospects for effective UNCTAD management and support of the Trainmar network as a stand-alone programme, but saw possibilities for merging certain Trainmar components with other UNCTAD capacity-building programmes.

With regard to the 2000 in-depth evaluation of the EMPRETEC programme [YUN 2000, p. 920], a July UNCTAD secretariat report [TD/B/WP/145] stated that, although most of the recommendations had been implemented, limited financial resources were a key factor in determining the gradual implementation of the remaining ones. Most of the resources came from savings and the regular budget, and the availability of extrabudgetary resources was of vital importance in that regard. The Programming, Planning and Assessment Unit of UNCTAD had facilitated the identification of in-house technical solutions and encouraged cooperation among divisions within UNCTAD. All national EMPRETEC centres had offered support to the process.

Medium-term plan and programme budget

The UNCTAD Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget held two sessions in 2001, both in Geneva.

At the first part of its thirty-seventh session (15-19 January) [TD/B/48/2], the Working Party reviewed the draft programme budget for the 2002-2003 biennium [UNCTAD/EDM/Misc.148/Rev.1]. In agreed conclusions, it concurred with the amended text and recommended that the subprogramme on LDCs, landlocked developing countries and small island developing States be reviewed in the light of the outcome of LDC-III (see p. 770) and decided to reconvene for that purpose. It reiterated the need for the subprogramme on the development of Africa to develop its analytical capacity in line with the provisions of the UNCTAD X Plan of Action, and recommended that appropriate resources be devoted to that area. With regard to the follow-up to the implementation of paragraph 166 of the UNCTAD X Plan of Action, which dealt with the strengthening of UNCTAD's capacity-building programmes, the Working Party welcomed the presentation of the detailed costed proposals for training courses [TD/B/WP/137] and recommended that UNCTAD implement a pilot phase of the training programme in a timely manner. It urged the UNCTAD Secretary-General to maximize synergies existing in the secretariat for the implementation of paragraph 166. The Working Party welcomed the decision to establish the Debt Management and Financial Analysis System (DMFAS) Trust Fund and took note of the UNCTAD secretariat report on the subject [TD/B/WP/136]. It urged the secretariat to prepare a detailed project document on the funding of the Trust Fund, and recommended that the UNCTAD Secretary-General organize the second DMFAS Advisory Group meeting in June and report thereon to the Working Party.

At its resumed thirty-seventh session (11-12 June) [TD/B/48/7], the Working Party reviewed the draft programme budget for the 2002-2003 biennium [A/56/6 (Sect. 11A)] and concurred with the programmatic content of the section on trade and development, which took into account comments made by the Party at its January session. In agreed conclusions, the Working Party emphasized UNCTAD's role in the implementation of the Programme of Action for LDCs for the Decade 2001-2010 (see p. 770). It decided to review at a resumed thirty-eighth session the impact on the system-wide coordination aspects of the General Assembly's decisions, based on recommendations to be made by the UN Secretary-General to its fifty-sixth session, for a follow-up mechanism for the implementation of the Programme of Action. The Working Party invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to explore further possibilities for financing the participation of experts from developing countries and economies in transition in UNCTAD expert meetings.

In July [A/56/15], TDB endorsed the report of the Working Party on its thirty-seventh session and its agreed conclusions on the draft programme budget for the 2002-2003 biennium.

At its thirty-eighth session (17-20 September) [TD/B/48/19], the Working Party approved a draft decision for adoption by TDB on the evaluation of technical cooperation activities (see p. 894). It stressed the importance of in-depth evaluations and follow-up action on the recommendations arising from them, and encouraged the UNCTAD secretariat to pay attention to the process and explore ways to foresee financing for in-depth evaluations of technical cooperation programmes. It welcomed the in-depth evaluation of the Trainmar programme [TD/B/WP/144], urged the UNCTAD Secretary-General to implement its recommendations and took note of progress made in the implementation of the Trade Point Programme Strategy [TD/B/WP/143] and the EMPRETEC programme [TD/B/WP/145].

In other action, the Working Party took note of the UNCTAD secretariat note on financing the participation of experts from developing countries and economies in transition in UNCTAD intergovernmental expert meetings [TD/B/WP/146], which covered the period from 1 January 1999 to 31 July 2001.

In October [A/56/15], TDB endorsed the outcome of the thirty-eighth session of the Working Party and adopted the decision on technical co-operation activities (see p. 894).

Midterm review (2002)

At its forty-eighth session in October [A/56/15], TDB considered the preparatory process for the midterm review of the work of UNCTAD, to be held in the second quarter of 2002, midway between UNCTAD X [YUN 2000, p. 890] and UNCTAD XI (2005). The Board endorsed Thailand's offer to host the midterm review in Bangkok and approved the basic modalities of the review process, namely: a review of the efficiency and functioning of the intergovernmental machinery; stock-taking in respect of the implementation of the commitments and work programme agreed to in the Bangkok Plan of Action [ibid., p. 891]; and interactive debates and policy dialogue in the context of opportunities and challenges of new policy developments since UNCTAD X. The Board also agreed on a number of procedures for the preparatory process.

Chapter V

Regional economic and social activities

The five regional commissions continued to provide technical cooperation, including advisory services, to their member States, promote programmes and projects, and provide training to enhance national capacity-building in various sectors. Four of them held regular sessions during the year: the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA). The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) did not meet in 2001 but was scheduled to meet in May 2002.

In 2001, ECA took the lead in promoting an African-developed and -led programme for development, which was adopted by African heads of State and Government as the New Partnership for Africa's Development, designed to eradicate poverty and to place African countries on a path of sustainable growth and development. The General Assembly endorsed the Partnership and called on the international community to provide financial support for its implementation. It also reviewed implementation of the programme for the Second Industrial Decade for Africa (1993-2002).

The Assembly recommended the promotion of further cooperation between the United Nations and a number of regional organizations. The Economic and Social Council established the Consultative Committee on Scientific and Technological Development and Technological Innovation of ESCWA, and further encouraged the investigation into a Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar.

Regional cooperation

Efforts continued in 2001 to improve cooperation among the United Nations regional commissions and between them and other UN entities, and with regional and international organizations.

On 3 May (decision 2001/211), the Economic and Social Council decided that the theme of its 2001 substantive session for the item on regional cooperation would be "Regional perspective on globalization: an opportunity for catching up or a risk of falling behind in the development process".

Meeting of executive secretaries. The executive secretaries of the regional commissions met from 12 to 14 February and on 21 November in New York, and from 18 to 20 July in Geneva.

At their February 2001 meeting and meetings held in the latter half of 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 923], they exchanged views on globalization and other development issues relating to their respective regions; areas of cooperation among the commissions; and their relationships with other relevant partners within and outside the United Nations system. The executive secretaries reviewed the commissions' input and participation in the common country assessment/United Nations Development Assistance Framework (CCA/UN-DAF) process, and the strengthening of the relationship between the commissions and relevant regional and subregional organizations working in peace-building in their respective regions. The executive secretaries also reviewed preparations for follow-up to the implementation of the Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49], and agreed on a common approach regarding their inputs to the Secretary-General's report to the General Assembly's fifty-sixth session on that issue (see p. 1278). They underlined the need for follow-up action on issues relating to financing for development and on others that emerged from the regional consultative meetings organized by the commissions.

The executive secretaries noted that, despite disparities between and within regions, some salient features had emerged in the five regional consultations organized by the regional commissions in 2000, and the updated report on those issues should be utilized as input to the International Conference on Financing for Development in 2002 (see p. 886).

Review and reform of the regional commissions

Reports of Secretary-General. In a May report [E/2001/18], the Secretary-General outlined steps taken by the regional commissions to implement the guidance given in Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/46 [YUN 1998, p. 1262]

with respect to their dual role as UN outposts and the regional expression of the Organization. The report also discussed interregional cooperation, including regional perspectives on globalization; further measures undertaken by the commissions to achieve greater effectiveness; and the report on meetings of the executive secretaries (see p. 897).

In an addendum to his report [E/2001/18/Add.1], the Secretary-General reviewed regional follow-up to world conferences and other global meetings. A second addendum examined cooperation with other regional bodies [E/2001/18/Add.2], and, in a third addendum, the Secretary-General submitted resolutions and decisions adopted at recent sessions of the regional commissions calling for action by the Council [E/2001/18/Add.3 & Corr.1].

By decision 2001/306 of 26 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's reports on regional cooperation (see above) and the summaries of the economic and social situation in Africa, 2000 [E/2001/13]; the economic and social survey of Asia and the Pacific, 2001 [E/2001/14]; the economic survey of Europe, 2000 [E/2001/12]; the economic survey of Latin America and the Caribbean, 2000 [E/2001/15]; and the survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region, 2000-2001 [E/2001/16].

The Council also adopted resolutions on the proposed Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar (resolution 2001/29), and on the establishment of the Consultative Committee on Scientific and Technological Development and Technological Innovation of ESCWA (resolution 2001/30).

(Summaries of the surveys and the texts of the resolutions are found in the relevant sections of this chapter.)

Africa

The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) held its thirty-fourth session/twenty-fifth meeting of the Conference of Ministers/ninth session of the Conference of African Ministers of Finance (Algiers, Algeria, 8-10 May) [E/2001/38].

The Conference considered the implementation of the Millennium Partnership for the African Recovery Programme and the Omega Plan (see p. 900); mobilizing resources for a major response to AIDS in Africa; and the second United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) regional cooperation framework. It also discussed the special thematic issues of economic governance and attracting foreign investment to Africa.

The Conference was preceded by the twentieth meeting of the Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole/ninth meeting of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts (Algiers, 2-7 May), which discussed the items on the Commission's agenda, as well as the promotion of good governance, peace and security; tackling diseases that deepened poverty—HIV/AIDS, malaria and tuberculosis; issues related to financing for development; bridging the digital divide; accelerating regional integration for infrastructure development; external debt issues for highly indebted middle-income and poor countries; transforming partnerships in Africa; and the ECA proposed programme of work and priorities for the 2002-2003 biennium [E/ECA/CM.25/5].

The Conference of Ministers adopted the Technical Preparatory Committee's report as amended [E/ECA/CM.25/7]. It also adopted a draft resolution on the development of an African initiative, which it brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council.

On 11 December [A/56/708], Japan transmitted to the Secretary-General the Chairman's statement on the ministerial-level meeting of the Tokyo International Conference on African Development (Tokyo, 3-4 December), and, on 13 December [A/56/726-S/2001/1231], Japan and South Africa transmitted a joint communiqué entitled "Japan-South Africa partnership in the new century", issued after a meeting on 2 October between the South African President and the Japanese Prime Minister.

On 9 October [A/56/457], the Sudan transmitted to the Secretary-General the decisions of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) at its thirty-seventh ordinary session (Lusaka, Zambia, 9-11 July), including one on the implementation of the Sirte Declaration establishing the African Union, adopted by the Assembly in 1999 (Sirte, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, 8-9 September 1999) [YUN 1999, p. 1364]. The decision urged OAU member States to ratify the Constitutive Act before the inaugural session of the African Union, and established a one-year period of transition from OAU to the African Union to allow for the creation of the organs of the Union.

Economic trends

Africa's economy grew at an average 4.3 per cent in 2001, compared to the 2000 figure of 3.5 per cent, according to the ECA summary of the economic and social situation in Africa [E/2002/17]. Some 37 countries achieved gross domestic product (GDP) growth of more than 3 per cent, a significant increase from 26 in 2000, and just 16 experienced GDP growth of less than 3 per cent, compared to 27 in 2000. That performance, achieved amid the turbulence created by the global economic slowdown and the 11 September terrorist attacks in the United States (see p. 60), reflected better macroeconomic management, improvements in agricultural production, higher than expected exports under the United States African Growth and Opportunity Act, which eliminated duties on a range of commodities, especially textiles, lower oil prices, currency devaluation in South Africa and the cessation of conflicts in several countries.

By subregion, Southern Africa's GDP grew by only 2.4 per cent, mainly because of negative growth in Zimbabwe and slower growth in South Africa, reflecting poor harvests, while West Africa's GDP grew by 3.3 per cent and East Africa's by 5 per cent, driven by cheaper oil imports and higher prices for agricultural exports.

Africa's five largest economies (Algeria, Egypt, Morocco, Nigeria, South Africa), which accounted for 59 per cent of African GDP, grew by 4.3 per cent, up from 3.2 per cent in 2000, due to rapid economic growth in Algeria, Egypt and Morocco. Growth in the continent's 11 oil-exporting countries averaged 5.8 per cent, compared to 4.1 per cent in 2000, and among its 42 non-oil exporters, growth averaged 3.7 per cent, up from 2.9 per cent in 2000, due mainly to the lower oil prices.

At the sectoral level, primary commodity prices fell in the first 11 months of 2001, averaging, in September, 17 per cent below their cyclical peak a year earlier. However, the drop in oil prices freed resources for other imports, minimized inflationary and other pressures, and enabled oil exporters to sustain growth.

Export earnings fell by 0.2 per cent in 2001, while higher prices and volume were responsible for a 6.7 per cent increase in import costs. In 2001, Africa's terms of trade fell by 2.1 per cent due to falling oil prices, after having appreciated by 18.1 per cent in 2000. The continent's service balance (foreign freight, insurance and banking services) remained in deficit, falling to $11.4 billion. Its current account deficit also fell, from 4.8 per cent of Africa's GDP in 1998 to 0.9 per cent in 2001.

Africa's average per capita income grew by an estimated 1.9 per cent in 2001—better than the 0.7 per cent increase in 2000 but still not sufficient to achieve the international development goal of cutting poverty in half by 2015. Thirty African countries achieved per capita income growth above 1.5 per cent.

Net private flows to Africa's emerging financial markets—especially in Algeria, Egypt, Morocco, South Africa and Tunisia—nearly doubled, from $4.9 billion in 2000 to $9.5 billion in 2001. Net direct equity grew from $3.5 billion to $4.8 billion, driven by privatizations in Algeria and Morocco, and, despite weakness in global equity markets, net portfolio equity flows increased from $1.7 billion to $4.5 billion. Private credit flows increased slightly, from a net outflow of $400 million in 2000 to an inflow of $200 million in 2001. Emerging market equity prices fell particularly hard after the 11 September attacks in the United States. Except for South Africa's stock exchange, which rose 26 per cent, Africa's emerging equity markets lost value in 2001.

Activities in 2001

ECA activities in 2001 were undertaken through the following subprogrammes: facilitating economic and social policy analysis; fostering sustainable development; strengthening development management; harnessing information for development; promoting regional cooperation and integration; and promoting the advancement of women.

Development policy and regional economic cooperation

African recovery and development

In 2001, ECA undertook activities that contributed to sustainable growth and poverty reduction in Africa through, among other actions, in-depth analysis of development strategy, human resources development, poverty analysis, and assessing and recommending effective anti-poverty policies. It undertook studies on development issues to estimate the resources required for attaining Africa's development goal, measures for enhancing the mobilization of resources, and the relationship between saving and investment rates in a sample of countries.

New Partnership for Africa's Development

The Joint Conference of African Ministers of Finance and Ministers of Economic Development and Planning (Algiers, 8-10 May) considered the ECA document "Compact for African Recovery: operationalizing the Millennium Partnership for the African Recovery Programme (MAP)" [E/ECA/CM.25/2]. MAP, initiated by South African President Thabo Mbeki, Nigerian President Olusegun Obasanjo and Algerian President Abdelaziz Bouteflika, was emerging as the African initiative for development, bringing together all partnership initiatives within a single framework. The Compact for African Recovery, proposed by the Ministers of Finance at their 2000 meeting [YUN 2000, p. 924], would provide technical and analytical support to MAP.

On 10 May, the Conference of Ministers issued a statement setting out its overall vision for Africa's development and adopted a resolution [E/2001/38 (res. 837(XXXIV))] recognizing the MAP initiative; the Omega Plan, a proposal by Senegalese President Abdoulaye Wade to develop physical capital and human capital for sustained growth; and the Compact for African Recovery. The Conference resolved that the two initiatives should be consolidated through a process of consultation involving technical experts of each initiative towards a common vision of Africa's future growth and poverty reduction. It requested ECA to assist in the process by making its resources and expertise available and to draft a single African initiative from that process. It also requested the ECA Executive Secretary to submit the draft programme of the African initiative to the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government for review and approval.

Commending the efforts to formulate and consolidate those two initiatives, the OAU Assembly, at its thirty-seventh session (Lusaka, 9-11 July) [A/56/457], adopted the Strategic Policy Framework and the New African Initiative, as well as its Programme of Action. It decided to present the Initiative to the UN General Assembly for endorsement and to convene a summit with international economic and financial institutions, as well as the private sector (Dakar, Senegal, 15-17 November), to consider the financing of the Initiative. It established a follow-up committee consisting of 15 heads of State to ensure continuous follow-up, particularly the establishment of management institutions.

The Economic and Social Council, on 18 July [A/56/3/Rev.1], following consideration of the item "The role of the United Nations in supporting the efforts of African countries to achieve sustainable development" at the high-level segment of its 2001 substantive session, adopted a ministerial declaration in which it welcomed the efforts of African leaders to develop an African-owned and -led framework for action towards the continent's sustainable development, and called on the UN system and the international community to support the New African Initiative adopted by OAU. It invited the Secretary-General to ensure an effective and coordinated UN system response and acknowledged the call by African heads of State for a special session of the General Assembly to consider the best way of supporting the Initiative.

The Assembly, in resolution 56/218 of 21 December (see p. 850), decided to hold a high-level plenary meeting on 16 September 2002 to consider how to support the Initiative, renamed the New Partnership for Africa's Development, and, in resolution 56/207 of the same date (see p. 754), called on the developed countries and the UN system to support it and complement Africa's efforts to overcome the challenges it faced.

In related developments, the Summit of Heads of State and Government of the Group of Eight industrialized countries (Genoa, Italy, 20-22 July) [A/56/222-S/2001/736] adopted the Genoa Plan for Africa, designed to forge a new partnership to address African development issues, support the key themes of the New Partnership for Africa's Development and develop a plan of action.

Information technology

ECA efforts in information and communication technology (ICT) were focused on raising the awareness of member States to the realities of the information society and how to use ICT to build the competitiveness of national economies and enhance human development by assisting member States in developing their national information and communication infrastructure and plans.

ECA organized the annual meeting of the African Technical Advisory Committee of the African Information Society Initiative (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 11-12 May) and the meeting of Partners for Information and Communication Technologies in Africa (Addis Ababa, 7-8 September) to discuss strategies to accelerate African development through increased ICT use. The Information Technology Centre for Africa was at the forefront of building skills and capacity for the information age through workshops and training programmes. It organized a workshop on the use of ICTs by small and medium-sized enterprises (Addis Ababa, September) and national information and communications infrastructure workshops for Southern (Windhoek, Namibia, 11-14 April) and East (Addis Ababa, 19-21 June) Africa. ECA forged closer collaboration with key international development agencies and provided advisory services to countries and regional economic bodies and institutions in Africa. It emphasized strengthening the statistical infrastructure and the capacity for collecting, processing, analysing and disseminating data in Africa. Member States were made aware of new technologies for database development and data dissemination for decision-making.

ECA implemented a fully integrated library and technical information system. The second meeting of the Committee on Development Information (Addis Ababa, 4-7 September) mandated ECA to develop the African Virtual Library and Information Network as a platform for sharing development information and knowledge. Its main objective was to help bridge the digital divide between Africa and the developed world by focusing on capacity-building at the institutional, national and regional levels.

Transportation and communications

ECA's secretariat carried out a number of activities to develop transport and communications infrastructure and services, with the aim of promoting an efficient, safe, reliable and affordable transport and communications system in Africa. A workshop on implementation of air services liberalization policies in the West and Central Africa subregions (Bamako, Mali, 12-14 March) discussed implementation of the Yamoussoukro Declaration on a new air transport policy [YUN 1988, p. 273]. The meeting adopted an action plan based on the legal framework and institutions, economic regulation and financing of the sector. A publication was released in March on best practices in developing rural transport policies that took into account the empowerment of women. In February, a report was published on measuring the impact of the gradual liberalization of traffic rights on the air transport industry within the Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa region. A study on the status of the Trans-East African Highway was published in June with the objective of revitalizing the highway network and the missing links that would play a role in developing intergovernmental road infrastructure and promote economic cooperation.

Europe-Africa permanent link

The ECA and ECE Executive Secretaries, in their April report on a Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar [E/2001/19], submitted by the Secretary-General pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/37 [YUN 1999, p. 918], stated that the study "Evaluation of technological approaches to offshore geological coring in the Strait of Gibraltar", intended to compare drilling techniques, was completed in February. It favoured the "vessel with dynamic positioning" option as being more technically feasible, safer and more economical. The study confirmed the directive of the Joint Committee for the project concerning the technological approach to the drilling, and allowed research companies to prepare a new work plan for the resumption of investigations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2001/29 [draft: E/2001/L.15/Rev.1] without vote [agenda item 10].

Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1982/57 of 30 July 1982, 1983/62 of 29 July 1983, 1984/75 of 27 July 1984, 1985/70 of 26 July 1985, 1987/69 of 8 July 1987, 1989/119 of 28 July 1989, 1991/74 of 26 July 1991, 1993/60 of 30 July 1993, 1995/48 of 27 July 1995, 1997/48 of 22 July 1997 and 1999/37 of 28 July 1999,

Referring to resolution 912(1989) adopted on 1 February 1989 by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe regarding measures to encourage the construction of a major traffic artery in south-western Europe and to study thoroughly the possibility of a permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar,

Referring also to the Barcelona Declaration adopted at the Euro-Mediterranean Conference, held in Barcelona, Spain, in November 1995, and to the work programme annexed thereto, aimed at connecting the Mediterranean transport networks to the trans-European transport network so as to ensure their interoperability,

Referring further to the Lisbon Declaration adopted at the Conference on Transport in the Mediterranean, held at Lisbon in January 1997, and to the conclusions of the Pan-European Transport Conference, held at Helsinki in June 1997, on corridors in the Mediterranean incorporating the permanent link,

Taking note of the follow-up report prepared jointly by the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe, in accordance with resolution 1999/37,

Taking note also of the conclusions of the second and third meetings of the Western Mediterranean Transport Group, held at Rabat in September 1995 and at Madrid in January 1997, respectively, and of the conclusions of the study on transport infrastructure in the western Mediterranean, which included the permanent link among the priority corridors in the extension of the trans-European network,

1. Welcomes the cooperation on the project for the link through the Strait of Gibraltar established between the Economic Commission for Africa, the Economic Commission for Europe, the Governments of Morocco and Spain and specialized international organizations;

2. Also welcomes the organization by the International Tunnelling Association, under the auspices of the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe, of the seminar held at Rabat in April 1999 on the modelling of tunnel costs;

3. Further welcomes the progress achieved with project studies, especially the deep-sea drilling work, which has provided a decisive impetus to geological and geo-technical knowledge of undersea formations;

4. Commends the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe on the work done in preparing the project follow-up report requested by the Council in its resolution 1999/37;

5. Renews its invitation to the competent organizations of the United Nations system and to non-governmental organizations, in particular the International Tunnelling Association and the International Union of Railways, to participate in the studies and work on the permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar;

6. Also renews its invitation to the European Commission to consider the possibility of participating in the consolidation of the studies and the development of the project, both institutionally and financially, within the framework of the Euro-Mediterranean transport cooperation being developed under the Barcelona process;

7. Requests the Executive Secretaries of the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe to continue to take an active part in the follow-up to the project and to report to the Council at its substantive session of 2003;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to provide formal support and, to the extent that priorities permit, the resources necessary, within the regular budget, to the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe, to enable them to carry out the activities mentioned above.

Industrial development

Second Industrial Development Decade

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/203 [YUN 1999, p. 919], the Secretary-General submitted a July report on the implementation of the programme for the Second Industrial Decade for Africa (1993-2002) (IDDA-II) [A/56/139], endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1992/44 [YUN 1992, p. 468]. The report examined economic and industrial development trends in Africa, including major challenges, and support programmes for implementing the programme for the Decade, including those implemented by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO).

The Secretary-General said that the programme for IDDA-II, due to end on 31 December 2002, was falling short of expectations. Given the underdeveloped state of industry in Africa, combined with the heavy debt burden facing the majority of African countries, UN system support for Africa's industrialization was still needed. The entire process by which the first Decade was prepared, implemented and evaluated needed to be reviewed, and a process identified that could easily be adapted to major policy shifts.

The first step in industrializing Africa was to strengthen its private sector. That could be achieved by finding an appropriate and constructive nexus between the State, industry and business, civil society organizations and individuals; investing heavily in education and other human resources development, particularly targeted areas of science and technology; motivating industrial entrepreneurs and minimizing start-up costs by providing economic and physical infrastructure to facilitate the mobility of production factors, goods and services; improving access by African entrepreneurs and small and medium-scale enterprises to financing by promoting and harnessing internal investment resources, especially domestic savings, and new sources of financing, such as pension funds; putting in place mechanisms to attract foreign direct investment; and developing national and subregional capital markets.

The Secretary-General concluded that economic development and industrialization in Africa should take into account the need for subregional and regional cooperation in all sectors of development. African Governments should therefore establish new and/or strengthen existing subregional and regional structures to lay the foundation for economic and industrial cooperation and integration.

Conference of African Ministers of Industry. The fifteenth meeting of the Conference of African Ministers of Industry (Yaoundé, Cameroon, 20-30 October) [A/57/175], organized by ECA and OAU, called upon African States: to implement sound macroeconomic policies and sectoral programmes to encourage competitiveness and good governance; to continue in 2002 to establish Industrial Partnership Councils as a platform for dialogue and cooperation between Governments and the private sector; and to formulate under their auspices national long- and medium-term industrial development plans. In addition, the Conference addressed a number of recommendations to UNIDO, and mandated the executive heads of ECA, OAU and UNIDO, in cooperation with other agencies, to pursue the relevant objectives set out in the New Partnership for Africa's Development (see p. 899). It was also decided to proceed, under the auspices of the Conference, ECA and UNIDO, with subregional meetings in Africa to come up with new regional development policies and strategies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/56/559], adopted resolution 56/187 without vote [agenda item 96 (b)].

Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1993-2002)

The General Assembly,
Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the outcomes of major United Nations conferences and summits, the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and its resolutions 54/203 of 22 December 1999, 55/187 of 20 December 2000 and 55/216 of 21 December 2000,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council decision 1999/270 of 28 July 1999 concerning the implementation and coordinated follow-up by the United Nations system of initiatives on African development, and taking note of the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2001 of the Economic and Social Council on the role of the United Nations in support of the efforts of African countries to achieve sustainable development, adopted on 18 July 2001,

Taking note of the Plan of Action of the Alliance for Africa's Industrialization, adopted by the Conference of African Ministers of Industry at its thirteenth meeting, held at Accra in May 1997, the outcome of the Conference on Industrial Partnerships and Investment in Africa, held at Dakar on 20 and 21 October 1999, and the outcome of the fifteenth meeting of the Conference of African Ministers of Industry, held at Yaoundé on 29 and 30 October 2001,

Taking note also of the statement of the Conference of African Ministers of Trade, held at Abuja in September 2001, to the Fourth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, and recalling resolution 2(XIV) on the African common position on globalization, adopted by the fourteenth meeting of the Conference of African Ministers of Industry, held at Dakar on 22 and 23 October 1999, both of which recognize the critical need for support for African countries in addressing the supply-side constraints on their integration into the world economy,

Welcoming the New Partnership for Africa's Development, which is a pledge by African leaders, based on a common vision and a firm and shared conviction, that they have a pressing duty to eradicate poverty and to place their countries, both individually and collectively, on a path of sustainable growth and development and at the same time to participate actively in the world economy and body politic, bearing in mind that the Partnership is anchored in the determination of Africans to extricate themselves and the continent from the malaise of underdevelopment and exclusion in a globalizing world, and urging that further steps be taken to operationalize it,

Recognizing the importance of industrialization as a key element in promoting sustained economic growth and sustainable development in Africa and its role in facilitating efforts to eradicate poverty, inter alia, through the enhancement of agro-based industries, the promotion of competitiveness, productive employment, capacity-building, gender mainstreaming and the empowerment of women and effective and efficient management systems,

Recognizing also the commendable efforts of African countries to engage their respective private sectors and civil society in policy dialogue at the highest levels and the need to continue such efforts to improve further the capacity of the private sector, including micro, small and medium-sized enterprises,

Recognizing further the need for African countries to continue their efforts to create a climate favourable to private sector development and foreign direct investment and the commitment of African countries to using both human and financial resources more efficiently in the process of industrialization, and emphasizing the continuing need for the mobilization of adequate resources through domestic initiatives and international support, inter alia, through enhanced official development assistance, investment guarantees, debt relief, as appropriate, and enhanced market access,

Recognizing the opportunities for and challenges of exploiting information and communication technologies and e-commerce for the overall industrial development of Africa, and in that regard noting the establishment of the Information and Communication Technologies Task Force,

Welcoming the progress made in the consolidation and programmatic reform of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, including through the instrument of integrated programmes to promote sustainable industrial development in African countries, and its approach to field activities through joint programming with the United Nations resident coordinator system in the United Nations Development Assistance Framework,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the programme for the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1993-2002);

2. Notes with concern that, despite the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa, which ends in 2002, little progress has been made in the overall industrialization of the continent and in some countries industrialization has regressed, and in that regard reaffirms the need for continuing domestic and international efforts towards Africa's industrialization;

3. Reaffirms the need for the African countries that have not yet done so to integrate the objectives of the Alliance for Africa's Industrialization, as appropriate, into their national plans for the establishment of institutional capacity for monitoring programmes and related projects;

4. Emphasizes the need for support for the implementation of the sectoral priorities in the New Partnership for Africa's Development concerning diversification of African production and exports, specifically with regard to promotion of the manufacturing sector and agro-based industries and for enhancing productive capacities and enabling African countries to participate more effectively in global trade;

5. Underlines the need for national Governments to improve the regulatory and policy environment in which micro, small and medium-sized enterprises operate, inter alia, to facilitate their access to credit and improve transport, energy and communications infrastructures, in order to foster their economic performance and competitiveness, and in that regard invites development partners to provide the appropriate technical assistance;

6. Invites the Economic Commission for Africa to work in cooperation with the Information and Communication Technologies Task Force and to play a more active role in the promotion of new information and communication technologies and e-commerce;

7. Also invites the Economic Commission for Africa to play a more active role in the development of African micro, small and medium-sized enterprises and industries, in coordination with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and other United Nations bodies concerned with the development of such enterprises, paying particular attention to enterprises owned by women and to women entrepreneurs;

8. Invites the international community, the World Bank, United Nations funds and programmes, the African Development Bank and other relevant regional institutions, in accordance with their respective mandates, to give full effect to the relevant provisions of the New Partnership for Africa's Development by supporting the implementation of the programme for the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa and the Plan of Action of the Alliance for Africa's Industrialization, as well as the outcome of the Conference on Industrial Partnerships and Investment in Africa and the outcome of the fifteenth meeting of the Conference of African Ministers of Industry;

9. Appeals to the international community, the World Bank, the African Development Bank and United Nations funds and programmes, in accordance with their respective mandates, to support the efforts of the African countries to intensify and expand industrial cooperation among themselves;

10. Commends the United Nations Industrial Development Organization for its work related to the provision of technical assistance to African countries, in particular the least developed among them, so as to enhance their capacity to overcome technical barriers to trade in industrial and other products, including improving quality standards to alleviate supply-side constraints, and to promote industrial competitiveness, and calls upon the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to continue to work closely with the World Trade Organization, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other relevant multilateral institutions in the provision of technical assistance to African countries, in order to enable them to integrate fully into the world economy;

11. Calls upon the international community to support Africa in strengthening its private sector through, in particular, the promotion of investment and exports, the promotion and creation of small and medium-sized enterprises, increased productivity, improved quality assurance and standardization, and financing, and welcomes in that context the trade facilitation initiatives of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization;

12. Also calls upon the international community to support the efforts of African countries to enhance the development of their human resources in the fields of health, basic education and vocational and technical training through, inter alia, South-South cooperation utilizing triangular arrangements;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to complete a review of the implementation of the programme for the Decade, including identification of lessons learned, before the end of the fifty-sixth session of the General Assembly, with a view to including the outcome of such a review in the overall review and appraisal of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and the ongoing processes under the New Partnership for Africa's Development and the establishment of the African Union;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session under an item entitled "United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa", a sub-item entitled "Implementation of the programme for the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa";

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Food security and sustainable development

In 2001, ECA's Food Security and Sustainable Development Division promoted better understanding and management of the interrelationships among food security, population and environment sustainability by making information available for decision-making, and through its analytical and operational work aimed at promoting strategies for integrating those issues into development policies and programmes. The Division promoted environmentally sustainable development in Africa, including modern science and technology for food security. It offered policy and advisory services to member States and implemented capacity- and institution-building activities with regard to population, agriculture and the environment.

ECA organized the second meeting of its Committee on Sustainable Development (Addis Ababa, 26-29 November) on the theme "Agricultural intensification: feeding ourselves and sustaining Africa's land resources in the new millennium". The Committee also reviewed the implementation of plans of action emanating from global and regional conferences and other substantive reports.

It requested ECA to develop a mechanism for information exchange and experience sharing, collaborate with African Governments on a pilot project for accelerated agricultural intensification, and establish partnership programmes/agreements with donors and development financing institutions to implement activities emanating from the New Partnership for Africa's Development (see p. 899).

Development management

ECA activities in development management, designed to strengthen good governance, were devoted to public sector management, private sector development and encouraging civil society participation in governance. It organized a sub-regional workshop on the development of codes and indicators to monitor administrative governance (Addis Ababa, April) and the first meeting of the Committee on Industry and Private Sector Development to examine strategies for enhancing the competitiveness of Africa's private sector and to review Africa's industrialization process (Yaoundé, October), and organized or participated in other meetings in support of private sector development. Its African Centre for Civil Society organized jointly with OAU a conference on building partnerships for peace and development in Africa (Addis Ababa, June), which stressed the role of civil society organizations in Africa's development process; and, with the World Bank and the African Development Bank, a workshop on the participation of civil society in the development and implementation of Poverty Reduction Strategy Papers (Addis Ababa, July). Studies were prepared on issues relevant to the development of civil society, and training workshops and seminars were organized for Cameroon, Egypt, Namibia and Senegal to facilitate dialogue and build consensus on the best approaches for broadening participation in governance and development.

On 11 April [A/56/63-E/2001/21], Namibia transmitted to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council the texts of the Windhoek Declaration and the Charter for the Public Service in Africa, adopted at the third biennial Pan-African Conference of Ministers of Civil Service (Windhoek, 5-6 February).

Integration of women in development

ECA's mission to promote the advancement of women, conducted through its African Centre for Gender and Development, was devoted to influencing a gender perspective in policies developed and adopted by decision makers at the national, subregional and regional levels on socio-economic development. Towards that end, the Centre's activities included monitoring and evaluation of the Dakar [YUN 1994, p. 696] and Beijing [YUN 1995, p. 1170] Platforms for Action; producing the African Women's Report on the development of an African gender and development index; monitoring the status of women through country gender profiles for the 53 African countries; and promoting information and communication outreach.

In November, the Committee on Women and Development endorsed a monitoring and evaluation programme, which was being implemented in partnership with other institutions. One of its aims was building member States' capacity to implement that programme. Other activities to promote women's advancement included building a conceptual framework to support strategies for measuring women's unpaid work and time use, and an analytical framework to provide insight into and ways to measure and integrate that factor into national accounts and budgets; and developing a gender-aware macroeconomic model to demonstrate how gender inequality in national accounts and budgets impacted on women's welfare, growth and poverty reduction. As part of its information and communication programme, the Centre embarked on a plan to make national policies more gender-sensitive. Its advisory services were centred on gender mainstreaming, focusing on gender policy and programme development and capacity-building for gender analysis. Technical advisory services for the economic empowerment of women were also provided to women's non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

Subregional Development Centres

The five Subregional Development Centres, based in Central, East, North, Southern and West Africa, continued to promote regional cooperation and integration through technical support to collective approaches in tackling common developmental problems at the sub-regional level. They also facilitated networking, information-sharing and the dissemination of ECA policy recommendations and technical publications; engaged in advocacy and capacity-building; and provided technical advisory services. The Centres also collaborated with UNDP and the UN resident coordinator system in implementing UN operational activities.

Programme, administration and organizational questions

ECA reform

The African Ministers of Finance and of Economic Development and Planning, in a statement issued at the end of their Joint Conference (see p. 899), said that the Joint Conferences were useful and appropriate forums and decided that they should be merged and that the new body should meet annually [E/2001/38]. The Ministers called on ECA to schedule the next Joint Conference.

Regional cooperation

Cooperation between the UN and SADC

Responding to General Assembly resolution 54/227 [YUN 1999, p. 923], the Secretary-General, in July [A/56/134 & Add.1], summarized information received from 20 Member States, 23 UN organizations and one regional organization on measures they had taken to cooperate with the Southern African Development Community (SADC).

By decision 56/443 of 21 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on cooperation between the United Nations and SADC. It decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh (2002) session, under the item "Cooperation between the United Nations and regional and other organizations", a sub-item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Community", and requested the Secretary-General to submit an updated report on the question at that session.

Cooperation between the UN and ECCAS

The Secretary-General, responding to General Assembly resolution 55/22 [YUN 2000, p. 232], submitted an August report [A/56/301] outlining action taken by UN departments, offices, bodies, programmes and agencies to promote cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December [meeting 80], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/39 [draft: A/56/L.25/Rev.2 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 21 (g)].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Community of Central African States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 55/22 of 10 November 2000 and 55/161 of 12 December 2000 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Community of Central African States,

Bearing in mind the charter establishing the Economic Community of Central African States, by which the Central African countries have agreed to work for the economic development of their subregion, to promote economic cooperation and to establish a Common Market of Central Africa,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted on 8 September 2000 by the heads of State and Government at the Millennium Summit of the United Nations, and especially chapter VII thereof,

Noting that, at the ninth regular session of the Economic Community of Central African States, held in Malabo on 24 June 1999, the heads of State and Government of the member States decided to resume the activities of the Community by providing it with sufficient financial and human resources to enable it to become a real tool for the integration of their economies and to foster the development of cooperation between their peoples, with the ultimate aim of making it one of the five pillars of the African Economic Community and of helping Central Africa to meet the challenges of globalization,

Bearing in mind the report of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa,

Welcoming the establishment of the Council for Peace and Security in Central Africa with a view to creating a climate of peace and security in the subregion and strengthening the rule of law essential to its development,

Welcoming also the launching of the activities of the Subregional Centre for Human Rights and Democracy in Central Africa, in accordance with the recommendations of the General Assembly in its resolutions 53/78 A of 4 December 1998 and 54/55 A of 1 December 1999, with a view to strengthening democracy, respect for human rights and the rule of law in the subregion,

Commending the States members of the Economic Community of Central African States for their undertaking to strengthen arrangements for cooperation within the Community,

Noting that, owing to the conflicts, loss of human lives and destruction of the economic and social infrastructure in Central Africa, it is essential to continue and strengthen the recovery programmes in order to restart the economy of the countries of the subregion,

Noting with deep concern the danger of an increase in poverty, in particular in rural areas, due to the conflicts, loss of human lives and destruction of the economic and social infrastructure,

Stressing the need for continued and strengthened recovery programmes in order to restart the economy of the countries of the subregion,

Welcoming the contribution made by the United Nations system to supplement the efforts made at the national and subregional levels with a view to promoting the process of democratization, recovery and development in Central Africa,

Aware of the opportunities and challenges which may result from the process of globalization and liberalization for the economies of the countries of the subregion,

Noting with satisfaction the measures taken by the Economic Community of Central African States to combat the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS),

Noting the important contribution of women in the development process,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Community of Central African States;

2. Commends those States Members of the United Nations and United Nations organs, organizations and agencies which have maintained or strengthened their cooperation with the Economic Community of Central African States or have begun to cooperate with it with a view to achieving peace, security and development;

3. Invites those States Members of the United Nations and United Nations organs, organizations and agencies which have not yet established contact or relations with the Economic Community of Central African States to consider doing so;

4. Welcomes the financial, technical and material support given to the Economic Community of Central African States by the international community;

5. Emphasizes the importance of appropriate cooperation between the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, and the Economic Community of Central African States;

6. Once again requests the international community to consider seriously increases in its financial, technical and material support to the Economic Community of Central African States to enable it to implement fully its programme of action and to respond to the needs of the subregion for reconstruction and recovery;

7. Urges all Member States and the international community to contribute to the efforts of the Economic Community of Central African States to achieve economic integration and development, promote democracy and human rights and consolidate peace and security in Central Africa and to implement the goals, targets and commitment of the United Nations conferences and the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in particular, to strengthen the role of women in the development process;

8. Welcomes the reforms which the Economic Community of Central African States is carrying out, in particular the implementation of its programme of action, so that it may be in a better position to tackle the problems of cooperation and regional integration;

9. Urges the international community and the United Nations agencies to continue to provide those countries of the Economic Community of Central African States in which a process of national reconstruction is taking place with appropriate assistance to consolidate their efforts towards democratization and the consolidation of the rule of law and to support their national development programmes;

10. Declares itself convinced of the importance of well-conceived global development strategies in order to avoid conflicts and disturbances and aware of the value of international cooperation and efforts to restore and maintain peace, and emphasizes that the international community should continue to help those countries which receive refugees to meet the resulting economic, social, humanitarian and environmental challenges;

11. Urges the United Nations and the international community to help to strengthen the means existing in the region to ensure that the Economic Community of Central African States has the necessary capacity with regard to prevention, monitoring, early warning and peacekeeping operations;

12. Invites the international community to consider supporting the creation of special economic zones and development corridors in the Economic Community of Central African States, with the active participation of the private sector;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to enhance contacts with the Economic Community of Central African States, with a view to encouraging and harmonizing cooperation between the United Nations and the Community;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to it at its fifty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), at its fifty-seventh session (Bangkok, Thailand, 19-25 April) [E/2001/39], had as its theme "Balanced development of urban and rural areas and regions within the countries of Asia and the Pacific". The Commission reviewed regional policy issues, ESCAP management issues, emerging issues and developments at the regional level, and programme planning. It also considered ESCAP's technical cooperation activities and programme and organizational questions.

The Commission decided that the theme of its 2002 session would be "Sustainable social development in a period of rapid globalization: challenges, opportunities and policy options".

Economic trends

According to the summary of the economic and social survey of Asia and the Pacific [E/2002/18], GDP growth declined sharply globally and in the ESCAP region in 2001. The decline, which averaged 3.9 percentage points in the region's developing economies and 2 per cent in the developed countries, was due mainly to a sharp downturn in world trade growth, from 12 per cent in 2000 to 1 per cent in 2001, and was triggered by a decline in information and communication technology (ICT) imports by the United States. The events of 11 September (see p. 60) significantly intensified the downturn. Economies with high trade-to-GDP ratios were especially vulnerable to the downturn in external demand. Of the various subregions, South-East Asia was the most severely affected, experiencing a 4 percentage point reduction in aggregate growth, with Singapore's GDP actually contracting. Viet Nam was a notable exception, maintaining GDP growth of 6.8 per cent. In East and North-East Asia, China remained largely immune to the global slowdown, achieving GDP growth of 7.3 per cent, compared to 8 per cent in 2000. In contrast, the Republic of Korea, Hong Kong, China, and Taiwan Province of China were significantly affected, with the latter two economies sliding into recession. The global slowdown, combined with continuing domestic constraints, impacted negatively on the economies of South and South-West Asia, with the notable exceptions of Bangladesh, whose GDP increased from 5.9 to 6 per cent, and India, with a growth rate of 5.4 per cent. The worst affected were Sri Lanka and Turkey. The Pacific island economies were adversely affected also, though to a lesser extent than the least developed countries (LDCs) of the region.

Policy issues

The global slowdown was expected to have an adverse social impact through higher unemployment and the constrained capacity of Governments to address emerging social problems and alleviate poverty through higher public expenditure. However, there was some leeway available in a number of economies of the region to tackle the emerging issues because of the benign inflationary environment and comfortable external position in the form of current account surpluses and stabilized levels of foreign debt. Against that background, stronger policy initiatives could be taken to enhance growth in the short run and mitigate the effects of the current slowdown in the medium term. However, the varying characteristics of each subregion suggested that policy approaches would need to be more nuanced to reflect the differences between and within the various subregions or within a particular group of countries. At the national level, most Governments would need to implement measures to preserve or enhance the momentum of growth through counter-cyclical fiscal and monetary policies; the latter would take precedence where public debt was already at a high level. Such a policy approach was not without some risk.

At the same time, Governments needed to reiterate their commitment to addressing and reforming the financial and corporate sectors and improving transparency and governance. In trade, it was imperative that countries avoid taking restrictive measures and thus risk a downward spiral in output. Developed countries should accelerate trade liberalization, especially in textiles and agricultural commodities, while developing countries could increase the flow of trade by enhancing trade facilitation.

ESCAP, at its 2001 session, considered a March report on the current economic situation in the region and related policy issues [E/ESCAP/1198]. The Commission stressed the need to continue improving financial and economic surveillance mechanisms, including the establishment of early warning mechanisms. ESCAP should be involved in strengthening those mechanisms and in exploring new, non-traditional modalities to reduce the risks involved in the financial and commodity markets. The region's reform agenda needed to be sustained, including measures to stabilize exchange rates, strengthen stock markets and promote regional trade liberalization. Human resources development was an important strategy for poverty reduction and for enabling the region to address the challenges, and reap the opportunities, of globalization. The Commission recommended that commodity markets be strengthened through further liberalization within the World Trade Organization (WTO) framework. It urged that concerted efforts, particularly in upgrading human resources development in ICT, be directed towards ensuring that the developing countries had affordable access to such technology and opportunities to participate in the new knowledge economy.

Activities in 2001

ESCAP activities in 2001 were carried out under seven thematic subprogrammes: regional economic cooperation; development research and policy analysis; social development; population and rural and urban development; environment and natural resources development; transportation, communications, tourism and infrastructure development; and statistics.

Development policy and regional economic cooperation

The Commission had before it the report of the Committee for Regional Economic Cooperation on its eighth session (Bangkok, 14-16 March) [E/ESCAP/1201]; a secretariat note on emerging issues and developments relevant to the subprogramme on regional economic cooperation [E/ESCAP/1202]; a secretariat note on the implementation of Commission resolution 56/1 [YUN 2000, p. 931] on the Decade of Greater Mekong Subregion Development Cooperation, 2000-2009 [E/ESCAP/1230]; a report on the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology [E/ESCAP/1203] (see p. 910); a report on the Regional Network for Agricultural Engineering and Machinery [E/ESCAP/1204] (see p. 912); and a report on policy issues for the ESCAP region: balanced development of urban and rural areas and regions within the countries of Asia and the Pacific [E/ESCAP/1199].

The Commission endorsed the recommendations, conclusions and decisions of the Committee for Regional Economic Cooperation and urged the secretariat to accord priority to assisting developing countries and countries with economies in transition to integrate more effectively into the multilateral trading system, with particular attention to capacity-building and training for trade negotiations, implementation of WTO agreements, enhanced understanding of WTO accession procedures and the integration of WTO agreements into national legal frameworks. The Commission welcomed the ESCAP/WTO Memorandum of Understanding and their joint training programme on WTO issues. Noting the abuse of anti-dumping and safeguards measures as hidden forms of protectionism, the Commission requested the secretariat to study the implications of protectionism for national economic development. The secretariat was also asked to continue to monitor and analyse the economic recovery process following the 2001 slowdown in world economic growth, so that developing countries could participate more effectively in the globalization process, to assist regional and sub-regional mechanisms for monitoring cross-border financial flows and to support the application of information technology in small manufacturing companies and businesses.

The Commission adopted a resolution [E/2001/39 (res. 57/5)], in which it noted the report of the Meeting of Eminent Persons ("Friends of the Chair") on the Integration of Asian Developing Countries into the International Trading System (Tehran, Iran, 10-11 March) and requested the Executive Secretary to further assist developing countries and economies in transition in their attempts at national capacity-building for the integration and implementation of multilateral trade agreements through policy advocacy, advisory services and training under the ESCAP/WTO programme.

The Commission also adopted a resolution on regional cooperation in ICTs for development [res. 57/4], in which it identified numerous areas where the Executive Secretary should accord priority assistance to member States in the region to support their work in strengthening regional cooperation in ICTs.

Least developed, landlocked and island developing countries

Special Body on Least Developed and Landlocked Developing Countries

The Commission endorsed the recommendations contained in the report of the Special Body on Least Developed and Landlocked Developing Countries on its fifth session (Bangkok, 20-21 February) [E/ESCAP/1216], which would serve as the regional input to the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (Brussels, Belgium, 14-20 May) (see p. 770). Noting with concern that the development goals of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s [YUN 1990, p. 369] remained largely unmet, the Commission recommended that the new programme of action to be adopted at the May Conference address that issue with a fresh approach to improve economic and social conditions in LDCs.

The Commission asked the secretariat to incorporate the report's recommendations in its work programme, and to prepare a comprehensive results-oriented action plan tailored to the needs of each LDC. It urged the international community to grant LDCs better access to its markets, to provide increased financial and technical assistance and to consider ways to better distribute and enhance its assistance in helping those countries to sustain their development efforts.

The Commission asked the secretariat to implement activities to improve access by island developing countries to international markets, increase their ICT use, enhance their absorptive capacity for major investments and strengthen their institutional capacity, and address issues dealing with the threat of climate change and rising sea level.

Economic and technical cooperation

In 2001, ESCAP received $15.7 million for technical cooperation activities, an increase of 6 per cent over the 2000 figure. Of that amount, $4.7 million came from within the UN system and $11 million from donors and participating developing countries and other intergovernmental organizations and NGOs [E/ESCAP/1255]. Contributions from nine developed donor countries (Australia, Canada, France, Germany, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden) accounted for 77.2 per cent of the total bilateral assistance received. Japan continued to be the largest bilateral donor, followed by the Netherlands and Germany. Among the developing country members and associate members, China, India and the Republic of Korea were the largest contributors. In addition to cash contributions, donors and developing country members provided 244 work-months of services of experts on a non-reimbursable loan basis. Sixty-two projects, amounting to some $7.2 million, were approved under the programme of work.

Technical cooperation among developing countries

In 2001 [E/ESCAP/1255], the secretariat developed and implemented some 90 promotional programmes of technical cooperation among developing countries and economic cooperation among developing countries (TCDC/ECDC). TCDC activities were concentrated on capacity-building and on increasing TCDC focal points' understanding of the TCDC modality and its benefits to development efforts.

The Commission [E/2001/39] noted the lack of sufficient resources to implement TCDC activities, and urged ESCAP to continue to mobilize extrabudgetary resources from both traditional and non-traditional donors. It also urged that TCDC sensitization workshops and in-country consultations be organized annually to reinforce the TCDC national focal points, update information on TCDC opportunities and facilitate the exchange of TCDC experience and related matters among participating countries.

Transport, communications, tourism and infrastructure development

The Commission endorsed the recommendations of the Committee on Transport, Communications, Tourism and Infrastructure Development on its third session [YUN 2000, p. 934]. It also considered the report [E/ESCAP/1213] on the implementation of the New Delhi Action Plan on Infrastructure Development in Asia and the Pacific [YUN 1995, p. 1012]. The Commission underscored the importance of the commitment and participation of members and associate members for the implementation of the Action Plan, and urged them to provide information on the status of projects under phase I of the Plan. It noted that 61 of 64 phase I projects had been implemented or were being implemented, and asked the secretariat to assist countries in creating an environment conducive to private sector participation in the infrastructure sector. Members and associate members were invited to identify project areas for phase II of the Action Plan and to provide information on national activities so as to facilitate regular review of implementation. The Commission reaffirmed its support for the Asian land transport infrastructure development (ALTID) project and recommended that it be a priority under phase II.

The Commission welcomed the Ministerial Conference on Infrastructure to be held in November (below) as an opportunity to focus on emerging trends in infrastructure development. It requested that priority be given to multimodal transport and logistics to create a better understanding of the industry among government agencies and to enhance the knowledge of logistics service planners and operators. The secretariat was asked to promote the adoption of a harmonized legal framework for the freight-forwarding industry and multimodal transport operations in the region.

The Commission reiterated that priority should be given to tourism in the ESCAP programme, and urged the secretariat to intensify its activities in that sector, including the organization of forums for sharing information on best practices, studies on the development of tourism facilities for persons with disabilities, and the development of community- and village-based tourism.

Ministerial Conference on Infrastructure

The Ministerial Conference on Infrastructure (Seoul, Republic of Korea, 12-17 November) [E/ESCAP/1249] adopted the Seoul Declaration on Infrastructure Development in Asia and the Pacific, including phase II of the regional action programme (2002-2006) of the New Delhi Action Plan. Priority areas of the programme included development and improvement of integrated/intermodal international transport; establishment of working groups on the development of the Asian Highway and the Trans-Asian Railway to facilitate the development of the networks; private sector participation and foreign direct investment in infrastructure development; development of transport infrastructure and services to enhance access to markets, facilities and services for social development and poverty alleviation; and development of sustainable transport for effective management of the impacts of rising transport demand related to the environment, health and safety. The Conference recommended that the Commission endorse phase V (2002-2003) of the ALTID Plan of Action, with priority accorded to the container transport demonstration project of the Trans-Asian Railway Northern Corridor and implementation of the joint ESCAP/ECE programme on the development of Asia/Europe land transport links.

Science and technology

In 2001, the activities of the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology (APCTT) were directed towards technology capacity-building and innovation, as well as subregional and regional networking to support countries in responding to the challenges of integration with the new global economy. It organized 47 technology transfer-related events in 14 countries in cooperation with 51 partner institutions, and established strategic alliances with more than 100 industrial associations, chambers of commerce and business development organizations in 33 countries. A major endeavour in 2001 was the launch of a project to develop a subregional training centre on hazardous waste management for the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation region under the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420].

The APCTT Governing Board held its sixteenth session in Shanghai, China, on 26 and 27 November [E/ESCAP/1242].

The Commission endorsed the recommendations of the APCTT Governing Board's fifteenth session [YUN 2000, p. 935], and encouraged APCTT to proceed with establishing a subregional network for promoting technology transfer, and with implementing a regional cooperative policy mechanism to promote the transfer of environmentally sound technologies. APCTT was directed to expand its activities with respect to technology management, technology capacity-building and human resources development in knowledge-based technologies to enhance the competitiveness of small and medium-sized enterprises. It should also strengthen its activities for upgrading technologies in traditional areas and pursue programmes aimed at converging traditional and new and emerging technologies.

Environment and sustainable development

The Commission considered the report of the Ministerial Conference on Environment and Development in Asia and the Pacific, 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 936]. In a resolution [E/2001/39 (res. 57/2)], it welcomed the Conference's recommendations and requested members and associate members to participate in their implementation by ensuring the formulation of programmes to implement the Regional Action Programme for Environmentally Sound and Sustainable Development, 2001-2005 [YUN 2000, p. 936]; encouraging local governments to participate in implementing the Kitakyushu Initiative for a Clean Environment [ibid.]; and assisting the secretariat in assessing progress in the implementation of the Conference's recommendations. The Commission noted the progress made in implementing the second phase of the Regional Space Application Programme for Sustainable Development in Asia and the Pacific, launched by the Second Ministerial Conference on Space Applications for Sustainable Development in Asia and the Pacific [YUN 1999, p. 930], and called for implementation of that Conference's recommendations.

In preparation for the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development (see p. 749), the High-level Regional Meeting for the World Summit (Phnom Penh, Cambodia, 27-29 November) [E/ESCAP/1234] adopted the Phnom Penh Regional Platform on Sustainable Development for Asia and the Pacific, which outlined a number of initiatives to address sustainable development in the region.

Natural resources development

The Commission, having considered the report of the High-level Regional Meeting on Energy for Sustainable Development [YUN 2000, p. 937], adopted a resolution [E/2001/39 (res. 57/6)], in which it noted the adoption of the Bali Declaration on Asia-Pacific Perspectives on Energy and Sustainable Development, and the Sustainable Energy Development Action Programme, Strategies and Implementation Modalities for the Asian and Pacific Region, 2001-2005 [YUN 2000, p. 937]. It called on members and associate members to fulfil their commitments made in the Bali Declaration, and to implement the Action Programme. It asked donors, financial institutions, UN bodies, NGOs and the private sector to assist developing countries in enhancing their national capacity, mobilizing resources and facilitating technology transfer. Among its recommendations to the Executive Secretary was a request that he undertake a programme to assist countries of the region, particularly developing countries, in formulating strategies on the efficient use of energy and the application of renewable and clean energy technologies.

The Commission also considered a report [E/ESCAP/1207] on issues related to the environment and sustainable development of natural resources and endorsed in general the conclusions and recommendations made by the secretariat regarding emerging issues and developments at the regional level. It stressed the importance of adopting an integrated approach to water resources management, and supported ESCAP activities in capacity-building in the strategic planning of natural resources and the preparation of national water visions for action, as well as involvement in the preparation of the World Water Assessment Programme and in the Third World Water Forum, to be held in Japan in 2003.

The Commission also considered the report of the Mekong River Commission (MRC), established in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1017], on its 2000 activities [E/ESCAP/1224]. It noted that MRC had initiated a revision of the Strategic Plan for 1999-2003 [YUN 1999, p. 931], with a view to reflecting fully emerging needs and new strategic objectives in the period 2001-2005.

Having considered the report of the Coordinating Committee for Coastal and Offshore Geoscience Programmes in East and South-East Asia [E/ESCAP/1223], the Commission noted the progress made in the development of the human resources and technology of its member countries in the energy, minerals, coastal management and geohazards, and geodata and information management sectors. It requested the Committee to cooperate more closely with the private sector to generate income in support of its activities.

The Committee on Environment and Natural Resources Development held its third session in Bangkok from 16 to 18 October [E/ESCAP/1244].

Agriculture and development

The Commission endorsed the report of the Regional Coordination Centre for Research and Development of Coarse Grains, Pulses, Roots and Tuber Crops in the Humid Tropics of Asia and the Pacific [E/ESCAP/1211 & Corr.1]. Acknowledging the Centre's research on the effects of trade liberalization on agriculture and on food security strategies for the southern Pacific island countries, it recommended that the Centre strengthen research and development programmes as well as human resources development and information services with ESCAP members and associate members. Concerned over the Centre's unstable financial condition, the Commission called for a substantial increase in funding and the provision of experts to ensure implementation of the Centre's activities. The ESCAP secretariat was asked to assist the Centre in mobilizing financial resources.

The Commission endorsed the recommendations of the twentieth session of the Governing Body of the Regional Network for Agricultural Engineering and Machinery (RNAEM) [YUN 2000, p. 938]. It also endorsed further activities in post-harvest food processing technology, the mechanization of horticultural crops, low-cost surface-covered cultivation, and agricultural waste and by-product utilization. The Commission recommended that RNAEM provide technical assistance and consultancy services in agro-industries in rural areas.

Social development

The Commission endorsed the report of the Committee on Socio-economic Measures to Alleviate Poverty in Rural and Urban Areas on its third session [YUN 2000, p. 938], and the secretariat note [E/ESCAP/1210] on progress in the implementation of resolutions and decisions relating to socio-economic measures to alleviate poverty in rural and urban areas.

It requested the ESCAP secretariat to continue to play an advocacy and catalytic role in poverty alleviation efforts, and to develop mechanisms for formulating regional integrated development plans and cooperation on technology transfer, human resources development and capacity-building. The secretariat should also continue its research and dissemination of information on demographic issues and their relationship to development and provide policy guidance and technical assistance in areas related to demographic dynamics. Other proposed areas of work included human resources development training in poverty alleviation and rural development programmes, and social protection, including social safety nets, social security benefits and social services. The Commission recommended that the social and economic consequences of ageing in the region should be studied and analysed, as should ageing-related issues. The secretariat was urged to implement and coordinate activities in preparation for the UN Second World Assembly on Ageing, to be held in 2002 (see p. 1102).

The Commission endorsed the recommendations of the Regional High-level Meeting for Asia and the Pacific in Preparation for Istanbul+5

[YUN 2000, p. 938] (see p. 973), which reviewed implementation of the Habitat Agenda, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) [YUN 1996, p. 992]. Noting progress in achieving the goals of the Habitat Agenda, especially those related to adequate shelter for all and sustainable human settlements in an urbanizing world, the Commission remarked that low levels of economic and technological development and inadequate international cooperation had hindered further achievements. The Commission recognized the need to localize the Habitat Agenda and institutionalize its implementation through national, subnational and municipal Habitat committees.

Women in development

The Commission, on 25 April [E/2001/39 (res. 57/3)], reaffirmed its commitment and role in implementing the Beijing Platform for Action, adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1170], the recommendations of the High-level Intergovernmental Meeting to Review Regional Implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1999, p. 933] and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly [YUN 2000, p. 1082]. It called on members and associate members to ensure that the momentum derived from the Assembly's twenty-third special session was maintained to achieve the full implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action, and urged donors, the private sector and regional and international financial institutions to assist developing countries, particularly least developed, landlocked and island developing economies and economies in transition, to implement the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome of the special session. The Commission addressed a number of recommendations to the Executive Secretary for action.

Human resources development

The Third Asia-Pacific Intergovernmental Meeting on Human Resources Development for Youth was held in Bangkok from 4 to 8 June [E/ESCAP/1263] on the theme "Integrated approaches to youth health: focus on sexual and reproductive health, substance abuse and HIV/AIDS". The meeting adopted recommendations for national follow-up and subregional and regional cooperation on integrated approaches to youth health, focusing on the prevention of substance abuse and HIV/AIDS among youth and the promotion of their sexual and reproductive health.

Regional action to fight HIV/AIDS

The Commission had before it a document on regional preparations for the special session of the General Assembly on HIV/AIDS [E/ESCAP/1229] (see p. 1125).

In a resolution on a regional call for action to fight HIV/AIDS in Asia and the Pacific [E/2001/39 (res. 57/1)], the Commission, among other recommendations, called for a regional commitment to enhancing coordination and strengthening community, national, regional and international efforts to prevent the spread of HIV/AIDS and to address its social and economic impact; a political commitment on a response to HIV/AIDS; the mainstreaming of HIV/AIDS into national economic and social development processes; and an increase in government and financial resources at the country level to address the epidemic. It called on members and associate members to be actively involved in the preparatory activities and ensure representation at the highest political level at the Assembly's special session on HIV/AIDS. The Commission requested the Executive Secretary to strengthen UN regional coordination mechanisms under the aegis of ESCAP, and, with the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS, promote accelerated action, including increased political engagement at the highest level, and support the United Nations Regional Coordination Meeting thematic working group on HIV/AIDS and intergovernmental working groups on HIV/AIDS. He should seek extrabudgetary resources to provide technical assistance and other support for efforts to combat the spread of HIV/AIDS in ESCAP countries, particularly the developing and least developed among them.

Natural disasters

The Commission, having considered the report of the Typhoon Committee [E/ESCAP/1225], noted the progress of work in 2000 on meteorological components, including observations, forecasts and warnings of typhoons; on hydrological components, including flood forecasts and warnings as well as storm surge forecasts; and on natural disaster reduction. It noted, in particular, the Committee's decisions to undertake a comprehensive review of the hydrological and disaster prevention and preparedness components, to restructure the Regional Cooperation Programme Implementation Plan, and to re-establish the Typhoon Research Coordination Group.

The Commission also considered the report of the Panel on Tropical Cyclones at its twenty-eighth session (Bangkok, 14-20 March) [E/ESCAP/1226]. It noted the Panel's proposal to the World

Meteorological Organization (WMO), ESCAP and the Panel's Technical Support Unit to increase interaction among the national and subregional institutions involved in the mitigation of tropical cyclone disasters. It noted that a trust fund had been established with WMO for the Panel's activities and encouraged Panel members and others to contribute.

Statistics

The Commission endorsed the conclusions and decisions contained in the report of the Committee on Statistics on its twelfth session [YUN 2000, p. 940], including the secretariat's programme of work for 2002-2003 and the priority areas identified: the 1993 System of National Accounts, and statistics on poverty, gender, environment and the informal sector. It decided that ICT and the knowledge-based economy should be included as an additional priority item. It urged the secretariat to assist in building national capabilities and to develop projects in ICT, statistical classifications, the International Comparison Programme and statistics on social issues. The Commission recognized the need to develop concepts and methodologies for measuring the informal sector activities. Stressing the importance of better poverty statistics, it believed that the Committee on Statistics should develop standard methods for facilitating international comparison of those statistics. It recognized the need for timely and comprehensive environmental statistics in the national development planning process, and the importance of harmonizing and rationalizing the basic development indicators used for measuring the goals set by global conferences. The Commission endorsed the Statistics Committee's recommendations on the impact of information technology (IT) on statistical work, and agreed with its suggestion that the United Nations Statistics Division or ESCAP should prepare a manual on measuring IT-related activities. The secretariat should facilitate the sharing of experiences on the measurement of the digital economy and produce a document on best practices for measuring electronic commerce activities in the region.

The Commission also had before it a report on the Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific [E/ESCAP/1215], which included a summary of the deliberations of the sixth session of the Institute's Governing Board (Tokyo, 29-30 August 2000).

The Commission noted the revised content of the Institute's training courses and approved the shift in emphasis to specialized statistical topics in its outreach training programme. It endorsed the Institute's initiatives to collaborate with the national statistical offices in its outreach programme, and the Institute's 2001-2002 work programme.

Programme and organizational questions

The Commission noted the secretariat's report on the implementation of the programme of work for 2000-2001 [E/ESCAP/1217] and endorsed the programme changes for 2001 [E/ESCAP/1218]. It was satisfied with the overall implementation of the programme of work and with the shift in its focus from producing publications to increasing training activities and the dissemination of information and data through ESCAP web sites. It suggested that all recurrent publications be shifted to those web sites and that the sites be hyper-linked with related sites of other UN bodies.

The Commission endorsed ESCAP's draft programme of work for 2002-2003 [E/ESCAP/1219 & Corr.1] and approved a tentative calendar of meetings and training programmes for the period from April 2001 to March 2002 [E/ESCAP/1220].

ESCAP reform

The Commission considered the Executive Secretary's report [E/ESCAP/1200] on the implementation of a 1997 Commission resolution on ESCAP reform [YUN 1997, p. 993]. The Executive Secretary reported that he had invited the United Nations Office for Project Services to undertake a management consultancy of ESCAP, which was expected to provide practical recommendations on structural and work process adjustments to revitalize ESCAP.

Also before the Commission was the report of the Advisory Committee of Permanent Representatives and Other Representatives Designated by Members of the Commission (ACPR) and its Open-ended Informal Working Group [E/ESCAP/1227 & Add.1]; the latter had been convened to assist ACPR in its work on ESCAP reform. The Commission recognized the importance of ACPR in maintaining constructive dialogue between member countries and the secretariat, and recommended that its advisory role be strengthened with regard to development and implementation of the Commission's programmes and its resolutions and decisions.

Subregional activities

Cooperation with the Economic Cooperation Organization

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/42 [YUN 2000, p. 941], the Secretary-General reported in June on cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization (ECO) [A/56/122]. The report described the cooperative relationship of ECO with various UN organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December [meeting 80], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/44 [draft: A/56/L.32] without vote [agenda item 21 (h)].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/2 of 13 October 1993, by which it granted observer status to the Economic Cooperation Organization,

Recalling also the resolutions previously adopted by the General Assembly on cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization, and inviting various specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and relevant international financial institutions to join in their efforts towards implementation of economic programmes and projects of the Economic Cooperation Organization,

Bearing in mind the progress attained by the Economic Cooperation Organization both in its reorganization endeavours and in launching and implementing various regional development projects and programmes over the past decade,

Welcoming the endeavours of the Economic Cooperation Organization in regard to consolidating its ties with the United Nations system and with relevant international and regional organizations towards the furtherance of its objectives,

Recalling that one of the main objectives of the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization is to promote international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character,

Expressing grave concern at the prevalent drought and its devastating impact on the socio-economic situation of some States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 55/42 of 21 November 2000, and expresses satisfaction at the enhanced pace of mutually beneficial interaction between the two organizations;

2. Takes note of the Dushanbe communiqué, issued at the eleventh meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization, held on 4 May 2001, in which the States members reiterated their common aspirations and resolve for a prosperous region of the Economic Cooperation Organization;

3. Stresses the importance of cooperation between the United Nations system and the Economic Cooperation Organization to address the challenges and opportunities of globalization in the region of the Economic Cooperation Organization by promoting the integration of States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization, as appropriate, into the world economy, particularly in areas of concern to

States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization, inter alia, trade, finance and transfer of technology;

4. Notes the holding in Islamabad on 8 November 2000 of a ministerial-level meeting on energy and petroleum, which, inter alia, resulted in a joint statement and the adoption of a plan of action for energy/petroleum cooperation in the region of the Economic Cooperation Organization for 2001–2005;

5. Notes with satisfaction the ongoing cooperation between the United Nations Development Programme and the Economic Cooperation Organization through the implementation of the capacity-building project of the secretariat of the Economic Cooperation Organization, and welcomes the decision of the two institutions to expand the scope of existing cooperation in priority areas of the Economic Cooperation Organization;

6. Notes the concern of the Economic Cooperation Organization with respect to agriculture, industry and the health sector in the region, and appreciates the due cognizance taken by the organization of the development of the region, and in this regard welcomes the fact that the Economic Cooperation Organization decided to hold a ministerial meeting on agriculture in Islamabad in October 2001;

7. Welcomes the signing in March 2001 of a memorandum of understanding between the Economic Cooperation Organization and the International Trade Centre, expresses its confidence that their mutual cooperation will add impetus to the ongoing trade transactions among States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization, and notes with appreciation the successful implementation of the ongoing project of the Economic Cooperation Organization and the International Trade Centre on expanding intraregional trade;

8. Notes with satisfaction the increasing cooperation between the Economic Cooperation Organization and the World Trade Organization, including the fact that the latter has accorded observer status to the former, and the increasing involvement of the Economic Cooperation Organization in relevant forums and ministerial conferences of the World Trade Organization, and appreciates the holding in Bishkek in 2002 of a joint Economic Cooperation Organization and World Trade Organization seminar on regionalism;

9. Welcomes the growing cooperation between the Economic Cooperation Organization and relevant international financial institutions in regard to financial assistance extended by them in the fields of transport, trade, energy, agriculture and privatization, particularly by the Islamic Development Bank in the joint projects of the Economic Cooperation Organization, the Islamic Development Bank, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the introduction of multimodal transport operations in the region of the Economic Cooperation Organization and the interconnection and parallel functioning of power systems in the region;

10. Also welcomes the efforts of the States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization in opening international passenger traffic and the launching of a demonstration container train on the Almaty-Tashkent-Tehran-Istanbul route of the Trans-Asian Railway main line;

11. Appreciates the fact that General Assembly resolution 55/181 of 20 December 2000, on the transit environment in landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours, has implications for the whole region of the Economic Cooperation Organization;

12. Welcomes the holding in Tehran in June 2001 of a joint Economic Cooperation Organization and United Nations Industrial Development Organization training course on technology management and technology transfer negotiations, which will enhance cooperation among the States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization in industry, particularly in the development of small and medium-sized enterprises;

13. Notes the increasing problem of the production, transit and abuse of narcotic drugs and their ill effects in the region of the Economic Cooperation Organization, notes with appreciation the commencement of phase II of the joint project of the Economic Cooperation Organization and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme on the Drug Control Coordination Unit established in the secretariat of the Economic Cooperation Organization in July 1999, and calls upon the other international and regional organizations to assist, as appropriate, the Economic Cooperation Organization in its efforts against the drug menace in the region;

14. Appreciates the cooperation of the Economic Cooperation Organization with the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat in jointly organizing the regional seminar on the fight against supranational organized crime;

15. Notes with satisfaction the expansion of cultural ties in the region under the auspices of the Cultural Institute of the Economic Cooperation Organization, and supports the endeavours to promote the rich cultural and literary heritage of the region through the launching of appropriate projects and programmes, with possible assistance from the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and other relevant entities;

16. Also notes with satisfaction the efforts of the States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization in the field of science and technology for the development of the region and endeavours in this regard, including the establishment of the Science Foundation of the Economic Cooperation Organization;

17. Accentuates the significance of environmental issues, such as air and water pollution, in the region of the Economic Cooperation Organization, and calls upon the relevant United Nations bodies to cooperate, as appropriate, with the Economic Cooperation Organization to implement joint plans and projects to improve the situation in the region;

18. Invites the United Nations system, its relevant bodies and the international community to continue to provide technical assistance, as appropriate, to the States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization and its secretariat in strengthening their early warning systems, preparedness, capacity for timely response and rehabilitation, with a view to reducing human casualties and mitigating the socio-economic impact of natural disasters;

19. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts of the Economic Cooperation Organization in the implementation of the United Nations programmes for the development of transit transport facilities in the landlocked countries of the region;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

21. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the sub-item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization".

Cooperation with the Pacific Islands Forum

On 14 September [A/56/388], Nauru transmitted the communiqué of the thirty-second meeting of the Pacific Islands Forum (Yaren, Nauru, 16-18 August), containing the decision of its heads of Government to pursue a closer and cooperative relationship between the United Nations and the Forum.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December [meeting 80], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/41 [draft: A/56/L.29 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 21 (m)].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Pacific Islands Forum

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/1 of 17 October 1994, by which it granted observer status to the South Pacific Forum,

Taking note of the communiqué of the thirtieth meeting of the Pacific Islands Forum, held in Koror from 3 to 5 October 1999, which, inter alia, agreed to change the name of the organization from the "South Pacific Forum" to the "Pacific Islands Forum",

Recalling that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to achieve international cooperation in addressing international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the Pacific Islands Forum, established in 1971, is to promote regional cooperation among its members through trade, investment, economic development and political and international affairs,

Welcoming the ongoing efforts towards closer cooperation between the United Nations and the Pacific Islands Forum,

Bearing in mind the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations on the existence of regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action and other activities consistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Welcoming the assistance given by the United Nations towards the maintenance of peace and security in the Pacific Islands Forum region,

Welcoming also the fact that in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted by resolution 55/2 of 8 September 2000, heads of State and Government resolved to address the special needs of small island developing States by implementing the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and the outcome of the twenty-second special session of the General Assembly,

Taking note of the communiqué of the thirty-second meeting of the Pacific Islands Forum, held in Yaren from 16 to 18 August 2001,

Affirming the need to strengthen the cooperation that already exists between entities of the United Nations system and the Pacific Islands Forum in the areas of economic and social development, as well as in political and humanitarian affairs,

Mindful of the need for the coordinated utilization of available resources to promote the common objectives of the two organizations,

1. Takes note of the decision of the heads of Government of the Pacific Islands Forum on the pursuit of a closer and cooperative relationship between the United Nations and the Pacific Islands Forum;

2. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Pacific Islands Forum, to promote and expand cooperation and coordination between the two secretariats in order to increase the capacity of the organizations to attain their common objectives;

3. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Pacific Islands Forum, to promote, as a matter of priority, meetings between their representatives for consultations on policies, projects and procedures that will facilitate, broaden and, if necessary, formalize, cooperation and coordination between the two organizations;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Pacific Islands Forum, to assist in the development of long-term peace-building programmes to address new security threats in the Pacific Islands Forum region;

5. Urges specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to cooperate with the Secretary-General of the United Nations in order to initiate, maintain and increase consultations and programmes with the Pacific Islands Forum and its associated institutions in the attainment of their objectives;

6. Invites initiatives from Member States to assist in the cooperation efforts between the United Nations and the Pacific Islands Forum;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Pacific Islands Forum".

Europe

---

The Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), at its fifty-sixth session (Geneva, 8-11 May) [E/2001/37], focused on strengthening regional cooperation and establishing its strategic directions.

During its debate on the theme "Business enterprise and economic growth in the Central Asian and the Caucasian countries: creating a supportive and secure environment", discussions centred on progress and problems in the transition process since 1991; privatization, regulatory reform and enterprise development; and living standards and social policy. The Commission underlined the priority needs of those regions and encouraged the Executive Secretary to strengthen assistance to them through regional and subregional cooperation, and with other international institutions, in particular through the special programmes and projects for the southern Caucasus and Central Asia.

The Commission was briefed on preparations for the ECE Ministerial Conference on Ageing (Berlin, Germany, September 2002), which was expected to produce an implementation scheme for the plan to be developed by the UN Second World Assembly on Ageing (see p. 1102).

The Commission also considered strengthening links within the ECE region in environment, energy and transport. Its principal subsidiary bodies were invited to develop linkages in various areas and to examine the most efficient, flexible and cost-effective modalities to address those intersectoral issues, review annually intersectoral cooperation and consider potential new issues for such cooperation. They were encouraged to find new ways to secure the means of implementing intersectoral activities, including setting aside regular resources and seeking extrabudgetary financing for those activities.

The Commission discussed key policy concerns of the Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49] relevant to the ECE region. Attention was focused on identifying the most relevant economic and social objectives for ECE member States, and on progress made and further efforts needed to achieve those objectives. The Chairman proposed a number of measures for assisting ECE member countries in implementing the Declaration and for monitoring progress.

In terms of ECE's strategic directions, the Executive Secretary reported to the Commission on an informal brainstorming session on 9 May, which discussed ways to meet the growing demands on ECE in an environment of zero-growth budget and the need to strengthen overall policy coherence and communication in ECE. It was suggested that a steering group be established to discuss and articulate the overall policy and direction for consideration by the Commission. The Commission also requested the Group of Experts on the Programme of Work to continue discussions on ECE's strategic directions.

Economic trends

According to ECE's summary of the economic survey of Europe, 2001 [E/2002/16], there was a progressive slowdown in the rate of expansion of the global economy in 2001, with world output increasing by 2.5 per cent, compared with a 4.7 per cent rise in 2000. Meanwhile, real GDP in the ECE region rose by only 1.7 per cent, compared to 4.2 per cent in 2000. However, that slowdown masked the resilience of the transition economies, especially in Eastern Europe where real GDP rose on average by 3.2 per cent. Global economic developments were overshadowed by the terrorist attacks in the United States on 11 September (see p. 60), which occurred at a time when the United States economy and the other major economic regions were in a fragile state and close to a cyclical downturn. The general effect of the attacks was to worsen the economic outlook, which was already uncertain, not least because of the large domestic and external imbalances in the United States economy.

Western Europe and North America

In the United States, real GDP fell between the second and third quarters of 2001. Economic activity in that period was influenced by the impact of the terrorist attacks of 11 September on consumer and business spending. Business activity peaked in March, and the economic expansion that started in March 1991 ended after exactly 10 years. However, real GDP did not decline further in the final quarter of 2001, as economic activity edged up by 0.3 per cent, just offsetting the fall in aggregate output in the third quarter. For the year as a whole, GDP rose by 1.2 per cent, due to growth of personal and government consumption expenditures, although they were largely offset by falling investment and exports. Manufacturing production declined by 4.4 per cent compared with 2000. Because of the sluggish economic activity, inflationary pressures weakened markedly. Core inflation remained broadly steady at 2.6 per cent for the year as a whole.

The current account deficit fell to some $415 billion or 4.1 per cent of GDP, compared to 4.5 per cent in 2000. The progressive easing of monetary policy since the beginning of 2001, designed to arrest and reverse the cyclical downturn, continued in the aftermath of the 11 September attacks. Between mid-September and early December, the target for the federal funds rate was reduced in four steps from 3.5 per cent to 1.75 per cent. The expansionary stance of fiscal policy, in combination with the cyclical downturn, resulted in a large fall in the federal budget surplus from 2.4 per cent of GDP in 2000 to 1.2 per cent ($127 billion) in 2001. The federal budget was forecast to move into deficit in 2002.

Canada's economy was adversely affected by the sharp downturn in the United States and the slowdown in the world economy, leading to a marked fall in exports. Real GDP rose by 1.5 per cent, down from 4.4 per cent in 2000. Unemployment rose to 8 per cent in December, the highest in almost three years. Core consumer price inflation was 2 per cent, well within the Bank of Canada's target of 1 to 3 per cent. In response to weakening domestic activity and low inflation, the Bank of Canada continued to loosen monetary policy.

In Western Europe, there was a marked slowdown in economic expansion, with real GDP rising by only 1.3 per cent, compared with 3.5 per cent the previous year. That outcome partly reflected the slump in Turkey, where GDP fell by more than 7 per cent. In the European Union (EU), real GDP rose by only 1.7 per cent, half the annual rate in 2000. In the euro area, between the third and final quarters of 2001, real GDP fell by 0.2 per cent and was only 0.75 of a percentage point above the level in the same period of 2000. The tendency for rapidly weakening growth was general. The falls in average annual growth rates of real GDP were particularly sharp in Finland and Ireland. Among the three major euro-area economies, France's long economic upswing petered out into a decline of real GDP by 0.1 per cent between the third and fourth quarters of 2001, mainly due to the slowdown in the rate of growth of private consumption and falling consumer confidence. In Germany, the economy moved into recession in the second half of 2001, with real GDP falling by 0.2 per cent between the second and third quarters and by 0.3 per cent in the final quarter, while in Italy, economic growth was very uneven. For the year, the average rate of economic growth was 1.8 per cent, down from nearly 3 per cent in 2000.

Outside the euro area, real GDP in the United Kingdom rose by 2.3 per cent, fuelled by buoyant private consumption. In contrast, business investment weakened in the course of the year. Fiscal policy supported economic activity in 2001 and the Bank of England reduced its base lending rate by 2 percentage points. The Government launched a massive investment programme designed to improve infrastructure (transport, health, education).

Eastern Europe, Baltic States and CIS

According to the summary of the economic survey of Europe, 2001 [E/2002/16], despite the global economic slowdown, 2001 turned out to be a relatively successful year for the ECE transition economies. With the exception of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM), all of them posted positive GDP growth. Aggregate GDP increased by 5 per cent, making them one of the fastest-growing regions in the world. The main factor behind that outcome was buoyant growth in the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), where a strong recovery continued for a third consecutive year. The Russian Federation remained the principal engine of growth for the CIS countries in 2001, with a 5 per cent increase in GDP. Two of the larger economies, Kazakhstan and Ukraine, showed strong recovery, registering some of the highest GDP growth rates in 2001, 13.2 per cent and 9.1 per cent, respectively. In most of those countries, strong growth was underpinned by export expansion. However, the surge in economic activity was mostly confined to the first half of 2001; in the second half of the year, there was a notable deceleration in both output and export performance throughout CIS.

Strong rates of growth also prevailed in most of the Eastern European and Baltic States. In Croatia, the Czech Republic, Latvia, Lithuania, Romania and Slovakia, GDP growth accelerated above expectations at the start of the year. Economic activity remained high, and, in line with expectations, in Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria and Estonia. In contrast, growth decelerated in Hungary and especially in Slovenia.

Two economies, Poland and FYROM, had encountered serious economic difficulties. After nine years of expansion, the Polish economy came to a near standstill in 2001. FYROM was the only transition economy with falling GDP in 2001, due to widespread disruption caused by the internal military conflict (see p. 368). A relatively strong post-war recovery continued in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, although that economy still faced formidable difficulties in implementing much-needed but painful economic reforms.

Thanks to the successful implementation of reforms which bolstered consumer and investor confidence, domestic demand in the transition economies had generally grown steadily in recent years, and helped to cushion them from the effects of the deteriorating external environment. In many countries in 2001, there was a shift from external towards predominantly domestic sources of growth. Moreover, the flow of inward foreign direct investment to the transition economies was unabated, and because of recent productivity gains, most Eastern European transition economies had been able to improve their cost competitiveness, helping exporters to perform better in Western European markets in 2001 than some of their competitors. While the total volume of Western European imports in 2001 increased by a little over 1 per cent, the volume of total exports from the Central European and Baltic countries increased by some 11 per cent. The gains in competitiveness and export performance led to an increase in Eastern Europe's share of the EU's extra-EU imports from 9.9 per cent in 2000 to 11.1 per cent in 2001.

Trade, industry and enterprise development

The Committee for Trade, Industry and Enterprise Development, at its fifth session (Geneva, 13-15 June) [ECE/TRADE/280], approved activities in support of greater policy coherence and cross-sectoral activities, including a request to subsidiary bodies to explore cross-sectoral activities in trade, transport facilitation and sustainable timber trade. It adopted the recommendations of its Round Table on Services in Transition Economies and those of its Forum on e-Services for Trade, Investment and Enterprise. The Committee also approved its new terms of reference, policy objectives and strategic goals. It requested that a task force be established to plan for a forum on trade facilitation to take place in Geneva in May 2002, and approved the establishment of ad hoc teams on metrology, business advisory, counselling and information services, gender and entrepreneurship, and poverty alleviation through enterprise and entrepreneurship. The Committee approved the 2001-2002 programme of work, the development of the Trade, Industry and Enterprise Development Directory and the holding of a preparatory meeting to finalize an optional protocol revising the 1961 European Convention on International Commercial Arbitration [YUN 1961, p. 272].

Transport

The Inland Transport Committee, at its sixty-third session (Geneva, 13-15 February) [ECE/TRANS/136], discussed follow-up to the 1997 Regional Conference on Transport and the Environment [YUN 1997, p. 1005] and to the London Charter on Transport, Environment and Health, adopted by the 1999 London Ministerial Conference on Environment and Health. It reviewed the transport situation in ECE member countries, emerging development trends, assistance to countries with economies in transition, and the status of application of international UN/ECE transport agreements and conventions. The Committee also considered transport trends and policies, transport economics, road transport, road traffic safety, safety in tunnels, harmonization of vehicle regulations, rail transport, inland water transport, customs questions affecting transport, the transport of dangerous goods and perishable foodstuffs, and transport statistics. It approved the report of the Working Party on Transport Trends and Economics and endorsed its decision to coordinate with the ESCAP secretariat action on land transport links between Europe and the Central Asian/Caucasian region. The Committee also approved the reports of the Working Party on Road Transport and encouraged proposals for amending the European Agreement on Main International Traffic Arteries.

The Committee noted that the Agreement Concerning the Establishment of Global Technical Regulations for Wheeled Vehicles, Equipment and Parts which can be fitted and/or be used on Wheeled Vehicles entered into force on 25 August, and that amendments to the European Agreement on Main International Railway Lines had entered into force on 15 November 2000.

Energy

The Committee on Sustainable Energy, at its eleventh session (Geneva, 21-22 November) [ECE/ENERGY/47], adopted the report of the Task Force on the United Nations International Framework Classification for Reserves and Resources (UNFC) and welcomed its widespread implementation. It recommended further ECE assistance for UNFC implementation within the new project on harmonizing definitions for reserve/resource classification of energy commodities—petroleum, natural gas, coal and uranium. The Committee established an Ad Hoc Group of Experts on Harmonization of Energy Reserves/Resources to apply the UNFC Codification System within existing commodities definitions. It took note of progress in the joint ECE/European Commission project on energy efficiency standards and labels, and welcomed the establishment of the Task Force on Environment and Energy (2002-2005), together with the Committee on Environmental Policy, to produce guidelines on reforming energy prices to support sustainable energy development. The Committee also welcomed progress made in the project on indicators of sustainable energy development, and recommended that the secretariat explore modalities to continue cooperation on that project with partner international organizations.

Agriculture

The Working Party on Standardization of Perishable Produce and Quality Development (fifty-seventh session, Geneva, 12-14 November) [TRADE/WP7/2001/9] adopted revised standards for beans, sweet peppers, lettuce and onions, recommendations for avocados for a one-year trial period and for table grapes for a two-year trial period, and revised standards for walnut kernels.

The Timber Committee, at its fifty-ninth session (Geneva, 2-5 October) [ECE/TIM/97], approved proposals emerging from the review of its joint programme with the European Forestry Commission. It discussed strengthening intersectoral cooperation in trade, timber, environment and energy and agreed on synergies for implementation. The Committee endorsed the general direction of ECE/Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations activities in support of the international dialogue on forests, and reviewed the markets for forest products in 2001 and prospects for 2002.

Environment

The Committee on Environmental Policy, at its eighth session (Geneva, 25-27 September) [ECE/CEP/80], considered the outcome [ECE/AC.22/2001/2] of the Regional Ministerial Meeting for the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development (see p. 749) and requested that a comprehensive analysis highlighting the challenges and emerging orientations of environmental policies in the region be prepared for its future work. It adopted new terms of reference for the Expert Group on Environmental Performance. The Committee further supported ECE multilateral environmental agreements and requested that the question of interlinkages be included in the agenda of its meetings. It welcomed the entry into force of the ECE Convention on Access to Information, Public Participation in Decision-making and Access to Justice in Environmental Matters and the decision of the governing bodies of the ECE Conventions on the Protection and Use of Transboundary Watercourses and International Lakes and on the Transboundary Effects of Industrial Accidents to launch an intergovernmental negotiation process to draw up a legally binding instrument on civil liability for transboundary damage caused by hazardous activities. The Committee discussed its substantive input to the fifth "Environment for Europe" Ministerial Conference and cross-sectoral activities, in particular developments related to transport, environment and health.

The Executive Body for the Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution held its nineteenth session in Geneva from 11 to 14 December [ECE/EB.AIR/75].

Human settlements

The Committee on Human Settlements (sixty-second session, Geneva, 17-19 September) [ECE/HBP/122] discussed the implementation of the ECE Strategy for a Sustainable Quality of Life in Human Settlements in the 21st Century and the Ministerial Declaration adopted by ECE Ministers of Housing and Spatial Planning [YUN 2000, p. 946], and their implications for its future programme of work. The Committee agreed to take into account the decisions of the General Assembly's special session to review implementation of the Habitat Agenda [YUN 1996, p. 994] (Istanbul+5) (see p. 973) when formulating and implementing its programme of work. It discussed the facilitation of social cohesion and security through urban development and decided to draw up guidelines on social housing.

The Committee confirmed the high priority of the country profile project for the housing sector and the activities related to land registration and land markets. It approved the draft guidelines on housing condominiums, and agreed to consider the preparation of practical, policy-oriented statistical data on housing and urban development.

Statistics

The Conference of European Statisticians (forty-ninth session, Geneva, 11-13 June) [ECE/CES/60] considered the implications of the meetings of its parent bodies—the May session of ECE and the March session of the UN Statistical Commission (see p. 1173). The Conference agreed to review the Integrated Presentation of international statistical work in the ECE region, especially the growing use of the Internet for the collection and dissemination of statistics; new manuals and standards in economic statistics and their interrelationship with the 1993 System of National Accounts; and methods for measuring the new economy and adapting to it.

The Committee discussed small-area statistics and statistics for small countries. It agreed that substantial research, development and innovations were necessary to meet the increasing demand for detailed small-area statistics and that special support should be given to countries in transition and small national economies to help them develop such statistics.

Operational activities

The Executive Secretary submitted an August note [E/ECE/1390 & Add.1,2], which reviewed operational activities in 2000 in energy, enterprise development, entrepreneurship and small and medium-sized enterprise (SME) development, environment, investment promotion, trade facilitation, transport and statistics. It also described technical assistance to a number of subregional organizations.

Lack of financial resources continued to be a major obstacle to expanding operational activities and responding to the needs and requests of member States, especially from CIS. Other problems that hindered the efficiency of operational activities included frequent changes of Governments and instability of countries' managerial systems; the lack of national experts; poor communication systems; complications of internal procedures; and the complexity of UN rules and procedures. In an attempt to meet the growing demand for operational activities from economies in transition, some ECE divisions had stretched their capacity thinly, in particular the Energy and Transport Divisions. In the light of those obstacles, the Executive Secretary suggested that the Commission consider shifting resources to those two Divisions, and provide more systematic financial support and technical assistance for operational activities in poverty eradication and entrepreneurship and SME development.

Intersectoral activities and cross-sectoral concerns

The Commission considered a note by the Executive Secretary on intersectoral cooperation in ECE [E/ECE/1385], which described the rationale for the intersectoral approach and presented the areas of intersectoral work in ECE: transport and environment; energy and environment; trade, environment and timber; and statistics. Mechanisms for fostering intersectoral cooperation and potential areas for future activities were proposed.

Latin America and the Caribbean

---

The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) did not meet in 2001. The Commission's twenty-ninth session was to be held in Brasilia, Brazil, from 6 to 10 May 2002.

Economic trends

According to the 2001 summary of the economic survey of Latin America and the Caribbean [E/2002/19], regional output grew at a very slow pace and GDP growth amounted to a scant 0.4 per cent. The severe slowdown in the world economy cut short the regional recovery that had begun in 2000, and that was compounded by a number of regional factors, including the financial crisis in Argentina and its repercussions for other economies in the region, the energy crisis in Brazil, natural disasters that forced authorities to undertake unbudgeted public expenditures, and a new outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease in the southern part of the continent which curtailed meat exports. Brazil's promising recovery was cut short by its energy crisis, the Chilean economy also lost momentum and Uruguay moved into its third consecutive year of recession. The economies of Bolivia, Colombia, Mexico and Peru stagnated, while the Dominican Republic, Paraguay and Venezuela experienced only moderate growth and Cuba's growth rate fell to 3 per cent. The exception was Ecuador, whose economy expanded rapidly in the first half of the year.

The region's inflation rate continued to abate, falling to 6.8 per cent, which was mainly attributable to stable exchange rates in most countries, the end of the escalation in oil prices, prudent monetary policies and the recessionary conditions in the region. The inflation rate decreased in 18 of the 22 countries for which information was available. Brazil and Guatemala registered inflation of three or four percentage points above 2000 figures, while Ecuador made the greatest improvement, with a drop of almost 70 percentage points. Only three economies had double-digit inflation.

The recessionary climate in the global economy led to declines in the value of the region's exports and the value of its imports. Those decreases reflected a steep drop in United States orders for Latin American and Caribbean products, which was compounded by a downward trend in raw materials prices. Export earnings also decreased, with the regional total for both goods and services slipping to little more than $390 billion, 3.7 per cent less than a year earlier. Regional consumption stagnated, gross fixed investment was reduced by 1 per cent, exports increased by just over 2 per cent and imports held steady.

Autonomous capital inflows to Latin America and the Caribbean plunged sharply, from $61.5 billion in 2000 to $34 billion in 2001, with Argentina witnessing a sharp turnaround that resulted in outflows of over $20 billion, followed by a contraction in flows to Brazil. Foreign direct investment diminished for the second year in a row, from $64.8 billion to $58.3 billion, but was still high compared to historical averages.

The current account deficit climbed to nearly $52 billion (around 3 per cent of regional GDP) from the 2000 level of $46 billion (2.4 per cent of GDP). The increases in the deficit remained within the bounds of each country's external financing capacity, however. Almost all countries saw a downturn in government income, especially in tax revenues, with the exceptions of Colombia, the Dominican Republic and Ecuador where tax reforms were instituted. Expenditure, on the other hand, increased, particularly for debt servicing.

The steep reduction in growth hurt the labour market, and the employment rate fell by over half a percentage point. Sluggish production activity in 2001 also hurt wages, which stagnated or fell in real terms. The regional unemployment rate held steady at 8.4 per cent of the economically active population.

External debt

The region's gross external debt declined moderately, from $740 billion in 2000 to $726 billion in 2001. Small variations were observed in most of the countries' external liabilities. Among the most heavily indebted nations, Bolivia, Brazil and Peru continued to report debt/export ratios of around 350 per cent; Argentina's ratio fell to 450 per cent from its 1999-2000 average of 500 per cent, while Nicaragua's held at around 700 per cent.

As Argentina was unable to obtain financing on voluntary debt markets, the Government swapped $30 billion in securities in June at very high interest rates to lighten its public debt service burden in 2002-2003. As the country's difficulties in securing financing persisted, it attempted to implement a new, comprehensive plan to restructure the public debt at an annual rate of no more than 7 per cent. By the end of November, it had completed a swap involving $50 billion in domestic obligations.

Development policy and regional economic cooperation

In 2001, ECLAC continued to implement its programme of work, which combined activities deriving from its role as a forum for regional dialogue, facilitating the emergence of common regional positions that could contribute to the world debate on development issues, with nor-native activities, comprehensive analysis of development and public policy-making processes and other operational activities, such as technical assistance, specialist information provision and training [LC/G.2160(SES.29/6)].

ECLAC expanded and strengthened collaboration and coordination with UN bodies and specialized agencies, as well as other regional inter-governmental organizations. It convened the second inter-agency coordination meeting for the Caribbean subregion (Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, 8-9 March) and the first inter-agency technical coordination meeting on regional statistical information (Santiago, Chile, 8 May). ECLAC developed an information system on UN world conferences in order to disseminate the contributions and activities in those areas by different organizations in the region.

In addition, ECLAC, the Banco del Desarrollo de Chile, the Latin American Association of Development Financing Institutions and the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB) organized the first colloquium on development banks (Santiago, 27 August) where experts from the region, the United States and Europe discussed the role played by development banking in financing investment projects.

The Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES) carried out activities related to the strategic management and reform of the State, regulation of public services, development and land-use management, national systems of public investment and basic planning functions. ILPES held the fifth Interparliamentary Conference on Mining and Energy in Latin America (CIME 2001) (Santiago, 18-20 July) and the fourth European-Latin American Dialogue for Sustainable Development of the Energy Sector (Santiago, 20 July), organized jointly with Chile's Energy and Mining Commission of the Chamber of Deputies and ECLAC's Natural Resources and Infrastructure Division. An international seminar was also organized on national systems of public investment in Latin America and the Caribbean (Santiago, 5-6 November). At the end of the year, ILPES signed an agreement with IDB to help Venezuela to review its national system of public investment and prepare a plan for strengthening it.

During the 2000-2001 biennium, the Institute organized training activities on issues associated with its areas of work for State and private sector officials and the teaching staff of universities and academic centres in the region. Fourteen international courses, six subregional courses and six national courses were held for 904 participants.

JIU report. In September [A/56/370], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) report entitled "United Nations system support for science and technology in Latin America and the Caribbean", which assessed the relevance and effectiveness of technical cooperation provided by UN organizations to endogenous capacity-building in science and technology in the region. JIU recommended that the United Nations Commission on Science and Technology for Development (see p. 757) discuss the feasibility of developing a UN system joint programme for science and technology for recommendation to the Economic and Social Council.

International trade and integration

The ECLAC Division of International Trade and Integration continued to monitor intra-regional trade and investment flows, examine regulatory and institutional aspects of regional integration and assess the process of negotiation and the implications of the various regional and subregional integration schemes. Various expert meetings were organized. One (São Paulo, Brazil, 5-6 November) reviewed an agenda for research and policies on globalization, technological change and gender, while another (Santiago, 3-4 December) focused on international competitiveness and the influence of Governments, enterprises and multilateral institutions on the capacity of enterprises and nations to participate in the global economy. Another meeting (Santiago, 14 March), organized jointly with the Latin American Integration Association and the Latin American Economic System, considered the cooperation mechanism between the three agencies and its effectiveness in the context of the ongoing negotiations between the various regional and subregional integration schemes.

Social development and equity

ECLAC's Social Development Division, in the 2000-2001 biennium, concentrated on social needs related to the process of globalization and economic development to ensure that both had positive effects on the conditions of employment and on the well-being of the population. In that context, it supported countries in reforming social policies and provided technical assistance to Argentina, the Dominican Republic, Mexico and Paraguay. In a joint effort with the Statistics and Economic Projections Division, it prepared the 2000-2001 edition of the Social Panorama of Latin America. The Division participated in a regional conference on social capital and poverty reduction in Latin America and the Caribbean: towards a new paradigm (Santiago, 24-26 September) and in the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (Durban, South Africa, 31 August-8 September) (see p. 615).

Human rights were included in the subprogramme on social development and equity. The Human Rights Unit, created in the Social Development Division in conjunction with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, began its activities in November.

Environment and human settlements

ECLAC, in collaboration with the United Nations Environment Programme, the Sustainable Development Division of the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs and UNDP, supported Latin American and Caribbean countries in regional preparations for the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development (see p. 749). Four subregional meetings were held to formulate proposals that would reflect the peculiarities of each subregion: Southern Cone (Santiago, 14-15 June), Caribbean (Havana, Cuba, 28-29 June), Andean area (Quito, Ecuador, 2-3 July) and Meso-America (San Salvador, El Salvador, 16-17 July). The Regional Preparatory Conference of Latin America and the Caribbean (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 23-24 October) adopted the Rio de Janeiro Platform of Action on the road to Johannesburg 2002, which reaffirmed previously adopted principles and agreements, identified obstacles encountered and lessons learned during the past decade and made other commitments for confronting challenges and exploring new forms of cooperation.

ECLAC's Environment and Human Settlements Division organized or collaborated in organizing expert meetings on ecotourism, trade, intellectual property and biological and genetic resources in Latin America. In October, it took part in the Regional Meeting of Ministers and High-level Authorities of the Housing and Urban Development Sector in Latin America and the Caribbean, and in November organized a seminar on transgenic agricultural products, jointly with the Division of Production, Productivity and Management. It also helped to organize the fourth European-Latin American Dialogue for Sustainable Development of the Energy Sector (Santiago, 20 July), the fifth Interparliamentary Conference on Mining and Energy in Latin America (Santiago, 18-20 July) and workshops in preparation for the Conference of Ministers of Mining of the Americas (Santiago, 19-22 June).

Population and development

The ECLAC secretariat pursued activities relating to the implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) [YUN 1994, p. 955], oriented towards supporting national systems and preparing a regional system of indicators for the follow-up of goals set at the Conference. In that regard, ECLAC, in conjunction with the United Nations Population Fund, organized a subregional workshop for Central America and Panama on those indicators (Managua, Nicaragua, 26-27 February).

The open-ended meeting of the Presiding Officers of the ECLAC sessional Ad Hoc Committee on Population and Development (Santiago, 4-5 December) reviewed progress in fulfilling the goals of the ICPD Programme of Action in countries of the region through the use of an appropriate system of indicators and agreed to adopt a basic system of indicators proposed by the secretariat, which would be revised and presented at the Committee's next meeting. It also agreed that the system should be implemented in 2004 in order to assess the fulfilment of the Programme of Action one decade after ICPD.

Three meetings of experts were held in Santiago to consider: the 2000-2001 census results and their use in formulating social policies (8 May); the sociodemographic analysis of social vulnerability in the region (20-21 June); and advances made in applying the recommendations of the Regional Plan of Action on Population and Development [YUN 1994, p. 740] (4-5 December).

Integration of women in development

The Presiding Officers of the Regional Conference on Women in Latin America and the Caribbean, at their thirty-second meeting (San José, Costa Rica, 19-20 April), agreed to request the assistance of national statistical institutes in each country in proposing the establishment, under the Statistical Conference of the Americas (below), of a special working group on gender statistics in all spheres. At their thirty-third meeting (Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, 9-11 October), the Presiding Officers, in view of the need to harmonize the regional processes in follow-up to the Regional Programme of Action for the Women of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1995-2001 [YUN 1994, p. 739], and the 10-year review of the Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170], recommended that the ninth meeting of the Regional Conference on Women in Latin America and the Caribbean be postponed to 2004 to fit in with the global process.

Economic statistics and technical cooperation

During the 2000-2001 biennium, the Statistics and Economics Projections Division conducted activities on statistical databanks, the dissemination of statistics and regional indicators, national accounts and economic development, technical cooperation, evaluation and prospective analysis of ECLAC countries' development processes, and statistics and quantitative analysis of social trends. The Division expanded and strengthened its databank system, particularly with regard to current economic trends, household surveys, foreign trade and national accounting. ECLAC activities in social statistics were designed to strengthen countries' capacities to create integrated systems of household surveys under a programme for improving surveys and measuring living conditions, jointly sponsored with IDB and the World Bank.

In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2000/7 [YUN 2000, p. 951], the secretariat organized the first meeting of the ECLAC Statistical Conference of the Americas (Santiago, 9-11 May). The Conference adopted the programme of international statistical work for Latin America and the Caribbean for the biennium June 2001 to June 2003, which was a comprehensive compendium of the international and regional cooperation activities to be carried out by all ECLAC Governments and relevant institutions. The programme, based on flexible institutional forms to take advantage of government capacity, included four subprogrammes: adaptation and production of basic statistics within the framework of a regional strategy for the implementation of the 1993 System of National Accounts; environmental statistics and statistics on science, technology and innovation; statistics and indicators on social variables and well-being; and dissemination of statistical information. The Conference also considered the adoption of measures for constructing gender indicators so that gender equity policies could be designed.

The first United Nations Inter-Agency Technical Coordination Meeting on Regional Statistical Information was held on 8 May.

Subregional activities

Caribbean

The ECLAC subregional headquarters for the Caribbean—the secretariat of the Caribbean Development and Cooperation Committee (CDCC) in Port of Spain—stepped up its efforts to provide technical support in operational and sectoral areas with a view to achieving sustained growth in the economies of member States and associate members of the Caribbean subregion.

The tenth meeting of CDCC's Monitoring Committee (Port of Spain, 6-7 March) reviewed CDCC secretariat activities between May 1999 and February 2001 and considered a secretariat document reviewing CDCC objectives, structure and mechanisms. In addition, a document on Caribbean perspectives on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States [YUN 1994, p. 783] was presented to the Subregional Preparatory Meeting of the Caribbean for the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Havana, June).

Mexico and Central America

The ECLAC subregional headquarters in Mexico City placed emphasis on the review of structural reform policies, trends in foreign direct investment, social marginalization, the wider participation of women, economic integration and sectoral competitiveness. Advisory services provided included support for the preparatory work for the meeting of the Regional Consultative Group for Central America (Madrid, Spain, 8-9 March). Cooperation was extended to the Consultative Group for Smaller Economies in the negotiations for the Free Trade Area of the Americas. Some countries of the subregion received advisory services relating to fiscal policy, competitiveness policies, priorities in the electric power industry and harmonization of the hydrocarbons markets. Among its other activities were projects financed by multilateral cooperation, such as those financed by UNDP to assess flood damage in Venezuela, to support the preparation of El Salvador's human development report, to provide agricultural training, to collaborate in the programme on violence in society and to support the Mexican Institute for International Cooperation in project management and multilateral cooperation. Other projects were financed by the United Nations Fund for International Partnerships, IDB and Germany.

The subregional headquarters also undertook activities on economic reform; public administration; foreign investment; agricultural modernization; industrial competitiveness; labour markets, gender and equity; international trade, economic integration and regional cooperation; and energy integration.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 54/8 [YUN 1999, p. 947], the Secretary-General reported in July on cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System [A/56/171]. The report summarized information from four UN organizations that had responded to the Secretary-General's request for a description of joint activities and coordination.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 86], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/98 [draft: A/56/L.43 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 21 (a)].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 54/8 of 25 October 1999 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind the Agreement between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System, in which the parties agree to strengthen and expand their cooperation in matters that are of common concern in the field of their respective competence pursuant to their constitutional instruments,

Considering that the Latin American Economic System is developing joint activities with the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Intellectual Property Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean,

Welcoming the continued monitoring of changes in the treatment of topics relating to the United Nations system, in close contact with the delegations of the Member States participating in such deliberations,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Urges the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean to continue deepening its coordination and mutual support activities with the Latin American Economic System;

3. Urges the United Nations Development Programme, within its new overall framework and high-priority development objectives in support of sustainable development, to continue its financial and technical cooperation with the programmes that the Permanent Secretariat of the Latin American Economic System is carrying out in areas of mutual interest and concern, aimed at complementing the technical assistance activities conducted by the Latin American Economic System;

4. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations, funds and programmes of the United Nations system to continue and intensify their support for, and cooperation in the activities of, the Latin American Economic System;

5. Reiterates its request to both the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Permanent Secretary of the Latin American Economic System to assess, at the appropriate time, the implementation of the Agreement between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Western Asia

The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) held its twenty-first session in Beirut, Lebanon, on 10 and 11 May [E/2001/41]. The Commission adopted a resolution for submission to the Economic and Social Council recommending the establishment of an ESCWA Consultative Committee on Scientific and Technological Development and Technological Innovation. It also adopted resolutions relating to election of officers, adoption of reports and the timing of sessions of its six subsidiary bodies, as well as resolutions on the sessions of the Committee on Transport and the Preparatory Committee, the programme of work and priorities for 2000-2001, the programme budget for 2002-2003, cooperation on shared water resources, energy, transport, a biennial pledging conference and rehabilitating the economic sectors in Palestine.

Economic and social trends

Economic trends

Economic growth was relatively meagre in the ESCWA region in 2001, according to the summary of the survey of economic and social developments in the region [E/2002/20]. Its estimated combined real GDP, excluding Iraq, grew by 2.1 per cent, substantially lower than the 4.5 per cent registered in 2000. Moreover, given the region's annual population growth rate of 2.4 per cent, the real GDP per capita was a negative 0.3 per cent in 2001, compared with 2.1 per cent the preceding year.

The deterioration was attributed mainly to the sharp slowdown in world economic growth, which adversely affected the demand for oil. Furthermore, the attacks of 11 September in the United States (see p. 60) intensified the world economic slowdown and therefore negatively affected the non-oil sectors in the region, particularly tourism and transport. The violence in the West Bank and Gaza Strip also had an adverse impact on the region's foreign direct investment.

The region's oil sector performed poorly in 2001, as both production levels and prices fell. Total oil revenue declined from $165.6 billion in 2000 to an estimated $128.6 billion in 2001. For most of the ESCWA members with more diversified economies, labour-market conditions remained generally unfavourable and, in most cases, deteriorated.

Inflation rates remained low in the region, at an estimated 3 per cent, because both Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) States and ESCWA member countries with more diversified economies were able to keep inflation under control. Fiscal positions deteriorated in most of the region. The sharp decline in oil revenue, which was far greater than previously projected, had an extremely negative effect on budgetary positions in the region. The budgets of member countries with more diversified economies continued to be deflationary, with budget expenditures increasing at a rate lower than the rate of inflation, thus reducing expenditures in real terms.

Most stock markets in ESCWA member countries were affected by the events of 11 September, with some of them losing most of the gains recorded since the beginning of the year. The performance of the region's external sector deteriorated considerably, as a result of developments in the international oil market. Oil prices fell by 16.2 per cent and demand for the region's oil exports fell significantly, thereby drastically reducing the combined balance-of-trade surpluses of the GCC States and widening the balance-of-trade deficits of most of the countries with more diversified economies. Furthermore, the attacks carried out on 11 September dealt an additional blow to the external sector accounts of the region, particularly those of the more diversified economies, tourism revenue was sharply lowered and current accounts negatively affected. While such accounts in GCC States deteriorated, mainly because of significantly lower balance-of-trade surpluses, the current account positions of the other group of countries in the region deteriorated because of increased balance-of-trade deficits, decreased revenue from tourism and lower remittances from expatriates.

Oil

In 2001, the region's oil sector performed poorly, mainly because of reduced international demand for oil, caused by lower world economic growth, which depressed oil prices, production and revenue in the ESCWA region. World oil prices declined by an estimated 16.2 per cent, from an average of $27.6 a barrel in 2000 to $23.1 in 2001, while the region's oil production fell by 3.3 per cent, causing revenue to fall by 22.4 per cent, to $128.6 billion. Combined oil revenue in the GCC States was estimated at $106.3 billion. Saudi Arabia's oil revenue, at $59.4 billion, declined by over 20 per cent but remained the largest in the region by far.

Trade

Overall trade performance in 2001 remained tied to fluctuating oil export revenues. Export growth rates declined for all ESCWA member States relative to the previous year's gains. GCC countries on average experienced a 2.5 per cent decline in export growth. However, Qatar achieved an export growth of 18 per cent, the highest in the region. For the more diversified economies, the trade record was mixed. For oil-exporting States, such as Egypt, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen, strong oil revenues and efforts to diversify exports helped to steady trade performance, with Egypt leading the group with a 13 per cent export growth between 2000 and 2001, while that of the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen declined by 0.1 per cent and 8 per cent, respectively. Non-oil-based economies had a more difficult time, with Lebanon registering an 18 per cent decline and Jordan 0.2 per cent.

Intraregional export growth fell by 12.8 per cent, when comparing the first and second quarters of 2000 and 2001. Moreover, the share of intraregional exports as part of the region's total exports fell by more than 1 per cent during the same period. The GCC countries continued to contribute over 80 per cent of intraregional exports. Non-GCC countries were among the hardest hit by the decline in intraregional exports, with Yemen, Jordan and Lebanon experiencing declines of 44, 27 and 15 per cent, respectively.

On the import side, GCC countries increased imports by 13 per cent, while imports by the more diversified economies fell on average by 5 per cent. Qatar recorded the highest annual increase in imports (23 per cent). Imports into the West Bank and Gaza fell dramatically, while Lebanese imports increased by almost 2 per cent.

Social trends

The population of the ESCWA region grew fairly rapidly, increasing from 94 million in 1980 to 166 million in 2000. A large youth population characterized the region, with an estimated 19 per cent of the total population between 15 and 24 years old. Unemployment among the youth in many member countries, especially in the more diversified economies, was a critical issue, as most of them were first-time job seekers, reflecting a swelling of the youth labour supply, as the Arab baby-boomer generation entered the labour market.

Health conditions in the region had continued to improve over the past several years, owing primarily to successful public-health campaigns. In addition, nutrition improved in all member countries except Iraq and Yemen, where improvement remained limited. At the regional level, life expectancy at birth, as the primary health indicator, reached an average of 70 years (71 for women and 68 for men) for 2000-2005.

However, while the level of education and enrolment rates in most of the member countries had improved significantly since the 1970s, the rates of illiteracy were still alarmingly high, particularly in the less developed countries of the region and conflict-stricken ones. That was evident from a relatively high adult illiteracy rate, especially for women, in several countries of the region. Moreover, poverty was still a serious problem in several countries. Meanwhile, public spending on social services, as a percentage of GDP, had not increased in the past 10 years, and had even declined in some countries. Political instability in the Middle East continued to dictate that large amounts of resources had to be allocated to defence expenditures, leaving an inadequate amount for social services, education and poverty alleviation. In spite of the considerable progress made in the status of women in the region over the decades, the gender gap in socioeconomic status persisted in many countries in terms of educational opportunities, employment, land ownership and inheritance.

Activities in 2001

During 2001, ESCWA activities under the 2000-2001 work programme [YUN 1999, p. 954] focused on regional follow-up to global conferences, environment, poverty, civil society institutions, gender, trade and related concerns on globalization, electronic commerce and free trade in the region, and human rights.

Economic development and cooperation

The second session of the Technical Committee on Liberalization of Foreign Trade and Economic Globalization in the Countries of the ESCWA Region (Manama, Bahrain, 7-8 April) [E/ESCWA/C.1/21/6/Add.6] discussed issues related to the liberalization of foreign trade and economic globalization and the forthcoming World Trade Organization (WTO) negotiations and their impact on ESCWA countries.

The Committee, among other recommendations to the Commission, proposed that: information be exchanged on the issues to be discussed at the fourth WTO Ministerial Conference (Doha, Qatar, November) (see p. 1432); workshops and seminars be organized on new issues to be raised at future international negotiations; and technical assistance be provided to member States in implementing WTO agreements, with special attention paid to the mechanism for settling disputes. ESCWA should continue to provide countries with technical expertise for WTO accession negotiations and the review of trade policies. It should approach international and regional funding bodies for resources to support national and regional capacity-building programmes in world and regional trade.

Transportation

The Committee on Transport, at its second session (Beirut, 6-7 February) [E/ESCWA/C.1/21/6/Add.3], considered the draft agreement on international roads in the Arab Mashreq and proposals for facilitating transport in the ESCWA region. The Committee recommended that the draft agreement be submitted for approval at ESCWA's 2001 session, and it adopted a number of other recommendations for submission to the Commission. The Committee considered the report of the second meeting of the heads of UN regional committees responsible for transport (Beirut, 23-24 January) and noted, in particular, the joint project for capacity-building through cooperation between regions to develop land and land-sea transportation. The Committee, while noting Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/41 [YUN 1999, p. 957] on the biennialization of meetings of the Commission's subsidiary bodies, recommended that its meetings be held yearly to allow it to discuss new transport developments in and the priorities of regional States and follow up on implementation of the agreement on international roads in the Arab Mashreq and the recommendations for facilitation of transport in the region.

On 11 May [E/2001/41 (res. 235(XXI))], the Commission adopted the draft agreement on international roads in the Arab Mashreq and requested the secretariat to give priority to the development of the integrated transport system in the Arab Mashreq and facilitation of traffic so as to benefit from the increased volume of regional and international commercial and tourist exchanges.

On the same date [res. 229(XXI)], the Commission decided that, with effect from 2002, the Committee on Transport would hold its sessions annually rather than biennially.

Statistics

The Statistical Committee, at its fourth session (Beirut, 3-5 April) [E/ESCWA/C.1/21/6/Add.5], adopted the work programme of ESCWA's Statistics Division for 2002-2003. Other objectives of the session included development and support of cooperation between ESCWA countries and the Statistics Division in statistical activities and programmes, and examination of the status of the 1993 System of National Accounts in those countries. It also examined the status of a project on developing national gender statistics programmes in the Arab countries and suggested that a regional working group on the development of gender statistics in the region should be formed. The Committee highlighted activities of special importance, including technical cooperation in statistics, social indicators in the framework of the implementation and follow-up by Arab countries of UN global conferences, surveys and statistics on employment and unemployment, civil registration and vital statistics. The Committee urged ESCWA to hold more seminars, workshops and meetings of experts in the field of national accounts, and to carry out industrial and construction surveys.

Among other action, the Committee recommended that a regional commission for civil registration and vital statistics be formed for the purpose of exchanging experience and data, and that the Cairo Declaration on Civil Registration and Vital Statistics, adopted by the regional workshop on vital statistics and civil registration Systems in ESCWA member States [YUN 1999, p. 952], be implemented. The Committee approved a project on strengthening statistical capacity in the ESCWA region, and proposed that ESCWA determine the steps required for building the ESCWA Statistical Information System.

Natural resources, energy and environment

The Committee on Water Resources, at its fourth session (Beirut, 14-17 November) [E/ESCWA/C.1/21/6/Add.2], reviewed the proposed programme of work of the ESCWA Energy, Natural Resources and Environment Division and agreed on its general orientation and objectives. It decided to form a working group for the rational management of water resources to deal with policies for reform of the water sector in member States. It also recommended that ESCWA focus more on technical studies on desalinated water and the protection of groundwater from depletion and pollution, and that the technical cooperation carried out by ESCWA and Germany continue to be implemented and ongoing activities completed, especially the database of shared groundwater resources.

The Commission, on 11 May [E/2001/41 (res. 233(XXI))], urged member countries to increase cooperation in water resources, in particular shared groundwater, water-related legislation and management of demand, by creating working parties within the Committee on Water Resources to harmonize methodology on managing such resources.

The Commission also considered the report of the Committee on Energy at its second session [YUN 1999, p. 952]. On 11 May [E/2001/41 (res. 234(XXI))], the Commission urged member countries to include in their energy-related programmes policies and measures to increase the efficiency of, and rationalize the energy use of, and promote renewable sources of, energy. Institutional frameworks should be devised to achieve that end. Member countries were asked to support activities related to the renewable energy promotion mechanism, with a view to strengthening regional cooperation in that field.

Quality of life

The third session of the Committee on Social Development (Beirut, 27-28 March) [E/ESCWA/C.1/21/6/Add.4] reviewed progress made by the Social Development Issues and Policies Division in 1999-2000 in implementing the subprogramme on improving the quality of life, and heard reports of member States on their plans and activities in social development areas, including human development, population, housing, women's issues and follow-up to global conferences.

The Commission had before it a paper on efforts to combat HIV/AIDS in the ESCWA region [E/ESCWA/21/7], in which it was recommended that the region face up to the need to care for and treat the thousands of HIV/AIDS patients in ESCWA countries and seek the best way of assuring that society accepted such persons and provided them with appropriate support. Resources should also be made available for preventing the spread of infection and reducing its effects. Countries of the region were requested to support the measures being taken by the Regional Office, including the assurance of a high level of political commitment and leadership, and strengthening national mechanisms for acquiring reliable data and institutional capacity.

Programme and organizational questions

On 11 May, the Commission decided that, with effect from 2002, member States would assume the chairmanship of the Commission's sessions and subsidiary bodies on a rotating basis, in Arabic alphabetical order [E/2001/41 (res. 226(XXI))], and sessions of ESCWA subsidiary bodies would be held not later than the end of the year prior to the Commission's session [res. 228(XXI)]; and with effect from the twenty-second session, meetings of the Preparatory Committee would be an integral part of the Commission's sessions [res. 230(XXI)]. The Commission also adopted the recommendations contained in the reports of its subsidiary bodies, and requested the Executive Secretary to report on progress made in their implementation within the context of the 2000-2001 work programme [res. 227(XXI)].

Establishment of scientific and technological development and innovation committee

On 11 May [E/2001/41 (res. 225(XXI))], the Commission decided to submit a resolution establishing a Consultative Committee on Scientific and Technological Development and Technological Innovation for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ESCWA [E/2001/18/Add.3 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 2001/30 without vote [agenda item 10].

Establishment of the Consultative Committee on Scientific and Technological Development and Technological Innovation of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the vital role played by the development of scientific and technological capabilities and technological innovation in achieving the goals of sustainable development,

Recognizing also the need to integrate and coordinate the endeavours of all the parties concerned with the development of scientific and technological capabilities, including bodies from the public, joint and private sectors and the institutions of civil society, to employ technological innovation in order to promote the productivity and competitiveness of the production and services sectors in member countries of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia,

Noting the possibilities which technological innovation capabilities offer with regard to facing the challenges and demands of globalization and the new systems and measures relating to the quality of products, the preservation of intellectual property rights and environmental protection,

1. Decides to establish the Consultative Committee on Scientific and Technological Development and Technological Innovation of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, the main responsibility of which will be to sponsor endeavours aimed at scientific and technological development and technological innovation. The Committee shall be composed of distinguished experts in the field, and shall have the following duties:

(a) To advise member countries on their efforts in acquiring modern technology, and to support such efforts with regional and international expertise, with particular reference to information and communications technologies, biotechnology and new materials technology;

(b) To propose ways of integrating and coordinating efforts aimed at transferring, adapting and mastering this technology, and promoting regional cooperation in these fields;

(c) To advise on priorities related to the programmes of work and medium-term plans adopted by the Commission in the fields of developing scientific and technological capabilities and technological innovation;

(d) To follow up on the resolutions and recommendations of international and regional conferences relating to the development of scientific and technological capabilities and technological innovation which are attended by member countries of the Commission, and to coordinate efforts related to the implementation of such resolutions and recommendations;

2. Also decides that the Committee shall hold its meetings at least once every two years, with effect from 2002;

3. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Commission to follow up implementation of the present resolution and to submit a report to the Commission at its twenty-second session on the progress achieved in this regard.

Programme of work, 1998-1999

The Commission had before it a report [E/ESCWA/C.1/21/3] on the implementation of the programme of work for the 1998-1999 biennium.

Despite the high vacancy rate among Professional staff and the scarcity of extrabudgetary resources, 99 per cent of the work programme activities were carried out. Only one output was postponed to the 2000-2001 biennium. Thirteen quantifiable outputs were added by legislation and four at the initiative of the secretariat, in addition to four operational activities. The high rate of performance was made possible through, among other measures, the use of consultants, short-term recruitment and extra time put in by Professional staff.

Programme of work, 2000-2001

The Commission considered reports on progress made in 2000 in implementing the programme of work for the 2000-2001 biennium [E/ESCWA/C.1/21/4 (Parts I-III)].

By the end of 2000, ESCWA had completed 35 per cent of its planned outputs and another 39 per cent were in progress. The vacancy rate in the Professional category had dropped to 25 per cent from 29 per cent in 1999. Work-months utilized through short-term recruitment accounted for only 16 per cent of available work-months due to vacancies.

On 11 May [E/2001/41 (res. 231(XXI))], the Commission approved the changes introduced to the 2000-2001 programme of work and asked the Executive Secretary to include any further modifications to the programme and priorities in the report to be submitted in the years between Commission sessions.

Programme of work and budget, 2002-2003

The Commission considered the draft programme of work and priorities for the 2002-2003 biennium [E/ESCWA/C.1/21/7]. The five subprogrammes were: management of water, energy and the environment for sustainable development; promoting social change for sustainable development; economic development and regional cooperation during the evolution of a globalized economy; coordination of sectoral policies and harmonization of norms and standards for sustainable development within global changes; and development, coordination and harmonization of statistics.

On 11 May [E/2001/41 (res. 232(XXI))], the Commission approved the programme budget for the 2002-2003 biennium. On the same date [res. 236(XXI)], the Commission, concerned about the decline in extrabudgetary resources, decided to hold a pledging conference during each of its sessions. It invited member States to increase contributions to finance the Commission's extrabudgetary activities and requested the Executive Secretary to seek contributions from non-ESCWA States, organizations and individuals and to provide member States with proposals regarding specific activities to be funded from extrabudgetary resources.

The Commission also noted the difficult economic situation in Palestine as a result of the confrontation with Israel (see p. 428) and the damage to the Palestinian infrastructure [res. 237(XXI)]. It requested the Executive Secretary to include in the budget activities to be planned by the secretariat and implemented in consultation with relevant Palestinian institutions, and to ensure that the extrabudgetary resources to finance such activities were available.

Chapter VI

Energy, natural resources and cartography

The conservation, development and use of natural resources and energy were considered by several United Nations bodies in 2001, including the Commission on Sustainable Development, which held a high-level segment during its ninth session that gave special attention to energy issues. The Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development did not meet in 2001.

During the year, action was taken to promote new and renewable sources of energy, including the effective implementation of and mobilization of resources for the World Solar Programme 1996-2005. In December, the General Assembly encouraged Governments and relevant stakeholders to make more use of the Programme to boost the development and utilization of solar energy and all forms of new and renewable energy.

Addressing the Assembly in October, the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency noted that nuclear power was the principal alternative to fossil fuels that could in the foreseeable future provide electricity on a large scale with practically no greenhouse gas emissions. In December, the Assembly affirmed its confidence in the Agency's role in the application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes.

Preparations for the International Year of Freshwater, 2003 continued through the inter-agency coordinating body for the Year, the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) Subcommittee on Water Resources, which met in September.

The recommendations of the Seventh United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas, which was held in New York in January, were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in July.

Energy and natural resources

The Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development did not meet in 2001. The subject of energy and sustainable development was discussed at the ninth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development (see below and p. 747).

The Economic and Social Council had before it the Committee's report on its second session [YUN 2000, p. 959], containing a draft decision by which the Council would have taken note of the report [E/2000/32] and approved the provisional agenda for the Committee's third (2002) session.

By resolution 2001/36 of 26 July (see below), the Council decided to transmit the Committee's report on its second session to the Commission on Sustainable Development and to defer to its next resumed session approval of the provisional agenda of the Committee's third session. On the same date, the Council decided, in the light of its adoption of resolution 2001/36 and in accordance with rule 57 of its rules of procedure, to reconsider the draft decision contained in the Committee's report on its second session (decision 2001/312).

By decision 2001/324 of 20 December, the Council again deferred, to its resumed organizational session for 2002, consideration of the draft decision recommended by the Committee at its second session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2001/36 [draft introduced orally] without vote [agenda item 13 (j)].

Report of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development on its second session

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development on its second session,

1. Decides to transmit the report of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development to the Commission on Sustainable Development;
2. Also decides to defer the approval of the provisional agenda of the third session of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development to its next resumed session, bearing in mind that the third session of the Committee is to take place from 8 to 20 December 2002.

Energy

Commission on Sustainable Development

The ninth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development (CSD) (New York, 16-27

April) [E/2001/29] (see also p. 747) had as one of its sectoral themes the question of energy. In addition, a special panel discussed financing energy and transportation for sustainable development and a multi-stakeholder dialogue was held on sustainable energy and transport. The General Assembly, in resolution S/19-2 [YUN 1997, p. 792], adopted at its nineteenth special session [ibid., p. 790], had emphasized that in line with the objectives of Agenda 21, adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672], the ninth session of CSD should contribute to a sustainable energy future for all. Several meetings were held in 2000 in preparation for the session [YUN 2000, p. 960].

The Commission had before it a February report of the Secretary-General on the sustainable production, distribution and use of energy: trends in national implementation [E/CN.17/2001/12 & Corr.1]. Based on national information submitted by 78 Member States and Switzerland, the report comprised an overall assessment of progress made towards sustainable production, distribution and use of energy by region; a review of national implementation and regional trends; a summary of findings from the national information received, which presented in table form some of the key regional issues related to energy production, distribution and use; and a discussion of future challenges for sustainable energy.

Also before the Commission was the report of the second session of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Energy and Sustainable Development (New York, 26 February–2 March) [E/CN.17/2001/15], which contained for the Commission's consideration a draft decision on the key issues pertaining to energy for sustainable development that the Expert Group had identified at its first session [YUN 2000, p. 960]. Those issues were: accessibility of energy, energy efficiency, renewable energy, advanced fossil fuel technologies, nuclear energy technologies, rural energy, and energy and transport. The draft decision, in the form of a negotiated text, contained unresolved issues for consideration and appropriate action by CSD. With the transmission of the report, the Expert Group was deemed to have fulfilled the mandate entrusted to it by General Assembly resolution S/19-2 to prepare the work of the Commission's ninth session on energy issues.

The Expert Group had before it a report of the Secretary-General on options and strategies for action on the key issues relating to energy and sustainable development [E/CN.17/ESD/2001/2].

By a 3 April note verbale [E/CN.17/2001/18], Kenya transmitted to the Commission the statement and programme of action adopted at the African High-level Regional Meeting on Energy and Sustainable Development (Nairobi, 10–13 January).

In a 27 April decision [E/2001/29 (dec. 9/1)], CSD stated that energy was central to achieving the goals of sustainable development, noting that nearly one third of the global population of 6 billion, mostly living in developing countries, continued to lack access to energy and transportation services. Wide disparities in energy consumption existed within and between developed and developing countries and current patterns of energy production, distribution and utilization were unsustainable. Ensuring adequate and affordable access to energy for present and future generations, in an environmentally sound, socially acceptable and economically viable way, would require substantial investments, including from the private sector, and attention would have to be given to promoting an enabling environment. CSD invited Governments, regional and international organizations and other relevant stakeholders to consider a number of issues and options on the key issues identified by the Ad Hoc Open-ended Intergovernmental Group of Experts (see above). It also identified a number of overarching issues, including research and development; capacity-building; technology transfer; information-sharing and dissemination; mobilization of financial resources; making markets work effectively for sustainable development; and the multi-stakeholder approach and public participation. CSD recognized the critical role that international cooperation, including regional cooperation, could play in assisting countries, particularly developing countries, in their efforts to achieve the goals of sustainable development.

High-level segment. The Special Panel on Financing Energy and Transportation for Sustainable Development was held during the high-level segment of CSD's ninth session. In addition to discussing financing opportunities, the Panel addressed decentralized rural energy, expansion of the contribution of renewable energy and energy efficiency, and energy and infrastructure for poverty alleviation. During the high-level meeting, ministers noted that the main goal of energy for sustainable development should be poverty eradication, guided by the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities. Countries should be free to choose their energy policies, taking into account their special conditions, needs and national priorities for sustainable development.

It was stressed, however, that financing was critical for energy systems because of high up-front investment costs. An estimated $100 billion to $300 billion would be required annually over the next 20 years to build adequate infrastructure to meet the energy needs of developing countries. The potential for gains in energy efficiency ranged from 25 to 45 per cent over the next 20 years. Governments should therefore promote investment in new energy-efficient technologies to replace outdated equipment and adopt a broad range of measures to manage energy demand, and energy efficiency improvements could also reduce the need for investments in new electricity-generation capacity. Wide-scale development and deployment of renewable energy technologies was recognized as another key to sustainable energy use. While some experts, organizations and countries believed that no energy option should be foreclosed, many participants expressed strong opposition to any further development and deployment of nuclear technology.

Multi-stakeholder dialogue. During its ninth session, CSD held a multi-stakeholder dialogue on energy and transport (16-18 April), involving representatives of business and industry, workers and trade unions, local authorities, scientific and technological communities, and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). The dialogue focused on four themes: achieving equitable access to sustainable energy; sustainable choices for producing, distributing and consuming energy; public-private partnerships to achieve sustainable energy for transport; and sustainable transport planning: choices and models for human settlements designs and vehicle alternatives. To achieve equitable access to sustainable energy, the various stakeholders included among their proposals to Governments: support for decentralized energy production, local and institutional capacity-building, and rational energy pricing; the elimination of subsidies for fossil fuels and the creation of subsidies for renewables; the establishment of a moratorium on fossil fuel exploration and large-scale dam construction; and continued market reforms. To provide sustainable choices for producing, distributing and consuming energy, they proposed, among other things, the promotion of energy efficiency through government programmes and policies; the development of a UN web-site database for information-sharing on sustainable energy sources; and the establishment of an international forum for stakeholders. One of the other proposals with regard to fostering public-private partnerships to achieve sustainable energy for transport was the establishment of a clean technology fund to provide preferential and affordable rates for transport alternatives. As to sustainable transport planning, the stakeholders included among their proposals an increase in government research on transportation policies; inclusion of local knowledge in planning processes; and the development of partnership solutions for sustainable transport alternatives.

World Solar Programme (1996-2005)

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/205 [YUN 2000, p. 960], the Secretary-General submitted a July report on concrete action being taken for the promotion of new and renewable sources of energy, including the effective implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 [A/56/129]. He stated that growing environmental and social concerns had brought a new dimension to the perception of the significant contribution renewable energy could make in the long term and outlined the recommendations for action by Governments that had been made at CSD's ninth session (see p. 932).

As to activities being carried out at the international level to implement the World Solar Programme 1996-2005, the Secretary-General said that the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization was continuing its strategy of encouraging discussions on investment opportunities for renewable energy and energy efficiency projects, as well as stimulating advocacy and mobilizing functions and promoting training, education and information efforts. It continued to implement the Global Renewable Energy Education and Training Programme, with special attention to Africa. Other areas of the UN system that were undertaking initiatives in new and renewable sources of energy included the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs; the Global Environment Facility, through its three implementing agencies (the World Bank, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Environment Programme); the United Nations Industrial Development Organization; the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations; and the UN regional commissions.

The Secretary-General outlined a number of obstacles and constraints impeding the promotion of new and renewable sources of energy and put forward options for action to overcome them. He called for an enabling policy environment and the introduction of innovative financing to accelerate the development and application of new and renewable sources of energy.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/56/561/

Add.7], adopted resolution 56/200 without vote [agenda item 98 (g)].

Promotion of new and renewable sources of energy, including the implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 53/7 of 16 October 1998, 54/215 of 22 December 1999 and 55/205 of 20 December 2000 on the World Solar Programme 1996-2005,

Recalling also resolution 14 concerning the World Solar Programme 1996-2005, adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its twenty-ninth session in November 1997,

Reaffirming that the convening at Harare on 16 and 17 September 1996 of the World Solar Summit, at which the Harare Declaration on Solar Energy and Sustainable Development was adopted and preparations for the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 approved, was a step in pursuance of the implementation of Agenda 21, which is a multifaceted and, at the same time, fundamental programme of action for achieving sustainable development,

Emphasizing that the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 is aimed at encompassing all forms of new and renewable energy, including solar, thermal, photovoltaic, biomass, wind, mini-hydro, tidal, ocean and geothermal forms,

Recalling resolution 19 adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its thirtieth session in November 1999, concerning the Global Renewable Energy Education and Training Programme 1996-2005, which constitutes one of the major programmes of universal value of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005,

Reiterating that mutually supportive efforts at the national and international levels are imperative in the pursuit of sustainable development, which includes the provision of financial resources and the transfer of technology for the application of cost-effective energy and the wider use of environment-friendly, renewable energies,

Acknowledging that the General Assembly continues to play an important role in promoting the World Solar Programme 1996-2005,

Acknowledging also that the Commission on Sustainable Development and the Economic and Social Council continue to play a pivotal role as forums for the discussion of new and renewable sources of energy and sustainable development,

Noting the role that the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization continues to play in the implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005, in particular its efforts, in association with multilateral partners and national specialized institutions, to enhance bilateral and regional cooperation through the joint organization of regional and sub-regional business and investment forums,

Welcoming the recommendations of the Commission on Sustainable Development at its ninth session, in particular the references to renewable energy,

Expressing its appreciation for the continued efforts of the Secretary-General in bringing the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 to the attention of relevant sources of funding and technical assistance,

Calling for further action to ensure that the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 is fully integrated into the mainstream of the efforts of the United Nations system towards attaining the objective of sustainable development,

Emphasizing that the achievement of more substantive results in the implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 will require the active involvement of all concerned parties, including Governments, multilateral funding agencies and relevant bodies in the United Nations system,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General concerning concrete action being taken to implement General Assembly resolutions 53/7, 54/215 and 55/205, and welcomes, in particular, the attempt therein to analyse and discuss the obstacles and constraints impeding the promotion of new and renewable sources of energy and options for action to overcome them;

2. Notes with appreciation the role that the World Solar Commission continues to play in the mobilization of international support and assistance for the implementation of many of the national high-priority projects on renewable sources of energy included in the World Solar Programme 1996-2005, many of which are being executed with national funding;

3. Notes that although significant financial support has been provided by some developed countries that are Members of the United Nations and some intergovernmental organizations, within and outside the United Nations system, in the implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005, more action still needs to be taken in this regard;

4. Encourages national Governments and relevant stakeholders to make more use of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 as one of the vehicles to boost the development and utilization of solar energy technologies and all forms of new and renewable energy, including biomass, wind, mini-hydro, tidal, ocean and geothermal forms;

5. Invites the international community to support, as appropriate, by, inter alia, providing financial resources, the efforts of developing countries to move towards sustainable patterns of energy production and consumption;

6. Recognizes that rural energy services, including their financing, should be designed to maximize local ownership, as appropriate;

7. Reiterates its call upon all relevant funding institutions and bilateral and multilateral donors, as well as regional funding institutions and non-governmental organizations, to support, as appropriate, the efforts being made for the development of the renewable energy sector in developing countries on the basis of environment-friendly renewable sources of energy of demonstrated viability, while taking fully into account the development structure of energy-based economies of developing countries, and to assist in the attainment of the levels of investment necessary to expand energy supplies beyond urban areas;

8. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to promote the mobilization of adequate technical assistance and funding and to enhance the effectiveness and the full utilization of existing international funds for the effective implementation of national and regional high-priority projects in the area of renewable sources of energy;

9. Emphasizes the need to intensify research and development in support of energy for sustainable development, which will require increased commitment on the part of all stakeholders, including Governments and the private sector, to deploy financial and manpower resources for accelerating research efforts;

10. Recognizes that the wider use of available renewable energy technologies requires the diffusion of available technologies on a global scale, including through North-South and South-South cooperation;

11. Takes note of the decision of the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization regarding the contribution of the Global Renewable Energy Education and Training Programme 1996-2005 in attaining the objective of sustainable development, and in this context encourages the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to mobilize resources, both human and financial, as mandated, to ensure the effective implementation of the Programme and to make efforts to promote public awareness in all Member States in this regard, with the support of international, regional and national institutions, both public and private;

12. Invites the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to make effective the implementation of the Global Renewable Energy Education and Training Programme 1996-2005 in the various regions and to strengthen the implementation of its African chapter;

13. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and in cooperation with the United Nations Development Programme, the Global Environment Facility, the United Nations Environment Programme and other relevant organizations, to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session a report on the concrete action being taken for the promotion of new and renewable sources of energy, including the effective implementation of and the mobilization of resources for the World Solar Programme 1996-2005;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-eighth session, under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development", the sub-item entitled "Promotion of new and renewable sources of energy, including the implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005".

Nuclear energy

1999 IAEA report. In accordance with decision 55/458 [YUN 2000, p. 962], the General Assembly considered the 1999 report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) at its resumed fifty-fifth session in 2001.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 March [meeting 96], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/244 [draft: A/55/L.75] without vote [agenda item 14].

Report of the International Atomic Energy Agency

The General Assembly,

Having received the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency to the General Assembly for the year 1999,

Noting the statement by the Director General of the Agency,

Recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency, and reaffirming its confidence in the role of the Agency,

Recognizing also the cooperation between the United Nations and the Agency and the Agreement covering the relationship between the United Nations and the Agency as approved by the General Conference of the Agency on 23 October 1957 and by the General Assembly in the annex to its resolution 1145(XII) of 14 November 1957,

Taking note of the resolutions and decisions adopted by the General Conference of the Agency at its forty-fourth regular session,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Director General of the Agency the records of the fifty-fifth session of the General Assembly relating to the activities of the Agency.

2000 IAEA report. By an August note [A/56/313], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the 2000 report of IAEA. Presenting and updating the report in the Assembly on 22 October [A/56/PV.30], the IAEA Director General said that nuclear power, which in 2000 supplied about one sixth of global electricity, was the principal alternative to fossil fuels that could in the foreseeable future provide electricity on a large scale with practically no greenhouse gas emissions. The preceding 12 months had seen strong safety practices, reduced generating costs and the first extensions of power plant licences to 60 years. Six new plants were connected to national electricity grids, and 33 more were under construction by the end of 2000. Views on nuclear power, however, were still mixed because of safety and non-proliferation concerns and three crucial questions would determine its future: whether it would continue to prove itself a safe technology; whether it could be effectively safeguarded against non-peaceful purposes; and whether it could be an economically competitive technology. IAEA had established the International Project on Innovative Nuclear Reactors and Fuel Cycles to look into those and other questions.

The Director General noted that although IAEA had been at the forefront of encouraging States to make security an integral part of the management of their overall nuclear programmes, the 11 September attacks in the United States were a wake-up call that more could and must be done. Immediately following that tragedy, IAEA began a thorough review of its activities and programmes on preventing acts of terrorism involving nuclear and other radioactive materials. The Agency was engaged in a variety of activities, including programmes to ensure physical security, help prevent and respond to illicit trafficking of nuclear material and other radioactive sources, promote the safety of nuclear facilities, safeguard nuclear material against non-peaceful uses and respond to emergencies.

Through its research projects and technical co-operation programme, IAEA was working to strengthen the scientific and technological capacities of its Member States and functioned as a vehicle for the transfer of nuclear technologies to combat disease and child malnutrition, manage water resources, increase food production and protect the environment, the Director General said. In each of those areas of nuclear application, the Agency sought to promote the development and transfer of techniques that served the priorities of its Member States, with a focus on the special needs of developing countries.

The Director General noted that the development and adoption of international legally binding norms under the auspices of the Agency had significantly contributed to the enhancement of nuclear safety worldwide. To date, conventions had been developed covering the safety of power reactors, radioactive waste and spent fuel management, early notification and assistance in case of a nuclear accident or radiological emergency, and the physical protection of nuclear material. The Agency also maintained a comprehensive body of safety standards, which were being used by an increasing number of States for their national nuclear safety regulations. The Director General also discussed IAEA's inability to implement its nuclear inspection mandate in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and in Iraq (see pp. 317, 292).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 86], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/94 [draft: A/56/L.10 & Add.1] by recorded vote (150-1-2) [agenda item 14].

Report of the International Atomic Energy Agency

The General Assembly,

Having received the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency for the year 2000,

Taking note of the statement of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency, in which he provided additional information on the main developments in the activities of the Agency during 2001,

Recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency in promoting the further application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes as envisaged in the statute of the Agency and in accordance with the inalienable right of States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and other relevant internationally legally binding agreements that have concluded relevant safeguards agreements with the Agency to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination and in conformity with articles I and II and other relevant articles of the Treaty, and with the objectives and purposes thereof,

Conscious of the importance of the safeguards system of the Agency and of the importance of the work of the Agency in the implementation of the safeguards provisions of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and other international treaties, conventions and agreements designed to achieve similar objectives, as well as in ensuring, as far as it is able, that the assistance provided by the Agency or at its request or under its supervision or control is not used in such a way as to further any military purpose, as stated in article II of its statute,

Reaffirming that the Agency is the competent authority responsible for verifying and assuring, in accordance with the statute and the safeguards system of the Agency, compliance with its safeguards agreements with States parties undertaken in fulfilment of their obligations under article III, paragraph 1, of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to preventing diversion of nuclear energy from peaceful uses to nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices, and also reaffirming that nothing should be done to undermine the authority of the Agency in this regard and that States parties that have concerns regarding non-compliance with the safeguards agreement of the Treaty by the States parties should direct such concerns, along with supporting evidence and information, to the Agency to consider, investigate, draw conclusions and decide on necessary actions in accordance with its mandate,

Stressing the need for the highest standards of safety in the design and operation of nuclear installations and in peaceful nuclear activities so as to minimize risks to life, health and the environment, and recognizing that a good safety record relies on good technology, good regulatory practices and well-qualified and trained staff, as well as international cooperation,

Noting that a demonstrated global record of safety is a key element for the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and that continuous efforts are necessary to ensure that the human and technical elements of safety are maintained at the optimal level, and also noting that, although safety is a national responsibility, international cooperation on safety-related matters is indispensable,

Considering that an expansion of technical co-operation activities relating to the peaceful uses of nuclear energy will contribute to the well-being of the peoples of the world, recognizing the special needs of the developing countries for technical assistance from the Agency and the importance of funding in order to benefit effectively from the transfer and application of nuclear technology for peaceful purposes as well as from the contribution of nuclear energy to their economic development, and desiring that the resources of the Agency for technical cooperation activities be assured, predictable and sufficient to meet the objectives mandated in article II of its statute,

Conscious that the work done by the Agency in the field of nuclear sciences and applications in the non-power sector contributes to sustainable development, especially with programmes aimed at enhancing agricultural productivity and food security, improving human health, increasing the availability of drinking water supplies and protecting the terrestrial and marine environment,

Recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency on nuclear power, the fuel cycle and nuclear science, nuclear techniques for development and environmental protection and nuclear safety and protection against radiation, including its work directed towards assisting developing countries in all these fields,

Welcoming the convening of the fourth Scientific Forum, on the theme "Serving human needs: nuclear technology for sustainable development", during the forty-fifth regular session of the General Conference of the Agency,

Taking note of the report of the Director General to the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency on the implementation of Security Council resolutions relating to Iraq, of his reports to the Security Council of 10 December 1999 and 11 October 2000, of 9 January, 12 February, 6 April and 5 October 2001, and of resolution GC(45)/RES/17 of 21 September 2001 of the General Conference,

Taking note also of resolution GC(45)/RES/16 in connection with the implementation of the Agreement between the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the International Atomic Energy Agency for the application of safeguards in connection with the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, the statements by the President of the Security Council of 31 March, 30 May and 4 November 1994 and the authorization of the Board of Governors, on 11 November 1994, to the Director General, to carry out all the tasks requested of the Agency in the statement by the President of the Security Council of 4 November 1994, noting recent political developments in north-east Asia, and expressing the hope that they will open the way to progress towards full implementation of the relevant agreements,

Taking note further of resolutions GC(45)/RES/10A on measures to strengthen international cooperation in nuclear, radiation and waste safety, GC(45)/RES/10B on transport safety, GC(45)/RES/10C on education and training, GC(45)/RES/11 on the strengthening of the technical cooperation activities of the Agency, GC(45)/RES/12A on the plan for producing potable water economically using small and medium-sized nuclear reactors, GC(45)/RES/12B on the use of isotope hydrology for water resources management, GC(45)/RES/12C on servicing immediate human needs, GC(45)/RES/12D on support to the Pan African Tsetse and Trypanosomiasis Eradication Campaign of the Organization of African Unity, GC(45)/RES/12E on drought in Central America, GC(45)/RES/12F on Agency activities in the development of innovative nuclear technology, GC(45)/RES/13 on strengthening the effectiveness and improving the efficiency of the safeguards system and the application of the Model Additional Protocol, GC(45)/RES/14A on measures against illicit trafficking in nuclear materials and other radioactive materials, GC(45)/RES/14B on the physical protection of nuclear material and nuclear facilities and GC(45)/RES/18 on the application of Agency safeguards in the Middle East, adopted on 21 September 2001 by the General Conference of the Agency at its forty-fifth regular session,

Taking note of resolution GC(45)/RES/15A on the staffing of the secretariat of the Agency, in which the General Conference called on developing and underrepresented member States to encourage well-qualified candidates to apply for vacant posts in the Agency, and considering the related resolution GC(45)/RES/15B on women in the secretariat, in which the General Conference called on the Director General to make every effort to rectify the present gender imbalance,

Recalling resolution GC(43)/RES/19 on the amendment to article VI of the statute and the statement by the President of the forty-third regular session of the General Conference of the Agency with respect to article VI, adopted on 1 October 1999 by the General Conference,

Taking note of the statement by the President of the forty-fifth regular session of the General Conference of the Agency, that:

"During the Conference, widespread condolences were expressed to the victims and their families as well as to the Government of the United States of America for the terrorist attacks that took place on 11 September 2001 in New York, Washington, D.C., and Pennsylvania. The delegates were unequivocal in their condemnation of these terrorists acts. As called for in General Assembly resolution 56/1 and Security Council resolution 1368(2001), the urgent need to work together to bring to justice the perpetrators, organizers and sponsors of these terrorist attacks and to hold accountable those responsible for aiding, supporting or harbouring the perpetrators, organizers and sponsors of these acts was supported. With particular regard to the Agency's mandate, the Conference expressed its concern about the possible impact of terrorism on the security of nuclear material and other radioactive materials. In this regard, the Conference requested the Director General to review thoroughly the activities and programmes of the Agency with a view to strengthening the Agency work relevant to preventing acts of terrorism involving nuclear materials and other radioactive materials. It further urged all member States to cooperate fully with the Director General and to support the Agency's efforts in this regard",

Taking note also of the statement by the President of the forty-fifth regular session of the General Conference of the Agency, which was endorsed by the General Conference at its tenth plenary meeting and issued under the item concerning Israeli nuclear capabilities and threat, that:

"The General Conference recalls the statement by the President of the thirty-sixth session in 1992 concerning the item entitled 'Israeli nuclear capabilities and threat'. That statement considered it desirable not to consider that item at the thirty-seventh session. The General Conference also recalls the statement by the President of the forty-third session, in 1999, concerning the same agenda item. At the forty-fourth and forty-fifth sessions, the item was, at the request of certain member States, included again in the agenda. The item was discussed. The President notes that certain member States intend to include the item in the provisional agenda of the forty-sixth regular session of the General Conference",

Noting with appreciation that the General Conference, in resolution GC(45)/RES/3, approved the appointment of Mr. Mohamed ElBaradei as the Director General until 30 November 2005,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency;

2. Affirms its confidence in the role of the Agency in the application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes;

3. Encourages all States members of the Agency that have not yet done so to ratify the amendment to article VI of the statute of the Agency, recalling the adoption by the General Conference of the Agency of resolution GC(43)/RES/19 on the amendment to article VI of the statute and the accompanying statement by the President of the forty-third regular session of the General Conference;

4. Also encourages all States members of the Agency that have not yet done so to ratify the amendment of article XIV.A of the statute of the Agency, recalling the adoption by the General Conference of the Agency of resolution GC(43)/RES/8 on the amendment of article XIV.A of the statute, which will provide for biennial budgeting by the Agency;

5. Consistent with the respective safeguards undertakings of member States and bearing in mind the importance of achieving the universal application of the safeguards system of the Agency, urges all States which have yet to bring into force comprehensive safeguards agreements to do so as soon as possible, affirms that measures to strengthen the effectiveness and improve the efficiency of the safeguards system with a view to detecting undeclared nuclear material and activities must be implemented rapidly and universally by all concerned States and other parties in compliance with their respective international commitments, stresses the importance of the safeguards system of the Agency, including comprehensive safeguards agreements and the Model Additional Protocol, which are among the essential elements of the system, requests all concerned States and other parties to safeguards agreements which have not yet done so promptly to sign additional protocols, requests the States and other parties to safeguards agreements having signed additional protocols to take the necessary measures to bring them into force as soon as their national legislation allows, and recommends that the Director General, the Board of Governors and member States continue to consider implementing the elements of the plan of action outlined in resolution GC(44)/RES/19, as appropriate and subject to available resources, with the aim of facilitating the entry into force of safeguards agreements and additional protocols and review the progress in this regard, and notes the important work being undertaken by the Agency, on an ongoing priority basis, in the conceptualization and development of integrated and cost-effective safeguards;

6. Urges all States to strive for effective and harmonious international cooperation in carrying out the work of the Agency, pursuant to its statute, in promoting the use of nuclear energy and the application of the necessary measures to strengthen further the safety of nuclear installations and to minimize risks to life, health and the environment, in strengthening technical assistance and cooperation for developing countries and in ensuring the effectiveness and efficiency of the safeguards system of the Agency;

7. Recalls resolution GC(45)/RES/12F on the activities of the Agency in the development of innovative nuclear technology, emphasizes the unique role that the Agency can play in developing user requirements and in addressing safeguards, safety and environmental questions for innovative reactors and their fuel cycles, within available extrabudgetary resources, and stresses the need for international collaboration in the development of innovative nuclear technology;

8. Stresses the need, in conformity with the statute of the Agency, to continue to pursue activities in the areas of nuclear science, technology and applications for meeting the basic sustainable development needs of member States, and also stresses the need to strengthen technical cooperation activities, including the provision of sufficient resources, and to enhance continually the effectiveness and efficiency of the programmes;

9. Recalls resolution GC(45)/RES/11 on the strengthening of the technical cooperation activities of the Agency, welcomes the measures and decisions taken by the Agency to strengthen and fund its technical cooperation activities, which should contribute to achieving sustainable development in developing countries, and calls upon States to cooperate in contributing to and in implementing the measures and decisions pursuant thereto;

10. Reaffirms the importance of all the measures contained in resolution GC(45)/RES/18 on the application of Agency safeguards in the Middle East, and calls upon all States in the region to implement all the provisions contained therein, including the application of full-scope Agency safeguards to all their nuclear activities, adherence to international non-proliferation regimes and the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region;

11. Commends the Director General and the secretariat of the Agency for their continuing, impartial efforts to implement the safeguards agreement still in force between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, recognizes the important role of the Agency in monitoring the freeze of nuclear facilities in that country as requested by the Security Council, notes with continuing concern that, although the Democratic People's Republic of Korea is a party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, the Agency continues to be unable to verify the accuracy and completeness of the initial declaration of nuclear material it made and is therefore unable to conclude that there has been no diversion of nuclear material in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, expresses deep concern about the continuing non-compliance of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea with the safeguards agreement between that country and the Agency, again urges the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to comply fully with its safeguards agreement, including all steps the Agency deems necessary to preserve all information relevant to verifying the accuracy and completeness of its initial declaration, and strongly encourages the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to respond positively and at an early date to the detailed proposal of the Agency for the first concrete steps needed for the implementation of the generic requirements for the verification of the accuracy and completeness of its initial declaration;

12. Also commends the Director General of the Agency and his staff for their strenuous efforts to implement Security Council resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, 707(1991) of 15 August 1991, 715(1991) of 11 October 1991, 1051(1996) of 27 March 1996, 1060 (1996) of 12 June 1996, 1115(1997) of 21 June 1997, 1154(1998) of 2 March 1998, 1194(1998) of 9 September 1998, 1205(1998) of 5 November 1998 and 1284(1999) of 17 December 1999, and calls upon Iraq to implement in full all relevant Security Council resolutions, including resolution 1284(1999), and in this regard to cooperate fully with the Agency and to provide the necessary access to enable it to carry out its mandate;

13. Welcomes the entry into force on 24 October 1996 of the Convention on Nuclear Safety, appeals to all States, particularly those operating, constructing, or planning nuclear power reactors, which have not yet taken the necessary steps to become parties to the Convention to do so, and looks forward to the second review meeting, due to take place in April 2002, expecting safety improvements in all areas, particularly in areas where the first review meeting found that there was room for improvement;

14. Notes with satisfaction that the Joint Convention on the Safety of Spent Fuel Management and on the Safety of Radioactive Waste Management entered into force on 18 June 2001, and appeals to all States which have not yet taken the necessary steps to become parties to it to do so in time to attend the first review meeting of the contracting parties;

15. Recalls resolution GC(45)/RES/10B on transport safety, and urges States to ensure that their national regulatory documents governing the transport of radioactive material are in conformity with the latest edition of the Agency's Transport Regulations;

16. Welcomes the measures taken by the Agency in support of efforts to prevent illicit trafficking in nuclear materials and other radioactive materials, and in this context decides to bear in mind, in its continued elaboration of an international convention on the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism, those activities of the Agency, and urges all States to cooperate fully with the Director General and to support the efforts of the Agency in reviewing thoroughly the activities and programmes of the Agency with a view to strengthening its work relevant to preventing acts of terrorism involving nuclear materials and other radioactive materials;

17. Appeals to States that have not yet done so to accede to the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material, also appeals to States to apply relevant physical protection recommendations and introduce and enforce appropriate measures and legislation to combat illicit trafficking in nuclear materials and other radioactive materials, welcomes the endorsement of the Physical Protection Objectives and Fundamental Principles referred to in document GC(45)/INF/14 by the Board of Governors of the Agency, encourages States to apply these principles in designing, implementing and regulating their national systems for the physical protection of nuclear material and nuclear facilities used for peaceful purposes, and welcomes the decision of the Director General to convene an open-ended group of legal and technical experts in order to prepare a draft of a well-defined amendment, to be subsequently reviewed by the States parties, aimed at strengthening the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material and encouraging States to become parties to the Convention;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Director General of the Agency the records of the fifty-sixth session of the General Assembly relating to the activities of the Agency.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 56/94:

In favour: Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belarus, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Latvia, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nauru, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Samoa, San Marino, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom and Northern Ireland, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Against: Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

Abstaining: Côte d'Ivoire, Lao People's Democratic Republic.

Natural resources

Water resources

Communication. Germany transmitted to the Secretary-General the Ministerial Declaration adopted at the International Conference on Freshwater (Bonn, 3-7 December) [E/CN.17/2002/PC.2/10]. Also transmitted were the Bonn Recommendations for Action and the Bonn Keys, which identified the main actions required to manage water better in order to achieve sustainable development.

International Year of Freshwater (2003)

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/196 [YUN 2000, p. 963], the Secretary-General submitted a July report on the status of preparations for the International Year of Freshwater, 2003 [A/56/189]. The report described potential activities, initiatives and networking at the international, national and local levels and gave examples of fund-raising activities that could be undertaken at the international and national levels. It also explored issues that would require greater attention during the Year and proposed further steps to be taken in preparation for it. The report was prepared by the ACC Subcommittee on Water Resources, which served as the coordinating body for the observance of the Year (see p. 940), in collaboration with its member UN entities and interested NGOs, such as the World Water Council, the Global Water Partnership and the Water Supply and Sanitation Collaborative Council.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/561/Add.8], adopted resolution 56/192 without vote [agenda item 98].

Status of preparations for the International Year of Freshwater, 2003

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/196 of 20 December 2000, in which it proclaimed 2003 as the International Year of Freshwater,

Recalling also the provisions of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 adopted at its nineteenth special session and decisions of the Economic and Social Council and those of the Commission on Sustainable Development at its sixth session, relating to freshwater,

Recalling further its resolution 53/199 of 15 December 1998 on the proclamation of international years,

Reaffirming the goal of reducing by half, between 2000 and 2015, the proportion of people who are unable to reach or to afford safe drinking water,

Noting the efforts for the preparations for the Third World Water Forum, to be held in Japan in March 2003, and for the elaboration of the World Water Development Report,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Welcomes the activities undertaken by States, the Secretariat, organizations of the United Nations system that are engaged in inter-agency work related to freshwater and major groups in preparation for the observance of the International Year of Freshwater, 2003, and encourages them to continue their efforts;

2. Encourages all Member States, the United Nations system and major groups to take advantage of the Year to raise awareness of the essential importance of freshwater resources for satisfying basic human needs and for health and food production and the preservation of ecosystems, as well as for economic and social development in general, and to promote action at the local, national, regional and international levels, and in this context calls for high priority to be given to the serious freshwater problems facing many regions, especially in the developing countries;

3. Also encourages all States, relevant international organizations and major groups to support activities related to the Year, inter alia, through voluntary contributions;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session an interim report on the activities undertaken in preparation for the International Year of Freshwater, 2003.

Inter-agency action

The ACC Subcommittee on Water Resources, at its twenty-second session (Geneva, 24-28 September) [ACC/2001/18], discussed preparations for the World Summit on Sustainable Development, to be held in 2002 (see p. 749); preparations for the World Water Assessment Programme and the World Water Development Report (to be issued in 2003); groundwater assessment and management; activities related to preventing the use of arsenic-contaminated groundwater; regional activities; water supply and sanitation, including the possible terrorist threat to water supply systems; preparations of the International Year of Freshwater, 2003 (see above); activities undertaken for World Water Day 2001 (22 March) and those planned for World Water Day 2002; and the ongoing review process of the ACC structure and subsidiary bodies (see p. 1365).

With regard to the last issue, the Subcommittee stressed the need for a continued well-recognized and formal inter-agency coordination mechanism in the field of water resources.

Cartography

UN Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas

In accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 1997/292 [YUN 1997, p. 1038], the Seventh United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas was held in New York from 22 to 26 January [E/2001/11]. The Conference established three technical committees, which dealt with development needs and institutional capacity-building; fundamental data collection and management; and spatial data infrastructure (SDI) development in the Americas. The committees' deliberations confirmed that the concept of national SDI was gaining recognition as a fundamental asset of a society, equal to roads, communications networks, and other public utilities. The challenge for the cartographic/SDI community was not only knowing how to harness the enormous potential of geographic information/SDI technologies but also having the ability to restructure national mapping agencies and other governmental organizations to cooperate and to create regional and global data infrastructure standards.

The Conference recommended that the Economic and Social Council endorse its proposal that the Eighth Conference be convened no later than early 2005, with a primary focus on the continued and strengthened contribution of cartography and geographic information in support of the implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 672]; and requested the Secretary-General to take measures, where appropriate and within available resources, to implement the other recommendations of the Conference, in particular, that the United Nations should continue to support surveying, mapping and spatial data infrastructure activities in the Americas region and continue, within available resources, to facilitate the participation of the least developed countries and the small island developing States of the region.

By decision 2001/232 of 19 July, the Council endorsed the recommendations contained in the Secretary-General's report on the Conference. On the same date, it took note of the Secretary-General's report (decision 2001/233).

Chapter VII

Environment and human settlements

In 2001, the United Nations and the international community continued efforts to protect the environment through legally binding instruments and the activities of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP).

The second Global Ministerial Environment Forum/twenty-first session of the UNEP Governing Council (Nairobi, Kenya, 5-9 February) adopted decisions related to various aspects of the global ecosystem. During the Council's session, Governments expressed increasing concern that the current governance structures did not meet the needs of the environmental agenda. Thus, the Council initiated a review process on international environmental governance, which was aimed at a new model predicated on the need for sustainable development that met the inter-related social, economic and environmental requirements.

The United Nations Forum on Forests, a subsidiary body of the Economic and Social Council established to promote the management, conservation and sustainable development of all types of forests and to strengthen long-term political commitment to that end, at its first session (New York, 11-12 June), adopted its multi-year programme of work for 2001-2005 and plan of action, and outlined the functions of the Collaborative Partnership on Forests.

The Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants, which was adopted at a meeting of the Conference of Plenipotentiaries (Stockholm, Sweden, 22-23 May), was opened for signature on 23 May in Stockholm and at UN Headquarters from 24 May 2001 to 22 May 2002. The Convention set out control measures on the production, import, export, disposal and use of an initial list of 12 persistent organic pollutants (POPs) and included measures to reduce or eliminate the production and use of intentionally produced POPs; eliminate unintentionally produced POPs; and manage stockpiles and dispose of POP waste in an environmentally sound manner. The resumed sixth session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (Bonn, Germany, 16-27 July) adopted the core elements for the implementation of the 1998 Buenos Aires Plan of Action to reduce the risk of global climate change (the Bonn Agreements), which provided for the establishment of two new funds to assist developing countries in adaptation, technology transfer and emissions reduction, and assist least developed countries in Convention implementation. At its seventh session (Marrakesh, Morocco, 29 October-10 November), the Conference adopted the Marrakesh Accords on modalities, guidelines and mechanisms to facilitate the entry into force of the 1997 Kyoto Protocol, which aimed to reduce industrialized countries' greenhouse gas emissions. The Thirteenth Meeting of the Parties to the 1985 Montreal Protocol (Colombo, Sri Lanka, 16-19 October) adopted the Colombo Declaration on Renewed Commitment to the Protection of the Ozone Layer to Mark the Forthcoming World Summit on Sustainable Development, in 2002, the Fifteenth Anniversary of the Montreal Protocol and the Tenth Anniversary of the Establishment of the Multilateral Fund.

The Millennium Ecosystem Assessment, a four-year international collaborative effort to evaluate the state of the major ecosystems (forests, freshwater systems, grasslands, coastal areas, agroecosystems) was launched in 2001 as part of the observance of World Environment Day on 5 June.

The General Assembly declared 6 November of each year as the International Day for Preventing the Exploitation of the Environment in War and Armed Conflict and invited Member States, UN system entities and other organizations to observe the Day.

The General Assembly convened its twenty-fifth special session (New York, 6-9 June) to review and appraise the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, a global call to action that offered a vision of adequate shelter for all and the sustainable development of human settlements, adopted by the 1996 United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II). The Assembly adopted the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium, by which participants reaffirmed their commitment to the Habitat Agenda, presented an assessment of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda and proposed further action. In February, the Commission on Human Settlements, acting as the Preparatory Committee for the special session, held its second session and also convened its eighteenth regular session, during which it adopted 12 resolutions.

In December, the Assembly transformed the Commission on Human Settlements and its secretariat, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), including the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, with effect from 1 January 2002, into the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat), which would function as a subsidiary organ of the Assembly. The former Commission would serve as the UN-Habitat Governing Council.

UN Environment Programme

Governing Council/Ministerial Forum

The second Global Ministerial Environment Forum, also serving as the twenty-first session of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), was held at UNEP headquarters in Nairobi, Kenya, from 5 to 9 February [A/56/25]. It decided to convene the Governing Council's seventh special session in Cartagena, Colombia, from 13 to 15 February 2002 to consider preparations for the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development (see p. 749) and to discuss further the question of international environmental governance (see p. 944). The Council's twenty-second session would take place in Nairobi from 3 to 7 February 2003.

Ministerial consultations held on 8 and 9 February [UNEP/GC.21/9] focused on the implementation and development of the Nairobi Declaration on the Role and Mandate of the United Nations Environment Programme [YUN 1997, p. 1040], which declared UNEP the principal UN body and the leading global authority concerned with the environment, and on the Malmö Ministerial Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 968] (see p. 945). Other issues discussed were poverty and the environment, and health and the environment. A January paper of the UNEP Executive Director [UNEP/GC.21/5 & Corr.1] provided background information for the discussions.

The Committee of the Whole considered the programme of work, the Environment Fund and administrative and other budgetary matters [UNEP/GC.21/9].

Subsidiary bodies

The 36-member High-level Committee of Ministers and Officials, an intersessional subsidiary organ of the Governing Council established in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1040], during its fifth meeting (Nairobi, 4 February) [UNEP/HLC/5/3 & Corr.1], reviewed its role and mandate, in accordance with a 1997 Governing Council decision [YUN 1997, p. 1040]. Following consideration of a report of the Executive Director [UNEP/HLC/5/2] and a debate on the subject, the Committee concluded that it was no longer needed, as the Governing Council/Global Ministerial Environment Forum had assumed the functions expected of the Committee at the time it was established.

On 9 February [A/56/25 (dec. 21/20)], the Governing Council decided to discontinue the Committee.

In 2001, the Committee of Permanent Representatives, which was open to representatives of all UN Member States and members of specialized agencies, held a series of meetings, all in Nairobi. The Committee's seventy-fourth to seventy-seventh meetings were held on 30 March [UNEP/CPR/75/2], 27 June [UNEP/CPR/76/2], 19 September [UNEP/CPR/77/2] and 10 December [UNEP/CPR/78/2]; extraordinary meetings were convened on 24 January [UNEP/CPR/74/3] and 12 March [UNEP/CPR/74/4]. Over the course of the meetings, the Committee discussed, among other things, preparations for the Governing Council/Global Ministerial Environment Forum 2001 session, its contribution to the implementation of Council decision 21/21 on international environmental governance (see p. 944), UNEP relations with the United Nations Office at Nairobi (UNON), and preparations for the Council's seventh special session in 2002 and for the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development (see p. 749).

UNEP governance

In decision 21/20 [A/56/25] on UNEP governance and related aspects of General Assembly resolution 53/242 [YUN 1999, p. 975], the Governing Council decided, subject to the availability of an offer from a host country, to hold its sessions in alternate years in the UN regions, where possible, on a rotational basis. It called on Governments in a position to do so to provide financial resources to facilitate the participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in all meetings of the Governing Council/Global Ministerial Environment Forum. The Council decided that the proceedings of the Committee of Permanent Representatives would be conducted in all official languages, following the installation of full interpretation services in Nairobi. It requested the Executive Director to provide all documentation for Council sessions to the Committee eight weeks in advance of the session and that the Committee endeavour to finish its work four weeks prior to the actual session. The Executive Director was also asked to notify designated focal points of upcoming UNEP meetings.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/56/561/Add.8], adopted resolution 56/193 without vote [agenda item 98].

Report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on its twenty-first session

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2997 (XXVII) of 15 December 1972, by which it decided to establish the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme,

Recalling also its resolution 55/200 of 20 December 2000 on the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on its sixth special session,

Recalling further the Nairobi Declaration on the Role and Mandate of the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Taking note with appreciation of the progress being made by the United Nations Environment Programme in the preparations for the World Summit on Sustainable Development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on its twenty-first session;

2. Welcomes the efforts already made to realize the objectives of the Nairobi Declaration on the Role and Mandate of the United Nations Environment Programme, supports the early and full implementation of General Assembly resolution 53/242 of 28 July 1999, and requests that the reports on the work of the Environmental Management Group be made available to Member States and members of specialized agencies;

3. Reiterates the invitation to the international environmental governance process initiated by decision 21/21 of 9 February 2001 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme to submit its progress report to the Preparatory Committee for the World Summit on Sustainable Development at its second session, to be held in New York from 28 January to 8 February 2002, and to submit the final results to the Committee at its third session, to be held in New York from 25 March to 5 April 2002, so that it may be fully considered in the preparatory process, and notes with interest the ongoing work of the open-ended intergovernmental group of ministers or their representatives on international environmental governance with respect to the comprehensive policy-oriented assessment of existing institutional weaknesses, as well as future needs and options for strengthened international environmental governance;

4. Underlines the need for sufficient financial resources on a stable and predictable basis to ensure the full implementation of the mandate of the Programme, and, within this context, notes ongoing related deliberations;

5. Notes the proposal of the Secretary-General to increase United Nations funding for the cost of servicing the Programme secretariat and the Governing Council from the regular budget;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the resource needs of the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Office at Nairobi under continuous review and to make proposals as needed in the context of the United Nations regular budget, with a view to strengthening the Programme and the Office.

International environmental governance

During the Governing Council's 2001 session, Governments expressed increasing concern that the current governance structures did not meet the needs of the environmental agenda. Thus, the Council initiated a review process on international environmental governance, which was aimed at a new model predicated on the need for sustainable development that met the inter-related social, economic and environmental requirements.

Council action. On 9 February [dec. 21/21], the Governing Council called on UNEP and UN Members and specialized agencies to implement General Assembly resolution 53/242 [YUN 1999, p. 975] as a basis for further institutional strengthening. It decided to establish an open-ended intergovernmental group of ministers or their representatives (see p. 945), with the Executive Director as an ex-officio member, to undertake a policy-oriented assessment of existing institutional weaknesses, as well as future needs and options to strengthen international environmental governance, including the financing of UNEP, and to present a report on analysis and options to the next session of the Governing Council/Global Ministerial Environment Forum. The Committee of Permanent Representatives was requested to provide its input for the process. The Council/Forum should provide its input on future requirements of international environmental governance in the broader context of sustainable development to the tenth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development (CSD), acting as the preparatory body for the World Summit on Sustainable Development (see p. 749), at its ministerial-level meeting in May 2002. The Council's President was requested to inform CSD of its decision and of the views expressed at the Council's current session by the Ministers of the Environment on international environmental governance. The Executive Director was requested, in consultation with Governments, to review the state of international environmental governance and to report to the intergovernmental group at its first meeting. He was also asked to seek additional resources from Governments in a position to do so to support the process, particularly to facilitate the participation of developing country representatives.

Intergovernmental group. In 2001, the Open-ended Intergovernmental Group of Ministers or Their Representatives on International Environmental Governance met four times: New York, 18 April [UNEP/IGM/1/3]; Bonn, 17 July [UNEP/IGM/2/6]; Algiers, Algeria, 9-10 September [UNEP/IGM/3/3]; and Montreal, Canada, 30 November-1 December [UNEP/IGM/4/6]. At its first meeting, the Group considered an April report of the Executive Director [UNEP/IGM/1/2], which described the current state of international environmental governance, reviewed the strengths and weaknesses of the existing arrangements, presented information on financing for the global environment, assessed the needs of the current environmental agenda and put forward options to strengthen international environmental governance. The Executive Director updated the report in August [UNEP/IGM/3/2] and revised it in November [UNEP/IGM/4/3] to include a sustainable development perspective and capacity-building, technology transfer and financing issues. In order to receive input on the issues raised in the Executive Director's report from expert institutions, major groups and individuals outside the UN system, civil society consultations (Nairobi, 22-23 May) and expert consultations (Cambridge, United Kingdom, 28-29 May) were held [UNEP/IGM/2/2]. The Intergovernmental Group had before it contributions on the governance process provided by the Environmental Management Group (EMG), an advisory group set up to coordinate UN system activities in addressing the major challenges in the UNEP work programme [UNEP/IGM/2/INF/4], and by the Committee of Permanent Representatives [UNEP/IGM/2/3]. The Group considered the concept of enhancing the coordination of international activities related to chemicals and waste through a chemicals and waste cluster [UNEP/IGM/2/INF/2 & Add.1]; a policy paper on improving international environmental governance among multilateral environment agreements (MEAs) [UNEP/IGM/2/4]; a report on the status of MEAs [UNEP/IGM/2/INF/3]; a proposal for a systematic approach to coordinate MEAs [UNEP/IGM/2/5]; and clustering as a policy and management strategy for enhancing coordination and policy coherence among MEAs [UNEP/IGM/4/4]. Based on proposals of the Governing Council President [UNEP/IGM/4/2], the Group established working groups to discuss improving coherence in policy-making (the role and structure of the Global Ministerial Environment Forum); strengthening UNEP's role, authority and financial situation; and improved coordination and coherence between MEAs, capacity-building, technology transfer and country-level coordination for environment and sustainable development, as well as enhanced coordination across the UN system (the role of EMG). The Group would present its final report in 2002.

Malmö Ministerial Declaration

The Malmö Ministerial Declaration, adopted by the Governing Council in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 968], identified the major environmental challenges of the twenty-first century, as well as ways for the international community to address those challenges.

In a report on the Declaration's implementation [UNEP/GC.21/3], the Executive Director stated that the challenges and opportunities articulated in the Declaration were being actively addressed by UNEP to turn them into concrete action. Fragmented sectoral policy responses were being made more coherent and integrated in order to address effectively the multifaceted environmental dimensions of sustainable development. Areas of implementation covered in the report were: access to environment and environment-related information; environmental law; integrating environmental dimensions into economic policies; promoting environmental accountability; the engagement of civil society; the new ethics concerning respect for nature; programmatic responses to environmental threats; and the 10-year review of progress achieved in the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) [YUN 1992, p. 670] (see p. 749).

On 9 February [dec. 21/18], the Governing Council decided to transmit the Declaration to other UN system intergovernmental bodies and conferences, including international financial institutions, and to invite them to promote its implementation. The Council invited CSD to consider the integration of the Declaration's commitments into its work, especially in preparation for the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development (see p. 749). The Executive Director was asked to take further steps regarding the Declaration as it related to the mandate of UNEP, and to monitor the Declaration's implementation and report thereon to the Committee of Permanent Representatives and to the Governing Council at its next session.

UNEP activities

A report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.21/2] described action taken in UNEP areas of activities, as defined by the Governing Council in a 1998 decision [YUN 1998, p. 982], including environmental assessment and information; the development and implementation of environmental policy instruments; support to Africa; and technology transfer and industry.

A January policy statement of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.21/8] provided information on the global context for UNEP's work, and on progress in the five areas of UNEP concentration (environmental information, assessment and early warning; enhanced coordination of environmental conventions and the development of environmental policy instruments; freshwater; technology transfer and industry; and support to Africa).

Support to Africa

On 9 February [dec. 21/15], the Governing Council, noting the escalating and emerging environmental problems in Africa, requested the Executive Director to: develop and promote understanding of the linkages between poverty and the environment, means of making people's livelihoods more productive and environmentally sustainable, and policy options for Governments that aimed at integrating the environment in central social and economic processes, including poverty reduction strategies and development frameworks; continue to support the implementation of a 1999 Governing Council decision on support to Africa [YUN 1999, p. 980], particularly within the context of the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment (AMCEN), which was established in 1985 [YUN 1985, p. 793] and scheduled to hold a special session in October 2001 [AMCEN/SS/2001/12], as well as other African regional and subregional organizations; and assist African countries in the preparations for the seventh (2001) Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (see p. 955) and for the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development (see p. 749). Donor countries, international financial institutions and the UN system, including UNEP, were called on to provide financial support and expertise.

The Council asked the Executive Director to support the implementation of the 1981 Abidjan Convention for Cooperation in the Protection and Development of the Marine and Coastal Environment of the West and Central African Region [YUN 1981, p. 840], the 1985 Nairobi Convention for the Protection, Management and Development of the Marine and Coastal Environment of the Eastern African Region [YUN 1985, p. 816] and the 1991 Bamako Convention on the Ban of the Import of All Forms of Hazardous Waste into Africa and the Control of Transboundary Movements of such Wastes Generated in Africa [YUN 1991, p. 627]; to strengthen the Abidjan and Nairobi Conventions; and to report on progress made to the Committee of Permanent Representatives and the Council in 2003.

In a November report [UNEP/GCSS.VII/4], the Executive Director described UNEP activities in support of Africa, including a meeting of climate change negotiators from Africa; support for the participation of African countries in meetings on biodiversity and biosafety; and support for the implementation of the United Nations Convention to combat desertification [YUN 1994, p. 944] (see p. 959), especially for preparing national action plans. In the area of regional agreements and conventions, UNEP made efforts to mobilize African Governments to revitalize the 1981 Abidjan Convention and helped develop a funding mechanism to ensure the financial reliability, predictability and sustainability of the Convention's budget. UNEP facilitated the participation by African countries in expert meetings held in Geneva (August) and in Nairobi (October) to develop guidelines on compliance with and enforcement of MEAs. The African Preparatory Conference for the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Nairobi, 15-18 October) was organized by UNEP, working with the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), the African Development Bank and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) as the joint expanded secretariat for the preparation of the Summit. In association with the African Preparatory Conference, UNEP organized an industry workshop as an input to the ministerial segment of the Conference, as well as a meeting of non-governmental organizations (NGOs). UNEP continued to provide secretariat functions for AMCEN. Other areas of support related to cleaner production centres; sustainable energy; rural energy development; renewable energy projects; industry outreach activities; climate change; biodiversity; international waters; and the emerging priority areas of land degradation, persistent organic pollutants and biosafety.

The UNEP/Global Environment Facility (GEF) portfolio in Africa in 2001 included 61 activities with a total budget of some $48 million. During the year, 14 activities in the Africa portfolio were approved, with total funding of $8.4 million, including $4.7 million in GEF resources.

At the subregional level, UNEP established in June a liaison office in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, to further enhance cooperation with ECA and the Organization of African Unity. Under the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative on Africa (see p. 851), UNEP assisted African countries in reinforcing environmental management capacities; in formulating and implementing key water resource policies and management programmes; and in creating a "water forum".

Water policy and strategy

On 9 February [dec. 21/11], the Governing Council, taking note of a report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.21/INF/21] on progress made to implement Council decisions adopted in 1999 on freshwater [YUN 1999, p. 981] and in 2000 on UNEP's water policy and strategy [YUN 2000, p. 969], accepted UNEP's refined water policy and strategy as contained in a further report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.21/2/Add.1]. Expressing appreciation for the establishment of an expert group on exchange of information on best practices in freshwater management, the Council decided that UNEP should prioritize the identification of available expertise and knowledge relating to the environmental aspects of water quality; facilitate the establishment of partnerships between countries that had expertise and countries that needed it; and promote inter-governmental collaboration at the request of the Governments concerned. The Executive Director was asked to enhance, through the International Environmental Technology Centre, the transfer of environmentally sound technologies for water management; intensify collaboration with Governments, upon request, as well as with other organizations and agencies to further water policy and strategy implementation; and take measures to implement the water policy and strategy and to review it in 2003. He was further requested to identify key policy issues for the environmental aspects of water and to propose policy options in 2003. The Governing Council requested the Executive Director to report to the Council in 2003 on progress made to implement its decision.

Environment and sustainable development

In 2001, CSD, acting as the Preparatory Committee for the World Summit on Sustainable Development (see p. 749), began preparations for the 10-year review in 2002 of the implementation of Agenda 21—a programme of action for sustainable development worldwide, which was adopted by UNCED in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 672].

The Preparatory Committee considered reports relating to the transfer of environmentally sound technologies, cooperation and capacity-building and environmentally sound management of biotechnology; sustainable mountain development; the global status of biodiversity; oceans and seas; protection of the atmosphere; agriculture, land and desertification; progress in forestry since UNCED; and management of toxic chemicals and hazardous and radioactive wastes (see p. 749).

A report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.21/2] highlighted UNEP's contribution to future sessions of CSD in the areas related to the protection of the atmosphere (see p. 963), energy, transport (see below), information for decision-making and participation, and international cooperation for an enabling environment.

Commission action. CSD, at its ninth session (New York, 5 May 2000 and 16-27 April 2001) [E/2001/29] (see p. 747), considered a report of the Secretary-General on transport and sustainable development [E/CN.17/2001/3]. The report reviewed the environmental impact of transport systems and the problems of current transport technology. It recommended policy options to promote sustainability in the transport sector at the national, regional and international levels. Annexed to the report was information on the Global Initiative on Transport Emissions, a joint project of the United Nations and the World Bank, with the cooperation of the private sector, to facilitate cooperation among the automotive and petroleum industries, developing countries and relevant international agencies to promote energy efficiency and reduce environmental problems.

The Intersessional Ad Hoc Working Group on Transportation and Atmosphere (New York, 6-9 March) [E/CN.17/2001/16], which served as a preparatory body for the ninth session of CSD, submitted possible elements for a draft decision on transport.

On 27 April [E/2001/29 (dec. 9/3)], the Commission, emphasizing the importance of international cooperation in ensuring that transport was considered within the general framework of sustainable development, recommended a series of measures to the international community regarding the transfer of cleaner technologies, energy efficiency and the improvement of transport systems; partnerships between the public and private sectors to introduce environmentally sound technologies; and the use of technology transfer of cleaner fuels. Regional cooperation was encouraged through the better utilization of the regional commissions and existing regional development banks, organizations and mechanisms. At the national level, Governments were encouraged to develop transportation systems that were responsive to development needs and, where affordable, would reduce negative environmental impacts. They were also encouraged to involve the private sector in improvements in efficiency and vehicle emission control.

By decision 56/439 of 21 December, the General Assembly took note of the report of the Second Committee on environment and sustainable development [A/56/561]; by decision 56/464 of 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on environment and sustainable development would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session.

Policy and advisory services

Institution-building

A report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.21/4] stated that, in accordance with Governing Council decisions adopted in 1999 [YUN 1999, pp. 973 & 998], UNEP continued to provide developing countries and those with economies in transition with policy and advisory services, particularly technical, legal and policy advice to develop national environmental legislation and relevant institutions. It supported African countries in developing environmental policy and policy instruments and in enhancing their national environmental legislation and related institutions. UNEP had strengthened its regional presence to ensure effective government participation in its work and to take into account regional concerns, priorities and perspectives in the development of policies, planning and implementation. It provided Governments and other parties with information on the state of the global environment and global environmental issues and with advisory services, and provided technical assistance to Governments upon request. Financial limitations had been the deciding factor in determining the amount of UNEP assistance provided; extrabudgetary resources had allowed the provision of assistance to more countries than otherwise would have been possible.

In response to a 1999 Governing Council decision [YUN 1999, p. 973], the Council considered a January report [UNEP/GC.21/INF/15] on the provision of policy and advisory services in key areas of institution-building. UNEP contributed to institution-building in countries at the national and regional levels by providing advisory services on scientific and technical matters, legal advisory services and information on legal, economic and policy instruments and tools, and by convening forums for policy dialogue. Specific activities covered environmental information, assessment and research, including environmental emergency response capacity and strengthening early warning and assessment; enhanced coordination of environmental conventions and the development of environmental policy instruments; freshwater initiatives, technology transfer and industry; and support to Africa.

On 9 February [A/56/25 (dec. 21/24)], the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to strengthen further the provision of technical, legal and policy advice to Governments and regional and subregional institutions dealing with environmental matters, to continue to improve public access to information on environmental matters and policy instruments, and to promote the development of relevant skills and the capacity of key stakeholders and partners. He was asked to report in 2002 on international legal instruments reflecting the provisions contained in principle 10 of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 670], which underlined the fact that environmental issues were best handled with the participation of all concerned citizens and that, at the national level, individuals should have access to information concerning the environment that was held by public authorities.

Economics, trade and financial services

A January note of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.21/INF/22] described UNEP's activities in the areas of economics, trade and finance, which were aimed at improving countries' understanding of the interlinkages and complementarities between environment, trade and development; enhancing countries' capacities in integrating environmental considerations into macroeconomic policies, including trade policies; and promoting sustainable development policies in the financial services sector. The note covered key challenges and UNEP's responses to them, including enhancing awareness and understanding, capacity-building, developing innovative policy tools, fostering partnerships and building consensus, promoting the role of financial services in sustainable development, and increasing international cooperation.

On 9 February [dec. 21/14], the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to further strengthen the secretariat to assist countries, particularly developing countries and countries with economies in transition, to enhance their capacities to develop and implement mutually supportive trade and environmental policies. It agreed that the Executive Director, in close cooperation with the World Trade Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, should develop national capacities to assess the environmental effects of trade; study the effectiveness of market-based incentives in achieving the objectives of MEAs; and continue to promote understanding, dialogue and the dissemination of information about MEAs. The Executive Director was requested to further promote the national development and application of environmental impact assessment, environmental valuation, methodologies for natural resource accounting and relevant economic instruments, in accordance with the socio-economic and development priorities of individual countries; to continue to collaborate with the private sector, including the financial services sector, to enhance its contribution to the achievement of sustainable development through cleaner and more resource-efficient technologies for a life-cycle economy and the transfer of environmentally sound technologies to developing countries; and to consult and brief Governments and to report in 2003.

Coordination and cooperation

Implementation of resolution 53/242

The Governing Council addressed the implementation of various aspects of General Assembly resolution 53/242 [YUN 1999, p. 975], which dealt with issues related to coordination and cooperation, including strengthening UN activities in the area of environment and human settlements.

On 9 February [dec. 21/20], the Council asked the Executive Director to propose to relevant UN system organizations a joint review of their roles in the area of the environment, aimed at identifying and analysing the need for strengthened coordination and cooperation; to continue efforts to enhance policy coherence and synergy among international legal instruments related to the environment and sustainable development at the inter-agency and intergovernmental levels; to promote further international action to enhance synergy between UNEP programmes and multi-lateral environmental conventions; to promote further the engagement of the private sector in addressing environmental challenges; and to ensure that capacity-building and technical assistance, as well as research and scientific studies in the area of the environment, remained important components of UNEP's work programme. It encouraged the Executive Director to strengthen UNEP's collaboration with the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements. He was asked to report in 2003.

The Council asked EMG to publish a benchmark report on progress in its work at regular intervals, urged the Secretary-General to secure resources to ensure the proper functioning of the EMG secretariat and invited Governments in a position to do so to contribute resources.

The Secretary-General was urged to provide resources from the UN regular budget to UNEP for 2002-2003 and to consider other ways of lending support to strengthening UNEP, in view of preparations for and the outcome of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (see p. 749).

Environmental emergencies

On 9 February [dec. 21/17], the Governing Council, having considered a report of the Executive Director containing a draft strategic framework on emergency prevention, preparedness, assessment, response and mitigation [YUN 2000, p. 969], welcomed the Strategic Framework (see p. 950) and requested the Executive Director to establish a process for comments on it and thereafter to support its implementation within UNEP's mandate. It asked the Executive Director to enhance long-term strategic cooperation with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), including the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction (see p. 861), through the joint UNEP/OCHA Environment Unit; to present in 2003 an analysis of the causes and long-term environmental effects of emergencies and the possible policy implications for Governments and the international community; to strengthen cooperation between UNEP and other relevant international organizations in order to assess whether gaps existed in protecting the environment from accidents and man-made disasters; and to support the parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity (see p. 957) in their efforts to consider the issue of non-economic environmental harm, notably by encouraging and promoting cooperation with other relevant international organizations and institutions.

In 2001, the joint UNEP/OCHA Unit established the Core Group of the Advisory Group on Environmental Emergencies (AGEE-CG), which met between full meetings of the Advisory Group on Environmental Emergencies (AGEE) that took place every two years, to discuss selected issues in more substantive detail than could be allowed for in the larger AGEE meetings. At its first meeting (Paris, 5 November), AGEE-CG focused on terrorism and the specific elements that made it a unique threat compared to other environmental and human threats and considered the potential role of the joint Unit. Much of the discussion took place against the background of the terrorist attacks of 11 September in the United States (see p. 60). The Group made a series of recommendations for the work of the joint Unit regarding the environmental components of terrorism, and information gathering and sharing.

During the year, the joint Unit coordinated responses to the environmental aspects of emergencies resulting from floods in Iran, a dump site collapse in the Philippines and drought in Uzbekistan.

Strategic Framework

The 2001 UNEP Strategic Framework on Emergency Prevention, Preparedness, Assessment, Mitigation and Response provided guidance for UNEP's future work in the area of emergencies by identifying the institutional and global contexts for action, as well as its role and key partners within the UN system. It defined environmental emergencies as sudden-onset disasters or accidents resulting from natural, technological or human-induced factors, or a combination thereof, that caused or threatened to cause severe environmental damage, as well as loss of human lives and property. The Framework noted that there was increasing global attention to emergencies, reflecting a complex interplay of economic, social, political and environmental conditions.

Global Environment Facility

The Global Environment Facility (GEF), a joint programme of UNDP, UNEP and the World Bank, was established in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 505] to forge international cooperation and finance activities to address global environmental problems.

On 9 February [dec. 21/25], the Governing Council, having considered a report of the Executive Director containing information on UNEP's participation in GEF from 1999 to 2000 [UNEP/GC/21/4] and a note by the secretariat [YUN 2000, p. 970] on the status of the implementation of the Action Plan on Complementarity between the activities undertaken by UNEP under GEF and its regular programme of work [YUN 1999, p. 977], welcomed the progress made by the Executive Director in strengthening UNEP's role as an implementing agency of GEF and progress achieved in implementing the Action Plan. The Executive Director was requested to keep Governments informed of further progress achieved in enhancing UNEP's role in GEF.

The UNEP portfolio of ongoing activities in 2001 was valued at $369 million, including $194 million in GEF financing. In addition, UNEP was co-implementing, with partner agencies, 15 projects whose UNEP component was worth $30 million. The overall work programme involved the participation of 144 countries.

Regarding the development of the UNEP/GEF portfolio, between January and December 2001, 53 new activities valued at $95 million, including $41 million in GEF financing, were approved. They included five full-size projects, 15 medium-size projects, 13 Project Preparation and Development Facility grants and 20 enabling activities, including those on persistent organic pollutants (POPs). The newly approved activities addressed conserving agro-biodiversity, climate change, POPs, land degradation and integrated catchment management.

Memorandums of understanding

In 2001 [UNEP/GC.22/INF/6], UNEP signed memorandums of understanding (MOUs) with the United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) (February) to establish the terms and conditions for UNOPS to provide services to UNEP; and with the United Nations University (April) to collaborate and consult on issues of common interest, including research and capacity-building projects and other activities at the global, regional and national levels, in order to coordinate their work and to strengthen cooperation.

Participation of civil society

On 9 February [dec. 21/19], the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to further the consultative process with Governments, civil society, the private sector and other major groups on ways to enhance the active engagement and participation of civil society in UNEP's work. It also asked him to submit a report on the outcome of the consultations, as well as a draft strategy for the active engagement of civil society, the private sector and other major groups in UNEP's work, to the Committee of Permanent Representatives, and subsequently to the Council in 2002. The Council decided to include the item in the provisional agenda of its special session in 2002.

Pursuant to the Council's decision, the Executive Director held global and regional consultations and, in December [UNEP/GCSS.VII/4/Add.1], issued a draft strategy for enhanced civil society participation in UNEP's work, particularly in relation to programme implementation, institutional structures and outreach. Specific strengths and weaknesses related to policy, programme, institutional aspects, outreach, consultation and finance were examined during the consultations and brought to the attention of the Committee of Permanent Representatives in August.

Involvement of youth

On 9 February [dec. 21/22], the Governing Council, recalling aspects relating to the involvement of youth in environmental issues contained in the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 50/81 [YUN 1995, p. 1211], and also in Agenda 21, a global plan of action for sustainable development adopted at UNCED [YUN 1992, p. 672], requested the Executive Director to develop a long-term strategy on how UNEP intended to engage and involve young people in environmental issues and debates; declare the engagement and involvement of young people a priority by undertaking a series of activities; and seek extrabudgetary resources to facilitate those activities. It decided to discuss ways of engaging and involving young people in UNEP's work in 2003.

The Youth Conference on Environment and Sustainable Development (Borgholm, Sweden, 23-27 May) marked the beginning of the Youth for Sustainable Development process, launched by UNEP in cooperation with Sweden and Nature and Youth of Denmark in preparation for the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development (see p. 749). A joint UNEP/United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) project on youth and sustainable consumption, designed to provide insight on consumption trends and motives of young people aged between 18 and 25 and to open a dialogue with the future decision makers, was under way.

UNEPnet/Mercure

In response to a 1999 Governing Council request [YUN 1999, p. 979], the Executive Director presented, in January [UNEP/GC.21/7/Add.2], a comprehensive review and cost-benefit analysis, conducted by independent external consultants, of the Mercure satellite communications system, UNEPnet (Internet mechanisms for environmental information access and exchange) and the UNEPnet Implementation Centre. The Mercure system was designed by the European Space Agency in response to an Agenda 21 call to utilize modern electronic telecommunications to improve access to, and the exchange of, environmental data and information for responsible decision-making concerning the environment. The consultants found that UNEPnet had played an important role in the functioning of UNEP's environmental information systems, ensuring electronic connectivity for many UNEP-sponsored establishments; had helped UNEP centres to gather and distribute data sets and services contributing to UNEP's programmatic goals; and had been effective in building environmental information capacity for some programme-targeted locations, allowing some sites to post and receive environmental data and information from the broader global Internet. The consultants reported that the Mercure satellite capacity was rapidly becoming saturated, which could be avoided by the full use of the system's technical capacity, and that there was a financial argument for making more use of Mercure. Due to the growth of Internet sites supplying environmental data, UNEP no longer needed to provide its own, expensive networking capacity, and should seek alternative means of information-sharing and data dissemination using existing Internet-based solutions.

Based on the consultants' findings and recommendations, the Division of Early Warning and Assessment, the Office of the Deputy Executive Director, UNON and the consultants developed a plan of action to address institutional developments intended to streamline the strategic management of UNEP's information and communication technology requirements; operational development designed to meet UNEP's telecommunications requirements through commercial contract provisions, with possible components to assist less developed nations in bridging the "digital divide"; and environmental information services developments emphasizing closer coordination, leadership and collaborative efforts with major developers and providers of environmental information.

The report contained a history of funding sources for UNEPnet/Mercure, which indicated that the total cost of the programme to the Environment Fund for 2000 and 2001 amounted to $213,200 per annum.

On 9 February [dec. 21/34], the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to implement the action plan, while ensuring the continuity of services currently provided by UNEPnet/Mercure to UNEP and other UN bodies and agencies in Nairobi. It authorized him to make direct donation of the Mercure ground station facilities implemented at partner sites in Bolivia, China, Costa Rica, Cuba, Kazakhstan, Mozambique, Nepal, the Niger and Viet Nam effective as at the end of 2001, and asked him to invite those countries, as well as other UN bodies and agencies at UNON, to continue participating in Mercure on a cost-sharing basis. The Executive Director was further requested to report bi-annually to the Committee of Permanent Representatives on the further development of the Mercure telecommunications system for UNON, with special emphasis on its costs and cost recovery, and to report in 2003 on the implementation of the action plan.

Global Environment Outlook

As requested by the Governing Council in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 979], the Executive Director submitted a user profile and impact study [UNEP/GC.21/INF/8] of the first (GEO-1) [YUN 1997, p. 1043] and second (GEO-2) [YUN 1999, p. 979] Global Environment Outlook (GEO) reports, which assessed the state of the environment, and of the GEO process. Data compiled through questionnaires, interviews and case studies indicated that ministers, senior advisers and permanent representatives found GEO-2 to be useful as an overview of the environmental situation at the global and regional levels, providing policy guidance at the national or regional levels, identifying emerging issues and putting national issues in a broader perspective. It was used as an authoritative source for environmental information by both the United Nations and the media, and was being used as course-related material by universities and other academic institutions. The GEO-2 report and process were contributing to regional and national policy development around the world, most identifiably in the growing adoption of the GEO methodology for the production and improvement of state-of-the-environment reports. The report contained sales and distribution data for GEO-2.

A report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.21/2] contained UNEP proposals regarding the optimal frequency and production schedule for future GEO and other related reports. It stated that GEO reports should be published every two years, and that those reports falling on the 10-year anniversaries of the 1972 Stockholm Conference on the Human Environment [YUN 1972, p. 317] and the review of progress on Agenda 21 (see p. 749) should include a comprehensive, integrated assessment of the state of the global environment. Publication of the GEO report should alternate with publication of the World Resources Report, produced jointly with UNDP, the World Bank and the World Resources Institute. UNEP should also produce at least one major environmental outlook report (technical, regional, subregional, thematic or targeted at specific meetings, forums or audiences) in interim years of the GEO report.

UNEP secretariat

OIOS audit and inspection activities

In September, the Secretary-General transmitted the seventh annual Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) report [A/56/381], which included UNEP audit information and covered activities during the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001. OIOS conducted audits of the UNEP International Environmental Technology Centre and reviewed seven UNEP offices in Canada, Europe and Japan. The Office issued six critical audit recommendations concerning the Centre: five dealt with type II gratis personnel (those seconded to UN organizations by Governments) and one concerned accountability of the offices away from headquarters. The report stated that those issues represented a continuing problem and UNEP should take further action to resolve them and to fully implement the OIOS recommendations. OIOS would continue to monitor UNEP's implementation of its recommendations.

OIOS audits of UNEP offices away from headquarters showed that, overall, they were well run but that their accountability had not been clearly established, which was attributed to the lack of clearly defined delegation of authority from UNEP headquarters and failure to distinguish their responsibilities from those of UNON for delivering financial and administrative services. OIOS was also concerned that some of the offices still had not completed host country agreements and were experiencing problems in obtaining exemptions from indirect taxes.

Regarding recommendations made in its 1999 follow-up inspection report to the General Assembly [YUN 2000, p. 971], OIOS stated that UNEP management had provided concrete evidence of actions taken to address most of the recommendations. Those actions related to, among other things, further clarifying the new functional structure of UNEP, enhancing dialogue with its Committee of Permanent Representatives, establishing mechanisms for the delegation of authority and improving programme delivery.

Misdirection of contributions

Following up on a 2000 case in which a private individual had received and refused to return 13 misdirected contributions made by Member States totalling $701,998.94 to the UNEP Trust Fund account [YUN 2000, p. 971], OIOS reported in September [A/56/381] that its investigators had assisted United States law enforcement authorities in preparing criminal proceedings against the individual in question. That individual was subsequently found guilty by a United States court jury, sentenced in April to 24 months in prison and required to make restitution of the misdirected funds to the Trust Fund bank.

UNEP Fund

Following consideration of the Executive Director's report on the proposed biennial programme and support budget for 2002-2003 [UNEP/GC.21/6 & Corr.1] and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [UNEP/GC.21/6/Add.1], the Governing Council, on 9 February (dec. 21/31), approved appropriations of Environment Fund resources of $14.9 million for the biennial budget, $100 million for the programme of work and $5 million for the Fund programme reserve, totalling $119.9 million. It noted that the $14.9 million for management and administrative support costs was conditional on an increase in funding from the UN regular budget for UNON and/or UNEP in the 2002-2003 biennium. The Council reconfirmed the authority of the Executive Director to reallocate resources between programmes up to a maximum of 20 per cent of the appropriation to which the resources were reallocated, and urged him to further increase the level of the financial reserve to $20 million as and when carry-over resources became available over and above those needed to implement the programme approved for the 2000-2001 and 2002-2003 bienniums. It requested the Committee of Permanent Representatives to consult with the Executive Director on ways to provide the Council and the Committee with further information on the distribution of work programme activities at the regional level. It noted with concern that the level of funding from the UN regular budget to UNEP was not sufficient to provide for the core functions of the Programme as stipulated by the General Assembly in resolution 2997(XXVII) [YUN 1972, p. 331], and appealed to the Assembly at its fifty-sixth (2001) session to consider a substantial increase in the UN regular budget allocation to UNEP and UNON for 2002-2003. The Executive Director was requested to provide financial details of work programmes to Governments in accordance with article VI of the General Procedures governing the operations of the Fund, if requested, and to make available to Governments, twice yearly, information on progress made in the implementation of the work programme; and to ensure that earmarked contributions to UNEP, apart from those for which UNEP acted as treasurer, funded activities that were in line with the work programme. The Council authorized him to enter into forward commitments not exceeding $20 million for Fund programme activities for the 2004-2005 biennium, and requested him to prepare a work programme consisting of Fund programme activities with a cost of $120 million for the 2004-2005 biennium. The Executive Director was requested to submit a finalized draft budget and work programme for consideration and approval by the Council in 2003. A February note of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.21/INF/24] contained the estimated distribution of Environment Fund resources by sub-programme objective.

A later report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GCSS.VII/INF/8] contained information on the status of the Environment Fund and other sources of funding for UNEP for the 2000-2001 biennium. The total projected resources for the biennium amounted to $274.84 million.

Trust funds

A secretariat note [UNEP/GC.21/INF/2] contained programmatic descriptions and actual, estimated or projected expenditures of UNEP trust funds for the 1998-1999, 2000-2001 and 2002-2003 bienniums.

On 9 February [dec. 21/32 B], the Governing Council approved the establishment of 12 trust funds and the extension of 27 others.

For the UNEP trust funds, which numbered 100, the projected income and expenditures as at 31 December 2001 were $816.86 million and $650.71 million, respectively.

Resource mobilization strategy

Pursuant to a 1999 Governing Council decision [YUN 1999, p. 982], the Executive Director reported on initial action taken to develop a strategy on stable, adequate and predictable funding for UNEP [UNEP/GC.21/7]. In an addendum [UNEP/GC.21/7/Add.1], the Executive Director presented the draft resource mobilization strategy, which was aimed at stabilizing, increasing and making more predictable the financing of UNEP activities from traditional resources; broadening the donor base within governmental and non-governmental sectors; and stimulating creative fund-raising, including through collaboration with the business community and the general public and the use of the Internet.

On 9 February [dec. 21/32 A], the Governing Council expressed support for the resource mobilization strategy and requested the Executive Director to make renewed and additional efforts towards improving UNEP's financial situation, especially towards increasing the number of countries contributing to the Environment Fund. It called on Governments and other relevant parties, including non-State actors, to provide stable and predictable financial and other resources to UNEP, taking the strategy into account. It also requested the Executive Director to implement the strategy and to keep Governments informed of progress through the Committee of Permanent Representatives, especially on fund-raising from non-State actors and on responses to special initiatives and emergency actions.

Financial reserve loan

The Governing Council, on 9 February [dec. 21/33], authorized the Executive Director to approve an advance of up to $8 million from the Environment Fund financial reserve to the UN Secretariat on a loan basis for the construction of additional office accommodation at UNON, subject and without prejudice to final approval by ACABQ and, as appropriate, by other competent authorities. It requested the Executive Director to ensure that the agreement between the Secretariat and UNEP included a provision that there should be an immediate repayment if requested by him. The Executive Director was asked to submit regular status reports to the Committee of Permanent Representatives and to report in 2003 on the decision's implementation.

International conventions and mechanisms

Implementation of environmental conventions

Following consideration of a report of the Executive Director on UNEP action to support and promote collaboration among multilateral environmental conventions [UNEP/GC.21/4] and a secretariat note on changes to the status of existing conventions and protocols from 1 March 1999 to 31 January 2001 [UNEP/GC.21/INF/16], the Governing Council, on 9 February [dec. 21/26], authorized the Executive Director to transmit the reports, together with comments made by delegations and relevant information received by the secretariat as at 31 May, to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth (2001) session.

A January note of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.21/INF/19], describing UNEP efforts to harmonize national reporting by parties to MEAs, noted that EMC had decided to establish an issue management group on the harmonization of national reporting and had implemented a pilot project, which would be presented to the World Summit on Sustainable Development in 2002 (see p. 749).

A secretariat note [UNEP/GC.21/INF/5] reviewed UNEP's initiative to develop guidelines relating to compliance with and enforcement of MEAs to ensure their effective implementation.

On 9 February [dec. 21/27], the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to continue to prepare the draft guidelines and to ensure the open-ended and transparent nature of the process. It encouraged him to complete the process and submit the draft guidelines in 2002.

The UNEP Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on the Development of Guidelines on Compliance and Enforcement of Multilateral Environmental Agreements, at its first meeting (Nairobi, 22-26 October), adopted draft guidelines on the subject [UNEP/(DEPI)/MEAs/WG.1/3], which were to be submitted to the Governing Council for its consideration in 2002.

On 29 November, the General Assembly reaffirmed that international disarmament forums should take into account the relevant environmental norms in negotiating treaties and agreements (resolution 56/24 F) (see p. 518).

Climate change convention

As at 31 December, 186 States were parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC), which was opened for signature in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 681] and entered into force in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 938]. During the year, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) acceded to the Convention, replacing the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

At year's end, 46 States were parties to the Kyoto Protocol to the Convention [YUN 1997, p. 1048]. During the year, Argentina, the Cook Islands, Malta, Romania and Uruguay ratified it; Bangladesh, Burundi, Colombia, the Gambia, Malawi, Mauritius, Nauru, Senegal and Vanuatu acceded to it; and the Czech Republic approved it.

Conference of Parties

The Conference of the Parties to UNFCCC, at its resumed sixth session (Bonn, Germany, 16-27 July) [FCCC/CP/2001/5 & Add.1,2], adopted the core elements for the implementation of the 1998 Buenos Aires Plan of Action to reduce the risk of global climate change [YUN 1998, p. 987] (the Bonn Agreements). The Bonn Agreements provided for the establishment of two new funds under the Convention, to be managed by GEF: a special climate change fund to finance adaptation, technology transfer, emission reduction and assistance to developing country parties in diversifying their economies; and a least developed countries (LDCs) fund to support their implementation of the Convention, particularly in their adaptation needs. An adaptation fund, also to be managed by GEF, was to be established under the Kyoto Protocol to finance adaptation projects/programmes. An expert group on technology transfer was also established. Other decisions that gave effect to the Bonn Agreements related to capacity-building in developing countries and in countries with economies in transition, the development and transfer of technologies, the impact of single projects on emissions, and administrative and budgetary questions. Further decisions dealt with the potential of clean energy to contribute to global environmental benefits and the review of various articles of the Kyoto Protocol. As the Conference was unable to complete its work on the issue of land use, land-use change and forestry, its work programme on mechanisms, procedures and mechanisms on compliance under the Kyoto Protocol and best practices in policies and measures among parties, it forwarded those items to its seventh session (see below) for further consideration. In other action, following consideration of a June report of the Executive Secretary of the Convention on the institutional linkage of the UNFCCC secretariat to the United Nations [FCCC/SBI/2001/5], the Conference approved the continuation of the current institutional linkage, which was adopted by the Conference in 1995 and endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 50/115 [YUN 1995, p. 1071], for a further five-year period, to be reviewed by the Assembly and the Conference not later than 31 December 2006. In September [A/56/385], the Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly approve the continuation of the institutional linkage; the Assembly did so in resolution 56/199 (see below).

On 10 November, the seventh session of the Conference (Marrakesh, Morocco, 29 October–10 November) [FCCC/CP/2001/13 & Add.1-4, Add.1/Corr.1, Add.3/Corr.1 & Add.4/Corr.1] adopted the Marrakesh Ministerial Declaration, which emphasized the linkage between sustainable development and climate change; reaffirmed development and poverty eradication as the overriding priorities of developing countries; and called on countries to explore synergies between the Convention and the Conventions on biodiversity (see p. 957) and desertification (see p. 959). The Declaration noted that the decisions adopted by the seventh session, constituting the Marrakesh Accords (see below), would facilitate the timely entry into force of the Kyoto Protocol. The President of the Conference and the UNFCCC Executive Secretary were requested to continue to participate actively in the preparations for the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development and in the Summit itself (see p. 749) and to report to the Conference at its eighth (2002) session.

The Marrakesh Accords, which set new emissions reduction targets for developed countries, with an average reduction of 5.2 per cent from 1990 levels by 2012, comprised a set of decisions spelling out rules for implementing the Kyoto Protocol. Major areas covered in the Accords were operating rules for international emissions trading and the Protocol's two other flexibility mechanisms (the clean development mechanism and joint implementation) and rules defining a party's eligibility to participate in the mechanisms; accounting procedures that provided for fungibility—meaning that emissions units under all three mechanisms could be transferred several times as equal units; a compliance regime; and the creation of a new type of emissions unit for "sink credits"—credits towards emissions targets for carbon absorbed by forests, soils and other so-called sinks.

The Conference adopted decisions on the items forwarded to it by the resumed sixth session (see p. 954). The eighth session of the Conference was scheduled to take place from 23 October to 1 November 2002 in India.

The Subsidiary Body for Scientific and Technological Advice (SBSTA) held its fourteenth session (24–27 July) [FCCC/SBSTA/2001/2] in Bonn, as did the Subsidiary Body for Implementation (SBI) [FCCC/SBI/2001/9]. The fifteenth sessions of SBSTA (29 October–6 November) [FCCC/SBSTA/2001/8] and SBI (29 October–8 November) [FCCC/SBI/2001/18] were held in Marrakesh.

Note by Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly decision 55/443 [YUN 2000, p. 972], the Secretary-General, in October [A/56/509], transmitted a report of the UNFCCC Executive Secretary on the outcome of the fourth (1998) [YUN 1998, p. 987], fifth (1999) [YUN 1999, p. 984] and sixth (2000) [YUN 2000, p. 972] sessions of the Conference of the Parties. The report also discussed the institutional linkage of the Convention's secretariat to the United Nations (see above).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/561/Add.6], adopted resolution 56/199 without vote [agenda item 98 (f)].

Protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/115 of 20 December 1995, 51/184 of 16 December 1996, 52/199 of 18 December 1997 and 54/222 of 22 December 1999, its decision 55/443 of 20 December 2000 and other resolutions relating to the protection of the global climate for present and future generations of mankind,

Noting that most States and one regional economic integration organization have ratified or acceded to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change,

Remaining deeply concerned that all countries, in particular developing countries, including the least developed countries and small island States, face increased risk from the negative impacts of climate change,

Noting that, to date, the Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change has attracted forty-five ratifications,

Expressing its deep appreciation to the Government of Morocco for hosting the seventh session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change at Marrakesh, Morocco, from 29 October to 9 November 2001,

Noting the adoption of the Bonn Agreements on the implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention, at the second part of its sixth session, held at Bonn, Germany, from 16 to 27 July 2001,

Expressing its appreciation to the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change for its excellent work in preparing the Third Assessment Report, and encouraging parties to make full use of the information contained therein,

Taking note of the decision of the Conference of the Parties at its sixth session to approve the continuation of the current institutional linkage of the secretariat of the Convention to the United Nations and related administrative arrangements for a further five-year period, to be reviewed by both the General Assembly and the Conference of the Parties no later than 31 December 2006,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General on the continuation of the institutional linkage of the secretariat of the Convention to the United Nations,

Taking note further of the decision of the Conference of the Parties inviting the General Assembly to decide at its fifty-sixth session on the question of meeting the conference-servicing expenses of the Convention from its regular budget, taking into account the views expressed by Member States,

Noting that, by paragraph (c) of its decision 55/443, it decided to include in the calendar of conferences and meetings for the biennium 2002-2003 the sessions of the Conference of the Parties and its subsidiary bodies envisaged for the biennium, in accordance with the decisions adopted by the Conference of the Parties,

Taking note of the report of the Executive Secretary of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, which was prepared in response to the invitation of the General Assembly in paragraph (d) of its decision 55/443,

1. Recalls the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in which heads of State and Government resolved to make every effort to ensure the entry into force of the Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, preferably by the tenth anniversary of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 2002, and to embark on the required reduction of emissions of greenhouse gases, and calls upon States to work cooperatively towards achieving the ultimate objective of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change;

2. Calls upon all States parties to continue to take effective steps to implement their commitments under the Convention, in accordance with the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities;

3. Stresses the importance of capacity-building, as well as of developing and disseminating innovative technologies in respect of key sectors of development, in particular energy, and of investment in that regard, including through private sector involvement, market-oriented approaches and supportive public policies, as well as international cooperation, emphasizes that climate change and its adverse impacts have to be addressed through cooperation at all levels, and welcomes the efforts of all parties to implement the Convention;

4. Takes note of the Marrakesh Accords, adopted by the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change at its seventh session, complementing the Bonn Agreements on the implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action, paving the way for the timely entry into force of the Kyoto Protocol;

5. Takes note with appreciation of the Marrakesh Ministerial Declaration, adopted by the Conference of the Parties at its seventh session as a contribution to the preparatory process for the World Summit on Sustainable Development;

6. Encourages the conferences of the parties to and the secretariats of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the Convention on Biological Diversity and the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa and other international instruments related to the environment and sustainable development, as well as relevant organizations, especially the United Nations Environment Programme, including, as appropriate, the involvement of the Environmental Management Group, to continue their work for enhancing mutual complementarities with full respect for the status of the secretariats of the conventions and the autonomous decision-making prerogatives of the conferences of the parties to the conventions concerned, to strengthen cooperation with a view to facilitating progress in the implementation of those conventions at the international, regional and national levels and to report thereon to their respective conferences of the parties;

7. Approves the continuation of the institutional linkage of the secretariat of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change to the United Nations, and related administrative arrangements, for a further five-year period;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to review the functioning of that institutional linkage not later than 31 December 2006, in consultation with the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, with a view to making such modifications as may be considered desirable by both parties, and to report thereon to the General Assembly;

9. Invites the conferences of the parties to the multilateral environmental conventions, when setting the dates of their meetings, to take into consideration the schedule of meetings of the General Assembly and the Commission on Sustainable Development so as to ensure the adequate representation of developing countries at those meetings;

10. Invites the Executive Secretary of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the work of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the sub-item entitled "Protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind".

Vienna Convention and Montreal Protocol

As at 31 December, 183 States and the European Community (EC) were parties to the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer [YUN 1985, p. 804], which entered into force in 1988 [YUN 1998, p. 810]. In 2001, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Nauru, Palau, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone and Somalia acceded to the Convention; FRY succeeded to it, replacing the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

Parties to the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, which was adopted in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 686], numbered 182 States and the EC; to the 1990 Amendment to the Protocol, 159 and the EC; to the 1992 Amendment, 136 and the EC; to the 1997 Amendment, 75 and the EC; and to the 1999 Amendment, 24.

The Thirteenth Meeting of the Parties to the Montreal Protocol (Colombo, Sri Lanka, 16-19 October) [UNEP/OzL.Pro.13/10] adopted decisions on the 2003-2005 replenishment of the Multilateral Fund for the Implementation of the Protocol and its operation, the assessment of the ozone-depleting potential of new substances, the use of n-propyl bromide, the production of chlorofluorocarbon-free metered-dose inhalers, critical-use exemptions for methyl bromide, illegal trade in ozone-depleting substances (ODS), and compliance by a number of parties. The Meeting adopted, and annexed to its report, the Colombo Declaration on Renewed Commitment to the Protection of the Ozone Layer to Mark the Forthcoming World Summit on Sustainable Development, in 2002, the Fifteenth Anniversary of the Montreal Protocol and the Tenth Anniversary of the Establishment of the Multilateral Fund. It decided to convene the Fourteenth Meeting of the Parties in Nairobi in November 2002.

Convention on air pollution

As at 31 December, 47 States and the EC were parties to the 1979 Convention on Long-Range Transboundary Air Pollution [YUN 1979, p. 710], which entered into force in 1983 [YUN 1983, p. 645]. Eight protocols to the Convention dealt with the programme for monitoring and evaluation of the pollutants in Europe (1984), the reduction of sulphur emissions or their transboundary fluxes by at least 30 per cent (1985), the control of emissions of nitrogen oxides or their transboundary fluxes (1988), the control of volatile organic compounds or their transboundary fluxes (1991), further reduction of sulphur emissions (1984), heavy metals (1998), POPs (1998) and the abatement of acidification, eutrophication and ground-level ozone (1999).

The nineteenth session of the Executive Body for the Convention (Geneva, 11-14 December) [ECE/EB.AIR/75] adopted decisions related to compliance, the facilitation of participation of countries with economies in transition and various budgetary questions. It adopted its work plan for 2002.

Convention on Biological Diversity

At year's end, 181 States and the EC were parties to the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 683], which entered into force in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 810]. During 2001, the Convention was ratified by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and acceded to by Saudi Arabia.

As at 31 December, nine States were parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety, which was adopted in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 973]. During the year, the Czech Republic, Fiji, Norway and Uganda ratified the Protocol and Lesotho, Nauru, and Saint Kitts and Nevis acceded to it.

The sixth (12-16 March) [UNEP/CBD/COP/6/3] and seventh (12-16 November) [UNEP/CBD/COP/6/4] meetings of the Subsidiary Body on Scientific, Technical and Technological Advice (SBSTTA), both held in Montreal, Canada, adopted recommendations for consideration by the sixth (2002) meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention. A recommendation on forest biological diversity was among those adopted by SBSTTA in November.

The Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Access and Benefit-sharing (Bonn, 22-26 October) [UNEP/CBD/COP/6/6] adopted the draft Bonn Guidelines on access to genetic resources and fair and equitable sharing of the benefits arising out of their utilization and recommended that the Conference of the Parties to the Convention finalize and adopt them. The Open-ended Intersessional Meeting on the Strategic Plan, National Reports and Implementation of the Convention on Biological Diversity (Montreal, 19-21 November) [UNEP/CBD/COP/6/5] agreed upon a structure and draft elements of the strategic plan for submission to the sixth (2002) meeting of the Conference of the Parties.

In November, the Convention secretariat published Global Biodiversity Outlook, a periodic report on biological diversity. A workshop on the strategic plan had been held from 28 to 30 May in Seychelles.

Note by Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 55/201 [YUN 2000, p. 974], the Secretary-General transmitted, in July [A/56/126], a report of the Executive Secretary of the Convention on ongoing work and cooperation with the Assembly and other relevant institutions.

Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety

The second meeting of the Intergovernmental Committee for the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety (ICCP) (Nairobi, 1-5 October) [UNEP/CBD/ICCP/2/15] considered the preparations for the first meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention serving as the meeting of the parties to the Protocol.

Governing Council action. The Governing Council considered a January report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.21/INF/18] describing the implementation of a 1999 Council decision on biosafety [YUN 1999, p. 987] and drawing attention to the need to promote capacity-building for safety in biotechnology to prepare countries for the entry into force of the Cartagena Protocol. It presented a new UNEP/GEF biosafety programme as follow-up to a UNEP/GEF pilot biosafety enabling activity project. Annexed to the report was the Montpellier Declaration on the Cartagena Protocol, adopted by the first meeting of ICCP [YUN 2000, p. 973].

On 9 February [dec. 21/8], the Council encouraged countries that had not yet signed the Cartagena Protocol to do so, followed by ratification thereof. It commended GEF's approval of the UNEP/GEF Development of National Biosafety Frameworks Project to benefit up to 100 GEF-eligible developing countries and countries with economies in transition. The Executive Director was requested to continue to mobilize resources for capacity-building initiatives in the area of biosafety, to mobilize resources and support, as appropriate, for the establishment and/or further strengthening of subregional and regional biosafety risk-assessment capabilities, considering the capacity need at the national level, and to report in 2003.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/561/Add.4], adopted resolution 56/197 without vote [agenda item 98 (d)].

Convention on Biological Diversity

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/201 of 20 December 2000 on the Convention on Biological Diversity, in which it, inter alia, decided to proclaim 22 May, the date of the adoption of the text of the Convention, as the International Day for Biological Diversity,

Recognizing the importance of the adoption by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention, in its decision EM-1/3 of 29 January 2000, of the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety to the Convention on Biological Diversity, the subsequent signature of the Protocol by one hundred and three parties to the Convention by 5 June 2001, and the ratification thereof or accession thereto by nine parties to date,

Expressing its appreciation for the generous offer of the Government of the Netherlands to host the sixth meeting of the Conference of the Parties, and the third meeting of the Intergovernmental Committee for the Cartagena Protocol, which will be held at The Hague from 8 to 26 April 2002,

Urging the parties to the Convention to undertake thorough preparations to advance progress on all issues that are included in the agenda of the sixth meeting of the Conference of the Parties,

1. Takes note of the report of the Executive Secretary of the Convention on Biological Diversity, as submitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

2. Notes the outcome of the first meeting of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Access and Benefit-sharing, which addresses the appropriate access to genetic resources and the fair and equitable sharing of benefits arising out of its utilization, hosted by the Government of Germany from 22 to 26 October 2001;

3. Also notes the outcome of the second meeting of the Intergovernmental Committee for the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety, held at Nairobi from 1 to 5 October 2001;

4. Welcomes the fact that one hundred and eighty-one States and one regional economic integration organization have become parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity, and urges States that have not joined the Convention to become parties to it, without further delay;

5. Calls upon parties to the Convention to become parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety as soon as possible;

6. Encourages the conferences of the parties to, and the secretariats of, the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the Convention on Biological Diversity and the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, and other international instruments related to the environment and sustainable development, as well as relevant organizations, especially the United Nations Environment Programme, including, as appropriate, the involvement of the Environmental Management Group, to continue their work on enhancing mutual complementarities, with full respect for the status of the secretariats of the conventions and the autonomous decision-making prerogatives of the conferences of the parties to the conventions concerned, to strengthen cooperation with a view to facilitating progress in the implementation of those conventions at the international, regional and national levels and to report thereon to their respective conferences of the parties;

7. Welcomes the decision of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity regarding its programme of work for forest biological diversity, and encourages the parties to and the secretariat of the Convention to cooperate with the United Nations Forum on Forests, inter alia, with regard to respecting, preserving and maintaining the knowledge, innovations and practices of indigenous and local communities embodying traditional lifestyles, in accordance with article 8 (j) and related provisions of the Convention;

8. Takes note of the fact that the provisions of the Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights and the Convention on Biological Diversity are interrelated, in particular with respect to intellectual property rights and relevant provisions of the Convention, and invites the World Trade Organization and the World Intellectual Property Organization, within their respective mandates, to continue to explore this relationship, taking into account the ongoing work in other relevant forums and bearing in mind decision V/26 B of the Conference of the Parties;

9. Invites all funding institutions and bilateral and multilateral donors, as well as regional funding institutions and non-governmental organizations, to cooperate with the secretariat of the Convention on Biological Diversity in the implementation of the programme of work;

10. Requests the conferences of the parties to the multilateral environmental conventions, when setting the dates of their meetings, to take into consideration the schedule of meetings of the General Assembly and the Commission on Sustainable Development so as to ensure the adequate representation of developing countries at those meetings;

11. Calls upon parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity to settle urgently any arrears and to pay their contributions in full and in a timely manner so as to ensure continuity in the cash flows required to finance the ongoing work of the Conference of the Parties, the subsidiary bodies and the Convention secretariat;

12. Looks forward to the contribution of the Convention on Biological Diversity to the preparations for the World Summit on Sustainable Development, bearing in mind the decisions taken by the Commission on Sustainable Development at its tenth session;

13. Invites the Executive Secretary of the Convention on Biological Diversity to report to the General Assembly on the ongoing work regarding the Convention;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the sub-item entitled "Convention on Biological Diversity".

Convention to combat desertification

In 2001, Belarus, Bulgaria, Poland, Slovenia and Thailand acceded to the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa [YUN 1994, p. 944], which entered into force in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 958], bringing the total number of parties to 177.

The Conference of the Parties, at its fifth session (Geneva, 1-12 October) [ICCP/COP(5)/11 & Corr.1 & Add.1], decided to establish the Committee for the Review of the Implementation of the Convention (CRIC) as a subsidiary body of the Conference. The first session of CRIC was scheduled for November 2002 in Bonn. The Conference took note of the report of its ad hoc working group (AHWG) on the review of implementation [ICCD/COP(4)/AHWG/6], following its intersessional meeting (Bonn, 19 March-6 April), at which the group reviewed 114 national and subregional reports and discussed new strategies and policy frameworks, the implementation review process, the financial mechanism for the Convention and cooperation between regions. In other action, the Conference decided to submit, as inputs to the preparatory process of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (see p. 749), the Chairman's summary of the Ministerial and High-level Interactive Dialogue sessions held during the Conference and AHWG reports. Other decisions related to regional approaches and coordination; contributions to and participation in the World Summit; traditional knowledge; the promotion and strengthening of relationships with other relevant conventions, international organizations, institutions and agencies; early warning systems; dryland degradation and the Millennium Ecosystem Assessment (see p. 961); and administrative issues. The sixth session was scheduled for October 2003 in Bonn. Within the context of the Regional Annex for Latin America and the Caribbean of the Convention, country parties of the region held their seventh meeting (La Serena, Chile, 21-24 August) [ICCD/COP(5)/INF.10] to identify priority actions and to establish and develop subregional and regional cooperation through a regional action programme to combat desertification.

The Committee on Science and Technology, a subsidiary body of the Conference (Geneva, 2-4 October), considered, among other things, reports on a proposal of the Government of Italy for a pilot project to create a network of institutions, bodies and experts on traditional knowledge [ICCD/COP(5)/CST/2], on communication strategies to generate best practices for combating desertification and mitigating the effects of drought [ICCD/COP(5)/CST/6], and on benchmarks and indicators [ICCD/COP(5)/CST/7].

Governing Council action. In response to a 1999 Governing Council request [YUN 1999, p. 989], the Executive Director submitted a review of UNEP support for the implementation of the Convention [UNEP/GC.21/INF/10] during the period 1999-2000. A further report of the Executive Director described the implementation of the Convention in relation to land degradation [UNEP/GC.21/2].

On 9 February [dec. 21/1], the Council requested the Executive Director to strengthen UNEP's capability to respond to global land issues in order to fulfil its mandate as Task Manager for chapter 12 of Agenda 21, on combating desertification and drought [YUN 1992, p. 672], and to support the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on desertification; to further strengthen the functional integration of UNEP's land resource management and soil conservation policy, and to strengthen UNEP's collaboration with the World Bank and UNDP, with a view to enhancing GEF assistance to countries for activities related to land degradation; to strengthen collaboration with relevant UN organizations and agencies and other organizations concerned with assistance for mitigating land degradation and for the implementation of the Convention; and to continue to assist countries affected by land degradation in the development of a pipeline of projects for financing by GEF and other relevant financial mechanisms.

Report of Secretary-General. As requested in General Assembly resolution 55/204 [YUN 2000, p. 976], the Secretary-General, in a July report [A/56/175], discussed the work of AHWG; an adjustment to the Convention's 2000-2001 programme budget; procedures for the review of the Convention's implementation; action by States; and regional implementation. The report reviewed the functioning of the institutional linkage, including financial arrangements, between the secretariat of the Convention and the United Nations, as approved by the Assembly in resolution 52/198 [YUN 1997, p. 1053]. No significant changes had taken place in the substantive linkage, and it was considered to have provided a sound basis for the day-to-day functioning of the Convention secretariat. The Secretary-General proposed that the Assembly approve the continuation of the institutional linkage for a further five-year period, to be reviewed by the Assembly and the Conference not later than 31 December 2006; the Assembly did so in resolution 56/196 (below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/561/Add.3], adopted resolution 56/196 without vote [agenda item 98 (c)].

Implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/204 of 20 December 2000 and other resolutions relating to the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa,

Expressing its deep appreciation to the Government of Germany for the generous manner in which it hosted and provided facilities for the fourth session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention,

Noting with satisfaction that the fifth session of the Conference of the Parties was held at the United Nations Office at Geneva from 1 to 12 October 2001,

Expressing its deep appreciation to the Government of Switzerland for the organization of the fifth session of the Conference of the Parties and its special events in Geneva,

Welcoming the decision taken by the Council of the Global Environment Facility at its May 2001 session to pursue the designation of land degradation, primarily desertification and deforestation, as a focal area of the Facility, as a means of enhancing its support for the successful implementation of the Convention,

Acknowledging that desertification and drought are problems of a global dimension in that they affect all regions of the world and that joint actions of the international community are needed to combat desertification and/or mitigate the effects of drought, including the integration of strategies for poverty eradication,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the outcome of the fourth session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, in particular the adoption of the Declaration on the Commitments to Enhance the Implementation of the Obligations under the Convention;

3. Also welcomes the outcome of the fifth session of the Conference of the Parties;

4. Notes the establishment of the Committee for the Review of the Implementation of the Convention as a subsidiary body of the Conference of the Parties, and invites parties and other actors to participate in the first session of the Committee, which shall be held at Bonn, Germany, from 18 to 29 November 2002, in accordance with Conference of the Parties decision 2/COP.5 of 12 October 2001;

5. Also notes that the mandate and functions of the Committee shall be subject to renewal at the seventh session of the Conference of the Parties, in the light of lessons learned during the overall review of the Committee;

6. Encourages the conferences of the parties to and the secretariats of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the Convention on Biological Diversity, the Convention to Combat Desertification and other international instruments related to environment and sustainable development, as well as relevant organizations, especially the United Nations Environment Programme, with, as appropriate, the involvement of the Environmental Management Group, to continue their work on enhancing mutual complementarities, with full respect for the status of the secretariats of the conventions and the autonomous decision making prerogatives of the conferences of the parties to the conventions concerned, to strengthen cooperation with a view to facilitating progress in the implementation of those conventions at the international, regional and national levels and to report thereon to their respective conferences of the parties;

7. Welcomes the decision of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention to Combat Desertification to submit to the preparatory process of the World Summit on Sustainable Development, as inputs, the Chairman's summary of the Ministerial and High-level Interactive Dialogue sessions held at the fifth session of the Conference of the Parties, including the challenges of and opportunities in combating desertification, controlling land degradation and mitigating the effects of drought in affected developing countries, as well as those relating to financial resources and achieving sustainable development, and the comprehensive report of the Ad Hoc Working Group for the in-depth review and analysis of reports submitted at the third and fourth sessions of the Conference of the Parties;

8. Also welcomes the decision taken by the Council of the Global Environment Facility, under item 7 of the agenda of its meeting in December 2001, to consider at its next meeting proposed amendments to the Instrument for the Establishment of the Restructured Global Environment Facility to designate land degradation, primarily desertification and deforestation, as a focal area of the Facility, as a means of enhancing its support for the successful implementation of the Convention, with a view to the Council recommending approval of such amendments by the Assembly of States participating in the Facility at its meeting in October 2002;

9. Encourages the Conference of the Parties and the Council and Assembly of the Global Environment Facility to work cooperatively and effectively to facilitate the financing of the full implementation of the Convention by the Facility to achieve the objectives of the Convention in the area of land degradation, primarily desertification and deforestation;

10. Notes with appreciation that some affected developing countries have adopted their national, sub-regional and regional action programmes, and urges affected developing countries that have not yet done so to accelerate the process of elaboration and adoption of their action programmes, with a view to finalizing them as soon as possible;

11. Calls upon the international community to contribute to the implementation of those programmes through, inter alia, the conclusion of partnership agreements and through the bilateral and multilateral cooperation programmes that are available to implement the Convention, including contributions from non-governmental organizations and the private sector, and to support the efforts of the developing countries to implement the Convention;

12. Invites affected developing countries to place the implementation of their action programmes to combat desertification high among their priorities in their dialogue with their development partners;

13. Notes with satisfaction the steps being taken by affected developing countries that are parties to the Convention, with the assistance of international organizations and bilateral development partners, to implement the Convention, and the efforts being made to promote the participation of all actors of civil society in the elaboration and implementation of national action programmes to combat desertification, and in that regard encourages countries to cooperate at the sub-regional and regional levels, as appropriate;

14. Welcomes the strengthened cooperation between the secretariat of the Convention and the Global Mechanism, and encourages further efforts in that regard for the effective implementation of the Convention;

15. Invites all parties to pay promptly and in full the contributions required for the core budget of the Convention for the biennium 2002-2003, and urges all parties that have not yet paid their contributions for the year 1999 and/or the biennium 2000-2001 to do so as soon as possible in order to ensure continuity in the cash flow required to finance the ongoing work of the Conference of the Parties, the secretariat and the Global Mechanism;

16. Calls upon Governments, multilateral financial institutions, regional development banks, regional economic integration organizations and all other interested organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations and the private sector, to contribute generously to the General Fund, the Supplementary Fund and the Special Fund, in accordance with the relevant paragraphs of the financial rules of the Conference of the Parties, and welcomes the financial support already provided by some countries;

17. Decides to include in the calendar of conferences and meetings for the biennium 2002-2003 the sessions of the Conference of the Parties and its subsidiary bodies, including the sixth ordinary session of the Conference of the Parties and the meetings of its subsidiary bodies;

18. Encourages the United Nations Development Programme to continue implementing decision 2000/23 of 29 September 2000 of its Executive Board pertaining to the cooperation between the secretariat of the Convention and the United Nations Development Programme in order to mainstream activities to combat desertification at the national, subregional and regional levels;

19. Approves the continuation of the current institutional linkage and related administrative arrangements between the United Nations Secretariat and the secretariat of the Convention for a further five-year period, to be reviewed by the General Assembly and the Conference of the Parties not later than 31 December 2006;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution;

21. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the sub-item entitled "Implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa".

Environmental activities

Follow-up to Millennium Summit

The Millennium Ecosystem Assessment, proposed by the Secretary-General in his report to the United Nations Millennium Summit (YUN 2000, p. 977), was launched in 2001 as part of the observance of World Environment Day on 5 June. The Assessment was a four-year international collaborative effort to evaluate the state of the major ecosystems (forests, freshwater systems, grasslands, coastal areas, agroecosystems), designed by UNDP, UNEP, the World Bank and the World Resources Institute and its partners. At the time of the launch, assessments were under way for Southern Africa, South-East Asia, Central America, western China and Norway.

In a September report [A/56/326] on the implementation of the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 55/2 [YUN 2000, p. 49], the Secretary-General proposed strategies to protect the environment. He called for efforts to ensure the entry into force of the 1997 Kyoto Protocol [YUN 1997, p. 1048] to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, which was opened for signature in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 681] and entered into force in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 938] (see p. 954). Collective efforts needed to be intensified towards the management, conservation and sustainable development of all types of forests, and towards reducing the number and effects of natural and man-made disasters. The Secretary-General appealed for support to implement the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa [YUN 1994, p. 944], which entered into force in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 958] (see p. 959), by taking measures to prevent land degradation and focusing on new participatory approaches to solving the problem of desertification. The Secretary-General called for the universal ratification of the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 683], which entered into force in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 810], and the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety [YUN 2000, p. 973] (see p. 957); a halt to unsustainable exploitation of water resources by developing water management strategies; and free access to information on the human genome sequence (for information on the human rights aspect of the human genome, see p. 674).

The General Assembly, in resolution 56/95 of 14 December (see p. 1279), took note of the Secretary-General's report.

The atmosphere

In 2001, UNEP reported that while the battle against chlorofluorocarbons was being won, new challenges were emerging. Bromine concentrations, more effective at destroying ozone than chlorine, were increasing. New chemicals such as n-propyl bromide and halon-1202, which were not controlled by the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer [YUN 1987, p. 686] (see p. 957), were being used as substitutes for banned ODS. The new substances threatened the UNEP-estimated recovery of the ozone layer to pre-1980 levels by 2050, including the closure of the ozone hole over Antarctica which, in September, extended over 24 million square kilometres.

The Secretary-General, in his message marking the International Day for the Preservation of the Ozone Layer (16 September), warned of a thriving illegal trade in ODS and other products controlled by the Montreal Protocol.

During the year, UNEP provided services to help countries curb illegal trading in ODS.

Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change

The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC), at its seventeenth session (Nairobi, 4-6 April), discussed the interlinkages between biodiversity and climate change, a proposed report on climate change and sustainable development, information and outreach activities, and IPCC's future work programme and 2002-2004 budget.

At its eighteenth session (Wembley, United Kingdom, 23-29 September), the Panel completed and approved its Third Assessment Report, which showed that changes in the climate system had occurred, hydrological systems and terrestrial and marine ecosystems had been affected by temperature increases, climate change would have either beneficial or adverse effects on environmental and socio-economic systems, and climate change would exacerbate water shortages in many water-scarce areas. Overall, climate change was projected to increase threats to human health and its impacts would fall disproportionately on the developing countries. The Panel decided to continue to prepare comprehensive assessment reports; it adopted several other decisions regarding its work and mandate, including its 2002-2004 work programme and budget.

Governing Council action. Following consideration of a report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.21/2], the Governing Council adopted a series of climate-related decisions.

Regarding the implementation of thrust 3 of the Climate Agenda on studies of climate impact assessment and response strategies to reduce vulnerability [YUN 1995, p. 1077] and the World Climate Impact Assessment and Response Strategies Programme of the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) [YUN 1991, p. 992], the Council, on 9 February [dec. 21/9 A], requested UNEP to continue to carry out activities related to climate impact assessment and response strategies in partnership with other agencies participating in the Climate Agenda. It asked the Executive Director to further promote technical assistance to developing countries in order to implement MEAs. The Council urged UNEP to continue to collaborate with international organizations to further the objectives of the Climate Agenda.

In a decision on IPCC [dec. 21/9 B], the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to disseminate the findings of IPCC's Third Assessment Report (see above), following publication, with a view to raising awareness among civil society and policy makers. It requested IPCC to continue to update its assessments and to report, through its Chair, to the Council in 2003.

As to the Global Climate Observing System (GCOS)—co-sponsored by WMO, the UNESCO Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC), UNEP and the International Council of Scientific Unions—the Council [dec. 21/9 C] requested the Executive Director to continue to support the activities of the GCOS joint planning office in facilitating the participation of experts from developing countries and countries with economies in transition in GCOS activities. It urged Governments to address deficiencies in the climate-observing networks and invited them, in consultation with the GCOS secretariat, to bring to the attention of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC), which entered into force in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 938], any capacity-building needs.

A Council decision on programmatic support to atmosphere-related conventions [dec. 21/9 D] urged the Executive Director to continue programmatic activities in support of UNFCCC, the 1995 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer [YUN 1985, p. 804], which entered into force in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 810], and the Montreal Protocol [YUN 1987, p. 686], in particular to encourage synergies between those instruments, and called on the Executive Director to continue to liaise with relevant UN agencies and international organizations, with a view to addressing the issue of systematic observations and assessment of the ozone layer.

Commission action. CSD, at its ninth session in April (see p. 747), had before it a report of the Secretary-General on the protection of the atmosphere [E/CN.17/2001/2], which discussed modifications in the atmosphere as a result of global factors, such as greenhouse gases, and regional and local factors, including transboundary and urban air pollution. The report stated that if emissions of greenhouse gases continued increasing, the expected rise in global temperature would not be steady and uniform. Recent climate models had predicted variable patterns of climate change across the Earth's surface and throughout the atmosphere and oceans, in response to emissions scenarios. The report examined the impact of climate change and variability on health due to temperature, humidity, wind, solar radiation and air pollution. Considering the long lifespan of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere, adaptation to climate change, based on a precautionary approach, would be required, along with mitigation of the greenhouse gas emissions. A series of recommendations was made for reducing vulnerability, strengthening resilience and building adaptive capacity.

In a 27 April decision [E/2001/29 (dec. 9/2)], the Commission recommended that the international community assist developing countries and countries with economies in transition to prevent and combat air pollution; improve the compilation, evaluation and analysis of data on the state of the atmosphere and air pollution; develop and introduce cleaner fuels and air pollution abatement technologies; and promote the transfer of technologies and sustainable consumption and production patterns, as well as the identification of financial, technological and institutional barriers and constraints to combating air pollution. At the regional level, the Commission encouraged cooperation on issues aimed at supporting regional arrangements, improving methods to quantify and assess air pollution, and enhancing capacity-building, institutional strengthening and involvement of stakeholders to improve air quality. National measures were aimed at improving data compilation and monitoring air quality; further developing and implementing air quality strategies, which included pollution control and air quality management; identifying, assessing and addressing the adverse effects of air pollution on human health, socioeconomic development, ecosystems and cultural heritage; and enhancing capacity-building, institutional strengthening and involvement of all relative stakeholders to improve air quality.

Terrestrial ecosystems

Land degradation

In 2001, drylands occupied one third of the world's land area. Over 100 countries, 80 of them in the developing world, were affected by land degradation.

In order to address the consequences of land degradation and desertification in Africa, UNEP, together with the World Bank and UNDP, carried out the Special Initiative for Africa on Land and Water, which was implemented within the context of GEF.

Deforestation and forest degradation

United Nations Forum on Forests

The United Nations Forum on Forests (UNFF) was established by Economic and Social Council resolution 2000/35 [YUN 2000, p. 979] as a subsidiary body of the Council to promote the management, conservation and sustainable development of all types of forests and to strengthen long-term political commitment to that end. It was also mandated to promote the implementation of internationally agreed actions on forests, to provide a coherent, transparent and participatory global framework for policy implementation, coordination and development, and to carry out principal functions, based on the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 670] and chapter 11 of Agenda 21 [ibid., p. 672] relating to forest principles, both adopted by UNCED [ibid., p. 670]. It was further mandated to promote the outcomes of the Intergovernmental Panel on Forests, established in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1080] to develop coordinated proposals for action towards the management, conservation and sustainable development of all types of forests, and the Intergovernmental Forum on Forests, created in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1057] to work towards the development of a legally binding instrument on the management, conservation and sustainable development of all types of forests.

Governing Council action. On 9 February [A/56/25 (dec. 21/2)], the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to support UNFF's programme of work. Governments, financial institutions and other organizations were called on to contribute resources to facilitate UNEP's participation and support to the implementation of UNFF's multi-year programme of work and plan of action.

UNFF session. UNFF held its first session (New York, 11-22 June), which was preceded by an organizational session (New York, 12 and 16 February) [E/2001/42/Rev.1].

In February, the Forum recommended a draft decision for adoption by the Economic and Social Council regarding the venue of its sessions (see below). It decided to locate the UNFF secretariat in New York [E/2001/42/Rev.1 (dec. ORG/1)] and to elect members of its Bureau for a one-year term, immediately following the closure of a regular session, during the first meeting of its subsequent regular session [dec. ORG/2]. The Forum elected its officers, adopted its provisional agenda and considered a report of an expert consultation on shaping its programme of work (Bonn, 27 November-1 December 2000) [E/CN.18/2001/2]. It also discussed progress towards setting up a collaborative partnership on forests, which was established in April.

In June, the Forum adopted three resolutions and one decision, which it brought to the Council's attention. The Forum adopted its multi-year programme of work for 2001-2005 [res. 1/1] and a plan of action [res. 1/2], outlined the functions of the Collaborative Partnership on Forests [res. 1/3] and accorded observer status to three intergovernmental organizations [dec. 1/1]. Documents before the Forum included April reports of the Secretary-General on the mandate for the multi-year programme of work [E/CN.18/2001/5 & Corr.1] and on the plan of action [E/CN.18/2001/6 & Corr.1], and notes by the Secretariat on the Collaborative Partnership on Forests [E/CN.18/2001/7] and on the accreditation of intergovernmental organizations [E/CN.18/2001/9]. A May letter from Brazil, Denmark, Malaysia, Norway, South Africa and the United Kingdom transmitted the report of the International Workshop of Experts on Financing Sustainable Forest Management (Oslo, Norway, 22-25 January) [E/CN.18/2001/8].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 3 May, the Economic and Social Council decided that UNFF's first and fifth substantive sessions would be held in New York, that two of the three intervening sessions would be held in Geneva and one in San José, Costa Rica, and that any ministerial segment to be convened during the intervening period would be held during the session in San José (decision 2001/218).

On 25 July, the Council decided that UNFF's first high-level ministerial segment would be held during the second session of the Forum, and welcomed Costa Rica's offer to host the session in San José from 4 to 15 March 2002 (decision 2001/292). On the same date, the Council, taking note of the report of the Forum on its first session, approved the provisional agenda for the second session (decision 2001/293).

Marine ecosystems

Oceans and seas

Global waters assessment

Governing Council action. On 9 February [dec. 21/13], the Governing Council took note of reports of the UN-sponsored Joint Group of Experts on the Scientific Aspects of Marine Environmental Protection (GESAMP) entitled "A sea of troubles", which recognized ineffective communication between scientists, policy makers and the public as a reason for the lack of commitment and the inability of the international community to address and solve the environmental problems of the seas, and "Protecting the oceans from land-based activities—Land-based sources and activities affecting the quality and uses of the marine, coastal and associated freshwater environment". It requested the Executive Director to assist in implementing General Assembly resolutions 54/33 [YUN 1999, p. 994] and 55/7 [YUN 2000, p. 1258] by participating in the United Nations Open-ended Informal Consultative Process on Oceans and the Law of the Sea, an annual review and evaluation of developments in ocean affairs and the law of the sea (see below). It also requested him, in cooperation with UNESCO and the secretariat of the Convention on Biological Diversity, and in consultation with the regional seas programmes, to explore the establishment of a regular process to assess the state of the marine environment, with active involvement by Governments and regional agreements. He was further requested to present the matter to the Open-ended Informal Consultative Process at its May session, and to report in 2003.

Consultative process. During the second meeting of the UN Open-ended Informal Consultative Process on Oceans and the Law of the Sea (New York, 7-11 May) [A/56/121] (see p. 1236), the UNEP Assistant Executive Director presented an overview of the Programme's work in the area of the marine and coastal environment, highlighting the relevant decisions of the Governing Council's 2001 session.

Global assessment. In order to implement Council decision 21/13 (see p. 964), the first meeting on a feasibility study for establishing a regular process for a global assessment of the state of the marine environment was held (Reykjavik, Iceland, 12-14 September) [UNEP/GC.22/INF/19/Rev.1]. Participants from international bodies, regional organizations, Governments and other concerned organizations agreed that a global marine assessment (GMA) was urgently needed. It recommended that the GMA process be aimed at policy makers and determined four key criteria for the suitability of existing mechanisms and to guide the global assessment, namely cost-effectiveness, credibility, sustainability and the ability to address policy issues. The meeting proposed a workshop for GMA technical development.

The Global International Waters Assessment (GIWA), which was inaugurated in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 982] to assess international waters and causes of environmental problems in 66 water regions and to focus on the aquatic environment in trans-boundary waters, held its first General Assembly (Kalmar, Sweden, 9-11 October). The Assembly considered work in the GIWA subregions and improving methodology, and highlighted the decline of the Black Sea due to overfishing, pollution and alien species. Following the Black Sea assessment, the three GEF members (UNEP, UNDP and the World Bank) joined with the European Union in the Black Sea Basin Strategic Partnership.

Global Programme of Action

On 9 February [dec. 21/10], following consideration of a report of the Executive Director

[UNEP/GC.21/2] containing information on the Global Programme of Action (GPA) for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities [YUN 1995, p. 1081], the Governing Council requested him to organize in November the first intergovernmental review meeting on the status of the implementation of GPA (see below). He was also asked to pay due attention to activities in UNEP's work programme aimed at addressing the negative effects of sewage, physical alteration and destruction of habitats, nutrients and sediment mobilization on the marine, coastal and associated freshwater environment, and to submit a progress report on UNEP's activities as GPA secretariat to the Council in 2003.

Review meeting. The first Intergovernmental Review Meeting on the Implementation of GPA (Montreal, 26-30 November) [UNEP/GPA/IGR.1/9], convened by UNEP, adopted the Montreal Declaration, which provided a strategic direction for further implementing GPA. The meeting endorsed the work programme of the GPA Coordination Office, which focused on moving the implementation of GPA from the planning to the action phase by developing tool kits, facilitating partnerships and initiating demonstration and capacity-building projects.

The meeting reviewed issues relating to municipal waste water, integrated coastal and oceans governance, building partnerships and financing GPA implementation. It noted steady but slow progress in implementing GPA. A GESAMP report identified the most serious global threats as the alteration and destruction of habitats and ecosystems; the environmental and health effects of sewage; eutrophication; and altered sediment flows caused by hydrological modification. An annex to the report contained summaries of presentations describing experience in the development and implementation of GPA in relation to programmes in 12 regional seas areas.

On 28 November, the General Assembly, taking note of the intergovernmental meeting, called on States to continue to prioritize action on marine pollution from land-based sources as part of their national sustainable development strategies and programmes as a means of implementing GPA (resolution 56/12) (see p. 1236).

Coral reefs

Recalling its decisions of 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1064] and 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 996] on the International Coral Reef Initiative (ICRI)—a programme to protect coral reefs [YUN 1995, p. 1084]—the Governing Council, on 9 February [dec. 21/12], noted the establishment of the UNEP Coral Reef Unit, as well as UNEP's continuing role in ICRI and its coordinating role in the International Coral Reef Action Network (ICRAN) (see below). It decided to support UNEP's continued participation and cooperation in the Global Coral Reef Monitoring Network. The Council underscored the need to strengthen the role of regional seas conventions and action plans as partners for implementing ICRI's Framework for Action, including ICRAN's action phase, and requested the Executive Director to ensure that the regional seas programmes worked as ICRI partners to prepare and implement programmes for the conservation and sustainable use of coral reefs. It also asked him to increase existing collaborative efforts between UNEP's coral-related activities and various multilateral environmental conventions; to develop collaborative approaches with UN agencies, to achieve sustainability in the management and use of coral reefs; to increase fund-raising efforts and work with partners such as ICRI to maximize the contributions of existing and new funding mechanisms; and to submit a progress report in 2003.

UNEP and the World Fish Centre (ICLARM), supported by the United Nations Foundation, through the United Nations Fund for International Partnerships, developed ICRAN. The project, set up in March, addressed the state of the declining coral reefs by facilitating the implementation of the priorities identified by ICRI. The network—which comprised UNEP and its Regional Seas Programme, the UNEP World Conservation Monitoring Centre (WCMC), ICLARM, the World Resources Institute, the ICRI secretariat, the Coral Reef Alliance, the Global Coral Reef Monitoring Network and the South Pacific Regional Environment Programme—supported coral reef management in regional seas programmes in the wider Caribbean, East Africa, East Asia and the South Pacific. Following start-up and bridging phases, the four-year ICRAN action phase was launched in June.

The World Atlas of Coral Reefs, which presented the most detailed assessment of coral reefs to date, was prepared by WCMC and launched in September.

Regional Seas Programme

In January [UNEP/GC.21/4/Add.1 & Corr.1], the Executive Director, in response to a 1999 Governing Council decision [A/54/25 (dec. 20/19 A)], reported on UNEP's progress in strengthening the Regional Seas Programme as its central mechanism for implementation of its activities relevant to chapter 17 of Agenda 21, on oceans. Support to regional seas programmes focused largely on land-based sources of pollution, integrated coastal areas management, coral reefs, and the development or revision of regional seas conventions and protocols. Attention was also given to the regional priorities of the respective regional seas conventions and action plans, and resources were assigned for strengthening the regional coordination units (RCUs). Incremental GEF funding had been mobilized for activities in various regions. Progress was made in strengthening the implementation of the Action Plan for the Protection, Management and Development of the Marine and Coastal Environment of the North-west Pacific Region (NOWPAP).

In February, the Governing Council adopted a series of decisions regarding the Regional Seas Programme. It requested the Executive Director to establish NOWPAP and to enter into negotiations with Japan and the Republic of Korea for the host country agreements for co-hosting a single RCU and, if necessary, to consult with other member States [dec. 21/30]. The Council approved the extension of the duration of the NOWPAP trust fund through 2003. Regarding the further development and strengthening of the programmes [dec. 21/28], the Council requested the Executive Director to continue to use global meetings of the regional seas conventions and action plans and other cost-effective mechanisms for UNEP's work, and to invite, as the secretariat of the Regional Seas Programme, representatives of the shipping, chemical and tourism industries to the Fourth Global Meeting (see p. 967) to discuss possible roles and collaboration in support of the programmes. As to the revitalization of the Regional Seas Programme [dec. 21/28 A], the Council requested the Executive Director to focus on priority issues such as land-based sources of pollution, integrated coastal areas management, coral reefs and the development or revision of regional seas conventions and protocols. He was also asked to support the preparation of a strategic approach to financing the programmes and to assist them in the mobilization of resources. In a decision on horizontal cooperation among regional seas conventions and action plans [dec. 21/28 B], the Council requested the Executive Director to support the implementation of a series of twinning arrangements and to facilitate new arrangements for horizontal cooperation among regional seas programmes. The Council invited the Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade [YUN 1998, p. 997] (see p. 968), the future convention on POPs (see p. 971) and the Regional Seas Programme to work together to implement capacity-building and information exchange activities to assist countries in meeting their obligations under those conventions, and to collaborate on mutually supportive activities [dec. 21/28 C]. The Executive Director was requested to prepare an inventory of the work in chemicals undertaken by the regional seas programmes as an information base for collaboration with the Rotterdam Convention and the convention on POPs; to support cooperative initiatives aimed at the harmonization of work plans of the regional seas conventions and the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 683], which entered into force in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 810], and the development of harmonized national reporting; to facilitate cooperative arrangements between the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora and the regional seas programmes; and to continue with the restructuring of the UNEP Marine Mammal Action Plan through a greater co-ordinated effort among the regional seas programmes and relevant conventions and partner organizations. With regard to partnerships with international organizations [dec. 21/28 D], the Council requested the Executive Director to promote a more active involvement of the regional seas conventions and action plans in the UN Open-ended Informal Consultative Process on Oceans and the Law of the Sea, and in sub-regional preparatory activities for the 2002 UNCED review (see p. 749). He was requested to follow up on the endorsement by the Third Global Meeting [YUN 2000, p. 983] of a joint UNEP/Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) paper on ecosystem-based fisheries management, including support to a series of actions to enhance cooperation. The Executive Director was further requested to support the establishment of a joint International Maritime Organization (IMO)/UNEP forum on emergency response to marine pollution; follow up on a recommendation that UNEP work closely with the Coastal Global Ocean Observing System, directed by IOC/UNESCO; work with the Marine Environment Laboratory of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) in supporting marine pollution sampling, monitoring and assessment in developing countries and countries with economies in transition that were members of regional seas programmes; and continue to strengthen partnerships with members of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) Subcommittee on Oceans and Coastal Areas in support of regional seas programmes. The Council welcomed the Reykjavik Conference on Responsible Fisheries in the Marine Ecosystem (Reykjavik, 1-4 October). Endorsing action taken to establish a regional seas programme of the Central-East Pacific region, the Council invited further efforts by Colombia, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua and Panama to negotiate and adopt a convention and action plan for the protection and sustainable development of the region, and requested the Executive Director to assist those Governments in the process [dec. 21/29]. It called for close cooperation between the proposed Central-East Pacific Regional Seas Programme, the South-East Pacific Action Plan and the Caribbean Action Plan. The Executive Director was requested to invite multilateral funding institutions, including the World Bank and GEF, to future meetings of the Central-East Pacific Regional Seas Programme, and to submit a progress report in 2003.

The second session of the High-level Government-designated Expert Meeting of the Proposed Central-East Pacific Regional Seas Programme (Managua, Nicaragua, 19-23 March) agreed on 25 of the 28 articles of a convention for the protection and sustainable development of the marine and coastal environment in the region. During the session, it was decided to retain the term "North-East Pacific" instead of "Central-East Pacific" within the title of the convention. The session approved the draft plan of action for the North-East Pacific and decided to hold a third session in August.

At the third session (Panama City, 6-9 August), the title of the proposed convention was modified to "convention for cooperation in the protection and sustainable development of the marine and coastal environment of the North-East Pacific". The full text of the convention was agreed upon, as was the full text of the convention's plan of action, including the regional programme of work on land-based sources of pollution 2001-2006 (annex I) and the strategy for the plan's operationalization (annex II). The formal signing of the convention and plan of action would take place in 2002.

The Fourth Global Meeting of Regional Seas Conventions and Action Plans (Montreal, 21-23 November) [UNEP/GCSS.VII/INF/5] adopted a series of recommendations on: implementation of joint programmes by UNEP and the International Ocean Institute; further collaboration between UNEP and IMO; an ecosystem-based approach to the management of fisheries and the marine and coastal environment; cooperation with the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420], which entered into force in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 685]; cooperation between regional seas programmes and IOC/UNESCO; a regular process to assess the state of the marine environment (see p. 965); cooperation between the regional seas programmes and the IAEA Marine Environment Laboratory (Monaco); compensation for environmental damage; strengthening relations between regional seas programmes and the oil and shipping industries; and international ocean governance. Other recommendations related to publications and resource mobilization. The fifth meeting would take place in 2002 in Toyama, Japan.

Conservation of wildlife

As at 31 December, the 1994 Lusaka Agreement on Cooperative Enforcement Operations Directed at Illegal Trade in Wild Fauna and Flora [YUN 1994, p. 951], which entered into force in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 970], had been ratified or acceded to by six States (Congo, Kenya, Lesotho, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia). The Agreement aimed to reduce, and ultimately eliminate, illegal trafficking in African wildlife.

The fourth meeting of the Governing Council of the Parties to the Lusaka Agreement (Nairobi, 23-24 July) called on States parties, assisted by the Lusaka Agreement Task Force in collaboration with UNEP, to review, develop and strengthen their national wildlife management laws and regulations and to incorporate provisions of the Agreement.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/2001/30/Rev.1], adopted resolution 2001/12 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Illicit trafficking in protected species of wild flora and fauna

The Economic and Social Council,

Aware that the conservation of wild flora and fauna and of genetic resources is essential for the maintenance of biological diversity and sustainable development, these being of fundamental importance, in particular, for local and indigenous communities with traditional lifestyles based on biological resources, and that concerns have been expressed with respect to illicit access to genetic resources,

Taking note of the principles on which are founded the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora, an agreement regulating international trade in endangered species and establishing recommendations for combating illicit trafficking therein, and the Convention on Biological Diversity,

Deeply concerned about the existence of groups, in particular those operating transnationally, dedicated to illicit trafficking in protected species of wild flora and fauna, that are increasingly employing sophisticated technologies,

Recognizing the links between transnational organized crime and illicit trafficking in protected species of wild flora and fauna, as well as the need to prevent, combat and eradicate this form of illicit traffic,

Aware of the adverse environmental, economic, social and scientific repercussions of transnational organized criminal activities devoted to illicit trafficking in protected species of wild flora and fauna,

Recognizing that international cooperation, especially mutual assistance against illicit trafficking in protected species of wild flora and fauna, is essential,

Taking into account General Assembly resolution 55/25 of 15 November 2000, in which it is stated that the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime constitutes an effective tool and the necessary legal framework for international cooperation in combating such criminal activities as illicit trafficking in protected species of wild flora and fauna, in furtherance of the principles of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora,

1. Urges Member States to adopt, in accordance with the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora, the legislative or other measures necessary for establishing illicit trafficking in protected species of wild flora and fauna as a criminal offence in their domestic legislation;

2. Encourages Member States to explore possible means of promoting law enforcement cooperation and information exchange aimed at preventing, combating and eradicating illicit trafficking in protected species of wild flora and fauna;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, within existing resources or drawing upon extrabudgetary contributions, in coordination with other competent entities of the United Nations system, a report analysing domestic, bilateral, regional and multilateral legal provisions and other relevant documents, resolutions and recommendations dealing with the prevention, combating and eradication of illicit trafficking in protected species of wild flora and fauna by organized criminal groups and to present its report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its eleventh session;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare, within existing resources or drawing upon extrabudgetary contributions, in coordination with other competent entities of the United Nations system, a report analysing the domestic, bilateral, regional and multilateral legal provisions and other relevant documents, resolutions and recommendations dealing with illicit access to genetic resources and also the extent to which organized criminal groups are involved therein and to present its report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its eleventh session.

Protection against harmful products and waste

Chemical safety

As at 31 December, 72 States and the EC had signed and 17 States (Bulgaria, Czech Republic, El Salvador, Germany, Guinea, Hungary, Kyrgyzstan, Mongolia, Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Panama, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Slovenia, Suriname) had ratified, approved or acceded to the 1998 Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent (PIC) Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade [YUN 1998, p. 997]. The Convention was to enter into force 90 days following the deposit of the fiftieth instrument of ratification.

Pending the entry into force of the Convention, the PIC procedure, which aimed to promote a shared responsibility between exporting and importing countries in protecting human health and the environment from the harmful effects of certain hazardous chemicals that were traded internationally, was applied voluntarily by Governments.

The eighth session of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee (INC) for an International Legally Binding Instrument for the Application of the PIC Procedure (Rome, 8-12 October) [UNEP/FAO/PIC/INC.8/19] considered issues associated with the implementation of the interim PIC procedure, and prepared for the Convention's entry into force. It resolved various questions associated with discontinuation of the interim PIC procedure and on conflict of interest in the Interim Chemical Review Committee, although some contentious issues, such as treatment of non-parties after discontinuation of the interim procedure and composition of the PIC regions, had been forwarded for consideration at INC's ninth session, scheduled for 2002 in Bonn.

The 29-member Interim Chemical Review Committee, a subsidiary body established by INC in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 997] to make recommendations on the inclusion of banned and severely restricted chemicals or hazardous pesticide formulations in the PIC procedure, held its second session (Rome, 19-23 March) [UNEP/FAO/PIC/ICRC.2/II]. The Committee decided that maleic hydrazide would not become subject to the PIC procedure and a decision guidance document would not be developed. However, the Committee would review the potassium salt of maleic hydrazide, which was more water-soluble and more readily taken up by the target organisms. The Committee recommended to INC that chemical monocrotophos become subject to the interim PIC procedure.

Governing Council action. The Governing Council considered a January note of the Executive Director transmitting a report of an independent consultant on options for enhanced coherence and efficiency among international activities related to chemicals [UNEP/GC.21/INF/20], submitted in response to a 1997 Council decision [YUN 1997, p. 1066] and in the light of a 1999 decision [YUN 1999, p. 997].

In February, the Governing Council adopted a series of decisions relating to the 1998 Rotterdam Convention and chemical safety and management.

The Council called on States and regional economic integration organizations entitled to do so to ratify, accept, approve or accede to the Rotterdam Convention, to contribute to the trust fund established by UNEP to support interim arrangements and the operation of the Conference of the Parties, and to ensure the full participation of developing countries and those with economies in transition in the work of INC [dec. 21/3]. The Executive Director was requested to report in 2003.

Regarding chemicals management [dec. 21/7], the Council invited countries to share their experiences with the Executive Director to assist in capacity-building efforts as outlined in the Bahia Declaration on Chemical Safety and the Priorities for Action beyond 2000, adopted by the Intergovernmental Forum on Chemical Safety (IFCS) (Bahia, Brazil, 15-20 October 2000) [IFCS/FORUM III/23w]. The Executive Director was requested to report on UNEP's contribution to the implementation of the Declaration and Priorities in 2003, and examine the need for a strategic approach to international chemicals management and prepare a report thereon for consideration in 2002.

The Council, recalling the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, annexed to General Assembly resolution S/19-2 [YUN 1997, p. 792], called on Governments that had not yet done so to eliminate the use of lead in gasoline, and urged Governments, intergovernmental organizations, IFCS and civil society to assist actively in the phase-out, by making available information, technical assistance, capacity-building and funding necessary for the participation of developing countries, especially LDCs and countries with economies in transition [dec. 21/6].

Mercury assessment

In a 31 January letter to the Director of UNEP Chemicals [UNEP/GC.21/INF/26], the Secretary to the Executive Body for the 1979 Convention on Long-Range Transboundary Air Pollution (see p. 957) emphasized the adverse environmental and health effects of mercury and its related compounds and invited UNEP to initiate an assessment of mercury.

Following consideration of a January note of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.21/INF/20], the Governing Council, on 9 February [dec. 21/5], invited the Executive Director, in cooperation with other members of the Inter-Organization Programme for the Sound Management of Chemicals, which served as a mechanism to coordinate efforts of intergovernmental organizations in chemicals assessment and management, to initiate a global assessment of mercury and its compounds. The assessment should include, among other elements, a summary of existing information on chemical processes, toxicology, and impacts of mercury on human health and the environment, and should outline, for consideration in 2002, options addressing any significant global adverse impacts of mercury. The Council requested the Executive Director to report on the assessment's results in 2003, and agreed to consider the need for assessments of other heavy metals.

Harmful products

In June [A/56/115-E/2001/92 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General submitted a report covering the sixth triennial review of the Consolidated List of Products Whose Consumption and/or Sale Have Been Banned, Withdrawn, Severely Restricted or Not Approved by Governments. The report updated developments since the submission of the Secretary-General's last report in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 998].

The Secretary-General noted that there had been marked progress in activities carried out in the area of products harmful to health and the environment. He presented a series of recommendations to the Economic and Social Council relating to the publication of the List in all UN official languages, the capacity-building of developing countries regarding the sound management of toxic chemicals and dangerous pharmaceutical products, cooperation by Member States, intergovernmental organizations and other members of civil society with the Secretariat on an in-depth analysis of the utilization of the List to be undertaken following the publication of the seventh (2004) triennial review, and ratification, acceptance, approval or accession by Member States to the Rotterdam Convention (see p. 968).

By decision 56/440 of 21 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2001/33 [draft: E/2001/L.37] without vote [agenda item 13 (e)].

Protection against products harmful to health and the environment

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 37/137 of 17 December 1982, 38/149 of 19 December 1983, 39/229 of 18 December 1984 and 44/226 of 22 December 1989, General Assembly decisions 47/439 of 22 December 1992 and 50/431 of 20 December 1995, and Council resolution 1998/41 of 30 July 1998,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on products harmful to health and the environment, which contains a review of the Consolidated List of Products Whose Consumption and/or Sale Have Been Banned, Withdrawn, Severely Restricted or Not Approved by Governments,

Taking note of the fact that an increasing number of countries participate in the preparation of the Consolidated List,

Noting with satisfaction the continued close collaboration between the United Nations, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme and the World Trade Organization in the preparation and dissemination of the Consolidated List,

1. Expresses its appreciation for the cooperation extended by Governments in the preparation of the Consolidated List of Products Whose Consumption and/or Sale Have Been Banned, Withdrawn, Severely Restricted or Not Approved by Governments, and urges all Governments, in particular those that have not yet done so, to provide the necessary information to relevant organizations for inclusion in future issues of the Consolidated List;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare each of the two issuances of the Consolidated List, pharmaceuticals and chemicals, in all official languages—the English version in the already established format, and the versions in the other languages as a text file. In this connection, the Consolidated List should continue to include previously collected data, while at the same time making distinct entries for those products covered in the interim prior informed consent procedure, in line with the Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade, and should consequently keep updating the information contained therein, in accordance with relevant action being taken by the Convention;

3. Invites multilateral and bilateral agencies to continue to strengthen and coordinate their activities for improving the capacity-building of developing countries, particularly the least developed countries, including innovative methodologies for earmarking, assessing and monitoring technical assistance in the area of the sound management of hazardous chemicals and dangerous pharmaceutical products;

4. Emphasizes the need to continue to utilize the work being undertaken by relevant organizations of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations in this area, as well as that being carried out under international agreements and conventions in related areas in updating the Consolidated List;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to report every three years, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 39/229, on the implementation of the present resolution and of previous Assembly resolutions on the same subject;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to continue to disseminate the Consolidated List as widely as possible and to look at the possibility of using online dissemination in collaboration with the World Trade Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Environment Programme.

Persistent organic pollutants

The Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee (INC) for an International Legally Binding Instrument for Implementing International Action on Certain Persistent Organic Pollutants, meeting in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 988], had agreed on an international legally binding instrument, the Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants, for adoption by the Conference of Plenipotentiaries in 2001.

Following consideration of a report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.21/2] on international action to protect human health and the environment through measures that would reduce and/or eliminate emissions and discharges of POPs, including the development of a legally binding instrument, the Governing Council, on 9 February [dec. 21/4], called on Governments and regional economic integration organizations to adopt and thereafter sign the Stockholm Convention (see below), and encouraged countries to ratify, accept, approve or accede to the Convention with a view to its entry into force as soon as possible, preferably by 2004. It authorized the participation of UNEP's secretariat in an interim secretariat and in a secretariat to the Convention, if so decided by the Conference of Plenipotentiaries and provided that the arrangements were satisfactory to the Executive Director and costs were met through extrabudgetary resources. The Council requested the Executive Director to promote full cooperation between the secretariat and those of other relevant conventions, and urged him to assist in the implementation of relevant resolutions of the Conference of Plenipotentiaries with a view to facilitating capacity-building, early entry into force and financing. The Executive Director was invited to take action to facilitate the voluntary implementation of the Convention prior to its entry into force if the Conference of Plenipotentiaries called for such action. The Council appealed to Governments, as well as intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and the private sector, to provide sufficient financial resources to implement interim arrangements for the Convention prior to the first meeting of its Conference of the Parties, and encouraged financial and in-kind contributions for supporting implementation of the immediate actions called for in a 1997 Council decision [YUN 1997, p. 1065] on measures to reduce and/or eliminate POPs. The Executive Director was requested to continue taking actions as requested in the 1997 decision, and was asked to invite the GEF Council to take into account the relevant resolutions of the Stockholm Conference of Plenipotentiaries and consider ways and means to implement them.

A preparatory meeting (Stockholm, Sweden, 21 May) for the Conference of Plenipotentiaries [UNEP/POPS/CONF/PM/3/Rev.1] finalized resolutions that INC did not consider in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 988]. The resolutions dealt with, among other things, interim arrangements to protect human health and the environment pending the Convention's entry into force and for its effective operation thereafter; the provision of assistance for capacity-building related to the implementation of the obligations of the Convention for developing countries and countries with economies in transition, and the development of a capacity assistance network with the cooperation of UNEP, as the interim secretariat of the Convention, and GEF; and liability and redress concerning the use and international introduction of POPs into the environment, including the organization of a workshop on the subject no later than 2002.

The Conference of Plenipotentiaries (Stockholm, 22-23 May) [UNEP/POPS/CONF/4] adopted the resolutions of the preparatory meeting, as well as those relating to interim financial arrangements, cooperation with the Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal (see p. 972), and proposals for the location of the Convention secretariat. The Final Act of the Conference of Plenipotentiaries was signed on 22 May by 114 States and the EC. On the same date, the Conference adopted the Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants, which was annexed to the meeting's report. The Convention was opened for signature on 23 May in Stockholm and at UN Headquarters from 24 May 2001 to 22 May 2002. It would enter into force 90 days after the deposit of the fiftieth instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession. As at 31 December, 110 States and the EC had signed the Convention; Canada and Fiji had ratified it.

The Stockholm Convention set out control measures on the production, import, export, disposal and use of an initial list of 12 POPs, including 8 pesticides (aldrin, chlordane, DDT, dieldrin, endrin, heptachlor, mirex and toxaphene); 2 industrial chemicals (hexachlorobenzene (HCB) and polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs)); and 2 unintended by-products (dioxins and furans). It included measures to reduce or eliminate the production and use of intentionally produced POPs; eliminate unintentionally produced POPs; and manage stockpiles and dispose of POP waste in an environmentally sound manner. A register of parties with specific exemptions was established. Parties were to promote the development or require the use of safer substitute or modified materials, and promote best available techniques for replacing existing POPs and preventing the development of new sources. Governments were to develop action plans to meet their obligations under the Convention. Procedures and criteria for listing new POPs were annexed to the Convention.

Hazardous wastes

As at 31 December, the number of parties to the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420], which entered into force in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 685], rose to 149, with the accession of Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cambodia, Cameroon, Guyana, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Nauru. The 1995 amendment to the Convention [YUN 1995, p. 1333], not yet in force, had been ratified, accepted or approved by 27 parties. The 1999 Basel Protocol on Liability and Compensation for Damage Resulting from Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1999, p. 998] had 13 signatories at year's end.

The Technical Working Group of the Convention, at its eighteenth session (Geneva, 18-20 June) [UNEP/CHW/TWG/18/14], considered, among other things, the preparation of draft technical guidelines on the environmentally sound management of lead acid battery wastes, metal and metal compounds, plastic wastes and their disposal, the dismantling of ships and POPs as waste.

The First Continental Conference for Africa on the environmentally sound management of unwanted stocks of hazardous wastes and their prevention (Rabat, Morocco, 8-12 January), organized jointly by Morocco and the Basel Convention secretariat, adopted the Rabat Declaration, by which participants pledged to implement national and regional solutions to deal with the unwanted stocks. It also adopted a Programme of Action and the necessary mechanisms, under the aegis of the United Nations, with a view to ensuring follow-up of recommendations relating to guidelines for undertaking inventories of unwanted stocks of pesticides and PCBs; transboundary movements of unwanted products; treatment technologies, including the use of cement kilns to incinerate pesticides; approaches for national policies and a regulatory framework regarding POPs; and strategies for the management of used oils.

Cleaner production and sustainable consumption patterns

The UNEP International Environmental Technology Centre organized workshops on eutrophication in lakes, advisory services on waste management and round tables on air quality and on trenchless technologies.

Under the UNEP Collaborating Centre on Energy and Environment, a sustainable energy advisory facility was established to provide advice to developing countries, including Botswana, Ghana and Mali.

Other matters

Environmental law

On 9 February [dec. 21/23], the Governing Council adopted the Programme for the Development and Periodic Review of Environmental Law for the First Decade of the Twenty-first Century (Montevideo Programme III) [YUN 2000, p. 989], to serve as a broad strategy for UNEP activities in that area. The Council requested the Executive Director to implement the Programme, within available resources, through UNEP's programmes of work and in close collaboration with States, conferences of the parties and secretariats of multilateral environmental agreements and other international organizations and actors. The Council decided to review the implementation of the Programme not later than its regular session in 2005. The Council had adopted previous Programmes in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 1030] and 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 820].

Occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories

On 9 February [dec. 21/16], the Governing Council, gravely concerned by reports of environmental violations in the occupied Palestinian territories, requested the Executive Director to assess the repercussions of those violations and to assist the Palestinian Authority (PA) to address urgent environmental challenges. He was also asked to report on the environmental situation in the territories, in accordance with the Council's 1999 decision [YUN 1999, p. 999], and to include the findings of the assessment. The Executive Director was requested to report to the Committee of Permanent Representatives as soon as possible and, through it, to the Council in 2002.

In a November report [UNEP/GCSS.VII/4], the Executive Director stated that Governments were informed that circumstances in the Middle East prevented the preparation of the report requested in 1999. Due to the continued deterioration in the situation during the year (see p. 406), UNEP was still unable to collect the necessary information. It had requested Israel, the PA, the office of the UN Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories and relevant agencies for advice and inputs to the report.

International Day for Preventing the Exploitation of the Environment in War and Armed Conflict

On 5 November [meeting 37], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/4 [draft: A/56/L.8 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 171].

Observance of the International Day for Preventing the Exploitation of the Environment in War and Armed Conflict

The General Assembly,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, which emphasized the necessity of safeguarding nature for the sake of future generations and working for the protection of our common environment,

Considering that damage to the environment in times of armed conflict impairs ecosystems and natural resources long beyond the period of conflict, and often extends beyond the limits of national territories and the present generation,

Recalling Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter of the United Nations, which states that all Member States shall refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity of any State in their international relations,

1. Declares 6 November each year as the International Day for Preventing the Exploitation of the Environment in War and Armed Conflict;

2. Invites Member States, entities of the United Nations system and other international and regional organizations to observe 6 November each year as the International Day for Preventing the Exploitation of the Environment in War and Armed Conflict;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the implementation of the present resolution and to promote it in the international community.

Follow-up to the 1996 UN Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II)

Twenty-fifth special session

The twenty-fifth special session of the General Assembly to review and appraise the implementation of the Habitat Agenda [YUN 1996, p. 994], adopted by the 1996 United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) [ibid., p. 992], was held in New York from 6 to 9 June [A/S-25/9], in accordance with Assembly resolution 52/190 [YUN 1997, p. 1092]. The Assembly adopted the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium (resolution S-25/2) (see p. 974), by which participants reaffirmed their commitment to the Habitat Agenda, a global call to action that offered a vision of adequate shelter for all and the sustainable development of human settlements, and the Istanbul Declaration on Human Settlements—a high-level political statement that committed Governments to the Habitat Agenda's recommendations [YUN 1996, p. 993]—presented an assessment of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda and proposed further action.

In other action, the Assembly approved the report of the Credentials Committee [A/S-25/6] on 8 June (resolution S-25/1). Regarding procedural matters, the Assembly, on 6 June, appointed the members of the Credentials Committee (decision S-25/11) and selected its President (decision S-25/12), Vice-Presidents (decision S-25/13), Chairpersons of the Main Committees (decision S-25/14) and officers of the newly established Thematic Committee (decision S-25/16) (see p. 980) and of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole of the Twenty-fifth Special Session (decision S-25/15); made arrangements with regard to the organization of the session (decision S-25/21); approved eight speakers in the debate for the last two speaking slots at each plenary meeting, with the exception of the first and last plenary meetings (decision S-25/23); and adopted the agenda for the special session (decision S-25/24). On 6 June, the Assembly decided that 11 representatives of local authorities, NGOs and other Habitat Agenda partners might make statements in the plenary debate (decision S-25/22).

(For information on the preparatory process for the session, see p. 979.)

In an opening statement before the Assembly session [A/S-25/PV.1], the Secretary-General, recalled the Millennium Declaration, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 55/2 [YUN 2000, p. 49], in which world leaders pledged to achieve significant improvement in the lives of at least 100 million slum-dwellers by 2020. He stated that the challenge of the special session was to create lasting momentum for action on housing issues. Five years along the path of implementing the Habitat Agenda, a few points stood out. Two thirds of the world's cities had established new public-private partnerships. States had adapted housing and other policies to reflect internationally agreed principles in partnership with local authorities, NGOs, women's organizations and other civil society groups. The role of women needed to be strengthened and decision makers should address the issues that affected them. The lack of secure tenure led to the enlargement of the informal sector; action in that area had the potential to provide a major route out of poverty. The world's cities faced a long list of common challenges, and all partners—ministers and mayors responsible for urban policy, NGOs, women's groups and others in civil society—were responsible to the inhabitants of slums, favelas, barrios, ghettos, shanty towns and squatter settlements.

The Assembly considered an April note by the Secretary-General [A/S-25/3] transmitting the final report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS) on the review and appraisal of progress made in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda. The report was based on a draft submitted in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 990]. The report had been amended in response to Assembly resolution 55/194 [ibid., p. 991] to include information on the implementation of the twin goals of the Habitat Agenda—adequate shelter for all and sustainable human settlements development—as well as on the actions and achievements of the Global Campaign for Secure Tenure [YUN 2000, p. 995] and the Global Campaign for Urban Governance [ibid.], and in response to Assembly resolution 55/195 [ibid., p. 993], to include information on the Cities Alliance initiative (see below). The report included illustrative boxes that corresponded to the cases selected for presentation and discussion by the Thematic Committee of the special session.

A May addendum [A/S-25/3/Add.1] contained the Executive Director's progress report on the Cities Alliance, a joint initiative of the Centre, the World Bank and bilateral agencies, which provided financial and technical assistance for activities to facilitate the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, particularly activities relating to city development strategies and improving slum upgrading.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 June [meeting 6], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole [A/S-25/7/Rev.1], adopted resolution S-25/2 without vote [agenda item 10].

Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium

The General Assembly

Adopts the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium

We, the representatives of Governments, being guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, meeting at the special session of the General Assembly to review the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, to recognize progress and to identify obstacles and emerging issues, reaffirm our will and commitment to implement fully the Istanbul Declaration on Human Settlements and the Habitat Agenda and decide on further initiatives, in the spirit of the United Nations Millennium Declaration. The Istanbul Declaration and the Habitat Agenda will remain the basic framework for sustainable human settlements development in the years to come.

Therefore, we:

A. Renewing the commitments made at the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II)

1. Reaffirm that human beings are at the centre of our concern for sustainable development and that they are the basis for our actions taken in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda;

2. Wish to stress that this is a special moment in the development of human settlements, when half of the world's 6 billion people will be living in cities and the world is facing the unprecedented growth of urban population, mainly in the developing world. The decisions we make now will have far-reaching consequences. We note with great concern that one fourth of the world's urban population is living below the poverty line. In many cities, which are confronted with rapid growth, environmental problems and the slow pace of economic development, it has not been possible to meet the challenges of generating sufficient employment, providing adequate housing and meeting the basic needs of citizens;

3. Re-emphasize that rural and urban areas are economically, socially and environmentally interdependent and that cities and towns are engines of growth contributing to the development of both rural and urban human settlements. Half of the world's inhabitants live in rural settlements and in Africa and Asia the population in the rural areas represents a majority. Integrated physical planning and balanced attention to rural and urban living conditions are of crucial importance for all nations. Full advantage must be taken of the complementary contributions and linkages between rural and urban areas by giving appropriate attention to their different economic, social and environmental requirements. While addressing urban poverty, it is also essential to eradicate rural poverty and to improve living conditions, as well as to create employment and educational opportunities in rural settlements and small and medium-sized cities and towns in rural areas;

4. Reconfirm our determination to address at all levels the deteriorating environmental conditions that threaten the health and quality of life of billions of people. Some activities at the local level that degrade the environment have implications at the global level and need to be addressed in the context of human settlements;

5. Reconfirm the goals and principles of adequate shelter for all and sustainable human settlements development in an urbanizing world, as set out in the Habitat Agenda, which form the basis of our commitments;

6. Renew and reaffirm the commitments we made in the Habitat Agenda concerning adequate shelter for all, sustainable human settlements, enablement and participation, gender equality, financing shelter and human settlements, international cooperation and assessing progress;

B. Welcoming progress in implementing the Habitat Agenda

7. Commend the efforts by all levels of government, the United Nations, other intergovernmental organizations and Habitat Agenda partners, as well as those by the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), and welcome the progress made thus far towards the implementation of the Habitat Agenda. We note with appreciation the national and regional reports on the implementation of the Habitat Agenda and the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) on the review and appraisal of progress made in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, taking into account the specific priorities and objectives of each region, and in conformity with the legal framework and national policies of each country;

8. Welcome the decision by the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-sixth session that the Special Rapporteur whose mandate would focus on adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living should, as a part of his mandate, develop a regular dialogue and discuss possible areas of collaboration with Governments, relevant United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, international organizations in the field of housing rights, including the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), non-governmental organizations and international financial institutions, and should make recommendations on the realization of the rights relevant to the mandate;

9. Also take note with satisfaction of the growing awareness of the need to address, in an integrated manner, poverty, homelessness, unemployment, lack of basic services, exclusion of women and children and of marginalized groups, including indigenous communities, and social fragmentation, in order to achieve better, more liveable and inclusive human settlements worldwide. Governments, international organizations and members of civil society have made continuous efforts to address those problems;

10. Take note of the development of integrated and participatory approaches to urban environmental planning and management in relation to the implementation of Agenda 21. In this regard, we welcome the support provided by many Governments to mechanisms for consultations and partnerships among interested parties to prepare and implement local environmental plans and local Agenda 21 initiatives;

11. Welcome the increasing economic role of cities and towns in our globalizing world and the progress made in forging public-private partnerships and strengthening small enterprises and microenterprises. Cities and towns hold the potential to maximize the benefits and to offset the negative consequences of globalization. Well-managed cities can provide an economic environment capable of generating employment opportunities, as well as offering a diversity of goods and services;

12. Welcome the efforts made so far by many developing countries in effecting decentralization in the management of cities as a means of strengthening the operation of local authorities in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda;

13. Welcome the contributions of national and other Governments, which have the primary responsibility for the implementation of the Habitat Agenda through their laws, policies and programmes;

14. Appreciate the important contributions made by local authorities worldwide in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda through concerted efforts and strengthened partnerships between Governments at all levels, resulting in the improved condition of human settlements, including improved urban governance. Broad-based participation in decision-making, together with accountability, simplicity of procedures and transparency, is imperative to prevent corruption and to promote public interests. In this regard, we note with satisfaction the increased priority given to the implementation of the Habitat Agenda and to the principles of good governance at all levels;

15. Recognize the important work done by the Global Parliamentarians on Habitat in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda. At the same time, we encourage them to continue to promote the implementation of the Habitat Agenda;

16. Recognize that the overall thrust of the new strategic vision of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) and its emphasis on the two global campaigns on secure tenure and urban governance are strategic points of entry for the effective implementation of the Habitat Agenda, especially for guiding international cooperation on adequate shelter for all and sustainable human settlements development. In this regard, we welcome the establishment of the Advisory Committee of Local Authorities and express our appreciation for its contributions to the work of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) and to the preparations for the special session of the General Assembly;

C. Recognizing gaps and obstacles

17. Take note with great concern of the current conditions of human settlements worldwide, especially as documented in the third global report on human settlements. Although Governments and their Habitat Agenda partners have continued efforts to fulfil their commitments, widespread poverty remains the core obstacle, and environmental conditions need significant improvement in many countries. Critically, the majority of people living in poverty still lack legal security of tenure for their dwellings, while others lack even basic shelter. Thus, serious impediments to sustainable human settlements development still persist;

18. Note with concern that one of the basic obstacles to the implementation of the Habitat Agenda is the discrepancy between the commitments made at Istanbul and the political will to fulfil them. We also acknowledge the gaps in both public information and awareness-raising as impediments;

19. Recognize that serious financial constraints give rise to acute problems of adequate shelter, housing and human settlements in countries that receive an influx of refugees as a result of ongoing conflicts, human-made and natural disasters and other calamities taking place in neighbouring countries;

20. Acknowledge the gaps in shelter and urban policies that have limited the opportunities for participation and partnership and have made it difficult to convert best practices into good policies. We are also deeply concerned that many women still do not participate fully, on the basis of equality, in all spheres of society, while at the same time suffering to a greater extent the effects of poverty;

21. Also acknowledge the fact that the urbanization process in the world has resulted in metropolitan concentrations that extend over the administrative boundaries of the original cities, expand over two or more administrative units, have local authorities with different capacities and priorities and suffer from an absence of coordination;

22. Recognize major obstacles that prevent the efficient functioning of land and housing markets to ensure an adequate supply of shelter. Actions recommended in paragraph 76 of the Habitat Agenda have not been fully implemented;

23. Have identified considerable obstacles associated with limited economic, technological and institutional capacities at all levels of government, in particular in the developing and the least developed countries. We recognize the absence of comprehensive and inclusive policies for capacity-building institutions and their networking;

24. Have also identified economic policies and financial market constraints at all levels that have prevented the mobilization of adequate resources to meet the sustainable human settlements needs of many countries;

25. Recognize that the mobilization of domestic resources as well as sound national policies are crucial for financing shelter and human settlements. Although Governments have the primary responsibility for the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, international support is likewise essential. We regret that international cooperation in shelter and human settlements development has not been enhanced significantly since 1996, which is a growing cause for concern. We also regret that many countries have been unable to make sufficient use of market mechanisms in support of their financial needs for shelter and human settlements development;

26. Recognize that there is unequal access to information and communication technologies, in particular in the developing countries, which has resulted in the inability of Governments and Habitat Agenda partners to make the best use of those resources in implementing the Habitat Agenda;

27. Further resolve to take concerted action against international terrorism, which causes serious obstacles to the implementation of the Habitat Agenda;

28. Recognize that the consequences of those gaps and obstacles are serious: for the first time in human history a majority of the world's 6 billion people will live in cities. Many people have experienced a deterioration in their living environment, not an improvement. The gaps and obstacles encountered in the past five years have slowed down global progress towards sustainable human settlements development. It is essential that actions are taken to ensure that the Habitat Agenda is now translated into policy and practice in every country;

D. Taking further actions

29. Affirm our commitment to overcoming obstacles encountered in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, especially poverty, which we consider to be the major underlying factor, and to strengthening and safeguarding national and international enabling environments, and to that end pledge to accelerate our efforts to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Habitat Agenda. Determined to give new momentum to our efforts to improve the condition of human settlements, we here set out further initiatives for achieving those ends. At the start of the new millennium, aware of our responsibilities towards future generations, we are strongly committed to adequate shelter for all and sustainable human settlements development in an urbanizing world. We invite people from all countries and all walks of life, as well as the international community, to join in renewed dedication to our shared vision for a more just and equitable world;

30. Reaffirm that the family is the basic unit of society and as such should be strengthened. It is entitled to receive comprehensive protection and support. In different cultural, political and social systems, various forms of the family exist. Marriage must be entered into with the free consent of the intending spouses and husband and wife should be equal partners. The rights, capabilities and responsibilities of family members must be respected. Human settlements planning should take into account the constructive role of the family in the design, development and management of such settlements. Society should facilitate, as appropriate, all necessary conditions for its integration, reunification, preservation, improvement and protection within adequate shelter and with access to basic services and a sustainable livelihood;

31. Resolve, within the framework, inter alia, of a poverty eradication strategy, to encourage social and economic policies that are designed to meet the housing needs of families and their individual members, with particular attention to the care of children;

32. Also resolve to promote changes in attitudes, structures, policies, laws and other practices relating to gender in order to eliminate all obstacles to human dignity and equality in family and society and to promote the full and equal participation of women and men, inter alia, in the formulation and implementation of and follow-up to public policies and programmes;

33. Invite Governments, the United Nations and other international organizations to strengthen the quality and consistency of their support for poverty eradication and sustainable human settlements development, in particular in the least developed countries. This in turn requires not only renewed political will, but also the mobilization and allocation of new and additional resources at both the national and international levels. We urge the strengthening of international assistance to developing countries in their efforts to alleviate poverty, including by creating an enabling environment that would facilitate the integration of developing countries into the world economy, improving their market access, facilitating the flow of financial resources and implementing fully and effectively all initiatives already launched regarding debt relief;

34. Emphasize that the international community should consider further measures, as appropriate, that would lead to durable solutions to the external debt burden of developing countries;

35. Express, in this connection, our appreciation to the developed countries that have agreed to and have reached the target of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for overall official development assistance, and call upon developed countries that have not yet done so to strengthen their efforts to achieve the agreed target of 0.7 per cent as soon as possible and, where agreed, within that target, to earmark 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of their gross national product for the least developed countries;

36. Request the international community to support strongly poverty eradication, and welcome the ongoing consultations by the Secretary-General on the establishment of a world solidarity fund for poverty eradication to finance and realize, inter alia, the social policies and programmes of the Habitat Agenda to address the challenges of poverty eradication and sustainable development in developing countries, especially the least developed countries, bearing in mind the voluntary nature of the contributions;

37. Resolve to raise awareness about human settlements challenges and solutions through full and open dissemination of information, and commit ourselves to renew and foster political will at all levels;

38. Also resolve to empower the poor and vulnerable, inter alia, by promoting greater security of tenure and enabling better access to information and good practices, including awareness of legal rights. We aim to develop specific policies to overcome growing urban poverty;

39. Further resolve to empower local authorities, non-governmental organizations and other Habitat Agenda partners, within the legal framework and according to the conditions of each country, to play a more effective role in the provision of shelter and in sustainable human settlements development. This can be achieved through effective decentralization, where appropriate, of responsibilities, policy management, decision-making authority and sufficient resources, where possible including revenue-collection authority to local authorities, through participation and local democracy as well as through international cooperation and partnerships. In particular, the effective role of women in decision-making in local authorities should be ensured, if necessary through appropriate mechanisms. In this context, we agree to intensify our dialogue, where possible, including through the Commission on Human Settlements, on all issues related to effective decentralization and the strengthening of local authorities, in support of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, in conformity with the legal framework and policies of each country;

40. Encourage authorities within metropolitan areas to develop mechanisms and to foster, where appropriate, legal, financial, administrative, planning and coordination instruments, in order to achieve more equitable, ordered and functional cities;

41. Resolve to build capacities and networks to enable all partners to play an effective role in shelter and human settlements development. The management of urbanization processes requires strong and accountable public institutions able to provide an effective framework in which everybody has access to basic services. Capacity-building needs to be directed towards, inter alia, supporting decentralization and participatory urban management processes. We also pledge to strengthen the institutions and legal frameworks that assist and allow broad-based participation in decision-making and in the implementation of human settlements strategies, policies and programmes;

42. Acknowledge, value and support volunteer work and the work of community-based organizations. Voluntary practices offer an important contribution to the development of human settlements, as they help to build strong, cohesive communities as well as to develop a sense of social solidarity, in the process generating significant economic outputs;

43. Are committed to improving prevention, preparedness, mitigation and response capacities, with the contribution of national and international cooperation networks, in order to reduce the vulnerability of human settlements to natural and human-made disasters and to implement effective post-disaster programmes for the affected human settlements, aimed, inter alia, at meeting immediate needs, reducing future disaster risks and making rebuilt human settlements accessible to all;

44. Commit ourselves to the goal of gender equality in human settlements development and resolve to promote gender equality and the empowerment of women as effective ways to combat poverty and to stimulate the development of human settlements that are truly sustainable. We further commit ourselves to formulating and strengthening policies and practices to promote the full and equal participation of women in human settlements planning and decision-making;

45. Also commit ourselves to strengthening existing financial mechanisms and to identifying and developing appropriate innovative approaches for financing shelter and human settlements development at all levels. Furthermore, we resolve to continue to undertake legislative and administrative reforms giving women full and equal access to economic resources, including the right to inheritance and the ownership of land and other property, credit, natural resources and appropriate technologies, and to ensure their right to security of tenure and their right to enter into contractual agreements. We resolve to promote increased and equal access for all people to open, efficient, effective and appropriate housing finance, to support savings mechanisms in the informal sector, where appropriate, and to strengthen regulatory and legal frameworks and financial management capacity at all appropriate levels;

46. Resolve to promote the upgrading of slums and the regularization of squatter settlements, within the legal framework of each country. In particular, we reiterate the aim of the "Cities without Slums" initiative to make a significant improvement in the lives of at least 100 million slum-dwellers by 2020;

47. Affirm that, in the interest of affordable housing for the poor, it is necessary to promote cooperation among countries in order to popularize the use of adequate low-cost and sustainable building materials and appropriate technology for the construction of adequate low-cost housing and services within the reach of the poor, especially in slums and unplanned settlements;

48. Resolve to intensify efforts to include countries with economies in transition in the system of multilateral cooperation in the sustainable development of human settlements by developing the support for those countries to determine an adequate level of decentralization in the governance of urban and rural human settlements. We reiterate our commitment to involve in those efforts the United Nations financial institutions, international and national foundations, the private sector and other partners of the Habitat Agenda;

49. Take note with satisfaction of the ongoing formulation of housing policy by many countries. We resolve to undertake the legislative and administrative reforms needed to support the efforts of people, individually and collectively, to produce affordable shelter, to adopt proactive planning of land supply, to promote the efficient functioning of land markets and administration, to eradicate legal and social barriers to equal and equitable access to land and to ensure that the equal rights of women and men to land and property are protected under the law. In implementing the above, we acknowledge the need for vigorously promoting affordable shelter and basic services for the homeless, preventing forced evictions that are contrary to the law and facilitating the access of all people, in particular the poor and vulnerable groups, to information on housing legislation, including any legal rights, and to remedies when those laws are violated. In this connection, we note with appreciation and support the initial approach and activities of the Global Campaign for Secure Tenure;

50. See the implementation of the Habitat Agenda as an integral part of the overall fight for the eradication of poverty. The implementation of the Habitat Agenda and the pursuit of sustainable development are intimately linked and interdependent, and human settlements development is a key factor for sustainable development. The World Summit on Sustainable Development, to be held at Johannesburg, South Africa, from 2 to 11 September 2002, provides a good opportunity to pursue further and intensify that relationship;

51. Resolve to intensify efforts to ensure the transparent, responsible, accountable, just, effective and efficient governance of cities and other human settlements. We recognize that good governance, within each country and at the international level, is essential to addressing the challenges of urban poverty and environmental degradation and to harnessing the potential opportunities offered by globalization. Cities need specific approaches and methodologies to improve governance, to plan and act strategically in order to reduce urban poverty and social exclusion and to improve the economic and social status of all citizens and protect the environment in a sustainable way. In this connection, we note the importance of promoting sustainable livelihoods through education and training, in particular for the poor and vulnerable groups;

52. The human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) pandemic has developed in a much faster and much more dramatic way than could have been foreseen at Istanbul. We resolve to intensify efforts at the international and national levels against HIV/AIDS and, in particular, to formulate and implement appropriate policies and actions to address the impact of HIV/AIDS on human settlements. We recognize the problem of accessing financial resources for housing by HIV/AIDS victims and the need for shelter solutions for accommodating HIV/AIDS victims, especially the orphans and the terminally ill;

53. Resolve to intensify efforts to enhance the role of youth and civil society and to increase cooperation with parliamentarians in human settlements development;

54. Also resolve to promote more determined action against urban crime and violence, in particular violence against women, children and the elderly, through a coordinated response at all levels, in accordance, as appropriate, with integrated crime prevention action plans. Those plans might include a diagnostic survey of crime phenomena, the identification of all the relevant actors in crime prevention and the fight against crime, the establishment of consultation mechanisms for the design of a coherent strategy and the elaboration of possible solutions to those problems;

55. Further resolve to address seriously the challenges to human settlements posed by wars, conflicts, refugees and human-made disasters, and commit ourselves, through enhanced international cooperation mechanisms, to support post-conflict and post-disaster countries, with special emphasis on the provision of shelter and other basic services, in particular to vulnerable groups, refugees and internally displaced persons, as well as to facilitate restoring security of tenure and property rights;

56. Resolve to take further effective measures to remove obstacles to the full implementation of the Habitat Agenda as well as obstacles to the realization of the rights of peoples living under colonial and foreign occupation, which are incompatible with the dignity and worth of the human person and must be combated and eliminated;

57. Also resolve to expand and to strengthen the protection of civilians in conformity with international humanitarian law, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, including article 49 thereof;

58. Resolve to strengthen international cooperation, including burden-sharing in, and the coordination of humanitarian assistance to, the countries hosting refugees, and to help all refugees and displaced persons to return voluntarily to their homes, in safety and dignity, and to be reintegrated smoothly into their societies;

59. Resolve to promote access to safe drinking water for all and to facilitate the provision of basic infrastructure and urban services, including adequate sanitation, waste management and sustainable transport that is integrated and accessible to all, including people with disabilities. To that end, we need to promote transparent and accountable management of public services, as well as partnerships with the private sector and non-profit organizations, for the delivery of those services;

60. Commit ourselves to intensifying efforts to improve sustainable environmental planning and management practices and to promote sustainable production and consumption patterns in human settlements in all countries, in particular in industrialized countries. Integrated approaches addressing social, economic and environmental issues should be taken more systematically at all levels. Agenda 21 and the local Agenda 21 initiatives provide important inputs to the process;

61. Reiterate the need to integrate the local Agenda 21 process, as mentioned above, in the global plan of action for the implementation of the Habitat Agenda. The aims, policies and strategies of both agendas should be harmonized in order to promote sustainable urban planning and management;

62. Also reiterate that Governments, local authorities and other Habitat Agenda partners should regularly monitor and evaluate their own performances and that, in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, Governments at all levels should identify and disseminate best practices and apply shelter and human settlements development indicators. To this end, we need to strengthen the capacity among all Habitat Agenda partners to handle and analyse information as well as to communicate with each other;

63. A further goal is to translate best practices into policies and to permit their replication. In this respect, the international community should ensure the effective formatting and dissemination of proven best practices and policies;

64. Recognizing that those living in poverty are in fact rich in innovative faculties and that microcredit plays an important role in eradicating poverty and improving human settlements, and, following success stories of some countries in this field, we encourage Governments, within their legal framework, and both national and international financial institutions, to strengthen the institutional frameworks by which it would be possible to extend microcredit, without collateral or security, to those living in poverty, in particular women;

65. Reiterate that international cooperation takes on added significance and importance in the light of recent trends towards the increased globalization and interdependence of the world economy. There is a need for the political will of all States and for specific action at the international level, including among cities, to inspire, to encourage and to strengthen existing and innovative forms of cooperation and partnership, coordination at all levels and increased investment from all sources, including the private sector, in order to contribute effectively to the improvement of shelter conditions, especially in developing countries. In this regard, we also resolve to pay particular attention to cities and other human settlements in critical natural environments, such as arid and semi-arid areas, for the purpose of providing assistance to and support for their development;

66. Reconfirm the role of the Commission on Human Settlements and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) in advocating, promoting, monitoring and assessing the progress made in implementing the goals of adequate shelter for all by providing legal security of tenure and sustainable human settlements development in all countries and in combining best practices, enabling policies, and compiling legislation and action plans for identifying illustrative cities for the two global campaigns and advancing further the normative debate and operational action on major human settlements issues, inter alia, by timely and regular publication of global flagship reports. We also support the establishment of the Habitat Agenda Task Manager System, designed to allow better monitoring and mutual reinforcement of actions taken by international agencies in support of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda;

67. Reaffirm our commitment to international cooperation as an essential element in the implementation of the Istanbul Declaration and the Habitat Agenda. In this regard, we invite the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on options for reviewing and strengthening the mandate and status of the Commission on Human Settlements and the status, role and function of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), in accordance with the relevant decisions of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II);

68. Agree to review regularly the further implementation of the Habitat Agenda, with a view to assessing progress and considering new initiatives.

Preparatory process

The Commission on Human Settlements, acting as the Preparatory Committee for the twenty-fifth special session of the General Assembly, held its second session in Nairobi from 19 to 23 February [A/S-25/2]. The first preparatory session was held in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 989]. The Committee decided to transmit the draft declaration on cities and other human settlements in the new millennium to the Assembly's special session [A/S-25/2 (dec. 2/1)]. Taking into account Assembly resolution 55/195 on preparations for the special session [YUN 2000, p. 993], the Committee decided to bring Economic and Social Council agreed conclusions 2000/1 [ibid., p. 991] on the coordinated implementation by the UN system of the Habitat Agenda to the Assembly's attention for further consideration. The Committee decided to establish the Thematic Committee, a new structure intended to recount the development of human settlements since Habitat II and to guide the search for solutions through presentations by Member States and accredited Habitat Agenda partners. The Preparatory Committee established criteria for the selection of presentations to ensure equitable geographical representation and thematic coverage. The five thematic meetings of the Committee would focus on the two main Habitat Agenda themes of adequate shelter for all and sustainable human settlements development in an urbanizing world. Sub-themes and cross-cutting elements would also be addressed. In other action, the Preparatory Committee decided to accredit the local authorities, NGOs and other Habitat Agenda partners [dec. 2/2], as listed in an annex to a February note by the Chair of the Committee [HS/CPC.2/4/Add.2], and that accreditation of Agenda partners would be open to members of the Advisory Committee of Local Authorities [dec. 2/3], established in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 1000].

The Committee had before it a January note by the secretariat [HS/C/PC.2/BD/2], which stated that, in accordance with Assembly resolution 55/195, the report Cities in a Globalizing World: Global Report on Human Settlements would be issued every two years. The State of the World's Cities Report, a shorter and popular version of the Global Report, would also be issued biennially. (See p. 981.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 March [meeting 97], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Settlements acting as the Preparatory Committee for the Assembly's special session [draft: A/55/L.78], adopted resolution 55/246 without vote [agenda item 94 (e)].

Organizational arrangements for the Thematic Committee for the special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/195 of 20 December 2000, in which it decided that the special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) should have a plenary, an ad hoc committee of the whole and a thematic committee, the details of which were to be worked out at the second session of the Preparatory Committee for the special session,

Decides to adopt the organizational arrangements for the Thematic Committee contained in the annex to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Organizational arrangements for the Thematic Committee

1. The Thematic Committee shall hold five meetings, as follows:

Wednesday, 6 June 2001, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 3 p.m. to 7 p.m.

Thursday, 7 June 2001, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 3 p.m. to 7 p.m.

Friday, 8 June 2001, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

2. The five meetings shall focus on the two main themes of the Habitat Agenda: "adequate shelter for all" and "sustainable human settlements development in an urbanizing world".

3. The Bureau of the Thematic Committee shall consist of one Chairperson, three Vice-Chairpersons and one Rapporteur. The Chair of the Thematic Committee shall be assisted by facilitators who are representatives of Member States.

4. The Thematic Committee shall be open to Member States, observer States and observers, entities of the United Nations system, including programmes, funds, specialized agencies and regional commissions with expertise in the subject matter of the special session, and accredited Habitat Agenda partners.

5. To facilitate the presentations, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), in consultation with Governments and accredited Habitat Agenda partners, shall be entrusted with the selection of thematic experiences. Submissions may come from the full range of Governments of Member States and accredited Habitat Agenda partners. Presentations may be made only by members of governmental delegations or accredited Habitat Agenda partners.

6. The Chairman of the Thematic Committee shall present a summary of the deliberations at the concluding plenary meeting of the special session.

Follow-up to the special session

An October report of the Secretary-General [A/56/477], submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 55/195 [YUN 2000, p. 993], presented an overview of the work of the session.

Referring to the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium, the Secretary-General said that the UNCHS 2002-2003 work programme addressed the main topics contained therein. In accordance with the Declaration, UNCHS would advocate, promote, monitor and assess progress made by combining best practices and enabling policies, and compiling legislation and plans of action to identify illustrative cities for the Global Campaign for Urban Governance and the Global Campaign for Secure Tenure (see p. 985) and further advancing the debate and operational action on major human settlements issues. Governments endorsed the establishment of the Habitat Agenda task manager system, designed to allow better monitoring and mutual reinforcement of action taken by international agencies in support of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda (see p. 989). In the plenary, most participants underlined the need for decentralization, more balanced regional development, promotion of participatory approaches and utilization of potential public and/or private partnerships. The Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole considered progress made in implementing the Habitat Agenda and the draft declaration, which it recommended for adoption by the Assembly (see p. 974). In the Thematic Committee, 16 case studies were presented from four cluster areas: shelter and services; environmental management; urban governance; and eradication of poverty. Cross-cutting themes were also addressed, such as participation, partnership and cooperation, gender, equality, social inclusion, the scaling up of local practice and exchange of knowledge. The studies indicated that progress was being made in many countries towards the Agenda goal of adequate shelter for all, through neighbourhood improvement and new construction, and demonstrated that countries were seeking to improve the governance of their cities. Overall, the review and appraisal process showed that Member States had taken steps towards incorporating the human settlements issues contained in the Istanbul Declaration [YUN 1996, p. 993] and the Habitat Agenda [ibid., p. 994] into national policies. Civil society, parliamentarians, local authorities, women and youth groups, the private sector and other actors had also played an important role in the implementation of the established goals and in the preparatory process.

Two major reports prepared by UNCHS, The State of the World's Cities Report 2001 [HS/619/01E] and Cities in a Globalizing World: Global Report on Human Settlements [Sales No. E.01.III.Q.1], were launched during the special session. The State of the World's Cities Report presented a region-by-region description of urbanization trends and issues. Studies presented in Cities in a Globalizing World indicated that, while some population groups had improved their housing conditions, a disproportionate share of the world's population had seen its housing situation deteriorate further. One billion urban inhabitants lived in inadequate housing, mostly in the slums and squatter settlements in developing countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/565], adopted resolution 56/205 without vote [agenda item 102].

Special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II)

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Habitat Agenda and the Istanbul Declaration on Human Settlements adopted in Istanbul in 1996,

Recalling also the report of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole of the twenty-fifth special session of the General Assembly, on an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), held in New York from 6 to 8 June 2001,

Stressing the importance of the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium, which was adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth special session,

Recognizing the need for renewed political will and for the mobilization and allocation of new and additional resources at the national and international levels in order to achieve full and accelerated implementation of the Habitat Agenda and the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium,

Reiterating that strengthened international cooperation is an essential element for the effective implementation of the Habitat Agenda and the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium,

Recalling the goal contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration of achieving a significant improvement in the lives of at least 100 million slum-dwellers by the year 2020, as proposed in the "Cities without Slums" initiative,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Reaffirms the importance of the full implementation of all the commitments undertaken in the Habitat Agenda;
3. Emphasizes the importance, at all levels of policy-making and in the context of sustainable development, of giving high priority to the implementation of the Habitat Agenda and the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium, including achieving the goals of adequate shelter for all and sustainable human settlements development in an urbanizing world, particularly in developing countries;

4. Recognizes that the overall thrust of the new strategic vision of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat) and its emphasis on the two global campaigns on secure tenure and urban governance are strategic points of entry for the effective implementation of the Habitat Agenda, especially for guiding international cooperation in respect of adequate shelter for all and sustainable human settlements development;

5. Recognizes also that Governments have the primary responsibility for the implementation of the Habitat Agenda and the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium, and stresses that the international community should fully implement its commitments to support Governments of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in their efforts, by providing the requisite means of implementation and through the creation of an international enabling environment;

6. Requests the relevant bodies of the United Nations system, including the specialized agencies, programmes, funds and regional commissions, as well as the World Bank and regional development banks, consistent with their respective mandates, to support fully the effective implementation at all levels of the Habitat Agenda and the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium;

7. Invites local authorities and other Habitat Agenda partners to contribute to the implementation of the Habitat Agenda and the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium, and encourages them to participate, as appropriate, in the Urban Forum and the Advisory Committee of Local Authorities, in their roles as advisory bodies to the Executive Director of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat), bearing in mind the decisions of the Commission on Human Settlements on the establishment of those two bodies;

8. Urges the Executive Director of the Programme to assess the role and funding of the regional programme activity centres of the Programme with a view to providing improved technical cooperation services to Governments to implement the Habitat Agenda and the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium at all levels;

9. Invites Governments and the Habitat Agenda partners, including local authorities, to facilitate the dissemination of the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium;

10. Invites the Executive Director of the Programme to transmit the outcomes of the relevant intergovernmental processes relating to sustainable human settlements development to the preparatory processes of the International Conference on Financing for Development and the World Summit on Sustainable Development, bearing in mind the relevant decisions of the preparatory processes of those two conferences;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session an item entitled "Implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and of the twenty-fifth special session of the General Assembly", and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

By decision 56/464 of 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the implementation of the Habitat Agenda and the outcome of its twenty-fifth special session would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session.

Coordination mechanisms to implement Habitat Agenda

A report of the UNCHS Executive Director [HS/C/18/11] covered coordination and cooperation, since the Commission's 1999 session [YUN 1999, p. 1001], between UNCHS, the UN system, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to implement the Habitat Agenda [YUN 1996, p. 994].

In May [E/2001/62], the Secretary-General reviewed the implementation of Economic and Social Council agreed conclusions 2000/1 [YUN 2000, p. 991] on the coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda. He stated that the Commission on Human Settlements, in February [A/56/8 (res. 18/5)], had called on UN organizations and agencies to use, where possible, the existing coordinating mechanisms of the United Nations Development Group and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework to demonstrate their capacity and complementary action and to make such efforts visible at all levels. The Commission requested the UNCHS Executive Director to establish an Urban Forum, with a view to strengthening the coordination of international support to the implementation of the Habitat Agenda. She had taken steps to do so by merging, as at 2002, the existing Urban Environment Forum and the International Forum on Urban Poverty into the World Urban Forum, which she intended to convene biennially, alternating with Commission sessions. The substantive focus of the World Urban Forum would be international cooperation in shelter and urban development. It would serve as an advisory body to the Executive Director and UNCHS and be open to representatives from national Governments and Habitat Agenda partners. With regard to the Council's request to the Secretary-General to review the matter of UNCHS participation in all aspects of the work of ACC, the Centre was invited to participate in the ACC High-level Committee on Programmes and the High-level Committee on Management. The Commission on Human Settlements, acting as Preparatory Committee for the General Assembly's twenty-fifth special session, transmitted to the Assembly for further consideration the text of the draft declaration on cities and other human settlements in the new millennium, which supported the establishment of the Habitat Agenda task manager system to facilitate coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda by the UN system (see also p. 984), and to streamline reporting to the Commission and the Council. Accordingly, UNCHS was taking steps through the ACC High-level Committee on Programmes to launch the system.

ACC action. In October [ACC/2001/11], ACC decided that UNCHS should be encouraged to pursue the launch of the Habitat Agenda task manager system.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2001/22 [draft: E/2001/L.41 & E/2001/SR.43] without vote [agenda item 6].

Integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits: coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of agreed conclusions 2000/1 of the Economic and Social Council on the coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda,

Welcoming the actions taken by the Secretary-General in response to agreed conclusions 2000/1 of the Council, including the appointment of a full-time Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat),

Recalling General Assembly resolution 35/77 C of 5 December 1980,

1. Reiterates once again the need for the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), as the United Nations focal point for the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, to participate in all aspects of the Administrative Committee on Coordination and its subsidiary machinery;

2. Looks forward to the report of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on options for reviewing and strengthening the mandate and status of the Commission on Human Settlements and the status, role and function of the Centre, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council and decisions of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II);

3. Invites the Secretary-General to implement, within the framework of the Administrative Committee on Coordination and in accordance with paragraph 66 of the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth special session, the establishment of the Habitat Agenda task manager system in order to allow better monitoring and mutual reinforcement of actions taken by international agencies in support of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda;

4. Also invites the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Council at its substantive session of 2002 on the implementation of the present resolution.

Commission on Human Settlements

The Commission on Human Settlements, at its eighteenth session (Nairobi, 12-16 February) [A/56/8], adopted 12 resolutions, of which one, on the establishment of the Committee of Permanent Representatives as a subsidiary body of the Commission [res. 18/1], recommended a resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council (see p. 984). A resolution on countries with economies in transition [res. 18/7] requested the UNCHS Executive Director to use pilot projects to launch cooperative programmes to promote the implementation of the Habitat Agenda [YUN 1996, p. 994], to initiate meetings and workshops to exchange experience in housing sector reform, and to report in 2003. The Commission asked UNCHS to continue to work with youth organizations in implementing the Habitat Agenda [res. 18/8]. A further resolution on the Habitat Agenda reviewed implementation mechanisms [res. 18/5] (see p. 984). Having considered a report of the Executive Director [HS/C/18/13], the Commission decided that the special themes of its nineteenth (2003) session would be urban development and shelter strategies for the poor, and the rural dimension of sustainable urban development [res. 18/2]. By a vote of 22 to 1, with 21 abstentions [res. 18/12], the Commission called on Israel to enable residents in the occupied Palestinian territories to ensure their housing needs, and asked the Executive Director to organize a meeting on the establishment of a human settlements fund for Palestinians and to report in 2003 (see p. 984). Following consideration of the Executive Director's reports on the global campaigns for secure tenure [HS/C/18/6] and urban governance [HS/C/18/7], the Commission took note of the need for technical and legal expertise to carry out the Campaign for Secure Tenure and, with regard to urban governance, of the initiative to illustrate and promote Inclusive Cities—formerly designated Illustrative Cities—as a means of advocacy and capacity-building [res. 18/3]; the Executive Director was asked to establish legal advisory capacity within UNCHS, to ensure continued expansion of the global campaigns and to report in 2003. The Commission called on the Executive Director to continue to involve local authorities in the Centre's work programme, to expand best practices, good policies and enabling legislation and action plans [res. 18/10] and to report in 2003. It also called on her to intensify dialogue among Governments on issues related to effective decentralization and the strengthening of local authorities [res. 18/11] and to report in 2003. Resolutions were adopted on cooperation between UNCHS and UNEP [res. 18/4] (see p. 986) and the revitalization of UNCHS [res. 18/9] (see p. 986).

On 16 February [res. 18/6], the Commission approved the 2002-2003 draft work programme [HS/C/18/8] and approved a budget of $24.9 million for 2002-2003, as presented by the Executive Director [HS/C/18/9], and following a review by ACABQ of the 2002-2003 budget [HS/C/18/9/Add.1]. It endorsed, in principle, the work programme and organizational and budget refinements as presented by the Executive Director [HS/C/18/8/Add.1, HS/C/18/9/Add.3] and by the Bureau of the Commission [HS/C/18/2/Add.4], and authorized the Executive Director, subject to the availability of additional resources, to make commitments up to $31.7 million.

The Commission considered reports of the Executive Director on follow-up to Commission resolutions and decisions [HS/C/18/2] adopted in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 1001], international cooperation and the mechanisms to monitor the implementation of the Habitat Agenda [HS/C/18/4], lessons learned from best practices and partnerships to achieve adequate shelter for all and sustainable human settlements [HS/C/18/5], and the role of local authorities [HS/C/18/3 & Add.1].

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council deferred consideration of the Commission's report to its resumed 2001 session (decision 2001/311) (see p. 984).

By resolution 56/206 (see p. 987), the General Assembly transformed the Commission into the Governing Council of UN-Habitat (formerly UNCHS), with effect from 1 January 2002.

Committee of Permanent Representatives

In a report on the role of the UNCHS Committee of Permanent Representatives [HS/C/18/2/Add.2 & Corr.1,2], submitted in response to a 1999 Commission request [YUN 1999, p. 1001], the Executive Director stated that there was no formal relationship between the Committee and the Commission. The Commission would have to decide whether it wished to enter into such a relationship and, if it did, submit a decision for the consideration and approval of the Economic and Social Council. When approval was given, the Committee would come into existence as an intersessional subsidiary organ of the Commission. The report presented the financial implication estimates for institutionalizing the Committee.

On 16 February [res. 18/1], the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council the establishment of the UNCHS Committee of Permanent Representatives as an intersessional subsidiary body of the Commission on Human Settlements and decided that, upon approval by the Council, the Committee would constitute an intersessional governing body of UNCHS, with the Centre functioning as the secretariat of the Committee. The Committee's terms of reference would be to review and monitor the implementation of the Centre's work programme and Commission decisions; review the Centre's draft work programme and budget; prepare draft decisions and resolutions for consideration by the Commission; and meet at least four times a year, with the participation of the UNCHS Executive Director. The Committee would consist of all Member States and members of the specialized agencies accredited to the Centre, and would elect a bureau composed of a chair, three vice-chairs and a rapporteur for a period of two years, taking into account the principles of rotation and equitable geographical representation. The Commission resolved to review the question of the use of languages in the Committee in 2003, based on the outcome of deliberations in the Council. The Chair of the Committee was requested to report to the Commission on the Committee's work. The Commission requested the Executive Director to take action regarding the Committee's establishment as a subsidiary body within the existing framework of expenditures for the informal operation of the Committee without prejudice to any new resources that might be made available, and to report in 2003.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 October [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Settlements [A/56/8], adopted resolution 2001/48 without vote [agenda item 13 (d)].

Establishment of the Committee of Permanent Representatives as an intersessional subsidiary body of the Commission on Human Settlements

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its rules of procedure, especially rules 24 and 27,

Having considered the recommendation of the Commission on Human Settlements concerning the establishment of the Committee of Permanent Representatives as an intersessional subsidiary body of the Commission as contained in Commission resolution 18/1 of 16 February 2001,

Recognizing the need for a properly mandated subsidiary body that can act during the intersessional period in terms of review and monitoring of the implementation of the resolutions and decisions adopted by the Commission,

1. Approves the establishment of the Committee of Permanent Representatives as an intersessional subsidiary body of the Commission on Human Settlements and endorses the terms of reference given to it by the Commission;

2. Decides that the Committee may set up working groups without prior decision of the Economic and Social Council or the Commission;

3. Asks the Commission to amend its rules of procedure in order to take into account the establishment of the Committee as an intersessional subsidiary body of the Commission;

4. Requests the Commission on Human Settlements and the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the implementation of the present resolution.

Occupied Palestinian territories

In response to a 1999 Commission resolution [YUN 1999, p. 1001], the Executive Director submitted a January report [HS/C/18/2/Add.1] on the housing situation in the occupied Palestinian territories. UNCHS had launched an appeal to Member States to raise funds to produce a report on the situation, but contributions fell short of the estimated $30,000 required. A consultant was commissioned in 2000 and work began pending anticipated additional funds. Due to the eruption of violence in the region, however, the report could not be completed. On 16 February, by a vote of 22 to 1, with 21 abstentions, the Commission adopted a resolution on illegal human settlements in the occupied Palestinian territories [res. 18/12], taking note of the Executive Director's explanation on the status of the report. The international donor community and all financial institutions were called on to increase financial assistance to alleviate the housing problems faced by the Palestinian people. The Executive Director was requested to organize a meeting on the establishment of a human settlements fund for the same purpose, and to conclude and update a comprehensive report for the Commission in 2003.

Implementation

A report of the Executive Director on international cooperation and the review of mechanisms for monitoring implementation of the Habitat Agenda [HS/C/18/4] stated that further attention was required to strengthen partnerships between the UN system and its civil society partners in mobilizing resources; promote the exchange of technology and access to information; raise the priority of adequate shelter and sustainable urban development; and strengthen strategic and operational partnerships with local authorities, organizations and the private sector. Increased attention was also called for to improve the coordination of international aid programmes to ensure a global impact on urban poverty reduction. The report provided an outline for the proposed Habitat Agenda task manager system (see also p. 982), and suggested the merging of the Urban Environment Forum (a coalition of cities, support programmes and businesses) and the International Forum on Urban Poverty (a partnership of local authorities, academic institutions and agencies). The task manager system would address the gap in the information and reporting framework through an information-sharing system, and would establish information and communication protocols and modalities to strengthen cooperation and collaboration. Its substantive focus would be the twin goals of the Habitat Agenda: adequate shelter for all and sustainable urban development. On 16 February [res. 18/5], the Commission called on UN organizations and agencies to use the United Nations Development Group and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework coordinating mechanisms in the implementation of the Agenda, and called on Governments and international financial institutions to increase their support of the Cities Alliance. The Executive Director was requested to take appropriate steps to implement Economic and Social Council agreed conclusions 2000/1 [YUN 2000, p. 991], to promote the merger of the Urban Environment Forum and the International Forum on Urban Poverty, and to report to the Commission in 2003.

UN Centre for Human Settlements

The year 2001 was marked by renewed focus on the Global Campaign for Secure Tenure, an advocacy instrument launched in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 995] to improve the human rights and living conditions of the urban poor. Special focus was given to the follow-up to local and regional campaigns in Europe, India, the Kosovo province of FRY, Latin America and South Africa, with a view to ensuring proper implementation, as well as drawing lessons for better preparation for future campaigns. Governments and NGOs in Brazil, Burkina Faso, Jamaica and Senegal had initiated situation analyses and consultation processes in preparation for the Global Campaign.

During 2001, UNCHS, together with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), developed the United Nations Housing Rights Programme (see p. 672).

As part of the Global Campaign for Urban Governance, which supported sustainable human settlements development in urban areas by eradicating poverty through improved urban governance, the "Inclusive Cities" initiative replaced the "Illustrative Cities" approach launched in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 996]. An "Inclusive City" promoted growth with equity, and enabled and empowered all groups to participate fully in the social, economic and political opportunities offered by cities. National campaigns were under way or were planned in the Balkan region, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Cuba, India, Jamaica, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Peru, the Philippines and the United Republic of Tanzania. UNDP, UNCHS, OHCHR, the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs and the United Nations Children's Fund (New York, June) agreed to integrate into their work equity, effectiveness, accountability, participation and security as five core principles of good urban governance.

Phase 3 (1996-2001) of the Urban Management Programme, a technical assistance programme initiative of UNDP, UNCHS, the World Bank and other bilateral partners, saw activities in 120 cities in 57 developing countries in Africa, the Arab States, Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean. In all regions, working papers and good practice guides were developed and disseminated.

The joint UNCHS/UNEP Sustainable Cities Programme, together with the Centre's Localizing Agenda 21 capacity-building programme, had more than 40 local projects either ongoing or completed in Chile, China, Egypt, Ghana, India, Malawi, Nigeria, the Philippines, Poland, the Republic of Korea, the Russian Federation, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Tunisia, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia.

In 2001, the Safer Cities Programme supported the development and implementation of local crime prevention strategies in Durban and Johannesburg (South Africa), Dar-es-Salaam (United Republic of Tanzania), Antananarivo (Madagascar), Abidjan (Côte d'Ivoire), Nairobi and Yaoundé (Cameroon). It was expanding its activities in Asia and Latin America, and in Hungary.

Through its Disaster Management Programme, the Centre was active in Afghanistan, China, East Timor, FRY (including Kosovo), Guatemala, Iraq, Mozambique and Somalia. Legal frameworks in post-conflict/disaster situations were developed, along with specific tools addressing participatory planning for emergencies, disaster vulnerability, flood assessment, programme development for emergencies, and disaster evaluation and response.

The Regional Office for Africa and the Arab States was active in 35 countries with 67 projects/programmes to assist areas suffering from disasters and ongoing conflicts and political unrest, environmental degradation, low productivity and high levels of economic and social exclusion in cities. In the Asia and Pacific region, the Centre's projects involved governance, urban management, institutional strengthening, capacity-building, and social and economic development. A safer city initiative was launched in Port Moresby, Papua New Guinea. At the end of the year, the Centre started a strategic planning exercise in Afghanistan to enable a quick and effective response to the anticipated need for social, institutional and physical rehabilitation when hostilities ceased (see p. 255). The Centre's Office in Japan organized activities linked to Habitat Agenda issues and hosted, jointly with Fukuoka City and the Fukuoka Prefecture, the World Habitat Day 2001 Global Observance. The Centre's operational activities in Latin America and the Caribbean experienced a decrease in terms of accrued revenue. However, efforts were made to build a new pipeline in countries where major national cost-sharing appeared feasible. Technical cooperation activities were carried out in Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Nicaragua, Panama and Paraguay. In Central and Eastern Europe, activities were under way in Kosovo, Poland and the Russian Federation and across the region. Projects in Kosovo, based on collaboration with the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK), focused on rehabilitating the municipal administration, developing new spatial planning legislation, regularizing housing and property rights, and restoring property and land registries. The Habitat Kosovo Programme included training of local government-elected officials in collaboration with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and the European Union. The Centre continued to support UNMIK in further developing and implementing the Housing and Property Directorate and the Housing and Property Claims Commission (see p. 348).

Cooperation with UNEP

A joint progress report of the UNEP and UNCHS Executive Directors [HS/C/18/10] highlighted cooperation between the two entities in subject areas established by the joint bureaux. Within the area of assessing environmental conditions in human settlements, the joint UNCHS/UNEP Sustainable Cities Programme supported the development of environmental profiles in cities preparing to become participants in the Programme. Regarding environmental aspects of policies, planning and management of human settlements, UNEP and UNCHS had strengthened their collaborative activities in disaster management, focusing on environmental and human settlement interactions, and were developing a flood vulnerability assessment tool and index to assist decision-making on settlements and environmental management and vulnerability reduction. Cooperation in the UNCHS/UNEP Sustainable Cities Programme promoted system-wide collaboration in urban environmental management at all levels; through the Joint UNEP/UNCHS Task Force on the Balkans, UNEP recommended action in areas of environmental concern and UNCHS assessed housing rights, property registration and local government sectors in Kosovo; and cooperation in the Managing Water for African Cities Programme addressed the growing urban water crisis and protection of Africa's threatened water resources and aquatic ecosystems from the increasing volume of land-based pollution from cities. Under the subject area of environmentally sound and appropriate human settlements technology, UNEP's International Environmental Technology Centre continued to cooperate with the Sustainable Cities Programme by supporting capacity-building activities. UNEP and UNCHS cooperated on research, training and the dissemination of information on environmentally sound human settlements planning and management through the Sustainable Cities Programme, particularly the development of products to address the city demonstration process, thematic support, and training requirements for strengthening city officials and stakeholders in their respective roles.

On 16 February [res. 18/4], the Commission requested the UNCHS Executive Director to continue to implement General Assembly resolution 53/242 [YUN 1999, p. 975]. It urged the Secretary-General to provide the necessary resources from the UN regular budget to the Centre for the 2002-2003 biennium. The Executive Director was requested to strengthen the Centre's core activities; to expand joint work in the Managing Water for African Cities Programme and to establish a mechanism for coordinated decision-making and oversight; to continue collaboration in the joint assessment of human settlements vulnerability to natural and human-made disasters, and in the joint formulation and implementation of vulnerability reduction strategies; and to report in 2003.

Revitalization

A February note by the secretariat [HS/C/18/2/Add.4] contained a progress report of the Bureau of the Commission on Human Settlements on the revitalization of UNCHS, as requested in a 1999 Commission resolution [YUN 1999, p. 1004], and a report of the Executive Director, intended to assist the Bureau in preparing its report. The Bureau stated that revitalization had not been completed, and cited the scarcity of resources, particularly non-earmarked resources, as an impediment to successful reform. Despite the absence of growth in contributions, which had restrained the implementation of the strategic vision adopted in 1999 [ibid., p. 1003], the concepts of the strategic vision had been fully developed, and there were positive signs that the Centre would be able to fully implement its Global Campaigns for Urban Governance and for Secure Tenure [YUN 2000, p. 995]. The Bureau welcomed the Executive Director's intention to strengthen the implementation tools for the strategic vision, such as steps taken to enter into strategic partnerships, and called for continued development of strategic planning. Despite substantial progress in 1999 and 2000, finance and administration required continued reform efforts. Administrative reform of UNCHS depended partly on the commitment of the United Nations Office at Nairobi (UNON). The Bureau was of the view that the relationship of UNCHS with UNON needed to be reviewed. The lack of clarity with regard to the delegation of authority from UN Headquarters to UNCHS imposed a restriction on the use of funds, and the Bureau suggested that the Executive Director take up the matter with the relevant authorities.

On 16 February [res. 18/9], the Commission on Human Settlements, welcoming the progress reports of the Commission's Bureau and the Executive Director on revitalization, endorsed measures taken by the Executive Director to rectify the identified weaknesses of the Centre. It called on Governments to continue their support for the Centre's revitalization. The Commission decided to review progress in 2003 and requested the Executive Director to submit a report.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution S-25/2 (see p. 974), the Secretary General submitted a November report [A/56/618] on options for reviewing and strengthening the mandate and status of the Commission and the status, role and function of UNCHS (Habitat). The report presented measures to enhance the Commission's policy-making role and suggested that the Assembly might wish to consider either conferring on the Commission the status of a full-fledged functional commission of the Economic and Social Council or having the Commission function as an organ of the General Assembly, reporting to the Council.

The report suggested that UNCHS could be enhanced by upgrading its capacity to offer technical assistance in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda [YUN 1996, p. 994], and by strengthening its normative and operational activities in the areas of training and capacity-building, knowledge-building and research, urban economic analysis and housing finance. It could also identify and increase synergies in policy and operational activities related to shelter and human settlements. The proposed Habitat Agenda task manager system (see p. 982) would function as a working group on the implementation of the Habitat Agenda. Additional efforts could be made to forge partnership initiatives with UN system organizations. The report suggested that the Centre could promote the recognition of cities and local authorities as UN partners and enhance dialogue among Governments and Habitat Agenda partners on decentralization and the strengthening of local authorities. Other measures included support to NGOs in advocacy work; strengthening partnerships with civil society organizations; and identifying new strategies to involve the private sector. Efforts should be made to enhance the Centre's role in providing advisory services and implementing human settlements programmes at the request of Member States; diversify sources of financing for technical cooperation projects and programmes; and identify new avenues for inter-agency collaboration. An option was proposed to revitalize the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, a revolving fund set up to support shelter programmes and housing finance institutions. Other steps involving technical cooperation, local institution-building, mainstreaming the experiences of the Centre's Best Practices and Local Leadership Programme facility and strengthening involvement with the United Nations Development Group were also suggested.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/565], adopted resolution 56/206 without vote [agenda item 102].

Strengthening the mandate and status of the Commission on Human Settlements and the status, role and functions of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat)

The General Assembly,

Recalling relevant resolutions on human settlements, in particular its resolutions 3327(XXIX) of 16 December 1974, 32/162 of 19 December 1977 and 34/115 of 14 December 1979,

Recalling also the Habitat Agenda and the Istanbul Declaration on Human Settlements,

Aware of rapid urbanization trends in developing countries and related challenges in shelter provision, eradicating poverty and sustainable human settlements development,

Convinced of the need for urgent action to advance the quality of life of all people in cities and other human settlements,

Conscious of the need to achieve greater coherence and effectiveness in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda within the United Nations system,

Recognizing that urgent steps should be taken to ensure a better mobilization of financial resources at all levels, to enhance the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, particularly in developing countries, with a view to improving human settlements,

Recalling the commitments of Governments to, inter alia, promoting broad access to appropriate housing financing, increasing the supply of affordable housing and creating an enabling environment for sustainable development that will attract investment,

Recalling also its resolution 51/177 of 16 December 1996, in which it, inter alia, designated the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) as a focal point for the implementation of the Habitat Agenda and called for a comprehensive and in-depth assessment of the Centre with a view to its revitalization,

Recalling further its resolutions 52/220 of 22 December 1997, 53/242 of 28 July 1999 and 55/195 of 20 December 2000, in which it requested the Secretary-General to consider further strengthening the Centre through the provision of requisite support and stable, adequate and predictable financial resources, including additional regular budget and human resources,

Recalling agreed conclusions 2000/1 of the Economic and Social Council adopted at the coordination segment of the substantive session of 2000 of the Council, and taking note of the conclusions of the Council at its substantive session of 2001 regarding improving inter-agency coordination in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda,

Bearing in mind the responsibilities of the Centre, as set out in paragraph 228 of the Habitat Agenda, and the establishment of the Habitat task manager system,

Recalling the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium, in particular paragraph 67 thereof, in which the Secretary-General was invited to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on options for reviewing and strengthening the mandate and status of the Commission on Human Settlements and the status, role and functions of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), in accordance with the relevant decisions of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II),

Encouraged by the resumption by several Member States of voluntary contributions to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation in response to the work undertaken by the management of the Centre to revitalize the Centre and give it a new impetus to advance the Habitat Agenda,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on options for reviewing and strengthening the mandate and status of the Commission on Human Settlements and the status, role and functions of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), including their financial implications,

United Nations Human Settlements Programme

Decides to transform the Commission on Human Settlements and its secretariat, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), including the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, with effect from 1 January 2002, into the United Nations Human Settlements Programme, to be known as UN-Habitat, which will have the elements described below:

A. Governing body

Status, composition, objectives, functions and responsibilities

1. Decides to transform, with effect from 1 January 2002, the Commission on Human Settlements into the Governing Council of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme, to be known as UN-Habitat, a subsidiary organ of the General Assembly;

2. Also decides that the Governing Council shall propose its rules of procedure on the basis of the rules of procedure of the Commission on Human Settlements, bearing in mind the provisions of the present resolution, for consideration by the General Assembly;

3. Further decides that the practices regarding the participation of Habitat Agenda partners shall be according to the relevant rules of the Economic and Social Council with regard to participation and accreditation, that the established practices of the Commission on Human Settlements shall be utilized and that such practices shall in no way create a precedent for other governing bodies of the subsidiary organs of the General Assembly;

4. Decides that the Governing Council shall be composed of fifty-eight members, to be elected by the Economic and Social Council for four-year terms on the following basis:

- (a) Sixteen seats for African States;
- (b) Thirteen seats for Asian and Pacific States;
- (c) Six seats for Eastern European States;
- (d) Ten seats for Latin American and Caribbean States;
- (e) Thirteen seats for Western European and other States;

5. Confirms that the Governing Council shall have the objectives, functions and responsibilities set out in resolution 32/162 and in paragraph 222 of the Habitat Agenda;

6. Decides that the Governing Council shall be the intergovernmental decision-making body for the Programme;

7. Also decides that the Governing Council shall meet biennially and report to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council;

8. Further decides that the Committee of Permanent Representatives to UN-Habitat shall serve as the Governing Council's intersessional subsidiary body;

B. Secretariat of the Programme

1. Decides to transform, with effect from 1 January 2002, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) into the secretariat of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat), and confirms that the secretariat of the Programme, under the direction of the Executive Director, shall be entrusted with the responsibilities set out in paragraph

228 of the Habitat Agenda and in resolution 32/162. The UN-Habitat secretariat shall service the Governing Council and serve as the focal point for human settlements and for the coordination of human settlements activities within the United Nations system;

2. Also decides, bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 54/249 of 23 December 1999, that the UN-Habitat secretariat shall be headed by an Executive Director at the level of Under-Secretary-General, to be elected by the General Assembly for a term of four years upon nomination by the Secretary-General after consultation with Member States;

3. Affirms that the Urban Forum is a non-legislative technical forum in which experts can exchange views in the years when the Governing Council does not meet, and that the Advisory Committee of Local Authorities is an advisory body to the Executive Director;

4. Decides that the resources for managing the Programme shall comprise the posts and budgetary resources of the Centre, without prejudice to additional regular budget and extrabudgetary resources that may become available;

II

Financing human settlements

1. Confirms that the Executive Director of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat) shall be responsible for the management of the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, with due regard to the terms of reference of the Foundation as stipulated in General Assembly resolution 3327(XXIX);

2. Encourages the Executive Director to strengthen the Foundation in order to achieve its primary operative objective, as set out in resolution 3327(XXIX), of supporting the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, including supporting shelter, related infrastructure development programmes and housing finance institutions and mechanisms, particularly in developing countries;

3. Invites all Governments to increase their contributions to the Foundation to enhance the capacity of the Programme to support the implementation of the Habitat Agenda and the Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium;

4. Encourages the Executive Director of the Programme to continue her fund-raising appeals and initiatives for a substantial increase of Foundation resources;

5. Calls for the active participation and collaboration of organizations and bodies within and outside the United Nations system, including the World Bank and regional development banks, in the activities of the Programme and its Foundation, in particular with regard to the provision of seed capital and the financing of operational human settlements projects and programmes, as well as developing appropriate and innovative approaches for financing its projects and programmes;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to support the Programme through the provision of adequate regular budget resources;

III

Policy coordination

1. Reaffirms that the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, in accordance with relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and relevant resolutions, including General Assembly resolutions 48/162 of 20 December 1993 and 50/227 of 24 May 1996, together with the Governing Council of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat), constitute the three-tiered intergovernmental mechanism to oversee the coordination of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda;

2. Emphasizes the role and importance of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, in particular achieving the goals of adequate shelter for all and sustainable human settlements, in the activities and programmes of the United Nations system, in particular in the context of common country assessments and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, as well as the poverty reduction strategy papers process led by the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund;

3. Welcomes the fact that the Programme, as the United Nations focal point for the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, will participate in the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Co-ordination at all levels of its machinery;

4. Decides that the Programme should strengthen its collaboration with the Commission on Sustainable Development and other relevant bodies in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda as it relates to sustainable development;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

OIOS review

In September, the Secretary-General transmitted the seventh annual report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) [A/56/381], which covered activities during the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, and included UNCHS audit information. During the reporting period, OIOS issued 17 critical audit recommendations to UNCHS, of which eight, regarding an audit of the Habitat settlement rehabilitation programme in northern Iraq (see p. 990), had been implemented, while nine critical recommendations remained open. UNCHS also implemented one of the nine OIOS recommendations made in its 1999 follow-up inspection [YUN 2000, p. 994], dealing with information management, and had initiated action to address the remaining recommendations.

An OIOS investigation of allegations of mismanagement in UNCHS operations in north-west Somalia established that the allegations were unfounded, but revealed that the senior officer had not strictly adhered to UN rules and regulations. OIOS recommended holding him accountable for some $50,000 in losses that resulted from his actions. The Office recommended improving the internal controls of the use of money vendors to make local payments in the region, in order to achieve cost reductions and avoid the risk of financial losses. UNCHS agreed with the recommendations and was implementing them. OIOS identified accounting errors and other adjustments totalling about $1.6 million on projects funded by a Danish aid organization. To prevent a recurrence, OIOS recommended establishing formal project management procedures and training for staff involved in UN accounting and budgeting. With regard to numerous individual construction contracts, an OIOS audit of UNCHS systems and procedures for implementing activities in northern Iraq, valued at about $245 million, revealed that the segregation of duties in the tender preparation stage, bidding process and evaluation of bids was inadequate. The contractor selection process needed to be strengthened and procedures for evaluating contractor performance had not been established. OIOS considered cash payments of some $500,000 annually to local personnel for inspecting Habitat construction projects to be inappropriate, since UNCHS used its own personnel to inspect contractors' work. The Office recommended that the United Nations Office of the Humanitarian Coordinator in Iraq (UNOHCI) review the basis for those payments. UNOHCI had done so, with other concerned UN organizations.

Chapter VIII

Population

As the world's population reached 6.1 billion in 2001, the population activities of the United Nations continued to be guided by the Programme of Action adopted at the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) and the key actions for the further implementation of the Programme of Action adopted at the twenty-first special session of the General Assembly in 1999.

The United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the largest internationally funded source of population assistance, was the lead UN organization for advancing the ICPD Programme of Action. UNFPA's third Executive Director, Thoraya Ahmed Obaid, took office in January and developed a transition plan that had five principal aims: to develop and implement a strategic vision of the Fund's goals and operations; to realign the Fund's structure to provide greater and more effective support to the field; to invest in and develop UNFPA staff; to improve knowledge sharing and communications, both within UNFPA and between the Fund and its partners; and to increase the visibility of UNFPA and its achievements.

The Commission on Population and Development, in April, considered the central theme of population, environment and development. It adopted a resolution on the subject, which it brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council. Other matters before the Commission included the flow of financial resources to implement the ICPD Programme of Action, world demographic trends and the activities of the UN Population Division.

The Population Division continued to analyse world demographic trends and population policies. New publications included World Population Prospects: The 2000 Revision.

Follow-up to the 1994 Conference on Population and Development

---

Implementation of the Programme of Action

Commission on Population and Development action. In follow-up to the recommendations of the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) [YUN 1994, p. 956], the Commission on Population and Development, at its thirty-fourth session (New York, 2-6 April) [E/2001/25], considered the central theme of population, environment and development. That subject was a key action for the further implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action, contained in resolution S-21/2 [YUN 1999, p. 1006], adopted at the 1999 special session of the General Assembly (ICPD+5). The Commission also discussed the flow of financial resources for assisting in the Programme of Action's implementation.

Population, environment and development

As decided at its 2000 session [YUN 2000, p. 1007], the central theme for the Commission's 2001 session was "Population, environment and development". For the Commission's discussion of the theme, the Secretary-General submitted a concise report on world population monitoring, 2001 [E/CN.9/2001/2], which analysed recent information and policy perspectives on population, environment and development. The report investigated the topics of: temporal trends in population, environment and development; government views and policies concerning population, environment and development; population size and growth, environment and development; migration, population change and the rural environment; health, mortality, fertility and the environment; and population, environment and development in urban settings.

The report concluded that, while all the environmental problems identified were largely or entirely the result of human activities, they varied in the extent to which they could be linked directly to population size, growth or distribution. For example, growth in some types of pollution was primarily the by-product of rising per capita production and consumption in industrialized economies, where population had generally been growing slowly. Even for environmental problems that were concentrated in countries with relatively rapid population growth, it was not necessarily the case that population increase was the main root cause, nor that halting population growth would resolve the problem. Nevertheless, continued population increase played an important role by increasing aggregate economic demand and, hence, the volume of pollution-causing production.

With globalization, new and emerging technologies and modes of production and consumption, the relationships among population, environment and development had become issues of heightened concern for Governments, the international community and the average citizen. Although population growth, structure and distribution were important aspects of environmental stress, that stress was a matter not just of population change, but also of how and what people produced and consumed, both currently and in the future.

The Commission, by a 6 April resolution [E/2001/25 (res. 2001/1)], which it brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council, requested the UN Population Division to continue its research on the linkages among population, consumption and production, the environment and natural resources, and human health. Particular attention was given to levels, trends and differentials of mortality, fertility, distribution and mobility, and the role of population and development policies, as well as mainstreaming of a gender perspective. The Division was also asked to contribute its research findings to the preparatory processes for the special session of the General Assembly for the review and appraisal of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) (see p. 973), the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development and other relevant intergovernmental meetings and conferences. The Commission also requested that the findings from that and related research on population, environment and development should contribute to the next review and appraisal of the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action, scheduled for 2004. The Division was encouraged to disseminate widely the results of its research, as a contribution to greater understanding and awareness of the interrelationships among population, environment and development.

Financial resources

In accordance with General Assembly resolutions 49/128 [YUN 1994, p. 963] and 50/124 [YUN 1995, p. 1094], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report on the flow of financial resources for assisting in the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action [E/CN.9/2001/3]. The report examined trends in bilateral, multi-lateral and foundation/non-governmental assistance to population activities in developing countries for 1998 and provisional figures for 1999, and also provided estimates of domestic expenditures reported by developing countries for 1999. International population assistance increased to just over $2.1 billion in 1998 and to almost $2.2 billion in 1999, but was far below the agreed target of $5.7 billion by 2000.

Developing countries continued to commit domestic resources to population programmes, the report stated. In 1999, domestic government and non-governmental expenditures were estimated at $8.9 billion, an increase over the 1998 level of $8.6 billion, but also below the agreed target. There was a significant and sizeable increase in the 1999 level of funding from the private sector, especially foundations, compared to 1998. Development banks also increased their loan commitments in 1999.

International population assistance was just over 38 per cent of the $5.7 billion target agreed upon at ICPD as the international community's share in financing the Programme of Action by 2000.

International migration and development

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/212 [YUN 1999, p. 1021], the Secretary-General submitted a July report on international migration, including the question of convening a UN conference on international migration and development to address migration issues [A/56/167]. The report summarized national policies on international migration and the views of Governments regarding the convening of a conference on the subject. It also described activities carried out by relevant organizations at the regional and international levels, taking account of the lessons on migration management and policies that they had learned through their activities. Also addressed were the possible mechanisms within the UN system for examining issues related to international migration and development.

Quoting the Population Policy Database of the Population Division, the report stated that, in recent decades, the number of Governments that had adopted measures to control international migration flows had increased to 35 per cent by 1995, compared to only 6 per cent in 1976. During the same period, the percentage of Governments that had adopted measures to maintain their levels of immigration or non-intervention policies decreased from 87 per cent to 61 per cent. In particular, developed countries showed the strongest inclination towards restricting immigration. Regarding emigration policies, between 1976 and 1995, the percentage of countries seeking to lower emigration increased from 13 per cent to 20 per cent. As at 1995, 75 per cent of countries aimed to maintain their existing level of emigration or not to intervene, a decline from 83 per cent in 1976. Both developed and developing countries showed similar trends in the evolution of their views.

Since 1995, the Population Division had on three occasions solicited views of Governments on the possibility of convening a conference on international migration and development as a follow-up to ICPD. Of the 78 Governments (41 per cent of UN membership) that had expressed their views since 1995, a majority appeared to favour holding a conference. However, there was a lack of consensus on objectives, funding and composition of the conference secretariat. Furthermore, a number of Governments expressed serious reservations about convening a conference, given the Organization's financial constraints. Those Governments appeared more in favour of a regional or subregional approach to the consideration of issues related to international migration and development.

In addition to providing an overview of the activities of different UN departments and programmes, specialized agencies and other bodies in various aspects of international migration, the report described the activities of a number of intergovernmental organizations that dealt with migration issues and provided assistance to migrants of different categories.

The report noted that the interlinkages between international migration and development were extremely complex. Efforts continued to explore to what extent international migration was a response to the dynamics of development and the extent to which migration itself could affect the development process. The experience gained by various organizations within and outside the UN system pointed to some mechanisms that might be used to better address and examine the issue of international migration and development. First, migration issues needed to be integrated in a more coherent way within a broader context of economic and social development frameworks, especially when designing strategies and programmes for development. Second, the Organization, in collaboration with other relevant bodies and agencies, could intensify its efforts to support the multilateral forums in which Governments, international organizations and civil society participated to address the issue. Thirdly, the dynamics of international migration could not be fully understood without the guidance of migration statistics. The United Nations continued to pursue and broaden its efforts to collect reliable data. To assist in those efforts, the Organization could further promote the implementation of the 1998 Recommendations on Statistics of International Migration: Revision 1 [Sales No. E.98.XVII.14]. Finally, the United Nations could continue to exercise its leadership in promoting the ratification of various existing international instruments related to international migration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/56/563], adopted resolution 56/203 without vote [agenda item 100].

International migration and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development adopted at Cairo, in particular chapter X on international migration, and the key actions for the further implementation of the Programme of Action, set out in the annex to General Assembly resolution S-21/2 of 2 July 1999, in particular section II.C on international migration, as well as the relevant provisions contained in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development, the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women and the outcome documents of the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth special sessions of the General Assembly,

Recalling also its resolutions 49/127 of 19 December 1994, 50/123 of 20 December 1995, 52/189 of 18 December 1997 and 54/212 of 22 December 1999 on international migration and development, as well as Economic and Social Council decision 1995/313 of 27 July 1995,

Reaffirming the continuing validity of the principles set forth in the international instruments regarding the protection of human rights, in particular the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Recalling that heads of State and Government, gathered at the United Nations Millennium Summit from 6 to 8 September 2000, committed themselves to respect for all internationally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development,

Recalling also that heads of State and Government at the United Nations Millennium Summit resolved to take measures, inter alia, to ensure respect for and protection of the human rights of migrants, migrant workers and their families, to eliminate the increasing acts of racism and xenophobia in many societies and to promote greater harmony and tolerance in all societies,

Reaffirming that the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council should carry out their respective responsibilities as entrusted to them in the Charter of the United Nations, as well as by the relevant United Nations conferences of the 1990s, in the formulation of policies and the provision of guidance to and coordination of United Nations activities in the field of population and development, including activities on international migration,

Noting the need for the relevant United Nations organizations and other international organizations to enhance their financial and technical support to developing countries as well as countries with economies in transition to ensure that migration contributes to development,

Recognizing the diversity of views expressed by the respondents to the survey regarding the question of convening a United Nations conference on international migration, its scope, form and agenda, which represented 41 per cent of the full United Nations membership, and that forty-seven respondents were in favour of convening a conference, five were partially in favour and twenty-six were against,

Noting in particular the need for more migration data, analysis of factors influencing international migration and of its impact, and a better understanding of the complex interrelationships between migration and development,

Noting the critical role of the existing forums within the United Nations system in addressing the issues of international migration and development, including through the Commission on Population and Development, the Commission on Human Rights, the Committee for Development Policy, the International Labour Organization and other relevant key organizations,

Noting with appreciation the numerous meetings and conferences convened relating to migration and development, in particular in the context of regional cooperation,

Noting the work undertaken, under the International Migration Policy Programme, by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the International Organization for Migration and the United Nations Population Fund, in partnership with the International Labour Office, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and other relevant international and regional institutions, with a view to strengthening the capacity of Governments to manage migration flows at national and regional levels and thus to foster greater cooperation among States towards orderly migration,

Noting also the work of the Secretariat in the field of migration and development,

Aware that, among other important factors, both domestic and international, the widening economic and social gap between and among many countries and the marginalization of some countries in the global economy, due in part to the uneven impact of the benefits of globalization and liberalization, have contributed to large flows of people between and among countries and to the intensification of the complex phenomenon of international migration,

Aware also that, in spite of the existence of an already established body of principles, there is a need to make further efforts to ensure that the human rights and dignity of all migrants and their families are respected and protected and that it is desirable to improve the situation of all documented migrants and their families,

Recognizing the importance, from an analytical and operational point of view, of identifying the existing linkages among the social, economic, political and cultural factors related to international migration and development and of the need for comprehensive, coherent and effective policies on international migration based on the spirit of genuine partnership and common understanding,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Urges Member States and the United Nations system to strengthen international cooperation in the area of international migration and development in order to address the root causes of migration, especially those related to poverty, and to maximize the benefits of international migration to those concerned;

3. Encourages, where relevant, interregional, regional and subregional mechanisms to continue to address the question of migration and development;

4. Calls upon all relevant bodies, agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and other relevant intergovernmental, regional and subregional organizations, within their continuing mandated activities, to continue to address the issue of international migration and development and to provide appropriate support for interregional, regional and subregional processes and activities on international migration and development, with a view to integrating migration issues in a more coherent way within the broader context of the implementation of agreed economic and social development programmes;

5. Encourages Governments of countries of origin, countries of transit and countries of destination to increase cooperation on issues related to migrations and to engage in further dialogue, including through relevant subregional, regional and international processes and organizations, as appropriate, including on the question of the convening of a United Nations conference on international migration and development;

6. Calls upon the United Nations, in collaboration with other relevant organizations and agencies, to provide support for dialogue involving Governments and other relevant stakeholders on international migration and development issues;

7. Encourages the international community, including donor countries, relevant United Nations bodies and other relevant international organizations and the private sector to provide support, including financial and technical support, for data collection and greater empirical research by Member States, in particular developing countries, and the relevant bodies of the United Nations system and other relevant international organizations on the causes and patterns of migration, including on irregular migration and trafficking, as well as its social, economic and demographic impacts, and for documenting and disseminating information on the successful management of all aspects of migration;

8. Invites Governments, with the assistance of the international community, where appropriate, to seek to make the option of remaining in one's country viable for all people, in particular through efforts to achieve sustainable development, leading to a better economic balance between developed and developing countries;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to solicit, one additional time, the views of Member States that have not responded to the survey requested in pursuance of resolution 52/189, as well as those of the International Labour Organization, the International Organization for Migration and other relevant organizations, both within and outside the United Nations system, and their views on his report submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, bearing in mind various regional processes, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to initiate or continue appropriate action in consultation with regional commissions in order to ensure the carrying out of interregional activities, with the contribution of the relevant actors on issues relating to international migration and development, taking into account, inter alia, the report of the Secretary-General, and encourages the United Nations bodies and other appropriate international organizations to provide support to such activities;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution that will, inter alia, update the lessons learned, as well as best practices on migration management and policies, from the various activities relating to international migration and development that have been carried out at the regional and interregional levels, and submit action-oriented recommendations for the consideration of the Assembly;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-eighth session a sub-item entitled "International migration and development".

UN Population Fund

Thoraya Ahmed Obaid became UNFPA's third Executive Director on 1 January 2001. In her first statement to the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)/UNFPA Executive Board, she identified three main challenges facing the Fund: ensuring a financially stable UNFPA; strengthening its institutional capacity; and addressing the sociocultural context of programme development and delivery.

In her annual report covering 2001 [DP/FPA/2002/4 (Part I)], the Executive Director stated that implementation of country programmes accounted for the majority of UNFPA's activities during the year. At the end of 2001, the Fund implemented projects in approximately 150 countries, including two subregional programmes for countries in the Caribbean and Pacific islands. A total of $144 million was spent on country programmes and an additional $27.7 million on regional and interregional programmes. Activities were carried out in the Fund's three core programme areas: reproductive health, including family planning and sexual health; population and development strategies; and advocacy.

The Fund's work in adolescent reproductive health, a programming priority, focused on providing young people with critical information, empowering girls, providing youth-friendly services, fostering supportive communities and encouraging youth participation. The Fund played a leading role in reproductive health commodity security by helping countries to procure quality, low-cost reproductive health supplies. Some 44 urgent requests for supplies were met through the Fund's Global Contraceptive Commodities Programme, a revolving fund designed to maintain stocks of reproductive health commodities for emergency situations. Notwithstanding generous contributions by the Netherlands and the United Kingdom, the Fund's activities in 2001 included a vigorous advocacy effort to raise awareness of the severe shortfall in funding in that critical area. The Executive Director estimated that the funding required for contraceptive commodities in the developing world would rise to $1.8 billion per year by 2015.

UNFPA responded to the HIV/AIDS pandemic on various fronts. It identified HIV prevention as an institutional priority, formulated a strategic direction for addressing HIV in its three core programme areas, and developed guidelines for national capacity-building. At the country and regional levels, efforts were intensified to integrate prevention into the reproductive health component of country programmes, especially in the context of adolescent reproductive health. The Fund was a key contributor to the special session of the General Assembly on HIV/AIDS in June (see p. 1125). The UNFPA strategic plan for HIV/AIDS for 2001-2005 was submitted to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board in June (see p. 996).

As the lead agency for implementing the ICPD Programme of Action, UNFPA continued its advocacy work for universal access to reproductive health care, the right to family planning, empowerment of women, the importance of engaging men as partners in the promotion of reproductive and sexual health and gender equity, the need for reproductive health information and services for adolescents, and the need for national Governments to adopt and implement sustainable population policies.

In other activities, UNFPA worked at the global level to raise awareness about fistula, a preventable and treatable condition caused by damage to the tissues of the bladder and rectum as a result of prolonged and obstructed labour. It also expanded its Goodwill Ambassador programme, through which celebrities helped to raise awareness of reproductive health needs in developing countries. Furthermore, it intensified the Face to Face Campaign, conducted in partnership with the International Planned Parenthood Federation, to contribute to resource mobilization by creating greater public and political awareness of population issues and organizations by engaging celebrities to help focus attention on advocacy initiatives. Another important advocacy tool, the Fund's annual The State of World Population report, called for greater efforts to balance human and environmental needs. Entitled Footprints and Milestones: Population and Environmental Change, the 2001 report argued that unbalanced consumption and environmental destruction were having a disproportionate impact on the poor, and noted that the world's population had doubled since 1960 and was projected to increase by another 3 billion by 2050.

UNFPA launched a dialogue on the role of religion and culture in the context of globalization and development and continued to prioritize gender mainstreaming in its core programme areas, in operations in emergency situations, and within the organization itself. It also increased its emphasis on emergency response and humanitarian assistance and focused attention on the speed of population ageing.

The Fund was committed to developing national capacities to integrate reproductive health, population and gender into policy-making and development planning, and for the effective design and implementation of reproductive health programmes. In that regard, it increased its emphasis in 2001 on building national capacity in efficient and effective programme management by strengthening a results-based approach in its programming, invested considerable resources in building human capacity by training health and community workers at all levels of the health-care system in reproductive health-care service provision, strengthened national capacities to monitor and analyse population trends and integrate population and gender issues into development programmes, and supported activities to build the capacity of country offices, Governments, NGOs and health workers to respond more quickly and effectively to humanitarian crises.

Upon taking office in January, the Executive Director initiated an organization-wide transition process to ensure that UNFPA and its operations remained relevant and effective in the face of new opportunities and challenges. That process had five principal aims: to develop and implement a strategic vision of the Fund's goals and operations; to realign the structure of the Fund to provide greater and more effective support to the field; to invest in and develop UNFPA staff; to improve knowledge sharing and communications within UNFPA and between the Fund and its partners; and to increase the visibility of UNFPA and its achievements. The Executive Director established thematic working groups to cover the five main transition components, plus finance. A field needs-assessment study was conducted in June/July, in which four teams travelled to 14 programme countries to solicit detailed information on wide-ranging issues from country office staff, country technical service teams, government representatives, bilateral agencies, NGOs and other UN system field staff. The resulting study yielded a large number of recommendations and formed the primary basis for the transition exercise. The Fund designated 2002 as the year for implementing and testing the new strategies and systems developed by the working groups. Planned transition outputs included: a positioning statement defining a common strategic direction for achieving greater progress with regard to the ICPD Programme of Action; finalization of a new human resources development strategy; the piloting and implementation of new strategies for knowledge sharing; the introduction of more streamlined administrative and financial systems for simpler and more reliable monitoring; and the launch of a new organizational identity to ensure that UNFPA would become better known for its work and to counter harmful misinformation.

By decision 2001/226 of 10 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the annual reports of the UNDP Administrator and of the UNFPA Executive Director to the Council [E/2001/10].

Strategic plan for HIV/AIDS

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/36 [YUN 1999, p. 1149], UNFPA, as one of the co-sponsors of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) (see p. 1125), submitted to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board an April report [DP/FPA/2001/9] on the Fund's contribution to the UN system strategic plan for HIV/AIDS for 2001-2005. The report described major UNFPA HIV-prevention activities before 2001 and lessons learned from its efforts.

The UNFPA strategic plan for 2001-2005 would continue to focus on HIV prevention through advocacy and information, education and communication and through integrating attention to HIV prevention in national reproductive health programmes. The country programmes for 2001-2005, including those for Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Chad, Ghana, Indonesia, Namibia and Uganda, already reflected those emphases. As the designated focal point within UNAIDS for condom programming, UNFPA had developed a plan on reproductive health commodities to be integrated into all programmes it supported. It would continue to collaborate with UNAIDS, the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Health Organization on activities related to preventing HIV infection in mothers and its transmission to children, and would give increased attention to reaching men with regard to their critical role in the spread of AIDS. In addition, efforts to prevent sexually transmitted HIV infection, as an integral component of the package of support in emergency and conflict situations, would be continued. The report went on to describe UNFPA's involvement in global, regional and national partnerships with regard to HIV/AIDS prevention and the institutional changes planned to reinforce its capacity to address the HIV epidemic and to strengthen national capacities in dealing with the problem.

Executive Board action. On 14 June [E/2001/35 (dec. 2001/9)], the Executive Board endorsed the Fund's focus and overall approach with respect to HIV/AIDS for the years 2001-2005. Recognizing UNFPA's experience and comparative advantage in fulfilling its lead role in implementing the goals of ICPD and the benchmarks of ICPD+5, and in making use of its extensive networks at the country level, the Board requested the Fund to intensify its efforts and to take a more visible leadership role in HIV prevention, especially among young people. It encouraged UNFPA to build further on its experience in addressing gender issues, including the role of men, as an integral part of HIV-prevention activities. Governments were encouraged to support UNFPA's efforts by increasing their commitment, including financial commitment, to curb and reverse the spread of HIV/AIDS in programme countries.

Humanitarian assistance

In a section of her annual report covering 2001 [DP/FPA/2002/4 (Part III)], the Executive Director stated that the Fund's humanitarian assistance activities in 2001 focused on reproductive health support; training and capacity-building; advocacy; data collection, analysis and information synthesis; inter-agency coordination and programme planning; tools development; and project development.

In 2001, through direct donor contributions or the use of other emergency resources, UNFPA supported UN consolidated appeal process activities in Afghanistan, Angola, Burundi, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Eritrea, Indonesia (for the Maluku crisis), the Russian Federation (northern Caucasus), Sierra Leone, Somalia, South-Eastern Europe, Tajikistan, Uganda and West Africa. The funds were utilized to save lives, including through the provision of emergency obstetric care and reproductive health services for refugees and internally displaced persons. UNFPA's achievements in assessing reproductive health needs, technical assistance in restoring basic and reproductive health services, provision of emergency supplies, safe delivery training, capacity-building, research activities and advocacy efforts had gone a long way in helping development partners and the general public to understand the critical importance of reproductive health issues during emergencies and in post-disaster situations.

Reproductive health commodities

In a section of her annual report covering 2001 [DP/FPA/2002/4 (Part III)], the Executive Director stated that, during the year, UNFPA continued to consolidate and expand its work in reproductive health commodity security. As it had done for more than a decade, the Fund provided leadership in that field through its Global Initiative on Contraceptive Requirements and Logistics Management Needs in Developing Countries. In April, the Fund published Reproductive Health Commodity Security: Partnerships for Change, A Global Call to Action, which outlined the challenges developing countries faced in achieving reproductive health commodity security.

In 2001, UNFPA worked closely with 81 countries experiencing commodity shortfalls and programmed $76 million contributed by Canada, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom to meet requests for commodities. The least developed countries received the most support and countries with high HIV prevalence received approximately three times as many condoms per capita as those with HIV prevalence below 2 per cent. To avert reproductive health commodity shortfalls in developing countries, the Fund planned to establish a framework for adequate and predictable donor support. To that end, it was conducting a survey on the supply situation in developing countries; the information would be used to provide reproductive health commodities in 2002 and beyond.

Country and intercountry programmes

UNFPA's provisional project expenditures for country and intercountry (regional and interregional) programmes in 2001 totalled $171.7 million, compared to $127.5 million in 2000, according to the Executive Director's statistical overview report for the year [DP/FPA/2002/4 (Part I/Add.1)]. The 2001 figure included $144 million for country programmes and $27.7 million for intercountry programmes. In accordance with the procedure for allocating resources according to categorization of countries into groups, laid down in a 1996 UNDP/UNFPA decision [YUN 1996, p. 989] and updated in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1005], total expenditures in 2001 to Group A countries (those most in need) amounted to $98.1 million, compared to $72.3 million in 2000.

Africa. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in sub-Saharan Africa totalled $57 million in 2001, compared to $42.7 million in 2000. Most of the resources (70.2 per cent) went to reproductive health and family planning, followed by population and development strategies (25.1 per cent) and advocacy (3.9 per cent).

On 5 February [E/2001/35 (dec. 2001/7)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved programmes of assistance to Burkina Faso, Chad, Ghana, Namibia and Uganda. On 14 September [dec. 2001/17], the Board approved programmes of assistance to Eritrea, Ethiopia, the Gambia, Mozambique, the Niger and Senegal.

Arab States and Europe. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in the Arab States and Europe totalled $22.6 million in 2001, compared with $17.4 million in 2000. Most of the resources (76.5 per cent) went to reproductive health and family planning, followed by population and development strategies (16.4 per cent) and advocacy (4 per cent).

On 5 February [dec. 2001/7], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved programmes of assistance to the Palestinian people and Turkey. On 14 September [dec. 2001/17], the Board approved programmes of assistance to Morocco, the Sudan and the Syrian Arab Republic.

Asia and the Pacific. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in Asia and the Pacific totalled $55.9 million in 2001, compared with $41.5 million in 2000. Most of the resources (77 per cent) went to reproductive health and family planning, followed by population and development strategies (14.8 per cent) and advocacy (7.3 per cent).

On 5 February [dec. 2001/7], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved a programme of assistance to Indonesia. On 14 September [dec. 2001/17], it approved programmes of assistance to Bhutan, Mongolia, Sri Lanka and Thailand. The Board also approved the programme of assistance to Myanmar and requested the Executive Director to report annually on its implementation.

Latin America and the Caribbean. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in Latin America and the Caribbean totalled $16.9 million in 2001, compared to $14.8 million in 2000. Most of the resources (72.2 per cent) went to reproductive health and family planning, followed by population and development strategies (21.9 per cent) and advocacy (4.7 per cent).

On 5 February [dec. 2001/7], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved programmes of assistance to Ecuador, Guatemala and Peru. It also approved a request for additional resources for the UNFPA programme for the English- and Dutch-speaking Caribbean countries.

Interregional programmes. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA's interregional and global programmes totalled $19.3 million in 2001, compared to $11.1 million in 2000. Of that total, 41.5 per cent went to advocacy, 34.6 per cent to reproductive health and family planning, 21.8 per cent to population and development strategies and 2.1 per cent to multisectoral activities.

On 5 February [dec. 2001/7], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of an oral report on progress in implementing the 2000-2003 inter-country programme.

UNFPA information and communication strategy

In response to a 1997 Executive Board request [YUN 1997, p. 1083], the Executive Director submitted a May report in which she reviewed the implementation of the information and communication strategy between 1997 and 2000 [DP/FPA/2001/6]. The report examined the strategy in the light of experience gained since 1997 and of changes in population and development, notably the 1999 ICPD+5 review conference [YUN 1999, p. 1005]. The major finding of the review was that the strategy had proved to be effective in addressing many of the basic challenges facing UNFPA, such as ensuring sound and stable funding; increasing awareness and understanding of the role and relevance of population in the development process; building support for the Fund's activities; strengthening its capacity for international policy advocacy; and working towards ICPD goals successfully within national social and cultural realities. The strategy had also helped UNFPA to expand its outreach to key audiences and the general public and to expand its partnerships with governmental and non-governmental organizations. One of the best indicators of its success was the increase in extrabudgetary funding for specific activities.

UNFPA's web site was an important tool for implementing the Fund's information and communication strategy. In September 2000, 1.5 million hits by 107,000 users were reported. The content of and traffic on the Fund's web site had grown steadily since 1997 and nearly all of UNFPA's publications and reports had been posted online. With regard to video productions and broadband outreach, innovative technologies and new media techniques had been employed to promote the ICPD message to a broad range of audiences. The challenge for UNFPA's information and communication strategy was, among other things, to continue the process of consensus-building; counter unprincipled opposition while responding to legitimate concerns; and pay close attention to institutional positioning and promotion, especially among key donors, to meet the ICPD financial goals.

On 12 June [E/2001/35 (dec. 2001/8)], the Executive Board endorsed UNFPA's actions to strengthen its ability to carry out its information and communications strategy and urged the Fund to continue to build on its past experience and to develop innovative ways to implement the strategy. The international community was urged to increase financial support for the promotion of the goals of ICPD and ICPD+5.

Financial and administrative questions

UNFPA's income from all sources totalled $396.4 million in 2001, compared to $414.1 million in 2000 [DP/FPA/2002/12]. That comprised $268.6 million of Regular Funds and $127.8 million from Other Funds. Expenditures totalled $254.2 million from Regular Funds and $123.5 million from Other Funds, resulting in a net surplus of $14.4 million to Regular Funds and of $4.3 million to Other Funds. The Regular Funds surplus would be fully utilized in 2002 and the Other Funds surplus related mostly to trust-fund projects lasting for more than one year. Income to Regular Funds remained largely unchanged at $268.6 million, compared to $264 million in 2000. However, the strong United States dollar hid the underlying trend, which was a substantial increase in donor contributions. In local currency terms, donors increased their funding by $10.8 million.

Project expenditure increased by 35 per cent to $171.7 million in 2001, compared to $127.5 million in 2000.

2002-2003 support budget

In a July report [DP/FPA/2001/10], the Executive Director submitted to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board the proposed biennial support budget for 2002-2003, which assumed a total income of $702.5 million ($580 million in Regular Resources and $122.5 million in Other Resources). Of that estimated amount, $168.3 million gross ($146.5 million net) would be used for programme support (headquarters and country offices, agency programme support costs, and the management and administration of UNFPA). The proposed budget represented an increase of 15 per cent over the 2000-2001 net figure of $127.4 million and 12.6 per cent higher than the gross figure of $149.4 million.

Several strategic considerations were taken into account in structuring the proposals for the biennial support budget. They included the need to reach the goals of ICPD and the ICPD+5 review; combat the spread of HIV/AIDS, especially by helping to ensure reproductive health commodity security; build national capacity to design and implement population and reproductive health policies; and strengthen the Fund's field operations and relations with partners, both inside and outside the UN system.

Commenting on the 2002-2003 support budget in August [DP/FPA/2001/12], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) stated that, prior to the adoption of the budget estimates, UNFPA should submit to the Executive Board, through ACABQ, a report on the implementation of a human resources strategy, in conjunction with the revised estimates for the biennial support budget for 2002-2003.

By a 14 September decision [E/2001/35 (dec. 2001/16)], the Executive Board approved gross appropriations of $168.3 million for the support budget for 2002-2003 and resolved that income estimates of $21.8 million should be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in estimated net appropriations of $146.5 million. It authorized the Executive Director to redeploy resources between appropriation lines, up to a maximum of 5 per cent of the appropriation to which the resources were redeployed. The Executive Director was urged to implement the foreseen reclassification of posts with the highest possible prudence and transparency, especially as to possible contradictions with requirements deriving from the field needs-assessment survey.

The Board requested the Executive Director to submit in 2002 a comprehensive human resources development strategy and proposed revisions to the biennial support budget for 2002-2003 arising from further review of organizational requirements, including the field needs-assessment survey.

Also on 14 September [dec. 2001/17], the Board took note of ACABQ's August report.

Multi-year funding commitments

In a May report [DP/FPA/2001/5], the Executive Director submitted to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board updated estimates of regular and supplementary resources for 2001-2003. As at 31 March, 53 countries had submitted written pledges to UNFPA for the year 2001; 20 had done so for 2002 and 17 for 2003. In 2000, UNFPA achieved its pledging target of 100 donor countries: 29 from Europe, 25 from Asia and the Pacific, 22 from Africa, 15 from Latin America and the Caribbean, 8 from the Arab States and 2 from North America. For 2001, the target had been increased to 110 donors. Total contributions received from donor Governments, as well as interest from the Mars Trust for UNFPA's general resources in 2000, amounted to $258.3 million (provisionally). As at 31 March 2001, $268.5 million had been pledged for 2001, including a projected additional amount of $6.5 million to be raised; $100.2 million had been pledged for 2002; and $100.6 million had been pledged for 2003. Total payments received from donor Governments for general resources in 2001 amounted to approximately $40.8 million as at 31 March.

Of UNFPA's 16 major donors (those contributing $1 million or more), which together provided an estimated 97 per cent of the total contributions to general resources, only five countries were in a position to make multi-year pledges, the report said. Noting that general resources were invaluable to its country programmes, UNFPA appealed to Executive Board members and the Fund's donors to consider increasing their contributions for 2001 and future years and to ensure the early and timely payment of those pledges.

On 22 June [E/2001/35 (dec. 2001/12)], the Executive Board took note of the Executive Director's report.

Programming process

In response to a 2000 Executive Board request [YUN 2000, p. 1006], the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director submitted an April report [DP/FPA/2001/7-DP/2001/12] on decentralizing programme development exercises (see p. 799). The Executive Board took action on the report in a 22 June decision [dec. 2001/11].

Audit reports

The Executive Director submitted to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board a status report [DP/FPA/2001/2] describing follow-up measures taken on the recommendations of the Board of Auditors on UNFPA for the 1998-1999 biennium.

On 1 February [E/2001/35 (dec. 2001/5)], the Executive Board took note of the report.

In a May report [DP/FPA/2001/8], the Executive Director described UNFPA's internal audit and oversight activities in 2000, stating that management audits had been carried out in 15 country offices and compliance audits undertaken in 11 country offices. Of 27 reports issued in 2000 (including 14 on 1999 audits), the level of internal controls and compliance with financial and administrative requirements were found to be satisfactory in 12 offices. Nine country offices were rated marginally deficient, four were deficient and two were seriously deficient.

The UNFPA Office of Oversight and Evaluation analysed the midterm reviews undertaken in 1999 and 2000 of 55 UNFPA-supported country programmes. It also conducted policy application reviews of two country programmes and continued to follow up on the implementation of recommendations of policy reviews conducted in previous years.

On 22 June [dec. 2001/12], the Executive Board took note of the Executive Director's report.

UN Population Award

The 2001 United Nations Population Award was presented to Dr. Nafis Sadik, former UNFPA Executive Director, in the individual category, and to the Japanese Organization for International Cooperation in Family Planning in the institutional category. Dr. Sadik was selected for her tremendous impact on population and development issues during her tenure as Executive Director between 1987 and 2000. During that time, she made significant contributions to the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development [YUN 1994, p. 955], which resulted in enormous changes in the field of population, including the global consensus that placed human rights, specifically women's rights, at the heart of the population debate. The Japanese Organization for International Cooperation in Family Planning was selected for its outstanding contribution to population issues in the developing world, as well as in Japan. It was active in the field of population and reproductive health, with projects in 26 countries in Asia, Latin America and Africa. Its major contributions were in the community-operated integrated approach to family planning; the sharing of Japanese expertise through human resources development; and advocacy in population and reproductive health issues.

The Award was established by the General Assembly in resolution 36/201 [YUN 1981, p. 792], to be presented annually to individuals or institutions for outstanding contributions to increased awareness of population problems and to their solutions. In October, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the report of the UNFPA Executive Director on the Population Award [A/56/459]. By decision 56/447 of 21 December, the Assembly took note of the report.

Commission on Population and Development

The Commission on Population and Development, at its thirty-fourth session (New York, 2-6 April) [E/2001/25], considered as its central theme "Population, environment and development", which was discussed in the context of the follow-up to ICPD [YUN 1994, p. 955]. Documents before the Commission focusing on the theme were reports of the Secretary-General on world population monitoring [E/CN.9/2001/2] and on the flow of financial resources for assisting in implementing the ICPD Programme of Action [E/CN.9/2001/3] (see p. 991). The Commission also had before it reports of the Secretary-General on world demographic trends [E/CN.9/2001/4] (see p. 1002) and on programme implementation and progress of work in the field of population in 2000 [E/CN.9/2001/5] [YUN 2000, p. 1007], and a note by the Secretariat on the draft programme of work of the Population Division for the 2002-2003 biennium [E/CN.9/2001/6] (see p. 1002).

In addition to adopting a resolution on population, environment and development [E/2001/25 (res. 2001/1)] (see p. 992), the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption a draft decision on the Commission's report on its thirty-fourth session and the provisional agenda for its thirty-fifth (2002) session. It also took note of the documents it had considered [dec. 2001/1].

By decision 2001/231 of 19 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Commission on its thirty-fourth session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the thirty-fifth session.

In preparation for the thirty-fifth session, the Commission's Bureau held an intersessional meeting in New York on 7 and 8 November [E/CN.9/2002/CRP.1].

2001 UN activities

In a report on programme implementation and progress of work of the UN Population Division in 2001 [E/CN.9/2002/5], the Secretary-General described the Division's activities dealing with the analysis of demographic variables at the world level; world population estimates and projections; population policy and socio-economic development; monitoring, coordination and dissemination of population information; and technical cooperation in population.

The Population Division's work in fertility and family planning analysis included the completion of a wallchart on World Contraceptive Use, 2001, which showed the most recent data available from surveys on contraceptive prevalence, including methods used. A report on world marriage patterns was under preparation. A workshop on prospects for fertility decline in high-fertility countries (New York, 9-11 July) cited the low status of women, especially their lagging educational attainment—one of the main obstacles to fertility decline—together with high family size preferences and the lack of accessible and affordable contraceptives.

The manual on the estimation of adult mortality was finalized for publication in 2002. At the end of 2001 a completed database on infant and child mortality, which incorporated data on under-five mortality in developing countries, became available. The data and accompanying documentation were also available on diskettes.

With regard to international migration, the Population Division prepared the report of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly on the subject (see p. 992) and issued, on a set of three diskettes, the "International Migration from Countries with Economies in Transition, 1980-2000" database. It also updated the "Flows in International Migration from South to North" database and finalized the reports "Levels and Trends of International Migration in Asia" and "Replacement Migration: Is It a Solution to Declining and Ageing Populations?" [Sales No. E.01.XIII.19]. As to internal migration, work was completed on gathering data for Latin America and the Caribbean, and North America, while the report "The Components of Urban Growth in Developing Countries" was published.

The results of the 2000 Revision of population estimates and projections to 2050 were published in two volumes. Volume I, World Population Prospects: The 2000 Revision, Comprehensive Tables [Sales No. E.01.XIII.8], was issued in July and volume II, World Population Prospects: The 2000 Revision, Sex and Age Distribution of the World Population [Sales No. E.01.XIII.9], was released in August. The data from the publication were also issued on CD-ROM. The 2000 Revision incorporated the impact of HIV/AIDS for 45 countries and used a revised methodology to project the epidemic's effect. The Analytical Report, which completed the series of publications related to the 2000 Revision, was finalized and would be published in 2002 under the title World Population Prospects: The 2000 Revision, volume III. The results of the 2001 Revision of World Urbanization Prospects were issued in draft form and the urban and rural part of the projections were made available on the Population Division's web site.

In the area of population policy and socio-economic development, the three-volume monograph Abortion Policies: A Global Review [Sales No. E.02.XIII.13] presented a country-by-country examination of national policies concerning induced abortion and the context within which it took place. The report Results of the Eighth United Nations Inquiry among Governments on Population and Development [Sales No. E.01.XIII.2] was published as part of the Population Division's effort to ensure proper monitoring of the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action. A wallchart, Population, Environment and Development, 2001 [Sales No. E.01.XIII.5], presented statistical data on countries' population size and growth, economic development and selected areas of environmental concern, including the supply of freshwater, deforestation, food and agriculture and greenhouse gas emissions. The Population, Resources, Environment and Development (PRED Bank, version 3) database was released on CD-ROM. A new publication, World Population Ageing, 1950-2050, provided an overview of the world ageing process and detailed indicators of population ageing for the world, regions and countries. It showed that the ageing of populations was a pervasive, unprecedented and enduring process with profound social and economic implications.

In 2001, the Population Division prepared the latest edition of its annual report, "World Population Monitoring", which had as its topic reproductive rights and reproductive health, with special reference to HIV/AIDS. The Division continued to update and expand its web site, providing information about new research publications. The Population Information Network (POPIN) web site continued to provide users with a continuous source of population information, particularly links to material within the UN system.

The Population Division continued to focus its technical cooperation programme on activities to strengthen population research and teaching institutions in developing countries. The major objectives of its activities were: to build capacity in developing countries for effective use of the Internet for population research and training and to encourage proper institutionalization of new technologies of information and communication in population centres; to promote cooperation among population institutions in the South and enhance the visibility of their work; and to ensure that the results of the Division's analytical and normative activities were relayed to stakeholders in developing countries. The Division continued to support and develop three networks of population research and training institutions, each of them having a web site and an electronic discussion group. It also continued its Outreach Programme, which sought to associate promising students and young researchers from developing countries with some of its analytical activities. In 2001, five young scholars from Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Côte d'Ivoire, Morocco and Togo participated in a special training programme on the prospects for fertility decline in high-fertility countries.

World demographic trends

In a March report to the Commission on Population and Development [E/CN.9/2001/4], prepared in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/2 [YUN 1996, p. 977], the Secretary-General provided an overview of the latest demographic trends worldwide for major areas and selected countries. It was estimated that the world population—some 6.1 billion in 2001—was growing at a rate of 1.2 per cent annually, implying a net addition of 77 million people per year. Six countries (Bangladesh, China, India, Indonesia, Nigeria, Pakistan) accounted for half of that annual increment. By 2050, the world population was expected to be between 7.9 billion (low variant) and 10.9 billion (high variant), with 9.3 billion as the medium variant.

Programme of work, 2002-2003

The Secretariat submitted to the Commission on Population and Development a February note [E/CN.9/2001/6] containing the Population Division's draft programme of work for 2002-2003. The Commission was invited to comment and make recommendations on the draft programme. On 6 April [E/2001/25 (dec. 2001/1)], the Commission took note of the draft.

Chapter IX

Social policy, crime prevention and human resources development

In 2001, the United Nations continued to promote the advancement of social, cultural and human resources development, and to strengthen its crime prevention and criminal justice programme.

In February, the Commission for Social Development considered measures for implementing the further initiatives for social development adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-fourth (2000) special session to review and appraise implementation of the outcome of the 1995 World Summit for Social Development. The Assembly, in 2001, addressed follow-up to the World Summit and the special session and took action regarding other social issues, including the implementation of the 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and preparations for the tenth anniversary of the 1994 International Year of the Family.

The Assembly devoted two plenary meetings to the observance of the International Year of Dialogue among Civilizations (2001), at the close of which it proclaimed the Global Agenda for Dialogue among Civilizations. The Assembly also proclaimed 2002 as the United Nations Year for Cultural Heritage and addressed the question of the return or restitution of cultural properties. As part of UN efforts to enhance respect for cultural diversity, the Assembly adopted resolutions on the protection of religious sites, the destruction of relics and monuments in Afghanistan and the building of a better world through sports and the Olympic ideal.

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice finalized draft plans of action for the implementation of the 2000 Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice, which the Economic and Social Council endorsed and recommended to the Assembly for adoption. An inter-governmental expert group commenced work on drafting an international legal instrument against corruption. In May, the Assembly adopted and opened for signature the Protocol against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Their Parts and Components and Ammunition to the 2000 United Nations Convention on Transnational Organized Crime.

In December, the Assembly called for the early ratification of the Convention and related protocols.

In continuing efforts to achieve the global goal of education for all, the Assembly, in December, proclaimed the 10-year period beginning 1 January 2003 the United Nations Literacy Decade. In its resolution on the University for Peace, it invited all peoples to celebrate One Day in Peace on 1 January 2002 and every year thereafter.

Follow-up to 1995 World Summit and to General Assembly special session

In July [A/56/140], the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 55/46 [YUN 2000, p. 1034], reported on follow-up to the Assembly's twenty-fourth (2000) special session [YUN 2000, p. 1012], which reviewed and appraised implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action adopted at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113]. The report focused on follow-up activities undertaken by relevant intergovernmental bodies within the UN system to implement the further initiatives for social development adopted at the special session by resolution S/24-2 [YUN 2000, p. 1013]. Following the special session, the Secretariat initiated efforts to improve coordination of UN system activities for implementing the outcomes of the World Summit and the further initiatives for social development. Subsequent progress reports from the heads of UN agencies, funds and programmes indicated that nearly all UN system bodies had initiated follow-up activities. Given that many of the activities reported were in existence prior to the adoption of the further initiatives, the special session provided an important political endorsement of the UN system's ongoing efforts to promote social development for all.

The principal themes and main areas for follow-up action included: reducing the proportion of people living in extreme poverty by one half by 2015; monitoring the social impact of macroeconomic policies; strengthening the international financial architecture and reducing the negative social and economic impacts of international financial turbulence; supporting developing countries' integration into the multi-lateral trading system; promoting efforts to mobilize additional resources for social development; sharing best practices in the field of social protection; minimizing undesirable humanitarian consequences of sanctions; strengthening mechanisms for conflict prevention and peace-building; elaborating a coordinated international strategy on employment; promoting initiatives on education for all; employing health policy as a proactive instrument for poverty reduction and economic and social development; strengthening the fight against money-laundering and corruption; promoting efforts to stop the HIV/AIDS pandemic; and finding durable solutions to the problems of refugees and returnees.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/56/585], adopted resolution 56/177 without vote [agenda item 27].

Implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Recalling the World Summit for Social Development, held at Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, entitled "World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world", held at Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000,

Reaffirming that the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action and the further initiatives for social development adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-fourth special session constitute the basic framework for the promotion of social development for all at the national and international levels,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Recalling also and reaffirming the commitments made at major United Nations conferences, special sessions, summit conferences and their follow-up processes, and the principles expressed in relevant United Nations declarations,

Recalling further its resolution 55/46 of 29 November 2000 on the implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly,

1. Reaffirms the commitments made by heads of State and Government at the World Summit for Social Development, contained in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action, which established a new consensus to place people at the centre of the concerns for sustainable development and pledged to eradicate poverty, promote full and productive employment and foster social integration so as to achieve stable, safe and just societies for all;

2. Also reaffirms the decisions on further action and initiatives to accelerate social development for all, adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-fourth special session and contained in the further initiatives for social development;

3. Stresses the vital importance of placing the goals of social development, as contained in the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action and in the further initiatives for social development, at the centre of economic policy-making, including in policies that influence domestic and global market forces and the global economy;

4. Encourages coordinated and mutually reinforcing follow-up to the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action, the further initiatives for social development and the United Nations Millennium Declaration, emphasizing the strong interrelatedness in respect of social development issues;

5. Invites the Secretary-General, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission for Social Development, the regional commissions, the relevant agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and other relevant intergovernmental forums, within their respective mandates, to take on a priority basis and in a coordinated manner all steps necessary to ensure the effective implementation of all commitments and undertakings contained in the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action and in the further initiatives for social development, and to continue to be actively involved in their follow-up;

6. Recognizes that the implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly calls for the strengthening of cooperation at the regional level through, inter alia, the promotion of dialogue among regional and subregional groups and organizations, encouragement of the implementation of regional social development agendas where they exist, and encouragement of recipient countries, donor Governments and agencies and multilateral financial institutions to take greater account of the regional social development agendas of the regional commissions and of regional and subregional organizations, inter alia, in their funding policies and programmes;

7. Reaffirms that a strong political commitment by the international community is needed to implement strengthened and effective international cooperation and assistance for development, including social development, and that the mobilization of domestic and international resources for development from all sources is an essential component of the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action and of the further initiatives for social development;

8. Welcomes the convening of the International Conference on Financing for Development, to be held at

Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002, which will consider the mobilization of national and international resources for social development, and the World Summit on Sustainable Development, to be held at Johannesburg, South Africa, from 2 to 11 September 2002, and encourages their preparatory committees and other relevant intergovernmental bodies involved in the preparations for and follow-up to those conferences to give consideration to the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly;

9. Reaffirms that the follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly will be undertaken on the basis of an integrated approach to social development and within the framework of a coordinated follow-up to major international and summit conferences in the economic, social and related fields, and in this regard takes note of Economic and Social Council resolution 2001/21 of 26 July 2001 on integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits;

10. Also reaffirms the need for effective partnership and cooperation between Governments and the relevant actors of civil society, including non-governmental organizations and the private sector, in the implementation of and follow-up to the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action and the further initiatives for social development, and the need for ensuring their involvement in the planning, elaboration, implementation and evaluation of social policies at the national level;

11. Further reaffirms that the Commission for Social Development, as a functional commission of the Economic and Social Council, will continue to have the primary responsibility for the follow-up to and review of the further implementation of the commitments made at Copenhagen and the outcome of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly;

12. Invites Governments to support the work of the Commission for Social Development, inter alia, through the participation of high-level representatives on social development issues and policies, and to continue to assess on a regular basis the progress made at the national level towards the implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, and to submit such information on a voluntary basis to the Commission;

13. Takes into account the fact that the Commission for Social Development will consider the priority theme "Integration of social and economic policy" at its fortieth session, in 2002, and emphasizes the importance of the active participation in and contribution to the work of the Commission by the relevant funds and programmes and the specialized agencies of the United Nations system;

14. Takes note of the Report on the World Social Situation, 2001, and requests the Secretary-General to submit future reports on a biennial basis;

15. Also takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the item entitled "Implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly", and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on this question to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session.

An overview of the Report on the World Social Situation, 2001 [Sales No. E.01.IV.5], noted by the Assembly above, had been presented by the Secretary-General to the Economic and Social Council the previous year [YUN 2000, p. 1034].

Commission for Social Development

The Commission for Social Development, at its thirty-ninth session (New York, 13-23 February) [E/2001/26 & Corr.1], recommended a multi-year work programme for 2002-2006 (see p. 1006) built around follow-up to the 1995 World Summit for Social Development and the twenty-fourth (2000) special session of the General Assembly, and considered preparations for the observance of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family (1994) (see p. 1008). The Commission convened expert panels and adopted resolutions on the priority theme "Enhancing social protection and reducing vulnerability in a globalizing world" and on the sub-theme "The role of volunteerism in the promotion of social development".

The Commission considered an analytical report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.5/2001/2] on the priority theme, which drew on the deliberations of two expert group meetings, held in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1034], that explored ways to develop social protection systems and mechanisms to ensure their sustainability. The report defined the terrain of social protection policy in terms of: its objectives and functions; its relation to human rights and the political economy; the role of Government, the private sector, the community and the family; and multilateral efforts, including those of the UN system and the European Union (EU). It reviewed the challenges to social protection in the face of globalization; outlined key elements in a broad policy and institutional framework; and made recommendations for national and international action to promote human development and effective social protection systems, to be considered as part of the broader strategies adopted to achieve that goal.

Having discussed the foregoing report, the Commission decided to consider ways of further examining the issue at a future session [E/2001/26 (res. 39/1)].

The Commission also considered the Secretary-General's note [E/CN.5/2001/6] on the sub-theme of the role of volunteerism in the promotion of social development, which discussed the spirit of volunteering to recapture its human and community dimension, as well as its constituent and irreducible diversity; dealt with the crucial challenge of linking voluntary action with social development strategies; and explored possible avenues for government support of volunteering in the context of the unprecedented opportunities offered by the International Year of Volunteers (2001) (see p. 814). The Commission welcomed the Secretary-General's note and requested him to report to the General Assembly's fifty-sixth (2001) session on ways for Governments and the UN system to support volunteering (see p. 815) and to propose recommendations for discussion at that session [E/2001/26 (dec. 39/2)].

In preparation for the Commission's 2002 session, the Secretariat organized three expert group meetings (San José, Costa Rica, 11-13 June; Sofia, Bulgaria, 30 October-1 November; and New York, 5-7 November) on the social aspects of macroeconomic policies, expenditures in the social sector as a productive factor and social assessment as a policy tool. On the basis of the meetings' outcomes, the Secretary-General prepared a December report [E/CN.5/2002/3], which reviewed the framework for the integration of economic and social policy—the priority theme for the 2002 session—provided an overview of the major challenges facing that policy, highlighted the major conclusions of the expert meetings and presented recommendations for action at the national and international levels.

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report [E/2001/26 & Corr.1], endorsed its resolutions and decisions, and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its fortieth (2002) session (decision 2001/235). On the same date, the Council took note of the report of the Commission acting as the Preparatory Committee for the Second World Assembly on Ageing on its first and resumed sessions and approved the provisional agenda for its second session (decision 2001/239) (see p. 1102).

Work programme

On 24 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/2001/26 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 2001/7 without vote [agenda item 14(b)].

Proposals for a multi-year programme of work of the Commission for Social Development for 2002-2006

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1996/7 of 22 July 1996 by which it decided on the structure of the agenda and work programme of the Commission for Social Development,

Decides that the multi-year programme of work of the Commission for the period 2002-2006 shall be the following:

2002: Follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly

(a) Priority theme: "Integration of social and economic policy". Under this theme, the following specific topics will be considered:

- (i) Social aspects of macroeconomic policies;

(b) Review of relevant United Nations plans and programmes of action pertaining to the situation of social groups:

Comprehensive review on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family.

2005: Follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly

(a) Priority theme: "Review of further implementation of the World Summit for Social Development and the outcome of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly";

(b) Review of relevant United Nations plans and programmes of action pertaining to the situation of social groups.

2006: Follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly

(a) Priority theme: "Review of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006)";

(b) Review of relevant United Nations plans and programmes of action pertaining to the social groups.

Role of cooperatives

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/123 [YUN 1999, p. 1039], the Secretary-General submitted a May report with a later addendum [A/56/83-E/2001/68 & Add.1] summarizing information received from 18 Governments and 21 specialized agencies, international organizations, and national and international cooperative organizations on their activities in utilizing and developing cooperatives, as well as their views on the draft guidelines aimed at creating a supportive environment for the development of cooperatives, previously sent to them for comment.

In general, the Governments reported their continuing support for and recognition of the cooperative movement's potential for and contribution to the attainment of social development goals. On the basis of the information received, in particular the specific comments on and suggested revisions to the draft guidelines, the Secretary-General made a series of recommendations and annexed a revised draft text of the guidelines for the Assembly's consideration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/56/572], adopted resolution 56/114 without vote [agenda item 108].

Cooperatives in social development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/90 of 16 December 1992, 49/155 of 23 December 1994 and 51/58 of 12 December 1996 and its resolution 54/123 of 17 December 1999, in which it requested the Secretary-General to seek the views of Governments on the draft guidelines aimed at creating a supportive environment for the development of cooperatives and to provide, if necessary, a revised version for adoption,

Recognizing that cooperatives, in their various forms, promote the fullest possible participation in the economic and social development of all people, including women, youth, older persons and people with disabilities, and are becoming a major factor of economic and social development,

Recognizing also the important contribution and potential of all forms of cooperatives to the follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development, held at Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, the Fourth World Conference on Women, held at Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995, and the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), held at Istanbul, Turkey, from 3 to 14 June 1996, and their five-year reviews, as well as the World Food Summit, held at Rome from 13 to 17 November 1996,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Draws the attention of Member States to the draft guidelines aimed at creating a supportive environment for the development of cooperatives, to be considered by them in developing or revising their national policies on cooperatives;

3. Encourages Governments to keep under review, as appropriate, the legal and administrative provisions governing the activities of cooperatives, with a view to ensuring a supportive environment for them and to protecting and advancing the potential of cooperatives to help them to achieve their goals;

4. Urges Governments, relevant international organizations and specialized agencies, in collaboration with national and international cooperative organizations, to give due consideration to the role and contribution of cooperatives in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit for Social Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women and the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and their five-year reviews, as well as the World Food Summit, by, inter alia:

- (a) Utilizing and developing fully the potential and contribution of cooperatives for the attainment of social development goals, in particular the eradication of poverty, the generation of full and productive employment and the enhancement of social integration;

- (b) Encouraging and facilitating the establishment and development of cooperatives, including taking measures aimed at enabling people living in poverty or belonging to vulnerable groups to engage on a voluntary basis in the creation and development of cooperatives;

- (c) Taking appropriate measures aimed at creating a supportive and enabling environment for the development of cooperatives by, inter alia, developing an effective partnership between Governments and the cooperative movement;

5. Invites Governments, in collaboration with the cooperative movement, to develop programmes to promote and strengthen the education of members, the elected leadership and professional cooperative management, where appropriate, and to create or improve statistical databases on the development of cooperatives and on their contribution to national economies;

6. Invites Governments, relevant international organizations, specialized agencies and local, national and international cooperative organizations to continue to observe the International Day of Cooperatives annually, on the first Saturday of July, as proclaimed by the General Assembly in its resolution 47/90;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the relevant United Nations and other international organizations and national, regional and international cooperative organizations, to render support to Member States, as appropriate, in their efforts to create a supportive environment for the development of cooperatives and to promote an exchange of experience and best practices, through, inter alia, conferences, workshops and seminars at the national and regional levels;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session.

UN Research Institute for Social Development

During 2001, the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) continued to conduct research into the social dimensions of development issues. The report of the UNRISD Board [E/CN.5/2003/2] detailing the year's activities noted that, in September, the Institute contributed to the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (see p. 615) and jointly organized a conference with the Ford Foundation on reviving development economics as a discipline that could improve the understanding of the acute problems facing developing countries. It also noted the commissioning of four papers on globalization and equity, in preparation for a meeting of high-level UN officials in 2002 on that theme. The report described the range of projects that were ongoing, completed or initiated under the UNRISD research programmes on social policy and development; democracy, governance and human rights; civil society and social movements; and technology, business and society.

UNRISD continued to carry out advisory activities for UN agencies, multilateral and bilateral organizations, Governments, non-governmental organizations (NGOs), other research institutes and universities. In addition, it maintained a steady output of publications, which were made available at many relevant events worldwide, and focused attention on a comprehensive redevelopment of its web site.

In February [E/2001/26 (dec. 39/105)], the Commission for Social Development took note of the report of the UNRISD Board for 1999 and 2000 [YUN 1999, p. 1040, & YUN 2000, p. 1035]. Following consideration of a January note by the Secretary-General with a later addendum [E/CN.5/2001/8 & Add.1], the Commission renominated three Board members, whose terms would expire on 30 June, for a further two-year term and nominated six new replacement members for four years, to be confirmed by the Economic and Social Council [dec. 39/101]. The Commission also took note of the Secretary-General's note [dec. 39/105].

On 24 July, the Council confirmed the three renominations and six new nominations to the UNRISD Board (decision 2001/236).

Follow-up to International Year of the Family

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/124 [YUN 1999, p. 1041] and decision 54/437 [ibid., p. 1346], the Secretary-General, by an August note [A/56/57-E/2001/5], transmitted to the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council the fourth biennial report [E/CN.5/2001/4] on follow-up activities during 1995-1999 to the International Year of the Family (1994), proclaimed by Assembly resolution 44/82 [YUN 1989, p. 612]. According to the report, those activities resulted in significant accomplishments at all levels, among them a greater awareness of the role of families and family issues, new initiatives and long-term activities in support of families worldwide, strengthening and development of mechanisms devoted to family policy and research, and mobilization of a global network of partners, particularly NGOs.

Nonetheless, some crucial issues were left unresolved and gaps in policies remained. In particular, consensus was not achieved on definitions and terminology related to the family, family policies and family-sensitive considerations. Partly for that reason, a long-term global action plan on families, similar to those on the advancement of women, ageing, youth or disability, had not been developed.

The report also suggested appropriate ways to observe the Year's tenth anniversary in 2004, as well as national and international preparatory activities to be undertaken, and made a number of recommendations in that context. As the lead entity for the anniversary, the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA) would stimulate and coordinate activities on five main themes: approaches to family policy development; technology and its impact on the family; parental roles and intra-familial support systems; statistics and indicators for family well-being; and HIV/AIDS and its impact on families.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/2001/26 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 2001/6 without vote [agenda item 14 (b)].

Preparations for and observance of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:
[For text, see General Assembly resolution 56/113 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/56/572], adopted resolution 56/113 without vote [agenda item 108].

Preparations for and observance of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/82 of 8 December 1989, 47/237 of 20 September 1993, 50/142 of 21 December 1995, 52/81 of 12 December 1997 and 54/124 of 17 De- cember 1999 concerning the proclamation, preparations for and observance of the International Year of the Family,

Recognizing that the preparation for and observance of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family provides a useful opportunity for drawing further attention to the objectives of the Year for increasing cooperation at all levels on family issues and for undertaking concerted actions to strengthen family-centred policies and programmes as part of an integrated comprehensive approach to development,

Recognizing also that the follow-up to the International Year of the Family is an integral part of the agenda and of the multi-year programme of work of the Commission for Social Development until 2004,

Recognizing further that the family-related provisions of the outcomes of the world conferences of the 1990s continue to provide policy guidance on ways to strengthen family-centred components of policies and programmes as part of an integrated comprehensive approach to development,

Noting with concern the devastating effects of difficult social and economic conditions, armed conflicts, natural disasters and infectious diseases such as tuberculosis and malaria and of the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) pandemic on family life,

Emphasizing that equality between women and men and respect for the human rights of all family members is essential to family well-being and to society at large,

Noting the active role of the United Nations in enhancing international cooperation in family-related issues, in particular in the area of research and information,

Emphasizing that it is necessary to intensify and improve coordination of the activities of the United Nations system on family-related issues so as to contribute fully to the effective preparation for and celebration of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the follow-up to the International Year of the Family and the preparations for the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family and the recommendations contained therein;

2. Urges Governments to view 2004 as a target year by which concrete achievements should be made to identify and elaborate issues of direct concern to families and also to set up and strengthen, where appropriate, mechanisms to plan and coordinate activities of governmental bodies and non-governmental organizations;

3. Encourages the regional commissions, within their respective mandates and resources, to participate in the preparatory process of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family and to play an active role in facilitating regional cooperation in this regard;

4. Requests the Commission for Social Development to continue to review annually the preparations for the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family as part of its agenda and of its multi-year programme of work until 2004;

5. Invites Member States to consider organizing activities in preparation for the celebration of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family at the national level;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in order to facilitate contributions by Governments, to include the United Nations Trust Fund on Family Activities, on an annual basis, among the programmes for which funds are pledged at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council on the implementation of the present resolution, including a description of the state of preparation for the observance of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family at all levels.

Report of Secretary-General. In an interim report [E/CN.5/2002/2] covering the period from February to December, the Secretary-General described initiatives undertaken in preparation for the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family in 2004.

DESA convened a consultative meeting on regional and global coordination in the promotion of social integration (New York, 1-5 October) to develop a focused approach to preparations for the observance, and initiated collaborative links with other UN organizations and consultations with intergovernmental organizations on family issues. The Secretariat organized the third consultative meeting of regional and international NGOs on the family (New York, 9 February) in conjunction with the February session of the Commission for Social Development to share information on planned activities. The United Nations Trust Fund on Family Activities provided financial assistance to Governments and NGOs for projects on the well-being of families. The UN family programme web site provided, in addition to other information, the bimonthly newsletter, Family Matters. The Secretariat prepared background information for use by Governments, the UN system and NGOs in the observance of the International Day of Families (15 May).

The report suggested that Governments might set up national coordinating committees, promote public information on the anniversary's objectives and encourage grass-roots involvement in related activities. It called on the Department of Public Information to develop an information strategy, on the UN regional commissions and intergovernmental organizations to participate in the preparations, and for contributions to the Trust Fund.

Persons with disabilities

Follow-up to World Programme of Action

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/121 [YUN 1999, p. 1043], the Secretary-General issued two reports on the implementation of the 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, adopted by Assembly resolution 37/52 [YUN 1982, p. 981]. The first was an interim report [E/CN.5/2001/7], which reviewed progress in implementing equalization of opportunities by, for and with persons with disabilities in the light of the priorities for action identified in resolution 54/121, described selected experiences in regional cooperation and presented a perspective framework for the fourth review and appraisal of the World Programme of Action in 2002. In February, the Commission for Social Development took note of the interim report [E/2001/26 (dec. 39/104)].

The second report, issued in July [A/56/169 & Corr.1], described recent policy and programme initiatives related to persons with disabilities, based on information received from Governments, UN system organizations and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. Activities of the 27 reporting Governments concerned accessibility, health and social services, employment and sustainable livelihoods, national efforts to promote more inclusive societies, and national awareness campaigns on disability issues. Within the UN system, the International Labour Organization focused on promoting decent work for persons with disabilities; the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations organized discussions on the integration of such persons in its field projects; the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) directed attention to inclusive education as a strategy to achieve the goal of education for all; the International Initiative against Avoidable Disablement, jointly sponsored by the World Health Organization, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Children's Fund, had 13 foundations in Asia and East Africa and funded a disability programme of the Palestinian Authority; and the World Bank introduced disability concerns into its poverty reduction projects.

The report examined progress in equalization of opportunities in terms of the establishment of international norms and standards to promote the rights of persons with disabilities, the improvement of accessibility of the United Nations for such persons and the compilation of global statistics and indicators on disability. In addition, the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability provided $159,676 in grants to six disability-related projects in Africa and in Central and Eastern Europe between November 2000 and June 2001.

The report further considered substantive aspects of a framework for the fourth review and appraisal of the World Programme of Action to be submitted to the Assembly in 2002. Five critical aspects were identified for review: the extent to which countries had specific policies and programmes designed to facilitate both community-based rehabilitation and equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities; inclusion of the disability perspective in policies and programmes to foster social and economic development; elaboration of specific criteria for evaluation of progress towards full participation and equality; periodic data gathering based on those evaluation criteria; and monitoring systems to obtain indicators for measuring progress.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/56/572], adopted resolution 56/115 without vote [agenda item 108].

Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons: towards a society for all in the twenty-first century

The General Assembly,

Recalling the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and reaffirming the obligations contained in relevant human rights instruments, including the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Recalling also its resolutions 37/52 of 3 December 1982, by which it adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, 48/96 of 20 December 1993, by which it adopted the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, 49/153 of 23 December 1994, 50/144 of 21 December 1995, 52/82 of 12 December 1997 and 54/121 of 17 December 1999,

Recalling further all of its relevant resolutions on the equalization of opportunities for and the human rights of persons with disabilities, and those of the Economic and Social Council and its functional commissions,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted on 8 September 2000 by the heads of State and Government at the Millennium Summit of the United Nations, and recognizing the need to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms of people with disabilities,

Noting with appreciation the actions of Governments to implement relevant sections of the Standard Rules and of relevant resolutions that give special attention to accessible environments and information and communications technologies, health, education and social services, employment and sustainable livelihoods, including the relevant activities of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

Reaffirming the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits and their respective follow-up reviews,

Noting with appreciation the assessment by the Secretary-General of the implementation of the outcomes of major United Nations conferences and summits to promote the rights and well-being of persons with disabilities, ensuring their full participation and equality, as well as the measures undertaken by the United Nations system aimed at preventing disabling conditions,

Noting the invitation made to the General Assembly by the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, held at Durban, South Africa, from 31 August to 8 September 2001, to consider elaborating an integral and comprehensive international convention to protect and promote the rights and dignity of disabled people, including, in particular, provisions that address the discriminatory practices and treatment affecting them,

Acknowledging the important role of non-governmental organizations in the promotion and protection of the human rights of persons with disabilities, and noting in this regard their work in promoting the elaboration of an international convention on the rights of disabled persons,

Noting with appreciation the valuable work of the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability in supporting the building of national capacities to promote the Standard Rules in order to create opportunities for sustainable livelihoods by, for and with persons with disabilities,

Noting with appreciation also the important contributions of subregional, regional and international seminars and conferences related to persons with disabilities,

Mindful of the need to adopt and implement effective policies and strategies to promote the rights and the full and effective participation of persons with disabilities in economic, social, cultural and political life, on the basis of equality, to achieve a society for all,

Welcoming initiatives to hold international conferences relating to persons with disabilities, including the Sixth World Assembly of Disabled Peoples' International, to be held in Japan in 2002,

Concerned that improvement of awareness of and sensitivity to disability issues and respect for the human rights of disabled persons has not been significant enough to improve the quality of life of persons with disabilities worldwide,

Expressing grave concern that situations of armed conflict continue to have especially devastating consequences for the human rights of persons with disabilities,

Recognizing the importance of timely and reliable data on disability-sensitive topics, programme planning and evaluation and the need for further development of practical statistical methodology for the collection and compilation of data on populations with disabilities,

Reiterating that technology, in particular information and communications technology, provides new possibilities for improving accessibility and employment for persons with disabilities and for facilitating their full and effective participation and equality, and welcoming the initiatives of the United Nations in promoting information and communications technology as a means of achieving the universal goal of a society for all,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons;

2. Welcomes the many initiatives and actions of Governments and relevant United Nations bodies and organizations, including relevant Bretton Woods institutions, as well as non-governmental organizations, to enhance the rights of persons with disabilities and the further equalization of opportunities by, for and with persons with disabilities in all sectors of society;

3. Notes with appreciation the valuable work undertaken by the Special Rapporteur on disability of the Commission for Social Development in monitoring the implementation of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities under his third mandate for the period 2000-2002, and also notes with appreciation the work of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in supporting the work of the Special Rapporteur;

4. Encourages Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the private sector, as appropriate, to continue to take concrete measures to promote the implementation of relevant United Nations resolutions and agreed international standards concerning persons with disabilities, in particular the Standard Rules, and for the further equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities by focusing on accessibility, health, education, social services, including training and rehabilitation, safety nets, employment and sustainable livelihoods, in the design and implementation of strategies, policies and programmes to promote a more inclusive society;

5. Calls upon Governments to undertake all necessary measures to advance beyond the adoption of national plans for people with disabilities through, inter alia, the creation or reinforcement of arrangements for the promotion and awareness of disability issues and the allocation of sufficient resources for the full implementation of existing plans and initiatives, and emphasizes in this regard the importance of supporting national efforts through international cooperation;

6. Encourages Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to take practical actions, including public information campaigns, by, for and with persons with disabilities, with a view to increasing awareness of and sensitivity to disability issues, combating and overcoming discrimination against persons with disabilities and furthering their full and effective participation in society;

7. Encourages Governments to continue their support to non-governmental organizations contributing to the fulfilment of the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons;

8. Also encourages Governments to involve persons with disabilities in the formulation of strategies and plans aimed at eradicating poverty, promoting education and enhancing employment;

9. Urges relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, including relevant human rights treaty bodies and the regional commissions, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and institutions, to continue to work closely with the programme on disability of the Division for Social Policy and Development of the Secretariat in the promotion of the rights of persons with disabilities, including activities at the field level, by sharing experiences, findings and recommendations on persons with disabilities;

10. Urges Governments to cooperate with the Statistics Division of the Secretariat in the continued development of global statistics and indicators on disability, and encourages them to avail themselves of the technical assistance of the Division to build national capacities for national data collection systems, including the compilation and dissemination of data on disabled persons, as well as the development of methods for data collection and disability statistics, as appropriate;

11. Urges Governments, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to provide special protection to girls and women with disabilities, elderly people with disabilities and persons with developmental and psychiatric disabilities, with special emphasis on integrating them into society and protecting and promoting their human rights;

12. Urges Governments, in collaboration with the United Nations system, to give special attention to the rights, needs and well-being of children with disabilities and their families in the development of policies and programmes, including the implementation of the Standard Rules;

13. Encourages Governments, intergovernmental organizations, concerned non-governmental organizations and the private sector to continue to support the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability with a view to strengthening its capacity to support catalytic and innovative activities to implement fully the World Programme of Action and the Standard Rules, including the work of the Special Rapporteur, and to support activities to build national capacities, with emphasis on priorities for action identified in the present resolution;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to support initiatives of relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, as well as those of regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and institutions, for the promotion of all human rights of, and non-discrimination in respect of, persons with disabilities and the further implementation of the World Programme of Action, as well as their efforts to integrate persons with disabilities in technical cooperation activities, both as beneficiaries and as decision makers;

15. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts in improving the accessibility of the United Nations for persons with disabilities, and urges him to continue to implement plans to provide a barrier-free environment;

16. Welcomes the preparations proposed by the Secretary-General in his current report for the fourth quinquennial review and appraisal of the World Programme of Action in 2002, including the proposed framework for that review, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session, through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council, a report on the findings and recommendations based on the review and appraisal, including a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Also on 19 December [meeting 88], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee

[A/56/583/Add.2], adopted resolution 56/168 without vote [agenda item 119 (b)].

Comprehensive and integral international convention to promote and protect the rights and dignity of persons with disabilities

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the obligations contained in the relevant human rights instruments,

Reaffirming also that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights, and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set out therein, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Recalling its resolution 37/52 of 3 December 1982, by which it adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, its resolution 48/96 of 20 December 1993, by which it adopted the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, and its resolution 54/121 of 17 December 1999,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 2000/10 of 27 July 2000 on further promotion of equalization of opportunities by, for and with persons with disabilities, as well as other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the functional commissions of the Council,

Reaffirming the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits and their respective follow-up reviews, in particular as they pertain to the promotion of the rights and well-being of persons with disabilities on an equal and participatory basis,

Noting with satisfaction that the Standard Rules play an important role in influencing the promotion, formulation and evaluation of policies, plans, programmes and actions at the national, regional and international levels to further the equalization of opportunities by, for and with persons with disabilities,

Recognizing that, despite different efforts made to increase cooperation and integration and increasing awareness of and sensitivity to disability issues since the adoption of the World Programme of Action by Governments, bodies and relevant organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations, these efforts have not been sufficient to promote full and effective participation by and opportunities for persons with disabilities in economic, social, cultural and political life,

Encouraged by the increasing interest of the international community in the promotion and protection of the rights and dignity of persons with disabilities in the world under a comprehensive and integral approach,

Deeply concerned about the disadvantaged and vulnerable situation faced by 600 million persons with disabilities around the world, and conscious of the need to advance in the elaboration of an international instrument,

Looking forward to the final reports of the Special Rapporteur on disability of the Commission for Social Development to be presented to that Commission, and also the outcome of the study currently being undertaken pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/51 of 25 April 2000 on the adequacy of instruments in respect of the protection and monitoring of the human rights of persons with disabilities,

Taking into account the recommendation of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, held in Durban, South Africa, from 31 August to 8 September 2001, to the General Assembly to consider elaborating a comprehensive and integral international convention to promote and protect the rights and dignity of persons with disabilities, including special provisions that address the discriminatory practices and treatment that affect them,

1. Decides to establish an Ad Hoc Committee, open to the participation of all Member States and observers of the United Nations, to consider proposals for a comprehensive and integral international convention to promote and protect the rights and dignity of persons with disabilities, based on the holistic approach in the work done in the fields of social development, human rights and non-discrimination and taking into account the recommendations of the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission for Social Development;

2. Also decides that, prior to the fifty-seventh session of the General Assembly the Ad Hoc Committee shall hold at least one meeting of a duration of ten working days;

3. Invites States, relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, including relevant human rights treaty bodies, the regional commissions, the Special Rapporteur on disability of the Commission for Social Development, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations with an interest in the matter to make contributions to the work entrusted to the Ad Hoc Committee, based on the practice of the United Nations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, with the support of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Division for Social Policy and Development of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat, to submit to the Ad Hoc Committee prior to its first session a compilation of existing international legal instruments, documents and programmes which directly or indirectly address the situation of persons with disabilities, including, inter alia, those of conferences, summits, meetings or international or regional seminars convened by the United Nations and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to provide the Ad Hoc Committee with the outcome of the study undertaken pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/51 and the final reports that will be presented by the Special Rapporteur on disability of the Commission for Social Development to that Commission;

6. Calls upon States, in cooperation with regional commissions, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Division for Social Policy and Development and the Special Rapporteur on disability of the Commission for Social Development, to hold regional meetings or seminars to contribute to the work of the Ad Hoc Committee by making recommendations regarding the content and practical measures that should be considered in the international convention;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Ad Hoc Committee with the facilities necessary for the performance of its work;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the progress made by the Ad Hoc Committee.

Cultural development

United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations

General Assembly action. By resolution 56/3 of 30 October, the General Assembly decided to convene its plenary meetings devoted to the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations (2001) not on the dates designated by resolution 55/23 [YUN 2000, p. 1039], but on 8 and 9 November. Accordingly, the Assembly devoted its meetings on those dates to the observance of the Year, aimed at promoting tolerance, trust, understanding and respect for cultural diversity. Proclaimed by resolution 53/22 [YUN 1998, p. 1031], the Year was intended to encourage initiatives by Governments, the UN system and other relevant international and non-governmental organizations to celebrate mutual respect, defuse the fear of diversity and underline the importance of inclusion.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Assembly resolution 55/23, the Secretary-General reported in November on activities pertaining to the Year [A/56/523]. A dialogue among civilizations had engendered wide interest among academic and international institutions and NGOs. UNESCO, instrumental in fostering that interest, carried out a broad range of activities in cooperation with Member States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, including the holding of conferences and seminars, together with Governments, civil society and other UN organizations. The United Nations University also organized conferences, workshops and other events, such as an essay contest for children entitled "Dialogue beyond Borders". A substantive contribution to the dialogue was the publication of a book entitled Crossing the Divide, Dialogue among Civilizations, the result of collaboration among the Secretary-General's Personal Representative for the Year, the UNESCO Director-General and the Group of Eminent Persons established by the Secretary-General.

Among major events launched in celebration and support of the Year were the Salzburg Dialogue among Civilizations: a New Paradigm of International Relations, hosted by Austria in Schloss Fuschl (28 August), which issued a document entitled "Salzburg Reflections" [A/56/419];

a UNESCO-sponsored international conference in Vilnius, Lithuania (24-26 April); and another conference in Tokyo and Kyoto, Japan (31 July-3 August). The Secretary-General remarked that the conferences and activities had shown that the United Nations remained the natural home of dialogue among civilizations, essential for achieving one of the main UN objectives, namely, conflict prevention.

Communications. Several other countries addressed communications to the Secretary-General reporting their activities in observance of the Year. The Czech Republic transmitted the text of the Prague Declaration adopted by the Fifth Forum 2000 Conference (14-17 October 2001) [A/56/498]; Iran forwarded the Tehran Declaration, adopted by the International Seminar on Environment, Religion and Culture (18-20 June) [A/56/458]; and China submitted a summary of the Twenty-first Century Forum—Symposium on Dialogue among Civilizations (Beijing, 11-12 September) [A/56/471].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 November [meeting 43], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/6 [draft: A/56/L.3 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 25].

Global Agenda for Dialogue among Civilizations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 53/22 of 4 November 1998, 54/113 of 10 December 1999 and 55/23 of 13 November 2000 entitled "United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations",

Reaffirming the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, which are, inter alia, to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace, and to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Underlining the fact that all Members have undertaken to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

Reaffirming their commitment to the fulfilment of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights as a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations and as a source of inspiration for the further promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms—political, social, economic, civil and cultural—including the right to development,

Underlining the fact that all civilizations celebrate the unity and diversity of humankind and are enriched and have evolved through dialogue with other civilizations and that, despite obstacles of intolerance and aggression, there has been constructive interaction throughout history among various civilizations,

Emphasizing that a common humanity unites all civilizations and allows for the celebration of the variegated splendour of the highest attainments of this civilizational diversity, and reaffirming that the civilizational achievements constitute the collective heritage of humankind,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration of 8 September 2000, which considers, inter alia, that tolerance is one of the fundamental values essential to international relations in the twenty-first century and should include the active promotion of a culture of peace and dialogue among civilizations, with human beings respecting one another, in all their diversity of belief, culture and language, neither fearing nor repressing differences within and between societies but cherishing them as a precious asset of humanity,

Noting that globalization brings greater interrelatedness among people and increased interaction among cultures and civilizations, and encouraged by the fact that the celebration of the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations, at the beginning of the twenty-first century, has underscored that globalization is not only an economic, financial and technological process which could offer great benefit but that it also presents the challenge of preserving and celebrating the rich intellectual and cultural diversity of humankind and of civilization,

Bearing in mind the valuable contribution that dialogue among civilizations can make to an improved awareness and understanding of the common values shared by all humankind,

Recognizing that human rights and fundamental freedoms derive from the dignity and worth inherent in the human person and are thus universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated, and that the human person is the central subject of human rights and fundamental freedoms and, consequently, should be the principal beneficiary and should participate actively in the realization of these rights and freedoms,

Reaffirming that all peoples have the right of self-determination, by virtue of which they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development,

Emphasizing that promotion and protection of freedom of opinion and expression and a collective commitment to listen to and learn from each other and to respect cultural heritage and diversity are essential for dialogue, progress and human advancement,

Underlining the fact that tolerance and respect for diversity and universal promotion and protection of human rights are mutually supportive, and recognizing that tolerance and respect for diversity effectively promote and are supported by, inter alia, the empowerment of women,

Recalling its resolution 55/254 of 31 May 2001, which calls upon all States to exert their utmost efforts to ensure that religious sites are fully respected and protected,

Emphasizing the need to acknowledge and respect the richness of all civilizations and to seek common ground among civilizations in order to address comprehensively common challenges facing humanity,

Welcoming the endeavours of Governments, international organizations, civil society organizations and countless individuals to enhance understanding through constructive dialogue among civilizations,

Welcoming also the efforts of the Personal Representative of the Secretary-General for the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations and of the Group of Eminent Persons established by the Secretary-General,

Expressing its firm determination to facilitate and promote dialogue among civilizations,

Proclaims the Global Agenda for Dialogue among Civilizations:

A. Objectives, principles and participants

Article 1

Dialogue among civilizations is a process between and within civilizations, founded on inclusion, and a collective desire to learn, uncover and examine assumptions, unfold shared meaning and core values and integrate multiple perspectives through dialogue.

Article 2

Dialogue among civilizations constitutes a process to attain, inter alia, the following objectives:

- Promotion of inclusion, equity, equality, justice and tolerance in human interactions;
- Enhancement of mutual understanding and respect through interaction among civilizations;
- Mutual enrichment and advancement of knowledge and appreciation of the richness and wisdom found in all civilizations;
- Identification and promotion of common ground among civilizations in order to address common challenges threatening shared values, universal human rights and achievements of human society in various fields;
- Promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms and enrichment of common understanding of human rights;
- Development of a better understanding of common ethical standards and universal human values;
- Enhancement of respect for cultural diversity and cultural heritage.

Article 3

Pursuit of the above-mentioned objectives will be enhanced by collective commitment to the following principles:

- Faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small;
- Fulfilment in good faith of the obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;
- Respect for fundamental principles of justice and international law;
- Recognition of diversified sources of knowledge and cultural diversity as fundamental features of human society and as indispensable and cherished assets for the advancement and material and spiritual welfare of humanity at large;
- Recognition of the right of members of all civilizations to preserve and develop their cultural heritage within their own societies;

- Commitment to inclusion, cooperation and the search for understanding as the mechanisms for the promotion of common values;
- Enhancement of participation by all individuals, peoples and nations in local, national and international decision-making processes.

Article 4

Dialogue among civilizations provides important contributions to progress in the following areas:

- Promotion of confidence-building at local, national, regional and international levels;
- Enhancing mutual understanding and knowledge among different social groups, cultures and civilizations in various areas, including culture, religion, education, information, science and technology;
- Addressing threats to peace and security;
- Promotion and protection of human rights;
- Elaboration of common ethical standards.

Article 5

Participation in dialogue among civilizations shall be global in scope and shall be open to all, including:

- People from all civilizations;
- Scholars, thinkers, intellectuals, writers, scientists, people of arts, culture and media and the youth, who play an instrumental role in initiation and sustainment of dialogue among civilizations;
- Individuals from civil society and representatives of non-governmental organizations, as instrumental partners in promoting dialogue among civilizations.

Article 6

Governments shall promote, encourage and facilitate dialogue among civilizations.

Article 7

Regional and international organizations should take appropriate steps and initiatives to promote, facilitate and sustain dialogue among civilizations.

Article 8

The media has an indispensable and instrumental role in the promotion of dialogue among civilizations and in the fostering of greater understanding among various civilizations and cultures.

Article 9

The United Nations should continue to promote and strengthen the culture of dialogue among civilizations.

B. Programme of Action

1. States, the United Nations system and other international and regional organizations and civil society, including non-governmental organizations, are invited to consider the following as a means of promoting dialogue among civilizations in all domains, within existing resources and also drawing upon voluntary contributions:

- Facilitating and encouraging interaction and exchange among all individuals, inter alia, intellectuals, thinkers and artists of various societies and civilizations;
- Promoting of mutual visits and meetings of experts in various fields from different civilizations, cultures and backgrounds, which provide an opportunity for discovering commonalities among various civilizations and cultures;

- Exchange of visits among representatives of the arts and culture and the organization of cultural festivals through which people will have a chance of getting acquainted with other cultures;
  - Sponsorship of conferences, symposiums and workshops to enhance mutual understanding, tolerance and dialogue among civilizations;
  - Planning sports competitions, Olympiads and scientific competitions, with a view to encouraging positive interaction among youth from different backgrounds and cultures;
  - Reinvigorating and encouraging translation and dissemination of basic manuscripts and books and studies representing different cultures and civilizations;
  - Promotion of historical and cultural tourism;
  - Incorporation of programmes to study various cultures and civilizations in educational curriculums, including the teaching of languages, history and socio-political thoughts of various civilizations, as well as the exchange of knowledge, information and scholarship among academia;
  - Advancement of research and scholarship to achieve an objective understanding of the characteristics of each civilization and the differences, as well as ways and means to enhance constructive interaction and understanding among them;
  - Utilization of communication technologies, including audio, video, printed press, multimedia and the Internet, to disseminate the message of dialogue and understanding throughout the globe and depict and publicize historical instances of constructive interaction among different civilizations;
  - Provision of equitable opportunities for participation in the dissemination of information, with a view to achieving an objective understanding of all civilizations and enhancing constructive interaction and cooperative engagement among civilizations;
  - Implementation of programmes to enhance the spirit of dialogue, understanding and rejection of intolerance, violence and racism among people, particularly the youth;
  - Utilizing the existence of migrants in various societies in bridging the gap of understanding between cultures;
  - Consultation to articulate effective mechanisms to protect the rights of all people to maintain their cultural identity, while facilitating their integration into their social environment.
2. States should encourage and support initiatives taken by civil society and non-governmental organizations for the promotion of dialogue among civilizations.
3. States, international and regional organizations and civil society, including non-governmental organizations, are invited to develop appropriate ways and means at the local, national, regional and international levels to further promote dialogue and mutual understanding among civilizations, and to report their activities to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

4. Governments, funding institutions, civil society organizations and the private sector are invited to mobilize the necessary resources to promote dialogue among civilizations, including by contributing to the Trust Fund established by the Secretary-General in 1999 for that purpose.

5. The United Nations system, including, in particular, the Personal Representative of the Secretary-General for the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, are invited to continue to encourage and facilitate dialogue among civilizations and formulate ways and means to promote dialogue among civilizations in the activities of the United Nations in various fields.

6. The Secretary-General is requested to report to the General Assembly at its sixtieth session on the implementation of this Global Agenda and Programme of Action.

Human rights and cultural diversity

In December, by resolution 56/156, the General Assembly asked the Secretary-General to prepare a report on human rights and cultural diversity, taking into account the views of Member States, relevant UN agencies and NGOs regarding the recognition and importance of cultural diversity among all peoples and nations of the world, and to submit it to the Assembly at its fifty-seventh (2002) session.

(For further information on human rights and cultural diversity, see p. 621.)

United Nations Year for Cultural Heritage, 2002

By a letter of 20 September [A/56/231], 11 States requested the inclusion in the agenda of the General Assembly's fifty-sixth (2001) session of an additional item entitled "United Nations Year for Cultural Heritage, 2002". Annexed to the letter was an explanatory memorandum.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 November [meeting 61], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/8 [draft: A/56/L.13 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 177].

United Nations Year for Cultural Heritage, 2002

The General Assembly,

Recalling the international conventions dealing with the protection of cultural and natural heritage, including the Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict adopted at The Hague in 1954 and the two Protocols thereto, the 1970 Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property, and the 1972 Convention for the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage, and recalling also the 1989 Recommendation on the Safeguarding of Traditional Culture and Folklore,

Welcoming the ratification of the Convention for the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage by one hundred and sixty-seven States parties, and noting the inscription of more than six hundred and ninety sites on the World Heritage List,

Mindful of the importance of protecting the world cultural tangible and intangible heritage as a common ground for the promotion of mutual understanding and enrichment among cultures and civilizations,

Noting the work already undertaken to protect the world cultural and natural heritage by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, including international campaigns,

Welcoming the decisions adopted at the twenty-ninth and thirty-first sessions of the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the one hundred and sixty-first session of the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization envisaging and calling for the proclamation of a United Nations year for cultural heritage,

Taking into consideration the thirtieth anniversary of the Convention for the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage in 2002,

1. Proclaims 2002 as the United Nations Year for Cultural Heritage;

2. Invites the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to serve as the lead agency for the year;

3. Also invites the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in collaboration with States, observers, relevant United Nations bodies, within their respective mandates, other international organizations and relevant non-governmental organizations, to intensify the implementation of programmes, activities and projects aimed at the promotion and protection of the world cultural heritage;

4. Invites Member States and observers to promote education and raise public awareness to foster respect for the national and world cultural heritage;

5. Calls upon Member States, observers, national and international organizations, non-governmental organizations and the private sector to make voluntary contributions to finance and support activities aimed at the promotion and protection of the national and world cultural heritage, including relevant activities of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization;

6. Decides to devote one day of plenary meetings at the fifty-seventh session of the General Assembly, on 4 December 2002, to mark the end of the United Nations Year for Cultural Heritage, and encourages Member States and observers to be represented in those meetings at the highest level possible;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session on the activities carried out during the United Nations Year for Cultural Heritage;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session an item entitled "United Nations Year for Cultural Heritage".

Cultural property

The Secretary-General, in September [A/56/413], transmitted the UNESCO Director-General's report on action taken by the organization to implement the 1999 recommendations of the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to its Countries of Origin or its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation [YUN 1999, p. 1045]. Submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 54/190 [ibid.], the report also contained 10 recommendations adopted by the Committee at its eleventh session (Phnom Penh, Cambodia, 6-9 March 2001).

Addressed mainly to UNESCO and its Director-General, the recommendations called for: initiatives to promote ongoing bilateral discussions on the question of restitution of works of art and for steps to search for illicitly exported cultural and archaeological objects for return to their countries of origin; technical and financial support for the prohibition of the sale of illegally acquired artifacts and protection of archaeological sites; measures to promote the adoption and dissemination of the International Code of Ethics for Dealers in Cultural Property [YUN 2000, p. 1417] and Object-ID, the international standard for recording data on movable cultural property and identifying cultural objects; a strategy to promote the Committee's voluntary international fund for the return and restitution of cultural property [ibid.]; and support to Member States for the inventory of their cultural heritage so as to guarantee better national conservation and information dissemination on cultural property in the event of theft. Member States were asked to prevent trade in forged cultural objects not identified as replicas and to ensure that customs and border officials were fully trained to apply the rules of the 1970 UNESCO Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 86], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/97 [draft: A/56/L.41/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 33].

Return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 3026 A (XXVII) of 18 December 1972, 3148 (XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3187 (XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3391 (XXX) of 19 November 1975, 31/40 of 30 November 1976, 32/18 of 11 November 1977, 33/50 of 14 December 1978, 34/64 of 29 November 1979, 35/127 and 35/128 of 11 December 1980, 36/64 of 27 November 1981, 38/34 of 25 November 1983, 40/19 of 21 November 1985, 42/7 of 22 October 1987, 44/18 of 6 November 1989, 46/10 of 22 October 1991, 48/15 of 2 November 1993, 50/56 of 11 December 1995, 52/24 of 25 November 1997 and 54/190 of 17 December 1999,

Bearing in mind its resolution 56/8 of 21 November 2001 on the proclamation of 2002 as the United Nations Year for Cultural Heritage,

Recalling the Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict, adopted at The Hague on 14 May 1954,

Recalling also the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property, adopted on 14 November 1970 by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Recalling further the Convention concerning the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage, adopted on 16 November 1972 by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Recalling the Convention on Stolen or Illegally Exported Cultural Objects, adopted in Rome on 24 June 1995 by the International Institute for the Unification of Private Law,

Recalling also the Medellin Declaration for Cultural Diversity and Tolerance and the Plan of Action on Cultural Cooperation, adopted at the first Meeting of the Ministers of Culture of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held in Medellin, Colombia, on 4 and 5 September 1997,

Noting the adoption of the Universal Declaration on Cultural Diversity and the Action Plan for its implementation, adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on 2 November 2001,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General submitted in cooperation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Aware of the importance attached by some countries of origin to the return of cultural property that is of fundamental spiritual and cultural value to them, so that they may constitute collections representative of their cultural heritage,

Expressing concern at the illicit traffic in cultural property and its damage to the cultural heritage of nations,

Expressing concern also at the loss, destruction, removal, theft, pillage, illicit movement or misappropriation of and any acts of vandalism or damage directed against cultural property in areas of armed conflict and territories that are occupied, whether such conflicts are international or internal,

1. Commends the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to its Countries of Origin or its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation on the work they have accomplished, in particular through the promotion of bilateral negotiations, for the return or restitution of cultural property, the preparation of inventories of movable cultural property and the implementation of the Object-ID standard related thereto, as well as for the reduction of illicit traffic in cultural property and the dissemination of information to the public;

2. Reaffirms the importance of the provisions of the Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict, and invites Member States that have not already done so to become parties to the Convention and to promote its implementation;

3. Welcomes the adoption of the Second Protocol to the Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict, adopted at The Hague on 26 March 1999, and invites all States Parties to the Convention to consider becoming parties to the Second Protocol;

4. Invites Member States to consider adopting and implementing the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property;

5. Reaffirms the importance of the provisions of the Convention on Stolen or Illegally Exported Cultural Objects, and invites Member States that have not already done so to consider becoming parties to it;

6. Urges Member States to introduce effective national and international measures to prevent and combat the illicit trafficking in cultural property;

7. Calls upon all relevant bodies, agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and other relevant intergovernmental organizations to work in coordination with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, within their mandates and in cooperation with Member States, in order to continue to address the issue of return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin, and to provide appropriate support accordingly;

8. Invites Member States to continue drawing up, in cooperation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, systematic inventories of their cultural property;

9. Reaffirms the efforts of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to promote the use of identification systems, in particular the application of the Object-ID standard, and to encourage the linking of identification systems and existing databases, including the one developed by the International Criminal Police Organization, to allow for the electronic transmission of information in order to reduce the illicit trafficking in cultural property, and encourages the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to make further efforts in this regard in cooperation with Member States, where appropriate;

10. Welcomes the adoption of the International Code of Ethics for Dealers in Cultural Property by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on 16 November 1999, and takes note of the creation by the General Conference at the same session of the International Fund for the Return of Cultural Property to its Countries of Origin or its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation, which was launched in November 2000 on the occasion of the thirtieth anniversary of the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property;

11. Encourages the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to define and implement a strategy for the effective promotion of the International Fund, and invites

Member States, intergovernmental bodies, the private sector and other interested donors of the international community to make voluntary contributions to the Fund;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to cooperate with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in its efforts to develop all possibilities, including any further initiatives, for bringing about the attainment of the objectives of the present resolution;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-eighth session the item entitled "Return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin".

Protection of cultural sites

Destruction of relics and monuments in Afghanistan

The Security Council, at its 6 March meeting held in private [meeting 4286], was briefed by the Secretariat on the destruction of statues, including the colossal Buddhas at Bamian, and other non-Islamic shrines and artifacts in Afghanistan. The Council condemned the 26 February Taliban edict ordering the wanton acts of violence on Afghanistan's cultural heritage and joined calls by States, the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan, UNESCO, the Islamic Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and others urging the Taliban to halt the destruction [S/2001/730] (see also p. 256).

Communications. Sweden forwarded a 1 March statement [A/55/831] by the EU Presidency expressing the EU's dismay at the Taliban edict. Qatar, on 4 March [A/55/822-S/2001/192], appealed to those concerned to reconsider the edict. The Republic of Korea, on 6 March [A/55/824], called on the Taliban leadership to put an immediate end to the destruction.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 March [meeting 94], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/243 [draft: A/55/L.79 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 46].

The destruction of relics and monuments in Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 53/203 A of 18 December 1998, 54/189 A of 17 December 1999 and 55/174 A of 19 December 2000,

Bearing in mind the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the need to respect the common heritage of humankind,

Respecting the multicultural, multi-ethnic and historical heritage of Afghanistan,

Deeply concerned and appalled by the Taliban edict of 26 February 2001, ordering the destruction of all statues and non-Islamic shrines in Afghanistan, and by the deliberate ongoing destruction of these relics and monuments which belong to the common heritage of humankind,

Recalling the several appeals made by the General Assembly to all Afghan parties to protect the cultural and historic relics and monuments in Afghanistan, and welcoming recent calls by the Security Council, the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the Islamic Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and others, urging the Taliban to halt their destruction,

Noting that the destruction of the statues in Afghanistan, in particular of the unique Buddhist sculptures in Bamian, would be an irreparable loss for humanity as a whole,

1. Strongly calls upon the Taliban to abide by their previous commitments to protect the cultural heritage of Afghanistan from all acts of vandalism, damage and theft;

2. Strongly urges the Taliban to review their edict of 26 February 2001 and to stop its implementation;

3. Also strongly urges the Taliban to take immediate action to prevent the further destruction of the irreplaceable relics, monuments or artefacts of the cultural heritage of Afghanistan;

4. Calls upon Member States to help, through appropriate technical measures, to safeguard the sculptures, including, if necessary, their temporary relocation or removal from public view.

Protection of religious sites

On 31 May [meeting 101], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/254 [draft: A/55/L.81 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 32].

Protection of religious sites

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 53/22 of 4 November 1998, 54/113 of 10 December 1999 and 55/23 of 18 November 2000, entitled "United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations",

Recalling also its resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, and its resolution 55/97 of 4 December 2000 on the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance,

Recalling further its resolutions 47/124 of 18 December 1992, 48/126 of 20 December 1993, 49/213 of 23 December 1994 and 51/95 of 12 December 1996, on the United Nations Year for Tolerance,

Bearing in mind the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as well as the pertinent universal and regional human rights instruments,

Bearing in mind also the relevant provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, as well as the relevant provisions of the Hague Convention for the Protection of

Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict of 1954,

Recalling the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, which emphasizes the need to counter intolerance and related violence based on religion or belief, including the desecration of religious sites,

Recalling also the appeal of the United Nations Millennium Declaration of 8 September 2000 to respect the diversity of belief, culture and language, to cherish differences within and between societies as a precious asset of humanity and to promote a culture of peace and dialogue among all civilizations,

1. Condemns all acts or threats of violence, destruction, damage or endangerment, directed against religious sites as such, that continue to occur in the world;

2. Calls upon all States to exert their utmost efforts to ensure that religious sites are fully respected and protected in conformity with international standards and in accordance with their national legislation and to adopt adequate measures aimed at preventing such acts or threats of violence, and invites relevant inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute to those efforts by developing appropriate initiatives in this field;

3. Encourages all States, relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the media to promote, inter alia, through education, a culture of tolerance and respect for the diversity of religions and for religious sites, which represent an important aspect of the collective heritage of humankind;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to devote, in consultation with the relevant bodies of the United Nations system, attention to the issue of protection of religious sites in his forthcoming reports related to the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations;

5. Decides to continue consideration of the question of the protection of religious sites under the item entitled "United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations".

Olympic truce

On 11 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/75 (draft: A/56/L.47 & Add.1) without vote [agenda item 23].

Building a peaceful and better world through sport and the Olympic ideal

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Building a peaceful and better world through sport and the Olympic ideal" and to consider this item every two years in advance of each Summer and Winter Olympic Games,

Recalling also its resolution 48/11 of 25 October 1993, which, inter alia, revived the ancient Greek tradition of ekecheiria or "Olympic Truce" with the aim of ensuring the safe passage and participation of athletes and others at the Games,

Taking into account the inclusion in the United Nations Millennium Declaration of an appeal for the observance of the Olympic Truce now and in the future and support for the International Olympic Committee in its efforts to promote peace and human understanding through sport and the Olympic ideal,

Recognizing that the goal of the Olympic movement is to build a peaceful and better world by educating the youth of the world through sport, practised without discrimination of any kind and in the Olympic spirit, which requires mutual understanding, promoted by friendship, solidarity and fair play,

Recognizing also the valuable contribution that the appeal launched by the International Olympic Committee for an Olympic Truce, with which the National Olympic Committees of the Member States are associated, could make towards advancing the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting with satisfaction the flying of the United Nations flag at all competition sites of the Olympic Games, and the joint endeavours of the International Olympic Committee and the United Nations system in fields such as development, humanitarian assistance, health promotion, education, women, the eradication of poverty, the fight against the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS), drug abuse and juvenile delinquency,

Noting also with satisfaction the organization by the International Olympic Committee, with the cooperation of the Secretary-General, of round tables on sport for a culture of peace on different continents for countries that have been or are still in a conflict situation, in the framework of the International Year for the Culture of Peace and in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/13 of 20 November 1997,

Welcoming the setting up by the International Olympic Committee, with the adherence of Member States and intergovernmental organizations, of a World Anti-Doping Agency,

1. Requests Member States to observe, within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations, the Olympic Truce during the XIX Olympic Winter Games to be held in Salt Lake City, United States of America, from 8 to 24 February 2002, by ensuring the safe passage and participation of athletes at the Games;

2. Welcomes the decision of the International Olympic Committee to mobilize all international sports organizations and that of the National Olympic Committees of the Member States to undertake concrete action at the local, national, regional and world levels to promote and strengthen a culture of peace based on the spirit of the Olympic Truce;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to promote the observance of the Olympic Truce among Member States, drawing the attention of world public opinion to the contribution such a truce would make to the promotion of international understanding, peace and goodwill, and to cooperate with the International Olympic Committee in the realization of this objective;

4. Welcomes the participation of the President in office of the General Assembly and also the representatives of the Secretary-General and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the International Olympic Truce Foundation;

5. Urges the International Olympic Committee to devise a special programme of assistance for the development of physical education and sport for countries affected by conflicts and poverty;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-eighth session the item entitled "Building a peaceful and better world through sport and the Olympic ideal" and to consider this item before the Games of the XXVIII Olympiad, to be held in Athens in 2004.

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on building a peaceful and better world through sport and the Olympic ideal would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464).

Crime prevention and criminal justice

Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, at its tenth session (Vienna, 8-17 May and 6-7 September) [E/2001/30/Rev.1], recommended to the Economic and Social Council approval of four draft resolutions for adoption by the General Assembly and three draft resolutions and one draft decision for adoption by the Council. The draft texts included action against illicit trafficking in protected species of wild flora and fauna (see p. 968). In accordance with a 2000 Commission resolution [YUN 2000, p. 1044], a thematic discussion was held on progress made in global action against corruption, with particular focus on government initiatives and asset recovery (see p. 1042).

On 24 July, the Council took note of the Commission's report on its tenth session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the eleventh (2002) session (decision 2001/240). On 3 May, it had elected Chad and Zimbabwe to fill postponed vacancies on the Commission for a term expiring on 31 December 2003 (decision 2001/201 B).

On the question of capital punishment, the Secretary-General, in March, issued his sixth quinquennial report on the subject [E/CN.15/2001/10 & Corr.1], which reviewed trends in the application of the death penalty during 1994-2000. The report was considered by the Commission on Human Rights (see p. 638).

Follow-up to Tenth UN Crime Congress

As a follow-up to the Tenth (2000) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders [YUN 2000, p. 1040], the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, in May, considered the Secretary-General's March report [E/CN.15/2001/5] on draft plans of action for implementation during 2001-2005 of the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century, adopted by General Assembly resolution 55/59 [YUN 2000, p. 1041]. The plans outlined actions to be undertaken by Member States and the UN system in 11 areas: transnational organized crime; corruption; trafficking in persons; smuggling of migrants; illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms; money-laundering; terrorism; crime prevention; witnesses and victims of crime; treatment of offenders; and criminal misuse of information technologies. Each draft plan was divided into national and international actions, with emphasis on the former.

Consideration of the draft plans continued at the Commission's intersessional meeting (Vienna, 3-5 September) on the basis of revised draft plans transmitted by a Secretariat note [E/CN.15/2001/14/Rev.2], which took account of the May discussions on the first six plans above and contained four additional draft plans of action submitted by Finland and Canada, covering juvenile justice; the special needs of women in the criminal justice system; standards and norms in crime prevention; and restorative justice.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/2001/30/Rev.1], adopted resolution 2001/47 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Plans of action for the implementation of the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century
The Economic and Social Council
Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

"The General Assembly,
"Recalling its resolution 55/59 of 4 December 2000, in which it endorsed the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century, adopted by the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

"Noting that, in paragraph 29 of the Vienna Declaration, the Tenth Congress invited the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to design specific measures for the implementation of and follow-up to the commitments undertaken in the Declaration,

"Recalling that, in its resolution 55/60 of 4 December 2000, it urged Governments, in their efforts to prevent and combat crime, to be guided by the results of the Tenth Congress, and requested the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with Member States, draft plans of action for the implementation of and follow-up to the commitments undertaken in the Vienna Declaration for consideration and action by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its tenth session,

"1. Takes note with appreciation of the plans of action for the implementation of the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century, which are contained in the annex to the present resolution;

"2. Notes with appreciation the work of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its ninth and tenth sessions on the preparation of the plans of action for the implementation of the Vienna Declaration;

"3. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the widest possible circulation of the plans of action;

"4. Invites Governments to consider carefully and use, as appropriate, the plans of action as a guide in their efforts to formulate legislation, policies and programmes in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, for the purpose of implementing and following up on the commitments undertaken in the Vienna Declaration;

"5. Invites the Secretary-General, in close cooperation with relevant intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations, to consider carefully and implement, as appropriate, the plans of action as a guide in developing policies and programmes in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, in accordance with the medium-term plans and the programme budgets and subject to available resources;

"6. Invites the Secretariat to discuss with the institutes of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network their possible contribution to the implementation of the plans of action, under the coordination of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice;

"7. Invites Member States and regional and international institutions, including financial institutions, to strengthen the Programme through sustained funding and other technical support activities in order to assist interested States in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, as appropriate;

"8. Invites the Commission to follow up the implementation of the plans of action and to make any recommendations, as appropriate.

"Annex

"Plans of action for the implementation of the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century

"I. Action against transnational organized crime

"1. In order to implement and follow up on the commitments undertaken in paragraphs 5, 6, 7 and 10 of the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century and to facilitate the signature, ratification, entry into force and progressive implementation of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocols thereto, the specific measures set out below are recommended.

"A. National actions

"2. States that have not signed the Convention and the protocols thereto should do so as soon as possible, and States that have signed those legal instruments should make every effort to ratify them as soon as possible. Each State will set priorities for the effective implementation of the Convention and the protocols thereto and will proceed as appropriate and as expeditiously as possible until all the provisions of all of those legal instruments are in full force and operation. Individually and collectively, States will endeavour, as appropriate, to support the following actions:

"(a) The development of legislation creating or strengthening sanctions, investigative powers, criminal procedures and other matters;

"(b) Capacity-building, including for the purpose of cooperation, through the strengthening of crime prevention and criminal justice systems, and the establishment or expansion of agencies responsible for the prevention, detection and control of transnational organized crime;

"(c) The establishment or improvement of training programmes for judges, prosecutors, law enforcement personnel and other individuals or agencies responsible for the prevention, detection and control of transnational organized crime;

"(d) The development and sharing of information and analytical expertise on methods and activities and general trends in organized crime and on the identities, whereabouts and activities of specific individuals or groups suspected of involvement in organized crime, to the extent consistent with national laws and international agreements and arrangements;

"(e) The general promotion of effective crime control strategies.

"3. States will also endeavour, as appropriate:

"(a) To support the efforts of the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat to promote ratification of the Convention and the protocols thereto through regional seminars and provide pre- and post-ratification assistance to signatory States by providing financial contributions, expertise and/or other forms of assistance;

"(b) To increase in a sustained manner their overall level of extrabudgetary contributions and strengthen and broaden the donor base of the Centre in order to ensure the availability of adequate material and technical resources for projects in support of the Convention and the protocols thereto, as well as other projects and programmes;

"(c) To strengthen international cooperation in order to create a conducive environment for the fight against organized crime, promoting growth and sustainable development and eradicating poverty and unemployment.

"B. International actions

"4. The Centre for International Crime Prevention will, in cooperation with other relevant international and regional organizations, as appropriate, and in accordance with the present resolution:

"(a) Organize high-level seminars to increase awareness of the Convention and the protocols thereto on the part of States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other key groups or individuals;

"(b) Assist States in the development of legislation and regulations and provide other expertise or technical cooperation to facilitate the ratification and implementation of the legal instruments, on request;

"(c) Assist States in the establishment or intensification of bilateral and multilateral cooperation in the areas covered by the Convention, in particular those involving the use of modern communication technologies, on request;

"(d) Carry out the regular collection and analysis of data on transnational organized crime, in consultation with interested States;

"(e) Maintain a database to permit a more comprehensive in-depth analysis of patterns and trends and geographical mapping of the strategies and activities carried out by organized criminal groups, and of best practices to combat transnational organized crime, in consultation with interested States;

"(f) Maintain a database of relevant national legislation;

"(g) Support the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime in the development of rules and procedures for the Conference of the Parties to the Convention;

"(h) Provide secretariat and general support to the Conference of the Parties to the Convention.

"II. Action against corruption

"5. In order to implement and follow up on the commitments undertaken in paragraph 16 of the Vienna Declaration to develop an effective international legal instrument against corruption and to develop and implement other measures and programmes to prevent and combat corruption, the specific measures below are recommended.

"A. National actions

"6. Individually and collectively, States will endeavour, as appropriate, to support the following actions:

"(a) Full participation in sessions of the Ad Hoc Committee for the Negotiation of a Convention against Corruption established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 55/61 of 4 December 2000;

"(b) Promoting the full and effective participation of developing countries, in particular least developed countries, in the deliberations of the Ad Hoc Committee; this may be done through the provision of extra-budgetary resources to the Centre for International Crime Prevention;

"(c) Making efforts to finalize the future United Nations convention against corruption by the end of 2003, taking into consideration existing legal instruments against corruption and, whenever relevant, the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime;

"(d) Commencing, when appropriate, the development of domestic legislative, administrative and other measures to facilitate the ratification and effective implementation of the future United Nations convention against corruption, including both domestic measures against corruption and measures to support effective cooperation with other States.

"7. States will endeavour, as appropriate, to address domestic corruption through the following measures:

"(a) The assessment of domestic types, causes, effects and costs of corruption;

"(b) The development of national strategies and action plans against corruption, based on the broad participation of stakeholders from government and civil society;

"(c) The maintenance or establishment of adequate domestic offences, investigative powers and criminal procedures to deal with corruption and related problems;

"(d) The strengthening of national governance systems and institutions, in particular criminal justice institutions, to create and/or ensure greater independence from and resistance to corrupt influences;

"(e) The maintenance or establishment of institutions and structures to achieve transparency and public accountability in government, business and other key social and economic sectors;

"(f) The development of expertise in anti-corruption measures and the education and training of officials about the nature and consequences of corruption and how to combat it effectively.

"8. States will endeavour, as appropriate, to address transnational corruption with the following measures:

"(a) The signature, ratification and implementation of existing international instruments against corruption, as appropriate;

"(a) Signing and ratifying the international instruments dealing with terrorism;

"(b) Conducting research and gathering information about criminal activities carried out for the purpose of furthering terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, including the identities, whereabouts and activities of specific individuals or groups involved in such activities, and supporting similar work at the international level, to the extent consistent with national laws and international agreements and arrangements;

"(c) Reviewing their relevant domestic laws and procedures with a view to achieving effective domestic measures against terrorism and related crime, an enhanced ability to cooperate in appropriate cases with other States and the effective implementation of relevant international instruments;

"(d) Fostering cooperation between anti-terrorism agencies and agencies fighting crimes; this may include the establishment of liaison offices or other channels of communication between anti-terrorism agencies and agencies fighting crime in order to enhance information exchange;

"(e) Considering voluntary contributions to support the implementation of the terrorism-prevention activities of the Centre for International Crime Prevention.

"B. International actions"

"24. The Centre for International Crime Prevention will, in cooperation with other relevant international and regional organizations, in coordination with the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat, as appropriate, and in accordance with the present resolution:

"(a) Take steps to raise awareness of the relevant international instruments, encourage States to sign and ratify such instruments and, where feasible, provide assistance in implementing such instruments to States, upon request;

"(b) In cooperation with Member States, take measures to raise public awareness of the nature and scope of international terrorism and its relationship to crime, including organized crime, where appropriate;

"(c) Continue to maintain existing databases on terrorism;

"(d) Offer analytical support to Member States by collecting and disseminating information on the relationship between terrorism and related criminal activities;

"(e) If further developments so require, draw up concrete proposals for consideration by Member States to strengthen the capacity of the Centre to develop, within its mandate, and administer the terrorism prevention component of its activities.

"VIII. Action on crime prevention"

"25. In order to implement and follow up on the commitment undertaken in paragraph 25 of the Vienna Declaration to develop comprehensive international, regional, national and local crime prevention strategies, the specific measures below are recommended.

"A. National actions"

"26. Individually and collectively, States will endeavour, as appropriate, to support the following actions:

"(a) Promotion of close cooperation between the various sectors of society, including justice, health, education, social services and housing, which are necessary to support effective community-based crime prevention;

"(b) Close cooperation with and assistance to elements of civil society in the development, adoption and promotion of crime prevention initiatives, taking into account the importance of proceeding on the basis of proven practices wherever possible and of selecting the appropriate balance between various approaches to community-based crime prevention;

"(c) Encouragement of assessment of the effectiveness of crime prevention programmes;

"(d) Development of practices that seek to prevent crime victims from being victimized once again;

"(e) Development and implementation of situational and other crime prevention programmes, bearing in mind the need to avoid any infringement of civil liberties;

"(f) Collaboration with other Governments and non-governmental organizations in the development and dissemination of successful and innovative crime prevention initiatives and specialized knowledge and expertise in crime prevention practices, including public awareness and education campaigns about effective crime prevention and the contributions that individuals, families, communities and all levels of government may make to contribute to safer and more peaceful communities;

"(g) Consideration of how to contribute to the collective efforts of countries to develop a comprehensive international strategy to advance community-based crime prevention;

"(h) Take steps to incorporate into their national crime prevention strategies measures to prevent and combat crime associated with racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related forms of intolerance.

"B. International actions"

"27. The Centre for International Crime Prevention will, in cooperation with other relevant international and regional organizations, as appropriate, and in accordance with the present resolution:

"(a) Develop and promote crime prevention expertise that has been carefully adapted from proven practices to the conditions in the countries where those practices are to be implemented, using seminars, training programmes and other means;

"(b) Where requested to do so by the State or States involved, conduct public awareness and education campaigns about effective crime prevention and the respective contributions that individuals, families, communities and all levels of government may make towards safer and more peaceful communities;

"(c) Endeavour to contribute to the exchange of information and experience in crime prevention, for the purpose of encouraging new forms of collaboration between countries involving government, the community and non-governmental organizations;

"(d) Assess the evolution and globalization of crime and prepare responses to it through innovative and effective crime prevention initiatives that take account of the impact of new technologies on crime and crime prevention;

"(e) Continue to coordinate studies on crime in urban areas and measures for its effective prevention, including on the possible cultural and institutional differences in effective crime prevention;

"(f) Encourage Member States to incorporate into international crime prevention strategies and norms measures to prevent and combat crime associated with racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related forms of intolerance, taking into account measures already taken by Member States;

"(g) Develop technical cooperation projects in the area of crime prevention for requesting States and assist in their implementation;

"(h) Develop a guide for policy makers and a handbook on proven practices in the area of crime prevention.

"IX. Action on witnesses and victims of crime

"28. In order to implement and follow up on the commitments undertaken in paragraph 27 of the Vienna Declaration to review relevant practices by 2002 where possible, to develop action plans, support services and awareness campaigns for victims, to consider the establishment of funds for victims and to develop and implement witness protection policies, the specific measures below are recommended.

"A. National actions

"29. Individually and collectively, States will endeavour, as appropriate, to support the following actions:

"(a) The conduct of national and regional studies on victims of crime in national justice systems;

"(b) The use and application of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, subject to the domestic legal systems of each State, taking into account the Handbook on Justice for Victims on the use and application of the Declaration and the Guide for Policy Makers on the implementation of the Declaration.

"B. International actions

"30. The Centre for International Crime Prevention will, in cooperation with other relevant international and regional organizations, as appropriate, and in accordance with the present resolution:

"(b) Promote the establishment of funds for victims of crime;

"(c) Promote proven practices in providing support and services for victims and witnesses using, for example, the International Victimology web site;

"(d) Translate into the official languages of the United Nations and widely disseminate the Guide for Policy Makers and the Handbook on Justice for Victims and assist requesting States in using those documents;

"(e) Upon request, assist States in the development of new legislation on victims, using, inter alia, the international database established by the Government of the Netherlands;

"(f) Where necessary, promote demonstration or pilot projects for the development, further development or establishment of victim services and other related operational activities.

"X. Action on prison overcrowding and alternatives to incarceration

"31. In order to implement and follow up on the commitments undertaken in paragraph 26 of the Vienna Declaration to promote safe and effective alternatives to incarceration, the specific measures below are recommended.

"A. National actions

"32. Individually and collectively, States will endeavour, as appropriate, to support the following actions:

"(a) The development of specific actions and time-bound targets to address prison overcrowding, recognizing that conditions in overcrowded prisons may affect the human rights of prisoners, including such actions as adopting effective measures to reduce pre-trial detention as far as possible; the introduction of appropriate alternatives to imprisonment; preferring non-custodial measures to imprisonment where possible; dealing with minor offences using options such as customary practice, mediation between concerned parties or the payment of civil reparations or compensation; and conducting public awareness and education campaigns on alternatives to imprisonment and how they work;

"(b) Encouraging international and regional institutions, including financial institutions, to incorporate into their relevant technical cooperation programmes measures to reduce prison overcrowding, in accordance with national laws;

"(c) Promoting and implementing good prison practice, taking into account international standards;

"(d) Ensuring that national and international actions on prison overcrowding and alternatives to incarceration take into account and address any disparate impact that such actions may have on women and men.

"B. International actions

"33. The Centre for International Crime Prevention will, in cooperation with other relevant international and regional organizations, as appropriate, and in accordance with the present resolution:

"(a) Encourage international and regional institutions, including financial institutions, to incorporate into their relevant technical cooperation programmes measures to reduce prison overcrowding, in accordance with national laws;

"(b) Promote national and international actions on prison overcrowding and alternatives to incarceration that take into account any disparate impact on women and men, as well as any special needs;

"(c) Upon request, provide assistance in the form of advisory services, needs assessment, capacity-building, training or other assistance to States to enable them to improve prison conditions.

"XI. Action against high-technology and computer-related crime

"34. In order to implement and follow up on the commitments undertaken in paragraph 18 of the Vienna Declaration to develop action-oriented policy recommendations for the prevention and control of high-technology and computer-related crime, taking into account the ongoing work in other forums and to enhance abilities to detect, prevent, investigate and prosecute such crimes, the specific measures below are recommended.

"A. National actions

"35. Individually and collectively, States will endeavour, as appropriate, to support the following actions:

"(a) Criminalization of the misuse of information technologies, as appropriate and in accordance with national law, including, if necessary, reviewing crimes such as fraud, in order to ensure that they apply to offences in which computer and telecommunication media and networks are used;

"(b) The development and implementation of rules and procedures, including on the exercise of jurisdiction, that would ensure that computer- and telecommunication-related crimes can be effectively detected and investigated at the national level and that effective cooperation can be obtained in multinational cases, taking into account national sovereignty, the need for effective law enforcement and the need to maintain effective protections for privacy and other related basic rights;

"(c) Ensuring that law enforcement personnel are trained and equipped to be able to respond effectively and expeditiously to requests for assistance in the tracing of communications and other measures necessary for the detection and investigation of transnational high-technology and computer-related crimes;

"(d) Engaging in domestic and international discussions on actions against high-technology and computer-related crime and the effects of technological change with industries involved in the development and deployment of computers, telecommunication equipment, network software and hardware and other relevant products and services. These discussions could include such key areas as:

"(i) Issues relating to domestic and international regulation of the technologies and networks;

"(ii) Issues relating to the incorporation of elements into new technologies, which are intended to prevent crime or facilitate the detection, investigation or prosecution of crime;

"(e) Making voluntary contributions, both bilaterally and through international and regional organizations, as appropriate, including in cooperation with the private sector, inter alia, in the form of technical expertise to assist other States in developing and implementing effective measures against high-technology and computer-related crime, including the measures referred to in subparagraphs (c) and (d) above.

"B. International actions

"36. The Centre for International Crime Prevention will, in cooperation with other relevant international and regional organizations, as appropriate, and in accordance with the present resolution:

"(a) Support national and international research activities to identify new forms of computer-related criminality and to assess the effects of such criminality in key areas such as sustainable development, the protection of privacy and electronic commerce, and the measures taken in response;

"(b) Disseminate internationally agreed materials such as guidelines, legal and technical manuals, minimum standards, proven practices and model legislation to assist legislators and law enforcement and other authorities in the development, adoption and application of effective measures against high-technology and computer-related crime and offenders both in general and in specific cases;

"(c) Promote, support and implement, as appropriate, technical cooperation and assistance projects. Such projects would bring together experts in crime prevention, computer security, criminal legislation and procedures, prosecution, investigative techniques and related matters with States seeking information or assistance in those areas.

"XII. Action on juvenile justice

"37. In order to implement and follow up the commitments, undertaken in paragraph 24 of the Vienna Declaration, the specific measures below are recommended.

"A. National actions

"38. Individually and collectively, States will endeavour, as appropriate, to support the following actions:

"(a) Giving timely assistance to juveniles in difficult circumstances in order to prevent them from resorting to crime;

"(b) Supporting the development of crime prevention practices that are focused on juveniles who are at risk of becoming delinquent or who are easy candidates for recruitment by criminal groups, bearing in mind the rights of such juveniles;

"(c) Strengthening juvenile justice systems;

"(d) Incorporating an integrated strategy for the prevention of youth crime and for juvenile justice in their national development plans;

"(e) Promoting the re-education and rehabilitation of juvenile offenders;

"(f) Encouraging, and where necessary, supporting the participation of civil society in the implementation of practices for the prevention of juvenile crime.

"B. International actions

"39. The Centre for International Crime Prevention will, in cooperation with other relevant international and regional organizations, as appropriate, and in accordance with the present resolution:

"(a) Upon request, develop technical cooperation projects to prevent youth crime, to strengthen juvenile justice systems and to improve the rehabilitation and treatment of juvenile offenders and assist States in implementing those projects;

"(b) Ensure effective cooperation among the relevant United Nations entities and the other organizations mentioned in the Guidelines for Action on Children in the Criminal Justice System.

"XIII. Action on the special needs of women in the criminal justice system"

"40. In order to implement and follow up on the commitments undertaken in paragraphs 11 and 12 of the Vienna Declaration, and to review crime prevention and criminal justice strategies in order to identify and address any disparate impact of programmes and policies on women and men, the specific measures below are recommended.

"A. National actions"

"41. Individually and collectively, States will endeavour, as appropriate, to support the following actions:

"(a) Reviewing, evaluating and, if necessary, modifying their legislation, policies, procedures and practices relating to criminal matters, in a manner consistent with their legal systems, in order to ensure that women are treated fairly by the criminal justice system;

"(b) Developing national and international crime prevention and criminal justice strategies that take into account the special needs of women as criminal justice practitioners, victims, witnesses, prisoners and offenders;

"(c) Considering sharing with other States, via web sites or other media or forums, any proven practices concerning women as criminal justice practitioners, victims, witnesses, prisoners and offenders that take into account the special needs of women.

"B. International actions"

"42. The Centre for International Crime Prevention will, in cooperation with other relevant international and regional organizations, as appropriate, and in accordance with the present resolution:

"(a) Collect and disseminate information and materials on violence against women in all of its forms and manifestations, as referred to in the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, for the purpose of implementing its crime prevention and criminal justice programme, including technical assistance at the request of States;

"(b) Work on issues relating to violence against women and to the removal of gender bias in the administration of criminal justice;

"(c) Cooperate with all other relevant entities of the United Nations system regarding activities on issues relating to violence against women and to the removal of gender bias in the administration of criminal justice, and coordinate work on such issues;

"(d) Consolidate and disseminate information on successful intervention models and preventive programmes at the national level;

"(e) Continue to improve training concerning criminal justice and crime-prevention aspects of the human rights of women and issues of gender bias and violence against women for relevant United Nations staff members;

"(f) Assist Member States, upon request, in utilizing the Model Strategies and Practical Measures on the Elimination of Violence against Women in the Field of Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice.

"XIV. Action on standards and norms"

"43. In order to implement and follow up on the commitments undertaken in paragraph 22 of the Vienna Declaration and to promote the use and application, as appropriate, of the United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice in national law and practice, the specific measures below are recommended.

"A. National actions"

"44. Individually and collectively, States will endeavour, as appropriate, to use and apply in national law and practice the United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice and to publish the Compendium of United Nations Standards and Norms in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the languages of their countries.

"B. International actions"

"45. The Centre for International Crime Prevention will, in cooperation with other relevant international and regional organizations, as appropriate, and in accordance with the present resolution:

"(a) Update the Compendium of United Nations Standards and Norms in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice;

"(b) Promote the use and application of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice, inter alia, by providing advisory services and technical cooperation to Member States upon request, including assistance to Member States in criminal justice and law reform, organization of training for law enforcement and criminal justice personnel and support to the administration and management of penal and penitentiary systems, thus contributing to the upgrading of their efficiency and capabilities;

"(c) Coordinate activities relating to the use and application of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice between the Centre for International Crime Prevention and other relevant United Nations entities, taking into account bilateral and regional assistance programmes.

"XV. Action on restorative justice"

"46. In order to implement and follow up on the commitments undertaken in paragraph 28 of the Vienna Declaration and to encourage the development of restorative justice policies, procedures and programmes, the specific measures below are recommended.

"A. National actions"

"47. Individually and collectively, States will endeavour, as appropriate, to support the following actions:

"(a) Taking into account Economic and Social Council resolution 2000/14 of 27 July 2000, entitled "Basic principles on the use of restorative justice programmes in criminal matters", when considering the desirability and the means of establishing common principles;

"(b) Dealing with offences, especially minor offences, according to customary practice in respect of restorative justice, where available and appropriate, provided that this meets human rights requirements and that those involved so agree;

"(c) Using amicable means as provided by national law to deal with offences, especially minor offences, for example by using mediation, reparation or agreements whereby the offender compensates the victim;

"(d) Promoting a culture favourable to mediation and restorative justice among law enforcement, judicial and social authorities and local communities;

"(e) Providing appropriate training for those involved in the development and implementation of restorative justice policies and programmes;

"(f) Promoting the re-education and rehabilitation of juvenile offenders by encouraging, where appropriate, the use of mediation, conflict resolution, conciliation and other methods of restorative justice as alternatives to judicial proceedings and custodial-based sanctions;

"(g) Developing and implementing restorative justice policies and programmes, taking into account existing international commitments with respect to victims, in particular the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power;

"(h) Promoting cooperation between government and civil society, including relevant non-governmental organizations, to implement restorative justice programmes and to ensure public support for the use of restorative justice principles.

"B. International actions

"48. The Centre for International Crime Prevention will, in cooperation with other relevant international and regional organizations, as appropriate, and in accordance with the present resolution:

"(a) Exchange information on experiences and proven practices in the implementation and evaluation of programmes for restorative justice;

"(b) Assist the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in considering the desirability and the means of establishing common principles on the use of restorative justice programmes in criminal matters;

"(c) Convene a meeting of experts to examine proposals for further action in relation to restorative justice, including mediation."

Crime congresses

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/110 [YUN 1998, p. 1032], the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice reviewed the role, function, periodicity and duration of the UN congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, including the issue of regional preparatory meetings, on the basis of a Secretariat note [E/CN.15/2001/6] prepared for the review.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/2001/30/Rev.1], adopted resolution 2001/9 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Role, function, periodicity and duration of the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 56/119 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/56/574], adopted resolution 56/119 without vote [agenda item 110].

Role, function, periodicity and duration of the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in its resolution 53/110 of 9 December 1998, it requested the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to review the role, function, periodicity and duration of the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, including the issue of regional preparatory meetings for the congresses,

Taking note with appreciation of the results of the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Bearing in mind that the congresses are a consultative body of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, in accordance with paragraph 29 of the statement of principles and programme of action of the Programme, annexed to General Assembly resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991,

Recognizing the significant contributions of the congresses to the promotion and strengthening of international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Recognizing also that the congresses have been a forum for promoting the exchange of experiences in research, law and policy development and the identification of emerging trends and issues in crime prevention and criminal justice among States, intergovernmental organizations and individual experts representing various professions and disciplines,

Recognizing further the role played by the congresses in preparing suggestions, for consideration by the Commission, on possible subjects for its programme of work,

Aware of the need to review the functioning and method of work of the congresses in order to improve their effectiveness,

Noting with appreciation the offers made by the Governments of Mexico and Thailand to host the next congress,

1. Decides to continue holding the United Nations congresses in accordance with paragraphs 29 and 30 of the statement of principles and programme of action of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, following a dynamic, interactive and cost-effective method of work and a focused programme of work, and to call them the United Nations congresses on crime prevention and criminal justice;

2. Also decides that, beginning in 2005, the congresses, pursuant to paragraphs 29 and 30 of the statement of principles and programme of action of the Programme, shall be held in accordance with the following guidelines:

(a) Each congress shall discuss specific topics, including, where appropriate, a main topic, all of which shall be determined by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice;

(b) Each congress shall include one session of pre-congress consultations;

(c) Each congress shall include a high-level segment in which States will be represented at the highest possible level and will be given an opportunity to make statements on the topics of the congress;

(d) As part of the high-level segment, the heads of delegations or their representatives shall participate in a number of thematic interactive round tables in order to further the discussion on the topics of the congress through open dialogue;

(e) Panels of experts, to be selected by the Commission with due regard for the principle of equitable geographical distribution, shall hold workshops dealing with the topics of the congress, maintaining an open dialogue with the participants and avoiding the reading of statements;

(f) Institutes of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network shall be invited to assist in the preparations for the workshops;

(g) The Secretary-General shall facilitate, within existing resources, the organization of ancillary meetings of non-governmental organizations and professional organizations at each congress;

(h) Each congress shall adopt a single declaration containing recommendations derived from the deliberations of the high-level segment, the round tables and the workshops, to be submitted to the Commission for its consideration;

(i) Any action suggested to the Commission regarding its programme of work, contained in the declaration of the congress, shall be undertaken through individual resolutions of the Commission;

(j) The Commission, as the preparatory body for the congress, shall request the Secretary-General to prepare only those background documents which are absolutely necessary for implementing the programme of work of the congress;

(k) Each congress shall be preceded by regional preparatory meetings, when necessary, and the costs of the regional preparatory meetings for each congress shall be streamlined by holding them in conjunction with other regional meetings, shortening their duration and limiting the preparation of background documents;

3. Requests the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to continue to act as the preparatory body for the congresses and to follow the guidelines contained in paragraph 2 above in organizing future congresses;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the staff required to serve as secretariat for the congresses and the regional preparatory meetings for the congresses;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to provide the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat with the necessary resources, within the overall appropriations of the programme budget for the biennium 2002-2003, for the preparations for the Eleventh United Nations Congress on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice and to ensure that adequate resources are provided in the programme budget for the biennium 2004-2005 to support the holding of the Eleventh Congress;

6. Requests the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to formulate, at its eleventh session, recommendations regarding the Eleventh Congress, including recommendations on the main topic, the organization of round tables and workshops to be held by panels of experts and the venue and duration of the Eleventh Congress, and to submit those recommendations, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session;

7. Also requests the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to formulate, at its eleventh session, appropriate recommendations to enable the Economic and Social Council to introduce the necessary amendments to the rules of procedure for the congresses to reflect the guidelines contained in paragraph 2 above;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the proper follow-up to the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly, through the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its eleventh session.

UN Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme

Commission consideration. In May, the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice considered the Secretariat's April note [E/CN.15/2001/11] on the proposed programme of work in crime prevention and criminal justice for the 2002-2003 biennium. The note set out the overall objective of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, namely, to strengthen international cooperation and assistance to Governments in tackling crime problems, such as those posed by transnational organized crime, trafficking in persons, economic and financial crime, including money-laundering and corruption, illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms and terrorism in all its forms, as well as to promote fair and efficient criminal justice systems. The note also outlined the expected accomplishments, together with performance indicators, and the outputs to be delivered.

The Centre for International Crime Prevention (CICP) of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention was responsible for the programme of work.

Report of Secretary-General. In a July report [A/56/155], the Secretary-General provided an overview of progress made in implementing General Assembly resolution 55/64 [YUN 2000, p. 1045] on strengthening the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme. It identified three basic requirements for sustaining and building upon the progress of the past years: action to reinforce the focus of the Programme's activities on achievable priority areas of engagement; continued efforts to provide resources to match existing mandates; and increased voluntary contributions for technical cooperation services.

The report described the status of work on a third protocol on illicit firearms (see p. 1036) to the 2000 United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, adopted by Assembly resolution 55/25 [YUN 2000, p. 1048], and on the elaboration of an international legal instrument against corruption (see p. 1041); it identified the main challenges relating to the criminal misuse of information technologies (see p. 1045) and noted the outcome of the first meeting of the expert group (Vienna, 12-16 March) charged with preparing a study on the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in explosives and their use for criminal purposes. In addition, the report provided an overview of CICP's technical cooperation activities as at 30 June, as well as information on the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund. Contributions and pledges to the Fund in 2000 totalled $3.1 million; in 2001, as at 31 May, they totalled $446,000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/56/574], adopted resolution 56/123 without vote [agenda item 110].

Strengthening the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, in particular its technical cooperation capacity

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991 on the creation of an effective United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, in which it approved the statement of principles and programme of action annexed to that resolution,

Emphasizing the role of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, specifically the reduction of criminality, more efficient and effective law enforcement and administration of justice, respect for human rights and promotion of the highest standards of fairness, humanity and professional conduct,

Recognizing that action against global criminal activity is a common and shared responsibility,

Convinced of the desirability of closer coordination and cooperation among States in combating crime, including the smuggling of migrants and trafficking in persons, especially women and children, drug-related crimes such as money-laundering, illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, and criminal activities carried out for the purpose of furthering terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, bearing in mind the role that could be played by both the United Nations and regional organizations in this respect,

Recognizing the urgent need to increase technical cooperation activities to assist countries, in particular developing countries and countries with economies in transition, with their efforts in translating United Nations policy guidelines into practice,

Recalling its resolution 55/25 of 15 November 2000, by which it adopted the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, and the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air, and its resolution 55/255 of 31 May 2001, by which it adopted the Protocol against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Their Parts and Components and Ammunition,

Welcoming the adoption of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocols thereto as a milestone to fight and prevent organized crime, one of the most serious contemporary threats to democracy and peace,

Emphasizing the importance of the expeditious entry into force of the Convention and the Protocols thereto,

Recognizing the need to maintain a balance in the technical cooperation capacity of the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat between the immediate priority of the Convention and the Protocols thereto and other priorities identified by the Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, in which it requested the Secretary-General, as a matter of urgency, to provide the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme with sufficient resources for the full implementation of its mandate, in conformity with the high priority attached to the Programme,

Bearing in mind the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 55/59 of 4 December 2000, and the plans of action for the implementation of the Vienna Declaration proposed by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice,

Welcoming the report of the Meeting of the Intergovernmental Open-ended Expert Group to Prepare Draft Terms of Reference for the Negotiation of an International Legal Instrument against Corruption, held at Vienna from 30 July to 3 August 2001,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the progress made in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 55/64 of 4 December 2000;

2. Reaffirms the importance of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme in promoting effective action to strengthen international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice, in responding to the needs of the international community in the face of both national and transnational criminality, and in assisting Member States in achieving the goals of preventing crime within and among States and improving the response to crime;

3. Also reaffirms the role of the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat in providing to Member States, upon request, technical cooperation, advisory services and other forms of assistance in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, including in the areas of prevention and control of transnational organized crime and terrorism;

4. Welcomes the programme of work of the Centre, including the three global programmes addressing, respectively, the trafficking in human beings, corruption and organized crime, formulated on the basis of close consultations with Member States and review by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, and calls upon the Secretary-General further to strengthen the Centre by providing it with the resources necessary for the full implementation of its mandate;

5. Supports the high priority given to technical cooperation and advisory services in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, including in the areas of prevention and control of transnational organized crime and terrorism, and stresses the need to enhance the operational activities of the Centre to assist, in particular, developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

6. Urges States and relevant international organizations to develop national, regional and international strategies and other necessary measures which complement the work of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme in addressing effectively the significant problems posed by the smuggling of migrants and trafficking in persons and related activities;

7. Welcomes the increased number of technical assistance projects in the field of juvenile justice, reflecting an increased awareness among Member States of the importance of juvenile justice reform in establishing and maintaining stable societies and the rule of law;

8. Invites all States to support, through voluntary contributions to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund, the operational activities of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme;

9. Encourages relevant programmes, funds and organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, international financial institutions, in particular the World Bank, and regional and national funding agencies, to support the technical operational activities of the Centre;

10. Urges States and funding agencies to review, as appropriate, their funding policies for development assistance and to include a crime prevention and criminal justice component in such assistance;

11. Welcomes the efforts undertaken by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to exercise more vigorously its mandated function of resource mobilization, and calls upon the Commission to strengthen further its activities in this direction;

12. Expresses its appreciation to non-governmental organizations and other relevant sectors of civil society for their support to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme;

13. Welcomes the efforts of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention to enhance the synergies between the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the Centre for International Crime Prevention, in conformity with the reform proposals of the Secretary-General;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to provide adequate support to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, as the principal policy-making body in this field, in performing its activities, including cooperation and coordination with other relevant bodies;

15. Invites States to make adequate voluntary contributions to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund in order to strengthen the capacity of the Centre to provide technical assistance to requesting States for the implementation of the commitments entered into at the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, including the measures outlined in the plans of action to implement the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century;

16. Urges all States and regional economic organizations that have not yet done so to sign and ratify the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocols thereto as soon as possible in order to ensure the speedy entry into force of the Convention and the Protocols thereto;

17. Welcomes the voluntary contributions already made, and encourages States to make adequate and regular voluntary contributions for the entry into force and implementation of the Convention and the Protocols thereto, through the United Nations funding mechanism specifically designed for that purpose in the Convention;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures and provide adequate support to the Centre during the biennium 2002-2003 so as to enable it to promote the speedy entry into force of the Convention and the Protocols thereto;

19. Invites the Secretary-General to consider, in consultation with Member States and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, the ways in which the Centre could contribute to the efforts of the United Nations system against terrorism, in accordance with relevant General Assembly and Security Council resolutions;

20. Welcomes the decision of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to mainstream a gender perspective into its activities and its request to the Secretariat that a gender perspective be integrated into all activities of the Centre;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session.

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on crime prevention and criminal justice would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464).

Coordination

In May, the Commission considered the Secretary-General's March report [E/CN.15/2001/8], prepared in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/23 [YUN 1999, p. 1054]. The report highlighted the research and technical assistance activities carried out in 1999 and 2000 by the UN interregional crime and justice research institutes, the affiliated regional institutes and associate institutes, and centres comprising the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network. It underscored efforts to coordinate and integrate those activities. In addition, it provided information on the activities of the International Scientific and Professional Advisory Council.

The Commission also considered the Secretary-General's related report [E/CN.15/2001/7] containing information received from Member States and relevant international organizations and other entities on their projects involving international technical assistance and training in crime prevention and criminal justice. Submitted in response to Council resolution 1999/24 [YUN 1999, p. 1055], the report addressed the viability and usefulness of expanding globally a centralized database of international training and technical assistance projects in crime prevention and criminal justice. The Secretary-General concluded that the establishment of a centralized clearing house for such projects would not achieve the desired coordination objective, as the level of responses and usage would prove too low.

UN African crime prevention institute

In October, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 55/62 [YUN 2000, p. 1047], the Secretary-General updated information on the activities, operations and funding of the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (UNAFRI) [A/56/151].

UNAFRI implemented a regional survey on illicit firearms trafficking involving the participation of 24 African countries, which culminated in the convening of the African Regional Workshop on Illicit Trafficking in Firearms in Africa (Kampala, Uganda, 11-13 June). Project proposals, for which the Institute was seeking sponsors, had been developed on the themes of trafficking in women and children, cult and crime, prison conditions and human rights, crime and AIDS, juvenile justice, conflict resolution, mob justice, a databank on crime and UNAFRI institutional capacity-building.

In spite of continued political support, the Institute's financial situation remained precarious, limiting its capacity to deliver fully on its mandate to provide effective and comprehensive services to African countries. However, within its limited resources, the Institute executed some major programmes in crime prevention and control.

The Institute's total resources for the 2000-2001 period amounted to $593,530, which came from Member States' assessed contributions, a UN grant, specific project grants, income received from the rental of UNAFRI premises and facilities, and interest on deposits.

A later report of the Secretary-General [A/57/135] stated that the UNAFRI Governing Board, at its seventh session (Kampala, 5-6 December), approved the Institute's budget and work programme for 2002-2003, stressing that successful implementation of the work programme was intertwined with future funding. The Board endorsed the recommendations of the Meeting of African Heads of Missions resident in Kampala on resource mobilization for the Institute, convened by UNAFRI on 25 October.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/56/574], adopted resolution 56/122 without vote [agenda item 110].

United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/62 of 4 December 2000 and all other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind the urgent need to establish effective crime prevention strategies for Africa, as well as the importance of law enforcement agencies and the judiciary at the regional and subregional levels,

Noting that the financial situation of the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders has greatly affected its capacity to deliver its services to African Member States in an effective and comprehensive manner,

1. Commends the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders for its efforts to promote and coordinate regional technical cooperation activities related to crime prevention and criminal justice systems in Africa;

2. Also commends the Secretary-General for his efforts to mobilize the financial resources necessary to provide the Institute with the core professional staff required to enable it to function effectively in the fulfilment of its mandated obligations;

3. Reiterates the need to strengthen further the capacity of the Institute to support national mechanisms for crime prevention and criminal justice in African countries;

4. Urges the States members of the Institute to make every possible effort to meet their obligations to the Institute;

5. Calls upon all Member States and non-governmental organizations to adopt concrete practical measures to support the Institute in the development of the requisite capacity and implement its programmes and activities aimed at strengthening crime prevention and criminal justice systems in Africa;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify efforts to mobilize all relevant entities of the United Nations system to provide the necessary financial and technical support to the Institute to enable it to fulfil its mandate;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to deploy his efforts to mobilize the financial resources necessary to maintain the Institute with the core professional staff required to enable it to function effectively in the fulfilment of its mandated obligations;

8. Calls upon the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to work closely with the Institute;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to enhance the promotion of regional cooperation, coordination and collaboration in the fight against crime, especially in its transnational dimension, which cannot be dealt with adequately by national action alone;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to make concrete proposals, including the provision of additional core professional staff, to strengthen the programmes and activities of the Institute and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Transnational crime

International convention

In 2001, UN efforts to combat transnational crime focused on promoting the early entry into force of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and its two supplementary protocols: the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children and the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air, all adopted in 2000 by General Assembly resolution 55/25 [YUN 2000, p. 1048]. In May, a third supplementary protocol, the Protocol against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Their Parts and Components and Ammunition, was adopted by the Assembly and opened for signature (see p. 1036). As requested by the Assembly in resolution 55/25, the Secretary-General transmitted in September [A/56/380] the report of the High-level Political Signing Conference for the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocols Thereto [YUN 2000, p. 1048].

To help facilitate the Convention's ratification and early entry into force, regional and sub-regional meetings were convened in Hanoi, Viet Nam (8-10 August), Tehran, Iran (3-4 October), Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso (28-30 November), and Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago (20 November-1 December).

As at 31 December, the Convention had 140 signatories and 6 parties; the Protocol on illegal trafficking in persons had 101 signatories and 4 parties; the Protocol against smuggling migrants had 97 signatories and 4 parties; and the Protocol on the illicit manufacturing and trafficking in firearms had 21 signatories. The Convention would enter into force on the ninetieth day after the date of deposit of the fortieth instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession. Each Protocol required the same number of parties for entry into force.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/2001/30/Rev.1], adopted resolution 2001/10 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Action against transnational organized crime: assistance to States in capacity-building with a view to facilitating the implementation of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocols thereto

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 56/120 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/56/574], adopted resolution 56/120 without vote [agenda item 110].

Action against transnational organized crime: assistance to States in capacity-building with a view to facilitating the implementation of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocols thereto

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned at the impact of transnational organized crime on the political, social and economic stability and development of societies,

Bearing in mind that the fight against transnational organized crime is a common and shared responsibility of the international community, necessitating cooperation at the bilateral and multilateral levels,

Reaffirming its support and commitment to the goals of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, in particular the objectives set forth in the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century,

Recalling its resolution 55/25 of 15 November 2000, in which it adopted the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocols thereto and urged all States and regional economic organizations to sign and ratify those international legal instruments,

Noting with appreciation the initiative of those States which have pledged financial contributions to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund in order to enable developing countries and countries with economies in transition to initiate measures to implement the Convention and the Protocols thereto,

1. Welcomes the signing of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocols thereto;

2. Expresses its appreciation for the offers of a number of Governments to host regional conferences at the ministerial level and for the financial contributions of a number of States for the purpose of holding pre-ratification seminars on facilitating the entry into force of the Convention and the Protocols thereto and their future implementation;

3. Encourages Member States to make adequate voluntary contributions to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund for the provision to developing countries and countries with economies in transition of the technical assistance they may require for implementation of the Convention and the Protocols thereto, including assistance for the preparatory measures needed for that implementation, taking into account article 30 of the Convention;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat with the resources necessary to enable it to promote, in an effective manner, the entry into force and implementation of the Convention and the Protocols thereto, inter alia, through the provision of assistance to developing countries and countries with economies in transition for building capacity in the areas covered by the Convention and the Protocols thereto;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its eleventh session.

Protocol on illicit firearms

In March, the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, at its twelfth session (Vienna, 26 February–2 March) [A/55/383/Add.2.3], finalized the text of the draft Protocol against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Their Parts and Components and Ammunition, and recommended it to the General Assembly for adoption. The draft Protocol was supplementary to the Convention, which, together with two other supplementary protocols, had been finalized by the Ad Hoc Committee at its tenth and eleventh sessions in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1048] and adopted by General Assembly resolution 55/25 [ibid.].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 May [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime [A/55/383/Add.2], adopted resolution 55/255 without vote [agenda item 105].

Protocol against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Their Parts and Components and Ammunition, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/111 of 9 December 1998, in which it decided to establish an open-ended inter-governmental ad hoc committee for the purpose of elaborating a comprehensive international convention against transnational organized crime and of discussing the elaboration, as appropriate, of international instruments addressing trafficking in women and children, combating the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, and illegal trafficking in and transporting of migrants, including by sea,

Recalling also its resolution 54/126 of 17 December 1999, in which it requested the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime to continue its work, in accordance with resolutions 53/111 and 53/114 of 9 December 1998, and to intensify that work in order to complete it in 2000,

Recalling further its resolution 55/25 of 15 November 2000, by which it adopted the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, and the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime,

Reaffirming the inherent right to individual or collective self-defence recognized in Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations, which implies that States also have the right to acquire arms with which to defend themselves, as well as the right of self-determination of all peoples, in particular peoples under colonial or other forms of alien domination or foreign occupation, and the importance of the effective realization of that right,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime on its twelfth session, and commends the Ad Hoc Committee for its work;

2. Adopts the Protocol against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Their Parts and Components and Ammunition, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, annexed to the present resolution, and opens it for signature at United Nations Headquarters in New York;

3. Urges all States and regional economic organizations to sign and ratify the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the protocols thereto as soon as possible in order to ensure the speedy entry into force of the Convention and the protocols thereto.

ANNEX

Protocol against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Their Parts and Components and Ammunition, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime

Preamble

The States Parties to this Protocol,

Aware of the urgent need to prevent, combat and eradicate the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, owing to the harmful effects of those activities on the security of each State, region and the world as a whole, endangering the well-being of peoples, their social and economic development and their right to live in peace,

Convinced, therefore, of the necessity for all States to take all appropriate measures to this end, including international cooperation and other measures at the regional and global levels,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 53/111 of 9 December 1998, in which the Assembly decided to establish an open-ended intergovernmental ad hoc committee for the purpose of elaborating a comprehensive international convention against transnational organized crime and of discussing the elaboration of, inter alia, an international instrument combating the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition,

Bearing in mind the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Convinced that supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime with an international instrument against the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition will be useful in preventing and combating those crimes,

Have agreed as follows:

I. General provisions

Article 1

Relation with the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime

1. This Protocol supplements the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime. It shall be interpreted together with the Convention.

2. The provisions of the Convention shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to this Protocol unless otherwise provided herein.

3. The offences established in accordance with article 5 of this Protocol shall be regarded as offences established in accordance with the Convention.

Article 2

Statement of purpose

The purpose of this Protocol is to promote, facilitate and strengthen cooperation among States Parties in order to prevent, combat and eradicate the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition.

Article 3

Use of terms

For the purposes of this Protocol:

(a) "Firearm" shall mean any portable barrelled weapon that expels, is designed to expel or may be readily converted to expel a shot, bullet or projectile by the action of an explosive, excluding antique firearms or their replicas. Antique firearms and their replicas shall be defined in accordance with domestic law. In no case, however, shall antique firearms include firearms manufactured after 1899;

(b) "Parts and components" shall mean any element or replacement element specifically designed for a firearm and essential to its operation, including a barrel, frame or receiver, slide or cylinder, bolt or breech block, and any device designed or adapted to diminish the sound caused by firing a firearm;

(c) "Ammunition" shall mean the complete round or its components, including cartridge cases, primers, propellant powder, bullets or projectiles, that are used in a firearm, provided that those components are themselves subject to authorization in the respective State Party;

(d) "Illicit manufacturing" shall mean the manufacturing or assembly of firearms, their parts and components or ammunition:

- (i) From parts and components illicitly trafficked;
- (ii) Without a licence or authorization from a competent authority of the State Party where the manufacture or assembly takes place; or
- (iii) Without marking the firearms at the time of manufacture, in accordance with article 8 of this Protocol;

Licensing or authorization of the manufacture of parts and components shall be in accordance with domestic law;

(e) "Illicit trafficking" shall mean the import, export, acquisition, sale, delivery, movement or transfer of firearms, their parts and components and ammunition from or across the territory of one State Party to that of another State Party if any one of the States Parties concerned does not authorize it in accordance with the terms of this Protocol or if the firearms are not marked in accordance with article 8 of this Protocol;

(f) "Tracing" shall mean the systematic tracking of firearms and, where possible, their parts and components and ammunition from manufacturer to purchaser for the purpose of assisting the competent authorities of States Parties in detecting, investigating and analysing illicit manufacturing and illicit trafficking.

Article 4

Scope of application

1. This Protocol shall apply, except as otherwise stated herein, to the prevention of illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition and to the investigation and prosecution of offences established in accordance with article 5 of this Protocol where those offences are transnational in nature and involve an organized criminal group.

2. This Protocol shall not apply to state-to-state transactions or to state transfers in cases where the application of the Protocol would prejudice the right of a State Party to take action in the interest of national security consistent with the Charter of the United Nations.

Article 5

Criminalization

1. Each State Party shall adopt such legislative and other measures as may be necessary to establish as criminal offences the following conduct, when committed intentionally:

- (a) Illicit manufacturing of firearms, their parts and components and ammunition;
- (b) Illicit trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition;
- (c) Falsifying or illicitly obliterating, removing or altering the marking(s) on firearms required by article 8 of this Protocol.

2. Each State Party shall also adopt such legislative and other measures as may be necessary to establish as criminal offences the following conduct:

(a) Subject to the basic concepts of its legal system, attempting to commit or participating as an accomplice in an offence established in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article; and

(b) Organizing, directing, aiding, abetting, facilitating or counselling the commission of an offence established in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article.

Article 6

Confiscation, seizure and disposal

1. Without prejudice to article 12 of the Convention, States Parties shall adopt, to the greatest extent possible within their domestic legal systems, such measures as may be necessary to enable confiscation of firearms, their parts and components and ammunition that have been illicitly manufactured or trafficked.

2. States Parties shall adopt, within their domestic legal systems, such measures as may be necessary to prevent illicitly manufactured and trafficked firearms, parts and components and ammunition from falling into the hands of unauthorized persons by seizing and destroying such firearms, their parts and components and ammunition unless other disposal has been officially authorized, provided that the firearms have been marked and the methods of disposal of those firearms and ammunition have been recorded.

II. Prevention

Article 7

Record-keeping

Each State Party shall ensure the maintenance, for not less than ten years, of information in relation to firearms and, where appropriate and feasible, their parts and components and ammunition that is necessary to trace and identify those firearms and, where appropriate and feasible, their parts and components and ammunition which are illicitly manufactured or trafficked and to prevent and detect such activities. Such information shall include:

(a) The appropriate markings required by article 8 of this Protocol;

(b) In cases involving international transactions in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, the issuance and expiration dates of the appropriate licences or authorizations, the country of export, the country of import, the transit countries, where appropriate, and the final recipient and the description and quantity of the articles.

Article 8

Marking of firearms

1. For the purpose of identifying and tracing each firearm, States Parties shall:

(a) At the time of manufacture of each firearm, either require unique marking providing the name of the manufacturer, the country or place of manufacture and the serial number, or maintain any alternative unique user-friendly marking with simple geometric symbols in combination with a numeric and/or alphanumeric code, permitting ready identification by all States of the country of manufacture;

(b) Require appropriate simple marking on each imported firearm, permitting identification of the country of import and, where possible, the year of import and enabling the competent authorities of that country to trace the firearm, and a unique marking, if the firearm does not bear such a marking. The requirements of this subparagraph need not be applied to temporary imports of firearms for verifiable lawful purposes;

(c) Ensure, at the time of transfer of a firearm from government stocks to permanent civilian use, the appropriate unique marking permitting identification by all States Parties of the transferring country.

2. States Parties shall encourage the firearms manufacturing industry to develop measures against the removal or alteration of markings.

Article 9

Deactivation of firearms

A State Party that does not recognize a deactivated firearm as a firearm in accordance with its domestic law shall take the necessary measures, including the establishment of specific offences if appropriate, to prevent the illicit reactivation of deactivated firearms, consistent with the following general principles of deactivation:

(a) All essential parts of a deactivated firearm are to be rendered permanently inoperable and incapable of removal, replacement or modification in a manner that would permit the firearm to be reactivated in any way;

(b) Arrangements are to be made for deactivation measures to be verified, where appropriate, by a competent authority to ensure that the modifications made to a firearm render it permanently inoperable;

(c) Verification by a competent authority is to include a certificate or record attesting to the deactivation of the firearm or a clearly visible mark to that effect stamped on the firearm.

Article 10

General requirements for export, import and transit licensing or authorization systems

1. Each State Party shall establish or maintain an effective system of export and import licensing or authorization, as well as of measures on international transit, for the transfer of firearms, their parts and components and ammunition.

2. Before issuing export licences or authorizations for shipments of firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, each State Party shall verify:

(a) That the importing States have issued import licences or authorizations; and

(b) That, without prejudice to bilateral or multilateral agreements or arrangements favouring landlocked States, the transit States have, at a minimum, given notice in writing, prior to shipment, that they have no objection to the transit.

3. The export and import licence or authorization and accompanying documentation together shall contain information that, at a minimum, shall include the place and the date of issuance, the date of expiration, the country of export, the country of import, the final recipient, a description and the quantity of the firearms, their parts and components and ammunition and, whenever there is transit, the countries of transit. The information contained in the import licence must be provided in advance to the transit States.

4. The importing State Party shall, upon request, inform the exporting State Party of the receipt of the dispatched shipment of firearms, their parts and components or ammunition.

5. Each State Party shall, within available means, take such measures as may be necessary to ensure that licensing or authorization procedures are secure and that the authenticity of licensing or authorization documents can be verified or validated.

6. States Parties may adopt simplified procedures for the temporary import and export and the transit of firearms, their parts and components and ammunition for verifiable lawful purposes such as hunting, sport shooting, evaluation, exhibitions or repairs.

Article 11

Security and preventive measures

In an effort to detect, prevent and eliminate the theft, loss or diversion of, as well as the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in, firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, each State Party shall take appropriate measures:

(a) To require the security of firearms, their parts and components and ammunition at the time of manufacture, import, export and transit through its territory; and

(b) To increase the effectiveness of import, export and transit controls, including, where appropriate, border controls, and of police and customs transborder cooperation.

Article 12

Information

1. Without prejudice to articles 27 and 28 of the Convention, States Parties shall exchange among themselves, consistent with their respective domestic legal and administrative systems, relevant case-specific information on matters such as authorized producers, dealers, importers, exporters and, whenever possible, carriers of firearms, their parts and components and ammunition.

2. Without prejudice to articles 27 and 28 of the Convention, States Parties shall exchange among themselves, consistent with their respective domestic legal and administrative systems, relevant information on matters such as:

(a) Organized criminal groups known to take part or suspected of taking part in the illicit manufacturing of or trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition;

(b) The means of concealment used in the illicit manufacturing of or trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition and ways of detecting them;

(c) Methods and means, points of dispatch and destination and routes customarily used by organized criminal groups engaged in illicit trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition; and

(d) Legislative experiences and practices and measures to prevent, combat and eradicate the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition.

3. States Parties shall provide to or share with each other, as appropriate, relevant scientific and technological information useful to law enforcement authorities in order to enhance each other's abilities to prevent, detect and investigate the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition and to prosecute the persons involved in those illicit activities.

4. States Parties shall cooperate in the tracing of firearms, their parts and components and ammunition that may have been illicitly manufactured or trafficked. Such cooperation shall include the provision of prompt responses to requests for assistance in tracing such firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, within available means.

5. Subject to the basic concepts of its legal system or any international agreements, each State Party shall guarantee the confidentiality of and comply with any restrictions on the use of information that it receives from another State Party pursuant to this article, including proprietary information pertaining to commercial transactions, if requested to do so by the State Party providing the information. If such confidentiality cannot be maintained, the State Party that provided the information shall be notified prior to its disclosure.

Cooperation

1. States Parties shall cooperate at the bilateral, regional and international levels to prevent, combat and eradicate the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition.

2. Without prejudice to article 18, paragraph 13, of the Convention, each State Party shall identify a national body or a single point of contact to act as liaison between it and other States Parties on matters relating to this Protocol.

3. States Parties shall seek the support and cooperation of manufacturers, dealers, importers, exporters, brokers and commercial carriers of firearms, their parts and components and ammunition to prevent and detect the illicit activities referred to in paragraph 1 of this article.

Article 14

Training and technical assistance

States Parties shall cooperate with each other and with relevant international organizations, as appropriate, so that States Parties may receive, upon request, the training and technical assistance necessary to enhance their ability to prevent, combat and eradicate the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, including technical, financial and material assistance in those matters identified in articles 29 and 30 of the Convention.

Article 15

Brokers and brokering

1. With a view to preventing and combating illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, States Parties that have not yet done so shall consider establishing a system for regulating the activities of those who engage in brokering. Such a system could include one or more measures such as:

(a) Requiring registration of brokers operating within their territory;

(b) Requiring licensing or authorization of brokering; or

(c) Requiring disclosure on import and export licences or authorizations, or accompanying documents, of the names and locations of brokers involved in the transaction.

2. States Parties that have established a system of authorization regarding brokering as set forth in paragraph 1 of this article are encouraged to include information on brokers and brokering in their exchanges of information under article 12 of this Protocol and to retain records regarding brokers and brokering in accordance with article 7 of this Protocol.

III. Final provisions

Article 16

Settlement of disputes

1. States Parties shall endeavour to settle disputes concerning the interpretation or application of this Protocol through negotiation.

2. Any dispute between two or more States Parties concerning the interpretation or application of this Protocol that cannot be settled through negotiation within a reasonable time shall, at the request of one of those States Parties, be submitted to arbitration. If, six months after the date of the request for arbitration, those States Parties are unable to agree on the organization of the arbitration, any one of those States Parties may refer the dispute to the International Court of Justice by request in accordance with the Statute of the Court.

3. Each State Party may, at the time of signature, ratification, acceptance or approval or accession to this Protocol, declare that it does not consider itself bound by paragraph 2 of this article. The other States Parties shall not be bound by paragraph 2 of this article with respect to any State Party that has made such a reservation.

4. Any State Party that has made a reservation in accordance with paragraph 3 of this article may at any time withdraw that reservation by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 17

Signature, ratification, acceptance, approval and accession

1. This Protocol shall be open to all States for signature at United Nations Headquarters in New York from the thirtieth day after its adoption by the General Assembly until 12 December 2002.

2. This Protocol shall also be open for signature by regional economic integration organizations provided that at least one member State of such organization has signed this Protocol in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article.

3. This Protocol is subject to ratification, acceptance or approval. Instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. A regional economic integration organization may deposit its instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval if at least one of its member States has done likewise. In that instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval, such organization shall declare the extent of its competence with respect to the matters governed by this Protocol. Such organization shall also inform the depositary of any relevant modification in the extent of its competence.

4. This Protocol is open for accession by any State or any regional economic integration organization of which at least one member State is a Party to this Protocol. Instruments of accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. At the time of its accession, a regional economic integration organization shall declare the extent of its competence with respect to matters governed by this Protocol. Such organization shall also inform the depositary of any relevant modification in the extent of its competence.

Article 18

Entry into force

1. This Protocol shall enter into force on the ninetyth day after the date of deposit of the fortieth instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession, except that it shall not enter into force before the entry into force of the Convention. For the purpose of this paragraph, any instrument deposited by a regional economic integration organization shall not be counted as additional to those deposited by member States of such organization.

2. For each State or regional economic integration organization ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to this Protocol after the deposit of the fortieth instrument of such action, this Protocol shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of deposit by such State or organization of the relevant instrument or on the date this Protocol enters into force pursuant to paragraph 1 of this article, whichever is the later.

Amendment

1. After the expiry of five years from the entry into force of this Protocol, a State Party to the Protocol may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall thereupon communicate the proposed amendment to the States Parties and to the Conference of the Parties to the Convention for the purpose of considering and deciding on the proposal. The States Parties to this Protocol meeting at the Conference of the Parties shall make every effort to achieve consensus on each amendment. If all efforts at consensus have been exhausted and no agreement has been reached, the amendment shall, as a last resort, require for its adoption a two-thirds majority vote of the States Parties to this Protocol present and voting at the meeting of the Conference of the Parties.

2. Regional economic integration organizations, in matters within their competence, shall exercise their right to vote under this article with a number of votes equal to the number of their member States that are Parties to this Protocol. Such organizations shall not exercise their right to vote if their member States exercise theirs and vice versa.

3. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article is subject to ratification, acceptance or approval by States Parties.

4. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article shall enter into force in respect of a State Party ninety days after the date of the deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of an instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval of such amendment.

5. When an amendment enters into force, it shall be binding on those States Parties which have expressed their consent to be bound by it. Other States Parties shall still be bound by the provisions of this Protocol and any earlier amendments that they have ratified, accepted or approved.

Article 20

Denunciation

1. A State Party may denounce this Protocol by written notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Such denunciation shall become effective one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.

2. A regional economic integration organization shall cease to be a Party to this Protocol when all of its member States have denounced it.

Article 21

Depositary and languages

1. The Secretary-General of the United Nations is designated depositary of this Protocol.

2. The original of this Protocol, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned plenipotentiaries, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed this Protocol.

Strategies for crime prevention

Corruption

In 2001, the United Nations commenced elaboration of an international convention against corruption and continued activities to prevent corrupt practices, including the illegal transfer of funds and the criminal misuse of information technologies. In May, the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice discussed progress made in global action against corruption as the theme of its tenth session [E/2001/30/Rev.1].

Communications. Communications transmitted to the Secretary-General on corruption issues included: from the Netherlands, the Final Declaration of the Global Forum on Fighting Corruption and Safeguarding Integrity II (The Hague, 28-31 May) [A/56/493]; from the Republic of Korea, the summary of the Seoul Anti-Corruption Symposium (30-31 August) [A/C.3/56/6]; and from the United Arab Emirates, a description of a newly approved law on money-laundering [A/56/468].

International instrument against corruption

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/61 [YUN 2000, p. 1072], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice an April report [E/CN.15/2001/3 & Corr.1], in which he analysed all relevant international instruments, other documents and recommendations addressing corruption, to serve as the basis for recommendations on the development of a legal instrument against corruption. The Secretary-General observed that all existing legal instruments against corruption, with the exception of the Convention on Combating Bribery of Foreign Public Officials in International Business Transactions, negotiated under the auspices of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development, were regional rather than international in scope. He concluded that the mandate given by the Assembly in resolutions 55/61 and 55/188 [YUN 2000, p. 1073] represented a unique opportunity to develop a global legal instrument against corruption that fully addressed the concerns of the international community as a whole and could include provisions and mechanisms applicable at the global level.

Intergovernmental Expert Group. The Intergovernmental Open-Ended Expert Group to Prepare Draft Terms of Reference for the Negotiation of an International Legal Instrument against Corruption, established in accordance with Assembly resolution 55/61, held its first meeting in Vienna from 30 July to 3 August [A/AC.260/2 & Corr.1]. In accordance with Assembly resolution 55/188, the Expert Group also examined the question of illegally transferred funds and their repatriation to the countries of origin. Having considered the Expert Group's report at its resumed tenth session in September, the Commission approved it and the draft resolution contained therein. The Commission decided to transmit the report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the Assembly for consideration and adoption. By a September note [A/56/402-E/2001/105], the Secretariat transmitted the report to the Council and the Assembly. The Council took action in December (below) and the Assembly was expected to take action in 2002.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/2001/30/Rev.1], adopted resolution 2001/46 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Terms of reference for the negotiation of an international legal instrument against corruption

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

"The General Assembly,

"Concerned at the seriousness of the problems posed by corruption, which may endanger the stability and security of societies, undermine the values of democracy and morality and jeopardize social, economic and political development,

"Recalling its resolution 51/59 of 12 December 1996, by which it adopted the International Code of Conduct for Public Officials and recommended the Code to Member States as a tool to guide their efforts against corruption,

"Recalling also its resolution 51/191 of 12 December 1996, by which it adopted the United Nations Declaration against Corruption and Bribery in International Commercial Transactions,

"Recalling further its resolution 55/61 of 4 December 2000, in which it established an ad hoc committee for the negotiation of an effective international legal instrument against corruption, and requested the Secretary-General to convene an intergovernmental open-ended expert group to examine and prepare draft terms of reference for the negotiation of such an instrument,

"Recalling its resolution 55/188 of 20 December 2000, in which it invited the Intergovernmental Open-Ended Expert Group to Prepare Draft Terms of Reference for the Negotiation of an International Legal Instrument against Corruption, convened pursuant to resolution 55/61, to examine the question of illegally transferred funds and the return of such funds to the country of origin,

"Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 2001/13 of 24 July 2001, entitled "Strengthening international cooperation in preventing and combating the transfer of funds of illicit origin, derived from acts of corruption, including the laundering of funds, and in returning such funds",

"Reiterating the need to prepare a broad and effective international legal instrument against corruption,

"Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on existing international legal instruments, recommendations and other documents addressing corruption, submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its tenth session and before the meeting of the Intergovernmental Open-Ended Expert Group,

"1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Intergovernmental Open-Ended Expert Group to Prepare Draft Terms of Reference for the Negotiation of an International Legal Instrument against Corruption, which met in Vienna from 30 July to 3 August 2001, as endorsed by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its resumed tenth session and by the Economic and Social Council;

"2. Decides that the Ad Hoc Committee for the Negotiation of a Convention against Corruption, established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 55/61, shall negotiate a broad and effective convention, which, subject to the final determination of its title, shall be referred to as the "United Nations Convention against Corruption";

"3. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee, in developing the draft convention, to adopt a comprehensive and multidisciplinary approach and to consider, inter alia, the following indicative elements: definitions; scope; protection of sovereignty; preventive measures; criminalization; sanctions and remedies; confiscation and seizure; jurisdiction; liability of legal persons; protection of witnesses and victims; promoting and strengthening international cooperation; preventing and combating the transfer of funds of illicit origin derived from acts of corruption, including the laundering of funds, and returning such funds; technical assistance; collection, exchange and analysis of information; and mechanisms for monitoring implementation;

"4. Invites the Ad Hoc Committee to draw on the report of the Intergovernmental Open-Ended Expert Group, the report of the Secretary-General, and the relevant parts of the report of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice on its tenth session, as well as in particular on paragraph 1 of Economic and Social Council resolution 2001/13, as resource materials in the accomplishment of its tasks;

"5. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to take into consideration existing international legal instruments against corruption and, whenever relevant, the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime;

"6. Decides that the Ad Hoc Committee shall be convened in Vienna in 2002 and 2003, as required, and shall hold no fewer than three sessions of two weeks each per year, within the overall approved appropriations of the programme budget for the biennium 2002-2003, according to a schedule to be drawn up by its bureau, and requests the Committee to complete its work by the end of 2003;

"7. Also decides that the bureau of the Ad Hoc Committee shall be elected by the Committee itself and shall consist of two representatives from each of the five regional groups;

"8. Invites donor countries to assist the United Nations in ensuring the full and effective participation of developing countries, in particular least developed countries, in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee, including by covering travel and local expenses;

"9. Urges States to be fully involved in the negotiation of the convention and to endeavour to ensure continuity in their representation;

"10. Invites the Ad Hoc Committee to take into consideration the contributions of non-governmental organizations and civil society, in accordance with United Nations rules and following the practice established by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime;

"11. Accepts with gratitude the offer of the Government of Argentina to host an informal preparatory meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee prior to its first session;

"12. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit progress reports on its work to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its eleventh and twelfth sessions, in 2002 and 2003, respectively;

"13. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Ad Hoc Committee with the necessary facilities and resources to support its work."

Corrupt practices and illegal transfer of funds

In May, the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice considered asset recovery as a sub-theme of its discussion on global action against corruption [E/2001/30/Rev.1]. Discussions highlighted the fact that strengthened international cooperation in asset recovery deserved urgent attention and that the issue could be addressed most effectively by an international legal instrument to provide a common basis for sharing information, conducting investigations, tracing assets, overcoming bank secrecy, confiscating and returning funds and extraditing offenders.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/2001/30/Rev.1], adopted resolution 2001/13 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Strengthening international cooperation in preventing and combating the transfer of funds of illicit origin, derived from acts of corruption, including the laundering of funds, and in returning such funds

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 51/191 of 16 December 1996 on the United Nations Declaration against Corruption and Bribery in International Commercial Transactions, 53/176 of 15 December 1998 on action against corruption and bribery in international commercial transactions, 54/205 of 22 December 1999 on the prevention of corrupt practices and illegal transfer of funds, 55/25 of 15 November 2000 on the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, 55/61 of 4 December 2000 on an effective international legal instrument against corruption and 55/188 of 20 December 2000 on preventing and combating corrupt practices and illegal transfer of funds and repatriation of such funds to the countries of origin,

Concerned about the seriousness of problems posed by corruption, which may endanger the stability and security of societies, undermine the values of democracy and morality and jeopardize social, economic and political development,

Concerned also that funds of illicit origin derived from acts of corruption include public funds, whose diversion may seriously threaten economic and political progress, in particular in developing countries,

Alarmed at the fact that such funds are often being transferred from their countries of origin to international banking centres and financial havens,

Recognizing that the authorities of those countries wishing to recover funds of illicit origin, including funds obtained through acts of corruption and financial fraud, have a legitimate wish to obtain information on the whereabouts of those funds and that confidentiality, the right to privacy and bank secrecy cannot guarantee impunity,

Recognizing also the importance of strengthening international cooperation in combating the transfer of funds of illicit origin and in returning such funds,

Viewing with deep concern the increasing link between money-laundering and corruption, making it essential to promote national and international efforts in areas such as preventing and combating the transfer of funds of illicit origin and returning such funds,

1. Requests the intergovernmental open-ended expert group referred to in General Assembly resolution 55/61 to consider, within the context of its mandates, the following issues, inter alia, as possible items of work to be included in the draft terms of reference for the negotiation of a future legal instrument against corruption:

(a) Strengthening international cooperation in preventing and combating the transfer of funds of illicit origin, including the laundering of funds derived from acts of corruption, and promoting ways and means of enabling the return of such funds;

(b) Developing the measures necessary to ensure that those working in banking systems and other financial institutions contribute to the prevention of the transfer of funds of illicit origin derived from acts of corruption, for example, by recording transactions in a transparent manner, and to facilitate the return of those funds;

(c) Defining funds derived from acts of corruption as proceeds of crime and establishing that an act of corruption may be a predicate offence in relation to money-laundering;

(d) Establishing criteria for the determination of countries to which funds, referred to above, should be returned and the appropriate procedures for such return;

2. Requests the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat to support Governments that request technical assistance in combating the transfer of funds of illicit origin and in returning such funds, including by providing the names of experts to assist such Governments;

3. Urges Governments, through voluntary contributions, and invites multilateral financial institutions and regional development banks, as appropriate, to support the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention in its efforts to assist Governments that request technical cooperation in combating the transfer of funds of illicit origin and in returning such funds, including by providing the names of the experts available to assist the Office;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, further to his analytical report on progress made in the implementation of resolution 55/188, to prepare, within existing resources or drawing upon through extrabudgetary contributions, for the ad hoc committee referred to in resolution 55/61, a global study on the transfer of funds of illicit origin, especially funds derived from acts of corruption, and its impact on economic, social and political progress, in particular in developing countries, and to include in his study innovative ideas regarding appropriate ways and means of enabling the States concerned to obtain access to information on the whereabouts of funds belonging to them and to recover such funds.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 55/188 [YUN 2000, p. 1073], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/56/403 & Add.1], prepared by CICP, on the prevention of corrupt practices and illegal transfer of funds. The report summarized information received from 29 States and two UN organizations on measures taken to prevent and combat the transfer of funds of illicit origin and on the issue of returning such funds. It also reviewed the outcomes of the tenth session of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (see p. 1021) and the first meeting of the Intergovernmental Open-Ended Expert Group to Prepare Draft Terms of Reference for the Negotiation of an International Legal Instrument against Corruption (see p. 1041). The report, which included input from the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, went on to describe the main problems involved in preventing and combating the transfer of funds of illicit origin and returning them, as well as the technical assistance activities of the UN Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention in that regard.

The Secretary-General concluded that the dimensions of the problem demanded joint and conclusive action by the international community. An area where the UN system could assist Member States was in capacity-building for case management; such a programme could provide support to requesting States for specific multinational cases. The system could also assist individual countries to coordinate efforts and assemble cases at the national level before other countries became involved. Other recommendations concerned the creation of a civil recovery vehicle, the use of "mentors" in asset-recovery cases, the funding of assistance in asset-recovery cases and the possible long-term role of the United Nations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/56/559], adopted resolution 56/186 without vote [agenda item 96 (a)].

Preventing and combating corrupt practices and transfer of funds of illicit origin and returning such funds to the countries of origin

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 54/205 of 22 December 1999 on the prevention of corrupt practices and illegal transfer of funds, 55/61 of 4 December 2000 on an effective international legal instrument against corruption and 55/188 of 20 December 2000 on preventing and combating corrupt practices and illegal transfer of funds and repatriation of such funds to the countries of origin, as well as the report of the Intergovernmental Open-Ended Expert Group to Prepare Draft Terms of Reference for the Negotiation of an International Legal Instrument against Corruption, which will be considered by the Economic and Social Council at its next session,

Concerned about the seriousness of problems posed by corrupt practices and transfer of funds of illicit origin, which may endanger the stability and security of societies, undermine the values of democracy and morality and jeopardize social, economic and political development,

Recognizing the need to create an enabling environment for business at the national and international levels in order to promote economic growth and sustainable development, taking into account the development priorities of Governments,

Recognizing also the responsibilities of Governments to adopt policies at the national and international levels aimed at preventing and combating corrupt practices and transfer of funds of illicit origin and returning such funds to the countries of origin,

Mindful of the catalytic role of the United Nations system in facilitating the constructive participation and orderly interaction of the private sector in the development process by embracing universal principles and norms, such as honesty, transparency and accountability,

Underlining the fact that preventing and combating corrupt practices and transfer of funds of illicit origin and returning such funds is an important element in mobilizing resources for development,

Recognizing the importance of international co-operation and existing international and national laws for combating corruption in international commercial transactions,

Noting that the International Conference on Financing for Development will be held at Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002,

Stressing the need to prevent and combat corrupt practices and the transfer of funds of illicit origin and to return such funds so as to enable countries to design and fund development projects, in accordance with their national priorities,

Noting that such corrupt practices include State funds being illegally acquired, transferred and invested abroad,

Noting also that the problem of corrupt practices and the transfer of funds of illicit origin, as well as the need to prevent the transfer of such funds, and to return them, have social, economic and legal implications that require comprehensive, holistic examination at the national and international levels,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the prevention of corrupt practices and illegal transfer of funds;

2. Reiterates its condemnation of corruption, bribery, money-laundering and the transfer of funds of illicit origin, and stresses its belief that those practices need to be prevented and that funds of illicit origin transferred abroad need to be returned after request and due process;

3. Calls, while recognizing the importance of national measures, for increased international co-operation, inter alia, through the United Nations system, in support of efforts by Governments to prevent and address the transfer of funds of illicit origin as well as to return such funds to the countries of origin;

4. Requests the international community to support the efforts of all countries to strengthen institutional capacity and regulatory frameworks for preventing corruption, bribery, money-laundering and the transfer of funds of illicit origin, as well as for returning such funds to the countries of origin;

5. Invites the Economic and Social Council to finalize its consideration of the draft terms of reference for the negotiation of a United Nations convention against corruption, by which an ad hoc committee would be requested to consider, inter alia, the elements of prevention and combating the transfer of funds of illicit origin derived from acts of corruption, including the laundering and returning of such funds, expeditiously;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, and also requests the Secretary-General, upon the completion of the work of the ad hoc committee referred to above, to submit recommendations on options for further consideration by the Assembly regarding this question;

7. Decides to keep the matter under review and to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session a sub-item entitled "Preventing and combating corrupt practices and transfer of funds of illicit origin and returning such funds to the countries of origin" under the item entitled "Sectoral policy questions".

Criminal misuse of information technologies

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/23 [YUN 1999, p. 1054], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice a March report containing the conclusions of a study on effective measures to prevent and control high-technology and computer-related crime [E/CN.15/2001/4]. The report provided a preliminary examination of the problems, including crimes committed against the technologies and their users; conventional crimes committed using computer or communications technologies; and the use of technologies to support criminal organizations and activities. It also described the activities of relevant international and intergovernmental organizations, particularly the Council of Europe, in relation to the prevention and control of computer-related crime.

The Secretary-General proposed that a more detailed study of the problem be presented to the Commission at its eleventh (2002) session and recommended that the Commission consider a series of options for further action, such as the possible drafting of an international instrument against computer-related crime, and options for a shorter-term strategy, including the establishment of a United Nations global programme against high-technology and computer-related crime.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/56/574], adopted resolution 56/121 without vote [agenda item 110].

Combating the criminal misuse of information technologies

The General Assembly,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in which Member States resolved to ensure that the benefits of new technologies, especially information and communications technologies, in conformity with the recommendations contained in the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2000 of the Economic and Social Council, are available to all, and its resolution 55/63 of 4 December 2000, in which it invited Member States to take into account measures to combat the criminal misuse of information technologies,

Recognizing that the free flow of information can promote economic and social development, education and democratic governance,

Noting the significant advances in the development and application of information technologies and means of telecommunication,

Expressing concern that technological advances have created new possibilities for criminal activity, in particular the criminal misuse of information technologies,

Noting that reliance on information technologies, while it may vary from State to State, has resulted in a substantial increase in global cooperation and coordination, with the result that the criminal misuse of information technologies may have a grave impact on all States,

Recognizing that gaps in the access to and use of information technologies by States can diminish the effectiveness of international cooperation in combating the criminal misuse of information technologies, and recognizing also the need to facilitate the transfer of information technologies, in particular to developing countries,

Noting the necessity of preventing the criminal misuse of information technologies,

Recognizing the need for cooperation between States and the private sector in combating the criminal misuse of information technologies,

Underlining the need for enhanced coordination and cooperation among States in combating the criminal misuse of information technologies, and, in this context, stressing the role that can be played by the United Nations and other international and regional organizations,

Welcoming the work of the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Recognizing with appreciation the work of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its ninth and tenth sessions and the subsequent preparation of a plan of action against high-technology and computer-related crime, which recognizes, inter alia, the need for effective law enforcement and the need to maintain effective protections for privacy and other related basic rights, as well as the need to take into account ongoing work in other forums,

Noting the work of international and regional organizations in combating high-technology crime, including the work of the Council of Europe in elaborating the Convention on Cybercrime, as well as the work of those organizations in promoting dialogue between government and the private sector on safety and confidence in cyberspace,

1. Invites Member States, when developing national law, policy and practice to combat the criminal misuse of information technologies, to take into account, as appropriate, the work and achievements of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice and of other international and regional organizations;

2. Takes note of the value of the measures set forth in its resolution 55/63, and again invites Member States to take them into account in their efforts to combat the criminal misuse of information technologies;

3. Decides to defer consideration of this subject, pending work envisioned in the plan of action against high-technology and computer-related crime of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice.

UN standards and norms

In April, the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice a report on the use and application of UN standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice [E/CN.5/2001/9]. He provided an overview of CICP efforts to promote the use and application of UN standards and norms, and reviewed the process of information-gathering and analysis conducted over two years through 12 surveys on existing international instruments and on standard-setting activities designed to facilitate the drafting of new international instruments. The report recommended that the cost-benefit value of the resources expended in gathering information through surveys be weighed against the output and suggested that attention be focused on consolidating mandated work and reporting obligations, inclusive of surveys, and on keeping them to a minimum. A possible option would be to request consolidated reporting obligations; follow-up activities would be focused on clusters of cross-cutting issues, areas, sectors or professions, rather than on individual instruments.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/2001/30/Rev.1], adopted resolution 2001/11 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Action to promote effective community-based crime prevention

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind its resolution 1996/16 of 23 July 1996, in which it requested the Secretary-General to continue to promote the use and application of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Recalling the "Elements of responsible crime prevention: standards and norms", annexed to its resolution 1997/33 of 21 July 1997, in particular those elements on community involvement in crime prevention contained in paragraphs 14 to 23,

Recalling also the revised draft elements of responsible crime prevention prepared by the Expert Group Meeting on Elements of Responsible Crime Prevention: Addressing Traditional and Emerging Crime Problems, held in Buenos Aires from 8 to 10 September 1999,

Noting that the revised draft elements of responsible crime prevention were annexed to the working paper prepared by the Secretariat on effective crime prevention: keeping pace with new developments, submitted to the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Acknowledging the need to update and finalize the draft elements of responsible crime prevention,

Noting the international colloquium of crime prevention experts held in Montreal, Canada, from 3 to 6 October 1999 in preparation for the Tenth Congress by the Governments of Canada, France and the Netherlands, in collaboration with the International Centre for the Prevention of Crime,

Noting with appreciation the workshop on community involvement in crime prevention, organized during the Tenth Congress by the International Centre for the Prevention of Crime,

Aware of the scope for significant reductions in crime and victimization through research-based approaches and of the contribution that effective crime prevention can make in terms of the safety and security of individuals and communities and their property,

Desirous that the commitments made in the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century, adopted by the Tenth Congress, in relation to crime prevention, especially those made in paragraphs 11, 13, 20, 21, 24 and 25 of the Vienna Declaration, be implemented nationally and internationally,

Convinced of the need to advance a collaborative agenda for action with respect to those commitments made in the Vienna Declaration,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to convene, subject to the availability of extrabudgetary resources, a meeting of experts selected on the basis of equitable geographical representation for the purposes of further revising the draft elements of responsible crime prevention, with a view to arriving at a version of the draft elements on which the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, at its eleventh session, will be able to reach consensus, and proposing priority areas for international action, including the identification of technical assistance issues, to promote effective community-based crime prevention;

2. Welcomes the offer of the Government of Canada to host the meeting of the expert group;

3. Requests the expert group, within the context of its meeting, to consider the results of the work of the recent United Nations meetings on this subject;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the results of the meeting of the expert group, including its revised version of the draft elements of responsible crime prevention and the priority areas for international action to promote effective community-based crime prevention, to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its eleventh session for its consideration and action.

Restorative justice

In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2000/14 [YUN 2000, p. 1076], the Secretary-General convened a meeting of the Group of Experts on Restorative Justice (Ottawa, Canada, 29 October–1 November) [E/CN.15/2002/5/Add.1 & Corr.1]. The Group of Experts reviewed comments received from 37 Member States on the preliminary draft elements of a declaration of basic principles on the use of restorative justice programmes in criminal matters and proposed a revised text, which was annexed to its report. The experts suggested that a non-binding international instrument on restorative justice could provide guidance in the establishment of national programmes and agreed that restorative justice measures should be flexible in their adaptation to established criminal justice practices.

Human resources development

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/211 [YUN 1999, p. 1072], the Secretary-General submitted a July report on advancing human resources development in developing countries [A/56/162]. The report outlined the background and context of UN system activity in human resources development, in the light of the twin challenges of reducing poverty and advancing technology.

The Secretary-General recommended that future UN initiatives for human resources development should take a broader view of the issue, not only equating it with education and training, but also relating it to broader capability development through knowledge acquisition, institutional change and policy reforms. That would allow human resources to respond to new demands associated with the technology revolution, take advantage of emerging opportunities in a globalized world and participate in processes that influenced the lives of the poor.

On 19 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 2001/299, adopted "The contribution of human resources development, including in the areas of health and education, to the process of development" as the theme for its high-level segment in 2002.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/560/Add.2], adopted resolution 56/189 without vote [agenda item 97 (b)].

Human resources development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 45/191 of 21 December 1990, 46/143 of 17 December 1991, 48/205 of 21 December 1993, 50/105 of 20 December 1995, 52/196 of 18 December 1997 and 54/211 of 22 December 1999, as well as the relevant sections of the Agenda for Development,

Reaffirming also the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted by heads of State and Government on 8 September 2000,

Recalling Economic and Social Council decision 2001/299 of 19 July 2001, by which the Council adopted "The contribution of human resources development, including in the areas of health and education, to the process of development" as the theme for the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2002,

Recognizing that human beings are at the centre of concern in sustainable development,

Stressing that Governments have the primary responsibility for defining and implementing appropriate policies for human resources development and that there is a need for continuing support from the international community to complement the efforts of developing countries,

Stressing also that there is a need for an enabling national and international environment that will enhance human resources development in developing countries and promote sustained economic growth and sustainable development,

Stressing further that health and education are at the core of human resources development, and the need to ensure that by 2015 children everywhere, boys and girls alike, will be able to complete a full course of primary schooling and that girls and boys will have equal access to all levels of education, as expressed at the World Education Forum, held at Dakar from 26 to 28 April 2000, and in the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Emphasizing that human resources development should be an essential component of international development cooperation and that there is a need to promote continuous training and capacity-building within projects and programmes as a means of advancing such development,

Recognizing that there is a need to integrate human resources development into comprehensive strategies that mainstream a gender perspective, taking into account the needs of all people, in particular the needs of women and girls,

Recognizing also the vital role of South-South cooperation in supporting national efforts at human resources development,

Expressing concern at the increasing development gap between developed and developing countries, including the gap in knowledge, information and communication technologies, and the increasing disparity of income in and among nations and its adverse impact on the development of human resources, in particular in the developing countries,

Stressing that developing countries should be assisted in their efforts to develop capacity in and be well equipped with the knowledge of information technologies that would enable them to benefit from the opportunities offered by globalization and to avoid the risk of marginalization in the process of globalization,

Expressing deep concern at the devastating impact of the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) pandemic, especially in sub-Saharan Africa, and of other major diseases on human resources development, in particular in developing countries,

Emphasizing the continuing need for coordination and integration among the organs and organizations of the United Nations system in assisting developing countries, in particular the least developed among them, to foster the development of their human resources, especially that of the most vulnerable groups, and for the United Nations to continue to give priority to human resources development in developing countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Recognizes the importance of developing human resources as a means, inter alia, of promoting economic growth and eradicating poverty as well as of participating more effectively in the world economic system and benefiting from globalization;

3. Urges increased investments by all countries, the United Nations system, international organizations, the private sector, non-governmental organizations and civil society in all aspects of human development, such as health, nutrition, education, training and further capacity-building, with a view to achieving sustainable development and the well-being of all;

4. Encourages all countries to accord priority to human resources development in the context of the adoption of national economic and social policies, including their financing, taking into account their financial constraints;

5. Urges the adoption of comprehensive approaches to human resources development which combine, among other factors, economic growth, poverty eradication, provision of basic social services, sustainable livelihoods, empowerment of women, involvement of young people, the needs of vulnerable groups of society, the needs of local indigenous communities, political freedom, popular participation and respect for human rights, justice and equity, all of which are essential for enhancing human capacity to meet the challenge of development;

6. Encourages all countries to ensure local and community-level engagement in policy issues of human resources development;

7. Emphasizes the need to ensure the full participation of women in the formulation and implementation of national and local policies to promote human resources development;

8. Recognizes the need to direct concerted efforts at enhancing the technical skills and know-how of people living in rural and agricultural areas, with a view to improving their means of livelihood and material well-being, and in this regard encourages the allocation of more resources for that purpose so as to facilitate access to appropriate technology and know-how from within and from other countries, in particular the developed countries, as well as through South-South cooperation;

9. Encourages the adoption of policies, approaches and measures that serve to narrow the increasing gap between developed and developing countries in information and communication technologies in particular and in technology in general by, inter alia:

- (a) Encouraging the private sector, in collaboration with the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations, to donate voluntarily to designated centres in developing countries literary materials, information and communications technology equipment and training which, together with the enabling policies and institutions both at the national and international levels, will facilitate improved access;

- (b) Taking advantage of the rapid turnaround in both the educational institutions and corporations in developed countries of literary material and information and communications technology equipment, through coordinated efforts involving the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations and recipients in interested developing countries;

- (c) Promoting transparent, efficient regulatory regimes and other policies that encourage investment;

- (d) Supporting targeted investments in infrastructure that would establish the physical foundation for the operation of Internet services and pave the way for commercial and development applications;

- (e) Developing training in information technologies for users such as non-governmental organizations, universities and business service organizations, as well as key governmental agencies;

10. Calls upon the United Nations system to harmonize further its collective human resources development efforts, in accordance with national policies and priorities;

11. Encourages the United Nations system to take a comprehensive view of human resources development in its initiatives, relating it to the acquisition of broader knowledge, with a view to enabling human resources to respond to the new demands associated with the technology revolution and to take advantage of emerging opportunities in a globalized world;

12. Also encourages the United Nations system to promote strategies for human resources development that facilitate access by developing countries to new information and communication technologies so as to bridge the digital divide;

13. Further encourages the United Nations system to focus in its cooperation activities on building human and institutional capacity, with specific attention given to women, girls and vulnerable groups;

14. Encourages the United Nations system to continue to engage, where appropriate, in partnerships with the private sector, in accordance with relevant United Nations resolutions, so as to contribute further to the building of human resources development capacity in developing countries;

15. Invites international organizations, including international financial institutions, to continue to give priority to supporting the objectives of human resources development and to integrating them into their policies, projects and operations;

16. Calls upon developed countries and the United Nations system to increase support to programmes and activities in developing countries for advancing human resources development and capacity-building, in particular those geared towards harnessing information and communication technologies;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-eighth session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development and international economic cooperation", the sub-item entitled "Human resources development".

UN research and training institutes

UN Institute for Training and Research

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/208 [YUN 2000, p. 1078], the Secretary-General submitted a November report on the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) [A/56/615]. He noted that the conduct of the various UNITAR programmes was evolving smoothly following a restructuring phase, and activities remained steady and sustained. Each year since 1996, some 120 programmes, seminars and workshops had been organized throughout the world and more than 5,500 participants were benefiting from UNITAR training and capacity-building activities annually. Significant developments included fellowship programmes in preventive diplomacy, international law, international civil service and international affairs management, organized in Europe and the United States, which had largely met the expectations of participants. The Institute had made progress in attracting experts from developing countries and countries with economies in transition for the preparation of training materials and in concentrating its programming on development issues. Almost all UNITAR programmes were being designed and conducted in conjunction with one or more institutions within and outside the UN system and systematic utilization of UNITAR's services had increased.

The Secretary-General stated that UNITAR's financial situation had improved but remained fragile. Although contributions to the Special Purpose Grants Fund were satisfactory, the insufficiency of non-earmarked voluntary contributions made it difficult to maintain training programmes in Nairobi and Vienna and impossible to inaugurate new programmes in cities hosting UN regional commissions, as requested by the Assembly in resolution 55/208. The Secretary-General also discussed continuity in UNITAR management and the question of the classification of rental rates and of maintenance costs charged to the Institute.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/56/567], adopted resolution 56/208 without vote [agenda item 104].

United Nations Institute for Training and Research

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/121 of 20 December 1995, 51/188 of 16 December 1996, 52/206 of 18 December 1997, 53/195 of 15 December 1998, 54/229 of 22 December 1999 and 55/208 of 20 December 2000,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Welcoming the recent progress made by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research in its various programmes and activities, including the improved cooperation that has been established with other organizations of the United Nations system and with regional and national institutions,

Expressing its appreciation to the Governments and private institutions that have made or pledged financial and other contributions to the Institute,

Noting that contributions to the General Fund have not increased and that the participation of the developed countries in training programmes in New York and Geneva is increasing,

Noting also that the bulk of the resources contributed to the Institute are directed to the Special Purpose Grants Fund rather than to the General Fund, and stressing the need to address that unbalanced situation,

Noting further that the Institute receives no subsidy from the United Nations regular budget, that it provides training programmes to all Member States free of charge and that similar United Nations institutions based at Geneva are not charged rent or maintenance costs,

Welcoming the decisions taken by the Secretary-General to ensure continuity in the management of the Institute and to establish the proper grade for the post of Executive Director with the concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Reiterating that training activities should be accorded a more visible and larger role in support of the management of international affairs and in the execution of the economic and social development programmes of the United Nations system,

1. Reaffirms the importance of a coordinated, United Nations system-wide approach to research and training based on an effective coherent strategy and an effective division of labour among the relevant institutions and bodies;

2. Also reaffirms the relevance of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research in view of the growing importance of training within the United Nations and the training requirements of States and the relevance of training-related research activities undertaken by the Institute within its mandate;

3. Stresses the need for the Institute to strengthen further its cooperation with other United Nations institutes and relevant national, regional and international institutes;

4. Welcomes the progress made in building partnerships between the Institute and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system with respect to their training programmes, and in this context underlines the need to develop further and to expand the scope of those partnerships, in particular at the country level;

5. Requests the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research to continue to ensure fair geographical distribution and transparency in the preparation of the programmes and in the employment of experts, and in this regard stresses that the courses of the Institute should focus primarily on development issues;

6. Renews its appeal to all Governments, in particular those of developed countries, and to private institutions that have not yet contributed financially or otherwise to the Institute, to give it their generous financial and other support, and urges the States that have interrupted their voluntary contributions to consider resuming them in view of the successful restructuring and revitalization of the Institute;

7. Calls upon developed countries, which are increasingly participating in the training programmes conducted in New York and Geneva, to make contributions or consider increasing their contributions to the General Fund;

8. Encourages the Board of Trustees of the Institute to continue its efforts to resolve the critical financial situation of the Institute, in particular with a view to broadening its donor base and increasing the contributions made to the General Fund;

9. Also encourages the Board of Trustees to consider diversifying further the venues of the events organized by the Institute and to include the cities hosting regional commissions, in order to promote greater participation and reduce costs;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Institute and United Nations funds and programmes, to continue to explore ways and means of systematically utilizing the Institute in the execution of training and capacity-building programmes for the economic and social development of developing countries;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to clarify the reason why the United Nations Institute for Training and Research does not benefit from rental rates and maintenance costs similar to those enjoyed by other organizations affiliated with the United Nations, such as the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research and the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development, and further requests the Secretary-General to submit proposals on how to waive or reduce the rental rates and maintenance costs charged to the United Nations Institute for Training and Research with a view to alleviating its current financial difficulties, which are aggravated by the current practice of charging commercial rates;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report to it at its fifty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution, including details on the status of contributions to, and the financial situation of, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, as well as on the use of its services by Member States.

United Nations University

The report of the United Nations University (UNU) Council [A/57/31], which described activities in 2001, stated that UNU continued to work within two major thematic areas—peace and governance, and environment and sustainable development. Within those areas, UNU undertook research and training and developed networks on a broad range of issues, from the causes of conflict to leadership, debt relief and international environmental governance. The University disseminated the results of its research through high-level panels, conferences, workshops, books, journals, newsletters and the Internet. In 2001, UNU initiated a new programme on science and technology for sustainability with the Republic of Korea and the Kwangja Institute of Science and Technology, and a new research and training programme on fragile ecosystems in wetland areas in Mato Grosso, Brazil, in cooperation with the Universidade Federal de Mato Grosso and the Mato Grosso government. The University also received endorsement for a new research and training centre on environment and human security in Germany, continued discussions with Qatar regarding a new centre in the Middle East and extended a fisheries training programme in Iceland.

UNU Council

At its annual session (Tokyo, 3-7 December), the UNU Council, the University's governing body, reviewed implementation of UNU activities; considered evaluations of the UNU World Institute for Development Economics Research and the University's capacity development activities; examined proposals for new research and training centres, programmes, networks and initiatives; assessed the University's financial situation; and reviewed and adopted the 2002-2003 academic programme and budget.

University for Peace

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/29 [YUN 1999, p. 1070], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/56/314], in which he detailed progress in revitalizing the Costa Rica-based University for Peace, especially concerning a strategy and programme for the development and management of its academic programme and other peace-related activities. The activities of the University, which was established in 1980 [YUN 1980, p. 1004], were being expanded and its academic programme enhanced in order to make it a focus of global efforts in the study of and education for peace. To that end, advisory meetings had been organized in all regions, with the participation of eminent international scholars, to address various aspects of the University's academic programme.

The Secretary-General concluded that the University could serve as a useful tool to support the peace and security objectives of the United Nations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 October [meeting 29], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/2 [draft: A/56/L.4 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 31].

University for Peace

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 54/29 of 18 November 1999, in which it recalled that, in its resolution 34/111 of 14

December 1979, it had approved the idea of establishing the University for Peace as a specialized international centre for postgraduate studies, research and the dissemination of knowledge specifically aimed at training and education for peace and its universal promotion within the United Nations system,

Recalling also that in its resolution 35/55 of 5 December 1980 it approved the establishment of the University for Peace in conformity with the International Agreement for the Establishment of the University for Peace,

Recalling further its resolutions 45/8 of 24 October 1990, 46/11 of 24 October 1991 and 48/9 of 25 October 1993,

Recalling that in its resolution 46/11 it decided to include in the agenda of its forty-eighth session and biennially thereafter an item entitled "University for Peace",

Recalling also its resolution 50/41 of 8 December 1995, in which it decided to request the Secretary-General to consider ways of strengthening cooperation between the United Nations and the University for Peace and to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session,

Recalling further its adoption on 13 September 1999 of the Declaration and Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace,

Noting that in 1991 the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the United Nations Development Programme, established a Trust Fund for Peace consisting of voluntary contributions in order to provide the University with the means necessary to extend its sphere of activity to the whole world, taking full advantage of its potential capacity for education, research and support of the United Nations and to carry out its mandate of promoting peace in the world,

Noting with appreciation that the Government of Uruguay, by agreement with the University for Peace, established in 1997 a World Centre for Research and Information on Peace as regional subheadquarters of the University for South America,

Noting also with appreciation the vigorous actions taken by the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and with the encouragement and support of the Government of Costa Rica, to revitalize the University,

Noting that the University has placed special emphasis on the area of conflict prevention, peace-keeping, peace-building and peaceful settlement of disputes, and that it has launched programmes in the areas of democratic consensus-building and training of academic experts in the techniques of peaceful settlement of conflicts, which is highly relevant to the promotion of universal peace,

Noting also that the University has launched a broad programme for building a culture of peace in Central America and the Caribbean in the context of the efforts being made by the United Nations and by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for the development and promotion of a culture of peace,

Noting with appreciation that the University organized a symposium in celebration of the International Year of Older Persons, 1999, at which it emphasized the valuable contribution that older persons can make to the promotion of peace, solidarity, tolerance and the culture of peace,

Recognizing the important and varied activities carried out by the University during the period 1999-2000, within its financial limitations and with the valuable assistance and contributions of Governments, foundations and non-governmental organizations,

Considering the importance of promoting education for peace that fosters respect for the values inherent in peace and universal coexistence among persons, including respect for the life, dignity and integrity of human beings, as well as friendship and solidarity among peoples irrespective of their nationality, race, sex, religion or culture,

Considering that, by its resolution 52/15 of 20 November 1997, the General Assembly proclaimed the year 2000 as the International Year for the Culture of Peace and that it should be ushered in with One Day in Peace, 1 January 2000,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to resolution 54/29 on ways of strengthening cooperation between the United Nations and the University for Peace;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to consider using the services of the University in his conflict-resolution and peace-building efforts and in the promotion of the Declaration and Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace;

3. Invites Member States, intergovernmental bodies, non-governmental organizations and interested individuals to contribute directly to the Trust Fund for Peace or to the budget of the University;

4. Invites Member States to accede to the International Agreement for the Establishment of the University for Peace, thereby demonstrating their support for an educational institution devoted to the promotion of a universal culture of peace;

5. Invites Member States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and all the peoples of the world to celebrate One Day in Peace, 1 January 2002, and every year thereafter;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-eighth session the item entitled "University for Peace".

Education for all

UN Literacy Decade

By a June note [A/56/114-E/2001/93 & Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the UNESCO Director-General containing the draft proposal and plan for a United Nations literacy decade, as envisaged by the Assembly in resolution 54/122 [YUN 1999, p. 1073]. The report noted that UNESCO estimates indicated that, if current trends continued, one in six adults (830 million people) would still be illiterate in 2010. There was, therefore, an urgent need for a major new worldwide initiative that focused on literacy as an integral component of the global commitment to Education for All.

The proposed decade would give greater thrust to achieving international development targets and give priority to making opportunities available for the poorest and most marginalized. The decade's outcomes would include a better understanding of the structure of illiteracy; a viable policy-making framework, with regional and international support for national initiatives; national prioritization of population groups; increased capacity in designing strategies; improved quality of teacher training; the promotion of functional literacy skills in order to reduce poverty; and the use of information technologies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/56/572], adopted resolution 56/116 without vote [agenda item 108].

United Nations Literacy Decade: education for all

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Convention on the Rights of the Child the right of every individual to education is recognized as inalienable,

Recalling also its resolutions 42/104 of 7 December 1987, by which it proclaimed 1990 as International Literacy Year, and 54/122 of 17 December 1999, in which it requested the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and Member States and with other relevant organizations and bodies, to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session a proposal for a United Nations literacy decade, with a draft plan of action and possible time frame for such a decade, on the basis of the outcome of the World Education Forum and the special session of the General Assembly for the five-year review of the World Summit for Social Development,

Reaffirming its resolution 49/184 of 23 December 1994, by which it proclaimed the ten-year period beginning on 1 January 1995 the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education and appealed to all Governments to intensify their efforts to eradicate illiteracy and to direct education towards the full development of the human personality and to the strengthening of respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2001/29 of 20 April 2001 on the right to education,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration of 8 September 2000 in which Member States resolved to ensure that, by the year 2015, children everywhere, boys and girls alike, would be able to complete a full course of primary schooling and that girls and boys would have equal access to all levels of education, which requires a renewed commitment to promote literacy for all,

Recalling also the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development and the outcome document of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly entitled "World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world",

Convinced that literacy is crucial to the acquisition, by every child, youth and adult, of essential life skills that enable them to address the challenges they can face in life, and represents an essential step in basic education, which is an indispensable means for effective participation in the societies and economies of the twenty-first century,

Affirming that the realization of the right to education, especially for girls, contributes to the eradication of poverty,

Acknowledging the activities undertaken at the national and regional levels for the Education for All 2000 assessment of progress towards achieving the goals of education for all, and stressing further the need to redouble efforts in order to meet the basic needs of people of all age groups, in particular girls and women,

Recognizing that, despite the significant progress in basic education, especially the increase in primary school enrolment coupled with a growing emphasis on the quality of education, major problems, both emerging and continuing, still persist, which require even more forceful and concerted action at the national and international levels so as to achieve the goal of education for all,

Deeply concerned about the persistence of the gender gap in education, which is reflected by the fact that nearly two thirds of the world's adult illiterates are women,

Urging Member States, in close partnership with international organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations, to promote the right to education for all and to create conditions for all for learning throughout life,

1. Takes note of the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization entitled "Draft proposal and plan for a United Nations literacy decade";

2. Proclaims the ten-year period beginning on 1 January 2003 the United Nations Literacy Decade;

3. Reaffirms the Dakar Framework for Action adopted at the World Education Forum, in which commitments were made to achieve a 50 per cent improvement in levels of adult literacy by 2015 and to improve the quality of education;

4. Appeals to all Governments to redouble their efforts to achieve their own goals of education for all by developing national plans in accordance with the Dakar Framework for Action, setting firm targets and timetables, including gender-specific education targets and programmes, to eliminate gender disparities at all levels of education, to combat the illiteracy of women and girls and to ensure that girls and women have full and equal access to education, and by working in active partnership with communities, associations, the media and development agencies to reach those targets;

5. Also appeals to all Governments to reinforce political will and develop more inclusive policy-making environments and devise innovative strategies for reaching the poorest and most marginalized groups and for seeking alternative formal and non-formal approaches to learning with a view to achieving the goals of the Decade;

6. Urges all Governments to take the lead in the coordination of the Decade activities at the national level, bringing all relevant national actors together in sustained dialogue on policy formulation, implementation and evaluation of literacy efforts;

7. Reaffirms that literacy for all is at the heart of basic education for all and that creating literate environments and societies is essential for achieving the goals of eradicating poverty, reducing child mortality, curbing population growth, achieving gender equality and ensuring sustainable development, peace and democracy;

8. Appeals to all Governments and to economic and financial organizations and institutions, both national and international, to lend greater financial and material support to the efforts to increase literacy and achieve the goals of education for all and those of the Decade through, inter alia, the 20/20 initiative, as appropriate;

9. Invites Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system as well as relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to intensify further their efforts to implement effectively the World Declaration on Education for All, the Dakar Framework for Action and the relevant commitments and recommendations to promote literacy made at recent major United Nations conferences and at their five-year reviews with a view to better coordinating their activities and increasing their contribution to development within the framework of the Decade in a manner that is complementary to and coordinated with the ongoing education for all process;

10. Decides that the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization should take a coordinating role in stimulating and catalysing the activities at the international level within the framework of the Decade;

11. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to seek and take into account comments and proposals from Governments and the relevant international organizations on the draft plan for the Decade in order to develop and finalize a well targeted and action-oriented plan of action to be submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session a question entitled "United Nations Literacy Decade".

Chapter X

Women

During 2001, United Nations efforts to advance the status of women and ensure their rights continued to be guided by the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, adopted at the Fourth (1995) World Conference on Women. That guidance was augmented by the political declaration and further action and initiatives adopted in 2000 at the General Assembly's twenty-third special session to appraise and assess implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action (Beijing+5).

The Commission on the Status of Women, the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly considered follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and Beijing+5. In a December resolution, the Assembly called on Governments, the UN system and civil society, including non-governmental organizations (NGOs), to take action to achieve full and effective implementation of the outcomes of the Beijing Conference and the special session.

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its forty-fifth session in March and May, recommended to the Council for adoption agreed conclusions on its two thematic issues: women, the girl child and HIV/AIDS; and gender and all forms of discrimination, in particular racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance. The Council endorsed the agreed conclusions in July. Also on the Commission's recommendation, the Council adopted resolutions on the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women; discrimination against women and girls in Afghanistan; and mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the UN system. It also adopted a multi-year programme of work for the Commission for 2002-2006. The Commission adopted and brought to the Council's attention resolutions on the release of women and children taken hostage, including those imprisoned during armed conflict, and the 2002-2005 system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women.

The United Nations Development Fund for Women continued to focus on women's economic and political empowerment and to advocate for gender equality. In December, the Assembly urged Member States, NGOs and the private sector to continue to contribute to the Fund. The Assembly also adopted resolutions on the situation of older women; traditional and customary practices affecting the health of women and girls; women in development; and violence against migrant women, among others.

The International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, which announced the completion of phases I and II of the Gender Awareness Information and Networking System, and the initiation of phase III, continued to suffer from financial insecurity throughout the year. In December, the Assembly decided to establish a working group to consider the Institute's future operations.

Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and Beijing+5

During 2001, the Commission on the Status of Women, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly considered follow-up to the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women, particularly the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170], and the political declaration and further actions and initiatives to implement the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, adopted at the twenty-third special session of the Assembly (Beijing+5) by resolution S/23-2 [YUN 2000, p. 1084]. The political declaration had reaffirmed the commitment of Governments to the goals and objectives of the Fourth World Conference and to implementation of the 12 critical areas of concern set forth in the Platform for Action: women and poverty; education and training of women; women and health; violence against women; women and armed conflict; women and the economy; women in power and decision-making; institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women; human rights and women; women and the media; women and the environment; and the girl child.

Commission on the Status of Women. At its forty-fifth session (New York, 6-17 March and 9-11 May), the Commission on the Status of Women had before it the first annual report of the Secretary-General on follow-up to and implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [E/CN.6/2001/2], submitted in response to Assembly resolution 55/71 [YUN 2000, p. 1107]. The report emphasized the Secretariat's efforts in support of gender mainstreaming and follow-up activities, including those undertaken by NGOs. It also provided information, in accordance with specific mandates, on the situation of Palestinian women (see p. 1067) and on women and children taken hostage (see p. 1060). An addendum [E/CN.6/2001/2/Add.1] described the situation of women and girls in Afghanistan (see p. 1065).

Economic and Social Council. In a May report to the Economic and Social Council [E/2001/78], the Secretary-General discussed action taken by the Commission on the Status of Women, other functional commissions of the Council and the UN regional commissions towards the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly. The report aimed to assist the Council in its coordination function.

On 26 July, the Council, by decision 2001/317, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

General Assembly. In response to General Assembly resolution 55/71, the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/56/319] that provided updated information on follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and Beijing+5 by intergovernmental bodies, the Economic and Social Council in particular, the UN system and NGOs.

The Secretary-General identified several resolutions adopted by the Council at its 2001 substantive session that addressed the situation of women. He drew particular attention to the fact that ministers at the Council's high-level segment on UN efforts to support the efforts of African countries to achieve sustainable development (see p. 847) had recognized the need to promote the role of women in social and economic development, including by ensuring their participation in the political and economic life of African countries.

In an addendum [A/56/319/Add.1], the Secretary-General described the full range of tasks of the Division for the Advancement of Women, including those that arose from the implementation of the outcome of Beijing+5, the greater acceptance of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, and the entry into force of the Optional Protocol to the Convention (see p. 1075).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/56/577], adopted resolution 56/132 without vote [agenda item 113].

Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/203 of 22 December 1995, 51/69 of 12 December 1996, 52/100 of 12 December 1997, 53/120 of 9 December 1998, 54/141 of 17 December 1999 and 55/71 of 4 December 2000,

Welcoming the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century", and stressing the importance of the outcome of the special session, which has assessed the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, identified obstacles and challenges thereto and proposed actions and initiatives to overcome them and achieve full and accelerated implementation,

Deeply convinced that the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session are important contributions to the advancement of women worldwide in the achievement of gender equality and must be translated into effective action by all States, the United Nations system and other organizations concerned, as well as by non-governmental organizations,

Stressing the importance of strong, sustained political will and commitment at the national, regional and international levels in order to achieve full and accelerated implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session,

Recognizing that the responsibility for the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session rests primarily at the national level and that strengthened efforts are necessary in this respect, and reiterating that enhanced international cooperation is essential for the effective implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session,

Welcoming the increased integration of a gender perspective in the work of the United Nations, in particular in the outcomes of major United Nations conferences, special sessions, summit conferences and their follow-up processes,

Welcoming also the integration of a gender perspective in the outcome of the twenty-sixth special session of the General Assembly, on the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS), held in New York from 25 to 27 June 2001, in particular the emphasis on the gender dimensions of the epidemic, and the recognition that gender equality and the empowerment of women are fundamental elements in the reduction of the vulnerability of women and girls, who are disproportionately affected by HIV/AIDS,

Welcoming further the integration of a gender perspective in the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, held at Durban, South Africa, from 31 August to 8 September 2001, which recognized, inter alia, the multiple forms of discrimination faced by women and the need to apply a gender perspective in measures to eradicate racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Emphasizing the importance of the decision by the Economic and Social Council, in its resolution 2001/41 of 26 July 2001, to devote the coordination segment of one of its substantive sessions, before 2005, to the review and appraisal of the system-wide implementation of agreed conclusions 1997/2 on mainstreaming the gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system, adopted by the Council on 18 July 1997,

Welcoming the ministerial declaration on the role of the United Nations system in support of the efforts of African countries to achieve sustainable development, adopted by the Economic and Social Council on 18 July 2001 at the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2001, in which the Council recognized, inter alia, the need to promote the role of women in social and economic development, including by assuring their participation in political and economic life,

Reaffirming the primary and essential role of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in promoting the advancement of women and gender equality, while noting the importance of the open debate entitled "Women and peace and security", held in the Security Council on 24 October 2000, and its outcome,

Welcoming the adoption of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocols thereto,

1. Reaffirms the goals, objectives and commitments contained in the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and also in the political declaration and further actions and initiatives to implement the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-third special session;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the follow-up to and progress made in the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly;

3. Calls upon Governments, the relevant entities of the United Nations system within their respective mandates and all other relevant actors of civil society, including non-governmental organizations, to take effective action to achieve full and effective implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session, as elaborated in the above-mentioned documents;

4. Calls upon Governments, in collaboration with relevant actors of civil society, including non-governmental organizations, to continue to facilitate the translation and dissemination of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session as broadly and as accessibly as possible;

5. Strongly encourages Governments to continue to support the role and contribution of civil society, in particular non-governmental organizations and women's organizations, in the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session;

6. Welcomes the integration of a gender perspective in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and emphasizes the importance of mainstreaming a gender perspective in the implementation of and follow-up to the Millennium Declaration and in future reports on this subject;

7. Reaffirms its decision that the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on the Status of Women, in accordance with their respective mandates and with General Assembly resolution 48/162 of 20 December 1993 and other relevant resolutions, constitute a three-tiered intergovernmental mechanism that plays the primary role in the overall policy-making and follow-up and in coordinating the implementation and monitoring of the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session;

8. Also reaffirms that the follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and the twenty-third special session will be undertaken within the framework of an integrated and coordinated follow-up to major international conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields, and in this regard takes note of Economic and Social Council resolution 2001/21 of 26 July 2001 on integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits;

9. Requests the Economic and Social Council to intensify further its efforts to ensure that gender mainstreaming is an integral part of all United Nations activities, building upon agreed conclusions 1997/2 adopted by the Council on 18 July 1997;

10. Invites the Council to continue to further policy coordination and inter-agency cooperation towards the achievement of the objectives of the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session, including by considering the dedication of specific segments of the Council to the advancement of women and implementation of the above-mentioned documents and by mainstreaming a gender perspective in all its work;

11. Encourages the Council to request the regional commissions, within their respective mandates and resources, to intensify efforts to build up a database, to be updated regularly, in which all programmes and projects carried out in their respective regions by agencies or organizations of the United Nations system are listed, and to facilitate their dissemination, as well as the evaluation of their impact on the empowerment of women through the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action;

12. Reaffirms that the Commission on the Status of Women has a central role in assisting the Council in monitoring, assessing progress made in and accelerating, within the United Nations system, the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session, and in advising the Council thereon, encourages the Commission, in this regard, further to enhance its working methods in order to improve the effectiveness of its work and its catalytic role in ensuring the integration of a gender perspective in United Nations activities, taking into consideration the adoption by the Council of the multi-year programme of work of the Commission for 2002-2006, and calls on the Commission and all involved to implement the programme of work;

13. Recognizes the importance attached to the regional and subregional monitoring of the global and regional platforms for action and of the implementation of the outcome of the twenty-third special session by regional commissions and other regional or sub-regional structures, within their mandates, in consultation with Governments, and calls for the promotion of further cooperation in that respect among Governments and, where appropriate, national machineries of the same region;

14. Reaffirms that, in order to implement the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session, adequate mobilization of resources at the national and international levels, as well as new and additional resources for the developing countries, in particular those in Africa and the least developed countries, from all available funding mechanisms, including multilateral, bilateral and private sources, will also be required;

15. Recognizes that the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session in the countries with economies in transition requires continued national efforts and international cooperation and assistance;

16. Reaffirms that, in order to implement the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session, a reformulation of policies and reallocation of resources may be needed, but that some policy changes may not necessarily have financial implications;

17. Recognizes that the creation of an enabling environment at the national and international levels, including through the full participation of women at all levels of decision-making, is necessary to ensure the full participation of women in economic activities, and calls upon States to remove obstacles to the full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session;

18. Reaffirms that, in order to ensure the effective implementation of the strategic objectives of the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session, the United Nations system should promote an active and visible policy of mainstreaming a gender perspective, including through the work of the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women and the maintenance of gender units and focal points;

19. Also reaffirms that United Nations bodies that focus on gender issues, such as the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Development Fund for Women and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, have an important role to play in the implementation of the objectives of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session;

20. Welcomes the convening, in 2002, of the International Conference on Financing for Development, to be held at Monterrey, Mexico, the World Summit on Sustainable Development, to be held at Johannesburg, South Africa, the Second World Assembly on Ageing, to be held at Madrid, and the special session of the General Assembly on children, and urges Governments to integrate a gender perspective in the respective processes and outcome documents;

21. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts made by all relevant organizations of the United Nations system in promoting the role of women in conflict prevention and resolution;

22. Recognizes the important role of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peace-building, the importance of their equal participation and full involvement in all efforts for the maintenance and promotion of peace and security and the need to increase their role in decision-making with regard to conflict prevention and resolution, and urges the United Nations system and Governments to make further efforts in this regard and to take steps to ensure and support the full participation of women at all levels of decision-making and implementation in development activities and peace processes, including conflict prevention and resolution, post-conflict reconstruction, peacemaking, peacekeeping and peace-building, as well as through the integration of a gender perspective into those United Nations processes;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that all United Nations personnel and officials at Headquarters and in the field, especially in field operations, receive training so that they mainstream a gender perspective in their work, including gender impact analysis, and to ensure appropriate follow-up to such training;

24. Requests all bodies that deal with programme and budgetary matters, including the Committee for Programme and Coordination, to ensure that all programmes, medium-term plans and programme budgets visibly mainstream a gender perspective;

25. Invites States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women to include information on measures taken to implement the outcome of the twenty-third special session, as well as the Beijing Platform for Action, in their reports to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women under article 18 of the Convention;

26. Welcomes the entry into force of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, and urges States parties to the Convention that have not yet done so to consider signing, ratifying or acceding to the Optional Protocol;

27. Urges Member States to consider signing, ratifying or acceding to the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocols thereto, in particular the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children;

28. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to disseminate the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session as widely as possible in all the official languages of the United Nations;

29. Also requests the Secretary-General to report annually to the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on the Status of Women on follow-up to and progress in the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session, with an assessment of progress made in mainstreaming a gender perspective within the United Nations system, including by providing information on key achievements, lessons learned and best practices, and to recommend further measures and strategies for future action within the United Nations system;

30. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the item entitled "Implementation of the outcome of the Fourth World Conference on Women and of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, entitled 'Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century'".

Critical areas of concern

Violence against women

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission on the Status of Women and the Commission on Human Rights a January report of the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) on activities in 2000 to eliminate violence against women [E/CN.4/2001/126-E/CN.6/2001/6]. UNIFEM continued to build on advocacy campaigns established with UN partners in various regions. Beijing+5 [YUN 2000, p. 1082] gave strong reaffirmation to activities within the international community addressing gender-based violence and added specific forms of violence against women to the international agenda, namely so-called honour killings and dowry-related deaths.

Since it began operations in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1193], the Trust Fund in Support of Action to Eliminate Violence against Women had received over $5.4 million in contributions and funded 105 projects around the world. Grants of $1 million were allocated to 17 projects in 2000; requests, however, totalled more than $12.5 million. Projects in 2000 addressed diverse forms of violence against women, including domestic violence, trafficking and sexual exploitation, honour killings, sexual harassment and violence against girls and women with disabilities. Strategies applied in executing the projects ranged from public-awareness raising and education to advocacy, legal literacy, training for professionals, action-oriented research and service provision, and training and mobilization of women's groups.

To encourage projects with increased potential, the Fund implemented guidelines to raise grants from $50,000 to $150,000 for joint proposals; under that framework, six grants were awarded in 2000. With support from a United Nations Foundation grant, a call for project proposals focusing on media and documentation was issued. It generated over 250 proposals, from which four to eight projects would be selected.

The Trust Fund learning component, supported by the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation, focused on reviewing and analysing lessons learned from Trust Fund initiatives.

Field visits to five countries highlighted effective strategies for changing attitudes, reversing stereotypes and eliminating harmful practices.

(For details of action on violence against women taken by the Commission on Human Rights, see p. 677.)

Women migrant workers

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/138 [YUN 1999, p. 1087], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/56/329], in which he summarized information received from 15 Member States, UN bodies, mechanisms and organizations, intergovernmental entities and NGOs to address the issue of violence against women migrant workers. The Secretary-General stated that data on the numbers of women migrant workers remained difficult to obtain and there was a lack of clarity about the scale of abuse and discrimination against them. Comprehensive information was needed on bilateral labour agreements between countries of origin and of destination and on labour and immigration legislation, as well as on the impact of such provisions, especially with respect to the enjoyment by women of the full range of human rights (see also p. 618).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/56/576], adopted resolution 56/131 without vote [agenda item 112].

Violence against women migrant workers

The General Assembly,

Recalling all of its previous resolutions on violence against women migrant workers and those adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women, the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, and the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women,

Reaffirming the outcome of the World Conference on Human Rights, the International Conference on Population and Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women and the World Summit for Social Development and their five-year reviews, specifically as the results pertain to women migrant workers,

Noting the various activities initiated by entities in the United Nations system, such as the expert group meeting organized by the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women and the International Organization for Migration, held at Geneva in August 1999, the international workshop on best practices concerning migrant workers and their families initiated by the International Organization for Migration, held at Santiago in June 2000, and the seminar on women immigrants organized by the United Nations Development Fund for Women and the Argentine National Institute against Discrimination, Xenophobia and Racism, held at Buenos Aires in July 2001, as well as other activities that continue to assess and alleviate the plight of women migrant workers,

Emphasizing the need for objective, comprehensive, broad-based information, possibly including a database for research and analysis, and a wide exchange of experience and lessons learned by individual Member States and civil society in the formulation of policies and concrete strategies to address the problem of violence against women migrant workers,

Encouraging the continuing participation of civil society in developing and implementing appropriate measures to support innovative partnerships among public agencies, non-governmental organizations and other members of civil society for combating violence against women migrant workers,

Noting the large numbers of women from developing countries and some countries with economies in transition who continue to venture forth to more affluent countries in search of a living for themselves and their families as a consequence of poverty, unemployment and other socio-economic conditions, and acknowledging the duty of the countries of origin to try to create conditions that provide employment and economic security for their citizens,

Expressing deep concern at the continuing reports of grave abuses and acts of violence committed against women migrant workers,

Realizing that the movement of a significant number of women migrant workers may be facilitated and made possible by means of fraudulent or irregular documentation and sham marriages with the object of migration, that this may be facilitated through, among others, the Internet, and that these women migrant workers are more vulnerable to abuse and exploitation,

Acknowledging the economic benefits that accrue to both the country of origin and the country of destination from the employment of women migrant workers,

Recognizing the importance of joint and collaborative approaches and strategies at the bilateral, regional, interregional and international levels in protecting and promoting the rights and welfare of women migrant workers,

Recognizing also the importance of exploring the link between migration and trafficking,

Encouraged by some measures adopted by some countries of destination to alleviate the plight of women migrant workers residing in their areas of jurisdiction,

Underlining the important role of relevant United Nations treaty bodies in monitoring the implementation of human rights conventions and the relevant special procedures, within their respective mandates, in addressing the problem of violence against women migrant workers and in protecting and promoting their rights and welfare,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Also takes note of the reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the human rights of migrants and of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences, with regard to violence against women migrant workers, and encourages them to continue to address the issue of violence against women migrant workers and their human rights, in particular the problem of gender-based violence and of discrimination, and trafficking in women;

3. Requests all Governments to continue to cooperate fully with both Special Rapporteurs in the performance of their tasks and mandated duties and to furnish all information requested, including by reacting promptly to the urgent appeals of the Special Rapporteurs;

4. Encourages Governments, in particular those of the countries of origin and destination, to make available to the Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants information on violence against women migrant workers, with a view to requesting the Special Rapporteur to recommend concrete measures and actions to address the problem;

5. Also encourages Governments to give serious consideration to inviting the Special Rapporteur to visit their countries so as to enable her to fulfil the mandate effectively;

6. Urges concerned Governments, in particular those of the countries of origin and destination, to strengthen further their national efforts to protect and promote the rights and welfare of women migrant workers, including through sustained bilateral, regional, interregional and international cooperation, by developing strategies and joint action and taking into account the innovative approaches and experiences of individual Member States, and to establish and maintain continuing dialogues to facilitate the exchange of information;

7. Also urges concerned Governments, in particular those of the countries of origin and destination, to support and allocate appropriate resources for programmes aimed at strengthening preventive action, in particular information for target groups, education and campaigns to increase public awareness of this issue at the national and grass-roots levels, in cooperation with non-governmental organizations;

8. Notes with appreciation the adoption by Member States, including countries of origin, transit and destination, of measures to inform women migrant workers of their rights and the benefits to which they are entitled, and encourages other Member States to adopt appropriate measures in this regard;

9. Calls upon concerned Governments, in particular those of the countries of origin and destination, if they have not done so, to put in place penal and criminal sanctions to punish perpetrators of violence against women migrant workers and, to the extent possible, to provide, and to encourage non-governmental organizations to provide, victims of violence with the full range of immediate assistance and protection, such as counselling, legal and consular assistance, temporary shelter and other measures that will allow them to be present during the judicial process, as well as to establish reintegration and rehabilitation schemes for returning women migrant workers to their countries of origin;

10. Encourages concerned Governments, in particular those of the countries of origin and destination, to support and, if they have not done so, to formulate and implement training programmes for their law enforcers, prosecutors and service providers with a view to instilling among those public sector workers the necessary skills and attitude to ensure the delivery of proper and professional interventions for women migrant workers who are subjected to abuse and violence;

11. Also encourages concerned Governments, in particular those of the countries of origin and destination, to adopt measures or strengthen existing ones to regulate the recruitment and deployment of women migrant workers, and to consider the adoption of appropriate legal measures against intermediaries who deliberately encourage the clandestine movement of workers and who exploit women migrant workers;

12. Invites Governments to identify the causes of undocumented migration and its economic, social and demographic impact, as well as its implications for the formulation and application of social, economic and migration policies, including those relating to women migrant workers;

13. Encourages concerned Governments, in particular those of the countries of origin, transit and destination, to avail themselves of the expertise of the United Nations, including the Statistics Division of the Secretariat and other relevant bodies, such as the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, to develop appropriate national data-collection methodologies that will generate comparable data on violence against women migrant workers as bases for research and analyses of the subject;

14. Encourages Member States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to relevant International Labour Organization conventions and to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, as well as the Slavery Convention of 1926;

15. Welcomes the adoption by the General Assembly of the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children and the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, and encourages Governments to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Protocols;

16. Encourages the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women to consider developing a general recommendation on the situation of women migrant workers;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session a report on the problem of violence against women migrant workers and on the implementation of the present resolution, taking into account updated information from the organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the International Labour Organization, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Development Fund for Women and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, as well as the International Organization for Migration and other relevant sources, including non-governmental organizations.

Women and children in armed conflict

Women and children taken hostage

In response to a 2000 Commission on the Status of Women request [YUN 2000, p. 1112], the Secretary-General, in a January report on follow-up to and implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [E/CN.6/2001/2], summarized information received from 17 Member States and 12 entities of the UN system on the release of women and children taken hostage, including those imprisoned during armed conflict.

By a 17 March resolution [E/2001/27 (res. 45/1)], the Commission condemned violent acts in contravention of international humanitarian law against civilian women and children in areas of armed conflict, and called for the immediate release of such women and children taken hostage. It strongly urged parties to armed conflicts to respect the norms of international humanitarian law and to take measures to protect those women and children and to secure their immediate release. All parties were urged to provide access to humanitarian assistance for those women and children and the Secretary-General and all relevant international organizations were asked to facilitate their release. The Secretary-General was also asked to prepare, taking into account information provided by States and relevant international organizations, a report on the subject for the Commission's 2002 session.

Communication. On 4 December [A/56/680-S/2001/1155], the Democratic Republic of the Congo transmitted to the Secretary-General the report of the subregional conference on the protection of women and children in armed conflict in Central Africa (Kinshasa, 14-16 November). Annexed to the report was a plan of action, which outlined measures to be taken at the national, subregional and international levels in order to find lasting solutions for the suffering of women and children in armed conflict in Central Africa.

Women, peace and security

On 8 March—the United Nations Day for Women's Rights and International Peace—the Security Council held informal consultations on women, peace and security (see p. 54).

On 31 October, the Council President made statement S/PRST/2001/31, in which members reaffirmed their commitment to the implementation of resolution 1325(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 1113] and support for increasing the role of women in decision-making with regard to conflict prevention and resolution (see p. 54).

Communication. On 27 November [A/C.3/56/9], Austria transmitted to the Secretary-General a document that emanated from a meeting of 15 women Foreign Ministers on the topic "Women and human security" (New York, 12 November).

The girl child

On 19 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/56/579], adopted resolution 56/139 without vote [agenda item 115].

The girl child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/78 of 4 December 2000 and all relevant resolutions, including the agreed conclusions of the Commission on the Status of Women, in particular those relevant to the girl child,

Recalling also all relevant United Nations conferences and the Declaration and Agenda for Action adopted by the World Congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, held at Stockholm from 27 to 31 August 1996, as well as the outcome documents of the recent five-year reviews of the implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development,

Deeply concerned about discrimination against the girl child and the violation of the rights of the girl child, which often result in less access for girls to education, nutrition and physical and mental health care and in girls enjoying fewer of the rights, opportunities and benefits of childhood and adolescence than boys and often being subjected to various forms of cultural, social, sexual and economic exploitation and to violence and harmful practices, such as female infanticide, incest, early marriage, prenatal sex selection and female genital mutilation,

Recognizing the need to achieve gender equality so as to ensure a just and equitable world for girls,

Deeply concerned that, in situations of poverty, war and armed conflict, girl children are among the victims most affected and that thus their potential for full development is limited,

Concerned that the girl child has furthermore become a victim of sexually transmitted diseases and the human immunodeficiency virus, which affect the quality of her life and leave her open to further discrimination,

Reaffirming the equal rights of women and men as enshrined, inter alia, in the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Reaffirming also the political declaration and further actions and initiatives to implement the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-third special session entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century",

Reaffirming further the Dakar Framework for Action adopted at the World Education Forum,

Reaffirming the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth special session,

1. Stresses the need for full and urgent implementation of the rights of the girl child as guaranteed to her under all human rights instruments, including the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, as well as the need for universal ratification of those instruments;

2. Urges States to consider signing, ratifying or acceding to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;

3. Welcomes the adoption of the Optional Protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict and on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, and invites States to consider signing and ratifying the Optional Protocols as a matter of priority with a view to their entry into force as soon as possible;

4. Welcomes also the United Nations Girls' Education Initiative launched by the Secretary-General at the World Education Forum;

5. Urges all Governments and the United Nations system to strengthen efforts bilaterally and with international organizations and private sector donors in order to achieve the goals of the World Education Forum, in particular that of eliminating gender disparities in primary and secondary education by 2005, and to implement the United Nations Girls' Education Initiative as a means of reaching this goal, and reaffirms the commitment contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

6. Calls upon all States to take measures to address the obstacles that continue to affect the achievement of the goals set forth in the Beijing Platform for Action, as contained in paragraph 33 of the further actions and initiatives to implement the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, where appropriate, including the strengthening of national mechanisms to implement policies and programmes for the girl child and, in some cases, to enhance coordination among responsible institutions for the realization of the human rights of girls, as indicated in the further actions and initiatives;

7. Urges all States to take all necessary measures and to institute legal reforms to ensure the full and equal enjoyment by the girl child of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, to take effective action against violations of those rights and freedoms and to base programmes and policies for the girl child on the rights of the child;

8. Urges States to enact and enforce strictly laws to ensure that marriage is entered into only with the free and full consent of the intending spouses, to enact and enforce strictly laws concerning the minimum legal age of consent and the minimum age for marriage and to raise the minimum age for marriage where necessary;

9. Urges all States to fulfil their obligations under the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, as well as the commitment to implement the Beijing Platform for Action;

10. Also urges all States to enact and enforce legislation to protect girls from all forms of violence, including female infanticide and prenatal sex selection, female genital mutilation, rape, domestic violence, incest, sexual abuse, sexual exploitation, child prostitution and child pornography, and to develop age-appropriate safe and confidential programmes and medical, social and psychological support services to assist girls who are subjected to violence;

11. Calls upon all States and international and non-governmental organizations, individually and collectively, to implement further the Beijing Platform for Action, in particular the strategic objectives relating to the girl child and including the further actions and initiatives to implement the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action;

12. Urges States to take special measures for the protection of war-affected girls and in particular to protect them from sexually transmitted diseases, such as the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS), and gender-based violence, including rape and sexual abuse, torture, sexual exploitation, abduction and forced labour, paying special attention to refugee and displaced girls, and to take into account the special needs of the war-affected girl child in the delivery of humanitarian assistance and disarmament, demobilization and reintegration processes;

13. Urges all States and the international community to respect, protect and promote the rights of the child, taking into account the particular vulnerabilities of the girl child in pre-conflict, conflict and post-conflict situations, and calls for special initiatives designed to address all of the rights and needs of war-affected girls;

14. Welcomes the holding of the International Conference on War-Affected Children at Winnipeg, Canada, from 10 to 17 September 2000, and takes note with appreciation of the Winnipeg Agenda for War-Affected Children;

15. Urges States to formulate comprehensive, multidisciplinary and coordinated national plans, programmes or strategies to eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls, which should be widely disseminated and should provide targets and time-tables for implementation, as well as effective domestic enforcement procedures through the establishment of monitoring mechanisms involving all parties concerned, including consultations with women's organizations, giving attention to the recommendations relating to the girl child of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences;

16. Calls upon Governments, civil society, including the media, and non-governmental organizations to promote human rights education and the full respect for and enjoyment of the human rights of the girl child, inter alia, through the translation, production and dissemination of age-appropriate information material on those rights to all sectors of society, in particular to children;

17. Requests the Secretary-General, as Chairman of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination, to ensure that all organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, individually and collectively, in particular the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Development Fund for Women, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Development Programme and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, take into account the rights and the particular needs of the girl child in the country programme of cooperation in accordance with the national priorities, including through the United Nations Development Assistance Framework;

18. Requests all human rights treaty bodies, special procedures and other human rights mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and its Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights to adopt regularly and systematically a gender perspective in the implementation of their mandates and to include in their reports information on the qualitative analysis of violations of the human rights of women and girls, and encourages the strengthening of cooperation and coordination in that regard;

19. Calls upon States and international and non-governmental organizations to mobilize all necessary resources, support and efforts to realize the goals, strategic objectives and actions set out in the Beijing Platform for Action and the further actions and initiatives to implement the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action;

20. Stresses the importance of a substantive assessment of the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action with a life-cycle perspective so as to identify gaps and obstacles in the implementation process and to develop further actions for the achievement of the goals of the Platform;

21. Welcomes the convening of the Second World Congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, at Yokohama, Japan, from 17 to 20 December 2001, and the regional consultative meetings for the preparation thereof, which aim to review the progress made in implementing the Declaration and Agenda for Action adopted by the first World Congress and to strengthen actions to eradicate commercial sexual exploitation of children, and invites Member States and observers to ensure their representation at the Second World Congress at a high political level;

22. Encourages the regional commissions and other regional organizations to carry out activities in support of the Second World Congress;

23. Stresses the importance of integrating a gender perspective and of considering the needs and rights of the girl child in the work of the special session of the General Assembly on children.

Women's health

Traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/133 [YUN 1999, p. 1091], the Secretary-General submitted an August report on traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls [A/56/316]. He summarized information received from 17 Member States concerning the formulation and revision of legislation and policy and awareness-raising programmes in order to protect women against such harmful traditional practices as female genital mutilation, early marriage and marriage by force or abduction. Information was also provided by NGOs and UN entities and mechanisms.

The Secretary-General stated that Member States had indicated that traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls, particularly female genital mutilation, continued to be addressed through the adoption of legal and policy measures, educational programmes and awareness-raising campaigns. However, concrete measures to eliminate the practices needed to be strengthened. The adoption and enforcement of legal measures prohibiting the practices and the development of comprehensive national plans and public information campaigns remained crucial. Education and training should be reinforced to include behavioural change approaches, reach women and men in all communities engaged in such practices, and address the underlying values that supported the practices. Those efforts should involve community and religious leaders, educators, medical practitioners, the media and those responsible for enforcing laws and implementing policies, such as the police and judicial personnel. The sensitization of, and alternative career training programmes for, traditional practitioners, as well as the pursuit of alternatives where harmful practices constituted a ritual ceremony or rite of passage, should be intensified.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/56/576], adopted resolution 56/128 without vote [agenda item 112].

Traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 54/133 of 17 December 1999 and its other relevant resolutions and decisions, and bearing in mind those of the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights and the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights,

Taking note of the reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights on traditional practices affecting the health of women and the girl child and of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences,

Reaffirming the obligation of all States to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms as stated in the Charter of the United Nations, and emphasizing the obligations contained in human rights instruments, in particular articles 5 and 12 of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, article 24 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and article 12 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Bearing in mind article 2 (a) of the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, and article 5, paragraph 5, of the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Recalling the provisions pertaining to traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls contained in the outcome of the World Conference on Human Rights, the International Conference on Population and Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women and the twenty-first, twenty-third and twenty-sixth special sessions of the General Assembly,

Recalling also general recommendation 14 concerning female circumcision adopted by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women at its ninth session, paragraphs 11, 20 and 24 (l) of general recommendation 19 concerning violence against women adopted by the Committee at its eleventh session, paragraphs 15 (d) and 18 of general recommendation 24 concerning article 12 of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women on women and health adopted by the Committee at its twentieth session, and taking note of paragraphs 21, 35 and 51 of general comment No. 14 (2000) concerning article 12 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights adopted by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights at its twenty-second session,

Reaffirming that harmful traditional or customary practices, including female genital mutilation, constitute a serious threat to the health of women and girls, and may have fatal consequences,

Expressing concern at the continuing large-scale existence of these practices,

Reaffirming that such harmful traditional or customary practices constitute a definite form of violence against women and girls and a serious violation of their human rights,

Emphasizing that the elimination of harmful traditional or customary practices will contribute to reducing the vulnerability of women and girls to the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) and other sexually transmitted infections,

Stressing that the elimination of such practices requires greater efforts and commitment from Governments, the international community and civil society, including non-governmental and community-based organizations, and that fundamental changes in societal attitudes are required,

Noting with appreciation the work done in the context of the Organization of African Unity to prepare a draft protocol to the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights on the rights of women in Africa,

Welcoming the call for the elimination of all harmful traditional practices which are detrimental to girls' and women's rights and health made by the Pan-African Forum on the Future of Children, held in Cairo from 28 to 31 May 2001,

1. Welcomes:

(a) The report of the Secretary-General, which provides encouraging examples of national and international developments;

(b) The efforts undertaken by United Nations bodies, programmes and organizations, including the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Population Fund, the World Health Organization, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Development Fund for Women and the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS, to address the issue of traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls, and encourages them to continue to coordinate their efforts;

(c) The work carried out by the Special Ambassador for the Elimination of Female Genital Mutilation of the United Nations Population Fund and her continuing contribution to the campaign to eliminate female genital mutilation;

(d) The work carried out by the Inter-African Committee on Traditional Practices Affecting the Health of Women and Children and other non-governmental and community organizations, including women's organizations, in raising awareness of the harmful effects of such practices, in particular of female genital mutilation;

(e) The fact that the elimination of harmful traditional or customary practices will be considered during the special session of the General Assembly on children;

2. Emphasizes the need for technical and financial assistance to those developing countries working to achieve the elimination of traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls from United Nations funds and programmes, international and regional financial institutions and bilateral and multilateral donors, as well as the need for assistance to non-governmental organizations and community-based groups active in this field from the international community;

3. Calls upon all States:

(a) To ratify or accede to, if they have not yet done so, the relevant human rights treaties, in particular the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child, to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and to respect and implement fully their obligations under any such treaties to which they are parties;

(b) To implement the international commitments made at relevant major United Nations conferences and special sessions and summit meetings of the General Assembly held since 1990 and their follow-up processes;

(c) To collect and disseminate basic data about the occurrence of traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls, including female genital mutilation;

(d) To develop, adopt and implement national legislation, policies, plans and programmes that prohibit traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls, including female genital mutilation, and to prosecute the perpetrators of such practices;

(e) To establish, if they have not done so, a concrete national mechanism for the implementation and monitoring of relevant legislation, law enforcement and national policies;

(f) To establish or strengthen support services to respond to the needs of victims by, inter alia, developing comprehensive and accessible sexual and reproductive health services and by providing training to health-care providers at all levels on the harmful health consequences of such practices;

(g) To address specifically in the training of health and other relevant personnel traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls, also addressing the increased vulnerability of women and girls to HIV/AIDS and other sexually transmitted infections due to such practices;

(h) To take all necessary measures to empower women and strengthen their economic independence and protect and promote the full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms in order to allow women and girls better to protect themselves from, inter alia, traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls;

(i) To intensify efforts to raise awareness of and to mobilize international and national public opinion concerning the harmful effects of traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls, including female genital mutilation, inter alia, by involving public opinion leaders, educators, religious leaders, chiefs, traditional leaders, medical practitioners, teachers, women's health and family planning organizations, social workers, childcare agencies, relevant non-governmental organizations, the arts and the media in awareness-raising campaigns, in order to achieve the total elimination of those practices;

(j) To address traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls in education curricula, as appropriate;

(k) To promote men's understanding of their roles and responsibilities with regard to promoting the elimination of harmful practices, such as female genital mutilation;

(l) To continue to take specific measures to increase the capacity of communities, including immigrant and refugee communities, in which female genital mutilation is practised, to engage in activities aimed at preventing and eliminating such practices;

(m) To explore, through consultations with communities and religious and cultural groups and their leaders, alternatives to harmful traditional or customary practices, in particular where those practices form part of a ritual ceremony or rite of passage, as well as through alternative training and education possibilities for traditional practitioners;

(n) To cooperate closely with the Special Rapporteur of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights on traditional practices affecting the health of women and the girl child, in particular by supplying all necessary information requested by her and by giving serious consideration to inviting her to visit their countries;

(o) To cooperate closely with relevant specialized agencies and United Nations funds and programmes, as well as with regional intergovernmental organizations, as appropriate, and relevant community and non-governmental organizations, including women's organizations, in a joint effort to eradicate traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls;

(p) To include in their reports to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, the Committee on the Rights of the Child and other relevant treaty bodies specific information on measures taken to eliminate traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls, including female genital mutilation, and to prosecute the perpetrators of such practices;

4. Invites:

(a) Relevant specialized agencies, United Nations bodies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to exchange information on the subject of the present resolution, and encourages the exchange of such information between non-governmental organizations active in this field and the bodies monitoring the implementation of relevant human rights treaties;

(b) The Commission on the Status of Women to address this subject at its forty-seventh session under the priority theme "Women's human rights and elimination of all forms of violence against women and girls as defined in the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome document of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly";

(c) Governments, organizations and individuals that are in a position to do so to contribute to the trust fund that supports the work of the Special Ambassador for the Elimination of Female Genital Mutilation of the United Nations Population Fund;

5. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue to make his report available to relevant meetings within the United Nations system;

(b) To report to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution, with a special focus on recent national and international developments, including examples of national best practices and international cooperation.

HIV/AIDS

One of the thematic issues for the 2001 session of the Commission on the Status of Women was women, the girl child and HIV/AIDS. On 8 March, the Commission held a panel discussion and a dialogue on the theme. On 11 May, the Commission adopted draft agreed conclusions on the thematic issue, which it recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption. The Council endorsed the agreed conclusions in resolution 2001/5 (see p. 1076).

Women in Afghanistan

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2000/9 [YUN 2000, p. 1120], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women a January report on the situation of women and girls in Afghanistan [E/CN.6/2001/2/Add.1]. Having described the continuing conflict in Afghanistan (see p. 255) and the deteriorating socio-economic conditions, particularly as a result of the drought, the collapsed health-care and education systems and a lack of governance, the Secretary-General characterized Afghanistan as nearing a humanitarian disaster (see p. 838). Women were particularly vulnerable due to their social status in Afghan society, which historically had observed conservative cultural norms and traditions and a strong division of gender roles. With the Taliban takeover of Kabul in 1996, gender discrimination became institutionalized through the issuance of edicts placing severe restrictions on women's freedom of movement, association and participation in public life. The Taliban's ban on employment of women not only violated women's human rights but also presented formidable obstacles to humanitarian efforts by the United Nations and the assistance community to improve the status of women and girls.

Along with mechanisms to link gender policy to concrete actions, the United Nations had set up a monitoring mechanism to oversee compliance, particularly to identify inconsistencies among gender policies of humanitarian organizations, and to implement those policies in operational fieldwork. The Secretary-General stated that the overall situation of women in Afghanistan remained unacceptable and required sustained attention from the international community. He called on the UN system and the international community to facilitate continued dialogue on human rights and gender issues with the Taliban. (See also p. 680.)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/2001/27], adopted resolution 2001/3 without vote [agenda item 14 (a)].

Discrimination against women and girls in Afghanistan

The Economic and Social Council,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the optional protocols thereto on the involvement of children in armed conflict and on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, the further actions and initiatives to implement the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-third special session, accepted humanitarian rules as set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and other instruments of human rights and international law,

Recalling that Afghanistan is party to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, and that it has signed the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have freely undertaken under the various international instruments,

Welcoming the substantive report of the Secretary-General to the Commission on the Status of Women on the situation of women and girls in Afghanistan, and the conclusions contained therein, including the need to monitor and evaluate the promotion and protection of the human rights of women and girls who reside in all areas of Afghanistan,

Noting the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, and deploring the "official, widespread and systematic violation of the human rights of women in Taliban-controlled areas" as found in the report,

Deploring the deteriorating economic, social and cultural conditions of women and girls in all areas of Afghanistan, in particular in areas under the control of the Taliban, as documented by the continued and substantiated reports of grave violations to the security of the person and integrity as well as the human rights of women and girls, including discrimination in terms of access to health care, to levels and types of education, to employment outside the home, to freedom of movement and to freedom of association,

Also deploring the July 2000 edict of the Taliban barring Afghan women from working in foreign organizations and non-governmental organizations, as well as the August 2000 statute on the activities of the United Nations in Afghanistan,

Welcoming the fourth report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, entitled "Interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan", in particular his special focus on violations of the human rights of women and girls, especially in territories under the control of the Taliban,

Deeply concerned about the detrimental impact of these harmful conditions on the well-being of Afghan women and the children in their care, and the detrimental effect of the restrictions to women's and girls' education and women's employment on the functions of Afghan society and the reconstruction and development of the country,

Expressing its appreciation to the international community for its support for, and solidarity with, the women and girls of Afghanistan, in particular the women of Afghanistan who protest against violations of their human rights, and encouraging women and men worldwide to continue efforts to draw attention to their situation and to promote the immediate restoration of their ability to enjoy their human rights,

1. Strongly condemns the continuing grave violations of the human rights of women and girls, including all forms of discrimination against them, in all areas of Afghanistan, in particular in areas under the control of the Taliban;

2. Also condemns the continued restrictions on the access of women to health care and the systematic violation of the human rights of women in Afghanistan, including the restrictions on access to education and to employment outside the home, freedom of movement and freedom from intimidation, harassment and violence, which have a serious detrimental effect on the well-being of Afghan women and the children in their care;

3. Urges the Taliban and other Afghan parties to recognize, protect, promote and act in accordance with all human rights and fundamental freedoms, regardless of gender, ethnicity or religion, in accordance with international human rights instruments, and to respect international humanitarian law;

4. Urges all the Afghan parties, in particular the Taliban, to bring to an end, without delay, all human rights violations against women and girls, and to take urgent measures to ensure:

(a) The repeal of all legislative and other measures that discriminate against women and girls and those that impede the realization of all their human rights;

(b) The effective participation of women in civil, cultural, economic, political and social life throughout the country;

(c) Respect for the equal right of women to work and their reintegration into employment in all segments of Afghan society, as well as throughout the United Nations system and human rights and humanitarian organizations operating within Afghanistan;

(d) The equal right of women and girls to education without discrimination, the reopening of schools and the admission of women and girls to all levels of education;

(e) Respect for the right of women and girls to security of person, and that those responsible for physical attacks on women and girls are brought to justice;

(f) Respect for freedom of movement for women and girls;

(g) Respect for effective and equal access of women and girls to the facilities necessary to protect their right to the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health;

5. Encourages the continuing efforts of the United Nations and other international and non-governmental organizations and donors to ensure that all United Nations-assisted programmes in Afghanistan are formulated and coordinated in such a way as to promote and ensure the participation of women in those programmes, and that women benefit equally with men from such programmes, and to that end encourages such measures as the establishment of culturally sensitive programmes to sensitize Afghan officials, ministry staff and technical departments concerning international principles of human rights and gender equality;

6. Appeals to all States and to the international community to ensure that all humanitarian assistance to the people of Afghanistan, in conformity with the Strategic Framework for Afghanistan, is based on the principle of non-discrimination, integrates a gender perspective, and actively attempts to promote the participation of both women and men and to promote peace and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

7. Urges States to continue to give special attention to the promotion and protection of the human rights of women and girls in Afghanistan and to mainstream a gender perspective in all aspects of their policies and actions related to Afghanistan;

8. Welcomes the overall efforts of the Secretary-General to address the situation of women and girls in Afghanistan, including the establishment of the positions of Gender Adviser and Human Rights Adviser in the United Nations Office of the Resident Coordinator for Afghanistan, in order to ensure more effective consideration and implementation of human rights and gender concerns in all United Nations programmes within Afghanistan, taking into account the recommendations contained in the report of the Inter-Agency Gender Mission to Afghanistan conducted by the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women in November 1997;

9. Urges the Secretary-General to ensure that all United Nations activities in Afghanistan are carried out according to the principle of non-discrimination against women and girls, that a gender perspective and special attention to the human rights of women and girls are fully incorporated into the work of the Civil Affairs Unit established within the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan, including the training and selection of staff, and that efforts are made to enhance the role of women in preventative diplomacy, peacemaking and peacekeeping;

10. Encourages United Nations agencies to intensify their efforts to employ more women in their programmes in Afghanistan, particularly at the decision-making level, to ensure, inter alia, the functioning of all programmes in order to better address the needs of the female population;

11. Stresses the importance of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan giving special attention to the human rights of women and girls and fully incorporating a gender perspective in his work;

12. Appeals to States and the international community to implement the recommendations of the Inter-Agency Gender Mission to Afghanistan under the leadership of the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women, and urges all countries, international organizations and non-governmental organizations having influence in Afghanistan to continue to bring pressure to bear on all armed groups to respect the human rights of women and girls in all circumstances;

13. Demands that all Afghan factions, in particular the Taliban, ensure the safety and protection of all United Nations and humanitarian workers in Afghanistan and allow them, regardless of gender, to carry out their work unhindered;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to review the situation of women and girls in Afghanistan and to submit to the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-sixth session a report on progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Palestinian women

In a report to the Commission on the Status of Women on follow-up to and implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [E/CN.6/2001/2], the Secretary-General discussed the situation of Palestinian women and assistance provided by the UN system. Covering the period from September 1999 to September 2000 and based on reports from UN bodies monitoring the situation in the occupied territories and refugee camps, the report stated that, despite continued UN system efforts to improve the economic and social conditions of Palestinian women and in spite of positive trends in the Palestinian economy during the review period, women continued to experience unequal access to the labour market and income-generating activities. Women living in the occupied territories were directly affected by Israeli policies, especially the closure of access routes that hindered efforts by the Palestinian Authority, civil society groups and UN organizations to advance women. It was particularly important that Palestinian women should continue to be given assistance in such areas as education, health, social services and microcredit and that efforts were made to increase their full and equal participation in decision-making and peace programmes.

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council, in resolution 2001/2, called for measures for tangible improvements in the difficulties faced by Palestinian women and called on Israel to facilitate the return of displaced Palestinian women and children to their homes (see p. 427).

Gender and all forms of discrimination

One of the thematic issues for the 2001 session of the Commission on the Status of Women was gender and all forms of discrimination, in particular racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance. On 13 March, the Commission held a panel discussion and a dialogue on the theme. On 17 March, the Commission adopted draft agreed conclusions on the thematic issue, which it recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption. The Council endorsed the agreed conclusions in resolution 2001/5 (see p. 1076).

Older women in society

On 19 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/56/576], adopted resolution 56/126 without vote [agenda item 112].

Situation of older women in society

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the obligations of all States to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms as stated in the Charter of the United Nations, and emphasizing also their obligations under the human rights instruments, in particular the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Optional Protocol thereto,

Recalling its resolution 44/76 of 8 December 1989 on elderly women, Economic and Social Council resolutions 1982/23 of 4 May 1982 on elderly women and the World Assembly on Ageing and 1986/26 of 23 May 1986 and 1989/38 of 24 May 1989 on elderly women, and resolution 36/4 of 20 March 1992 of the Commission on the Status of Women, on the integration of elderly women into development,

Recalling also the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century" and the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, in particular their provisions regarding older women,

Welcoming the convening of the Second World Assembly on Ageing, to be held at Madrid in April 2002,

Aware that women constitute the majority of older populations in all regions of the world and represent an important human resource, whose contribution to society has not been fully recognized,

Recognizing the increasing role of older women in taking the responsibility of providing care and assistance to victims of the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) in various regions of the world, particularly in developing countries,

Affirming the dual challenges of ageing and disability, and affirming also that older persons have specific health needs and that, with the increase in life expectancy and the growing number of older women, their health concerns require particular attention and further research,

Aware that few statistics are available on the situation of older women, and recognizing the importance of data, including data disaggregated by age and sex, as an essential element of planning and policy evaluations,

Recognizing that women of all ages, in particular older women, continue to suffer from discrimination and lack of opportunities,

Emphasizing that Governments bear the primary responsibility for creating an enabling environment for the economic and social development of their citizens, and noting with appreciation the valuable contributions of civil society, including non-governmental organizations, in calling attention to the specific needs of older women,

1. Stresses the importance of mainstreaming a gender perspective, taking into account the needs of older women, in policy and planning processes at all levels;

2. Also stresses the need to eliminate discrimination on the basis of gender and age and ensure equal rights and their full enjoyment for women of all ages;

3. Urges Governments and regional and international organizations, including the United Nations system in cooperation with civil society, including the non-governmental organizations concerned, to promote programmes for healthy active ageing that stress the independence, equality, participation and security of older women and undertake gender-specific research and programmes to address their needs;

4. Emphasizes the need for Governments and regional and international organizations, including the United Nations system and the international financial institutions, to develop and improve the collection, analysis and dissemination of data disaggregated by age and sex;

5. Urges Governments to take measures to enable all older women to be engaged actively in all aspects of life, as well as to assume a variety of roles in communities, public life and decision-making, and to develop and implement policies and programmes in cooperation with civil society, including the non-governmental organizations concerned, to ensure their full enjoyment of human rights and quality of life, as well as to address their needs, with a view to contributing to the realization of a society for all ages;

6. Invites Governments, the United Nations system and international organizations to consider, in their development planning, the increasing responsibilities of older women in providing care and assistance to victims of HIV/AIDS;

7. Invites Governments and the United Nations system to give attention to the situation of older women in the context of the Second World Assembly on Ageing, to be held at Madrid in April 2002, including the integration of a gender perspective into the outcome document.

Women and development

In an August report to the General Assembly on women in development: access to financial resources: a gender perspective [A/56/321 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General discussed, in the context of the International Conference on Financing for Development, to be held in 2002, the gender perspective of financing for development. He also provided statistics on women entrepreneurs and addressed the question of women's access to financial resources and instruments through bank financing, microcredit, equity financing and savings and insurance services. Other issues covered in the report were women's access to information through technology and empowerment of women.

The Secretary-General noted that the number of women-owned businesses had steadily increased worldwide and that women-owned small enterprises and microenterprises were increasingly contributing to the economic and social development of their countries. However, women's contributions were limited by the constraints that women entrepreneurs faced in obtaining financial resources. He therefore recommended that Governments develop accessible financial mechanisms responsive to women's needs; facilitate the access of young women and women entrepreneurs to education and training in business, administration and information and communications technologies; and change existing laws or formulate new laws and regulations on access to financial resources based on the principle of equality between women and men. Governments should encourage banks and other financial intermediaries to: explore viable venues to reach people living in poverty, in particular women, including through international public/private partnership funds; design savings schemes attractive to the poor and to poor women in particular; undertake research to learn more about the characteristics, financial needs and performance of women-owned businesses; and work towards equal treatment of women clients. The Secretary-General recommended that all aspects of financing for development should be examined from a gender perspective in order to ensure women's access to financial resources, and that gender-sensitive policies and programmes should be developed at the micro and macro levels.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 90], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/56/560/Add.1], adopted resolution 56/188 without vote [agenda item 97 (a)].

Women in development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/195 of 18 December 1997, 54/210 of 22 December 1999 and all its other resolutions on the integration of women in development, and the relevant resolutions and agreed conclusions, including those on women in the economy, adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women,

Reaffirming the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome documents of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century", as well as the outcomes of other recent major United Nations conferences and summits and other relevant special sessions of the General Assembly and their follow-up processes,

Reaffirming also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, which affirms that the equal rights and opportunities of women and men must be assured, and calls for, inter alia, the promotion of gender equality and the empowerment of women as effective ways to combat poverty, hunger and disease and to stimulate development that is truly sustainable,

Reaffirming further that gender equality is of fundamental importance for achieving sustained economic growth and sustainable development, in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions and recent United Nations conferences, and that investing in the development of women and girls has a multiplier effect, in particular on productivity, efficiency and sustained economic growth,

Recognizing the significant contribution that women make to the economy and the major force that they represent for change and development in all sectors of the economy, especially in key areas such as agriculture, industry and services,

Reaffirming that women are key contributors to the economy and to combating poverty through both remunerated and unremunerated work at home, in the community and in the workplace, and that the empowerment of women is a critical factor in the eradication of poverty,

Recognizing that population and development issues, education and training, health, nutrition, the environment, water supply, sanitation, housing, communications, science and technology and employment opportunities are important elements for effective poverty eradication and the advancement and empowerment of women,

Recognizing also, in this context, the importance of respect for all human rights, including the right to development, and of a national and international environment that promotes, inter alia, justice, gender equality, equity, popular participation and political freedom for the advancement and empowerment of women,

Recognizing further that education and training, in particular in business, trade, administration, information and communication technologies and other new technologies, are essential for gender equality, the empowerment of women and poverty eradication,

Recognizing that the difficult socio-economic conditions that exist in many developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, have resulted in the acceleration of the feminization of poverty and that the empowerment of women is a critical factor in the eradication of poverty,

Recognizing also that poverty eradication and the achievement and preservation of peace are mutually reinforcing, and recognizing further that peace is inextricably linked to equality between women and men and to development,

Aware that, although globalization and liberalization processes have created employment opportunities for women in many countries, they have made women, especially in developing countries and in particular in the least developed countries, more vulnerable to problems caused by increased economic volatility,

Recognizing that some effects of market liberalization may deepen the socio-economic marginalization of women in the agricultural sector, including through the loss of employment among small-scale farmers who are more likely to be women than men, and emphasizing that women who are small-scale farmers need special support and empowerment so as to be able to meet the challenges and take advantage of the opportunities of agricultural market liberalization,

Recognizing also that enhanced trade opportunities for developing countries, including through trade liberalization, will improve the economic condition of those societies, including women, which is of particular importance in rural communities,

Aware that, while women represent an important and growing proportion of business owners, their contribution to economic and social development is constrained by, inter alia, the lack of equal access of women and men to, and control over, credit, technology, support services, land and information,

Concerned that the continuing discrimination against women, the denial or lack of equal rights and access to education, training and credit facilities and the lack of control over land, capital, technology and other areas of production impede their full and equal contribution to, and equal opportunity to benefit from, development,

Emphasizing the promotion of programmes aimed at financial intermediation with a view to ensuring the access of rural women to credit and to agricultural inputs and implements and, in particular, to easing collateral requirements for access to finance by women,

Expressing its concern about the underrepresentation of women in economic decision-making, and stressing the importance of mainstreaming a gender perspective in the formulation, implementation and evaluation of all policies,

Noting the importance of the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in particular its funds and programmes, including the United Nations Development Fund for Women, in facilitating the advancement of women in development, and recognizing the work done by the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women,

Welcoming the fact that the Commission on the Status of Women will take up the theme of eradicating poverty, including through the empowerment of women throughout their life cycle in a globalizing world, at its forty-sixth session, in 2002,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Women in development: access to financial resources: a gender perspective";

2. Calls for the accelerated and effective implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the relevant provisions of the outcome documents of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, as well as the outcomes of all other major United Nations conferences and summits and other relevant special sessions of the General Assembly and their follow-up processes;

3. Stresses that a favourable and conducive national and international environment in all fields of life is necessary for the effective integration of women in development;

4. Urges Governments to develop and promote methodologies for mainstreaming a gender perspective in all aspects of policy-making, including economic policy-making;

5. Recognizes the mutually reinforcing links between gender equality and poverty eradication, as well as the need to elaborate and implement, where appropriate, in consultation with civil society, comprehensive gender-sensitive poverty eradication strategies that address social, structural and macroeconomic issues;

6. Stresses the importance of developing national strategies for the promotion of sustainable and productive entrepreneurial activities that will generate income among disadvantaged women and women living in poverty;

7. Urges all Governments to ensure women's equal rights with men and their full and equal access to education, training, employment, technology and economic and financial resources, including credit, in particular for rural women and women in the informal sector, and to facilitate, where appropriate, the transition of women from the informal to the formal sector;

8. Encourages Governments, the private sector, non-governmental organizations and other actors of civil society to promote and protect the rights of women workers and to take action to remove structural and legal barriers as well as stereotypical attitudes to gender equality at work, and to initiate positive steps to promote equal pay for equal work or work of equal value;

9. Urges all Governments to take all appropriate measures to eliminate discrimination against women with regard to their access to bank loans, mortgages and other forms of financial credit, giving special attention to poor, uneducated women, and to support women's access to legal assistance;

10. Calls upon Governments and entrepreneurial associations to facilitate the access of women, including young women and women entrepreneurs, to education and training in business, administration and information and communication technologies;

11. Recognizes the role of microfinance, including microcredit, in the eradication of poverty, the empowerment of women and the generation of employment, and in this regard notes the importance of sound national financial systems and encourages the strengthening of existing and emerging microcredit institutions and their capacities, including through the support of international financial institutions;

12. Stresses the need for assistance to enable women in developing countries, particularly grass-roots women's groups, to have full access to and use of new technologies, including information technologies, for their empowerment;

13. Urges States to design and revise laws that ensure that women are accorded full and equal rights to own land and other property, including through inheritance, and to undertake administrative reforms and other necessary measures to give women the same right as men to credit, capital and appropriate technologies and access to markets and information;

14. Calls upon Governments to encourage the financial sector to mainstream a gender perspective in its policies and programmes, in particular by:

(a) Exploring viable options to reach people living in poverty, in particular women, including through international public and/or private funds;

(b) Designing savings schemes that are attractive to the poor and to poor women in particular;

(c) Undertaking research to learn more about the characteristics, financial needs and performance of businesses owned by women;

(d) Working towards equal treatment for women clients through comprehensive gender-awareness training for staff at all levels and better representation of women in decision-making positions;

15. Requests Governments to ensure the full participation of women in decision-making and in policy formulation and implementation at all levels so that their priorities, skills and potentials can be adequately reflected in national policy;

16. Calls upon Governments to promote, inter alia, through legislation, family-friendly and gender-sensitive work environments and also to promote the facilitation of breastfeeding for working mothers as well as the provision of the necessary care for working women's children and other dependants;

17. Calls upon the international community to make efforts to mitigate the effects of excess volatility and economic disruption, which have a disproportionately negative impact on women, and to enhance trade opportunities for developing countries in order to improve the economic conditions of women;

18. Urges the international community, the United Nations system and relevant organizations to give priority to assisting the efforts of developing countries to ensure the full and effective participation of women in deciding and implementing development strategies and integrating gender concerns into national programmes, including by providing adequate resources to operational activities for development in support of the efforts of Governments to ensure, inter alia, full and equal access of women to health care, capital, education, training and technology, as well as full and equal participation in all decision-making;

19. Expresses its appreciation to the developed countries that have agreed to and have reached the target of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for overall official development assistance, and calls upon the developed countries that have not yet done so to strengthen their efforts to achieve the agreed target as soon as possible and, where agreed, within that target, to earmark 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of gross national product for the least developed countries;

20. Encourages the international community, the United Nations system, the private sector and civil society to provide the necessary financial resources to assist national Governments in their efforts to meet the development targets and benchmarks agreed upon at the World Summit for Social Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women, the International Conference on Population and Development, the twenty-third and twenty-fourth special sessions of the General Assembly and other relevant United Nations conferences and summits;

21. Encourages the United Nations system and international and regional organizations, as appropriate, to assist Governments, at their request, in building institutional capacity and developing national action plans or further implementing existing action plans for the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action;

22. Urges multilateral donors, international financial institutions and regional development banks to review and implement policies to support national efforts to ensure that a higher proportion of resources reach women, in particular in rural and remote areas;

23. Encourages the International Conference on Financing for Development, to be held at Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002, to examine all aspects of financing for development from a gender perspective;

24. Encourages Governments to integrate fully a gender perspective in their preparations for the World Summit on Sustainable Development, to be held at Johannesburg, South Africa, from 26 August to 4 September 2002;

25. Calls upon the United Nations system to integrate gender mainstreaming into all its programmes and policies, including in the integrated follow-up to United Nations conferences, in accordance with agreed conclusions 1997/2 on gender mainstreaming adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1997;

26. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to update the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development for the consideration of the General Assembly at its fifty-ninth session; as in the past, the survey should focus on selective emerging development issues that have an impact on the role of women in the economy at the national, regional and international levels;

27. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session a report on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution, including the impact of globalization on the empowerment of women and their integration in development;

28. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-eighth session the sub-item entitled "Women in development".

Women in rural areas

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/135 [YUN 1999, p. 1089], the Secretary-General submitted a July report on improvement of the situation of women in rural areas [A/56/268]. The report was based on the analysis and conclusions of an expert group meeting on the situation of rural women in the context of globalization (Ulaanbaatar, Mongolia, 4-8 June). The expert group examined the impact of major global economic trends on rural women; proposed a research and policy agenda to maximize the beneficial effects of globalization for women; and made recommendations to Governments, the UN system, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs, the private sector and civil society.

In order to implement the findings of the expert group meeting, it was suggested that a high-level policy consultation be convened at the United Nations to set priorities and outline critical strategies that would meet the needs and objectives of rural women in the context of globalization. It was further suggested that the Commission on the Status of Women include consideration of the situation of rural women as a priority theme in its multi-year programme of work.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/56/576], adopted resolution 56/129 without vote [agenda item 112].

Improvement of the situation of women in rural areas

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 54/135 of 17 December 1999,

Recalling also the importance attached to the problems of rural women by the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Welcoming the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century", namely, the political declaration and further actions and initiatives to implement the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration of 8 September 2000, in which Member States resolved, inter alia, to promote gender equality and the empowerment of women as effective ways to combat poverty, hunger and disease and to stimulate development that is truly sustainable,

Recognizing the critical role and contribution of rural women in enhancing agricultural and rural development, improving food security and eradicating rural poverty,

Noting that some effects of globalization may deepen the socio-economic marginalization of rural women,

Noting also that the globalization process has had some benefits by providing opportunities for wage employment for rural women in new sectors,

Mindful of the fact that the available data and existing tools of measurement and analysis are insufficient for a full understanding of the gender implications of the processes of globalization and rural change, and their impact on rural women,

Recognizing the urgent need to take appropriate measures aimed at further improving the situation of women in rural areas,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Welcomes the holding, from 4 to 8 June 2001 at Ulaanbaatar, of the expert group meeting on the situation of rural women within the context of globalization;
3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a user-friendly publication based, inter alia, on case studies presented at the expert group meeting referred to in paragraph 2 above in order to raise awareness of the situation of rural women in the context of globalization;
4. Also requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States on the desirability of convening a high-level policy consultation at the governmental level with a view to setting priorities and developing critical strategies that would meet the manifold challenges faced by rural women;
5. Welcomes the convening of the World Summit on Sustainable Development in South Africa in September 2002, including the review of chapter 24 of Agenda 21, entitled "Global action for women towards sustainable and equitable development", entailing, inter alia, measures to improve the situation of women in rural areas, and the World Food Summit: five years later, to be held in Italy in June 2002, and urges Governments to integrate a gender perspective, with attention to the improvement of the situation of women in rural areas, in the respective processes and outcome documents;
6. Invites Member States, in collaboration with the organizations of the United Nations and civil society, as appropriate, to continue their efforts to implement the outcome of and to ensure an integrated and coordinated follow-up to United Nations conferences and summits, including their five-year reviews, and to attach greater importance to the improvement of the situation of rural women in their national, regional and global development strategies by, inter alia:
  - (a) Creating an enabling environment for improving the situation of rural women, including integrating a gender perspective in macroeconomic policies and developing appropriate social support systems;
  - (b) Designing and revising laws to ensure that, where private ownership of land and property exists, rural women are accorded full and equal rights to own land and other property, including through the right to inheritance, and undertaking administrative reforms and other necessary measures to give women the same right as men to credit, capital, appropriate technologies and access to markets and information;
  - (c) Taking steps towards ensuring that women's unpaid work and contributions to on-farm and off-farm production, including income generated in the informal sector, are visible, and assessing the feasibility of developing and improving mechanisms, such as time-use studies, to measure in quantitative terms unpaid work, recognizing the potential for it to be reflected in the formulation and implementation of policies and programmes at the national and regional levels;

(d) Investing in and strengthening efforts to meet the basic needs of rural women through capacity-building and human resources development measures and the provision of a safe and reliable water supply, health services, including family planning services, and nutritional programmes as well as education and literacy programmes and social support measures;

(e) Pursuing the political and socio-economic empowerment of rural women by supporting their full and equal participation in decision-making at all levels, including in rural institutions through, inter alia, the provision of training and capacity-building programmes, including legal literacy;

(f) Promoting programmes to enable rural women and men to reconcile their work and family responsibilities and to encourage men to share equally with women household and childcare responsibilities;

(g) Integrating a gender perspective into the design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of development policies and programmes with an emphasis on reducing the disproportionate number of rural women living in poverty;

(h) Designing and implementing policies that promote and protect the enjoyment by women of all human rights and fundamental freedoms and creating an environment that does not tolerate violations of the rights of women and girls;

(i) Developing specific assistance programmes and advisory services to promote economic skills of rural women in banking, modern trading and financial procedures and providing microcredit and other financial and business services to a greater number of women in rural areas for their economic empowerment;

7. Invites the Commission on the Status of Women to pay due attention to the situation of rural women in the consideration of the priority themes identified in its multi-year programme of work for the period 2002-2006;

8. Invites the relevant organizations of the United Nations system dealing with issues of development to address and support the empowerment of rural women and their specific needs in their programmes and strategies, including in the context of globalization;

9. Stresses the need to identify the best practices for ensuring that rural women have access to and full participation in the area of information and communications technologies, inter alia, through specific studies, and invites the International Telecommunication Union to consider this matter in connection with the preparations for the World Summit on the Information Society;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Mainstreaming a gender perspective

Inter-Agency Meeting. The Inter-Agency Meeting on Women and Gender Equality of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) (New York, 27 February-2 March) [ACC/2001/3] held a one-day workshop on approaches and methodologies for gender mainstreaming. The workshop's recommendations included that ACC members should be invited to establish within their own organizations regular reporting mechanisms for all senior managers on gender mainstreaming and that ACC should be invited to undertake in 2002 a review of progress made in implementing Economic and Social Council agreed conclusions 1997/2 [YUN 1997, p. 1186].

Commission on the Status of Women. In his January report to the Commission on the Status of Women on follow-up to and implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [E/CN.6/2001/2], the Secretary-General stated that, in accordance with the Council's agreed conclusions 1997/2 on gender mainstreaming, the UN Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women had continued systematically to promote, facilitate and monitor the integration of gender perspectives into all areas of the work of the UN system. He noted that a framework had been developed for assessing progress towards gender mainstreaming, which would facilitate more systematic and effective reports and provide a monitoring tool for the Special Adviser in her efforts to promote and support gender mainstreaming throughout the system.

On 17 March [E/2001/27 (res. 45/2)], the Commission reaffirmed that the primary goal of mainstreaming a gender perspective was the achievement of gender equality. It called on the Secretary-General, in future reports on follow-up to and implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, to assess progress made on mainstreaming a gender perspective within the UN system, including by providing information on key achievements, lessons learned and best practices, and to recommend strategies for future action. The Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council consider including a regular item in its agenda on mainstreaming a gender perspective in the UN system and devoting a future coordination segment, by 2005, to the review and appraisal of the system-wide implementation of Council agreed conclusions 1997/2. The Council was further asked to ensure that a gender perspective was mainstreamed into all its work.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2001/41 [draft: E/2001/L.29] without vote [agenda item 14 (a)].

Mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system

The Economic and Social Council,

Affirming that gender mainstreaming constitutes a critical strategy in the implementation of the Beijing

Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, and for achieving the overall goal of gender equality,

Recalling its agreed conclusions 1997/2 on mainstreaming the gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system,

Welcoming General Assembly resolution 55/71 of 4 December 2000, in which the Assembly, inter alia, invited the Council to continue to further policy coordination and inter-agency cooperation towards the achievement of the objectives of the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, including by considering the dedication of specific segments to the advancement of women and the implementation of the above-mentioned instruments and by mainstreaming a gender perspective in all its work,

Having considered resolution 45/2 of the Commission on the Status of Women,

Determined to further intensify its efforts to ensure that gender mainstreaming is an integral part of all its activities concerning integrated and coordinated follow-up to United Nations conferences,

1. Decides to include in its agenda, under the item entitled "Coordination, programme and other questions", a sub-item entitled "Mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes of the United Nations system", in order to, inter alia, monitor and evaluate achievements made and obstacles encountered by the United Nations system, and to consider further measures to strengthen the implementation and monitoring of gender mainstreaming within the United Nations system;

2. Calls upon the Secretary-General, in future reports to the Commission on the Status of Women, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly on follow-up to and implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, to assess progress made on mainstreaming a gender perspective within the United Nations system, including by providing information on key achievements, lessons learned and best practices, and to recommend further actions and strategies for future action within the United Nations system;

3. Also calls upon the Secretary-General and all bodies reporting to the Economic and Social Council to address the gender aspects of issues before the Council in their reports;

4. Decides to devote the coordination segment of one of its substantive sessions, before 2005, to the review and appraisal of the system-wide implementation of agreed conclusions 1997/2 of the Council on mainstreaming the gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system.

(See also p. 680.)

System-wide plan

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/16 [YUN 1999, p. 1099], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women the proposed system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 2002-2005 [E/CN.6/2001/4]. The plan outlined actions to be taken by each UN system organization to achieve the objectives set out in the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome document of the General Assembly's twenty-third special session on women. The plan was structured around the activities of the system to mainstream a gender perspective in all of its activities, as well as in relation to the 12 critical areas of concern in the Platform for Action.

On 9 May [E/2001/27 (res. 45/3)], the Commission recommended the adoption of the proposed system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women 2002-2005 by the Economic and Social Council and that the Council, through the Commission, follow up the implementation of the plan and undertake a comprehensive mid-term review in 2004. The Commission recommended that the Council request the formulation of a new system-wide medium-term plan to cover the period 2006-2010 and that the Secretary-General submit, in 2005, the new draft plan to the Council and a draft of the proposal to the Commission.

CPC action. By a 24 May letter [E/AC.51/2001/8], the Chairperson of the Commission on the Status of Women transmitted to the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) the text of Commission resolution 45/3 (above) and summaries of the comments of Member States on the plan.

At its forty-first session (New York, 11 June-6 July) [A/56/16], CPC took note of the proposed system-wide medium-term plan for 2002-2005 and of the Commission Chairperson's letter.

By decision 2001/326 of 20 December, the Economic and Social Council adopted the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women 2002-2005.

Convention on elimination of discrimination against women

As at 31 December 2001, 168 States were parties to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895]. During the year, the Democratic Republic of Korea and Mauritania acceded to the Convention and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia succeeded to it, replacing the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. At year's end, 26 States parties had also accepted the amendment to article 20, paragraph 1, of the Convention in respect of the meeting time of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), which was adopted by the States parties in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1178]. The amendment would enter into force when accepted by a two-thirds majority of States parties.

The Optional Protocol to the Convention, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 54/4 [YUN 1999, p. 1100], which entered into force in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1123], had 28 States parties by the end of 2001. The Protocol entitled individuals or groups to submit directly to CEDAW complaints concerning alleged Convention violations and established procedures for inquiries into situations of grave or systematic violations of women's rights.

The Secretary-General submitted his annual report to the Assembly on the status of the Convention as at 1 August [A/56/328].

CEDAW

In 2001, the 23-member Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, established in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 1149] to monitor compliance with the 1979 Convention, held two sessions in New York [A/56/38].

At its twenty-fourth session (15 January-2 February), CEDAW reviewed the initial or periodic reports of Burundi, Egypt, Finland, Jamaica, Kazakhstan, Maldives, Mongolia and Uzbekistan on measures they had taken to implement the Convention. CEDAW also considered a Secretariat report on ways of expediting the Committee's work [CEDAW/C/2001/1/4] and the Committee's revised rules of procedure [CEDAW/C/2001/1/WG.1/WP.1]. By three decisions, CEDAW adopted its rules of procedure [A/56/38 (dec. 24/1)]; adopted a statement on gender and racial discrimination to be forwarded to the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (see p. 616) [dec. 24/11]; and decided to develop closer links with the Commission on the Status of Women [dec. 24/111].

At its twenty-fifth session (2-20 July), CEDAW reviewed the initial or periodic reports of Andorra, Guinea, Guyana, the Netherlands, Nicaragua, Singapore, Sweden and Viet Nam. It also considered Secretariat reports on ways of improving the Committee's work [CEDAW/C/2001/11/4] and on the Committee's approach to article 4, paragraph 1, of the Convention (on temporary special measures) [CEDAW/C/2001/11/5]. By three decisions, CEDAW requested approval from the General Assembly to hold, on an exceptional basis, a three-week session in August 2002, in order to consider the backlog of States parties' reports, and to enlarge the pre-session working group, to meet in February 2002, to prepare issues and questions relating to the backlog [A/56/38 (dec. 25/1)]; decided that the pre-session working group should formulate a short list of issues and questions, focusing on themes addressed by the Convention [dec. 25/11]; and adopted a statement to be forwarded to the special session of the Assembly on children in 2002 [dec. 25/11]. The Committee also adopted suggestions, one recommending that the Division for the Advancement of Women (UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs) establish a confidential electronic database for the registration of communications submitted under the Optional Protocol to the Convention [suggestion 25/1] and the other on the content of reports of UN bodies and specialized agencies submitted to CEDAW [suggestion 25/2].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 December [meeting 92], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/56/576], adopted resolution 56/229 without vote [agenda item 112].

Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/70 of 4 December 2000 and its previous resolutions on the elimination of discrimination against women,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the United Nations, as stated in Articles 1 and 55 of the Charter, is to promote universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction of any kind, including distinction as to sex,

Affirming that women and men should participate equally in social, economic and political development, should contribute equally to such development and should share equally in improved conditions of life,

Recalling the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, in which the Conference reaffirmed that the human rights of women and the girl child were an inalienable, integral and indivisible part of universal human rights,

Acknowledging the need for a comprehensive and integrated approach to the promotion and protection of the human rights of women, which includes the integration of the human rights of women into the mainstream of United Nations activities system-wide,

Reaffirming the commitments made in the political declaration and the outcome document of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century", in particular paragraphs 68 (c) and (d) concerning the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Optional Protocol thereto,

Recalling that, in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, heads of State and Government resolved to implement the Convention,

Welcoming the progress made in the implementation of the Convention, but expressing concern about the remaining challenges,

Welcoming also the growing number of States parties to the Convention, which now stands at one hundred and sixty-eight,

Welcoming further the entry into force on 22 December 2000 of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Bearing in mind the recommendation of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women that national reports should contain information on the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action, in accordance with paragraph 323 of the Platform,

Having considered the report of the Committee on its twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth sessions,

Expressing concern at the great number of reports that are overdue and that continue to be overdue, in particular initial reports, which constitutes an obstacle to the full implementation of the Convention,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;

2. Expresses disappointment that universal ratification of the Convention was not achieved by 2000, and urges all States that have not yet ratified or acceded to the Convention to do so;

3. Emphasizes the importance of full compliance by States parties with their obligations under the Convention and the Optional Protocol thereto;

4. Welcomes the rapidly growing number of State parties to the Optional Protocol, which now stands at twenty-eight, and urges other States parties to the Convention to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Optional Protocol;

5. Also welcomes the fact that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women has adopted the rules governing its work under the Optional Protocol as part of its revised rules of procedure;

6. Notes that some States parties have modified their reservations, expresses satisfaction that some reservations have been withdrawn, and urges States parties to limit the extent of any reservations that they lodge to the Convention, to formulate any such reservations as precisely and as narrowly as possible, to ensure that no reservations are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention or otherwise incompatible with international treaty law, to review their reservations regularly with a view to withdrawing them and to withdraw reservations that are contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention or that are otherwise incompatible with international treaty law;

7. Urges States parties to the Convention to make every possible effort to submit their reports on the implementation of the Convention in accordance with article 18 thereof and with the guidelines provided by the Committee and to cooperate fully with the Committee in the presentation of their reports;

8. Encourages the Secretariat to extend further technical assistance to States parties, upon their request, in the preparation of reports, in particular initial reports, and invites Governments to contribute to these efforts;

9. Commends the Committee on its contributions to the effective implementation of the Convention;

10. Strongly urges States parties to the Convention to take appropriate measures so that acceptance of the amendment to article 20, paragraph 1, of the Convention by a two-thirds majority of States parties can be reached as soon as possible so that the amendment may enter into force;

11. Expresses its appreciation for the additional meeting time that allows the Committee to hold two sessions annually, each session of three weeks' duration and each preceded by a pre-session working group of the Committee;

12. Also expresses its appreciation for the efforts made by the Committee to improve the efficiency of its working methods, and encourages further efforts in this regard;

13. Acknowledges the number of reports awaiting consideration by the Committee, and in this regard decides to authorize the Committee to hold, on an exceptional basis, an extraordinary session of three weeks' duration in 2002 to be used entirely for the consideration of the reports of the States parties in order to reduce the backlog of reports, and to enlarge the membership of the pre-session working group in 2002 to prepare for the exceptional session of the Committee, taking into account decision 25/I of the Committee;

14. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 54/4 of 6 October 1999, to provide the resources, including staff and facilities, necessary for the effective functioning of the Committee within its full mandate, in particular taking into account the entry into force of the Optional Protocol;

15. Urges Governments, agencies and organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to disseminate the Convention and the Optional Protocol thereto;

16. Encourages all relevant entities of the United Nations system, within their mandates, as well as Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, in particular women's organizations, as appropriate, to continue to assist States parties, upon their request, in implementing the Convention, and in this regard encourages States parties to pay attention to the concluding comments as well as the general recommendations of the Committee;

17. Encourages all relevant entities of the United Nations system to continue to build women's knowledge and understanding of and capacity to utilize human rights instruments, in particular the Convention and the Optional Protocol thereto;

18. Welcomes the submission by the specialized agencies, at the invitation of the Committee, of reports on the implementation of the Convention in areas falling within the scope of their activities and the contribution of non-governmental organizations to the work of the Committee, and encourages the specialized agencies to continue to submit reports;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the status of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the implementation of the present resolution.

Commission on the Status of Women

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its forty-fifth session (New York, 6-17 March and 9-11 May) [E/2001/27 & Corr.1], recommended four resolutions to the Economic and Social Council for adoption on the situation of Palestinian women (see p. 1067); discrimination against women and girls in Afghanistan (see p. 1065); proposals for the Commission's multi-year programme of work for 2002-2006 (see p. 1084); and its agreed conclusions on thematic issues (women and HIV/AIDS; gender and all forms of discrimination) (below). The Commission also adopted and brought to the Council's attention resolutions on the release of women and children taken hostage, including those imprisoned during armed conflicts (see p. 1060); mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the UN system (see p. 1072); and the proposed system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women (2002-2005) (see p. 1073). The Commission further adopted six decisions, by which it requested that a decision for enhancing the review of progress in implementing the Beijing Platform for Action and of the outcome documents of the General Assembly's twenty-third special session should be taken in coordination with the conference reviews of other functional commissions [E/2001/27 (dec. 45/101)]; requested its Bureau to undertake the preparatory work for a further discussion of the Commission's working methods at its forty-sixth (2002) session [dec. 45/102]; requested the Secretary-General to submit another report on the Commission's communications procedure to the forty-sixth session [dec. 45/103]; decided to meet in resumed session from 9 to 11 May [dec. 45/104]; recommended that CPC, when reviewing the proposed programme budget for 2002-2003, take into consideration the discussion on the subject in the Commission [dec. 45/105]; and took note of the documents before it [dec. 45/106].

By decision 2001/317 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report on its forty-fifth session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/2001/27 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 2001/5 without vote [agenda item 14 (a)].

Agreed conclusions of the Commission on the Status of Women on thematic issues

The Economic and Social Council

Endorses the following agreed conclusions adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women with respect to the thematic issues addressed by the Commission at its forty-fifth session:

A. Women, the girl child and human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome

1. Women play a vital role in the social and economic development of their countries. It is a profound concern that by the end of 2000, 36.1 million people were living with human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS), and of those infected, 95 per cent were living in developing countries, and 16.4 million were women. The proportion of women infected with HIV is increasing and in sub-Saharan Africa women constitute 55 per cent of all adult HIV-infected, while teenage girls are infected at a rate of five to six times greater than their male counterparts.

2. Full enjoyment by women and girls of all human rights, civil, cultural, economic, political and social, including the right to development—which are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated—is of crucial importance in preventing the further spread of HIV/AIDS. The majority of women and girls do not fully enjoy their rights, in particular to education, the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health and social security, especially in developing countries. These inequalities begin early in life and render women and girls more vulnerable in the area of sexual and reproductive health, thus increasing their risk and vulnerability to HIV infection and their disproportionate suffering from the consequences of the HIV/AIDS epidemic.

3. Poverty and the negative and harmful traditional and customary practices that subordinate women in the household, community and society render women especially vulnerable to HIV/sexually transmitted infections. Millions of women and girls lack access and/or have insufficient access to health care, medication and social support in general, including in the case of sexually transmitted infections/HIV/AIDS.

4. The Commission on the Status of Women has taken into account the recommendations on women, the girl child and HIV/AIDS as contained in the following documents: the Beijing Platform for Action, the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, the outcome documents of the twenty-first, twenty-third and twenty-fourth special sessions of the General Assembly, the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the agreed conclusions of the Commission on the Status of Women on women and health, and Commission resolution 44/2 of 2 March 2000.

5. The Commission recalls the internationally agreed targets as contained in the documents referred to in paragraph 4 above, and suggests that the outcome document of the special session of the General Assembly on HIV/AIDS should fully integrate a gender perspective, including in any new targets, and focus on actions needed to achieve existing targets.

6. The Commission welcomes the Abuja Declaration on HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis and other Related Infectious Diseases, in particular its gender dimension, adopted by the Organization of African Unity at its Special Summit on HIV/AIDS, held at Abuja, on 26 and 27 April 2001.

7. The Commission notes with appreciation the efforts of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) and its co-sponsors, bilateral and multilateral donors, governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to empower women through capacity-development programmes, as well as programmes that provide women with access to development resources and strengthen their networks that offer care and support to women affected by HIV/AIDS.

8. The highest level of political commitment to the empowerment and advancement of women and to the prevention, research, care and treatment of sexually transmitted infections, especially HIV/AIDS, must be secured.

9. It is important to integrate fully a gender perspective in the preparatory process and in the outcome document of the special session of the General Assembly on HIV/AIDS, including, inter alia, the full integration of a gender perspective in any new targets and in actions needed to achieve internationally agreed targets that relate to women, the girl child and HIV/AIDS as contained in the documents referred to in paragraph 4 above.

10. In order to accelerate the implementation of the strategic objectives of the conferences and documents mentioned in paragraph 4 above, especially of those objectives related to women, the girl child and HIV/AIDS, the Commission recommends that the following actions be taken:

Actions to be taken by Governments,
the United Nations system and civil society, as appropriate

1. Empowerment of women:

(a) The rapid progression of the HIV/AIDS pandemic, particularly in the developing world, has had a devastating impact on women. The unequal power relationships between women and men, in which women often do not have the power to insist on safe and responsible sex practices, and lack of communication and understanding between women and men on women's health needs, inter alia, endanger women's health, in particular by increasing their susceptibility to sexually transmitted infections, including HIV/AIDS;

(b) Responsible behaviour and gender equality are among the important prerequisites for its prevention;

(c) Ensure that the sexual health and reproductive rights of women of all ages as defined in paragraphs 94 to 96 of the Beijing Platform for Action is seen as an essential part in efforts to promote women's empowerment, bearing in mind that women and girls are disproportionately affected by HIV/AIDS and, in this context, further promote the advancement and empowerment of women and women's full enjoyment of all human rights, including the right to development and their right to have control over and decide freely and responsibly on matters related to their sexuality, in order to protect themselves from high risk and irresponsible behaviour leading to sexually transmitted infections, including HIV/AIDS, and access to health information and education, health care and health services, which are critical to increasing the ability of women and young girls to protect themselves from HIV infection;

(d) Focus national and international policies towards the eradication of poverty in order to empower women to better protect themselves from the spread of the pandemic and to deal more effectively with the adverse effects of HIV/AIDS;

(e) Alleviate the social and economic impact of HIV/AIDS on women who, in their roles as food suppliers and traditional caregivers, are primarily affected by the negative consequences of the pandemic, such as a reduced labour force and a breakdown of social service systems;

(f) Reaffirm the equal rights of women and the girl child infected and affected by sexually transmitted infections/HIV/AIDS to have access to health, education and social services and to be protected from all forms of discrimination, stigma, abuse and neglect;

(g) Also reaffirm the human rights of girls and women to equal access to education, skill training and employment opportunities as a means to reduce their vulnerability to sexually transmitted diseases/HIV;

(h) Urge Governments to take all necessary measures to empower women and strengthen women's economic independence and protect and promote full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms in order to allow women and girls to better protect themselves from sexually transmitted infections/HIV;

(i) Address and reduce the increased HIV/AIDS risks, vulnerabilities and impact on women and girls, including in conflict situations, through gender-sensitive economic, legal and social services and programmes, including integration of HIV/AIDS prevention and care services into minimum essential health-care packages;

(j) Strengthen concrete measures to eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls, including harmful traditional and customary practices, abuse and rape, battering and trafficking in women and girls, which aggravate the conditions fostering the spread of HIV/AIDS, through, inter alia, the enactment and enforcement of laws, as well as public campaigns to combat violence against women and girls;

(k) Take steps to create an environment that promotes all human rights, compassion and support for people infected/affected by HIV/AIDS, including through introducing and/or reviewing legislation, with a view to striving to remove discriminatory provisions and provide the legal framework that will protect the rights of people living with HIV/AIDS, in particular of women and girls, and enable those who are vulnerable to have access to appropriate voluntary and confidential counselling services, and encourage efforts to reduce discrimination and stigmatization;

(l) Further develop and fully integrate a gender perspective into national, regional and international HIV/AIDS programmes and strategies, taking into account, inter alia, sex- and age-disaggregated data and statistics, with a particular focus on gender equality;

(m) Take measures to promote and implement women's equal access to and control over economic resources, including land, property rights and the right to inheritance, regardless of their marital status, in order to reduce the vulnerability of women in the context of the HIV/AIDS epidemic;

(n) Provide women and girls, including those in marginalized groups, with equal access to quality education, literacy programmes, health care and health services, social services, skills training and employment opportunities, support capacity-building and the strengthening of women's networks and protect them from all forms of discrimination, including racial discrimination, stigma, abuse and neglect, in order to reduce their risk and vulnerability to HIV/AIDS and alleviate the impact on those infected and affected by HIV/AIDS.

2. Prevention:

(a) Governments, relevant United Nations agencies, funds and programmes and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, individually and collectively, should make efforts to place combating HIV/AIDS as a priority on the development agenda and to implement multisectoral and decentralized effective preventive strategies and programmes, especially for the most vulnerable populations, including women, young girls and infants, also taking into account the prevention of mother-to-child transmission of HIV/AIDS;

(b) Governments, with the assistance of relevant United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, must adopt a long-term, timely, coherent and integrated AIDS prevention policy, with public information and life skills-based education programmes specifically tailored to the needs of women and girls, adapted to their social and cultural context and sensitivities, and the specific needs in their life cycle;

(c) Intensify efforts to determine the best policies and programmes to prevent women and young girls from becoming infected with HIV/AIDS, taking into account that women, in particular young girls, are socially, physiologically and biologically more vulnerable than men to sexually transmitted infections;

(d) Take measures to integrate, inter alia, a family-based approach in programmes aimed at providing prevention, care and support to women and girls infected and affected by HIV/AIDS and a community-based approach in policies and programmes aimed at providing prevention, care and support to women and girls infected and affected by HIV/AIDS;

(e) Ensure equal and non-discriminatory access to accurate, comprehensive information, prevention education on reproductive health, and voluntary testing and counselling services and technologies, within a cultural and gender-sensitive framework and with particular emphasis on adolescents and young adults;

(f) Request the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) and its co-sponsors to continue in their efforts aimed at providing complete and accurate sexual and reproductive health education for young people, within a cultural and gender-sensitive framework, while, inter alia, encouraging them to delay sexual initiation, or/and to use condoms and, in this context, urge that greater attention be given to the education of men and boys about their roles and their responsibilities in preventing the transmission of sexually transmitted diseases, including HIV/AIDS, to their partners;

(g) Promote gender equality in relationships, and provide information and resources to promote informed, responsible and safe sexual behaviour and practices, mutual respect and gender equality in sexual relationships;

(h) Encourage all forms of media to promote non-discriminatory and gender-sensitive images and a culture of non-violence and respect for all human rights, in particular women's rights, in addressing HIV/AIDS;

(i) Encourage active involvement of men and boys through, inter alia, youth-led and youth-specific HIV education projects and peer-based programmes in challenging gender stereotypes and attitudes as well as gender inequalities in relation to HIV and AIDS, as well as their full participation in prevention, impact allevia-tion and care, and design and implement programmes to encourage and enable men to adopt safe and responsible sexual and reproductive behaviour and to use effectively methods to prevent unwanted pregnancies and sexually transmitted infections, including HIV/AIDS;

(j) Intensify, especially in the most affected countries, education, services, community-based mobilization and information strategies to protect women of all ages from HIV and other sexually transmitted infections, including through the development of safe, affordable, effective and easily accessible female-controlled methods, including such methods as microbicides and female condoms that protect against sexually transmitted infections and HIV/AIDS, as well as voluntary and confidential HIV testing and counselling and the promotion of sexually responsible behaviour, including abstinence and condom use;

(k) Strengthen sustainable, efficient and accessible primary health-care systems that serve to support prevention efforts;

(l) Special attention should be given to the prevention of HIV, in particular with regard to mother-to-child transmission and for victims of rape—on the basis of informed consent and voluntary and confidential testing, counselling and treatment—including through ensuring access to care and improving the quality and availability of affordable drugs and diagnostics, especially antiretroviral therapies, and by building on existing efforts, with special attention to the issue of breastfeeding;

(m) Strive to ensure that schools at all levels, other educational institutions and non-formal systems of education play a leading role in preventing HIV infection and preventing and combating stigmatization and discrimination by providing an environment free of all forms of violence that promotes compassion and tolerance, and provide gender-sensitive education, including on responsible sexual behaviour and practices, life skills and behaviour change;

(n) Work together with civil society, including traditional, community and religious leaders, to identify the customary and traditional practices that adversely influence gender relations and to eliminate those practices that increase the vulnerability of women and girls to HIV/AIDS.

3. Treatment, care and support:

(a) Request Governments to ensure universal and equal access for women and men throughout their life cycle to social services related to health care, including education, clean water and safe sanitation, nutrition, food security and health education programmes, especially for women and girls living with and affected by HIV/AIDS, including treatment for opportunistic diseases;

(b) Request Governments to work to provide comprehensive health care for women and girls living with HIV/AIDS, including dietary and food supplements and treatment for opportunistic infections and full, equal, non-discriminatory and prompt access to health care and health services, including sexual and reproductive health and voluntary and confidential counselling, taking into account the rights of the child to access to information, privacy, confidentiality, respect and informed consent and the responsibilities, rights and duties of parents and legal guardians;

(c) Care and support for people living with HIV/AIDS, in particular women and girls, should have a comprehensive approach, involving medical, social, psychological, spiritual and economic needs, targeting the community and national levels;

(d) Collaborate to strengthen efforts to create an environment and the conditions necessary, with the assistance of relevant United Nations agencies, funds and programmes and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, upon request to address the challenges faced by women and girls infected and affected by HIV/AIDS, in particular orphans and widows, girls and older women who may also be primary caregivers for people living with HIV/AIDS, all of whom are particularly vulnerable to both economic and sexual exploitation; provide them with the necessary economic and psycho-social support; and encourage their economic independence through income-generating programmes and other methods;

(e) Provide support for the implementation of special programmes for the growing problems of children orphaned by AIDS, especially girls, who may easily become victims of sexual exploitation.

4. Enabling environment for regional and international cooperation:

(a) Call upon the international community, relevant agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to intensify their support of national efforts against HIV/AIDS, in particular in favour of women and young girls, including efforts to provide affordable antiretroviral drugs, diagnostics and drugs to treat tuberculosis and other opportunistic infections; strengthening health systems, including reliable distribution and delivery systems; implementing a strong generic drug policy; bulk purchasing; negotiating with pharmaceutical companies to reduce prices; appropriate financing systems; and encouraging local manufacturing and import practices consistent with national laws and international agreements, in particular in the worst hit regions in Africa and where the epidemic is severely setting back national development gains;

(b) Take action to eradicate poverty, which is a major contributory factor in the spread of HIV infection and worsens the impact of the epidemic, in particular for women and girls, as well as depleting resources and incomes of families and endangering the survival of present and future generations;

(c) Identify and implement development-oriented and durable solutions that integrate a gender perspective to external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries, including least developed countries, inter alia, through debt relief, including the option of debt cancellation for official development assistance, in order to help them to finance programmes and projects targeted at development, including the advancement of women, inter alia, through facilitating the delivery of health care and health services and the provision of preventive programmes on HIV/AIDS, especially targeting women and girls; in this regard, welcome the Cologne initiative for the reduction of debt, in particular the speedy implementation of the enhanced heavily indebted poor countries initiatives; and encourage Governments to ensure the provision of adequate funds for its implementation and implement the provision that funds saved should be used to support anti-poverty programmes that are gender sensitive and that address prevention, care and support of women and girls infected and affected;

(d) Ensure international, regional and South-South cooperation, including development assistance and additional adequate resources, to implement gender-sensitive policies and programmes aimed at halting the spread of the epidemic by providing affordable quality treatment and care of all people, especially women and girls living with HIV/AIDS;

(e) Encourage the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) and its co-sponsors, bilateral and multilateral donors and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to intensify their support to empower women and prevent HIV infection and to give urgent and priority attention to the situation of women and girls, especially in Africa, in particular through the International Partnership against AIDS in Africa;

(f) Increase investment in research on the development of HIV vaccines, microbicides and other female-controlled methods, simpler and less expensive diagnostic tests, single-dose treatments for sexually transmitted infections and quality low-cost drug combinations, including for opportunistic infections and sexually transmitted infections, as well as alternative medicine for HIV/AIDS, focusing on the needs of women and girls;

(g) Support and assist research and development centres, in particular at the national level, in the worst-hit regions, with a gender specific focus, in the field of vaccines and treatment for HIV/AIDS, as well as support the efforts by Governments in building and/or strengthening their national capacities in this area;

(h) Develop and implement as well as strengthen already existing training programmes for law enforcement officers, prison officers, medical officers and judicial personnel, as well as United Nations personnel, including peacekeeping staff, to be more sensitive and responsive to the needs of threatened and abused women and children infected with HIV/AIDS, including intravenous drug users, female inmates and orphans;

(i) Ensure that the needs of girls and women in relation to HIV/AIDS in all situations of conflict, post-conflict and peacekeeping, and in the immediate and reconstructive responses to emergencies and natural disasters, are addressed;

(j) Provide gender-sensitive prevention and treatment services for female substance abusers living with HIV/AIDS;

(k) Provide technical and financial support to networks of people living with HIV/AIDS, and non-governmental organizations and community-based organizations involved in implementing HIV/AIDS programmes, in particular women's groups, in order to strengthen their efforts;

(l) Adopt a balanced approach to prevention and comprehensive care, including treatment and support, for women and girls affected by HIV/AIDS, taking into account the role played by poverty, poor nutritional conditions and underdevelopment, which increases the vulnerability of women and girls to HIV/AIDS;

(m) Urge relevant United Nations entities to incorporate a gender perspective into their follow-up and evaluation of the progress made in the control of sexually transmitted infections and HIV/AIDS;

(n) Commend UNAIDS for its advocacy in successfully accelerating both increased prevention and improved access to care, urge Governments and the international community to continue advocating and lobbying, and encourage Governments to enter into negotiations with multinational drug companies for reduction in market prices of HIV/AIDS related drugs and diagnostics to ensure availability, affordability and sustainability to women and girls living with HIV/AIDS.

B. Gender and all forms of discrimination, in particular racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance

1. The Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and other international instruments reaffirm the principles of equality and non-discrimination.

2. The consistent efforts of the international community in promoting gender equality through the convening of world conferences on women are recalled. It should also be recalled that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action adopted at the Fourth World Conference on Women and the outcome documents of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century", emphasize that all human rights of women and of the girl child are an inalienable, integral and indivisible part of universal human rights. The Platform for Action reaffirms that all human rights—civil, cultural, economic, political and social, including the right to development—are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated.

3. The Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action indicate that many women face additional barriers to the enjoyment of their human rights because of such factors as their race, language, ethnicity, culture, religion, disability or socio-economic class or because they are indigenous people, migrants, including women migrant workers, displaced women or refugees. Also, the outcome documents of the twenty-third special session indicate that in situations of armed conflict and foreign occupation, the human rights of women have been extensively violated. Among the further actions and initiatives to implement the platform adopted by the special session were several directed at the elimination of racially motivated violence against women and girls.

4. The efforts of the international community in combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance are recalled.

5. There has been growing recognition that various types of discrimination do not always affect women and men in the same way. Moreover, gender discrimination may be intensified and facilitated by all other forms of discrimination. It has been increasingly recognized that without gender analysis of all forms of discrimination, including multiple forms of discrimination and, in particular, in this context, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, violations of the human rights of women might escape detection and that remedies to address racism may also fail to meet the needs of women and girls. It is also important that efforts to address gender discrimination incorporate approaches to the elimination of all forms of discrimination, including racial discrimination.

6. By its resolution 52/111 of 12 December 1997, the General Assembly decided to convene a World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, to be held in Durban, South Africa, from 31 August to 8 September 2001. In its resolution 53/132 of 9 December 1998, the Assembly proclaimed 2001 as the International Year of Mobilization against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance. It is therefore timely that the gender dimensions of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance are addressed by the Commission on the Status of Women.

7. The increasing gravity of different manifestations of racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia in various parts of the world requires a more integrated and effective approach on the part of relevant mechanisms of the United Nations human rights machinery. These trends affect the implementation of the outcome documents of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century" and of the relevant international instruments against discrimination.

8. The Commission recommends that the following actions be taken:

Actions to be taken by Governments,
the United Nations and civil society, as appropriate

1. An integrated, holistic approach to address multiple forms of discrimination against women and girls, in particular racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance:

(a) Examine the intersection of multiple forms of discrimination, including their root causes, from a gender perspective, with special emphasis on gender-based racial discrimination, in order to develop and implement strategies, policies and programmes aimed at the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women and to increase the role that women play in the design, implementation and monitoring of gender-sensitive anti-racist policies;

(b) Establish and strengthen effective partnerships with and provide support, as appropriate, to all relevant actors of civil society, including non-governmental organizations working to promote gender equality and the advancement of women, in particular women subject to multiple discrimination, in order to promote an integrated and holistic approach to the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women and girls;

(c) Acknowledge the need to address the issues of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance as and where they affect young women and men and boys and girls and recognize the role they play in the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including particular forms of racism experienced by young women and girls, and support the fundamental role played by youth non-governmental organizations in educating young people and children to build a society based on respect and solidarity;

(d) Promote respect for and the value of the full diversity of women's and girls' situations and conditions and recognize that some women face particular barriers to their empowerment, and ensure that the goals of achieving gender equality and the advancement of women, including marginalized women, are reflected in all strategies, policies and programmes aimed at the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women and girls; and mainstream a gender perspective into the preparation and implementation of policies integrating multiculturalism, ensuring the full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms by all women and girls and reaffirming that human rights—civil, cultural, economic, political and social, including the right to development—are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated;

(e) Promote recognition that the empowerment of women is an essential component of a proactive strategy to fight racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and other forms of related intolerance, and take measures to empower women subject to multiple discrimination to exercise fully their rights in all spheres of life and to play an active role in the design and implementation of policies and measures that affect their lives;

(f) Take action to raise awareness and promote the eradication of all forms of discrimination, including multiple discrimination experienced by women, through, inter alia, education and mass media campaigns;

(g) The Platform for Action recognized that women face barriers to full equality and advancement because of such factors as their race, age, language, ethnicity, culture, religion or disability, because they are indigenous women or of other status. Many women encounter specific obstacles related to their family status, particularly as single parents, and their socio-economic status, including their living conditions in rural, isolated or impoverished areas. Additional barriers also exist for refugee women, other displaced women, including internally displaced women, as well as for immigrant women and migrant women, including women migrant workers. Many women are also particularly affected by environmental disasters, serious and infectious diseases and various forms of violence against women;

(h) Acknowledge that racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance manifest themselves in a differentiated manner for women, increasing poverty, causing their living conditions to deteriorate, generating violence and limiting or denying them the full enjoyment and exercise of all their human rights;

(i) Ensure the full and equal opportunity for the sustained participation and representation of indigenous women and girls and of women and girls, as appropriate, from culturally diverse backgrounds, in all relevant decision-making processes;

(j) Ensure that the Commission on the Status of Women takes into account in its work the impact of all forms of discrimination, including multiple discrimination, on the advancement of women;

(k) Acknowledge the ongoing work of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination in taking into account the impact of multiple forms of discrimination on the advancement of women and the achievement of gender equality.

2. Policies, legal measures, mechanisms and machineries:

(a) Establish and/or strengthen, where appropriate, legislation and regulations against all forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including their gender-based manifestations;

(b) Condemn all forms of racism and racial discrimination, including propaganda, activities and organizations based on doctrines of superiority of one race or group of persons, that attempt to justify or promote racism or racial discrimination in any form;

(c) Take concrete measures to promote equality based on the elimination of gender and racial prejudice in all fields, through, inter alia, better access to education, health care, employment and other basic services, to promote full enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights for all women and girls;

(d) Take measures to address, through policies and programmes, racism and racially motivated violence against women and girls and to increase cooperation, policy responses, effective implementation of national legislation and other protective and preventive measures aimed at the elimination of all forms of violence against women and girls;

(e) Review, where appropriate, national legal and other mechanisms, including the criminal justice system, to ensure equality before the law so that women and girls can seek protection, shelter and remedies against all forms of discrimination, including intersectional discrimination;

(f) Review, where appropriate, policies and laws, including those on citizenship, immigration and asylum, for their impact on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women and the achievement of gender equality;

(g) Design and implement policies and measures that address all forms of violence against women and girls, and empower victims of all forms of violence, in particular women and girls, to regain control over their lives, inter alia, through special protection and assistance measures;

(h) Devise, enforce and strengthen effective measures to combat and eliminate all forms of trafficking in women and girls through a comprehensive anti-trafficking strategy consisting of, inter alia, legislative measures, prevention campaigns, information exchange, assistance and protection for and reintegration of the victims and prosecution of all the offenders involved, including intermediaries;

(i) Develop and implement policies to ensure the full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms by all women and girls, regardless of race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin;

(j) Take measures, as appropriate, to promote and strengthen policies and programmes for indigenous women, with their full participation and respect for their cultural diversity, to combat discrimination based on gender and race and to ensure their full enjoyment of all human rights;

(k) Review and revise, as appropriate, emigration policies, with a view to eliminating all discriminatory policies and practices against migrants, especially women and children, and to protect fully all their human rights, regardless of their legal status, as well as to provide them with humane treatment;

(l) Take steps to eliminate any violations of the human rights of women refugees, asylum seekers and internally displaced persons, who are often subjected to sexual and other violence;

(m) Urge all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, in order to achieve its universal ratification, and emphasize the importance of the full compliance of States parties with the obligations they have accepted under this Convention;

(n) Consider signing, ratifying or acceding to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families as a matter of priority, and consider promoting ratification of the relevant conventions of the International Labour Organization.

3. Change attitudes and eliminate stereotypes and prejudice:

(a) Develop gender-sensitive education and training programmes aimed at eliminating discriminatory attitudes towards women and girls, and adopt measures to address the intersection between racist and gender-based stereotypes;

(b) Develop and implement programmes and policies to raise awareness among all relevant actors at the national, regional and international levels to the issue of multiple discrimination against women and girls;

(c) Review and update educational materials, including textbooks, and take appropriate action to remove all elements promoting discrimination, in particular gender-based discrimination, racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

(d) Ensure that education and training, especially teacher training, promote respect for human rights, the culture of peace, gender equality and cultural, religious and other diversity, and encourage educational and training institutions and organizations to adopt policies of equal opportunities and follow up their implementation with the participation of teachers, parents, boys and girls and the community;

(e) Develop strategies to increase awareness among men and boys with respect to their shared responsibility in promoting gender equality and combating all forms of discrimination, in particular racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance as well as multiple discrimination;

(f) Develop anti-racist and gender-sensitive human rights training for personnel in the administration of justice, law enforcement agencies, security and health-care services, schools and migration authorities, paying particular attention to immigration officials, border police and staff of migrant detention centres, as well as for United Nations personnel;

(g) Bearing in mind gender perspective, encourage the mass media to promote ideas of tolerance and understanding among peoples and different cultures.

4. Research and collection of data and information:

(a) Develop methodologies to identify the ways in which various forms of discrimination converge and affect women and girls, and conduct studies on how racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance are reflected in laws, policies, institutions and practices and how this has contributed to the vulnerability, victimization, marginalization and exclusion of women and the girl child;

(b) Collect, analyse and disseminate quantitative, qualitative and gender-sensitive data regarding the impact of all forms of discrimination, including multiple discrimination, on women and girls, and sponsor, where appropriate, surveys and community-based research, including the collection of disaggregated data by sex, age and other variables, as appropriate.

5. Preventing conflict and promoting a culture of peace, equality, non-discrimination, respect and tolerance:

(a) Respect fully international human rights law and international humanitarian law applicable to the rights and protection of women and girls, and take special measures to protect women and girls from gender-based violence, in particular rape and all other forms of sexual violence during armed conflict, and end impunity and prosecute those responsible for genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes, including those relating to sexual and other gender-based violence against women and girls;

(b) Violence against women and girls is a major obstacle to the achievement of the objectives of gender equality, development and peace. Violence against women both violates and impairs or nullifies the enjoyment by women of their human rights and fundamental freedoms. Gender-based violence, such as battering and other domestic violence, sexual abuse, sexual slavery and exploitation, international trafficking in women and children, forced prostitution and sexual harassment, as well as violence against women resulting from cultural prejudice, racism and racial discrimination, xenophobia, pornography, ethnic cleansing, armed conflict, foreign occupation, religious and anti-religious extremism and terrorism, are incompatible with the dignity and worth of the human person and must be combated and eliminated;

(c) Ensure the full and equal opportunity for sustained participation and representation of women at all levels and in all areas in conflict prevention, management and conflict resolution and in post-conflict peace-building.

6. World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance:

The Commission on the Status of Women stresses the importance of mainstreaming a gender perspective into the preparations, work and outcome of the World Conference, and urges the inclusion of women in delegations to the Conference.

Communications on the status of women

Working group. At a closed meeting on 16 March [E/2001/27], the Commission took note of the report of the Working Group on Communications on the Status of Women, established in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1050] to consider ways of making the communications procedure more transparent and efficient. The Working Group considered 14 confidential and three non-confidential communications received directly by the Division for the Advancement of Women and 22 confidential communications received by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights. The Working Group expressed deep concern about the continuing grave violations of women's human rights, as well as persistent and pervasive discrimination against women. In particular, the Working Group was concerned about discrimination against women in employment and in their enjoyment of the right to health; dowry-related crimes; the systematic use of physical and sexual violence against women, including rape as a weapon of armed conflict, torture, beatings, custodial killings, abduction, arbitrary arrests and harassment by military, paramilitary or police forces; the targeting of civilians in conflict situations and the mistreatment of persons internally displaced, especially women and girls; and the failure of authorities to take appropriate action in such cases. The Working Group was also gravely concerned about contemporary forms of slavery, which included domestic and sexual slavery and trafficking in women and girls for economic or sexual exploitation. It noted with concern the ongoing acts of violence, intimidation and death threats of women human rights defenders by members of the police and others in authority, and the lack of investigation by authorities. The Working Group noted with concern the continued discrimination against and systematic attacks, including killings, detention, torture, rape, forced sterilization and forced disappearances, on indigenous groups, and the discriminatory provisions against women in national legal systems. The Working Group expressed deep concern at the harmful traditional practice of female genital mutilation and recognized the urgent need for Governments to implement the relevant international commitments with regard to that practice. Having considered the responses from Governments, the Working Group recommended further public education campaigns and gender-awareness training for specific sectors directed at the elimination of stereotypic attitudes towards women and girls.

Communications procedure. The Commission on the Status of Women had before it a January report of the Secretary-General assessing the implications of the reforms of mechanisms in the human rights area (1503 procedure) for communications concerning the status of women [E/CN.6/2001/12]. The report gave an overview of the development of the Commission's confidential communications procedures and those of the Commission on Human Rights; discussed the operation of the two confidential procedures, the relationship between them and options for better coordination of the procedures; and presented options for more fundamental reform of the existing communications procedure of the Commission on the Status of Women. Among the options presented were: the transformation of the communications procedure into a "situations" mechanism, involving the Working Group on Communications or with a working group of independent experts; the appointment of a special rapporteur who would take over the function of the Working Group; and the appointment of a thematic special rapporteur with the primary task of collecting information and preparing a detailed report.

Programme of work

In a January report [E/CN.6/2001/7 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General presented proposals for the Commission on the Status of Women's multi-year programme of work (2002-2006), which took into account challenges identified in the outcome document of Beijing+5 that impacted on the implementation of the 12 critical areas of concern of the Beijing Platform for Action. In addition to thematic proposals, the Secretary-General suggested that the Commission be sufficiently flexible and dynamic so that it could address issues in addition to those adopted in the programme of work and revisit certain issues taken up at previous sessions.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/2001/27 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 2001/4 without vote [agenda item 14 (a)].

Proposals for a multi-year programme of work for the Commission on the Status of Women for 2002-2006

The Economic and Social Council

1. Adopts a multi-year work programme for the effective implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome documents of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century", which will provide a framework to assess the progress achieved in the implementation of the Platform for Action and the outcome documents of the special session and will be in line with the coordinated follow-up to major forthcoming United Nations conferences and summits;

2. Decides that the work of the Commission on the Status of Women, as set out in the programme of work, shall be closely related to its mandate and to the relevant provisions of the Platform for Action and the outcome documents of the special session, with a view to ensuring their effective implementation through more practical and action-oriented initiatives and outcomes. To achieve effective implementation, the work of the Commission should take into account relevant cross-cutting issues, such as institutional capacity-building;

3. Also decides that the agenda for the sessions of the Commission shall consist of the following:

1. Election of officers
2. Adoption of the agenda and other organizational matters
3. Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and to the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century":
  - (a) Review of gender mainstreaming in entities of the United Nations system
  - (b) Emerging issues, trends and new approaches to issues affecting the situation of women or equality between women and men
  - (c) Implementation of strategic objectives and actions in the critical areas of concern and further actions and initiatives
4. Communications concerning the status of women
5. Follow-up to Economic and Social Council resolutions
6. Provisional agenda for the next session of the Commission
7. Adoption of the report of the Commission on its present session;

4. Further decides on the following calendar:

2002

Item 1

Eradicating poverty, including through the empowerment of women throughout their life cycle in a globalizing world.

Item 2

Environmental management and mitigation of natural disasters: a gender perspective.

2003

Item 1

Participation and access of women to the media, and information and communication technologies and their impact on and use as an instrument for the advancement and empowerment of women.

Item 2

Human rights of women and elimination of all forms of violence against women and girls as defined in the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome documents of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century".

Item 1

The role of men and boys in achieving gender equality.

Item 2

Equal participation of women in conflict prevention, management and resolution and in post-conflict peace-building.

2005Item 1*

Review of the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome documents of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century".

Item 2

Current challenges and forward-looking strategies for the advancement and empowerment of women and girls.

2006Item 1*

Enhanced participation of women in development: an enabling environment for achieving gender equality and the advancement of women, taking into account, inter alia, the fields of education, health and work.

Item 2

Equal participation of women and men in decision-making processes at all levels.

UN Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM)

During 2001 [A/57/125], the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) continued to focus on strengthening women's economic security and rights; ensuring that women's leadership shaped governance and peace-building; and promoting women's human rights and eliminating violence against women. UNIFEM's work was undertaken in the context of its 2000-2003 strategy and business plan, endorsed by the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1127].

Four key results emerged from UNIFEM's work on women's economic security and rights: new and strengthened institutions, laws and policies to facilitate women's equal ownership and access to economic resources; increased knowledge and understanding with respect to managing globalization and economic transition from the perspective of poor women; new commitments to incorporate gender perspectives in economic governance; and increased economic capacity for women entrepreneurs, producers and informal sector workers. Among notable results from UNIFEM's initiatives in the governance and peace-building area were: the creation of replicable models for increasing women's leadership in peace-building and reconstruction; and new and strengthened partnerships with UN agencies. Promoting women's human rights and eliminating violence against women continued to be a strong focus in all of the regions in which UNIFEM worked. Efforts resulted in: new and strengthened policies, legislation and commitments; the creation of new or strengthened institutional mechanisms to address gender-based violence; and scaled-up and replicable strategies based on UNIFEM-supported pilot projects and lessons learned about ending violence and addressing the gender dimensions of HIV/AIDS. Considerable progress was made in 2001 in strengthening UN system capacity to support women's empowerment and gender mainstreaming in its policies and programmes. Results included: stronger and more focused support to the resident coordinator system; the development of new agreements and strengthening of existing collaboration with UN funds, programmes and specialized agencies; and heightened visibility for field-based innovations for gender equality in the intergovernmental arena. The Fund's achievements in supporting learning and strategic partnerships included: more targeted and focused documentation and dissemination of experiences and lessons learned; increased collaboration with partners; and movement from isolated projects to thematic programmes.

UNIFEM's core resources increased by 8 per cent to $20.7 million in 2001 from $19.1 million in 2000. Total contributions rose to $27.9 million in 2001, an increase of $1.3 million over 2000. UNIFEM continued to enter into co-financing arrangements with various donors. In 2001, a total of $12.3 million was approved by donors for multi-years, compared with $8.2 million in 2000.

UNIFEM's Trust Fund in Support of Actions to Eliminate Violence against Women approved grants for 21 new projects in 2001 to address diverse forms of violence against women, including domestic violence, trafficking and sexual exploitation and female servitude.

Through an initiative to use media and communications strategies to address gender-based violence, UNIFEM awarded grants to five organizations for projects that included a soap opera in Nicaragua to reach young viewers with the message that they had a right to make their own decisions and confront discrimination; and a music video in India that focused on violence against women and its impact on women's livelihoods. The Trust Fund's learning component held regional strategic communications workshops in Mexico, Nepal, Slovakia and Zimbabwe for Trust Fund grantees. In addition, UNIFEM joined with Johns Hopkins University (Baltimore, Maryland, United States) to develop a catalogue, Picturing a Life Free of Violence, and a database of media and communications resources on violence against women.

Since its establishment in 1996, the Trust Fund had awarded $6.8 million in grants to 129 projects in over 73 countries.

In July [A/56/174], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report on UNIFEM's 2000 activities [YUN 2000, p. 1126]. The Assembly, by decision 56/442 of 21 December, took note of the report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/56/576], adopted resolution 56/130 without vote [agenda item 112].

United Nations Development Fund for Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/125 of 14 December 1984, in which it established the United Nations Development Fund for Women as a separate and identifiable entity in autonomous association with the United Nations Development Programme, as well as its resolutions 52/94 of 12 December 1997 and 54/136 of 17 December 1999,

Recalling also the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women, which recognizes the special role of the Fund in the promotion of the empowerment of women and calls upon the Fund to review and strengthen its work programme in the light of the Platform for Action, focusing on the political and economic empowerment of women,

Welcoming the contributions that the Fund has made in supporting initiatives of Member States, United Nations organizations and non-governmental organizations to formulate and implement activities that promote gender equality and the empowerment of women, concentrating on three thematic areas, namely, strengthening women's economic capacity, engendering governance and leadership and promoting women's human rights and the elimination of all forms of violence against women,

Recalling and reaffirming the commitments made at United Nations world conferences and summit meetings and special sessions of the General Assembly held since 1990 and their follow-up processes,

Noting the importance of the work of the Consultative Committee on the United Nations Development Fund for Women in policy and programme directions, as stipulated in the annex to resolution 39/125,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the note by the Secretary-General on the activities of the United Nations Development Fund for Women;

2. Encourages the Fund to continue to assist, in its areas of expertise, in the implementation of commitments made at the Fourth World Conference on Women and at the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century";

3. Commends the focus by the Fund on strategic programmes in its three thematic areas and on supporting innovative and experimental activities in implementing its strategy and business plan (2000-2003) within the context of the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome document of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly;

4. Notes with appreciation the increased synergy between the United Nations Development Fund for Women and other funds, programmes and organizations of the United Nations system, as well as the Office of the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women and the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Secretariat, and calls upon these entities to continue their collaborative efforts;

5. Notes the ability of the Fund to execute projects and programmes on behalf of the United Nations Development Programme in order to fulfil their respective mandates as well as their individual and common purposes;

6. Also notes the activities undertaken by the Fund in follow-up to General Assembly resolution 54/136, including activities relating to the impact of armed conflict on women and the role of women in peace-building, and the support it provides for the participation of women in peace processes, and in this regard encourages the Fund to continue to consult with Member States on these activities;

7. Emphasizes the importance of the Trust Fund in Support of Actions to Eliminate Violence against Women and its learning component in extracting and sharing good practices with respect to the elimination of violence against women, and reiterates the call to Governments, non-governmental organizations and the public and private sectors to consider contributing or increasing contributions to the Trust Fund;

8. Encourages the Fund to continue to contribute to ensuring that a gender perspective is integrated into a comprehensive approach to the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) and acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) at all levels of the three thematic areas of the Fund, in particular in the follow-up to the special session of the General Assembly on HIV/AIDS, building on its partnerships within the United Nations system, in particular with the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS;

9. Also encourages the Fund to support the development or strengthening of mechanisms to increase accountability for gender equality, at the request of countries, including by building the capacity of Governments to undertake gender-responsive budget analysis;

10. Urges the Fund to continue its efforts to mainstream a gender perspective in United Nations operational activities, including through the resident coordinator system and the common country assessment and United Nations Development Assistance Framework processes;

11. Welcomes the role of the Fund in promoting the strategic importance of the empowerment of women in all of the regions in which it operates, and notes with appreciation the enhanced programme activities of the Fund in the African region;

12. Encourages the Fund to continue to assist Governments in implementing the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, in order to advance gender equality at all levels, including by reinforcing the cooperation between Governments and civil society, especially women's organizations;

13. Recognizes that the Fund has been able to secure increased contributions for its work, and expresses its appreciation to Member States and private organizations and foundations, whose increased contributions demonstrate their commitment to the issues on which the Fund is working;

14. Expresses its appreciation for the work of the national committees for the Fund, and encourages them, with appropriate support from the Fund, to increase their capacity and intensify their outreach to civil society and the private sector in terms of building broad-based visibility and mobilizing resources for the work of the Fund;

15. Urges Member States, non-governmental organizations and members of the private sector that have contributed to the Fund to continue to contribute and to consider increasing their financial contributions, and urges others to consider contributing to the Fund.

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the advancement of women would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464).

International Research and Training Institute (INSTRAW)

The Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW) held its twenty-first session (22-24 May) via the Internet. All Board Members were in their home countries, except for the outgoing and new Presidents of the Board, who were at the Institute's headquarters in Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic [E/2001/88]. An autonomous institution, INSTRAW undertook research and training programmes for the advancement and mobilization of women in development.

The Board stated that the United Nations should take measures to ensure INSTRAW's continuity by motivating Member States to contribute to its sustainability, taking into consideration the fact that phases I and II of the Gender Awareness Information and Networking System (GAINS), launched in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1127], had been completed, phase III had been initiated, and 50 per cent of the projected funds had been invested. It recommended that a new INSTRAW Director be appointed as soon as possible and that, if funds allowed, the new Director should assume functions while the current Director was still at the Institute in order to facilitate a smooth transition. The Board approved the proposed strategic focus, work plan and budgetary requirements for the year 2001, acknowledged the relevance of the GAINS methodology and recognized the need to secure INSTRAW's financial sustainability beyond 2001 in order to implement the methodology fully. It requested the Economic and Social Council to recommend to the General Assembly the transfer of any funds remaining of the $800,000 supplement provided in 2000 [ibid., p. 1128] for 2001 as a reserve for the year 2002. The Board recommended that, if insufficient funds were received for INSTRAW's core operations for 2002, operations for that year should be adjusted to the level of funds available. It recommended the immediate implementation of INSTRAW's fund-raising strategy.

INSTRAW restructuring

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2000/24 [YUN 2000, p. 1127], the Secretary-General submitted a May report on the revitalization and strengthening of INSTRAW [E/2001/76]. He outlined efforts by the UN Secretariat and the Institute to improve the financial situation of the Institute and to explore new sources of funding. The report also assessed prospects for securing the Institute's sustainability beyond 31 December 2001.

INSTRAW, with a consulting firm's assistance, had developed and implemented a fund-raising strategy, which included developing a list of potential new funding sources and publicity and communications materials, expanding links and building partnerships with organizations within and outside the UN system, and raising public awareness of the capabilities of GAINS. To diversify its funding sources, the Institute prepared a portfolio of special projects for which it sought funding from non-government sources.

Secretariat efforts included the holding of a series of donor meetings, demonstrations of GAINS for delegations and NGOs, and continued appeals to Governments for contributions. Despite those efforts to improve INSTRAW's financial situation, reserves remained insufficient to assure the Institute's full transition in 2002 to the new working method mandated by the General Assembly and the Council. Without effective measures by Member States to ensure INSTRAW's financial stability beyond 2001, it would face closure by the end of the year.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2001/40 [draft: E/2001/L.25] without vote [agenda item 14 (a)].

Revitalization and strengthening of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling its resolution 2000/24 of 28 July 2000, in which, inter alia, it expressed grave concern that the level of contributions had not adequately increased to a level to enable, in particular, the full implementation of the Gender Awareness Information and Networking System nor the operational viability of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women beyond 31 December 2000, and reiterating the importance of supporting traditional methods of information dissemination, research and training,
