Foreword

On 11 September 2001, devastating terrorist attacks in the United States of America, including on the host city of the United Nations, dramatized the global threat of international terrorism and highlighted the need for a common, and multifaceted, strategy to combat it. While the most direct result of 11 September was the conflict in Afghanistan and the beginnings of United Nations efforts to assist in the transformation of that country, the international community also focused on strengthening international law and cooperation to prevent and suppress terrorism.

Yet the other social, economic and political problems that blighted so much of our planet and so many of its peoples were rendered no less important by 11 September, and they also demanded the attention of the international community throughout the year. During a special session on HIV/AIDS, the General Assembly adopted the Declaration of Commitment—the first global battle plan against the epidemic. The Assembly also held a special session on human settlements, while major conferences discussed racism, the illicit trade in small arms and the problems of the least developed countries. Conflict continued to plague Africa, though in some countries—most notably in Sierra Leone—there were signs of improvement. Steady progress was made in the transition to independence in East Timor and towards local control in Kosovo. Yet the Georgian-Abkhaz conflict escalated, and a terrible cycle of violence and reprisals plagued the lives of Israelis and Palestinians.

In this year of trial and toil, the Norwegian Nobel Committee, in awarding the United Nations the centennial Nobel Peace Prize, recognized the work of the Organization for “a better-organized and more peaceful world”.

I trust that this Yearbook of the United Nations for 2001 bears out this theme by showing the crucial role of the United Nations in addressing pressing global problems and strengthening international cooperation, as well as the magnitude of the challenges that lie before us as we continue our common efforts to achieve the goals of the Charter. As the year showed, so many of our problems are common problems, and international cooperation is more necessary than ever if we are to address the dangers, spread the burdens and share the opportunities of our age.

About the 2001 edition of the Yearbook

This volume of the YEARBOOK OF THE UNITED NATIONS continues the tradition of providing the most comprehensive coverage of the activities of the United Nations. It is an indispensable reference tool for the research community, diplomats, government officials and the general public seeking readily available information on the UN system and its related organizations.

Efforts by the Department of Public Information to achieve a more timely publication have resulted in having to rely on provisional documentation and other materials to prepare the relevant articles. Largely, Security Council resolutions and presidential statements, Economic and Social Council resolutions and some other texts in the present volume are provisional.

Structure and scope of articles

The Yearbook is subject-oriented and divided into six parts covering political and security questions; human rights issues; economic and social questions; legal questions; institutional, administrative and budgetary questions; and intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations. Chapters and topical headings present summaries of pertinent UN activities, including those of intergovernmental and expert bodies, major reports, Secretariat activities and, in selected cases, the views of States in written communications.

Activities of United Nations bodies. All resolutions, decisions and other major activities of the principal organs and, on a selective basis, those of subsidiary bodies are either reproduced or summarized in the appropriate chapter. The texts of all resolutions and decisions of substantive nature adopted in 2001 by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council are reproduced or summarized under the relevant topic. These texts are preceded by procedural details giving date of adoption, meeting number and vote totals (in favour-against-abstaining) if any; and an indication of their approval by a sessional or subsidiary body prior to final adoption. The texts are followed by details of any recorded or roll-call vote on the resolution/decision as a whole.

Major reports. Most reports of the Secretary-General, in 2001, along with selected reports from other UN sources, such as seminars and working groups, are summarized briefly.

Secretariat activities. The operational activities of the United Nations for development and humanitarian assistance are described under the relevant topics. For major activities financed outside the UN regular budget, selected information is given on contributions and expenditures.

Views of States. Written communications sent to the United Nations by Member States and circulated as documents of the principal organs have been summarized in selected cases, under the relevant topics. Substantive actions by the Security Council have been analysed and brief reviews of the Council's deliberations given, particularly in cases where an issue was taken up but no resolution was adopted.

Related organizations. The Yearbook also briefly describes the 2001 activities of the specialized agencies and other related organizations of the UN system.

Multilateral treaties. Information on signatories and parties to multilateral treaties and conventions is taken from Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General: Status as at 31 December 2001 (ST/LEG/SER.E/20 (vols. I & II)), Sales No. E.02.V.4.

Terminology

Formal titles of bodies, organizational units, conventions, declarations and officials are given in full on first mention in an article or sequence of articles. They are also used in resolution/decision texts, and in the SUBJECT INDEX under the key word of the title. Short titles may be used in subsequent references.

How to find information in the Yearbook

The user may locate information on the United Nations activities contained in this volume by the use of the Table of Contents, the Subject Index, the Index of Resolutions and Decisions and the Index of Security Council Presidential Statements. The volume also has five appendices: Appendix I comprises a roster of Member States; Appendix II reproduces the Charter of the United Nations, including the Statute of the International Court of Justice; Appendix III gives the structure of the principal organs of the United Nations; Appendix IV provides the agenda for each session of the principal organs in 2001; and Appendix V gives the addresses of the United Nations information centres and services worldwide.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

References in square brackets in each chapter of Parts One to Five of this volume give the symbols of the main documents issued in 2001 on the topic. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/56/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the fifty-sixth session, beginning with A/56/1. Documents of special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S- and A/ES-, followed by the session number.

A/C.- refers to documents of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.1/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.6/-, a document of the Sixth Committee. A/BUR/- refers to documents of the General Committee. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/CN.4/-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two arabic numerals; the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions of regular sessions are numbered consecutively, from 301 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 401 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/2001/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 2001 sessions, beginning with E/2001/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by identifying numbers, refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/C.2/-, to documents of its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1 (resolution 2001/1); and one for decisions, beginning with 201 (decision 2001/201).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1 (1946).

ST/-, followed by symbols representing the issuing department or office, refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

Documents of certain bodies bear special symbols, including the following:

ACC/-	Administrative Committee on Coordination
CD/-	Conference on Disarmament
CERD/-	Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination
DC/-	Disarmament Commission
DP/-	United Nations Development Programme
HS/-	Commission on Human Settlements
ITC/-	International Trade Centre
TD/-	United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
UNEP/-	United Nations Environment Programme

Many documents of the regional commissions bear special symbols. These are sometimes preceded by the following:

E/ECA/-	Economic Commission for Africa
E/ECE/-	Economic Commission for Europe
E/ECLAC/-	Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean
E/ESCAP/-	Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific
E/ESCWA/-	Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

"L" in a symbol refers to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions; "CONF." to documents of a conference; "INF." to those of general information. Summary records are designated by "SR.", verbatim records by "PV.", each followed by the meeting number.

United Nations sales publications each carry a sales number with the following components separated by periods: a capital letter indicating the language(s) of the publication; two arabic numerals indicating the year; a Roman numeral indicating the subject category; a capital letter indicating a subdivision of the category, if any; and an arabic numeral indicating the number of the publication within the category. Examples: E.01.II.A.2; E/F/R.01.II.E.7; E.01.X.1.

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

Following is the Secretary-General's report on the work of the Organization, submitted to the fifty-sixth session of the General Assembly. The Assembly took note of it on 26 September (decision 56/404). On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item would remain for consideration during the resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464).

Introduction

1. My annual report on the work of the Organization reviews the efforts of the United Nations to find constructive solutions to the fundamental problems of our age. It is a sober recognition of the complexities of the tasks facing the Organization. At the same time, it underlines the enduring significance of the United Nations as an instrument of global cooperation for the common good.

2. The dawn of the new millennium brought an historic reaffirmation by Member States of the purposes and principles of their Organization. At the Millennium Summit, held from 6 to 8 September 2000 in New York, 147 heads of State and Government, and 189 Member States in total, adopted the Millennium Declaration, pledging their collective responsibility to uphold the principles of human dignity, equality and equity at the global level. In my report to the General Assembly entitled "Road map towards the implementation of the Millennium Declaration", I offer a programme for meeting those ambitious objectives.

3. One of the United Nations strengths is its capacity to adjust to changing international conditions. We must preserve this tradition of innovation while maintaining the principles of the Charter, which have guided the Organization for 56 years. We must prepare for the possibilities of the future and meet the new demands made on the United Nations.

4. During the past year, we have witnessed striking contrasts on the international scene, both encouraging developments and dangerous threats. These mixed global trends are a reminder that the pursuit of international peace and progress requires the sustained commitment and engagement of the community of nations.

5. Today, universal ideas—the sovereignty of the people, accountability of leaders, individual rights and the rule of law—are spreading around the world. Yet there is no guarantee that these values will not be reversed, and that some nations will not once again succumb to tyranny and oppression.

6. The chapters of this report present a comprehensive review of the various activities of the United Nations system in pursuit of common objectives. The United Nations role in peace and security remains an essential part of its global responsibilities. Conflict prevention is of critical importance and requires a comprehensive understanding of the underlying causes and dynamics of violent conflict. The Organization's authority as a credible instrument to prevent conflict depends on its capacity to address the root causes of deadly conflict.

7. The United Nations is about much more than peace and security. The value of the Organization in providing humanitarian assistance to the vulnerable in natural disasters and complex emergencies has frequently been affirmed.

8. As I have stressed often, development cooperation is a solid foundation on which to build stability, economic justice and social development. The nature and scope of the development challenge will require an unprecedented level of financial commitment and international cooperation. The United Nations has assisted in developing policies and tools to tackle the problems involved and to construct the building blocks of sustainable peace.

9. The quest of the United Nations to build a world of order and justice can be achieved only through respect for the rule of law in international affairs. The growth of international law, the ratification of international treaties and the prosecution of war criminals by international tribunals will help to ensure that ruthless force does not prevail.

10. Management reform within the United Nations should always be viewed as a work in progress in which constant efforts are made to enhance the Organization's effectiveness, efficiency and relevance.

11. In an increasingly globalized world, none of the critical issues we are dealing with can be resolved within a solely national framework. All of them require cooperation, partnership and burden-sharing among Governments, the United Nations, regional organizations, non-governmental organizations, the private sector and civil society. The United Nations has made important efforts to forge global partnerships to promote the international interest, but we need to reach out still further.

12. On 29 June 2001, Member States did me great honour in appointing me to a second term as Secretary-General. We have achieved a great deal over the past five years. I firmly believe, however, that we can and must do better.

13. The United Nations is an embodiment of the will of humankind to defeat violence with the power of reason and to achieve some betterment of the human condition. Its Member States work together to make principle and justice prevail in world affairs. I am confident that, with the active support of Member States and the peoples of the world, the United Nations will fulfil its promise as an indispensable institution for international cooperation.

10 September 2001

On 11 September, less than 24 hours after my annual report was issued, our host city was subjected to a cold-blooded and vicious terrorist attack. I wish to express my profound sympathy to the victims, to their loved ones and to the people and Government of the United States. Terrorist acts are never justified. I condemn these deliberate acts of terrorism and those who planned and carried them out in the strongest possible terms.

Chapter I

Achieving peace and security

14. The United Nations activities in peace and security have been conducted against a background of suffering caused by virulent conflicts across the world. These conflicts involve a preponderance of civilian rather than combatant victims, many of them women and children; massive movements of refugees and internally displaced persons; increasingly complex (though widely varying) conflict-sustaining economies; and a ready access to weapons of all kinds, particularly small arms, which have a devastating impact on people and societies throughout the world. Such conflicts threaten stability, undermine human security, inflict suffering on many millions of people and damage local and regional economies, infrastructures and the environment, in ways that will have consequences for decades to come.

15. The United Nations has an obligation to prevent the outbreak of armed conflict wherever and whenever possible. To this end, I have reinforced my efforts to move the United Nations from a culture of reaction to one of prevention. In June 2001, I submitted a major report on the prevention of armed conflict to the General Assembly and the Security Council (A/55/985-S/2001/574 and Corr.1), in which I reviewed the progress that has been achieved in developing the capacity of the United Nations to prevent conflict and presented specific recommendations to enhance the efforts of the United Nations system in this field.

16. Where the United Nations is involved in peacekeeping or peace-building, preventing the recurrence of conflict is a central priority. In most cases today, our mandates for peacekeeping extend beyond the classic missions of the past, where lightly armed forces were interposed between armies, and involve providing assistance to local authorities in a wide range of areas. They may include humanitarian relief and mine action; disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of combatants; training of the police and judiciary; monitoring human rights; providing electoral assistance; and strengthening national institutions to ensure that future problems can be resolved by democratic means without recourse to violence. In East Timor and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, where the United Nations heads transitional administrations, our responsibilities are still greater.

17. The field operations that conduct this broad array of tasks rely upon the support structures of the United Nations Secretariat to achieve their goals. As was ably documented by the report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations (A/55/305-S/2000/809), the current structures came into being through improvisation. In many respects they are insufficient, or poorly adapted to real needs. While many peacekeeping successes have been achieved, those involved have often had to make enormous efforts to overcome the deficiencies of existing structures.

18. As a result of the findings of the Panel on Peace Operations, the international community has begun to work towards the creation of secure and adequate foundations for an effective structure to support United Nations peace operations. Part of my own contribution has been to submit to the General Assembly a comprehensive review of all the elements within the Secretariat that play a role in peacekeeping operations (A/55/977). I have also charged my staff with the preparation of a draft plan of action on peace-building. The plan, now being finalized, is a practical guide for the United Nations system on how Headquarters can best support colleagues in the field in the formulation and implementation of coherent peace-building strategies.

19. In this respect, I warmly endorse the observation made by the President of the Security Council in his statement of 20 February 2001 that "a well-planned and coordinated peace-building strategy can play a significant role in conflict prevention" (S/PRST/2001/5). I welcome the Security Council's growing interest in the protection of civilians, in particular of women and children, and its focused attention on issues such as HIV/AIDS. We have learned that, within the United Nations system, efforts to prevent conflict and to keep and build peace must be driven by realities in the field, underpinned by rigorous situation analysis, and sustained by timely and targeted support from Headquarters as well as adequate resources from Member States. I am optimistic that the efforts made in the last year to lay out our requirements for achieving peace and security will contribute substantially to achieving the pledges made in the Millennium Declaration, provided the necessary resources are made available by Member States.

Conflict prevention and peacemaking

20. While comprehensive and coherent conflict prevention strategies offer the greatest potential for promoting lasting peace, they have never been easy to formulate or to implement. I have been gratified to note that in recent years Member States are turning increasing attention and providing more assistance to conflict prevention. For the United Nations, the concept of conflict prevention must be put into practice, and the rhetoric matched by action.

21. My report on the prevention of armed conflict contains concrete recommendations to enhance the effectiveness of various United Nations organs, bodies, agencies and Secretariat departments and to strengthen cooperation between the United Nations, regional organizations, non-governmental organizations and civil society in conflict prevention. It underlines that the development and humanitarian agencies of the United Nations system, together with the Bretton Woods institutions, have a vital role to play in creating a peaceful environment, as well as in addressing the root causes of conflicts at the early stages of prevention. I intend to continue dispatching United Nations interdisciplinary fact-finding and confidence-building missions to volatile regions; to start submitting periodic regional or subregional reports to the Security Council on disputes that may potentially threaten international peace and security; to develop regional prevention strategies with regional partners, and organs and agencies of the United Nations, as appropriate; to establish an informal network of eminent persons for conflict prevention; and to improve the capacity and resource base for preventive action in the Secretariat. I look forward to constructive dialogue with Member States on the contributions that we may make together in the effort to ensure that a culture of prevention takes root in the international community.

22. In West Africa, the United Nations has intensified its partnership with the countries of the region. Collectively, we have concentrated on identifying potential threats to peace and are co-operating to prevent such challenges from deteriorating into violent conflict. This was the goal of the multidisciplinary missions I sent to the Gambia in November 2000 and to West Africa in March 2001. The Gambia's international partners have since undertaken to work closely with the country, within the framework of an integrated preventive strategy, to help strengthen the Gambia's capacity to avert a worsening of conditions. As a result of the second mission, a United Nations Office in West Africa will be established, headed by a Special Representative. The office will aim to enhance the United Nations capacity for monitoring, early warning and conflict prevention in the subregion and work closely with the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) and other partners.

23. In an effort to expand the benefits of an integrated regional approach, I dispatched senior envoys to the Central African Republic and Côte d'Ivoire at moments when the two countries faced acute tension and friction late in 2000. Their respective efforts gave us a more detailed understanding of the situation. The International Commission of Inquiry for Côte d'Ivoire, which I set up at the request of the Government to look into the violence that followed the presidential elections held on 22 October 2000, has completed its work. Its mission was to facilitate justice and prevent impunity, and also to promote healing and reconciliation within Ivorian society. In December 2000, I sent my Special Envoy to assess the impact of the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo on two of its immediate neighbours, the Central African Republic and the Republic of the Congo. The mission was also designed as a confidence-building measure to promote cooperation among the countries concerned in addressing common challenges along their shared borders.

24. The Millennium Declaration called for enhanced institutional cooperation between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations. The utility of such an approach has been demonstrated in West Africa. Nowhere was this more evident than in the Mano River basin, where the United Nations, in collaboration with the three Mano River Union countries and ECOWAS, actively participated in addressing complex humanitarian, political and security situations affecting Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone. I have particularly supported ECOWAS initiatives to promote dialogue among the three countries, in the belief that, without such dialogue, efforts to address the root causes of the subregion's problems will remain insufficient and ineffective. Since the imposition of sanctions in May 2001, I have also stressed the importance of remaining engaged with Liberia in the pursuit of durable peace in the subregion.

25. Elsewhere in Africa, impetus was given to efforts to resolve two long-standing conflicts. In Burundi, the signing of the Arusha Agreement on Peace and Reconciliation on 28 August 2000 brought new momentum to the peace process. As stipulated in the Agreement, an Implementation Monitoring Committee was established under United Nations chairmanship to follow up, monitor, supervise, coordinate and ensure the effective implementation of all provisions of the Agreement. I appointed my Special Representative for the Great Lakes region as its chairman. The issue of the transitional leadership has since been resolved and a transitional government is expected to be established on 1 November 2001. However, the absence of a ceasefire remains an impediment to the implementation of the Arusha Agreement. I remain hopeful that the negotiations between the armed rebel groups and the Government of Burundi, facilitated by the Deputy President of South Africa, Jacob Zuma, on behalf of former President Nelson Mandela, will soon prove successful.

26. The establishment of the Transitional National Government of Somalia, as a result of the Djibouti initiative, and its move to Mogadishu in October 2000, marked an important step in the effort to end the conflict in Somalia. Unfortunately, the lack of progress in completing the peace process and the precarious security situation in much of Somalia have so far prevented me from recommending to the Security Council the establishment of a United Nations peace-building mission in the country. We remain ready to assist whenever conditions permit and I urge the international community to remain engaged in the search for an end to Somalia's long nightmare.

27. I cannot report significant changes in Angola, where the war continues to cause intense suffering. The Government has indicated a willingness to resume dialogue with UNITA with a view to completing the remaining tasks under the Lusaka Protocol. Both sides have reiterated their commitment to the Lusaka Protocol, although they continue to disagree on how to complete its implementation. My Adviser for Special Assignments in Africa continues to pay special attention to Angola. The United Nations remains ready to assist the Government and others concerned to end the war, and to provide technical assistance for the elections to be held in 2002 and maintain its programmes of humanitarian relief and capacity-building in the field of human rights.

28. In the Middle East, the deteriorating situation in the region, resulting in the worst crisis since the signing of the Oslo Agreement in 1993, remains a source of great concern for the international community. The outbreak of violence in the occupied Palestinian territory and in Israel late in September 2000 has brought extensive loss of life and serious decline in the economic conditions on both sides, as well as a devastating deterioration in the humanitarian situation of the Palestinians. In view of the gravity of the situation and its negative implications for international peace and security, I have devoted much of my personal attention to this issue. I have maintained close and regular contacts with the parties and other leaders in the region and the international community to find a way forward. I visited the region in October 2000 to explore avenues to end the violence and to revive the peace process. I worked with the parties and the leaders of the United States of America, the European Union, Egypt and Jordan to reach an understanding at the Sharm el-Sheikh Summit on the steps required to end the confrontation. The report of the Sharm el-Sheikh Fact-finding Committee, known as the Mitchell report, which was released in April, provided a viable basis for a return to the negotiating table, and I fully endorsed its recommendations. In June 2001, I went again to the Middle East to encourage the parties to consolidate the ceasefire agreement and move towards full implementation of the Mitchell report.

29. The conflict between Israelis and Palestinians can be resolved only through a political settlement. To this end, I once again urge both sides to end violence, adhere to the security agreements already agreed upon and restart a viable political process leading to peace and reconciliation.

30. The dramatic developments during the year under review and the tragic loss of life have underlined the urgency of reaching a comprehensive, just and lasting solution to the Middle East conflict on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973).

31. In view of Iraq's continuing non-compliance with Security Council resolutions, in particular resolution 1284(1999), the United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission has not been deployed. It remains a great concern that, since December 1998, the United Nations has not been able to verify Iraq's adherence to Security Council resolutions regarding weapons of mass destruction. Moreover, Iraq continues its non-cooperation with the High-level Coordinator, who is seeking to repatriate all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals and secure the return of Kuwaiti property. I deeply regret the continuing suffering of the Iraqi people and share their hopes that sanctions can be lifted sooner rather than later. While I am prepared to resume my dialogue with the Government of Iraq, a first round of which was held in February 2001, Iraq must reconsider its non-cooperation with the Security Council if it wishes to make progress towards an eventual lifting of the sanctions.

32. Little or no progress has been made towards ending the conflict in Afghanistan, despite the tireless efforts of my Personal Representative to bring the warring parties to the negotiating table. In the year under review, a severe drought has added to the woes of the Afghan people and the humanitarian crisis now afflicting the country has contributed to a sense of hopelessness, further aggravating the plight of Afghan civilians, particularly women and girls, under the harsh policies of the Taliban regime. This conflict, like so many others we face around the world, cannot be considered in isolation from its regional context. A solution can be advanced only with the active and coordinated support of neighbouring States, especially the Islamic Republic of Iran and Pakistan, and other members of the "six plus two" group of countries. A more coordinated approach by the international community will be required if significant progress in addressing the problems of Afghanistan is to be achieved.

33. Over the past two years, sporadic fighting, including hostage-taking, initiated by extremist and terrorist forces, has affected some countries in Central Asia. These isolated but worrisome developments are related in part to the situation in Afghanistan and in part to other factors such as deteriorating economic conditions and the resulting social tensions. In cooperation with Member States in the region and other interested parties, the United Nations is prepared to offer assistance in the political, developmental and humanitarian fields in order to address the root causes of instability.

34. In March 2001, I visited several countries in South Asia. In my meetings with the leaders of India and Pakistan, I urged them to resume their bilateral dialogue with a view to reducing tensions in the region, including Kashmir. I was greatly encouraged that the leaders of India and Pakistan held a summit meeting at Agra in July. I hope that the useful discussions held there will continue and develop into a sustained dialogue. While I remain concerned at the unresolved civil war in Sri Lanka, I hope that the good offices of Norway will soon result in the initiation of peace talks.

35. In East Asia, I am pleased to report that a peaceful settlement of the conflict in Bougainville has been reached. Following talks between the Government of Papua New Guinea and the Bougainville parties, facilitated by the United Nations Political Office in Bougainville, a comprehensive agreement covering the issues of autonomy, referendum and weapons disposal was reached on 22 June 2001. The involvement of regional countries and the consistent support of the Security Council were crucial to the achievement of this agreement.

36. In the implementation of the mandate entrusted to me by the General Assembly, my Special Envoy and I have continued to encourage the Government of Myanmar to engage in a substantive dialogue with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi in order to achieve national reconciliation and to return the country to democratic rule. During the year under review, a number of steps have been taken to build confidence between the two sides. The United Nations is committed to continuing to facilitate the dialogue and looks forward to further progress.

37. Together with relevant agencies and programmes of the United Nations system, I intend to enhance our efforts to assist Indonesia as it seeks to establish a democratic society and to address the wide range of complex issues facing the country. It is my firm belief that Indonesia's territorial integrity can best be assured by adherence to democratic norms and the promotion of human rights. To this end, efforts should be made to support the reform process that the Government is implementing, as well as to help find peaceful resolutions to the problems in regions such as Aceh, Maluku and West Papua.

38. I shall also continue to search for ways and means to contribute to inter-Korean rapprochement and other positive developments in the region. I believe that the international community should take active measures to foster peace and stability in this region and urge Member States to consider further support for promoting dialogue, trust and reconciliation on the peninsula.

39. In Europe, proximity talks on Cyprus with the parties, led by Glafcos Clerides and Rauf Denktash, proceeded under my auspices until November 2000. However, Mr. Denktash asked that no date be set for talks early in 2001. Although it was not possible to resume talks immediately, my Special Adviser continued to hold consultations with a number of Governments and organizations, making preparations to be of further assistance to the parties at the appropriate time. Late in August, I met Mr. Denktash at Salzburg with a view to moving towards an early resumption of the process.

40. My Special Representative for Georgia, in cooperation with the Russian Federation as facilitator, the members of the group of Friends of the Secretary-General for Georgia, and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, has continued his efforts to pursue a comprehensive settlement of the Georgian/Abkhaz conflict. The two sides were able to agree on a series of concrete confidence-building steps at the Third High-level Meeting on Confidence-building Measures, which was held at Yalta in March 2001 at the invitation of the Government of Ukraine.

41. In Latin America, my Special Adviser on International Assistance to Colombia maintained regular contacts in Colombia and abroad. Peace talks between the Government and the two largest guerrilla groups proceeded intermittently throughout the year. Nevertheless, the violence intensified, resulting in frequent violations of human rights and in growing numbers of internally displaced persons. Analysts have warned that fighting, displacement and drug cultivation are likely to increase and spread further beyond the borders of Colombia. The United Nations stands ready, at the request of the parties to the conflict, to assist further in promoting a peaceful resolution. It is my hope that the parties will take urgent measures to cease violence against the unarmed civilian population and to ensure full respect for human rights and international humanitarian law. I also remain concerned at the adverse environmental effects that the cultivation of drug crops, the processing of narcotics and forced eradication efforts have had. The combination of counter-narcotics and counter-insurgency efforts poses the risk of a regional arms race and could lead to a spread of fighting, displacement and drug cultivation beyond the borders of Colombia.

Peacekeeping and peace-building

42. While the conflicts that United Nations peacekeeping operations seek to address are complex and daunting, I am gratified to report that the international community has shown a renewed appreciation for the value of United Nations peacekeeping, a determination to acknowledge openly and learn from peacekeeping failures and successes, and an increased commitment to give peacekeepers the tools and resources they need to accomplish their missions.

43. The key factors for successful peacekeeping remain the will of parties on the ground; realistic mandates based on a well-understood and common overall strategy; and readiness to support those mandates politically and through the provision of appropriate human and material resources. To have a lasting impact, peacekeeping must be supported and accompanied by a process of peace-building, to prevent the recurrence of armed conflict and permit recovery and development.

44. Over the past year, the Secretariat has sought to lay secure and adequate foundations for an effective peacekeeping structure while providing daily direction and support to the operations in the field. The report of the Panel on Peace Operations and its subsequent endorsement by the Millennium Summit gave this reform process, rooted in an ongoing dialogue with Member States, renewed focus and momentum. My initial report on the implementation of the Panel's recommendations, presented in October 2000, offered a number of practical measures to support the broad objectives identified by the Panel. Member States responded positively to many of my suggestions and provided significant additional resources to the Secretariat for peacekeeping. They also requested more detail in a number of areas, however, and underlined their interest in a further, comprehensive review of the Secretariat's peacekeeping capacity. In response, on 1 June 2001, I issued a second report (A/55/977).

45. My second report adopted the comprehensive approach requested by Member States, and proposed further steps for improving peacekeeping capacity. These included proposals for enhancing the Secretariat's planning capacity at three levels—strategic, policy and operational—in order to move from a reactive mode towards advanced planning. In addition, I outlined measures to develop a more effective relationship between Headquarters and the field; to ensure a closer collaboration between the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and other departments in the Secretariat engaged in supporting peacekeeping; to enhance logistical support for operations in order to achieve the 30-day to 90-day time frames for deployment recommended by the Panel on Peace Operations; to develop within the Secretariat a more effective capacity for analysis that can draw upon the wealth of information available from open sources and from within the Organization; and to improve the safety and security of peacekeepers in the field.

46. Implementation of these reforms will make demands upon the Secretariat and on Member States. Some of the measures proposed will require immediate investment for future benefits, while others will require political compromise. Nonetheless, I am convinced that their adoption will improve our capacity to respond to the demands that will be made of us.

47. In addition to underlining the need to enhance United Nations peacekeeping capacity, the Member States resolved, in the section of the Millennium Declaration on meeting the special needs of Africa, “to encourage and sustain regional and subregional mechanisms for preventing conflict and promoting political stability, and to ensure a reliable flow of resources for peacekeeping operations on the continent”.

48. While African States and regional and subregional organizations have shown a growing interest in playing a role in peacekeeping operations in Africa, the limited resources available to them continue to be a major impediment. Support for building African peacekeeping capacity can take the form of assistance to specific operations or of incremental steps to enhance capability—for example, provision by the international community of information, expertise and logistical and financial resources. The Secretariat’s efforts in this regard have included cooperation with the Organization of African Unity, the Economic Community of West African States, the Southern African Development Community and, more recently, the Economic Community of Central African States in areas such as training, information-sharing, staff exchanges and participation in regional peacekeeping exercises, as well as the strengthening of the United Nations standby arrangements system and mine action programmes. The Secretariat has also continued to facilitate contacts between African troop contributors to United Nations operations and donor States, and to promote agreement between African and non-African States regarding assistance.

49. The international community should be conscious, however, that efforts to enhance African peacekeeping capacity cannot become a justification for reduced engagement in the continent. Support by non-African States for peace-making and peacekeeping efforts in Africa, including deployment of peacekeeping troops, will remain essential in the foreseeable future. The experience of United Nations peacekeeping operations in Africa during the year under review demonstrates this most vividly.

50. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, President Laurent-Désiré Kabila was succeeded in January 2001 by his son, General Joseph Kabila. Since then, the situation has undergone a marked change. The ceasefire under the Lusaka Agreement was re-established and has remained in force without major violations. Deployment of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) has continued without incident. Prospects also improved on the political front after President Joseph Kabila invited Sir Ketumile Masire to resume his work as facilitator of the inter-Congolese dialogue, upon which peace and stability in the country depend.

51. MONUC is now entering the phase of the implementation of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement during which all foreign forces should be withdrawn from the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the armed groups disarmed, demobilized and reintegrated or repatriated. The Security Council has authorized the expansion of the civilian components of MONUC to enable it to play a larger role, particularly in the political, humanitarian, human rights and child-protection areas. This is an important development as the humanitarian problems faced by the country, all of them exacerbated by the conflict, are very serious. Some 16 million people are affected by severe shortages of food; millions of children suffer from malnutrition; more than a third of the population lacks access to even basic medical care, and half has no access to clean water; and serious violations of human rights continue to be reported throughout the country.

52. In implementing its peacekeeping mandate in Sierra Leone and in cooperation with regional leaders, the United Nations has continued to pursue a dual-track approach, combining credible military pressure with constructive political dialogue. With the recent arrival of additional troops, the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) has consolidated its presence in nearly all parts of the country. Considerable progress has been made in the implementation of the Agreement on the Ceasefire and Cessation of Hostilities between the Government and the Revolutionary United Front (RUF), signed at Abuja in November 2000, as a result of a number of follow-up meetings between the parties, UNAMSIL and ECOWAS. The ceasefire has held, and over 13,000 combatants from both pro-Government forces and RUF were disarmed from May to August 2001 under a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. Peace consolidation and confidence-building measures taken by the Government have included the release of some RUF detainees and other steps to help facilitate the transformation of RUF into a political party. In July 2001, the Government indicated its intention to seek Parliamentary approval for a second six-month extension of its current term of office, which will expire at the end of September 2001. The Government has just announced an indefinite postponement of elections. In the area of addressing impunity and promoting reconciliation, planning for the establishment of the Special Court and a Truth and Reconciliation Commission is under way. As the deployment of UNAMSIL nears completion and the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme makes further progress, the Government will be expected to step up its efforts to extend its authority across the country, particularly in the diamond-producing areas. Sustained international support remains vital to the success of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process. Moreover, the underlying political problems of the country, which the civil war has exacerbated, will need to be addressed by the Government and people of Sierra Leone.

53. The United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE) was launched in September 2000, and has played a key role in helping the two countries emerge from their tragic and destructive war. The tasks of the peacekeepers include the monitoring of the ceasefire, verification of the redeployment of Ethiopian and Eritrean troops, establishment of mine and unexploded ordnance clearance operations, and monitoring of a Temporary Security Zone between the two countries in accordance with the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities signed at Algiers on 18 June 2000. A second Agreement, reached on 12 December 2000, provided for the establishment of a Boundary Commission to delimit and demarcate the common border and so resolve the border dispute which was the immediate cause of the war. The conclusion of the delimitation and demarcation of the border will lead to termination of the peacekeeping mission. The Boundary Commission has now been formally constituted, and it has agreed to a tentative timeline for the first phase of its work, namely, the delimitation of the border.

54. The search for a mutually acceptable solution between the parties in Western Sahara remained the focus of the United Nations efforts to overcome the multiple problems impeding implementation of the settlement plan. After meeting with officials of the Government of Morocco to determine if Morocco, as the administrative Power in Western Sahara, was prepared to offer or support some devolution of authority to the Territory that would be substantial and in keeping with international norms, my Personal Envoy presented a draft framework agreement on the status of Western Sahara to the Frente POLISARIO and to the Government of Algeria. In view of the adoption of resolution 1359(2001) by the Security Council, the parties are expected to meet directly or through proximity talks under the auspices of my Personal Envoy to discuss the draft framework agreement and negotiate specific changes to the document, and to discuss any other proposal for a political solution, that may be put forward by the parties, in order to arrive at a mutually acceptable agreement. The official proposals submitted by the Frente POLISARIO to overcome the obstacles to the implementation of the settlement plan will also be considered.

55. The situation along the border between Israel and Lebanon is volatile. While the situation over the past year along the withdrawal line, or "Blue Line", was generally calm, there were tensions and serious breaches of the line connected to the dispute over the Shab'a farms area. The Government of Lebanon has yet to take all the necessary steps to ensure the return of its effective authority throughout the south down to the Blue Line, where the activities of armed elements keep the situation unstable. Persistent Israeli violations of Lebanese airspace have created additional tension. The Security Council has repeatedly called for all parties concerned to respect fully the Blue Line, most recently in resolution 1365(2001).

56. The functions of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon are now largely those of an observer mission. Accordingly, the Force has commenced a reconfiguration exercise and is reducing its numbers.

57. The United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH) has made important strides in ensuring that its core police reforms will be completed by the end of the Mission's mandate. Registration of the country's 24,007 police personnel was completed in May 2001, while final certification with appropriate background checks continues. The Mission's police training programmes are nearing conclusion. The Mission also issued a new policy for monitoring police performance. In response to incidents of mob violence, UNMIBH has taken the lead in establishing training support units, and is seeking to obtain anti-riot equipment. However, the percentage of minority representation in the local police force remains very low. The Mission is in need of donor assistance to meet minority police representation targets in both entities.

58. In the second year of its mandate, the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) has focused on the progressive transfer of public administration responsibilities to local control. Steps to ensure this were the holding of municipal elections in October 2000 and my Special Representative's promulgation, early in 2001, of a Constitutional Framework for Provisional Self-Government. This has paved the way for the Kosovo-wide elections that will be held on 17 November 2001. UNMIK continues to encourage all communities, particularly the Kosovo Serb community, to participate in the existing UNMIK-led structures and is urging them to register for elections. With a view to strengthening law and order, one of the major challenges in Kosovo, UNMIK established a new pillar,<sup>1</sup> which combines UNMIK police and the Department of Judicial Affairs into a single structure.

59. UNMIK continues to face critical challenges, such as the protection of the rights of all communities, the return of refugees and internally displaced persons, the issue of the missing and detainees, the adoption of confidence-building measures vis-à-vis the Kosovo Serb community, the development of constructive dialogue with the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, the fight against terrorism and organized crime, and the impact of the deteriorating security situation in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

60. The serious threat posed by mines and unexploded ordnance in Kosovo is being successfully addressed and mitigated; mine action operations are moving towards implementation of an exit strategy in the coming year.

61. The situation in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia is a source of grave concern. The country is riven by an ethnic conflict that threatens to spiral into civil war. The recent crisis, which began last February with a military campaign by ethnic Albanian armed groups, is a result of festering inter-ethnic demographic pressures, internal political dynamics and the links between the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and its neighbours, including Kosovo. The crisis is continuing, despite several cessation of hostilities agreements and mediation efforts by the European Union and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, which remains in the lead. These efforts have my personal support. The Security Council remains seized of the situation in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. I have continued to exchange views on the situation while exploring areas where the United Nations may be of assistance.

62. I reported last year that positive developments on the ground had allowed for two peace-keeping operations, in Tajikistan and the Central African Republic, to be closed down and replaced with smaller peace-building support offices. These offices, like others in Africa and in Guatemala, have continued to lead United Nations efforts to consolidate peace and promote democratization and the rule of law.

63. The United Nations Tajikistan Office of Peace-building (UNTOP) provides a political framework and leadership for a variety of peace-building activities in Tajikistan. Together with the country team, in particular the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the Office has made a significant contribution to mobilizing international support for programmes that create employment and train former irregular fighters as part of their reintegration into civilian life. In May 2001, UNTOP, UNDP and the World Bank convened a successful donor conference in Tokyo, where pledges exceeded $400 million.

64. Working in close cooperation with Governments and civil society, the three United Nations post-conflict peace-building support offices currently operating in Africa, in the Central African Republic, Guinea-Bissau and Liberia, are trying to create an enabling political environment for addressing the post-conflict priorities facing the three countries and their fragile democratic institutions. This includes providing the political framework and leadership for integrating the peace-building activities of the United Nations country team, mobilizing international assistance to address pressing economic and social problems, and promoting national reconciliation and dialogue and strengthening local capacities for managing crises. Efforts continue to assist the rebuilding of the judiciary and the legislature, in promoting the rule of law and respect for human rights, and enhancing relations between each country and its neighbours.

65. The United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala (MINUGUA) has continued to verify compliance with the peace agreements reached in 1996. The President of Guatemala has frequently reiterated his Government's commitment to the peace process. Yet implementation of the agreements continues to face numerous obstacles and pending commitments have been re-scheduled until the end of 2004. In a context of increasing polarization, MINUGUA has encouraged political alliances around the peace agenda in order to foster cooperation between the Government and civil society. At my request, my Chief of Staff travelled to Guatemala recently to underline my concern about the faltering peace process. He expressed my hope that the Government and influential sectors of civil society, specifically the private sector, would enter into a constructive dialogue to overcome the growing polarization in the country. I am convinced that at this political juncture it is necessary to mobilize all efforts to ensure the irreversibility of the peace process. However, unless the Government assumes ownership of and leads that process, democracy in Guatemala will remain fragile and social discontent may increase. While the United Nations will continue to support the implementation of the peace agreements, it cannot and should not become a substitute for the social and political commitments required of Guatemalans to build their future.

66. The International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti (MICAH) has faced serious obstacles during this year. In my final report on the Mission (A/55/905), the mandate of which ended on 6 February 2001, I provided a sobering assessment of the situation in the country and expressed my hope that the Government and the opposition would enter into a political dialogue aimed at reconciliation. For the post-MICAH period, the United Nations has put in place a comprehensive transition programme coordinated by UNDP. The programme emphasizes human rights, favours consensus-building and conflict reduction, and seeks strong civil society participation. Since the closure of MICAH, the Organization of American States (OAS) and the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) have taken the lead in international efforts to improve the prospects for negotiations between the Government and the opposition. I welcome the efforts of OAS at mediation and negotiation, and look forward to the outcome of its joint initiative with CARICOM.

67. The engagement of OAS in Haiti exemplifies the close cooperation and coordination of efforts between the United Nations and regional organizations that are required for peace-building. In order to further such cooperation, in February 2001, I convened the fourth high-level meeting between the United Nations and regional organizations on cooperation for peacebuilding. The meeting adopted a Framework for Cooperation in Peace-building, in which we agreed on guiding principles for cooperation in this field, as well as on possible joint activities.

68. In less than two years since its inception, the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET), in partnership with the East Timorese people and in close coordination with United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, has made considerable progress towards fulfilling the broad mandate entrusted to it by the Security Council to assist the country in its transition to self-government and to establish conditions for sustainable development, while ensuring security, law and order throughout the territory and providing humanitarian assistance. The 12 months under review have seen intensive activity. Through power-sharing arrangements with UNTAET, the East Timorese have gradually taken charge of government responsibilities. They have also been vested with executive power in a mixed international/Timorese Cabinet, and have exercised legislative responsibilities in an all-Timorese National Council.

69. On 15 September 2001, following the election on 30 August of a Constituent Assembly to prepare a Constitution for an independent and democratic East Timor, the country will enter the final transition phase, with the formation of a new and expanded all-Timorese Cabinet and the convening of the Constituent Assembly. If so decided by its members, the Constituent Assembly may in due course become the first legislature of an independent East Timor. Once the Constitution is approved and the necessary elections are held, perhaps early in 2002, East Timor will be ready to declare independence, with the Security Council's endorsement. Independence will not, however, precipitate East Timor's abandonment by the international community. Plans are under way for a possible United Nations mission to succeed UNTAET. This new mission would continue to provide a military and police presence and to assist the new Government in those areas that could not be consolidated during UNTAET.

70. I am aware of concern among Member States regarding the level of resources committed to this operation. I am also aware of the comprehensive responsibility the United Nations has assumed in East Timor. I therefore favour a prudent approach that seeks to safeguard the international community's considerable investment in East Timor's future. In the interest of effectiveness, and to ensure that the population of East Timor can build upon the investment made, I believe that once UNTAET is closed down, and after the independence of East Timor is declared, substantial international support should continue to be provided, through an integrated and well-coordinated mission led by a Special Representative, mandated by the Security Council and funded from assessed contributions.

71. United Nations peace-building activities continue to be strengthened by increasingly dynamic cooperation and coordination across the system. This cooperation is perhaps best exemplified at the field level, where peace operations interact regularly with the different entities of the United Nations system engaged in peace-building and preventive work, including emergency operations led by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other relief agencies, and the long-term work of entities like UNDP. Work in the field of human rights is of particular importance for both early warning and peace-building. In this regard, cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights by the human rights component of a peacekeeping operation or with the High Commissioner's own field presence is of paramount importance to the Organization's work.

Electoral assistance

72. Requests for United Nations electoral assistance have increased during the year under review. Major electoral missions were conducted in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, East Timor and Sierra Leone. In November 2000, local elections were successfully held in Kosovo, where area-wide elections are currently being prepared. Assistance to the Peruvian electoral process culminated in the completion of the second round of presidential voting early in June 2001.

73. Several elections that have been held during the past year suggest important progress towards democratization. In Côte d'Ivoire, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Peru, incumbent regimes organized elections in the expectation that voters would simply renew their mandates as they had done in the past. In each case, the electorate voted out the regime or protested so strongly against attempts by the incumbents to remain in office that they eventually submitted their resignations. In the Philippines, popular protests spurred by allegations of corruption toppled the President. These examples suggest that public awareness of democratic rights—such as freedom of the press, the rule of law, and free and fair elections—is rising, and that citizens are beginning to act upon this awareness. They are holding their leaders accountable. Moreover in the era of globalization, when information moves instantaneously around the world, each instance of successful popular action reinforces and invigorates others.

74. This change has had important repercussions for United Nations electoral assistance. The emphasis on capacity-building will continue, but assistance will also be more specifically targeted to supporting particular institutions and stimulating greater local participation. In Nigeria, for example, an innovative project is providing encouragement and support to Nigerian civil society in designing and implementing civic education programmes.

Disarmament

75. In the Millennium Declaration, world leaders resolved to strive to eliminate weapons of mass destruction, particularly nuclear weapons, and to reduce the global risks posed by small arms and landmines. Uncertainties about the status of the strategic relationship between the leading nuclear-weapon Powers and continuing divergence of views among States on priorities and perspectives, however, continue to inform the debate and block further movement on global security and disarmament.

76. Global military expenditures have continued to rise, the increase occurring in some industrialized countries and in a number of developing countries. Although official development assistance levels have continued to fall during the year, military budgets have risen persistently. Conservative estimates suggest that annual military expenditures exceed $800 billion, or 80 per cent of average cold war global military expenditures.

77. The level of international cooperation in disarmament remains disappointingly low. This is especially evident in the Conference on Disarmament—a crucial part of the multilateral disarmament machinery—where in 2001 no consensus on a programme of work could be reached. I hope that the appointment by the Conference of three special coordinators will help to bring about some forward movement next year. Several multilateral agreements still await either entry into force or effective implementation. The historic agreements reached at the 2000 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons have yet to be fully realized.

78. Although 161 States have signed and 79 States have ratified the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty, the challenges that confront its entry into force still persist. At the request of the majority of the States parties, I have decided to convene the second Conference on Facilitating the Entry into Force of the Treaty, which will be held in New York from 25 to 27 September 2001. It is my hope that the prevailing global moratorium on nuclear testing will be strictly observed pending the Treaty's entry into force.

79. I am concerned that plans to deploy national missile defences threaten not only current bilateral and multilateral arms control agreements but also ongoing and future disarmament and non-proliferation efforts. In order to avert a new arms race, I encourage continuing consultation on these issues. Multilateral negotiations towards legally binding, irreversible and verifiable disarmament agreements are essential.

80. Multilaterally negotiated norms against missile proliferation would considerably reduce the threat posed by ballistic missiles armed with conventional weapons or weapons of mass destruction. At the General Assembly's request, I have convened a panel of governmental experts to review and report in 2002 on the issue of missiles in all its aspects.

81. Negotiations on a verification protocol to strengthen the Biological Weapons Convention, enhance its effectiveness and promote a higher degree of transparency have not led to agreement. It is expected that the work to strengthen the Convention will be addressed at the Fifth Review Conference of the Parties, scheduled to begin on 19 November 2001. The Chemical Weapons Convention has played a vital role in international efforts to eliminate the dangers posed by weapons of mass destruction, to curb their proliferation and to achieve their elimination. Increased effort is required to ensure the Convention's universality, and continued political and financial support for the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons is vital to ensuring that its mandated tasks are effectively and efficiently carried out.

82. The dangerous global prevalence of small arms and light weapons has attracted increasing attention in recent years. The United Nations Conference on the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, held from 9 to 20 July 2001, mobilized Governments, regional organizations, United Nations agencies, non-governmental organizations and civil society, and provided an historic opportunity for international debate on the illicit small arms trade. The Programme of Action, which was adopted by consensus, is a significant first step towards the goal of preventing, combating and eradicating the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons. It included guidelines for practical action at the national, regional and international levels. The Conference did not achieve consensus on all issues, however. I encourage Governments to continue work on those issues and urge Member States to act upon the key recommendations of the Conference.

83. Member States are increasingly requesting the Secretariat to implement practical disarmament measures in the context of peace-building efforts. Weapons collection projects and disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes have been developed in Africa, Asia, Europe and Latin America. Although a lack of adequate resources continues to hamper their work, regional centres for peace and disarmament have expanded their activities and initiated the provision of advisory and training services. Efforts are under way to seek more contributions from interested Member States in order to cope with growing requests for assistance.

84. Adherence to the amended Protocol II to the Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons has grown, the total number of States which have adhered to the amended Protocol II now being 58. An additional 12 countries acceded to or ratified the Convention on the Prohibition of Anti-personnel Mines, while States parties continued to work towards its implementation. It is estimated that production of landmines has all but ceased, transfer of anti-personnel landmines has sharply dropped, and existing stockpiles in many countries are steadily being destroyed. By the Second Meeting of States Parties to the Convention, in September 2000, 25 States parties had completed the destruction of their mines, and elimination was ongoing in 24 others.

Sanctions

85. The risk of adverse effects of sanctions on innocent populations or third parties highlights the tension inherent in the Organization's dual mandate to preserve international peace and to protect human needs. Sanctions should be forceful enough to persuade targeted leaders to move towards political compliance, but not so severe as to precipitate humanitarian distress that undermines the viability of the policy and of the instrument itself.

86. I welcome the continued development of the concept of targeted sanctions, evident in the sanctions measures that the Security Council has imposed during the year under review. In December 2000, by resolution 1333(2000), the Council extended the flight ban and added an arms embargo to the targeted financial sanctions previously imposed against the Taliban regime in Afghanistan. In March 2001, by resolution 1343 (2001), the Council imposed a travel ban and an embargo on diamonds from Liberia. In both cases, the Security Council sought to focus pressure on those responsible for behaviour that contravened international norms of peace and security, while minimizing the impact of its action on civilian populations and affected third States.

87. The recommendations of the Security Council informal Working Group on General Issues on Sanctions should prove a valuable contribution to the sanctions debate. In the meantime, I warmly welcome the continued use of investigative panels to document sanctions violations, including illicit arms trafficking and illegal sales of diamonds.

Chapter II

Meeting humanitarian commitments

88. Sadly, the turn of the millennium has not been accompanied by a reduction in the suffering caused by natural disasters and complex emergencies throughout the world. Protracted conflicts continue in Afghanistan, Angola, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Somalia and the Sudan, while crises escalated or erupted in Burundi, Indonesia, Liberia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, to mention several prominent examples. Vulnerable civilian populations continue to be deliberate targets of violence and to bear the brunt of the suffering caused by conflict. The deplorable attacks on humanitarian workers have also persisted. Heads and representatives of all 189 Member States paid tribute to those victims of violence at the Millennium Summit in New York in September 2000.

89. The scale and number of natural disasters continue to grow, escalating the demand for humanitarian assistance. During the past year, continuing drought in the Horn of Africa, Central America and Central and South Asia left a trail of devastation. Severe floods wrought destruction and large-scale displacement in Southern Africa and Asia. North-East Asia experienced devastating cold. Massive earthquakes struck in El Salvador and India, causing enormous loss of life and damage to infrastructure. This growing need for humanitarian assistance requires greater efficiency in relief efforts carried out by the aid community, civil society and national Governments.

Coordinating humanitarian action and the protection of civilians

90. Coordination, both within the humanitarian community and between humanitarian initiatives and peace and security efforts, has continued to improve during the year. Special attention has been paid to improving coordination between humanitarian action and peace operations, in accordance with my note guiding the relationship between Representatives of the Secretary-General, resident coordinators and humanitarian coordinators.

91. In my second report to the Security Council on the protection of civilians in armed conflict (S/2001/331), I stated that the realities of distressed populations had not changed. Little progress had been made in implementing the 40 recommendations in my first report (S/1999/957) or in the two subsequent Security Council resolutions on the subject (resolutions 1265(1999) and 1296(2000)). I therefore urged the Security Council to shift the focus from reporting on this issue to implementing agreed recommendations.

92. Progress in protecting civilians threatened by armed conflict is measured in lives and livelihoods, and freedom from fear. Success depends on the willingness of Member States and international actors, including the Security Council and the General Assembly, to take appropriate and necessary action to protect civilians in armed conflict, particularly women, children and the elderly. The efforts to build the "culture of protection" that I called for in my second report should extend beyond the United Nations, and will require continued action and co-operation on the part of Governments, regional organizations, international and domestic non-governmental organizations, the media, the private sector and academia and civil society as a whole.

93. In the report and its recommendations it is argued that international action must complement, rather than serve as a substitute for, the responsibilities of States. The primary responsibility for protecting civilians in armed conflict rests with States, as recognized by the Member States when they pledged in the Millennium Declaration "to expand and strengthen the protection of civilians in complex emergencies, in conformity with international humanitarian law". Given the predominantly internal nature of today's armed conflicts, my report also highlighted the need to engage armed groups in protecting distressed populations.

94. Of the tens of millions of persons displaced worldwide, roughly half have been displaced by armed conflict. During the past year, the United Nations continued to strengthen humanitarian responses to crises of internal displacement. In July 2000, the Inter-Agency Standing Committee mandated a Senior Inter-Agency Network on Internal Displacement to carry out reviews of particular countries with internally displaced populations, in order to make recommendations to improve the situation in those countries and offer proposals for enhancing the international response to their basic needs. The Network complements the continuing advocacy efforts of my Representative on Internally Displaced Persons, and uses the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement, formulated under his direction, as its overarching framework. Indeed, the mandate of my Representative is also represented on Network review missions.

95. Representatives of the Network visited Afghanistan, Angola, Burundi, Colombia, Eritrea, Ethiopia and Indonesia from October 2000 to August 2001. The review missions undertaken confirmed that there are serious gaps in the United Nations humanitarian response to the needs of internally displaced persons that have to be addressed, particularly with regard to protection. These gaps arise from the absence of clear agency responsibility in some sectors, and from what would appear to be insufficient efforts by some agencies in their designated areas. In many cases, the major constraint to an improved inter-agency response remains a lack of sustained funding. Work is under way to bridge the gaps that were identified. Over the long term, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs will be strengthened to support the responses of operational agencies to the needs of the internally displaced. This will be done through the establishment of a small, inter-agency, non-operational Internally Displaced Persons Unit that will advise the Emergency Relief Coordinator.

Delivering humanitarian services and dealing with underfunded emergencies

96. During the year under review, humanitarian assistance from the United Nations has reached a number of vulnerable populations, in Afghanistan, Angola, Burundi, Colombia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Guinea, Indonesia, Liberia, Mongolia, Mozambique, the occupied Palestinian territory, the Russian Federation, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the Sudan, Tajikistan, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and the Great Lakes region in Africa, among others.

97. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) is playing an increasingly important emergency role in over 35 countries. Its humanitarian action this past year included the immunization of more than 47 million children against polio on National Immunization Days, for which special ceasefires were negotiated in Afghanistan, Angola, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Sudan and Sri Lanka. More than 7 million children have benefited from UNICEF education support, and its response in East Timor, Kosovo and the United Republic of Tanzania highlighted the importance of emergency education as important means of bringing normalcy to a traumatized population.

98. Of the 17 countries most affected by HIV/AIDS, 13 are experiencing conflict. UNICEF has numerous programmes in these countries, including peer education and awareness-raising activities targeting young people through mass media and non-formal education. UNICEF programmes and partnerships for the protection of children and women in emergencies have expanded during the year. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Sudan, progress was made towards demobilizing child soldiers while, in Sierra Leone, 1,000 of a total 1,700 demobilized children were reunited with their families. United Nations peacekeeping missions have also been used as both channels and targets for education and awareness-raising on HIV/AIDS.

99. The World Health Organization (WHO) contributes to overall humanitarian coordination by informing all partners on the determinants of survival and health in emergencies, and works to put coordinated public health actions in place for all affected populations, including the forcibly displaced. The priorities remain needs assessment, immunization, improved nutrition, providing pharmaceuticals, controlling communicable as well as non-communicable diseases, reproductive health and mental health. WHO also supports inter-agency action for HIV/AIDS control in emergencies, for the elderly in humanitarian emergencies and for the health of humanitarian workers.

100. The presence and field operational ability of WHO can ensure optimal impact in coordinated public health management, collective learning and health sector accountability. To this end, WHO provides country-specific technical guidance, situation reports and epidemiological surveillance data to all those partners that by their action in health or related sectors can contribute to the common goal of reducing avoidable mortality and suffering. In October 2000, WHO organized an International Consultation on the Mental Health of Refugees and Displaced Populations in Conflict and Post-Conflict Situations that endorsed a declaration of cooperation between operational agencies, Member States and academic and research institutions. WHO validated technical instruments for assessment and evaluation, and is organizing an international conference to examine how the response of local health-care systems to the needs of internally displaced persons can be improved.

101. As the food aid arm of the United Nations, the World Food Programme (WFP) continued to use food aid to save lives, alleviate hunger and enable poor people whose food supply is insecure to make investments to help themselves in the longer term. In response to emergencies in 2000, WFP delivered over 3.5 million tons of food, assisting 83 million people, including over 60 million people affected by natural disasters and complex emergencies. WFP continued to work with other United Nations entities to secure safe and unimpeded access to vulnerable populations and areas for the assessment, delivery, distribution and monitoring of food aid. WFP uses food aid to support livelihoods, reduce vulnerability to future food scarcities and support durable solutions, and strives to channel food through women in order to ensure that food aid meets the needs of families, particularly children. It seeks to provide 80 per cent of relief food directly to women, ensure full participation of women in decision-making groups, and facilitate equal access of women to resources, employment, markets and trade. WFP also works to understand the particular needs of food-insecure internally displaced people and help to ensure for them the same rights and freedoms as other people in their country, as well as addressing the food needs of refugees in a manner that builds self-reliance.

102. About 50 per cent of WFP food assistance in 2000 was targeted to vulnerable populations and groups affected by civil strife or conflicts in one of the many protracted emergencies plaguing Africa, Central Asia, the Balkans and Latin America. While in global terms WFP increased its food assistance to affected civilians by 3 per cent in 2000, it has experienced problems in some underfunded, "forgotten" emergencies, such as Angola, Somalia or the Great Lakes region. Timely contributions allowed the provision of humanitarian aid efficiently in a number of extremely complex and volatile situations. In some cases, however, resources were made available too late to avert or mitigate unfolding crises, or to avoid breaks in the food distribution chain, with the result that WFP had to resort to reducing the rations of affected populations.

103. The Global Information and Early Warning System of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), a comprehensive international warning system for threats to crop and food supply conditions, continued, in the wake of dramatic increases in food emergencies, to alert the international community to imminent crop failures and food crises. During the period 1998-2000, virtually all regions were seriously affected by natural or man-made disasters. Using field and satellite data, the system monitors crop and food supply and demand conditions in all countries, identifies those where food shortages may be imminent and maintains continuous assessments of possible emergency food needs.

104. In 2000, FAO provided emergency agriculture and livelihood recovery assistance to people affected by natural disasters and complex emergencies in 41 countries. FAO distributed seeds and tools to vulnerable groups, including internally displaced persons, ex-combatants and women. In the Horn of Africa and in Mongolia, FAO supplied animal feed and veterinary drugs to safeguard the health of livestock, upon which the local rural populations rely heavily. In countries, such as Afghanistan and Tajikistan, that have undergone protracted periods of conflict, FAO implemented longer-term rehabilitation projects, including the development of private veterinary services, the establishment of seed multiplication schemes and the restoration of farming machinery. To enhance the sustainability of these efforts, FAO placed special emphasis on the technical training and capacity-building elements of these projects.

105. FAO plays a central coordination role in the agricultural sector. A comprehensive relief and rehabilitation agricultural programme was implemented in Kosovo where, owing primarily to the presence of the FAO Emergency Coordination Unit, rehabilitation activities were able to expand in scope as immediate food relief was scaled down, successfully linking the relief and recovery stages of humanitarian assistance.

106. The United Nations Development Programme has continued to provide technical assistance through country offices, both to facilitate the reintegration of displaced populations and to rehabilitate crisis-affected communities through socio-economic initiatives. UNDP is introducing transitional recovery teams to strengthen the capacity of its country offices and resident coordinator system to support early recovery efforts and to advance effective transitions from situations of conflict and disaster.

107. UNDP also seeks to reduce demand for illicit arms by confronting the root causes of violence. It has collected and destroyed tens of thousands of weapons and encouraged authorities in countries emerging from crisis to destroy tons of ammunition and explosives used in conflict. In the past year, it achieved some success in Albania, the Republic of the Congo and El Salvador. In Albania, some 14,000 weapons were collected and destroyed, and 10,000 weapons were collected and destroyed in the Republic of the Congo.

108. The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East provides education, health, relief and social services, and implements income-generation programmes aimed at over 4 million refugees. Funding has not kept pace with the rapidly growing demand for services in this area, however. On the basis of donor pledges so far, the Agency faces an estimated deficit of $67 million against a budget of $311 million approved by the General Assembly. The deficit seriously jeopardizes the quality and extent of the Agency's services.

109. During the past year the "oil-for-food" programme, established by the Security Council in 1996, and administered by the Office of the Iraq Programme, has continued to assist the Iraqi people in meeting their basic needs in the areas of food and nutrition, health, water and sanitation, agriculture and shelter. Since the adoption of Security Council resolution 1330(2000) on 5 December 2000, 72 per cent of Iraqi oil revenue is now available for the humanitarian programme, instead of the 66 per cent available during earlier phases. The additional funds will address the needs of the most vulnerable groups of the population. The Government of Iraq's delays in contracting humanitarian supplies and equipment are of great concern, as are the delays in submitting applications by contractors, and the decision to place a large number of contracts on hold by the Security Council sanctions committee.

110. The United Nations system, under the coordination of the United Nations Mine Action Service, has continued to address the threat of landmines in over 20 countries. Affected land is surveyed, marked, mapped and cleared, while awareness of the risks is raised within the communities concerned. Assistance to victims has focused on rehabilitation and reintegration. The United Nations has continued to mobilize resources to support these activities, and more than 30 countries now seek funding assistance through various United Nations mechanisms. It is estimated that, in 2000, international donors provided over $200 million for mine action in addition to the resources committed by mine-affected States themselves. At the international level, considerable advancements have been made, including the development and dissemination of the International Mine Action Standards, the further deployment of the Information Management System for Mine Action, and work on the socioeconomic impact of landmine contamination. While significant progress has been achieved in reducing the threat posed by landmines in several countries, the most severely affected States will require consistent levels of international support for a number of years to come.

111. Underfunding, access restrictions and staff security issues have seriously constrained the emergency response capacity of agencies during the year. Underfunding is an ongoing and critical limitation for humanitarian action in a number of countries. In the absence of immediate and realistic funding, emergency planning, preparedness and stockpiling can do little to accelerate the humanitarian response to a crisis.

112. The consolidated appeals process brings the United Nations humanitarian community together to develop common strategies for complex emergencies in the most acute crises, often characterized by political or economic failure in the State concerned. For 2001, consolidated appeals were issued for humanitarian crises in Afghanistan, Angola, Burundi, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Republic of the Congo, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Maluku in Indonesia, the northern Caucasus in the Russian Federation, Sierra Leone, Somalia, South-Eastern Europe, the Sudan, Tajikistan, the United Republic of Tanzania, Uganda and West Africa.

113. The 2001 consolidated appeals sought $2.8 billion to reach an estimated 44 million people in need of humanitarian assistance in countries affected by conflict. As at June 2001, less than a third of the requirements listed in the consolidated appeals had been met, even lower in percentage terms than pledges made to the 2000 consolidated appeals at the same time last year.

The challenge of protecting and assisting refugees

114. The year 2000 marked the fiftieth anniversary of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). At this important milestone, UNHCR faces serious challenges. They include ensuring the availability and quality of asylum; revitalizing the refugee protection system; providing effective assistance to refugees; promoting durable solutions for refugees; and fostering partnerships in support of the international protection system and in pursuit of durable solutions.

115. The global population of concern to UNHCR decreased from 22.3 million at the start of 2000 to 21.1 million at the start of 2001. This population includes refugees, asylum seekers, returning refugees in the early stages of their reintegration, and internally displaced persons. Ongoing or renewed conflicts, coupled with stagnating peace processes, generated continuing outflows of refugees. Repeated violations in the Democratic Republic of the Congo of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement displaced an estimated 1.8 million people internally, and led over 100,000 people to flee, mostly to the Republic of the Congo, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia. Despite the signing in August 2000 of the Arusha Agreement on Peace and Reconciliation, continued violence prompted 80,000 people to leave Burundi for the United Republic of Tanzania. In the first seven months of 2001, the arrival of some 880,000 Afghans in Pakistan made Pakistan host to the largest refugee population in the world, estimated at some 2 million people.

116. In September 2000, we witnessed the brutal killings of three UNHCR staff members in West Timor and one staff member in Guinea. To address the inextricably linked issues of refugee and staff security, UNHCR undertook a comprehensive review of its emergency preparedness and response structures, as well as the management of its security services, increasing its coordination with the office of the United Nations Security Coordinator and other United Nations agencies, funds and programmes.

117. Access to safety and continued protection in host countries remain vital for the world's refugees. The quality of asylum has, however, deteriorated in a number of countries, including in several regions with traditionally generous asylum policies. This is a result of the economic and social difficulties in hosting large refugee populations, national security considerations and concerns about the use of asylum procedures by illegal immigrants and the trafficking and smuggling of persons.

118. In December 2000, after consultations with key partners, in particular the International Committee of the Red Cross, UNHCR produced policy guidelines on the question of combatants and former combatants with particular reference to the situations in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Namibia and Zambia.

119. UNHCR has continued to monitor implementation of the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and its 1967 Protocol, notably through involvement in national procedures for the determination of refugee status. When a State is not a party to international law regarding refugees, or has not established the relevant procedures, UNHCR carries out refugee status determinations under its mandate. Fifty years after the establishment of UNHCR, a major challenge still lies in persuading more States to accede to and comply with the Convention and Protocol. At the end of 2000, 140 States, including most recently Mexico and Trinidad and Tobago, had acceded to the instruments.

120. UNHCR has played a leading role in facilitating and coordinating voluntary repatriation, which includes providing assistance to returnees during reintegration and rehabilitation. In total, over 790,000 persons returned to their countries during 2000, including 290,000 returning to Afghanistan mostly from the Islamic Republic of Iran and Pakistan, and 125,000 to Kosovo, from other parts of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

121. Apart from being an important protection tool, resettlement has increasingly become a mechanism for sharing responsibility and seeking durable solutions. The traditional resettlement countries continue each year to provide resettlement opportunities to some 30,000 refugees referred by UNHCR, usually from the Middle East and increasingly from Africa. In a welcome development over recent years, Argentina, Benin, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Chile, Iceland, Ireland and Spain have joined the list of countries willing to provide resettlement opportunities.

122. Underfunding has also seriously affected UNHCR operations and, in some cases, led to a scaling-down of assistance. In Angola, for example, lack of funding curtailed the procurement of building materials for the completion of houses in camps ahead of the rainy season. In Afghanistan, unpredictable and insufficient funding undermined the ability of UNHCR to cope with repatriation rates that more than doubled in the past year, and to alleviate the suffering of some 500,000 internally displaced persons.

Natural disaster response: engaging developing countries and building capacities

123. Although natural disasters can occur anywhere, a number of factors such as poverty, food insecurity, wars, social strife, lack of community planning and environmental degradation make developing countries more vulnerable to their devastating impact. The United Nations has been working closely with Governments, at national and regional levels, to strengthen their preventive and response capacities in order to minimize the risks and impact of disasters.

124. In cooperation with the Governments of affected countries, the United Nations intensified its efforts to draw lessons from previous relief operations and to strengthen preventive strategies, including early warning mechanisms, at national and regional levels. In the Americas and the Caribbean regions, thanks to 25 years of efforts spearheaded by the Pan American Health Organization/WHO, most countries have made significant progress in the disaster field. They have developed country hazard maps, and have improved and expanded seismic monitoring networks and early warning systems. World Food Programme assistance to victims of natural disasters has increased steadily in recent years. Globally, one third of WFP food aid in 2000 was targeted to these vulnerable populations, marking a 20 per cent increase over the preceding year. UNDP cooperated with developing countries to mainstream disaster management within broader development strategies, and integrate disaster response preparedness initiatives into a framework of support for disaster reduction.

125. The Disaster Management Training Programme, managed by UNDP in collaboration with 26 partner United Nations agencies, programmes and funds, and international organizations, aims to provide training to capacity-building programmes. Country-level training activities under the Programme have been integrated into the Comprehensive Disaster Management Strategy in the Southern Africa region. Other training activities have focused on countries of the Mekong River Commission, and have provided capacity-building support for individual countries at vital stages of long-term disaster management strategy in Central America.

126. The United Nations disaster assessment and coordination system, managed by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, has been building expertise in disaster-prone regions to coordinate international assistance in major disasters. The Military and Civil Defence Unit of the Office is conducting training to improve relationships and coordination between humanitarian actors and the military and civil defence resources that are employed in emergency response. It also coordinates international exercises when military and civil defence assets are used.

127. In partnership with the United Nations Environment Programme, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs is focusing on upgrading the humanitarian community's capacity to respond rapidly to the environmental consequences of natural disasters. Specifically, it has developed a global network of officially designated national focal points to serve as the conduit for accessing information and assistance. This continuously expanding global network currently includes representatives of more than 100 countries in all major regions.

128. Events in 2001 once again confirmed the need to plan effective disaster reduction measures in order to strike a better balance between, on the one hand, funds spent on intervention and relief and, on the other, resources which could be devoted to enhance prevention capacities. The first year of operation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction has demonstrated that many countries and a large number of United Nations agencies and organizations, non-governmental organizations, regional entities and representatives of civil society are willing to engage in broad efforts to promote a global culture of prevention. Building and strengthening effective early warning systems, and providing adequate education and training, as well as appropriate technology, are a few major areas where decisive action is required.

Chapter III

Cooperating for development

Overview: extreme poverty

129. At the Millennium Summit, the international community resolved to wage war on poverty by launching a sustained campaign to make the right to development a reality for everyone. The effort to render globalization inclusive and equitable will pose a daunting challenge in the years ahead. If the international community is to meet its goals of development and poverty eradication, economic growth in developing economies must accelerate. At the same time, disparities in prevailing poverty rates both within and between countries will require targeted attention. We will need to work together, with adequate financial resources, to advance appropriate economic, social and financial policies and to bolster supporting institutions at the national and international levels.

Cooperating effectively to eradicate poverty

130. Through its development cooperation efforts, the United Nations continues to dedicate substantial resources to supporting Governments in the implementation of their development objectives and priorities, including those articulated in the Millennium Declaration. The United Nations Strategy for Halving Extreme Poverty, endorsed by the Administrative Committee on Coordination in October 2000, recognizes the multidimensional nature of poverty. It incorporates a rights-based approach embodying principles of equity, non-discrimination (among ethnic, gender and geographical groups), accountability and participation into development and poverty reduction efforts. United Nations entities have cooperated in the formulation of national poverty reduction strategies in 60 countries and the writing of comprehensive poverty reduction strategy papers in others. The United Nations has carried out assessments of the social and economic effects of liberalization and globalization in 17 countries of Latin America and the Caribbean. Common country assessments and the United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks, drafted in 81 countries and completed in 34, are the principal vehicles by means of which the United Nations is contributing to achieving the millennium development goals. To date, 71 countries have aligned their activities to those goals.

131. The United Nations Development Group, under the chairmanship of UNDP, continues to manage development activities. Since my last report, I am pleased to announce that the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the World Health Organization have joined the United Nations Development Group.

132. Early in 2001, the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) released its Rural Poverty Report 2001: The Challenges of Ending Rural Poverty, a comprehensive review of the causes and dynamics of rural poverty and effective approaches to poverty reduction. The report concludes that the poor themselves are the most potent agents of change. Evidence shows that poverty decreases faster when the poor participate actively in poverty reduction. Access to assets such as land, water, markets, information and technology enables the poor to take charge of their lives and allows them to escape poverty permanently. In 2000, IFAD approved 27 new rural development projects expected to benefit an estimated 13.6 million people. Those projects are implemented in collaboration with United Nations entities, bilateral and multilateral donors, non-governmental organizations and partners in the private sector. Joint operations based on complementary expertise and shared objectives have proved invaluable in achieving project goals and thus contributing to poverty eradication.

133. The United Nations has also reached out in other areas to help people lift themselves out of poverty. Through the use of vulnerability assessment and mapping tools, the World Food Programme has identified the food-insecure and marginalized, targeted its food aid and sought to ensure that each of its interventions involves investment in physical or human assets of lasting value. Meanwhile, UNDP has increased the availability of sustainable microfinance services. Together with the United Nations Capital Development Fund, it operates the MicroStart programme. As at 31 March 2001, MicroStart had begun operations in 20 countries and 62 projects in 14 countries had received grants. Collectively, the 62 projects have increased the number of active clients served from a baseline of 67,026 to 192,881. The percentage of women clients served by the projects has increased from 57 per cent to 84 per cent.

134. No effort to reduce poverty can succeed without first ensuring the well-being of children and the enjoyment of their rights. Education, and especially education of girls, will contribute significantly to poverty reduction and achievement of the millennium development goals. At my request, UNICEF is leading an inter-agency task force to develop and implement the United Nations Girls' Education Initiative and United Nations staff in 50 countries are involved in collaborative activities related to girls' education. In 2000, WFP fed more than 12 million schoolchildren in 54 countries. This year, it will aim to increase funding for food aid, while also creating alliances to combine food with sanitation, health and education assistance.

135. Ensuring gender equality and women's empowerment are equally critical to the reduction of poverty. The United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) has worked closely with partner agencies, the World Bank, civil society and private sector partners to reduce maternal mortality by three quarters between 1990 and 2015 through the Safe Motherhood Initiative. In 2000, the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) focused on strengthening women's economic capacity, rights and bargaining power; promoting legal and regulatory changes that safeguard women's equal ownership and access to economic assets; enhancing Governments' capacities to manage economic transitions without marginalizing poor women; and supporting gender-responsive government budgets and macroeconomic policy frameworks.

136. At the intergovernmental level, the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, held at Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000, provided a broad mandate for a global campaign to eradicate poverty, with emphasis on the need for consolidation of the many ongoing initiatives. The Administrative Committee on Coordination has proposed that the Assembly discuss a framework for a global campaign to eradicate poverty. The campaign, a common advocacy effort, would underline the United Nations system-wide commitment to reducing poverty through concerted action in social, educational, nutritional, health and cultural dimensions, as well as in the promotion of gender equality and empowerment.

137. The twenty-fifth special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), held in New York from 6 to 8 June 2001, provided a further vehicle for poverty reduction. The concluding Declaration on Cities and Other Human Settlements in the New Millennium emphasizes that improvements in shelter and related urban infrastructure and services, as well as the sustainable development of human settlements, will contribute to eliminating poverty. The implementation of the Habitat Agenda and the pursuit of sustainable development are an integral part of the overall fight for the eradication of poverty. As poverty is a main obstacle in implementing the Habitat Agenda, the Declaration stresses the need to address, in an integrated manner, poverty, homelessness, unemployment, lack of basic services, exclusion of women and of children and marginalized groups. This will help achieve better, more liveable and inclusive human settlements. The Declaration also highlights the need to empower the poor and vulnerable by promoting greater security of tenure, including awareness of legal rights, and by promoting the upgrading of slums and regularization of squatter settlements, within the legal framework of each country. In particular, it re-emphasizes the aim of the Cities without Slums initiative to make a significant improvement in the lives of at least 100 million slum-dwellers by 2020.

138. World leaders at the Millennium Summit resolved to make every effort to ensure the success of a unique intergovernmental process called financing for development. All the major international actors that deal with the inter-related issues of finance, trade and development have decided to search collectively for solutions to common problems. The preparatory meetings for the International Conference on Financing for Development, which is to be held at Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002, include regional meetings organized by the five regional commissions in collaboration with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and regional development banks. The Coordinating Secretariat for Financing for Development, established in 2000, is located in the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat, and includes staff seconded from the World Bank, UNCTAD and UNDP. Staff from the International Monetary Fund and the World Trade Organization have also worked actively with the Coordinating Secretariat. Last January I issued a report that offered a comprehensive set of 87 recommendations on all key aspects of financing for development. To further assist the preparatory process, I requested a High-level Panel on Financing for Development, chaired by the former President of Mexico, Ernesto Zedillo, to produce a report that will help Governments refine their proposals for the Monterrey Conference.

139. The aim of the special high-level meeting of the Economic and Social Council with the Bretton Woods institutions, held on 1 May 2001, was to promote coherence and cooperation in international development and, in particular, in poverty reduction. The meeting stressed the crucial need to ensure sustained economic growth, but noted that economic growth would not advance sustainable development in the absence of social justice. The meeting recognized that halving the number of people living in poverty by 2015 would require lasting debt relief to the poorest countries and stressed that a stable and well-managed international financial system was vital in the context of increasing globalization. Of equal importance was the recognition that protectionism in trade measures, in particular for the agricultural sector of developed countries, had prevented developing countries from benefiting fully from trade. Increased market access for developing countries was fundamental to ensuring poverty reduction. Participants welcomed efforts to open the new round of trade talks in 2001. These issues will also be discussed at the International Conference on Financing for Development.

140. Of the 49 countries classified as least developed, 34 are in Africa, 13 are located in the region of Asia and the Pacific, one is in Western Asia and one is in the region of Latin America and the Caribbean. Those countries face formidable obstacles to their development, which include external debt problems, declining external resource flows, declining terms of trade, barriers to market access for their products, high population growth, inadequate social development, lack of infrastructure and environmental constraints, including water shortages.

141. The progress of the least developed countries towards international targets for human and social development has been disappointingly slow. Special measures are therefore needed to lend momentum to their development efforts. The World Economic and Social Survey 2000, prepared by the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, reviewed a number of issues that least developed countries will need to address in order to achieve rapid and sustained growth that improves living standards. Focusing on domestic conditions, the Survey stressed the pivotal role of agriculture, the importance of human capital development, the need to improve technological capabilities and the prime role of institutions and institutional change in the development process.

142. Against this backdrop, I conducted the preparatory process for, and convened, the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries at Brussels from 14 to 20 May 2001. Preparing African countries for the Conference was of particular importance. The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) organized a high-level consultative meeting in November 2000. The meeting reviewed progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s and considered policies to ensure the progressive, sustainable integration of least developed countries into the global economy. The Conference of African Ministers of Finance considered the expert recommendations and adopted a common declaration calling for an increase in external resource flows, including official development assistance and foreign direct investment; expansion of current debt relief initiatives; wider preferential market access for products originating in least developed countries; and technical assistance to strengthen capacity to address supply-side constraints, including those relating to infrastructure and institutions.

143. The Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries adopted a political declaration, the Brussels Declaration, and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001-2010. The Brussels Declaration reaffirms the collective responsibility of the international community to uphold the principles of human dignity, equality and equity and to ensure that globalization becomes a positive force for all the world's people, as set out in the Millennium Declaration.

144. The Programme of Action provides specific goals and targets along with action-oriented commitments in seven critically important areas: fostering a people-centred policy framework; good governance at the national and international levels; building human and institutional capacities; building productive capacities to make globalization work for least developed countries; enhancing the role of trade in development; reducing vulnerability and protecting the environment; and mobilizing financial resources.

145. In both the Political Declaration and the Programme of Action, development partners agreed to increase market access for least developed countries; to provide adequate financial resources for the full implementation of the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative; and to contribute to the integrated framework for trade-related technical assistance. UNCTAD, the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency, the World Bank Group's Foreign Investment Advisory Service and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization also launched a technical assistance programme on foreign direct investment in a pilot group of countries. Drawing on the experience of United Nations field teams, UNCTAD will lead the implementation of the Programme of Action.

Battling HIV/AIDS

146. The HIV/AIDS pandemic is a catastrophe of global proportions. It is destroying the social fabric in the most affected countries, reversing years of declining death rates and causing dramatic rises in mortality among young adults. By late 2000, over 36 million adults and children were living with HIV/AIDS, while nearly 22 million had died of the virus. According to the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) Epidemic Update of December 2000, 5.3 million new infections occurred last year and the number of children orphaned by AIDS had reached nearly 15 million.

147. Africa is the continent most profoundly affected by the spread of AIDS. In sub-Saharan Africa, where 25.3 million people are living with HIV/AIDS, the epidemic is now the leading cause of death. HIV prevalence rates among people aged 15 to 49 have reached or exceeded 10 per cent in 16 sub-Saharan countries. The virus is also spreading with alarming speed in other parts of the world. A rapid increase in the number of HIV infections in Eastern Europe and South and East Asia is also cause for serious concern.

148. Participants in the Millennium Summit resolved to halt and begin to reverse the spread of HIV/AIDS by 2015; to provide special assistance to children orphaned by HIV/AIDS; and to help Africa build its capacity to tackle the spread of the HIV/AIDS pandemic and other infectious diseases. The United Nations has pursued numerous initiatives to assist Governments in defeating the epidemic. The depth of the health crisis in sub-Saharan Africa, in particular, has generated concerted action in numerous forums. African Governments, partners of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development, United Nations entities, non-governmental organizations and private sector partners intensified efforts to mobilize additional resources under the auspices of the Framework for Action of the International Partnership against AIDS in Africa.

149. The Economic Commission for Africa organized the African Development Forum in December 2000 around the theme "AIDS: the greatest leadership challenge". The Forum called for leadership and action by all stakeholders to fight HIV/AIDS in Africa in the African Consensus and Plan of Action: Leadership to Overcome HIV/AIDS. The Plan of Action served as an important input for the Special Summit on HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis and Other Related Infectious Diseases of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) held at Abuja in April 2001, where African leaders committed themselves to devoting at least 15 per cent of their annual budgets to improving health-care systems.

150. In June 2001, the General Assembly held its twenty-sixth special session, on HIV/AIDS, to review and address the problem of HIV/AIDS in all its aspects and to secure a global commitment to enhancing coordination and intensification of national, regional and international efforts to combat it in a comprehensive manner. The special session constituted a culminating point in the efforts of the United Nations to combat HIV/AIDS. In that framework and with the assistance of UNAIDS and its co-sponsors, I called for a major new global campaign in the fight against HIV/AIDS at the OAU Special Summit on HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis and Other Related Infectious Diseases. The Plan of Action adopted at the Summit is intended to translate into concrete initiatives the commitments made by African leaders to intensify efforts to mobilize resources for prevention, care and treatment of the diseases and to develop strategies to mitigate the impact of the epidemic on Africa's socio-economic development. I also proposed the establishment of a Global AIDS and Health Fund in order to mobilize the $7 billion to $10 billion necessary to appropriately address the AIDS epidemic.

151. In order to strengthen coordination within the United Nations system, I also established a High-level Inter-Agency Task Force on HIV/AIDS, chaired by the Deputy Secretary-General and composed of all relevant funds, programmes and agencies. System-wide efforts to address the various aspects of the HIV/AIDS crisis continue.

Social development

152. Social objectives are integral to the struggle against poverty. The United Nations is continuing, through its own operational activities and through partnerships and networks, to promote improved access to basic social services and health care, to advance gender equality, to safeguard respect for human rights, to facilitate good governance, to expand access to information and communication technologies, to combat the scourge of illegal drugs and to support data collection and analyses on a wide range of policy issues.

Basic social services

153. The Task Force on Basic Social Services for All of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, chaired by UNFPA, has strengthened the United Nations system's capacity to deliver coordinated assistance, including policies, plans and programmes at the national and regional levels. In October 2000, the Task Force completed new or revised Guidelines for the United Nations

Resident Coordinator System on basic education, maternal mortality, primary health care and HIV/AIDS.

Health

154. Global immunization coverage (the major childhood diseases covered are measles, poliomyelitis, pertussis, diphtheria, tetanus and tuberculosis) stands at 74 per cent, although many countries in sub-Saharan Africa, as well as those in conflict, report coverage rates far below 50 per cent. The Global Alliance for Vaccines and Immunization is playing a critical role in improving coverage. In 2000, only 2,800 cases of polio were confirmed, as compared with 7,100 cases in 1999. National immunization days, typically organized in partnership with UNICEF, WHO, Rotary International and the United States Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, remain vital to improved coverage. In 2000, a record 550 million children under five years of age were immunized during intensified national immunization days in 82 countries. For example, in India, 152 million children were vaccinated in three days, and across West and Central Africa 76 million children were immunized in 17 countries. Within Africa, the Roll Back Malaria initiative, led by WHO, UNDP, the World Bank and UNICEF, emphasizes partnerships with all stakeholders, including Governments of countries where the disease is endemic, donor Governments, the private sector and civil society, in malaria prevention and control.

Gender and population

155. The new biennial report of UNIFEM, Progress of the World's Women 2000, offers revealing insights into advances and challenges in women's economic, social and political status and rights. Progress 2000 documents the advances many countries have made on behalf of women and also examines remaining social, economic and political gaps. The report found that, during the last decade, only eight countries had successfully met global agreements to achieve both gender equality in secondary education enrolment and at least a 30 per cent share for women of seats in parliament. It strongly recommends the adoption of a globally agreed goal specific to women's paid employment, such as raising women's share of administrative and managerial positions.

156. Gender inequality has direct consequences for women's health, education and social and economic participation. At its twenty-first special session, in 1999, at which it reviewed the implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the General Assembly reaffirmed gender equality and women's empowerment as central goals of the Programme of Action and recommended a number of key initiatives such as zero tolerance for all forms of violence, including rape, incest, sexual violence and sex trafficking, against women and children. This entails developing an integrated approach that addresses the need for widespread social, cultural and economic change, in addition to legal reforms, and the close monitoring of the gender-differentiated impact of the globalization of the economy and the privatization of basic social services, in particular reproductive health.

157. In 2000, the UNIFEM Trust Fund in Support of Actions to Eliminate Violence against Women continued to serve as the basis for learning about gender-based violence and support for initiatives aimed at ending such violence. UNIFEM funded 17 new Trust Fund projects addressing a variety of issues, including addressing "honour killings" in Jordan, building local capacity to protect women from trafficking and domestic violence in the Republic of Moldova, training human rights lawyers on domestic violence issues in Peru and educating the public and sensitizing law enforcement agents about domestic violence laws in the United Republic of Tanzania.

158. In March 2000, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution on women's equal ownership of, access to and control over land and the equal rights to own property and to adequate housing. Introduced by the Committee on Housing Rights and Evictions, a recipient of UNIFEM funding, the resolution constitutes a milestone in recognizing the gender dimensions of economic, social and cultural rights, drawing connections between women's property ownership, housing and inheritance rights.

159. The United Nations Development Programme worked in more than 100 countries to address issues of gender equality and empowerment. It facilitated dialogue between Governments and civil society stakeholders on gender issues, drew up action plans addressing gender equality, and established networks of gender focal points in Government and within the wider community of national stakeholders. It also helped to augment national capacities for data collection and analysis, mainly to facilitate national reporting on the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.

Youth employment

160. Social integration is a fundamental dynamic of social development. It continues to evolve under the influence of demographic change, most noticeably in changing family structures and the ageing of populations. In my report to the Millennium Assembly, I highlighted the urgency of finding decent work for the more than 70 million young women and men actively but unsuccessfully seeking employment, as well as for the many others underemployed in the informal economy. The Member States, in the Millennium Declaration, accepted the challenge of youth employment when they resolved to "develop and implement strategies that give young people everywhere a real chance to find decent and productive work".

161. As a first step in meeting that challenge, I have, together with the heads of the World Bank and the International Labour Organization, convened a high-level network—drawing on the experience and creativity of private industry and civil society—on youth unemployment and economic policy. The network will formulate a set of recommendations on youth employment directed at world leaders, disseminate information on good practices and identify a series of collaborative youth employment initiatives for implementation with partners.

162. "Empowering Youth for Action" was the theme of the fourth session of the World Youth Forum of the United Nations, held at Dakar in August 2001. Pursuant to the General Assembly's decision to proclaim 12 August International Youth Day, Member States and youth organizations worldwide recognized the day as an opportunity to strengthen youth involvement in development activities.

Ageing

163. Ageing remains one of the most complex social development issues confronting countries today. The World Ageing Situation 2001 questions conventional wisdom that ageing is a problem and offers fresh approaches to the issue. The Second World Assembly on Ageing, to be held at Madrid in April 2002, will offer an opportunity to adopt a revised version of the International Plan of Action on Ageing, originally adopted in 1982, focusing on humanitarian and developmental aspects of ageing, aligned with modern, sociocultural, economic and demographic realities.

People with disabilities

164. Promoting equal opportunities for persons with disabilities and ensuring respect for their rights and full participation in all spheres of social life also remains a priority. In 2001, the Secretariat supported an initiative to develop an effective policy framework and programme interventions for children and young adults with disabilities in Latin America in preparation for the special session of the General Assembly on children, to be held from 19 to 21 September 2001. Through the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability, it has also sponsored activities of the African Decade of Disabled People (2000-2009), an innovative partnership between Governments and the non-governmental community to bring disability to the forefront of Africa's development agenda.

The promotion of human rights and good governance

165. Rights-based programming underpins much of the operational activity undertaken by the United Nations. Last year, UNDP supported the development of national human rights action plans, invested in civic education and awareness-raising campaigns, and established and strengthened ombudsman offices and national human rights institutions. In several countries, UNDP also carried out a range of activities to bolster democratic governance. For example, support was made available to 38 parliaments, 34 justice systems and 21 electoral systems in 2000. A $6 million global initiative funded by the Government of Belgium was launched to strengthen parliaments, while a global network of 350 civil society organizations was established to promote judicial reform. Public sector management programmes in 78 countries resulted in civil service reform, national action to tackle corruption and promote transparency, and the adoption by some Governments of results-based management to advance public sector efficiency and accountability. Decentralization programmes involving capacity-building, resource mobilization, service delivery and community empowerment were ongoing in 37 countries.

Reduction of the demand for drugs

166. The United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP) continues to lead the United Nations system in supporting government efforts to combat the scourge of illegal drug abuse. To that end, the Programme has organized the Global Youth Network against Drug Abuse and assisted Governments and non-governmental organizations in involving young people in policy-making and programme activities. The UNDCP Global Assessment Programme on Drug Abuse has assisted countries in Africa and Asia to collect and analyse data, while the joint UNDCP/WHO Global Initiative on Primary Prevention of Substance Abuse has supported community-level prevention in Belarus, the Philippines, the Russian Federation, South Africa, Thailand, the United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam and Zambia.

Access to information and communication technologies

167. Information and communication technology is an important instrument for reaping the potential benefits of globalization. In the past year, the United Nations forged important partnerships to bridge the "digital divide" and harness the power of technology to promote development. I will launch, on 14 September 2001, the United Nations Information and Communication Technologies Task Force, which resulted from the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council in July 2000 (resolution 2000/29). The Task Force, created for an initial period of three years, consists of representatives of 18 countries, 8 private corporations, 6 multilateral organizations (International Telecommunication Union, United Nations, UNDP, UNESCO, World Intellectual Property Organization and the World Bank) and 4 non-governmental organizations. The principal mission of the Task Force is to harness the power of information and communication technologies for advancing the millennium development goals, in particular the eradication of poverty. It should achieve this by acting as an effective and useful facilitator, catalyst and accelerator, a global forum and a means to raise awareness and mobilize resources.

168. UNDP has been actively involved in a number of public and private multisectoral initiatives to focus attention on the issues, undertake advocacy and provide mechanisms for follow-up at the country level. It has also, with the World Bank, provided for the secretariat of the Digital Opportunity Task Force, or DOT Force, which was set up in the wake of the meeting of the Group of Eight summit, held at Okinawa in July 2000. The final report of the DOT Force, Digital Opportunities for All: Meeting the Challenge, with a nine-point action plan, was fully endorsed by the G-8 leaders in their final communiqué at Genoa in July 2001. UNDP has also endeavoured to strengthen the voice of developing countries by means of a multisectoral task force which is a partnership between G-8 countries, developing countries, the private sector and non-governmental organizations. To support the work of the DOT Force, UNDP, in collaboration with the Markle Foundation and Accenture, also completed the first phase of the Digital Opportunity Initiative in July 2001, which makes the case for information and communication technology for development and will continue to assist developing countries in preparing national e-strategies. As also announced at Okinawa, and completed in July 2001, the United Nations Volunteers, UNDP, the United States Peace Corps and Cisco Systems deployed a programme to provide Internet training in 24 least developed countries worldwide. UNDP will work with other United Nations entities, Governments, non-governmental organizations and the private sector in implementing the DOT Force Plan of Action.

Data collection and analysis for advocacy and policy

169. The United Nations produces a wealth of reports and analyses that enable Governments to track the progress made in different aspects of social development. That data collection provides an excellent basis for advocacy and policy development. In the area of population, for example, UNFPA and the Statistics Division of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs have collaborated to enhance national capacities for statistical collection and analysis, especially in relation to conducting population censuses and surveys. This is fundamental to the construction of population-based indicators with a view to monitoring progress towards the goals set by global conferences.

170. With support from UNDP, more than 56 national human development reports are in various stages of preparation. Long-term studies were completed in Cameroon, Namibia and Sierra Leone, and another 30 such exercises are under way elsewhere. Courses on human development were introduced in 11 universities across Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States. Advocacy has begun to produce new policies and programmes across all regions. Examples of recent progress include the participation of members of the think tank on human development in the formulation of the new National Charter in Bahrain; the Government of Brazil's adoption of the Human Development Index as a prerequisite to all federal resource allocation for social development; the use of the municipal Human Development Index in Bulgaria to focus public assistance; and the amendment of the rules and regulations of the Social Fund for Development in Egypt to incorporate best practices on poverty reduction.

Sustainable development

171. Nearly a decade has passed since the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development was convened in 1992. Since then, Governments and civil society groups have brought tremendous energy to the implementation of Agenda 21 and other outcomes of the Conference. Governments in both developed and developing countries have taken legislative and regulatory action to strengthen national policy frameworks for sustainable development. Around the world, numerous communities have implemented local versions of Agenda 21 and a growing number of companies have adopted sustainable development as an essential element of corporate stewardship.

172. Within the United Nations system, diverse initiatives in support of Member States' efforts to pursue country-specific sustainable development plans have been launched through project financing, policy advice and technical assistance aimed at strengthening human, institutional, technical and productive capacities of developing countries.

173. Notwithstanding those efforts, the challenge of achieving sustainability remains. The World Resources Report 2000-01: People and Ecosystems, the Fraying Web of Life, produced in September 2000 by the World Resources Institute, UNDP, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the World Bank, concluded that increased resource demands continued to cause global ecosystems to deteriorate, with potentially devastating results for human development and the welfare of all species. The report was based largely on information collected in the preparatory phase of the Millennium Ecosystem Assessment from 1998-2000, a major international collaborative effort to map the health of our planet, generate new information, develop methodological tools, inform public policies and increase public awareness. It led to the launching of a Poverty-Environment Initiative designed to identify practical policy measures that advance the twin goals of poverty reduction and environmental regeneration. The World Energy Assessment, co-sponsored by UNDP, the Department of Economic and Social Affairs and the World Energy Council, was also launched in the period under review.

174. An important landmark will be the convening, at the instigation of the General Assembly, of the World Summit on Sustainable Development at Johannesburg, South Africa, in 2002. The Summit is intended to reinvigorate global commitment to sustainable development by identifying accomplishments and constraints as well as new challenges and opportunities in the implementation of Agenda 21 and other outcomes of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. The regional commissions and UNEP have been organizing regional meetings with this in mind.

175. In order to successfully address new and emerging challenges in promoting sustainable development, the international community needs strong, focused and effective institutional arrangements that ensure coherent and integrated international environmental policy. To that end, and in line with the Malmö Ministerial Declaration, adopted by the First Global Ministerial Environment Forum, held at Malmö, Sweden, in May 2000, and the decisions of the Governing Council of UNEP, a review of international environmental governance, involving Governments, financial institutions, civil society and experts, is under way. It will take full account of the environmental components of the Millennium Declaration and provide substantive inputs to the preparatory process for the World Summit on Sustainable Development.

176. International cooperation for sustainable development at the intergovernmental level continues under the auspices of the Commission on Sustainable Development, which held its ninth session in April 2001. The Commission placed its policy review in a broad development context and highlighted the linkages between atmospheric issues and other problems, including unsustainable consumption and production patterns, rapid urbanization and the interdependence of energy, transport and the atmosphere. In its deliberations on energy, the Commission emphasized that meeting the energy challenge would require financial resources, technology transfer and commitment to innovative ways of applying energy-efficient, environmentally sound and cost-effective technologies to all sectors of the economy.

177. The first Meeting of the Parties to the Convention on the Transboundary Effects of Industrial Accidents was held in November 2000. Negotiations were initiated for a new legally binding instrument on pollutant release and transfer registers under the Convention on Access to Information, Public Participation in Decision-making and Access to Justice in Environmental Matters (the "Aarhus Convention") for possible adoption at the Fifth Ministerial Conference on Environment for Europe, to be held at Kiev in 2003. The Aarhus Convention, negotiated under the auspices of the Economic Commission for Europe, was adopted in June 1998 and enters into force in October 2001.

178. During the year under review, the Commission on Sustainable Development successfully concluded the work of the Intergovernmental Forum on Forests. By its resolution 2000/35, the Economic and Social Council decided to establish the United Nations Forum on Forests to promote the implementation of internationally agreed actions on forests at the national, regional and global levels. In June 2001, the Forum held its first substantive session to develop a plan of action and to initiate the Forum's work by means of a collaborative partnership on forests.

179. Implementation of multilateral environmental agreements is essential in the protection of our common environment. The adoption and signing at Stockholm in May 2001 of the Convention for Implementing International Action on Certain Persistent Organic Pollutants, with a view to minimizing and eliminating some of the most toxic chemicals, was an important milestone. Environmental experts have hailed the Convention, which sets out control measures covering the production, trade, disposal and use of such pollutants, as an historic step towards making the planet safer.

180. In the field of climate change, summaries of the third assessment report of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change were released early in 2001. The Panel concluded that there was strong evidence that most of the warming over the past 50 years was attributable to human activities and projected a global average temperature rise of 1.4° to 5.8° C over the next 100 years. To alleviate the problem, efforts by the United Nations system to promote renewable energy technologies and facilitate the required reductions in emissions of greenhouse gases continue, as do attempts to ensure the entry into force of the Kyoto Protocol by 2002.

181. Efforts towards sustainable development also continue at the regional level. The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific organized a Ministerial Conference on Environment and Development at Kitakyushu, Japan, in September 2000. The Conference adopted a Ministerial Declaration and a Regional Action Programme 2001-2005, which commit regional Governments to pursuing common priorities to promote sustainable development. The Conference also launched the Kitakyushu Initiative for a Clean Environment, the first attempt at twinning cities of developing countries with the City of Kitakyushu to improve urban environmental management.

182. The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean is working with the Department of Economic and Social Affairs and UNEP in assisting countries in the region to prepare for the World Summit on Sustainable Development. Participants in the preparatory meetings reported a high level of adherence to international environmental agreements, both those approved at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 1992 and those negotiated subsequently.

183. Most countries of the region of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) have formulated national environmental strategies and action plans aimed at integrating environmental concerns into economic development plans and setting priorities to achieve sustainable development. ESCWA is also emphasizing assessment and identification of options to facilitate sustainable approaches to energy resource management and the development of mechanisms to support regional and subregional cooperation. By October 2000, 11 ESCWA member States had agreed to join the mechanism and had nominated concerned national authorities to represent them as national focal points. The region is facing a critical situation with respect to water resources. It must work to increase the efficiency of water use and water management, including water recycling and desalination; to induce more regional cooperation, especially in the management of shared water resources; and to utilize its abundant energy resources in increasing the availability of water resources and protecting our common environment.

Africa

184. In the Millennium Declaration, Member States devoted special attention to Africa and called on the United Nations system to play a catalytic role in mobilizing resources in the cause of African development.

185. The recommendations contained in my report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa (A/52/871-S/1998/318) remain an important point of departure. The implementation of those recommendations has been entrusted to the General Assembly Ad Hoc Working Group, whose progress report of November 2000 contained a concise overview of the progress in and constraints to their implementation. The Working Group met again in May and June 2001 to focus on conflict prevention, post-conflict peace-building and education.

186. At the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council, in July 2001, the New African Initiative adopted by the Organization of African Unity at Lusaka, also in July, was the principal focus of attention. The ministerial declaration adopted by the Council at the conclusion of the session gives clear direction to the United Nations system to rally behind the unified framework that African leaders have launched. Through the declaration, the Council established itself as the main global forum for mobilizing the support of the United Nations system and the international community at large for the Initiative and the newly created African Union. I am pleased at the high-level participation of Africa and the clear demonstration of its intention to take control of its own destiny.

187. The Economic and Social Council placed particular emphasis on the link between peace and development and the need to ensure that the momentum towards democracy and economic reform was sustained. It called for effective international support for Africa, including in addressing the HIV/AIDS crisis, improving market access and providing deeper and broader debt relief and increased official development assistance. The United Nations system will have to play a central role in mobilizing international support in order to achieve those objectives.

188. In its ministerial declaration, the Council noted in particular the call made by African heads of State for a special session of the General Assembly to consider how best to support the New African Initiative and requested me to explore the feasibility of creating a subregional coordinating capacity for peace-building and an ad hoc advisory group of the Economic and Social Council on countries emerging from conflict.

189. While international support remains essential, ultimately African countries themselves are best placed to overcome the pressing challenges that confront the continent, and it is encouraging to see the renewed determination of Africans to do so. The full engagement of the Economic Commission for Africa is especially important. The Compact for African Recovery, presented to ECA at its thirty-fourth session, held at Algiers in May 2001, represents an important component of the ECA response to the implementation of the Millennium Declaration.

190. The priority areas of the Compact include promoting good governance, peace and security; tackling diseases that accentuate poverty; developing human resources; promoting infrastructure expansion; advancing regional integration; enhancing Africa's competitiveness through the utilization of information and communication technologies and economic diversification; sustaining high economic growth rates; expanding market access and trade; and ensuring external resource flows, including debt relief.

191. United Nations entities remain deeply involved in a wide range of African development issues. In 2000, WFP assisted almost 35 million people with food deliveries, 51 per cent of them women, in sub-Saharan Africa. Its operations in that area now include 76 development projects, 20 long-term relief and recovery operations and 47 emergency operations.

192. UNDP continues to promote participatory approaches to poverty reduction through partnership arrangements with civil society organizations. Moreover, in countries in special development situations, such as Angola and Burundi, UNDP has played an important role in ensuring that humanitarian concerns do not eclipse broader dialogue on poverty eradication or environmental protection. Together with other partners, UNDP has also invested in democratic governance in Africa by supporting electoral processes and parliaments.

193. UNIFEM has implemented a series of strategies to address the multidimensional nature of poverty in Africa. It has emphasized the importance of building the capacity of small-scale businesses owned by women. Linking women producers and entrepreneurs with external markets, the initiative also supports women's participation in non-traditional fields and assists with microfinance projects. The UNIFEM project Promoting Women's Rights to Economic Security in countries of the Southern African Development Community safeguards women's economic security by strengthening their capacity and skills at the local, national and regional levels.

194. A number of United Nations entities, including UNFPA, UNICEF, WHO and UNESCO, have worked to provide sexual and reproductive health information, counselling and services to youth and adolescents in Africa. With funding from the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, and in co-operation with Pathfinder International, UNFPA has created the African Youth Alliance to reduce the rate of HIV/AIDS infection among adolescents. Support from the United Nations Foundation has permitted UNFPA to support similar programmes in Benin, Burkina Faso, Mali, Sao Tome and Principe, and Senegal. UNDP, UNICEF, UNFPA, UNESCO, WHO and UNIFEM are working together to build on the success of UNIFEM in promoting alternative rites of passage to combat female genital mutilation. To date, 16 countries have outlawed the practice.

195. Child survival and improvements in child and maternal health remain a priority in Africa. Sub-Saharan Africa continued to receive the greatest share of UNICEF programme expenditure, which in 2000 amounted to $391 million, or 38 per cent of total spending. This represents an increase of 15 per cent over 1999 expenditure. Under its Bamako Initiative, UNICEF is contributing to the revitalization of health systems and community participation. The Initiative has improved the quality of services and access to basic health care in 7,000 health centres in 13 countries. The UNICEF African Girls' Education Initiative, implemented in partnership with the Government of Norway, has afforded an increasing number of African girls in, for example, Cameroon, Chad, Eritrea, Senegal and Uganda the opportunity to attend school and receive an improved basic education. The Initiative will expand its support to 31 African countries, including some torn by civil strife.

Chapter IV

The international legal order and human rights

Human rights development

196. Bridging the gap between human rights norms and their implementation continues to pose a substantial challenge for the United Nations. The Commission on Human Rights plays a crucial role in meeting this challenge by providing a forum for discussion, in which more than 60 heads of State or Government, Ministers for Foreign Affairs or other Ministers participated in the past year. In addition to the 53 States members of the Commission, almost all the remaining Members of the United Nations now attend meetings of the Commission as observers. Nearly all the United Nations agencies, 10 intergovernmental organizations and about 250 non-governmental organizations participated in the Commission's fifty-seventh session. Forty-two special rapporteurs, independent experts, and chairpersons of bodies and groups submitted country and thematic reports. Those reports painted a bleak picture of the status of human rights in the world today.

197. Some progress was made during the Commission's fifty-seventh session, but the task of achieving universal respect for human rights remains daunting. Eighty-two resolutions, 19 decisions, and three statements by the Chairperson were adopted, addressing the human rights situation in more than 20 countries and territories; they focused on numerous themes such as summary executions, torture, religious intolerance, violence against women, the right to development, and human rights and extreme poverty. This year, the Commission addressed new topics and made particular advances in the protection of the human rights of indigenous peoples by appointing a special rapporteur on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people. The Special Rapporteur will gather, request, receive and exchange information and communications from all relevant sources, including Governments, indigenous people themselves, and their communities and organizations, on violations of their human rights and fundamental freedoms. This is a particularly appropriate step in view of the General Assembly's emphasis on enhancing the rights of vulnerable groups, as expressed in the Millennium Declaration, and the designation of the period 1995-2004 as the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People. To stress the specific human rights dimension of indigenous matters, I designated the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights as the lead agency for the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, established by the Economic and Social Council in July 2000. In addition to its work on indigenous issues, the Commission adopted a timely resolution concerning access to medication in the context of pandemics such as HIV/AIDS. It also requested the appointment of an independent expert to examine the question of a draft optional protocol, under which individual communications could be considered, to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and established a working group to draft a legally binding instrument for the protection of all persons from enforced disappearance.

198. In addressing the Commission on 30 March 2001, I gave my full support to the High Commissioner for Human Rights in her efforts to ensure the success of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, held at Durban, South Africa, from 31 August to 7 September 2001. Racial discrimination, xenophobia and intolerance are scourges that must be fought and defeated. The High Commissioner, acting in her capacity as the Secretary-General of the Conference, and her Office have organized five regional seminars of experts, at Geneva, Warsaw, Bangkok, Addis Ababa and Santiago. Four regional intergovernmental conferences have already been held at Strasbourg, Santiago, Dakar and Tehran. The Durban Conference has great potential to give people around the world both help and hope in the fight against discrimination.

199. During the Millennium Summit, I renewed my call upon States to ratify the six core United Nations human rights treaties, and many have done so. Protecting the vulnerable is a crucial task. One significant development is the entry into force, on 22 December 2000, of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women. The Protocol contains a communications procedure that allows submission of claims of violations of rights protected under the Convention, and an inquiry procedure enabling the Committee to initiate inquiries into situations of grave or systematic violations of women's rights. Progress has also been made with regard to the two Optional Protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child. Both protocols were adopted by the General Assembly on 25 May 2000. The Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict has already been signed by 80 States, with four States parties. The Protocol on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography has been signed by 73 States, three of which have already become parties. Each Protocol requires ratification or accession by 10 States parties to become enforceable.

200. The six United Nations treaty bodies continue to provide a framework for national action to enhance the protection of human rights. New general recommendations have been adopted by various committees addressing issues such as the right to education, HIV/AIDS, equality and the gender-related dimension of racial discrimination.

201. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights continued its technical cooperation efforts to assist States in the protection and promotion of human rights. At present, the Office is responding directly to requests from some 60 Member States to create or strengthen national human rights capacities and infrastructures. As the system-wide focal point for human rights, democracy and the rule of law, and in an effort to continue mainstreaming human rights, the Office has strengthened its partnerships with other parts of the system. Creating new linkages between human rights policy expertise and field-level development, peacekeeping and humanitarian capacities has proved useful in these endeavours. In response, 2001 has seen more rights-based development programmes, more rights-sensitive humanitarian operations and more rights-attentive peacekeeping operations.

202. The dissemination of information on human rights issues has improved in 2000-2001. The Office's strategy for securing, processing and sharing human rights information has involved human rights research activities, reference and documentation services, publications and web-publishing efforts. The web site of the Office offers comprehensive information on the United Nations human rights programme and activities and gives access to essential human rights documents. In June 2001, the web site received a record high of 5 million hits.

The International Criminal Court

203. The Preparatory Commission for the International Criminal Court held its sixth session in November/December 2000, and its seventh session in February/March 2001. The eighth session will be held from 24 September to 5 October 2001. At its sixth session, the Preparatory Commission considered issues relating to the financing, privileges and immunities, and relationship agreements of the Court, as well as the crime of aggression. At its seventh session, it considered the rules of procedure of the Assembly of States Parties. Substantial progress was made on all five of these items. At its eighth session, the Preparatory Commission will consider the budget of the Court for its first financial year and the basic principles of a headquarters agreement between the Court and the host country.

204. A total of 139 States had signed the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court by 31 December 2000, the last day on which it was open for signature. To date, 37 States have ratified the statute. These figures are encouraging and there is no doubt that the statute will enter into force soon. The adoption of the Rome Statute has opened a new chapter in international law. A comprehensive legal and institutional regime now exists in the field of international criminal justice, something that will certainly affect the conduct of States but, more importantly, will guide and shape the behaviour of individuals. Much remains to be done to operationalize that regime and make it effective. I appeal to States not only to establish their consent to be bound by the Rome Statute as soon as possible but also to support, by every means, the important cause of the Court.

205. Some Governments and their peoples remain wary of this enterprise. I find it hard to believe, though, that their scepticism flows from any disagreement with the importance of compliance with international humanitarian law, much less from any principled opposition to the notion that those who are guilty of the most atrocious crimes known to humanity should be tried and punished. I would encourage those who remain unconvinced by the project of a permanent International Criminal Court to reflect on the central principle of Nürnberg and Tokyo, namely, that those who commit or authorize war crimes and other serious violations of international humanitarian law are individually accountable for their crimes, and the community of States can and should bring them to justice.

The International Tribunals

International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia

206. During the past year, there were several major developments in the work of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia. These developments should significantly enhance the Tribunal's ability to discharge its mandate to prosecute those responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law in the former Yugoslavia, and to contribute to the maintenance of peace and security in the region, while enabling the Tribunal to complete its work by 2008.

207. Major reforms enhancing the efficiency of the Tribunal's operations and expediting the commencement and completion of trials have been made. In November 2000, the Security Council amended the statute of the International Tribunal to provide for a pool of 27 judges to help its 16 permanent judges to conduct and complete trials as the need arises. In a major demonstration of support for the Tribunal, 34 States in all regions of the world responded to my invitation for nominations and, among them, proposed no fewer than 64 candidates for election. In June 2001, the General Assembly elected 27 of those candidates to the Tribunal. Other significant reforms have included an increase in the capacity of the Tribunal's Appeals Chamber, and a series of amendments to the Tribunal's Rules of Procedure and Evidence, the most noteworthy of which is that barring "interlocutory" or provisional appeals.

208. As regards States' cooperation with the Tribunal, the most notable event over the past year was the apprehension and subsequent transfer to the Tribunal of the former President of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, Slobodan Milosevic, on 28 June 2001. This marked the beginning of a new era in the development of international criminal justice. The surrender, arraignment and forthcoming trial of an accused person who was, until very recently, a head of State, represent a major victory in the international community's fight against impunity and a decisive step towards a world governed in accordance with the rule of law. The voluntary surrender of Biljana Plavsic and the transfer of Momcilo Krajišnik, two former high-ranking political figures, also represented major developments in the Tribunal's relations with the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

209. There are currently 39 accused persons held in the United Nations Detention Unit. Four trials, involving a total of 10 accused, are under way before the Tribunal's three Trial Chambers, and 10 other cases, involving a total of 16 accused, are in the pre-trial phase. Over the past year, the Tribunal has tried and sentenced five individuals. Each of the five has appealed against the sentence. One other accused has pleaded guilty and is awaiting sentencing. The Tribunal transferred three convicted persons to Member States to serve their sentences: two to Finland and one to Germany.

210. Following the electoral defeat of Mr. Milosevic, the Prosecutor reopened the Tribunal's field office in Belgrade in order to help investigators to resume their work in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. Meanwhile, investigators completed work on exhumations in Kosovo that resulted in the discovery of the remains of some 4,000 individuals. The Prosecutor also commenced investigations into allegations against ethnic Albanian rebels in southern Serbia, the Kosovo Liberation Army, and groups involved in hostilities in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. Over the past year, the Prosecutor has personally dedicated a considerable amount of time and effort to encouraging Governments to arrest persons indicted by the Tribunal and to transfer them to The Hague to stand trial. It is gratifying that those efforts are now beginning to bear fruit.

International Tribunal for Rwanda

211. The Tribunal made significant advances during the past year. Amendments to the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, which lay down a framework for the admission of statements from other trials and impose stricter judicial controls on motions, will all help to speed up court proceedings. A generally more vigorous approach to the Tribunal's caseload has begun to yield positive results. The Appeals Chamber handed down final judgements in three cases, bringing the total number of cases disposed of on appeal to five. Meanwhile, Trial Chamber I completed the trial of one accused, who received the Tribunal's first acquittal.

212. Following the implementation of a "twin-track" approach, whereby each of the three Trial Chambers simultaneously conducts two trials, a total of 15 accused persons are now on trial before the Tribunal in five cases. One of these cases, known as the Butare case, is the largest to date at the Tribunal, involving no less than six accused. Another trial, involving two accused, is scheduled to commence in September 2001, at which time the number of persons on trial will total 17. As these figures show, the Tribunal is discharging its mandate as effectively as possible given current resources.

213. At the same time, four accused were arrested and transferred to the Tribunal's detention facility in Arusha. They were Samuel Musa-byimana, a former Bishop of the Anglican Church in Rwanda; Simeon Nshamihigo, a defence investigator; and two former mayors, Sylvestre Gabumbitsi and Jean Mpambara.

214. In November 2000, the Security Council decided to increase the number of judges in the Appeals Chambers of the two International Tribunals. Following the amendment of the Tribunal's statute, the General Assembly elected two new judges to the Tribunal on 24 April 2001, and the President of the Tribunal transferred two existing judges to the Appeals Chambers on 1 June 2001. It is hoped that this increase in the judicial capacity of both International Tribunals will expedite the disposition of the increasing numbers of appeals.

215. Regrettably, the first President of the Tribunal and the Presiding Judge of Trial Chamber II, Judge Laity Kama of Senegal, passed away in Nairobi on 6 May 2001. Judge Kama was a man of the highest professional competence who was devoted to the cause of justice and the promotion and protection of human rights, and who fulfilled his duties with dignity and integrity. On 31 May 2001, I appointed Judge Andréia Vaz, President of the Court of Cassation of Senegal, to fill the position.

Enhancing the rule of law

216. Over the past year, the Organization has taken further decisive steps towards strengthening respect for the rule of law in international affairs. In August 2000, the Security Council charged me with negotiating and concluding an agreement with the Government of Sierra Leone for the establishment of an independent special court. It will try persons bearing the greatest responsibility for serious violations of international humanitarian law, as well as crimes under relevant Sierra Leonean law. At my request, the Office of Legal Affairs prepared a draft Agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Sierra Leone on the Establishment of the Special Court, and a draft statute for the Court, and negotiated both of these instruments with the Government of Sierra Leone. The members of the Security Council have given their agreement, in principle, to their contents.

217. At my request, the Office of Legal Affairs has also initiated a process of informal consultations with a group of interested States on practical arrangements for the implementation of the Agreement, including establishing a management committee, budget estimates and Court premises. In view of the response to my appeal for voluntary contributions in funds, personnel and equipment, initial arrangements for the operation of the Court have been modified, to align them with the level of available funding. Once the resources are sufficient to fund the establishment and operation of the Court, the Agreement will be concluded with the Government of Sierra Leone, and the legal framework needed for the Court to begin to function will be established.

218. At the Millennium Summit, I encouraged States to sign, ratify and accede to treaties of which I am the depositary. Specific attention was paid to a core group of 25 multilateral treaties that represent the objectives of the Charter and reflect the Organization's values. I was deeply gratified by the success of this initiative. During the Summit, no less than 84 States performed a total of 274 treaty actions—187 signatures and 87 ratifications and accessions—in respect of 40 of the more than 500 treaties for which I act as the depositary. Particularly satisfying were the 12 signatures and four ratifications of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, and the seven ratifications of, or accessions to, the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel. In view of this positive response, I have decided to organize a similar event, albeit on a somewhat smaller scale, during the special session of the General Assembly on children and the general debate at the fifty-sixth session of the General Assembly. This event will focus on 23 multilateral treaties relating to the advancement of the rights of women.

219. Many States fail to sign or ratify treaties, not because of any lack of political will, but because of a simple shortage of technical expertise when it comes to the implementation of treaty provisions. Consequently, the Office of Legal Affairs is preparing a handbook that will provide guidance to Governments on the execution of treaty formalities. This practical guide will be issued in the six official languages of the Organization and will be supplemented by training sessions for government lawyers, organized with the United Nations Institute for Training and Research. It is not enough simply for States to establish their consent to be bound by treaties, however; States must also implement and respect the obligations which those treaties impose.

220. One of the central objectives of the United Nations is to assist Governments in establishing the necessary conditions for compliance with treaty commitments. The Organization already undertakes a broad range of actions to this end, helping Governments to draft national implementing legislation and supporting training programmes for those involved in its application. Over the past year, the Office of Legal Affairs has worked to increase awareness of the various forms of technical assistance that the Organization can provide to Governments in this respect.

221. That the law should be accessible to those whom it is meant to guide is a central precept of the rule of law. Mindful of this, the Office of Legal Affairs is working to make the entire corpus of modern international treaty law directly available to legal practitioners, diplomats, non-governmental organizations and ordinary citizens by publishing on the Internet the complete texts of more than 50,000 treaties that were registered with the Secretariat prior to May 1998. Ordinary citizens, civil society and corporations should thus be in a better position to ensure that they are accorded their rights and benefits and that they, in turn, respect their duties, under international law.

Legal affairs

222. The past year was particularly productive for the International Law Commission. The Commission adopted a set of draft articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, thus concluding work that had been on its agenda for almost 50 years. The Commission also adopted a set of draft articles on the prevention of transboundary harm from hazardous activities and advanced work on a number of other topics, notably, reservations to treaties, unilateral acts of States and diplomatic protection.

223. At its session in 2001, the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law adopted two major texts, the draft Convention on Assignment of Receivables in International Trade and the Model Law on Electronic Signatures. The draft Convention, which was referred to the General Assembly for conclusion, will enhance the availability of credit at more affordable rates, thus facilitating international trade and a more equitable distribution of the benefits of international trade among all peoples. The Model Law on Electronic Signatures is aimed at facilitating electronic commerce by promoting a safe environment for all participants to share in the benefits of modern technology. The Commission also took note of ongoing work on arbitration and insolvency and decided to begin work in the fields of electronic contracting, transport law, privately financed infrastructure projects and secured transactions.

224. The past year has seen no less than 83 ratifications of, and accessions to, the 12 existing global conventions for the prevention and suppression of international terrorism. Particularly gratifying is the fact that 16 States ratified or acceded to the International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings, which, as a result, entered into force on 23 May 2001. The Ad Hoc Committee and the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly commenced work on a comprehensive convention on international terrorism. Efforts to resolve outstanding issues regarding plans for an international convention for the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism continue.

225. In 1999, the General Assembly launched consultations to facilitate its annual review of developments in the field of ocean affairs and the law of the sea. The second series was held in May 2001 and addressed illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing, marine science, piracy and the economic and social impacts of marine degradation, particularly in coastal areas.

226. The Office of Legal Affairs advised UNMIK and UNTAET on the exercise of their legislative and executive authority. In particular, it assisted the two Administrations in establishing legal frameworks for transitional, democratic and autonomous self-governing institutions. The Office continued to provide legal advice to the Organization's other peacekeeping missions. In particular, it participated in the negotiation of several status-of-forces and status-of-mission agreements, the finalization of the Agreement between the United Nations and Ethiopia concerning the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea and the Agreement between the United Nations and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia concerning the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo. Further, the Office provided legal advice to participants in the Burundi peace process under former President Nelson Mandela's facilitation, and contributed to implementing recommendations made by the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations.

227. The Office of Legal Affairs successfully defended the Organization in complex arbitration proceedings involving a $20 million claim; assisted in the resolution of claims against the Organization arising out of its peacekeeping operations; cooperated with host State authorities in recovering nearly $750,000 worth of Member States' contributions to the United Nations Environment Programme that had erroneously been credited to a private individual's bank account; assisted in negotiating a number of agreements with the private sector; and provided advice on implementation of the "oil-for-food" programme, including negotiation of agreements to facilitate the diversification and better protection of its assets.

Chapter V

Enhancing management

Administration and management

228. Member States have continued to support management reform within the United Nations and have endorsed detailed proposals in three priority areas: human resources reform, information technology policy, and the capital master plan. The Organization is now equipped to operate more efficiently and effectively and to make the best use of its financial and human resources.

Human resources reform

229. Comprehensive human resources reform, unanimously agreed to by Member States, will change the Organization's management culture. It will enable the Secretariat to be more flexible and responsive in its use of human resources, a necessity given the evolution of the United Nations from a headquarters-based organization into one with a strong field presence. The reforms will modernize the Organization's human resources management standards and strengthen its capacity to recruit, develop and manage its staff.

Capitalizing on technology

230. The United Nations information technology strategy, designed to promote access to and sharing of information, support field operations, strengthen technical infrastructure, build human resources capacity and launch an e-administration, will ensure a coordinated approach to technical challenges. An example of work already under way is the Integrated Management Information System (IMIS). This electronic administration system for human resources, finance, accounts and procurement is being installed throughout the Secretariat, and will serve to anchor future technological improvements in this rapidly changing field. We are poised to establish field connectivity so that we can use IMIS for the Organization's operations around the globe. Ongoing efforts to render the system more user-friendly will encourage its use and therefore increase productivity.

Capital master plan

231. The capital master plan, including its financing components, was submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session. Member States supported its plans for the proactive refurbishing of the Headquarters complex, and a comprehensive design plan and detailed cost analysis are in preparation.

Future challenges

232. Numerous other reform initiatives, at various stages of implementation, are under way. Procurement reform has been successfully completed, and the simplification and streamlining of the Organization's rules and procedures is progressing smoothly. The electronic personnel manual is now available through the Intranet, and has proved to be an invaluable tool for responsible, consistent and uniform managerial action. We are continually shifting to a more results-based mode of operation. Performance indicators are being introduced at all levels; for example, in the financial area, through the introduction of results-based budgeting, and in the personnel area, through refinements in the performance evaluation system.

233. The Secretariat will continue to implement comprehensive management reform, introducing best management practices and technologies, so that limited resources are made available for priorities. It will complete and implement a Key Item Management Reporting System, make productivity a managerial responsibility, and extend IMIS, with its far-reaching management control functions, to all major duty stations and peacekeeping missions. Innovations will continue to be introduced in the context of the overall information technology strategy. Human resources management reform will also continue. The introduction and refinement of performance measurements, through the performance appraisal system, and through the introduction of results-based budgeting, are geared towards ensuring the delivery of high-priority services identified by Member States.

234. The introduction of sunset provisions in all of the Organization's legislative directives, another important step towards revitalizing the Organization, still awaits acceptance by Member States. Once adopted, sunset provisions will orient the Organization's work programme to high-priority tasks as they evolve.

Financial situation

235. In the area of fiscal responsibility, the United Nations has demonstrated consistent budgetary discipline. There has been no budgetary growth over the last four bienniums and there has even been a reduction in the Organization's budget. The Organization has absorbed the effects of inflation and a large number of unfunded mandates. At the same time, it has succeeded in reallocating resources from low-priority areas and administrative services to higher-priority programmes identified by Member States. While many Member States have responded to Secretariat efforts to improve the collection of current and outstanding assessments, a number of major contributors have paid none or only part of their dues. This has forced the United Nations to borrow from peacekeeping accounts to offset the earlier and larger-than-usual deficit currently being experienced. It is clear that the United Nations cannot function effectively unless all Member States pay their dues, in full, on time and without conditions.

Accountability and oversight

236. Since its creation in 1994, the Office of Internal Oversight Services has evolved from a collection of small autonomous units reporting to the Administration into an independent, integrated Office providing a comprehensive range of internal oversight services. It is now recognized—both within and outside the Organization—as an objective source of reliable information and an agent of change in the United Nations.

237. The work of the Office of Internal Oversight Services extends from audits to consulting, evaluations, monitoring, inspections and investigations. It produces semi-annual overall performance assessments of the departments and offices under my charge. During the past year, oversight activities resulted in over 2,000 recommendations related to strengthening internal controls and improving management performance, and identified some $58 million in potential cost savings and recoveries. The number of recommendations is significantly higher than that reported in previous years. In order to reflect its widening global coverage, the Office is for the first time also making recommendations issued through observations made at the operating level in the field. The emphasis of the Office on full implementation of its recommendations results in ongoing dialogue between it and the rest of the Organization. To focus on areas that warrant special monitoring, the Office has recently developed criteria to identify those of its recommendations that have a critical and far-reaching impact on the Organization's operations.

238. The Office of Internal Oversight Services has convened several senior staff workshops to address strategic oversight planning issues such as maximizing the value added to the Organization, making greater use of information technology, and improving staff competencies. Achievement of the Office's oversight goals ultimately depends on the quality of the work it produces and the significance and impact of its recommendations. It is therefore critical for the Office to use the most up-to-date oversight techniques and procedures, such as those used by advanced private and public sector oversight entities.

239. As a result of a strategic planning exercise, which began last year, the Office of Internal Oversight Services proposes to merge its monitoring, evaluation, inspection and consulting functions. This will allow for a more synthesized gathering of qualitative data, facilitating the preparation of programme performance reports, as requested by the intergovernmental bodies. The Office also proposes to strengthen the investigations subprogramme to cope with the increasing number of cases received, and to establish an office at Geneva to deliver more responsive and coordinated oversight services there.

240. As the United Nations has become more field-based, it has delegated increased levels of authority in areas such as procurement and human resources management. This obliges us to ensure that proper controls are in place in the field, and that adequate checks and balances exist. It is encouraging to note that the Office of Internal Oversight Services has increased its oversight of field activities, including the operations of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Office of the Iraq Programme.

Audit and management consulting

241. The Audit and Management Consulting Division placed special emphasis on audits of peacekeeping operations, humanitarian and related activities, human resources management and procurement of goods and services. The Division also conducted management audits addressing some of the major reform issues facing the Organization, such as recruitment.

242. The Division has expanded audit coverage of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations. Audits were conducted at Headquarters and numerous field missions during the past year. Resident auditors assigned to major peacekeeping missions provided continuous audit coverage and assisted management in establishing appropriate internal controls. Resident auditors have been posted to Abidjan and Nairobi to cover the decentralized operations of UNHCR in Africa, and to provide audit and management advice to the regional directors. As a temporary measure, resident auditors have also been assigned to UNHCR emergency operations in East Timor and Kosovo.

Investigations

243. The Investigations Section carries out internal oversight responsibilities by examining reports of violations of United Nations regulations, rules and pertinent administrative issuances to ensure greater staff member accountability and to protect the Organization's resources. During the reporting period, the Section received over 400 new cases and produced 36 reports containing its recommendations to the relevant programme. Recommendations were also made in several cases where staff members were cleared of allegations of wrongdoing, as the evidence gathered during the investigations did not substantiate the report received.

244. At the invitation of my Special Representatives in Kosovo and in East Timor, the Section opened Resident Investigator offices in UNMIK and UNTAET to provide a range of investigative services to the missions, and help to train staff to build the investigation capacity of the civilian administration.

245. Major investigations conducted during the reporting period included the misdirection of funds at UNEP and an investigation into allegations of fee-splitting between defence counsel and indigent detainees at the International Tribunals for Rwanda and the former Yugoslavia. The Office of Internal Oversight Services also led an international task force investigating bribery and extortion of refugees in Kenya seeking resettlement, which resulted in the arrest of nine people.

Central monitoring and inspection

246. The Central Monitoring and Inspection Unit conducted inspections of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, the Department of General Assembly Affairs and Conference Services, and the United Nations Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention. From the inspection of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs it was concluded that the Department had promoted greater policy and programme coherence and provided more effective substantive support to the intergovernmental and inter-agency machineries. Improvements need to be made in evaluating development cooperation activities and implementing organization-wide executive decisions.

247. The inspection of Conference Services showed that streamlining technical support services had allowed for improved planning and more rational resource allocation, and enhanced the efficiency of services provided to intergovernmental and expert bodies. Further feedback mechanisms, such as surveys, would improve the quality of its services. In its inspection of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention, the Office of Internal Oversight Services observed that that Office was being run in a highly centralized and arbitrary manner. No consistent system for programme oversight was in place, and the absence of clearly defined delegation of authority clouded accountability. Member States, including donors and recipients of services, indicated that this had adversely affected fulfilment of its mandates and implementation of some projects. The Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention accepted all of the recommendations of the Office of Internal Oversight Services and initiated a series of measures to improve the situation.

Central evaluation

248. The Central Evaluation Unit examined the population and sustainable development programmes of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs in the past year. The examination found that the value of the Population Division's reports and publications as reference work, and their comprehensiveness and technical quality, is well recognized, and that the Division has made a significant contribution to the understanding of international migration. The evaluation of the sustainable development programme focused on current programme implementation issues. The Office of Internal Oversight Services recommended actions to improve support for intergovernmental processes, streamline reporting and enhance the quality of information presented. All the evaluation recommendations were endorsed by the Committee for Programme and Coordination at its forty-first session, in June 2001.

249. The Unit also completed triennial reviews of the implementation of the recommendations resulting from in-depth evaluations of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme. The Office of Internal Oversight Services found that, although some of the recommendations were implemented satisfactorily, the overall level of implementation was somewhat disappointing, as the Drug Control Programme had not addressed the underlying problems identified in the evaluation. The Office of Internal Oversight Services is monitoring implementation of those recommendations that have not yet been implemented.

Chapter VI

Partnerships

Communications

250. As I noted in my previous annual report, the United Nations has succeeded in forging global partnerships that would hardly have been conceivable even a decade ago. These partnerships continue to be strengthened by the Organization's communications and information strategy, which rests on a clear understanding that the goals of the United Nations can be met only if an informed public understands its mission.

251. The world is assailed by an information overload, and yet we are charged with the responsibility of giving a public face and discernible meaning to the activities and programmes of the Organization. For the Department of Public Information, this has meant integrating otherwise diverse operations into strategic global advocacy campaigns. The Department has highlighted tangible results of the major international conferences convened by the United Nations over the past year. Several initiatives, including the "UN works" campaign, capturing the direct impact of the Organization on the lives of people; a documentary film on light weapons, Armed to the Teeth; and a United Nations in Action report on human rights and special features on health issues in Africa in the United Nations Chronicle have contributed to articulating the importance of achieving the goals of the Millennium Declaration.

252. As the Millennium Declaration affirms, the benefits of new information and communication technologies must be available to all. This mandate drives our efforts to provide developing countries with immediate access to news developments at the United Nations. The global growth in Internet and e-mail access, including in the least developed countries, has allowed us to communicate rapidly and in real time with the media of developing countries. Most of those media entities have no representation at the United Nations, and e-mail and web-based news services are of enormous service and interest to them.

253. A daily news service has been established on the United Nations web site, reporting on and providing links to United Nations activities, operations, documents and other sources of information available electronically, including direct links from the field, complete with digital images. The news service is part of the United Nations News Centre, specifically designed to be an electronic gateway to news throughout the United Nations system, helping to ensure timely and global access to information on the Organization. In addition, an e-mail news alert system is being put in place as a more direct and proactive means of electronic communication to target audiences. A similar system is already regularly used to alert media in all parts of the world to important developments.

254. The launch of daily news bulletins by United Nations Radio in the six official languages of the Organization is a further dramatic example of the Department reaching out to cross the "digital divide" between developed and developing countries. Transmitted to hundreds of radio stations in all regions of the world, these live radio broadcasts have a daily audience of tens of millions. More than 100 radio and television networks have received public service announcements relating to the commemoration of this Year of Dialogue among Civilizations. The United Nations web site, also in all official languages, has averaged 4 million hits a day this year, twice the number in 2000. The multilingualism essential to this success is being fostered creatively: an agreement is being finalized, for instance, with a number of universities in Spain to provide translations of material on the web site into Spanish. United Nations information centres expand the site's outreach further, with creatively tailored messages in the languages of their areas of operation.

255. Technology facilitates the channelling of traditional forms of information outreach, notably print, in a manner that is attractive, accessible and yet economical. Articles by outside contributors have highlighted the successes and the limitations of United Nations activities. Republishing individual articles in other media has also promoted a multiplier effect of the content.

256. Media outreach programmes continue to expand awareness of United Nations activities. United Nations information centres nurture relationships with local media, non-governmental organizations and the broader public to ensure that the Organization's concerns are widely understood. With generous support from the Government of Japan, 15 journalists from Asia attended high-level briefings at United Nations Headquarters, and 19 participants joined the Department's annual training programme for broadcasters and journalists from developing countries.

257. In the Dag Hammarskjöld Library, digitalization of documents and creation of resource databases have rendered this world-class repository of information more accessible. In the past year, the Library responded to 60,000 individual reference queries and delivered electronic journals via e-mail to readers.

258. The Department of Public Information continues to work actively to implement the Millennium Declaration's goal of giving "greater opportunities to the private sector, non-governmental organizations and civil society, in general, to contribute to the realization of the Organization's goals and programmes". Those partners include 1,600 non-governmental organizations formally associated with the Department; participants in guided tours for whom a new, comprehensive "visitors' experience" is being planned; school students who have enthusiastically joined programmes devised on the electronic CyberSchoolBus; and the business community, which accesses procurement opportunities in developing countries through the print and online editions of Development Business. Further, the Department supports the political, economic and humanitarian actors within the United Nations through the Cartographic Section, which remains a vital resource to the Organization as a whole.

259. The communication revolution has thrown open new, and increasingly accessible, technologies, even as it offers fresh possibilities to enhance and energize existing means of dissemination. Today's resources are essential to redeem tomorrow's promise, however. As the Department of Public Information moves beyond reorientation to modernization, it is essential that it should not be compelled, by a multiplicity of mandates and a lack of realistic resources, to spread itself too thin.

United Nations Fund for International Partnerships

260. The United Nations continues to benefit from an ever-expanding range of partnerships with the business community, philanthropic foundations and civil society organizations. Private sector interest in cooperating with the United Nations is intensifying and my office is increasingly called upon to develop innovative partnerships with a wide range of civil society actors. The United Nations Fund for International Partnerships (UNFIP) plays a vital role in developing networks to benefit the United Nations system. The Fund identifies new avenues for partnership with a wide range of external partners; provides advice on programme design; offers guidance on United Nations rules of procedure and funding modalities; and supports the creation of an enabling environment for corporate and individual philanthropy.

261. The Fund entered its fourth year in March 2001. As the counterpart of the United Nations Foundation, it has programmed nearly $385 million in support of more than 170 projects, involving 32 United Nations organizations in more than 100 countries. In 2001, the Fund added a peace, security and human rights portfolio to its ongoing programmes in children's health, environment, and women and population. In the past year, an additional $63 million in programme funds was mobilized from a wide range of partners. Together with the United Nations Foundation, UNFIP also encourages complementarity and coordination by bringing together United Nations organizations in joint programming.

262. The Fund has developed and continues to develop collaborative arrangements with the private sector and foundations, including the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, the Rockefeller Foundation, the Coca-Cola Company, Cisco Systems, Ericsson, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce World Markets, United Way International and others. In collaboration with UNAIDS and the Global Business Council on HIV/AIDS, for example, UNFIP served as a private sector interlocutor to support fund-raising efforts for HIV/AIDS. It also helped in the creation of a facility for the receipt of private sector funds by the United Nations Foundation, pending the establishment of the Global AIDS and Health Fund. UNFIP continues to provide coordination for the Health InterNetwork, administered by WHO, and the United Nations Information Technology Service, administered by the United Nations Volunteers. It will continue to focus on promoting partnerships to advance the goals of the Millennium Declaration.

Project services

263. The only completely self-financing entity in the United Nations system, the United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS), finances itself on a fee-for-service basis. In 2000, UNOPS acquired new business valued at $948 million and delivered more than $471 million in services in over 2,600 projects worldwide. It also approved disbursement of $193 million in loans for projects it is supervising on behalf of the International Fund for Agricultural Development.

264. During the year, UNOPS worked predominantly to diversify its client base, building on its core relationship with UNDP. In 2000, acquisition of projects from new United Nations partners totalled an unprecedented $132 million, exceeding project acquisition from the regular resources of UNDP. In the first six months of 2001, demand for project services from clients other than UNDP approached a record $200 million.

265. New clients requesting UNOPS services included UNEP, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), UNMIK and UNTAET. In both East Timor and Kosovo, major procurement operations were carried out to support the United Nations efforts to establish interim governing structures. Its operations yielded a substantial cost savings to clients and contributed to building local capacity for reconstruction.

266. As project work on behalf of non-traditional clients grows, so do new partnerships characterized by a clear division of labour. While project funders retain responsibility for the expertise provided in the area of their mandate, UNOPS acts as a project manager, assuming responsibility for operational and commercial activity and managing the financial risks and liabilities inherent in the contracting process. The Office's comparative advantage in results-based management, and the potential to transfer this knowledge to the United Nations system at large, is increasingly recognized. In 2000, UNOPS provided management consultancy services to ESCAP to support its revitalization programme and to the Department of Technical Cooperation of IAEA to analyse workload pressures. Consulting services were also provided in Guatemala, where WFP asked the Office for assistance in formulating its country programme; at the request of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala, UNOPS provided consulting services to the Soros Foundation, the Centre for Legal Action and Human Rights and the Government of Norway on issues relating to the implementation of peace agreements and the follow-up of the Commission for Historical Clarification.

267. UNOPS efforts are expected to yield great results in 2001. Under its dedicated partnership regime, a new services offering, United Nations organizations may hire UNOPS to broker partnerships or to implement projects under existing partnership agreements. To date, 11 agreements have been signed with non-governmental organizations and private sector firms. One such partnership, funded by UNFIP, is bringing HIV/AIDS education to remote communities in Nepal. Another is transferring trade and business skills to local artisans in Mozambique. Such partnerships strengthen project delivery and attract new stakeholders whose support is critical to the global mandates of the United Nations.

Partnerships with civil society

268. Over the past year, cooperation with civil society, including a wide range of non-governmental organizations and the private sector, has continued to develop. Existing initiatives in the areas of policy dialogue and advocacy for United Nations values and activities are being consolidated. At the same time we are building new partnerships with the business community, non-governmental organizations and other civil society actors in order to promote information-sharing and learning, to support operational delivery and to mobilize private funds.

269. At the policy level, two notable developments have been the launch of the Information and Communication Technologies Task Force and the establishment of the high-level Policy Network on Youth Employment. Both of these cooperative efforts are drawing on the expertise and resources of non-governmental organizations, the private sector and academia, to help us increase our effectiveness in addressing critical development issues. Non-governmental organizations, the private sector and other civil society actors, including parliamentarians, are also providing valuable input to the preparations for the International Conference on Financing for Development and the World Summit on Sustainable Development to be held in 2002, working closely with the relevant United Nations bodies to share expertise, learn from existing experience and propose future joint action.

270. My Global Compact initiative continues to evolve as a multi-stakeholder network focused on three core areas of activity, namely, learning, dialogue and action. The network now consists of several hundred companies, business associations, academic institutions and non-governmental organizations active in the areas of environment, labour, human rights and development. A key focus during the past 12 months has been to involve more companies and business associations from developing countries, and almost two thirds of our private sector participants are now from those countries. The International Labour Organization, UNEP, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and UNDP continue to play a central role, and other United Nations bodies are involved in specific areas of the initiative. UNCTAD, for example, is working with the International Chamber of Commerce and individual companies on a programme of investment deliverables for the least developed countries, including investment guides, linkages and advisory councils. The International Organization of Employers is working with the International Labour Organization to develop training materials on the Compact's nine principles for its national organizations in over 100 countries, and is cooperating with UNAIDS to strengthen the capacity of employers organizations to tackle HIV/AIDS, especially in Africa. Several regional commissions are using the Global Compact as a framework for dialogue and partnerships with the private sector in their regions. A learning forum has been established, managed by a consortium of academic institutions, and a policy dialogue has been initiated on the role of the private sector in zones of conflict. Individual companies are supporting development projects in partnership with the United Nations in areas such as HIV/AIDS, microcredit, digital divide, diversity, and humanitarian and refugee support.

271. We continue to mobilize funds, product donations and volunteer support through the work of UNFIP, as well as advocacy and fundraising programmes initiated by individual United Nations bodies, including UNICEF, UNDP, UNAIDS, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and UNHCR. These range from long-standing initiatives, such as the UNICEF Change for Good programme, to more recent cooperative efforts, such as NetAid and corporate support for our UN works cyber-magazine.

Chapter I

International peace and security

The year 2001 witnessed new and extraordinary challenges to international peace and security, dramatized by the 11 September terrorist attacks in the United States. Both the General Assembly and the Security Council immediately condemned the attacks, expressed condolences and solidarity with the people and Government of the United States and called for urgent international action to eradicate terrorism and to hold the organizers, perpetrators and sponsors accountable. Towards that end, the Council, in September, adopted a number of measures designed to stifle international terrorist activities and established a committee to monitor implementation of those measures by Member States. In November, the Council adopted a declaration on the global effort to combat terrorism, in which it proposed further measures, including the provision of assistance to Member States.

Although the 11 September attacks dominated international attention, the United Nations was no less preoccupied with other threats to international peace and security and with its own efforts to consolidate its peacekeeping, peacemaking and peace-building efforts. In recognition of those efforts, the Norwegian Nobel Committee, on 12 October, announced the joint award of the Nobel Peace Prize to the United Nations and its Secretary-General, Kofi A. Annan, for their work for a better organized and more peaceful world. On the same day, the Security Council congratulated the recipients and paid tribute to the men and women who worked for the United Nations in the service of peace.

In the context of the need to enhance the Organization's conflict prevention efforts, the Council, in February, held a debate on a comprehensive approach to peace-building, during which it supported the formulation of an integrated strategy in that regard. In June, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council and the General Assembly a number of recommendations on how to further develop the UN system's conflict prevention capacity, with the co-operation and involvement of Member States.

The United Nations political and peace-building missions continued to lead UN efforts to consolidate peace and promote democratization and the rule of law. In 2001, the number of such missions in operation rose to 12. At the same time, efforts continued to strengthen and streamline the management and operation of UN peacekeeping missions through the implementation of the recommendations made in 2000 by the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations in the Brahimi report. As part of those efforts, the Secretariat conducted the first in-depth managerial examination of UN peacekeeping operations and identified core capacities that required further strengthening. During the year, the United Nations deployed no new peacekeeping missions, with the total number of missions remaining at 15 (4 in Africa, 3 in Asia, 5 in Europe and 3 in the Middle East). However, the number of military personnel and civilian police serving under UN command increased to some 47,000 compared to 37,719 the year before; they were supported by some 12,800 international and local civilian staff.

The Council, in January, established a working group on peacekeeping operations to address generic peacekeeping issues and technical aspects of individual peacekeeping operations. It also adopted measures to improve consultations among the Council, troop-contributing countries and the Secretariat.

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, the body responsible for reviewing UN peacekeeping operations in all their aspects, met in June and recommended action to enhance UN peacekeeping capacity and to fulfil peacekeeping responsibilities in the field. It approved most of the recommendations of the in-depth management review of peacekeeping operations.

The cost of UN peacekeeping operations increased to $2,378.7 million for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, compared with $1,756.8 million during the previous 12-month period. Unpaid assessed contributions for peacekeeping operations also increased to $2,352.3 million, compared with $2,128.9 million during the previous period. The Assembly considered various aspects of peacekeeping financing, financial performance reports and proposed budgets, including the peacekeeping support account and the United Nations Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy. It considered the Secretary-General's report on the use of resident auditors at peacekeeping missions and endorsed further recommendations on reform procedures for determining reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment and troop costs. The Secretariat clarified for Member States the procedures adopted in 2000 for apportioning the expenses of peacekeeping operations.

Nobel Peace Prize

On 12 October, the Norwegian Nobel Committee announced that it would award the 2001 Nobel Peace Prize, in two equal portions, to the United Nations and its Secretary-General, Kofi A. Annan, for their work for a better organized and more peaceful world.

The Committee stated that the United Nations was at the forefront of efforts to achieve peace and security in the world, and of the international mobilization aimed at meeting the world's economic, social and environmental challenges. As Secretary-General, the Committee said, Mr. Annan had been pre-eminent in bringing new life to the United Nations. While clearly underlining the Organization's traditional responsibility for peace and security, he had also emphasized its obligations with regard to human rights, risen to new challenges such as HIV/AIDS and international terrorism, and brought about more efficient utilization of the Organization's modest resources.

At a 12 October meeting of the General Assembly [A/56/PV.24], several Member States congratulated the Organization and the Secretary-General on the award of the Peace Prize. Addressing the Assembly, the Secretary-General quoted the Nobel Committee's statement that it had used the prize "to proclaim that the only negotiable route to global peace and cooperation goes by way of the United Nations". He observed that, in a world that was growing ever closer and more interconnected, yet still torn by brutal conflicts and cruel injustice, it was more important than ever that humanity travelled that route and that everyone should work hard to pave the road ahead of it.

Also on 12 October, the Security Council held a special meeting on the award of the Nobel Peace Prize.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 October [meeting 4390], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/28 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council today celebrates, together with the rest of the United Nations family, the award of the 2001 Nobel Peace Prize to the United Nations and to its Secretary-General, Kofi Annan.

The United Nations is the embodiment of cooperation among States in safeguarding peace, advancing international development, and in combating common threats to the dignity and well-being of peoples everywhere.

The United Nations remains today, in its activities around the world and in the ideals it sets, the best hope for a future in which peoples everywhere can work together to meet common challenges and to advance common goals.

The Security Council today pays special tribute to all the men and women who work for the United Nations, whatever their tasks of duty, wherever they may be in the service of peace.

The decision of the Nobel Committee to award the 2001 Nobel Peace Prize to the United Nations and to the Secretary-General reflects the high esteem shared by people throughout the world for Secretary-General Kofi Annan. It rightly honours his exceptional achievements in the service of the United Nations and of the entire international community as well as honouring the achievements of the United Nations itself.

In warmly congratulating the Secretary-General, Kofi Annan, the Council reiterates its own strong support for his efforts in upholding the purposes and principles of the United Nations Charter and for his role in assuring to the Organization its full and rightful place in the world and in leading its search for new ways forward for all men and women in all countries to live their lives with dignity and peace.

Following delivery of the statement, the Secretary-General congratulated Council members past and present, stating that the Nobel Committee, in awarding the Peace Prize to the United Nations, had honoured the Council and, indeed, all parts of the Organization, above all the men and women who worked in the service of peace. All who worked at the United Nations should feel proud, but also humble, because even more would be expected of them in the future, perhaps in the near future.

On 10 December, the Secretary-General received the Nobel Peace Prize for 2001 in Oslo. He was accompanied by the General Assembly President, who accepted the Prize on behalf of the United Nations. Delivering the Nobel Lecture, the Secretary-General said that in the twenty-first century the mission of the United Nations would be defined by a new, more profound awareness of the sanctity of every human being, regardless of race or religion. Peace had to be sought because it was the condition for every member of the human family to live a life of dignity and security. He added that from the vision of the UN role in the next century flowed three key priorities—eradicating poverty, preventing conflict and promoting democracy.

Follow-up to Millennium Summit (2000)

In his September report "Road map towards the implementation of the United Nations Millennium Declaration" [A/56/326], submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 55/162 [YUN 2000, p. 62], the Secretary-General outlined action taken to implement the millennium development goals contained in the Declaration [ibid., p. 49] adopted at the Assembly's Millennium Summit, including those related to peace and security. In a section of the report on strengthening United Nations capacities for resolving armed conflict, the Secretary-General described progress in implementing the goal of making the United Nations more effective in maintaining peace and security by giving it the resources and tools for conflict prevention, the peaceful resolution of disputes, peacekeeping, and post-conflict peace-building and reconstruction. Those challenges, he said, required action to replace the culture of reaction by one of prevention, as reflected in the measures designed to limit armed conflict, including preventive arms control and marking and tracking "blood diamonds" (see p. 52); completing the ongoing management reforms in UN peacekeeping; and supporting peace-building efforts on the ground with regard to disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, while providing electoral assistance and promoting reconciliation.

He proposed, as strategies for moving forward, earlier and more sustained action to address the underlying causes of conflict, development of improved integrated prevention strategies with a regional focus, and enhancing the capacity of Member States, regional organizations and the UN system for effective prevention; encouraging States to ensure equitable distribution of assets and access to resources; urging States to act on the Secretary-General's recommendations on the prevention of armed conflict (see p. 48); strengthening national capacities for addressing structural risk factors by providing advisory services and technical assistance; and utilizing multidisciplinary fact-finding missions, encouraging the use of preventive deployments and establishing an informal network of eminent persons for conflict prevention.

In peacekeeping, the Secretary-General recommended ensuring the expeditious completion of peacekeeping reform, particularly by reaching, in 2001, an agreement on the decisions required for further progress, including on financial resources (see p. 74); increasing collaboration between the United Nations and regional organizations; and paying greater attention to gender, humanitarian and disarmament issues in peacekeeping operations.

As to peace-building, the Secretary-General recommended securing adequate international resources to permit recovery and development for post-conflict societies; strengthening the capacity of UN resident coordinators and country teams to undertake effective peace-building; preventing the recurrence of conflict through disarmament, demobilization and reintegration measures; and improving the functioning of UN peace-building support offices.

In the area of international terrorism, he proposed encouraging States to sign, ratify and implement the conventions and protocols relating to terrorism (see p. 69); supporting international efforts to finalize the draft convention for the suppression of nuclear terrorism and to draw up a comprehensive convention on international terrorism (see p. 1224); and continuing efforts to develop and adopt corresponding laws and administrative procedures at the national level.

The Assembly, on 14 December, adopted resolution 56/95 on the follow-up to the outcome of the Millennium Summit (see p. 1279).

Follow-up to Security Council Summit (2000)

On 7 March [meeting 4288], the Security Council held an open debate on the agenda item "Ensuring an effective role of the Security Council in the maintenance of international peace and security, particularly in Africa". In a 28 February letter [S/2001/185], Ukraine, as Council President, informed the Secretary-General of its intention to convene the meeting, stating that the objective was to evaluate progress achieved in implementing the Council's declaration contained in resolution 1318(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 64], adopted at its high-level meeting in 2000, and to explore further ways to enhance the Council's role in that regard.

In an explanatory memorandum, Ukraine recalled the commitments set out in resolution 1318(2000) to enhance the effectiveness of the United Nations in addressing the challenges to peace and security and posed a number of questions regarding the Council's practical implementation of those commitments. Specifically, it asked how effectively was the promotion of peace and sustainable development being translated into practical action; whether there were "forgotten" conflicts or situations that needed greater attention; whether there were any specific tasks related to the strengthening of peacekeeping that required more energetic efforts by the Council; what specific areas had been overlooked in enhancing UN effectiveness in addressing conflict; how effectively was the Council contributing to the development of comprehensive strategies to address the root causes of conflicts; and what progress had been achieved in strengthening cooperation and communication between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations and was there any need for institutional reinforcement. Appended to the note was a summary of the major ideas, initiatives and messages presented during the Summit.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 March [meeting 4302], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/10 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls the decisions and recommendations contained in the declaration on ensuring an effective role for the Security Council in the maintenance of international peace and security, particularly in Africa, adopted at its meeting at the level of heads of State and Government in the course of the Millennium Summit (resolution 1318(2000) of 7 September 2000, annex), and the open debate held on 7 March 2001 to review its implementation. The Council takes note with interest of the important views expressed by non-members at this debate.

The Council notes the progress achieved in translating the commitments made at its Summit meeting into practical results and expresses its determination to intensify efforts to this end. The Council underlines the importance of the declaration as a contribution towards the development of a well-targeted strategy and shared vision in the maintenance of international peace and security and of the deeper and broader involvement of Member States and the wider international community in that regard.

The Council will consider and take appropriate action on the Secretary-General's forthcoming report on conflict prevention, his recommendations on the strengthening of the United Nations capacity to develop peace-building strategies, the report prepared by its Working Group on General Issues of Sanctions, and the recommendations on improving the three-way relationship between the Council, the troop-contributing countries and the Secretariat to be prepared by its Working Group on Peacekeeping Operations, and reiterates its intention to review periodically the implementation of its resolution 1327(2000) of 13 November 2000 on strengthening peacekeeping operations.

The Council underlines the need for closer cooperation and interaction within the United Nations system in addressing the challenges to peace and security, including the root causes of conflicts, and intends to continue taking concrete steps in advancing this goal. The Council also expresses its willingness to continue to develop productive working relationships with regional and subregional organizations in addressing conflict.

The Council decides to conduct a further review, with the active participation of non-members, of the implementation of the commitments made at its meeting at the level of heads of State and Government.

Implementation of 1970 Declaration

The General Assembly, by decision 56/417 of 29 November, decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-eighth (2003) session the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security" [YUN 1970, p. 105].

Conflict prevention

Prevention of armed conflict

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Security Council presidential statement S/PRST/2000/25 [YUN 2000, p. 73], the Secretary-General submitted to the Council and the General Assembly a June report on the prevention of armed conflict [A/55/985-S/2001/574 & Corr.1], in which he reviewed progress in developing a conflict prevention capacity in the United Nations and made recommendations on how UN system efforts could be further enhanced, with the cooperation and involvement of Member States.

The Secretary-General stated that the primary responsibility for conflict prevention rested with national Governments and other local actors; without a sense of national ownership, prevention was unlikely to succeed. It required early action by national actors and, where appropriate, by the international community. However, for early prevention to be effective, the multidimensional causes of conflict needed to be identified and addressed. Of great importance were a deep understanding of the importance of local circumstances and traditions and the identification of fundamental socio-economic inequities.

Prevention fell into two categories: operational prevention, or measures applicable in the face of immediate crisis; and structural prevention, which consisted of measures to ensure that crises did not arise in the first place or, if they did, that they did not recur. An investment in long-term structural prevention was ultimately an investment in sustainable development, which, when it addressed the root causes of conflict, played an important role in preventing conflict and in promoting peace.

In the current era of diminishing international development assistance, the donor community was increasingly reluctant to provide development support to States that were on the brink of or in the midst of conflict. However, investing in conflict prevention offered the potential for multiple returns for national development over the long term and would save hundreds of thousands of lives and billions of dollars. Funds currently spent on military action could instead be available for poverty reduction and equitable sustainable development, which would further reduce the risks of war and disaster.

The Secretary-General noted that many of the UN system's development and other programmes and projects already had preventive effects or preventive potential, though they were often disparate and inchoate. The challenge therefore was how to mobilize that collective potential with greater coherence and focus, without major new resources.

The Secretary-General recommended that the General Assembly consider both more active use of its powers, in accordance with Articles 10, 11 and 14 of the Charter, in the prevention of armed conflicts, and ways to enhance its interaction with the Security Council, particularly in developing long-term conflict prevention and peace-building strategies. He encouraged the Council to consider establishing a mechanism for discussing prevention cases on a continuing basis, in addition to early warning or prevention cases brought to its attention by Member States. He further suggested that the Economic and Social Council, at a future high-level segment of its annual substantive session, address the root causes of conflict and the role of development in promoting long-term conflict prevention.

The Secretary-General urged Member States to resort to the International Court of Justice (ICJ) earlier and more often to settle their disputes; accept the Court's jurisdiction or, where necessary, agree on matters to present to the Court; and when adopting multilateral treaties under UN auspices, include clauses providing for disputes to be referred to ICJ. He recommended that the Assembly authorize the Secretary-General and other UN organs to take advantage of the Court's advisory competence and that those organs that already enjoyed such authorization resort to the Court more frequently.

As to the role of his own office, the Secretary-General indicated his intention to increase the use of interdisciplinary fact-finding and confidence-building missions to volatile regions; develop regional prevention strategies with regional partners and appropriate UN organs and agencies; establish an informal network of eminent persons for conflict prevention; and improve the capacity and resource base for preventive action in the Secretariat.

With regard to the UN system, funds and programmes and specialized agencies should consider how best to integrate a conflict prevention perspective into their mandated activities, the Assembly should provide the Department of Political Affairs with adequate resources to carry out its conflict prevention and peace-building responsibilities, and Member States and the Security Council should make more use of preventive deployments before the onset of conflict. The Secretary-General urged the Council to support peace-building components within peacekeeping operations and strengthen the Secretariat's capacity in that regard through, among other actions, the measures outlined in the Secretary-General's report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations and of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations [A/55/977] (see p. 71).

The Secretary-General also recommended greater transparency by Member States on military matters and called on the Assembly and other UN disarmament bodies to strengthen disarmament-related early warning and transparency mechanisms, particularly with regard to small arms and light weapons. He encouraged the Council to include a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration component in the mandates of UN peacekeeping and peace-building operations.

The Secretary-General also made recommendations regarding human rights, development assistance, humanitarian action, media and public information, gender equality, drug control and crime prevention and interaction between the United Nations and other international actors in the prevention of armed conflict.

In his conclusions, the Secretary-General addressed measures for overcoming the obstacles to conflict prevention, including the refusal by some Governments to admit that they had a problem that could lead to violent conflict and their rejection of offers of assistance, ways in which Member States defined their national interests in any given crisis, the intractability of conflicts and the obduracy of warring parties, and the many instances of local warlords and other non-State actors who did not consider themselves constrained by Security Council decisions and the wishes of the international community. The time had come, he said, to intensify efforts to move from a culture of reaction to a culture of prevention, and he proposed 10 principles to guide the future approach of the United Nations to conflict prevention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 August [meeting 110], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/281 [draft: A/55/L.91] without vote [agenda item 10].

Prevention of armed conflict

The General Assembly,

Having received the report of the Secretary-General on prevention of armed conflict and the recommendations contained therein,

Recalling its debate on the report on 12 and 13 July 2001,

1. Calls upon Governments to consider the report of the Secretary-General and the recommendations contained therein;

2. Calls upon regional and subregional organizations to consider the report and the recommendations therein addressed to them;

3. Calls upon all relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to consider, in accordance with their mandates, the recommendations addressed to them and to inform the General Assembly, preferably during its fifty-sixth session, of their views in this regard;

4. Invites relevant civil society actors to consider the report and the recommendations therein addressed to them;

5. Decides to continue to consider the report and the recommendations contained therein at its fifty-sixth session, taking into account, as appropriate, any views and comments received pursuant to paragraphs 1 to 4 above.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 August [meeting 4360], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1366(2001). The draft [S/2001/828] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1196(1998) of 16 September 1998, 1197(1998) of 18 September 1998, 1208(1998) of 19 November 1998, 1209(1998) of 19 November 1998, 1265(1999) of 17 September 1999, 1296(2000) of 19 April 2000, 1318(2000) of 7 September 2000, 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000 and 1327(2000) of 13 November 2000,

Recalling also the statements of its President of 16 September 1998 (S/PRST/1998/28), 24 September 1998 (S/PRST/1998/29), 30 November 1998 (S/PRST/1998/35), 24 September 1999 (S/PRST/1999/28), 30 November 1999 (S/PRST/1999/34), 23 March 2000 (S/PRST/2000/10), 20 July 2000 (S/PRST/2000/25), 20 February 2001 (S/PRST/2001/5) and 22 March 2001 (S/PRST/2001/10),

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the prevention of armed conflict and in particular the recommendations contained therein relating to the role of the Security Council,

Reiterating the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and reaffirming its commitment to the principles of the political independence, sovereign equality and territorial integrity of all States,

Mindful of the consequences of armed conflict on relations between and among States, the economic burden on the nations involved as well as on the international community, and, above all, the humanitarian consequences of conflicts,

Bearing in mind its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security and reaffirming its role in the prevention of armed conflicts,

Stressing the need for the maintenance of regional and international peace and stability and friendly relations among all States, and underlining the overriding political, humanitarian and moral imperatives as well as the economic advantages of preventing the outbreak and escalation of conflicts,

Emphasizing the importance of a comprehensive strategy comprising operational and structural measures for prevention of armed conflict, and recognizing the ten principles outlined by the Secretary-General in his report on prevention of armed conflicts,

Noting with satisfaction the increased recourse, with consent of receiving Member States, to Security Council missions to areas of conflict or potential conflict, which among others, can play an important role in the prevention of armed conflicts,

Reiterating that conflict prevention is one of the primary responsibilities of Member States,

Recognizing the essential role of the Secretary-General in the prevention of armed conflict and the importance of efforts to enhance his role in accordance with Article 99 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing the role of other relevant organs, offices, funds and programmes and the specialized agencies of the United Nations, and other international organizations including the World Trade Organization and the Bretton Woods institutions, as well as the role of non-governmental organizations, civil society actors and the private sector in the prevention of armed conflict,

Stressing the necessity of addressing the root causes and regional dimensions of conflicts, recalling the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General on causes of conflicts and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa of 13 April 1998 and underlining the mutually supportive relationship between conflict prevention and sustainable development,

Expressing serious concern over the threat to peace and security caused by the illicit trade in and the excessive and destabilizing accumulation of small arms and light weapons in areas of conflict and their potential to exacerbate and prolong armed conflicts,

Emphasizing the importance of adequate, predictable and properly targeted resources for conflict prevention and of consistent funding for long-term preventive activities,

Reiterating that early warning, preventive diplomacy, preventive deployment, practical disarmament meas- ures and post-conflict peace-building are interdependent and complementary components of a comprehensive conflict prevention strategy,

Underlining the importance of raising awareness of and ensuring respect for international humanitarian law, stressing the fundamental responsibility of Member States to prevent and end impunity for genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes, recognizing the role of the ad hoc tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda in deterring the future occurrence of such crimes thereby helping to prevent armed conflict, and stressing the importance of international efforts in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations in this regard,

Reiterating the shared commitment to save people from the ravages of armed conflicts, acknowledging the lessons to be learned for all concerned from the failure of preventive efforts that preceded such tragedies as the genocide in Rwanda and the massacre in Srebrenica, and resolving to take appropriate action within its competence, combined with the efforts of Member States, to prevent the recurrence of such tragedies,

1. Expresses its determination to pursue the objective of prevention of armed conflict as an integral part of its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security;

2. Stresses that the essential responsibility for conflict prevention rests with national Governments, and that the United Nations and the international community can play an important role in support of national efforts for conflict prevention and can assist in building national capacity in this field and recognizes the important supporting role of civil society;

3. Calls upon Member States as well as regional and subregional organizations and arrangements to support the development of a comprehensive conflict prevention strategy as proposed by the Secretary-General;

4. Emphasizes that for the success of a preventive strategy, the United Nations needs the consent and support of the Government concerned and, if possible, the cooperation of other key national actors and underlines in this regard that the sustained political will of neighbouring States, regional allies or other Member States who would be well placed to support United Nations efforts, is necessary;

5. Expresses its willingness to give prompt consideration to early warning or prevention cases brought to its attention by the Secretary-General and in this regard, encourages the Secretary-General to convey to the Security Council his assessment of potential threats to international peace and security with due regard to relevant regional and subregional dimensions, as appropriate, in accordance with Article 99 of the Charter of the United Nations;

6. Undertakes to keep situations of potential conflict under close review as part of a conflict prevention strategy and expresses its intention to consider cases of potential conflict brought to its attention by any Member State, or by a State not a Member of the United Nations or by the General Assembly or on the basis of information furnished by the Economic and Social Council;

7. Expresses its commitment to take early and effective action to prevent armed conflict and to that end to employ all appropriate means at its disposal including, with the consent of the receiving States, its missions to areas of potential conflict;

8. Reiterates its call to Member States to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security and in this regard urges them to provide the necessary human, material and financial resources for timely and preventive measures including early warning, preventive diplomacy, preventive deployment, practical disarmament measures and peace-building as appropriate in each case;

9. Reaffirms its role in the peaceful settlement of disputes and reiterates its call upon the Member States to settle their disputes by peaceful means as set forth in Chapter VI of the Charter of the United Nations including by use of regional preventive mechanisms and more frequent resort to the International Court of Justice;

10. Invites the Secretary-General to refer to the Council information and analyses from within the United Nations system on cases of serious violations of international law, including international humanitarian law and human rights law, and on potential conflict situations arising, inter alia, from ethnic, religious and territorial disputes, poverty and lack of development and expresses its determination to give serious consideration to such information and analyses regarding situations which it deems to represent a threat to international peace and security;

11. Expresses its intention to continue to invite the Office of the United Nations Emergency Relief Coordinator and other relevant United Nations agencies to brief its members on emergency situations which it deems to represent a threat to international peace and security and supports the implementation of protection and assistance activities by relevant United Nations agencies in accordance with their respective mandates;

12. Expresses its willingness to consider preventive deployment upon the recommendation of the Secretary-General and with the consent of the Member States concerned;

13. Calls upon all Member States to ensure timely and faithful implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects adopted on 20 July 2001 and to take all necessary measures at national, regional and global levels to prevent and combat the illicit flow of small arms and light weapons in areas of conflict;

14. Expresses its willingness to make full use of information from the Secretary-General provided to him, inter alia, under paragraph 33 section II of the Programme of Action in its efforts to prevent armed conflict;

15. Stresses the importance of the inclusion, as part of a conflict prevention strategy, of peace-building components including civilian police within peace-keeping operations on a case-by-case basis to facilitate a smooth transition to the post-conflict peace-building phase and the ultimate conclusion of the mission;

16. Decides to consider inclusion, as appropriate, of a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration component in the mandates of United Nations peace-keeping and peace-building operations with particular attention to the rehabilitation of child soldiers;

17. Reiterates its recognition of the role of women in conflict prevention and requests the Secretary-General to give greater attention to gender perspectives in the implementation of peacekeeping and peace-building mandates as well as in conflict prevention efforts;

18. Supports the enhancement of the role of the Secretary-General in conflict prevention including by increased use of United Nations interdisciplinary fact-finding and confidence-building missions to regions of tension, developing regional prevention strategies with regional partners and appropriate United Nations organs and agencies, and improving the capacity and resource base for preventive action in the Secretariat;

19. Endorses the call of the Secretary-General for support to the follow-up processes launched by the Third and Fourth High-level United Nations-Regional Organizations Meetings in the field of conflict prevention and peace-building, and to provide increased resources for the development of regional capacities in these fields;

20. Calls for the enhancement of the capacity for conflict prevention of regional organizations, in particular in Africa, by extending international assistance to, inter alia, the Organization of African Unity and its successor organization, through its Mechanism of Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution, as well as to the Economic Community of West African States and its Mechanism for Prevention, Management and Resolution of Conflicts, Peacekeeping and Security;

21. Stresses the need to create conditions for durable peace and sustainable development by addressing the root causes of armed conflict and, to this end, calls upon Member States and relevant bodies of the United Nations system to contribute to the effective implementation of the United Nations Declaration and Programme of Action for a Culture of Peace ;

22. Looks forward to further consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on prevention of armed conflict by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, as well as other actors including the Bretton Woods institutions, and supports the development of a system-wide coordinated and mutually supportive approach to prevention of armed conflict;

23. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

In related action, the Council, in presidential statement S/PRST/2001/21 of 31 August, noted with concern, among other things, that the destabilizing accumulation and uncontrolled spread of small arms and light weapons in many regions of the world increased the intensity and duration of armed conflicts, impeded success at peace-building, frustrated efforts to prevent armed conflict and compromised the effectiveness of the Council in discharging its responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security (see p. 500).

Conflict diamonds

Kimberly Process. The Kimberly Process on conflict diamonds, established in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 76] to stem the flow of rough diamonds used by rebels to finance armed conflict, protect the legitimate diamond industry and create and implement an international certification scheme for rough diamonds based on national certification schemes and internationally agreed minimum standards, held six meetings in 2001 under the chairmanship of South Africa (Windhoek, Namibia, 13-16 February; Brussels, Belgium, 25-27 April; Moscow, 3-5 July; Twickenham, United Kingdom, 11-13 September; Luanda, Angola, 30 October-1 November; and Gaborone, Botswana, 26-29 November).

In an October provisional report [A/56/502], submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 55/56 [YUN 2000, p. 77], it was stated that the Windhoek meeting, which also included a technical workshop, had adopted a road map to guide future meetings in devising an implementable, simple and workable international certification scheme for rough diamonds. The Brussels meeting produced a consolidated paper outlining elements of a model certificate of origin and considered the need for non-producing countries to certify their rough diamond exports. It requested that a non-paper be drafted containing all the elements of the envisaged certification scheme. The Moscow meeting [A/56/186] agreed in principle on the basic elements of an international system for certification of rough diamonds, which was to be elaborated further to include the format and content of certificates accompanying rough diamonds, plus the minimum standards to support those certificates and underpin the whole system.

At the Twickenham meeting, it was agreed to assess the relationship between proposed elements and the envisaged certification scheme and international trade obligations, plus elements relating to its implementation in the European Community (EC). It also examined the type of instrument necessary to establish the certification scheme, its implementation and maintenance.

The meeting in Luanda [A/56/675] agreed on internal controls, provisions for cooperation and transparency and the content of the certificate to accompany shipments of rough diamonds. Agreement was also reached on the preamble of the working document on the certification scheme, which set out the scheme in context. The meeting considered proposals from the World Diamond Council for a comprehensive system of warranties and industry self-regulation, the essential elements of which were incorporated into the draft certification scheme.

The Gaborone meeting, held at the ministerial level [A/56/675] and attended also by representatives of the world's leading rough diamond-producing, -exporting and -importing States, the EC, the Southern African Development Community and other concerned States, issued a statement in which it declared that the 28 November working document entitled "Essential elements of an international scheme of certification for rough diamonds, with a view to breaking the link between armed conflict and the trade in rough diamonds" provided a good basis for the envisaged certification scheme. The scheme should be established through an international understanding as soon as possible. Those in a position to issue the Kimberly Process Certificate should do so immediately. All others were encouraged to do so by 1 June 2002 and full and simultaneous implementation was scheduled for the end of 2002. The mandate of the Kimberly Process should be extended until that time in order to finalize the international understanding. The widest possible participation in the certification scheme should be encouraged and facilitated. The ministers also recognized the need to ensure that the measures taken to implement the scheme were consistent with international law governing international trade, and agreed that a progress report should be submitted to the General Assembly.

The ministers recommended that the United Nations support the implementation of the certification scheme for rough diamonds as an instrument to help promote legitimate trade and ensure the effective implementation of the relevant Security Council resolutions relating to sanctions on the trade in conflict diamonds that were contributing to the promotion of international peace and security and relevant Assembly resolutions.

The Security Council, in resolution 1385 (2001) of 19 December (see p. 178), welcomed the efforts by interested States, the diamond industry, in particular the World Diamond Council, and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to break the link between illicit trade in rough diamonds and armed conflict, particularly through the Kimberly Process, and encouraged further progress in that regard. It also welcomed the establishment of a certification regime in relation to the export of rough diamonds from Guinea and Sierra Leone and the efforts of the Economic Community of West African States to develop a region-wide certification regime.

The General Assembly, by decision 56/464 of 24 December, decided that the item on the role of diamonds in fuelling conflict would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session.

Preventive diplomacy and peacemaking

While comprehensive and coherent conflict prevention strategies offered the greatest potential for promoting lasting peace, they had never been easy to formulate or to implement, the Secretary-General said in his annual report on the work of the Organization [A/56/1 & Add.1]. Member States were turning increasing attention and providing more assistance to conflict prevention; for the United Nations, the concept had to be put into practice, and the rhetoric matched by action. The Secretary-General recalled his 1998 recommendations [YUN 1998, p. 66] on enhancing the effectiveness of and strengthening cooperation in conflict prevention and emphasized that UN development and humanitarian agencies, together with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund), had a vital role to play in creating a peaceful environment and addressing the root causes of conflicts at the early stages of prevention. The Secretary-General said that he would continue to dispatch UN interdisciplinary fact-finding and confidence-building missions to volatile regions; start submitting periodic regional or subregional reports to the Security Council on disputes that might potentially threaten international peace and security; develop regional prevention strategies with regional partners and UN organs and agencies to establish an informal network of eminent persons for conflict prevention; and improve the capacity and resource base for preventive action in the Secretariat.

The Secretary-General noted that the Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49] called for enhanced institutional cooperation between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations. The utility of such an approach had been demonstrated in West Africa, where the Organization had intensified its partnership with the countries of that region to identify potential threats to peace and was cooperating to prevent such challenges from deteriorating into violent conflict.

International symposium on conflict prevention

The International Symposium on Conflict Prevention, entitled "Culture of Prevention: Multi-Actor Coordination from UN to Civil Society", organized by Japan (Tokyo, 13-14 March), was held as a follow-up to the G-8 (Group of eight major industrialized States) Miyazaki Initiatives for Conflict Prevention [YUN 2000, p. 75]. The Symposium considered how to achieve successful coordination among various actors engaged in conflict prevention activities and specifically addressed the themes of small arms and light weapons in the case of Cambodia and conflict and development in the case of East Timor.

In his summary of the Symposium's deliberations [A/55/875-S/2001/322], submitted to the Secretary-General by Japan on 2 April, the Chairman said that there was inadequate coordination and insufficient communication among the multiple actors working on conflict prevention, resulting in ineffectiveness and failure, with the actions of some actors cancelling out those of others. To eliminate those difficulties and achieve solid coordination, the Symposium recommended a number of measures for action by the United Nations, other international organizations and Governments.

Women's role in conflict prevention and resolution

On 8 March—the United Nations Day for Women's Rights and International Peace—the Security Council held informal consultations on women and peace and security [A/56/2]. In a press statement, the Council President reiterated the call to Member States to ensure increased representation of women in decision-making for the prevention, management and resolution of conflicts and to all parties to armed conflicts to take specific measures to protect women and girls from gender-based violence in situations of armed conflict. The need for early and full implementation of resolution 1325(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 1113] on women in armed conflict was stressed and UN agencies and bodies were urged to take it into account in their work. The President noted the launch of the first Millennium Peace Prize for Women, which recognized and highlighted women's leadership in ending war and building sustainable peace.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 October [meeting 4402], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/31 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council reaffirms its commitment to the implementation of its resolution 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000 and welcomes the efforts by the United Nations system, Member States, civil society organizations and other relevant actors in promoting the equal participation and full involvement of women in the maintenance and promotion of peace and security and in implementing the provisions of resolution 1325(2000).

The Council further reaffirms its strong support for increasing the role of women in decision-making with regard to conflict prevention and resolution and renews its call on States to include women in the negotiation and implementation of peace accords, constitutions and strategies for resettlement and rebuilding and to take measures to support local women's groups and indigenous processes for conflict resolution. In this regard it recognizes the efforts of the Mano River Women's Peace Network in facilitating peace and dialogue in the Mano River

Union region. It is also encouraged by the inclusion of women in the political decision-making bodies in Burundi, Somalia and East Timor.

The Council underscores the importance of promoting an active and visible policy of mainstreaming a gender perspective in all policies and programmes while addressing armed conflicts, in particular peacekeeping operations in keeping with the statement of the President of the Security Council on 8 March 2000.

The Council therefore reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to include, where appropriate, in his reporting to the Security Council, progress in gender mainstreaming throughout United Nations peacekeeping missions and on other aspects relating to women and girls. It expresses its intention to give full consideration to these reports and to take appropriate action. The Council also reaffirms its call for the inclusion of gender components, as appropriate, in peacekeeping operations.

The Council renews its support for gender-sensitive training guidelines and material on the protection, rights and the particular needs of women, as well as on the importance of involving women in all peacekeeping and peace-building measures. The Council calls upon all troop-contributing countries to include these elements in their national training programmes for peacekeepers.

The Council welcomes the specific proposals made by the Secretary-General aimed at strengthening the Best Practices Unit of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations with the appointment of gender advisers at sufficiently senior levels.

It also welcomes the practical efforts, including the preparation of complementary reports, already made by the United Nations and its agencies, funds, programmes and regional bodies, in particular those participating in the Administrative Committee on Coordination Inter-agency Task Force on Women, Peace and Security to implement all aspects of resolution 1325(2000), as well as the timely issuance of the publication Gender Perspective in Disarmament, which gives a clear indication of ways in which women can be fully involved and the benefits to the parties concerned.

The Council notes with satisfaction that the Secretary-General's study requested under paragraph 16 of its resolution 1325(2000) on the impact of armed conflict on women and girls, the role of women in peace-building and the gender dimensions of peace processes and conflict resolution is under way and welcomes the coordinated comprehensive input of the United Nations and all the relevant agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and looks forward to its review.

The Council is concerned that there are still no women appointed as Special Representatives or Special Envoys of the Secretary-General to peace missions, and urges Member States to redouble their efforts to nominate women candidates to the Secretary-General. The Council also urges the Secretary-General to appoint women as Special Representatives and Envoys to pursue good offices on his behalf in accordance with his strategic plan of action.

The Council recognizes the need to implement fully international humanitarian and human rights law that protects the rights of civilians, including women and girls, during and after conflicts and calls on all parties to armed conflicts to take special measures to protect women and girls from gender-based violence and all other forms of violence.

The Council remains actively seized of the matter and expresses its willingness to consider, as appropriate, the gender dimensions of armed conflict in carrying out its responsibility of maintaining international peace and security under the Charter of the United Nations.

Peace-building

In his report on the work of the Organization [A/56/1 & Add.1], the Secretary-General said that UN peace-building activities continued to be strengthened by increasingly dynamic cooperation and coordination across the system, especially at the field level, where peace operations interacted regularly with the different UN system entities engaged in peace-building and preventive work, including emergency operations led by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other relief agencies, and the long-term work of entities like the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Work in human rights was of particular importance for both early warning and peace-building. In that regard, cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) by the human rights component of a peacekeeping operation or with the High Commissioner's own field presence was of paramount importance to the Organization's work.

Comprehensive approach to peace-building

On 5 February [meeting 4272], the Security Council held an open debate on the topic "Peace-building: towards a comprehensive approach". In a 25 January letter [S/2001/82], Tunisia, in its capacity as Council President, informed the Secretary-General of its intention to organize such a debate, noting that it would give the international community an opportunity to reaffirm its political will and commitment to define a common approach to peace-building, to focus on various aspects of peace-building and the problems involved and to work towards a comprehensive strategy for peace-building and conflict prevention. In an attached working paper, it examined the concept of peace-building and proposed points for discussion during the Council's debate, including the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants; refugees and displaced persons; poverty eradication and the promotion of sustainable development; and strengthening the rule of law and democratic institutions. Tunisia also made proposals for a comprehensive peace-building strategy.

Addressing the Council on 5 February, the Secretary-General said that peace-building in the broadest sense was about helping a country to put back in place the rudiments of normal life after a period of conflict, the resumption of economic activity, the rejuvenation of institutions, the restoration of basic services, the reconstruction of clinics and schools, the revamping of public administration and the resolution of differences through dialogue, not violence. The overarching challenge was to move societies towards sustainable peace.

Peace-building done well was a powerful deterrent to violent conflict. It was not the dramatic imposition of a grand plan, but rather the process of building the pillars of peace from the ground up, bit by bit. Virtually every part of the UN system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, was currently engaged in one form of peace-building or another through the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants; human rights education; the repatriation of refugees; the promotion of conflict resolution and reconciliation techniques, as well as cultural exchanges. To ensure the coherence of those efforts, the United Nations was trying to improve its internal arrangements, so that peace-building was comprehensive and integrated and duplication of effort and confusion were avoided.

Although peace-building was thought of primarily in post-conflict settings, it was also a preventive instrument, which could address the underlying root causes of conflict, and which could be used before the actual outbreak of war. While peace-building should be seen as a long-term exercise, there was also an element of urgency to achieve tangible progress on a number of fronts in a short period of time. It was an extremely difficult undertaking, often starting almost from ground zero, under clouds of bitterness and loss. It required persistence and vision, as well as the courage to pursue reconciliation in societies still fractured by suspicion and mistrust.

The Secretary-General undertook to do his utmost operationally to improve peace-building projects and to exploit to the best possible effect the expertise within the UN system and among many partners. He would also ask Council members to do more politically to give peace-building a higher priority and a higher profile by bringing it closer to the forefront of their awareness. Peace-building should not be seen as an add-on or an afterthought, something to save for later when conditions or resources or politics permitted. It was a central tool of proven worth and

Council members should pledge to develop and improve it, and to use it in good time.

UN-regional organizations meeting on peace-building

The Fourth High-level United Nations-Regional Organizations Meeting (New York, 6-7 February) discussed UN peace-building efforts. The Secretary-General, as Chairman of the meeting, transmitted to the Council President on 12 February [S/2001/138] his summary of the meeting's deliberations entitled "Framework for co-operation in peace-building", which included the "Guiding principles for cooperation in peace-building" agreed on at the meeting.

The Secretary-General said that participants emphasized that peace-building should be a home-grown process, in which the role of the United Nations and regional organizations was to support national endeavours and its fundamental goal was to promote self-reliance. The meeting recognized that there were a number of constraints to effective peace-building activities, in particular a lack of political support by the international community for long-term peace-building; mandates given to the United Nations and regional organizations that frequently exceeded their capacities; and the limited availability of resources, which were often drawn from funds provided for other activities.

The guiding principles for cooperation in peace-building advocated the promotion of self-reliance as a fundamental goal of all cooperative peace-building activities, which should be a home-grown process supported by the United Nations and regional organizations. The aim was to ensure speedy operational response and optimum mobilization of resources geared to the priority needs of the affected countries. In addition, joint peace-building activities should be directed at preventing the outbreak or recurrence of conflict, with the cooperation of the parties concerned; cooperation should be based on the comparative advantages of the United Nations and regional organizations leading to complementarity of efforts; and multidisciplinary actions could encompass five key areas of peace-building: negotiation and implementation of peace agreements; security stabilization; good governance, democratization and human rights; justice and reconciliation; and humanitarian relief and sustainable development. Also needed were the co-ordinated mobilization of international assistance, peace-building assistance guided by needs rather than by geographic preferences and efforts to ensure that peace-building was undertaken on the basis of international legitimacy.

Possible cooperative activities could be undertaken in the areas of capacity-building, strategic development, operational interaction, monitoring, mobilization of political will and financial resources, and follow-up activities.

Annexed to the report was the Secretary-General's statement at the concluding session of the meeting, in which he highlighted some of the main points of discussion that commanded broad agreement.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 February [meeting 4278], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/5 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls the open debate held at its 4274th meeting on 5 February 2001 on "Peace-building: towards a comprehensive approach". The Council recalls also the statements of its President in relation to activities of the United Nations in preventive diplomacy, peacemaking, peacekeeping and post-conflict peace-building. The Security Council welcomes the convening by the Secretary-General of the Fourth High-level United Nations-Regional Organizations Meeting and notes with interest its results, in particular the "Framework for cooperation in peace-building" as conveyed by the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council in his letter of 12 February 2001.

The Council reaffirms its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security. The Council emphasizes the need for full respect for the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the relevant provisions of international law, in particular those related to prevention of armed conflicts and settlement of disputes by peaceful means.

The Council reaffirms that the quest for peace requires a comprehensive, concerted and determined approach that addresses the root causes of conflicts, including their economic and social dimensions.

The Council recognizes that peacemaking, peacekeeping and peace-building are often closely inter-related. The Council stresses that this interrelationship requires a comprehensive approach in order to preserve the results achieved and prevent the recurrence of conflicts. To this effect, the Council reiterates the value of including, as appropriate, peace-building elements in the mandates of peacekeeping operations.

The Council recognizes that peace-building is aimed at preventing the outbreak, the recurrence or continuation of armed conflict and therefore encompasses a wide range of political, developmental, humanitarian and human rights programmes and mechanisms. This requires short- and long-term actions tailored to address the particular needs of societies sliding into conflict or emerging from it. These actions should focus on fostering sustainable institutions and processes in areas such as sustainable development, the eradication of poverty and inequalities, transparent and accountable governance, the promotion of democracy, respect for human rights and the rule of law and the promotion of a culture of peace and non-violence.

The Council further reaffirms that a comprehensive and integrated strategy in peace-building must involve all the relevant actors in this field, taking into account the unique circumstances of each conflict situation. The Council emphasizes that a well-planned and coordinated peace-building strategy can play a significant role in conflict prevention. In this connection, the Council underlines that international efforts in peace-building must complement and not supplant the essential role of the country concerned.

The Council notes that the experiences of the United Nations and regional organizations and other actors in peace-building point to the need for enhancing peace-building activities by formulating a strategy based on the interdependence between sustainable peace, security and development in all its dimensions.

The Council stresses that, to be successful, such a peace-building strategy should meet, inter alia, the following basic criteria: relevance, coherence and consistency of programmes and actions; the consent and cooperation of the authorities of the State concerned where they exist; continuity in and conclusion of the process; cooperation and coordination among organizations and other actors involved; and cost-effectiveness of the overall peace-building operation.

The Council strongly encourages the United Nations system and regional and subregional organizations, donor countries and the international financial institutions to consider undertaking initiatives such as: utilization of the mechanism of consolidated appeals, the joint holding of pledging conferences to mobilize expeditiously international political support and the essential resource requirements; ensuring prompt financing of quick start-up peace-building projects; and strengthening mechanisms that promote development and self-reliance by improving capacity-building activities.

The Council also underlines that successful peace-building is predicated on an effective and an unambiguous division of labour, based on the comparative advantage of different implementing bodies, between all the international partners, including the United Nations system, the international financial institutions, regional and subregional organizations, non-governmental organizations and the wider international community. In this regard, the Council strongly encourages all those actors to enhance their cooperation in areas such as the early identification of situations where peace-building is required; the definition of objectives and priority areas of peace-building; the development of an integrated operational response through mutual consultation; joint monitoring of peace-building activities; and establishing repertoires of best practices and lessons learned in the area of peace-building.

The Council stresses the importance of mainstreaming a gender perspective into peace agreements and peace-building strategies and of involving women in all peace-building measures.

The Council further encourages the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations to establish consultative processes to ensure that peace settlements and agreements mediated by these organizations include commitments by the parties to the conflict to concerted action in different areas of peace-building, and stresses the need to identify such areas at early stages of the negotiation of peace agreements.

The Council recognizes that the repatriation and resettlement of refugees and internally displaced persons as well as the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants should not be seen in isolation but must be carried out in the context of a broader search for peace, stability and development, with special emphasis on the revival of economic activities and reparation of the social fabric.

The Council considers it essential to provide speedy operational solutions to the exceptional and urgent needs of countries emerging from or on the verge of conflict, through innovative and flexible means, including quick impact programmes which translate into concrete and visible improvements in the daily lives of their local populations.

To enhance further the effectiveness of the United Nations in addressing conflicts at all stages, from prevention to settlement to post-conflict peace-building, the Security Council reiterates its willingness to consider ways to improve its cooperation with other United Nations bodies and organs directly concerned by peace-building, in particular the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council which have a primary role in this field.

The Security Council recalls the essential role of the Secretary-General in peace-building, in particular in the establishment of strategies in this field and their implementation and recognizes the need to strengthen the coordination and analysis capacity of the Secretariat in order to allow the Secretary-General to fulfil his responsibilities in this area.

The Council recognizes the need for the early involvement on the ground of peace-building actors and an orderly assumption of their responsibilities. To this effect and in order to avoid any gap between peacekeeping and peace-building, the Council expresses its determination, where appropriate, to consult at various stages of any peacekeeping operation that includes peace-building elements and in particular when the operation is being established, with the State concerned and with relevant actors who are primarily responsible for coordinating and implementing aspects of peace-building activities, such as the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the United Nations funds and programmes, the international financial institutions, regional organizations and major donor countries.

The Security Council recognizes that troop-contributing countries may be involved in peace-building activities and that, within the existing system of consultations with these countries, relevant peace-building activities should be discussed.

The Council encourages close cooperation between the authorities of the State concerned and the international community in elaborating programmes of peace-building activities where the commitment by the parties could be formalized in written communications.

The Council underlines the importance of the presence of special representatives of the Secretary-General or other suitable United Nations coordination arrangements, such as the resident coordinator system, in coordinating the elaboration and implementation of peace-building programmes by international organizations and donor countries in close cooperation with local authorities, taking into account ongoing activities. The Council stresses that any United Nations peace-building presence should have the necessary personnel and financial resources to discharge its mandate.

The Council stresses the importance of its being kept regularly informed of the progress achieved as well as of difficulties encountered in peace-building in countries where a peacekeeping operation had been mandated by the Security Council.

The Council reiterates that efforts to ensure lasting solutions to conflicts and to maintain the momentum for peace in any given country or region require an increased solidarity, sustained political will and timely and adequate resources on the part of the international community.

The Council recalls the decision by the Secretary-General to instruct the Executive Committee on Peace and Security to formulate a plan on the strengthening of the United Nations capacity to develop peace-building strategies and to implement programmes in support of them, and looks forward to the submission by him of recommendations to the Security Council and the General Assembly on the basis of this plan.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

In November [S/2001/1054], the Netherlands transmitted to the Council President the report of a seminar "The United Nations system in the new millennium: fostering substantive and operational linkages in the implementation of Peace" (Tarrytown, United States, 19-20 October). Hosted by the International Peace Academy and funded by the Netherlands, the seminar brought together 30 Permanent and Deputy Permanent Representatives of Security Council and Economic and Social Council member States to discuss the respective roles of the primary UN intergovernmental bodies and how they could be better coordinated to increase UN effectiveness in peace-building.

Political and peace-building missions in 2001

During 2001, 12 political and peace-building missions were in operation: 8 in Africa, 2 in the Americas and 2 in Asia and the Pacific.

In Africa, the United Nations Office in Angola continued to explore measures for restoring peace and assisted in capacity-building, humanitarian assistance and the promotion of human rights. The Security Council extended its mandate until 15 October 2001 and again until 15 April 2002. The United Nations Office in Burundi continued to assist the parties to the peace process with regard to the building of an internal political partnership within the context of the Arusha peace process (see p. 145). In 2001, the Secretary-General proposed that the Office undertake additional responsibilities in the post-conflict peace-building phase to help in the consolidation of peace and security and that the staff and resources of the Office be restructured and strengthened. The Security Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in the Central African Republic until 31 December 2002 and agreed with the Secretary-General's proposals for strengthening its mandate to support national reconciliation and create a political environment conducive to peace and development. The mandate of the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Guinea-Bissau was extended until 31 December 2002. On 21 November, the Council noted the Secretary-General's intention to extend the United Nations Political Office for Somalia for a further two years (2002-2003) to continue to assist him to advance the cause of peace and reconciliation, to monitor the situation and support the formation of the Transitional National Government. The mandate of the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Great Lakes Region and that of the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Liberia were extended until 31 December 2002. In November, the Council noted the Secretary-General's intention to establish the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for West Africa for three years from January 2002.

In the Americas, the Organization continued to support the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala, whose mandate was extended until 24 December 2002 by the General Assembly. The International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti, which assisted in that country's economic rehabilitation and reconstruction, ended on 6 February.

In Asia and the Pacific, the United Nations Tajikistan Office of Peace-building (UNTOP) was extended until 1 June 2002 and the United Nations Political Office in Bougainville (UNPOB) (Papua New Guinea) was extended until 31 December 2002, with an expanded mandate to assist with weapons collection and disposal. The United Nations Special Mission in Afghanistan (UNSM) continued to facilitate a political process aimed at achieving a lasting political settlement of the internal conflict there. The General Assembly, in resolution 56/220 A of 21 December, supported the Mission's enhanced role in helping the Afghan Interim Authority to implement the Bonn agreement (see p. 263) until UNSMA could be integrated in a new UN mission in Afghanistan. In the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the United Nations Command continued to implement the maintenance of the 1953 Armistice Agreement [YUN 1953, p. 136].

Other related missions authorized by the Assembly and the Council during 2001 included the United Nations Electoral Observer Mission to monitor the general elections in Fiji and the post-election environment (see p. 314); and an International Security Assistance Force to assist the Afghan Interim Authority in the maintenance of security in Kabul and its surrounding areas so as to allow it to operate in a secure environment (resolution 1386(2001)) (see p. 267).

profound condolences to the victims and their families, and to the people and Government of the United States. The attacks, he said, were undoubtedly deliberate acts of terrorism, carefully planned and coordinated, and he condemned them utterly. Terrorism had to be fought resolutely wherever it appeared; no just cause could be advanced by terror.

In a statement on behalf of the Security Council [SC/7141], the President said that Council members condemned in the strongest terms the horrifying attacks and expressed their deepest sympathy and condolences to the victims and their families and to the people and Government of the United States. They called on all States to work together urgently to bring to justice the perpetrators, organizers and sponsors, and on the international community to redouble its efforts to prevent and suppress terrorist acts by increased cooperation and full implementation of relevant international anti-terrorist conventions and Council resolutions. Council members expressed their readiness to take urgent further steps in accordance with their responsibilities under the Charter.

On 12 September [A/56/350], Mongolia resolutely condemned the terrorist attacks against the United States and stated that the tragic events demonstrated that international terrorism posed a real threat and a serious challenge to all humanity. Mongolia asked the Secretary-General to convene immediately an emergency session of the General Assembly to deliberate the issue of international terrorism.

Also on 12 September, the fifty-sixth session of the Assembly, at its first plenary meeting, heard statements on the terrorist attacks from the Presidents of the fifty-fifth and fifty-sixth sessions, the Secretary-General and representatives of the Asian Group, the Group of Eastern European States, the Group of Latin American and Caribbean States, the Group of Western European and Other States and the United States [A/56/PV.1].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 September [meeting 1], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/1 [draft: A/56/L.1] without vote [agenda item 8].

Condemnation of terrorist attacks in the United States of America

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Strongly condemns the heinous acts of terrorism, which have caused enormous loss of human life, destruction and damage in the cities of New York, host city of the United Nations, and Washington, D.C., and in Pennsylvania;

Threats to international peace and security

International terrorism

Terrorist attacks in the United States

On 11 September, four civilian aeroplanes were hijacked by terrorists in the United States of America and deliberately crashed in New York, Washington, D.C., and Pennsylvania, resulting in the loss of thousands of innocent lives.

The Secretary-General, in a statement to the press on the same day [SG/SM/7948], expressed his

2. Expresses its condolences and solidarity with the people and Government of the United States of America in these sad and tragic circumstances;

3. Urgently calls for international cooperation to bring to justice the perpetrators, organizers and sponsors of the outrages of 11 September 2001;

4. Also urgently calls for international cooperation to prevent and eradicate acts of terrorism, and stresses that those responsible for aiding, supporting or harbouring the perpetrators, organizers and sponsors of such acts will be held accountable.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 September [meeting 4370], the Security Council, in accordance with the understanding reached in prior consultations, met to consider the agenda item "Threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts". Before hearing statements by the Council members and the Secretary-General, the Council observed a minute of silence in memory of the victims of the 11 September terrorists acts. The Council President, because of the Council's decision to limit the list of speakers to the 15 members of the Council, invited those delegations wishing to have their planned statements included in the official records to submit them to the Secretariat. Statements from Australia, Belgium (on behalf of the European Union (EU)), Brazil, Cuba, Israel, Japan, New Zealand, Romania, Slovenia and Yugoslavia were annexed to a 13 September note of the Council President [S/2001/864].

The Council unanimously adopted resolution 1368(2001). The draft [S/2001/861] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming the principles and purposes of the Charter of the United Nations,

Determined to combat by all means threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts,

Recognizing the inherent right of individual or collective self-defence in accordance with the Charter,

1. Unequivocally condemns in the strongest terms the horrifying terrorist attacks which took place on 11 September 2001 in New York, Washington, D.C., and Pennsylvania and regards such acts, like any act of international terrorism, as a threat to international peace and security;

2. Expresses its deepest sympathy and condolences to the victims and their families and to the people and Government of the United States of America;

3. Calls on all States to work together urgently to bring to justice the perpetrators, organizers and sponsors of these terrorist attacks and stresses that those responsible for aiding, supporting or harbouring the perpetrators, organizers and sponsors of these acts will be held accountable;

4. Calls also on the international community to redouble their efforts to prevent and suppress terrorist acts including by increased cooperation and full implementation of the relevant international anti-terrorist conventions and Security Council resolutions, in particular resolution 1269(1999) of 19 October 1999;

5. Expresses its readiness to take all necessary steps to respond to the terrorist attacks of 11 September 2001, and to combat all forms of terrorism, in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations;

6. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

On 17 September [A/56/377-S/2001/885], the United States, in identical letters to the Presidents of the Assembly and the Council, conveyed its appreciation for the expressions of sympathy and support contained in the resolutions passed by the Assembly and the Council in connection with the 11 September terrorist attacks.

Measures to eliminate international terrorism

On 28 September [meeting 4385], the Security Council continued consideration of the item on threats to international peace and security caused by terrorists acts, during which it adopted a series of measures aimed at countering international terrorism. The Council had before it communications from Afghanistan [A/56/365-S/2001/870], China [A/56/410-S/2001/914], Georgia [A/56/387-S/2001/893], Iraq [S/2001/888], Mali [S/2001/895], Pakistan [A/56/368-S/2001/877], Qatar [A/56/363-S/2001/869] and the United Arab Emirates [A/56/401-S/2001/903] (see p. 65), and statements issued by the GUUAM States (Azerbaijan, Georgia, Republic of Moldova, Ukraine, Uzbekistan) [A/56/405-S/2001/906] and the EU [S/2001/894].

Also before the Council was the text of a plan of action to combat terrorism, adopted at an extraordinary session of the European Council on 21 September [A/56/407-S/2001/909]. The plan provided for the introduction of a European arrest warrant and the adoption of a common definition of terrorism, the identification of presumed terrorists in Europe and of their support organizations, the sharing by States with Europol (the European Police Organization) of all useful data regarding terrorism and the establishment of a specialist anti-terrorism team within Europol to cooperate closely with the United States. The European Council also supported the development of a general UN convention against international terrorism and measures to combat the financing of terrorist activities.

The Council unanimously adopted resolution 1373(2001). The draft [S/2001/921] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 1269(1999) of 19 October 1999 and 1368(2001) of 12 September 2001,

Reaffirming also its unequivocal condemnation of the terrorist attacks which took place in New York, Washington, D.C., and Pennsylvania on 11 September 2001, and expressing its determination to prevent all such acts,

Reaffirming further that such acts, like any act of international terrorism, constitute a threat to international peace and security,

Reaffirming the inherent right of individual or collective self-defence as recognized by the Charter of the United Nations as reiterated in resolution 1368(2001),

Reaffirming the need to combat by all means, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts,

Deeply concerned by the increase, in various regions of the world, of acts of terrorism motivated by intolerance or extremism,

Calling on States to work together urgently to prevent and suppress terrorist acts, including through increased cooperation and full implementation of the relevant international conventions relating to terrorism,

Recognizing the need for States to complement international cooperation by taking additional measures to prevent and suppress, in their territories through all lawful means, the financing and preparation of any acts of terrorism,

Reaffirming the principle established by the General Assembly in its declaration of October 1970 (resolution 2625(XXV)) and reiterated by the Security Council in its resolution 1189(1998) of 13 August 1998, namely that every State has the duty to refrain from organizing, instigating, assisting or participating in terrorist acts in another State or acquiescing in organized activities within its territory directed towards the commission of such acts,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that all States shall:

(a) Prevent and suppress the financing of terrorist acts;

(b) Criminalize the wilful provision or collection, by any means, directly or indirectly, of funds by their nationals or in their territories with the intention that the funds should be used, or in the knowledge that they are to be used, in order to carry out terrorist acts;

(c) Freeze without delay funds and other financial assets or economic resources of persons who commit, or attempt to commit, terrorist acts or participate in or facilitate the commission of terrorist acts; of entities owned or controlled directly or indirectly by such persons; and of persons and entities acting on behalf of, or at the direction of such persons and entities, including funds derived or generated from property owned or controlled directly or indirectly by such persons and associated persons and entities;

(d) Prohibit their nationals or any persons and entities within their territories from making any funds, financial assets or economic resources or financial or other related services available, directly or indirectly, for the benefit of persons who commit or attempt to commit or facilitate or participate in the commission of terrorist acts, of entities owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by such persons and of persons and entities acting on behalf of or at the direction of such persons;

2. Decides also that all States shall:

(a) Refrain from providing any form of support, active or passive, to entities or persons involved in terrorist acts, including by suppressing recruitment of members of terrorist groups and eliminating the supply of weapons to terrorists;

(b) Take the necessary steps to prevent the commission of terrorist acts, including by provision of early warning to other States by exchange of information;

(c) Deny safe haven to those who finance, plan, support, or commit terrorist acts, or provide safe havens;

(d) Prevent those who finance, plan, facilitate or commit terrorist acts from using their respective territories for those purposes against other States or their citizens;

(e) Ensure that any person who participates in the financing, planning, preparation or perpetration of terrorist acts or in supporting terrorist acts is brought to justice and ensure that, in addition to any other measures against them, such terrorist acts are established as serious criminal offences in domestic laws and regulations and that the punishment duly reflects the seriousness of such terrorist acts;

(f) Afford one another the greatest measure of assistance in connection with criminal investigations or criminal proceedings relating to the financing or support of terrorist acts, including assistance in obtaining evidence in their possession necessary for the proceedings;

(g) Prevent the movement of terrorists or terrorist groups by effective border controls and controls on issuance of identity papers and travel documents, and through measures for preventing counterfeiting, forgery or fraudulent use of identity papers and travel documents;

3. Calls upon all States to:

(a) Find ways of intensifying and accelerating the exchange of operational information, especially regarding actions or movements of terrorist persons or networks; forged or falsified travel documents; traffic in arms, explosives or sensitive materials; use of communications technologies by terrorist groups; and the threat posed by the possession of weapons of mass destruction by terrorist groups;

(b) Exchange information in accordance with international and domestic law and cooperate on administrative and judicial matters to prevent the commission of terrorist acts;

(c) Cooperate, particularly through bilateral and multilateral arrangements and agreements, to prevent and suppress terrorist attacks and take action against perpetrators of such acts;

(d) Become parties as soon as possible to the relevant international conventions and protocols relating to terrorism, including the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism of 9 December 1999;

(e) Increase cooperation and fully implement the relevant international conventions and protocols relating to terrorism and Security Council resolutions 1269(1999) and 1368(2001);

(f) Take appropriate measures in conformity with the relevant provisions of national and international law, including international standards of human rights, before granting refugee status, for the purpose of ensuring that the asylum-seeker has not planned, facilitated or participated in the commission of terrorist acts;

(g) Ensure, in conformity with international law, that refugee status is not abused by the perpetrators, organizers or facilitators of terrorist acts, and that claims of political motivation are not recognized as grounds for refusing requests for the extradition of alleged terrorists;

4. Notes with concern the close connection between international terrorism and transnational organized crime, illicit drugs, money-laundering, illegal arms-trafficking, and illegal movement of nuclear, chemical, biological and other potentially deadly materials, and in this regard emphasizes the need to enhance coordination of efforts on national, subregional, regional and international levels in order to strengthen a global response to this serious challenge and threat to international security;

5. Declares that acts, methods and practices of terrorism are contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations and that knowingly financing, planning and inciting terrorist acts are also contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations;

6. Decides to establish, in accordance with rule 28 of its provisional rules of procedure, a Committee of the Security Council, consisting of all the members of the Council, to monitor implementation of this resolution, with the assistance of appropriate expertise, and calls upon all States to report to the Committee, no later than 90 days from the date of adoption of this resolution and thereafter according to a timetable to be proposed by the Committee, on the steps they have taken to implement this resolution;

7. Directs the Committee to delineate its tasks, to submit a work programme within 30 days of the adoption of this resolution, and to consider the support it requires, in consultation with the Secretary-General;

8. Expresses its determination to take all necessary steps in order to ensure the full implementation of this resolution, in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter;

9. Decides to remain seized of this matter.

Several communications were addressed to the Secretary-General on other measures taken by countries and international and regional organizations to combat terrorism. Those included communications from Uzbekistan [A/56/354-S/2001/866]; Argentina [A/56/414-S/2001/917]; Belarus [A/56/496-S/2001/996]; Qatar [A/56/519-S/2001/1033]; the five permanent Security Council members, transmitting the 12 November statement of their Ministers for Foreign Affairs [A/56/613-S/2001/1066]; Chile, transmitting statements of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Rio Group (Latin American and Caribbean States) [A/56/637-S/2001/1091, A/56/636-S/2001/1090]; Senegal, transmitting the Dakar Declaration against Terrorism adopted at the African conference on terrorism (Dakar, 17 October) [A/56/513-S/2001/1021]; Chile, transmitting the press communiqué of the meeting of the "troika" of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Rio Group (Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica) with the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Ukraine (New York, 13 November) [A/56/635-S/2001/1088];

Poland, transmitting the Declaration and Action Plan adopted by the Warsaw Conference on Combating Terrorism (Warsaw, 6 November) (see p. 66) [A/56/671-S/2001/1142]; the United Arab Emirates [A/56/463-S/2001/964]; and Cuba [A/56/520-S/2001/1037].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

From 1 to 5 October [meetings 12-22], the General Assembly considered in plenary the agenda item "Measures to eliminate international terrorism" in the context of the importance and urgency of the issue in the aftermath of the 11 September terrorist attacks in the United States. The Assembly had before it the Secretary-General's report on measures to eliminate international terrorism [A/56/160 & Corr.1 & Add.1] (see p. 1225).

Addressing the Assembly on 1 October [A/56/PV.12], the Secretary-General recalled that Security Council resolution 1373(2001) (see p. 61) required States to cooperate in a wide range of areas, from suppressing the financing of terrorism to providing early warning, cooperating in criminal investigations and exchanging information on possible terrorist acts. Implementation of that resolution required technical expertise at the national level and the Secretary-General encouraged States that could offer such assistance to do so urgently.

In meeting to deliberate on its own response to the events of 11 September, the Assembly's task was to build on the wave of human solidarity to ensure that the momentum was not lost and to develop a broad, comprehensive and sustained strategy to combat and eradicate terrorism. Member States had a clear agenda before them, beginning with ensuring that the 12 conventions and protocols on international terrorism, drafted and adopted under UN auspices, were signed, ratified and implemented without delay by all States (see p. 69). It would also be important to obtain agreement on a comprehensive convention on international terrorism.

While the world was unable to prevent the 11 September attacks, there was much it could do to prevent future terrorist acts carried out with weapons of mass destruction. The global norm against the use or proliferation of weapons of mass destruction should be strengthened, by redoubling efforts to ensure the universality, verification and full implementation of key related treaties; promoting cooperation among international organizations dealing with such weapons; tightening national legislation over exports of goods and technologies needed to manufacture weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery; and developing new efforts to criminalize their acquisition and use by non-State groups.

Controls over other types of weapons that posed grave dangers through terrorist use should also be strengthened, including a ban on the sale of small arms to non-State groups; making progress in eliminating landmines; improving the physical protection of sensitive industrial facilities, including nuclear and chemical plants; and increased vigilance against cyber-terrorist threats.

The Assembly President, summarizing the debate on 5 October [A/56/PV.22], said that it was unprecedented in the history of the United Nations for 167 Member States and 4 observers to participate in a debate on a single agenda item. That fact alone demonstrated how seriously all Member States and the international community regarded the acts of terrorism that took place on 11 September.

During the deliberations, Member States condemned international terrorism as a threat to international peace and security and a crime against humanity. It was one of the formidable challenges to the world community in the twenty-first century, and the United Nations should play the key role in intensifying international efforts to eliminate it. Member States also recognized the urgency of dealing with all forms and manifestations of international terrorism and those who harboured and supported the perpetrators, organizers and sponsors. They stressed the need to enhance international cooperation and to promptly take all necessary measures to prevent and suppress terrorist activities.

Member States concurred that a primary task facing the international community was to ensure that an effective legal framework for the prevention and elimination of international terrorism was in place. To that end, the President called on Member States that had not done so to become, as a matter of priority, parties to existing international conventions relating to terrorism. Many Member States also expressed their intention to take measures to implement international conventions within their domestic jurisdiction.

The President urged Member States to accelerate the Assembly's work, with a view to the early conclusion of the pending conventions on international terrorism, in order to enhance the capacity of the international community to combat terrorism. He requested the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee to expedite its work and report to the Assembly by 15 November (see p. 1225).

Member States also shared the view that the international community should resolve to fight terrorism as a phenomenon separate from any religion or ethnic group. In that regard, the necessity for dialogue among civilizations was stressed. Also, some representatives had suggested a high-level conference on international terrorism, while others called on the international community to address the root causes of terrorism. At the same time, the need for a clearer definition of terrorism was raised as an issue for further consideration.

On 12 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 56/88 on measures to eliminate international terrorism (see p. 1226).

Responsibility for 11 September attacks

Communications. In a 7 October letter to the Security Council President [S/2001/946], the United States said that it had clear and compelling information that the Al-Qa'idah organization, which was supported by the Taliban regime in Afghanistan, had a central role in the 11 September attacks. Although there was much the United States did not know as its inquiry was in its early stages, it was clear that the attacks and the ongoing threat posed by the Al-Qa'idah organization had been made possible by the Taliban regime's decision to allow parts of Afghanistan under its control to be used by that organization as a base of operation to train and support agents of terror.

That position was supported by the United Kingdom, which, on 8 October [S/2001/949], submitted to the Council President a document setting out the case against Osama bin Laden for the 11 September terrorist attacks against the United States based on intelligence information. The United Kingdom stressed that the document did not purport to provide a prosecutable case against Osama bin Laden in a court of law, but on the basis of all information available it was confident of the conclusions reached: that Osama bin Laden and Al-Qa'idah, the terrorist network which he headed, planned and carried out the atrocities on 11 September; they retained the will and resources to carry out further atrocities; the United Kingdom and its nationals were potential targets; and Osama bin Laden and Al-Qa'idah were able to commit those atrocities because of their close alliance with the Taliban regime, which allowed them to operate with impunity in pursuing terrorist activities. The United Kingdom stated that the document did not contain the totality of the material known to it, given the continuing and absolute need to protect intelligence sources.

In earlier communications, Côte d'Ivoire, on 2 October [A/56/429], drew attention to an article in The Times of the United Kingdom that alleged the existence of a cell of the bin Laden network in Côte d'Ivoire and accused the country of harbouring a terrorist training camp. Côte d'Ivoire formally advised the Secretary-General that it harboured no terrorist training camps, much less terrorists from the bin Laden network, and unequivocally denied any close or remote involvement in the tragedy that struck the United States.

Afghanistan's President, B. Rabbani, on 13 September [A/56/365-S/2001/870], said that the 11 September acts of terrorism in the United States, which followed the suicide bombing aimed at Ahmad Shah Massoud, Vice-President and Defence Minister of the Islamic State of Afghanistan, on 9 September, well established how terrorism constituted a threat to international peace and security, freedom and liberty. Afghanistan recalled its earlier warnings of the threats of terrorist activities by the Pakistan-Taliban-bin Laden axis in the Taliban-occupied parts of Afghanistan. The time had come, it said, for the international community to put pressure on Pakistan, the Taliban's main backer, to cease immediately its aggression in Afghanistan, withdraw its armed personnel, put an end to the use of Afghan soil for perpetrating subversive acts against other States and close down all terrorist training camps and centres of indoctrination within Pakistan.

The Secretary-General, in a 17 September press statement [SG/SM/7959], said that he was saddened at the assassination of Commander Masoud. That act of terrorism had eliminated a key Afghan leader, and both the method and apparent involvement of non-Afghan elements in the crime further complicated the efforts of the international community to end the conflict.

The United Arab Emirates, on 24 September [A/56/401-S/2001/903], informed the Secretary-General of its decision to break off diplomatic relations with the Taliban Government of Afghanistan following its failure to respond to the Security Council's request to hand over Osama bin Laden to face a fair international trial on the accusations made against him in connection with the terrorist attacks of 11 September in the United States.

Action under Article 51 of the Charter

On 7 October [S/2001/946], the United States reported to the Security Council President that, in accordance with Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations, it had, together with other States, initiated action in the exercise of its inherent right of individual and collective self-defence following the armed attacks against it on 11 September, resulting in the death of more than 5,000 persons, including nationals of 81 countries, and the destruction of four civilian aircraft, the World Trade Center towers and a section of the Pentagon (United States military headquarters). The actions of the United States military were designed to prevent or deter further attacks on the United States and included measures against Al-Qa'idah terrorist training camps and Taliban military installations in Afghanistan. In carrying out those actions, the United States was committed to minimizing civilian casualties and damage to civilian property and would continue its humanitarian efforts to alleviate the suffering of the people of Afghanistan. (For information on the resulting military, political and humanitarian developments in Afghanistan, see PART ONE, Chapter IV, and PART THREE, Chapter III.)

On 8 October [S/2001/967], the EU declared its full solidarity with the United States and wholehearted support for the action it was taking in Afghanistan. It stressed that the targeted action launched on 7 October was an attack neither against Islam nor against the people of Afghanistan. The military action was part of a wider multilateral strategy in which the EU was committed to playing its part, including a comprehensive assault on the organizations and financing structures that underpinned terrorism.

Invoking Article 51 of the Charter, several other countries informed the Council President of action they had taken following the 11 September attacks, clarifying that such action was not in any way directed against the people of Afghanistan or Islam. Canada, on 24 October [S/2001/1005], reported that it was deploying naval ships, surveillance and transport aircraft, military personnel and other assets. On 23 November [S/2001/1103], France announced that it was undertaking action involving the participation of military air, land and naval forces. On the same date [S/2001/1104], Australia said that it was invoking the 1951 Security Treaty between Australia, New Zealand and the United States (ANZUS Treaty), under which it would contribute elements of the Australian Defence Force, including land, air and naval units, to assist the United States-led military operations. As approved by its Federal Parliament, Germany announced on 29 November [S/2001/1127] that it was providing nuclear, biological and chemical defence units, medical and specialized units, air-transport capacities and naval forces. The Netherlands, on 6 December [S/2001/1171], stated that it was providing air-transport capacity, naval forces, navy aviation and support. Some of its units would be deployed as backfill for American military forces in the Caribbean. On 17 December [S/2001/1193], New Zealand indicated its willingness to make a military contribution.

United States policy on terrorism

On 6 November [S/2001/1052], United States President George W. Bush, in a telecast statement to the Warsaw Conference on Combating Terrorism [A/56/671-S/2001/1142], said that Al-Qa'idah was operating in more than 60 nations, including some in Central and Eastern Europe. Those terrorist groups were seeking chemical, biological and nuclear weapons and, given the means, they would be a threat to every nation and eventually to civilization itself. Therefore, the United States was determined to fight that evil until it was rid of it and would not wait for the authors of mass murder to gain weapons of mass destruction. The United States military was systematically pursuing its mission, destroying many terrorist training camps, severing communication links and taking out air defences, and was currently attacking the Taliban front lines.

It was a difficult struggle of uncertain duration and Afghanistan was only the beginning of United States efforts in the world. The United States would not rest until terrorist groups of global reach had been found, stopped and defeated. That goal would not be achieved until all nations stopped harbouring and supporting such terrorists within their borders.

The defeat of terror required an international coalition of unprecedented scope and co-operation, and no nation could be neutral in that conflict, because no civilized nation could be secure in a world threatened by terror.

Implementation of resolution 1373(2001)

Counter-Terrorism Committee

In a 4 October note [S/2001/935], the Security Council President announced that, after consultations among Council members, it was agreed to elect the chairperson (Sir Jeremy Greenstock (United Kingdom)) and vice-chairpersons (Colombia, Mauritius, Russian Federation) of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1373(2001) (known as the Counter-Terrorism Committee). The Committee would submit a work programme by 28 October. The Council would review the Committee's structure and activities not later than 4 April 2002.

On 19 October [S/2001/986], the Chairman of the Counter-Terrorism Committee submitted the Committee's work programme to the Council. Recognizing that many areas of counter-terrorism were inherently sensitive, the Committee undertook to ensure the highest level of confidentiality and would develop rules to that effect.

On 23 October [S/2001/999], the Council President informed the Chairman that the Council agreed to the work programme.

On 30 November [S/2001/1134], the Committee submitted to the Council a directory of contact points in each State and in a number of international/regional organizations and agencies and the Secretariat. The directory was updated in December [S/2001/1134/Add.1]. A revised consolidated version would be submitted in January 2002 and every two months subsequently.

Reports of Member States. The Chairman of the Counter-Terrorism Committee submitted to the Council President reports received from Member States containing information on action they had taken or intended to take to implement Council resolution 1373(2001). On 30 November, the Committee submitted reports from Honduras [S/2001/1136], Mongolia [S/2001/1135], Norway [S/2001/1138] and Venezuela [S/2001/1137]; on 10 December, from Myanmar [S/2001/1144]; on 13 December, from the Dominican Republic [S/2001/1200] and Lebanon [S/2001/1201]; on 14 December, from Bahrain [S/2001/1210], Canada [S/2001/1209] and the Syrian Arab Republic [S/2001/1204]; on 19 December, from Slovakia [S/2001/1225] and the United States [S/2001/1220]; on 20 December, from the Bahamas [S/2001/1236], Egypt [S/2001/1237], Singapore [S/2001/1234], Sweden [S/2001/1233] and Uruguay [S/2001/1235]; on 21 December, from Andorra [S/2001/1244], Australia [S/2001/1247], Austria [S/2001/1242], Cyprus [S/2001/1243], the Democratic People's Republic of Korea [S/2001/1248], El Salvador [S/2001/1249], Finland [S/2001/1251], Indonesia [S/2001/1245], Ireland [S/2001/1252], Liechtenstein [S/2001/1253], Malta [S/2001/1250], Mexico [S/2001/1254] and Spain [S/2001/1246]; on 27 December, from Albania [S/2001/1309], Algeria [S/2001/1280], Barbados [S/2001/1276], Belgium [S/2001/1266], Belize [S/2001/1265], Bosnia and Herzegovina [S/2001/1313], Botswana [S/2001/1267], Brazil [S/2001/1285], Bulgaria [S/2001/1273], China [S/2001/1270], Colombia [S/2001/1318], Costa Rica [S/2001/1279], Croatia [S/2001/1271], the Czech Republic [S/2001/1302], Denmark [S/2001/1303], Djibouti [S/2001/1311], Estonia [S/2001/1315], France [S/2001/1274], Guatemala [S/2001/1272], Iceland [S/2001/1308], India [S/2001/1278], Iraq [S/2001/1291], Israel [S/2001/1312], Jamaica [S/2001/1314], Japan [S/2001/1306], Kazakhstan [S/2001/1307], Mauritius [S/2001/1286], Morocco [S/2001/1288], Mozambique [S/2001/1319], Namibia [S/2001/1305], Pakistan [S/2001/1310], Paraguay [S/2001/1293], Poland [S/2001/1275], Romania [S/2001/1339], the Russian Federation [S/2001/1284], San Marino [S/2001/1292], Slovenia [S/2001/1277], Somalia [S/2001/1287], South Africa [S/2001/1281], the Sudan [S/2001/1317], Tunisia [S/2001/1316], Turkey [S/2001/1304], Venezuela [S/2001/1289] and the EU [S/2001/1297]; and on 28 December, from Argentina [S/2001/1340], Azerbaijan [S/2001/1325], Burundi [S/2001/1322], Cape Verde [S/2001/1329], the Cook Islands [S/2001/1324], the Democratic Republic of the Congo [S/2001/1331], Ecuador [S/2001/1327], Iran [S/2001/1332], the Libyan Arab Jama-hriya [S/2001/1323], Nepal [S/2001/1326], the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia [S/2001/1333], Ukraine [S/2001/1330] and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia [S/2001/1328].

Terrorism and human rights

The Director of the New York Office of OHCHR, on behalf of the High Commissioner, in a statement to the Counter-Terrorism Committee [S/2001/1227] transmitted to the Security Council President on 14 December by the Committee Chairman, said that, while pursuing the objective of eradicating terrorism under resolution 1373(2001), efforts should be made to avoid innocent people becoming the victims of counter-terrorism measures. States should strictly adhere to their international obligations to uphold human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The Director hoped that the Counter-Terrorism Committee would assist States in ensuring the compatibility of measures taken under resolution 1373(2001) with States' obligations under human rights law. OHCHR was committed to advising Governments on the content of human rights standards in the light of international norms and jurisprudence that might be relevant in the context of anti-terrorism measures.

OHCHR was aware of the Committee's guidance for States in the reporting requirements under resolution 1373(2001). To avoid the misapplication of the resolution, the High Commissioner was recommending that further complementary guidance be issued to assist States to comply with their international human rights obligations. The suggested "further guidance", based on States' obligations under international human rights law, was available to the Committee members. The misapplication of resolution 1373(2001) could lead to unwarranted infringement on civil liberties, and there was evidence that some Governments were introducing measures that might erode core human rights safeguards. In some countries, non-violent activities had been considered as terrorism and excessive measures had been taken to suppress or restrict individual rights, including the presumption of innocence, the right to a fair trial, freedom from torture, privacy rights, freedom of expression and assembly, and the right to seek asylum. That was clearly not the aim of resolution 1373(2001) and it was important to ensure that such unintended and undesirable consequences of the global effort against terrorism were avoided. The High Commissioner was urging the Committee therefore to ensure that those assisting it in its crucial monitoring task had strong human rights expertise; she stood ready to assist the Committee in identifying such experts.

IAEA action

In a 7 December letter to the Security Council President [S/2001/1164], the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) stated that, pursuant to resolution 1373(2001), the IAEA General Conference, in a resolution adopted at its forty-fifth regular session (Vienna, 17-21 September) (see p. 1401), requested him to strengthen the Agency's work relevant to preventing acts of terrorism involving nuclear material and other radioactive materials.

In response to that request, he reported to the IAEA Board of Governors on protection against nuclear terrorism, summarizing the Agency's work in areas relevant to the prevention and mitigation of the consequences of terrorist acts and outlining proposals for enhanced and additional activities, excerpts of which were contained in an attachment to the Director General's letter. The Board had directed him to proceed urgently with approved activities, to review the Agency's proposed response to the threat of nuclear terrorism and to submit the outcome for consideration in 2002.

Security Council declaration on the global effort to combat terrorism

On 12 November [meeting 4413], the Security Council met at the ministerial level to continue consideration of threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts. It had before it a statement by Japan outlining its positions on counter-terrorism [S/2001/1062].

A number of other communications on the question of terrorism were addressed to the Secretary-General or the Council President by Member States and intergovernmental organizations: Belgium transmitted the conclusions of the General Affairs Council of the EU of 8 October [S/2001/968] and of 17 October [S/2001/980]; Slovenia, also on 17 October [S/2001/987], transmitted a declaration of its National Assembly; Armenia transmitted the statement of the participants in the extraordinary meeting of the Committee of Secretaries of the Security Councils of the States parties to the Treaty on Collective Security (Dushanbe, 9 October) [S/2001/1020]; Iraq transmitted a letter from its President of 29 October [S/2001/1034]; and Zambia forwarded a communiqué issued by the fifth extraordinary session of the Central Organ of the Organization of African Unity Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution (New York, 11 November) [S/2001/1061].

Addressing the Council [S/PV.4413], the Secretary-General noted that the reports submitted by Member States to the Counter-Terrorism Committee (see p. 66) would play an indispensable role in identifying and cataloguing existing policies and instruments, and provide the benchmark for the international community as it assessed its ability to combat international terrorism. He encouraged all States to ensure the full implementation of resolution 1373(2001) (see p. 61) and to submit their reports by December.

The Secretary-General announced that he had established a working group, comprising senior officials from the UN system, as well as outside experts, to identify the longer-term implications and broad policy dimensions of terrorism for the United Nations and to formulate recommendations on steps the UN system might take.

The United Nations was uniquely placed to facilitate cooperation between Governments in the fight against terrorism and to ensure that the greatest number of States were able and willing to take the necessary and difficult steps—diplomatic, legal and political—that were needed to defeat terrorism.

France drew attention to the plan of action adopted on 21 September by the EU (see p. 61), which included a European arrest warrant and other legal, police and aviation-security measures, and to the “special recommendations” adopted on 30 October in Washington, D.C., by the intergovernmental Financial Action Task Force on Money Laundering (FATF), established in 1989 by the G-7 countries, to apply to the sources of financing of terrorism methods that had been successfully used to combat money-laundering. France proposed the establishment of a forum on the financing of terrorism, with a broader membership than that of FATF.

United States Secretary of State Colin Powell stated that his country had declared war on all terrorist organizations with a global reach, and, as a result, it needed the support of all of its partners in the international community, and specifically the help of police forces, intelligence services and banking systems around the world to isolate and eradicate the common enemies.

Council resolution 1373(2001) was a mandate to change fundamentally how the international community responded to terrorism. States were starting to work together to cut off the financial resources that were the oxygen of terrorist groups, and Council members had supported the immediate freezing of the assets of over 120 persons and entities that the United States had identified to the UN Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 265] (Afghan sanctions committee) (see p. 270). The Council was well situated to coordinate specialized training and assistance to help countries deal with rapid financial flows and regulatory loopholes.

The war on terrorism would be fought also with increased support for democracy programmes, judicial reform, conflict resolution, poverty alleviation, economic reform and health and education programmes. The United States stood ready to provide technical assistance, ranging from aviation security to financial tracking measures and law enforcement. It welcomed initiatives by others in those fields, and was ready to exchange information about terrorism and to cooperate in other ways. The integrity of international transmission systems, such as the mail system, should also be taken into account, as should the Internet. In each of those areas, there were important roles for the United Nations and for each country to play.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 November [meeting 4413], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1377 (2001). The draft [S/2001/1060] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council

Decides to adopt the attached declaration on the global effort to combat terrorism.

ANNEX

The Security Council,

Meeting at the ministerial level,

Recalling its resolutions 1269(1999) of 19 October 1999, 1368(2001) of 12 September 2001 and 1373(2001) of 28 September 2001,

Declares that acts of international terrorism constitute one of the most serious threats to international peace and security in the twenty-first century;

Further declares that acts of international terrorism constitute a challenge to all States and to all of humanity;

Reaffirms its unequivocal condemnation of all acts, methods and practices of terrorism as criminal and unjustifiable, regardless of their motivation, in all their forms and manifestations, wherever and by whomever committed;

Stresses that acts of international terrorism are contrary to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and that the financing, planning and preparation of as well as any other form of support for acts of international terrorism are similarly contrary to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

Underlines that acts of terrorism endanger innocent lives and the dignity and security of human beings everywhere, threaten the social and economic development of all States and undermine global stability and prosperity;

Affirms that a sustained, comprehensive approach involving the active participation and collaboration of all

Member States of the United Nations, and in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and international law, is essential to combat the scourge of international terrorism;

Stresses that continuing international efforts to broaden the understanding among civilizations and to address regional conflicts and the full range of global issues, including development issues, will contribute to international cooperation and collaboration, which themselves are necessary to sustain the broadest possible fight against international terrorism;

Welcomes the commitment expressed by States to fight the scourge of international terrorism, including during the General Assembly plenary debate from 1 to 5 October 2001, calls on all States to become parties as soon as possible to the relevant international conventions and protocols relating to terrorism, and encourages Member States to take forward work in this area;

Calls on all States to take urgent steps to implement fully resolution 1373(2001), and to assist each other in doing so, and underlines the obligation on States to deny financial and all other forms of support and safe haven to terrorists and those supporting terrorism;

Expresses its determination to proceed with the implementation of that resolution in full cooperation with the whole membership of the United Nations, and welcomes the progress made so far by the Counter-Terrorism Committee established by paragraph 6 of resolution 1373(2001) to monitor implementation of that resolution;

Recognizes that many States will require assistance in implementing all the requirements of resolution 1373(2001), and invites States to inform the Counter-Terrorism Committee of areas in which they require such support;

In that context, invites the Counter-Terrorism Committee to explore ways in which States can be assisted, and in particular to explore with international, regional and subregional organizations:

- The promotion of best-practice in the areas covered by resolution 1373(2001), including the preparation of model laws as appropriate;

- The availability of existing technical, financial, regulatory, legislative or other assistance programmes which might facilitate the implementation of resolution 1373(2001);

- The promotion of possible synergies between these assistance programmes;

Calls on all States to intensify their efforts to eliminate the scourge of international terrorism.

Treaty Event

The Treaty Event: Multilateral Treaties on Terrorism was held at United Nations Headquarters from 10 to 16 November, with the participation of 66 heads of State and Government and Ministers for Foreign Affairs. The Secretary-General, in his 4 October letter of invitation to Member States, said that, having witnessed the horror and devastation caused by the recent terrorist attacks in the host State of the United Nations and consistent with the calls made by the General Assembly and the Security Council, he was urging States to reaffirm their abhorrence of terrorism by becoming party, if they had not done so, to the 12 global conventions that addressed various aspects of terrorism, four of which were deposited with him. Those four conventions deposited with the Secretary-General were the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents, adopted by General Assembly resolution 3166(XXVIII) [YUN 1973, p. 775]; the International Convention against the Taking of Hostages, adopted by Assembly resolution 34/146 [YUN 1979, p. 1144]; the International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings, adopted by Assembly resolution 52/164 [YUN 1997, p. 1348]; and the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, adopted by Assembly resolution 54/109 [YUN 1999, p. 1233]. The other conventions adopted under UN auspices were the Convention on Offences and Certain Other Acts Committed on Board Aircraft (Tokyo, 1963); the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft (The Hague, 1970); the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation (Montreal, 1971); the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material (Vienna, 1980); the Protocol on the Suppression of Unlawful Acts of Violence at Airports Serving International Civil Aviation, supplementary to the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation (Montreal, 1988); the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Maritime Navigation (Rome, 1988); the Protocol for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Fixed Platforms Located on the Continental Shelf (Rome, 1988); and the Convention on the Marking of Plastic Explosives for the Purpose of Detection (Montreal, 1991).

The Secretary-General said that States also needed to take measures to implement the obligations under those treaties within their domestic jurisdictions. In reaffirming their commitment to the treaty framework dealing with terrorism, by signing and ratifying or acceding to those treaties to which they were not already party, Member States would also contribute to strengthening the international legal framework.

In a 16 November report on the Event, the Office of Legal Affairs indicated that 79 States participated and undertook 180 treaty actions relating to 41 treaties (110 signatures and 70 ratifications/accessions and other actions). The highest number of treaty actions related to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism (48 signatures and 8 ratifications/accessions), followed by the International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings (15 ratifications/accessions) and the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents (4 ratifications/accessions).

(For further information on treaties and conventions relating to terrorism, see PART FOUR, Chapter III.)

Other terrorist incidents

On 15 August [S/2001/793], Angola reported that, on 10 August, a train carrying some 500 civilian passengers was attacked by rebel forces near the town of Zenza do Itombe in Kwanza Norte province, resulting in the deaths of 252 people, with more than 165 injured. Some 90 days earlier, after having killed and brutally mistreated civilians in the city of Caxito, the rebels kidnapped 61 children. Angola called on the international community and the United Nations to take action to isolate those who waged war and refused to respect Security Council decisions.

In a 14 August press release [SG/SM/7916], the Secretary-General condemned the 10 August attack and noted that the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) had claimed, and therefore bore responsibility for, that indefensible loss of life.

The Security Council, in presidential statement S/PRST/2001/24 of 20 September (see p. 226), condemned the terrorist attacks by UNITA forces on the civilian population of Angola and stressed that such attacks were unacceptable and could not be justified by any political goals.

In a series of communications submitted to the Secretary-General throughout 2001, Israel reported on violent incidents committed against Israeli civilians, including suicide bombings, and armed attacks allegedly committed by Palestinian gunmen, resulting in the deaths of hundreds of Israeli civilians and damage to property. Israel called on the Palestinian leadership to bring an end to the violence.

In a 4 December letter [A/56/678-S/2001/1150], Israel, in reporting new atrocities, listed those communications. It reported that, on the evening of 1 December, two Palestinian suicide bombers detonated their charges in a crowded pedestrian mall in Jerusalem, killing 10 Israelis and wounding 180, several of them seriously. In a similar act committed 12 hours later in Haifa, 15 civilians were killed and 38 others wounded. Israel recalled its previous letters to the Secretary-General detailing Palestinian terrorist atrocities of the past 14 months and said that it held Chairman Yasser Arafat and the Palestinian Authority

(PA) fully responsible for those attacks. Israel maintained that there could be no return to normalcy in the region until the PA fulfilled its signed commitments to renounce the use of terror and violence. The international community should therefore make it clear to the Palestinian leadership that its inaction would not be tolerated and that any regime that lent support to terrorism or allowed its territory to serve as a haven for terrorist murderers was unwelcome in the family of civilized nations.

The Secretary-General, in a 2 December press statement [SG/SM/8056], expressed shock and horror at the bombings in Jerusalem and Haifa. No cause and no motive could ever justify the deliberate murder of innocent civilians, he said. The Secretary-General unequivocally condemned those acts of terrorism and called on the PA to take immediate and decisive action to arrest and bring to justice those responsible for those and earlier acts of terrorism.

The Permanent Observer of Palestine to the United Nations, in a January letter [A/ES-10/54-S/2001/7], referring to previous Israeli accusations of terrorism, reiterated that the Palestinian side remained opposed to terrorist actions by any side and definitely did not condone the actions referred to. (For further information on the Israel/Palestine situation, see PART ONE, Chapter VI.)

Qatar, on 29 October [A/56/519-S/2001/1033], condemned attacks on several churches in Pakistan, which had resulted in a number of civilian fatalities. Qatar reaffirmed its condemnation of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations.

Peacekeeping operations

In 2001, the United Nations, in the context of its continuing review of peacekeeping operations and follow-up to the recommendations of the 2000 report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations (the Brahimi report), conducted the first in-depth managerial examination of those operations, which resulted in proposals for further steps for improving UN peacekeeping capacity, including the provision of additional financial and human resources.

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, whose mandate was to review the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects, held a general debate on 18 and 19 June, during which it approved a number of recommendations for submission to the General Assembly. The Special Committee also considered other general issues related to peacekeeping operations and made recommendations for improving their effectiveness.

On 7 September, by decision 55/492, the Assembly included in the draft agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item "Comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects". On 10 December, by decision 56/418, the Assembly took note of the report of the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee [A/56/551].

In-depth examination of UN peacekeeping operations

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolutions 54/81 B [YUN 2000, p. 96], 55/2 [ibid., p. 49] and 55/135 [ibid., p. 90], the Secretary-General submitted a June report on implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations and the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations [A/55/977]. The 2000 resolutions contained the Assembly's response to four interlinked reports produced over the preceding 12 months on strengthening the capacity of the United Nations for peacekeeping: the report of the Special Committee [YUN 2000, p. 95]; the Brahimi report [ibid., p. 83]; the Secretary-General's report on the implementation of the Brahimi report [ibid., p. 85]; and the Special Committee response to the Brahimi report and the implementation plan contained in that report [ibid., p. 89].

The Secretary-General's June 2001 report contained the findings of the first in-depth and comprehensive managerial examination of UN peacekeeping operations. The review, which was conducted in-house, benefited from the input of external management consultants and former senior UN and Member States' officials with extensive exposure to UN peacekeeping, and from the External Review Board and the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS). It examined the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO), the need for enhanced interrelationships with other parts of the Secretariat, the security management system (DPKO and the Office of the United Nations Security Coordinator), and system-wide information, analysis and decision-making capacities.

The report contended that DPKO's core capacities required considerable strengthening, including its management practices and culture; its ability to translate legislative guidance into strategic plans for future peacekeeping operations, bearing in mind lessons learned and best practices from previous operations; the priority and effort it dedicated to developing the requisite policies and capacities to enable peacekeeping operations to function efficiently and effectively; and internal coordination for the planning, conduct and support of specific operations.

In assessing the implications of the Brahimi report's recommendation [YUN 2000, p. 84] that the United Nations set as an objective the ability to fully and effectively deploy peacekeeping missions within 30 to 90 days of the adoption of a Security Council resolution establishing them, the Secretary-General outlined three options for achieving that objective: a "heavy strategic reserve" of equipment and materiel at the United Nations Logistics Base (UNLB) in Brindisi, Italy (which could entail an initial investment of some $350 million); a "light strategic reserve" option, with substantially lower up-front investments (some $30 million), which would rely on extensive "retainer" contracts for the "just-in-time" delivery of goods and services, but with very large annual recurring costs (over $100 million per annum); and a "medium strategic reserve" option, with approximately $170 million up-front investment and some $40 million annual recurring costs. The Secretary-General recommended the "medium strategic reserve" option as the most economical and practical. Any of the options to meet the 30-to-90-day deployment time frames would require a one-time expenditure budget to enhance the strategic deployment stocks at UNLB and to cater for annual recurring costs; entry into pre-arranged contracts and letters of assist for key services; increased reliability of standby arrangements with Member States, especially for support units; and improved personnel surge capacity, particularly for administrative support staff. Pre-commitment authority to initiate spending to procure essential goods and services prior to the adoption of a resolution establishing an operation could greatly enhance the Organization's ability to meet the stated deployment objectives.

However, although those proposals could go a long way to ensure a military and civilian police capacity in parallel with a rapid military deployment, none of the options would guarantee 30-to-90-day deployment time frames, unless fully self-sustaining and completely self-sufficient troops were provided by Member States with the means to do so.

The report also outlined progress with regard to proposals for enhancing the standby arrangements system for military and civilian police personnel, including for the creation of a revolving list of "on call" officers to be deployed at short notice. In that regard, it referred to the 19 March letter to Member States from the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations (annex G to the report), containing the profiles of required expertise and the proposed mechanism for enhancing the standby arrangements system. The report also presented the outlines of a global strategy for civilian staffing of peacekeeping operations (see p. 106) to address critical shortcomings in the current system.

The Secretary-General argued that to strengthen DPKO's core capacities and meet the challenges of rapid and effective deployment, adjustments would be required to DPKO's organizational structure and staffing levels. He therefore proposed creating a new position of Director for Strategic Planning and Management in the Office of the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, with responsibilities for overseeing improvements to the management infrastructure, including information management, as well as an enhanced lessons learned and strategic planning capacity; increasing the number of Assistant Secretaries-General in DPKO from two to three, with the addition of an Assistant Secretary-General for Military/Civilian Police Affairs and Mine Action; and upgrading the rank of the Civilian Police Adviser. He also proposed restructuring the Office of Logistics, Management and Mine Action, by dividing the Field Administration and Logistics Division into two separate divisions (one for administrative support and the other for logistics support), reporting directly to the Assistant Secretary-General, whose title would be changed to the Assistant Secretary-General for Mission Support. The Office of Mission Support would have enhanced capacities for administrative planning and civilian training, plus contracts management (annexes E and H).

The Secretary-General stated that DPKO needed to be strengthened to bring to completion the myriad of policies, standard operating procedures, systems and training programmes that were critical for efficient and effective performance in the field. Additional resources were also necessary to give DPKO the time and flexibility to interact with Member States more frequently, particularly Security Council members and troop, police and financial contributors. Strengthening DPKO could entail some 150 new posts, the additional resources for which would be justified in a subsequent report, on a post-by-post basis.

The Secretary-General further proposed measures to strengthen DPKO's collaboration with other departments, agencies, funds and programmes that played a role in peacekeeping, but recommended against delegating procurement and budgeting authority from the Department of Management to DPKO, proposing instead that the two Departments should interact with one another with much greater frequency and depth.

The roles and responsibilities of DPKO and the Department of Political Affairs were clarified (annex L), with the suggestion that the physical co-location of the political affairs officers in both Departments was desirable to promote cohesion and cultural change. The need to strengthen the capacities of the Department of Management, OIOS, OHCHR and the Office of Legal Affairs to more effectively support UN peacekeeping operations was underlined, as was the need for increased collaboration between DPKO and the Department of Public Information. Greater attention needed to be paid to gender issues in peacekeeping operations and there should be more involvement of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, operational funds and programmes and the Department for Disarmament Affairs in all aspects of peacekeeping, from planning to liquidation.

The report recommended that, to optimize the Organization's resources in conflict zones, enhanced analytical capacities, better executive-level decision-making systems and the ability to devise coherent and comprehensive mid-to-long-term strategies were required. It proposed strengthening the Executive Committee on Peace and Security by creating a small new multi-disciplinary policy and analysis unit to support the Committee's work (see p. 76).

In his concluding remarks, the Secretary-General observed that most of the findings confirmed that the overall peacekeeping capacities of the Secretariat had not developed at the pace they should have because sufficient time, energy and resources had not been dedicated to planning for the future. Furthermore, if the United Nations continued to define its capacities strictly based on current minimum needs, it would be no better off two to three years later. It should not lose the opportunity to invest in the future. Performance could significantly improve if changes were brought to structures, systems and procedures, and if additional resources were provided, but the United Nations could no longer afford to continue with the "gifted amateurism" that had characterized its approach to peacekeeping. Higher professional standards were required, as were enhanced mechanisms to monitor performance and progress more effectively.

However, strengthening DPKO and other parts of the Secretariat was not the only answer to the challenge. The decisions of the Council and its willingness to ensure that operations did not fail were determining factors, as was the political will of Member States to match mandates with the required human, material, financial and political support.

Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2001 session (18-19 June) [A/55/1024 & Corr.1], considered the Secretary-General's report (see p. 71) and encouraged the Secretariat to conduct regular and systematic reviews. It recognized the need to further strengthen DPKO's capacity to undertake its core functions and, especially, to reinforce management, planning and mission support.

In the area of management, the Special Committee recommended the creation of the position of Director for Management in the Office of the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations. The Director would also supervise the work of the restructured Peacekeeping Best Practices Unit. The Committee recognized the need to strengthen the front offices of the respective assistant secretaries-general, and requested the Secretary-General to report in his budget proposals on specific measures taken to address the problems related to DPKO's management or organizational culture. The Special Committee recommended that the capacity of the Best Practices Unit be strengthened and its mandate broadened, and that the Unit be renamed to reflect better its responsibilities.

As to policy and capacity development, the Special Committee concurred that additional resources should be allocated to the Department. It welcomed the proposal to create a small new unit in the Office of Mission Support and stressed that the training of civilian personnel in DPKO should be done in coordination with the Office of Human Resources Management.

With regard to operational planning, the Special Committee welcomed the improvement in coordination and cooperation through the establishment of Integrated Mission Task Forces (IMTFs) and called on the Secretariat to fully embrace the IMTF concept. It recommended increasing the capacity of the Office of Operations to fulfil its mission planning and support responsibilities to better enable the Secretariat to consult with Member States and troop-contributing countries. Stressing the importance of having the entire leadership of a mission participate in key aspects of the mission-planning process at Headquarters and in the field, the Special Committee expressed concern over the practicality of having potential mission leaders as heads of future IMTFs. It recognized the Secretariat's efforts to develop a "mission headquarters orientation programme".

The Special Committee supported the "task team" approach to mission support and encouraged the Secretary-General to ensure greater communication and coordination between the Office of Operations, the Office of Mission Support, and the Military and Civilian Police Divisions. The Situation Centre should be responsible for producing comprehensive fact sheets and status reports in support of DPKO's reporting requirements, supplemented during crises by timely military and political assessments. The Special Committee agreed that additional resources and staff training were required to enhance the capacity of the Situation Centre in the overall strengthening of the Office of Operations.

With regard to rapid deployment, the Special Committee urged the Secretariat to continue working towards the 30-to-90-day goal for deploying peacekeeping operations and endorsed the concept of a medium strategic reserve at UNLB as the most appropriate and practical option. The Secretariat, in preparing mission budget proposals, should develop a common understanding with Member States of the financial, equipment and personnel requirements needed to meet set deployment objectives. The Special Committee concurred with the Secretary-General's assessment that the rapid deployment time frame could be achieved only if Member States provided fully self-sustaining and completely self-sufficient troops within current contingent-owned equipment procedures. The Secretariat should make recommendations on how the strategic air and sea lift for rapid deployment of peacekeeping missions could be better pre-arranged. It supported efforts to enhance and strengthen the United Nations standby arrangements system (see p. 77) and looked forward to consultations between the Secretariat and Member States on its improvement, including the creation of "on call" lists of military and civilian police personnel. The Special Committee also supported the further development of pre-mandate commitment authority given to the Secretary-General prior to a mission's full authorization by the Security Council.

The Special Committee endorsed the separation of the Civilian Police Division from the Military Division and supported the upgrading of the post of Civilian Police Adviser, the further strengthening of the Civilian Police Division and the creation of a limited capability in the Division to assist in criminal law and judicial issues, the upgrading of the Mine Action Service to a Division, the reorganization of the Field Administration and Logistics Division, the creation of two separate divisions within the new Office of Mission Support, and the establishment of a Contracts Management Section within the Logistics Support Division to strengthen procurement planning (see p. 103). It recommended that active service military officers be included in the re-organized Office of Mission Support.

However, the Special Committee remained unconvinced about the exact role of a third assistant secretary-general as proposed by the Secretary-General and requested him to elaborate on the matter in his next report.

Resource requirements

Report of Secretary-General. On 2 August [A/C.4/55/L.24], the Secretary-General stated that implementation of the Special Committee's recommendations on strengthening UN peacekeeping operations would require additional resources of not more than $30 million under the support account for peacekeeping operations budget for the period 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, approved in General Assembly resolution 55/271 (see p. 95) and in the 2002-2003 programme budget. Detailed resource requirements would be provided to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee.

On 9 August [A/C.5/55/46 & Corr.1 & Add.1], the Secretary-General informed the Fifth Committee that the consequential changes in the 2002-2003 programme budget would amount to $2,696,200 gross, inclusive of an increase of nine posts. The change in the support account would amount to $23,129,600, inclusive of an increase of 207 posts, of which 129 posts were requested for DPKO. The increase represented 0.9 per cent of the level of peacekeeping costs for the 2000-2001 biennium, which were projected at slightly in excess of $3 billion.

Report of ACABQ. In October [A/56/478], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) noted that, should the Assembly adopt the draft resolution on the comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects (see resolution 56/241 below), additional requirements of $1,575,700 would arise under the 2002-2003 programme budget (section 3: $376,400; section 22: $888,800; section 27D: $127,900; section 32: $182,600). Additional requirements of $16,215,450 would also arise under the support account for 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002. ACABQ recommended approval of seven additional posts under the regular budget (three under section 3, Political affairs, and four under section 22, Human rights) and 122 additional posts under the support account (92 under section 5, Peacekeeping operations; 26 under section 27, Management and central support services; and 4 under section 28, Internal oversight).

On 4 December [A/C.4/56/5], in response to queries from Nigeria and other interested Member States, the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations transmitted to the Chairman of the Fourth Committee a list containing the number and nationalities of candidates selected in the first round of the recruitment process following the issuance of the Brahimi report [YUN 2000, p. 83] and subsequent documents [ibid., p. 91]. The list showed that 88 of the 93 posts approved by the Assembly in resolution 55/238 had been filled [ibid., p. 1300].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 December [meeting 92], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/56/738], adopted resolution 56/241 without vote [agenda items 122 & 133].

Comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects

The General Assembly,

Having considered the statement submitted by the Secretary-General on the comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Taking account of the report of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations on the comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects,

Recalling its resolutions 45/258 of 3 May 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 48/226 A of 23 December 1993, 48/226 B of 5 April 1994, 48/226 C of 29 July 1994, 49/250 of 20 July 1995, 50/11 of 2 November 1995, 50/221 A of 11 April 1996, 50/221 B of 7 June 1996, 51/226 of 3 April 1997, 51/239 A of 17 June 1997, 51/239 B and 51/243 of 15 September 1997, 52/220 of 22 December 1997, 52/234 and 52/248 of 26 June 1998, 53/12 A of 26 October 1998, 53/208 B of 18 December 1998, 53/12 B of 8 June 1999, 54/243 A of 23 December 1999, 54/243 B of 15 June 2000, 55/238 of 23 December 2000 and 55/271 of 14 June 2001 and its decisions 48/489 of 8 July 1994, 49/469 of 23 December 1994 and 50/473 of 23 December 1995,

Noting with appreciation the comments and observations contained in paragraph 6 of the report of the Advisory Committee, concerning the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations and the determination of resources, and in paragraph 26, concerning the role and responsibilities of the head of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat and his senior staff in the area of management,

1. Attaches great importance to the provision of adequate resources for peacekeeping operations and their backstopping as well as for all priority activities of the Organization, in particular activities in the area of development, and underlines the need for genuine and meaningful partnership between the Security Council, the troop-contributing Governments and other Member States and the Secretariat;

2. Reaffirms that the expenses of the Organization, including the backstopping of peacekeeping operations, shall be borne by Member States;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, when making first-time use of the results-based budgeting technique in the presentation of the support account budget estimates for peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 2002 to 30 June 2003, to undertake a complete rethinking of how post and non-post resources for the support account are justified and presented and, in this regard, to take full account of paragraphs 9 and 10 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

4. Reaffirms the decision in paragraph 2 of its resolution 49/250 that the support account funds shall be used for the sole purpose of financing human and non-human resource requirements for backstopping and supporting peacekeeping operations at Headquarters, and that any changes to this limitation will require the prior approval of the General Assembly;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to review the issue of capacity in the Peacekeeping Best Practices Unit for policy support in peacekeeping operations in the area of demobilization, disarmament and reintegration, taking into account the views of the Advisory Committee;

6. Stresses that the creation of small units in the Department of Peacekeeping Operations to fulfil various functions which duplicate the responsibilities of other departments must be avoided, and shares the caution expressed by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions that an increase in the number of organizational units in the Department does not necessarily facilitate coordination or enhance administrative and management capacity;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to prevent duplication of work between the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the Department of Political Affairs of the Secretariat and to further clarify the relationships and interactions between the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and other offices in the Department of Management of the Secretariat, especially those dealing with personnel, financial administration and control, management of procurement activities and monitoring of delegated authority;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to report, in the context of the annual support account budget estimates, on action taken by the Department of Peacekeeping Operations to develop and implement a comprehensive information technology systems strategy that integrates field missions with the Secretariat's overall information and communication technology strategy;

9. Expresses concern about the effect of scattering the units of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations in a number of different physical locations on its operational effectiveness, and requests the Secretary-General to investigate and report on ways and means of achieving co-location of such units;

10. Also expresses concern over the delay in the recruitment and staffing of the 93 support account posts approved in December 2000 on an urgent basis;

11. Reaffirms section I, paragraph 6, of its resolution 55/238, in which it agreed with paragraph 36 of the report of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations relating to proper representation of troop-contributing countries in the Department of Peacekeeping Operations;

12. Expresses concern over the imbalance in the geographical representation of Member States in the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, and urges the Secretary-General to take immediate measures to improve the representation of underrepresented and unrepresented Member States in future recruitment;

13. Also expresses concern over the lack of compliance by the Department of Peacekeeping Operations with the rules, regulations and procedures pertaining to human resources management, and in this regard reaffirms the role of the Office of Human Resources Management of the Secretariat as set out in General Assembly resolutions 53/221 of 7 April 1999 and 55/258 of 14 June 2001, in particular the General Assembly decision that the Office of Human Resources Management should remain the central authority for the monitoring and approval of the recruitment and placement of staff and for the interpretation of the regulations and rules of the Organization and their enforcement;

14. Welcomes the emphasis on training, planning and establishment of rosters, which would provide the capacity to manage and monitor personnel actions in the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the Office of Human Resources Management, and encourages the utilization of information technology in reducing the current recruitment period below 180 days;

15. Regrets the inordinate delay in the certification of write-off claims from some liquidated peacekeeping operations, and requests the Secretary-General to finalize the certification of those claims by 30 June 2002 and to submit a progress report on this issue to the General Assembly at its resumed fifty-sixth session;

16. Urges the Secretary-General to give priority to the reimbursement of claims from liquidated missions, including maintaining adequate reserves to settle claims once certified;

17. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee, subject to the provisions of the present resolution, and decides not to establish at this time the D-2 post of Director of Change Management mentioned in paragraph 28 of the report of the Advisory Committee and to keep the matter under review for consideration at the second part of its resumed fifty-sixth session, and, in the light of the development of a coherent policy, to review the P-5 post for gender issues at the second part of its resumed fifty-sixth session;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to entrust the Office of Internal Oversight Services of the Secretariat with the task of conducting an evaluation of the impact of the recent restructuring of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations on its backstopping of peacekeeping operations performance, and the impact on efficient and effective use of the resources of the Department, and to report to the General Assembly at its resumed fifty-eighth session;

19. Decides to appropriate an additional amount of 1,575,700 United States dollars under the following sections of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2002-2003: 376,400 dollars under section 3, Political affairs; 888,800 dollars under section 22, Human rights; 127,900 dollars under section 27, Management and central support services; and 182,600 dollars under section 32, Staff assessment, to be offset by a corresponding amount (182,600 dollars) under income section 1, Income from staff assessment, of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2002-2003;

20. Approves an additional 121 support account-funded posts and their related post and non-post requirements in the amount of 16,103,750 dollars gross (14,889,500 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to conduct, through the Office of Internal Oversight Services, an audit of the policies and procedures of the Organization for recruiting staff for the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and to report thereon to the General Assembly for its consideration at its resumed fifty-sixth session.

General aspects of UN peacekeeping

Establishment of Security Council Working Group on Peacekeeping Operations

On 31 January, the Security Council, by presidential statement S/PRST/2001/3 (see p. 79), established a Working Group of the whole on UN peacekeeping operations to address generic peacekeeping issues relevant to the Council's responsibilities and technical aspects of individual peacekeeping operations, without prejudice to the competence of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations.

The Council President, in a 14 February note [S/2001/135], indicated that, after consultations, it had been agreed that Curtis A. Ward (Jamaica) would serve as the Working Group's Chairman until 31 December.

The Working Group held three sessions in 2001. In May [S/2001/546], it examined the relationship between the Council, troop-contributing countries and the Secretariat (see p. 80); in September [S/2001/900], it examined the Secretary-General's report "No exit without strategy: Security Council decision-making and the closure or transition of United Nations peacekeeping operations" [S/2001/394] (see p. 89); and in December [S/2001/1335], it assessed the efficiency and effectiveness of the measures set out in resolution 1353(2001) for meetings with troop-contributing countries with a view to improving the system (see p. 84).

Information, analysis and decision-making

In his June report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations and the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations [A/55/977] (see p. 71), the Secretary-General stated that he had directed the Secretariat, working closely with the relevant agencies, funds and programmes, to reassess the formation of the Information and Strategic Analysis Secretariat (EISAS), as proposed in the Brahimi report [YUN 2000, p. 84]. The findings of that review, together with observations by the management consultants and the External Review Board, reaffirmed several weaknesses: that during the planning and operation of peacekeeping operations, mission planners and senior mission leadership did not always operate with the benefit of a comprehensive assessment of the political, socio-economic, development, human rights and humanitarian factors that contributed to the conflict concerned, which affected their credibility with the parties to the conflict and also affected the Organization's ability to carry out its mandate effectively; where the information did exist, there was no organizational unit within the system to pull that information together into a coherent whole, to identify gaps in knowledge and synthesize it into a digestible format for those concerned; contrary to perceptions, the desk officers in the Department of Political Affairs were not performing that knowledge management function from a multidisciplinary perspective because their numbers were few, their time limited and their expertise mainly restricted to political analysis; and greater use needed to be made of modern information systems.

Convinced that the original idea behind the creation of EISAS would substantially address those shortcomings, the Secretary-General proposed creating a more modest unit for system-wide policy and analysis, which would maintain some of the objectives previously articulated for EISAS, but would be half the proposed size and would not absorb the information technology, cartographic and media monitoring capabilities from the Department of Public Information. The Peace-building Unit would be de-linked from it. The new unit would serve as the secretariat for the Executive Committee on Peace and Security (ECPS); undertake medium and long-term analyses of cross-cutting issues that were fundamental to the successful planning and support of peacekeeping operations, peace-building offices, special political missions and peacemaking/diplomatic activities; and prepare proposals for mid-to-long-term strategies. The new unit would be autonomous and headed by a Director, with a small support staff.

Special Committee action. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, in June [A/55/1024 & Corr.1], recommended that a capability to analyse information relevant to each peacekeeping operation, and to disseminate its analysis to senior mission leadership, troop-contributing countries and other countries involved should not be established in support of ECPS. Instead, it requested the Secretary-General to consider placing it within DPKO or in his Executive Office. The Secretariat should revisit the concept of establishing information technology systems in support of the proposed analytical capability. The Special Committee requested that the Secretary-General address those issues.

Standby arrangements and rapid deployment

The Secretary-General, in a December report [A/56/732] on the implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [YUN 2000, p. 95] and the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations [ibid., p. 83], said that he had appealed to Member States to consider committing specialized enabling resources, together with strategic lift capabilities, to the UN standby arrangements system (UNSAS). In that regard, DPKO had initiated specific requests to certain Member States. In response to his further request that UNSAS participants indicate the availability or not of their currently listed assets, only nine replies had so far been received. In addition, since very few participants had been reporting monthly on the status of their commitments and many States had indicated a preference for reporting quarterly, the initiative was being re-examined.

The Secretariat welcomed the creation and identification of peacekeeping forces through regional partnerships, and had sought the views of Member States on the deployment of coherent brigade-sized units to UN peacekeeping operations. Following the creation of a generic mission headquarters of some 100 military officers, deployable on seven days' notice as a means of enhancing planning capability, Member States were requested in March to provide staffing nominations. As at December, 22 States had responded positively. Individuals serving under the system would be rotated every two years. A model civilian police headquarters had also been designed and would be reviewed by Member States in 2002. The Secretary-General encouraged Member States to participate in the on-call lists and to submit their staffing nominations. The Mine Action Service was developing an emergency response plan, which would be supported by standing arrangements currently being developed with mine action organizations. Stocks of mine action-related equipment would be established within the United Nations Humanitarian Response Depot in Brindisi, while a database of experts for deployment on short notice was also being developed. Those arrangements were expected to be completed by the end of 2002.

Consultations held with Member States in October on the enhancement of rapid deployment capabilities and the development of a common understanding of the requirements to meet the 30- to 90-day deployment time lines had advanced the planning assumptions and rationale supporting the proposed strategic deployment stock (SDS) equipment lists and the attendant financial requirements and methodologies. The aim was to make SDS fully deployable by the end of 2002 or early 2003. DPKO was also reviewing ways to enhance the timely availability of strategic air- and sea-lift capabilities, including options for establishing a long-term standing Letter of Assist arrangement for large cargo aircraft (AN-124) with two Member States. The Procurement Division was reviewing whether standby commercial contracts could be established with commercial AN-124 operators. The Secretariat had established a surge roster of key administrative staff for the rapid and effective start-up of new missions.

HIV/AIDS and peacekeeping operations

On 19 January [meeting 4259], the Security Council considered the agenda item "The responsibility of the Security Council in the maintenance of international peace and security: HIV/AIDS and international peacekeeping operations". Briefing the Council, the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations acknowledged that UN peacekeepers ran the risk of transmitting or contracting HIV, but observed that it was difficult to quantify the extent of the risk. He reported on measures taken by DPKO to implement resolution 1308(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 82] and to mitigate the risks that peacekeepers presented or were exposed to. They included heightened awareness of the problem among peacekeepers and training in preventive measures, such as the development of a training module on medical issues for senior-level trainers, including AIDS prevention and awareness, the production and distribution of a number of publications to peacekeeping missions and to Member States, and the production of a "pocket card" with basic facts on codes of conduct and HIV/AIDS awareness and prevention in various languages. In addition, DPKO had proposed to Member States, within the context of the post-Phase V Working Group on Peacekeeping Operations (see p. 99), that the United Nations reimburse contributor States for the cost of conducting HIV testing of their personnel. On 19 January, DPKO and the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) signed a memorandum of understanding that further developed and institutionalized the relationship between the organizations.

The UNAIDS Executive Director updated the Council on action taken to fulfil his commitment to address HIV/AIDS in emergencies and the uniformed services, including assessment missions by the UNAIDS Humanitarian Coordination Unit to Burundi, East Timor, Eritrea and Ethiopia to assess locally specific risk factors, prepare HIV prevention strategies and train trainers in prevention and behaviour change so that peacekeepers could become agents of change and HIV prevention. With the UNDP Administrator, he had written to UN resident coordinators in countries affected by conflict to ensure that AIDS, as a humanitarian and security issue, was at the top of the UN system's agenda in those countries. UNAIDS was also working with its co-sponsors and DPKO to focus on the elevated risk of HIV in conflict and humanitarian situations and was establishing with DPKO an expert panel to analyse and formulate a comprehensive position on HIV testing for peacekeepers and humanitarian personnel.

General Assembly special session on HIV/AIDS

The General Assembly, at its twenty-sixth special session (25-27 June) on the problem of HIV/AIDS in all its aspects, adopted the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS (resolution S-26/2) (see p. 1126), which, among other things, addressed the issue of HIV/AIDS in conflict and disaster-affected regions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 June [meeting 4339], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/16 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the successful holding of the twenty-sixth special session of the General Assembly on HIV/AIDS and encourages further action to address the problem of HIV/AIDS.

The Council recalls its resolution 1308(2000) of 17 July 2000, in which the Council, bearing in mind its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, and emphasizing the important roles of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in addressing the social and economic factors that lead to the spread of HIV/AIDS, inter alia, recognized that the HIV/AIDS pandemic is also exacerbated by conditions of violence and instability, and stressed that the HIV/AIDS pandemic, if unchecked, may pose a risk to stability and security.

The Security Council therefore welcomes the fact that the declaration adopted at the twenty-sixth special session of the General Assembly addresses HIV/AIDS in conflict and disaster-affected regions, and contains a number of practical measures at the national and international levels, to be met within given time frames, to reduce the impact of conflict and disasters on the spread of HIV/AIDS, including the provision of awareness and training for personnel employed by United Nations agencies and other relevant organizations, the development of national strategies to address the spread of HIV amongst national uniformed services, as required, and the inclusion of HIV/AIDS awareness and training into guidelines designed for personnel involved in international peacekeeping operations.

The Council also recalls its open debate on 19 January 2001, taking stock of progress made since the adoption of resolution 1308(2000). The Council notes the progress made in the implementation of the resolution, and commends the increased co-operation in this regard between the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) and the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) through the Memorandum of Understanding between them signed in January 2001. Further, the Council welcomes the efforts to develop practical measures, such as the planned joint United Nations field assessment missions to major peacekeeping operations, and the development of the HIV/AIDS Awareness Card for Peacekeeping Operations to be distributed to all peacekeeping operations after testing in the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone. The Council also welcomes the fact that the co-operation framework signed in May this year between UNAIDS and the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) expresses their intention to cooperate in the follow-up to resolution 1308(2000), as well as resolution 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000 on women, peace and security.

The Council recognizes that further efforts are necessary to reduce the negative impact of conflict and disasters on the spread of HIV/AIDS, and to develop the capacity of peacekeepers to become advocates and actors for awareness and prevention of HIV transmission. The Council encourages continued efforts with regard to relevant training for peacekeeping, pre-deployment orientation, and increased international cooperation by interested Member States in areas such as prevention, voluntary and confidential testing and counselling, treatment for personnel, and the exchange of best practices and countries' policies in this regard. The Council encourages UNAIDS and DPKO to further pursue the implementation of resolution 1308(2000), including through the consideration of further efforts to enhance cooperation, such as the inclusion of HIV/AIDS advisers in peacekeeping operations, and revision, as required, of relevant codes of conduct.

The Council expresses its intention to contribute within its competence to the attainment of the relevant objectives in the declaration adopted at the twenty-sixth special session of the General Assembly in carrying out the Council's work, in particular in its follow-up to resolution 1308(2000).

Consultations with troop contributors

Singapore, in an 8 January letter [S/2001/21], informed the Secretary-General that, during its Presidency of the Security Council, it would organize an open debate on strengthening cooperation with troop-contributing countries (TCCs). In background papers attached to its letter, Singapore stated that the guidelines for meetings of TCCs established by the Council in S/PRST/1994/62 [YUN 1994, p. 120] and

S/PRST/1996/13 [YUN 1996, p. 18] continued to be valid if they were fully implemented. Unfortunately, the meetings between the Council, the Secretariat and troop-contributing countries had become pro forma and ritualistic and had fallen short of expectations. Singapore also referred to resolution 1327(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 87], in which the Council had stated its commitment to hold private meetings with TCCs at various stages of the establishment and implementation of peacekeeping operations, which was a significant improvement over the earlier arrangement.

In introducing the item on 16 January [meeting 4257], the Council President said that the success of peacekeeping operations depended on a healthy relationship between the Council, the Secretariat and TCCs. The Council and the Secretariat had already initiated action to strengthen consultations with TCCs in follow-up to the Brahimi report [YUN 2000, p. 83], but more needed to be done to strengthen cooperation among all three partners. Several questions regarding the relations between TCCs, the Council and the Secretariat should be addressed, including the usefulness of meeting with TCCs prior to the adoption of Council resolutions; other mechanisms and channels that could be used to strengthen the link between the Council and TCCs; and better cooperation among the three partners to address peacekeeping problems, including commitment gaps in the contribution of troops to all peacekeeping operations and the safety and security of UN peacekeepers.

On 23 January [S/2001/73], Canada proposed that for each mission the Council should establish an operation-specific cooperative committee with TCCs, including those countries contributing formed military units and/or senior command personnel, when they were not the same. The proposed operation-specific committee would be a decision-making body, but the Council would retain its ultimate decision-making authority. The committee would be presided over by a Council member with a natural lead interest in the situation. All other Council members and those TCCs meeting participation criteria would be full members. Participation by the relevant UN agencies would be essential. The parties to the conflict would be excluded, but modalities for consultations with them would be developed on a case-by-case basis.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 January [meeting 4270], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/3 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has given further consideration to the question of strengthening cooperation between the Council, the troop-contributing countries and the Secretariat. In this connection, the Council stresses the importance of full implementation of provisions of resolution 1327(2000) of 13 November 2000 and in the statements of its President of 28 March 1996 (S/PRST/1996/13) and 3 May 1994 (S/PRST/1994/22). The Council takes note of the views expressed at its debate on the subject "Strengthening cooperation with troop-contributing countries" at its 4257th meeting on 16 January 2001. The Council recognizes the scope for further improvement in its relations with troop-contributing countries and the need to work together with a common purpose towards shared goals.

The Council recognizes that in view of the increasing complexity of peacekeeping operations, there is a need for a transparent three-way relationship between the Security Council, the Secretariat and the troop-contributing countries that will foster a new spirit of partnership, cooperation and confidence.

Recognizing that the experience and expertise of troop-contributing countries in theatres of operation can greatly assist the planning process, the Council reiterates its agreement to hold consultations with troop-contributing countries in a timely manner at different stages of a United Nations peacekeeping operation, in particular when the Secretary-General has identified potential troop-contributing countries for a new or ongoing peacekeeping operation, during the implementation phase of an operation, when considering a change to, or renewal of, or completion of a peacekeeping mandate, or when a rapid deterioration in the situation on the ground threatens the safety and security of United Nations peacekeepers.

The Council will seek to ensure that all private meetings as provided for in resolution 1327(2000) between members of the Council, the troop-contributing countries and the Secretariat are substantive, representative, meaningful and provide for a full exchange of views. The Council stresses the importance of full participation by all those involved and encourages troop-contributing countries to take the initiative to call for meaningful exchanges of information. The President of the Council will provide, where appropriate, a detailed report of consultations with the troop-contributing countries to the Council.

The Council stresses the usefulness of full and comprehensive briefings by the Secretariat at private meetings with the troop-contributing countries, including, where appropriate, military factors.

The Council encourages the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to improve coordination and cooperation on peacekeeping issues within the United Nations system and the Secretariat.

The Council encourages the Secretary-General to raise public awareness globally of the positive contribution of peacekeeping operations and the role played by peacekeepers from various troop-contributing countries.

The Council acknowledges that the Secretariat must be able to rely on sufficient human and financial resources to respond to the demands placed on it. It underlines the importance of follow-up to the report of the Panel on Peace Operations with a view to strengthening the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and other relevant departments of the Secretariat involved in peacekeeping.

The Council reiterates that the problem of the commitment gap with regard to personnel and equipment for peacekeeping operations requires the assumption by all Member States of the shared responsibility to support United Nations peacekeeping.

The Council acknowledges that the delay in reimbursement causes severe budgetary constraints to troop-contributing countries. It urges all Member States to pay their assessed contributions in full and on time, so that peacekeeping operations can stand on a solid financial basis.

The Council decides to establish a Working Group of the whole on United Nations peacekeeping operations. The Working Group will not replace the private meetings with the troop-contributing countries. The Working Group will address both generic peacekeeping issues relevant to the responsibilities of the Council, and technical aspects of individual peacekeeping operations, without prejudice to the competence of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations. Where appropriate, the Working Group will seek the views of the troop-contributing countries, including through meetings between the Working Group and the troop-contributing countries, with a view to their views being taken into account by the Council.

As a first step, the Working Group is tasked to undertake an in-depth consideration of, inter alia, all the proposals made in the course of the Council's public meeting on 16 January 2001, including ways to improve the three-way relationship between the Council, the troop-contributing countries and the Secretariat and to report to the Council by 30 April 2001. An indicative list of all the ideas and proposals arising from the meeting on 16 January 2001 will be forwarded to the Working Group for its consideration.

Meeting of Working Group on Peacekeeping Operations. The Working Group established pursuant to presidential statement S/PRST/2001/3 submitted its first report to the Security Council in May [S/2001/546]. The Group's first task was to examine the relationship between the Council, TCCs and the Secretariat. An indicative list of the proposals made by Member States during the Council's 16 January meeting, prepared by Singapore [S/2001/130], formed the basis of the Group's working document. The Group also had before it a paper submitted on 30 May [S/2001/535] by Argentina, Canada, Ghana, India, Jordan, the Netherlands and New Zealand elaborating further Canada's proposals on cooperation with TCCs, on participation in the mission planning process, the establishment of a mission-specific cooperative management committee and on managing the mission, including during its termination phase.

The Group was briefed by the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations on the Secretariat's perspectives on measures that could enhance the quality of consultations between the Council, TCCs and the Secretariat. He also apprised the Group of the Secretariat's limitations in carrying out those measures, and the importance of support for the resources to do so effectively.

The Working Group's recommendations were contained in a draft resolution, which it recommended to the Council for adoption.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 13 June [meeting 4326], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1353(2001). The draft [S/2001/573] was prepared in consultations among Council members, on the basis of the Working Group's draft.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 1318(2000) of 7 September 2000 and 1327(2000) of 13 November 2000 and the statements by its President of 3 May 1994 (S/PRST/1994/22) and 28 March 1996 (S/PRST/1996/13), and all other relevant statements by its President,

Recalling also the statement by its President of 31 January 2001 (S/PRST/2001/3),

Taking into consideration the views expressed at its debate on the subject "Strengthening cooperation with troop-contributing countries" at its 4257th meeting on 16 January 2001,

Reaffirming its commitment to the Purposes of the Charter of the United Nations as set out in Article 1, paragraphs 1 to 4, of the Charter, and to the Principles of the Charter as set out in Article 2, paragraphs 1 to 7, of the Charter, including its commitment to the principles of the political independence, sovereign equality and territorial integrity of all States, and to respect for the sovereignty of all States,

Reaffirming its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security, reiterating its commitment to enhance the capacity of the United Nations in this area, and emphasizing its willingness to take all necessary steps within its competence to that end,

Recalling the relevant recommendations in the report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations, and reaffirming its support for all efforts to strengthen the efficiency and effectiveness of United Nations peacekeeping operations,

Stressing the need to ensure the safety and security of peacekeepers and other United Nations and associated personnel, including humanitarian personnel,

Stressing the need to improve the relationship between the Security Council, the troop-contributing countries and the Secretariat to foster a spirit of partnership, cooperation, confidence and mutual trust,

Recognizing the need to strengthen cooperation with troop-contributing countries, as part of a series of measures to ensure more coherent and integrated concepts of operations and to enhance managerial efficiency and operational effectiveness of United Nations peacekeeping operations,

Noting that relevant provisions contained in the annexes to the present resolution pertain also to strengthening cooperation with countries contributing civilian police and other personnel,

1. Agrees to adopt the decisions and recommendations contained in the annexes to the present resolution;

2. Requests its Working Group on Peacekeeping Operations to continue its work on strengthening the capacity of the United Nations to establish and support efficient and effective peacekeeping operations;

3. Undertakes to follow closely the implementation of the agreed measures for cooperation with troop-contributing countries, and requests its Working Group on Peacekeeping Operations to assess within six months of the adoption of this resolution the efficiency and effectiveness of the agreed measures, consider their further improvement taking into account the proposals of the troop-contributing countries and to report to the Council on these matters;

4. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

ANNEX I

A

Statement of principles on cooperation with troop-contributing countries

The Security Council

1. Recognizes that its partnership with troop-contributing countries can be strengthened by the assumption by Member States, in particular those with the greatest capacity and means to do so, of their shared responsibility to provide personnel, assistance and facilities to the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security;

2. Encourages Member States to take steps to bridge the commitment gap with regard to personnel and equipment for specific United Nations peacekeeping operations;

3. Emphasizes the importance of troop-contributing countries taking the necessary and appropriate steps to ensure the capability of their peacekeepers to fulfil the missions' mandate, and underlines the importance of bilateral and international cooperation in this regard, including in the area of training, logistics and equipment;

4. Underlines the importance of ensuring that national contingents participating in United Nations peacekeeping operations receive effective and appropriate support from the Secretariat, including in the area of training, logistics and equipment;

5. Stresses the need to ensure that the Secretariat is given sufficient human and financial resources to fulfil these tasks, and that these resources be used efficiently and effectively;

6. Underlines that consultations between the Security Council, the Secretariat and troop-contributing countries should enhance the ability of the Security Council to make appropriate, effective and timely decisions in fulfilling its responsibilities;

7. Underlines also the need to maintain a comprehensive approach to improving the effectiveness of peacekeeping operations from their conception, including in preparing contingency plans for volatile situations, and promoting cohesive exit strategies;

B

Operational issues

1. Encourages international cooperation and support for peacekeeping training, including the establishment of regional peacekeeping training centres, and stresses the need for technical support from the Secretary-General to such centres;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to include information on his consultations with troop-contributing countries in his regular reports to the Security Council on individual peacekeeping operations, and undertakes to take account of the views expressed in these consultations and in its meetings with troop-contributing countries when taking decisions on such operations;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to convene assessments meetings with interested delegations, in particular troop-contributing countries, at appropriate stages of each peacekeeping operation as a part of his efforts to draw the lessons that can be learned, which should be taken into account in the conduct and planning of current and future operations;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to take into account in the conduct of peacekeeping operations and in the regular lessons-learned process, the operational experiences of national contingents while in the field or following departure;

5. Undertakes to inform troop-contributing countries fully of the terms of reference of missions of the Security Council involving peacekeeping operations and subsequently of the conclusions of the missions;

6. Expresses its view that the conduct of reconnaissance visits to the mission area by countries committing troops can be highly valuable in preparing for effective participation in peacekeeping operations, and encourages support for such visits;

7. Urges the Secretary-General to take further steps to implement the proposal of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations to create integrated mission task forces, and to pursue other related capabilities to improve United Nations planning and support capacities;

8. Stresses the need to improve the information and the analysis capacity of the United Nations Secretariat, with a view to improving the quality of advice to the Secretary-General, the Security Council and the troop-contributing countries;

9. Stresses also that the Secretariat's advice to the Security Council and the troop-contributing countries should include a range of recommendations for action on the basis of an objective assessment of the situation on the ground, rather than what Member States are presumed to be willing to support;

10. Underlines the importance of an effective mission-specific public information and communications capacity within peacekeeping operations, in particular through campaigns to improve awareness of the objectives and scope of the mission within the local population in the mission area;

11. Stresses the need for an effective public information programme to generate international public support for United Nations peacekeeping operations, and stresses also in this regard the need for special programmes, in particular in troop-contributing countries, to project the contribution of peacekeepers;

12. Underlines in this regard the need for an effective public information capacity within the United Nations, and takes note in this regard of the proposals made by the Secretary-General to strengthen Secretariat planning and support for public information in peacekeeping operations;

C

Other mechanisms

1. Undertakes to continue to consider the possibility of using the Military Staff Committee as one of the means of enhancing United Nations peacekeeping operations;

2. Expresses its belief that Groups of Friends of the Secretary-General, as well as other informal mechanisms which might include troop-contributing countries, Security Council members, donors and the countries in the region, can play a useful role in increasing the coherence and effectiveness of United Nations action, and stresses that they should conduct their work in close cooperation with the Security Council;

D

Follow-up

1. Expresses its intention to assess within six months the efficiency and effectiveness of its meetings with troop-contributing countries, with a view to the possibility of further improvement to the current system, including through the consideration of specific proposals of troop-contributing countries for new mechanisms;

2. Decides to strengthen cooperation with the troop-contributing countries in addition to and on the basis of the principles and provisions contained in the resolution and the present annex by improving and expanding existing consultation mechanisms as elaborated in annex II, with a view to ensuring proper reflection of the views and concerns of troop-contributing countries.

ANNEX II

Format, procedures and documentation of meetings with the troop-contributing countries

The consultations with troop-contributing countries will take place in the following formats:

A. Public or private meetings of the Security Council with the participation of troop-contributing countries;

B. Consultation meetings with the troop-contributing countries;

C. Meetings between the Secretariat and troop-contributing countries.

A

Public or private meetings of the Security Council

1. The Security Council will hold public or private meetings with the participation of troop-contributing countries, including at their request, and without prejudice to the provisional rules of procedure of the Security Council, in order to ensure a full and high-level consideration of issues of critical importance to a specific peacekeeping operation.

2. Such meetings may be held, in particular, when the Secretary-General has identified potential troop-contributing countries for a new or ongoing peacekeeping operation, when considering a change in, or renewal or completion of a peacekeeping mandate, or when there is a rapid deterioration in the situation on the ground, including when it threatens the safety and security of United Nations peacekeepers.

B

Consultation meetings with the troop-contributing countries

1. Consultation meetings with troop-contributing countries will continue as the principal means of consultation, and will continue to be convened and chaired by the President of the Security Council.

2. Such consultation meetings may be convened, including at the request of troop-contributing countries, as appropriate at different stages of peacekeeping operations, including:

(a) Mission planning, including the development of the concept of operations and the elaboration of the mandate of a new operation;

(b) Any change in the mandate, in particular the broadening or narrowing of the scope of the mission, the introduction of new or additional functions or components, or a change in the authorization to use force;

(c) The renewal of a mandate;

(d) Significant or serious political, military or humanitarian developments;

(e) A rapid deterioration of the security situation on the ground;

(f) The termination, withdrawal or scaling down in size of the operation, including the transition from peacekeeping to post-conflict peace-building;

(g) Before and after Council missions to a specific peacekeeping operation.

3. The following parties will be invited to these meetings:

(a) Countries contributing troops, military observers or civilian police to the peacekeeping operation;

(b) Prospective troop-contributing countries as identified by the Secretary-General;

(c) Relevant United Nations bodies and agencies, when they have specific contributions to make to the issue under discussion;

(d) Other bodies and agencies, as observers, as appropriate;

(e) Countries that make special contributions, such as other civilian personnel, contributions to trust funds, logistics, equipment and facilities and other contributions, as appropriate;

(f) The host country/countries, as observers, as appropriate;

(g) The representative of a regional or subregional organization or arrangement, contributing troops as appropriate;

(h) Regional organizations, as observers when not contributing troops, as appropriate.

4. Such consultation meetings will, as appropriate, include consideration of:

(a) Preparations for the establishment of a peacekeeping mandate by the Security Council;

(b) Operational issues, including the concept of operations, mission planning, authorization to use force, the chain of command, force structure, the unity and cohesion of the force, training and equipment, risk assessment and deployment;

(c) Significant concerns of or recommendations by the Secretary-General, as set out in his report, a briefing note from the Secretariat or the Secretariat's oral briefing;

(d) The specific concerns of troop-contributing countries, including those communicated to the President of the Security Council;

(e) Progress in the accomplishment of the mission's tasks in different areas or mission components.

5. The following measures will be ensured to improve the quality and effectiveness of such consultations:

(a) An informal paper setting out the agenda, including issues to be covered and drawing attention to relevant background documentation, will be circulated by the President of the Security Council to the participants when inviting them to attend these meetings;

(b) The Secretary-General should ensure, within the constraints of the Security Council's programme of work, that reports requested by the Security Council on specific peacekeeping operations are issued in good time to allow the timely holding of meetings with troop-contributing countries before discussion among Security Council members;

(c) The Secretariat should also make fact sheets available to all participants at the beginning of these meetings;

(d) The Secretary-General should ensure, where possible, that briefings are given by senior personnel working with the mission in the field;

(e) The Secretary-General should ensure that briefings consist of an objective assessment and analysis of the political, military, humanitarian and human rights situations, where appropriate;

(f) The Secretary-General should add value to the briefings by making them more user-friendly, including through the exploitation of information technology.

6. The following arrangements will be made to ensure timely and appropriate communication of the concerns and views of troop-contributing countries, as expressed at the consultation meetings, to the members of the Security Council so that these concerns and views can receive due consideration:

The President of the Security Council will prepare, with the assistance of the Secretariat, and make available a summary of the content of such meetings;

The summary of discussion will be distributed to Council members in advance of informal consultations or of the next meeting on the relevant peacekeeping operation, where appropriate.

C

Meetings between the Secretariat and troop-contributing countries

The Security Council supports the existing practice of meetings between the Secretariat and troop-contributing countries to discuss matters concerning specific peacekeeping operations, and also the participation at such meetings, where appropriate, of Special Representatives of the Secretary-General, Force Commanders and Civilian Police Commissioners.

Other forms of consultations

The Security Council notes that the forms of consultations mentioned herein are not exhaustive and that consultations may take a variety of other forms, including formal or informal communication between the President of the Council or its members, the Secretary-General and the troop-contributing countries and, as appropriate, with other countries especially affected, including countries from the region concerned.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2001 session (18-19 June) [A/55/1024 & Corr.1], requested the Council to consider implementing the recommendations contained in the Brahimi report [YUN 2000, p. 83] that pertained to the strengthening of cooperation between TCCs, the Council and the Secretariat and to consider seriously the proposals for a new mechanism of consultations between the Council and TCCs.

It asked DPKO to provide Member States, semi-annually, with updated lists of the names of key personnel and officers and their responsibilities in the relevant offices, divisions, units and sections within the Department who maintained regular contacts with the permanent missions of Member States on all issues related to the participation, deployment and reimbursement of their personnel in peacekeeping operations.

Follow-up to Council resolution 1353(2001)

Communications. On 22 June [S/2001/626], Pakistan submitted to the Security Council further proposals on strengthening cooperation with TCCs, which, it said, were intended to improve on those already put forward by other Member States. On 6 July [S/2001/671], the Russian Federation put forward suggestions for enhancing the activities of the Military Staff Committee.

Bangladesh made proposals on 18 August [S/2001/811] concerning the holding of meetings by the Council with TCCs prior to review or renewal of a peacekeeping mandate, with Secretariat participation, and other periodic meetings as required to review a situation, assess progress, address difficulties faced by the mission and consider concerns of TCCs.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in his December report on the implementation of the Special Committee's 2000 recommendations [A/56/732], said that assessment meetings were being held between the Secretariat and TCCs to draw out lessons learned and benefit from the operational experiences of national contingents. The Secretariat planned to engage TCCs in further discussions on how their national systems recorded those experiences and was seeking to improve its support to the Council's meetings with TCCs within the new format outlined in resolution 1353(2001) (see p. 80).

Working Group on Peacekeeping Operations.

In December, the Working Group on Peacekeeping Operations submitted its third report to the Security Council [S/2001/1335]. The Group had assessed the efficiency and effectiveness of the measures for meetings with TCCs with a view to further improving the system. It reviewed the consultation process during the past six months, including the conduct of Council meetings with those countries, and considered specific proposals by TCCs for new mechanisms [S/2001/535, S/2001/626].

The Working Group concluded that six months was not sufficient time to evaluate fully the effectiveness of resolution 1353(2001) and that a further in-depth review should take place. However, the format of meetings conducted under that resolution did provide a better process for information exchange than previous arrangements. Consultation meetings chaired by the Council President should be the principal means of consultations with TCCs. A position paper submitted by the Russian Federation on the use of the Military Staff Committee (see p. 83) and a United Kingdom proposal to enhance military advice to the Council would require further consideration.

The Working Group proposed for the Council's consideration a draft note by the Council President on setting up a new mechanism. The draft text stated that the new mechanism would provide for, among other things, joint meetings of the Working Group, TCCs and the Secretariat for a closer and more interactive dialogue over issues pertaining to peacekeeping operations as set out in paragraphs 2 and 4 of section B of annex II of resolution 1353(2001) (see p. 82) so as to complement the ongoing process of consultation meetings pursuant to that resolution.

The Working Group would continue to assess the implementation of resolution 1353(2001) and any other new mechanism, and agreed that meetings held under any new mechanism should complement and not supplant those held pursuant to resolution 1353(2001).

Civilian police

In March [A/55/812], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the OIOS report on the management audit of UN civilian police operations. The audit, which reviewed civilian police operations with a view to enhancing their effectiveness and efficiency, was conducted at Headquarters and at the three missions with the largest civilian police components—the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor and the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo.

OIOS observed that the civilian police component of UN peacekeeping operations had increased in both size and scope of operations, from some 2,200 less than two years previously to more than 8,600. Although there had been several positive accomplishments, many of the previous recommendations concerning civilian police had not been implemented. DPKO continued to "reinvent" civilian police management and administrative systems with each new mission, and had not developed a comprehensive civilian police strategy. Selection criteria remained unchanged throughout the life of a mission, regardless of its stage and skills needed; frequent rotations, particularly at senior management levels, were detrimental to operations; and the DPKO Civilian Police Unit had not been proactive in recruiting from Member States with language and culture similar to those of the mission area. The qualifying grade for the English proficiency test had been standardized, although it was clear that, in certain missions, a higher level of proficiency would be more appropriate. Further, no programme was in place to train and develop civilian police for rapid deployment. In addition, civilian police were deployed in several non-policing roles, such as guarding prisons, protecting dignitaries, providing security, and performing customs duties and other administrative functions. The audit also revealed inefficiencies in transporting large civilian police contingents to and from missions.

OIOS recommended that DPKO reclassify the post of Civilian Police Adviser to the same level as the military counterpart; strengthen staff capabilities within the Civilian Police Unit to develop strategic plans and policies and to manage information systems and technology; develop civilian police mission start-up kits (including standard operating procedures, organizational structures, job descriptions, management information systems and equipment specifications) to facilitate rapid and effective deployment to new missions; and standardize civilian police designations, uniforms, equipment and patrol vehicle markings.

DPKO should train and develop a cadre of "UN-certified" civilian police ready for rapid deployment; improve the effectiveness of the selection assistance teams by expanding their use to additional contributing countries and incorporating induction training into team visits; identify essential civilian police positions and offer regular UN appointments to attract higher-calibre candidates and to help retain institutional memory; and target the recruitment of civilian police from countries with languages, cultures or legal systems similar to those of the mission area.

OIOS further recommended that DPKO: ask Member States to contribute skilled civilian or non-commissioned civilian police officers to perform administrative functions, as well as specialists in the other non-policing activities currently being performed by civilian police; appoint a central coordinator within the Civilian Police Unit to manage rotations and repatriations; and establish an information technology focal point within that Unit to manage central integrated databases and to develop and support standard civilian police applications in areas such as logistics, crime and incident reporting.

The Department's management should, in addition, reassess current civilian police responsibilities and determine which of those functions were critical to mission success.

The Secretary-General, in his letter of transmittal, said that DPKO had already taken measures to address many of the issues identified in the review.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, in June [A/55/1024 & Corr.1], said that it appreciated the efforts to promote standardization and professionalism in the civilian police operations and welcomed the issuance of the "Principles and guidelines for United Nations police operations" to support Member States in training police for participation in UN operations.

The Special Committee noted the Secretariat's intention to draft other rules and procedures, including disciplinary measures, and recommended that the Secretariat finalize that exercise in consultation with Member States.

Safety and security

In his June report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations and the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations [A/55/977], the Secretary-General said that DPKO had completed in May a comprehensive review of security requirements in peacekeeping missions, as requested by the Special Committee [YUN 2000, p. 93]. The purpose of the review was to assess security management in peacekeeping and identify weaknesses and ways to rectify such deficiencies. The review benefited from the deliberations of the Seminar on the Safety of United Nations Peacekeepers and Associated Personnel Working in Conflict Zones (Tokyo, Japan, 15-16 March) [A/55/950-S/2001/512].

The review found that, unlike the personnel of UN agencies, funds and programmes, the security of peacekeeping personnel was the responsibility of the head of mission, and not the United Nations Security Coordinator (UNSECOORD).

DPKO did draw on UNSECOORD technical expertise, but the Coordinator lacked the staff to participate fully in the entire planning process for each mission or address the full range of security implications and requirements. As a result, the initial threat/risk assessments tended to focus on political and military considerations and paid less attention to security management issues.

The review noted that there were no templates or guidelines for minimum equipment required for security purposes, and mission personnel were often deployed before such items as communications equipment, vehicles, protective gear and medical evacuation aircraft were available in sufficient quantities. The review urged that the responsibilities of managers for the safety of staff should be clearly recorded in their terms of reference; all staff should receive security awareness training; and negligent performance or non-compliance with security management should be identified and those involved held accountable. More attention should be paid to the outlying team sites and regional headquarters where the majority of security incidents occurred. To better protect staff in the most vulnerable areas, missions should allocate equipment according to security needs, ensure the full integration of regional sites into security planning and improve information exchange among all locations and components. Personnel should not be deployed to areas where speedy evacuation could not be guaranteed in an emergency.

The review emphasized the importance of better information collection and analysis, and the development of integrated strategies to guide the implementation of mandates, based on continuous threat/risk assessments. It recommended strengthening the Situation Centre at Headquarters as part of the DPKO management reforms. The review also made recommendations for improving the security oversight processes at Headquarters, particularly the further clarification of the relationship between DPKO and the UNSECOORD, and for increasing staffing at Headquarters to support peacekeeping security management.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, in June [A/55/1024 & Corr.1], stressed the need for host countries and others concerned to ensure the safety and security of UN and associated personnel, and urged those States that had not done so to consider becoming party as soon as possible to the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, adopted by General Assembly resolution 49/59 [YUN 1994, p. 1289], which had entered into force on 15 January 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 1336]. It noted the Secretary-General's report on the scope of legal protection under the Convention [YUN 2000, p. 1347]. The Special Committee emphasized that status-of-forces agreements should include specific measures to enhance personnel safety and security, based on the Convention.

The Special Committee welcomed the comprehensive review of security requirements in peacekeeping missions (see above), but remained concerned about their deficiencies. It urged DPKO and UNSECOORD to pursue as a matter of urgency better information collection, analysis and dissemination at Headquarters and in the field, and stressed the importance of Member States and the Secretariat sharing safety and security "best practices". The Special Committee asked the Secretary-General to include in his next report steps taken to address those concerns. It invited the Security Council to pay special attention to personnel safety and security when establishing a new operation or changing peacekeeping mandates. The Special Committee also recommended that the Secretariat and Member States accept responsibility for improved preparation of personnel, including better training. All peacekeeping personnel should receive security briefings upon arrival in the mission area, particularly regarding potential threats, and given specific guidelines for avoiding hazardous situations.

The Special Committee stressed the critical role played by the DPKO Air Safety/Transport Unit regarding safety awareness and accident prevention within UN peacekeeping operations. It welcomed the review by the International Civil Aviation Organization of UN peacekeeping air operations and supported its recommendations concerning safety and security. It was concerned about the standards of UN-chartered aircraft contracted for the transportation of UN peacekeepers and called on the Secretariat to take remedial measures.

Report of Secretary-General. In his December report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations and the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations [A/56/732], the Secretary-General said that, as follow-up to the comprehensive review of security requirements in peacekeeping operations (see p. 85), DPKO, in collaboration with the UNSECOORD Office, had developed a proposal for implementing the review's recommendations, and the minimum resources required had been identified in the peacekeeping support account budget submission (see p. 94). Pending the approval of those resources, DPKO was assisting field missions in improving their ability to respond to the specific threats associated with the upsurge in global terrorism. Missions had been reminded to raise awareness among staff of basic precautions and to ensure that updated security plans were in place and complied with. Exceptional measures, including the relocation of dependants and restrictions on operational activities, were implemented in a number of missions, and particular attention was being paid to protection from nuclear, biological and chemical threats. DPKO was working to formalize a policy on such threats in the field, including the integration of related measures into mission security plans. During the year, pre-mission security and safety training was supported through the distribution of publications to Member States, peacekeeping training centres and field missions. Security Awareness Aides-Memoires and Hostage Incident Cards were also circulated, as were health and safety publications. DPKO also reviewed its short-term aircraft specifications, and made a number of amended proposals on various aircraft-related issues, to be implemented in 2002.

The General Assembly, in resolution 56/255, section VIII (see p. 1320), requested the Secretary-General to submit in 2002 a report on the establishment of a clear mechanism of accountability and responsibility. He was also asked to evaluate the UN security system, including the new security arrangements and the relationship and interaction between DPKO and the UNSECOORD Office, and to report in 2003.

Comprehensive review of peacekeeping

Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 54/81 B [YUN 2000, p. 96], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations continued its comprehensive review of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects [A/55/1024 & Corr.1]. In response to the Committee's request, the Secretary-General submitted two reports on the implementation of the Special Committee's recommendations: one in June [A/55/977] and the other in December [A/56/732].

The Special Committee held an organizational meeting on 18 June and a general debate on 18 and 19 June.

The Special Committee noted that, since the end of the cold war, the number of complex peacekeeping operations had increased, and that the Security Council had recently mandated peacekeeping operations which, in addition to the traditional tasks of monitoring and reporting, included other activities. In that regard, it stressed the importance of an effective, efficiently structured and adequately staffed DPKO. The Special Committee stressed the importance of applying the principles and standards of establishing and conducting peacekeeping operations and emphasized the need to continue considering those principles, together with peacekeeping definitions, systematically. New proposals or conditions concerning peacekeeping operations should be discussed in the Special Committee.

The Special Committee noted the statements of the Security Council President in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 37] and S/PRST/2001/5 (see p. 56) with regard to the inclusion of peace-building elements in peacekeeping mandates to ensure a smooth transition to a successful post-conflict phase, and emphasized that, before doing so, those elements should be explicitly defined and clearly identified. Peacekeeping operations should be provided with clearly defined mandates, objectives and command structures and secure financing, and congruity should be ensured between mandates, resources and objectives. Changes in mandates should be accompanied by commensurate resource changes and should be based on a thorough and timely reassessment by the Council, including military advice, of the implications on the ground.

The Special Committee recognized the importance of coordinating measures in the field with regard to conflict prevention, peacekeeping and peace-building, and reiterated the importance of early planning and regular coordination for peacekeeping operations and other mandated activities designed to reduce the risk of resumption of conflicts and to contribute to reconciliation, reconstruction and recovery. The Special Committee also stressed the importance of formulating appropriate exit strategies in future peacekeeping operations (see p. 89).

The Special Committee recommended that Member States concerned be fully consulted and provided on a timely basis with a copy of all UN internal investigations or inquiries into incidents, including the final outcome, that involved the death of or injury to personnel from Member States or loss/theft of property of Member States. In cases of alleged gross misconduct, Member States concerned should be invited to take part in the investigation, bearing in mind the need to maintain discipline in the mission area and the desirability of justice being done in all such cases. The Special Committee welcomed the circulation of sample rules of engagement and looked forward to further consultation on their finaliza-tion. It also underlined the importance of further consultation with Member States regarding the Secretary-General's bulletin [ST/SGB/1999/13] on observance by UN forces of international humanitarian law.

The Special Committee reiterated the importance of issuing training materials in all UN official languages and urged that funding be made available for that purpose. It encouraged the Secretariat to provide increased assistance for regional training programmes. Disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes should be provided with adequate and timely resources, which should be included in the assessed budgets of relevant peacekeeping operations during its start-up phase. Funding for such programmes would be reviewed during examination of the mission's budget.

With regard to DPKO participation in the Executive Committee on Peace and Security, the Special Committee acknowledged the need for greater coordination among UN departments and agencies to avoid duplication and improve effectiveness in the conduct of peacekeeping operations; it recommended that the Secretary-General establish a small support secretariat to service the Executive Committee (see p. 76).

The Special Committee supported a review of the personal baggage allowance for a peacekeeper and stated that consideration should be given to providing senior staff, officers, military observers and civilian police with the same travel arrangements as UN personnel at Headquarters.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 December [meeting 92], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/55/572/Add.1], adopted resolution 56/225 without vote [agenda item 89].

Comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2006(XIX) of 18 February 1965 and all other relevant resolutions,

Recalling in particular its resolutions 54/81 B of 25 May 2000 and 55/135 of 8 December 2000,

Affirming that the efforts of the United Nations in the peaceful settlement of disputes, inter alia, through its peacekeeping operations, are indispensable,

Convinced of the need for the United Nations to continue to improve its capabilities in the field of peacekeeping and to enhance the effective and efficient deployment of its peacekeeping operations,

Considering the contribution that all States Members of the Organization make to peacekeeping,

Noting the widespread interest in contributing to the work of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations expressed by many Member States, in particular troop-contributing countries,

Bearing in mind the continuous necessity of preserving the efficiency and strengthening the effectiveness of the work of the Special Committee,

1. Welcomes the report of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations;

2. Endorses the proposals, recommendations and conclusions of the Special Committee, contained in paragraphs 33 to 136 of its report;

3. Urges Member States, the Secretariat and relevant organs of the United Nations to take all necessary steps to implement the proposals, recommendations and conclusions of the Special Committee;

4. Reiterates that those Member States that become personnel contributors to United Nations peacekeeping operations in years to come or that participate in the future in the Special Committee for three consecutive years as observers shall, upon request in writing to the Chairman of the Special Committee, become members at the following session of the Special Committee;

5. Decides that the Special Committee, in accordance with its mandate, shall continue its efforts for a comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects and shall review the implementation of its previous proposals and consider any new proposals so as to enhance the capacity of the United Nations to fulfil its responsibilities in this field;

6. Requests the Special Committee to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the item entitled "Comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects"

Also on 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item "Comprehensive review of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects" would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464).

Peacekeeping exit strategies

In response to a Security Council request [YUN 2000, p. 97], the Secretary-General submitted an April report entitled "No exit without strategy: Security Council decision-making and the closure or transition of United Nations peacekeeping operations" [S/2001/394]. The report examined guidelines for an exit strategy and the role of the Council and other principal organs in that regard.

The Secretary-General said that, more than once during the preceding 10 years, the United Nations had withdrawn a peacekeeping operation, or dramatically altered its mandate, only to see the situation remain unstable or sink into renewed violence. The central issue was what factors the Council should assess in deciding to launch, close or significantly alter a UN peacekeeping operation. Discussions on whether to

"exit" or significantly alter an operation might be prompted by three circumstances: the successful completion of the mandate, failure or partial success.

In terms of the completion of a mandate, the Secretary-General stated that the ultimate purpose of a peacekeeping operation was the achievement of a sustainable peace, both internationally, through a mutually agreed settlement, and domestically, when the natural conflicts of society could be resolved peacefully through the exercise of State sovereignty, and warring parties helped to move their political and economic struggles from the battlefield into an institutional framework where a settlement process could be engaged. To facilitate such a transition, a mission's mandate should include peacebuilding, incorporating such elements as institution-building and the promotion of good governance and the rule of law. Related to the success of the transition was the availability of resources to implement the mandate and address critical elements of the programme, such as re-establishing civil administration and basic civil infrastructure, and effective disarmament, demobilization and reintegration.

The UN system had recently identified three key objectives whose fulfilment had often brought about successful, comprehensive peacebuilding: consolidating internal and external security; strengthening political institutions and good governance; and promoting economic and social rehabilitation and transformation. A successful exit depended on a collaborative and inclusive UN system and the effectiveness of other international actors, including the international financial institutions and NGOs. A carefully planned exit was also essential so that the gains made during a peacekeeping deployment could be sustained. Withdrawal of a large operation could have a highly visible, negative effect on mission support businesses and local mission staff. However, such a comprehensive exit strategy was not always possible in the short run, since there were occasions when the most that could be hoped for was to establish a stabilizing presence based on a limited agreement. Even when a mandate had been successfully completed, the Council might still wish to review the situation to ascertain whether current achievements were sustainable in the wake of a withdrawal, if they could be consolidated in a follow-on mission and if the requisite capacity and resources were assured.

In other cases, the Council might decide on withdrawal in recognition of the fact that failure sometimes occurred because conditions for an orderly transition to post-conflict peacebuilding did not materialize. However, mission closure as a result of the failure of the parties to abide by their agreements did not represent an end to UN and Council responsibility or involvement. When a mission could not be seen through to a successful completion, the focus should be on the alternatives to a UN peace operation. In the past decade, the experiences of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda, one inter-State and the other intra-State but both exiting without a follow-on strategy, had shown that closure could be costly in both financial and human terms.

Between clear-cut success and failure was the ambiguous situation where the Council might consider withdrawing an operation that was making a positive contribution in some respects but was stymied in others. The decision-making process was further complicated where the mission had a less encouraging record and an uncertain outlook, and/or casualties and other costs had exceeded expectations. In such cases, the Council should critically re-evaluate the mission's mandate to determine if a lower profile but open-ended mission was the best alternative. If the decision was to stay the course, was it possible to deter emerging war entrepreneurs or spoilers and what redesigns in the exit strategy might assist a transition to a more stable situation or sustainable peace?

The Secretary-General highlighted the weak link of voluntary funding to support programmes that were not part of a peacekeeping operation per se, but on which its ultimate success depended, as the critical hindrance to the United Nations ability to implement successfully the type of long-term, multiphase mandate that he was suggesting. The Council would have to address that funding gap if it was to enjoy a record of achievement in helping to foster successful peacekeeping exits as well as self-sustaining peace in their aftermath. He also identified the cases of the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (see PART ONE, Chapter V) and East Timor (see PART ONE, Chapter IV), which reflected important differences in circumstances and illustrated the challenges of a successful exit strategy. In Kosovo, no agreement commanding the support of the parties and the international community appeared in sight. In East Timor, the situation was much clearer—the mandate was to prepare East Timor for independence, after which the mission would be closed.

The Secretary-General outlined the roles of the Council and other principal organs and agencies in formulating and implementing those vital decisions, the requirements for designing a strategically informed mandate, including efficient information gathering and analysis, and the conditions necessary for its implementation.

Working Group on Peacekeeping Operations.

The Security Council Working Group on Peacekeeping Operations transmitted in September its second report [S/2001/900], which dealt with its consideration of the issues raised and recommendations made in the Secretary-General's report on exit strategies (see p. 88). The Working Group recommended to the Council a draft statement setting out the agreement and commitment of Council members in decision-making in creating a peacekeeping mandate, changing the mandate of a current mission and closing a mission, and recognizing the importance of achieving a sustainable peace through a UN peace mission.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council President, in a 25 September note [S/2001/905], indicated that Council members, having discussed the Secretary-General's report, recognized the importance of achieving a sustainable peace through a UN peace mission and had indicated their agreement and commitment as follows:

1. The Security Council recalls its resolutions 1327(2000) and 1353(2001), all relevant Council resolutions and all relevant statements of its President, and takes note of the respective roles of the Council, the Secretariat and the General Assembly, including the Council's relationship with troop-contributing countries and the use of Council missions in conflict areas, in formulating and implementing decisions with respect to a United Nations mission.

2. The Council acknowledges that a good exit strategy is facilitated by a good entrance strategy.

3. The Council agrees that it is essential that all relevant parts of the United Nations system, as well as the Government of the host country, be fully engaged during the life of a mission, that clear direction is given and milestones are established that support a comprehensive and integrated approach to peace-building, where peace-building is appropriate, as well as the operation's exit strategy, and to that end encourages the Secretary-General to make recommendations to the Council as appropriate.

4. The Council undertakes to include, as appropriate, peace-building elements in a mission's mandate to support the transition from peacekeeping to post-conflict peace-building, and underlines the importance of necessary coordination with the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council and the relevant funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, as well as the Bretton Woods institutions, particularly in respect of transition from peacekeeping to post-conflict peace-building.

5. The Council recognizes that a more systematic assessment of certain basic factors, including political objectives, strategic analysis, the commitment of parties, the role of regional actors and the availability of resources, in particular troops and equipment, will be important in deciding on the authorization of, making significant changes to, the withdrawal of and the closure and transition of United Nations peacekeeping operations.

6. The Council agrees that a major criterion for the Council's decision on the scaling down or withdrawal of a peacekeeping operation is the successful completion of its mandate, resulting in the establishment of a requisite political and security environment conducive to durable peace and/or a follow-on post-conflict peace-building process.

7. The Council welcomes the expressed commitment of the Secretary-General to providing the best, most pertinent information available to the Secretariat, including that obtained through the early dispatch of fact-finding and technical surveys to potential mission areas.

8. The Council reiterates that the Secretary-General should possess the capacity for efficient information-gathering and analysis to provide credible, objective analyses and sound advice to support the Council's deliberations during mandate formation, periodic or episodic review of a mandate and consideration of withdrawal of a mission.

9. The Council supports the expressed intention of the Secretary-General to include comprehensive disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes in his plans for future peacekeeping operations, as appropriate, so that the Council can consider, on a case-by-case basis, the inclusion of aspects of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration in the operations' mandates, and encourages the Secretary-General to do so.

10. The Council reiterates its commitment contained in its resolution 1353(2001) to strengthen its partnership with troop-contributing countries, in particular the role of troop-contributing countries in the process of mandate formation, review and termination, taking into account the views of troop-contributing countries for the extension of co-operation between them and the Council.

11. The Council undertakes to give consideration in its deliberations on the launch, review, closure or significant alteration of the mandate of a peacekeeping operation to the questions presented by the Secretary-General in his report, and also to the observations made by Member States during the debate of the Council on 15 November 2000.

12. The Council, pursuant to Chapter VIII of the Charter, and without compromising the Security Council's prerogative to act, undertakes to encourage cooperation with regional organizations, where appropriate, and stresses, in particular, that the views of those who will be responsible for the implementation of a peace agreement should be considered during the negotiation phase, that the main actors in negotiations should assess realistically the capacity and comparative advantage of different implementing bodies and that the lines of reporting and the division of labour must be unambiguous, and recognizes the importance of regional organizations that contribute to peacekeeping operations, seeking to develop their capacity to provide peacekeeping operations not only with military peacekeepers, but also with other relevant personnel, such as police and judicial or penal experts, and calls upon the international community to extend support in that regard.

13. The Council recognizes that the timely contribution and deployment of personnel, material and funds is vital to the successful implementation of a mission and to the withdrawal of a mission on the basis of an accomplished mandate, agrees to undertake a major role in accordance with its Charter responsibilities in consolidating support for the mission among the parties, regional actors, troop-contributing countries and Member States, and reiterates that the support and political will of each can be crucial to a mission's ultimate success.

Operations in 2001

On 1 January, 15 UN peacekeeping operations were in place—4 in Africa, 3 in Asia, 5 in Europe and 3 in the Middle East. That number remained unchanged as no missions were launched or terminated during the year.

Africa

In Africa, the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) was twice extended by the Security Council for six months, the second time to 31 March 2002. In November, the Security Council supported the launching of phase III of the deployment of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC), especially in the east of the country, in conformity with its new concept of operation. The United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) continued to monitor the ceasefire and otherwise conduct peacekeeping tasks. In November, the Council extended its mandate until 28 February 2002. It also extended the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE) until 15 March 2002.

Asia

In Asia, the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM) continued to monitor the demilitarized zone along the border between the two countries. In October, the Security Council concurred with the Secretary-General's recommendation to maintain the mission and to review the question of its continuation or termination by April 2002. The United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan (UNMOGIP) remained in place to monitor the ceasefire in Jammu and Kashmir. In January, the Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET) until 31 January 2002. In October, it noted that UNTAET's mandate was being extended until independence and endorsed a plan for adjusting its size and configuration in the months prior to independence and for a reduced UN integrated mission in the post-independence period.

Europe

In Europe, the Security Council extended the mandates of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG) until 31 January 2002; the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP) until 15 January 2002; the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) until 15 June 2002; and the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH), including the International Police Task Force (IPTF), until 21 June 2002.

The United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK), Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, remained in place.

Middle East

Three long-standing operations continued in the Middle East: the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO) continued to observe the truce in Palestine; the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), whose mandate was extended until 31 January 2002 under new reconfiguration and deployment arrangements; and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF), whose mandate was renewed until 31 May 2002.

Roster of 2001 operations

UNTSO

United Nations Truce Supervision Organization
Established: June 1948.

Mandate: To assist in supervising the observance of the truce in Palestine.

Strength as at December 2001: 152 military observers.

UNMOGIP

United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan

Established: January 1949.

Mandate: To supervise the ceasefire between India and Pakistan in Jammu and Kashmir.

Strength as at December 2001: 45 military observers.

UNFICYP

United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus
Established: March 1964.

Mandate: To prevent the recurrence of fighting between the two Cypriot communities.

Strength as at December 2001: 1,196 troops, 35 civilian police.

UNDOF

United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

Established: June 1974.

Mandate: To supervise the ceasefire between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic and the disengagement of Israeli and Syrian forces in the Golan Heights.

Strength as at December 2001: 1,036 troops.

UNIFIL

United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon

Established: March 1978.

Mandate: To restore peace and security and assist the Lebanese Government in ensuring the return of its effective authority in the area.

Strength as at December 2001: 3,639 troops.

UNIKOM

United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

Established: April 1991.

Mandate: To monitor the demilitarized zone along the border between Iraq and Kuwait.

Strength as at December 2001: 906 troops, 193 military observers.

MINURSO

United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara

Established: April 1991.

Mandate: To monitor and verify the implementation of a settlement plan for Western Sahara and assist in the holding of a referendum in the Territory.

Strength as at December 2001: 27 troops, 204 military observers, 22 civilian police.

UNOMIG

United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia
Established: August 1993.

Mandate: To verify compliance with a ceasefire agreement between the parties to the conflict in Georgia and investigate ceasefire violations; expanded in 1994 to include monitoring the implementation of an agreement on a ceasefire and separation of forces and observing the operation of a multinational peacekeeping force.

Strength as at December 2001: 106 military observers.

UNMIBH

United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (including the International Police Task Force (IPTF))

Established: December 1995.

Mandate: To monitor and facilitate law enforcement activities in Bosnia and Herzegovina, train and assist law enforcement personnel in carrying out their responsibilities, advise government authorities on the organization of civilian law enforcement agencies and assess threats to public order and the agencies' capability to deal with such threats.

Strength as at December 2001: 1,674 civilian police, 4 military observers.

UNMOP

United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka

Established: January 1996.

Mandate: To monitor the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula.

Strength as at December 2001: 27 military observers.

UNMIK

United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo

Established: June 1999.

Mandate: To promote, among other things, the establishment of substantial autonomy and self-government in Kosovo, perform basic civilian administrative functions, organize and oversee the development of provisional institutions, facilitate a political process to determine Kosovo's future status, support reconstruction of key infrastructure, maintain civil law and order, protect human rights and assure the return of refugees and displaced persons.

Strength as at December 2001: 4,519 civilian police, 37 military observers.

UNTAET

United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor

Established: October 1999.

Mandate: To provide security and maintain law and order, establish an effective administration, assist in the development of civil and social services, ensure the coordination and delivery of humanitarian, rehabilitation and development assistance, support capacity-building for self-government and assist in the establishment of conditions for sustainable development.

Strength as at December 2001: 7,110 troops, 1,316 civilian police, 102 military observers.

UNAMSIL

United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone

Established: October 1999.

Mandate: To cooperate with the Government of Sierra Leone and other parties in the implementation of the Peace Agreement signed in Lomé, Togo, on 7 July 1999, including, among other things, to assist in the implementation of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration plan, monitor adherence to the ceasefire agreement of 18 May 1999 and facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance.

Strength as at December 2001: 17,105 troops, 261 military observers, 54 civilian police.

MONUC

United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo

Established: November 1999.

Mandate: To establish contacts with the signatories to the Ceasefire Agreement, provide technical assistance in implementation of the Agreement, provide information on security conditions, plan for the observation of the ceasefire, facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance and assist in the protection of human rights.

Strength as at December 2001: 2,924 troops, 449 military observers, 13 civilian police.

UNMEE

United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea

Established: July 2000.

Mandate: To establish and put into operation the mechanism for verifying the cessation of hostilities and prepare for the establishment of the Military Coordination Commission.

Strength as at December 2001: 3,722 troops, 217 military observers.

Financial and administrative aspects of peacekeeping operations

Financing

Expenditures for peacekeeping activities amounted to $2,378.7 million for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, compared to $1,756.8 million during the previous 12-month period. The increase of $621.9 million, or 35.4 per cent, was mainly the result of the start-up mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea, expanded operations in Sierra Leone and the Democratic Republic of the Congo and a full year of operations in East Timor.

The financial situation of UN peacekeeping operations continued to be affected by serious cash shortages, necessitating borrowing from and among peacekeeping funds, while substantial amounts of obligations for reimbursement to Member States for troop costs and contingent-owned equipment remained unpaid.

As at 30 June 2001, total unpaid assessed contributions for peacekeeping operations were $2,352.3 million, up from $2,128.9 million in the previous period. Available cash for all operations totalled $979.8 million, while total liabilities were twice as much at $2,247.1 million.

Notes of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/233 A [YUN 1994, p. 1338], the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly's Fifth Committee a February note [A/C.5/55/37] updating the budgetary information on requirements for all peacekeeping operations from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 and reflecting the appropriations provided to date by the Assembly for those operations for that period, inclusive of requirements for the peacekeeping support account and the United Nations Logistics Base in Brindisi (UNLB). The updated level of requirements totalled $2.4 billion gross, compared to the initial estimate of $2,072,562,000 [YUN 2000, p. 101].

In April [A/55/874], the Secretary-General submitted estimated gross budgetary requirements for seven missions (MINURSO, UNDOF, UNFICYP, UNIKOM, UNMIBH, UNMIK and UNOMIG) whose budgets had been submitted for the period 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002 in the amount of $799,398,000, and gross estimates for five missions (UNIFIL, UNAMSIL, UNMEE, UNTAET and MONUC) whose budgets for the same period would be submitted to the Assembly's fifty-sixth session amounting to $1,633,416,900, excluding support account requirements (see p. 94) and requirements for UNLB (see p. 104). The Secretariat estimated that the total overall requirements would probably be around $2.6 billion, but could be significantly higher should the Security Council approve large-scale deployment contingents for MONUC.

Financial performance and proposed budgets

In April [A/55/874], ACABQ considered the financial performance reports for the period 1 July 1999 to 20 June 2000 and the proposed budgets for the period 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002 of UNDOF, UNIKOM, UNFICYP, UNOMIG, UNMIBH (which included UNMOP and liaison offices in Belgrade and Zagreb), UNMIK, MINURSO and UNLB. It also considered the financial performance reports for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 of the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti (MIPONUH) and the reports on the final disposition of the assets of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti and MIPONUH; and of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP).

ACABQ further considered the financial performance reports for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola and MINURCA; the financial performance reports for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 and the revised budgets for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 of UNIFIL and UNAMSIL; the financial performance reports for the period 1 January to 31 December 2000 of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, UNPREDEP and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters; the proposed budget for the establishment of UNMEE for the period 31 July 2000 to 30 June 2001; and the report of the Board of Auditors to the General Assembly on the accounts of UN peacekeeping operations for the period ended 30 June 2000 [A/55/878].

ACABQ was informed by the United Nations Controller that the initial maintenance budgets for UNIFIL, UNMEE, UNAMSIL, UNTAET and MONUC for the period 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, to be submitted to the Assembly's resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session, would probably have to be recosted and resubmitted. The financial performance report for UNTAET for 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 and the budgets for UNIFIL, UNMEE, UNAMSIL and UNTAET for 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002 would be submitted to the Assembly's fifty-sixth (2001) session. ACABQ recommended that, pending submission of the budgets for those missions to its fifty-sixth session, the Assembly's resumed fifty-fifth session should approve, as a bridging action, commitment authority with assessment for the period 1 July to 31 December 2001 as follows: UNIFIL, $99,548,960 gross ($97,558,500 net) based on a revised budget of $199,097,919 gross ($195,117,090 net) for 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001; UNMEE, $90 million gross ($88,933,450 net) based on an authorized budget of $180 million gross ($177,866,900 net); UNAMSIL, $275 million gross ($273,375,000 net) based on a revised budget of $550 million gross ($546,750,000 net), as approved by General Assembly resolution 55/251 B (see p. 173); and UNTAET, $282 million gross ($273,025,800 net) based on a budget of $563 million gross ($546,051,600 net), as approved by Assembly resolution 55/228 A [YUN 2000, p. 291].

ACABQ, while acknowledging that the exigencies that led to the Secretary-General's proposals for bridging action were unavoidable, observed that their simultaneous application during the same budgetary period placed a considerable strain on the system for considering and approving performance reports and budgets for peacekeeping operations, including the Assembly's programme of work. It stressed the importance of not letting those exceptions affect the discipline required to maintain the system.

ACABQ recommended that a summary of actions taken to implement the relevant recommendations of the internal and external oversight bodies be annexed to the performance reports of peacekeeping operations and that the Secretariat study the process with respect to memorandums of understanding on arrangements for contingent-owned equipment and identify the reasons for delays.

ACABQ, having reviewed UNAMSIL's estimates, concluded that an effective procedure should be put in place for ascertaining the capacity of TCCs to meet the requirements for wet-lease and self-sustainment provisions of contingent-owned equipment arrangements and for ensuring consistent implementation of the standards set out in the contingent-owned equipment manual. It was concerned that some TCCs might be experiencing difficulties in meeting the required level of equipment and self-sustainment, and encouraged the Secretary-General to review the wet-lease arrangements and the anticipated efficiency gains.

With regard to civilian personnel, ACABQ asked that expenditures on staff security should be clearly identified in performance reports and budgets of all peacekeeping operations. It reiterated its request that the Secretary-General analyse the problems of staff recruitment and retention, and recommended that personnel contracts be issued to staff for periods longer than a mission's mandate, with proper safeguards should the mandate not be renewed. Staff travel expenditures should be justified and explained in performance reports and proposed budget estimates.

ACABQ believed that there was a need for close cooperation with United Nations Volunteers at early mission stages, especially in planning. Volunteers should not, however, be a cheap labour source for peacekeeping operations. Their contribution in any mission operation should be recognized and they should be given the same functional access to services in the mission area as UN international staff.

As to procurement and inventory management, ACABQ expressed concern about weaknesses in inventory management and asset control and stressed that steps should be taken to ensure that adequate qualified staff were assigned, trained and retained to perform procurement and inventory management functions in field missions. The restructuring of logistics units to report directly to the mission civilian component should be addressed as a matter of urgency in all peacekeeping operations, with a view to introducing appropriate changes. Future peacekeeping budget submissions should justify significant investments ($1 million and above) in non-UN-owned premises.

With regard to the short- and long-term solutions to problems relating to the Secretariat's capacity to handle mission liquidation and to eliminate the backlog in areas such as claims and information and personnel management support services, ACABQ recommended that they should be addressed and that future requests for resources for mission liquidation be accompanied by a detailed plan, including a timetable for completion. Future transfers of assets to a host Government under "temporary possession" arrangements should be submitted to ACABQ for review prior to finalization. The Assembly should approve any disposition of mission assets free of charge to Governments, and the sale of equipment on credit to a Member State should be discouraged.

ACABQ recommended that experience gained in some missions regarding public information programmes should be examined to determine its applicability to other missions. An examination should be conducted as to whether maximum use was being made of existing UN facilities and resources and the possibility of using local public information facilities and reported on in the next budget submission.

ACABQ believed that there should be better planning for training personnel in mission areas and the subjects covered in training programmes and their costs should be clearly stated in programme budgets.

Peacekeeping support account

The Secretary-General, in March [A/55/861], submitted the financial performance report of the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000. Of the revised total resources of $38,388,700 for post and non-post requirements authorized by General Assembly resolutions 53/12 B [YUN 1999, p. 64] and 54/243 B [YUN 2000, p. 106], expenditures amounted to $38,360,800, resulting in an unutilized balance of $27,900.

Also in March [A/55/862], in response to Assembly resolution 54/243 B, the Secretary-General submitted support account resource requirements for the period 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, estimated at $73,645,500 gross ($64,361,800 net), which provided for a staffing establishment of 562 posts and related non-post costs. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly approve that amount, as well as the $3,501,600 originally authorized by resolution 54/243 B, and that the amount of $1,300,900, comprising the unencumbered balance from the 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 period, plus interest and miscellaneous income be applied to the 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002 period. The total amount of $75,846,200 gross ($66,562,500 net) would be prorated among the individual peacekeeping operation budgets.

In April [A/55/882], ACABQ recommended that the Assembly approve the Secretary-General's recommendations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 June [meeting 103], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/534/Add.2], adopted resolution 55/271 without vote [agenda item 153 (a)].

Support account for peacekeeping operations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/258 of 3 May 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 48/226 A of 23 December 1993, 48/226 B of 5 April 1994, 48/226 C of 29 July 1994, 49/250 of 20 July 1995, 50/11 of 2 November 1995, 50/221 A of 11 April 1996, 50/221 B of 7 June 1996, 51/226 of 3 April 1997, 51/239 A of 17 June 1997, 51/239 B and 51/243 of 15 September 1997, 52/220 of 22 December 1997, 52/234 and 52/248 of 26 June 1998, 53/12 A of 26 October 1998, 53/208 B of 18 December 1998, 53/12 B of 8 June 1999, 54/243 A of 23 December 1999, 54/243 B of 15 June 2000 and 55/238 of 23 December 2000 and its decisions 48/489 of 8 July 1994, 49/469 of 23 December 1994 and 50/473 of 23 December 1995,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financial performance of the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, his report on the budget for the support account for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002 and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Reaffirming the need to continue to improve the administrative and financial management of peacekeeping operations,

Recognizing the need for adequate support during all phases of peacekeeping operations, including the liquidation and termination phases,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the financial performance of the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 and of his report on the budget for the support account for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002;

2. Recognizes the importance of the United Nations being able to respond and deploy rapidly a peacekeeping operation upon the adoption of a Security Council mandate;

3. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on

Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

4. Affirms the need for adequate funding for the backstopping of peacekeeping operations;

5. Reaffirms that the expenses of the Organization, including the backstopping of peacekeeping operations, shall be borne by Member States and, to that effect, that the Secretary-General should request adequate funding to maintain the capacity of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat;

6. Decides to maintain for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002 the funding mechanism for the support account used in the current period, from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, as approved in paragraph 3 of its resolution 50/221 B;

7. Also decides to continue the five hundred and sixty-two support account-funded temporary posts;

8. Reaffirms the need for the Secretary-General to ensure that delegation of authority to the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and field missions is in strict compliance with relevant resolutions and decisions, as well as relevant rules and procedures of the General Assembly on this matter;

9. Notes the intention of the Secretary-General to submit revised resource requirements for the support account prior to the opening of the fifty-sixth session of the General Assembly;

10. Notes with appreciation the intention of the Secretary-General, as reflected in paragraph 12 of the report of the Advisory Committee, to introduce changes in the presentation of the support account budget document in conformity with General Assembly resolution 55/231 of 23 December 2000 on results-based budgeting;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure a more consistent and balanced presentation of proposals for all the departments;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General, as a matter of urgency, to address the need for streamlining the contingent-owned equipment procedures, including processing claims and memoranda of understanding, and to strengthen the Finance Management and Support Service in the area of claims processing, and to submit to the General Assembly, at its fifty-sixth session, concrete remedial proposals to address adequately the concerns raised in paragraph 15 of the report of the Advisory Committee;

13. Decides to appropriate the commitment authority of 3,501,600 United States dollars approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 54/243 A;

14. Approves the support account post and non-post requirements in the amount of 73,645,500 dollars gross (64,361,800 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002;

15. Decides to apply the unencumbered balance of 1,300,900 dollars in respect of the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, inclusive of 1,273,000 dollars in miscellaneous and interest income, and to prorate the balance of 75,846,200 dollars gross (66,562,500 dollars net) among the individual active peacekeeping operation budgets, to meet the resources required for the support account for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002.

In December [A/C.5/56/34], the Secretary-General submitted additional support account requirements totalling $16,103,750 gross ($14,889,500 net) in respect of the budgets of UNIFIL, UNAMSIL, UNMEE, UNTAET and MONUC for the 12-month period 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, which were discussed by the Assembly during its consideration of the implementation of the recommendations of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations (see p. 74).

Appropriations

In May [A/C.5/55/43], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly initial 2001/02 appropriations and commitment authorities with assessment, including the support account for peacekeeping operations and UNLB, totalling $1,772,825,760 gross ($1,699,425,550 net).

In August [A/C.5/55/48], the Secretary-General submitted updated information on the total budgetary requirements for peacekeeping operations for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 amounting to $2.63 billion; and for the period 1 July 2001 to June 2002 totalling $1.77 billion. However, in the light of the revised budgets under preparation for UNIFIL, UNAMSIL, UNMEE, UNTAET, MONUC and UNMIK and for the support account and UNLB, the overall level of budgetary requirements for active peacekeeping missions was likely to be in excess of $3 billion. Also included in the Secretary-General's note were indicative consolidated summary information on amounts to be apportioned among Member States for the period 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002 amounting to $1,275,143,380 gross ($1,223,471,543 net) and unencumbered balances to be credited to Member States for closed peacekeeping operations amounting to $4,826,222 gross ($4,760,450 net).

Apportionment of costs

In March [A/C.5/55/38], the Secretary-General, following numerous queries from Member States regarding changes in the system for the apportionment of peacekeeping expenses among Member States set out in resolutions 55/235 [YUN 2000 p. 102] and 55/236 [ibid., p. 104], provided information to Member States on the implementation of those resolutions based on the Secretariat's understanding of their provisions. Annexed to the report (annex II) was a tabulated assignment of contribution levels, voluntary movements and transitional phasing for the period 1 July 2001 to 31 December 2003. Another annex (annex III) provided the effective rates of assessment for peacekeeping operations for the same period, based on the information contained in annex II and the regular budget scale of assessments for 2001-2003 set out in resolution 55/5 B [ibid., p. 1311].

It was the Secretariat's understanding that the new structure of 10 levels (A to J) for determining rates of assessment from July 2001 would be reviewed by the Assembly in 2009. Regarding the triennial updating of the composition of those levels, in conjunction with the reviews of the regular budget scale of assessments, the Secretary-General would inform the Assembly in 2003 and 2006 of the composition of the 10 levels during the periods 2004-2006 and 2007-2009, respectively. After 2009, it would presumably be considered in the context of the Assembly's review of the structure of the levels. Movement between categories would be based on Member States' per capita gross national product (GNP) based on the same statistical data used in preparing the regular budget scale of assessments. Subject to the provisions of resolutions 55/5 B and 55/5 C [YUN 2000, p. 1314], the scale of assessments for the 2004-2006 regular budget period would be based on the average of the results of machine scales using base periods of six (1996-2001) and three (1999-2001) years.

For 2001-2003, the Assembly had decided that the average used for determining the composition of the 10 levels should be that for the six-year (1993-1998) base period. In updating the composition of those levels, average per capita GNP figures for the six-year (1996-2001) base period for the regular budget scale of assessments for the period 2004-2006 should also be used.

After 2001-2003, the Assembly had stated that two-year transition periods would apply to countries moving up by two levels and three-year transition periods would apply to countries moving up by three levels or more, while transitions specified for 2001-2003 would occur in equal increments over the transition period. It was the Secretariat's understanding that any transitional measures applied for 2004-2006 would also occur in equal annual increments, and changes involving a two-year transition would involve an increase of 50 per cent of the change in the percentage of the respective regular budget rates payable by each of the Member States concerned from 1 January to 31 December 2004, and a second 50 per cent from 1 January 2005 onwards. For those moving up by three levels or more, the transitional three-year phasing would involve equal instalments of one third of the respective regular budget rates payable from 1 January to 31 December 2004, an additional one third from 1 January to 31 December 2005 and a final one third from 1 January 2006 onwards.

The Assembly had listed the Member States assigned to level C for 2001-2003 in resolution 55/235 [YUN 2000, p. 102] but did not specify parameters for their inclusion in that level. Therefore, it was the Secretariat's understanding that, in updating the composition of the 10 levels used in 2001-2003 for 2004-2006 and for 2007-2009, the countries listed under level C would remain at that level until the 2009 review of the structure of levels, subject to any subsequent decisions by the Assembly or voluntary movements to level B by any of the countries concerned.

The Secretariat also understood that, notwithstanding the average per capita GNP of Hungary and the Republic of Korea for the six-year (1996-2001) base period used for the regular budget scale of assessments for 2004-2006, the transitional periods would continue to 1 January 2005 in the case of the Republic of Korea, and to 1 July 2005 in the case of Hungary.

With regard to the voluntary upward movements, the Assembly had welcomed Turkey's commitment to move to level H (paying 30 per cent of its regular budget rate of assessment) from 1 July 2001 until 2002, and to level F for the remainder of the scale period. It was therefore the Secretariat's understanding that, when the Secretary-General updated the composition of levels and informed the Assembly thereon at its fifty-eighth (2003) session, Turkey would revert to the level corresponding to its average per capita GNP for the six-year (1996-2001) base period used for the regular budget scale of assessments for the period 2004-2006. That would be subject to any further voluntary decision by its Government to be assessed at a higher level. The position with regard to the assessment rates for 2007-2009 would depend on decisions made with respect to the period 2004-2006.

The upward movement of the Republic of Korea and the voluntary upward movement of other Member States were not similarly time-limited. The Secretariat understood that, in updating the composition of the 10 levels in 2003 and 2006, the Secretary-General should include those countries at their voluntarily established levels for 2001-2003 unless their revised levels would otherwise be higher, or unless they wished to revert to a lower level for which they were eligible in the new scale period (2004-2006 or 2005-2007). As regards the current scale period (2001-2003), it was the Secretariat's understanding that resolution 55/235 did not provide for reversal of a voluntary upward movement during a scale period, except by specific decision of the Assembly.

rate higher at any time during the scale period, it was the Secretariat's understanding that, unless any such new commitments were time-limited, they would be considered open-ended, that the provisions of paragraph 6 of resolution 55/236 [YUN 2000, p. 104] related specifically to the current scale period (2001-2003), and that voluntary movements might still be considered by the Assembly in the context of the triennial updating of the composition of the levels. The Assembly might also make additional decisions on changes in the level of specific Member States at any time.

In a May addendum [A/C.5/55/38/Add.1], the Secretary-General recalled that the Assembly, in resolution 55/253 (see p. 773), had endorsed the Economic and Social Council recommendations that Senegal be added to the list of least developed countries (LDCs) and that consideration of the graduation of Maldives from that list be deferred. In accordance with the provisions of resolution 55/235, when the composition of the levels was updated in 2003 for the 2004-2006 triennium, Senegal would move to level J (LDCs), together with any other Member State that might be added to the list of LDCs by 2003. Similarly, any Member State graduating from the list during that same period would move up from level J.

The Secretary-General observed that, had Senegal been on the list of LDCs prior to the adoption of resolution 55/235, its effective rate of assessment for peacekeeping during the period 1 July 2001 to 31 December 2003 would have been 0.0005 per cent, rather than 0.0010 per cent, and the share of Member States in level A would have been higher as a result by 0.0005 per cent.

The Fifth Committee considered the Secretary-General's reports in May and agreed that no action should be taken on them [A/55/712/Add.1]. By decision 55/487 of 14 June, the Assembly took note of the Fifth Committee's report.

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the UN peacekeeping operations would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464) and that the Fifth Committee would continue consideration of the item at that session (decision 56/458).

Accounts and auditing

At its resumed fifty-fifth session, the General Assembly considered the financial report and audited financial statements for UN peacekeeping operations for the 12-month period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 [A/55/5, vol. II], the Secretary-General's March report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors [A/55/380/Add.2] and the related report of ACABQ [A/55/878].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 June [meeting 103], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/689/Add.2], adopted resolution 55/220 C without vote [agenda item 115].

Financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors

The General Assembly,

Having considered the financial report and audited financial statements for the twelve-month period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 and the report of the Board of Auditors on United Nations peacekeeping operations, the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the first report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors concerning United Nations peacekeeping operations for that period,

1. Accepts the audited financial statements on the United Nations peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000;

2. Endorses the recommendations of the Board of Auditors contained in its report;

3. Takes note of the observations, and endorses the recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

4. Also takes note of the first report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors concerning United Nations peacekeeping operations for the financial period ending 30 June 2000;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the use of objective-setting by the administrations of peacekeeping missions and also to ensure that the development and attainment of such objectives are reported on to the General Assembly through the financial performance reports of the missions;

6. Requests the Board of Auditors to monitor the process of objective-setting by missions and the measurement of their use, whether effective or otherwise, and to report thereon to the General Assembly in its annual audit report on the financial statements of peacekeeping missions;

7. Notes with concern the late issuance of the financial report and audited financial statements for the twelve-month period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 and the report of the Board of Auditors on United Nations peacekeeping operations, and requests the Board of Auditors and the Secretary-General to work together to implement ways to ensure its timely and simultaneous issuance in all six official languages of the United Nations, including streamlining the format and content of the report as well as the related financial information contained in the performance reports.

Resident auditors at peacekeeping missions

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 54/241 A [YUN 1999, p. 168], the Secretary-

General submitted a January report on experiences learned from the use of resident auditors at peacekeeping missions [A/55/735]. He stated that the main concept behind resident auditors—OIOS staff members deployed to missions but reporting to the OIOS Director, Audit and Management Consulting Division—was that their continuous physical presence in peacekeeping missions would provide reasonable assurance to management that established internal controls were functioning effectively. They would also be an additional deterrent against mismanagement, waste, abuse or fraud in high-risk missions; enable OIOS to gain more in-depth knowledge of mission operations and be better able to react promptly to “audit-worthy” events; and facilitate the OIOS process for providing management advice.

OIOS and DPKO agreed that the practice had been useful and should be continued. During 1994 to 1999, 15 resident auditors were deployed in 10 missions, serving a total of 209 staff-months and issuing more than 1,500 recommendations, 80 per cent of which were implemented. Other corrective actions included the recovery of $9.5 million in fraud-related and other overpayments and the adoption of cost-saving or income-enhancement measures amounting to $9.3 million, the installation of stronger internal controls and other improvements to ensure the quality of administrative and logistical support operations and the efficient and effective use of mission resources.

However, the use of resident auditors presented a number of challenges, including recruiting qualified candidates; ensuring adequate training and exposure to best auditing practices; maintaining an effective working relationship with mission management without compromising their independence; and assisting and motivating the resident auditors to perform effectively.

To ensure adequate internal audit coverage, ACABQ had endorsed the OIOS recommendation that a resident auditor at the P-4 or P-3 level be assigned for each $100 million of annual budgeted expenditure and, for those missions with annual budgets exceeding $200 million, that an auditing assistant at the G-6 or G-7 level be assigned also. OIOS was also proposing that the resident audit teams in large missions, namely, UNMIK and UNAMSIL, be headed by resident auditors at the P-5 level.

As at 31 December 2000, 13 resident auditor posts and three auditing assistant posts had been authorized in six peacekeeping missions (UNMIK, UNAMSIL, MONUC, UNMIBH, UNTAET and UNMEE). If the OIOS formula were fully implemented, it would result in: the inclusion of one additional mission (UNIFIL) under the resident auditor arrangement; and the establishment of up to five additional resident auditor posts at the P-5, P-4 or P-3 level and one auditing assistant post at the G-7 or G-6 level. The recruitment and deployment of additional resident auditors would be made only after OIOS had made a detailed assessment of the risks and corresponding audit requirements pertaining to each affected mission.

The work of the resident auditors had become even more important in the light of the implementation of the recommendations of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations (see p. 71), which provided for greater delegation of administrative authority to peacekeeping missions.

The Secretary-General said that the use of OIOS resident auditors in peacekeeping missions should be strengthened, and endorsed the formula for determining their number and salary levels.

ACABQ report. In March [A/55/828], ACABQ said that, in its report on the report of the Board of Auditors on the financial statements for UN peacekeeping operations for the period ended 30 June 2000 [A/55/878], it had requested the Board, in its next submission, to include information on the adequacy of the resident audit function in the missions to be audited. ACABQ was of the opinion that a proper selection process for all eligible candidates and a strict definition of functions were essential. It also advised that other challenges could be surmounted by rotating resident auditors among different missions and at Headquarters at regular intervals and by strengthening the synergy of communication and coordination between the field and Headquarters.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 June [meeting 103], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/534/Add.2], adopted resolution 55/273 without vote [agenda item 153 (a)].

Experiences learned from the use of resident auditors at peacekeeping missions

Recalling paragraph 9 of its resolution 54/241 A of 23 December 1999,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on experiences learned from the use of resident auditors at peacekeeping missions and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Endorses the observations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

Reimbursement issues

Equipment

Report of post-Phase V Working Group. The post-Phase V Working Group on reformed procedures for determining reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment (15-26 January) [A/C.5/55/39 & Corr.1] reviewed the reimbursement rates for contingent-owned equipment and the methodology for review of the troop cost rates (see p. 100). Convened in response to General Assembly resolutions 54/19 B [YUN 2000, p. 109] and 55/229 [ibid., p. 108], the Working Group examined issues related to major equipment, self-sustainment, medical support services, troop costs and other issues, including inland transport costs and updating the model memorandum of understanding.

The Working Group validated the methodology and agreed on revised reimbursement rates for major equipment and self-sustainment; rates for some special cases and new categories of major equipment; generic reimbursement for painting and repainting of major equipment; and a new rate for level II services provided by level III medical facilities. It also adopted principles regarding liability for damage to major equipment used by one country and owned by another; a policy for reimbursing inland transportation claims; and a modular approach to reimbursement of medical facilities. In addition, it reviewed self-sustainment categories and standards; and the provision of level I medical support, medical aspects contained in the contingent-owned equipment manual and the provision of blood and blood products. The Working Group proposed options on troop costs reimbursement for the consideration of the Assembly (see p. 100).

Report of Secretary-General. In a March report [A/55/815], the Secretary-General said that, while recognizing that the post-Phase V Working Group could not arrive at a consensus on some issues, such as the review of the policy on vaccination costs and pre- and post-deployment examinations, he welcomed its achievements. The enhanced procedures and policies developed for major equipment, self-sustainment and medical support services would greatly facilitate the reimbursement of troop contributors for their contingent-owned equipment.

The Secretary-General agreed with the Working Group's recommendations and recommended that the Assembly: adopt a revised methodology of applying the statistical tool of standard deviation to the indices for generic categories to all major equipment and self-sustainment categories listed in the reports of the Phase II and Phase III Working Groups [YUN 1995, p. 311]; increase reimbursement rates using a maximum standard deviation of 25 per cent for major equipment and self-sustainment, as set out in annexes I.A and I.I.C of the Working Group's report; adopt the reimbursement rates for new categories of major equipment contained in annex I.B; request the United Nations to conduct training to ensure users were qualified to operate unique major equipment belonging to other countries; hold the user country responsible for reimbursing the providing country through the United Nations for major equipment damage; and adopt generic rates of reimbursement for painting and repainting of major equipment, as set out in annex I.C.

The Secretary-General also recommended that the Assembly adopt the new procedures on reimbursement of inland transportation costs for major equipment; adopt the amendment of the performance standards for catering, office, electrical, laundry and cleaning, tentage, observation and field defence stores; adopt the definitions for high- and normal-risk missions in the context of medical support; apply the term "force asset" in the context of medical support; adopt the modular approach to reimbursement for medical facilities; approve the occasional provision of level I medical support in an emergency to all members of a UN mission; include suggested changes, as set out in the contingent-owned equipment manual; confirm the rate for the provision of blood and blood products; adopt the new rate for the provision of level II services by level III medical facilities; replace the terms "major medical equipment" and "minor medical equipment" by the term "medical equipment"; adopt a maintenance cost of 0.5 per cent of the generic fair-market value per month for the medical modules in all levels of medical support; endorse the existing medical self-sustainment rates; accept the new methodology for collecting and interpreting medical data; and decide on the modalities for the conduct of a triennial review of rates and standards of related policy issues.

Report of ACABQ. ACABQ, in April [A/55/887], recommended that the Assembly approve the Working Group's recommendations as outlined in the Secretary-General's report.

Troops

The post-Phase V Working Group [A/C.5/55/39 & Corr.1.] considered the methodology for calculating standard rates of reimbursement to troop-contributing States, including ways to produce timely and more representative data, as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 55/229 [YUN 2000, p. 108]. The Working Group considered two proposals: that troop contributors be reimbursed on an equal basis for identical services, on the basis of a standard cost reimbursement formula, and for additional costs incurred for the participation of their troops in UN peacekeeping operations, with some Governments not being fully reimbursed on any standard cost-reimbursement formula; or, as an alternative to the creation of a standard rate, an arbitrary definition of the "cost of a soldier" could serve as a new starting point.

The Working Group recommended that the Assembly consider all aspects of the methodologies proposed. A number of delegations did not believe that establishing a rate was within the Working Group's mandate; the majority of troop-contributing countries supported the adoption of the second option as an interim measure.

In April [A/55/887], ACABQ, pending a comprehensive review of the methodology of reimbursement of troop costs, recommended that the Assembly consider, as an ad hoc arrangement, increasing the standard monthly rates of reimbursement by 4 to 6 per cent, and that a group of qualified individuals study and make proposals on the methodology and the elements on which it was based.

Annexed to ACABQ's report was a table showing the impact of the increase on the reimbursement rates for UN peacekeeping operations. ACABQ recommended that, should the Assembly approve the increases, they should be reflected either in the proposed 2001-2002 budgets for those operations that were yet to be considered by the Assembly or in the performance reports for those peacekeeping budgets already approved.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 June [meeting 103], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/534/Add.2], adopted resolution 55/274 without vote [agenda item 153 (a)].

Reformed procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment and troop costs

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/233 A of 23 December 1994, 50/222 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 E of 17 June 1997, 54/19 A of 29 October 1999 and 54/19 B of 15 June 2000,

Recalling also its decision 55/452 of 23 December 2000, by which the Secretary-General was requested to convene the post-Phase V Working Group,

Having considered the report of the post-Phase V Working Group on reformed procedures for determining reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment, as transmitted by the Chairman of the Working Group to the Chairman of the Fifth Committee, the report of the Secretary-General, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, on the reform of the procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment and troop costs,

1. Endorses the recommendations of the post-Phase V Working Group on reform procedures for determining reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment and troop costs, as outlined in paragraph 17 of the report of the Secretary-General, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

2. Takes note of the recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

3. Affirms the importance of conducting peacekeeping operations with the maximum of efficiency and effectiveness and the need to minimize delays in processing reimbursements to troop- and equipment-contributing countries;

4. Recognizes the fact that delay and uncertainty in reimbursements to troop-contributing countries of troop and contingent-owned equipment costs adversely impact on the ability of current and potential troop-contributing countries to participate effectively in United Nations peacekeeping operations, and in this context emphasizes the need for all Member States to pay their assessed contributions to all peacekeeping operations in full, on time and without preconditions;

5. Stresses that necessary resources should be provided to the Secretariat to allow verifications to be conducted to confirm, before deployment, the preparedness of each potential troop contributor and to ensure that standards continue to be met in accordance with the provisions of the relevant memoranda of understanding;

6. Notes that the evaluation and standardization of United Nations peacekeeping training are currently being developed by the Secretariat in consultation with troop-contributing countries, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on this important issue to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, through the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, for approval of these standards;

7. Recognizes the need for providing specific guidance on the methodology of reimbursement for troop costs;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly for its approval at its resumed fifty-sixth session, taking into account the views expressed by Member States, a methodology for reimbursement for troop costs, covering troops and formed police units, and a questionnaire to be submitted to troop-contributing countries, on the basis of the following elements and guidelines:

(a) Troops, formed civilian police units and staff officers serving in United Nations peacekeeping operations shall be reimbursed on an equal basis for identical services;

(b) Reimbursement for troop costs shall take into consideration, inter alia, general principles such as simplicity, equity, transparency, comprehensiveness, portability, financial control and audit and confirmed delivery of specified services, all of which shall be built into the agreements entered into by the United Nations with the participating States;

(c) The data for this survey shall identify the common and essential additional costs from existing troop levels related to personnel that are incurred by troop-contributing countries due to their participation in United Nations peacekeeping operations, including the establishment of a standard vaccination package and identification of mission-specific vaccines and mission-specific medical and biochemical examinations, using the data available from the World Health Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund, that could be liable for reimbursement;

(d) The methodology shall ensure that no double payment is made with respect to reimbursement between the various levels of self-sustainment, components of troop costs and any other allowances;

9. Decides that a future standard rate of reimbursement for troop costs should be based on new survey data that is representative of the costs incurred by around 60 per cent of countries that have contributed troops to peacekeeping operations;

10. Decides also, on an interim and ad hoc basis, to increase the standard rate of reimbursement for troop costs to troop-contributing countries by 2 per cent, effective 1 July 2001;

11. Decides further that an additional 2 per cent increase, on an interim and ad hoc basis, will be effective as of 1 January 2002, bringing the total increase of the current rate of reimbursement for troop costs to 4 per cent;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to review the practical aspects of the wet-lease, dry-lease and self-sustainment arrangements, including the effectiveness of the contingent-owned equipment procedures to ascertain the capacity of troop-contributing countries to meet the requirements for wet-lease and self-sustainment provisions of the contingent-owned equipment arrangements and the need to ensure the effectiveness of peacekeeping operations, including through a consistent implementation of the standards set out in the contingent-owned equipment manual, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

13. Stresses the need for the Secretariat to meet its obligations, in full, as agreed upon in the memoranda of understanding, in a timely manner, so as to ensure operational effectiveness of the troops in United Nations peacekeeping operations;

14. Takes note of the views of the Secretariat regarding the possibility of reviewing, subject to future experience, the procedures for settlement of liability for damages for major equipment used by one country and owned by another country, and decides that the liability for damage to major equipment used by one country and owned by another country should be based on the relevant provisions of their memoranda of understanding in accordance with the applicable rules and regulations of the United Nations;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to convene in 2004 an open-ended working group of experts, for a period of no less than ten working days, to hold a triennial review of reimbursement rates for contingent-owned equipment and self-sustainment, including medical services;

16. Decides to keep this matter under review at its fifty-sixth session.

In an August note [A/C.5/55/47], the Secretary-General, in the light of the adoption by the Assembly in resolution 55/274 of interim and ad hoc measures for the reimbursement of troop costs, including increasing the standard rate of reimbursement for troop costs to troop-contributing countries by 2 per cent effective 1 July 2001 and an additional 2 per cent increase effective 1 January 2002, submitted a table setting out the applicable revised reimbursement rates effective 1 July 2001 and 1 January 2002.

Special Committee consideration. In its July report [A/55/1024 & Corr.1], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations expressed concern at the delay in reimbursement of troop contributors and the hardships caused for all troop- and equipment-contributing countries, especially developing countries. It encouraged the Secretariat to continue to expedite the processing of all claims and reiterated its request that the Secretary-General present a progress report to the Committee in 2002.

Management of peacekeeping assets

Liquidation

By decision 55/485 of 14 June, the General Assembly noted the OIOS report on the audit of the liquidation of peacekeeping operations [YUN 1999, p. 69].

The Assembly, in resolution 56/246 (see p. 1284) of 24 December, requested the Secretary-General to present an update on the implementation of OIOS recommendations on UN mission liquidation activities, in particular with regard to write-offs, at its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session.

Field assets control system

In March [A/55/845], the Secretary-General reported on progress in the implementation of the field assets control system (FACS), which was developed in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 56] to help manage non-expendable UN-owned equipment in the field. He stated that the Secretariat had successfully prototyped and developed the mission-critical online inventory tracking and management system using Lotus Notes. FACS was successfully implemented in 28 field missions, and over 800 staff members had been trained in its use. There were currently over 500 daily users of the system, which helped to improve the efficiency of peacekeeping inventory management through standardized work flow and inventory management procedures, the explicit definition of roles and responsibilities of organizational units, data issues and the accommodation of areas requiring extra security, such as financial data and purchase value. It also provided each mission with full visibility of its inventory and enabled an informed procurement planning process. FACS provided a detailed transaction history of transferred inventory from a liquidated mission to a current one, thereby enabling online monitoring and follow-up of asset shipments.

In 2000, FACS was used for the first time as the mission-wide, sole repository for the non-expendable inventory data of all field missions. The information available from it had already assisted contingents serving specific missions to identify, analyse and make adjustments to essential financial parameters such as costs of maintenance. A variety of operational support information could be obtained on numerous parameters used to identify bottlenecks and problem areas and to provide feedback for mission preparedness and procurement planning.

In terms of its future development, FACS would be closely integrated with the field expendable and supplies system, which was being designed to control UN-owned expendable property. It would continue to be deployed in all new peacekeeping missions and implemented in missions operated by the Department of Political Affairs. As new systems were developed and deployed, the number of databases requiring management and control was expected to grow significantly, increasing the complexity of managing the entire operation and the load on the data and communications infrastructure. The introduction of knowledge management tools and techniques within the system would be necessary to enable its proper management and control. Consideration was also being given to interfacing FACS with other major systems in the field.

As to resources, the requirement for a long-term decentralized maintenance strategy with centralized planning, coordination and control needed to be taken into account. It was planned to outsource specific maintenance and support activities of the field mission logistics system, while retaining specialist activities, with overall planning and coordination of the whole project. There was also an increasing need to provide for enhanced security measures at operational and database levels and during transmission, and to maintain well-developed contingency plans in the event of failure or disaster.

By decision 55/480 of 14 June, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's report on progress in the implementation of FACS.

ACABQ, in August [A/56/7], in its first report on the proposed 2002-2003 programme budget, welcomed the progress achieved in the implementation of FACS and requested that steps be taken to ensure that qualified personnel were available in all missions to use and maintain the system so as to avoid disruptions resulting from frequent staff rotation. It requested that FACS be reviewed to determine its applicability to the inventory management of the rest of the Organization's assets. Priority should be given to developing a capacity to archive electronically records of mission inventory that had been liquidated. In that regard, closer cooperation should exist between DPKO's Field Administration and Logistics Division and the Archives and Records Management Section in the Office of Central Support Services.

ACABQ reiterated that adequate maintenance should be provided for and that further development should be envisaged to ensure the effectiveness of the system. It trusted that proper use of FACS would result in better control of UN property in peacekeeping missions and minimize the loss of UN inventory assets.

Procurement

The Secretary-General, in his June report [A/55/977] on the implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations and the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations, outlined the current division of labour between DPKO and the Department of Management in procurement (annex J) and presented a flow chart of the entire acquisition and deployment process within which procurement fell (annex K).

The Secretary-General said he had deferred action on the recommendation of the Panel that the Department of Management delegate authority and responsibility for peacekeeping procurement to DPKO on a two-year trial basis, bearing in mind the substantial changes that might be required to the entire logistics support system to meet 30- to 90-day rapid deployment timelines and the impact they would have on existing procurement arrangements and procedures. A number of procedural reviews had already been conducted and others were still in process, and the two Departments had jointly identified areas that could be streamlined and/or improved through the increased delegation of procurement authority to the field, fast-track procurement and other mechanisms to speed response, while ensuring independent monitoring of adherence to financial regulations and rules, through the missions' resident auditors (see p. 98).

With or without increased delegated authority to the field, additional training for procurement officers in the field was required and pilot courses were to begin in September. In order to meet the 30- to 90-day deployment timelines, a major undertaking was required to create a strategic reserve of equipment and materiel and to expand the breadth, scope and numbers of systems contracts. In that connection, the Secretary-General agreed with the consultants' recommendation not to delegate procurement authority from the Department of Management to DPKO. However, since the planning of procurement activities needed to be strengthened, the Secretary-General proposed establishing a Contracts Management Section within the proposed Logistics Support Division to strengthen those capacities. The section would liaise with the Procurement Division and the Office of Mission Support to facilitate smooth procurement-related activities through advance planning and requisition, bidding and selection, including technical evaluation and contract management, and contractors' performance evaluation.

The two Departments needed to work more closely to ensure that the stringent deployment timelines were met, including the out-posting of procurement officers from the Procurement Division to the Office of Mission Support and their participation in coordination meetings within DPKO and visits to the field missions. The Procurement Division should consult more frequently with DPKO when designing system-wide policies and procedures to ensure their flexibility to cater for the unique aspects of peacekeeping procurement. The two Departments should treat as a shared responsibility and priority the building of capacity in the field to assume greater levels of authority for local procurement.

The General Assembly, in resolution 55/247 of 12 April on procurement reform (see p. 1280), requested the Secretary-General to ensure that there was capacity in field missions to perform the procurement functions properly, as well as effective mechanisms at Headquarters for monitoring procurement in the field, including remedial measures to address the problems identified with regard to peacekeeping operations and their standardization.

By decision 55/485 of 14 June, the Assembly noted the OIOS reports on the investigation into the award of a fresh rations contract in a UN peacekeeping mission [YUN 1999, p. 70] and on the audit of the management of service and rations contracts in peacekeeping missions [ibid.].

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, in June [A/55/1024 & Corr.1], welcomed the review of procurement procedures with regard to peacekeeping operations and stressed the need for efficiency, propriety, accountability and transparency in the procurement process. In that regard, it took note of General Assembly resolution 55/247 and other relevant Assembly resolutions.

UN Logistics Base

The resumed fifty-fifth session of the General Assembly had before it the financial performance report of the United Nations Logistics Base (UNLB) in Brindisi, Italy, for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 112].

In March 2001 [A/55/830], the Secretary-General submitted the proposed budget for UNLB for the period 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002 in the amount of $8,982,600 gross ($8,174,400 net), representing a 3.6 per cent decrease in resources from the 2000/01 budget period. The decrease reflected a 4.2 per cent drop in civilian personnel costs, a 3.2 per cent drop in operational costs and a 0.5 per cent drop in staff assessment. There was an 18.6 per cent increase under other programmes. The budget provided for 23 international and 83 local staff.

The Secretary-General indicated that he proposed submitting a revised budget after the submission of the review of UNLB's concept of operation and related requirements and the Headquarters capacity study and comprehensive review to the General Assembly's fifty-sixth session.

In relation to the financial performance report, ACABQ, in April [A/55/874/Add.8], recommended acceptance of the Secretary-General's proposal regarding the unencumbered balance and interest and miscellaneous income.

Regarding the 2001/02 cost estimates, ACABQ recommended approval of the proposed budget. It was of the opinion that, unless the proposed budget revisions entailed significant changes in financial requirements, the results of the reviews should be reported in the next performance report and budget for UNLB.

In February [A/C.5/55/37] and May [A/C.5/55/43], the Secretary-General submitted to the Fifth Committee notes on the amounts to be apportioned in respect of each peacekeeping mission, including the prorated share of UNLB for the periods 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 and for the period 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, respectively.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 June [meeting 103], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/534/Add.2], adopted resolution 55/272 without vote [agenda item 153 (a)].

Financing of the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy

The General Assembly,

Recalling section XIV of its resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994,

Recalling also its decision 50/500 of 17 September 1996 on the financing of the United Nations Logistics

Base at Brindisi, Italy, and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 54/278 of 15 June 2000,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Logistics Base and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Reiterating the importance of establishing an accurate inventory of assets,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy;

2. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

3. Reiterates the need to implement, as a matter of priority, an effective inventory management standard, especially in respect of peacekeeping operations involving high inventory value;

4. Approves the cost estimates for the United Nations Logistics Base amounting to 8,982,600 United States dollars gross (8,174,400 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002;

5. Decides to apply the unencumbered balance of 430,500 dollars in respect of the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, the interest income of 289,000 dollars and miscellaneous income of 340,000 dollars, that is, a total of 1,059,500 dollars, to the resources required for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002;

6. Also decides to prorate the balance of 7,923,100 dollars gross (7,114,900 dollars net) among the individual active peacekeeping operation budgets to meet the financing requirements of the United Nations Logistics Base for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002;

7. Authorizes the Secretary-General to provide for a civilian establishment consisting of ten Professional, thirteen Field Service and eighty-three locally recruited staff;

8. Decides to consider during its fifty-sixth session the question of the financing of the United Nations Logistics Base.

Personnel matters

Mission subsistence allowance

In November [A/56/648], the Secretary-General transmitted an OIOS report on the audit of the establishment and management by the Department of Management and DPKO of mission subsistence allowance (MSA) rates—a daily allowance paid to UN international civilian staff, military observers and civilian police in special peacekeeping missions to cover subsistence costs. MSA constituted a significant portion of overall peacekeeping costs. In general, the MSA rate reflected subsistence costs (including food, lodging and incidental items) based on the conditions that peacekeeping staff were exposed to in each mission area. It was generally lower than, or at least did not exceed, the daily subsistence allowance (DSA) rates established by the International Civil Service Commission for short-term travel to the same locations. The audit reviewed MSA rates in effect as at September 2000 in 10 peacekeeping missions (MINURSO, MONUC, UNAMSIL, UNIKOM, UNMEE, UNMIBH, UNMOP, UNMIK, UNOMIG and UNTAET) to determine whether they were reasonable and justified. For the 2000/01 financial period, those costs made up 17 per cent ($350 million) of the total expenditures of the 10 missions reviewed.

The audit revealed that the MSA rates in seven of the missions (MINURSO, UNAMSIL, UNOMIG, MONUC, UNMEE, UNMIK and UNIKOM) were found to be excessive and should be reduced. The UNMIBH rate appeared to be unduly low. The reviews by the Office of Human Resources Management (OHRM) of the MSA rates at UNMEE, UNOMIG, MINURSO, MONUC, UNAMSIL and UNIKOM, made in conjunction with the audit, had reduced the MSA rates payable in those missions, resulting in projected savings of approximately $33.7 million per year. The audit also found that there was a need for a regular OHRM review of MSA rates to ensure their continued reasonableness in comparison with actual subsistence costs in the various mission areas. That would also mitigate the inherent conflict of interest in the collection of relevant data on those costs, which was mainly based on questionnaires filled out by mission personnel. In order to introduce a stable and reliable means of setting MSA rates, consideration should be given to using DSA rates as a standard or benchmark for establishing and adjusting MSA rates in the same geographical locations.

The Secretary-General, in his letter of transmittal, concurred with the audit recommendations and noted that the Department of Management and DPKO were undertaking a more proactive approach in establishing and managing MSA.

The General Assembly, in resolution 56/246 (see p. 1284) of 24 December, requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the OIOS recommendations on MSA were fully and expeditiously implemented and to report on the matter in the context of the performance reports of the relevant peacekeeping operations.

Death and disability benefits

In a March note [A/C.5/55/40 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General, pursuant to General Assembly decision 54/459 B [YUN 2000, p. 113] and ACABQ recommendations [ibid.], submitted the first annual report on death and disability claims, indicating that, in 2000, 145 claims were received and 318 processed, including 19 claims from the backlog of claims received before 1997, with 90 claims pending at the end of the year. Annexed to the note were tables showing claims received by country and by mission as at 31 December 2000 and the total number of casualties reported and claims submitted for incidents occurring between 1 January 1995 and 31 December 2000.

The information by country and mission did not contain the dollar amounts as requested by ACABQ, since claims were submitted in different currencies, were subject to exchange rate fluctuations, and the original claimed amount might be adjusted, creating a difference between the amount claimed and that paid. Inclusion of dollar amounts would therefore give a misleading description of the value of pending claims.

ACABQ, in April [A/55/883], while noting the Secretariat's position on the matter of dollar amounts, requested that a column be added to the tables showing claims by country and mission, indicating the dollar amount of claims settled and paid during the specific reporting year, and that information be included in the next report on the complete process for the settlement of death and disability claims. It believed that permanent missions accredited to the United Nations should be involved from the outset of the exercise to facilitate and accelerate the process.

By decision 55/486 of 14 June, the General Assembly noted the Secretary-General's note on death and disability benefits and the related ACABQ report.

Recruitment policies and procedures

Report of Secretary-General (June). In his June report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations and the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations [A/55/977], the Secretary-General stated that consultants had observed that mission staff members had expressed concern about staff shortages and the quality of staff assigned to missions. In addition, the roster for civilian peacekeepers was ineffective and inadequately supported, advertising of vacancies was limited, the grading system for newly recruited staff was inflexible, the interview process was inadequate and missions seldom participated in the selection process for international staff.

Other observations were: that there was lack of career development and no real succession planning; insufficient attention to the gender issue; and no priority accorded to ensuring proper care of civilian, military and civilian police personnel, particularly those serving in unsafe environments. The staffing constraints within DPKO's Personnel Management and Support Service had contributed to those problems, as had the structure of the Service.

Concerning the proposed global strategy for civilian staffing that would correct current weaknesses and prepare for the future, senior UN system managers had outlined the main elements of that strategy, the resources required and potential implementation timelines. Some of those weaknesses were also addressed in the Organization's human resources management reforms (see p. 1336). Considerable progress had been made in the design of a new recruitment roster system, and DPKO and OHRM had collaborated in the establishment of the Galaxy Project for automating UN staff recruitment and selection procedures. A key facet of the staffing strategy would be to delegate additional recruitment authority to field missions. OHRM and DPKO concluded that written procedures, policy guidelines and monitoring mechanisms needed to be developed and the further delegation of recruitment authority to field missions required established recruitment standards, qualified recruitment specialists at the missions and appropriate Headquarters oversight. DPKO would set up a monitoring function with OHRM based on agreed parameters. To develop further and implement the global strategy for civilian staffing, the Secretary-General proposed creating a new section in the restructured Personnel Management and Support Service, which would include gender expertise to ensure equitable gender distribution in recruitment strategies for peacekeeping operations.

Special Committee consideration. In June [A/55/1024 & Corr.1], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations supported the creation of a new section in the restructured Personnel Management and Support Service to undertake civilian workforce planning and analysis, expand recruitment sources, expedite recruitment, manage the rapid civilian deployment capability and manage the careers of civilian staff in peacekeeping operations. It looked forward to the further development and wider use of the Galaxy Project to standardize civilian personnel recruitment and provide for greater transparency. The Special Committee recognized the benefits of further delegation of recruitment authority to the field, but stressed the necessity of proper policy guidelines, monitoring mechanisms and adequately trained and experienced human resources staff. It believed that greater mobility of personnel, especially between Headquarters and the field, was required for improving DPKO's management and planning capacities.

Report of Secretary-General (December). In December [A/56/732], the Secretary-General reported that the Secretariat had undertaken a number of strategies to implement the global staffing strategy. The Galaxy Project was being modified to meet the full range of recruitment needs and the prototype of the "Galaxy 1 a" roster component had been released. Mission templates would further assist in refining a surge roster of middle/senior administrative staff for mission start-up phases and the succession planning phase, and generic profiles were being formulated for 30 key professional-level job profiles in peacekeeping operations. In August, DPKO reviewed the applicant databases of the United Nations Volunteers, the World Food Programme and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in an ongoing effort to develop a compendium of existing and potential recruitment sources and to create tools to enhance standby capacities. New procedures were concluded with OHCHR to streamline and shorten the selection process of human rights officers in field missions. DPKO had approached OHRM with regard to developing a mechanism for identifying and securing the release of suitable and sufficient numbers of staff to field operations, who would be entered in a sub-roster of pre-selected personnel ready to deploy on short notice. Work was under way to codify the policy and procedure of granting special post allowances for field staff and to simplify administrative entitlements, and consideration was being given to reducing differences in emoluments and benefits of mission appointees and staff seconded from a parent UN department, programme or agency. DPKO, in consultation with the Field Staff Union, continued work on the concept and structure of a Field Service category. To provide career prospects for qualified field personnel, DPKO, in its support account budget, had requested the establishment of a civilian training section and human resources management and development section in the Personnel Management and Support Service of the Field Administration and Logistics Division.

OIOS report

In July, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the OIOS report on the audit of the policies and procedures of DPKO for the recruitment of international civilian staff for field missions [A/56/202]. The audit reviewed selected mission appointments processed by DPKO's Personnel Management and Support Service between January 1999 and October 2000.

Among the shortcomings identified by OIOS were: the absence of benchmarks and proper analysis of workload; the limited functionality of the candidate roster and the yet to be fully developed standard job descriptions for mission posts; a selection process that did not ensure the competitive selection of candidates; and inconsistencies in determining the salary levels and lack of reference checks of their qualifications and experience in most cases. The audit also found that DPKO's recruitment practices and procedures needed to be substantially improved to enhance transparency and to meet the staffing needs of field missions more effectively. OIOS supported the proposal of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations [YUN 2000, p. 83] for the delegation of recruitment authority to field missions, but advised that it should be preceded by the establishment of recruitment standards, the deployment of qualified recruitment specialists in the affected missions and the implementation of appropriate monitoring mechanisms at Headquarters.

OIOS recommended that: OHRM should implement an effective monitoring mechanism to ensure that the recruitment authority delegated to DPKO was exercised with transparency and in accordance with the Organization's human resources policies; the Personnel Management and Support Service should establish a functional roster of qualified, pre-screened candidates and selection decisions should be delegated to field missions; the Service should develop standard job descriptions for all posts; to promote transparency and fairness in determining salary levels, the Service should apply grading criteria consistently and record reasons for deviations from those criteria; the Service should ensure that checks of candidates' educational qualifications and work experience were completed before appointment or before extending initial appointments; to improve the management of recruitment functions, the Service should strengthen its case for additional resources by fully justifying its posts based on reliable workload indicators and benchmarks, presenting a risk analysis highlighting the potential impact of lower resource levels; the Service should prepare written procedures for recruiting international civilian staff for field missions; and DPKO should deploy qualified human resources specialists and train existing field mission staff before recruitment authority was fully delegated.

DPKO and OHRM agreed with the report's recommendations and were working together to strengthen the policies and procedures for recruiting international civilian staff for field missions.

Behavioural issues

In his December report on implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations and the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations [A/56/732], the Secretary-General stated that DPKO had recognized that problems sometimes occurred with the behaviour of military, civilian and civilian police peacekeeping personnel. A working group had been constituted to review all guidelines, including those on disciplinary issues, the investigation of alleged gross misconduct and investigations or inquiries into incidents involving the death of or injury to personnel from Member States or loss of property, and to identify areas for improvement. Another working group was constituted to review, among other things, the administrative procedures on discipline for UN police personnel in peacekeeping missions and to submit recommendations for their incorporation into a revised version of the guidelines. The Civilian Police Division was drafting guidelines for the development of rules of engagement and guidelines for generic standard operating procedures for civilian police and was introducing a standard disciplinary process in all field missions with a UN civilian police component. It intended to make current codes of conduct, policies and guidelines electronically available and part of the Division's start-up kit for newly established peacekeeping missions.

The sample Rules of Engagement for military personnel were revised by DPKO and the Department of Legal Affairs based on comments and observations received from Member States. The revised document was being used by military planning staff to guide them in preparing mission-specific Rules of Engagement.

Cooperation with regional organizations

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations [A/55/1024 & Corr.1] recognized the need to strengthen cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations. As those arrangements posed considerable challenges, it reiterated its recommendation that the Secretary-General elaborate in his next progress report on how they could best be confronted. The Special Committee stressed that efforts to enhance the collective capacity of African countries to participate in peacekeeping operations should focus on increasing the institutional capacity of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), particularly its Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution. Member States were urged to contribute to the OAU Peace Fund and to the trust fund established by the Secretary-General for enhancing the participation of African countries in peacekeeping operations. They were also urged to provide financial and other support to the study of peacekeeping operations conducted by African subregional organizations.

The Special Committee looked forward to the establishment of a group on the enhancement of African peacekeeping capacity and urged the Secretariat to continue its consultations on the group's terms of reference with a view to its timely establishment. It urged that discussion on the exchange of staff between the secretariats of the United Nations and OAU be concluded at the earliest opportunity, and encouraged the Secretariat to extend its efforts in subregional peacekeeping training and seminars to all African subregional organizations.

The Secretary-General, in his December report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Special Committee and the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations [A/56/732], said that, pursuant to the calls of the General Assembly and the Security Council for strengthening the UN partnership in peacekeeping activities with regional and subregional organizations, he had convened four high-level meetings of the United Nations and regional organizations aimed at establishing a clearer framework for cooperation in peace and security areas, including conflict prevention and peace-building. DPKO had prepared draft terms of reference for the proposed working group on the enhancement of African peacekeeping capacity and would resume consultations in order to fine-tune its provisions and seek agreement on the remaining elements for the establishment of the working group.

Over the preceding 14 months, DPKO had expended 30 per cent of its training efforts on enhancing peacekeeping capacity in Africa, including courses in Ghana, Kenya and Zimbabwe, UN military observer training in South Africa, leadership seminars/strategic studies in Botswana, a senior mission management seminar in Zimbabwe, gender and peacekeeping training courses for UNMEE, UNAMSIL and MONUC, assistance to a Southern African Development Community (SADC) planning seminar and the coordination of a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration seminar in Canada to enhance the African capacity. Support was also given to the French Reinforcement of African Peacekeeping Capacities project "Exercise Tanzanite", involving a military exercise for forces from all SADC countries, planned for 2002.

DPKO continued to facilitate contacts with African troop contributors to UN operations and donor States that could provide support in making up for the shortfalls in contingent-owned equipment and self-sustainment. Cooperation between DPKO and OAU in various aspects of peacekeeping activities had been growing steadily and comprised information exchange, peacekeeping training and the promotion of greater African participation in the UN standby arrangement system (see p. 77).

Within its staff exchange programme with OAU, DPKO arranged orientation/training in New York for the head of the OAU Early Warning Unit in the Conflict Management Centre (31 January–9 February) and was preparing to send an officer to OAU headquarters in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, in early 2002, to train staff and assist in strengthening the OAU Situation Room. The United Nations maintained a liaison office at OAU headquarters.

The United Nations also maintained close working relations with SADC and the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) with regard to peace efforts in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Sierra Leone and cooperated with them in carrying out various joint activities aimed at enhancing African peacekeeping capacity. A coordination mechanism between the United Nations, ECOWAS and the Government of Sierra Leone was set up in 2000 at the initiative of the Secretary-General.

Over the preceding five years, the Balkans had been the stage for growing cooperation between DPKO and regional organizations, such as the European Union, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO). Both in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Yugoslavia's Kosovo province, NATO troops provided overall security and cooperated with UN civilian police, while OSCE had electoral and institution-building tasks. UNMIK's four-pillar structure (see PART ONE, Chapter V) offered a unique coordination model, which had prompted intensification of contacts between the Secretariat and the headquarters of European organizations in Brussels and Vienna. A NATO Liaison Officer had been assigned to DPKO, and the establishment of a United Nations Liaison Office in Brussels was under discussion.

Chapter II

Africa

Although Africa continued to be plagued by numerous conflicts in 2001, several of them showed signs of amelioration as political situations evolved and diplomatic efforts, including those by the United Nations, began to take effect and show positive results. The situation in war-affected countries was further complicated by problems of economic stagnation, flows of refugees and internally displaced persons, and the spread of HIV/AIDS. In some cases, for example Angola, the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and Sierra Leone, warfare was fuelled by the illegal trade in raw diamonds, known as "conflict" or "blood" diamonds, and the exploitation of other natural resources. Various UN bodies investigated that issue.

The General Assembly's working group on ways to implement the 1998 recommendations of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa focused in 2001 on two themes—education, and conflict prevention and post-conflict peace-building—and made suggestions for further action in both areas. The Secretary-General issued his own report on follow-up action in the area of peace and security and reviewed UN action with regard to governance and sustainable development. The Assembly endorsed the working group's proposals for further action.

The area of major conflict continued to be the Great Lakes region, which was again dominated by events in the DRC, where war involved several opposition forces and troops from six neighbouring countries. Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda supported opposition groups in the DRC, and the Government was supported by Angola, Namibia and Zimbabwe. The Security Council dispatched a mission to eight countries of the region in May to assess the situation and make recommendations for resuming the road to peace. In January, President Laurent-Désiré Kabila was assassinated, and his son, Joseph Kabila, replaced him. Those events and statements by the new President were followed by a reduction in fighting; the opposing sides began disengaging from the confrontation line and Namibia and Uganda had withdrawn many of their troops from DRC territory by the end of the year. The United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) was thus able to take up the next phase of its mandate—the observation and monitoring of the disarmament, demobilization and resettlement of combatants—which required the expansion of its peacekeeping force, and the Council extended the Mission's mandate until 15 June 2002. The ceasefire held in most of the country, with the exception of eastern DRC, where violations increased in late 2001. The factions and other interested parties met in an inter-Congolese dialogue on 15 October, but did not consider substantive issues.

In Burundi, the conflict between government forces and armed opposition groups continued, despite their agreement in 2000 to cease hostilities. The Facilitator of the peace process in that country, Nelson Mandela, intensified efforts to resolve the conflict and was able to bring the parties together to agree on a transitional government, which was installed on 1 November under a power-sharing formula.

The conflict in the DRC also continued to affect Rwanda, which maintained that its troops in the DRC were necessary to preserve its own security. The situation inside Rwanda remained calm and the Government focused on a transition to democracy and overhauling the justice system.

The internal situation of the Central African Republic deteriorated in 2001 as a result of an attempted coup d'état in May and other manifestations of political opposition. The lack of dialogue between the country's political stakeholders was a serious obstacle to the sustainability of the democratic institutions established a year before, and the country's economic situation was dire. The United Nations Peace-building Support Office in the Central African Republic, established in 2000, continued to support the Government's efforts to consolidate peace and national reconciliation.

Tensions also rose in West Africa in early 2001, especially in Guinea-Bissau, Liberia and Sierra Leone. However, there was encouraging progress towards peace and stability later in the year, especially in Sierra Leone. The Secretary-General dispatched an inter-agency mission to the region in March, which visited 11 countries and remarked on the stability of the political and security situation in the Mano River Union countries (Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone), Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea-Bissau and the Casamance region of Senegal. The mission urged the international community to adopt an integrated regional approach to prevent, manage and contribute to resolving the many conflicts in the region. Acting on its recommendations, the Secretary-General decided to establish the Office of the Special Representative for West Africa, as from January 2002.

The United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL), the size and scope of which was expanded by the Council during 2001, maintained contacts with the Government and the main rebel group to follow up on the implementation of the 2000 Abuja Ceasefire Agreement. Progress was reported, and the withdrawal of forces and disarmament were nearly completed by the end of the year. In September, the Council extended UNAMSIL's mandate until March 2002. Cross-border fighting along Sierra Leone's boundaries with Guinea and Liberia flared up in early 2001 but abated following a dialogue among the three countries. Acting on the Government's suggestion, the Secretary-General pursued efforts to establish a Special Court for Sierra Leone and decided to send a planning mission to that country in January 2002. In addition, the United Nations provided support for the establishment of a Truth and Reconciliation Commission in Sierra Leone, also expected to begin work in 2002.

Fighting in northern Liberia in early 2001 threatened the border regions in Guinea and Sierra Leone, as did Liberia's assistance to rebels in Sierra Leone. Liberia's support included exporting rough diamonds obtained in Sierra Leone, which reportedly financed the rebels' military efforts. The Council, in March, demanded that Liberia cease its support of the rebels and imposed an arms embargo against Liberia and sanctions against importing diamonds from Liberia. The tension between the Mano River Union countries decreased following ministerial meetings that began in August.

The Government of Guinea-Bissau, which had been formed in 2000 in accordance with the 1998 Abuja Peace Accord, remained precarious in 2001. The United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Guinea-Bissau continued to report on developments within the country and along its border with Senegal.

The Horn of Africa remained calm but tense in 2001. The subregion was beset by problems and struggled to overcome disputes, both bilateral, as in the case of the border dispute between Eritrea and Ethiopia, and internal, as in Somalia. Eritrea and Ethiopia generally continued to abide by the Peace Agreement they had signed in December 2000, but progress in its implementation was slow, particularly with regard to the demarcation of the boundary. The United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE) monitored the ceasefire and the Temporary Security Zone between the two countries. In late 2001, Eritrea restricted movement of UNMEE in certain areas.

The humanitarian situation in Angola deteriorated significantly in 2001 as the conflict between the Government and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) intensified and UNITA guerrilla attacks, particularly against civilians, increased in frequency. The number of people displaced as a result of the civil strife rose to 4.1 million by the end of the year. Matters changed towards the latter part of the year when the Government gained the upper hand in the fighting and reportedly moved into much of the area previously under UNITA control. The United Nations hoped that the new situation would provide a window of opportunity to advance the peace process and set the stage for elections. The Security Council, through its Sanctions Committee and the Monitoring Mechanism, continued to investigate violations of the sanctions against UNITA.

The United Nations pursued efforts to hold a referendum in Western Sahara for the self-determination of its people, as agreed in 1990 by Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO), but progress was negligible. The Secretary-General's Personal Envoy proposed a different approach—for Morocco to retain responsibility for foreign relations, national security and defence, while executive, legislative and judicial bodies in the Territory would have competence over local issues. Morocco indicated its support for the plan, while POLISARIO and Algeria objected to it on the grounds that it provided for the integration of Western Sahara into Morocco. Meanwhile, the United Nations continued its work on identifying eligible voters for holding a referendum.

In January, the Scottish Court sitting in the Netherlands concluded its trial of two nationals of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya accused of plotting the 1988 bombing of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland. One of the accused was found guilty and the other not guilty.

The Council, in September, having taken into account the Sudan's efforts to cooperate with the international community by acceding to anti-terrorism conventions, to improve relations with neighbouring countries and to discharge its obligations under various Council resolutions, terminated the sanctions it had imposed against that country in 1996.

Promotion of peace in Africa

During 2001, the General Assembly considered ways to implement the recommendations made by the Secretary-General in his 1998 report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa [YUN 1998, p. 66]. The Assembly's open-ended working group to follow up the recommendations, the mandate of which had been extended in late 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 116], focused on two themes—education, and conflict prevention and post-conflict peace-building—and made suggestions for further action in those areas. The Secretary-General also issued a progress report on the recommendations, describing specific action by UN organizations in the promotion of peace and security and developments in governance and sustainable development.

The Assembly endorsed the recommendations of the working group and requested the Secretary-General to designate the already established interdepartmental/inter-agency task force as the permanent focal point within the Secretariat to monitor their implementation.

In March, the Security Council held an open debate on ensuring its effective role in the maintenance of peace and security, particularly in Africa (see p. 47).

Working Group report. The Open-ended Ad Hoc Working Group on the Causes of Conflict and the Promotion of Durable Peace and Sustainable Development in Africa, established by General Assembly resolution 53/92 [YUN 1998, p. 77] to monitor implementation of the Secretary-General's 1998 recommendations on the topic, submitted a report on its 2001 activities to the Assembly [A/56/45], as requested by the Assembly in resolution 55/217 [YUN 2000, p. 117]. The Working Group held one organizational session (20 March) and two substantive sessions (29 May–1 June, 30 July–3 August) during the year. It adopted two themes as the focus of its discussions—education, and conflict prevention and post-conflict peace-building—and made suggestions for further action in those areas.

With regard to education for durable peace and sustainable development, the Working Group focused on the role of education in addressing the challenges of globalization and poverty eradication; development of technical, vocational and professional skills to respond to the knowledge-based economy and society; employability in a globalized world economy; contribution to science and technology; preventing the spread of HIV/AIDS; preventing and managing conflicts; and promoting sustainable development in Africa. UN system programmes for education, including a number aimed at expanding access to education, especially at the primary level, and improving the quality of education, were considered. While such efforts were commendable, the Working Group observed, the human resources capacity in many African countries remained inadequate to respond to challenges; the low enrolment rates in primary education (77 per cent) and the low school enrolment rates of girls (under 75 per cent) in many African countries would undermine economic growth and sustainable development.

As to conflict prevention and post-conflict peace-building, the Working Group noted the large number of ongoing conflicts in Africa, estimated at 17. To address those conflicts, the Secretary-General had used a variety of mechanisms, including the appointment of special envoys and representatives who worked closely with regional and subregional organizations and others to address the conflicts, as was the case with the Ethiopia-Eritrea conflict and conflicts in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and Burundi. The Secretary-General's establishment in March of the Inter-Agency Mission to West Africa was an important initiative to develop a coordinated and global approach to conflict prevention. It aimed to mobilize UN bodies to address the multifaceted problems confronting the Mano River Union countries and to integrate UN efforts with those of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS). It would focus on issues that might threaten peace and security in the region, such as arms flows, the illegal exploitation of strategic natural resources, mass refugee movements, mercenaries and terrorist activities. A number of UN offices had been established in Africa, including in Burundi, the Central African Republic, Guinea-Bissau and Liberia, to promote peace and national reconciliation, the strengthening of democratic institutions and governance structures, the harmonization of UN peace-building activities, international support for post-conflict peace-building activities, the facilitation of communications between the Governments of neighbouring countries, the coordination of activities of regional organizations and bilateral donors, and assistance in disarmament and the demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants into civilian life. The United Nations also cooperated with the Organization of African Unity (OAU) in developing specific capacities in OAU for conflict prevention, management and resolution. The United Nations Development Fund for Women provided support to strengthen women's leadership role in the peace process at the regional and interregional levels; for example, it supported women's participation in the peace processes in Burundi and Somalia.

The Working Group made suggestions for further action in the two thematic areas. It encouraged the Assembly to call on the international community to provide assistance to African countries to achieve universal primary education, eliminate gender disparities in primary and secondary education by 2005 and achieve gender equality in education by 2015. The Group welcomed innovative programmes that increased access to education and retention of children in schools by providing incentives and called on countries to share successful experiences. It recognized the need to increase the use of information and communications technology in training, institutional capacity-building and education, and to develop the skills required by the new knowledge-based world economy. The role of education was also emphasized in preventing the spread of HIV/AIDS, malaria, tuberculosis and other diseases. As Africa's external debt continued to divert its resources from development activities, including education, the Working Group called for the implementation of the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative for eligible African countries through new resources. Developed countries were urged to grant more development assistance. The Working Group proposed that UN system organizations assist interested African countries in developing curricula that provided access to information and communications technology.

With respect to conflict prevention and post-conflict peace-building, the Working Group called for international support for African countries that were promoting regional peace and resolution of conflicts and proposed the collaboration of civil society with organizations making such efforts. The Group believed that economic growth supportive of poverty eradication and development should be at the core of conflict-prevention strategies. All partners should support economic growth, reconstruction and recovery, national peace-building efforts in promoting good governance and strengthening the rule of law. The root causes of conflict were numerous, but poverty was nearly always a related issue and it needed to be addressed in the peace process. The international community should increase support for African efforts in that regard by addressing poverty eradication through debt cancellation, improved market access, enhanced official development assistance, increased flows of foreign direct investment and transfer of technology; making linkages between the economic and social dimensions of poverty reduction strategies, and assisting in monitoring and analysis; promoting policies that were pro-poor and gender-sensitive; and supporting African policies towards job creation. Demobilization, disarmament and reintegration programmes should also be supported, in particular through the regular budget of peacekeeping operations. The Group further recommended that post-conflict peace-building be supported by international assistance to UN offices in Africa; assistance to African countries for including peace-building activities in their planning and budgetary processes; support for the efforts of civil society to work for peace; mechanisms to address illicit trade in natural resources and arms; support for rehabilitation; and promotion of good governance and transparency in financial and trading systems.

Having considered the multiplicity of initiatives in the UN system to address the recommendations in the Secretary-General's report, the Working Group recommended that the Assembly suspend the Group's activities during the Assembly's fifty-sixth (2001) session to allow Member States to appraise the outcome of other UN initiatives on Africa. It proposed that a permanent focal point be established within the Secretariat to monitor progress by the UN system in implementing the Secretary-General's recommendations.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 55/217 [YUN 2000, p. 117], the Secretary-General, in a September report [A/56/371], updated the 1999 progress report [YUN 1999, p. 78] on the implementation of his 1998 recommendations on the causes of conflict and promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa. Affirming that the recommendations remained valid, he described specific follow-up action, mainly by UN organizations, in the matters of peace and security and gave an overview of developments in governance and sustainable development.

Concerning peacemaking, the Secretary-General continued to appoint special mediators and representatives. Commissions of inquiry had also been established to investigate allegations of massacres in Togo and killings in Côte d'Ivoire after the 2000 presidential elections [YUN 2000, p. 230]. The key objective of such commissions was to discourage a sense of impunity and to deter similar action. The UN system was mobilizing the international community to support post-conflict countries by convening donor conferences, including those held for Burundi, the Central African Republic and the DRC in 2000. The Secretariat was continuing efforts to improve the effectiveness of sanctions, and consultations had been held with a number of African States with a view to encouraging them to pass legislation making the violation of a Security Council arms embargo a criminal offence. Efforts were also made to stop the proliferation of arms and reduce the purchase of arms and munitions to below 1.5 per cent of gross domestic product while maintaining a zero-growth budget for military expenditure, through, for example, support for various disarmament registers, declarations and activities. The United Nations remained committed to supporting disarmament initiatives, such as the Declaration concerning Firearms, Ammunition and Other Related Materials in the Southern African Development Community (SADC), adopted in March [A/CONF.192/PC/35].

UN peacekeeping efforts included support for African peacekeeping capacity, in consultation with OAU, ECOWAS, SADC and others. The United Nations provided specific services to support Africa's own initiatives to resolve disputes and the Secretary-General continued to urge Member States to contribute bilaterally and multilaterally to UN and OAU trust funds for peacekeeping. Protecting civilians in situations of conflict had become an important aspect of UN peacekeeping operations, and the mandates of the UN missions in the DRC and Sierra Leone included the responsibility for providing protection to civilians under imminent threat of physical violence. To address refugee security, which was also a concern in conflict situations, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) had decided to establish arrangements with some Governments to provide law and order and public security experts to be deployed at the beginning of a refugee crisis and to work with local public security institutions. Programmes were already in place in Kenya and the United Republic of Tanzania, where UNHCR provided material support for the deployment of police forces to ensure law and order in and around refugee camps.

Post-conflict peace-building included UN provision of emergency assistance to create the preconditions necessary for reconstruction and development. Such assistance was being provided by the peace-building support offices in the Central African Republic, Guinea-Bissau and Liberia. Their activities included encouraging reconciliation and respect for human rights; fostering political inclusiveness; promoting national unity; ensuring repatriation and resettlement of refugees and displaced persons; reintegrating ex-combatants; and curtailing the availability of arms.

With regard to good governance, the Secretary-General, in his 1998 report [YUN 1998,

p. 66], had urged African countries to enact legislation to combat bribery and set out a uniform African convention on the conduct of public officials and the transparency of public administration. While very little progress had been made in that regard, the United Nations continued to encourage African countries to implement the Secretary-General's recommendations and to advocate the repatriation of the illegally acquired wealth that was transferred to Western banks by some corrupt African leaders and officials, and the adequate remuneration of African civil servants for their work. The United Nations was also promoting good governance by strengthening the administrative capacity of African countries.

UN efforts to promote sustainable development in Africa included projects that created a positive environment for investment and economic growth; investing in human resources; pursuing public health priorities, such as reduction of HIV/AIDS and malaria; eliminating all forms of discrimination against women; restructuring international aid and reducing the debt burden; opening international markets to African products; providing support for regional co-operation and integration; and harmonizing current international and bilateral initiatives.

The Secretary-General observed that the fact that a significant number of the least developed countries in Africa were also conflict-prone countries underlined the interrelationship between peace and development. In proposing a new global partnership with their development partners (see p. 899), African leaders had committed themselves to strengthening mechanisms for conflict prevention, management and resolution, and to promoting and protecting democracy and human rights by developing standards of accountability, transparency and participative governance. Such goals could be achieved more quickly with support from the international community. The Group of Eight industrialized countries, at their summit meeting (Genoa, Italy, July) [A/56/222-S/2001/736], adopted a Plan for Africa, which the United Nations hoped would complement its efforts. The obstacles remained immense—the reversals in human development over the previous 15 years, increased poverty levels, the devastation caused by HIV/AIDS and the destruction of infrastructure caused by conflict. Since his previous report [YUN 1999, p. 78], the Secretary-General noted, the war in Ethiopia and Eritrea had ended and a UN peacekeeping operation was patrolling the ceasefire line and helping to solidify peaceful relations, and there were signs of better prospects in Burundi, the DRC and Sierra Leone, although the crisis in Liberia and Sierra Leone was spreading to Guinea. Progress had been made in implementing many of the earlier recommendations, but much more needed to be done to improve political and economic governance and to stop the proliferation of small arms in Africa. Reducing poverty continued to be the biggest challenge for the region, and mobilization of domestic and external resources was urgent. The region would continue to rely on a strong and committed international partnership.

Communications. On 29 October [S/2001/1031], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council President of his decision to extend the appointment of his Special Adviser on Africa, Mohamed Sahnoun (Algeria), until 31 December 2002. He stated that Mr. Sahnoun had been following developments in the Horn of Africa sub-region (see p. 191), especially Somalia and the Sudan, and had provided assessment and advice on a possible UN role in those countries. He had also represented the Secretary-General in meetings of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD) and the IGAD Partners Forum devoted to the two countries. On 31 October [S/2001/1032], the Council President replied that the Council had taken note of his decision.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/37 [draft: A/56/L.28 & Add.I, orally revised] without vote [agenda item 48].

Causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Open-ended Ad Hoc Working Group on the Causes of Conflict and the Promotion of Durable Peace and Sustainable Development in Africa and the progress report of the Secretary-General,

Recalling its resolutions 53/92 of 7 December 1998, 54/234 of 22 December 1999 and 55/217 of 21 December 2000 on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa,

Recalling also its resolution 46/151 of 18 December 1991, the annex to which contains the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, its resolutions 48/214 of 23 December 1993, 49/142 of 23 December 1994 and 51/32 of 6 December 1996, on the midterm review of the New Agenda, and its resolution 53/90 of 7 December 1998 on the implementation of the New Agenda, as well as chapter VII of the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Reaffirming that the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General constitutes a priority that must remain high on the agenda of the United Nations system and Member States,

Reaffirming also that the General Assembly, as the chief policy-making and representative organ of the United Nations, must continue to play the primary role in monitoring the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General and assessing the progress made,

Emphasizing the need to strengthen further the political will to ensure the political, financial, technical and other support critical for the effective implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General not only in the two thematic areas—education and conflict prevention and post-conflict peace-building—of the deliberations of the Working Group in 2001, but also in all the areas mentioned in the report,

Welcoming the adoption by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-seventh ordinary session, held at Lusaka from 9 to 11 July 2001, of the New African Initiative (now called New Partnership for Africa's Development),

Mindful of the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2001 of the Economic and Social Council, on the role of the United Nations system in supporting the efforts of African countries to achieve sustainable development,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Open-ended Ad Hoc Working Group on the Causes of Conflict and the Promotion of Durable Peace and Sustainable Development in Africa and the progress report of the Secretary-General;

2. Notes with deep concern that access to education at all levels in Africa remains low, despite the recognition that education plays a central role in conflict prevention and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development;

3. Also notes with deep concern that, while some efforts have been made in the prevention and settlement of conflicts, such efforts have not often brought positive results;

4. Endorses the recommendations entitled "Suggestions for further action and measures", contained in paragraphs 35 to 56 of the report of the Working Group;

5. Decides to suspend the activities of the Working Group during the fifty-sixth session of the General Assembly in order to consider further measures for the implementation and monitoring of initiatives on Africa, including the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2001 of the Economic and Social Council, in the light of the forthcoming review of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and related initiatives, all of which should be guided by the New Partnership for Africa's Development;

6. Invites the Working Group to re-examine its mandate during the fifty-seventh session of the General Assembly, including the most appropriate way to proceed with the deliberations of the Working Group as well as the scope and nature of its work;

7. Decides to continue to monitor the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General on causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a comprehensive report on the implementation of the recommendations contained in his report, including concrete measures needed to ensure a coordinated and integrated approach to the full and early implementation of the recommendations;

9. Requests that the Secretary-General designate the already established interdepartmental/inter-agency task force as the permanent focal point within the Secretariat mandated to monitor the implementation of the recommendations contained in his report, and also requests that the task force be strengthened with the necessary human, managerial and administrative resources effectively to carry out this task;

10. Also requests that the task force provide Member States, on an annual basis, with updated matrices indicating the current status of implementation of the various recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General.

Central Africa and Great Lakes region

The situation in the Great Lakes region of Africa in 2001 continued to be shaped by events in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), where the conflict involved a number of opposition forces, most of them based on ethnic groups, and troops from six neighbouring States. There was a significant improvement in security as the result of the partial withdrawal of foreign troops from the DRC and the change in leadership of that country following the assassination of President Laurent-Désiré Kabila in January. His son, Joseph Kabila, assumed his father's position. Those changes gave grounds for cautious hope for positive change and resumption of the peace process under the 1999 Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement [YUN 1999, p. 87]. Under the improved circumstances, the opposing sides began disengaging from the confrontation line and redeploying to new defensive positions, as verified by the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC). That move allowed the Mission to begin the next phase of its mandate—to observe and monitor the disarmament, demobilization and resettlement of the combatants—with an expanded peace-keeping force of nearly 3,000 troops by the end of the year. Efforts were made to bring the opposing political factions together at an inter-Congolese dialogue to discuss re-establishment of the State administration in all areas of the DRC; however, that goal remained elusive at the end of the year. Throughout 2001, the ceasefire was observed by the opposing forces in most of the country with the exception of eastern DRC, where fighting intensified in the later months. Much of the conflict focused on control of natural resources in that area, and it benefited many of the opposing parties to prolong rather than end the fighting. The plundering of the DRC's natural resources was the subject of a report by an expert panel set up by the Security Council to investigate the phenomenon.

Progress in peacemaking efforts was also achieved in Burundi, where armed factions, generally divided into two ethnic groups, and government forces continued the conflict despite most of them having signed the Arusha Agreement on Peace and Reconciliation in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 146]. That Agreement, a framework for political reform, served as the basis for negotiations in 2001 under the UN-appointed Facilitator, Nelson Mandela. Although no ceasefire was in place, the parties were able to reach agreement on establishing a transitional government, which was installed on 1 November under a power-sharing formula.

In Rwanda, the situation remained generally calm as the country made efforts to overcome the ill-effects of the 1994 genocide through changes in government and the justice system and promoting human rights. The Government, which maintained troops in the DRC, expressed concern about the security of its borders with that country.

In May, the Security Council dispatched a mission to the Great Lakes region to assess the situation and make recommendations for resuming the peace process. At that time, the ceasefire in the DRC was holding and the mission stressed the urgency of taking advantage of the window of opportunity to move the peace process forward. At the same time, the Council was struck by the intractability of the situation in Burundi.

The Central African Republic was affected by events in the DRC, but its problems stemmed mainly from civil unrest and lack of dialogue between the Government and opposition parties that had contributed to internal tension since a 1996 army rebellion. Efforts to achieve national reconciliation were set back in May following an attempted coup d'état and the Government's questions about the loyalty of certain members of the armed forces.

Security Council consideration. At a 7 February meeting [meeting 4273], during which it considered the situation in the Great Lakes region, the Security Council was addressed by the Secretary-General and President Paul Kagame of Rwanda. The Secretary-General pointed out that President Kagame had met the previous week in Washington, D.C., with DRC President Joseph Kabila to discuss the challenges facing both countries and the entire region. The issues of governance, national dialogue, democracy, accountability and reconciliation needed to be addressed in the DRC and in the region as a whole if there was to be a lasting solution in the Great Lakes. There was also the issue of the continued existence of predatory armed groups. All countries of the region, in particular Rwanda, had legitimate security concerns. Council members had expressed the need to seize the current opportunity in the DRC to implement the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement. The withdrawal of Rwandan forces and their allies from the town of Pweto, currently under discussion between the MONUC Force Commander and the authorities in Kigali and the DRC, would serve as a confidence-building measure and as an important step towards compliance with Council resolution 1304(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 131]. The Secretary-General expressed the hope that the resolution of the conflict in the DRC would bring peace to the entire Great Lakes region and in particular to Rwanda.

Confirming his country's willingness to fulfil its obligations under the Lusaka peace process, President Kagame pointed to three core issues that needed to be addressed to have that process succeed: the inter-Congolese dialogue, called for in the Lusaka Agreement, to find a stable internal situation so that DRC problems would not affect the neighbouring countries; the problem of former Rwandan Armed Forces (ex-FAR) and Interahamwe forces, which threatened security in the region; and the withdrawal of foreign forces from the DRC [S/PV.4273].

Security Council mission. Following consultations, Security Council members agreed to dispatch a mission to the Great Lakes region in late May. The Council President, in a letter of 25 April [S/2001/408], requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the Secretariat made all the necessary arrangements. The President also forwarded the mission's terms of reference, which pertained specifically to the situations in the DRC (see below) and Burundi (see p. 145). The mission's report [S/2001/521 & Add.1] contained recommendations on ways to pursue the peace process in the two countries (see p. 124).

Addressing the Council on 30 May [meeting 4323], the head of the mission (French Ambassador Jean-David Levitte) explained that 12 Council members had visited eight countries and in 10 days met with 10 heads of State and two Facilitators—former Presidents Ketumile Masire of Botswana, for the inter-Congolese dialogue, and Nelson Mandela of South Africa, for Burundi—and with representatives of political parties, civil society and armed groups. There was a feeling that a real window of opportunity existed for the DRC to move towards peace, particularly in view of the leadership of President Joseph Kabila and the fact that the ceasefire had been holding for four months. The Secretary-General commented on the change in the political climate within the DRC and progress in the inter-Congolese dialogue, the linkage between the conflicts in the DRC and Burundi, the disengagement of troops and the liberalization of political life [S/PV.4323].

Communications. The DRC, in a 26 June letter to the Security Council President [S/2001/634], expressed the readiness of President Joseph Kabila to meet his Burundian, Rwandan and Ugandan counterparts to discuss the withdrawal of foreign troops from Congolese territory and the pacification of the region. The Presidency of the European Union (EU), in a 9 October statement on the Great Lakes region transmitted to the Secretary-General on 15 October [S/2001/979], welcomed the August meeting led by the Facilitator for the DRC, Sir Ketumile Masire, that had opened up the way for the inter-Congolese dialogue on 15 October. The EU underlined the need for the signatory States and other parties to the Lusaka Agreement to demonstrate the political will required to end support for the negative forces. With regard to Burundi, the agreement reached in late July on guiding the transition in Burundi, led by the Facilitator, Mr. Mandela, also opened up new prospects, although those were still fragile in the absence of a ceasefire.

On 16 November [S/2001/1095], the Secretary-General informed the Council President of his intention to extend the mandate of his Special Representative for the Great Lakes Region, Berhanu Dinka, for another year, until 31 December 2002. Mr. Dinka had been soliciting the views of countries in the region regarding the proposed organization of an International Conference on the Great Lakes; representing the Secretary-General at meetings under the Arusha peace process on Burundi; and addressing the regional dimensions of the conflict in the DRC through interaction with the Special Representative in that country. The Council, on 21 November [S/2001/1096], took note of the Secretary-General's intention.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

The DRC remained at the centre of regional strife in 2001, albeit at reduced levels of fighting, as it had since the beginning of the conflict in 1998, which eventually involved seven neighbouring countries and numerous rebel groups. Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda, at times allied with various rebel factions, supported opposition to the DRC Government, which in turn was supported, at its request, by Angola, Namibia and Zimbabwe.

On 16 January, President Laurent-Désiré Kabila was assassinated. His son, Major General Joseph Kabila, was nominated as President. The change in leadership provided a window of opportunity for renewed efforts to pursue the implementation of the 1999 Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement [YUN 1999, p. 87] signed by the Government of the DRC, one of the two main rebel movements and five regional States. The Agreement provided for a ceasefire to be monitored by MONUC, OAU and Zambia; withdrawal of foreign forces from the country; and re-establishment of State administration throughout the country. MONUC, with a mandate to facilitate the implementation of the Agreement, began expanding its force from 200 troops at the beginning of the year. With a mandated force of 5,500, MONUC reached a total of approximately 3,000 troops by the end of 2001, and the Security Council extended its mandate until 15 June 2002. The rapid expansion of MONUC was made possible by the disengagement of forces from the confrontation line and their redeployment to new defensive positions, as verified by the Mission. MONUC began establishing four coordination centres to provide command for the military observers in areas distant from its headquarters in Kinshasa. At the same time, some foreign forces were withdrawn from Congolese territory and the Government began to demobilize some of its troops. By the end of the year, Namibia and Uganda had greatly reduced their forces in the DRC, and Angola had announced its intention to withdraw some troops. Rwandan troops remained in the country. Having verified the disengagement and redeployment of opposing forces, MONUC was able to commence the third phase of its operations and began to plan disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, resettlement and reintegration of the combatants.

In general, the ceasefire held throughout the year in much of the country, with the exception of eastern DRC, where violations were on the rise by late 2001. The Secretary-General, who visited the region in September, and the neutral Facilitator, Sir Ketumile Masire, urged the Governments of both the DRC and Rwanda to use all their influence to end the fighting in the east and to open a dialogue.

Efforts were made to bring the warring factions and other interested parties together at an inter-Congolese dialogue, which took place on 15 October in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia. The meeting did not address any substantive issues, which led the Facilitator to adjourn the dialogue until 2002. An informal meeting in preparation for the dialogue was held in Abuja, Nigeria, from 6 to 8 December.

An expert panel established by the Security Council to investigate the illegal exploitation of natural resources of the DRC reported in 2001 that the plundering of those resources continued unabated. Over the years of conflict, the exploitation had become systematic and systemic, with networks having been developed for channelling extracted resources, first by Rwanda and Uganda and later by individual actors, including army commanders, businessmen and government structures. The panel made a number of recommendations for halting the illegal exploitation, including sanctions against countries and individuals involved in those activities.

On 7 September, the General Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its fifty-sixth (2001) session the item on armed aggression against the DRC (decision 55/502). On 24 December, it decided that the item would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464).

Political and military developments

Change in leadership

At the beginning of 2001, the political and military situation in the DRC was at a standstill despite intense diplomatic activity and personal initiatives of heads of State in the region during 2000. Broad agreement on the key questions to put the peace process back on track had not been achieved, and military activity, although relatively quiet, was observed in several areas throughout the country. The situation changed on 16 January with the assassination of President Laurent-Désiré Kabila in Kinshasa by a member of the presidential bodyguard.

Report of Secretary-General (February). The Secretary-General reported that event and consequent political and military developments in his sixth report on MONUC [S/2001/128], issued in February, as requested by the Security Council in resolution 1332(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 139]. On 17 January, Major General Joseph Kabila, the son of the former President, was entrusted with the powers of head of State and Commander-in-Chief of the Congolese Armed Forces (FAC) by ministers and senior military officers, a decision approved by the Congolese transitional parliament but rejected by both rebel groups and some elements of the Congolese political class.

On 21 January, the heads of State of Angola, Namibia and Zimbabwe issued a communiqué in which they undertook to maintain their respective military forces in the DRC and reinforce the security of the population. They encouraged all parties to search for a political solution to the conflict and called on the United Nations to deploy additional military observers. The new President, in meetings with the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Kamel Morjane (Tunisia), affirmed his desire to implement Council resolutions, particularly those relating to the process of disengagement of forces, the withdrawal of foreign forces and the inter-Congolese dialogue. Addressing the Congolese people on 26 January, Mr. Kabila called for the immediate withdrawal of Burundian, Rwandan and Ugandan forces from Congolese territory, and advocated a policy of dialogue and reconciliation with neighbouring States. He committed himself to working to relaunch the Lusaka Agreement and indicated that he would seek national reconciliation through political dialogue. He called for further engagement of OAU in a process of co-facilitation of the inter-Congolese dialogue. Once peace was established, he envisaged that elections would be held.

Addressing the Security Council on 2 February [meeting 4271], Mr. Kabila said that, despite many efforts over the previous two years, forces from Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda remained on DRC soil. Expressing hope for relaunching the Lusaka Agreement, he added that, to be effective, the Agreement needed to be reinforced by a mechanism that could punish the parties that violated the ceasefire and did not respect the deployment and disengagement measures. He sought the Council's agreement in four areas: the disengagement of opposing troops; the deployment of UN troops; the unconditional withdrawal of uninvited forces; and the withdrawal of troops from countries that were invited.

Following the assassination, the rebel movements denied any involvement and reaffirmed their commitment to the Lusaka Agreement. All rebel leaders called for progress in convening the inter-Congolese dialogue stipulated in the Agreement and denounced the installation of Joseph Kabila as President. Rebel leaders were unanimous in demanding the establishment of a transitional government. On 17 January, three rebel movements merged to form the Front de libération du Congo (FLC), comprising the Mouvement pour la libération du Congo (MLC), the Rassemblement congolais pour la démocratie-Mouvement de libération (RCD-ML) and RCD-National (RCD-N). The new group envisaged a single military force opposing the government side.

Continuing in his role as neutral Facilitator of the inter-Congolese dialogue, Sir Ketumile Masire enjoyed the support of the rebel movements and main political parties. Although the new President did not withdraw the Government's rejection of Sir Ketumile, he called for a francophone co-facilitator.

The Secretary-General described military developments in the DRC during the reporting period (December 2000–February 2001). Though much of the country remained quiet, military action was observed in border areas. As called for in Security Council resolution 1304(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 131], Rwanda and Uganda kept their forces at a distance of some 100 kilometres from Kisanjani. However, RCD military elements remained in the city, with their leaders maintaining that security concerns did not allow them to withdraw their forces before the arrival of UN troops. The area around the city had been de facto divided into quadrants, each occupied by rebel factions. The areas were generally respected, except for isolated skirmishes between RCD and MLC/RCD-N in the diamond mining area north of the city. The opposition parties, with the exception of MLC, ratified the detailed sub-plans for disengagement and redeployment in Harare, Zimbabwe, on 6 December. However, there had been no movement in that regard. Nor had there been any indication of withdrawal of Rwandan and Ugandan forces from the DRC, estimated to number 20,000 and 10,000, respectively, as the Council had called for in resolution 1304(2000). On the government side, it was estimated that there were approximately 12,000 Zimbabwean, 7,000 Angolan and 2,000 Namibian troops deployed in the DRC.

As at 8 February, MONUC had a total of 200 military personnel deployed to the headquarters of the rebel movements (Bunia, Gbadolite, Goma), the four regional joint military commissions (Boende, Kabalo, Kabinda, Lisala) and six other locations (Gemena, Isiro, Kananga, Kindu, Kisanjani, Mbandaka). A team was also deployed in Nchelenge, northern Zambia. Twenty-three liaison officers were stationed in the capitals of surrounding countries and one was with OAU in Addis Ababa. In South Kivu, attacks by armed groups had forced international agencies to suspend many of their operations; that threat precluded MONUC deployment in the eastern provinces.

The number of internally displaced persons in the DRC was 2 million and was expected to rise further; when added to the refugee population, the total was estimated to be over 2,335,000. Fewer than half received humanitarian assistance (see also pp. 833 and 1117). Numerous human rights violations had continued with impunity (see p. 697), compounded by renewed outbreaks of political and ethnic tensions, which took the form of clashes between various armed groups and ethnic groups.

On the basis of experience gained since MONUC's first deployment in the DRC in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 94], the UN Secretariat developed a revised draft concept of operations for the monitoring of actions taken by the parties in compliance with the disengagement and redeployment plan signed in Harare on 6 December 2000. The deployment of up to 550 military observers was envisaged, together with 1,900 armed personnel. Two riverine units were also planned with the necessary rotary and fixed-wing air assets. The military personnel required would total 3,000 officers and other ranks. The Harare disengagement plan allowed two weeks for the verification phase, which would begin once the parties had disengaged and moved to designated areas; thereafter MONUC would verify and monitor the plan across the four areas. The Secretary-General also intended to deploy civilian staff, including political, human rights, humanitarian, public information and child protection officers, to the Mission area as the operation proceeded.

In general, the Secretary-General found that the change in President had marked a new stage in the UN consideration of the DRC conflict and gave grounds for cautious optimism regarding the peace process. One hopeful sign was that the DRC Government might be willing to accept Sir Ketumile Masire, the neutral Facilitator.

Communications. The DRC, on 10 January [S/2001/29], informed the Security Council President that Rwanda was still waging an offensive in the DRC province of Katanga and had tried to involve Zambia in the war of aggression against the DRC. The DRC welcomed the neutrality displayed by Zambia. On 12 January [S/2001/41], Rwanda asserted that the DRC Government and its allies continued to violate the Lusaka Agreement and were poised to attack the Rwandan forces in Katanga province. Referring to a charge made by the DRC in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 141] that Zambian territory was being used by Rwandan and other forces to launch attacks into the DRC, Zambia, on 12 January [S/2001/77], asserted that it had been and would remain neutral with regard to the conflict in the DRC.

Following the assassination of President Laurent-Désiré Kabila, Uganda, on 18 January [S/2001/60], refuted charges by the DRC Defence Minister that Uganda was involved, and appealed to the new leadership to follow the Lusaka peace process. On 19 January [S/2001/65], Rwanda also denied charges about its involvement in the assassination and expressed support for the peace process. The EU, in a 22 January statement [S/2001/97], expressed support for the Lusaka Agreement as the consensual basis for peace and called on all parties to show restraint.

Lusaka summit

The heads of State of the signatory countries to the Lusaka Peace Agreement met in Lusaka, Zambia, on 15 February, reviving hopes for progress in the peace process. At the meeting, the new DRC President gave assurances of his acceptance of Sir Ketumile Masire as the neutral Facilitator of the inter-Congolese dialogue. The parties also committed themselves to the Kampala plan [YUN 2000, p. 126] and the Harare sub-plans for disengagement and redeployment of forces, signed in April and December 2000, respectively.

Rwanda, on 18 February [S/2001/147], taking note of the statement issued at the conclusion of the Lusaka summit, welcomed the declaration of the DRC President that the neutral Facilitator would be invited to begin consultations with the interested parties with a view to beginning the dialogue as soon as possible, and the announced deployment of the second phase of MONUC by 26 February. Rwanda also reaffirmed its earlier offer to pull back the Rwanda Patriotic Army (RPA) to new positions, not less than 200 kilometres from all forward positions, beginning on 28 February in Pweto. It hoped that other parties would remain committed to the disarmament of the ex-FAR and Interahamwe, as stipulated in the Agreement.

On 20 February [S/2001/150], Uganda issued a statement on the Lusaka summit in which it expressed support for the Kampala disengagement plan and subsequent sub-plans. It welcomed the improved rapport of the DRC Government with MONUC; the DRC commitment to dialogue facilitated by Sir Ketumile; the planned deployment of MONUC observers; and the consensus reached at the summit to implement area-to-area disengagement and redeployment plans. As a demonstration of its commitment to the peace process, Uganda would withdraw two battalions from the DRC in addition to the five already withdrawn in August 2000, and it hoped the other parties would follow so as to make possible a total withdrawal of all foreign forces.

Implementation of Lusaka Agreement

The Security Council considered the Secretary-General's February report on MONUC at meetings on 21 and 22 February, which were attended by members of the Political Committee for the Implementation of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement (the parties to the Agreement, OAU and the United Nations), and discussed further deployment of MONUC.

Addressing the Council on 21 February [meeting 4279], the Secretary-General noted the recent positive changes in the DRC: the parties had been talking to each other at the highest levels; the Congolese people were able to take part in the governance of their country; and a cessation of hostilities prevailed throughout much of the country. Although the country remained divided by a line of confrontation between the forces of five foreign armies, agreement had been reached for them to pull back as a first step towards a withdrawal of all foreign forces from the DRC. Under his concept of operations, MONUC would monitor and verify the disengagement. The dire humanitarian crisis also needed to be addressed.

In official communiqués on private meetings of the Council with the Political Committee on 21 [S/PV.4280] and 22 [S/PV.4281] February, it was stated that a constructive dialogue had taken place and that Sir Ketumile Masire had responded to questions posed by Council members.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 February [meeting 4282], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1341 (2001). The draft [S/2001/157] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1234(1999) of 9 April 1999, 1258(1999) of 6 August 1999, 1265(1999) of 17 September 1999, 1273(1999) of 5 November 1999, 1279(1999) of 30 November 1999, 1291(2000) of 24 February 2000, 1296(2000) of 19 April 2000, 1304(2000) of 15 June 2000, 1323(2000) of 13 October 2000 and 1332(2000) of 14 December 2000 and the statements by its President of 13 July 1998 (S/PRST/1998/20), 31 August 1998 (S/PRST/1998/26), 11 December 1998 (S/PRST/1998/36), 24 June 1999 (S/PRST/1999/17), 26 January 2000 (S/PRST/2000/2), 5 May 2000 (S/PRST/2000/15), 2 June 2000 (S/PRST/2000/20) and 7 September 2000 (S/PRST/2000/28),

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and of all States in the region,

Reaffirming also the obligation of all States to refrain from the use of force against the territorial integrity and political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

Reaffirming further the sovereignty of the Democratic Republic of the Congo over its natural resources, and noting with concern reports of the illegal exploitation of the country's assets and the potential consequences of these actions for security conditions and the continuation of hostilities,

Expressing its alarm at the dire consequences of the prolonged conflict for the civilian population throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular the increase in the number of refugees and displaced persons and stressing the urgent need for substantial humanitarian assistance to the Congolese population,

Expressing its deep concern at all violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, including atrocities against civilian populations, especially in the eastern provinces,

Deeply concerned at the increased rate of HIV/AIDS infection, in particular amongst women and girls as a result of the conflict,

Gravely concerned by the continued recruitment and use of child soldiers by armed forces and groups, including cross-border recruitment and abduction of children,

Reaffirming its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Reaffirming its support for the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement, as well as the Kampala plan and the Harare sub-plans for disengagement and redeployment,

Stressing the importance of giving new impetus to the peace process in order to secure the full and definitive withdrawal of all foreign troops from the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Also stressing the importance of advancing the political process called for under the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement and facilitating national reconciliation,

Recalling the responsibilities of all parties to cooperate in the full deployment of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and noting with satisfaction the recent statements by the President of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and his assurances of support for the deployment of the Mission,

Welcoming the participation of the members of the Political Committee of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement in its meetings of 21 and 22 February 2001, and stressing the need for the parties to honour the commitments they made to take concrete steps to advance the peace process,

Commending the outstanding work of Mission personnel in challenging conditions, and noting the strong leadership of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 12 February 2001 and his conclusion that the necessary conditions of respect for the ceasefire, a valid plan for disengagement and cooperation with the Mission are being met,

Determining that the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continues to pose a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Notes the recent progress made in achieving respect for the ceasefire, and urgently calls on all parties to the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement not to resume hostilities and to implement this agreement, as well as the agreements reached in Kampala and Harare and the relevant Security Council resolutions;

2. Demands once again that Ugandan and Rwandan forces and all other foreign forces withdraw from the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in compliance with paragraph 4 of its resolution 1304 (2000) and the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement; and urges these forces to take urgent steps to accelerate this withdrawal;

3. Demands that the parties implement fully the Kampala plan and the Harare sub-plans for disengagement and redeployment of forces without reservations within the 14-day period stipulated in the Harare Agreement, starting from 15 March 2001;

4. Welcomes the commitment by the Rwandan authorities in their letter of 18 February 2001 to withdraw their forces from Pweto in accordance with the Harare Agreement, calls on them to implement this commitment, and calls on other parties to respect this withdrawal;

5. Welcomes also the commitment of the Ugandan authorities to reduce immediately by two battalions the strength of their forces in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, calls on the Ugandan authorities to implement this commitment, and calls on the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to verify it;

6. Urges the parties to the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement to prepare and adopt not later than 15 May 2001, in close liaison with the Mission, a precise plan and schedule which, in accordance with the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement, would lead to the completion of the orderly withdrawal of all foreign troops from the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and requests the Secretary-General to report to it by 15 April 2001 on the progress of these efforts;

7. Demands that all the parties refrain from any offensive military action during the process of disengagement and withdrawal of foreign forces;

8. Urges all the parties to the conflict, in close liaison with the Mission, to prepare by 15 May 2001 for immediate implementation prioritized plans for the disarmament, demobilization, reintegration, repatriation or resettlement of all armed groups referred to in annex A, chapter 9.1, of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement, and demands that all parties cease all forms of assistance and cooperation with these groups and use their influence to urge such groups to cease their activities;

9. Condemns the massacres and atrocities committed in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and demands once again that all the parties concerned put an immediate end to violations of human rights and international humanitarian law;

10. Demands that all armed forces and groups concerned bring an effective end to the recruitment, training and use of children in their armed forces, calls upon them to extend full cooperation to the Mission, the United Nations Children's Fund and humanitarian organizations for speedy demobilization, return and rehabilitation of such children, and requests the Secretary-General to entrust the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict with pursuing these objectives on a priority basis;

11. Calls upon all parties to ensure the safe and unhindered access of relief personnel to all those in need, and recalls that the parties must also provide guarantees for the safety, security and freedom of movement of United Nations and associated humanitarian relief personnel;

12. Calls also upon all the parties to respect the principles of neutrality and impartiality in the delivery of humanitarian assistance;

13. Calls upon the international community to increase its support to humanitarian relief activities within the Democratic Republic of the Congo and in neighbouring countries affected by the crisis in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

14. Reminds all parties of their obligations with respect to the security of civilian populations under the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949 and stresses that occupying forces should be held responsible for human rights violations in the territory under their control;

15. Welcomes the expressed willingness of the authorities of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to proceed with the inter-Congolese dialogue under the aegis of the neutral Facilitator, Sir Ketumile Masire, and in this regard welcomes the announcement by the President of the Democratic Republic of the Congo at the Summit in Lusaka on 15 February 2001 that the Facilitator has been invited to Kinshasa, and calls upon all Congolese parties to take immediate concrete steps to take forward the inter-Congolese dialogue;

16. Reiterates that the Mission shall cooperate closely with the Facilitator of the inter-Congolese dialogue, provide support and technical assistance to him, and coordinate the activities of other United Nations agencies to this effect;

17. Calls upon all the parties to the conflict to cooperate fully in the deployment and operations of the Mission including through full implementation of the provisions and the principles of the Status-of-Forces Agreement throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and reaffirms that it is the responsibility of all the parties to ensure the security of United Nations personnel, together with associated personnel;

18. Requests the parties, as a follow-up to the discussions on this matter at the Lusaka Summit on 15 February 2001, to relocate the Joint Military Commission to Kinshasa, co-locating it at all levels with the Mission, and calls upon the authorities of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to ensure the security of all the Commission members;

19. Reaffirms the authorization contained in resolution 1291(2000) and the mandate set out in its resolution for the expansion and deployment of the Mission, and endorses the updated concept of operations put forward by the Secretary-General in his report of 12 February 2001, with a view to the deployment of all the civilian and military personnel required to monitor and verify the implementation by the parties of the ceasefire and disengagement plans, stressing that this disengagement is a first step towards the full and definitive withdrawal of all foreign troops from the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

20. Emphasizes that it will be prepared to consider a further review of the concept of operations for the Mission, when appropriate and in the light of developments, in order to monitor and verify the withdrawal of foreign troops and the implementation of the plan mentioned in paragraph 8 above and, in coordination with existing mechanisms, to enhance security on the border of the Democratic Republic of the Congo with Rwanda, Uganda and Burundi, and requests the Secretary-General to make proposals when appropriate;

21. Reaffirms that it is ready to support the Secretary-General if and when he deems that it is necessary and it determines that conditions allow it to deploy troops in the border areas in the east of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including possibly in Goma or Bukavu;

22. Welcomes the dialogue initiated between the authorities of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Burundi, urges them to continue their efforts, and emphasizes in this respect that the settlement of the crisis in Burundi would contribute positively to the settlement of the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

23. Welcomes also the recent meetings of the parties, including the meeting of the Presidents of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda, encourages them to intensify their dialogue with the goal of achieving regional security structures based on common interest and mutual respect for the territorial integrity, national sovereignty and security of both States, and emphasizes in this respect that the disarmament and demobilization of and cessation of any support to the ex-Rwandese Armed Forces and Interahamwe forces will facilitate the settlement of the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

24. Expresses its full support for the work of the expert panel on the illegal exploitation of natural resources and other forms of wealth in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and once again urges the parties to the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the other parties concerned to cooperate fully with it;

25. Reaffirms that it attaches the highest importance to the cessation of the illegal exploitation of the natural resources of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, affirms that it is ready to consider the necessary actions to put an end to this exploitation, and awaits with interest in this respect the final conclusions of the expert panel, including the conclusions relating to the level of co-operation of States with the expert panel;

26. Reaffirms also that an international conference on peace, security, democracy and development in the Great Lakes region, with participation by all the Governments of the region and all the other parties concerned, should be organized at the appropriate time under the aegis of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity with a view to strengthening stability in the region and working out conditions that will enable everyone to enjoy the right to live peacefully within national borders;

27. Expresses its intention to monitor closely progress by the parties in implementing the requirements of the present resolution and to undertake a mission to the region, possibly in May 2001, to monitor progress and discuss the way forward;

28. Expresses its readiness to consider possible measures which could be imposed, in accordance with its responsibilities and obligations under the Charter of the United Nations, in case of failure by parties to comply fully with this resolution;

29. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Referring to resolution 1341(2001), the Secretary-General proposed to the Council on 18 April [S/2001/405] the names of 40 States to be included in the list of countries contributing military personnel to MONUC. The Council took note of the proposal on 24 April [S/2001/406].

Communications (February-April). On 26 February [S/2001/174], the DRC welcomed Security Council resolution 1341(2001) and reaffirmed its position on the inter-Congolese dialogue, disengagement, cooperation with MONUC, the collocation of MONUC and the Joint Military Commission (JMC) of the Political Committee, respect for human rights, provision of humanitarian aid and further deployment of MONUC along the borders with Rwanda. Referring to that letter, Uganda, on 14 March [S/2001/224], said that the reason for insecurity along the borders of the DRC was the presence of armed groups who were using the DRC as a base against neighbouring countries. Uganda refuted the charge that it was directly involved in the inter-ethnic fighting between the Hema and the Lendu and expressed support for the DRC peace process.

The EU, in a 27 February statement [S/2001/200], welcomed the Council's action, noted the commitment of the parties to implement the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement and called on them to take immediate measures to permit the disengagement and withdrawal of their troops. It would consider appropriate measures if parties failed to honour their commitments.

On 19 March [S/2001/246], Namibia claimed that MLC rebels in the DRC had attacked an allied forces' ferry on a supply mission, in violation of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement.

The DRC stated on 3 April [S/2001/320] that it had received information concerning Burundi's announcement that it was withdrawing three of its battalions from the towns of Pweto and Kalemie, in the province of Katanga, which demonstrated the extent to which Burundi was involved in destabilizing the DRC. The DRC called on the Council to demand that Burundi, which was not a party to the Lusaka Agreement, withdraw immediately its remaining troops from the DRC. On 4 May [S/2001/441], Burundi denied that it had announced the withdrawal of any troops as the DRC claimed. It intended to pursue the dialogue with the DRC on security along the common border and on implementing the Lusaka Agreement.

On 16 April [S/2001/361], the DRC requested the Council to hold an emergency meeting to discuss recent developments concerning the deployment of MONUC, including the blocking by Rwanda and RCD-Goma of the landing of a UN aircraft carrying peacekeepers. In addition, RCD-Goma had not withdrawn from the front line as agreed in the disengagement plan and had hindered the movement of MONUC forces. The DRC urged the Council to apply sanctions against Rwanda and RCD-Goma.

Report of Secretary-General (April). In response to resolution 1341(2001), the Secretary-General issued his seventh report on MONUC on 17 April [S/2001/373]. He noted that President

Kabila had reaffirmed his acceptance of Sir Ketumile Masire as Facilitator of the inter-Congolese dialogue and President Kagame had confirmed Rwanda's intention to disengage its forces 200 kilometres from forward positions.

In an effort to pursue the inter-Congolese dialogue, President Kabila had met with Sir Ketumile in March and they agreed that the process for national dialogue would be as inclusive as possible. On 12 March, President Kabila met with Congolese political and civil society representatives to review the regulation of political activity. However, some main opposition groups did not attend. Subsequently, the Government recommended amendments to laws, which, if adopted, would allow all political parties to operate.

The military situation remained generally calm with significant ceasefire violations reported only around Bolomba in Equateur province. Government and allied forces alleged repeated attacks by FLC against their positions and against resupply ferries in that area. Meanwhile, RPA troops began withdrawing from positions around Pweto in Katanga province on 28 February. The withdrawal was monitored by MONUC military observers. At the same time, three battalions of the Burundian army were reportedly repatriated, leaving two battalions in the DRC. The repatriation of one Ugandan battalion was completed on 11 April. Beginning on 15 March, the date set for the start of disengagement in Security Council resolution 1341(2001), RCD forces withdrew from Pweto to 15 kilometres to the east, as observed by MONUC. On 23 March, the JMC adopted a supplementary protocol to the Harare disengagement sub-plans to take into account RCD's decision to withdraw its forces to a distance of 15 rather than 200 kilometres. The protocol included arrangements for new RCD defensive positions, including at Pweto and Ikela airport. Withdrawals by FAC were observed, despite delays, but there was no indication of disengagement by FLC. Rwanda and Uganda maintained their forces some 100 kilometres from Kisangani. However, RCD elements, citing security concerns, remained in the city, blocking the deployment of MONUC.

The Political Committee, on 6 April, endorsed the concept of operations and timetable for the first phase of the draft plan prepared by JMC for the disarmament, demobilization, reintegration, repatriation and/or resettlement of armed groups (DDRRR), and approved the concept of the orderly withdrawal of all foreign forces from the country, including a calendar. JMC and MONUC would monitor the withdrawal.

As at 11 April, MONUC had a total of 288 liaison officers and military observers. The most serious threat to the security of UN personnel stemmed from lawlessness and the actions of armed groups. While freedom of movement had improved for MONUC, it continued to experience difficulties in negotiations with RCD over deployment locations of sector headquarters and guard units in Goma, Kalemie and Kisangani, and with FLC over deployment to Basankusu. In accordance with the Harare disengagement sub-plan, a 56-day period of verification began on 29 March, during which MONUC military observers would verify the disengagements and redeployments across four areas, a task that was complicated by the danger of mines and the increase in defensive positions in the revised Harare sub-plans, possibly requiring additional MONUC military observers.

The humanitarian situation in the DRC continued to be a cause for grave concern despite some marginal improvements, including a slight reduction in the total number of displaced persons (1.89 million). The number of persons in critical need of food remained at an estimated 16 million. There had been discernible improvements in the Government's attitude regarding respect for human rights as well as some reduction in violence and ethnic tension in the eastern provinces.

The Secretary-General reported that considerable additional work would need to be done in order to produce plans for a MONUC mandate in an eventual third phase of deployment. The second phase, essentially a technical military operation of limited scope, had been launched, whereas the third could require a significant expansion in mandate and size for DDRRR functions, ensuring the withdrawal of all foreign forces and securing the borders. The Secretary-General mentioned some of the anticipated difficulties, including the need for an interim civilian administration, the provision of humanitarian assistance and basic services, security of local populations following the withdrawal of forces, repair of infrastructure and averting human rights violations.

In general, the Secretary-General found that much had changed since the beginning of the year. It was time for all parties to pull back to their new defensive positions, as some had done, so that MONUC could continue its verification operations under phase II and begin the more difficult phase III, currently being planned. He welcomed the bilateral contacts that had taken place between the DRC and Uganda, as well as between the other parties.

Communications (April/May). On 27 April [S/2001/420], the DRC informed the Security Council of the murder of six staff of the International Committee of the Red Cross near the town of Bunia, close to the Ugandan border; it alleged that Ugandan troops were most likely responsible. Uganda denied those charges on 8 May [S/2001/452]. On 7 May [S/2001/461], Uganda announced it would completely withdraw its forces from 10 positions in the DRC, examine whether to maintain a presence in two other locations, and maintain deployment in the Rwenzori mountains until security concerns had been addressed. Rwanda, on 7 May [S/2001/469], also objected to claims made by the DRC in the 27 April letter, in particular claims linking Rwandan authorities to criminal and mafia elements.

On 10 May [S/2001/466], Zambia issued the text of the Declaration of Fundamental Principles of the Inter-Congolese Political Negotiations, signed in Lusaka on 4 May by the Congolese signatories to the Lusaka Agreement (the DRC Government, MLC, RCD and RCD-ML). Among the principles were national reconciliation and a new political order as a basis for rebuilding the DRC; inclusion of the political opposition and representatives of the Forces Vives to designate their representatives to the inter-Congolese dialogue; the organization of free and transparent elections; and the formation of a restructured, integrated army.

Security Council mission to Great Lakes

The Security Council, following consultations and in response to its resolution 1341(2001) (see p. 120), sent a 12-member mission to the Great Lakes region (15-26 May) to monitor progress by the parties to the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement in implementing the resolution [S/2001/521]. It held extensive talks with leaders of several States, as well as opposition forces and others involved in the peace process. The mission noted that, for the first time since the outbreak of the DRC conflict, the outlines of a solution appeared to be taking shape; it stressed the urgency of taking advantage of that window of opportunity. Among the positive signs was the attitude displayed by President Kabila towards the peace process and MONUC. The mission observed that the ceasefire had held for four months and that the belligerents' forces had disengaged from the confrontation line, enabling MONUC to deploy its guard units and military observers to their designated locations. President Kabila's repeal of a law banning political parties was a significant step toward ameliorating the political environment. Nonetheless, obstacles remained. The mission expressed concern about the reluctance of Jean-Pierre Bemba, the leader of FLC, to disengage his forces, which were some 100 kilometres beyond the positions agreed to under the Harare disengagement plan. The DDRRR plans for armed groups needed to be finalized, operational sub-plans needed to be drawn up and signed by the military commanders of all parties, and the withdrawal of foreign forces needed to be conducted in a phased and orderly manner.

The mission recommended that the Council approve a transition to phase III of MONUC operations on the basis of forthcoming recommendations by the Secretary-General. During that phase, MONUC would assist the parties in carrying out phased withdrawal of all foreign forces and for DDRRR of armed groups. The co-location of JMC with MONUC would help them to coordinate military planning for operations. The mission impressed upon RCD and the Political Committee the need to demilitarize Kisangani, the presence of RCD forces there being a violation of resolution 1304(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 131].

Aware of the security concerns of the civilian population in the areas to be evacuated by foreign forces, the mission said that some form of civil administration, including police, would be essential. Such concerns needed to be addressed by the Congolese parties in the context of the inter-Congolese dialogue. In the mission's view, DDRRR of armed groups was the key to ending the conflict in the DRC. The Political Committee members had assured the mission that they would provide the necessary information on the armed groups to JMC in order to facilitate planning for that goal. The mission affirmed that peace could not be restored until all foreign forces had departed and welcomed indications that some foreign contingents had already withdrawn. The mission considered it indispensable for the return to peace to be accompanied by increased economic activity, which the international community should mobilize to assist. MONUC could play an important role in reopening the riverine network to stimulate trade and facilitate the movement of persons and goods, including MONUC supplies. The Security Council looked forward to receiving further details concerning the proposed Congo River Basin Commission comprising the Congolese parties, UN agencies and the Governments of the Republic of the Congo and the Central African Republic, under the chairmanship of MONUC. The mission also called for a halt to the illegitimate exploitation of the natural resources of the DRC (see p. 140), respect for human rights by all the parties and cessation of the use of child soldiers. In that regard, it recommended the deployment of additional human rights observers in the DRC. The mission proposed that, at the appropriate time, an international conference on the Great Lakes region be held to promote peace, security and development.

Annexed to the mission's report [S/2001/521/Add.1] were a statement issued in Kinshasa on 21 May by the mission at the close of its visit to that city; a communiqué issued after a joint meeting of the Political Committee and the mission in Lusaka on 22 May [S/2001/525]; a draft plan issued by JMC on DDRRR of all armed groups in the DRC, the handing over of mass killers, perpetrators of crimes against humanity and other war criminals, and disarmament of all Congolese civilians who were illegally armed; and a plan issued by JMC for the orderly withdrawal of all foreign forces from the DRC.

During the Security Council consideration of the mission's report on 30 May [meeting 4323], the head of the mission, Mr. Levitte, said that the mission had obtained assurances from Mr. Bemba, on the one hand, and the Political Committee, on the other, that on 1 June FLC forces would withdraw from the zones they were occupying to the agreed positions set out in the communiqué adopted by the Political Committee and the mission. There was a parallel decision to send humanitarian observers to Equateur province, as elsewhere throughout the DRC, in order to improve the human rights and humanitarian situations. In the economic field, the mission had announced some 40 small quick-impact projects, to be carried out in areas where MONUC troops were deployed, and the reopening on 7 June of the Congo River to commercial navigation as a result of the presence of a MONUC riverine unit. Urgent matters that needed to be dealt with included the withdrawal of foreign troops from and demilitarization of Kisangani, the collocation of JMC and MONUC and a transition to the third phase of MONUC deployment. In that regard, Mr. Levitte observed that the ceiling of 5,537 forces, as decided by the Council in resolution 1291(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 123], remained adequate but further planning was required.

Extension of MONUC mandate

Report of Secretary-General (June). The Secretary-General, in his eighth report on MONUC, dated 8 June [S/2001/572], described developments since his previous report and made recommendations for future activities of the Mission, whose mandate was due to expire the following week. He reported that Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations Jean-Marie Guéhenno visited the area in mid-April and urged all parties to cooperate with MONUC. In the region, there had been signs of rapprochement, including a number of visits by heads of State for talks on implementation of the Lusaka Agreement and security concerns. A meeting of the Central Organ of the OAU Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution (Lomé, Togo, 19 May) expressed satisfaction at the new disposition of the DRC Government and other parties to the Lusaka Agreement. President Museveni of Uganda, in a note verbale dated 3 May [S/2001/357], said that Ugandan forces would soon be withdrawn from the DRC and advised that his Government was considering withdrawing from the Lusaka peace process. The Secretary-General appealed to President Museveni not to abandon the process. Uganda later affirmed that it would remain party to the Lusaka Agreement but reserved the right to withdraw if it remained dissatisfied with the Agreement's implementation [S/2001/461].

Following intensive consultations by Sir Ketumile Masire, the neutral Facilitator, representatives of the DRC Government and the rebel movements agreed on 4 May on a set of principles to serve as the framework for the inter-Congolese dialogue. A preparatory meeting to the dialogue was scheduled for 16 July. As a result of the new political climate, some exiled political opponents returned to the DRC.

The military situation remained generally calm, with significant ceasefire violations reported only around Bolomba in Equateur province in early May, allegedly between FLC and FAC. As at 8 June, MONUC had a total of 2,366 military personnel, including 497 liaison officers and military observers, stationed throughout the country and in capitals of surrounding countries. Although MONUC enjoyed good cooperation with the Government and its allies, it experienced difficulties and delays from RCD on many issues, specifically the procurement of goods and services due to RCD's insistence on local suppliers. FLC had also caused unreasonable delays for MONUC deployment.

MONUC's verification process expanded to include all four sectors in its supervision of the movements of the forces; cooperation from the parties varied but was generally satisfactory. Logistics presented problems, in some cases requiring the establishment of forward refuelling bases because of the remote location of some of the new defensive positions. Disengagement and verification were almost complete in three of the four sectors. As at 4 June, 69 of the designated 96 redeployment positions had been visited and the disengagement of forces in those areas had been verified. The one area where disengagement had been unsatisfactory was Equateur province, where the rebel forces were controlled by FLC leader Mr. Bemba, who cited fears for the safety of the civilian populations in the areas to be evacuated by his troops. MONUC worked with the parties to secure the withdrawal of Ugandan and Zimbabwean troops and equipment from certain areas.

The security situation in the eastern provinces remained highly volatile. RCD announced on 29 May that its forces had captured the airfield of Kilembwe in South Kivu, which, it alleged, had been used by FAC to resupply ex-FAR and Interahamwe militias. RCD accused the Government of seeking to transfer the war to the eastern regions, alleging a sharp increase in the number of attacks by armed groups since the President had assumed office. An envoy from Burundi, at a meeting of the Political Committee on 21 May, reported that a large-scale eastward movement of rebels of the Front pour la défense de la démocratie (FDD) had taken place over the preceding few months, with a third of the FDD rebels having returned to Burundi, where they were responsible for the upsurge in violence in and around Bujumbura. Rwanda and Uganda continued to maintain their forces some 100 kilometres from Kisangani, but RCD military elements remained in the city.

JMC, in collaboration with MONUC, was developing plans for the withdrawal of foreign forces and for DDRRR of the armed groups identified in the Lusaka Agreement. In that regard, the Security Council mission had insisted that the parties should provide information concerning numbers, locations, assembly areas, withdrawal routes and timetables in order to allow the United Nations to make its own plans to assist the parties and to monitor the withdrawal. On the basis of that information, MONUC would draw up plans and modalities for UN assistance. As at 8 June, only Angola and Uganda had provided information on their forces in the DRC. Further progress in developing a detailed plan for approval by the parties could not be made until Namibia, Rwanda and Zimbabwe provided information on their forces. During the reporting period, the four regional Joint Military Commissions had co-located with the MONUC sector headquarters, enabling members to be involved in the verification of the disengagement and redeployment of forces.

The Secretary-General cautioned that it would be precipitous to enter a third phase of MONUC deployment before the completion of the disengagement and verification phase and without the benefit of realistic and approved plans; nevertheless, the momentum generated by the disengagement of forces and the withdrawal of foreign forces must not be lost. The Secretariat had therefore updated MONUC's concept of operations to ensure that the Mission had the necessary resources to complete the current phase and to prepare for the next one, which would involve continuing to monitor the presence of forces in the new defensive positions, as well as any further withdrawals of foreign contingents, and would require additional military personnel and equipment. An expansion of MONUC's presence in the sector headquarters in Kisangani, Kalemie, Kananga and Mbandaka was also necessary in the form of civilian (political, humanitarian, human rights, child protection and public information staff) and military personnel. A mine action centre should be established in MONUC headquarters, with subsidiary cells in each sector headquarters. Due to a lack of trained police and a vacuum in the security situation that would follow the withdrawal of foreign forces, the deployment of a small civilian police component with MONUC was envisaged, to prepare recommendations for an expanded civilian police component wherever MONUC military personnel were deployed and to advise local authorities. MONUC would also support the opening of the internal waterway system, including through the deployment of two riverine units. Since MONUC would be called upon to assist with DDRRR functions, military and civilian support staff would need to be deployed as part of the transition to phase III. As part of its public information capability, it was envisaged that a radio studio would be set up in Kinshasa with transmitters in five locations. Programming would cover MONUC activities, the peace process, the DDRRR programme and the inter-Congolese dialogue. To strengthen the civilian component, the Secretary-General intended to appoint a Deputy Special Representative with responsibility for coordination within the Mission, as well as between MONUC and other UN agencies and donors operating in the DRC.

Given the scale of the country and the degraded infrastructure, the revised concept of operations provided for a progressive build-up of capabilities in personnel, logistics and equipment in order to position MONUC to respond in an effective manner once the parties began withdrawal of foreign troops and DDRRR. The revised concept envisaged an increase of up to 2,500 military personnel over the 3,000 authorized under the current MONUC mandate, thus remaining within the force level of 5,537 approved by the Security Council in resolution 1291(2000).

The Secretary-General was gratified to note that the parties continued to adhere to the cease-fire; however, reports of the eastward movement of armed groups and their recent incursions into Burundi, Rwanda and the United Republic of Tanzania were disturbing. There was speculation that the armed groups were moving out of the DRC to evade participation in the DDRRR programme. The Secretary-General said that there could be no lasting peace in the DRC without a comprehensive settlement in Burundi and he was gratified by the recent meetings of regional heads of State. He welcomed the DRC Government's cooperation with MONUC and called on the rebel movements to extend the same level of cooperation. The substantial compliance of the parties with the Harare disengagement plan, as monitored and verified by MONUC, was also a matter for encouragement. However, the reluctance of FLC to disengage its forces in Equateur province remained a concern. The plans drawn up by JMC and the Political Committee, in consultation with MONUC, on troop withdrawal and DDRRR did not constitute a sufficient basis for further action by the United Nations at that point, the Secretary-General said. He called on the parties to provide, as soon as possible, the information requested. Though incomplete, the progress made in the disengagement of forces (phase II of MONUC) demanded a follow-up; therefore, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council authorize a transition to the third phase of MONUC deployment that would not require an increase in the authorized military strength. A transition with an enlarged civilian component and a new civilian police unit would eventually lead to the third phase, DDRRR. The Secretary-General, emphasizing that MONUC would be engaged in the DRC for a considerable time to come, recommended that the Council extend its mandate for a year, until 15 June 2002.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 15 June [meeting 4329], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1355(2001). The draft [S/2001/587] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1234(1999) of 9 April 1999, 1258(1999) of 6 August 1999, 1265(1999) of 17 September 1999, 1273(1999) of 5 November 1999, 1279(1999) of 30 November 1999, 1291(2000) of 24 February 2000, 1296(2000) of 19 April 2000, 1304(2000) of 15 June 2000, 1323(2000) of 13 October 2000, 1332(2000) of 14 December 2000 and 1341(2001) of 22 February 2001 and the statements by its President of 13 July 1998 (S/PRST/1998/20), 31 August 1998 (S/PRST/1998/26), 11 December 1998 (S/PRST/1998/36), 24 June 1999 (S/PRST/1999/17), 26 January 2000 (S/PRST/2000/2), 5 May 2000 (S/PRST/2000/15), 2 June 2000 (S/PRST/2000/20), 7 September 2000 (S/PRST/2000/28) and 3 May 2001 (S/PRST/2001/13),

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and of all States in the region,

Reaffirming also the obligation of all States to refrain from the use of force against the territorial integrity and political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

Reaffirming further the sovereignty of the Democratic Republic of the Congo over its natural resources,

Expressing its alarm at the dire consequences of the prolonged conflict for the civilian population throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular the increase in the number of refugees and displaced persons, and stressing the urgent need for substantial humanitarian assistance to the Congolese population,

Expressing its deep concern at all violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, including atrocities against civilian populations, especially in the eastern provinces,

Deeply concerned at the increased rate of HIV/AIDS infection, in particular amongst women and girls in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Gravely concerned by the continued recruitment and use of child soldiers by armed forces and groups, including cross-border recruitment and abduction of children,

Reaffirming its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Reaffirming its support for the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement, as well as the Kampala plan and the Harare sub-plans for disengagement and redeployment,

Reaffirming that the primary responsibility for implementing the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement lies with the parties,

Reiterating its support for the inter-Congolese dialogue and the Facilitator, and stressing the need for the parties to resolve outstanding substantive and procedural issues,

Recalling the responsibilities of all parties to cooperate in the full deployment of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Endorsing the report of the Security Council mission to the Great Lakes region, and recalling the communiqué of the joint meeting of the Political Committee for the Implementation of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the United Nations Security Council mission to the Great Lakes region,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 8 June 2001 and its recommendations,

Determining that the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continues to pose a threat to international peace and security in the region,

A

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Notes with satisfaction that the ceasefire among the parties to the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement has been respected, welcomes the progress on disengagement and redeployment noted in the Secretary-General's report of 8 June 2001, and reiterates its urgent call on all parties to the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement to implement this agreement, as well as the agreements reached in Kampala and Harare and all relevant Security Council resolutions;

2. Demands that the Front de Libération du Congo disengage and redeploy its forces in accordance with the Harare sub-plans and the commitment it made to the Security Council mission to the Great Lakes region, in their meeting of 25 May 2001, and expresses its intention to monitor this process;

3. Demands once again that Ugandan and Rwandan forces and all other foreign forces withdraw from the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in compliance with paragraph 4 of its resolution 1304 (2000) and the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement, urges those forces to take the necessary steps to accelerate this withdrawal, and welcomes in this regard the decision by Ugandan authorities to start withdrawing their troops from the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

4. Calls upon all the parties to refrain from any offensive action during the process of disengagement and withdrawal of foreign forces, and expresses concern at recent reports of military operations in the Kivus;

5. Demands that the Rassemblement Congolais pour la Démocratie demilitarize Kisangani in accordance with resolution 1304(2000), and that all parties respect the demilitarization of the city and its environs;

6. Demands that all parties, including the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, cease immediately all forms of assistance and cooperation with all armed groups referred to in annex A, chapter 9.1, of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement;

7. Takes note of the plans drafted by the Political Committee for the orderly withdrawal of all foreign forces from the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and for the disarmament, demobilization, repatriation and reintegration of all armed groups in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and calls upon the parties to finalize these plans and to implement them as a matter of urgency;

8. With a view to ensuring the finalization of these plans, requests all parties that have not already done so to provide the Joint Military Commission, as soon as possible, with all necessary operational information on the withdrawal, including, inter alia, the numbers and locations of the foreign forces, their assembly areas and withdrawal routes and the timetable, and on disarmament, demobilization, repatriation and reintegration, including, inter alia, the numbers, location and armaments of the armed groups, and the proposed sites of their demobilization areas, in order to facilitate United Nations planning to assist the parties in the implementation of these plans;

9. Encourages the Presidents and Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda to intensify their dialogue with the goal of achieving regional security structures based on common interest and mutual respect for the territorial integrity, national sovereignty and security of both States, and emphasizes in this respect that the disarmament and demobilization of, and cessation of any support to, the ex-Forces Armées Rwandaises and Interahamwe forces are essential to the settlement of the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

10. Condemns the recent incursions by armed groups into Rwanda and Burundi;

11. Welcomes the dialogue initiated between the authorities of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Burundi, strongly urges them to continue their efforts, calls on all States in the region to bring to bear their influence on Burundian armed groups to encourage them to refrain from violence, to enter negotiations for a political settlement and to join the Arusha peace process, and demands that all States in the region cease any military support to such groups;

12. Stresses that a durable peace in the Democratic Republic of the Congo should not be achieved at the expense of peace in Burundi, and requests the Secretary-General as well as interested Member States to make proposals, on an urgent basis, on how best to address these interrelated crises;

13. Welcomes the announcement by the facilitator of the inter-Congolese dialogue of the organization of the preparatory meeting of the inter-Congolese dialogue on 16 July 2001, calls on all Congolese parties to commence that dialogue as soon as possible, preferably on Congolese soil, and to ensure a successful outcome, and welcomes in this regard the initial measures taken by the authorities of the Democratic Republic of the Congo towards the liberalization of political activities;

14. Calls upon all relevant parties to ensure that urgent child protection concerns, including disarmament, demobilization, repatriation and reintegration of child soldiers, the plight of girls affected by the conflict, the protection and safe return of refugee and internally displaced children, and the registration and reunification of unaccompanied or orphaned children, are addressed in all national, bilateral and regional dialogues, and that solutions are designed in accordance with international best practice;

15. Condemns the massacres and atrocities committed in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, demands once again that all the parties to the conflict put an immediate end to violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, and stresses that those responsible will be held accountable;

16. Reminds all parties of their obligations with respect to the security of civilian populations under the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949, and stresses that all forces present on the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo are responsible for preventing violations of international humanitarian law in the territory under their control;

17. Condemns strongly the attacks against the personnel of humanitarian organizations, and demands that the perpetrators be brought to justice;

18. Condemns the use of child soldiers, demands that all armed forces and groups concerned bring an end to all forms of recruitment, training and use of children in their armed forces, calls upon all parties to collaborate with the United Nations, humanitarian organizations and other competent bodies to ensure the expeditious demobilization, rehabilitation and reintegration of children abducted or enrolled in armed forces or groups and to allow their reunification with their families, and urges Member States to ensure adequate and sustained resources for long-term reintegration;

19. Calls upon all parties to ensure, in accordance with relevant international law, the full, safe and unhindered access of relief personnel to all those in need and the delivery of humanitarian assistance, in particular to all children affected by the conflict, and recalls that the parties must also provide guarantees for the safety, security and freedom of movement of

United Nations and associated humanitarian personnel;

20. Calls upon the international community to increase its support for humanitarian relief activities within the Democratic Republic of the Congo and in neighbouring countries affected by the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

21. Expresses its full support for the work of the Expert Panel on the illegal exploitation of natural resources and other forms of wealth in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and notes that the report of the Expert Panel of 12 April 2001 contains disturbing information about the illegal exploitation of Congolese resources by individuals, Governments and armed groups involved in the conflict and the link between the exploitation of the natural resources and other forms of wealth in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the continuation of the conflict;

22. Reaffirms that it attaches the highest importance to the cessation of the illegal exploitation of the natural resources of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and reaffirms that it is ready to consider the necessary actions to put an end to this exploitation;

23. Awaits in this respect the publication of the addendum to the report of the Expert Panel which should contain an updated evaluation of the situation, again urges all the parties to the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the other parties concerned to cooperate fully with the Expert Panel while ensuring necessary security for the experts, and welcomes the action taken by Ugandan authorities in setting up a commission of inquiry in this regard;

24. Stresses the link between the progress in the peace process and economic recovery of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, welcomes initial economic reforms undertaken by the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and underlines the urgent need for international economic assistance;

25. Stresses the importance of the restoration of river traffic, welcomes the reopening of the Congo and the Oubangui Rivers, calls urgently on all parties, and in particular the Rassemblement Congolais pour la Démocratie in the light of its recent public comments, to cooperate further in order to permit the re-establishment of economic links between, inter alia, Kinshasa, Mbandaka and Kisangani, and expresses its support for the proposed establishment of a Congo River Basin Commission comprising the Congolese parties, United Nations agencies and some neighbouring countries under the chairmanship of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

26. Stresses that durable peace can only be achieved if all the countries of the region are successful in defining amongst themselves the rules by which to promote security and development, and reaffirms in this regard that an international conference on peace, security, democracy and development in the region, with participation by all the Governments of the region and all the other parties concerned, should be organized at the appropriate time under the aegis of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity;

27. Expresses its intention to monitor closely progress by the parties in implementing the requirements and demands of the present resolution;

28. Expresses again its readiness to consider possible measures which could be imposed, in accordance with its responsibilities and obligations under the Charter of the United Nations, in case of failure by parties to comply fully with the present resolution and other relevant resolutions;

B

29. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo until 15 June 2002, and also decides to review progress at least every four months based on reporting by the Secretary-General;

30. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council, once all necessary information has been provided by the parties to the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement, and subject to the continuing cooperation of the parties, proposals concerning the way the Mission could assist in, monitor and verify the implementation by the parties of the plans referred to in paragraphs 7 and 8 above;

31. Approves the updated concept of operations put forward by the Secretary-General in paragraphs 84 to 104 of his report of 8 June 2001, including, for further planning purposes, the creation of a civilian police component and of an integrated civilian/military section to coordinate disarmament, demobilization, repatriation and reintegration operations, the strengthening of the Mission presence in Kisangani, and the strengthening of the Mission logistic support capability to support current and foreseen future deployment, with a view to preparing the transition towards the third phase of the deployment of the Mission after the necessary information has been provided by the parties;

32. Authorizes in this regard the Mission, consistent with the Secretary-General's report, to assist, upon request, and within its capabilities, in the early implementation, on a voluntary basis, of the disarmament, demobilization, repatriation and reintegration of armed groups, and requests the Secretary-General to deploy military observers in locations where early withdrawal is implemented, with a view to monitoring the process;

33. Reiterates the authorization contained in resolution 1291(2000) for up to 5,537 Mission military personnel, including observers as deemed necessary by the Secretary-General;

34. Requests the Secretary-General to expand the civilian component of the Mission, in accordance with the recommendations in his report, in order to assign to areas in which the Mission is deployed human rights personnel, so as to establish a human rights monitoring capacity, as well as civilian political affairs and humanitarian affairs personnel;

35. Calls upon the Secretary-General to ensure sufficient deployment of child protection advisers to ensure consistent and systematic monitoring and reporting on the conduct of the parties to the conflict as concerns their child protection obligations under humanitarian and human rights law and the commitments they have made to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict;

36. Stresses the need for an increased public information capacity, including the establishment of United Nations radio stations to promote understanding of the peace process and of the role of the Mission among local communities and the parties;

37. Calls upon all the parties to the conflict to cooperate fully in the deployment and operations of the Mission, including through full implementation of the provisions of the Status-of-Forces Agreement throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and reaffirms that it is the responsibility of all the parties to ensure the security of United Nations personnel, together with associated personnel;

38. Stresses the need for the co-location of the Joint Military Commission with the Mission in Kinshasa;

39. Reaffirms that it is ready to support the Secretary-General if and when he deems it necessary and when conditions allow it, in the context of viable security frameworks, to further deploy military personnel in the border areas in the east of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

40. Expresses its appreciation for the partnership established with the parties to the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement, which was strengthened during the last Security Council mission to the Great Lakes region, and reiterates that it is firmly determined to continue to provide assistance to the parties in their efforts to achieve peace;

41. Commends the outstanding work of Mission personnel who operate in challenging conditions, and expresses its strong support for the Special Representative of the Secretary-General;

42. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications (June/July). In mid-2001, the DRC drew the Security Council's attention to increased violence and tension in the country and the region. On 25 June [S/2001/634], it issued a statement on reports of a resurgence of violence in Burundi and Rwanda due to infiltrations from Congolese territory of Interahamwe and ex-FAR and Burundian rebels; it denied allegations that it was facilitating those infiltrations. Uganda, in a 3 July response [S/2001/665], denied allegations that it was harbouring those opposed to the Rwandan Government. On 27 June [S/2001/646], the DRC transmitted a press release issued after a meeting between President Kabila and President Denis Sassou-Nguesso of the Republic of the Congo, during which they discussed prospects for peace and the inter-Congolese dialogue, among other things.

On 5, 11, 13 and 18 July [S/2001/666, S/2001/685, S/2001/694, S/2001/709], the DRC alerted the Council to the lack of compliance by opposition groups to its resolutions calling for the disengagement and redeployment of forces; in particular the DRC mentioned FLC, the Uganda People's Defence Force and RCD-Goma, assisted by Rwanda. It charged Rwanda and RCD-Goma with trying to create a secessionist State in eastern DRC and said that Rwanda and its allies refused to demilitarize Kisangani. Responding on 19 July [S/2001/716], Rwanda stated that the DRC was using delaying tactics, including provocation, to sabotage the implementation of the Lusaka Agreement.

The EU General Affairs Council, in a 16 July statement [S/2001/729], said it considered the window of opportunity that had opened up earlier in regard to peacemaking efforts in the DRC to be still available in spite of risks of a deterioration in the situation. The EU intended to encourage a gradual and balanced resumption of aid and co-operation in the DRC; such engagement would depend on progress in implementing the Lusaka Agreement.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 24 July [meeting 4349], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/19 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council takes note with satisfaction of the progress made so far in the peace process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council calls on all the parties to the conflict to fulfil all their commitments, implement fully the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement and complete the disengagement and redeployment of their forces in accordance with the Kampala plan and the Harare sub-plans, which the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo will verify.

The Council finds it unacceptable that more than one year after the adoption of its resolution 1304 (2000) of 15 June 2000 containing the demand to completely demilitarize Kisangani, reiterated in resolution 1355 (2001) of 15 June 2001, the Rassemblement Congolais pour la Démocratie has thus far failed to comply with it. The Council calls on the Rassemblement Congolais pour la Démocratie to implement fully and immediately its obligation under resolution 1304 (2000), and notes that continued failure to do so may have future implications.

The Council reminds all the parties of their obligation to cooperate fully with the Organization Mission and of their obligations with respect to the security of civilian populations under the fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949. The Council urges the relevant parties to expedite the conclusion of their investigation into the killing of six International Committee of the Red Cross staff in eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo, to report their findings to the Committee and to bring the perpetrators to justice.

The Council calls on all parties to facilitate and support humanitarian efforts of the United Nations and non-governmental organizations. It stresses the importance of the work of the United Nations Humanitarian Coordinator.

The Council reiterates its call for the cessation of the illegal exploitation of the natural resources of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. In this regard, it calls on all parties to cooperate fully with the Expert Panel and, looking forward to the addendum to the report of the Panel, reiterates its readiness to consider the necessary actions to put an end to this exploitation.

The Council reiterates its demand on all parties to accelerate the finalization and the implementation of comprehensive plans for the orderly withdrawal of all foreign troops from the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and the disarmament, demobilization, reintegration, repatriation and resettlement of all armed groups referred to in annex A, chapter 9.1, of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement.

The Council expresses serious concern over the activities of the armed groups in the east of the country. It takes note with interest of the invitation by the President of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to the Mission to visit the camps where some members of the armed groups have reportedly been quartered by the Forces Armées Congolaises, and stresses the importance of the Mission assisting, within its capabilities, in the early implementation, on a voluntary basis, of the disarmament, demobilization, reintegration, repatriation and resettlement of these armed groups, in accordance with the authorization given in its resolution 1355(2001). The Council requests in this regard the donor community, in particular the World Bank and the European Union, to provide financial and in-kind contributions as soon as possible to the Mission in the implementation of this mission.

The Council reiterates its firm support for the inter-Congolese dialogue and the efforts of the Facilitator and his team in the field. It emphasizes the importance of an open, representative and inclusive dialogue, free from outside interference and involving civil society, leading to a consensus settlement. It calls on the Congolese parties to the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement to cooperate fully with the Facilitator to enable him to conduct the process in a swift and constructive manner. It expresses the hope that the dialogue can be held on Congolese soil, respecting the choice that the Congolese actors themselves will make. It encourages donors to continue to provide support to the Facilitator's mission.

The Council welcomes the recent high-level meetings between the Presidents of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Rwanda and Uganda and encourages them further to pursue the dialogue to find solutions to their common security concerns in accordance with the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement.

The Council reiterates its commitment to support full implementation of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement. It reaffirms that the primary responsibility for implementing the Agreement lies with the parties. The Council urges them to demonstrate the necessary political will by cooperating with each other and with the Mission in achieving this goal. It expresses its readiness to consider, subject to necessary progress made by the parties and to recommendations of the Secretary-General the possible expansion of the Mission if and when the mission enters its third phase.

The Council commends the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Ambassador Kamel Morjane, for his outstanding work and invaluable contribution to the peace process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

Appointment. The Secretary-General, on 31 July [S/2001/760], informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Amos Namanga Ngongi (Cameroon) as his Special Representative for the DRC, replacing Kamel Morjane (Tunisia). The Council took note of the decision on 2 August [S/2001/761].

Communications (August). The DRC, on 1 August [S/2001/759], condemned an alleged attempt by RCD-Goma to establish "federalism" in Congolese territories under Rwandan and Ugandan occupation, which, it said, was aimed at ending the peace process and undermining the chances for an inter-Congolese dialogue; it called on the Security Council to take enforcement action. Responding on 8 August [S/2001/774], Rwanda said that the DRC, frustrated because three quarters of the country was under the control of various Congolese rebels, was trying to convince international public opinion that its claims of secessionism and expansionism were true.

The sixteenth ministerial meeting of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa (Kinshasa, 13-17 August) [A/56/378-S/2001/890] welcomed the forthcoming preparatory meeting of the inter-Congolese dialogue and appealed to the Council to move ahead as soon as possible with the implementation of phase III of MONUC deployment.

Inter-Congolese dialogue

The preparatory meeting for the inter-Congolese dialogue was held in Gabarone, Botswana, from 20 to 24 August. Approximately 70 delegates from the Congolese signatory parties to the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement, as well as from civil society and every DRC province, took part. The Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Hédi Annabi, addressing the Security Council on 30 August [meeting 4361], described the meeting as remarkably successful. The parties agreed to conduct the dialogue itself in Addis Ababa, starting on 15 October, for an estimated period of 45 days. In a Declaration of Commitment, the participants agreed on key issues such as liberalization of political life in the DRC, respect for human rights, release of political prisoners and prisoners of war, freedom of movement of people and goods throughout the country, re-establishment of communication links and the rehabilitation of infrastructure, restitution of seized property, protection from arbitrary arrests, protection of natural resources from illegal exploitation, and the withdrawal of foreign troops in accordance with the Lusaka Agreement. Another key development that emerged in the margins of the preparatory talks was a meeting between President Kabila and rebel leaders, Mr. Bemba of FLC and Adolphe Onusumba of RCD. The Secretary-General, in his October report on MONUC (see below), described the outcome as an important exercise in confidence-building during which the parties were able to develop unofficial channels of communication. As requested by the Facilitator, the United Nations would help organize the dialogue [S/PV.4361].

The EU issued two statements on the inter-Congolese dialogue, on 17 and 30 August [S/2001/815, S/2001/836], welcoming the meeting and encouraging the parties to continue to work in the same spirit of compromise and conciliation as that which prevailed in Gaborone.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

Following a private meeting on 5 September [meeting 4364], the Security Council issued a communiqué [S/PV.4364] stating that it had heard a briefing by Sir Ketumile Masire, Facilitator of the inter-Congolese dialogue, who had responded to questions posed by Council members.

Also on 5 September [meeting 4365], following consultations among Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/22 on behalf of the Council.

The Security Council welcomes the success of the preparatory meeting of the inter-Congolese dialogue, held in Gaborone on 20-24 August 2001.

The Council reiterates its strong support for the inter-Congolese dialogue and for the efforts of the Facilitator and his team in the field. It calls on all the Congolese parties to further cooperate with each other and the Facilitator in the constructive spirit of Gaborone to ensure the successful outcome of the inter-Congolese dialogue starting on 15 October 2001, in Addis Ababa.

The Council stresses the importance of the dialogue to be free from outside interference, open, representative and inclusive, and emphasizes the need to ensure adequate representation of Congolese women in the process.

The Council encourages donors to provide further support to the Facilitator for the inter-Congolese dialogue and, in due course, the process of implementing a new political dispensation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council urges all the parties to the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement to press forward with the full and early implementation of that Agreement, including disarmament, demobilization, reintegration, repatriation and resettlement of the armed groups, and the withdrawal of foreign forces.

The inter-Congolese dialogue began in Addis Ababa on 15 October. However, because of insufficient resources, 80 participants attended instead of the more than 300 expected. The Secretary-General's Special Representative explained the circumstances to the Security Council on 24 October [meeting 4395]. The DRC raised objections about the reduced number of participants and refused to allow substantive issues to be addressed. On 21 October, the neutral Facilitator announced that the dialogue would be postponed until a later date. In a letter of 23 October [S/2001/998], the DRC gave its position on the Addis Ababa talks, emphasizing the need for them to be inclusive. South Africa offered to host the dialogue within one month and to assume most of the cost, a proposal to which the DRC and all the other component groups responded positively.

Communication. On 18 September [S/2001/884], the DRC alleged that RCD-Goma had appointed what they called "provincial assemblies" aimed at establishing federalism or a secessionist State in the Congolese territories occupied by Rwanda.

MONUC phase III

Report of Secretary-General (October). The Secretary-General, in his ninth report on MONUC, issued on 16 October [S/2001/970], stated that the overall situation in the DRC continued to develop in a largely positive direction. The ceasefire had held and the disengagement of forces and their redeployment to new defensive positions was effectively complete. Some foreign forces had been withdrawn from the territory. The preparatory meeting of the inter-Congolese dialogue was held successfully. At the same time, outbreaks of fighting had continued in the east of the country, where the ceasefire violations were mainly attributed to armed groups.

During a visit to the region from 1 to 5 September, the Secretary-General urged the DRC to bring an end to the fighting in the east, open a dialogue with Rwanda and cooperate with MONUC in preparing for the demobilization of the soldiers of Rwandan origin located at Kamina. In that regard, President Kabila announced that some 3,000 soldiers at that location would be demobilized shortly. The Secretary-General also met with representatives of civil society and with the RCD leadership in Kisangani, where he insisted on the earliest possible demilitarization of the town. In Kigali, he met with President Paul Kagame and urged him to use his influence to halt the fighting in eastern DRC. The President expressed his Government's willingness to take back the Rwandan former combatants currently in the DRC.

At a meeting of the Political Committee (Kigali, 14-15 September), the JMC decision to co-locate to Kinshasa with MONUC was endorsed. The Polical Committee criticized the United Nations for its "hesitancy" in deploying forces to the DRC.

On 29 September, armed elements, believed to be Mayi-Mayi militia (a term applied to local armed Congolese groups in opposition to Rwandan forces), attacked Kindu, apparently aiming for the RPA command headquarters and the airport. The attacks were repulsed by RCD troops occupying the town. On 16 August, a MONUC helicopter was hit by 14 bullets, fired by unidentified armed men, but the occupants were unhurt.

As at 15 October, MONUC's strength stood at 2,408 military personnel. A total of 77 military observer teams were inside the DRC, of which 46 were static and 31 were mobile. MONUC completed the verification of disengagement and re-deployment of the parties. All but one of the 96 new defensive positions were verified, thereby effectively ending that element of the Lusaka process. While much progress had been made in the south-eastern areas, there were some violations of the disengagement plan at Moliro, Pweto and Mani. Uganda had largely withdrawn its troops from Equateur province but had declared its intention to maintain three battalions in the country until a peace agreement was reached. The Namibian authorities indicated that they had withdrawn their troops except for two small elements. Zimbabwe declared the withdrawal of three battalions from Equateur province and the eastern part of the country. There had been no withdrawals by RPA.

In general, the parties provided satisfactory security for MONUC military and civilian personnel. However, RCD, which filed most of the allegations of ceasefire violations, did not in many cases provide timely security guarantees for investigation by MONUC. RCD continued to reject the demilitarization of Kisangani and maintained forces there, allegedly to counter the threat by the Mayi-Mayi and FAC.

The humanitarian situation in the DRC remained grave, with humanitarian agencies having access to fewer than half of the estimated 2,041,000 displaced people due to security constraints. The human rights situation, on the other hand, had improved as a result of the Government's efforts to establish human rights laws and standards.

At the time of the report, MONUC had nearly completed the second phase of its deployment and was faced with the tasks of the next phase—the total withdrawal of foreign forces and the disarmament and demobilization of armed groups. It would also be necessary to find durable solutions to the problem of armed groups, including the repatriation, resettlement and reintegration of ex-combatants into society. With regard to Rwandan former combatants, the objective would be to repatriate them to Rwanda as soon as possible after they were disarmed, rather than accommodating them for long periods in camps on Congolese territory. Screening of ex-combatants would largely be organized by the host country with the support of the United Nations. In that regard, the Secretary-General warned, it should be borne in mind that some members of ex-FAR and Interahamwe had taken part in the Rwandan genocide of 1994. He also cautioned that the armed groups operating in eastern DRC had not signed the Lusaka Agreement and continued to take part in armed hostilities.

The main role of MONUC in phase III would be to establish temporary reception centres where combatants could surrender their weapons to MONUC. They would then be demobilized, perhaps accompanied by their dependants, and transported back to Rwanda for reintegration. MONUC would assume a coordinating role in organizing the DDRRR effort but would rely on UN programmes and agencies for such practical tasks as camp management, medical support and provision of food, water and sanitation. MONUC would adopt a step-by-step approach in the eastern part of the DRC. It needed to assess the security situation in the area before deploying troops. Its initial objective would be to establish a mixed civilian and military presence, as well as a forward support base, probably at Kindu, and strengthen its presence in Kisangani once it was demilitarized. An initial group of 400 would have responsibility for establishing the necessary infrastructure for subsequent deployments, as well as investigating ceasefire violations, gathering information on the size and movement of armed groups, and facilitating disarmament and demobilization. The base would be gradually expanded to some 2,000 troops, including an aviation regiment with armed helicopters, an engineering unit, and riverine and ferry services. UN civilian personnel would work to increase humanitarian access, draw attention to human rights problems, gather information about armed groups, keep the local population informed through radio broadcasts about MONUC, and plan for disarmament and demobilization of armed groups, including child soldiers. A public information component would prepare for a UN radio network capable of broadcasting to the entire country.

To sustain the momentum in the peace process, the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council authorize MONUC to enter phase III of its deployment in accordance with the concept of operations he outlined. The initial deployment of troops in Kindu would remain within the limit of 5,537 troops already authorized. Significant assistance and funding would be required for peace-related operations.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October/November)

Following a closed meeting on 18 and 22 October [meeting 4391], the Security Council issued a communiqué [S/PV.4391] stating that it had heard briefings from the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the DRC and Major General Mountaga Diallo, MONUC Force Commander. The Special Representative had responded to questions by Council members and representatives of troop-contributing countries.

On 24 October [meeting 4396], following consultations among Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/29 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the recommendations of the Secretary-General on the next phase in the deployment of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, as contained in his report of 16 October 2001.

The Council supports the initiation of phase III of the deployment of the Mission within the currently mandated ceiling and, in particular, its deployment towards the east of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council reminds the parties to the conflict that they are responsible for the continuation of the peace process. It is up to them to create and to maintain conditions conducive to the start of phase III of the Mission by fully implementing the commitments they have undertaken. The Council will take its decisions on the future of phase III of the Mission after ascertaining that the parties to the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement are committed to continuing, in a spirit of partnership, to make the efforts necessary to advance the peace process. The next meeting between the Security Council and members of the Political Committee established by the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement will provide an opportunity to discuss these issues.

The Council recalls the importance it places on the implementation of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement and the relevant resolutions of the Council. In particular the Council:

—Calls on those States which have not yet done so to withdraw from the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in accordance with the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement and the relevant Security Council resolutions;

—Calls on all parties to cease any support for armed groups and to implement the process of disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, resettlement and reintegration of the groups referred to in annex A, chapter 9.1; of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement;

—Emphasizes the importance of the inter-Congolese dialogue and calls on the Congolese parties to work together for the success of this process; and —Demands the demilitarization of Kisangani, in conformity with its resolution 1304(2000).

The Council expresses serious concern at the worsening humanitarian and human rights situation, particularly in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and reiterates its call for all the parties to urgently address the human rights abuses, including those raised in the ninth report of the Secretary-General, in the Government-controlled territory, the territory controlled by the Front de Libération du Congo and the territory controlled by the Rassemblement Congolais pour la Démocratie.

Following a closed meeting on 9 November [meeting 4411], the Security Council issued a communiqué [S/PV.4411] stating that it had held a frank and constructive discussion with members of the Political Committee of the Lusaka Agreement. Also on 9 November [meeting 4412], the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1376 (2001). The draft [S/2001/1058] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions and statements by its President,

Reaffirming the obligation of all States to refrain from the use of force against the territorial integrity and political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations, and reaffirming also the political independence, the territorial integrity and the sovereignty of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including over its natural resources,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 16 October 2001 and its recommendations,

Welcoming the participation of the Political Committee for the implementation of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement in joint meetings held on 9 November 2001,

Determining that the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continues to pose a threat to international peace and security in the region,

1. Welcomes the general respect for the ceasefire among the parties to the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement, expresses nonetheless its concern at the hostilities in areas of the eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo and calls on the parties to cease any form of support to the armed groups, particularly in the east of the country;

2. Welcomes the withdrawal of some foreign forces from the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including the full Namibian contingent, as a positive step towards the full withdrawal of all foreign forces, and requests all States that have not yet done so to begin to implement, without delay, their full withdrawal in accordance with resolution 1304(2000) of 16 June 2000;

3. Demands once again that Kisangani be demilitarized rapidly and unconditionally in accordance with Security Council resolution 1304(2000), takes note of the pledge by the RCD-Goma during the 4411th meeting of 9 November 2001 fully to demilitarize the city, welcomes the decision of the Secretary-General to further deploy Mission personnel in this city, notably to contribute to the training of police, stresses that, once demilitarized, no party will be permitted to reoccupy the city militarily and welcomes in this regard the pledge by the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, during the same meeting, to respect this provision;

4. Expresses its support for the inter-Congolese dialogue, one of the key elements of the peace process, and for all efforts to promote this process, calls on the Congolese parties to work together for the success of the dialogue, and expresses its support for the facilitator and his call on the parties to make the dialogue fully inclusive;

5. Expresses its grave concern at the repeated human rights violations throughout the Democratic Republic of the Congo in particular in the territories under the control of the rebel groups party to the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement, and calls on all parties to put an end to such violations;

6. Expresses its serious concern with regard to the humanitarian situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and calls on the international community to increase, without delay, its support for humanitarian activities;

7. Expresses its serious concern with regard to the economic difficulties facing the Democratic Republic of the Congo, stresses that progress in the peace process and the economic recovery and development of the country are interdependent, and in this regard underlines the urgent need for increased international economic assistance in support of the peace process;

8. Reiterates its condemnation of all illegal exploitation of the natural resources of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, demands that such exploitation cease and stresses that the natural resources of the Democratic Republic of the Congo should not be exploited to finance the conflict in that country;

9. Emphasizes that there are links between the peace processes in Burundi and in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and, welcoming the recent progress in the Burundi process, invites the parties to the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement to work with the Burundian authorities to advance these two processes;

10. Supports the launching of phase III of the deployment of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo on the basis of the concept of operations detailed in paragraphs 59 to 87 of the Secretary-General's report and stresses, in this regard, the importance it attaches to the deployment of the Mission in the east of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in conformity with the new concept of operation and within the overall ceiling, including in the cities of Kindu and Kisangani;

11. Notes with concern the joint communiqué issued on 4 November 2001 by the Secretaries-General of the Mouvement de Libération du Congo and of the Rassemblement Congolais pour la Démocratie concerning the deployment of a joint special force in Kindu, and stresses that appropriate conditions will be necessary to allow the Mission to fulfil its role in Kindu and to ensure that discussions on the voluntary disarmament and demobilization of concerned armed groups take place in a neutral environment;

12. Affirms that the implementation of phase III of the deployment of the Mission requires the following steps from the parties and requests the Secretary-General to report on progress thereon:

- (i) The transmission to the Mission, as soon as possible and in accordance with its resolution 1355(2001) of 15 June 2001, of the necessary operational information for the planning of Mission support for the process of total withdrawal of foreign troops present in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including the number of foreign military personnel in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, their equipment and armament, their exit routes, and a precise timetable for implementation;
- (ii) The transmission to the Mission, as soon as possible and in accordance with its resolution 1355(2001), of the necessary operational information for the planning of the Mission's mandated role in the process of disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, resettlement and reintegration programme for the armed groups referred to in annex A, chapter 9.1, of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement, including the number of persons concerned, their equipment and armament, their location, their intentions, as well as a precise timetable for implementation;
- (iii) The establishment of a direct dialogue between the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda leading to confidence-building and a joint mechanism for coordination, and exchanges of information regarding the disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, resettlement and reintegration process;
- (iv) The establishment by the Governments of the countries concerned, in particular Rwanda, and noting steps taken so far, of conditions conducive to voluntary disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, resettlement and reintegration of the members of the armed groups concerned, in particular, by assuring the protection of the personal safety of the members of these armed groups, their civil rights and their economic reintegration including with the assistance of the donor community;
- (v) The demilitarization of Kisangani;
- (vi) The full restoration of freedom of movement for persons and goods between Kinshasa and Kisangani and throughout the country;
- (vii) The full cooperation by the parties with Mission military and logistical operations, as well as its humanitarian, human rights and child protection activities, including by permitting unrestricted access to ports and airports, and by refraining from introducing administrative and other impediments;
13. Expresses its satisfaction at the partnership established with the parties to the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement, strengthened by regular contacts between the Political Committee for the implementation of that Agreement and the Council, and reiterates its firm determination to continue to provide assistance to the parties in their efforts to achieve peace;
14. Commends the outstanding work of Mission personnel in challenging conditions, and pays tribute in particular to the efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General;
15. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications (November/December). The Sudan, in a 20 November letter to the Security Council President [S/2001/1113], referred to an allegation by Uganda in a statement to the Council that the objective of Ugandan forces in the DRC was to ensure that the Democratic Alliance, a Ugandan opposition group supported by the Sudan and trained by Al-Qa'idah, did not obtain assistance for the purpose of launching terrorist operations in Uganda across the Ruwenzori mountains. The Sudan said Uganda was trying to divert attention from its invasion of DRC territory and its plundering of resources.

On 3 December [S/2001/1143], the DRC informed the Council of recent developments that might jeopardize the peace process, including the refusal of RCD-Goma to demilitarize Kisangani, the deployment of RPA in eastern DRC, the resumption of fighting in areas under Ugandan control, and repression of workers in the occupied provinces. The DRC called on the Council to take action. In another letter of the same date [S/2001/1146], the DRC stated that Rwanda was substantially increasing its military presence in eastern DRC at a time when the Congolese people were focusing on the inter-Congolese negotiations and when the allied forces of Namibia had completed their withdrawal and Angola and Zimbabwe had begun a significant withdrawal of their forces. In its view, Rwanda was seeking to restart the war. Rwanda, on 10 December [S/2001/1168], denied that it had made any changes to its troops' deployment in the DRC, adding that they were in the new defensive positions, as agreed, and in other places in Katanga. It claimed that the DRC was supporting Rwandan opposition forces. The DRC, on 27 December [S/2001/1299], refuting a claim by President Kagame of Rwanda that he had already withdrawn half of his troops from the DRC, noted that the Secretary-General's Special Representative had recently reported a build-up of Rwandan forces in eastern DRC.

Situation at year's end. On 4 November, RCD and MLC leaders announced their intention to create a joint military force to forcibly disarm rebel groups in eastern DRC; a force of 4,102 soldiers, based in Kindu, would track, disarm and neutralize "negative forces". Addressing the Security Council on 9 November [meeting 4410], the Secretary-General expressed concern about that decision and warned that Kindu must not be used as a base for launching military operations.

Late 2001 was marked by a realignment of political and military alliances of armed rebel groups, resulting in intensified fighting in the north-eastern part of the country [S/2002/169]. Following the dissolution of the former FLC

(merger of MLC and RCD-K/ML), a shift of alliances on the ground involving MLC and factions of RCD-K/ML was reflected in military confrontations between the forces of the two movements. On 16 November, RCD-K/ML took over administrative control of Bunia, forcing MLC to retreat to Equateur province. Other clashes between the two factions also occurred. On 29 December, MONUC reported firing for much of that day in Kindu. RCD/RPA claimed that Mayi-Mayi fighters had attacked the town with the aim of gaining control of the airfield, allegedly killing 21 civilians.

At the invitation of President Kabila, MONUC observed the demobilization at Kamina of nearly 2,000 combatants, said to be Rwandans, who were interviewed by MONUC. MONUC was working with the Governments of the DRC and Rwanda to facilitate repatriation and resettlement of those men. Meanwhile, Uganda claimed that it had reduced its troops in the DRC by 6,655 since 29 July 2000. However, it insisted that three battalions would remain in eastern DRC.

In an effort to pave the way for substantive discussions at the next inter-Congolese dialogue (planned for 2002), the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs, Ibrahima Fall, in consultation with the neutral Facilitator, held talks with the Government, MLC and RCD on 9 and 12 November in New York and from 6 to 8 December in Abuja. It was agreed to reduce the number of participants in the 2002 round of talks to 300 and participation was extended to representatives of the Mayi-Mayi, religious groups, traditional chiefs, internal and external opposition not present at the preparatory talks in Gaborone, and the Congolese diaspora.

The overall humanitarian situation continued to be characterized by grievous human rights violations, chronic food insecurity, population displacement and serious health problems, aggravated by restrictions on humanitarian agencies due to the prevailing insecurity.

MONUC financing

In a 10 May report [A/55/935], the Secretary-General submitted the financial performance of MONUC from 6 August 1999 to 30 June 2000, the proposed budget for its operation from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 and its estimated initial requirements for 1 July to 31 December 2001. He recommended that the General Assembly: appropriate $58,681,000 gross ($58,441,000 net) as authorized in resolution 54/260 B [YUN 2000, p. 142] for the operation of the Mission from 6 August 1999 to 30 June 2000; decide on the treatment of the unencumbered balance of $3,409,600 gross ($3,605,300 net) for the period ending 30 June 2000; appropriate $273,119,600 gross ($270,085,600 net) for operations from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001; assess $131,800,600 gross ($129,258,500 net) for 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001; and approve a commitment authority, with assessment, of $209,965,600 gross ($204,788,900 net) for the maintenance of MONUC from 1 July to 31 December 2001.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) commented on that report on 15 May [A/55/941] and made general comments on the financing of UN peacekeeping operations in a 6 April report [A/55/874].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On 14 June [meeting 103], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/55/962], adopted resolution 55/275 without vote [agenda item 167].

Financing of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 1258 (1999) of 6 August 1999 and 1279(1999) of 30 November 1999 regarding, respectively, the deployment to the Congo region of military liaison personnel and the establishment of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission, the latest of which was resolution 1332(2000) of 14 December 2000,

Recalling its resolutions 54/260 A of 7 April 2000 and 54/260 B of 15 June 2000 on the financing of the Mission,

Reaffirming the general principles underlying the financing of United Nations peacekeeping operations, as stated in General Assembly resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973 and 55/235 of 23 December 2000,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994, in particular those paragraphs regarding the peacekeeping budgetary cycles, which should be adhered to in the future budgeting process, where possible;

2. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo as at 30 April 2001, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 32.7 million United States dollars, representing some 16 per cent of the total assessed contributions, notes that some 64 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

5. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure the payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

6. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

7. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

8. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

9. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Mission;

10. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

11. Expresses concern about the high level of unliquidated obligations in the Mission as at 30 June 2000;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

14. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo the amount of 58,681,000 dollars gross (58,441,000 dollars net), as previously authorized and apportioned under the terms of General Assembly resolutions 54/260 A and B for the establishment and operation of the Mission for the period from 6 August 1999 to 30 June 2000;

15. Decides also to appropriate the amount of 232,119,600 dollars gross (229,085,600 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, inclusive of the amount of 141,319,000 dollars gross (140,827,100 dollars net) previously authorized under the terms of General Assembly resolution 54/260 B and of 49,865,400 dollars gross (49,530,700 dollars net) authorized by the Advisory Committee under the terms of section IV of General Assembly resolution 49/233 A, and authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into additional commitments for the Mission for the same period in the amount not exceeding 41 million dollars gross and net;

16. Decides further, taking into account the amount of 141,319,000 dollars gross (140,827,100 dollars net) already apportioned under the terms of its resolution 54/260 A, to apportion among Member States the additional amount of 83,233,883 dollars gross (80,903,625 dollars net) for the Mission for the period from 1 July 2000 to 15 June 2001 in accordance with the levels set out in General Assembly resolution 55/235, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolution 55/236 of 23 December 2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2001, as set out in its resolution 55/5 B of 23 December 2000;

17. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 16 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated additional staff assessment income of 2,330,258 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 July 2000 to 15 June 2001;

18. Decides also to apportion among Member States the amount of 7,566,717 dollars gross (7,354,875 dollars net) for the period from 15 to 30 June 2001, in accordance with paragraph 16 above, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 15 June 2001;

19. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 18 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated additional staff assessment income of 211,842 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 15 to 30 June 2001;

20. Decides that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 16 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 3,409,600 dollars gross (3,605,300 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 2000, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989 and as adjusted by the Assembly in subsequent relevant resolutions and decisions for the ad hoc apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations, the latest of which were resolution 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and decisions 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999 for the period 1998-2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999;

21. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 3,409,600 dollars gross (3,605,300 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 2000 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations, in accordance with paragraph 20 above;

22. Decides further to appropriate for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001 the amount of 200 million dollars gross (194,823,300 dollars net) to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with paragraph 16 above, at the monthly rate of 33,333,333 dollars gross

(32,470,550 dollars net), subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 30 June 2001;

23. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 22 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 5,176,700 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001;

24. Decides also to appropriate to the Special Account for the Mission the amount of 8,260,509 dollars gross (7,249,409 dollars net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 862,915 dollars gross (774,893 dollars net) for the United Nations Logistics Base for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with paragraph 16 above, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 2001 and 2002, as set out in General Assembly resolution 55/5 B, the scale of assessments for the year 2001 to be applied against a portion thereof, that is, 4,130,254 dollars gross (3,624,704 dollars net) for the support account and 431,457 dollars gross (387,446 dollars net) for the Logistics Base for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001, and the scale of assessments for the year 2002 to be applied against the balance, that is, 4,130,255 dollars gross (3,624,705 dollars net) for the support account and 431,458 dollars gross (387,447 dollars net) for the Logistics Base for the period from 1 January to 30 June 2002;

25. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 24 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,011,100 dollars for the support account and 88,022 dollars for the United Nations Logistics Base approved for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, 505,550 dollars for the support account and 44,011 dollars for the Logistics Base being amounts pertaining to the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001, and the balance, that is, 505,550 dollars for the support account and 44,011 dollars for the Logistics Base pertaining to the period from 1 January to 30 June 2002;

26. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

27. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission;

28. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

29. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo".

On 27 November, the Secretary-General reported on the budget for MONUC for 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002 [A/56/660], which amounted to $537,051,200 gross ($528,531,800 net). It was based on an authorized strength of up to 5,537 military personnel, as authorized in part B of Security Council resolution 1355(2001) (see p. 129). Of the total budget, some 13 per cent of resources related to civilian personnel costs. Operational costs accounted for 59 per cent of the budget, military personnel costs reflected 25 per cent, while staff assessment comprised 2 per cent. The Secretary-General recommended that the General Assembly: appropriate $337,051,200 gross ($333,708,500 net) for the maintenance of the Mission from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, in addition to the amount of $200 million gross ($194,823,300 net) appropriated under Assembly resolution 55/275 (see p. 137) for 1 July to 31 December 2001; assess the additional amount of $68,526,600 gross ($69,422,600 net) for the maintenance of MONUC for 1 July to 31 December 2001; assess $246,148,500 gross ($242,243,700 net) for 1 January to 15 June 2002; and assess $22,377,100 gross ($22,022,200 net) for 16 to 30 June 2002 should the Council decide to continue the Mission's mandate beyond 15 June 2002.

ACABQ reviewed MONUC financing in a report of 7 December [A/56/688]. It noted that a report of the size and complexity of the MONUC budget required more time than was available to the Committee to properly fulfil its function. It would revert to the issue in 2002.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 24 December [meeting 92], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/56/713], adopted resolution 56/252 without vote [agenda item 158].

Financing of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1258 (1999) of 6 August 1999, by which the Council established the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council revised and extended the mandate of the Mission, the latest of which was resolution 1376(2001) of 9 November 2001,

Recalling its resolution 54/260 A of 7 April 2000 as well as subsequent resolutions on the financing of the Mission, the latest of which was resolution 55/275 of 14 June 2001,

Reaffirming the general principles underlying the financing of United Nations peacekeeping operations, as stated in General Assembly resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973 and 55/235 of 23 December 2000,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Reiterates paragraph 1 of its resolution 55/275;
2. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo as at 15 November 2001, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 152.6 million United States dollars, representing, regrettably, some 40 per cent of the total assessed contributions, notes that some 22 per cent of Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;
3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States that have paid their assessed contributions in full and on time, and urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full;
4. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;
5. Also expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;
6. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;
7. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;
8. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Mission;
9. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;
10. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;
11. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;
12. Decides to appropriate the additional amount of 196,593,590 dollars gross (193,819,705 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the nine-month period from 1 July 2001 to 31 March 2002, inclusive of the amount of 3,351,190 dollars gross (3,098,505 dollars net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations, in addition to the amount of 8,260,509 dollars gross (7,249,409 dollars net) already appropriated for the support account, the amount of 862,915 dollars

gross (774,893 dollars net) already appropriated for the United Nations Logistics Base and the amount of 200 million dollars gross (194,823,300 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001 appropriated and assessed by the General Assembly in its resolution 55/275;

13. Decides also, taking into account the amount of 200 million dollars gross (194,823,300 dollars net) already apportioned for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001 in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 55/275, to apportion among Member States the additional amount of 196,593,590 dollars gross (193,819,705 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 31 March 2002 in accordance with the levels set out in General Assembly resolution 55/235 as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolution 55/236 of 23 December 2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 2001 and 2002 as set out in its resolution 55/5 B of 23 December 2000;

14. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 13 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 2,773,885 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 January to 31 March 2002;

15. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

16. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission;

17. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

18. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo".

The Assembly, on 24 December, decided that the agenda item on MONUC financing would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464), and that the Fifth Committee would continue to consider the item at that session (decision 56/458).

Exploitation of natural resources

Reports of Expert Panel. The Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council, on 16 January [S/2001/49], the interim report of the Panel of Experts on the Illegal Exploitation of Natural Resources and Other Forms of Wealth of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The Expert Panel, established by the Secretary-General in response to a Council request contained in presidential statement S/PRST/2000/20 [YUN 2000, p. 128], had the mandate to collect information on illegal exploitation and to analyse the links between such exploitation and the continuation of the conflict in the DRC. It described its activities, including difficulties encountered, and its meetings with government leaders in Burundi, the DRC, Kenya, Rwanda, Uganda and Zimbabwe. It also sent members to meet with officials in Cameroon, South Africa and the United Republic of Tanzania and conducted meetings with government officials, the diplomatic community, non-governmental organizations (NGOs), members of civil society and private individuals in Brussels, London and Paris. One of the most serious problems facing the Panel was the paucity of detailed and reliable information, including statistics, as to the nature, extent, location, yield and value of the DRC's natural resources. Decades of government neglect, mismanagement and corruption, including widespread evasion of taxes and customs duties, as well as the effects of conflict since 1996, made it almost impossible to establish a precise and impartial factual picture of the country's natural resource base and exploitation patterns. Mines and other sources were remote and heavily guarded, roads were few and ill-maintained and communications poor.

The Panel intended to follow up information it had received, in particular to examine the links between the exploitation of the natural resources and other forms of wealth in the DRC and the continuation of the conflict. However, the Panel concluded that it could not assemble a coherent picture of the situation in the three months remaining due to the complexity of the situation, the vast territories, the multiplicity of the actors involved, the difficulties of travel and communications, the lack of cooperation on the part of some Governments and other sources of information, and the security risks arising from the conflict. It therefore proposed that its mandate be extended for three months, until mid-June.

On 25 January [S/2001/84], Uganda protested some aspects of the interim report, including the Panel's interpretation of its mandate, its description of meetings with Ugandan officials and allegations by the DRC that Uganda had been involved in exploitation of minerals, agricultural products and protected species.

In a 23 March letter [S/2001/288], the Secretary-General recommended, in view of the need for extra time, that the Panel submit its final report by 3 April; he later requested a deadline of 16 April [S/2001/338]. The Council, on 28 March [S/2001/289] and 6 April [S/2001/339], took note of those recommendations.

On 12 April [S/2001/357], the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council the final report of the Panel of Experts. The report stated that illegal exploitation of the mineral and forest resources of the DRC was taking place at an alarming rate. Two phases could be distinguished: mass-scale looting and the systematic exploitation of natural resources. During the first phase, stockpiles of minerals, coffee, wood, livestock and money that were available in territories conquered by the armies of Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda were taken and either transferred to those countries or exported to international markets by their forces or nationals. In the second phase, exploitation became systematic and systemic, requiring planning and organization. Systematic exploitation flourished because of the pre-existing structures developed during the 1996 conquest of power by the Alliance of Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Congo-Zaire, led by the late Laurent-Désiré Kabila. Those structures were improved and new networks for channelling extracted resources were put in place. However, the systemic exploitation used the existing systems of control established by Rwanda and Uganda. In both cases, exploitation was often carried out in violation of the DRC's sovereignty, the national legislation and sometimes international law. Key individual actors, including army commanders, businessmen and government structures, had been the engines of the systematic and systemic exploitation.

The illegal exploitation had resulted in massive availability of financial resources for RPA and the individual enrichment of top Ugandan military commanders and civilians, as well as the emergence of illegal networks headed by military commanders or businessmen. Other contributing factors included the roles played by some entities, private companies and individuals, including some decision makers in the DRC and Zimbabwe and some leaders in the region.

The conflict in the DRC had become mainly about access to and control and trade of five key mineral resources—coltan (columbo-tantalite, used in communications equipment), diamonds, copper, cobalt and gold. Plundering, looting and racketeering and the constitution of criminal cartels were becoming commonplace in occupied territories. Those cartels had ramifications worldwide, and they represented the next serious security problem in the region. The private sector had also contributed in the exploitation, whether directly or indirectly. The conflict in the DRC, because of its lucrative nature, had created a "win-win" situation for all belligerents. Adversaries and enemies were at times partners in business.

The Panel concluded that tough measures needed to be taken to end the cycle of exploitation of the natural resources and the continuation of the conflict in the DRC. It made a number of recommendations regarding: sanctions against countries and individuals involved in the illegal activities; preventive measures to avoid a recurrence of the current situation; reparations to the victims of the illegal exploitation of natural resources; design of a framework for reconstruction; improvement of international mechanisms and regulations governing some natural resources; and security issues. Proposed measures included: that a Security Council embargo be imposed on the import or export of coltan, niobium, pyrochlore, cassiterite, timber, gold and diamonds from or to Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda until those countries' involvement in the exploitation of DRC natural resources was made clear; that all countries should abstain from facilitating the import or export of those resources or face sanctions; that Member States should freeze the financial assets of the rebel movements and their leaders; that an embargo on weapons supply to rebel groups should be established; that Member States should suspend balance-of-payments support to those countries involved in illegal exploitation; that to curb the flow of illicit diamonds, the DRC should liberalize the diamond trade; and that all diamond dealers operating in the territories occupied by foreign forces should immediately stop doing business with rebels and with Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda; failure to do so should lead to action through the World Diamond Council. The Panel endorsed all the relevant recommendations on diamonds made in 2000 by the expert panel investigating the diamond trade in relation to Sierra Leone [YUN 2000, p. 204]. The Panel proposed that countries with seaports and transit facilities report to the United Nations Forum on Forests on the transit of timber through their territory and called for an improved certification system. It recommended that individuals, groups and companies whose properties were damaged or expropriated by the Burundian, Rwandan or Ugandan armed forces and their allies be compensated by the States concerned. The Panel further recommended that the Council establish an international mechanism to investigate and prosecute individuals involved in economic criminal activities and companies and government officials whose activities harmed powerless people and weak economies, and a permanent mechanism to investigate the illicit trafficking of natural resources in armed conflicts so as to monitor cases already subject to the investigation of other panels, such as those of Angola, the DRC and Sierra Leone.

The Security Council considered the Panel's report on 3 May [meetings 4317, 4318].

Communications (April/May). In letters of 16 and 24 April and 1 May [S/2001/378, S/2001/402,

S/2001/433], Uganda, Rwanda and Burundi, respectively, raised objections to the Expert Panel's report. Uganda expanded on its objections in letters of 4 and 25 May [S/2001/458, S/2001/522], stating that the report suffered from a number of fundamental flaws and that Uganda had appointed a commission to investigate the allegations.

Action plan. As requested by the Security Council at informal consultations on 18 April, the Chairperson of the Panel of Experts presented, on 24 April [S/2001/416], an action plan for the extension of its mandate by three months, until the end of July 2001. In transmitting its final report, the Panel indicated that approximately 70 per cent of the information and work had been covered. On that basis, the Panel wished to work on the remaining 30 per cent, mainly on two themes: the activities of criminal cartels and the mining of and deals on copper and cobalt. In addition, the Panel would compile comments and reactions from various stakeholders and actors cited in the report and prepare answers to those parties. The first theme, on criminal cartels, covered a wide range of issues related to continuation of the conflict, including money-laundering, counterfeit currency and its use for purchasing natural resources, financial networks, and arms transactions to support the continuation of the conflict. With regard to the second theme, the Panel would work primarily on investigating the stocks of copper and cobalt that existed in some regions of the DRC before the beginning of the war.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 3 May [meeting 4318], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/13 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls the statement of its President of 2 June 2000 (S/PRST/2000/20). It expresses its intention to give full consideration to the report of the Panel of Experts on the Illegal Exploitation of Natural Resources and Other Forms of Wealth of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It takes note of the action plan of the Expert Panel for the extension of its mandate.

The Council notes that the report contains disturbing information about the illegal exploitation of Congolese resources by individuals, Governments and armed groups involved in the conflict, and the link between the exploitation of the natural resources and other forms of wealth in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the continuation of the conflict.

The Council condemns the illegal exploitation of the natural resources of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and expresses its serious concern at those economic activities that fuel the conflict. It urges the Governments named in the report in this regard to conduct their own inquiries into this information, cooperate fully with the Expert Panel while ensuring necessary security for the experts, and take immediate steps to end illegal exploitation of the natural resources by their nationals or others under their control.

The Council notes with concern the terrible toll the conflict is taking on the people, economy and environment of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council believes that the only viable solution to the crisis in the Democratic Republic of the Congo remains the full implementation of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement and the relevant Security Council resolutions.

The Council emphasizes the importance of a comprehensive approach addressing all the root causes of the conflict to achieve a lasting peace settlement in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to extend the mandate of the Expert Panel for a final period of three months, and requests also that the Expert Panel submit to the Council, through the Secretary-General, an addendum to its final report which shall include the following:

(a) An update of relevant data and an analysis of further information, including as pointed out in the action plan submitted by the Panel to the Security Council;

(b) Relevant information on the activities of countries and other actors for which the necessary quantity and quality of data were not made available earlier;

(c) A response, based as far as possible on corroborated evidence, to the comments and reactions of the States and actors cited in the final report of the Expert Panel;

(d) An evaluation of the situation at the end of the extension of the mandate of the Panel, and of its conclusions, assessing whether progress has been made on the issues which come under the responsibility of the Panel.

The Council expresses its intention to examine and respond to the recommendations of the report in the light of the addendum submitted by the Panel, so as to advance the peace process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Secretary-General, on 25 June [S/2001/632], informed the Council of his intention to appoint Mahmoud Kassem (Egypt) as Chairperson of the Expert Panel.

On 3 October [S/2001/950], the Secretary-General said that the Panel would need extra time to complete its work; he therefore recommended that the Panel's mandate be extended until 30 November 2001. The Council, on 8 October [S/2001/951], took note of the recommendation.

Addendum to Panel report. On 10 November, the Expert Panel issued the addendum [S/2001/1072] to its April report. It remarked that the history of the DRC, regardless of the political authority, had been marked by systematic abuse of its natural and human resources, almost always backed by brutal use of force and directed to the benefit of a few. The mismanagement and plunder of the country's natural resources led to an informal economy based on barter, smuggling and fraudulent trade that reinforced pre-existing ties based on ethnicity, kinship and colonial structures between DRC regions and neighbouring States such as Burundi and Rwanda, as well as Angola, Kenya, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia. The result was that a country with vast natural wealth was reduced to one of the poorest States by the early 1990s. That was the situation when the war began in August 1998.

The Panel described a pattern of continued exploitation since the 12 April ceasefire by both State and non-State actors, including the rebel forces and armed groups. Some exploitation activities were conducted as joint ventures and others were carried out by the de facto authority in the area. The Panel limited its latest investigations to specific resources—coltan, gold, copper, cobalt, diamonds and timber. Human resources were also exploited by all parties to the conflict, resulting in systematic violations of human rights.

The Panel found indications that clashes during the previous seven months in the eastern areas between the Mayi-Mayi, who were better equipped and coordinated than before, and the Ugandan troops and the MLC rebel group were directly related to the control of coltan and gold. Similar battles were fought by the Mayi-Mayi with RPA over access to coltan. The Panel concluded that Zimbabwe's arming of Burundian rebel groups was contributing to sustaining the war by proxy, allowing the ceasefire to remain intact while creating a "controllable" conflict in the occupied zone in the east that satisfied the interests of many parties. With the low-intensity conflict dragging on, a certain status quo was maintained whereby many resources could continue to be extracted, traded and routed for export. Rwanda and Zimbabwe had the most important commercial presence in the DRC as a result of their involvement in the war. It was thought that Zimbabwe's role in continuing the conflict might be shared with the DRC Government, or some elements in it, as well as others. The profiteering of private businesses of all kinds in illicit and criminal activities gave them vested interests in seeing the continuation of the conflict, in particular businesses in Kenya, South Africa and the United Republic of Tanzania.

The report described the military involvement and economic interests in the DRC of the allied countries—Angola, the DRC, Namibia and Zimbabwe—and the uninvited forces of Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda. It explored the role in exploitation of some of the neighbouring countries in the region, which it called the transit countries—the Central African Republic, the Republic of the Congo, Kenya, South Africa, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia—and provided background information on the national armed groups (RCD-Goma, RCD-ML, MLC/FLC and the Mayi-Mayi) and the foreign armed groups or negative forces (FDD, the Interahamwe and ex-FAR, currently known as ALIR I and II).

The Panel concluded that the systematic exploitation of the DRC's natural resources continued unabated, resulting in the further enrichment of individuals and institutions. A primary reason for the continuing exploitation was the collapse of State institutions and structures. Initially, foreign countries and rebel movements were motivated to intervene for political and security concerns, but the primary motivation had become financial benefits. The military operations and presence of all sides had been transformed into self-financing activities, whereby no real budgetary burden was borne by the parties concerned. Contrary to its protestations, the DRC Government had been involved in allowing some foreign companies to continue the exploitation of resources in rebel-occupied areas without cancelling any concessions.

The Panel stated that the international community should assist in formulating a plan of action for rebuilding the DRC State institutions as a means of enabling it to control its territory and to protect its natural resources. Such assistance should be linked to the convening of an international conference on peace and development in the Great Lakes region. The Panel recommended that: all concessions, commercial agreements and contracts signed during the 1997-2001 era of Laurent-Désiré Kabila and subsequently in the rebel-held areas should be reviewed and revised to correct all irregularities, under the auspices of a Security Council body; MONUC should accelerate the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process in order to reduce the security concerns of regional States, including the DRC; a temporary moratorium should ban the purchase of products such as coltan, diamonds, gold, copper, cobalt, timber and coffee originating in areas in the DRC under the control of foreign troops or rebel groups; and countries involved in the conflict should investigate and prosecute illicit traffickers of high-value products from the DRC, and technical measures to control trade should be finalized, such as the standardization of certificates of production, harmonization of tax regimes and verification regulations, and analysis of diamond production and trade statistics. The Panel further recommended that the Council consider sanctions, depending on future trends in exploitation of DRC natural resources and developments in the Great Lakes region, and, in the meantime, establish a monitoring mechanism to report on progress in reducing exploitation.

Communications (November/December). During November and December, a number of countries transmitted comments on and/or reservations with regard to the Expert Panel's April report and November addendum. On 5 and 6 December [S/2001/1156, S/2001/1175], the DRC commented on the report and expressed support for the Panel's recommendations. Having conducted an inquiry on the reports, Uganda, on 14 and 21 November and 10 December [S/2001/1080, S/2001/1107, S/2001/1163], commented on the findings and recommendations, covering what it considered to be both positive conclusions and areas of concern, including what it called false allegations against Uganda. On 23 November and 7 December [S/2001/1102, S/2001/1161], Rwanda welcomed many key elements of the report but denied any involvement by its armed forces in commercial activities in the DRC. Burundi, on 13 December [S/2001/1197], welcomed the Panel's finding that Burundi was cleared of all suspicion of illegally exploiting the wealth of the DRC and requested the international community to focus efforts on obtaining a ceasefire. Namibia, on 14 December [S/2001/1212], listed its objections to specific claims about its involvement in exploitation. On the same date [S/2001/1214], Zimbabwe forwarded the communiqué of the Southern African Development Community Ministerial Task Force on Developments in Zimbabwe (Harare, 10-11 December) to counter misleading observations concerning Zimbabwe raised in the November addendum.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

The Security Council considered the Panel's addendum on 14 [meeting 4437] and 19 [meeting 4441] December. Following consultations among Council members on 19 December, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/39 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council notes with concern that the plundering of the natural resources and other forms of wealth of the Democratic Republic of the Congo continues unabated. The Council strongly condemns these activities, which are perpetuating the conflict in the country, impeding the economic development of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and exacerbating the suffering of its people, and reaffirms the territorial integrity, political independence and sovereignty of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including over its natural resources.

The Council stresses that:

- No external parties, or groups or individuals under their control, should benefit from the exploitation of the natural resources of the Democratic Republic of the Congo at the Democratic Republic of the Congo's expense;

- The Democratic Republic of the Congo's natural resources should not serve as an incentive for any State, group or individual to prolong the conflict;

- External parties, and groups or individuals under their control, must not use the natural resources of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to finance the conflict in the country;

- The resources should be exploited legally and on a fair commercial basis to benefit the country and people of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council thanks the Expert Panel for its recommendations on the institutional, financial and technical aspects of the issue, and for its advice on possible measures to be imposed by the Security Council. It reaffirms its support to the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement, and reiterates its commitment to take any appropriate action to help put an end to the plundering of the resources of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in support of the peace process, once it has been established that such actions will have no serious and unmanageable negative impact on the disastrous humanitarian and economic situation of the country.

The Council stresses the importance of continuing the monitoring of the situation regarding the illegal exploitation of the natural resources of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the link between the exploitation of these natural resources in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the continuation of the conflict, in order to keep the necessary pressure to put an end to the illegal exploitation of the resources of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including the exploitation of human resources, at the expense of the Congolese people and of the peace process.

Therefore, the Council, having heard the views expressed at its open debate on 14 December 2001, requests the Secretary-General to renew the mandate of the Expert Panel for a period of six months at the end of which the Expert Panel should report to the Council. The panel should submit an interim report after three months.

The next reports of the panel should include the following elements:

- An update of relevant data and an analysis of further information from all relevant countries, including in particular from those which thus far have not provided the panel with the requested information;

- An evaluation of the possible actions that could be taken by the Council, including those recommended by the panel in its report and in its addendum, in order to help bring to an end the plundering of natural resources of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, taking into account the impact of such actions on the financing of the conflict and their potential impact on the humanitarian and economic situation of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

- Recommendations on specific actions that the international community, in support of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, might take, working through existing international organizations, mechanisms and United Nations bodies, to address the issues in the report and its addendum;

—Recommendations on possible steps that may be taken by transit countries as well as end-users to contribute to ending illegal exploitation of the natural resources and other forms of wealth of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council stresses the importance of the panel maintaining a high level of collaboration with all the Congolese players, governmental as well as non-governmental, throughout the national territory.

The Council once again urges the Governments named in the previous reports to conduct their own inquiries, cooperate fully with the Expert Panel and take, on an urgent basis, the necessary steps to end all illegal exploitation of the natural resources of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, by their nationals or others under their control, and inform the Council accordingly. The Council also calls on those countries that have not yet provided the Panel with the requested information to do so as a matter of urgency.

Burundi

Throughout the year, efforts to revive the Burundi peace process based on the 2000 Arusha Agreement on Peace and Reconciliation [YUN 2000, p. 146], a framework for political reform, were led by former President Nelson Mandela of South Africa, whom the Secretary-General appointed in 1999 as Facilitator of the peace process. The main obstacles to implementation of the Agreement were the continued hostilities and the lack of agreement on leadership of a transitional government. The conflict between armed groups and government forces intensified at several points in 2001, despite the fact that most political parties had signed the Agreement in August 2000. Some of the main combatant rebel forces, however, were not parties to the Agreement although they had joined the negotiations.

The Implementation Monitoring Committee, set up by the Arusha Agreement under the chairmanship of the Facilitator, met five times in 2001 to follow up on implementation, arbitrate on disputes among signatories and consider draft legislation on political activity, among other things. Although his efforts were complicated by ongoing civil conflict and lack of a formal ceasefire, Mr. Mandela was successful in bringing the parties together to agree on and install a broad-based transitional government on 1 November under a power-sharing formula, thus ushering in a new and promising chapter in the search for lasting peace and stability in the country. Peacemaking efforts were also carried out by regional leaders who met four times in 2001 as the Regional Peace Initiative and agreed to provide forces to assist Burundi in protecting exiled political leaders once they returned to the country.

Political and military developments

The intensification of fighting following the August 2000 signing of the Arusha Agreement severely hampered efforts to carry out tasks of the transitional phase as stipulated in the Agreement, including the return and resettlement of refugees and displaced people, and the reform of military and security institutions. It also exacerbated the humanitarian situation in a country already afflicted with a malaria epidemic and widespread malnutrition and hunger. Efforts to reach a ceasefire were stymied by the fact that two main armed groups, the National Council for the Defence of Democracy–Front for the Defence of Democracy (CNDD-FDD) and the Party for the Liberation of the Hutu People–National Liberation Forces (PALIPEHUTU-FNL), were not part of the Arusha peace process.

Communications (January). Burundi, on 16 January [S/2001/51], called on the Security Council to condemn the rebel groups in Burundi for the violence committed against the civilian population, urge them to join the peace process, and urge all countries bordering Burundi to ensure that their territories were not used by the Burundian rebels against their country of origin. The Council was also requested to welcome the 9 January meeting in Libreville, Gabon, between Burundi President Pierre Buyoya and Jean Bosco Ndayikengurukiye, head of CNDD-FDD, to discuss the peace process. Annexed to the letter were a communiqué issued after that meeting and a list of armed attacks against civilians that occurred in December 2000 and January 2001.

The DRC drew the Council's attention to the wider implications of the Burundi conflict in a 10 January letter [S/2001/30]. Welcoming the Libreville meeting, the DRC stated that President Laurent-Désiré Kabila had offered his good offices in the resolution of the Burundian crisis, in the light of the consequences of Burundi's ethnic conflicts on DRC territory. The DRC also welcomed President Buyoya's commitment to withdraw his troops from Congolese territory.

Regional peace initiative. The fourteenth Summit Meeting of the Regional Peace Initiative on Burundi (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 26 February) [A/55/850-S/2001/265] was attended by the Presidents of Burundi, the DRC, Kenya, Rwanda and the United Republic of Tanzania, and the Vice-Presidents of Gabon, South Africa and Uganda. The meeting considered the Facilitator's progress report on the Burundi negotiations and his recommendations on the outstanding issues, namely, cessation of hostilities and leadership of the transition. It took note of the establishment of the Arusha Agreement's Implementation Monitoring Committee and its Executive Council and expressed support for the work of the Committee and its UN-appointed Chairman, Berhanu Dinka.

In view of the absence of agreement on leadership of the transition, the Summit recommended a scheme by which the three-year period of transition would be divided into two phases of 18 months. In the first phase, the parties would agree on a Transitional President from the G-10 group of parties (Tutsi) and the Vice-President from the G-7 group (Hutu); in the second phase, the positions would be reversed. The signatory parties would agree on the 26 ministerial posts in the proportions already agreed and the Security Council would provide assistance to the Regional Initiative and the Facilitator, in particular by dispatching peacekeepers and protection aides to Burundi as soon as hostilities were suspended or by financing any countries willing to contribute peacekeepers. The Summit held three more meetings in 2001 in efforts to arrange negotiations leading to a ceasefire.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 2 March [meeting 4285], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/6 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council strongly condemns the recent attacks by armed groups in Burundi, particularly those launched on Bujumbura by the Forces for National Liberation. The timing of these actions is of particular concern since they were launched during the meeting of the parties to the Arusha Peace and Reconciliation Agreement (the Arusha Agreement) on Burundi convened by the Facilitator, Nelson Mandela, on 25 February 2001 in Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania. The Council calls for the immediate cessation of these attacks.

The Council expresses its strong disapproval of all acts aimed at undermining the peace process in Burundi. The Council urges all sides to exercise restraint and to refrain from any action that may exacerbate the situation.

The Council condemns the deliberate targeting of the civilian population by the armed groups and calls upon all parties to abide by international humanitarian law and in particular to refrain from any further attacks or any military action that endangers the civilian population.

The Council reiterates its call on the Forces for National Liberation and the Forces for the Defence of Democracy to cease hostilities immediately and to join the peace process. The Council recalls the meeting in Libreville on 9 January 2001 between the President of the Republic of Burundi and the leader of the Forces for the Defence of Democracy and urges the continuation of this process. The Council calls on all the parties, including the armed groups, to engage in dialogue immediately so as to allow an early cessation of hostilities and to reach agreement on a permanent ceasefire.

The Council stresses the importance of providing urgent humanitarian assistance to civilians displaced by the hostilities, and calls upon all parties to guarantee safe and unhindered access by humanitarian personnel to those in need. The Council reiterates its request to the donor community to help the Government of Burundi, United Nations agencies and the humanitarian community to respond effectively to the needs of the population of Burundi. The Council also urges donors to deliver on the commitments made at the Paris Donors Conference on 11 and 12 December 2000.

The Council takes note of the scheme for power-sharing arrangements among parties to the Arusha Agreement worked out by the fourteenth Summit Meeting of the Regional Peace Initiative on Burundi, held in Arusha on 26 February 2001, and calls on all the parties to reach early agreement on the outstanding issues related to the transitional power-sharing arrangements and to give their full cooperation to the Facilitator.

The Council stresses that the key to achieving lasting peace in Burundi lies with the Burundian parties. It is convinced that compromise is the only means to resolve the conflict, and to this end urges all parties to work towards settling outstanding differences over the peace accord, and to proceed to its implementation.

The Council reaffirms its full support for the continuing efforts of the Facilitator, the Regional Peace Initiative and the Implementation Monitoring Committee to bring peace to Burundi. The Council also emphasizes the role of the Implementation Monitoring Committee in advancing the peace process. It takes note of the communiqué of the 14th Summit Meeting of the Regional Peace Initiative on Burundi held in Arusha on 26 February 2001. It also reiterates its readiness to consider practical ways in which it can best support the peace process, and the implementation of the Arusha Agreement.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Communications (March-May). On 14 March [S/2001/221], Burundi requested the Security Council to meet in order to condemn once again the recent attacks by PALIPEHUTU-FNL and CNDD-FDD, supported by the other "negative forces" fighting in the DRC, and call on the signatories to the Arusha Agreement to give priority to a ceasefire instead of establishing the transitional institutions. Reviewing the evolution of the peace process, Burundi said that progress was currently hindered because of the ongoing offensive by FDD in the south-east of the country on the Tanzanian border and a two-week urban guerrilla warfare campaign in Bujumbura. The situation in the DRC had brought about a realignment of armed factions, Burundi said, which could cause grave danger not just for Burundi but also for neighbouring countries, which would be drawn into the conflict because of the Hutu-Tutsi sensitivities that existed throughout the region and in some Southern African countries. In Burundi's view, priority should be given to ensuring security and combating the rebellion. Pending the ceasefire, activities could proceed on drafting laws on provisional immunity, the transitional legislature and political parties. The Government supported the Facilitator's request for international observation and protection forces.

At a private meeting on 16 March, the Security Council considered Burundi's 14 March letter. In an official communiqué [S/PV.4297], the Council stated that its members and the representative of Burundi had had a constructive discussion.

On the eve of the Security Council's mission to the region (see below), Burundi, on 11 May [S/2001/472], transmitted to the Council President the "Memorandum on the peace process in Burundi: the security challenge", which stated that the situation urgently required action by the international community because the regional efforts of Mr. Mandela were not enough. Burundi saw a correlation between developments in the DRC conflict and those in the Burundi conflict: the further the former moved towards peace, the more adversely the Burundi conflict was affected. The Burundi conflict was the work of armed rebel groups (FDD and FNL) who trained in and operated from the DRC. Some rebel groups were also operating from the United Republic of Tanzania, but that Government had remained passive to the problem. Burundi believed the Arusha Agreement to be in jeopardy and made a number of suggestions for the Council mission, including calling for short-term sanctions against the rebel groups, urging Tanzania to look into Burundi's security concerns, and urging the DRC to hold a bilateral dialogue with Burundi in a more positive spirit.

Security Council mission

The Security Council, having agreed to dispatch a mission to the Great Lakes region in May (see p. 116), informed the Secretary-General on 25 April of its terms of reference [S/2001/408].

Reporting to the Council on 29 May [S/2001/521], the mission stated that it was struck by the complexity and intractability of the situation in Burundi and its potential for large-scale violence. It delivered a strong message to all its Burundian interlocutors that peace could be achieved only through negotiations within the framework of the Arusha Agreement. The mission suggested that the regional heads of State should remain involved and that the Government and FNL should hold a dialogue; urgent attention should be paid to the situation along the border between Burundi and the United Republic of Tanzania, which could ignite a serious deterioration in the crisis, and a joint commission should be established to deal with refugee issues. It also proposed the establishment of a permanent negotiating mechanism involving the Secretary-General's Representative in Bujumbura to deal with such issues as the reform of the armed forces and the judiciary, human rights and refugees and displaced persons. The mission observed that the movements of rebel fighters from the DRC eastwards in order to evade being disarmed and demobilized might aggravate the Burundi crisis. The Council supported a global solution to restore peace to both countries and to the region.

The Security Council discussed the report on 30 May [meeting 4323].

Communications (June/July). In a joint communiqué [S/2001/633] issued following consultations in Dar es Salaam (23-24 June), the Defence Ministers of Burundi and the United Republic of Tanzania expressed concern about the illegal movements and criminal activities along the common border between the two countries and directed local authorities to meet to solve the problem of cross-border crimes. Concerning the repatriation of refugees, they commended the signing of a tripartite agreement between Burundi, Tanzania and UNHCR in May and directed that the meeting of the Technical Working Group be held in early July in Kigoma, Tanzania, as scheduled, so as to put in place the operational plan for repatriating refugees and to propose further measures facilitating repatriation, including the creation of safe zones in Burundi.

On 26 June [S/2001/634], the DRC stated that the preceding few weeks had seen a resurgence of violence in Burundi and Rwanda, where governmental sources were reportedly attributing the upsurge to infiltrations from Congolese territory of Interahamwe and ex-FAR, with the support of the DRC authorities. The DRC asserted that such claims were baseless. Burundi responded on 6 July [S/2001/672], alleging Congolese support to factions opposing the Burundi authorities.

The EU, in statements of 6 and 24 July [S/2001/684, S/2001/739], noted the worsening of the political and security situation in Burundi, expressed support for Mr. Mandela's efforts and condemned the coup attempt by a group of mutineers from the Burundian armed forces on 22-23 July.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 29 June [meeting 4341], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/17 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council calls for an immediate suspension of hostilities in Burundi.

The Council calls on the armed groups to enter into negotiations.

The Council reiterates its profound concern at the continuation of the conflict in Burundi and its toll on the civilian population. In that context, the Council stresses once again its support for the Arusha process and the efforts of the Facilitator, Nelson Mandela.

The Council strongly emphasizes to the parties to the Arusha Peace and Reconciliation Agreement of August 2000 (Arusha Agreement) the need to implement all the immediately applicable provisions of the Agreement, including the provisions for the establishment of new institutions.

The Council calls upon the parties to the Arusha Agreement to continue searching, together with all parties concerned, for solutions to outstanding issues in the Agreement.

The Council expresses grave concern at continuing human rights abuses and violations of humanitarian law, and stresses the need for all parties to ensure respect for human rights and humanitarian law. In particular, it urges the belligerents to commit themselves immediately to the protection of civilians, in particular their life, physical integrity and the means necessary for their survival. It also reiterates its call for safe and unhindered access for the delivery of humanitarian aid to all people in need.

The Council encourages the Secretary-General through his Representatives to continue to engage the armed groups and contribute to coordinated efforts to bring about a political settlement of the conflict.

The Council reiterates its call to the donor community to increase its humanitarian and development assistance to the people of Burundi, in keeping with their pledges given at the Paris Donor Conference on 11-12 December 2000.

The Council remains actively seized of the situation in Burundi and, in this context, will continue to receive regular reporting from the Secretariat on developments in and around the country. The Council stands ready to consider, in the light of progress in the above areas, further contributions to the peace process, and the implementation of the Arusha Agreement.

Installation of Transitional Government

The Facilitator convened two meetings in July in an effort to break the impasse in the transitional arrangements: the first with leaders of the Regional Peace Initiative in Lusaka on 8 July and the second with the signatories of the Arusha Agreement in Johannesburg two days later [S/2001/1076]. At the first meeting, the Facilitator proposed, due to the lack of consensus within the G-10 (Tutsi) group of parties and the position taken by the army, that Mr. Buyoya would be the transitional leader for the first phase. The leaders agreed, but insisted on certain conditions that were also agreed to by Mr. Buyoya: inclusion of representatives of the signatory parties in the transitional government; full implementation of the Agreement; reforming the army and integrating the armed groups into it; collaborating with UNHCR on repatriation of refugees and resettlement of internally displaced persons; protection of all political leaders; refraining from reprisals against political opponents; release of political prisoners; appealing for regional and international troops for maintaining peace and security; establishing a special protection unit for political leaders consisting of an equal number of soldiers/policemen and people appointed by the G-7 (Hutu) and G-10 groups; working towards an equitable representation of Burundian communities in all public offices; collaborating with the Implementation Monitoring Committee; and ceasing the functions of President after the 18-month period.

The fifteenth Summit Meeting of the Regional Peace Initiative on Burundi (Arusha, 23 July) took note of Mr. Mandela's proposal on the transitional leadership and Mr. Buyoya signed a document agreeing to fulfil all the conditions. The Summit agreed that a special protection unit should be deployed in Burundi as soon as possible to protect returning exiled leaders. Half of the unit would be contributed by the G-7 group. It would be assisted by Ghana, Nigeria, Senegal and South Africa. Reform of the army would begin immediately after installation of the transitional government. It was also decided that cabinet members would be nominated in accordance with the agreed quota of posts (60 per cent for G-7, 40 per cent for G-10) and the allocation of those posts would be determined through negotiations among the participating signatories.

Burundi, in a statement [S/2001/752] issued after the fifteenth Summit Meeting, described recent developments and the next stages of the peace process. It announced that the Facilitator and the Summit, following a process of consultation with the people, had designated the current President and Domitien Ndayizeye to serve as President and Vice-President, respectively, for the first 18 months of the transitional government. On the issue of a ceasefire, contacts were made in South Africa between the Government and CNDD-FDD to launch negotiations. However, Burundi acknowledged that difficulties stemmed not only from the persistence of the war in a number of localities but also from the issue of the transitional leadership. The search for a ceasefire remained the top priority. The draft laws necessary for the formation of a new Government and Parliament would soon be adopted, which would allow those institutions to be operational by 1 November.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 26 September [meeting 4383], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/26 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council reaffirms its strong support for the Facilitation of Former President Nelson Mandela, and urges all Burundians of goodwill to join in the cause of peace, democracy and national reconciliation in their country. It also calls upon all parties to cooperate fully with the Implementation Monitoring Committee.

The Council looks forward to and strongly supports the 1 November 2001 installation of the transitional government in Burundi. The Council believes that this event, the creation of a broad-based and inclusive government, will mark a critical turning point in the Burundi peace process. It will also encourage the donors to provide additional assistance, including by honouring fully the pledges they made during the Paris Donors' Conference in December 2000.

The Council calls on the Burundian parties to reach agreement swiftly on the establishment of a special protection unit entrusted solely with the police function of providing personal security for politicians returning from exile. It welcomes the convening by the Facilitation of a pre-implementation stakeholders meeting in Arusha and urges the international community to provide, on an urgent basis, support for the training and deployment of this special protection unit.

Deeply concerned by the increase of violence recently, the Council recalls the urgent need to bring about a negotiated settlement of the conflict and calls upon the Facilitation, the Regional Peace Initiative for Burundi, the Government of Burundi, the signatory parties and the armed groups to devote their full attention to the achievement of a definitive ceasefire. The Council once again calls on the Forces pour la Défense de la Démocratie (FDD) and Forces Nationales de Libération (FNL) to suspend hostilities, to continue negotiations and to join the peace process. The Council believes that the installation of a broad-based government on the basis of an internationally sanctioned peace process makes armed rebellion an unacceptable means of political expression. It calls on the FNL and FDD, together with the Burundi Government, to observe strictly the rights of the civilian population and other provisions of international humanitarian law.

The Council calls on all States, in particular those in the region, to cease all forms of support to the FNL and FDD, and urges all Member States to encourage the armed groups to join the peace process.

The Council calls on the States of the Regional Initiative to mark the installation of the transitional government by further enhancing their bilateral and regional cooperation with the new government. The Council believes that this cooperation is particularly important in the area of regional security and calls on the Governments of Burundi and its neighbouring States to increase their cooperation in this regard.

The Council expresses its concern at the deteriorating humanitarian situation and calls on all parties to create the conditions for the voluntary return of refugees, and for the safe and unhindered activities of the humanitarian relief community. It also calls upon the donor community to increase their humanitarian assistance to Burundi and to accelerate its delivery.

The sixteenth Summit of the Initiative was held on 1 October. In view of the disagreement between the Burundian Government and the G-7 group on a number of issues, including the composition of the transitional government and the transitional constitution, as well as the composition and size of the special protection unit, the Summit urged both parties to solve their differences and to report to the next Summit 10 days later. In a 10 October press statement [AFR/342-SC/7170], the Security Council condemned the continuing violence in Burundi and expressed concern at the appalling humanitarian situation there. The Council reiterated its strong support for the installation of the transitional government on 1 November and called on the signatories to the Arusha Agreement to cooperate fully with the Facilitator and the Implementation Monitoring Committee. At the seventeenth Summit (Pretoria, South Africa, 11 October), Mr. Mandela reported that Mr. Buyoya and the G-7 group had agreed on the legal framework of the transitional government, the composition of the cabinet, the structure of government and the composition of the Senate and the transitional National Assembly. With regard to the special protection unit, Ghana, Nigeria, Senegal and South Africa offered to provide protection for the returning exiled political leaders until an all-Burundi unit was trained and deployed. South Africa confirmed its offer on 25 October [S/2001/1013]. The first contingent of South African troops arrived in Bujumbura on 27 October.

In a 9 October statement transmitted to the Council on 15 October [S/2001/979], the EU commented that the agreement reached in July on guiding the transition in Burundi led by the Facilitator, Mr. Mandela, also opened up new prospects although they were still fragile in the absence of a ceasefire.

In a 16 October press statement [SC/7176], the Council welcomed the progress made at the seventeenth Summit and called on the Burundian parties to resolve outstanding issues so that the installation of the transitional government could proceed on 1 November.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 29 October [meeting 4399], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1375 (2001). The draft [S/2001/1016] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions and statements by its President on the situation in Burundi, in particular the statement by its President of 26 September 2001 (S/PRST/2001/26),

Reaffirming that the Arusha Peace and Reconciliation Agreement of August 2000 (Arusha Agreement) remains the most viable basis for a resolution of the conflict together with the continued efforts to build an internal political partnership in Burundi,

Expressing deep concern at the ongoing violence and insecurity in Burundi,

Noting with concern the implications of the situation in Burundi for the region as well as the consequences for Burundi of continued regional instability,

Reiterating its strong support for the facilitation of former President Nelson Mandela in his efforts to achieve a peaceful solution to the conflict in Burundi,

Supporting the efforts of the Secretary-General to enhance the role of the United Nations in Burundi, and in particular the continued work of his Special Representative for the Great Lakes region, as well as in his capacity as Chairman of the Implementation Monitoring Committee,

Commending the continued efforts of and support from the Organization of African Unity/African Union for a peaceful resolution of the conflict,

Welcoming the agreement reached at the Summit of the Regional Initiative on 11 October 2001 in Pretoria, South Africa, on the legal framework and the structure of the transitional government, and the composition of the cabinet, the senate and the transitional national assembly,

Also welcoming the letter from the Foreign Minister of South Africa to the President of the Security Council of 23 October 2001 and the letter from the President of Burundi to the President of South Africa annexed thereto,

1. Reaffirms its strong support for the 1 November 2001 installation of the transitional government in Burundi;

2. Calls upon the parties to the Arusha Agreement and the armed groups, namely the Forces pour la Défense de la Démocratie (FDD) and Forces Nationales de Libération (FNL), to put an end immediately to all acts of violence against civilians;

3. Calls upon the FDD and FNL to cease immediately all hostilities, enter into negotiations and join the peace process, and calls upon all the States of the region to support fully the process;

4. Endorses the efforts of the Government of South Africa and other member States to support the implementation of the Arusha Agreement, and strongly supports in this regard the establishment of an interim multinational security presence in Burundi, at the request of its Government, to protect returning political leaders and train an all-Burundian protection force;

5. Requests the Government of Burundi to keep the Council informed of progress to establish an all-Burundian protection force;

6. Reiterates its willingness to consider, in the light of progress in the peace process, further contributions to the peace process and the implementation of the Arusha Agreement;

7. Urges the international community, with the installation of the transitional government, to provide additional assistance, including by honouring fully the pledges made by donors during the Paris Conference of December 2000;

8. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

On 1 November, the Transitional Government of national unity was installed in Burundi. The occasion was witnessed by the Presidents of Malawi, Nigeria, Rwanda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia, the Deputy Presidents of South Africa and Uganda, the OAU Secretary-General and representatives of the United Nations and the EU.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (8 November)

On 8 November [meeting 4408], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/33 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the 1 November 2001 inauguration of Burundi's Transitional Government, and calls on all Burundians to support it and work together to ensure the success of this broad-based and inclusive government's fulfilling its functions in accordance with the agreements that led to its establishment.

The Council welcomes the continued engagement of the Regional Initiative and, in this regard, also welcomes the deployment of the first elements of the multinational security presence tasked with the protection of returning political leaders. The Council calls on all the Burundian parties to support this undertaking, and expresses its gratitude to the Government of South Africa for its contribution to the cause of peace in Burundi.

The Council expresses its deep appreciation to former President Nelson Mandela for his dedicated service as Facilitator of the Arusha Peace Process, and reiterates its hope that the region and the international community may continue to rely on his moral leadership. The Council welcomes the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative for the Great Lakes, through the Implementation Monitoring Committee.

The Council condemns the recent attacks by the FDD and FNL on civilians, and is gravely concerned that the frequency of such attacks has increased. The Council once again states that the installation of a broad-based government in accordance with an internationally supported peace process makes armed rebellion an unacceptable means of political expression.

The Council reiterates its call for an immediate suspension of hostilities in Burundi and for the armed groups to enter into negotiations to reach a definitive ceasefire, which is the priority issue. In this regard, the Council welcomes the involvement of President Bongo of Gabon and Deputy President

Zuma of South Africa and expresses its full support for their efforts.

The Council expresses its concern at the human rights and humanitarian situation in Burundi and once again calls on the responsible parties to ensure full compliance with the relevant international conventions.

The Council calls on the international community to increase its humanitarian assistance, as well as to assist in Burundi's economic recovery and development through, inter alia, honouring the pledges made at the Paris donors' conference.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in his November interim report on the situation in Burundi [S/2001/1076], said that the indefatigable efforts of the Facilitator and leaders of the region had finally succeeded in bringing about the installation of a broad-based Transitional Government of national unity, on 1 November. Mr. Mandela announced that although his role as Facilitator had come to an end, and responsibility for ensuring the implementation of the Arusha Agreement rested with the Implementation Monitoring Committee, under the chairmanship of the United Nations, he would continue to act as moral guarantor to the Agreement and would be represented on the Committee.

The establishment of the Transitional Government made it possible for the peace process to be repatriated from Arusha to Bujumbura where Implementation Committee meetings would be held once adequate security measures were in place for the protection of Committee members and other returning exiled leaders. The primary role of the United Nations Office in Burundi (UNOB), the mandate of which had been extended until December 2001 [YUN 2000, p. 147], would need to be adjusted and refocused. The Office's staffing and resources would have to be increased to provide it with the expertise and the capability needed to support the work of the Implementation Committee and related activities. The net additional staff requirements would amount to 16 international posts, including the Committee Chairman, and a small number of military advisers and civilian police to plan for possible deployment of a peacekeeping mission.

The Secretary-General reported that the progress made on the Transitional Government highlighted the need to cease hostilities to allow the full implementation of the Arusha Agreement, and he called for the international community to increase its contribution in support of that goal by providing assistance for humanitarian, development and reconstruction efforts.

As the Transitional Government was being established, negotiations on a cessation of hostilities/ceasefire continued. Deputy President Jacob Zuma of South Africa, who assisted the Facilitator in the negotiations, addressed the fifteenth and sixteenth Summit Meetings of the Regional Peace Initiative and asked the leaders to call on the armed groups to negotiate seriously. They called on CNDD-FDD and PALIPEHUTU-FNL to cease hostilities and to enter into negotiations on a ceasefire. Despite some positive indications that they would cooperate with the Transitional Government, both groups increased their attacks on civilians, killing more than 30 and forcing scores to flee.

The prolonged conflict continued to disrupt social and economic development. The gross domestic product (GDP) per capita, which averaged $240 from 1980 to 1985, was estimated at $120 in 2001. The external debt exceeded $1 billion (175 per cent of GDP), while the debt service amounted to 124 per cent of the total value of exports of goods and services. Those conditions had had a devastating impact on social services, national health, access to clean water and agricultural production. Life expectancy had declined from 53.8 years in 1993 to 42.8 years, and 58 per cent of the population lived below the poverty line, compared with 39 per cent in 1993. The humanitarian situation suffered due to the increased hostilities.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (15 November)

Following a closed meeting on 15 November, the Security Council issued a communiqué [S/PV.4416], in which it stated that it had had a useful exchange of views with Mr. Mandela, Facilitator of the Arusha Peace Process. The Council thanked Mr. Mandela and commended his efforts on behalf of Burundi. Also on 15 November [meeting 4417], following consultations among Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/35 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its deep gratitude to Madiba Nelson Mandela of South Africa for his dedicated service to the people of Burundi and the cause of peace in Central Africa. Building on the work of his predecessor, the late Mwalimu Julius Nyerere of the United Republic of Tanzania, Madiba has helped to give Burundi a chance for lasting peace, democracy, economic development and national reconciliation.

The Council had, in the statement of its President on 8 November 2001 (S/PRST/2001/33), welcomed the 1 November 2001 inauguration of Burundi's Transitional Government and expressed its appreciation for the instrumental role played by Madiba towards the creation of the Transitional Government. The Council had also expressed the hope that the region and the international community could continue to rely on his moral leadership and ingenious spirit that are essential for progress towards peace in Burundi.

The Council acknowledges the sterling contribution of Madiba as Facilitator of the Arusha Peace Process in bringing together all the parties, including the armed groups, to engage in dialogue in order to facilitate an early cessation of hostilities in accordance with the Arusha Agreement. The Council commends Madiba for his tenacity and unwavering commitment towards political reconciliation in Burundi.

The Council expresses its appreciation to Madiba and the South African Government for initiating the deployment of the first elements of the multinational security presence tasked with the protection of returning political leaders, without which the conditions would not have been conducive for the inauguration of the Burundi Transitional Government. These key successes have confirmed the trust and confidence which the Council and the international community have always had in Madiba.

The Council expresses its concern about the recent increase in violence and reiterates its call for an immediate cessation of hostilities in Burundi. The Council calls on all Burundians to reject violence and to pursue their objectives through the institutions and mechanisms of the transition process. The Council appeals to all Burundians and United Nations Member States to build on the momentum created through the efforts of Madiba and to support the Regional Peace Initiative and the Transitional Government and the Implementation Monitoring Committee.

Communications (December). On 7 December [S/2001/1207], the Security Council informed the Secretary-General that it had taken note of his November report [S/2001/1076] and, in particular, the information on UNOB. The members supported his proposal to strengthen the Office to help implement the Arusha Peace Agreement.

The Netherlands, on 6 December [S/2001/1158], said that in view of the importance of supporting the peace process, in particular the deployment of a multinational security force as recommended by the Secretary-General, it would contribute 1.8 million euros to the Burundi protection force and would consider an additional contribution in 2002.

Rwanda

Rwanda continued to undergo significant changes in 2001 in the areas of decentralization of government and transition to democracy, the drawing up of a new constitution, overhauling of the justice system, and the promotion of a culture of human rights, unity and reconciliation. Such strides were possible as Rwanda moved beyond the aftermath of the 1994 genocide [YUN 1994, p. 2991].

Those efforts were clouded by the insecurity in the region largely due to the ongoing conflict in the DRC. During the Security Council's mission to the Great Lakes region in May [S/2001/521 & Add.1] (see p. 124), President Paul Kagame stated that Rwandan troops were in the DRC because of his Government's concern about the security of its borders. He mentioned recent cross-border incursions and said that some actors were taking advantage of the peace process to push fighters eastwards from the DRC towards Burundi and Rwanda.

Arms embargo

The Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 918 (1994) concerning the arms embargo against Rwanda [YUN 1994, p. 285] submitted to the Council a report on its 2001 activities [S/2002/49]. In the absence of a specific monitoring mechanism to ensure the implementation of the arms embargo, the Committee repeated its observation that it relied solely on the cooperation of States and organizations to provide it with information on violations of the arms embargo. No violations were brought to the Committee's attention during the reporting period.

Financing of UNAMIR

The General Assembly, by decision 55/500 of 7 September, included in the draft agenda of its fifty-sixth (2001) session the item on financing of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR). The Mission had been withdrawn from Rwanda in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 62] and the liquidation process was begun at that time. On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464) and that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item at that session (decision 56/458).

Central African Republic

The United Nations Peace-building Support Office in the Central African Republic (BO-NUCA), established by Security Council presidential statement S/PRST/2000/5 [YUN 2000, p. 162] to take over from the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic, the peacekeeping mission that had been in place since 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 134], continued to support the Government's efforts to consolidate peace and national reconciliation in the wake of a 1996 army rebellion [YUN 1996, p. 808]. Despite efforts to implement the 1997 Bangui Agreements [YUN 1997, p. 91] and the 1998 National Reconciliation Pact [YUN 1998, p. 133], the Government, under President

Ange-Félix Patassé, and the numerous opposition parties found little ground for cooperation or dialogue, and the political situation was dominated by considerable tension in their relationship. The situation was further clouded by social tension and a precarious economic and security situation.

In May, the political situation was exacerbated by an attempted coup d'état led by General André Kolingba, a former President. The Government quickly regained control and worked to restore security in the capital; many of the main instigators fled to the DRC. Most of the army remained loyal and it therefore appeared unlikely that the attempt would jeopardize the restructuring of the defence and security forces upon which the Government had embarked. The security situation contributed to the refugee problem and it was estimated that 20,000 people had fled the Central African Republic for the DRC. The presence of putschists among the refugees was a matter of concern for the Central African Republic, which closed the border between the two States on 17 July.

In the light of the heightened tension in the country, the Secretary-General, in September, recommended strengthening the mandate of BONUCA to focus on activities to bring about political dialogue and national reconciliation, to monitor the security situation, to ensure respect for human rights, and to provide political support for the mobilization of resources for economic reconstruction. The Security Council considered those recommendations and noted the Secretary-General's intention to extend BONUCA's mandate for another year, until 31 December 2002.

The political situation, which had been precarious since the attempted coup, suffered another blow on 26 October when President Patassé dismissed General François Bozizé, the Chief of Staff of the Central African Republic armed forces, following the discovery of a cache of weapons at his residence. As a result of the affair, the situation in the Central African Republic, which was gradually returning to normal, encountered setbacks at the end of the year, further weakening the State's economic recovery efforts.

Political situation and BONUCA activities

Report of Secretary-General (January). The Secretary-General, in response to a request contained in the Security Council's presidential statement S/PRST/2000/5 [YUN 2000, p. 162], reported on 11 January on the situation in the Central African Republic and on BONUCA activities for the previous six months [S/2001/35]. He stated that late 2000 had been dominated by considerable tension in the relationship between the ruling party and the 15 opposition parties [YUN 2000, p. 164]. The lack of dialogue between the country's political stakeholders was a serious obstacle to the sustainability of the democratic institutions established barely a year before. Prolonged civil service strikes, brought about by the accumulation of unpaid salary arrears and current salaries, increased the risk of social upheaval, and the negative economic and social impact of the conflict in the DRC was compromising the progress made towards the consolidation of the fragile peace and stability in the country. The economy as a whole had never recovered from the destruction of the socio-economic infrastructure that took place during the mutinies of 1996 and 1997 and, even more damaging, the continuing fuel crisis that began in June 2000.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

The Security Council met twice on 23 January [meetings 4261, 4262] to consider the situation in the Central African Republic. At the second meeting, following consultations among Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/2 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General dated 11 January 2001, submitted in accordance with the statement by the President of the Council of 10 February 2000 (S/PRST/2000/5).

The Council commends the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in the Central African Republic and the Representative of the Secretary-General for the efforts they have constantly made to contribute to peace and stability in the Central African Republic. In this connection, the Council welcomes the additional progress made in certain areas since the previous report of the Secretary-General of 29 June 2000, particularly in the area of disarmament and the restructuring of the security and defence forces, and as regards respect for human rights by the police.

The Council welcomes the mission to the region of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General, to assess the impact of the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo on the Central African Republic and the Republic of the Congo, in particular its humanitarian, economic, social and security implications. The Council is looking forward to discussing the findings of that mission in the very near future.

The Council expresses its concern at the political and social tensions which have recently resurfaced in the Central African Republic, which threaten the national reconciliation process undertaken four years ago with the active support of the international community. The Council notes with concern the absence of dialogue between the Government and the opposition. The Council is also disturbed by the deterioration of the economic situation, partly because of the repercussions of the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the resulting fuel crisis.

The Council welcomes the contributions already received and calls upon bilateral and multilateral donors to provide full support to the efforts of the Government of the Central African Republic. The Council appreciates the release by the World Bank of the second tranche of credit for the consolidation of public finances and welcomes the recent decision by the International Monetary Fund to release additional funds. The Council calls upon Member States which made pledges at the special meeting in New York co-chaired by the Secretariat, Germany and the United Nations Development Programme in May 2000 to fulfil their commitments. The Council also stresses the importance of international assistance to refugees and displaced persons in the Central African Republic and in the other countries of the region in order to contribute to regional stability.

The Council reaffirms that it is first up to the Central Africans to summon the necessary political will for national reconciliation. The Council strongly encourages the Government of the Central African Republic to do everything in its power to strengthen democratic institutions and broaden the scope of national reconciliation. The Council urges all political actors in the Central African Republic to contribute each in their own way to the reduction of the existing tension between the Government and the opposition. In this respect, while it welcomes the release, on 8 January 2001, of 62 persons who had been arrested during the prohibited demonstration of 19 December 2000, the Council nevertheless notes with concern certain constraints on the peaceful public assembly of opposition and labour groups.

The Council calls upon the Government of the Central African Republic to take concrete measures to implement economic reforms and to ease social tensions. The Council stresses the priority need for the payment of salary arrears in the civil service and welcomes the recent announcement by the Government of the Central African Republic that it will take steps in this direction. The Council also encourages the Government of the Central African Republic to take all the financial measures that are necessary to relaunch the demobilization and reintegration programme.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep it regularly informed about the activities of the United Nations Peace-building Support Office, the situation in the Central African Republic, and in particular the progress made in the political, economic and social reforms, and to submit a report by 30 June 2001, in accordance with the statement of the President of the Council dated 10 February 2000.

Report of Secretary-General (July). In his 2 July report to the Council on the situation in the Central African Republic and on BONUS [S/2001/660], the Secretary-General stated that the political situation was exacerbated by the completely unexpected attempted coup d'état on the night of 27-28 May when a group of soldiers attempted to overthrow the regime of President Ange-Félix Patassé and to seize power. The putschists simultaneously attacked the residence of the head of State, the national radio and the headquarters of the Presidential Guard. They were repulsed by loyalist forces and the coup attempt failed, thanks to the support of Libyan troops sent to Bangui and to the support of elements of the Congolese rebel movement of Jean-Pierre Bemba. The Secretary-General and the President of the Council issued statements condemning the coup attempt.

On 30 May, General André Kolingba, a former President of the Republic, claimed responsibility for the attempted coup. The next day, President Patassé instituted charges against all those involved. On 1 June, General Kolingba called on his supporters to cease fighting, but clashes continued until 6 June. According to authorities, 59 persons were killed (25 military and 34 civilians) and 88,765 displaced. The President announced that the trial of the putschists would be held under transparent conditions and international observers would be allowed to monitor it.

The situation in Bangui was gradually returning to normal, and international organizations were mobilizing to provide appropriate humanitarian assistance, which was estimated to cost $3.6 million. In view of the new crisis, the Secretary-General dispatched General Amadou Toumani Touré, former President of Mali, as his Special Envoy to the Central African Republic from 12 June to 1 July to hold talks on the political situation, assess the humanitarian consequences of the fighting, consider how best the needs of those affected could be met and encourage a resumption of the political dialogue in the country.

Despite the gradual return to normalcy in the capital, a civil service strike had not ended as an announced salary payment was interrupted by the attempted coup. The human rights situation was markedly affected by the events following the attempted coup in that thousands of persons were displaced from one district to another in Bangui. Cases of exactions and of the summary executions of civilian and military personnel were reported; the Government pledged to put an end to those acts.

Since the attempted coup was supported by only a small number of participants, roughly 100, it was unlikely that it had jeopardized the restructuring of the defence and security forces upon which the Government had embarked. The reporting period was marked by heightened insecurity in certain provinces where there were attacks on travellers, military convoys and cattle farmers, and pillaging of refugee camps and villages. In Bangui itself, a number of acts of armed banditry were reported, thus highlighting the situation in respect of the proliferation of illegally owned weapons. BONUSA undertook a fact-finding mission on the border between the Central African Republic and Cameroon in March, following the tensions that had arisen between the two countries in February. That initiative resulted in an easing of tensions that led to the discussion of the demarcation of the common border within the framework of their mixed commission on cooperation. BONUSA's civilian police organized a number of training programmes for the police and gendarmerie of the Central African Republic. The economic situation suffered further as a result of the attempted coup d'état, and the Government's reform efforts were set back. The consequences for the Central African Republic of the crisis in the DRC were also felt in the economic (interruption of traffic on the Ubangui River, supply difficulties), humanitarian (refugee flows) and security (risk of illegal circulation of weapons) areas.

The Secretary-General concluded that the Central African Republic was in a crisis situation which was not fundamentally different from the situation caused by the 1996-1997 mutinies. The attempted coup d'état had jeopardized the efforts the international community had been making for five years to restore and consolidate peace, and had endangered the democratic process and economic recovery. The Secretary-General called on the international community to provide support for the restructuring of the defence and security forces, the collection of weapons and the redeployment plan drawn up by the Government. The continuation and completion of the restructuring of the armed forces was a priority task. The efforts already made in that sphere and the training provided by BONUSA had enabled the army to demonstrate its loyalty during the attempt. The people of the Central African Republic were urged to re-establish political dialogue, restore confidence, foster consultations and promote tolerance.

Appointment. On 9 July [S/2001/690], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint General Lamine Cissé (Senegal) as his Representative in the Central African Republic and Head of BONUSA. He would succeed Cheikh Tidiane Sy (Senegal), who resigned in May. The Council, on 12 July [S/2001/691], took note of the Secretary-General's intention.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 17 July [meeting 4347], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/18 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has examined the report of the Secretary-General of 2 July 2001 on the activities of the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in the Central African Republic and the situation in the Central African Republic.

The Council expresses its appreciation to the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General, General Amadou Toumani Touré, for the mission he conducted in Bangui from 9 June to 1 July 2001. It notes with satisfaction that the mission has contributed to easing tensions in the Central African Republic.

The Council welcomes the appointment of the new Representative of the Secretary-General in the Central African Republic. It looks forward to his assuming the active leadership of the Peace-building Support Office at an early date.

The Council reiterates its condemnation of the recent attempted coup in the Central African Republic. It recognizes the importance of the Central African Republic to subregional stability. It expresses its deep concern at the precarious situation in the country and the persisting acts of violence, in particular against certain ethnic groups. The Council notes that such a climate is not conducive to encouraging the continuation of the return home of the thousands of Central Africans that were displaced or took refuge in neighbouring countries as a result of the events at the end of May. It calls upon the Government of the Central African Republic to take urgent steps to bring an end to all acts of violence.

The Council strongly condemns the killing of the security coordinator for the United Nations system in the Central African Republic. It takes note of the condemnation of this act by the Central African authorities and of their intention to carry out an investigation and urges them to bring those responsible to justice.

The Council calls for respect for human rights, national reconciliation and political dialogue in the spirit of the 1998 National Reconciliation Pact.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to submit to it by 30 September 2001 recommendations on how the United Nations might further contribute to the recovery of the Central African Republic, paying particular attention to the following questions:

(a) Strengthening the Peace-building Support Office, in particular in areas such as human rights monitoring, assistance to the judicial system and capacity-building, and enhancing the effectiveness of its early warning capacity;

(b) Exploring with the Government of the Central African Republic, in cooperation with the relevant institutions, the provision of expertise in the area of public administration and finances, in particular by making available experts in such matters;

(c) The continued and improved restructuring of the Central African armed forces and the implementation of an effective arms-collection programme.

The Council expresses its willingness to study, in cooperation with the relevant institutions, particularly the International Monetary Fund and World Bank, the recommendations of the Secretary-General.

The Council stresses that an enhanced international effort will be necessary to help in the recovery of the Central African Republic. It urges all States that made pledges at the special donor meeting in

New York in May 2000 to fulfil them. It calls on the Bretton Woods institutions to take into account the specific nature of the situation in order to conclude programmes with the Central African authorities at an early date. The Council stresses the crucial importance of poverty eradication, debt payment and payment of arrears of salary for civil servants which requires in the long term heightened efforts on the part of the Government of the Central African Republic in the management of public finances and administration.

The Council again recalls that responsibility for national reconciliation, stability and the reconstruction of the country lies primarily with the political leaders and the people of the Central African Republic. It emphasizes in this regard that the full effectiveness of the assistance of the international community depends on the implementation in parallel of appropriate structural reforms.

Report of Secretary-General (September). On 18 September [S/2001/886], the Secretary-General, in response to the Council's request (above), submitted a report on the situation in the Central African Republic, which, he said, was in a situation of crisis since the attempted coup d'état in May and required immediate and increased levels of external assistance. The repercussions of the fighting in the capital had been disastrous for the economy, and the World Bank had suspended disbursements for non-payment of amounts due. The State was unable to pay the salaries of its public servants on a regular basis. In addition, political dialogue no longer seemed to be on the agenda. In the area of security, the chief instigators of the attempted coup and a large number of soldiers had fled to the DRC and posed a threat to stability in the country. For that reason, any solution to the DRC crisis should take into account the situation in the Central African Republic. The Central African Republic's stability was threatened by the proliferation of weapons in the sub-region and in areas adjacent to the DRC's Equateur region under the control of the Front de libération du Congo of Jean-Pierre Bemba. The refugee problem was a further illustration of the connection between the situations in the DRC and the Central African Republic. At the time of the report, approximately 20,000 refugees from the Central African Republic were residing in the DRC, and the putschists were reportedly among them. The Central African authorities closed the common border on 17 July.

At the domestic level, the situation was gradually returning to normal. The investigation by the Government into the killing of the security coordinator for the UN system was under way. The human rights situation was gradually improving, with a reduction in the number of executions.

In order to ensure that security and peace were restored in the Central African Republic, the Secretary-General called on States and other partners to provide assistance in disarmament and redeployment, and in the restructuring of the defence and security forces.

Due to the situation since the attempted coup d'état, the Secretary-General, as the Council had requested, proposed that BONUCA's mandate, originally set out in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 128], should be expanded in the areas of political support, security, civilian police, human rights and economic recovery. Its tasks would include monitoring the political situation; supporting initiatives to strengthen national unity and reconciliation; strengthening democratic institutions; monitoring the military and security situation; promoting the restructuring of the defence and security forces and the redeployment plan; promoting arms collection; promoting, within the armed forces, a culture of peace and respect for national institutions; helping to mobilize external resources for restructuring of the defence and security forces; monitoring the public security situation; supporting the Government's training of police and gendarmerie; providing technical assistance to police and gendarmerie in public order and crime control; monitoring the human rights situation; contributing to national capacity-building in respect for human rights; supporting activities in strengthening the judicial system and the rule of law; providing political support for UN efforts to promote national reconstruction, combat poverty and promote good governance; and contributing to mobilizing political support and resources to implement social and economic programmes agreed upon with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund (IMF)). Should the Council approve those new tasks, the Secretary-General suggested that BONUCA's mandate be extended for an additional year, until 31 December 2002.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

The Security Council considered the Secretary-General's report at two meetings, on 21 and 26 September [meetings 4380, 4382]. At the second meeting, following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/25 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 19 September 2001 submitted in accordance with the statement of its President on 17 July 2001 (S/PRST/2001/18), particularly his recommendations on how the United Nations might further contribute to the recovery of the Central African Republic.

The Council expresses its appreciation of the continuing work of the Secretary-General's Representative, General Lamine Cissé, and of the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in the Central African Republic.

The Council expresses its continued deep concern at the precarious situation in the Central African Republic. It reiterates its call on all parties for political dialogue, national reconciliation and respect for human rights in the spirit of the 1998 National Reconciliation Pact. In this respect it has taken note of the appeals for national unity made by the Central African authorities.

The Council calls on the Central African authorities to follow the internationally accepted standards for due process in the course of investigations and court trials of individuals involved in the coup attempt in May 2001. These procedures should be transparent and should not be allowed to aggravate the inter-ethnic relations in the Central African Republic. The refugees who left the country after the failed coup should be able to return in safety without fear of persecution on ethnic basis.

The Council encourages the international community to make a substantial and urgent contribution to the recovery of the Central African Republic and emphasizes that the efficiency of such a contribution will greatly depend on the efforts the Government of the Central African Republic itself makes to this end. The Council emphasizes that the crucial issues of external debt and payment of arrears of salary for civil servants need to be urgently addressed.

The Council encourages the United Nations Development Programme and the international financial institutions, particularly the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and the African Development Bank, to consider, in consultation with the Government of the Central African Republic and the Secretary-General's Representative, ways of strengthening the capacities of the Government of the Central African Republic in the management of its economic and financial affairs, including through secondment of high-level experts. The Council invites the Secretary-General to keep it informed of actions taken in this regard when he presents his next report on the Central African Republic. In addition, the Council urges the Bretton Woods institutions to show exceptional solicitude towards the Central African Republic.

The Council takes note with interest of the intention of the Secretary-General, in coordination with the Government of the Central African Republic, to extend the mandate of the Peace-building Support Office and to strengthen it in accordance with paragraph 29 of his report of 19 September 2001.

The Council underlines the need to continue the restructuring of the Central African armed forces to enable them to fulfil their role effectively, loyally and impartially, in the service of the Central African people. It also recalls the importance of implementing an effective arms-collection programme. In this regard, it supports the recommendations in paragraphs 17 and 18 of the report of the Secretary-General.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep it regularly informed of the activities of the Support Office and the situation in the Central African Republic, particularly in the areas of political dialogue, national reconciliation and respect for human rights.

At that meeting, the President informed the Council that the Secretariat's assessment of the cost of strengthening BONUCA would be $1.4 million; extending its mandate for the year 2002 would cost approximately $4.9 million.

Communications. On 19 November [S/2001/1117], the Sudan forwarded to the Secretary-General a Declaration issued by the meeting of the Community of Sahelo-Saharan States on Central Africa (New York, 15 November). Expressing concern about the deteriorating security conditions in the Central African Republic, the Community emphasized solidarity with the legitimate elected Government and commended efforts by Colonel Muammar Qaddafi, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya leader, to promote stability in Central Africa within the framework of the mandate assigned to him by the Community as its coordinator for peace and security.

The Sudan, on 4 December [S/2001/1148], transmitted the final communiqué issued by the African mini-summit on peace and stability in the Central African Republic (Khartoum, 3 December). Attended by the heads of State of Chad, the Central African Republic, the Sudan and Zambia, and the Libyan Secretary of Defence, together with representatives of OAU and the United Nations, the meeting decided to establish, for an interim period, a peacekeeping force to ensure security in the country and appealed to OAU, the United Nations, and friendly countries to support it. The mini-summit also decided to form a political committee of foreign ministers of Burkina Faso, Chad, Gabon, Libya and the Sudan, the OAU Secretary-General, the Representative of the UN Secretary-General and the Secretary-General of the Community of Sahelo-Saharan States to maintain contacts with a view to achieving national conciliation in Central Africa.

Further developments. In a report covering the situation in the Central African Republic in the last three months of 2001 [S/2002/12], the Secretary-General said that the situation there continued to be marked by the repercussions of the attempted coup d'état in May. On 9 October, the Joint Commission of Judicial Inquiry submitted its partial conclusions to President Patassé and to the competent judicial authorities. It was expected that the trial of the putschists would commence in December and would involve about 700 individuals, of whom 70 were in custody and 628 were fugitives. The political situation deteriorated further on 26 October when the President relieved General François Bozizé of his duties as Chief of Staff of the Central African Republic's armed forces after a cache of weapons was discovered in his residence. When the General resisted arrest, the Secretary-General's Representative undertook a good offices mission. The President promised to appoint General Bozizé to another position and to consider granting a pardon once the judicial procedure was completed, while the General stated that he would remove barricades that had a stranglehold on Bangui. Despite the verbal agreement, government troops attacked the General's positions, and the General and some of his supporters fled to Chad. The President of Chad refused to consider extraditing General Bozizé and proposed negotiations, with OAU and UN involvement. The General claimed to be willing to negotiate with his country's authorities, a claim supported by Chad, which granted him political asylum.

Efforts were made at the regional level, through the Community of Sahelo-Saharan States and OAU, to reach a negotiated solution to the new crisis. Libya proposed sending international observers and an African peacekeeping force to the Central African Republic.

Internally, the Bozizé affair contributed to the persistent tension between the majority and the opposition, who sought an amnesty for General Bozizé and his men. A peaceful end to the affair was desired, and the Secretary-General supported all subregional initiatives that sought to restore stability to the Central African Republic.

Responding to calls for calm, the Central African Republic authorities put an end, on 24 December, to all judicial proceedings against former General Bozizé and his men. The former General set a number of conditions for his return to Bangui, including the proclamation of a general amnesty, the departure of foreign troops, cancellation of the sending of a peacekeeping force to the Central African Republic and the holding of a national dialogue. A meeting between President Patassé and the opposition leaders was planned. With the assistance of UN agencies, a committee was set up on 29 November to consider the modalities for receiving refugees returning from the DRC. Only a few returned officially, but many returned to Bangui quietly.

During the reporting period, instances of extrajudicial execution and arbitrary detention were reported to BONUCA, and the situation in the prisons remained troubling. The failed coup and the Bozizé affair had a serious impact on the country's armed forces, with the army losing 1,300 soldiers. Most of the deserters fled to the DRC and the remainder to Chad, leaving the army in a state of disarray. The Bozizé affair led to a worsening in the security situation and also had adverse consequences for the economy, as the blocking of the main supply route for nearly a week and the closure of offices, banks and businesses led to a major loss of income for the State.

The Secretary-General observed that the process of returning to normal in the Central African Republic had been slowed down by the Bozizé affair. The national reconciliation that was expected after the failed coup in May had still not taken place by the end of the year, partly because of the continuing judicial investigations. It was hoped that President Patassé's call for the return of refugees would contribute to an easing of tension.

MINURCA financing

In March [A/55/849], the Secretary-General submitted the financial performance report of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic (MINURCA) for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000. The Mission, which at the end of its mandate in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 161], was replaced with BONUCA, remained in the process of liquidation. The General Assembly, by resolutions 53/238 [YUN 1999, p. 129] and 54/277 [YUN 2000, p. 166], had appropriated a total amount of $41,098,075 gross ($40,069,275 net) for the maintenance and liquidation of the Mission for that period, inclusive of $1,659,640 for the support account for peacekeeping operations and $325,435 for the United Nations Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy. Expenditures for the period totalled $39,900,975 gross ($38,916,875 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $1,197,100 gross ($1,152,400 net). The unencumbered balance resulted mainly from lower actual costs for military contingents and civilian personnel, as well as reduced operational requirements under premises/accommodation, air operations and other programmes.

ACABQ considered the financial performance report and made comments in two of its own reports, both issued in April: one on financing of UN peacekeeping operations in general [A/55/874] and the other on the financial report of MINURCA [A/55/884].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 June [meeting 103], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/960], adopted resolution 55/270 without vote [agenda item 152].

Financing of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic

The General Assembly,
Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and the related reports of the

Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1159 (1998) of 27 March 1998, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission, the last of which was resolution 1271 (1999) of 22 October 1999,

Recalling its resolution 52/249 of 26 June 1998 on the financing of the Mission and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 54/277 of 15 June 2000,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to meet its outstanding liabilities,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic as at 30 April 2001, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 36.7 million United States dollars, representing 32 per cent of the total assessed contributions, notes that some 44 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions in full;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Also expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

5. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

6. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

7. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the liquidation of the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

9. Decides that Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission shall be credited their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 1,197,100 dollars gross (1,152,400 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 2000, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in subsequent relevant resolutions and decisions for the ad hoc apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations, the latest of which were resolution 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and decisions 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999 for the period 1998-2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999;

10. Also decides that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 1,197,100 dollars gross (1,152,400 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 2000 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations in accordance with the scheme set out in paragraph 9 above;

11. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic".

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the item on MINURCA financing would remain for consideration during its resumed fifth-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464) and that the Fifth Committee would continue to consider the item at that session (decision 56/458).

West Africa

In response to rising tensions in West Africa, particularly in the Mano River Union countries (Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone), the Secretary-General, in March, sent an inter-agency mission to the subregion, led by Ibrahima Fall, Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs. The mission underscored the fragility of the political, security, social and humanitarian situation, as well as the precarious governance and economic development conditions in West Africa, particularly in the Mano River Union countries and Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea-Bissau and the Casamance region of Senegal. It recommended that the United Nations and the international community adopt an integrated and comprehensive regional approach to prevent, manage and contribute to resolving the many conflicts in the region, and made recommendations in political, security, economic and humanitarian areas to that end. As proposed by the mission, the Secretary-General established the Office of the Special Representative for West Africa, as of January 2002.

Following the mission, some tangible improvement in parts of West Africa was noted: the peace process in Sierra Leone saw significant progress followed by an improvement in the humanitarian situation; in Côte d'Ivoire, the Government organized a dialogue for national reconciliation, which was attended by all the major political leaders; Guinea decided not to force through legislative elections that could have escalated the internal political crisis following a controversial referendum in November on the extension of the President's term of office; a UN mission was dispatched to Guinea-Bissau to develop an overall peace-building and development plan; and elections were held in the Gambia. There was also a reduction in tension among the Mano River Union countries following progress in the ministerial dialogue among ministers for foreign affairs, defence and the interior, which began in August. The ministers discussed restoring confidence at the highest political level, security problems along the common borders and preparations for a summit of heads of State, planned for early 2002. Despite those improvements, the overall political situation remained volatile, and the threat of insecurity and instability remained real in the Mano River Union and other countries.

Inter-Agency Mission to West Africa

The Inter-Agency Mission to West Africa, led by Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs, Ibrahim Fall, visited 11 West African countries (Côte d'Ivoire, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Mali, Nigeria, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Togo) from 6 to 27 March (S/2001/434). The Secretary-General's decision to dispatch the mission in response to security problems in the subregion, particularly along the borders between Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone, had been welcomed by the Security Council in presidential statement S/PRST/2000/41 [YUN 2000, p. 182]. During the Mission's meetings with high-level government officials, UN country teams, members of the diplomatic corps, parliamentarians, political party representatives, religious leaders, representatives of civil society groups, NGOs, and staff of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), the Mano River Union secretariat, the Commission of the West African Economic and Monetary Union, the African Development Bank and the Central Bank of West African States, the idea of a comprehensive and integrated approach to the priority needs and challenges of the subregion was extensively discussed. Within that context, views were exchanged on a range of issues, including peace and security, governance, national reconciliation, promoting political dialogue, human rights, humanitarian issues, subregional integration, enhancing cooperation with ECOWAS and other organizations, the HIV/AIDS epidemic, alleviating poverty and external debt, illegal arms trafficking and its connection to the sale of "conflict diamonds", landmines, the proliferation of arms and militias, and issues affecting children, including the problem of child soldiers.

Throughout the Mission's visit, the gravity of the political and security situation in West Africa and the potential for the rapid spread of insecurity and instability were repeatedly underscored. Most interlocutors foresaw deterioration in the Mano River Union countries, Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea-Bissau and the Casamance region of Senegal, and the possibility of a "domino effect", with instability spreading from one country to another, which was a source of deep and widespread concern. The importance of approaching conflict resolution from a regional perspective was stressed. Likewise, humanitarian problems within single countries could not be viewed as specific and internal. It was repeatedly noted that problems had been compounded by a lack of political dialogue among leaders and a lack of national reconciliation, persistent economic decline and high levels of poverty, the trade in arms and proliferation of militias, narcotics trafficking, disease, resource scarcity and the often violent and aggressive attempts at transnational control of natural resources by State and non-State actors. In some countries, the Mission noted wide disparities in perception of the situation between the Government and other interlocutors. Ethnic affinities, which transcended national boundaries in countries such as the Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Senegal and Sierra Leone, had contributed to the spread of conflicts in border areas, especially where militia groups and others had carved out territories for control. Of particular concern were tensions between the Mano River Union countries and the alleged involvement of State and non-State actors in supporting the Revolutionary United Front in Sierra Leone, among them dealers in conflict diamonds, mercenaries and international arms dealers. Interlocutors stressed the importance of efforts by ECOWAS leaders and the United Nations to promote reconciliation between the leaders of the three Mano River Union countries.

ECOWAS had played a significant role in conflict prevention and resolution and had sent peacekeeping forces to several of its member States where conflict had broken out. The possible deployment of an interposition force along the borders between Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone to prevent further armed incursions remained under consideration. While ECOWAS countries were generally willing to contribute peacekeeping forces to either an ECOWAS or UN force, they lacked equipment, training, logistical and technical capacities.

The Mission found that reports of violations of human rights, ranging from the broader rights of people to peace, security and development to abuses against the rights of individuals, were widespread within the subregion. In addition, the economies of West African countries were generally fragile, despite abundant natural resources, and the issue of the external debt burden was raised as a major concern by both government and non-governmental interlocutors. As a result of the many conflicts, the subregion was confronted with a serious refugee problem, with well over half a million refugees and over 670,000 internally displaced persons. Insecurity had, in a number of areas, severely constrained humanitarian operations and the prevalence of HIV/AIDS was increasing.

The Mission recommended enhancement of institutional arrangements and mechanisms within the UN system, including the establishment of a UN office for West Africa to develop policies for activities and monitor political, security, human rights, humanitarian and development issues in the subregion; closer consultations between the United Nations, Governments and ECOWAS; and a subregional UN development assistance framework to target issues of a cross-border nature. In the area of peace and security, the Mission proposed that the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone be expanded to cover Guinea and Liberia to take into account the interrelations between the implementation of the Lomé Peace Agreement [YUN 1999, p. 159] and implementation of UN sanctions on Liberia and the monitoring of borders between the three countries. As to conflict prevention and resolution, it was recommended that the UN system and the international community strengthen the ECOWAS Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management, Resolution, Peacekeeping and Security. Cooperation with the UN system should be enhanced to develop the ECOWAS early warning system, including a central observer office and zonal bureaux, and the ECOWAS secretariat should be supported to enable it to provide electoral assistance to member States. The United Nations needed to be more involved in national reconciliation activities as soon as signs of a potential crisis in the subregion were evident and should follow up on the efforts of national leaders, in particular those of Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia and Sierra Leone, to honour their commitments to reconciliation with opposition groups. Preventive and post-conflict peace-building measures should be among primary activities in national and sub-regional programmes, with particular emphasis on the political dimensions of peace-building. Disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes should be implemented simultaneously in post-conflict situations, in particular in the Mano River Union countries, Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea-Bissau and the Casamance area of Senegal. The United Nations should assist ECOWAS in implementing its peacekeeping programmes, including through strengthening ECOWAS headquarters arrangements and training centres, and providing logistical and technical support. Other recommendations concerned stopping the proliferation of arms in the subregion; ending the use of child soldiers, child trafficking and child labour; women and armed conflict; peacekeeping arrangements; implementing targeted sanctions; governance; human rights; refugees; ensuring safe access and safe passage for humanitarian assistance; internally displaced persons and host communities; funding; and economic integration.

Security Council consideration. On 10 April, the Security Council received a briefing from Assistant Secretary-General Fall on the findings of the Mission. The Council considered the Mission's report on 14 May [meeting 4319], when it was again briefed by Mr. Fall and other Mission members. The report was again considered by the Council on 18 and 19 December [meetings 4439, 4440] when the President made a statement on the situation in West Africa (see p. 162).

Communications. The ECOWAS heads of State and Government, at an extraordinary summit on the security situation in West Africa (Abuja, Nigeria, 11 April) [S/2001/353], expressed concern at the continuing tension along the common boundaries of Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone, and the presence of several irregular armed groups in the region. They appealed to the Mano River Union States to take individual and collective measures to curb the activities of armed rebel groups operating on their territories. They reaffirmed their wish to deploy troops along the borders.

In a 24 September statement [S/2001/922], the EU expressed satisfaction about progress made in the dialogue among the Mano River Union countries, particularly recent meetings of their Foreign Ministers held in the three capitals. The EU welcomed commitments concerning joint action against the groups involved in events destabilizing the region, the establishment of a joint patrol along the borders of the three countries and combating the proliferation of small arms. It welcomed the prospect of a meeting between the heads of State of those countries in January 2002.

Establishment of UN office for West Africa

The Secretary-General informed the Security Council President on 26 November [S/2001/1128] that he intended to establish the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for West Africa. It would be entrusted with the functions of: promoting an integrated sub-regional approach in the work of the United Nations and other partners; liaising with and assisting ECOWAS and the Mano River Union; carrying out good offices roles and special assignments, including in conflict prevention and peace-building; and reporting to Headquarters on key developments. The Office, which would have seven international staff headed by an Under-Secretary-General, would be established in Dakar, Senegal, for three years from January 2002, subject to a review after its first year. On 29 November [S/2001/1129], the Council welcomed the Secretary-General's intention.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 4440], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/38 on behalf on the Council:

The Security Council has considered, during its public meetings of 14 May and 18 December 2001, the report of the Inter-Agency Mission to West Africa.

The Council welcomes with satisfaction the above report and fully supports initiatives taken with a view to implementing its recommendations. It welcomes, in particular, the establishment of the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for West Africa to ensure, inter alia, the strengthening of harmonization and coordination of the activities of the United Nations system in an integrated regional perspective and to the development of a fruitful partnership with the Economic Community of West African States, other sub-regional organizations and international and national actors, including civil society.

The Council emphasizes that greater subregional integration must remain a key goal for the United Nations system in the search for lasting solutions to the conflicts in West Africa and to the human suffering to which these give rise. It stresses the need to further strengthen the capacities of the Economic Community of West African States in the areas which should enable it to act as the engine of sub-regional integration and increased cooperation with the United Nations system.

The Council underlines the importance of taking steps to develop cooperation and coordination among the intergovernmental bodies and entities of the United Nations system which can influence the situation in West Africa, and expresses its intention to consider measures to coordinate its action with these bodies and entities.

The Council emphasizes the need to maintain regional peace and stability and, in that connection, welcomes the progress made in the Mano River Union area. It also emphasizes the need to see to the effective implementation of the confidence-building and cooperation measures agreed on by Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone and strongly encourages these three countries to do their utmost to hold a summit meeting of their heads of State and to ensure its success. It commends the role of the civil society particularly the Mano River Union Women's Peace Network for their instrumental role in facilitating dialogue among the leaders of the region.

The Council also emphasizes the need to strengthen the capacity of the Economic Community of West African States to monitor and to stem the illicit flows of small arms and the establishment of militia. In this connection it welcomes the extension for a period of three years, starting on 5 July 2001, of the Moratorium on the Importation, Exportation and Manufacture of Small Arms and Light Weapons in West Africa. It appeals to the international community to provide appropriate financial assistance to the Programme for Coordination and Assistance for Security and Development and to the national mechanisms involved in the fight against the proliferation of small arms in West Africa.

The Council also emphasizes the urgent need to solve the problem of refugees and displaced persons in the subregion by permitting voluntary returns as soon as possible, under acceptable security conditions.

The Council reiterates its condemnation of the use, by State and non-State actors, of children as combatants in violation of the relevant international instruments on the rights of the child and the Accra Declaration on War-Affected Children in West Africa and the related Plan of Action. It calls for the immediate demobilization of all child soldiers.

The Council welcomes the holding in New York, on 16 November 2001, of the fifth meeting of the United Nations-Economic Community of West African States-Sierra Leone coordination mechanism and the progress made in the peace process in Sierra Leone. It appeals to the international community for substantial financial assistance for the programme for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants and other peace-consolidating activities in Sierra Leone.

The Council welcomes the holding of the twenty-fifth conference of heads of State and of Government of the Economic Community of West African States. It pays tribute to that organization for its major contribution to the restoration of peace, stability, democracy and development in West Africa.

The Council will remain actively seized of this matter.

Communication. The twenty-fifth session of the Authority of Heads of State and Government of ECOWAS (Dakar, 20-21 December) [A/56/849-S/2002/219] reviewed the political and security situation in West Africa and commended Sierra Leone for its progress in restoring peace and security. It also took note of the evolution of the situation in the Mano River Union region and appealed to member States of the Union to intensify the dialogue they had initiated.

Sierra Leone

The United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) continued throughout 2001 to maintain its contacts with the Government of Sierra Leone and the main rebel group, the Revolutionary United Front (RUF), to follow up on the implementation of the Agreement on the Ceasefire and Cessation of Hostilities (Abuja Agreement), signed in November 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 210]. Although the situation in Sierra Leone had remained relatively stable since the signing of the Agreement, concerns remained about continuing incursions and violence along the borders of Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone (see above). Progress towards implementing the terms of the Abuja Agreement was slow but discernible in the early months of the year, beginning with the disarmament and demobilization of ex-combatants. UNAMSIL began patrols into RUF-held territory to carry out its aim of assisting the Government to extend its authority and restore law and order throughout the country, to promote a political process, and to renew the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme.

In March, the Security Council increased UNAMSIL's military component to 17,500 and welcomed the Mission's revised concept of operations that foresaw a progressive expansion of its area of operations leading to eventual government control of the entire country and political inclusion of opposing groups.

By midyear, the pace of implementation of the Abuja Agreement picked up and progress continued to be made throughout the rest of 2001. The Secretary-General reported in September that there were grounds for cautious optimism on the peace process. The ceasefire, although fragile, was generally observed, and by December withdrawal of forces and disarmament had been accomplished in 10 of the 12 districts. As disarmament progressed, the Government began preparations for elections in December, later postponed to May 2002. RUF was permitted to register as a political party and was invited to participate in electoral discussions. Security in the country remained a serious concern, and the Secretary-General noted that the establishment of adequate disarmament, demobilization and reintegration facilities remained an urgent task.

In January, the Security Council considered the 2000 report of the Panel of Experts established to investigate possible violations of the sanctions against Sierra Leone—the arms embargo and the ban on rough diamond exports. According to the Panel, the trade in rough diamonds was a major source of income for RUF and had enabled it to sustain its military activities. Sierra Leone informed the Council of steps it had taken to end transactions of such “conflict” or “blood” diamonds by, among other measures, establishing a certificate-of-origin regime to halt illicit mining and smuggling of diamonds, action that was welcomed by the Council.

The Secretary-General pursued efforts to establish a Special Court for Sierra Leone to try crimes against humanity, war crimes and other violations of international humanitarian law. He raised questions concerning some aspects of the draft agreement between the United Nations and Sierra Leone and the proposed statute, particularly on the personal jurisdiction of the Special Court and funding. Having received indications of sufficient, if not total, funding for the first three years, the Secretary-General authorized the commencement of the operation of the Court, beginning with a planning mission to Freetown in January 2002.

Initiatives were under way to establish a Truth and Reconciliation Commission in Sierra Leone, which was expected to begin work in 2002.

UNAMSIL

Report of Secretary-General (March). In a 14 March report [S/2001/228], his ninth on UNAMSIL, the Secretary-General described developments in Sierra Leone since his December 2000 report [YUN 2000, p. 211]. The Secretary-General's Special Representative, Oluyemi Adeniji, and UNAMSIL representatives held several meetings and maintained contacts with the Government and RUF to follow up on the implementation of the 2000 Abuja Agreement. UNAMSIL discussed military issues with the rebel group, in particular the return of weapons seized from UNAMSIL contingents in May 2000 [ibid., p. 195] and the reopening of roads to facilitate the free movement of people and goods in RUF-held areas. RUF was also urged to disengage from the conflict at Sierra Leone's border with Guinea, to begin disarming and demobilizing its fighters and to accept the deployment of government officials. Those contacts yielded some results—RUF reopened several roads, UNAMSIL was able to expand its patrol areas and RUF returned some of the UNAMSIL weapons and equipment it had seized.

The Government established its own indirect contacts with RUF, but the slow pace at which RUF was implementing aspects of the Abuja Agreement did not help to remove apprehension about the rebels' intentions. The RUF leadership indicated that it would not disarm unless the Government was replaced by an inclusive interim government when its term of office expired on 28 March. On 13 February, the Parliament agreed to extend the Government's term so that it could work towards accelerating the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme for all combatants, with the exception of the Sierra Leone Army, repatriating and resettling refugees and internally displaced persons, extending government authority to all RUF-held areas and preparing for elections. The Electoral Commission completed its plan for holding parliamentary and presidential elections by 31 December; however, there appeared to be consensus both among Sierra Leoneans and in the international community that free and fair elections would not be possible until security conditions were in place and the Government's authority was extended throughout the country. Other issues needed to be addressed, such as the choice of an electoral system, a review of the electoral law, restructuring of constituency boundaries, registration of voters and printing of the electoral roll.

During the reporting period, the ceasefire between the Government and the rebels continued to hold and the military situation remained relatively calm. However, there was increased fighting at the border areas with Guinea, and the Sierra Leone Army attempted to move towards RUF positions in some areas, which caused local tensions. In the meantime, the Army continued its training and restructuring programme with the assistance of the United Kingdom. UNAMSIL maintained liaison with the Army and the United Kingdom Task Force.

As to the situation with neighbouring countries (see also above), fighting escalated in the areas along Sierra Leone's border with Guinea. In response to cross-border attacks, Guinean forces intensified shelling and launched helicopter gunship attacks on RUF positions deep inside Sierra Leone, causing civilian casualties and flows of internally displaced persons. There were also reports of incursions by armed elements into Liberia, with Liberia accusing Guinea of providing support to those armed elements. A joint Guinea-Sierra Leone military body was set up to ensure that Guinean forces avoided causing civilian casualties during military operations against RUF positions. In an effort to arrest further escalation, the Special Representative met with the Presidents of Guinea and Liberia and the Chairman of ECOWAS to convey the Security Council's concern at the widening crisis. Liberia, under increasing international pressure, on 12 January publicly renounced its support for RUF and expelled RUF elements. The Security Council, by resolution 1343(2001) of 7 March (see p. 181), outlined the steps that Liberia had to take with a view to ending its support for RUF and other armed rebel groups in the region.

As at 14 March, the military strength of UNAMSIL was 10,356 personnel and was expected to reach 12,700 by the end of March. UNAMSIL had consolidated its presence in the south and west of the country and had begun patrolling into RUF-controlled areas. The Mission revised its concept of operations to take into account the Abuja Agreement, the changes in its military structure and circumstances on the ground. UNAMSIL's main objectives remained to assist the Government to extend its authority and restore law and order throughout the country, and to promote a political process that would lead to a renewed disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme and the holding of free and fair elections. The updated concept of operations integrated military and civilian aspects and envisaged the deployment, in successive phases, into RUF-controlled areas of UNAMSIL troops, UN civil affairs, civilian police and human rights personnel, representatives of humanitarian agencies and government personnel. The Mission's rules of engagement allowed it to respond robustly to any attack or threat of attack, including in a pre-emptive manner. In the first stage of forward deployment, which was under way, UNAMSIL was expanding its area of operations by conducting long-range patrols into RUF-controlled areas; it was continuing to maintain liaison with RUF. On the arrival of significant reinforcements, UNAMSIL would enter its second phase of forward deployment by expanding into new areas to ensure freedom of movement along the east-west supply routes and to create the conditions for the resumption of organized disarmament and demobilization by ex-combatants. In the third stage, subject to the availability of troops, UNAMSIL would deploy further forward to the diamond-producing regions and to some border areas, and ensure the orderly conduct of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration tion programme and the extension of government authority and basic services. At the next stage, UNAMSIL might need to establish a presence at all key towns and areas to create the necessary conditions for holding elections. The Secretary-General continued to seek contributions to UNAMSIL of additional well-trained and well-equipped troops. When new contingents were deployed, UNAMSIL's total military strength would reach 17,500. Once State authority was extended, the international community could shift its focus to development and humanitarian assistance, and the establishment of security would facilitate the return of Sierra Leonean refugees and internally displaced persons.

The disarmament programme continued, and at the time of the report some 20,000 ex-combatants had been disarmed and demobilized, with some 28,000 ex-combatants, mainly RUF and Civil Defence Forces (CDF)—a militia group allied to the Government—remaining to be disarmed. Reintegration projects existed for some ex-combatants, but thousands had not reported to regional reintegration offices. UNAMSIL was expected to assume a broader responsibility in those efforts.

While the situation in Sierra Leone had remained relatively stable since the signing of the Abuja Agreement, there were continuing incursions and violence at the borders of Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone. The Secretary-General called on those Governments to work with ECOWAS and the United Nations to end the crisis and stated that it was imperative that RUF leaders and their backers stop further incursions across the borders. RUF, which continued to delay its disarmament, was apparently ready to implement only those aspects of the Abuja Agreement that posed no threat to its military strength and to its exploitation of the country's natural resources. In the Secretary-General's view, the two-track approach continued to offer the best chances of achieving a durable peace through a combination of a strong military deterrent and a political dialogue between the parties. The forward deployment of UNAMSIL in sufficient strength was an important element in that approach; the Secretary-General recommended that the authorized strength of the Mission be increased and that the mandate be extended for another six months, until 30 September 2001. It was also important for the Government and all other parties involved to formulate more clearly their approaches to the peace process, including a clearer picture of the future status of members of armed groups, as well as the impact of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and of the planned Special Court (see p. 179). The current cessation of hostilities provided an opportunity for the parties to restore dialogue and build confidence. The decision by RUF to establish a political body in Freetown was a step in the right direction, and the Secretary-General commended the Government for consenting to the RUF presence in the capital, which should facilitate the opening of a meaningful political dialogue.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 30 March (meeting 4306), the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1346(2001). The draft [S/2001/293] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions and the statements of its President concerning the situation in Sierra Leone,

Affirming the commitment of all States to respect the sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of Sierra Leone,

Expressing its continued concern at the fragile security situation in Sierra Leone and neighbouring countries, and in particular at the continued fighting on the border regions of Sierra Leone, Guinea and Liberia and at the grave humanitarian consequences for the civilian, refugee and internally displaced populations in those areas,

Recognizing the importance of the progressive extension of State authority throughout the entire country, political dialogue and national reconciliation, the full implementation of a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, the legitimate exploitation of the natural resources of Sierra Leone for the benefit of its people, full respect for the human rights of all and the rule of law, effective action on the issues of impunity and accountability, the voluntary and unhindered return of refugees and internally displaced persons, the holding by the Government of Sierra Leone of free, fair and transparent elections, and the formulation of a long-term plan for the peace process in order to achieve sustainable peace and security in Sierra Leone, and stressing that the United Nations should continue to support the fulfilment of these objectives,

1. Decides that the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone, established in its resolutions 1270(1999) of 22 October 1999 and 1289(2000) of 7 February 2000, shall be extended for a period of six months from the date of the adoption of the present resolution;

2. Further decides to increase the military component of the Mission to a strength of 17,500, including the 260 military observers already deployed, as recommended by the Secretary-General in paragraphs 99 and 100 of his report;

3. Welcomes the revised concept of operations for the Mission as set out in paragraphs 57 to 67 of the report of the Secretary-General and the progress already made towards its implementation, and encourages the Secretary-General to proceed to its completion;

4. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States providing additional troops and support elements to the Mission and those who have made commitments to do so, encourages the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to seek, if necessary, further properly trained and equipped forces to strengthen the military components of the Mission in order to enable the Mission to implement fully its revised concept of operations, and requests the Secretary-General to inform the Council upon receipt of firm commitments to that end;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Council at regular intervals on progress made by the Mission in the implementation of key aspects of its concept of operations, and further requests him to provide an assessment in his next report on steps taken to improve the effectiveness of the Mission;

6. Expresses its deep concern at the reports of human rights abuses committed by the Revolutionary United Front and others, including other military groups, against the civilian population, in particular the harassment and forced recruitment of adults and children for fighting and forced labour, demands that these acts cease immediately, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure all human rights monitoring positions within the Mission are filled in order to address the concerns raised in paragraphs 44 to 51 of the report of the Secretary-General;

7. Expresses also its deep concern that the Ceasefire Agreement signed in Abuja on 10 November 2000 between the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front has not been fully implemented, and demands that the Front take immediate steps to fulfil its commitments under that Agreement to ensure full liberty for the United Nations to deploy its troops throughout the country, the free movement of persons and goods, unimpeded movement of humanitarian agencies, refugees and displaced persons and the immediate return of all seized weapons, ammunition and other equipment, and to recommence active participation in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme;

8. Requests, in this respect, the Mission to maintain its support, within its capabilities and areas of deployment, for returning refugees and displaced persons and to encourage the Revolutionary United Front to cooperate to this end in fulfilment of its commitments under the Abuja Ceasefire Agreement;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council his views on how to take forward the issue of refugees and internally displaced persons, including their return;

10. Calls upon all the parties to the Sierra Leone conflict to intensify their efforts towards the full and peaceful implementation of the Abuja Ceasefire Agreement and the resumption of the peace process, taking into account the basis of the Abuja Ceasefire Agreement and relevant Security Council resolutions, and urges Governments and regional leaders concerned to continue their full cooperation with the Economic Community of West African States and the United Nations to promote these efforts, and, in particular, to use their influence with the leaders of the Revolutionary United Front to obtain their cooperation towards achievement of the above-mentioned goals;

11. Encourages the efforts of the Economic Community towards a lasting and final settlement of the crisis in the Mano River Union region caused by the continued fighting in the border areas of Sierra Leone, Guinea and Liberia, and underlines the importance of the political support that the United Nations can provide to these efforts in order to stabilize the region;

12. Takes note of the responsibilities to be undertaken by the Mission in support of the Government of Sierra Leone's disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, notably the decision to provide an enhanced management role as referred to in paragraphs 76 to 79 of the report of the Secretary-General, commends the Government of Sierra Leone for the improvements it has already brought about in the programme, encourages it to take the necessary urgent decisions to allow finalization of the programme and dissemination of information on its benefits and conditions to proceed expeditiously, and also encourages international organizations and donor countries to support generously the efforts of the Government of Sierra Leone in this regard;

13. Emphasizes that the development and extension of the administrative capacities of Sierra Leone are also essential to sustainable peace and development in the country, and therefore urges the Government of Sierra Leone to take the necessary practical steps to prepare for and bring about the restoration of civil authority and basic public services throughout its territory, including in the locations where the Mission is expected to deploy in accordance with its concept of operations, and encourages States, other international organizations and non-governmental organizations to provide appropriate assistance in this regard;

14. Encourages the Government of Sierra Leone, together with the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and other relevant international actors, to expedite the establishment of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and the Special Court envisaged by resolution 1315(2000) of 14 August 2000, bearing in mind in particular the need to ensure the appropriate protection of children;

15. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to keep the security, political, humanitarian and human rights situation in Sierra Leone under close review and to report to the Council, after due consultations with troop-contributing countries, with any additional recommendations, including, if necessary, for a further strengthening of the military component of the Mission for the completion of the planned concept of operations to fulfil the overall objective of assisting the Government of Sierra Leone to re-establish its authority throughout the country, including the diamond-producing areas, and to create the necessary conditions for the conduct of free, fair and transparent elections in due course under the authority of the Government of Sierra Leone;

16. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications (March). In a 30 March letter [S/2001/301], Guinea referred to the Secretary-General's 14 March report on UNAMSIL, in particular his statement on ensuring the conditions for repatriating Sierra Leonean refugees. Such an operation would require the cooperation of UNAMSIL, Guinea said, and therefore the Mission should consider deploying its forces in the security zones that would receive the refugees. For a decade Guinea had accepted refugees in its territory and was determined to cooperate in order to ensure the success of a repatriation operation.

Sierra Leone, on 21 March [S/2001/253], expressed its dismay at Liberia's decision to expel Sierra Leone's Ambassador to that country and indicated that it had responded in kind. Sierra Leone further noted Liberia's closure of the border between the two countries.

Refugee situation. In response to resolution 1346(2001) (see p. 165), the Secretary-General reported, on 23 May, on refugees and internally displaced persons in and around Sierra Leone [S/2001/513 & Corr.1]. In total, there were over 1 million refugees, internally displaced persons and other war-affected victims in Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone. The crisis had its roots in the civil wars in Liberia and Sierra Leone, continuing RUF control over large areas of Sierra Leone, and the ongoing instability and violence on the borders between the Mano River Union countries. The movements and presence of large numbers of refugees and internally displaced persons in the subregion had serious humanitarian, political and security implications and had become a contentious issue, especially in Guinea. The heavy burden on Guinea as host State, the worsening security situation on the border, and the suspicion that refugee communities might be harbouring rebels had led to calls for their early repatriation. Consequently, UNHCR had encountered problems in providing protection to many refugees in Guinea. Also, a large number of Liberians had recently crossed into Sierra Leone to flee fighting in northern Liberia.

With regard to the refugee situation in Guinea, the Secretary-General stated that the High Commissioner for Refugees had visited the region in February. Since then, the security situation had improved, and UNHCR and other agencies had accessed camps in the Parrot's Beak area of Guinea to provide emergency relief and to commence the relocation of refugees to sites further inland. Since that relocation exercise began, UNHCR had relocated some 43,600 Sierra Leonean refugees from Parrot's Beak to safer areas further north. UNHCR had also assisted voluntary repatriation to Sierra Leone. With the deterioration of the situation in Guinea and Liberia and the gradual improvement of the security situation in Sierra Leone, Sierra Leonean refugees had begun to make their way back to Sierra Leone. Since September 2000, more than 55,000 Sierra Leoneans had returned from Guinea.

The Secretary-General stated his opinion that the conditions for the immediate return of all refugees to Sierra Leone did not exist at the current time. A large part of Sierra Leone remained under RUF control and largely beyond the reach of humanitarian assistance. He called on the international community to support UN and others' efforts to assist in the protection, relocation and return of refugees and internally displaced persons.

The Presidents of Guinea and Sierra Leone, having met at Pamelap, Guinea, on 3 June, issued a communiqué [S/2001/579] stating they had reviewed the security situation along the border. They expressed satisfaction with the imposition of sanctions on Liberia and appealed for international assistance in the repatriation and resettlement of refugees and displaced people from both countries.

Report of Secretary-General (June). In his tenth report on UNAMSIL, dated 25 June [S/2001/627], the Secretary-General said that significant progress had been achieved in the Sierra Leone peace process. On 10 April, the joint committee comprising ECOWAS, the Government and the United Nations met in Abuja, and decided to meet with RUF to review implementation of the Abuja Agreement. That review meeting (Abuja, 2 May) concluded that the ceasefire had been largely observed, with the exception of some attacks by CDF on RUF in eastern Sierra Leone. The Government and RUF agreed to remove all road-blocks in areas under their control. RUF pledged to return, by 30 May, all weapons and equipment it had seized from UNAMSIL and the ECOWAS Monitoring Group (ECOMOG). The meeting, which led to an affirmation that CDF and RUF should disarm simultaneously, called on the fighting groups to release all abductees, in particular child combatants, and urged the parties to create an atmosphere conducive to the return of refugees and internally displaced persons. The Government declared its readiness to address some of RUF's political concerns, including releasing some detained RUF leaders and transforming RUF into a political party. Nearly all the meeting's decisions were implemented, including withdrawal and disarmament plans in certain districts. However, RUF handed over only a negligible amount of UNAMSIL weapons.

ECOWAS leaders continued efforts to advance the peace process in Sierra Leone and to address the conflicts affecting the Mano River Union. At a summit meeting on 11 April (see p. 161), a mediation committee was established to encourage dialogue between the heads of State of Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone.

The overall military and security situation in Sierra Leone during March and April remained volatile, with reports of ceasefire violations by CDF, but the situation improved after the 2 May Abuja meeting. UNAMSIL's troop strength increased to 12,718 as at 21 June, enabling the Mission to implement the second phase of its concept of operations and to prepare for the third by maintaining a patrol presence in Koidu, a diamond-producing centre. The disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, to be monitored by a mechanism with the participation of CDF and RUF, was resumed on 18 May. UNAMSIL worked with the Government to extend civil authority to all areas of the country. With the progress in disarmament, it appeared likely that the Government would be able to organize elections during the next dry season (October 2001 to May 2002), and it began preparations for elections in December. To plan for its involvement in elections, the Secretariat sent an assessment mission to Sierra Leone in May to discuss its participation.

The Secretary-General, while remarking on positive developments in the previous two months, cautioned that challenges remained, in particular the need to establish security throughout the country. The security situation in the sub-region remained difficult, and he urged the Mano River Union countries to start a political dialogue. He also called on the international community to contribute to the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, which was crucial to all aspects of the peace process, including the creation of conditions conducive to holding free and fair elections. The most urgent tasks that needed to be addressed in the short term were the establishment of adequate disarmament, demobilization and reintegration facilities and the development of a realistic timetable for implementing the programme in the remaining districts and for the timely creation of reintegration opportunities. UNAMSIL could play an enhanced role in providing training and advice to Sierra Leonean law enforcement officials, in cooperation with the team of Commonwealth police advisers in the country. To that end, the Secretary-General intended to bring the civilian police component of UNAMSIL to its authorized strength of 60 and to assess further needs.

The Security Council considered the Secretary-General's report on UNAMSIL on 28 June [meeting 4340].

Report of Secretary-General (September). On 7 September, the Secretary-General, in his eleventh report on UNAMSIL [S/2001/857 & Add.1], said that the Sierra Leone peace process had continued to make encouraging progress during the period since his last report. The disarmament of RUF and CDF combatants had so far been completed in four districts, including the diamond-producing Kono district. With the exception of skirmishes between those two groups, which marred the initial stages of disarmament in Kono district, the ceasefire had continued to hold. The cross-border fighting between RUF and Guinean forces in the northern and eastern border areas had also ceased. The deployment of UNAMSIL covered much of the country, including Kabala in the north and Koidu in the east. Consequently, more areas had become accessible to humanitarian workers and the civilian population. The Government had begun to restore civil authority in some areas formerly controlled by RUF. The joint committee on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration had met twice and agreed on a schedule for the programme. The Government and RUF took additional confidence-building measures, including RUF's release of more abductees and child combatants, participation by both sides in sensitization and reconciliation campaigns, enrolment of some RUF ex-combatants in the military reintegration programme, the provisional registration of the RUF party by the National Electoral Commission and an invitation to the party to participate in discussions on the electoral process. The Government announced its intention to seek six-month extensions of its term of office and that of Parliament, which were due to expire on 30 September and 1 October, respectively.

The peace process in Sierra Leone had a positive impact on the situation in the Mano River Union region. Since the relaunching of the disarmament process in May, no further cross-border fighting between RUF and Guinean armed forces had been reported. The Special Representative, on 7 August, took part in a meeting of the Presidents of Mali, Nigeria and Sierra Leone and the Executive Secretary of ECOWAS. The three Presidents met in Koidu on 3 September [S/2001/838] with Issa Sesay, the RUF leader, the first direct meeting between President Ahmad Tejan Kabbah and Mr. Sesay. At the meeting, the RUF leadership reiterated its commitment to the peace process but expressed concern for the personal security of the movement's members after disarmament. The Foreign Ministers of the Mano River Union countries met in Monrovia, Liberia, from 13 to 15 August. On 22 and 23 August, the Ministers, together with the Defence and Security Ministers, met in Freetown to review the security situation in the subregion. Preparations were begun for a summit meeting.

The overall military and security situation remained calm and stable, despite some clashes.

UNAMSIL visited trouble spots in Kono district where RUF and CDF combatants were disarmed. The Mission's troop strength stood at 16,664 as at 5 September. UNAMSIL patrols reached most areas of the country and military observers played a role in the disarmament process by receiving and processing combatants. Since the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process resumed on 18 May, a total of 16,097 combatants had been disarmed, out of an estimated 25,000. A total of 6,502 weapons had been collected. The reintegration programme, operating from four regional offices, had provided assistance to over 10,600 ex-combatants. UNAMSIL personnel were also involved in community reconciliation, rehabilitation of health, education and local administration structures, human rights-related activities, HIV/AIDS sensitization and public information activities.

On 5 September, the Government announced that the parliamentary and presidential elections would be held on 14 May 2002. In response to a request from the Government, the Secretary-General dispatched an electoral needs assessment mission to Sierra Leone from 18 to 28 August. The pre- and post-electoral period would require security arrangements and coordination among all entities involved in the electoral process, including UNAMSIL, which would provide security and logistical assistance.

In general, the Secretary-General found that the continued progress achieved during the period under review, in particular in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme and the eastward deployment of UNAMSIL, including into the diamond-producing areas, gave grounds for cautious optimism concerning the peace process. The potentially destabilizing clashes between RUF and CDF elements had been addressed by UNAMSIL and the parties. The shortfalls in the budget for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration under the multi-donor trust fund, some $5 million for 2001, remained a source of concern, and long-term needs remained crucial to the entire process. The Secretary-General urged the Government to restore civil authority throughout the country, extend services to long-neglected communities, deploy the police and the army, and increase its capacity to regulate better the diamond mining industry. He welcomed the preparatory work for holding elections, but stressed that certain benchmarks should be achieved before then—the completion of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme; the restoration of civil authority throughout the country; the transformation of RUF into a political party; the deployment of UNAMSIL; and the guarantee of freedom of movement throughout the country. In that context, the Secretary-General recommended that the Mission's mandate be extended for six months. UNAMSIL would seek to complete the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, continue to assist in implementing the Abuja Agreement and support preparations for elections.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 18 September [meeting 4374], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1370 (2001). The draft [S/2001/874] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1270(1999) of 22 October 1999, 1289(2000) of 7 February 2000, 1313(2000) of 4 August 2000, 1317(2000) of 5 September 2000, 1321(2000) of 20 September 2000 and 1346(2001) of 30 March 2001, and the statement of its President of 3 November 2000 (S/PRST/2000/31), and all other relevant resolutions and statements of its President concerning the situation in Sierra Leone,

Affirming the commitment of all States to respect the sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of Sierra Leone,

Expressing its concern at the fragile security situation in the Mano River countries, in particular the continued fighting in Liberia, and at the humanitarian consequences for the civilian, refugee and internally displaced populations in those areas,

Welcoming the progress made in the peace process aimed at achieving sustainable peace and security in Sierra Leone and commending the positive role of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone in advancing the peace process,

Recognizing the importance of the progressive extension of State authority throughout the entire country, political dialogue and national reconciliation, the holding by the Government of Sierra Leone of free, fair and transparent elections, the transformation of the Revolutionary United Front into a political party, full respect for the human rights of all and the rule of law, effective action on the issues of impunity and accountability, the voluntary and unhindered return of refugees and internally displaced persons, the full implementation of a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, the legitimate exploitation of the natural resources of Sierra Leone for the benefit of its people, and stressing that the United Nations should continue to support the fulfilment of these objectives,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 7 September 2001,

1. Decides that the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone shall be extended for a period of six months from 30 September 2001;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States providing troops and support elements to the Mission and those who have made commitments to do so;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Council at regular intervals on progress made by the

Mission in the implementation of key aspects of its concept of operations, and further requests him to provide an assessment in his next report on steps taken to improve the effectiveness of the Mission;

4. Expresses its continued deep concern at the reports of human rights abuses and attacks committed by the Revolutionary United Front, the Civil Defence Forces and other armed groups and individuals against the civilian population, in particular the widespread violation of the human rights of women and children, including sexual violence, demands that these acts cease immediately, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that all human rights monitoring positions within the Mission are filled in order to address the concerns raised in paragraphs 40 to 43 of the report of the Secretary-General;

5. Welcomes the efforts made by the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front towards full implementation of the Ceasefire Agreement signed in Abuja on 10 November 2000 between the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front and reaffirmed at the meeting of the Economic Community of West African States, the United Nations, the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front at Abuja on 2 May 2001, and encourages them to continue those efforts;

6. Urges, in particular, the Revolutionary United Front to step up its efforts to fulfil its commitment under the Abuja Ceasefire Agreement to ensure full liberty for the United Nations to deploy its troops throughout the country and also, with a view to restoring the authority of the Government of Sierra Leone throughout the country, to ensure the free movement of persons, goods and humanitarian assistance, unimpeded and safe movement of humanitarian agencies, refugees and displaced persons and the immediate return of all seized weapons, ammunition and other equipment;

7. Encourages the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front to continue to take steps towards furthering of dialogue and national reconciliation, and, in this regard, stresses the importance of the reintegration of the Revolutionary United Front into Sierra Leone society and the transformation of the Front into a political party, and demands that the Front cease any effort at maintaining options for military action;

8. Requests the Mission to continue to support, within its capabilities and areas of deployment, returning refugees and displaced persons and urges the Revolutionary United Front to cooperate to this end in fulfilment of its commitments under the Abuja Ceasefire Agreement;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Council, further to his report of 23 May 2001, an update of his views on how to take forward the issue of refugees and internally displaced persons, including their return;

10. Urges Governments and regional leaders concerned to continue their full cooperation with the Economic Community of West African States and the United Nations to promote the efforts of all parties to the Sierra Leone conflict towards the full and peaceful implementation of the Abuja Ceasefire Agreement, and to provide assistance to that end;

11. Encourages the ongoing efforts of the Economic Community of West African States towards a lasting and final settlement of the crisis in the Mano River Union region, and underlines the importance of the continuing political and other support that the United Nations provides to these efforts in order to stabilize the region;

12. Welcomes the positive impact of progress made in the Sierra Leone peace process on the situation in the Mano River basin, including the recent ministerial meetings of the Mano River Union and the prospects for a summit meeting of Mano River Union Presidents, and in this regard, encourages the efforts of the Mano River Union Women's Peace Network towards regional peace;

13. Emphasizes the importance of a successful disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme to long-term stability in Sierra Leone, welcomes the progress made in that process and urges the Revolutionary United Front, the Civil Defence Forces and other groups to continue their commitment to, and active participation in, the programme;

14. Expresses concern at the serious financial shortfall in the multi-donor trust fund for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, and urges international organizations and donor countries to support generously and urgently the efforts of the Government of Sierra Leone in this regard, as well as provide additional funds for the wide range of urgently needed post-conflict activities, including humanitarian and rehabilitation requirements;

15. Emphasizes the importance of free, fair, transparent and inclusive elections for the long-term stability of Sierra Leone and takes note of the Mission's readiness to provide support, within its capabilities, to facilitate the smooth holding of the elections;

16. Emphasizes that the development and extension of the administrative capacities of Sierra Leone are essential to sustainable peace and development in the country, and to the holding of free, fair and transparent elections, and therefore urges the Government of Sierra Leone, with the assistance of the Mission, in accordance with its mandate, to accelerate and coordinate efforts to restore civil authority and basic public services throughout the country (including in the diamond mining areas), including by the deployment of key administrative officials and the Sierra Leone police and the progressive involvement of the Sierra Leone Army in providing border security against external forces, and encourages States, other international organizations and non-governmental organizations to provide appropriate assistance in this regard;

17. Encourages the Government of Sierra Leone, together with the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and other relevant international actors, to expedite the establishment of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and the Special Court envisaged by resolution 1315(2000) of 14 August 2000, bearing in mind in particular the need to ensure the appropriate protection of children, and urges donors urgently to commit funds for the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and to disburse their financial pledges to the Trust Fund for the Special Court;

18. Welcomes the Secretary-General's intention to keep the security, political, humanitarian and human rights situation in Sierra Leone under close review and to report to the Council, after due consultations with troop-contributing countries, with any additional recommendations, including on how the Mission will provide support to the Government of Sierra Leone in holding elections;

19. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (December). In his twelfth report on UNAMSIL, issued on 13 December [S/2001/1195 & Add.1], the Secretary-General stated that there had been further progress in the Sierra Leone peace process. The ceasefire continued to hold and the disarmament of RUF and CDF combatants was completed in 10 of the 12 districts. UNAMSIL's troop strength reached the authorized ceiling of 17,500, and the Mission was deployed in all districts. The Government continued to take steps to extend its authority to areas formerly controlled by RUF. The joint committee on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, comprising UNAMSIL, the Government and RUF, held three meetings to review the disarmament process. It declared the disarmament exercise completed in the main diamond-producing district of Kono and in Bonthe and agreed to a programme for collecting shotguns, which had been excluded from the original disarmament plan. Meanwhile, the political parties were preparing for elections. Eight opposition parties held meetings and discussed the possibility of uniting. With the assistance of the Government, RUF acquired offices for its party in Freetown, Bo and Makeni. Although the overall security situation remained generally stable, there were clashes between disarmed CDF and RUF cadres over mining claims in Kono district in September. In coordination with UNAMSIL, the Sierra Leone Army deployed in key areas on the borders with Guinea and Liberia.

As at 9 December, a total of 36,741 combatants had disarmed, a number that far exceeded the initial estimate; the final figure was expected to reach 40,000. Some 13,500 weapons were collected during the reporting period. Payment of reinsertion benefits, which were intended to enable disarmed combatants to resettle in their communities while awaiting long-term reintegration, started on 15 October, with over 17,000 former combatants receiving payments. Following the deployment of UNAMSIL and the completion of disarmament, district and ministry officials returned to three districts, and a number of displaced chiefs returned to their districts.

Preparations were under way for national elections on 14 May 2002. The National Electoral Commission drew up an electoral plan and a National Consultative Conference (13-15 November) addressed core electoral issues. The identification of voter registration centres was expected to be completed by the end of the year, to be followed by voter registration, including the registration of refugees and internally displaced persons. It was proposed that 5,400 polling stations be established at about 3,000 locations. UNAMSIL would provide technical and logistical assistance and general security support for the electoral process, and its public information section would assist the National Electoral Commission in carrying out civic education on elections.

The Mission's human rights officers investigated allegations of abuses, confirming the existence of mass graves and attacks by RUF on a village in Koinadugu district. They facilitated the release of persons detained by RUF. At the beginning of December, an estimated 510,000 Sierra Leonean refugees were living in countries of the subregion, with some 200,000 in Guinea and Liberia. Within Sierra Leone, some 247,590 people were displaced. UNHCR registered 60,000 returnees in Sierra Leone and thousands of others had spontaneously returned.

The Secretary-General reported that the peace process in Sierra Leone had reached an important juncture. A secure environment with increased freedom of movement, a gradual return of refugees and a resurgence of economic activity in the provinces were emerging as a result of UNAMSIL's full deployment and progress in disarmament. At the same time, problems remained concerning the extension of the Government's authority throughout the country, the reintegration of disarmed combatants and the return and resettlement of refugees and internally displaced persons. Regrettably, RUF had slowed down the disarmament of its combatants in the two remaining districts. The international community needed to assist Sierra Leone in rehabilitating its infrastructure, establishing national reconciliation and addressing impunity and accountability, as well as in resettling returnees and internally displaced persons. The situation in the subregion, in particular within the Mano River Union, also deserved attention, and it was important to support the dialogue among Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone.

UNAMSIL financing

The Secretary-General, in February [A/55/805 & Corr.1], presented to the General Assembly the budget for UNAMSIL for 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, which had been revised following the Security Council's expansion, by resolution 1299 (2000) [YUN 2000, p. 196], of the military component of the Mission to 13,000 military personnel from the previously authorized strength of 11,100. The revised budget amounted to $561,996,400 gross ($558,128,000 net), exclusive of a budgeted voluntary contribution in kind of $2,025,200, and represented an increase of $85,270,000 or 17.9 per cent in gross terms over the budget already appropriated for UNAMSIL.

In a March report [A/55/839], ACABQ reviewed the Secretary-General's report on the revised budget and made recommendations for reducing costs. It recommended that the Assembly approve an appropriation of $550,000,000 gross for the maintenance of UNAMSIL for the same period, inclusive of the appropriation of $476,726,400 gross already made by the Assembly in resolution 54/241 B [YUN 2000, p. 213].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (April)

On 12 April [meeting 98], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/891], adopted resolution 55/251 A without vote [agenda item 132].

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1270 (1999) of 22 October 1999, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council revised and extended the mandate of the Mission, the latest of which was resolution 1346(2001) of 30 March 2001,

Recalling its resolution 53/29 of 20 November 1998 on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone and its resolutions 54/241 A and B of 23 December 1999 and 15 June 2000, respectively, on the financing of the Observer Mission and the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone and the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone as at 28 February 2001, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 242.1 million United States dollars, representing some 41 per cent of the total assessed contributions, notes that some 11 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

5. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

6. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

7. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

8. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Mission, and for this purpose requests the Secretary-General to speed up the implementation of the asset management system at all peacekeeping missions in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/1 A of 15 October 1997;

9. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

12. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone the amount of 73,273,600 dollars gross (73,784,400 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, in addition to the amount of 504,399,051 dollars gross (496,545,461 dollars net) already appropriated under the terms of General Assembly resolution 54/241 B, inclusive of the amount of 23,931,281 dollars gross (20,250,873 dollars

net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 3,741,370 dollars gross (3,328,988 dollars net) for the United Nations Logistics Base;

13. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, taking into account the amount of 504,399,051 dollars gross (496,545,461 dollars net) already apportioned under the terms of its resolution 54/241 B, to apportion among Member States an additional amount of 36,636,800 dollars gross (36,892,200 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by its subsequent relevant resolutions and decisions, for the apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations, the latest of which were its resolution 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999 for the period 1998-2000, and its resolutions 55/235 and 55/236 of 23 December 2000 for the period 2001-2003, the scale of assessments for 2000 to be applied against a portion thereof, that is, 18,318,400 dollars gross (18,446,100 dollars net), which is the amount pertaining to the period ending 31 December 2000, and the scale of assessments for 2001 to be applied against the balance, that is, 18,318,400 dollars gross (18,446,100 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 30 June 2001;

14. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973 A (X) of 15 December 1955, the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 13 above, shall take into consideration the decrease in their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 255,400 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, 127,700 dollars being the amount pertaining to the period ending 31 December 2000 and the balance, that is, 127,700 dollars, pertaining to the period from 1 January to 30 June 2001;

15. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

16. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission;

17. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

18. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone".

In March, the Secretary-General reported on the financial performance of UNAMSIL from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 [A/55/853]. UNAMSIL had taken over the civilian and military components and functions of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone (UNOMSIL) in October 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 164]; accordingly, the report incorporated expenditures related to the operation of UNOMSIL. For the period covered by the report, the General Assembly had appropriated for the missions in Sierra Leone a total of $265,789,000 gross ($264,371,600 net), exclusive of voluntary contributions in kind of $1,550,020. Expenditures for the period totalled $263,338,200 gross ($262,035,200 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $2,450,800 gross ($2,336,400 net).

ACABQ reviewed the report and issued its comments in April [A/55/869]. It recommended that the unencumbered balance be credited to Member States in a manner to be decided by the Assembly. Also in April [A/55/874], ACABQ reported on general aspects of financing of UN peacekeeping operations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On 14 June [meeting 103], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/891/Add.1], adopted resolution 55/251 B without vote [agenda item 132].

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1270 (1999) of 22 October 1999, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council revised and extended the mandate of the Mission, the latest of which was resolution 1346(2001) of 30 March 2001,

Recalling its resolution 53/29 of 20 November 1998 on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone and subsequent resolutions on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone, the latest of which was resolution 55/251 A of 12 April 2001,

Reaffirming the general principles underlying the financing of United Nations peacekeeping operations as stated in General Assembly resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973 and 55/235 of 23 December 2000,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994, in particular those paragraphs regarding the peacekeeping budgetary cycles, which should be adhered to in the future budgeting process, where possible;

2. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone and the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone as at 30 April 2001, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 165.8 million United States dollars, representing some 28 per cent of the total assessed contributions, notes that some 19 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

5. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone in full and on time;

6. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

7. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

8. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

9. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Mission;

10. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

13. Approves, on an exceptional basis, the special arrangements for the Mission with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing contingents and/or logistic support to the Mission shall be retained beyond the period stipulated under financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

14. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in the amount of 275 million dollars gross (273,375,000 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001, and decides to appropriate the amount of 16,634,763 dollars gross (14,598,640 dollars net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 1,737,712 dollars gross (1,560,456 dollars net) for the United Nations Logistics Base representing the prorated share of the Mission in the support account and Logistics Base requirements for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002;

15. Decides to apportion among Member States the amount of 137.5 million dollars gross (136,687,500 dollars net) for the Mission for the period from 1 July to 30 September 2001, in accordance with the levels set out in General Assembly resolution 55/235, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolution 55/236 of 23 December 2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2001, as set out in its resolution 55/5 B of 23 December 2000;

16. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 15 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 812,500 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 July to 30 September 2001;

17. Decides further to apportion among Member States the amount of 137.5 million dollars gross (136,687,500 dollars net) for the period from 1 October to 31 December 2001, at a monthly rate of 45,833,333 dollars gross (45,562,500 dollars net) in accordance with paragraph 15 above, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2001 as set out in General Assembly resolution 55/5 B, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 30 September 2001;

18. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 17 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 812,500 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 October to 31 December 2001;

19. Decides also to apportion among Member States the amount of 16,634,763 dollars gross (14,598,640 dollars net) for the support account and the amount of 1,737,712 dollars gross (1,560,456 dollars net) for the United Nations Logistics Base for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002 in accordance with paragraph 15 above, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 2001 and 2002, as set out in General Assembly resolution 55/5 B, the scale of assessments for the year 2001 to be applied against a portion thereof, that is, 8,317,382 dollars gross (7,299,320 dollars net) for the support account and 868,856 dollars gross (780,228 dollars net) for the Logistics Base for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001, and the scale of assessments for the year 2002 to be applied against the balance, that is, 8,317,381 dollars gross (7,299,320 dollars net) for the support account and 868,856 dollars gross (780,228 dollars net) for the Logistics Base for the period from 1 January to 30 June 2002;

20. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 19 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 2,036,123 dollars for the support account and 177,256 dollars for the United Nations Logistics Base approved for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, 1,018,062 dollars for the support account and 88,628 dollars for the Logistics Base, being amounts pertaining to the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001, and the balance, that is, 1,018,061 dollars for the support account and 88,628 dollars for the Logistics Base pertaining to the period from 1 January to 30 June 2002;

21. Decides that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 15 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 2,450,800 dollars gross (2,336,400 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 2000, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in subsequent relevant resolutions and decisions, for the ad hoc apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations, the latest of which were resolution 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and decisions 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999 for the period 1998-2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999;

22. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 2,450,800 dollars gross (2,336,400 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 2000, shall be set off against their outstanding obligations in accordance with the scheme set out in paragraph 21 above;

23. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

24. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission;

25. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

26. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone".

ANNEX

Special arrangements with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations

1. At the end of the twelve-month period provided for in financial regulation 4.3, any unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question relating to goods supplied and services rendered by Governments for which claims have been received or which are covered by established reimbursement rates shall be transferred to accounts payable; such accounts shall remain recorded in the Special Account for the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone until payment is effected.

2. In addition:

(a) Any other unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question owed to Governments for provision of goods and services rendered but not yet verified, as well as other obligations owed to Governments, for which claims have not yet been received shall remain valid for an additional period of four years following the end of the twelve-month period provided for in financial regulation 4.3;

(b) Claims received during this four-year period as well as approved verification reports shall be treated as provided for under paragraph 1 of the present annex, if appropriate;

(c) At the end of the additional four-year period, any unliquidated obligations shall be cancelled and the then remaining balance of any appropriations retained therefor shall be surrendered.

The Secretary-General, in October [A/56/487], proposed a budget for UNAMSIL for 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002 of $722,134,800 gross ($716,498,400 net), exclusive of budgeted voluntary contributions in kind amounting to $1,350,133. His proposal was based on an authorized force strength of 17,500 military personnel, including 260 military observers, as authorized by the Security Council in resolution 1346(2001) (see p. 165). The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly appropriate the total amount for the maintenance of UNAMSIL for that period, inclusive of $275 million gross ($273,375,000 net) already assessed under resolution 55/251 B (see p. 173) for 1 July to 31 December 2001.

In November [A/56/621], ACABQ recommended that the Assembly approve an appropriation of $692 million gross for UNAMSIL for 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, inclusive of the amount already appropriated.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 24 December [meeting 92], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/56/712], adopted resolution 56/251 without vote [agenda item 141].

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1270 (1999) of 22 October 1999, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council revised and extended the mandate of the Mission, the latest of which was resolution 1370(2001) of 18 September 2001,

Recalling its resolution 53/29 of 20 November 1998 on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone and subsequent resolutions on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone, the latest of which was resolution 55/251 B of 14 June 2001,

Reaffirming the general principles underlying the financing of United Nations peacekeeping operations, as stated in General Assembly resolutions 1874(S-IV) of

27 June 1963, 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973 and 55/235 of 23 December 2000,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone and the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone as at 15 November 2001, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 317.1 million United States dollars, representing, regrettably, some 30 per cent of the total assessed contributions, notes that some 11 per cent of Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full and on time, and urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure the payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone in full and on time;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Also expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

5. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

6. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

7. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Mission;

8. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

11. Decides to appropriate the amount of 699,230,584 dollars gross (693,126,185 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the twelve-month period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, inclusive of the amount of 7,230,584 dollars gross (6,685,385 dollars net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations, in addition to the amount of 16,634,763 dollars gross (14,598,640 dollars net) already appropriated for the support account, and the amount of 1,737,712 dollars gross (1,560,456 dollars net) already appropriated for the United Nations Logistics Base by the General Assembly in its resolution 55/251 B, inclusive also of the amount of 275 million dollars gross (273,375,000 dollars net) authorized by the Assembly in resolution 55/251 B;

12. Decides also, taking into account the amount of 275 million dollars gross (273,375,000 dollars net) already apportioned for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001 and the amount of 18,372,475 dollars gross (16,159,096 dollars net) already apportioned for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 55/251 B, to apportion among Member States the amount of 251,230,584 dollars gross (248,140,985 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 2001 to 31 March 2002, in accordance with the levels set out in General Assembly resolution 55/235, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolution 55/236 of 23 December 2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 2001 and 2002 as set out in its resolution 55/5 B of 23 December 2000, the scale of assessments for the year 2001 to be applied against a portion thereof, that is, 71 million dollars gross (69,845,400 dollars net) for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001, and the scale of assessments for the year 2002 to be applied against the balance, that is, 180,230,584 dollars gross (178,295,585 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 31 March 2002;

13. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 12 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 3,089,599 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 July 2001 to 31 March 2002, 1,154,600 dollars being the amount pertaining to the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001, and the balance, that is, 1,934,999 dollars pertaining to the period from 1 January to 31 March 2002;

14. Decides to apportion among Member States the amount of 132 million dollars gross (130,938,600 dollars net) for the period from 1 April to 30 June 2002, at a monthly rate of 44 million dollars gross (43,646,200 dollars net) in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2002 as set out in General Assembly resolution 55/5 B, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 31 March 2002;

15. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 14 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,061,400 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 April to 30 June 2002;

16. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

17. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission;

18. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

19. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone".

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on UNAMSIL financing would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464) and that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item at that session (decision 56/458).

Sanctions and justice system

Efforts by the United Nations to find a peaceful solution to the Sierra Leone conflict included Security Council action to control the illicit trade in diamonds from that country, which it found was linked to the trade in arms and related materiel. The Council considered the report of the Panel of Experts to investigate possible violations of the arms embargo and the ban on rough diamond exports and welcomed the establishment of the certificate-of-origin regime for trade in rough diamonds in and their export from Sierra Leone.

The Council's arms sanctions against non-governmental forces in Sierra Leone, imposed by resolution 1132(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 135] and revised by resolution 1171(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 169], remained in force and were monitored by the Council Committee established for that purpose.

The Secretary-General continued his efforts to establish a Special Court to bring to justice those responsible for committing serious crimes against the people of Sierra Leone and to establish a Truth and Reconciliation Commission.

Role of diamonds in conflict

On 25 January [meeting 4264], the Security Council considered the 2000 report of the Panel of Experts on Sierra Leone Diamonds and Arms [YUN 2000, p. 204]. The Panel, established by the Secretary-General in accordance with resolution 1306(2000) [ibid., p. 201], examined how and why Sierra Leone's conflict diamonds were able to find their way into the legitimate diamond trade with relative ease and how weapons reached RUF in Sierra Leone, in spite of UN arms embargoes being in place. The Panel made recommendations on control of the illegal diamond trade and a ban on weapons trade and transport.

In letters to the Council, the Gambia [S/2001/74], Liberia [S/2001/78] and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya [S/2001/421] rejected some findings or methods of work of the Panel. Guinea, in letters of 26 February [S/2001/173, S/2001/279], said that the report rightly implicated the Liberian authorities in arms trafficking in Sierra Leone and in the subregion and that the imposition of sanctions against Liberia was justified (see p. 181); Guinea also announced its decision to establish a certificate-of-origin regime for the diamonds it exported. On 29 March [S/2001/303], Saudi Arabia said that it had taken measures to prohibit the direct or indirect import of all rough diamonds from Sierra Leone except those controlled through the certificate-of-origin regime.

Sierra Leone informed the Security Council Sanctions Committee on Sierra Leone (see p. 178) that it had made efforts to comply with the terms of resolution 1306(2000). On 7 February [S/2001/127], Sierra Leone submitted a 90-day review of its new certificate-of-origin regime for trade in Sierra Leone diamonds, the main objective of which was to end transactions in what were described as "conflict" or "blood" diamonds by halting illicit mining and smuggling. The Government outlined steps it had taken to strengthen regulations in the mining and marketing sectors, as well as revision of related banking guidelines for diamond exports. As at 31 January, the Government's buying office had issued 34 certificates of origin under the new regulations. Control mechanisms included an electronic database on exports and digital photographs of rough diamonds. The Government believed the regime, though still in its infancy, was a modest success and that it had demonstrated the potential of serving as a model for other national certification systems, particularly in other areas of conflict in Africa. The real success of the certification regime would depend on implementation of resolution 1306(2000) by all States, in particular the diamond-importing States. On 28 March [S/2001/300], the Security Council Sanctions Committee stated that Sierra Leone's new certificate-of-origin regime for trade in diamonds was effectively in operation. The Committee would pursue several issues relating to the operation of the certification regime directly with the Government of Sierra Leone.

Sierra Leone conducted a second 90-day review of the certificate-of-origin regime, which was forwarded to the Council on 13 August [S/2001/794]. The review stated that a total of 113 certificates had been issued and further measures had strengthened controls. After nine months in operation, $19.1 million in diamonds had been exported and the certification system was considered a major success; by the end of the year, the export total had reached $24 million [S/2002/38]. The Government shared the Council's view that the peace process in Sierra Leone was entering a crucial phase as UNAMSIL and the Government moved into the main diamond-producing areas. It believed that the positive trends in the peace process augured well for further success for the certification system. Sierra Leone welcomed the establishment of a similar certification system in Guinea (see p. 177), and it supported efforts to establish standards for an international certification system to break the link between the illicit transaction of rough and uncut diamonds and armed conflict. On 27 August [S/2001/827], the Council received a statement from Sierra Leone on a police investigation of suspected transactions in illicit diamonds in the Freetown area. The action, Sierra Leone said, demonstrated the Government's commitment to ensuring implementation of resolution 1306 (2000).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 19 December [meeting 4442], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1385 (2001). The draft [S/2001/1216] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions and the statements of its President concerning the situation in Sierra Leone, and in particular its resolutions 1132(1997) of 8 October 1997, 1171(1998) of 5 June 1998, 1299(2000) of 19 May 2000 and 1306(2000) of 5 July 2000,

Affirming the commitment of all States to respect the sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of Sierra Leone,

Welcoming the significant progress made in the peace process in Sierra Leone, including in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, and the efforts of the Government to extend its authority over the diamond-producing areas, with the assistance of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone, but noting that it has not yet established effective authority over those areas,

Expressing its continued concern at the role played by the illicit trade in diamonds in the conflict in Sierra Leone,

Welcoming General Assembly resolution 55/56 of 1 December 2000, as well as ongoing efforts by interested States, the diamond industry, in particular the World Diamond Council, and non-governmental organizations to break the link between illicit trade in rough diamonds and armed conflict, particularly through the significant progress made by the Kimberley Process, and encouraging further progress in this regard,

Welcoming the establishment of a certification regime in relation to Guinea's exports of rough diamonds and the continued efforts of the Economic Community of West African States as well as West African countries towards developing a region-wide certification regime,

Emphasizing the responsibility of all member States, including diamond importing countries, for fully implementing the measures in resolution 1306(2000),

Taking note of the views of the Government of Sierra Leone on the extension of the measures imposed by paragraph 1 of resolution 1306(2000),

Determining that the situation in Sierra Leone continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Welcomes the establishment and implementation of the Certificate of Origin regime for trade in diamonds in Sierra Leone, and the export of rough diamonds from Sierra Leone certified under that regime;

2. Welcomes reports that the Certificate of Origin regime is helping to curb the flow of conflict diamonds out of Sierra Leone;

3. Decides that the measures imposed by paragraph 1 of resolution 1306(2000) shall remain in force for a new period of 11 months from 5 January 2002, except that, pursuant to paragraph 5 of resolution 1306(2000), rough diamonds controlled by the Government of Sierra Leone under the Certificate of Origin regime shall continue to be exempt from these measures, and affirms that, in addition to its six-monthly review in accordance with paragraph 15 of resolution 1306(2000), at the end of this period it will review the situation in Sierra Leone, including the extent of the Government's authority over the diamond-producing areas, in order to decide whether to extend these measures for a further period and, if necessary, to modify them or adopt further measures;

4. Decides also that the measures imposed by paragraph 1 of resolution 1306(2000), as extended by paragraph 3 above, shall be terminated immediately if the Council determines that it would be appropriate to do so;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to publicize the provisions of the present resolution and the obligations imposed by it;

6. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Sanctions Committee

The Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1132 (1997) [YUN 1997, p. 135] concerning Sierra Leone reported to the Council several times in 2001 on the arms embargo and the question of the export of rough diamonds (see p. 177). By four letters [S/2001/105, S/2001/261, S/2001/493, S/2001/718], the Chairman forwarded information he had received from the United Kingdom on arms and related materiel sent to Sierra Leone for use by the Sierra Leone Army or by UNAMSIL. Three other letters [S/2001/126, S/2001/492, S/2001/664] conveyed reports from Sierra Leone on weapons it had imported for use by its Army and police. On 7 August [S/2001/771, S/2001/772], the Chairman forwarded lists of countries that had responded since December 2000 to the Security Council's request for information on implementation of certain aspects of resolution 1306(2000).

On 29 November [S/2001/1130], the President of the Council affirmed that the members had elected the Chairman and Vice-Chairmen of the Committee for a term ending on 31 December 2001. The Chairman was Iftekhar Ahmed Chowdhury (Bangladesh), who succeeded Anwarul Karim Chowdhury (Bangladesh), and the Vice-Chairmen were from Mali and Singapore.

In a summary of the Committee's activities for the year [S/2002/50], the Chairman said that five meetings were held in 2001, at which the Committee reviewed trade and transfer of both arms and diamonds with Sierra Leone and considered travel requests for leaders of rebel groups. The Committee received a total of 23 replies from States on implementation of paragraph 17 (on the arms embargo) and 43 replies on implementation of paragraph 8 (on restrictions on diamond trade) of resolution 1306(2000). The report noted that the President of the Council, in a statement to the press on 13 December, welcomed the efforts of the West African countries to develop a region-wide certification regime for diamonds, and the establishment of the certificate-of-origin regime by Sierra Leone, and the effect of those actions on curbing the flow of illicit diamonds out of Sierra Leone. The President had added, however, that RUF and CDF continued to mine diamonds illegally, giving them access to funds that might be used to buy weapons. He indicated the readiness of the Council to extend the ban on the export of Sierra Leone diamonds. In the absence of a specific monitoring mechanism to ensure the implementation of the sanctions regime, the Committee urged States and organizations in a position to provide it with pertinent information to do so.

Proposal for Special Court

The Secretary-General in 2001 pursued efforts to establish a Special Court for Sierra Leone to try crimes against humanity, war crimes and other serious violations of international humanitarian law, as well as crimes under relevant Sierra Leonean law. The Court was first proposed by Sierra Leone and recommended by the Security Council in resolution 1315(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 205]. In a January letter [S/2001/40], the Secretary-General commented on the Council's proposed amendments [YUN 2000, p. 206] to the draft Agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Sierra Leone and the proposed Statute. He also presented his understanding of the meaning, scope and legal effect of some proposals pertaining to the personal jurisdiction of the Special Court, its funding and the reduced size of the Court. On 31 January [S/2001/95], the Council said it agreed in general with the Secretary-General's views on personal jurisdiction and his analysis of the importance and role of the phrase "persons who bear the greatest responsibility". However, Council members did not agree that the President of the Court should be empowered to seek the Council's intervention with regard to intervening with third States on surrendering accused individuals. The Council agreed with the Secretary-General's proposal to seek information from States on their preparedness to contribute resources before the entry into force of the Agreement with the Government of Sierra Leone.

The Secretary-General informed the Council on 12 July [S/2001/693] that he consulted with Sierra Leone on the changes to the proposed Agreement and draft Statute of the Court. He provided details of financing for the Court, noting that the requirements for the first three years of operation amounted to $114.6 million. Having appealed to States for possible contributions, he stated that, as at 6 July, $15 million would likely be available for the first year—a shortfall of approximately $1.8 million—and pledges for the following two years of $20.4 million—a shortfall of $19.6 million. Considering that the amount pledged was sufficient to commence the establishment and operation of the Special Court, he would seek payment of those pledges; when funds were deposited, he would ask the Legal Counsel to conclude on behalf of the United Nations the Agreement on the Establishment of the Special Court with the Government of Sierra Leone. On 23 July [S/2001/722], the President of the Council said that the members welcomed the developments as described by the Secretary-General as a step towards bringing justice to the people of Sierra Leone and supported informal consultations between the Secretariat and interested States to plan for the Court.

On 26 December [S/2001/1320], the Secretary-General recalled that the Council and the Secretariat had an understanding that the implementation of the Agreement would commence only after sufficient contributions were in hand to finance the Court's establishment and 12 months of operation and pledges had been received to cover expenses for the following 24 months. He stated that, while the first year of the Court's operation was virtually funded, the shortfall in the pledges for the second and third years of operation remained high. He was persuaded, however, of the political will of States to the success of the Court, and therefore had decided to authorize the commencement of its operation, beginning with the dispatch of a planning mission to Freetown from 7 to 18 January 2002 to discuss practical arrangements, including premises, the provision of local personnel and services, and the launching of the investigative and prosecutorial process. The Secretary-General remarked that the last pending issue between the Secretariat and the Government—the question of the temporal jurisdiction of the Court—had been resolved, with the two parties agreeing to the temporal jurisdiction set as of 30 November 1996. It was expected that the Agreement would be signed at the conclusion of the mission, thus establishing the legal framework for the establishment and operation of the Court. The Secretary-General expressed concern about the difficulties inherent in securing funds on the basis of voluntary contributions. Once the Court was established, he noted, the United Nations would assume certain obligations, including vis-à-vis persons detained under the Court's authority or in regard to contractual relationship.

Truth and Reconciliation Commission

Preparations for the establishment of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission in Sierra Leone continued throughout 2001.

By December [S/2001/1195], the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Special Representative had selected the four national and three international members of the Commission; their names were being forwarded to President Kabbah for approval. UNAMSIL engaged the RUF leadership on the issue of the Commission and began a sensitization campaign in the Northern Province in August. Although RUF appeared receptive to the Commission, leaders expressed concern over its independence and the relationship between it and the Special Court.

The budget for the planned 15 months of operation of the Commission was estimated at $8.5 million. The Commission was expected to commence operations in the first half of 2002.

Liberia

In early 2001, fighting in the north-east and north-west of Liberia intensified, threatening peace not only internally but also in the border regions with Guinea and Sierra Leone. The situation was complicated by Liberian support to the RUF rebels in Sierra Leone, as reported in 2000 by the Panel of Experts established to investigate violations of the arms embargo and the ban on rough diamond exports in relation to Sierra Leone [YUN 2000, p. 204]. According to the Panel, the bulk of RUF diamonds left Sierra Leone through Liberia, which would not be possible without the involvement of Liberian government officials at the highest levels. The illicit trade in diamonds represented a major source of income for RUF.

In March, the Security Council demanded that Liberia take certain specific measures to cease its support of RUF in its opposition struggle with the Government of Sierra Leone (see p. 181). The Council also imposed an arms embargo against Liberia, sanctions against importing diamonds from Liberia and a travel ban on senior members of the Government and armed forces.

By December, the tension among Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone had decreased following ministerial meetings beginning in August to consider security problems along the common borders (see p. 168). The United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in Liberia (UNOL) continued to work towards peace in the country and to monitor the situation.

Border situation

In early 2001, the Security Council received letters alerting it to the deteriorating security situation along the borders of the Mano River Union countries (Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone) (see also p. 161) and particularly between Guinea and Liberia. On 5 February [S/2001/106], Germany noted that the border situation between the two countries was characterized by armed cross-border incursions and a deteriorating humanitarian situation. It expressed its readiness to contribute to the efforts of the Council, ECOWAS and other States to maintain international peace and security in the region.

President Charles Taylor of Liberia, in a 23 February letter to the Secretary-General [S/2001/167], complained of remarks attributed to Guinea's Army Chief of Staff about intended aggressive action against Liberia. Liberia had been the victim of five armed incursions by Guinean-based Liberian dissidents supported by the Government of President Lansana Conteh, according to President Taylor. Liberia called on the United Nations to urge Guinea to exercise restraint and to support the deployment of ECOWAS monitoring forces along the Liberian-Guinean border.

On 26 February [S/2001/173], Guinea said that it agreed with the Expert Panel report [YUN 2000, p. 204] that implicated the Liberian authorities in arms trafficking in Sierra Leone and in the subregion, which was fuelled by diamonds being exploited by RUF. Guinea added that the recent rebel attacks on Guinea's borders by rebel groups from Liberia and Sierra Leone were part of the destabilization of the countries of the subregion, which had been organized by the Government of Liberia and the RUF rebels. In Guinea's view, the imposition of sanctions against Liberia would be justified. Guinea, on 20 March [S/2001/283], said that its Ambassador in Monrovia had been declared persona non grata by Liberia and that the movement of its diplomatic personnel had been restricted. Liberia had already withdrawn its Ambassador in Guinea. Nevertheless, Guinea remained committed to improving relations with Liberia.

Sierra Leone informed the Council President on 27 February [S/2001/176] that Liberia had unilaterally taken control of operations over the airspace of the Roberts Flight Information Region, of which Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone were the members, by expelling the Guinean and Sierra Leonean telecommunications operators from Liberia.

Imposition of sanctions

Sierra Leone, on 23 February [S/2001/166], noting that the Security Council had discussed the 2000 report of the Panel of Experts on Sierra Leone Diamonds and Arms [YUN 2000, p. 204] almost a month earlier (see p. 177), listed the reasons why it believed that sanctions should be imposed against Liberia without further delay. For instance, Liberia had failed to show that it had taken steps to disengage itself from RUF, it continued to harbour senior RUF members and their families and it also continued to violate the arms embargo imposed by Council resolution 788 (1992) [YUN 1992, p. 192].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 7 March [meeting 4287], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1343(2001). The draft [S/2001/188] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1132(1997) of 8 October 1997, 1171(1998) of 5 June 1998, 1306(2000) of 5 July 2000 and its other resolutions and statements of its President on the situation in Sierra Leone and the region,

Welcoming General Assembly resolution 55/56 of 1 December 2000, in particular its call for measures engaging all concerned parties including diamond producing, processing, exporting and importing countries as well as the diamond industry to break the link between diamonds and armed conflict, and its call upon all States to implement fully Security Council measures targeting the link between the trade in conflict diamonds and the supply to rebel movements of weapons, fuel or other prohibited materiel,

Taking note of the report of the United Nations Panel of Experts established pursuant to paragraph 19 of resolution 1306(2000) in relation to Sierra Leone,

Taking note of the findings of the Panel of Experts that diamonds represent a major and primary source of income for the Revolutionary United Front, that the bulk of Revolutionary United Front diamonds leave Sierra Leone through Liberia, and that such illicit trade cannot be conducted without the permission and involvement of Liberian government officials at the highest levels, and expressing its deep concern at the unequivocal and overwhelming evidence presented by the report of the Panel of Experts that the Government of Liberia is actively supporting the Revolutionary United Front at all levels,

Recalling the Economic Community of West African States Moratorium on the Importation, Exportation and Manufacture of Small Arms and Light Weapons in West Africa adopted in Abuja on 31 October 1998,

Taking note of the measures announced by the Government of Liberia since the publication of the report of the Panel of Experts established pursuant to resolution 1306(2000), and welcoming the intention of the Economic Community of West African States to monitor their implementation in close cooperation with the United Nations and to report thereon after a period of two months,

Recalling its concern already expressed in resolution 1306(2000) at the role played by the illicit diamond trade in fuelling the conflict in Sierra Leone and at reports that such diamonds transit neighbouring countries, including Liberia,

Reiterating its call made in the statement of its President of 21 December 2000 (S/PRST/2000/41) on all States in West Africa, particularly Liberia, immediately to cease military support for armed groups in neighbouring countries and prevent armed individuals from using their national territory to prepare and commit attacks in neighbouring countries,

Determining that the active support provided by the Government of Liberia for armed rebel groups in neighbouring countries, and in particular its support for the Revolutionary United Front in Sierra Leone, constitutes a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 788(1992) of 19 November 1992 and 985(1995) of 13 April 1995,

Noting that the conflict in Liberia has been resolved, that national elections have taken place within the framework of the Yamoussoukro IV Agreement of 30 October 1991 and that the final communiqué of the informal consultative group meeting of the Economic Community of West African States Committee of Five on Liberia issued in Geneva on 7 April 1992 has been implemented, and determining therefore that the embargo imposed by paragraph 8 of resolution 788(1992) should be terminated,

1. Decides to terminate the prohibitions imposed by paragraph 8 of resolution 788(1992) and to dissolve the Committee established under resolution 985(1995);

B

2. Demands that the Government of Liberia immediately cease its support for the Revolutionary United Front in Sierra Leone and for other armed rebel groups in the region, and in particular take the following concrete steps:

(a) Expel all Revolutionary United Front members from Liberia, including such individuals as are listed by the Committee established by paragraph 14 below, and prohibit all Revolutionary United Front activities on its territory, provided that nothing in this paragraph shall oblige Liberia to expel its own nationals from its territory;

(b) Cease all financial and, in accordance with resolution 1171(1998), military support to the Revolutionary United Front, including all transfers of arms and ammunition, all military training and the provision of logistical and communications support, and take steps to ensure that no such support is provided from the territory of Liberia or by its nationals;

(c) Cease all direct or indirect import of Sierra Leone rough diamonds which are not controlled through the Certificate of Origin regime of the Government of Sierra Leone, in accordance with resolution 1306 (2000);

(d) Freeze funds or financial resources or assets that are made available by its nationals or within its territory directly or indirectly for the benefit of the Revolutionary United Front or entities owned or controlled directly or indirectly by the Revolutionary United Front;

(e) Ground all Liberia-registered aircraft operating within its jurisdiction until it updates its register of aircraft pursuant to Annex VII to the Chicago Convention on International Civil Aviation of 1944 and provides to the Council the updated information concerning the registration and ownership of each aircraft registered in Liberia;

3. Stresses that the demands in paragraph 2 above are intended to lead to further progress in the peace process in Sierra Leone, and, in that regard, calls upon the President of Liberia to help ensure that the Revolutionary United Front meet the following objectives:

(a) Allow the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone free access throughout Sierra Leone;

(b) Release all abductees;

(c) Enter their fighters in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process;

(d) Return all weapons and other equipment seized from the Mission;

4. Demands that all States in the region take action to prevent armed individuals and groups from using their territory to prepare and commit attacks on neighbouring countries and refrain from any action that might contribute to further destabilization of the situation on the borders between Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone;

5. (a) Decides that all States shall take the necessary measures to prevent the sale or supply to Liberia, by their nationals or from their territories or using their flag vessels or aircraft, of arms and related materiel of all types, including weapons and ammunition, military vehicles and equipment, paramilitary equipment and spare parts for the aforementioned, whether or not originating in their territories;

(b) Decides that all States shall take the necessary measures to prevent any provision to Liberia by their nationals or from their territories of technical training or assistance related to the provision, manufacture, maintenance or use of the items in subparagraph (a) above;

(c) Decides that the measures imposed by subparagraphs (a) and (b) above shall not apply to supplies of non-lethal military equipment intended solely for humanitarian or protective use, and related technical assistance or training, as approved in advance by the Committee established by paragraph 14 below;

(d) Affirms that the measures imposed by subparagraph (a) above do not apply to protective clothing, including flak jackets and military helmets, temporarily exported to Liberia by United Nations personnel, representatives of the media and humanitarian and development workers and associated personnel, for their personal use only;

6. Decides further that all States shall take the necessary measures to prevent the direct or indirect import of all rough diamonds from Liberia, whether or not such diamonds originated in Liberia;

7. (a) Decides also that all States shall take the necessary measures to prevent the entry into or transit through their territories of senior members of the Government of Liberia and its armed forces and their spouses and any other individuals providing financial and military support to armed rebel groups in countries neighbouring Liberia, in particular the Revolutionary United Front in Sierra Leone, as designated by the Committee established by paragraph 14 below, provided that nothing in this paragraph shall oblige a State to refuse entry into its territory to its own nationals, and provided that nothing in this paragraph shall impede the transit of representatives of the Government of Liberia to United Nations Headquarters to conduct United Nations business or the participation of the Government of Liberia in the official meetings of the Mano River Union, the Economic Community of West African States and the Organization of African Unity;

(b) Decides that the measures imposed by subparagraph (a) above shall not apply where the Committee established by paragraph 14 below determines that such travel is justified on the grounds of humanitarian need, including religious obligation, or where the Committee concludes that exemption would otherwise promote Liberian compliance with the demands of the Council, or assist in the peaceful resolution of the conflict in the subregion;

8. Further decides that the measures imposed by paragraphs 6 and 7 above shall come into force at 0001 eastern daylight time two months after the date of adoption of this resolution, unless the Security Council determines before that date that Liberia has complied with the demands in paragraph 2 above, taking into account the report of the Secretary-General referred to in paragraph 12 below, inputs from the Economic Community of West African States, relevant information provided by the Committee established by paragraph 14 below and the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1132(1997) and any other relevant information;

9. Decides that the measures imposed by paragraph 5 are established for 14 months and that, at the end of the period, the Council will decide whether the Government of Liberia has complied with the demands in paragraph 2 above, and, accordingly, whether to extend these measures for a further period with the same conditions;

10. Decides further that the measures imposed by paragraphs 6 and 7 above are established for a period of 12 months, and that at the end of this period the Council will decide whether the Government of Liberia has complied with the demands in paragraph 2 above, and, accordingly, whether to extend these measures for a further period with the same conditions;

11. Decides also that the measures imposed by paragraphs 5 to 7 above shall be terminated immediately if the Council, taking into account, inter alia, the reports of the Panel of Experts referred to in paragraph 19 below and of the Secretary-General referred to in paragraph 12 below, inputs from the Economic Community of West African States, any relevant information provided by the Committee established by paragraph 14 below and the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1132(1997) and any other relevant information, determines that the Government of Liberia has complied with the demands in paragraph 2 above;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a first report to the Council by 30 April 2001 and thereafter at six-month intervals from that date, drawing on information from all relevant sources, including the United Nations Office in Liberia, the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone and the Economic Community of West African States, on whether Liberia has complied with the demands in paragraph 2 above and on any progress made towards the objectives set out in paragraph 3 above, and calls on the Government of Liberia to support United Nations efforts to verify all information on compliance which is brought to the United Nations notice;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to provide to the Council six months from the date of the adoption of this resolution:

(a) A preliminary assessment of the potential economic, humanitarian and social impact on the Liberian population of possible follow-up action by the Council in the areas of investigation indicated in paragraph 19 (c) below;

(b) A report on the steps taken by the Government of Liberia to improve its capacity in air traffic control and surveillance in accordance with the recommendations of the Panel of Experts established pursuant to resolution 1306(2000) and any advice which may be provided by the International Civil Aviation Organization;

14. Decides to establish, in accordance with rule 28 of its provisional rules of procedure, a Committee of the Security Council, consisting of all the members of the Council, to undertake the following tasks and to report on its work to the Council with its observations and recommendations:

(a) To seek from all States information regarding the actions taken by them to implement effectively the measures imposed by paragraphs 5 to 7 above, and thereafter to request from them whatever further information it may consider necessary;

(b) To consider, and to take appropriate action on, information brought to its attention by States concerning alleged violations of the measures imposed by paragraphs 5 to 7 above, identifying where possible persons or entities, including vessels or aircraft, reported to be engaged in such violations, and to make periodic reports to the Council;

(c) To promulgate expeditiously such guidelines as may be necessary to facilitate the implementation of the measures imposed by paragraphs 5 to 7 above;

(d) To give consideration to and decide upon requests for the exemptions set out in paragraphs 5 (c) and 7 (b) above;

(e) To designate the individuals subject to the measures imposed by paragraph 7 above, and to update this list regularly;

(f) To make information it considers relevant, including the list referred to in subparagraph (e) above, publicly available through appropriate media, including through the improved use of information technology;

(g) To make recommendations to the Council on ways of increasing the effectiveness of the measures imposed by paragraphs 5 to 7 above and on ways to limit unintended effects, if any, of these measures on the Liberian population;

(h) To cooperate with other relevant Security Council Sanctions Committees, in particular that established pursuant to resolution 1132(1997) and that established pursuant to resolution 864(1993);

(i) To establish a list of Revolutionary United Front members present in Liberia as referred to in paragraph 2 (a) above;

15. Calls upon the Government of Liberia to establish an effective Certificate of Origin regime for trade in rough diamonds that is transparent and internationally verifiable and has been approved by the Committee established by paragraph 14 above, to come into operation after the measures imposed by paragraphs 5 to 7 above have been terminated in accordance with this resolution;

16. Urges all diamond-exporting countries in West Africa to establish Certificate of Origin regimes for the trade in rough diamonds similar to that adopted by the Government of Sierra Leone, as recommended by the Panel of Experts established pursuant to resolution 1306(2000), and calls upon States, relevant international organizations and other bodies in a position to do so to offer assistance to those Governments to that end;

17. Calls upon the international community to provide the necessary assistance to reinforce the fight against the proliferation and illicit trafficking of light weapons in West Africa, in particular the implementation of the Economic Community of West African States Moratorium on the Importation, Exportation and Manufacture of Small Arms and Light Weapons in West Africa, and to improve air traffic control in the West African subregion;

18. Requests all States to report to the Committee established by paragraph 14 above, within 30 days of the promulgation of the list referred to in paragraph 14 (e) above, on the actions they have taken to implement the measures imposed by paragraphs 5 to 7 above;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to establish, within one month from the date of adoption of the present resolution, in consultation with the Committee established by paragraph 14 above, a Panel of Experts for a period of six months consisting of no more than five members, drawing, as much as possible and as appropriate, on the expertise of the members of the Panel of Experts established pursuant to resolution 1306(2000), with the following mandate:

(a) To investigate any violations of the measures imposed by paragraphs 5 to 7 above;

(b) To collect any information on the compliance by the Government of Liberia with the demands in paragraph 2 above, including any violations by the Government of Liberia of the measures imposed by paragraph

2 of resolution 1171(1998) and paragraph 1 of resolution 1306(2000);

(c) To further investigate possible links between the exploitation of natural resources and other forms of economic activity in Liberia, and the fuelling of conflict in Sierra Leone and neighbouring countries, in particular those areas highlighted by the report of the Panel of Experts established pursuant to resolution 1306(2000);

(d) To collect any information linked to the illegal activities of the individuals referred to in paragraph 21 below and to any other alleged violations of this resolution;

(e) To report to the Council through the Committee established by paragraph 14 above no later than six months from the date of adoption of this resolution with observations and recommendations in the areas set out in subparagraphs (a) to (d) above;

(f) To keep the Committee established by paragraph 14 above updated on their activities as appropriate; and further requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary resources;

20. Requests the Panel of Experts referred to in paragraph 19 above, as far as possible, to bring any relevant information collected in the course of its investigations conducted in accordance with its mandate to the attention of the States concerned for prompt and thorough investigation and, where appropriate, corrective action, and to allow them the right of reply;

21. Calls upon all States to take appropriate measures to ensure that individuals and companies in their jurisdiction, in particular those referred to in the report of the Panel of Experts established pursuant to resolution 1306(2000), act in conformity with United Nations embargoes, in particular those established by resolutions 1171(1998), 1306(2000) and the present resolution, and, as appropriate, take the necessary judicial and administrative action to end any illegal activities by those individuals and companies;

22. Calls upon all States and all relevant international and regional organizations to act strictly in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution notwithstanding the existence of any rights or obligations entered into or any licence or permit granted prior to the date of adoption of this resolution;

23. Decides to conduct reviews of the measures imposed by paragraphs 5 to 7 above not more than sixty days after the adoption of this resolution, and every six months thereafter;

24. Urges all States, relevant United Nations bodies and, as appropriate, other organizations and interested parties to cooperate fully with the Committee established by paragraph 14 above and the Panel of Experts referred to in paragraph 19 above, including by supplying information on possible violations of the measures imposed by paragraphs 5 to 7 above;

25. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

The Council, on 12 March [S/2001/215], elected Kishore Mahbubani (Singapore) as Chairman and Ireland and Mauritius as Vice-Chairmen of the Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1343(2001) (Sanctions Committee for Liberia). On 23 March [S/2001/268], the Secretary-General informed the Council that, in accordance with resolution 1343(2001), he had established a five-member Panel of Experts to investigate violations of measures imposed by paragraphs 5 to 7 of that resolution, among other things. The Panel would be chaired by Martin Chungong Ayafor (Cameroon).

Liberia, on 22 March [S/2001/264], called on the United Nations to put in place a credible mechanism to verify Liberia's compliance with resolution 1343(2001), including establishing a UNAMSIL presence in Liberia. It also requested the United Nations to provide technical assistance to set up a diamond certification regime and to engage ECOWAS in a partnership in conflict management in West Africa, and in particular Sierra Leone. Consistent with the Council's demands in resolution 1343(2001), Liberia had taken the following measures: all RUF fighters had been expelled from Liberian territory; the border with Sierra Leone had been closed; the entry of uncertified rough diamonds from countries with certification regimes had been banned; systems were being put in place to freeze RUF financial assets; and Liberian-registered aircraft had been ordered grounded.

Liberia expressed concern about the threat to its security being posed by former combatants of the United Liberation Movement for Democracy in Liberia (ULIMO), dissidents who were waging war against Liberia from Guinea and whose presence in Guinea was a destabilizing force in the Mano River Union countries. Liberia claimed that its territorial integrity was again under attack from Guinea.

Report of Secretary-General (April). On 30 April, the Secretary-General issued his first report pursuant to Security Council resolution 1343(2001) regarding Liberia [S/2001/424], in which he listed steps taken by Liberia to comply with that text, as reported by UNOL, UNAMSIL, ECOWAS and other sources. Among measures reported by UNAMSIL were that Liberia issued a statement renouncing all support for RUF and calling on RUF to lay down its arms and announced the expulsion of the former RUF field commander, Sam Bockarie, and all persons associated with RUF from Liberia and the closure of the RUF office in Monrovia. However, the whereabouts of Mr. Bockarie was not known and there were reports he was in RUF-held territory in Sierra Leone. UNAMSIL was informed that the Government of Liberia continued to maintain relations with RUF. UNAMSIL reported that it had been able to deploy to some RUF-held areas as called for in resolution 1343(2001).

ECOWAS reported that it had sent a mission of its Mediation and Security Council (19-24 April) to verify Liberia's compliance with resolution 1343(2001). The mission expressed doubts about the departure of all RUF members. It considered that the United Nations should accept Liberia's request to deploy UNAMSIL monitors and observers on Liberia's side of the border with Sierra Leone and at all points of entry into Liberia. As to the banning of rough uncertified diamonds into Liberia and the 120-day ban on the export of Liberian diamonds, the mission stated that Liberia's efforts to institute its own certification-of-origin regime were commendable and warranted UN assistance. The Secretary-General said that the Secretariat had received information indicating that Mr. Bockarie was still living in Liberia and that the Liberian Government had not severed relations with RUF in Sierra Leone. He noted the ECOWAS mission's comment that the United Nations could not demand that Liberia expel RUF and at the same time request it to influence RUF to cooperate with UNAMSIL. In conclusion, the Secretary-General urged the international community to remain engaged with Liberia and the Security Council to continue to work with ECOWAS.

Communications. Between April and November, Liberia raised with the Secretary-General and the Security Council President a number of concerns or objections about the terms of resolution 1343(2001) [S/2001/429, S/2001/474, S/2001/516, S/2001/519, S/2001/562, S/2001/593, S/2001/595, S/2001/675, S/2001/727, S/2001/851, S/2001/924, S/2001/1035]. It protested that the arms embargo was unfair at a time when Liberia was coming under attack and needed to defend itself; that Guinea was aiding ULIMO rebels in their war against Liberia; that the attackers had occupied portions of Liberia's northern territory; that certain RUF members named by the Sanctions Committee for Liberia were not in Liberia despite claims to the contrary; that Guinea, Sierra Leone and the United Kingdom were supplying arms to the ULIMO rebels; that there was no justification for the Sanctions Committee to have banned many persons from international travel; and that Liberia's humanitarian situation was suffering as a result of the sanctions.

On 9 May [S/2001/467], Sierra Leone said that it was taking measures to comply with resolution 1343(2001), by preventing the import through Sierra Leone of all rough diamonds from Liberia, and banning the travel into or transit through Sierra Leone of Liberian individuals and their spouses who supported armed rebel groups. The United Kingdom, on 18 June [S/2001/625], stated that it had not supplied any arms to dissident movements in the Mano River Union region. The British Government was supplying equipment and training to the Sierra Leone Army.

The Sanctions Committee established pursuant to resolution 1343(2001), by a 13 September letter to the Council President [S/2001/867], rejected Liberia's request [S/2001/593] that the travel ban list be suspended. It affirmed its willingness to continue its policy of constructive engagement with Liberia. On 9 July [S/2001/704], the Gambia protested the inclusion of a Gambian national on the travel ban list. Bulgaria notified the Council President on 14 August [S/2001/795] that it had tightened the arms embargo against Liberia.

Reports of Secretary-General (October). In October, the Secretary-General issued three reports in response to resolution 1343(2001).

On 5 October [S/2001/939], he provided a preliminary assessment of the potential economic, humanitarian and social impact on the Liberian population of possible covert action with regard to the timber extraction industry, rubber production and the Liberian ship register. The report described the current economic and social conditions in the country, which was classified as a least developed country due to its low average per capita GDP ($177 in 2000, less than half the value in the 1980s), lack of economic diversification and poor prospects for sustained economic development. Since sanctions were imposed by resolution 1343(2001), the Liberian dollar had weakened markedly and public confidence in the Liberian economy had declined. The timber industry generated about 9 per cent of the total national budget. If that revenue was lost, all sectors of the budget would come under further pressure, income taxes might be increased, salary payment arrears would grow, the prices of imported goods would rise and new taxes on petty traders and foreigners would probably be introduced. International sanctions on Liberian rubber would directly affect more Liberians than sanctions on timber, and the effects of reduced revenues to the Government would be similar to those of the timber industry. Although the Liberian ship register generated 20 per cent of the national budget, its staff numbered only 100 people and little direct impact on the Liberian population was anticipated from possible restrictions on the register. In general, any restrictions would probably have negative effects on the financial environment, with worsening exchange rates, increasing prices for essential commodities, decreased savings and more capital flight.

In an 11 October report [S/2001/965], the Secretary-General described steps taken by Liberia to improve its capacity in air traffic control and surveillance and to obtain assistance in that regard from the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO). Liberia, as a member of the Roberts Flight Information Region, adhered to the African-Indian Ocean air navigation plan and other navigational and air traffic operation requirements and protocols. The Government had decided, however, as a result of cross-border incursions by dissident forces and increased national security concerns, to assume temporarily independent management of Liberian airspace, pending an improvement in relations among the Mano River Union countries. That plan required the installation of equipment at the Roberts International Airport Air Traffic Control Centre in Monrovia, reactivation of telecommunication equipment and a team of exclusively Liberian air control technicians under the supervision of the Liberian Civil Aviation Authority. The Authority remained in contact with ICAO to seek assistance in reforming its air traffic management within the Roberts Flight Information Region and held informal talks with ICAO in Dakar on 26 and 27 March to discuss the implications of Liberia's decision.

On 31 October [S/2001/1025], the Secretary-General issued his second report on steps Liberia had taken to cease support for RUF and other rebel groups, based on information from UNOL, UNAMSIL, ECOWAS and other sources. According to Liberia, it remained disengaged from RUF, its border with Sierra Leone remained closed, the ban on import of Sierra Leone rough diamonds remained in force and RUF funds remained frozen. UNAMSIL reported that it had free access throughout the country and that RUF continued to release abducted persons, including child combatants. RUF cooperation with the disarmament programme since 18 May had been encouraging and was expected to be completed on 31 October. However, RUF had returned only 87 weapons, 10 vandalized vehicles and 20 stripped armoured personnel carriers of the equipment taken from UNAMSIL. The Secretary-General noted the remark by ECOWAS that even though some of the socio-economic problems being experienced by the Liberian people predated the sanctions, they had been aggravated by their imposition. He reported that Liberia had actively participated in recent ministerial meetings of the Mano River Union, and he reiterated his appeal to the Council to remain engaged with Liberia whatever decision it might take with regard to sanctions.

Panel of Experts

On 26 October [S/2001/1015], the Chairman of the Sanctions Committee for Liberia submitted to the Council the report of the Panel of Experts appointed by the Secretary-General, in response to resolution 1343(2001), to investigate violations of the measures imposed by paragraphs 5 to 7 of that resolution. In the six months since its formation, the Panel noted significant signs of improvement in the Mano River Union region. Regional diplomatic efforts were currently under way to further improve bilateral relations among the three members of the Union. Conflict still existed, however, in Lofa County in Liberia, and there remained a possibility of Sierra Leone gravitating back into conflict if RUF did not release its hold on some of the best diamond areas.

There had been a proliferation of the use of non-State actors in the conflicts in the Mano River Union area, and their actions could destabilize the region again. Those groups obtained weapons from State supporters, from their trade in diamonds, gold, cocoa and coffee or from their military action. The junction of the borders of Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone had been the fault zone where those groups had thrived. RUF's relationship with Liberia, as described in the 2000 Panel of Experts report on Sierra Leone [YUN 2000, p. 204], continued, although a split was reported among RUF units that were willing to disarm in Sierra Leone and others that continued to fight in the war that had shifted to the Guinean and Liberian borders. Throughout 2001, RUF units were fighting with Liberian units in Lofa County.

The Panel proposed, among other things, that the Security Council: lift the grounding order against all Liberian-registered aircraft; extend the arms embargo on Liberia; impose an arms embargo on the armed non-State actors in the three Mano River Union countries; and impose a ban on all round log exports from Liberia from July 2002. The Liberian Government was urged to: consolidate revenues in a central account before allocating money to authorized agencies for approved expenditures; with IMF agreement, commission an independent report on revenue from timber concessions from January 2001 to July 2002; put in place a credible and transparent certification scheme for rough diamonds, which would be independently audited; and agree with IMF on auditing revenues generated from the shipping and corporate registry, and on using those funds for development purposes. The Panel further suggested that information about the travel ban on certain individuals should be made available on the Internet; the UN Secretariat should monitor compliance with resolution 1343(2001) and develop databases on violations; and the Panel should conduct assessment missions to Liberia and neighbouring States in April and September 2002.

With regard to other countries of the region, the Panel, noting that there were fraudulent aircraft registrations in the Central African Republic and Equatorial Guinea, as well as in Liberia, recommended that those countries and ICAO take action to cancel or ground such aircraft.

In the context of the travel ban, the Panel noted that most violations were through Abidjan; it urged the Council to encourage the Côte d'Ivoire authorities to adopt a less passive attitude to implementing the ban.

Singapore, in a 2 November letter [S/2001/1043], requested additional information about a Singapore-registered company mentioned in the Panel's report in connection with alleged weapons deliveries.

Sanctions Committee

The Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1343(2001) concerning Liberia, reporting on its activities from 7 March to 31 December [S/2002/83], stated that it had received 13 notifications of travel and considered 35 requests for travel ban waivers, of which 28 were granted. It also received 13 requests for deletion from the list of persons banned; it retained 7 names, deleted 5 and deferred 1 to its next quarterly review. The Committee received information from 42 countries on action taken to implement the ban.

The Committee received information from only one State regarding a possible violation of the sanctions regime. However, its Chairman would seek information from States cited in the Panel of Experts report as having committed alleged violations.

Prior to the imposition of the sanctions regime on 7 May, the Committee Chairman conducted a fact-finding mission to the region (13-20 April) to ascertain its possible impact.

Extension of UNOL

The Secretary-General informed the Security Council on 12 October [S/2001/981] that the mandate of the United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Liberia would end on 31 December. Despite the difficult political and security circumstances prevailing in the country and the subregion and the limited resources available to it, the Office continued to make worthwhile contributions in the areas of national reconciliation, respect for human rights and the rule of law through good offices and training programmes. It provided a useful political link between Liberia and the international community, particularly since the imposition of sanctions, and gave support to the Sierra Leone peace process. In that light and following consultations with the Government of Liberia, the Secretary-General recommended that UNOL's mandate be extended for another year, to 31 December 2002. He intended to conduct a review of the Office during 2002 and make proposals to the Council.

On 18 October [S/2001/982], the Council took note of his recommendation.

UNOMIL financing

By decision 55/499 of 7 September, the General Assembly included in the draft agenda of its fifty-sixth (2001) session the item on financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL), whose mandate ended in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 123]. On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the item would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464) and that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item at that session (decision 56/458).

Guinea-Bissau

The political situation in Guinea-Bissau remained volatile throughout 2001. Early in the year, the authorities foiled an assassination plot against President Kumba Yala, elected in January 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 183], to topple his Government, which was formed in accordance with the 1998 Abuja Peace Accord [YUN 1998, p. 153], ending the internal conflict in the country. In addition, armed confrontations took place between government forces and rival factions of the separatist Movement of Democratic Forces of Casamance (MFDC) in the north-west of the country.

The United Nations Peace-building Support Office in Guinea-Bissau (UNOGBIS) continued to report on developments in the country as well as the situation along the border with Senegal. The Secretary-General described its activities and developments in the country in four reports issued during the year.

Developments and UNOGBIS activities

The democratic transition in Guinea-Bissau failed to yield tangible results in early 2001, according to the inter-agency mission sent to West Africa in March by the Secretary-General [S/2001/434] (see p. 160). With little technical expertise within government institutions, deep levels of poverty, an undeveloped private sector with few prospects for investment, few avenues for employment and an oversized army dependent on the State for resources, the situation remained fragile. The mission said that collapse of the State was possible, with security and humanitarian implications for neighbouring countries, specifically Guinea, the Gambia and the Casamance area of Senegal.

Report of Secretary-General (March). In response to resolution 1233(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 140], the Secretary-General, in a 16 March report [S/2001/237], provided to the Security Council an update of developments in Guinea-Bissau and UNOGBIS activities since his previous report in September 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 186].

Following the attempted coup d'état in November 2000 [ibid.], which ended in the death of the head of the former military junta, General An-soumane Mane, the direct challenge to the constitutional order by the military appeared to decrease in early 2001. However, the overall situation in the country grew more unstable. Frictions within the coalition Government intensified, resulting in a mass resignation from the Government, on 23 January, of all members of the Guinea-Bissau Resistance, the coalition partner of the Party of Social Renewal (PRS) of President Yala. The President's subsequent appointment of a minority PRS Cabinet created further political uncertainty, since that party lacked the parliamentary majority to rule alone.

Against a background of ethnic and religious discontent, the President attempted to form a new coalition Government following demands to replace Prime Minister N'Chama. On 18 February, the authorities said they had foiled another plot to assassinate President Yala. Despite the climate of tension, Guinea-Bissau continued efforts to consolidate its fragile democratization process. The National Assembly, which resumed its annual session on 28 February, focused on the revision of the Constitution. To facilitate that debate, UNOGBIS organized a seminar that included discussion of such issues as norms and principles of constitutions in multiparty systems. The National Assembly was preparing the necessary legislation for holding municipal elections in June. The United Nations provided the services of an electoral expert.

The situation along Guinea-Bissau's border with Senegal became more tense as fighting between rival factions of the separatist MFDC increased in the north-west of Guinea-Bissau, and those fighters pursued their rebellion in Casamance province, Senegal. MFDC's cross-border infiltration into Guinea-Bissau led to armed clashes with that country's forces, and there were charges that MFDC was involved in a failed plot to assassinate Mr. Yala. The situation was further complicated by the presence in the border area of some 3,460 registered Casamance refugees. With much international assistance, the Government continued its mine-clearing programme and commenced its demobilization, reinsertion and reintegration programme by completing a census of ex-combatants and paramilitary forces and demobilizing 948 of them.

The economy of Guinea-Bissau was in dire straits, and the Government was unable to meet the most basic social needs of the population. A World Bank mission visited the country from 26 January to 9 February to assess the implementation of the economic rehabilitation and recovery credit.

The Security Council considered the report during informal consultations on 29 March and received a briefing by the Secretariat on economic, social and security matters and the consolidation of democratic institutions and processes in Guinea-Bissau. In a statement to the press that day, the President, on behalf of the members, welcomed the authorities' efforts to form a broad-based Government and called on all parties to cooperate to that end. While noting the tense situation along Guinea-Bissau's border with Senegal, the President welcomed the signing of the peace agreement between the Government of Senegal and MFDC and expressed the hope that the situation would be addressed through peaceful means within Senegal, and would no longer be a destabilizing factor in Guinea-Bissau.

Report of Secretary-General (June). On 22 June, the Secretary-General submitted another report on developments in Guinea-Bissau and on UNOGBIS activities [S/2001/622 & Corr.1]. The political situation was dominated in the period since his March report by strong and prolonged friction between the executive and legislative branches of government over the choice of Prime Minister. Faustino Imbali, whom President Yala appointed on 20 March, was opposed by parliamentarians, mainly from opposition parties but also including members of the President's party, PRS. The National Assembly repeatedly refused to confirm Mr. Imbali and his Government, and the country practically operated without a government throughout April and May. Another foiled coup attempt took place in mid-April. During that unstable period, civil society, led by the Bishop of Bissau, called on political actors to engage in dialogue in order to stabilize the country. The Secretary-General's Representative, Samuel C. Nana-Sinkam (Cameroon), continued to provide his good offices to facilitate compromise. On 17 May, the National Assembly approved the work programme of Mr. Imbali's Government. UNOGBIS, in a follow-up to a previous meeting, organized a seminar on the consolidation of multiparty democracy in collaboration with the country's 17 political parties and the parliament (Bissau, 28 May-1 June).

The activities of the MFDC rebels remained the most serious security challenge to Guinea-Bissau. Since Guinea-Bissau forces launched a military offensive against the separatist rebels in March to force them from the north-west region, the border situation remained tense and skirmishes between rival MFDC factions continued, sometimes within Guinea-Bissau territory. The presence of an estimated 3,000 refugees from Casamance, some alleged to have links with the rebels, complicated the situation further. UNHCR sent a mission to Guinea-Bissau in April to assess the refugee situation. Tensions within the armed forces contributed to delays in implementing the demobilization, reinsertion and reintegration programme. However, with World Bank assistance, 571 former combatants were demobilized in May.

The volatility of the political and military situation was both a cause and a consequence of the country's economic deterioration; foreign assistance accounted for some 80 per cent of the national budget. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), on 17 April, signed a three-year financial assistance agreement in the amount of $3.7 million to support the Government's governance programme, and other UN agencies provided aid. UNOGBIS continued to promote respect for human rights and the rule of law. During the period under review, it focused on supporting the Government's efforts to ensure due process for persons detained on suspicion of complicity in the failed 2000 coup attempt. By 13 June, only 11 of the original 169 persons detained remained in detention, the rest having been released pending trial.

The Secretary-General expressed relief that the governmental impasse had been overcome, and he called for continued financial support for the country's newly restored democratic institutions in order to enable them to function effectively.

The Security Council considered the report on 10 July, following which the President, in a statement to the press, reaffirmed the Council's support for efforts to promote national reconciliation and strengthen democratic institutions and the rule of law. The Council also expressed concern about the unstable situation in the country and called for assistance to Guinea-Bissau in its economic rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts.

Report of Secretary-General (September). In a 27 September report on developments in Guinea-Bissau and on UNOGBIS [S/2001/915], the Secretary-General stated that the overall situation in the country remained volatile. The Government faced an institutional crisis resulting from differences among various institutions, representing different branches of power, over their constitutional responsibilities. The opposition continued to demand the resignation of both the Government and Prime Minister Imbali. By mid-September, a rift had formed between President Yala and his own party, due to a number of his controversial decisions, which also provoked strong resistance from major political actors, especially the judiciary. Despite the difficult political climate, the National Assembly continued efforts to assert its role as a check on the executive, including its oversight responsibilities in the management of the national treasury. The report of its commission to investigate the alleged embezzlement of $17 million and to recommend procedures on fiscal control of the national treasury was completed, but not made public. The National Assembly approved draft revisions to the Constitution and the revised Constitution was awaiting the President's approval. All political parties agreed that municipal elections should be held in early 2002. Electoral preparations continued, although planning was hampered by financial constraints. The Secretary-General's Representative continued to promote dialogue and to mobilize civil society groups and individuals, especially the Bishop of Bissau, to lessen tensions and stabilize the situation.

Along the border with Senegal, the situation remained precarious, as the withdrawal of regular Guinea-Bissau troops from the border region, with only border guards left in place to provide security, left the situation there tense and delicate. The volatility of the border regions continued to hamper progress in the reorganization of the army and caused delays in the demobilization, reinsertion and reintegration programme. The census for that programme was completed, with 23,803 candidates counted. The next stage would be demobilization of 5,000 persons. The mine-clearing process continued; 1,600 mines were removed, with an estimated 5,000 remaining.

The country's widespread economic and social problems prevented the few democratic advances achieved over the previous months from taking root. The Secretary-General explored with ECOWAS and others ways to assist the Government to stabilize the political situation, and he appealed to the international community for urgent technical and financial assistance to the weak judiciary.

The Security Council members, having considered the report on 22 October, issued a statement to the press in which they called on all government institutions to engage in dialogue, to respect the Constitution and to promote national reconciliation. They also called for an integrated and coordinated approach by the UN system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, and called on bilateral donors to help Guinea-Bissau create income-generating capacity.

Report of Secretary-General (December). On 14 December [S/2001/1211], the Secretary-General submitted his fourth and last report of the year on developments in Guinea-Bissau and UNOGBIS. The political situation continued to be difficult and volatile. The Government reported that it had foiled a coup attempt on 3 December, and the opposition called repeatedly for the President's resignation and for the dismissal of Prime Minister Imbali. The Foreign Minister was removed from office on 21 November, and the Prime Minister was dismissed on 7 December. The new 24-member Cabinet of Prime Minister Alhamara N'Tchia Nhasse took office on 11 December. The political process continued to be marked by multiple crises among various institutions. According to the opposition, the arrest and detention of the President of the Supreme Court on allegations of misappropriation of funds were politically motivated and should be rescinded. The executive insisted that National Assembly rules and procedures did not allow parliament to declare executive acts as unconstitutional. The different perceptions of the constitutionality or otherwise of executive decisions had engendered harsh rhetoric in parliament, including initiatives from the opposition for the removal of the President from office. The executive sought to strip some opposition legislators of their parliamentary immunity in order to bring them to trial on charges of corruption and misappropriation of funds, which opposition parties said were false. Meanwhile, UNOGBIS continued to promote dialogue and national reconciliation, including through a television forum and seminars to enhance the capacity of civil society to play a more active role in building a stable political environment. The Secretary-General discussed the situation in Guinea-Bissau with heads of State in the region and with ECOWAS. The Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries and ECOWAS explored the possibility of embarking on a joint initiative to contribute to the quest for peace in Guinea-Bissau.

Although security along the border with Senegal improved during the reporting period, occasional forays into Guinea-Bissau's territory by MFDC continued. Although no major factional fighting by rival MFDC groups was reported in Guinea-Bissau territory, armed attacks against civilian vehicles continued, resulting in theft and civilian casualties. Internally, the military authorities continued to pledge loyalty to the constitutional order, although there were growing indications of concern about the apparent inability of the Government to move the democratic process forward. Military personnel to be demobilized in early 2002 were identified, following the completion of the census of the armed forces. Demining activities continued, and the Government established a Centre for Anti-Mine Action, which estimated that 2,500 mines had been removed and about 20,000 remained in the country.

The political instability continued to affect economic performance, including the flow of aid. Widespread poverty added to social instability and generated scepticism about the dividends of democracy. As the principal employer in the country, the Government's inability to pay civil service salaries on time, including months of accumulated arrears, generated enormous social and economic hardship and tensions. The drop in price of the principal cash crop, cashew nuts, and reported corruption at different levels of State administration were also factors. Against that backdrop, President Yala threatened to dismiss 60 per cent of civil servants for corruption and fraud, and the Government decided to set up an anti-corruption unit in the Ministry of Justice. UNOGBIS organized a seminar on ways to improve the functioning of anti-corruption mechanisms. The Bretton Woods institutions remained engaged with Guinea-Bissau in such areas as demobilization, reintegration, education, health and public finances. The human rights area showed signs of improvement. By late November, all detainees linked to the attempted military uprising in 2000 had reportedly been released. However, following a coup attempt on 3 December, a number of people, including military officers, were said to have been detained. Relations between the Government and the media, which had been strained, improved as discussions on a draft press code began. UNOGBIS prepared a reference document on principles and practices of journalism in a democratic society, and, with assistance from Germany, made available modern broadcasting equipment to State television and to government and private radio services. UNOGBIS also continued to organize training programmes for military and police staff, with a view to sensitizing them with regard to respect for human rights; it also organized courses for magistrates and Ministry of Justice staff members. In an effort to enhance coordination among UN bodies, UNOGBIS and the UN country team developed a "strategic vision" to assist Guinea-Bissau's peace-building process in the short to medium term. The immediate goal was to help prevent the country from relapsing into armed conflict by addressing the root causes of its crises.

By the end of the year, the situation in Guinea-Bissau remained a source of deep concern due to lack of stability and little progress in democratization. Appealing to political actors to resolve their differences through dialogue and within the framework of the Constitution, the Secretary-General said that consolidation of peace would help to create conditions in which economic growth and better living conditions could take place. He urged the international community to remain engaged with and supportive of Guinea-Bissau, and specifically to contribute to the round-table conference of donors, scheduled for early 2002.

Extension of UNOGBIS mandate

The Secretary-General, on 5 October [S/2001/960], proposed that the UNOGBIS mandate, which was due to expire on 31 December 2001, be extended until 31 December 2002. The Security Council, on 10 October [S/2001/961], took note of the proposal.

On 5 December [S/2001/1180], the Secretary-General informed the Council of his intention to appoint David Stephen (United Kingdom) as his Special Representative for Guinea-Bissau and Chief of UNOGBIS as from 1 February 2002. Mr. Stephen would succeed Samuel C. Nana-Sinkam (Cameroon). The Council, on 12 December [S/2001/1181], took note of that intention.

Eritrea-Ethiopia

During the year, Eritrea and Ethiopia generally continued to abide by the terms of the Algiers Peace Agreement that they had signed in December 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 180] and made efforts to implement it, even though progress in the peace process was slow and marked by disagreement, in particular on demarcation of the boundary between the two countries. The border dispute was the original cause of the conflict, which had first erupted in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 144].

The United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE), which was established in July 2000, continued to monitor the ceasefire throughout 2001. The formal declaration of the Temporary Security Zone in April, as called for in the 2000 Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities [YUN 2000, p. 173], gave momentum to the peace process and made possible the return of civilians to their places of origin in that area. While the parties had reservations regarding the Zone's boundaries, they respected it on the ground. UNMEE continued to patrol and observe throughout the Zone, contributing to stability there. However, in the last few months of the year, tension rose considerably in the Mission area, with each party accusing the other of building up militarily. In addition, Eritrea failed to provide the Mission with information on its militia and police or to allow UNMEE complete freedom of movement in areas adjacent to the Zone. Other outstanding issues included the release of prisoners of war, establishment of a direct air corridor between Addis Ababa and Asmara, and the conclusion of a status-of-forces agreement between Eritrea and the United Nations. UNMEE's mandate was extended twice by the Security Council in 2001, the second time until March 2002.

The Boundary Commission began its work on delimitation and demarcation of the border, a complex and costly enterprise that required extensive demining.

Implementation of Algiers agreement

The Secretary-General, in response to Security Council resolution 1320(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 176], submitted five reports on Ethiopia and Eritrea in 2001. He provided updated information on political and humanitarian developments and on the status of UNMEE.

Report of Secretary-General (January). In his report of 12 January [S/2001/45], the Secretary-General welcomed the Peace Agreement between Eritrea and Ethiopia, which was signed in Algiers on 12 December 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 180], and described it as a major achievement for Africa. He stated that the strength of UNMEE's military component stood at 3,432 personnel as at 11 January, including 153 observers. UNMEE expected to be fully deployed and operational by the end of February, with a total strength of 4,200 troops. Civilian staff members totalled 194.

The presence of landmines and unexploded ordnance in the future Temporary Security Zone and adjacent areas was a threat not only to UNMEE personnel but also to the populations concerned. UNMEE was establishing a mine-action priority-setting coordination group at its Asmara office.

The Secretary-General said that the Algiers Peace Agreement underlined the commitment of both countries to the consolidation of the peace process. He was encouraged by the fact that the parties had already taken steps towards implementation. Noting that the Algiers Agreement required the parties to respect and implement fully the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities of 18 June 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 173], the Secretary-General, while acknowledging UNMEE's rapid deployment, expressed concern about the delay in establishing the Temporary Security Zone. He recalled that disagreements between the parties in that regard had arisen during the second meeting of the Military Coordination Commission (MCC) in December 2000 [ibid., p. 181]. A few matters pertaining to UNMEE's deployment also remained to be resolved, including the status-of-forces agreements between the United Nations and Ethiopia and Eritrea. The Secretary-General hoped that the parties would work towards establishing the Boundary Commission, which, under the Algiers Agreement, had been entrusted with the delimitation and demarcation of the border, and would provide the required financing as soon as possible. He also called for contributions to the trust fund established under Security Council resolution 1177 (1998) [YUN 1998, p. 147] for establishing the border. Subject to the availability of the resources, the United Nations was prepared to assist the Boundary Commission.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

On 9 February [meeting 4275], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/4 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council, recalling all previous resolutions and statements of its President regarding the situation in Eritrea and Ethiopia, notes with appreciation the Secretary-General's progress report of 12 January 2001 and subsequent update pertaining to the matter.

The Council reaffirms the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Eritrea and Ethiopia, and further reaffirms its continued commitment to a peaceful definitive settlement of the conflict.

The Council, reiterating its strong support for the Agreement of Cessation of Hostilities signed by the parties in Algiers on 18 June 2000, strongly welcomes and supports the subsequent Peace Agreement between the Government of the State of Eritrea and the Government of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia signed in Algiers on 12 December 2000 ("Algiers Agreement"). It commends the efforts of the Organization of African Unity, the President of Algeria and his Special Envoy, as well as the United States of America and the European Union for their role in achieving the Algiers Agreement.

The Council encourages both parties to continue working towards the full and prompt implementation of the Algiers Agreement. In this connection, it further welcomes the agreement reached by the parties on 6 February 2001 to move forward with the establishment of the Temporary Security Zone on 12 February 2001.

The Council expresses its strong support for the Secretary-General's role in continuing to help implement the Algiers Agreement, including through his own good offices, for the efforts of his Special Representative and for the contributions of relevant United Nations entities.

The Council notes with satisfaction that the Algiers Agreement includes mechanisms for the delimitation and demarcation of the common border and for addressing claims and compensation, and that the parties are cooperating with the Secretary-General in these matters in accordance with agreed schedules. It draws the urgent attention of Member States to the fact that funds provided to date for border delimitation and demarcation, through the United Nations Trust Fund established under resolution 1177(1998) of 26 June 1998, remain clearly inadequate to meet the expenses of the Boundary Commission for the work entrusted to it under the Algiers Agreement. While expressing appreciation to those Member States that have already contributed financially, the Council calls upon Member States to consider providing further support to the peace process, including through contributions to the voluntary Trust Fund in order to assist the parties in rapid delimitation and demarcation of the common border in accordance with resolution 1312(2000) of 31 July 2000 and in accordance with the Algiers Agreement.

The Council notes with appreciation the expeditious deployment of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea allowing the parties to redeploy and rearrange their forces as scheduled. It expresses appreciation to the troop-contributing countries and to those Member States that have provided the Mission with additional assets.

The Council urges the parties to cooperate fully and expeditiously with the Mission in the implementation of its mandate, including through the complete redeployment of troops consistent with the Algiers Agreement, the establishment of a direct air corridor between Addis Ababa and Asmara to ensure freedom of movement for Mission flights, and the conclusion of the necessary status-of-forces agreements, including identifying suitable accommodation sites for the Mission.

The Council further urges the parties to facilitate mine action in coordination with the United Nations Mine Action Service, including through exchanging and providing existing maps and any other relevant information to the United Nations. It notes with concern that mines and unexploded ordnance remain the pre-eminent threat to the safety and security of Mission troops and the population in and around the future Temporary Security Zone. It calls upon the international community to support generously non-governmental organizations with resources, skills and expertise in demining so that, in coordination with the Mission and the United Nations country teams, they can assist both Governments in this undertaking.

The Council encourages both parties to continue to exercise restraint and to implement confidence-building measures, to continue the release and voluntary and orderly return under the auspices of the International Committee of the Red Cross of civilians that remain interned, to release remaining prisoners of war and facilitate their return under the auspices of the International Committee of the Red Cross, and to fulfil their commitments under the Algiers Agreement to afford humane treatment to each other's nationals and persons of each other's national origin.

The Council calls on the parties to ensure the continued safe and unhindered access of humanitarian assistance to those in need, to guarantee the safety and security of all Mission, International Committee of the Red Cross and other humanitarian personnel and to respect strictly the relevant provisions of international humanitarian law.

The Council recognizes that the effects of the war have exacted a heavy toll on the civilian populations of Eritrea and Ethiopia, including through the internal displacement and outflow of refugees. It urges the respective Governments to continue to redirect their efforts towards the reconstruction and development of both economies, to work towards reconciliation with a view to normalizing their relations, and to engage in constructive cooperation with the other neighbouring States in the Horn of Africa, with a view to achieving stability in the subregion. It further urges contributions from the international community, including the United Nations agencies and the international financial institutions, in support of the reconstruction efforts of both countries.

The Council remains seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (March). In a 7 March report [S/2001/202], the Secretary-General updated the Council on political and humanitarian developments in Eritrea and Ethiopia and recommended an extension of UNMEE's mandate. He stated that major strides towards establishing the Temporary Security Zone envisaged in the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities were made by the parties at the third MCC meeting (Nairobi, Kenya, 6 February). The Zone, which was temporary and in no way prejudged the final status of any contested areas, was a first step to instil confidence, disengage troops and allow both Governments to arrange for the return of refugees and internally displaced persons. It would also enable humanitarian organizations to begin their activities in the area. The parties accepted in general terms UNMEE's proposal for the southern boundary of the Zone, although both expressed reservations about its location. The Force Commander translated the agreed map into a larger-scale operational map for use by the United Nations and the parties on the ground. Ethiopia began redeploying its forces on 12 February and Eritrea began to rearrange its forces northward on 17 February, while registering strong objections to the operational map. UNMEE established control of all sensitive locations inside the Zone and monitored the redeployment and repositioning of the armed forces of both parties. At the fourth MCC meeting on 28 February, held for the first time inside the Zone, the parties agreed to cooperate with the UNMEE verification process and to allow UNMEE complete freedom of movement for that purpose.

Despite Eritrea's stated intention to abide by earlier understandings, on 1 March it announced a halt in the repositioning of its forces, due to objections to adjustments to the original map. It still maintained a substantial military presence in all three sectors of the Zone. Consequently, as at 6 March, UNMEE was not in a position to declare the formal establishment of the Zone, thus creating a potentially dangerous vacuum of authority in the Zone areas. UNMEE was also concerned about restrictions on its freedom of movement by the two parties; several requests for low flights over the Zone were denied, and some patrols in the Zone and adjacent areas were restricted. During the reporting period, the military situation between the two armed forces generally remained calm, despite some small-arms firings and destruction of property by one or the other party.

Some progress was made on the boundary demarcation issue, with both countries submitting to the Boundary Commission's Secretary, who was the Chief of the Cartographic Section of the UN Secretariat, their claims and supporting evidence. However, Ethiopia challenged one of the Eritrea-appointed Commissioners. In addition to the arbitral proceedings to be held by the Commission, the delimitation and demarcation of the border would require on-site technical work for which UNMEE would provide support. With regard to detained persons, Ethiopia had released a total of 614 prisoners of war and 989 civilian internees, and Eritrea had released 628 of the former and 4,357 of the latter since December 2000.

As at 1 March, the strength of UNMEE stood at 4,143 military personnel and 273 civilian staff. Negotiations between Ethiopia and the Secretariat over a few outstanding issues, particularly exemption from taxation and freedom of movement to and from the Temporary Security Zone, were still ongoing. The Mission's public information programme initiated radio broadcasts on recent developments and the peace process. UNMEE continued to receive frequent reports of landmine explosions on both sides of the border. However, neither side had provided complete information on minefields. The Mine Action Coordination Centre began training 150 local personnel. The difficult humanitarian situation caused by the impact of three years of drought was compounded by the effects of the war. Eritrea and the UN country team launched a humanitarian appeal for $217 million to stabilize the situation of the most vulnerable, in particular internally displaced persons and recently returned refugees (see p. 831). It was estimated that 6,240,000 people were affected by the drought and needed assistance and 400,000 had been displaced as a consequence of the war.

The Secretary-General proposed that the costs related to the work of the Secretary of the Boundary Commission, who was a UN staff member, as well as any support required from UNMEE, be included in the Mission's budget. To reduce the risks associated with mines for displaced persons returning to their homes, adequate mine-clearance and mine-awareness programmes would be required. The Secretary-General appealed to donors to contribute to the Mine Action Coordination Centre established by UNMEE. Noting that UNMEE had achieved significant progress since its establishment, the Secretary-General recommended that its mandate be extended for six months, until 15 September 2001.

Communications. On 8 March [S/2001/204], Eritrea transmitted to the Security Council a press release in which it called on the United Nations to rectify the alleged mistakes made in the location of the southern boundary of the Temporary Security Zone. Japan announced on 15 March [S/2001/240] a pledge of $1,083,000 for the Trust Fund in Support of the Delimitation and Demarcation of the Ethiopia/Eritrea Border. Eritrea, on 15 March [S/2001/229], said that although it broadly concurred with the Secretary-General's report, in particular the recommendation for the extension of UNMEE's mandate, it felt that a number of points had not been addressed adequately and took exception to the implication that a consensus was reached at MCC for an adjustment of the Zone to take account of reservations expressed by both parties. Also, Eritrea did not receive a larger-scale operational map as stated, but received a second map that put additional areas of sovereign Eritrean territory outside the Zone and under the military occupation of Ethiopia without consulting Eritrea; therefore, Eritrea had stopped its rearrangement of troops after having informed UNMEE. Ethiopia, on 20 March [S/2001/250], also commended the report and stated its willingness to resolve the issues of freedom of movement for the United Nations and sign a status-of-forces agreement; it called on Eritrea to do likewise. Ethiopia also rebutted some claims made by Eritrea.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 15 March [meeting 4294], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1344(2001). The draft [S/2001/233] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling resolutions 1298(2000) of 17 May 2000, 1308(2000) of 17 July 2000, 1312(2000) of 31 July 2000, and 1320(2000) of 15 September 2000, the statement of its President of 9 February 2001 (S/PRST/2001/4), and all relevant previous resolutions and statements of its President pertaining to the Ethiopia-Eritrea conflict,

Reaffirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Ethiopia and Eritrea,

Further reaffirming the need for both parties to fulfil all of their obligations under international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law,

Recalling the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 49/59 of 9 December 1994,

Reaffirming its strong support for the Agreement of Cessation of Hostilities signed between the Government of the State of Eritrea and the Government of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia in Algiers on 18 June 2000 and the subsequent Comprehensive Peace Agreement signed by the parties in Algiers on 12 December 2000,

Welcoming the progress made thus far in the implementation of these agreements,

Reaffirming its strong support for the Secretary-General's role in continuing to help implement the Agreements, including through his good offices, for the continuing efforts of his Special Representative and for the contributions of relevant United Nations entities,

Expressing its strong support for the role played by the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea in the implementation of its mandate,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 7 March 2001,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea at the troop and military observer levels authorized by its resolution 1320(2000) until 15 September 2001;

2. Calls upon the parties to continue working towards the full and prompt implementation of their Agreements, including an expeditious completion of the remaining steps, in particular the rearrangement of forces necessary for the establishment of the Temporary Security Zone, and to fulfil the following obligations:

(a) To ensure freedom of movement and access for the Mission;

(b) To establish a direct air corridor between Addis Ababa and Asmara in the interests of the safety of United Nations personnel;

(c) To conclude status-of-forces agreements with the Secretary-General;

(d) To facilitate mine action in coordination with the United Nations Mine Action Service, in particular through exchanging and providing existing maps and any other relevant information to the United Nations;

3. Stresses that the Agreements link the termination of the United Nations peacekeeping mission with the completion of the process of delimitation and demarcation of the Ethiopia-Eritrea border, which is a key element of the peace process;

4. Notes the primary responsibility of the parties under the Comprehensive Peace Agreement to fund the Boundary Commission and urges them to fulfil their financial obligations in this regard;

5. Stresses the importance of the close relationship between the Mission and the Boundary Commission and, noting the recommendations contained in paragraphs 50 and 53 of the Secretary-General's report, encourages the Mission to provide appropriate support to the Boundary Commission;

6. Decides to consider the recommendations in paragraphs 50 and 53 of the Secretary-General's report upon receipt of more detailed information;

7. Calls upon all States and international organizations to consider providing further support to the peace process, including through contributions to the voluntary Trust Fund to facilitate the rapid delimitation and demarcation of the common border, as well as to assist and participate in the longer-term tasks of reconstruction and development, and the economic and social recovery of Ethiopia and Eritrea;

8. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

The Security Council, on 16 March [S/2001/233], informed the Secretary-General that it shared his views on the importance of the Boundary Commission to the successful implementation of the UNMEE mandate. In order to make decisions on that matter, the Council requested quantified and detailed proposals on the recommendations contained in his March report (see p. 194).

Communications. Ethiopia and Eritrea, in letters to the Council, accused each other of impeding progress towards a peaceful settlement. On 29 March [S/2001/312], Eritrea transmitted a press release, which stated that the mines that had exploded around Tserona that resulted in an injury to an UNMEE peacekeeper had been laid by Ethiopia, which continued to reject appeals to provide minefield information to UNMEE. On 4 April [S/2001/327], Ethiopia countered that it had submitted information on minefields to UNMEE. Eritrea's claims were an effort to divert attention from its not having signed the status-of-forces agreement and its refusal to allow UNMEE to fly directly between Asmara and Addis Ababa.

Ethiopia, on 7 May [S/2001/448], said that Eritrea was violating the Algiers Agreement by reintroducing its troops into the Temporary Security Zone under the guise of militia. Eritrea, on 14 May [S/2001/477], denied that claim and said that Ethiopia's objective was to destabilize Eritrea; it had done so by using terrorist armed groups to harass the population in the occupied areas and to loot property. Meanwhile, Ethiopia refused to redeploy its troops from certain areas in the Temporary Security Zone, refused to provide UNMEE with information on landmines and impeded agreement on high-altitude flights. Also on 14 May [S/2001/480], Eritrea reported the results of an inquiry into an incident in which its forces had turned back an UNMEE vehicle travelling on a road in Eritrea. It maintained that movement outside the Temporary Security Zone and within restricted military zones required observance of notification procedures. On 18 June [S/2001/609], Eritrea protested what it described as an attack by the Ethiopian Army on an Eritrean police station inside the Temporary Security Zone. Another protest was made by Eritrea on 28 June [S/2001/648], when it accused Ethiopia of having deported 722 Eritreans and one Ethiopian on 25 June. It added that over the past years, Ethiopia had deported over 76,000 Eritreans and Ethiopians of Eritrean origin.

Establishment of Temporary Security Zone

The Temporary Security Zone was established on 18 April, marking the formal separation of the Ethiopian and Eritrean forces, as the UN Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Jean-Marie Guéhenno, announced to the Security Council the following day [S/PV.4310 & Corr.1]. Mr. Guéhenno stated that that step, as called for in the Algiers Agreement, was an important stage that would allow for the restoration of the Eritrean civil administration, including police and local militia, and the return of displaced persons to the Zone. In his announcement of the event, the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Legwaila Joseph Legwaila, had said that UNMEE continued to work with both countries to resolve a number of problems concerning the southern boundary of the Zone. The Special Representative reminded the parties that it was their obligation to ensure that all returnees were able to go back to their villages of origin. In addition, UNMEE reported that some Ethiopian military forces had moved forward slightly in the Zone from the confirmed redeployment position and discussions on the subject with the Ethiopian authorities were ongoing.

On 17 April, Mr. Guéhenno informed the Council, UNMEE and Eritrea had signed a protocol that would govern relations between the Mission and the police and militia units that would return to the Zone. That protocol established that police and militia should be clearly identifiable and allowed to carry only personal weapons. The most immediate challenge, he said, was the return of displaced persons to the Zone, and Eritrea was anxious that the move should be completed prior to the rainy season. Accordingly, Eritrea was planning for the return of 300,000 displaced persons within the next six to eight weeks. UNMEE made clear that a precipitous return could put returnees in a dire humanitarian situation. Linked to those returns was the threat posed by landmines and unexploded ordnance in the areas of return, where only limited mine-clearance activities were being carried out. The issue of direct flights between Addis Ababa and Asmara was still unresolved, and UNMEE faced repeated restrictions of movement.

Mr. Guéhenno noted that the Boundary Commission held its first informal meeting (The Hague, Netherlands, 25-26 March), with the participation of agents for both Ethiopia and Eritrea, at which a tentative time line of activities was presented. The Commission was drawing up a plan of action for the on-site activities required for delimitation and demarcation of the border. However, the formal orders to commence the work of the Commission could be issued only after Ethiopia's objection to one of the Commissioners was resolved. The President of the Commission had asked the Secretary-General to resolve Ethiopia's challenge, and he had a similar responsibility with regard to objections posed by both parties to three out of five members of the Claims Commission. The Presidents of both Commissions had requested the parties to make deposits to cover the initial costs of those two bodies, pursuant to commitments made in the Algiers Agreement. Some contributions were made to the Claims Commission, but the parties had not made any to the Boundary Commission.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 15 May [meeting 4320], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/14 on behalf of the Council:

Recalling all previous resolutions and statements of its President regarding the situation between Ethiopia and Eritrea, the Security Council emphasizes the importance of the commitments undertaken by the Government of the State of Eritrea and the Government of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia to the Agreement of Cessation of Hostilities signed in Algiers on 18 June 2000 and the subsequent Peace Agreement between the parties signed in Algiers on 12 December 2000 ("Algiers Agreements").

The Council reiterates its strong support for the Secretary-General's role in helping to implement the Agreements, including through his own good offices, and for the efforts of his Special Representative. It further expresses its appreciation for the continued role of the Organization of African Unity in helping to implement the Algiers Agreements.

The Council also reiterates its appreciation for the continued deployment of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea both to the troop-contributing countries and to those Member States that have provided the Mission with additional assets.

The Council encourages both parties to continue working towards the full and prompt implementation of the Agreements and, in this context, to take concrete confidence-building measures. The Council further reaffirms its continued commitment to a peaceful definitive settlement of the conflict. In this connection, the Council notes with satisfaction that the parties have agreed to the Secretary-General's proposal of 1 May 2001, on the composition of the Boundary and Claims Commissions, critical components to the peaceful definitive settlement of the conflict. It now calls on the parties to fully cooperate with the Boundary Commission and to fulfil their financial responsibilities regarding the Boundary Commission's work.

The Council stresses that the parties must provide free movement and access for the Mission and its supplies as required throughout the territories of the parties, without any restrictions, including within the Temporary Security Zone and the 15-kilometre-wide adjacent area. Free and unhindered access for the Mission is a fundamental condition for the success of the peacekeeping operation. The Council emphasizes further that the purpose of the Temporary Security Zone is to separate the parties' armed forces. The Temporary Security Zone must be completely demilitarized. The civilian populations inside the Temporary Security Zone should be supported by an appropriate but limited number of Eritrean civilian militia and police.

The Council calls on the parties to cooperate fully and expeditiously with the Mission in the implementation of its mandate and to abide scrupulously by the letter and spirit of their agreements, particularly regarding the inviolability of the Temporary Security Zone. It also calls on both parties to exercise restraint in their public statements.

The Council further calls on the parties to continue to facilitate mine action in coordination with the United Nations Mine Action Service. It encourages the parties to exercise caution in returning civilians to the Temporary Security Zone before it has been adequately demined. The Council further calls for the immediate establishment of a secure air corridor between Addis Ababa and Asmara that does not require a detour through other countries. It also calls on Eritrea to conclude the necessary status-of-forces agreement for the Mission.

The Council notes that, in accordance with paragraph 16 of resolution 1298(2000) of 17 May 2000, the arms embargo on the parties expires on 16 May 2001. The Council recognizes that the Algiers Agreements are consistent with paragraphs 2 through 4 of resolution 1298(2000). Under the current circumstances, the measures imposed by paragraph 6 of the same resolution have not been extended by the Council beyond 16 May 2001.

The Council urges the parties to ensure that efforts are redirected from weapons procurement and other military activities towards the reconstruction and development of both economies, and regional reconciliation, with a view to achieving stability in the Horn of Africa. The Council reiterates its encouragement of Member States to exercise the highest degree of responsibility in discouraging arms flows to countries and regions emerging from armed conflicts.

The Council remains vigilant and expresses its intention to take appropriate measures if the situation between Eritrea and Ethiopia again threatens regional peace and security.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (June). In his 19 June progress report on Ethiopia and Eritrea [S/2001/608], the Secretary-General welcomed the establishment of the Temporary Security Zone as a milestone in the peace process, making possible the return of civilians seeking to resume their lives in their places of origin. Despite differing views concerning the exact boundaries and its regime, in particular as it referred to the restoration of Eritrean militia and police, the situation on the ground remained generally calm. Nonetheless, there was a growing concern at the possibility of incidents resulting from the proximity between the Eritrean militia and police and the Ethiopian forces in the area of the southern boundary of the Zone.

UNMEE had attempted to define a precise southern boundary of the Zone that took into account the concerns of the parties of an administrative, military or humanitarian nature. It investigated the situation along several segments of that boundary, including clarification of the location and status of over a hundred villages in the area, resulting in a number of mutually acceptable adjustments of the boundary. Given the need for operational clarity, UNMEE had completed a finalized map showing the southern and northern boundaries of the Zone. UNMEE was concerned at the continued presence of Ethiopian troops inside the Zone in one location, despite Ethiopian assurances that those troops would be withdrawn. UNMEE had received recent indications that Ethiopia considered that the redeployment position corresponded to the 6 May 1998 line. That was not acceptable to the Mission, long after an understanding had been reached on the Ethiopian troops' redeployment positions in that area. Eritrea had not informed UNMEE of past or planned redeployment numbers, despite repeated requests and the fact that it was required to do so under the 2000 ceasefire Agreement. As at 13 June, UNMEE estimated that over 5,500 Eritrean militia and 3,100 police had already deployed inside the Zone. Both militia and police were apparently being organized along the lines of a military structure.

On 16 April, the Special Representative and the Eritrean Commissioner signed a Protocol Agreement on the functioning of local militia and police inside the Zone. The Protocol outlined the terms under which Eritrean militia and police were expected to operate and limited the types of weapons that they could carry. It also provided for the storage of certain types of weapons in predetermined locations. As at 13 June, UNMEE had lodged 31 protests with the Eritrean authorities concerning violations of the Protocol. Notwithstanding those problems, UNMEE had received good cooperation from both police and militia.

Ethiopia, on 21 April, issued a statement in which it rejected key elements of the Protocol Agreement on police and militia. It objected to the number of Eritrean militia to be deployed in the Zone, the type of weapons they would be allowed to carry and the fact that militia members would wear distinctive uniforms; Ethiopia said that was evidence that the Zone had not been demilitarized. It expressed similar concerns on 7 May [S/2001/448]. Eritrea said that its deployment of police and militias, dispersed over such a vast area, could not pose a cause of concern to Ethiopia [S/2001/477]. In the absence of any information on the pre-conflict strength and configuration of Eritrean local militia and police, UNMEE was attempting to determine what would constitute an appropriate but limited number of Eritrean civilian police and militia.

Freedom of movement for UNMEE, as required in the ceasefire Agreement, remained a problem; as at 13 June, the Mission had recorded and protested 113 restrictions on its movement by Eritrea and 30 by Ethiopia. Eritrea argued that UNMEE's freedom of movement should be limited to the Zone and to the main supply/access routes, and that it should not extend to the 15-kilometre-wide area adjacent to the Zone. Those restrictions impeded the Mission's monitoring mandate, which required the United Nations to monitor both the Zone and the forces of the two parties after redeployment and repositioning in the vicinity of the Zone. There had been no progress regarding the establishment of a direct high-altitude flight route between Asmara and Addis Ababa for UNMEE aircraft.

The United Nations continued to build confidence between the parties through MCC, which remained the only channel for direct contacts between them. Meetings were held on 6 April and 21 May in Djibouti and Nairobi, respectively. The meetings discussed the restoration of Eritrean militia and police in the Zone, freedom of movement, mine information, and the need for customs and immigration control along the southern boundary of the Zone. The parties agreed in principle to establish a joint mechanism, with the participation of OAU and UNMEE, to repatriate remains of soldiers from the Zone. They also agreed to establish three sector-level MCCs.

On 22 March, Ethiopia signed the status-of-forces agreement (SOFA) for UNMEE; however, the SOFA with Eritrea remained under negotiation.

The landmine and unexploded ordnance situation in the Zone was slowly but steadily becoming clearer since more information was provided by the parties and on-site surveying progressed. In March, Eritrea handed over to UNMEE 313 mine records covering 175,000 anti-personnel mines and 45,000 anti-tank mines. Ethiopia provided 17 reports to the Mine Action Coordination Centre and maintained that it had no central records of mines laid in the Zone. The Centre entered the relevant information on its database. The threat to both Mission personnel and the civilian population was great. Mine-awareness leaflets were distributed throughout the Zone and adjacent areas.

The Boundary Commission and the Claims Commission had begun their work, the initial difficulties regarding the nomination of some of the Commissioners having been resolved. Information on the main activities of the two Commissions was annexed to the Secretary-General's report.

In the humanitarian area, significant numbers of internally displaced persons had moved back to their home areas, either spontaneously or through returns organized by the Government with UNHCR assistance. Approximately 160,000 such persons were in camps and another 100,000 to 150,000 were living in host communities. Eritrea drew up plans for the second phase of government-organized returns, and UNMEE participated in village assessments of infrastructure in preparation for their arrival. Following a March agreement among Eritrea, the Sudan and UNHCR on the voluntary repatriation of Eritrean refugees from the Sudan, the first group of 900 Eritrean refugees returned to their home villages in May. The Sudan estimated that 174,000 Eritrean refugees remained there. During the period under review, Ethiopia released 242 Eritrean prisoners of war, and Eritrea released one Ethiopian prisoner of war, on health grounds. According to the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), some 400 prisoners of war remained in Eritrea and some 1,300 in Ethiopia. The human rights component of UNMEE became operational with the arrival of five of the expected seven human rights officers. They began investigating allegations of violations in the Zone area and monitoring the return of displaced persons.

The Secretary-General commended the two Governments for their commitment to the peace process and their overall compliance with their obligations under the Algiers Agreement, in spite of the fact that serious difficulties remained. It was imperative, he said, for the parties to resolve the outstanding issues, in particular those pertaining to the Temporary Security Zone, so as to ensure that it was clearly defined and effectively demilitarized. In letters to the leaders of the two countries, the Secretary-General appealed to Eritrea to pay attention to the deployment of an excessive number of militia and police in the Zone and to the fact that a SOFA had not been signed, and expressed concern to Ethiopia over the continued presence of its troops in parts of the eastern sector of the Zone. The continuing restrictions on UNMEE's freedom of movement and the establishment of a direct high-altitude route between Asmara and Addis Ababa were mentioned in both letters. The Secretary-General regretted that neither Government had displayed publicly much openness to a normalization of relations between them.

Report of Secretary-General (September). On 5 September [S/2001/843], the Secretary-General issued an update of his previous report on Ethiopia and Eritrea; he recommended that the Council extend UNMEE's mandate for six months.

On 21 and 22 June, UNMEE presented its final map of the Temporary Security Zone to the Eritrean and Ethiopian authorities. The Special Representative urged the parties to accept the map despite their objections to some parts of the boundary. Ethiopia stated that the map was unacceptable because of two "errors". It asserted that an 8-kilometre-wide pocket at the eastern end of Sector East should be returned to Ethiopia, and that the Zone should be uniformly 25 kilometres wide, which was not the case in Sector Centre. For its part, Eritrea indicated that it could not accept the map as it was a departure from the proposals originally presented to the parties on 30 January; in particular, the Zone could not be considered as "fully established" until Eritrea's concerns regarding the southern boundary had been addressed. The Secretary-General noted that, while neither party had formally accepted the map, they had in fact based their operations on it and cooperated with UNMEE in the management of the Zone, in accordance with the parameters established in the map. However, on several occasions, Eritrea invoked its disagreement with the southern boundary by refusing to cooperate on other issues, thus delaying resolution of matters such as restrictions on UNMEE's freedom of movement, signing a SOFA, convening sector-level meetings of MCC and providing information on the number of militia and police inside the Zone. With regard to the last, UNMEE had not been able to determine whether the number of Eritrean police and militia deployed in the Zone was commensurate with the size of the population. Nevertheless, UNMEE estimated that 6,800 Eritrean militia and 3,000 police were deployed inside the Zone, a significant rise in militia since June (5,500), but the police number was unchanged. Despite appeals from UNMEE not to deploy police and militia close to the southern boundary of the Zone, on at least one occasion their deployment in that area led to increased tensions between the parties in some sections of the boundary. In addition, UNMEE protested several violations by the police and militia of the Protocol Agreement on the Presence of Police and Militia in the Temporary Security Zone, signed between UNMEE and Eritrea on 16 April. In particular, the Eritrean militia and police contravened the provisions of the Protocol relating to the type of weapons they could carry and to stockpiling of weapons in the Zone. Despite those concerns, cooperation and communication between UNMEE and the police at the field level were relatively good.

Eritrea continued to hamper UNMEE's freedom of movement, thereby reducing its ability to monitor the area north of the Zone where Eritrean Defence Forces were positioned. On a few occasions, movement was restricted by the Ethiopian Armed Forces owing to insufficient coordination among some of their elements.

The seventh meeting of MCC (Nairobi, 27 June) discussed plans for opening the Mereb River Bridge, the challenges faced by civilians returning to their homes and UNMEE's freedom of movement. Eritrea continued to maintain that it was premature to hold sector MCC meetings until the Zone was "fully established", and its representative questioned the holding of future MCC meetings in either Addis Ababa or Asmara. The parties continued discussions on a draft procedure for collecting and exchanging the remains of soldiers killed during the conflict. The eighth MCC meeting (Nairobi, 8 August) focused on border security and the return of internally displaced persons. As at 31 August, the strength of UNMEE's military component stood at 3,870 military personnel.

Landmines remained a major threat in the Zone and adjacent areas, with eight civilians killed and 24 injured from 1 June to 31 August. On 18 August, eight Jordanian peacekeepers were injured when their truck hit a mine. A positive step in mine action was Eritrea's 27 August signature of the 1997 Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction [YUN 1997, p. 503]. Ethiopia, which said it did not possess centralized mine records, agreed to facilitate an UNMEE-organized information collection project in three sectors. However, the project was tested in Sector East and found to be unsatisfactory. Mine-clearance teams continued their work, and training of humanitarian demining teams progressed.

The composition of the Boundary Commission and of the Claims Commission was completed, and a report on the Boundary Commission's activities was annexed to the Secretary-General's report. The parties had made initial contributions towards the expenses of the Boundary Commission, and voluntary contributions from various Member States to the Trust Fund for the Delimitation and Demarcation of the Border totalled $5.4 million.

As a result of UNMEE's patrolling, the return of civilian administration, police and militia to the Zone, and the efforts of the humanitarian community, security conditions in the Zone improved. A total of 170,000 internally displaced persons had returned to their villages from camps by the time of the report. A total of 70,000 persons still lived in camps, as their home areas remained inaccessible because of mines and unexploded ordnance, insecurity caused by the proximity of villages to the southern boundary of the Zone, or the fact that some villages were in areas under Ethiopian administration. UN agencies, NGOs and the Eritrean Relief and Refugee Committee began programmes to provide housing materials to villages. The release and repatriation of prisoners of war came to a halt, despite the commitment made by both parties under the Algiers Agreement. According to ICRC, some 1,800 prisoners of war remained in Ethiopia and 400 in Eritrea. During the reporting period, ICRC assisted the repatriation of 3,522 persons of Ethiopian descent from Eritrea. Since December 2000, a total of 19,853 persons had been repatriated to Ethiopia. On 25 June, 704 persons of Eritrean descent, mostly long-term residents of the Tigray region in Ethiopia, were sent to Eritrea in a manner, which ICRC determined was not in accordance with international humanitarian law and which UNMEE protested. The Secretary-General expressed his concern over those circumstances in a letter of 2 August to the Prime Minister. In a reply of 8 August, the Government of Ethiopia maintained that the persons were repatriated to Eritrea of their own free will. UNMEE interviewed individuals repatriated by both countries and found serious human rights concerns, including the issue of long-term detention without due process, allegations of ill-treatment, discrimination in access to social services and employment, and harassment. UNMEE carried out human rights monitoring activities within the Zone and adjacent areas. The Secretary-General appealed to both countries to reconsider their positions on the eviction of each other's nationals.

The three-month period under review, which completed the first year of the Mission's operations, had seen the gradual consolidation of progress achieved earlier. For the first time in three years, the armies of Eritrea and Ethiopia had been fully separated and some of their soldiers were beginning to return home. The outstanding issues remained freedom of movement for UNMEE, high-altitude flights between Asmara and Addis Ababa, the unconditional release of prisoners of war, Eritrea's non-acceptance of a SOFA, the presence of landmines and the human rights and humanitarian situations.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 14 September [meeting 4372], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1369 (2001). The draft [S/2001/862] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling resolutions 1298(2000) of 17 May 2000, 1308(2000) of 17 July 2000, 1312(2000) of 31 July 2000, 1320(2000) of 15 September 2000 and 1344(2001) of 15 March 2001, the statements of its President of 9 February 2001 (S/PRST/2001/4) and of 15 May 2001 (S/PRST/2001/14) and all relevant previous resolutions and statements pertaining to the situation between Ethiopia and Eritrea,

Reaffirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Ethiopia and Eritrea,

Further reaffirming the need for both parties to fulfil their obligations under international law, international humanitarian law, human rights law and refugee law, and to ensure the safety of all personnel of the United Nations, the International Committee of the Red Cross and other humanitarian organizations,

Reaffirming its strong support for the Comprehensive Peace Agreement between the Government of the State of Eritrea and the Government of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia, signed in Algiers on 12 December 2000, and the preceding Agreement of Cessation of Hostilities, signed in Algiers on 18 June 2000 (hereafter referred to collectively as the Algiers Agreements),

Further reaffirming its strong support for the help in implementing the Algiers Agreements continuously provided by the Secretary-General and his Special Representative, including through their good offices, and by the Organization of African Unity,

Reaffirming its strong support for the role played by the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea in the implementation of its mandate, as well as by the Organization of African Unity Liaison Mission in Ethiopia-Eritrea,

Welcoming the progress made thus far in implementing the Algiers Agreements, including in the establishment and functioning of the Temporary Security Zone and the constitution of the Boundary and Claims Commissions, respectively,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 5 September 2001,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea at the troop and military observer levels authorized by its resolution 1320(2000) until 15 March 2002;

2. Calls upon the parties to cooperate fully and expeditiously with the Mission in the implementation of its mandate and to abide scrupulously by the letter and spirit of their agreements, including regarding co-operation with the Boundary Commission and facilitation of its work;

3. Emphasizes that the Algiers Agreements link the termination of the Mission with the completion of the work of the Boundary Commission related to delimitation and demarcation of the Ethiopia-Eritrea border;

4. Further emphasizes that the Temporary Security Zone must be completely demilitarized;

5. Calls upon the parties to urgently resolve the outstanding issues in accordance with the Algiers Agreements and fulfil the following obligations:

(a) The parties must provide freedom of movement and access for Mission personnel and its supplies as required for the performance of the Mission's duties; Eritrea must without restrictions allow the Mission to monitor the 15-kilometre area north of the Temporary Security Zone, and Ethiopia must avoid creating restrictions on the freedom of movement of the Mission in the 15-kilometre area south of the Temporary Security Zone;

(b) The parties must facilitate the establishment of a secure and practicable air corridor between Addis Ababa and Asmara, which does not require a detour through other countries, by accepting the proposal made in this regard by the Special Representative of the Secretary General;

(c) Eritrea must provide the Mission with information on the local militia and police inside the Temporary Security Zone, including their weapons, necessary for the mission to verify that the functions and configuration of the militia and police do not exceed that which prevailed before the outbreak of the conflict;

(d) Ethiopia must provide the Mission with full information and maps concerning all minefields so as to facilitate the work of the Mine Action Coordination Centre with a view, inter alia, to allow internally displaced persons to return safely to homes within the Temporary Security Zone;

(e) Eritrea must, without further delay, conclude the status-of-forces agreement with the Secretary-General;

(f) The parties must, unconditionally and without further delay, and in accordance with the 1949 Geneva Conventions, release and return the remaining prisoners of war and detainees under the auspices of the International Committee of the Red Cross;

(g) The parties must fulfil their financial responsibilities regarding the Boundary Commission;

6. Further calls upon the parties, where relevant in cooperation with the Mission, to explore and pursue a range of confidence-building measures, including the following:

(a) Affording humane treatment to each other's nationals and persons of each other's national origin and allowing each other's nationals to remain, without discrimination, in locations where they have decided to settle;

(b) Assisting relevant initiatives and contacts between organizations and groups, including those of the civil society, in the two countries;

(c) Exercising restraint in public statements;

7. Encourages all States and international organizations to support the peace process, including through:

(a) Contributions to the voluntary Trust Fund to Support the Peace Process in Ethiopia and Eritrea to facilitate quick-impact projects for emergency reconstruction and confidence-building measures;

(b) Contributions to the voluntary Trust Fund for the Delimitation and Demarcation of the Border between Ethiopia and Eritrea;

(c) Contributions to the United Nations country teams' consolidated appeals for humanitarian assistance to Eritrea and Ethiopia;

(d) Assistance to facilitate sustainable reintegration of demobilized soldiers, internally displaced persons and refugees;

(e) Assistance in the longer-term tasks of reconstruction and development, and the economic and social recovery of Ethiopia and Eritrea;

(f) Exercising the highest degree of responsibility in discouraging arms flows to the region;

8. Urges the parties to ensure that efforts are redirected from weapons procurement and other military activities towards the reconstruction and development of their economies and encourages both countries to continue and enhance the efforts to improve their relations in order to promote regional peace and security;

9. Expresses its intention to continue to monitor closely progress by the parties in implementing the provisions of the Algiers Agreements and the requirements of the present resolution, and to consider a mission to the two countries before agreeing to a further mandate renewal in order to monitor progress and discuss possible further steps towards reconciliation;

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

The Security Council held private meetings separately with the Foreign Ministers of Eritrea and Ethiopia on 16 November [meetings 4420 & 4421].

Report of Secretary-General (December). On 13 December [S/2001/1194], the Secretary-General submitted his last progress report of the year on Ethiopia and Eritrea. He described the situation as having remained calm and said that both parties had generally respected the Zone, even though Eritrea disputed the southern boundary and therefore considered that the Zone was "not fully established". There were isolated instances of small units or patrols of both parties crossing into the Zone, but they did not have a negative impact on its overall integrity. UNMEE, which had reached a military strength of 4,117, patrolled and observed effectively throughout the Zone, contributing an important element of stability to the situation. However, during the period under review, UNMEE experienced increased restrictions on its freedom of movement in the area north of the Zone, hindering its ability to monitor the Eritrean Defence Forces in their redeployment positions. The Mission refined its monitoring activities to overcome those restrictions. Compounding those problems, a series of allegations in late November contributed to an escalation in tensions. On 14 November, Ethiopian Prime Minister Meles Zenawi, in letters to the Secretary-General and the Security Council, alleged that Eritrea was accelerating the "further militarization" of the Zone and was building up its troops along the border, and claimed that UNMEE might have adopted a "policy of appeasement to secure Eritrea's compliance". Ethiopia, he said, reserved the right of self-defence in the face of what it perceived as a growing threat. President Isaias Afwerki of Eritrea reacted in a letter of 20 November to the Secretary-General, asserting that Ethiopia's allegations were groundless and that its motive was to influence the delimitation process. The Special Representative ordered an investigation of the entire northern boundary and determined that the allegations were unfounded. On 30 November, Prime Minister Zenawi expressed concern to the Secretary-General over Eritrea's non-compliance with the ceasefire, stating that Eritrea continued to violate the Zone and that its troops were present under the guise of police and militia.

Despite repeated requests, Eritrea had not provided UNMEE with the necessary information (strength, disposition and structure before the outbreak of the conflict and currently) on its militia and police deployed inside the Zone, but had offered to provide overall numbers of militia and police against a guarantee of confidentiality, which UNMEE was unable to do given its policy of transparency. UNMEE estimated that there were 6,400 Eritrean militia and 3,000 police currently inside the Zone, and those numbers had remained roughly constant since the Secretary-General's September report. In certain areas, militia and police checkpoints, observation posts and other installations were located close to the southern boundary of the Zone. UNMEE increased the number of its observation posts on the southern boundary.

UNMEE continued to enjoy good access to the positions of the redeployed Ethiopian forces in the area south of the Zone. At the same time, there had been an increase in restrictions on freedom of movement by the Eritrean authorities north of the Zone where Eritrean forces were positioned, in violation of the ceasefire Agreement. After long discussions between UNMEE and the Eritrean authorities, Eritrea began to allow UNMEE to visit locations in the area north of the Zone upon 24 hours' prior notification. No progress was made on establishing a direct high-altitude flight between Asmara and Addis Ababa. Eritrea continued to maintain that UNMEE should fly the most direct route, while Ethiopia insisted that UNMEE should make a brief deviation to steer clear of anti-aircraft installations. At MCC meetings on 29 October (Djibouti) and 28 November (Mereb River Bridge), outstanding issues were discussed but little progress was made.

Minefields continued to be a problem in the Zone and caused the death of six people, mostly civilians, and injured many more. Ethiopia, in October, handed over to the United Nations maps of minefields inside the Zone and in adjacent areas. UNMEE was seeking further details on the types of mines used and more specific information on minefields already cleared by the Ethiopian Armed Forces. Demining operations continued to expand during the reporting period, by UNMEE and a number of other organizations. UNMEE also continued its mine-risk education programmes.

Since the last report, the Boundary Commission's work had proceeded in accordance with the programme adopted soon after its establishment. Information on its activities was contained in an annex to the Secretary-General's report. The demarcation process was expected to be complex, large and costly and required extensive mine clearance, and the Secretary-General appealed for contributions to the UN Trust Fund established for that purpose.

The humanitarian situation throughout the Zone and adjacent areas in Eritrea and Ethiopia remained stable, and many of the internally displaced persons and refugees who had returned were rebuilding their lives. At the time of the report, an estimated 55,000 internally displaced persons remained in nine camps; that figure included 9,300 persons living outside camps. The voluntary repatriation of Eritrean refugees from the Sudan, which was suspended owing to heavy rains, resumed on 20 October. As at the end of November, over 26,700 refugees had returned with UNHCR and Eritrean assistance. UN agencies assisted with the reintegration of returning refugees by providing aid for agricultural, water and sanitation, health, education and community services projects.

Eritrea and Ethiopia both released a number of prisoners of war on health grounds. Since December 2000, a total of 879 Eritrean and 653 Ethiopian prisoners of war had been repatriated under ICRC auspices. ICRC continued to assist the repatriation of persons of Ethiopian descent from Eritrea; since December 2000, 21,255 such persons had been repatriated to Ethiopia. Following the forced repatriation of persons of Eritrean descent by Ethiopia in June, no further such repatriations were reported. UNMEE continued to carry out human rights monitoring activities within the Zone and adjacent areas and investigated some allegations of abductions by militia, police or military personnel. UNMEE's public information component conducted regular press briefings in the capitals of both countries and facilitated access to the Zone for media members. It had not yet gained access to Ethiopian radio for its own broadcasts, and its weekly transmissions on Radio Eritrea were suspended by the Eritrean authorities in October. Radio UNMEE posted its programmes on UN web sites in English and six local languages. The UNMEE HIV/AIDS Task Force continued to pursue its programme, and training of the Mission's military contingents was ongoing.

The Secretary-General observed that the absence of mutual confidence left the relationship between the two countries in a potentially volatile situation. He appealed to Eritrea to cooperate with UNMEE by giving it freedom of movement in the areas north of the Zone and urged both parties to exercise restraint, as recent public allegations of major military preparations and further rhetoric did not help the cause of peace. He called on them to facilitate the establishment of a direct air corridor between the capitals and release all prisoners of war. The Secretary-General again urged Eritrea to conclude a SOFA.

Arms embargo

On 9 January [S/2001/23], Ethiopia protested to the Security Council that the arms embargo the Council had imposed against Ethiopia and Eritrea under resolution 1298(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 170] was unfair because it denied Ethiopia the means to defend itself and hindered the demining effort. On 26 January [S/2001/100], Malta informed the Secretary-General of measures it had taken to implement the arms embargo.

The Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1298 (2000) concerning the situation between Eritrea and Ethiopia, on 16 May [S/2001/503], transmitted the Committee's report describing its activities from 1 January to 16 May, during which time it had held one informal meeting and one formal meeting. On 7 March, the Committee adopted guidelines for conducting its work. In accordance with provisions of resolution 1298(2000), the Committee expected to receive further replies from States concerning measures they had instituted to meet their obligations set out in that resolution. Two replies were received, from France and New Zealand. During the reporting period, the Committee received no reports from international/regional organizations on violations of the established prohibitions. It did, however, receive press reports that a Ukrainian aircraft carrying eight people and 30 tons of rifles and ammunition, originating from the Czech Republic and officially destined for Georgia, had been seized by the Bulgarian authorities at Bourgas Airport after the pilot requested permission to take off for Eritrea. The Committee requested Bulgaria, the Czech Republic, Eritrea, Georgia, Israel and Ukraine to undertake investigations. On 10 May, the Committee received letters from Bulgaria and Ukraine informing it of the current stage of their investigations.

The Committee observed that it did not have any specific monitoring mechanism to ensure the implementation of the arms embargo and relied solely on the cooperation of States and organizations to provide pertinent information.

UNMEE financing

2000-2001 budget

ACABQ report (March). In a March report [A/55/688/Add.1], ACABQ reviewed the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of UNMEE for the period from 31 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 [A/55/666 & Corr.1]. ACABQ had first reviewed the Secretary-General's report in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 179] and had decided to resume consideration in 2001. Having received further information from the Secretariat on the structure of UNMEE and on financial requirements based on revised staffing estimates, ACABQ recommended that the General Assembly approve an appropriation and assessment of $180 million gross for 31 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, inclusive of the commitment authority of $150 million gross approved by the Assembly in resolution 55/237 [YUN 2000, p. 179]. The Committee expected to examine resources for the period 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002 during the autumn of 2001, based on actual experience during the period ending 30 June 2001.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (April)

On 12 April [meeting 98], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/711/Add.1], adopted resolution 55/252 A without vote [agenda item 176].

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1312 (2000) of 31 July 2000, regarding the establishment of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission, the latest of which was its resolution 1344(2001) of 15 March 2001,

Recalling its resolution 55/237 of 23 December 2000 on the financing of the Mission,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such an operation,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea as at 28 February 2001, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 101.9 million United States dollars, representing 92 per cent of the total assessed contributions, notes that some 13 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure the payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

5. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

6. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

7. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

8. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Mission, and for this purpose requests the Secretary-General to speed up the implementation of the asset management system at all peacekeeping missions in accordance with its resolution 52/1 A of 15 October 1997;

9. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at the earliest possible time on how the concept of operations affects and can justify the proposed structure of the Mission, including its senior staff component;

12. Further requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

13. Decides to appropriate the amount of 180 million dollars gross (177,866,900 dollars net) for the operation of the Mission for the period from 31 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, inclusive of the amount of 150 million dollars gross (148,220,200 dollars net) authorized by the General Assembly in its resolution 55/237;

14. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, taking into account the amount of 150 million dollars gross (148,220,200 dollars net) already apportioned under the terms of its resolution 55/237, to apportion the additional amount of 30 million dollars gross (29,646,700 dollars net) for the period from 31 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of its resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by subsequent relevant resolutions and decisions, for the apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations, the latest of which were its resolution 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999 for the period 1998-2000, and its resolutions 55/235 and 55/236 of 23 December 2000 for the period 2001-2003, the scale of assessments for 2000 to be applied against a portion thereof, that is, 13,791,045 dollars gross (13,628,632 dollars net), which is the amount pertaining to the period ending 31 December 2000, and the scale of assessments for 2001 to be applied against the balance, that is, 16,208,955 dollars gross (16,018,068 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 30 June 2001;

15. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973 A (X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 14 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated additional staff assessment income of 353,300 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 31 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, 162,413 dollars being the amount pertaining to the period ending 31 December 2000 and the balance, that is, 190,887 dollars, pertaining to the period from 1 January to 30 June 2001;

16. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

17. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission;

18. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

19. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea".

ACABQ report (April). ACABQ reported in April on financing of the UN peacekeeping operations [A/55/874] (see p. 93). With regard to UNMEE and four other missions, the Secretariat had informed the Committee that, although it was possible to prepare initial maintenance level budgets for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002 for submission to the Assembly during the resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session, the initial budgets would be overtaken by events and would have to be prepared anew, recosted and resubmitted at a later date. The UNMEE budget would be submitted to the Assembly during its fifty-sixth session, later in the year. ACABQ therefore recommended that the Assembly approve bridging action for UNMEE for 1 July to 31 December 2001, based on the authorized budget of $180 million gross ($177,866,900 net) for 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, in the amount of $90 million gross ($88,933,450 net).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On 14 June [meeting 103], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/711/Add.2], adopted resolution 55/252 B without vote [agenda item 176].

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1312 (2000) of 31 July 2000, regarding the establishment of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission, the latest of which was resolution 1344(2001) of 15 March 2001,

Recalling its resolutions 55/237 of 23 December 2000 and 55/252 A of 12 April 2001 on the financing of the Mission,

Reaffirming the general principles underlying the financing of United Nations peacekeeping operations, as stated in General Assembly resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973 and 55/235 of 23 December 2000,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994, in particular those paragraphs regarding the peacekeeping budgetary cycles, which should be adhered to in the future budgeting process, where possible;

2. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea as at 30 April 2001, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 127.8 million United States dollars, representing some 81 per cent of the total assessed contributions, notes that some 10 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

5. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

6. Expresses concern at the delay, in general, experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa, and notes with satisfaction the comments of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in paragraph 24 of its report, regarding the quick and efficient deployment of the military contingents of the Mission;

7. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

8. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

9. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Mission;

10. Endorses the recommendation contained in paragraph 10 (b) of the report of the Advisory Committee;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at the earliest possible time on how the concept of operations affects and can justify the proposed structure of the Mission, including its senior staff component;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

13. Further requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

14. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in the amount of 90 million dollars gross (88,933,450 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July to 31 December

2001, and decides to appropriate the amount of 5,444,104 dollars gross (4,777,737 dollars net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 568,706 dollars gross (510,695 dollars net) for the United Nations Logistics Base, representing the prorated share of the Mission in the support account and Logistics Base requirements for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002;

15. Decides to apportion among Member States the amount of 37.5 million dollars gross (37,055,604 dollars net) for the period from 1 July to 15 September 2001, in accordance with the levels set out in General Assembly resolution 55/235 and adjusted by the Assembly in its resolution 55/236 of 23 December 2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2001, as set out in its resolution 55/5 B of 23 December 2000;

16. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 15 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 444,396 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 July to 15 September 2001;

17. Decides further to apportion among Member States the amount of 52.5 million dollars gross (51,877,846 dollars net) for the period from 16 September to 31 December 2001, at a monthly rate of 15 million dollars gross (14,822,242 dollars net), in accordance with paragraph 15 above, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 15 September 2001;

18. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 17 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 622,154 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 16 September to 31 December 2001;

19. Decides also to apportion among Member States the amount of 5,444,104 dollars gross (4,777,737 dollars net) for the support account and the amount of 568,706 dollars gross (510,695 dollars net) for the United Nations Logistics Base for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, in accordance with paragraph 15 above, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 2001 and 2002, as set out in General Assembly resolution 55/5 B, the scale of assessments for the year 2001 to be applied against a portion thereof, that is, 2,722,052 dollars gross (2,388,869 dollars net) for the support account and 284,353 dollars gross (255,348 dollars net) for the Logistics Base for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001, and the scale of assessments for the year 2002 to be applied against the balance, that is, 2,722,052 dollars gross (2,388,868 dollars net) for the support account and 284,353 dollars gross (255,347 dollars net) for the Logistics Base for the period from 1 January to 30 June 2002;

20. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 19 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 666,367 dollars for the support account and 58,011 dollars for the United Nations Logistics Base approved for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, 333,183 dollars for the support account and 29,005 dollars for the Logistics Base being amounts pertaining to the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001 and the balance, that is, 333,184 dollars for the support account and 29,006 dollars for the Logistics Base, pertaining to the period from 1 January to 30 June 2002;

21. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

22. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission;

23. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

24. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea".

2001-2002 budget

On 8 November, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly the proposed UNMEE budget for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002 [A/56/610], which amounted to $208,879,800 gross ($204,969,700 net). Additionally, non-budgeted voluntary contributions in kind amounted to $200,000. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly approve an appropriation for the proposed budget, assess the additional amount of $14,439,900 gross ($13,551,400 net) for 1 July to 31 December 2001, assess $43,516,625 gross ($42,702,021 net) for 1 January to 15 March 2002, and assess $60,923,275 gross ($59,782,829 net) for 16 March to 30 June 2002, should the Security Council decide to continue the Mission's mandate.

Having reviewed the Secretary-General's proposed budget, ACABQ, on 28 November [A/56/661], taking into consideration the pattern of expenditure for 1 July to 31 December 2001, which showed an unspent balance of $38.6 million, compared with the apportionment of $90 million, recommended that the Assembly approve an appropriation and assessment of $198.4 million gross for 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, inclusive of $90 million gross appropriated and assessed by the Assembly in resolution 55/252 B (above) for 1 July to 31 December 2001.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 December [meeting 92], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/56/714 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 56/250 without vote [agenda item 137].

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1312 (2000) of 31 July 2000, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission, the latest of which was resolution 1369(2001) of 14 September 2001,

Recalling its resolution 55/237 of 23 December 2000 on the financing of the Mission and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 55/252 B of 14 June 2001,

Reaffirming the general principles underlying the financing of United Nations peacekeeping operations, as stated in General Assembly resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973 and 55/235 of 23 December 2000,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea as at 15 November 2001, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 100.3 million United States dollars, representing, regrettably, 36 per cent of the total assessed contributions, notes that some 12 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States that have paid their assessed contributions in full and on time and urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors, that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Also expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

5. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

6. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

7. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi,

Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Mission;

8. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

11. Decides to appropriate the amount of 200,279,308 dollars gross (196,227,505 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the twelve-month period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, inclusive of the amount of 1,879,308 dollars gross (1,737,605 dollars net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations, in addition to the amount of 5,444,104 dollars gross (4,777,737 dollars net) already appropriated for the support account, and the amount of 568,706 dollars gross (510,695 dollars net) already appropriated for the United Nations Logistics Base by the General Assembly in its resolution 55/252 B, and inclusive of the amount of 90 million dollars gross (88,933,450 dollars net) authorized by the Assembly in resolution 55/252 B;

12. Decides also, taking into account the amount of 90 million dollars gross (88,933,450 dollars net) already apportioned for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001 and the amount of 6,012,810 dollars gross (5,288,432 dollars net) already apportioned for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002 in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 55/252 B, to apportion among Member States the amount of 52,412,641 dollars gross (50,567,834 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 2001 to 15 March 2002 in accordance with the levels set out in General Assembly resolution 55/235, as adjusted by its resolution 55/236 of 23 December 2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 2001 and 2002 as set out in its resolution 55/5 B of 23 December 2000, the scale of assessments for the year 2001 to be applied against a portion thereof, that is, 9.2 million dollars gross (8,311,500 dollars net) for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001, and the scale of assessment for the year 2002 to be applied against the balance, that is, 43,212,641 dollars gross (42,256,334 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 15 March 2002;

13. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 12 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,844,807 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 July 2001 to 15 March 2002, 888,500 dollars being the amount pertaining to the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001, and the balance, that is, 956,307 dollars, pertaining to the period from 1 January to 15 March 2002;

14. Decides to apportion among Member States the amount of 57,866,667 dollars gross (56,726,221 dollars

net) for the period from 16 March to 30 June 2002, at a monthly rate of 16,533,333 dollars gross (16,207,492 dollars net) in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2002 as set out in General Assembly resolution 55/5 B, subject to any decision by the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 15 March 2002;

15. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 14 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,140,446 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 16 March to 30 June 2002;

16. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

17. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission;

18. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

19. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea".

Also on 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on UNMEE financing would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464) and that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item at that session (decision 56/458).

Somalia

In 2001, Somalia continued to struggle for national reconciliation and restoration in the wake of the Arta (Djibouti) Peace Conference, which took place in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 215]. The Conference, an initiative of the Government of Djibouti, brought together the Somali factions, with the exception of Puntland and Somaliland, and resulted in the formation of a Transitional National Assembly and the election of President Abdikassim Salad Hassan to head Somalia's Transitional National Government (TNG). President Hassan continued his efforts to bring on board the factions that had remained outside the Arta process, including those that formed the Somali Reconciliation and Restoration Council in March. He was also instrumental in initiating conferences with faction leaders in Kenya, under the auspices of President Daniel arap Moi. In October, the Security Council reiterated its support for the Arta peace process, which, it believed, was the most viable basis for peace and national reconciliation in Somalia.

Having completed a security assessment of Mogadishu, as requested by the Council in January, the Secretary-General was unable to recommend the deployment of a post-conflict peace-building mission in Somalia. However, he did propose that the mandate of the United Nations Political Office for Somalia (UNPOS), with its headquarters in Nairobi, be renewed for the biennium 2002-2003.

The humanitarian situation in Somalia continued to be of concern, due to poor harvests and internal conflict. Despite efforts by the United Nations and other humanitarian and development agencies, the unfavourable security conditions prevented assistance from reaching the needy on a continuous and unimpeded basis. In December, the General Assembly, in resolution 56/106, called on the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize international humanitarian, rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance for Somalia (see p. 834).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 11 January [meeting 4254], the Security Council held a private meeting to consider the Secretary-General's 19 December 2000 report on the situation in Somalia [YUN 2000, p. 217]. It also heard a briefing by the Prime Minister of the Transitional Government of Somalia, Ali Khalif Galaydh. The Prime Minister responded to questions posed by Council members.

On the same day [meeting 4255], following consultations among Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/1 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council notes with appreciation the Secretary-General's report of 19 December 2000 on the situation in Somalia and reaffirms its commitment to a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the situation in Somalia, consistent with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, bearing in mind respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of Somalia.

The Council welcomes and supports the outcome of the Arta peace conference, the establishment of the Transitional National Assembly and the Transitional National Government. It expresses gratitude for the efforts undertaken by the Government and people of Djibouti in convening the peace conference. Furthermore, it recognizes with appreciation the impetus provided to the process by the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, including the mandate extended by the ministerial meeting in Djibouti in March 2000.

The Council further welcomes the efforts of the Transitional National Government to promote reconciliation within Somalia. It strongly urges all political groups in the country, in particular those which have remained outside the Arta peace process, to engage in peaceful and constructive dialogue with the Transitional National Government in order to promote national reconciliation and facilitate the democratic elections scheduled for 2003 as called for in the Transitional National Charter. It further calls upon all groups, in particular armed movements, to support and participate in the demobilization efforts undertaken by the Transitional National Government. It encourages the Transitional National Government to continue, in a spirit of constructive dialogue, the process of engaging all groups in the country, including in the north-eastern and north-western areas, with the view to preparing for the installation of permanent governance arrangements through the democratic process.

The Council underlines the massive challenges facing Somalia with respect to reconstruction and development, and the immediate need for urgent assistance, particularly in the areas of demobilization (with special attention to measures to combat HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases), disarmament and rehabilitation of basic infrastructure. It calls upon the United Nations, its Member States and specialized agencies, non-governmental organizations as well as the Bretton Woods institutions to assist in addressing these challenges.

The Council, emphasizing the importance of respect for human rights and international humanitarian law, notes with concern that the humanitarian and security situation remains fragile in several parts of Somalia, including Mogadishu. It strongly condemns attacks by armed groups on civilians and humanitarian personnel and calls upon all Somalis to respect fully the security and safety of personnel of the United Nations and its specialized agencies, the International Committee of the Red Cross and of non-governmental organizations, and to guarantee their complete freedom of movement and safe access throughout Somalia.

The Council reiterates to all States their obligation to comply with the measures imposed by resolution 733(1992) of 23 January 1992 and urges each State to take the necessary steps to ensure full implementation and enforcement of the arms embargo. It strongly condemns the illegal supply of weapons to recipients in Somalia. It reiterates its call upon all States, the United Nations and other international organizations and entities to report to the Committee established by resolution 751(1992) of 24 April 1992 information on possible violations of the arms embargo.

The Council insists that all States should refrain from any military intervention in the internal situation in Somalia and that the territory of Somalia should not be used to undermine the stability in the subregion.

The Council welcomes the Secretary-General's intention to put in place a trust fund for peace-building in Somalia. It notes that despite the recent positive developments in Somalia, the security situation in the country is still a cause for serious concern. The Council therefore invites the Secretary-General to prepare a proposal for a peace-building mission for Somalia. Such a proposal should, with specific attention to the security situation in the country, outline possible ways to advance the peace process further.

The Council remains seized of the matter.

Communications. On 8 January [S/2001/19], Ethiopia informed the Security Council of its concern regarding the situation in Somalia. As a country sharing a 2,000-kilometre border with Somalia and a haven for tens of thousands of Somali refugees, Ethiopia would be the second greatest beneficiary from a stable and peaceful Somalia. It would be a tragedy if an effort was not made to build on the momentum for peace and national reconciliation created at the Arta Peace Conference. On 10 January [S/2001/27], Ethiopia referred to an 8 January British Broadcasting Corporation report that Somalia's Prime Minister had criticized Ethiopia for interfering in the affairs of Somalia. It observed that there was real hope for peace in Somalia but only if TNG ceased trying to create artificial enemies.

In a 21 March letter to the Security Council President [S/2001/263], Somalia's Prime Minister described some actions taken to engage the factions that were not part of the Arta Conference. He also listed activities by Ethiopia that he viewed as interferences in Somalia's internal affairs and as posing a threat to Somalia's unity, territorial integrity and political independence.

In a 4 April response [S/2001/325], Ethiopia rejected Somalia's portrayal of it as a State bent on "destabilizing" Somalia and stated that its spirit of goodwill towards Somalia would continue.

On 10 August [S/2001/792], the EU Presidency expressed concern about the recent outbreak of conflict in Mogadishu and other parts of Somalia. It welcomed the creation of the National Commission for Reconciliation and Property Settlement (NCRPS) and drew the attention of all parties involved to the need for guaranteed safety of all humanitarian agencies and their personnel operating in Somalia.

Report of Secretary-General (October). In an 11 October report [S/2001/963], submitted in response to a request contained in Security Council presidential statement S/PRST/1999/16 [YUN 1999, p. 171], the Secretary-General described events in Somalia since his December 2000 report [YUN 2000, p. 217].

TNG, led by President Hassan, appointed a 25-member NCRPS, and the Transitional National Assembly approved a Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. It also succeeded in bringing on board two of the five faction leaders in Mogadishu who had originally opposed the Arta peace process. Although TNG negotiated with the militias holding the Mogadishu seaport in early 2001, it remained closed because some faction leaders would not agree to its reopening. TNG also sent delegations to various parts of Somalia for talks with clan leaders; while they met with some success in the Hiran region, they were ambushed by opposition militia in Gedo and Bakool. TNG claimed that the attacks were carried out with Ethiopia's backing, allegations that Ethiopia denied. On 18 June, the Chairman of the Lower Juba Alliance announced the formation of an 11-member inter-clan council which allied itself with TNG. However, several faction leaders who attended the Arta Conference subsequently joined those opposed to TNG. The Mogadishu faction leaders and the others hostile to the Arta peace process announced on 23 March the formation of the Somali Reconciliation and Restoration Council, which aimed to hold an all-inclusive national reconciliation conference, within six months, to form a representative Transitional Government of National Unity. That conference was postponed until 2002.

On 17 April, the Djibouti Government closed its border with "Somaliland", which claimed to have separated from the rest of Somalia, following its administration's destruction of a consignment of cigarettes allegedly belonging to a Djibouti businessman. Since then there had been no air, land or sea communications between Djibouti and Somaliland, despite an attempt by Mohamed Ibrahim Egal, Somaliland's leader, to improve relations. On 31 May, the Somaliland administration carried out a referendum on a new constitution, the first article of which asserted the region's independence. Officials claimed that 97 per cent of 1.3 million voters endorsed the new constitution. Mr. Egal then called on the international community to recognize Somaliland. The "Puntland" administration and TNG opposed the referendum, citing the 1960 Act of Union. In July, Mr. Egal announced the formation of a new political party, the Allied People's Democratic Party (UDUB), in preparation for parliamentary and presidential elections in 2002. Elders remained divided on UDUB's constitutionality.

The "Puntland" administration's mandate expired on 30 June. The administration, headed by Colonel Abdullahi Yusuf, rather than undertake presidential and parliamentary elections as stipulated in the 1998 Transitional Charter of Puntland, requested and received a three-year extension from the House of Representatives. The Chairman of the Supreme Court declared the extension unconstitutional and, as provided for in the Charter, assumed office as the legal interim President of Puntland. That decision was upheld by a meeting of elders despite Colonel Yusuf's attempt to unseat the Chairman by suspending him from the Supreme Court. The interim President organized a conference (Garowe, 26 August) to set the future course of Puntland. Meanwhile, Colonel Yusuf announced on 12 August that he was still President of Puntland and declared the Garowe conference to be illegal.

Regional and other peace initiatives on Somalia included a call by the summit meeting of the League of Arab States (Amman, Jordan, 26-27 March) for funding of $54 million for the absorption and resettlement of militias and the restoration of State institutions. In early April, President Omar Hassan al-Bashir of the Sudan, as Chairman of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD), appointed a Special Envoy for Somalia, renewing expectations that the IGAD mechanism for the peace process in Somalia would be put in place. The OAU Secretary-General, following OAU's thirty-seventh summit (Lusaka, Zambia, 2-7 July), announced his intention to field a mission to consult with all parties to the conflict. While attending that summit, the UN Secretary-General took the opportunity to meet President Hassan and encouraged him to make further efforts towards the completion of the Arta process. The Secretary-General's Representative continued to meet with all parties in Somalia and with regional actors.

Economic and social systems sustaining lives and livelihoods in Somalia continued to be disrupted by more than a decade of conflict, exacerbated by recurrent drought and flooding. UN agencies adopted a four-part humanitarian and development strategy, the accomplishment of which, the Secretary-General stated, was possible only if adequate financial and material resources were available. To support the humanitarian, recovery and development activities, the consolidated inter-agency appeal for 2001, requesting $129.6 million, was launched (see p. 834).

The security situation in Somalia remained tenuous and included a militia attack on the Spanish Médecins sans frontières (MSF-Spain) compound that resulted in the abduction of six UN staff and the MSF-Spain workers, who were later released. Numerous clashes took place between militias, and fighting in Puntland and Somaliland resulted in the temporary suspension of UN activities in those regions. The United Nations conducted two more security assessments in Mogadishu in August and September, which showed that the situation had improved somewhat and that there were fewer weapons in the streets. However, the Secretary-General concluded that the security situation did not make it possible to deploy a post-conflict peace-building mission in Somalia at that time. He recommended that the mandate of UNPOS be extended for a further two years (2002-2003) (see p. 212). The Secretary-General stated his intention to consult all concerned on the feasibility and usefulness of setting up a Committee of Friends of Somalia to focus on ways and means of drawing attention to Somalia's needs and to help mobilize funds.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 31 October [meeting 4401], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/30 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council, having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 11 October 2001 and having held a public meeting on 19 October 2001 (S/PV.4392 and S/PV.4392 resumption 1), reaffirms its commitment to a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the situation in Somalia, consistent with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and bearing in mind its respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of Somalia.

The Council reiterates its support for the outcome of the Arta peace conference, the establishment of the Transitional National Assembly and the Transitional National Government. It encourages the Transitional National Government to continue, in the spirit of constructive dialogue, the process of engaging all groups in the country, including in the north-eastern and north-western areas, with the view to preparing for the installation of permanent governance arrangements through the democratic process.

The Council believes that the Arta peace process continues to be the most viable basis for peace and national reconciliation in Somalia. It urges the Transitional National Government, political and traditional leaders and factions in Somalia to make every effort to complete, without preconditions, the peace and reconciliation process through dialogue and involvement of all parties in a spirit of mutual accommodation and tolerance. It calls on all parties to refrain from actions that undermine the Arta peace process. The Council emphasizes that while the search for a national solution continues, unwavering attention must be paid to achieving local political settlements as well.

The Council expresses its support for the Transitional National Government's ongoing efforts to enhance security in the Mogadishu area and to make operational the National Commission for Reconciliation and Property Settlement, which should be independent, as foreseen in the Transitional National Charter. The Council emphasizes the necessity for efforts against international terrorism in accordance with resolution 1373(2001) of 28 September 2001 and welcomes the stated intention of the Transitional National Government to take steps in this regard. The Council urges the international community, including through the Counterterrorism Committee established pursuant to resolution 1373(2001), to provide assistance to Somalia for the implementation of the aforementioned resolution.

The Council calls on the concerned States in the Horn of Africa to contribute constructively to the peace efforts in Somalia. It emphasizes that the situation in Somalia and the objective of long-term regional stability can most effectively be addressed if neighbouring States play a positive role, including in the process of rebuilding national institutions in Somalia.

The Council acknowledges Djibouti's major contribution to the Arta peace process and welcomes its continued role in this regard. It encourages the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, the Organization of African Unity/African Union and the League of Arab States to enhance their efforts to promote peace in Somalia.

The Council calls on all States and other actors to comply scrupulously with the arms embargo established by resolution 733(1992) of 23 January 1992. The Council insists that all States, in particular those of the region, should not interfere in the internal affairs of Somalia. Such interference could jeopardize the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of Somalia.

The Council insists that the territory of Somalia should not be used to undermine stability in the sub-region.

The Council strongly condemns the attack on 13 October 2001 on a police station in Mogadishu, in which a number of officers and civilians were killed. It reiterates its condemnation of the attack on 27 March 2001 on the compound of Médecins sans Frontières in Mogadishu and the subsequent abduction of international personnel, and demands that those responsible must be brought to justice. The Council notes that these attacks were launched at the same time as the consideration of a possible United Nations peace-building mission for Somalia.

The Council emphasizes that no measure of violence can alleviate the plight of the Somali people nor bring stability, peace or security to their country. It calls for an immediate end to all acts of violence in Somalia. Deliberate acts of violence should not be allowed to prevent the rehabilitation of Somalia's governing structures and the restoration of the rule of law throughout the country. In this context, the Council condemns the leaders of those armed factions who remain outside the peace process and continue to be obstacles to peace and stability in Somalia.

The Council expresses concern about the humanitarian situation in Somalia, in particular in southern areas, and in the Bay, Bakool, Gedo and Hiran regions due to the expected food insecurity and lack of rainfall in the October-December period. It draws attention to the urgent need for international assistance, inter alia, in covering food and water shortfalls, thereby also combating potentially further destabilizing stress migration and prevalence of disease. Noting that problems in livestock exports have also been a major influence in worsening the economic and humanitarian situation, the Council calls on all States and on all authorities within Somalia to co-operate in efforts to allow the resumption of such exports.

The Council notes with satisfaction that the United Nations, the Red Cross movement and non-governmental organizations continue to provide humanitarian and development assistance to all areas of Somalia. The Council calls upon all parties in Somalia to respect fully the security and safety of personnel of the United Nations, the International Committee of the Red Cross and non-governmental organizations, and to guarantee their complete freedom of movement and access throughout Somalia. The Council calls on Member States to respond urgently and generously to the United Nations consolidated inter-agency appeal for 2001, for which only 16 per cent of the identified needs have been financially provided thus far.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to take the following steps in support of the peace process in Somalia:

(i) Dispatch a headquarters-led inter-agency mission to carry out a comprehensive assessment, based on the existing general United Nations standards, of the security situation in Somalia, including in Mogadishu;

(ii) Prepare proposals for how the United Nations may further assist in the demobilization of militia members, and the training of police personnel from the Transitional National Government;

(iii) Invite donors to make contributions to the trust fund for peace-building in Somalia, to be put in place as proposed in the 19 December 2000 report of the Secretary-General, with a view to facilitate targeted activities in line with proposals developed pursuant to paragraph (ii) above;

(iv) Consider the scope for adjustments, as appropriate, to the mandate for the United Nations Political Office for Somalia;

(v) Consult all concerned on finding practical and constructive ways of achieving the following objectives:

(a) Promoting coherency of policy approaches towards Somalia and consolidating support for peace and reconciliation in the country;

(b) Facilitating exchange of information; and

(c) Finding ways and means of drawing attention to Somalia's needs related to national reconciliation and development.

The effort to achieve the objectives stated in subparagraphs (a), (b) and (c) above should have a focus in the region and include close interaction with the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and its Partners Forum, the Organization of African Unity/African Union, the League of Arab States and the Security Council;

(vi) Intensify, through urgent contacts with donor countries and relevant non-governmental organizations, the efforts for humanitarian and development assistance in Somalia; and

(vii) Submit reports, at least every four months, on the situation in Somalia and the efforts to promote the peace process, including updates on the scope and contingency planning for launching a peace-building mission for Somalia. The next report, due on 31 January 2002, should provide an update on the activities undertaken pursuant to paragraphs (i) to (vi) above.

The Council remains seized of the matter.

Communication. On 6 November [S/2001/1063], Somalia transmitted to the Security Council President the communiqué that was issued following the Somalia Reconciliation Meeting (Nairobi, 1-4 November), which was attended by TNG and the Somali Reconciliation and Restoration Council. The two parties adopted an agenda as the basis for future deliberations.

Later developments. In a later report that covered developments in Somalia towards the end of 2001 [S/2002/189], the Secretary-General stated that, on 12 October, the Transitional National Assembly put forward a motion of no-confidence in TNG, accusing it of failing to move the national reconciliation process forward. The motion passed on 28 October and, on 12 November, Hassan Abshir Farah was named the new Prime Minister. With regard to the political crisis in "Puntland", the protracted Garowe conference of elders finally elected Jama Ali Jama as the new President of the "Puntland State of Somalia" on 14 November. Colonel Yusuf rejected the outcome and returned with his forces to Garowe. Mr. Jama retreated to Bosasso claiming that Ethiopian troops had crossed into Somalia in support of Colonel Yusuf, an allegation that Ethiopia dismissed as baseless.

As to the situation in "Somaliland", Mr. Egal continued to state that he was not interested in participating in any reconciliation talks on Somalia. His administration had attempted to institute a multiparty system, as opposed to governance under the guidance of the traditional council of elders, an effort that was being resisted. Seven registered political organizations were expected to compete in municipal elections, which were to have been held on 20 December following the passing of an electoral law on 17 November. However, the elections were postponed, and Mr. Egal was given a one-year extension by the upper house of the "Somaliland Parliament".

President Moi of Kenya convened two rounds of meetings (Nairobi, 1-4 November and 13-24 December) between TNG and some factions outside the Arta process. Agreements signed in December called for an all-inclusive government to be formed. As a result, TNG proposed to the Transitional National Assembly that the number of cabinet members and parliamentarians be increased to facilitate a broader-based government, and the Kenyan authorities announced their intention to establish an international secretariat on Somalia.

Following the Joint IGAD Partners Forum (Addis Ababa, 20 November), the Special Envoy of the President of the Sudan on Somalia led a joint IGAD mission to Somalia and Addis Ababa (20-31 December). Its recommendations included a call for a national reconciliation conference.

In the wake of the 11 September terrorist attacks in the United States, the United States President signed an executive order on 23 September blocking the assets of organizations and individuals linked to terrorism, including Al-Itihaad al-Islamiya, a Somali organization. The list was further expanded to include a number of Somali individuals and Al-Barakaat Group of Companies Somalia, Ltd. On 31 October, President Hassan met with the Secretary-General's Representative for Somalia and denied any linkage between his administration and Al-Itihaad al-Islamiya. When the United States Treasury shut down the Al-Barakaat Group offices in the United States, on 7 November, claiming the Group to be a principal source of funding for Osama bin Laden, President Hassan set up a commission to look into the Group's records.

UNPOS

On 16 November [S/2001/1097], the Secretary-General proposed to the Security Council that the mandate for UNPOS, established in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 400], be renewed for the biennium 2002-2003, pending an improvement in the security situation that would allow him to submit a proposal for a peace-building office in Somalia.

On 21 November [S/2001/1098], the Council President informed the Secretary-General that his decision concerning UNPOS had been noted by the Council.

Arms embargo

The Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 751(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 202] concerning Somalia continued throughout 2001 to monitor the arms embargo against Somalia imposed by resolution 733(1992) [ibid., p. 199]. In June, the Council decided that the embargo would not apply to non-lethal military equipment intended solely for humanitarian or protective use.

In a 6 June note [S/2001/564], the Council President announced the election of Noureddine Mejdoub (Tunisia) as Chairman of the Committee, with Jamaica and Norway as Vice-Chairmen. Their terms were to end on 31 December 2001.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 June [meeting 4332], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1356(2001). The draft [S/2001/589] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 733(1992) of 23 January 1992 and 751(1992) of 24 April 1992,

Expressing its desire to see peace and security return to Somalia,

Recognizing the ongoing efforts of the United Nations, its specialized agencies and humanitarian organizations to deliver humanitarian assistance to Somalia,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Reiterates to all States their obligation to comply with the measures imposed by resolution 733(1992), and urges each State to take the necessary steps to ensure full implementation and enforcement of the arms embargo;

2. Decides that the measures imposed by paragraph 5 of resolution 733(1992) shall not apply to protective clothing, including flak jackets and military helmets, temporarily exported to Somalia by United Nations personnel, representatives of the media and humanitarian and development workers and associated personnel for their personal use only;

3. Decides also that the measures imposed by paragraph 5 of resolution 733(1992) shall not apply to supplies of non-lethal military equipment intended solely for humanitarian or protective use, as approved in advance by the Committee established pursuant to resolution 751(1992) (the Committee);

4. Requests the Committee to give consideration to and decide upon requests for the exemptions set out in paragraph 3 above;

5. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council Committee. On 21 December, the Chairman of the Security Council Committee concerning Somalia submitted to the Council a report covering its activities in 2001 [S/2001/1259]. Following the adoption of Council resolution 1356(2001), the Committee approved draft new consolidated guidelines for the conduct of its work. On 20 July, the Committee approved a United Kingdom request to export specialized demining equipment to Somalia. The Committee reiterated that, in the absence of a specific monitoring mechanism to ensure the effective implementation of the arms embargo, it relied solely on the cooperation of States and organizations in a position to provide information on violations of the embargo.

UNOSOM II financing

The United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM), established by Security Council resolution 751(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 202], was withdrawn from Somalia in March 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 400].

On 7 September, the General Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Operation in Somalia II" (decision 55/496).

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the item would remain for consideration at its resumed (2002) fifty-sixth session (decision 56/464) and that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item at that session (decision 56/458).

Western Sahara

In 2001, the United Nations considered new alternatives to holding a referendum for the people of Western Sahara, a Non-Self-Governing Territory, to choose between independence or integration with Morocco, as outlined in the 1990 settlement plan. That plan, approved by Security Council resolution 658(1990) [YUN 1990, p. 920], outlined terms for a referendum and was agreed to by Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO). Progress on its implementation over the following decade had been slow, despite the continuous efforts of the United Nations. The United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO), established by Council resolution 690(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 794] to implement the plan, continued to monitor the 1991 ceasefire between Morocco and POLISARIO [ibid., p. 796] and to report on developments.

Tension in Western Sahara mounted in the early months of the year when POLISARIO restricted the movement of MINURSO patrols in western areas of the Territory.

In May, the Secretary-General's Personal Envoy, James A. Baker III (United States), proposed a draft framework agreement on the status of Western Sahara, by which the population of Western Sahara, through their executive, legislative and judicial bodies, would have competence over local issues while Morocco would be responsible for foreign relations, national security and defence. The executive powers would be held by an Executive, elected by a vote of those identified by the MINURSO Identification Commission, and an Assembly. Morocco indicated its support for the plan, while POLISARIO objected to it on the grounds that it provided for the integration of Western Sahara into Morocco. Algeria also protested that it would confirm the illegal occupation of the Territory by Morocco and would violate the right of the Saharan people to self-determination.

The Identification Commission continued its work on establishing a list of voters by considering appeals following the issuance in 1999 and 2000 of provisional parts of the list.

On 29 June, the Council extended MINURSO's mandate until 30 November in order to allow the Secretary-General's Personal Envoy to meet with Morocco, POLISARIO, Algeria and Mauritania to discuss the proposed draft framework agreement. On 27 November, MINURSO's mandate was extended until 28 February 2002 to allow the Personal Envoy more time for those consultations.

Report of Secretary-General (February). The Secretary-General, in response to Security Council resolution 1324(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 227], on 20 February submitted a report on the situation concerning Western Sahara [S/2001/48], which covered developments since his previous report of 25 October 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 225]. He observed that the reporting period was marked by a deterioration in relations between the two parties and there was no progress in implementing the settlement plan.

The crossing, in early January, of the Paris-Dakar car rally into Western Sahara contributed to an increase in tensions. On previous occasions, the rally had crossed Western Sahara with prior consultations by the organizers with the two parties. For the 2001 crossing, however, only Morocco was contacted for permission. In a communiqué of 22 December 2000, POLISARIO indicated that the passage of the rally would constitute a violation of the ceasefire and that it would resume military activities. Morocco responded with an equally strong statement. As the rally date neared, MINURSO reported a partial mobilization and military movements by POLISARIO. In a 5 January statement, the Secretary-General's Special Representative, William Eagleton (United States), emphasized that any military action by either party would constitute a violation of the ceasefire. On 7 January, the rally crossed into the Territory and POLISARIO stated that the event was a breach of the ceasefire, for which it held Morocco responsible, but it would suspend its decision regarding the resumption of military activities. While no action was taken, the event increased animosity between the parties and raised tensions in the area.

The Identification Commission continued its work on establishing a list of voters, specifically on consolidation of files and data quality control, with particular attention to preparations for the technical review of the appeals admissibility and for appeal hearings on substance. The Commission had received a total of 131,038 appeals, following the issuance of the first part of the provisional voter list in July 1999 (containing the names of 84,251 applicants identified as eligible to vote, out of 144,369 interviewed by the Commission) and of the second part of the list in January 2000 (containing the names of 2,161 eligible applicants, out of 51,220 interviewed). The overwhelming majority of the appeals filed (115,645) was against exclusion from the provisional voter list, with most of the appeals (108,708) falling under the article of the Appeals Procedures dealing with applicants rejected by the Identification Commission who were bringing new evidence. Most of those appellants had listed one or two witnesses to support their claims, with only limited documentary evidence, especially regarding appellants from tribal groupings H41, H61 and J51/52. The remaining appeals were based on claims that the Commission failed to convoke or to identify them (1,260), that they were blocked by force majeure (5,079), or that they were not identified although they were on the 1991 revised census list (643). Another category of appellants included those who were contesting the inclusion of other persons on the provisional voter list (15,393). Regarding potential additional appellants, Morocco estimated that those who reached 18 years of age after 31 December 1993 might number about 30,000, while POLISARIO estimated that number at 11,000, including 5,000 in Tindouf, Algeria.

As at 16 February, the strength of MINURSO's military component stood at 230 military personnel. It continued to monitor the 1991 ceasefire between the Royal Moroccan Army and POLISARIO military units and to implement the military agreements between MINURSO and the two parties on the marking and disposal of mines and unexploded ordnance, and the exchange of related information, until December 2000. On 31 December, POLISARIO liaison officers advised MINURSO that it would not be allowed within 800 metres of POLISARIO unit locations. On 17 January, POLISARIO announced restrictions on the movement of MINURSO air and ground reconnaissance patrols and, since 3 January, all POLISARIO units had deployed outside their confinement locations without prior notification to MINURSO. Both decisions were in violation of the military agreements between MINURSO and the two parties. On 6 January, POLISARIO protested to MINURSO that a Royal Moroccan Army unit had entered the buffer zone (a 5-kilometre strip from the berm), thus violating the military agreements pertaining to the ceasefire. Morocco rejected the allegation. The MINURSO civilian police component, at a strength of 47 officers, protected files and other materials at the Identification Commission centres at Laayoune and Tindouf.

The Secretary-General regretted that he could not report any progress in implementing the settlement plan or towards determining whether Morocco, as administering Power, was prepared to support some devolution of authority for all inhabitants and former inhabitants of Western Sahara. On the advice of his Personal Envoy, the Secretary-General recommended that the MINURSO mandate be extended for two months, until 30 April 2001, to see whether Morocco was prepared to support some devolution of authority. Failing such support, MINURSO would be directed to begin hearing the pending appeals from the identification process on an expedited basis. The Personal Envoy also advised the Secretary-General that that was the last request he would support for a mandate extension to provide extra time for Morocco to decide on devolution of authority.

Communications (February/March). In a 21 February letter to the Security Council President [S/2001/155], Algeria said that since there had not been any progress in the quest for a mutually acceptable political solution, MINURSO should begin hearing the pending appeals from the identification process, thereby resuming the implementation of the settlement plan. Algeria believed that the question of the appeals should and could be settled if the United Nations decided to mobilize the necessary resources, thereby enabling the holding of a referendum.

Morocco, on 27 February [S/2001/178], said that since the beginning of the referendum process, the adversaries of Morocco's territorial integrity had waged a campaign against the identification of Saharans who were not in the Territory at the time of the 1974 Spanish census, though they were aware that many were in northern Morocco, Mauritania and other places. However, it was unrealistic to attempt to reduce to the appeals process alone the many problems that had hampered the implementation of the settlement plan.

Cuba, in its capacity as Chairman of the Group of Latin American and Caribbean States, on 30 March [A/55/867-S/2001/308], commenting on Western Sahara, reaffirmed that the settlement plan, including the holding of a referendum, was the only choice accepted by both parties to ensure the right to self-determination and achieve a just and lasting peace.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

On 27 February [meeting 4284], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1342 (2001). The draft [S/2001/165] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its previous resolutions on Western Sahara, in particular resolutions 1108(1997) of 22 May 1997, 1292(2000) of 29 February 2000, 1301(2000) of 31 May 2000, 1309(2000) of 25 July 2000 and 1324(2000) of 30 October 2000, and also its resolution 1308(2000) of 17 July 2000,

Recalling the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 20 February 2001 and the observations and recommendations contained therein, and expressing full support for the role and work of the Personal Envoy,

Reiterating full support for the continued efforts exerted by the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara to implement the settlement plan and agreements adopted by the parties to hold a free, fair and impartial referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara,

Noting that fundamental differences between the parties over the interpretation of the main provisions of the settlement plan remain to be resolved,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 30 April 2001, with the expectation that the parties, under the auspices of the Personal Envoy of the Secretary-General, will continue to try to resolve the multiple problems relating to the implementation of the settlement plan and try to agree upon a mutually acceptable political solution to their dispute over Western Sahara;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide an assessment of the situation before the end of the present mandate;

3. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (April). In response to Council resolution 1342(2001), the Secretary-General submitted a 24 April report on the situation concerning Western Sahara [S/2001/398]. During the period since his February report, the Secretary-General's Personal Envoy consulted with the two parties and other interested parties and his Special Representative also pursued consultations.

Following the passage of the Paris-Dakar car rally, tensions remained high and the integrity of the ceasefire was called into question by unmonitored deployment of POLISARIO forces and their restrictions on the movement of MINURSO military observers. MINURSO ground patrols continued to be restricted to areas not closer than 800 metres to POLISARIO combat units and observation posts, and its air reconnaissance was limited to the 30-kilometre area immediately east of the berm. On 15 March, Moroccan military authorities informed MINURSO of plans to begin construction of an asphalt road in the south-west corner of the Territory, across the 5-kilometre buffer strip and into Mauritania near Nouadhibou. On the same day, the Royal Moroccan Army deployed troops in the Guerguerat area, allegedly to provide security for contractors working on the road. The Special Representative and the Force Commander warned Morocco that the proposed road building could be in violation of the ceasefire agreement. At the time of the report, there was no evidence of road construction.

The Identification Commission completed the consolidation and quality control of the files received during the second round of appeals and corrected some minor errors on the provisional voter list. The first draft of a manual on hearings on the substance was produced, and its usefulness and practicability tested in simulation sessions with actual appeal files.

UNHCR continued to carry out its responsibilities for the Saharan refugees in the four Tindouf camps in Algeria, monitoring their welfare and coordinating activities with the host Government and implementing partners. It held a meeting on 22 February with the World Food Programme and the European Community Humanitarian Office in Geneva on redressing the basic food situation in the camps. UNHCR held a workshop in Algiers from 1 to 4 April to discuss its 2001 and 2002 implementation and operations plan with the host Government, NGO partners, donor countries, UN agencies and refugees.

The Secretary-General saw no progress towards overcoming the obstacles to implementation of the settlement plan during the reporting period. However, he believed that substantial progress had been made towards determining whether Morocco, as the administering Power in Western Sahara, was prepared to offer or support some devolution of authority for all the inhabitants and former inhabitants of the Territory. Because of that progress, his Personal Envoy recommended that MINURSO's mandate be extended for two months, until 30 June, to provide time to consult further with the parties concerning both a possible devolution of authority and a possible solution to implementation of the settlement plan. The Secretary-General shared those views.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 27 April [meeting 4315], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1349(2001). The draft [S/2001/413] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its previous resolutions on Western Sahara, in particular resolutions 1108(1997) of 22 May 1997, 1292(2000) of 29 February 2000, 1301(2000) of 31 May 2000, 1309(2000) of 25 July 2000, 1324(2000) of 30 October 2000 and 1342(2001) of 27 February 2001, and also its resolution 1308(2000) of 17 July 2000,

Recalling the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 24 April 2001 and the observations and recommendations contained therein, and expressing full support for the role and work of the Personal Envoy,

Reiterating full support for the continued efforts exerted by the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara to implement the settlement plan and agreements adopted by the parties to hold a free, fair and impartial referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara,

Noting that fundamental differences between the parties over the interpretation of the main provisions of the settlement plan remain to be resolved,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 30 June 2001, with the expectation that the parties, under the auspices of the Personal Envoy of the Secretary-General, will continue to try to resolve the multiple problems relating to the implementation of the settlement plan and try to agree upon a mutually acceptable political solution to their dispute over Western Sahara;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide an assessment of the situation before the end of the present mandate;

3. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (June). On 20 June [S/2001/613], the Secretary-General described developments in Western Sahara since his April report. During that period, his Personal Envoy met with officials of Morocco to determine if it was prepared to offer or support some devolution of authority for all inhabitants and former inhabitants. He also met with President Abdelaziz Bouteflika and other Algerian officials to present a draft "Framework agreement on the status of Western Sahara", which was annexed to the Secretary-General's report. The draft stated that the population of Western Sahara, through their executive, legislative and judicial bodies, would have exclusive competence over internal issues, while Morocco would have exclusive competence over external matters, such as foreign relations, national security, defence, weapons and the preservation of territorial integrity. The flag, currency, customs, postal and telecommunication systems of Morocco would be the same for Western Sahara. The executive authority would be vested in an Executive, who would be elected by individuals identified by the Identification Commission as qualified, for a term of four years, and thereafter by majority vote of the Assembly. Assembly members would be directly elected for terms of four years. Judges would be from Western Sahara. All laws and court decisions would comply with the Moroccan constitution. Within five years, a referendum on the final status of the Territory would be held.

On 22 May, President Bouteflika transmitted Algeria's comments on the proposed agreement, which were also annexed to the Secretary-General's report. In Algeria's view, the proposal presented certain weaknesses and imbalances. The UN Secretariat, in a statement annexed to the report, analysed Algeria's remarks. The Algerian memorandum made three points: that the proposed agreement favoured and prepared the ground for eventual integration of Western Sahara with Morocco; that the framework went against the principle of self-determination; and that the Personal Envoy was not following his mandate but was focusing instead solely on a political solution.

The Personal Envoy met with the POLISARIO Secretary-General, Mohamed Abdelaziz, and other members of his party in Tindouf to review the proposed agreement. Mr. Abdelaziz stated that anything other than independence meant integration with Morocco and that he would not discuss the proposal. In a letter of 28 May to the Personal Envoy, also annexed to the Secretary-General's report, he offered some proposals to overcome obstacles preventing the implementation of the settlement plan, dealing with the appeals issue, the repatriation of refugees, respect for the outcome of the referendum, humanitarian issues and confidence-building measures, and post-referendum guarantees. The UN Secretariat analysed the proposals in comments annexed to the Secretary-General's report, stating that they raised three kinds of difficulties: some proposals, while offering concessions, attached conditions; other proposals would require action by the Security Council; and others would require clarification. Overall, some of them sought to provide technical solutions, but they did not address the main problem with the implementation of the settlement plan as a whole, namely the inability of the United Nations to implement any measures unless both parties agreed to cooperate.

The Secretary-General reported that Morocco had resumed construction of an asphalt road in the south-western corner of the Territory. In mid-May, MINURSO and several Member States contacted the Moroccan authorities and requested them to suspend the road construction. Subsequent MINURSO patrols confirmed that no roadwork was under way.

The Identification Commission continued with simulation workshops, and feedback from those sessions was used in preparing a manual on the hearings on the substance. A meeting in Agadir (26-27 May) evaluated the Commission's activities and adopted the Manual on Hearings on the Substance.

Discussions continued between MINURSO and POLISARIO on easing or lifting the restrictions on the Mission's freedom of movement east of the berm, but no progress was reported. On the western side of the berm, MINURSO patrols continued to visit Royal Moroccan Army ground units greater than company size. From 7 to 22 May, MINURSO confirmed the destruction, by the Royal Moroccan Army, of about 3,000 anti-tank mines, 37,000 anti-personnel mines and 27,000 detonators and munitions in the Ankesh area, near Smara. In total, 7.5 tons of mines and explosives were destroyed.

UNHCR continued its activities in the Tindouf camps for Western Saharan refugees. It undertook an assessment of their humanitarian welfare and concluded that their overall situation was precarious, particularly for the weak, the elderly, women and children.

The Secretary-General reviewed the implementation process since the 1991 adoption of the settlement plan. With the exception of the monitoring of the ceasefire, none of the main provisions of the plan had been fully implemented because of fundamental differences between the parties over its interpretation. The establishment of the electorate body for the referendum in Western Sahara had been, and remained, the most contentious issue. The difficulties in determining who was eligible to take part in the referendum were due in large part to the nomadic tradition of the Saharan people and the tribal structure of the society.

The Secretary-General observed that the United Nations had gone through an arduous process over 10 years to implement the settlement plan, involving his efforts and those of two previous Secretaries-General, five Special Representatives and his Personal Envoy. Because of the parties' unwillingness to work together to resolve problems, the United Nations had submitted proposals to bridge their differences, which the parties revised or diluted through long negotiations. The process had become a zero-sum game, which each side felt it had to win since the referendum would produce only one winner. That resulted in successive deadlocks in the identification process, which was the only substantial element of the settlement plan after the establishment of the ceasefire in 1991 that the United Nations began to try to implement. All other key issues remained unresolved, namely: the release of prisoners of war and Saharan political detainees; the repatriation of refugees, including security concerns; the code of conduct for the referendum campaign; and the lack of an enforcement mechanism for the results of the referendum. More significantly, implementation of the settlement plan required the cooperation of the two parties and the two neighbouring countries, Algeria and Mauritania. After four years of attempting to find ways to implement the settlement plan, and confronted with the failure of the parties to come up with any concrete proposals during the three rounds of consultations held from June to September 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 223], the Personal Envoy concluded that there were serious doubts as to whether the settlement plan could be implemented in its current form, and the Secretary-General concurred with that view. Adjustments to the plan proved just as contentious as other provisions and did not resolve the long-term problems.

The Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy hoped that Morocco, POLISARIO, Algeria and Mauritania would agree to meet, either directly or through proximity talks under the auspices of the Personal Envoy, to discuss with specificity the elements of the proposed framework agreement, which aimed at reaching a resolution of the Western Sahara conflict in a way that did not foreclose self-determination, but provided for it. The Secretary-General especially invited Algeria, which had indicated its willingness to offer clarifications on the imbalances it found in the proposed framework agreement, to engage in those discussions and to negotiate changes. As the Personal Envoy had informed the parties, should they agree to discuss a political solution other than the settlement plan, they would not prejudice their final positions since nothing would be agreed until everything had been agreed. While the discussions on the proposed framework went on, the settlement plan would not be abandoned, but put on hold. The Identification Commission would suspend its activities, after safely storing all records.

Over the next five months, the Personal Envoy would invite the two parties, Algeria and Mauritania, to discuss the proposed framework agreement. Should he decide to continue those discussions after that period, the Secretary-General would recommend to the Security Council that MINURSO's mandate be extended. If the Personal Envoy concluded otherwise, the Council could review the Mission's mandate and consider its future role under the circumstances. The Secretary-General therefore recommended that the Council extend MINURSO's mandate for five months, until 30 November.

Communication (June). Algeria, on 21 June [S/2001/623], forwarded comments to the Security Council on the Secretary-General's report, claiming that the Secretariat had deliberately set out to prove that the settlement plan, which had been accepted by the parties and was supported by the international community, was not workable. The Secretariat had taken it upon itself to champion an autonomy plan and had decided to reject Algeria's objections. By those actions, the Secretariat was taking sides and intruding in an area that was strictly within the competence of Member States and the Council. On the substance of the recommendations in the report, Algeria, while it had indicated its willingness to support the Personal Envoy's efforts, could not accept that the settlement plan should be dismissed in such a cavalier manner and that the POLISARIO proposals for relaunching its implementation should be set aside without serious consideration by Morocco and the Council. Algeria called on the Council to reaffirm its commitment to the settlement plan and reiterate MINURSO's mandate in the same terms it had used for a year.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 29 June [meeting 4342], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1359(2001). The draft [S/2001/641] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on Western Sahara, in particular resolution 1108(1997) of 22 May 1997, and the statement by its President of 19 March 1997 (S/PRST/1997/16),

Recalling also its resolution 1308(2000) of 17 July 2000, and the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994,

Reaffirming the provisions contained in paragraph 2 of Article 1 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 20 June 2001,

Expressing full support for the role and work of the Personal Envoy,

Reiterating full support for the ongoing efforts of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara to implement the settlement plan and agreements adopted by the parties to hold a free, fair and impartial referendum for the self-determination of the people of the Western Sahara,

Taking into consideration the official proposals submitted by the Polisario Front in order to overcome the obstacles preventing the implementation of the settlement plan contained in annex IV to the report of the Secretary-General,

Taking into consideration also the draft Framework Agreement on the Status of Western Sahara contained in annex I to the report of the Secretary-General, which would provide for a substantial devolution of authority, which does not foreclose self-determination, and which indeed provides for it,

Taking into consideration further the memorandum of the Government of Algeria on the draft status for Western Sahara contained in annex II to the report of the Secretary-General,

Reaffirming its commitment to assist the parties to achieve a just and lasting solution to the question of Western Sahara,

1. Decides, as recommended by the Secretary-General in his report of 20 June 2001, to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 30 November 2001;

2. Supports fully the efforts of the Secretary-General to invite all the parties to meet directly or through proximity talks, under the auspices of his Personal Envoy, and encourages the parties to discuss the draft Framework Agreement and to negotiate any specific changes they would like to see in this proposal, as well as to discuss any other proposal for a political solution, which may be put forward by the parties, to arrive at a mutually acceptable agreement;

3. Affirms that while discussions referred to above go on, the official proposals submitted by the Polisario Front to overcome the obstacles preventing implementation of the Settlement Plan will be considered;

4. Recalls that according to the rules of the consultations established by the Personal Envoy nothing would be agreed until everything had been agreed, and therefore emphasizes that by engaging in these negotiations the parties will not prejudice their final positions;

5. Urges the parties to solve the problem of the fate of people unaccounted for, and calls on the parties to abide by their obligations under international humanitarian law to release without further delay all those held since the start of the conflict;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to provide an assessment of the situation before the end of the present mandate, and, as appropriate, recommendations on the future mandate and composition of the Mission;

7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Communications (October/November). The Secretary-General, on 30 October [S/2001/1041], informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint William Lacy Swing (United States) as his Special Representative for Western Sahara, with effect from 1 December. Mr. Swing would succeed William Eagleton (United States). On 2 November [S/2001/1042], the Council took note of his intention.

In a 12 November letter [S/2001/1067], the Secretary-General briefly described the activities of his Personal Envoy pursuant to Council resolution 1359(2001) (above). Mr. Baker informed the Secretary-General that he would need additional time for his consultations with the parties; accordingly, the Secretary-General proposed that the Council authorize a technical extension of MINURSO's mandate for two months, to 31 January 2002. The Secretary-General would report to the Council before that date.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 27 November [meeting 4427], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1380 (2001). The draft [S/2001/1109] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 1359(2001) of 29 June 2001 and its previous resolutions on the question of Western Sahara,

Taking note of the letter of the Secretary-General of 12 November 2001,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 28 February 2002;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council informed of all significant developments in an interim report by 15 January 2002 and to provide an assessment of the situation by 18 February 2002;

3. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Further developments. The Personal Envoy held talks on the draft framework agreement with delegations of Algeria, Mauritania and POLISARIO in Pinedale, Wyoming, United States, from 27 to 29 August [S/2002/41]. Morocco was not invited to the meeting, since it had indicated its support of the document. The Personal Envoy had sought clarification from POLISARIO on its proposals of 28 May (see p. 217) and pointed out that Morocco's concurrence would be required for some proposals to be implemented and Council action would be required for others.

On 4 October, POLISARIO submitted a memorandum containing its position on the draft framework agreement, objecting to it on the grounds that it set the stage for integrating Western Sahara into Morocco. It urged the United Nations to continue trying to implement the settlement plan at all costs. Three days later, President Bouteflika forwarded Algeria's comments on the draft, stating its view that the draft framework would confirm the illegal occupation of the Territory by providing for its integration into Morocco and would thereby constitute a violation of the right of the Saharan people to self-determination. In order to overcome the disagreements between the two parties, and rather than resort to a period of so-called autonomy, Algeria said it would be better for the United Nations to take sovereign responsibility for the implementation of its own settlement plan for Western Sahara. It could do that by initiating a short transition period leading up to a referendum, during which the Territory would be placed under its exclusive authority and administration. Before such a transition period, certain conditions would have to be met, including the withdrawal of Moroccan troops from the Territory and the cantonment of the personnel authorized to remain there under the supervision of MINURSO, along with the cantonment of POLISARIO military forces. Morocco, in comments submitted on 10 November, stated that the legality of its presence and the legal grounds for its sovereignty had been well established for over 25 years. Algeria, it said, was attempting to escalate the situation by, among other things, entrusting the administration and security of the Territory to the United Nations instead of actively pursuing a peaceful settlement.

The situation of prisoners of war, persons unaccounted for and detainees remained a serious concern towards the end of 2001. In November, an ICRC representative interviewed 23 former POLISARIO combatants in Laayoune who had been unaccounted for, and the spouse of another. On 6 November, Morocco released 25 Saharan detainees, including 24 civilians arrested since 1999 and one military person arrested in 1979 and serving a life sentence. From 20 November to 3 December, an ICRC team visited the remaining 1,477 prisoners of war held by POLISARIO, providing them with medical and mail services. POLISARIO informed the team that one prisoner had recently died and another had escaped.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 82], the General Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's report summarizing developments in Western Sahara from 31 August 2000 to 30 June 2001 [A/56/159], on the recommendation of the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee [A/56/557], adopted resolution 56/69 without vote [agenda item 18].

Question of Western Sahara

The General Assembly,

Having considered in depth the question of Western Sahara,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all peoples to self-determination and independence, in accordance with the principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 55/141 of 8 December 2000,

Recalling also the agreement in principle given on 30 August 1988 by the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro to the proposals of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity in the context of their joint mission of good offices,

Recalling further Security Council resolutions 658(1990) of 27 June 1990 and 690(1991) of 29 April 1991, by which the Council approved the settlement plan for Western Sahara,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the United Nations towards the people of Western Sahara, as provided for in the settlement plan,

Recalling all Security Council and General Assembly resolutions relating to the question of Western Sahara,

Noting with satisfaction the entry into force of the ceasefire in accordance with the proposal of the Secretary-General, and stressing the importance it attaches to the maintenance of the ceasefire as an integral part of the settlement plan,

Noting also with satisfaction the agreements reached by the two parties during their private direct talks aimed at the implementation of the settlement plan, and stressing the importance it attaches to a full, fair and faithful implementation of the settlement plan and the agreements aimed at its implementation,

Noting that, despite the progress achieved, difficulties remain in the implementation of the settlement plan which must be overcome,

Taking note of the resolutions of the Security Council relating to the question, including resolution 1359 (2001) of 29 June 2001,

Taking note also of the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy in search of a mutually acceptable political solution on the question of Western Sahara,

Welcoming the acceptance by the two parties of the detailed modalities for the implementation of the Secretary-General's package of measures relating to the identification of voters and the appeals process,

Having examined the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Having also examined the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Commends the Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy for their outstanding efforts and the two parties for the spirit of cooperation they have shown in the support they provide for those efforts;
3. Takes note of the agreements reached between the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro for the implementation of the settlement plan during their private direct talks under the auspices of James Baker III, the Personal Envoy of the Secretary-General, and urges the parties to implement those agreements fully and in good faith;
4. Urges the two parties to continue their cooperation with the Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy, as well as with his Special Representative, and to refrain from undertaking anything that would undermine the implementation of the settlement plan and the agreements reached for its implementation and the continued efforts of the Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy;
5. Calls upon the two parties to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General, his Personal Envoy and his Special Representative in implementing the various phases of the settlement plan and in overcoming the difficulties that remain despite the progress so far achieved;
6. Encourages the parties to continue their discussions under the auspices of the Personal Envoy of the Secretary-General with a view to reaching a mutually acceptable agreement on the question of Western Sahara;
7. Urges the two parties to implement faithfully and loyally the Secretary-General's package of measures re- lating to the identification of voters and the appeals process;

8. Reaffirms the responsibility of the United Nations towards the people of Western Sahara, as provided for in the settlement plan;

9. Reiterates its support for further efforts of the Secretary-General for the organization and supervision by the United Nations, in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity, of a referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara that is impartial and free of all constraints, in conformity with Security Council resolutions 658(1990) and 690(1991), by which the Council approved the settlement plan for Western Sahara;

10. Takes note of the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, including resolutions 1349(2001) of 27 April 2001 and 1359(2001) of 29 June 2001;

11. Urges the parties to solve the problem of the fate of people unaccounted for, and calls on the parties to abide by their obligations under international humanitarian law to release without further delay all those held since the start of the conflict;

12. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to consider the situation in Western Sahara, bearing in mind the positive ongoing implementation of the settlement plan, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session;

13. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

MINURSO

The military component of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO), under the command of General Claude Buze (Belgium), continued to monitor the ceasefire between the Royal Moroccan Army and the POLISARIO military forces that came into effect in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 796]. The Mission's military strength remained at the authorized figure of 230 throughout the year. The civilian police, under the command of Inspector General Om Prakash Rathor (India), fell from 47 officers to 26 at the end of the year. MINURSO civilian police officers continued to protect files and materials at the Identification Commission centres in Laayoune and Tindouf and to undertake training and planning activities.

MINURSO financing

In February [A/55/764], the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on MINURSO's financial performance for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000. Expenditures totalled $49,211,511 gross ($45,860,511 net), resulting in an unutilized balance of $2,913,400 gross ($2,312,800 net).

In another February report [A/55/794], the Secretary-General presented the proposed budget to maintain MINURSO from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, which amounted to $48,849,600 gross ($45,280,800 net). In April [A/55/874/Add.7], ACABQ reviewed the proposed budget and recommended that the Assembly assess the requested amount at a monthly rate of $4,070,800 gross ($3,773,400 net), should the Security Council decide to extend MINURSO's mandate beyond 30 April 2001.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 June [meeting 103], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/966], adopted resolution 55/262 without vote [agenda item 135].

Financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 690 (1991) of 29 April 1991, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission, the latest of which was resolution 1349(2001) of 27 April 2001,

Recalling its resolution 45/266 of 17 May 1991 on the financing of the Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 54/268 of 15 June 2000,

Reaffirming the general principles underlying the financing of United Nations peacekeeping operations, as stated in General Assembly resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973 and 55/235 of 23 December 2000,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara as at 30 April 2001, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 89 million United States dollars, representing some 20 per cent of the total assessed contributions, notes that some 10 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

5. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

6. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

7. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

8. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Mission;

9. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

12. Decides to appropriate the amount of 50,481,396 dollars gross (46,716,010 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, inclusive of the amount of 1,477,457 dollars gross (1,296,614 dollars net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 154,339 dollars gross (138,596 dollars net) for the United Nations Logistics Base, to be apportioned among Member States at a monthly rate of 4,206,783 dollars gross (3,893,001 dollars net) in accordance with the levels set out in General Assembly resolution 55/235, as adjusted by resolution 55/236 of 23 December 2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 2001 and 2002, as set out in its resolution 55/5 B of 23 December 2000, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 30 June 2001;

13. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 12 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 3,765,386 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002;

14. Decides further that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 12 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 2,913,400 dollars

gross (2,312,800 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 2000, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by subsequent relevant resolutions and decisions, for the ad hoc apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations, the latest of which were resolution 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and decisions 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999 for the period 1998-2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999;

15. Decides that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 2,913,400 dollars gross (2,312,800 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 2000 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations in accordance with the scheme set out in paragraph 14 above;

16. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

17. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission;

18. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

19. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara".

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the item on MINURSO financing would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464) and that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item at that session (decision 56/458).

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

In January, the Scottish Court sitting in the Netherlands concluded the trial of two Libyan Arab Jamahiriya nationals accused of plotting the 1988 bombing of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, which caused the deaths of 259 passengers and crew and 11 Lockerbie residents. The verdict was that one of the accused was guilty and the other was not. A number of regional organizations made comments on the case in letters to the Security Council and called on the Council to lift entirely the sanctions against Libya imposed by resolution 748(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 55] and suspended in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 149].

Trial of Pan Am 103 bombing suspects

The Scottish Court sitting in the Netherlands gave its verdict on 31 January in the case against Abdelbaset Ali Mohmed Al Megrahi and Al Amin Khalifa Fhimah, both nationals of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, accused of the Lockerbie crime. The three judges of the Court, by a unanimous decision, found the former guilty and the latter not guilty. On the same date, the United Kingdom forwarded to the Security Council President a copy of the Opinion of the Court on the case [S/2001/94].

On 7 February [S/2001/118], the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries expressed its satisfaction that Libya had fulfilled its commitments in accordance with the relevant Council resolutions and requested the Council to lift the sanctions against Libya. On 13 November [S/2001/1108], the Movement's six-member committee established to follow up the Lockerbie question reiterated that request. The African Group, on 14 February [S/2001/140], also called on the Council to lift the sanctions, as did the Community of Sahel Saharan States in a 13 February resolution [S/2001/182]. The Community also requested the immediate release of Abdelbaset Ali Mohmed Al Megrahi, who, it said, had been sentenced on political grounds unrelated to law or justice. In letters of 21 March and 9 April [S/2001/257, S/2001/349], the League of Arab States transmitted resolutions by its Foreign Ministers and its Council, respectively, demanding the release of the Libyan citizen convicted for political reasons unrelated to the law, demanding that the Security Council lift the sanctions, urging the Arab States to declare the sanctions null and void, and expressing support for Libya's right to obtain compensation for damage and suffering caused by the sanctions. In November [S/2001/1074], the League's Committee of Seven entrusted with monitoring the Lockerbie issue reaffirmed those resolutions. In similar action, the heads of State of OAU adopted an 11 July resolution [S/2001/769] calling on the Council to lift sanctions against Libya, demanding the release of the unjustly convicted Libyan citizen and reaffirming Libya's right to compensation. The OAU committee established to follow up the Lockerbie issue reiterated that position on 4 December [S/2001/1152].

1986 attack against Libya

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on 21 June [S/2001/624], protested to the Security Council that it had failed to take action against the United States when it attacked Libya on 15 April 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 252]. In contrast, the Council had acted speedily when the United States made demands regarding the Lockerbie affair, despite a lack of any legal basis or any evidence. Libya stated that the case of the United States attack would remain open before the Council until it adopted a resolution calling for those responsible to be brought to trial and the victims' families compensated.

The General Assembly, by decision 56/449 of 21 December, deferred consideration of the item "Declaration of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on the aerial and naval military attack against the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by the present United States Administration in April 1986" and included it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh (2002) session.

Sudan

During 2001, the Sudan continued the efforts it began in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 218] to cooperate with the international community, among other things, acceding to anti-terrorism conventions, improving relations with neighbouring countries and discharging its obligations under various Security Council resolutions. As a result, the Council, in September, terminated the sanctions it had imposed against the Sudan in 1996.

Sanctions

On 9 April [S/2001/341], the League of Arab States transmitted to the Security Council President a resolution, adopted by the thirteenth Arab Summit Conference (Amman, Jordan, 28-29 March), which endorsed the call made by the Sudan in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 218] for the sanctions against it to be lifted. That call had also been endorsed by several other groups in 2000 [ibid., p. 219]. Those sanctions, imposed under Council resolutions 1044(1996) [YUN 1996, p. 129], 1054(1996) [ibid., p. 130] and 1070(1996) [ibid., p. 131], called for States to reduce the level of diplomatic staff in the Sudan and restrict travel of Sudanese government officials and armed forces into or through their territories, and to deny Sudanese aircraft the right to use other countries' airspace.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 September [meeting 4384], the Security Council adopted resolution 1372(2001) by vote (14-0-1). The draft [S/2001/916] was submitted by Bangladesh, Colombia, Jamaica, Mali, Mauritius, Singapore, Tunisia and Ukraine.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1044(1996) of 31 January 1996, 1054(1996) of 26 April 1996 and 1070(1996) of 16 August 1996,

Noting the steps taken by the Government of the Sudan to comply with the provisions of resolutions 1044(1996) and 1070(1996),

Noting in that respect the communications from the Permanent Representative of South Africa on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement, and the Permanent Representative of Algeria on behalf of the League of Arab States and the Permanent Representative of Gabon on behalf of the African Group, and from the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity dated 20 June 2000,

Noting further the letter of the Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia, dated 5 June 2000, and the letter of the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Arab Republic of Egypt, dated 9 June 2000 supporting the lifting of sanctions imposed on the Republic of the Sudan,

Noting also the contents of the letter dated 1 June 2000 from the Minister of External Relations of the Republic of the Sudan addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations,

Welcoming the accession of the Republic of the Sudan to the relevant international conventions for the elimination of terrorism, its ratification of the 1997 International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombing and its signing of the 1999 International Convention for the Suppression of Financing of Terrorism,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Decides to terminate, with immediate effect, the measures referred to in paragraphs 3 and 4 of resolution 1054(1996) and paragraph 3 of resolution 1070 (1996).

VOTE ON RESOLUTION 1372(2001):

In favour: Bangladesh, China, Colombia, France, Ireland, Jamaica, Mali, Mauritius, Norway, Russian Federation, Singapore, Tunisia, Ukraine, United Kingdom.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

Speaking after the vote, the United States said that, although the Sudan had taken substantial steps to meet the specific demands of Security Council resolution 1054(1996) [YUN 1996, p. 130], it was concerned that the suspects wanted in connection with the 1995 assassination attempt on Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak in Addis Ababa [YUN 1995, p. 412] had not been turned over to the appropriate authorities; however, the United States believed, as did Egypt and Ethiopia, that the suspects were no longer in the Sudan. The United States welcomed the Sudan's recent efforts to apprehend extremists within the country who might have contributed to international terrorism and welcomed the fact that the Sudan was engaged in discussions with the United States Government on ways to combat terrorism. However, the United States had continuing concerns about the civil war in the Sudan, which had lasted some 18 years, and the abuse of human rights. For those reasons, the United States had abstained in the vote.

The Sudan said that resolution 1372(2001) provided an impetus for it to cooperate further in efforts to eliminate terrorism and to engage in the work of the international community.

Sudan-Uganda

On 25 January [S/2001/84], Uganda, in comments on the interim report of the United Nations Expert Panel on the Illegal Exploitation of Natural Resources and Other Forms of Wealth of the DRC (see p. 140), stated it had become involved in the DRC in order to protect its legitimate national security interests against Sudanese-backed rebels in the DRC. Responding to those comments on 4 February [S/2001/113], the Sudan stated that the excuses advanced by Uganda for its invasion of the DRC represented an attempt to distract attention from the plunder of the DRC's wealth—gold, diamonds and hardwoods—by members of the corrupt clique in Uganda.

Southern Africa

Angola

The armed conflict in Angola between the Government and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) continued unabated in 2001, causing further population displacement. The estimated number of displaced persons rose to 4.1 million by the end of the year as guerrilla attacks forced people from their homes and into neighbouring countries, creating serious humanitarian situations. In late 2001, the Government was apparently gaining the upper hand in the struggle; it reported that UNITA's strength was weakened and the area under its control greatly reduced. UN officials expressed the view that there was a window of opportunity for the United Nations to advance the peace process. In talks with the United Nations, the Government said it would seek UN assistance in the electoral process for elections in 2002 and humanitarian aid.

There was no progress in implementing the 1994 Lusaka Protocol [YUN 1994, p. 348], by which the Government and UNITA had agreed that the State administration would be extended. However, by the end of the year both sides indicated a willingness to reopen discussions on achieving its terms. The Security Council held UNITA and its leader primarily responsible for the failure to implement the Protocol, which it regarded as the only viable basis for a political settlement of the conflict.

Sanctions against UNITA remained in force in 2001 and violations were investigated by the Monitoring Mechanism established by resolution 1295(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 155]. That body issued two reports in 2001 on sanctions-busting in such areas as arms brokering and transport, petroleum sales, diamond trading and travel and residence of senior UNITA officials and their families. On three occasions during the year, the Security Council extended the mandate of the Mechanism. Angola affirmed that the sanctions had been effective in reducing UNITA's capacity to wage war.

The United Nations Office in Angola (UNOA) continued to monitor the situation in the country and to urge the parties to carry out their obligations under the Lusaka Protocol.

Political and military developments

Report of Secretary-General (April). The Secretary-General, in response to Security Council resolution 1294(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 152], submitted an April report on developments in Angola [S/2001/351]. The security situation remained tense in the early part of the year as government troops pursued residual UNITA forces and took control of municipalities previously under UNITA control. Reports indicated that UNITA soldiers were deserting in large numbers, taking advantage of the amnesty law announced in November 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 154] and transmitted to the Security Council President on 11 January 2001 [S/2001/36]. Nevertheless, UNITA retained the capacity to attack government positions, was still the dominant power in some localities in the north and north-east of the country and had safe havens in the Malange and Cuango basins.

On 15 March, the Government announced a four-point plan for the completion of the peace process. It called for an unconditional cessation of hostilities by UNITA, the handover of its weapons to the United Nations, the conclusion of tasks pending under the Lusaka Protocol and UNITA participation in the general elections to be held in 2002.

Another opposition group, the Front for the Liberation of the Enclave of Cabinda, reiterated its call for negotiations with the Governments of Angola and Portugal, both for the right of the people of the Cabinda enclave to self-determination and for the release of seven Portuguese nationals taken hostage in May 2000 and March 2001. Angolan authorities were reported to be making contacts with the various separatist movements of Cabinda province, aimed at initiating discussions on how to resolve the concerns of the population.

Relations between Angola and Zambia, which had deteriorated due to the military offensive of the Angolan Armed Forces in the eastern region and the resulting influx of refugees into Zambia, improved in early 2001. On 10 February, Presidents Frederick Chiluba of Zambia and Sam Nujoma of Namibia attended a mini-summit with President José Eduardo dos Santos in Luanda and discussed border security issues. They agreed to set up a tripartite security mechanism to prevent the illegal circulation of people and goods and the unlawful trade in diamonds and ivory, as well as illicit arms trafficking.

Breaking a long period of silence, UNITA leader Jonas Savimbi, in an interview on 22 March, said that his movement was ready for dialogue, reiterated the validity of the Lusaka Protocol and noted that both parties still had to conclude the implementation of some of its key provisions. He expressed doubts about the sincerity of the Government in granting him amnesty. He indicated that UNITA had no objections to the disarmament plan under the Protocol but would like to discuss its modalities beforehand.

The Secretary-General's representative in Angola and head of UNOA, Mussagy Jeichande, met with President dos Santos and other officials, who reaffirmed the continuing validity of the Lusaka Protocol and called on UNOA to seek the completion of its implementation. The representative also maintained contacts with opposition parties and other civil society groups.

The human rights situation continued to be undermined by the direct consequences of the ongoing conflict and structural weaknesses in government institutions. Civilians, in particular villagers and farmers, were often victims of serious and recurring human rights abuses, and abuses and attacks were perpetrated by both UNITA members and soldiers and policemen acting outside the parameters of the official code of conduct.

The humanitarian situation in Angola remained precarious due to the large number of internally displaced persons. By the end of February, the number of those displaced since the resumption of hostilities in January 1998 reached 2.9 million, of whom 2.2 million lived in areas accessible to humanitarian agencies. Efforts were made to increase the registration of the internally displaced persons for humanitarian assistance. Increases in cases of malaria, respiratory infections and diarrhoea were reported. Significant efforts were made to resettle displaced populations in safe areas in order to protect them from guerrilla and counter-insurgency activity.

The Secretary-General welcomed the positive measures taken by the Government of Angola. He said that it was imperative that UNITA abandon its military option and seek a resolution of the conflict in the context of the Lusaka Protocol. He appealed to all concerned to facilitate the delivery of emergency relief assistance and urged the donor community to respond as generously as possible to the 2001 UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for Angola (see p. 831). He noted encouraging signs of a nascent democratic process involving broad segments of Angolans, including civil society, and the need for drafting a new constitution and holding free and fair elections. UNOA would continue to report on developments in the country and to provide assistance to Angola in human rights and capacity-building. The Secretary-General therefore recommended that the Security Council extend UNOA's mandate for a further six months, until 15 October. The Council, on 19 April [S/2001/387], informed the Secretary-General that it concurred with his recommendation.

Communications (June-August). Côte d'Ivoire, in an 18 June letter to the Secretary-General [S/2001/607], said that, although in the past it had maintained contacts with UNITA leaders, it had frozen its relations with that organization; that message had been conveyed by President Laurent Gbagbo during an official visit to Angola in late May.

On 15 August [S/2001/793], Angola reported that on 10 August UNITA forces had attacked a train, killing 252 people and injuring more than 165. UNITA had begun to pursue a policy of avoiding confrontations with government military forces and had resorted to violence against defenceless communities. Angola called on the United Nations to take action.

Security Council consideration. On 20 September, the Security Council met in private and was briefed by Angola's Minister of the Interior. The Council issued a communiqué [S/PV.4376] stating that it had had a constructive interactive discussion with the Minister. The United States transmitted to the Council President a statement it had made on behalf of the Troika of Observer States to the Lusaka Protocol (Portugal, Russian Federation, United States) to the Council meeting [S/2001/908]. The Troika condemned the 10 August attack on the passenger train, called on UNITA to re-enter the dialogue on implementing the Lusaka Protocol, and expressed support for further work on a judicial framework in advance of Angola's next election.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 20 September [meeting 4377], following consultations among Security Council members, the President issued statement S/PRST/2001/24 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council remains concerned at the continuing conflict in Angola. It reiterates its position that the primary responsibility for the continued fighting lies with the leadership of the armed faction of the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA) headed by Mr. J. Savimbi which is refusing to fulfil its obligations under the "Accordos de Paz", the Lusaka Protocol and relevant resolutions of the Security Council, which remain the only viable basis for political settlement of the conflict in Angola.

The Council considers the four-point agenda for peace proposed by the Government of Angola a useful indication of areas where an agreement or progress should be reached. It calls on the UNITA armed faction headed by Mr. J. Savimbi to cease all military action and to enter into a dialogue with the Government of Angola on how to conclude the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol on this basis.

The Council condemns in the strongest terms the terrorist attacks by UNITA forces on the civilian population of Angola. It stresses that such attacks are unacceptable and cannot be justified by any political goals. The Council reminds their perpetrators that such acts are in violation of international law and may have further implications.

The Council reaffirms that the failure by the armed faction of UNITA to implement its obligations under the "Accordos de Paz", the Lusaka Protocol, and its relevant resolutions remains the reason for the Security Council sanctions against UNITA. The Council is determined to keep sanctions in place until it is convinced that the conditions in its relevant resolutions are met. It reiterates its call on all States to implement strictly the sanctions regime against UNITA and urges them to strengthen, where appropriate, their internal legislation related to application of sanction measures imposed by the Council. The Council reaffirms its intention to keep sanctions under close monitoring and periodic review in order to raise their effectiveness, including as they relate to UNITA activity abroad.

The Council notes with satisfaction that, at their recent summit, the heads of State and Government of the Southern African Development Community countries undertook to prepare a report on how the Community countries implement Security Council resolution 1295(2000). The Council encourages the Community countries to cooperate fully in their efforts to implement the Security Council's measures against UNITA.

The Council encourages the Government of Angola to promote the peace process and in this regard welcomes the initiatives by the Government of Angola, as well as by the Angolan people, including the civil society and the churches. It calls on the Angolan authorities to continue efforts aimed at national reconciliation and stabilization of the situation in the country in consultation with all segments of the Angolan society, including the civil society and the churches. These should focus on re-establishment of the State administration, improvement of the social and economic situation of the population, promotion of the rule of law, protection of human rights, and the activity of the Inter-Agency Committee and of the Peace and Reconciliation Fund.

The Council supports the intention of the Government of Angola to hold elections as a part of the ongoing democratization process in Angola in conformity with the universally accepted democratic principles and standards. It stresses the need to create the necessary conditions for elections to be free and fair. The Council requests the Secretary-General to provide appropriate support, in coordination with the Government of Angola, in preparation of elections, including through the work of the ongoing United Nations technical assistance mission.

The Council notes the positive contribution that the United Nations Office in Angola is making towards finding the solution to the Angolan conflict. It reiterates its full support for the work of the Office and the Representative of the Secretary-General.

The Council is seriously concerned with the plight of the Angolan population particularly the internally displaced persons and, in order to alleviate its suffering, calls again on all parties concerned to facilitate the delivery of emergency relief assistance. The work of the United Nations agencies and other international organizations delivering assistance to those in the affected areas is of the utmost importance and must continue unobstructed with the financial support of the international community.

Communication (September). On 24 September [S/2001/904], Burkina Faso categorically denied an assertion by the Angolan Minister of Defence that Mr. Savimbi was in Burkina Faso.

Report of Secretary-General (October). The Secretary-General, in an October report on Angola [S/2001/956], provided an update on the situation there since his previous (April) report. During that six-month period, deep animosity and distrust had persisted between the Government and UNITA. Despite increasing pressure from the civil society for a political settlement of the conflict, fighting continued unabated with dire humanitarian consequences. UNITA guerrilla activities included the killing of 150 persons and the kidnapping of 60 children in Bengo province (north-east of Luanda), shooting at a World Food Programme (WFP) plane near Kuito in June, and the attack on a passenger train in Kwanza Norte province in August. In both the train and plane attacks, UNITA alleged that government forces and war materiel were being transported, charges denied by the Government.

In a speech in Luanda during the opening of a peace conference on 2 May [S/2001/470], President dos Santos explained that his Government had opted for a military solution to the conflict as a matter of legitimate self-defence. He affirmed that the Government's four-point peace plan (see p. 225) reinforced the Lusaka Protocol and its determination to hold general elections. He added that Mr. Savimbi, having declared that he accepted the Lusaka Protocol, needed to announce how he intended to implement its terms.

In a June interview with the British Broadcasting Corporation, Mr. Savimbi said UNITA could neither declare a unilateral ceasefire nor disarm because there were no verification mechanisms in place. UNITA proposed the establishment of a transitional government and the creation of a High Council of Peace to include many political and civil society leaders. Meanwhile, the Government maintained its intention to hold general elections in the second half of 2002, and the President said he would be a candidate again.

Replying on 15 May to a message from the Secretary-General, Mr. dos Santos acknowledged the positive impact of sanctions against UNITA and sought the assistance of the United Nations for the forthcoming electoral process, a pilot project for the resettlement of former combatants, and the Fund for Peace and National Reconciliation.

Relations between the Angolan Government and neighbouring countries improved, with the Côte d'Ivoire President proposing to respect the sanctions against UNITA (see p. 226). There were a number of exchange visits by the Foreign Affairs and Defence Ministers of Angola and Zambia and, at a tripartite summit meeting of Angola, Namibia and Zambia on 26 June, President dos Santos expressed satisfaction with the situation along the Angolan-Zambian border and acknowledged the contributions of Namibia and Zambia towards peace in Angola.

The human rights situation continued to be undermined by the ongoing conflict. Humanitarian principles were largely ignored, with civilians subjected to a wide range of human rights abuses. Ambushes on roads and landmines endangered the lives of civilians and limited freedom of movement. UNITA had begun to target civilians with greater intensity. Through partnerships with government authorities and civil society, the UNOA human rights programme helped establish a mechanism to enable Angolans to exercise their rights while supporting the government institutions that were responsible for their protection.

The humanitarian situation remained serious, particularly in inaccessible regions. At the end of August, the number of persons reportedly displaced since the resumption of hostilities in December 1998 reached over 3 million, of whom 1.3 million had been confirmed by humanitarian organizations. More than 165,000 persons had been displaced since March by war-related activity and food insecurity. April floods in southern Angola and attacks during May led to the temporary displacement of about 100,000 people during a three-month period. In addition, growing insecurity in Uíge province in July and August forced at least 10,000 Angolan refugees to flee to the DRC. Malnutrition was a serious problem in several provinces and was compounded by lack of health facilities and water and sanitation. Despite intermittent insecurity, a new corridor was opened into Camacupa and a major humanitarian operation was launched. Although plans were made to relocate 500,000 internally displaced persons during the year, only 67,000 people were resettled between March and September because of deteriorating security conditions.

Despite the intensification of guerrilla attacks, the Secretary-General noted encouraging signs towards the resolution of the conflict led by civil society's call for a political settlement. Both the Government and UNITA had reaffirmed the validity of the Lusaka Protocol as a basis for peace, although they differed with respect to the ways its provisions should be implemented. The Secretary-General's Special Adviser on Africa, Ibrahim Gambari, having visited Angola in early May, led UN efforts to search for a solution and ways in which the United Nations could assist the Government. UNOA, in addition to promoting a peaceful resolution of the conflict, provided assistance in humanitarian aid, human rights and capacity-building, and also monitored the situation. For those reasons, the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend the UNOA mandate for another six months, until 15 April 2002. The Council, on 16 October [S/2001/973], informed the Secretary-General that it concurred with that recommendation.

Security Council consideration. The Secretary-General's Special Adviser on Africa, Mr. Gambari, addressed the Security Council on 15 November [meeting 4418] as it considered the situation in Angola. He stated that the Angolan Government had recently launched a number of military offensives, especially in the eastern province of Moxico, where it reportedly destroyed UNITA's operational command centres and took hundreds of prisoners. A total of 4.1 million people were estimated to be displaced and a tenth of all Angolans depended on food assistance to survive.

Concerning the peace process, the Government had reaffirmed its commitment to peace within the framework of the Lusaka Protocol. The UNITA leadership, while appearing to accept the validity of the Protocol, had made a number of specific proposals to solve the conflict that appeared to lie outside the Protocol's framework. Both the Church and the National Assembly were actively involved in the search for a settlement. In a speech on 23 August, President dos Santos announced his intention not to stand as a candidate in the next general elections; however, he also indicated that there were several preconditions before elections could take place, including revision of the electoral law, a new constitution, a census, resettlement of displaced populations and security guarantees.

Addressing the Council, Angola affirmed that it was working towards peace and national reconciliation, a process that included meetings with political parties and civil society, including churches, NGOs and civic associations, as well as with representatives of the international community. In the military arena, the Government had taken forceful measures to complete the terms of the Lusaka Protocol, particularly the disarmament of UNITA forces and the extension of State authority throughout the national territory. The sanctions imposed by the international community had been effective in reducing the capacity of UNITA's military wing to wage war and, consequently, a number of UNITA members had been persuaded to lay down their weapons. Angola called on the international community to tighten the sanctions, particularly in the area of telecommunications.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 15 November [meeting 4419], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/36 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council remains deeply concerned about the ongoing conflict in Angola. It holds Mr. Jonas Savimbi and the armed faction of the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA) primarily responsible for the failure to implement the Lusaka Protocol. It expresses its deep concern at the resulting human rights and international humanitarian law violations, and the humanitarian crisis.

The Council reaffirms that the Lusaka Protocol remains the only viable basis for a political settlement of the conflict in Angola. The failure by UNITA to implement the Lusaka Protocol, the "Accordos de Paz" and the relevant resolutions of the Security Council are the basis for the continuation of the Security Council sanctions against UNITA.

The Council once again reaffirms its intention to keep sanctions under close and ongoing monitoring with a view to improving their effectiveness until it is convinced that the conditions in the relevant resolutions are met. It welcomes, in this regard, the ongoing review by the Sanctions Committee of the recommendations of the Monitoring Mechanism on sanctions against UNITA.

The Council reiterates its call on Member States to comply fully with the implementation of the sanctions regime against UNITA. The Council notes the positive contribution of the Security Council Sanctions Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) and, in this regard, calls upon the Member States to cooperate fully with the Security Council Committee and the Monitoring Mechanism on sanctions against UNITA.

The Council supports the Government of Angola in its efforts to implement the Lusaka Protocol including through the Fund for Peace and National Reconciliation. The Security Council supports the Government's intention to hold free and fair elections when appropriate conditions are in place. It encourages the Angolan authorities to continue, in consultation with all the political parties and the full participation of the civil society, their efforts for peace, stability and national reconciliation. The Council further encourages the Government of Angola to work for economic reform and to ensure transparent and accountable governance to provide a positive climate for peace.

The Council expresses its concern that the continuing conflict in Angola is leading to a large number of internally displaced persons and a dire humanitarian situation. It welcomes the efforts of the Government of Angola to improve the humanitarian situation and the resettlement of the displaced population and calls upon it to increase its efforts to this end. It also calls upon the international community to continue to provide necessary humanitarian assistance. It stresses that humanitarian assistance should be provided to the population in need, throughout Angola.

The Council supports the efforts of the civil society and the churches to alleviate the humanitarian situation and to facilitate national reconciliation.

The Council welcomes the upcoming visit of the Secretary-General's Special Adviser on Africa to Angola for consultations with the Government, political parties and civil society representatives on how the United Nations could help in the advancement of the peace process. It also reiterates its support for the work of the United Nations Office in Angola in finding the solution to the Angolan conflict.

The Russian Federation requested that the statement it had made to the Council on 15 November on behalf of the Troika of Observer States to the Lusaka Protocol be circulated [S/2001/1116]. The Troika pointed out that one of the new voices in Angola calling for dialogue in pursuit of peace was that of the growing civil society movement within government-controlled areas of the country, which should be encouraged. The Troika believed that the principles of the Lusaka Protocol should remain intact: the State administration should be extended to all areas of the country; UNITA should disarm and be demobilized; and UNITA should be able to enter politics as a political party.

Later developments. Following a mission to Angola from 8 to 14 December, Mr. Gambari reported to the Security Council on 21 December [meeting 4444] that progress was being made on all fronts. With regard to the peace process, he reported that, for the first time, there was a convergence of opinion among those consulted that the United Nations should play a more proactive role. The Government had no objection to the role of the churches in facilitating contacts with UNITA, but said that should be done through the United Nations as mediator. According to the Government, UNITA's military capacity had been nearly destroyed, it controlled no territory and was facing numerous defections. However, the Government recognized that UNITA was still capable of conducting terror attacks. UNITA parliamentarians reiterated the organization's commitment to peace through a dialogue within the framework of the Lusaka Protocol, but cautioned that it should not be used as a platform to obtain UNITA's surrender and that a final decision still lay in the hands of Mr. Savimbi.

The Government had indicated that the United Nations should assume responsibility for the collection and destruction of weapons; that would involve an adjustment to UNOA's mandate, which was to promote humanitarian assistance and capacity-building in human rights. Mr. Gambari said there was a window of opportunity to advance the peace process in Angola, which the United Nations should explore; under the guidance of the Secretary-General, he would seek to accelerate the peace process in the context of the Lusaka Protocol.

With regard to the proposed national elections, the Government continued to express its commitment to hold them soon. In Mr. Gambari's view, however, that was not realistic, as the discussions of the fundamental principles for a new constitution appeared deadlocked. The humanitarian situation had worsened in a number of areas, and the number of internally displaced persons and refugees was estimated to have reached 4.1 million out of a total population of about 12 million. The rapid increase was due to the "mop-up" operation by the Angolan Armed Forces, a strategy of moving people from their areas of origin into camps for internally displaced persons with the aim of depriving UNITA of its support base. Nevertheless, the Government had made enormous efforts to improve the humanitarian situation by, among other things, increasing funds to provide for the humanitarian needs of displaced persons who had moved into urban areas.

Sanctions

In 2001, the Security Council continued to monitor sanctions against UNITA through the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 256] and the Monitoring

Mechanism on Sanctions against UNITA, which was established by resolution 1295(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 155] to investigate violations of the sanctions. The first set of sanctions under resolution 864(1993)—arms and petroleum embargoes—was expanded several times in the following years to include bans on diamond trading and travel by high UNITA officials and their families.

In January and February, the Council considered the December 2000 report of the Monitoring Mechanism [YUN 2000, p. 158], which presented findings on countries involved in arms and military equipment shipments, travel by UNITA representatives and trade in illegal diamonds and financial assets. In January, the Council extended the Mechanism's mandate for three months and, in April, extended it for a further six months, until 19 October. On that date, the Council again extended the Mechanism's mandate for six months, until 19 April 2002.

Monitoring Mechanism

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 23 January [meeting 4263], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1336 (2001). The draft [S/2001/69] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 864(1993) of 15 September 1993 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 1127(1997) of 28 August 1997, 1173 (1998) of 12 June 1998, 1237(1999) of 7 May 1999 and 1295(2000) of 18 April 2000,

Reaffirming also its commitment to preserve the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola,

Expressing its continued concern regarding the humanitarian effects of the present situation on the civilian population of Angola,

Determining that the situation in Angola constitutes a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Takes note of the final report of the Monitoring Mechanism established pursuant to resolution 1295 (2000);

2. Expresses its intention to give full consideration to the final report pursuant to paragraph 5 of resolution 1295(2000);

3. Decides to extend the mandate of the Monitoring Mechanism as set out in resolution 1295(2000) for a period of three months;

4. Requests the Monitoring Mechanism to report periodically to the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993), and to provide a written addendum to the final report, by 19 April 2001;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, upon adoption of this resolution and acting in consultation with the Committee, to reappoint up to five of the experts appointed by him pursuant to resolution 1295(2000) to serve on the Monitoring Mechanism, and further requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary financial arrangements to support the work of the Monitoring Mechanism;

6. Requests the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) to submit the written addendum to the final report to the Council by 19 April 2001;

7. Calls upon all States to cooperate fully with the Monitoring Mechanism in the discharge of its mandate;

8. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

The Secretary-General, on 29 January [S/2001/91], informed the Council that he had reappointed the five experts to the Monitoring Mechanism in accordance with resolution 1336(2001).

Angola, in an 8 February letter [S/2001/123], urged the Security Council to uphold the sanctions against UNITA, which, in Angola's view, constituted the most effective means to maintain pressure on UNITA's armed wing. Angola remained concerned over the systematic violations of sanctions, noting in particular the diamond traffic that sustained rebel groups in Africa, especially in Angola. Angola stressed the need to strengthen the sanctions against UNITA, enlarge the Monitoring Mechanism's mandate to bring about judicial prosecution of companies and individuals violating the sanctions, adopt measures to combat the support of diamond and arms traffickers, and adopt measures against countries involved in violating sanctions.

Security Council consideration (February).

On 22 February [meeting 4283], the Council again considered the Monitoring Mechanism's report and heard a statement by the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 256] to monitor sanctions against UNITA. He noted that the recommendations of the Monitoring Mechanism required action by and financial support from the United Nations, individual States and the international community. The findings of the Monitoring Mechanism and of the Panel of Experts [YUN 2000, p. 154] had demonstrated the involvement of the same people, organizations and corporations in two and probably more of the major conflicts in Africa. The United Nations lacked the necessary permanent capacity for following up on those findings. The UN sanctions regime against UNITA was working; it was currently more expensive and difficult for UNITA to conduct business with the suppliers of essential materials, and it was riskier for State and commercial suppliers to engage in business with UNITA. With the Council's support, the Committee would work with others to erode UNITA's remaining military capacity.

Expressing support for the Committee's report, Angola said that the primary impact of the sanctions was reflected in the significant reduction of the military capacity of the rebels. Former rebels had accepted the Government's amnesty offer and joined national reconciliation efforts. Angola called on the Council to reinforce the Monitoring Mechanism and to adopt concrete measures to combat transnational organized crime networks in Africa.

April report. In an April addendum [S/2001/363] to its December 2000 report, submitted in response to resolution 1336(2001), the Monitoring Mechanism provided information obtained during its visit to a number of countries, from print-outs from captured UNITA computers and from responses to questionnaires sent to Member States.

The Mechanism identified a number of companies that had played a key role in brokering arms transactions between Bulgaria and Romania and UNITA and observed that there was an urgent need to tighten the regulations governing the activities and operations of such companies. It recommended that the establishment of an international register of dubious companies involved in sanctions-busting should be considered. As to the travel of senior UNITA officials, the Mechanism stated that, in addition to carrying out public relations activities and political lobbying, UNITA representatives were also essential to UNITA supply lines, diamond sales and logistics. The Mechanism had been informed about UNITA links/branches in Latin America and Scandinavia. With regard to diamond trading, the Mechanism observed that many countries had not passed national laws enacting the implementation of Security Council resolution 1173(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 108] as it related to diamonds from Angola. Even in countries that had enacted laws and strengthened diamond-trading controls, illicit diamonds were still reaching the market. However, the sanctions had brought about reform of official Angola diamond-trading structures and produced a novel approach to resolving problems on the ground, which should be considered for application in other African diamond-mining countries. In the area of petroleum and petroleum products, the Mechanism was informed by Namibia that 32 full 5,000-litre petroleum containers had been unearthed in southern Angola. However, their source was unknown. The Mechanism also learned that small UNITA guerrilla groups still used trucks for rapid deployment, which highlighted the need for continued vigilance by the Government of Angola and countries in the subregion to ensure that fuel was not smuggled to UNITA.

As a result of the vigilance and systematic investigations undertaken by the Mechanism, Governments that had violated the sanctions in the past were distancing themselves from UNITA and taking measures to implement the sanctions. Companies and individuals were under pressure and constant scrutiny. The Mechanism believed that it would not be prudent to abandon its work when indications showed that UNITA was finally being hurt by the sanctions even if it had not given up.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 19 April [meeting 4311], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1348(2001). The draft [S/2001/379] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 864(1993) of 15 September 1993 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 1127(1997) of 28 August 1997, 1173(1998) of 12 June 1998, 1237(1999) of 7 May 1999, 1295(2000) of 18 April 2000 and 1336(2001) of 23 January 2001,

Reaffirming also its commitment to preserve the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola,

Expressing once again its concern regarding the humanitarian effects of the present situation on the civilian population of Angola,

Recognizing the importance attached, inter alia, to the monitoring, for as long as it is necessary, of the implementation of the provisions contained in resolutions 864(1993), 1127(1997) and 1173(1998),

Determining that the situation in Angola continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Takes note of the written addendum provided pursuant to paragraph 4 of resolution 1336(2001) to the final report of the Monitoring Mechanism established pursuant to resolution 1295(2000);

2. Expresses its intention to give full consideration to the written addendum and to the final report, pursuant to paragraph 5 of resolution 1295(2000);

3. Decides to extend the mandate of the Monitoring Mechanism for a further period of six months, ending on 19 October 2001;

4. Requests the Monitoring Mechanism to report periodically to the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993), and to provide a supplementary report by 19 October 2001;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, upon adoption of the present resolution and acting in consultation with the Committee, to appoint up to five experts to serve on the monitoring mechanism, and further requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary financial arrangements to support the work of the monitoring mechanism;

6. Requests the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) to submit the supplementary report to the Council by 19 October 2001;

7. Calls upon all States to cooperate fully with the Monitoring Mechanism in the discharge of its mandate;

8. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

The Secretary-General, on 30 May [S/2001/537], informed the Council President of his decision to reappoint four experts to serve on the Monitoring Mechanism. On 9 July [S/2001/676], he announced the appointment of the fifth member.

Angola, on 3 October [S/2001/933], requested the Council to extend the mandate of the Monitoring Mechanism, as that body had played a crucial role in reducing the violations of sanctions against UNITA. Angola reiterated that request on 10 October [S/2001/958] and called on the Council to impose new restrictive measures against UNITA's military wing, namely in the area of telecommunications.

October report. On 12 October, in accordance with resolution 1348(2001), the Monitoring Mechanism transmitted to the Security Council a supplementary report on sanctions against UNITA [S/2001/966]. During the reporting period, it had pursued allegations of sanctions violations and continued to examine the role of criminal elements instrumental to UNITA's capacity to sustain its guerrilla war. In addition, the Mechanism expanded its base of inquiry by drawing on the expertise of professional asset tracers to identify UNITA's financial resources.

The Mechanism believed that deliveries of arms and ammunition had been drastically reduced due to the sanctions. Although UNITA had lost control over airstrips, cross-border supplies still reached it from the DRC. The Mechanism received repeated allegations that the DRC remained a major transit country for UNITA diamonds.

The Monitoring Mechanism described its further investigations concerning violations of arms sanctions, which centred on collecting additional information regarding the arms brokering companies, particularly the financial trail related to arms purchases; the determination of the origin of UNITA equipment seized in Togo; and the assessment of other possible sources of arms supply.

As to the diamond sanctions, the Mechanism stated that the Chief Executive Officer of the Angola Selling Corporation had informed it that between $1 million and $1.2 million of embargoed diamonds were leaving Angola each day. The Government had stated that the major problem was no longer diamonds produced by UNITA but illicit diamonds being smuggled by other players, as mining areas previously held by UNITA were recaptured. In investigating the rough diamond trading companies said to be involved in violating the sanctions, the Mechanism noted the almost total lack of transparency, the relative absence of traceable paper trails and the protection of what data were available by commercial confidentiality or law, which created difficulties in finding hard evidence of dealers' activities. However, it had been possible to construct a chain of evidence in some cases. The Mechanism had identified one dealer in Antwerp that appeared to be implicated in illicit diamond trading with UNITA. It would provide the Government of Belgium with its findings and documentation, and request a thorough investigation, the outcome of which would be given to the Security Council Committee.

During the review period, the Mechanism had conducted investigations aimed at establishing the financial resources and network at the disposal of UNITA. Certain assets held in the names of senior UNITA officials had been located in six countries. The three main categories of assets identified were bank accounts, real estate properties and business entities. Offshore financial centres continued to play a major role as havens for UNITA funds and in facilitating financial transactions. The Mechanism had established that, since the announcement of sanctions, the UNITA network had experienced a decrease in liquidity; travel restrictions had proved particularly important in that regard.

With respect to improving the effectiveness of the sanctions, the Mechanism observed that, with few exceptions, measures aimed at enacting legislation to make the violation of Security Council sanctions a criminal offence were very limited. On the other hand, the Southern African Development Community and OAU, among other African subregional and regional organizations, had taken significant measures.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 19 October [meeting 4393], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1374(2001). The draft [S/2001/985] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 864(1993) of 15 September 1993 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 1127(1997) of 28 August 1997, 1173(1998) of 12 June 1998, 1237(1999) of 7 May 1999, 1295(2000) of 18 April 2000, 1336(2001) of 23 January 2001 and 1348(2001) of 19 April 2001,

Reaffirming also its commitment to preserve the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola,

Expressing once again its concern regarding the humanitarian effects of the present situation on the civilian population of Angola,

Recognizing the importance attached, inter alia, to the monitoring, for as long as it is necessary, of the implementation of the provisions contained in resolutions 864(1993), 1127(1997) and 1173(1998),

Determining that the situation in Angola continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Takes note of the supplementary report of 12 October 2001 provided pursuant to paragraph 4 of resolution 1348(2001);

2. Expresses its intention to give full consideration to this supplementary report;

3. Decides to extend the mandate of the Monitoring Mechanism for a further period of six months, ending on 19 April 2002;

4. Calls upon the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) to undertake a review to be completed by 31 December 2001 of the final report of the Monitoring Mechanism, the addendum to the final report and the supplementary report with a view to examining the recommendations contained in these reports and to offer guidance to the Monitoring Mechanism on its future work;

5. Requests the Monitoring Mechanism to provide the Committee within 60 days of the adoption of this resolution with a detailed action plan for its future work, in particular, but not exclusively, on sanctions on UNITA diamonds, violations of arms sanctions, and on UNITA finances;

6. Requests further the Monitoring Mechanism to report periodically to the Committee and to provide an additional report by 19 April 2002;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, upon adoption of this resolution and acting in consultation with the Committee, to appoint four experts to serve on the Monitoring Mechanism and further requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary financial arrangements to support the work of the Monitoring Mechanism;

8. Requests the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) to submit the additional report to the Council by 19 April 2002;

9. Calls upon all States to cooperate fully with the Monitoring Mechanism in the discharge of its mandate;

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

In response to resolution 1374(2001), the Secretary-General, on 24 October [S/2001/1009], informed the Security Council that he had appointed four experts to the Monitoring Mechanism.

Sanctions Committee

The Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 256] concerning the situation in Angola, in a report on its 2001 activities [S/2002/243], stated that it had held 11 formal and 6 informal meetings during the year.

At those meetings, the Committee considered the reports of the Monitoring Mechanism (see pp. 231 and 232), and the Mechanism's activities were summarized in the Committee's report. The Committee Chairman visited a number of countries in Africa and Europe and reported to the Committee on his discussions. Early in the year, the Chairman requested Member States to provide details of action taken to follow up on the conclusions and recommendations contained in the December 2000 report of the Monitoring Mechanism [YUN 2000, p. 158]; as at 31 December 2001, a limited number of responses had been received. On 20 February, the Committee Chairman wrote to the EU and ECOWAS, drawing their attention to concerns expressed by the Monitoring Mechanism regarding possible abuse by UNITA officials of the Schengen Agreement (on lifting of passport controls among EU members) and ECOWAS travel documents. A further request for information was sent to the two organizations on 4 December. On 28 September, the Committee approved an updated list of senior UNITA officials and family members, which was forwarded to all 189 Member States and relevant international organizations, requesting them to inform the Committee of action taken in the light of resolutions 1127(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 106] and 1173(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 108], which imposed representation, travel and financial sanctions. A further request was made in that regard on 4 December. At an 11 December meeting, the Committee stressed the importance of efforts made outside the UN framework for implementing the sanctions against UNITA. In that regard, it expressed its interest in progress being made at the Kimberley Process with regard to conflict diamonds (see p. 52).

The members of the Committee found a broad consensus that, in 2001, the sanctions against UNITA continued to be effective in helping to reach their main objective—preventing UNITA from pursuing its objectives through military means. The Committee reaffirmed the importance of closely monitoring the sanctions with a view to sustaining and improving their effectiveness until conditions in the relevant Council resolutions were met.

Financing of UN missions

In March [A/55/844 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General reported on the financial performance of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola (MONUA), whose mandate expired in February 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 106], for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000. Expenditures totalled $14,231,340 gross ($13,402,740 net), resulting in an unutilized balance of $818,100 gross ($903,800 net) of the amount the General Assembly had appropriated for the liquidation of the Mission. Action by the Assembly was required to decide on the treatment of the unencumbered balance for both the reported period and the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, which totalled $967,600 gross ($116,200 net).

Having considered the Secretary-General's report on MONUA's financial performance, ACABQ, in an April report [A/55/879], recommended that the Assembly accept the Secretary-General's proposals.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 June [meeting 103], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/964], adopted resolution 55/260 without vote [agenda item 129].

Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 626 (1988) of 20 December 1988, by which the Council established the United Nations Angola Verification Mission, 696(1991) of 30 May 1991, by which the Council decided to entrust a new mandate to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (thenceforth called the United Nations Angola Verification Mission II), 976(1995) of 8 February 1995, by which the Council authorized the establishment of a peacekeeping operation (thenceforth called the United Nations Angola Verification Mission III), 1118(1997) of 30 June 1997, by which the Council decided to establish, as from 1 July 1997, the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola, and its subsequent resolutions, the latest of which was resolution 1229(1999) of 26 February 1999,

Recalling its resolution 43/231 of 16 February 1989 on the financing of the Verification Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, and its resolution 54/17 B of 15 June 2000 on the financing of the Observer Mission,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observer Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observer Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Observer Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observer Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to meet its outstanding liabilities,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola as at 30 April 2001, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 75.8 million United States dollars, representing 5 per cent of the total assessed contributions, notes that some 45 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions in full;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Also expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

5. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

6. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

7. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the liquidation of the Observer Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

9. Decides that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Observer Mission, there shall be credited their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 967,600 dollars gross (116,200 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 2000, comprising an unencumbered balance of 149,500 dollars gross and additional requirements of 787,600 dollars net in respect of the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, and an unencumbered balance of 818,100 dollars gross (903,800 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted, by subsequent relevant resolutions and decisions, for the ad hoc apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations, the latest of which were resolution 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and decisions 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999 for the period 1998-2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1998, 1999 and 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999;

10. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their obligations to the Observer Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 967,600 dollars gross (116,200 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 2000 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations in accordance with the scheme set out in paragraph 9 above;

11. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola".

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the financing of MONUA would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464) and that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item at that session (decision 56/458).

Other questions

Comoros

On 21 December, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the item "Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte" and included it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh (2002) session (decision 56/454).

Côte d'Ivoire

In connection with the violence that erupted in Côte d'Ivoire in late 2000 following the presidential elections [YUN 2000, p. 230], Mali, on 9 January [S/2001/25], transmitted to the Security Council President a communiqué from its President, Alpha Oumar Konaré, who currently held the Presidency of ECOWAS. President Konaré, concerned by recent violence, reaffirmed his faith in the political settlement of all disputes and strongly condemned any form of the assumption of power by force.

In February, the Secretary-General established an International Commission of Inquiry on Côte d'Ivoire. The Commission, which stayed in Côte d'Ivoire for two months, found, among other things, that members of the gendarmerie and military had been involved in the deaths of civilians.

Mozambique

In accordance with decision 55/458 [YUN 2000, p. 230], the General Assembly retained for consideration at its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session the item "Financing of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique" (ONUMOZ). ONUMOZ began operations in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 196] and was liquidated in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 368].

On 7 September 2001, the Assembly included the item in the draft agenda of its fifty-sixth session (decision 55/497).

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the item would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464) and that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item at that session (decision 56/458).

Cooperation between OAU and the UN system

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/218 [YUN 2000, p. 231], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/56/489] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU).

A major development that could affect the structure and content of the programme of cooperation between the United Nations and OAU was the coming into force of the Constitutive Act of the African Union on 26 May. OAU would thus be phased out within a year, with the possibility of an extension of the period of transition. Proposals would be evolved on the orientation and structure of the new African Union for the consideration of the member States. That situation posed a number of questions for the programme of action that was agreed upon by the United Nations and OAU in April 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 230], especially those aspects that called for the international community's support for developing OAU institutional capacity in various areas, particularly in conflict prevention, management and resolution. The dismantling of OAU and the establishment of the African Union would require the re-evaluation and possible reformulation of many of the existing cooperation arrangements between the two organizations.

A leadership change also took place in 2001, with Amara Essy replacing Salim Ahmed Salim as Secretary-General on 20 September. The United Nations intended to undertake with the new OAU Secretary-General a review of the UN/OAU programme of cooperation to determine how it could be adapted to support OAU as it developed the structural concept of the African Union.

The Secretary-General noted that the United Nations and OAU continued to expand collaboration in peace and security, an area in which the UN Liaison Office with OAU remained a useful instrument in facilitating communication and consultation. He described cooperation between OAU and the UN Departments of Political Affairs and of Peacekeeping Operations in maintaining peace and security, including providing electoral assistance, in a number of African countries. In the humanitarian area, both the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) maintained regular contact with OAU.

The OAU Secretary-General and the High Commissioner for Refugees signed a revised OAU/UNHCR cooperation agreement on 9 April, which emphasized the need to address the underlying causes of refugee problems by the competent political organs within OAU. The report described collaborative work in economic and social development involving the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) in the areas of environment, population, gender issues and regional cooperation and integration, and the United Nations Development Programme in promoting Africa's economic cooperation and integration and capacity-building for the OAU Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution. Other cooperative activities included public information on HIV/AIDS, especially with the UN Department of Public Information and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). UNESCO also cooperated with OAU in the areas of education and culture.

Other UN bodies involved in the programme of cooperation with OAU included the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Health Organization. The Secretary-General also provided information on collaboration by the International Organization for Migration with OAU.

The programme of cooperation between the United Nations and OAU was one of the most extensive formal arrangements concluded between the United Nations and regional organizations in the world, the Secretary-General observed. Not only had a tradition of regular consultation with OAU on issues of peace and security affecting the African continent evolved, but many of the UN agencies and programmes had developed extensive bilateral programmes with OAU in their various areas of work. The programme of action agreed upon at the April 2000 meeting between the two organizations had provided a valuable framework for the two organizations to work together to address a wide range of issues and problems.

On 9 October [A/56/457], the Sudan transmitted to the Secretary-General the decisions and declarations adopted by the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government at its thirty-seventh ordinary session (Lusaka, 9-11 July) and the decisions of the Council of Ministers at its seventy-fourth ordinary session (Lusaka, 5-8 July).

On 12 November [S/2001/1061], Zambia forwarded to the Security Council President a communiqué issued by the Central Organ of the OAU Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution at its fifth extraordinary session, at the ministerial level (New York, 11 November).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December [meeting 80], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/48 [draft: A/56/L.37 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 21 (j)].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind the decisions and declarations adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-seventh ordinary session, held in Lusaka from 9 to 11 July 2001, in particular decision AHG/Dec.160 (XXXVII) on the establishment of the African Union on the basis of the Constitutive Act and a period of transition from Organization of African Unity and African Economic Community to African Union, to allow for the creation of the organs of the African Union,

Taking note of declaration AHG/Decl.1 (XXXVII), adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-seventh ordinary session, concerning the adoption of the New African Initiative, now called New Partnership for Africa's Development, following the review by the Implementation Committee of Heads of State and Government in Abuja on 23 October 2001 on sustainable development in Africa,

Recalling the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations and the agreement on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, as well as all its resolutions on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, including resolutions 54/94 of 8 December 1999 and 55/218 of 21 December 2000,

Taking note of the declarations and decisions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-sixth ordinary session, held in Lomé from 10 to 12 July 2000, in particular declaration AHG/Decl.4 (XXXVI), the Solemn Declaration on the Conference on Security, Stability, Development and Cooperation in Africa,

Emphasizing the importance of the effective, coordinated and integrated implementation of the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and welcoming in this regard the commitments of Member States to respond to the special needs of Africa,

Taking note of the Organization of African Unity Convention on the Prevention and Combating of Terrorism, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-fifth ordinary session, held in Algiers from 12 to 14 July 1999, and the communiqué issued by the Central Organ of the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution of the Organization of African Unity, at its fifth extraordinary session, at the ministerial level, held in New York on 11 November 2001,

Taking note also of the declaration of the extraordinary summit meeting of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis and other related infectious diseases, held in Abuja from 24 to 27 April 2001,

Acknowledging the need for continued and closer cooperation between the United Nations and its specialized agencies and the Organization of African Unity and its specialized agencies in the peace and security, political, economic, social, technical, cultural and administrative fields,

Acknowledging also the contribution of the United Nations Liaison Office in strengthening coordination and cooperation between the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations since its establishment in Addis Ababa in April 1998 and the need for its consolidation in order to enhance its performance,

Emphasizing the need to implement the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of the substantive session of the Economic and Social Council of 18 July 2001 on the role of the United Nations in support of the efforts of African countries to achieve sustainable development,

Emphasizing also the need to implement urgently its resolution S-26/2 of 27 June 2001 containing the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS, adopted at its special session on HIV/AIDS, and acknowledging in this respect the commitments of Member States to address the special needs of Africa,

Noting the efforts being made by the Organization of African Unity and its specialized agencies and member States in the area of economic integration, and the need to accelerate the process of implementation of the Treaty establishing the African Economic Community,

Noting also the progress made by the Organization of African Unity in developing the capacity of its Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution, and acknowledging in this regard the assistance of the United Nations and the international community,

Stressing the urgent need to address the plight of refugees and internally displaced persons in Africa, and noting in this context the efforts made to implement the recommendations of the Organization of African Unity Ministerial Meeting on Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Africa, held in Khartoum on 13 and 14 December 1998, as well as the endorsement by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its seventy-second session of the Comprehensive Implementation Plan, adopted at the Special Meeting of Governmental and Non-Governmental Technical Experts organized by the Organization of African Unity and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Conakry from 27 to 29 March 2000,

Recognizing the importance of developing and maintaining a culture of peace, tolerance and harmonious relationships based on the promotion of economic development, democratic principles, good governance, the rule of law, human rights, social justice and international cooperation,

Recognizing also the need to improve coordination and harmonization among the various United Nations initiatives established to assist the development of Africa,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the cooperation existing between the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations and, in this respect, the continuing participation in and constructive contribution of the Organization of African Unity and its specialized agencies to the work of the United Nations, its organs and specialized agencies, and calls upon the two organizations to enhance the involvement of the Organization of African Unity in all United Nations activities concerning Africa;

3. Calls upon the Secretary-General closely to involve the Organization of African Unity and its specialized agencies in the implementation of the commitments contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, especially those that relate to meeting the special needs of Africa;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, together with the Organization of African Unity, to take the necessary measures for the speedy and effective implementation of the recommendations of the biennial meeting of the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations, held in Addis Ababa on 10 and 11 April 2000, in particular those priority areas specified in section III of the report of the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

5. Stresses the need for closer cooperation and coordination between the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations in the area of peace and security, particularly with regard to conflict prevention, peacekeeping, peace-making, post-conflict reconstruction and peace-building and support for the democratization processes and good governance;

6. Requests the United Nations to extend full cooperation and support to the Organization of African Unity in the implementation of the Solemn Declaration on the Conference on Security, Stability, Development and Cooperation in Africa, an initiative which creates a synergy between the various activities currently undertaken by the Organization of African Unity and provides a policy development forum for the elaboration and advancement of common values within the policy organs of the Organization of African Unity;

7. Encourages the Secretary-General to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations Liaison Office with the Organization of African Unity;

8. Requests the United Nations, while acknowledging its primary role in the promotion of international peace and security, to intensify its assistance to the Organization of African Unity in strengthening the institutional and operational capacity of its Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution, in particular in the following areas:

(a) Development of its early warning system, including the Situation Room of the Conflict Management Centre;

(b) Technical assistance and training of civilian and military personnel, including a staff exchange programme;

(c) Regular and continued exchange and coordination of information, including between the early warning systems of the two organizations;

(d) Provision of assistance to field missions of the Organization of African Unity in its various member States, in particular, in the area of communication and other related logistical support;

(e) Mobilization of financial support, including through the trust funds of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity;

9. Urges the United Nations to encourage donor countries, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, to contribute to adequate funding, training and logistical support for African countries in their efforts to enhance their peacekeeping capabilities, with a view to enabling those countries to participate actively in peacekeeping operations within the framework of the United Nations;

10. Also urges the United Nations to contribute, where appropriate, to the enhancement of the capacity of the Organization of African Unity to deploy peace support missions;

11. Requests the agencies of the United Nations system working in Africa to include in their programmes at the national, subregional and regional levels activities to support African countries in their efforts to enhance regional economic cooperation and integration;

12. Stresses the urgent need for the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity to develop close cooperation and concrete programmes, aimed at addressing the problems posed by the proliferation of small arms and light weapons and anti-personnel mines, within the framework of the relevant declarations and resolutions adopted by the two organizations, including the Plan of Action on Landmines, adopted at the First Continental Conference of African Experts on Landmines, held at Kempton Park, South Africa, from 19 to 21 May 1997, the Bamako Declaration of 1 December 2000 on an African Common Position on the Illicit Proliferation, Circulation and Trafficking of Small Arms and Light Weapons and the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, adopted by the United Nations Conference on the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, held in New York from 9 to 20 July 2001;

13. Welcomes the intention of the United Nations, set out in section I of the report of the Secretary-General, to review the programme of cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in order to address the needs of the African Union during the transitional period;

14. Calls upon United Nations agencies to continue to cooperate with the Organization of African Unity in order to facilitate the transition from the Organization of African Unity to the African Union, to intensify the coordination of their regional programmes in Africa to ensure the effective harmonization of their programmes with those of the African regional and sub-regional economic organizations and to contribute to creating a positive environment for economic development and investment;

15. Welcomes the leadership efforts of African leaders to develop an African-owned and African-led framework for action towards the sustainable development of the African continent, and calls upon the United Nations system and the international community to support the New Partnership for Africa's Development and the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of the substantive session of the Economic and Social Council, and the enhancement of the capacity of African countries to take advantage of the opportunities offered by globalization and overcome the challenges it poses, as a means of ensuring sustained economic growth and sustainable development;

16. Encourages the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity to collaborate closely in the global fight against terrorism and the implementation of the Organization of African Unity Convention on the Prevention and Combating of Terrorism and the communiqué issued by the Central Organ of the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution;

17. Calls upon the United Nations to support actively the efforts of the Organization of African Unity in urging the donor community and, where appropriate, multilateral institutions to strive to meet the agreed target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance, to implement fully, speedily and effectively the enhanced programme of debt relief for the heavily indebted poor countries, and to achieve the goal of securing debt relief in a comprehensive and effective manner in favour of African countries through various national and international measures designed to make their debt sustainable in the long term;

18. Calls upon all Member States and regional and international organizations, in particular those of the United Nations system, as well as non-governmental organizations, to provide additional assistance to the Organization of African Unity and those Governments in Africa concerned with the problems of refugees, returnees and displaced persons;

19. Calls upon the relevant organizations of the United Nations system to ensure the effective and equitable representation of African men and women at senior and policy levels at their respective headquarters and in their regional fields of operation;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Portuguese-speaking countries

By a 16 April note verbale [S/2001/366], Angola transmitted to the Security Council President the final communiqué of the summit meeting of the African Countries Using Portuguese as an Official Language (PALOP) (Luanda, 10 April).

Chapter III

Americas

During 2001, the United Nations continued to advance the cause of lasting peace, human rights, sustainable development and the rule of law in the Americas. The Organization monitored the political and security situation in Central America, where, despite delays in the implementation of the peace agreements in Guatemala, progress was made in the consolidation of greater democratization throughout the subregion. Peaceful general elections were held in November in both Honduras and Nicaragua.

The United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala (MINUGUA) continued to fulfil its mandate of verifying compliance with the 1996 peace accords between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca. In December, the General Assembly extended MINUGUA's mandate until 31 December 2002. In order to reactivate and speed up the implementation of pending commitments on the peace agenda, the Commission to Follow Up the Implementation of the Peace Agreements defined priority agendas for the State's executive, legislative and judiciary branches.

In Haiti, a political and security crisis continued to stall the implementation of essential structural reforms, which undermined social and economic development. The inauguration of Jean-Bertrand Aristide on 7 February as Haiti's President further polarized political and civil society, leading to major outbreaks of violence throughout the year. The mandate of the International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti (MICAH) ended on 6 February. The United Nations Development Programme assumed responsibility for formulating a post-MICAH transition programme and other UN agencies continued to provide assistance to Haiti throughout 2001.

In November, the Assembly again called on States to refrain from promulgating laws and measures such as the ongoing United States economic embargo against Cuba.

Central America

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/178 [YUN 2000, p. 237], the Secretary-General submitted a September report on the situation in Central America [A/56/416], describing progress achieved by Central American countries in the areas of peace, freedom, democracy and development since October 2000.

The Secretary-General said that the consolidation of democratic systems in Central America continued as elections unfolded peacefully throughout the region. General elections were held in Nicaragua on 4 November; Enrique Bolaños was elected President. A United Nations technical monitoring team provided advice and assistance in the pre- and post-electoral periods. General elections were held in Honduras on 25 November, resulting in the election of Ricardo Maduro Joest to the presidency. For the first time, Hondurans living abroad were entitled to vote following modifications in the Electoral Law.

With the end of armed conflict throughout the region, human rights violations were no longer systematic nor the norm, yet violations did occur and the institutions designed to protect human rights were still weak and required strengthening. In July, a new ombudsman was elected in El Salvador. With a solid mandate from the Legislative Assembly, the new ombudsman should be in a position to extend protection throughout the country and to shape the office and its agenda to play its envisioned role. The growth of the ombudsman's office in Nicaragua was also a source of optimism, as three special ombudsmen had been appointed for women, indigenous peoples and youth, respectively. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights were working with the police on developing a strategic human rights plan for the force.

Human rights compliance and public security deteriorated in Guatemala with an increase in crime, including armed assault and lynchings. There was also a growing incidence of attacks and intimidation against judicial officials, human rights activists and journalists. UNDP promoted the involvement of civil society organizations in fulfilling the 1999 Commission for Historical Clarification's recommendations [YUN 1999, p. 199].

According to the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, the per capita gross domestic product (GDP) for the Central American region, excluding Belize and Panama, grew by only 0.7 per cent in 2000. That trend was strongly influenced by the downturn in the Costa Rican economy. The GDP of El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua in fact increased 3.6 per cent in 2000, having grown by 3.2 per cent in 1999. Although the region's financial situation continued to stabilize and structural reforms were implemented, Central America was still burdened by heavy external debt. Strengthening regional economic cooperation among the countries continued to be a challenge for development in the region. In March, Mexico launched the Puebla-Panama Plan, a comprehensive initiative involving nine states in southern Mexico and all the Central American countries. The Plan envisioned, among other things, new investment in infrastructure, human development, disaster prevention and environmental protection. Heads of State from all the countries involved met in San Salvador in June and decided to implement the Plan.

In March, the Regional Consultative Group of Central America met in Spain to follow up on a similar meeting held in Sweden in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 195]. After extensive consultations, Central American Governments submitted the "Madrid proposal", a strategic framework for the transformation and modernization of Central America in the twenty-first century. In particular, the proposal aimed to enhance development and improve living conditions through sustained economic growth. The areas of focus included the reduction of social, economic and environmental vulnerabilities; transformation of the productive sector; sustainable management of natural resources; and increased civil society participation in development.

Heads of State from every country in the western hemisphere, with the exception of Cuba, met at the Third Summit of the Americas (Quebec City, Canada, 20-22 April) to consider an extensive agenda that included political, human rights and economic issues. Among other things, participants agreed that negotiations on a Free Trade Agreement of the Americas should be concluded no later than January 2005, and adopted a number of resolutions that should provide a firm foundation for the consolidation of institutional human rights guarantees.

The General Assembly of the Organization of American States (OAS) (San José, Costa Rica, 3-5 June) debated and considered a series of proposed reforms to the inter-American human rights system. Central American heads of State attended the Rio Group Summit (Santiago, Chile, 17-18 August) and discussed the economic crisis in Argentina and the widening technology gap between the developed and the developing world.

In early 2001, a series of earthquakes ravaged El Salvador. A severe drought that began in June affected the whole region as large parts of the harvest were damaged or destroyed, causing hunger and disastrous conditions, especially in Honduras and Nicaragua. Throughout the year, several regional initiatives were undertaken to reduce the region's social and ecological vulnerability.

The United Nations continued to support the process of peace-building and development in Central America. In El Salvador, UNDP monitored pending aspects of the 1992 Peace Agreement [YUN 1992, p. 222]. The major outstanding area of the accords remained the Fund for the Protection of the War Wounded and War Disabled, particularly the difficulty in establishing the total number of potential beneficiaries.

In Guatemala, the United Nations continued to verify compliance with the 1996 Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace [YUN 1996, p. 168]. General dissatisfaction with the peace process, increasing public insecurity and an economic crisis provoked escalating social and political tension.

The Secretary-General observed that as important as ensuring the foundations for good governance was the need to improve other human development indicators and combat poverty. Such a national strategy was best situated within a framework of consensus-building, effective participation and political pluralism. It was from the constant interaction of those factors that democratic political culture was built. He added that Central America had been transformed by the strides taken in the last decade. While armed conflict and the consistent violation of human rights had ended, the region had a long way to go before the poverty and structural inequalities that gave rise to conflict were overcome.

Communication. El Salvador transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the Political Agreement between the Government and the associations representing the war wounded and disabled, adopted on 18 December [A/56/804]. The Agreement rectified the shortcomings of the Fund for the Protection of the War Wounded and War Disabled and satisfied the last outstanding commitment for the full implementation of the 1992 Peace Agreement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 December [meeting 92], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/224 [draft: A/56/L.45/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 44].

The situation in Central America: procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace and progress in fashioning a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development

The General Assembly,

Considering the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, particularly resolution 637(1989) of 27 July 1989, and its own resolutions, particularly resolution 43/24 of 15 November 1988, in which it requests the Secretary-General to continue his good offices and to afford the fullest possible support to the Central American Governments in their efforts to achieve the objectives of peace, reconciliation, democracy, development and justice established in the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America" of 7 August 1987,

Reaffirming its resolutions in which it recognizes and stresses the importance of international economic, financial and technical cooperation and assistance, both bilateral and multilateral, aimed at promoting economic and social development in the region with a view to furthering and supplementing the efforts of the Central American peoples and Governments to achieve peace and democratization, particularly resolution 52/169 G of 16 December 1997, concerning international assistance to and cooperation with the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America, and the relevant resolutions concerning emergency assistance to the Central American countries, as a consequence of the destruction caused by natural disasters,

Emphasizing the importance of the development of the Central American Integration System, which has as its main objective the promotion of the integration process, the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America as the integrated programme for national and regional development, which contains the commitments and priorities of the countries of the area for the promotion of sustainable development, the establishment of the subsystem and of the regional social policy, the model of democratic Central American security, and the implementation of other agreements adopted at the presidential summit meetings, which taken together constitute the global frame of reference for consolidating peace, freedom, democracy and development and the basis for the promotion of mutually advantageous relations between Central America and the international community,

Recognizing the considerable success achieved in the fulfilment of the commitments contained in the Guatemala peace agreements, implementation of which is being verified by the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala,

Noting with concern the deterioration in the Central American economies, mainly due to an unfavourable international economic climate and its negative effects on the efforts of the peoples and Governments of the region to achieve sustainable economic development,

Noting at the same time the delays in the fulfilment of some of the commitments contained in the Guatemala peace agreements, which have led the Commission to Follow Up the Implementation of the Peace Agreements to reschedule its fulfilment for the period 2001-2004, and having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the United Nations

Verification Mission in Guatemala and the recommendations contained therein aimed at ensuring that the Mission is able to respond adequately to the demands of the peace process until December 2002,

Taking note with satisfaction of the successful implementation of the peace agreements and the continuous consolidation of the process of democratization in El Salvador, as a result of the efforts of its people and Government,

Recognizing with satisfaction the role played by the peacekeeping operations and observer and monitoring missions of the United Nations, which carried out successfully their mandate in Central America pursuant to the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly, respectively,

Recognizing with satisfaction also the organization and holding of general elections in 2001, in Nicaragua on 4 November and in Honduras on 25 November,

Emphasizing the importance of the end of a critical period in Central American history and the start of a new phase free from armed conflict, with freely elected Governments in each country and with political, economic, social and other changes which are creating a climate conducive to the promotion of economic growth and further progress towards the consolidation and further development of democratic, just and equitable societies,

Noting that the Third Meeting of the States Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction was held in Nicaragua in September 2001,

Reaffirming that the consolidation and establishment of firm and lasting peace and democracy in Central America is a dynamic and ongoing process that faces serious structural challenges,

Stressing the importance of progress in human development, especially the alleviation of extreme poverty, the promotion of economic and social justice, judicial reform, the promotion and safeguarding of human rights and fundamental freedoms, respect for minorities and the satisfaction of the basic needs of the most vulnerable groups among the peoples in the region, issues which have been a primary source of tension and conflict and which deserve to be discussed with the same urgency and dedication as was the case in the settlement of armed conflicts,

Considering with concern that it has not yet been possible to overcome the devastating effects of hurricanes Mitch and Keith on certain countries of the region, which are causing setbacks in the progress made by the peoples and Governments of Central America, a situation which is aggravated by the earthquakes in El Salvador and the drought afflicting the entire region in 2001, especially Honduras and Nicaragua,

Emphasizing the solidarity of the international community with the victims of hurricane Mitch, as demonstrated by the Stockholm Declaration, the subsequent meetings of the Regional Consultative Group for the transformation and modernization of Central America and, in particular, by the meeting of the Group, held in Madrid on 8 and 9 March 2001, at which the requirements of the Central American countries affected by natural disasters, including the earthquakes in El Salvador early in 2001, were considered,

Bearing in mind the efforts made by the Central American Governments to reduce the risks and mitigate the consequences of natural disasters in the region, as demonstrated by the adoption, by the Presidents of the Isthmus, of the Declaration of Guatemala II of 19 October 1999, the subsequent adoption of the Strategic Framework for the Reduction of Vulnerability and Disasters in Central America, as well as the adoption of the Central American Five-Year Plan for the Reduction of Vulnerability to and the Impact of Disasters, 2000 to 2004,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Central America;

2. Commends the efforts of the peoples and the Governments of the Central American countries to re-establish peace and democracy throughout the region and promote sustainable development by implementing the commitments adopted at the summit meetings in the region, and supports the decision of the Presidents that Central America should become a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development;

3. Reaffirms the need to continue to improve the electoral processes that have been taking place in Central America, which are conducive to the consolidation of democracy in the region;

4. Recognizes the need to continue to follow closely the situation in Central America according to the objectives and principles established in the Stockholm Declaration in order to support national and regional efforts to overcome the underlying causes that have led to armed conflicts, avoid setbacks and consolidate peace and democratization in the area and promote the objectives of the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America;

5. Takes note with satisfaction of the results of the meeting of the Regional Consultative Group for the transformation and modernization of Central America which will continue to help to consolidate the transformation and modernization of Central America through the implementation of measures to reform and harmonize the legislation and institutions of the region, and through specific development projects;

6. Reaffirms the importance of the Puebla-Panama Plan as a means of promoting the economic and social development of the Mesoamerican region, and in that connection recognizes the progress made in implementing the Plan and invites the friendly countries of the Mesoamerican region, international agencies and international businessmen and investors to support the Mesoamerican countries in the implementation of the projects prioritized in the Plan;

7. Recognizes the efforts made by the Government of El Salvador to deal effectively with the requirements deriving from the earthquakes in that country early in 2001;

8. Welcomes the valuable and speedy response of the international community to the serious natural disasters which have affected the region, in particular the earthquakes in El Salvador early in 2001, which demonstrates the permanent solidarity that unites the peoples of the world, and also urges the cooperating international community to continue to make the necessary contributions to supplement national efforts to reconstruct the country;

9. Also welcomes the Declaration of Guatemala II which provides for the necessary measures to prevent vulnerability to and mitigate the effects of natural disasters;

10. Further welcomes the progress achieved in implementing the Guatemala peace agreements, calls upon all parties to take further measures to implement the commitments in the peace agreements, in particular with regard to the Fiscal Pact for a Future with Peace and Development, the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples, and the recommendations of the Commission for Historical Clarification, and urges all sectors of society to combine efforts and work with courage and determination to consolidate peace;

11. Requests the Secretary-General, the bodies and programmes of the United Nations system and the international community to continue to support and verify in Guatemala the implementation of all the peace agreements signed under United Nations auspices, compliance with which is an essential condition for a firm and lasting peace in that country, and to consider the implementation of the peace agreements as the framework for their technical and financial assistance programmes and projects, stressing the importance of constant and close cooperation among them in the context of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework for Guatemala;

12. Expresses its appreciation and satisfaction to the people and the Government of El Salvador for their successful efforts to fulfil the commitments set forth in the peace agreements, which have made a substantial contribution to the strengthening of the process of democratization in that country;

13. Recognizes the importance of the Central American Integration System as the body set up to coordinate and harmonize efforts to achieve integration, and calls upon the international community, the United Nations system and other international organizations, both governmental and non-governmental, to extend effective cooperation with a view to improving the competence and efficiency of the Integration System in the fulfilment of its mandate;

14. Underlines the efforts carried out in the Central American region towards integration, such as the Trilateral Declaration between Guatemala, El Salvador and Nicaragua, as well as the Customs Union between those countries, as means for promoting integration while respecting different stages of development, through a pragmatic mechanism open to the participation of the other countries of the region; underlines also the most recent progress in the form of the frontier post in Peñas Blancas, Nicaragua, common to four countries (El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua), which became operational in October 2001; this customs unification, involving twelve frontier posts, entailed bilateral, trilateral and quadrilateral unifications;

15. Encourages the Central American Governments to continue to carry out their historic responsibilities by implementing fully the commitments they have assumed under national, regional or international agreements, especially the agreements for the promotion and safeguarding of human rights, and the commitments to implement the social programme to overcome poverty and unemployment, establish a more just and equitable society, improve public safety, strengthen the judiciary, consolidate a modern and transparent public administration and eliminate corruption, impunity, acts of terrorism and drug and arms trafficking, all of which are necessary and urgent measures for consolidating a firm and lasting peace in the region;

16. Reiterates its deep appreciation to the Secretary-General, his special representatives, the groups of countries for the peace processes in El Salvador (Colombia, Mexico, Spain, United States of America and Venezuela), and Guatemala (Colombia, Mexico, Norway, Spain, United States of America and Venezuela), to the Support Group for Nicaragua (Canada, Mexico, Netherlands, Spain and Sweden), to the European Union and to other countries that have contributed significantly and to the international community in general for its support and solidarity in the building of peace, democracy and development in Central America;

17. Reaffirms the importance of international cooperation, in particular cooperation with the bodies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and the donor community in the new stage of consolidating firm and lasting peace and democracy in Central America, and urges them to continue to support Central American efforts to achieve those goals;

18. Notes with satisfaction the firm determination of the Central American Governments to settle their disputes through peaceful means, thereby avoiding any setback in the efforts to consolidate firm and lasting peace in the region;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to lend his full support to the initiatives and activities of the Central American Governments, particularly their efforts to consolidate peace and democracy through the promotion of integration and the implementation of the comprehensive sustainable development programme, emphasizing, inter alia, the potential repercussions of natural disasters, in particular the persisting effects of hurricane Mitch, for the peace processes and the vulnerable economies of the region, and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution;

20. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the item entitled "The situation in Central America: procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace and progress in fashioning a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development".

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the situation in Central America would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464).

Guatemala

The peace process in Guatemala made little progress in 2001. However, with the aim of establishing targeted sectoral partnerships on urgent topics, the Commission to Follow Up the Implementation of the Peace Agreements submitted priority agendas for the three branches of government. The Congress of the Republic approved some measures provided for in the 1999

Fiscal Pact [YUN 1999, p. 202], such as an increase in some taxes and the strengthening of the State's sanctioning capacity. The approval of those measures polarized the political debate, leading to anti-Government demonstrations. In August, the private sector staged protest strikes, which turned violent in some provinces. The Government, in turn, declared a state of siege in the department of Totonicapán. The Secretary-General's Chef de Cabinet, Iqbal Riza, in a visit to Guatemala in June, tried to reactivate a dialogue among all social and political parties, but to no avail.

The United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala (MINUGUA) continued to verify the implementation of the 1996 Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace [YUN 1996, p. 168], signed by the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca (URNG), and monitored compliance with the 2000-2004 verification timetable [YUN 2000, p. 239]. The calendar established in the 1997 Agreement on the Implementation, Compliance and Verification Timetable for the Peace Agreements [YUN 1997, p. 176] for the period 1997-2000, also signed by the Government and URNG, expired in December 2000. Since much of the peace agenda remained outstanding, the Commission to Follow Up the Implementation of the Peace Agreements rescheduled pending commitments in an implementation timetable for 2000-2004, which recognized that the basis of the Timetable Agreement and the peace agreements as a whole remained valid.

MINUGUA

The mandate of MINUGUA, which was extended to 31 December 2001 by General Assembly resolution 55/177 [YUN 2000, p. 247], included verification of all agreements signed by the Government of Guatemala and URNG, covering human rights, the parties' compliance with the ceasefire, separation and concentration of the respective forces, and disarmament and demobilization of former URNG combatants. The Mission's functions also comprised verifying compliance with the 2000-2004 timetable for the implementation of pending commitments under the Peace Agreements, in addition to good offices, advisory and support services and public information.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Assembly resolution 55/177, the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/56/391] covering the state of implementation of the peace agreements (see below) and the structure and staffing of MINUGUA. It also contained recommendations for assisting the peace-building process and continuing the gradual scaling-down of MINUGUA's operations, especially in 2002.

Since the rescheduling of the pending commitments in December 2000, the peace process made little progress, heightening social polarization and political conflict. In view of the standstill in the implementation process, the Commission to Follow Up the Implementation of the Peace Agreements defined a reactivation strategy that involved preparing and presenting priority agendas for the main sectors of State activity. The agenda for the executive branch included commitments relating to national reconciliation, socio-economic aspects, public security and the armed forces, and human rights and justice. The agenda for the legislative branch called on Congress to consider laws on participation, modernization, the electoral system, human rights, indigenous peoples' rights, social development and other fiscal initiatives. The agenda for the judicial system suggested giving priority to the drafting of a State policy against crime and to expanding access to justice for the entire population. The Secretary-General said that, in 2002, compliance with the rescheduled timetable would have to speed up and important reforms would have to go into effect, such as the amendments to the Elections and Political Parties Act, which would govern the general elections to be held in 2003.

During 2001, MINUGUA had to provide increased support, facilitation and good offices at the request of the parties, in order to exert a positive influence on the prevention and resolution of many local and national conflicts. Among other things, the Mission provided technical assistance to the Presidential Office for Conflict Resolution, the function of which was to coordinate a comprehensive approach to multiple sources of tension. Systematic, across-the-board impunity for crimes and human rights violations remained the principal obstacle to the enjoyment of those rights. At the same time, there was a need to expand access to the media, especially for indigenous people, avoid media concentration and safeguard the public's right to receive objective, unbiased information.

The scaling back of MINUGUA [YUN 2000, p. 240] had an impact on the Mission's territorial deployment, bringing the number of its regional offices down from eight to six and its regional sub-offices down from five to four, and forced it to prioritize its activities, especially verification and institution-building. During the period 2002-2003, MINUGUA would have to meet new challenges, such as the deteriorating human rights situation; the growing climate of conflict in the country's interior; the need to give priority to promoting compliance with the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples; and the tasks of verifying the exercise of political rights and providing technical assistance for the new electoral legislation that would govern the holding of the 2003 general elections. The Secretary-General proposed that the reduction envisaged for 2002 should not affect or alter the territorial deployment planned for 2001 and that all the mobile teams envisaged should be put into operation. Concomitantly, the regional offices would be reinforced by redeploying posts from MINUGUA headquarters. In 2001, MINUGUA headquarters was structured around four substantive areas: human rights; juridical affairs; socio-economic affairs, resettlement and integration; and public security and the armed forces. In 2002, the substantive areas would not include juridical affairs, as the human rights section would take over the verification of the justice system and the juridical affairs section would cease to function. The new human rights and justice section would be responsible for verifying compliance with all the commitments made under the 1994 Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights [YUN 1994, p. 407] with regard to the administration of justice and the right to justice. It would also coordinate with the UN system the monitoring of the overall process of reform and modernization of the administration of justice.

In 2001, the offices of the police and military advisers were merged with the public security and armed forces section and the number of police and military personnel was reduced from 51 to 10 police observers and from 20 to 4 military liaison officers. Of the two special units established on cross-cutting themes, the women's unit would cease to function and its monitoring and institution-building tasks would be transferred to the UN system, while the socio-economic affairs section would maintain a focal point on the agrarian situation and coordinate with MINUGUA. The indigenous affairs unit would become an Indigenous Affairs Advisory Service and a new conflict-resolution and State reform unit would be set up to meet the new challenges posed by electoral reform.

In anticipation of the Mission's withdrawal, a Transition Group, composed of officials appointed by the Secretary-General's Special Representative and by the resident coordinator of the UN system for operational activities for development, would be set up to establish policy guidelines for projects being transferred to UN agencies and provide legal advice.

The Secretary-General observed that 2002 would be decisive for progress in complying with the Guatemalan peace agreements and reiterated the commitment of the United Nations to the peace process. Accordingly, he recommended that the Assembly authorize the renewal of MINUGUA's mandate for a further period of one year, until 31 December 2002.

Verification of compliance

In response to General Assembly resolution 55/177 [YUN 2000, p. 247], the Secretary-General in June submitted his sixth report [A/55/973] on the verification of compliance with the agreements signed by the Government of Guatemala and URNG [YUN 1996, p. 168].

The implementation of the commitments entered into by the two parties was governed by the Timetable Agreement [YUN 1997, p. 176], which expired in December 2000. The Commission to Follow Up the Implementation of the Peace Agreements rescheduled pending commitments in an implementation timetable for 2000-2004 [YUN 2000, p. 239], which recognized the validity of the Timetable Agreement.

The Secretary-General expressed concern about the scant progress made in the implementation of the agreements, citing the lengthy time it took the Government to effect the transition, replace officials in charge of institutions central to the peace process and formulate public policies. An overall assessment of the peace agreements showed that the process of sustainable resettlement and definitive integration of demobilized combatants had not gone far enough and there was still no comprehensive development strategy that would ensure the sustainability of the overall integration of those population groups. In the social development area, huge gaps remained between the indigenous and non-indigenous population, between rural and urban areas and between men and women. The formulation of public policies on such issues as education, housing and health, which in some cases involved consultations with civil society, represented significant progress. On the other hand, the formulation of a policy for sustainable development of production and the creation of institutions capable of promoting it were still in the early stages and progress had been made on only a few specific issues.

The work done by the National Commission for Monitoring and Supporting the Strengthening of the Justice System [YUN 2000, p. 244] had fostered dialogue between civil society and State institutions. However, the justice system's performance showed no signs of significant improvements, especially regarding the investigations of human rights violations. Commitments in the areas of public security, police reform and transformation of the armed forces' role faced the challenges of a society in transition from war to peace. The situation of insecurity and the limitations of the National Civil Police (PNC) continued to be invoked to justify maintaining an active role for the armed forces in public security tasks. That represented a setback in the demilitarization of public security and was not conducive to the strengthening of either civilian power or the police. Fulfilment of the commitments on the armed forces had been uneven, since, although progress had been made in their restructuring and deployment, the commitments on military intelligence and the formulation of a new military doctrine had not moved forward.

The sustainable, equitable development of resettlement areas and the integration of uprooted and demobilized population groups continued to face major constraints. The integration phase for demobilized combatants was still moving very slowly, due, in part, to the lack of progress in complying with other agreements, especially the 1996 Agreement on Social and Economic Aspects and Agrarian Situation [YUN 1996, p. 165]. Some progress had been made in land and housing projects, but projects related to integration in production, health care for the disabled and exhumation of URNG's combatants started very late. The Peace Secretariat continued to implement pilot compensation projects in some departments of the country, but, overall, little progress had been made in compensating victims of human rights violations.

The execution of public spending was slow; it accelerated in the closing months of the reporting period, but only in the education and health sectors. In housing, the effective spending rate was inadequate, owing to lack of access to funds budgeted and appropriated. In 2001, social funds managed approximately 25 per cent of the State's social investment, which underscored the need to completely overhaul them in order to improve investment efficiency and returns.

The concentration of land ownership, low wages and the adverse conditions resulting from the decline in the international price for some of the country's main exports, mainly coffee, continued to challenge the sustainability of the peace-building process. A promising development was the adoption by the Congress of 36 amendments to the Labour Code, which represented major progress in complying with the peace agreements and bringing domestic legislation into line with the recommendations of the International Labour Organization. In addition, the Ministry of Agriculture created a Gender, Women and Rural Youth Unit to add a gender perspective to its work and to promote women's equal access to land ownership.

The modernization of the State, which focused on strengthening social participation and consensus-building, remained a key element in the implementation and consolidation of the peace agreements. The decentralization process, however, experienced uncertainty and considerable delays. In early 2001, the Presidential Commissioner for the Modernization and Decentralization of the State assumed overall responsibility for the decentralization process, in order to better coordinate and accelerate its implementation. The National Women's Forum made great progress in promoting participation by indigenous and non-indigenous women, though it still faced constraints on their participation in development planning forums. Although some progress had been made on taxation and other aspects which improved tax collection by curbing tax evasion, not enough had been done to implement the commitments made in the 1999 Fiscal Pact [YUN 1999, p. 202]. In particular, the Government failed to make progress on issues such as assessment and oversight of public spending and fiscal decentralization.

Public spending in the justice sector increased and considerable efforts were made to give indigenous people access to justice and to recognize their customary law. Public security remained an issue of concern, even though the spending target for it been exceeded. PNC made progress by creating and setting up specialized units and by increasing its efforts to prevent lynchings. However, the units' incomplete territorial deployment and lack of human and material resources undermined their effectiveness. In the reporting period, proposals were made for promoting the formulation of rules and structures for the intelligence services, as well as for their oversight and functioning. The process of formulating a new doctrine for the armed forces was ongoing. The television frequency allocated to the armed forces was reassigned to the Office of the President of the Republic, thereby complying with the corresponding agreement. The redeployment of military units continued and the reassignment of troops would enable available resources to be used more appropriately. The commitment to replace the Presidential General Staff was rescheduled to the first half of 2003.

The Secretary-General observed that substantial, sustained progress on the pending agenda was essential for overcoming the profound social inequalities that existed in Guatemala. Lack of equity in employment, ethnic discrimination, lack of access to basic services and the fact that large sectors of the population continued to live in extreme poverty threatened the gains and sustainability of the peace process. Resolving that situation was the basic prerequisite for guaranteeing peace and eliminating the considerable potential for conflict that still characterized Guatemalan society.

In a later report [A/56/1003], the Secretary-General said that, as of the end of 2001, many of the commitments that had been rescheduled for that year had not been fulfilled. In October, the Productive Projects Trust was set up to deal with the sustainable resettlement of the uprooted population and the integration of URNG's former combatants, but the Government had yet to allocate the necessary financial resources to the Trust. The end of 2001 was set as the deadline for fulfilment of the rescheduled commitments concerning information and intelligence. However, no bills had been drafted for the creation of a civil intelligence department in the Ministry of the Interior, nor had any progress been made on the law that was supposed to establish procedures for the legislative oversight of State intelligence agencies. The Secretary-General noted that PNC, as at December, had met the target of 200,000 members, 12 per cent of whom were indigenous and 10 per cent women.

Human rights

In August [A/56/273], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly MINUGUA's twelfth report on human rights, which described the Mission's activities between 1 July 2000 and 30 June 2001.

During the period under review, the Mission received 352 complaints, compared with 285 during the previous reporting period [YUN 2000, p. 245]. There was a decrease in the number of alleged violations of the rights accorded priority under the 1994 Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights [YUN 1994, p. 407]. Despite the Government's repeated assertions that it was willing to promote a human rights agenda, institutional shortcomings and insufficient action caused delays and impunity. There was an increase in the involvement of municipal authorities in right-to-life violations, especially auxiliary mayors, who were responsible for the bulk of violations, and of former members of the Voluntary Civil Defence Committees, who were mainly responsible for lynchings. There were also further cases of executions by PNC members. On 8 June, the Third Trial Court convicted State agents of Monsignor Juan José Gerardi Conedera's murder [YUN 1998, p. 219] and determined that it had been a political crime. The sentence contained a direct reference to the existence of a modus operandi, tolerated and abetted by State structures, in the planning, execution and subsequent cover-up of Monsignor Gerardi's assassination.

The practice of torture, cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment and ill-treatment persisted. The main characteristic of the period under review was the large number of complaints of threats, harassment and intimidation against persons and institutions working for the protection of human rights, civil servants and persons involved in judicial proceedings, which had been neither investigated nor punished. In some cases of intimidation, political motives could not be ruled out. In other cases, pressure was used to prevent the clarification and judicial punishment of serious violations and offences, especially when they were attributed to State agents. On his visit to the country in May, the Special Rapporteur of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights on the independence of judges and lawyers expressed concern for the security and independence of persons involved in judicial proceedings and expressed regret at the failure to implement most of the recommendations made following his August 1999 visit [YUN 1999, p. 627]. Violations of the right to freedom of association and assembly continued, and the right to freedom of expression was affected by alleged threats against communications media and journalists.

In June, inmates of the Escuintla maximum security prison, including those indicted and convicted in cases that had had a major impact on society, escaped with the cooperation and complicity of most of the prison staff. The escape, a serious setback for efforts to combat impunity, further exacerbated the public's feeling that it was defenceless against crime and discouraged those witnesses, judges and prosecutors who had played an effective role in the punishment of dangerous criminals. At the same time, attacks on police stations, acts of mob violence and lynchings, the release of alleged criminals and serious clashes between communities occurred with alarming frequency, seriously undermining governance in various municipalities.

The influence and involvement of illegal security forces and clandestine structures in criminal activities increased, though the complicity that they enjoyed made them difficult to verify. Clandestine groups also operated within prisons and conducted illegal parallel investigations without proper authorization. The existence of criminal groups within private security companies was also reported. The problem was complicated by the fact that such companies employed over 25,000 people, many of whom were alleged to have committed serious human rights violations. Little progress was made in providing compensation for victims of human rights violations, even though a Commission for Peace and Harmony was set up in June.

In a later report [A/57/336], MINUGUA stated that the armed forces continued to expand their role in public security and other spheres of government action. In November, the Defence Minister, then a general on active duty, was nominated by the President of Guatemala to head the Ministry of the Interior, in charge of PNC. Military and former military officers were later appointed to key positions in the Ministry, the National Security Commission, the prison system, the civil aviation authority and the tourism institute. Also in November, Congress approved the Law on Mandatory Professional Membership, prompting some concerns that it was an attempt to restrict journalists' freedom of expression. However, the Constitutional Court ruled provisionally that there was no requirement of professional membership in order to exercise freedom of expression.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 December [meeting 92], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/223 [draft: A/56/L.42/Rev.1] without vote [agenda item 44].

United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/177 of 19 December 2000, in which it decided to authorize the renewal of the mandate of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala from 1 January to 31 December 2001,

Taking into account the fact that the Government of Guatemala has expressed its commitment to the full implementation of the peace agreements,

Underlining the fact that substantive aspects of the peace agreements have yet to be implemented and that the Commission to Follow Up the Implementation of the Peace Agreements has approved a new schedule for their implementation from 2000 until the end of 2004,

Taking into account that the parties have requested the United Nations to support the consolidation of the peace-building process until 2003,

Taking into account also the twelfth report of the Mission on human rights,

Taking into account further the sixth report of the Secretary-General on the verification of compliance with the peace agreements,

Taking into account the report of the Commission for Historical Clarification,

Stressing the positive role played by the Mission in support of the Guatemala peace process, and emphasizing the need for the Mission to continue to enjoy the full support of all parties concerned,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Mission,

1. Welcomes the twelfth report of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala on human rights;

2. Also welcomes the sixth report of the Secretary-General on the verification of compliance with the peace agreements;

3. Recalls the report of the Commission for Historical Clarification and the recommendations contained therein;

4. Welcomes the commitment made by the Government of Guatemala to the full implementation of the peace agreements through the adoption of social policies anchored to the agreements;

5. Recalls that the Commission to Follow Up the Implementation of the Peace Agreements has rescheduled the pending commitments and included others not initially scheduled;

6. Takes note of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General aimed at ensuring that the Mission can respond adequately to the demands of the peace process until 31 December 2002, as well as of his proposals relating to the changes in the structure and staffing of the Mission for the period 2001-2003;

7. Also takes note of the agreement reached by the parties regarding the importance of the continuing presence of the Mission in Guatemala until 2003;

8. Notes with satisfaction the progress made in the implementation of the peace agreements, in particular the partial fulfilment of the Fiscal Pact for a Future with Peace and Development which establishes the basis for increased public spending on the peace agenda and paves the way for the modernization of the economic system, and stresses the need to complete its implementation, in particular as regards measures to enhance public confidence in Government spending;

9. Also notes with satisfaction the significant reforms introduced in labour laws and the reinforcement of the operational capacities, training and full deployment of the National Civil Police;

10. Underlines with concern the fact that key commitments remain outstanding in the areas of fiscal, judicial, military, electoral and land reform, as well as decentralization and rural development, and therefore urges that those commitments be implemented without further delay;

11. Notes that the consolidation of the peace-building process remains a significant challenge that requires a concerted national effort to guarantee the irreversibility of the peace process;

12. Also notes that the present Government has taken a significant step forward by signing and ratifying various important international human rights instruments;

13. Encourages the Government to implement the recommendations contained in the reports of the Mission on human rights, in particular those related to the systematic impunity for crimes and human rights violations and the alarming increase in incidents directed at individuals working on human rights and judicial issues;

14. Underlines the importance of implementing fully the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples as a key to fighting discrimination and consolidating peace and equality in Guatemala, and highlights the need to implement fully the Agreement on Social and Economic Aspects and Agrarian Situation as a means of addressing the root causes of the armed conflict;

15. Calls upon the Government to implement the recommendations of the Commission for Historical Clarification with a view to promoting national reconciliation, upholding the right to truth and providing redress for the victims of human rights abuses and violence committed during the thirty-six-year conflict, and calls upon Congress to establish, as recommended, the Commission for Peace and Harmony;

16. Invites the international community and, in particular, the agencies, programmes and funds of the United Nations to continue to support the consolidation of the peace-building process, with the peace agreements as the framework for their technical and financial assistance programmes and projects, and stresses the continued importance of close cooperation among them in the context of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework for Guatemala;

17. Urges the international community to support financially, through existing mechanisms of international cooperation, the strengthening of national capacities to ensure the consolidation of the peace process in Guatemala;

18. Also urges the international community to support financially the strengthening of the capacities of the United Nations agencies and programmes as the Mission will transfer some of its activities and projects to these agencies to support the national efforts to comply with the commitments of the peace agreements;

19. Stresses that the Mission has a key role to play in promoting the consolidation of peace and the observance of human rights and in verifying compliance with the revised timetable for the implementation of pending commitments under the peace agreements;

20. Decides to authorize the renewal of the mandate of the Mission from 1 January to 31 December 2002;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, as early as possible, an updated report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session, together with his recommendations regarding the continuation of the peace-building phase after 31 December 2002;

22. Also requests the Secretary-General to keep the General Assembly fully informed of the implementation of the present resolution.

Haiti

During 2001, Haiti continued to experience a political and security crisis, which stalled the implementation of essential structural reforms and undermined social and economic development. The general human rights situation again deteriorated, with growing intimidation and attacks on journalists and human rights activists. The year was marked by several major security incidents, including assaults against the Police Academy in July and against the Presidential Palace in December, followed, in both cases, by violence against opposition members and the media.

The International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti (MICAHA) was closed at the end of its mandate on 6 February. UNDP assumed responsibility for the implementation of a post-MICAHA transition programme and other UN agencies continued to provide assistance to Haiti throughout the year. OAS took the lead in trying to mediate a solution to the political crisis, though little progress was made.

International Civilian Support Mission

In April [A/55/905], the Secretary-General submitted the last report on the activities of MICAHA, covering developments in the Mission's area from 10 November 2000 to 6 February 2001. MICAHA had been established by General Assembly resolution 54/193 [YUN 1999, p. 218] to consolidate the results achieved by the OAS/UN International Civilian Mission in Haiti (MICIVIH), the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti (MIPONUH) and previous UN missions.

The period under review was marked by the holding of the November 2000 elections for President and a third of the Senate [YUN 2000, p. 255] and its aftermath, which saw a concerted civil society effort to promote political dialogue, questionable opposition moves to form an alternative government, and a climate of tension and threats accompanied by intermittent bombings. The elections resulted in a landslide victory for the ruling party Fanmi Lavalas and the election of its leader and former President, Jean-Bertrand Aristide, to the presidency. The opposition parties boycotted the elections over a dispute with Fanmi Lavalas pertaining to irregularities committed during the parliamentary and municipal elections of May 2000 [ibid., p. 253]. After Fanmi Lavalas proposed the eight-point accord with the United States on 27 December 2000 [ibid., p. 255] as the starting point for any dialogue, talks between Fanmi Lavalas and the Democratic Convergence (a 15-member opposition party coalition) started on 3 February, but discussions broke down three days later due to lack of significant concessions by either side. Mr. Aristide was installed as President on 7 February.

MICAHA was closed at the end of its mandate on 6 February and the first group of advisers began leaving on 19 January. The Mission was created with a mandate of 11 months, three of which were lost because of delays in obtaining the necessary voluntary contributions. The brevity of the working period limited MICAHA's overall effectiveness, especially as it was mandated to work in areas where multi-year programmes were called for, such as judicial reform and strengthening of police command. The Mission's ability to be effective was also limited by a difficult and tense political context following the May and November 2000 elections. MICAHA's capacity to contribute to the institutional reinforcement of the justice and human rights sectors, and especially public security, was also hampered by an insufficient determination within the country to strengthen those institutions. Nonetheless, MICAHA contributed to some advances in all of the mandated areas.

MICAHA's programme for the Haitian National Police focused on central command, administrative and control structures, including the Inspectorate General, and the departmental command centres. Activities included developing and putting into place key management and administrative tools and procedures, strengthening decentralized command and management capacities, helping to launch a permanent recruitment programme and drafting a career incentive and development plan for police officers. However, those developments were undercut by, among other things, highly centralized command structures; politicization, demoralization and a wait-and-see attitude; and corruption and involvement of police officers in criminal activity. The Mission also contributed towards the improvement of human rights training at the Police Academy, the Prison Authority's training centre and the Judges School, and supported the drafting of a law defining the Ombudsman's Office mandate and structure.

As work continued on the formulation of a United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) [YUN 2000, p. 254], three working groups were established in the areas of education for all, human resources and access to social services; governance and rule of law; and food security and sustainable rural development. UNDP, in close coordination with the Friends of the Secretary-General for Haiti, MICAHA and the UN Department of Political Affairs, developed a post-MICAHA transition programme, for which funding was being sought. The programme would build on UNDP's ongoing activities related to the rule of law, while consolidating activities initiated by MICAHA. Its five main objectives were: strengthening national capacities in the justice sector; facilitating a participatory judicial reform process; improving access to justice; consolidating the institutional development of the police and prison systems; and strengthening national capacities in human rights monitoring and promotion. Unfortunately, sufficient funding was not found to allow for an immediate handover of MICAHA's tasks.

In a statement to the press on 13 February, the Security Council called on the Haitian authorities and politicians actively to continue their efforts at reconciliation and resolve their differences through dialogue. The Council also encouraged OAS to continue to identify options and recommendations aimed at resolving the political situation and requested UN agencies, especially UNDP, to work with Haitian authorities on the restructuring of the security forces and the judicial system and on strengthening human rights.

The Secretary-General observed that all the UN missions had contributed effectively to the reinforcement of Haiti's democratic institutions and to the respect for human rights, although strong countervailing forces often reduced those gains. He noted that President Aristide had expressed interest in a continuation of UN assistance in projects related to the rule of law. In order to respond to that request, it would be necessary to devise new forms of technical assistance that might better allow the UN system to support the Haitian people. President Aristide had also expressed interest in maintaining the position of the Representative of the Secretary-General with the mandate of facilitating dialogue between the various political actors and promoting peace. The Secretary-General would consult with relevant parties to assess how to respond to that request. Though the democratic process in Haiti had been undermined, the United Nations would continue to support the Haitian people in their difficult transition towards democracy.

On 7 September, the General Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its fifty-sixth (2001) session the item on the situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti (decision 55/489). On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the item would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464).

Post-MICAH activities

In a report to the Economic and Social Council [E/2002/56], the Secretary-General said that on 1 March the Haitian Parliament approved the appointment of Jean-Marie Chèrestal as Prime Minister. Following MICAH's closure in February and the departure of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Haiti, OAS took the lead responsibility for providing international support for the negotiation process between Fanmi Lavalas and the Democratic Convergence on reaching an agreement to end the political crisis. Despite the fact that numerous OAS mediation missions took place throughout 2001, little progress was made.

The UN resident coordinator withdrew from his functions in Haiti in July. In August, the candidacy of a new resident coordinator was presented to the Haitian Government, which gave its approval in December. Prior to his departure, the outgoing resident coordinator had placed significant emphasis on the completion of the UN-DAF document and focused on the implementation of mechanisms for ensuring an efficient post-MICAH transition.

Owing to its special role in the transition phase and its responsibility for providing a degree of institutional memory to the UN system in Haiti, UNDP had continued to follow the development of the political situation through regular contact with OAS. UNDP's transition programme took place under difficult circumstances, marked by, among other things, increased political polarization and the near-complete withdrawal of bilateral donors' support to the rule of law. The post-MICAH transition programme was launched without the allocation of any additional resources and, therefore, it had been impossible to implement the full range of activities originally foreseen. Despite those difficulties, UNDP and other UN agencies continued to provide assistance to Haiti throughout 2001 (see p. 856).

Financing of missions

In January [A/55/753], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly MIPONUH's financial performance report for the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000. Expenditures for the period totalled $18,082,500 gross ($16,952,200 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $559,116 gross ($666,216 net).

In April [A/55/881], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) reviewed the Secretary-General's reports on MIPONUH's financial performance (see above) and on the final disposition of the assets of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti (UNSMIH), which ended in July 1997, the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti (UNTMH), which terminated in November 1997, and MIPO-NUH, which terminated in March 2000 (liquidation phase was completed in September 2000) [YUN 2000, p. 257]. ACABQ suggested that the Assembly should authorize the Secretary-General to utilize an amount of $164,200 gross ($142,900 net) in order to meet the cost of completing the liquidation tasks at UN Headquarters.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 June [meeting 103], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/55/963], adopted resolution 55/269 without vote [agenda item 150].

Financing of the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti

The General Assembly,
Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti and the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1063 (1996) of 28 June 1996, by which the Council established the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti, and resolution 1086(1996) of 5 December 1996, by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission until 31 July 1997,

Bearing in mind also Security Council resolution 1123(1997) of 30 July 1997, by which the Council established the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti for a single four-month period,

Bearing in mind further Security Council resolution 1141(1997) of 28 November 1997, by which the Council established the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti, and resolution 1277(1999) of 30 November 1999, by which the Council continued the Mission until 15 March 2000,

Recalling its resolution 51/15 A of 4 November 1996 on the financing of the Support Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 54/276 of 15 June 2000,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Missions are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Missions, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to continue to provide the account of the Missions with the necessary financial resources to enable them to meet their outstanding liabilities,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti and the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti as at 30 April 2001, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 19.9 million United States dollars, representing 22 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Support Mission to the period ending 30 June 2000, notes that some 65 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding contributions in full;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Also expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

5. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

6. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

7. Endorses the conclusions and observations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

8. Notes that the commitment authority of 2,201,284 dollars gross (1,987,784 dollars net) authorized by the Advisory Committee under the terms of section IV of General Assembly resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994 was not utilized;

9. Authorizes the Secretary-General to utilize an amount of 164,200 dollars gross (142,900 dollars net) from the resources provided for the period ending 30 June 2000 in order to meet the cost of completing the liquidation tasks at Headquarters;

10. Decides that Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Civilian Police Mission shall be credited their respective share of the remaining unencumbered balance of 394,916 dollars gross (523,316 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 2000, in accordance with the composition of groups as set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 31 March 1989 and adjusted by subsequent relevant General Assembly resolutions and decisions for the ad hoc apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations, the latest of which were resolution 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and decisions 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999 for the period 1998-2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999;

11. Also decides that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their obligations to the Civilian Police Mission, their share of the remaining unencumbered balance of 394,916 dollars gross (523,316 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 2000 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations in accordance with the scheme set out in paragraph 10 above;

12. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the final disposition of the assets of the Missions;

13. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti and the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti".

On 7 September, the Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its fifty-sixth (2001) session the item on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Haiti (UNMIH) (decision 55/498).

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the items on the financing of UNMIH and of UNSMIH, UNTMIH and MIPONUH would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464), and that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of those items at that session (decision 56/458).

Other questions

Costa Rica–Panama

Costa Rica and Panama transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a document entitled "Proclamation for peace, human security and demilitarization", which was signed in Panama by the Presidents of the two countries on 29 November [A/56/917]. The proclamation, among other things, called on Latin America's heads of State to work towards the progressive elimination of military forces through their gradual conversion into civilian police institutions.

Cuba–Panama

On 26 October [S/2001/1039], Cuba transmitted to the Secretary-General a background paper on the alleged terrorist activities of Luis Posada Carriles and three other Cuban-Americans. Mr. Carriles and his associates were arrested in Panama in November 2000 as they were allegedly planning to assassinate President Fidel Castro during the Ibero-American Summit. On 14 May 2001, Panama denied Cuba's extradition request.

By a 12 November letter to the Secretary-General [S/2001/1073], Panama replied that Cuba's request for the extradition of Mr. Carriles and his alleged accomplices was denied as inadmissible, since the accused were the subject of judicial proceedings in the territory of Panama and because there was no reciprocity by Cuba vis-à-vis Panama in that regard.

Cuba–United States

In August [A/56/276 & Add.1], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 55/20 [YUN 2000, p. 257], submitted information received from 74 States, the European Union and 12 UN bodies and agencies on the implementation of the resolution, by which the Assembly had called on States to refrain from unilateral application of economic and trade measures against States, and urged them to repeal or invalidate such measures. The preamble to resolution 55/20 had made particular reference to the Helms-Burton Act, promulgated by the United States in 1996, which had strengthened sanctions against Cuba.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 27 November [meeting 64], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/9 [draft: A/56/L.9] by recorded vote (167-3-3) [agenda item 34].

Necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba

The General Assembly,

Determined to encourage strict compliance with the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming, among other principles, the sovereign equality of States, non-intervention and non-interference in their internal affairs and freedom of international trade and navigation, which are also enshrined in many international legal instruments,

Recalling the statements of the heads of State or Government at the Ibero-American Summits concerning the need to eliminate the unilateral application of economic and trade measures by one State against another that affect the free flow of international trade,

Concerned at the continued promulgation and application by Member States of laws and regulations, such as that promulgated on 12 March 1996 known as the "Helms-Burton Act", the extraterritorial effects of which affect the sovereignty of other States, the legitimate interests of entities or persons under their jurisdiction and the freedom of trade and navigation,

Taking note of declarations and resolutions of different intergovernmental forums, bodies and Governments that express the rejection by the international community and public opinion of the promulgation and application of regulations of the kind referred to above,

Recalling its resolutions 47/19 of 24 November 1992, 48/16 of 3 November 1993, 49/9 of 26 October 1994, 50/10 of 2 November 1995, 51/17 of 12 November 1996, 52/10 of 5 November 1997, 53/4 of 14 October 1998, 54/21 of 9 November 1999 and 55/20 of 9 November 2000,

Concerned that, since the adoption of its resolutions 47/19, 48/16, 49/9, 50/10, 51/17, 52/10, 53/4, 54/21 and 55/20, further measures of that nature aimed at strengthening and extending the economic, commercial and financial embargo against Cuba continue to be promulgated and applied, and concerned also at the adverse effects of such measures on the Cuban people and on Cuban nationals living in other countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 55/20;

2. Reiterates its call upon all States to refrain from promulgating and applying laws and measures of the kind referred to in the preamble to the present resolution in conformity with their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and international law, which, inter alia, reaffirm the freedom of trade and navigation;

3. Once again urges States that have and continue to apply such laws and measures to take the necessary steps to repeal or invalidate them as soon as possible in accordance with their legal regime;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the appropriate organs and agencies of the United Nations system, to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution in the light of the purposes and principles of the Charter and international law and to submit it to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the item entitled "Necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 56/9:

Communications. By letters of 26 October [A/56/522-S/2001/1040] and 29 October [A/56/521-S/2001/1038] to the Secretary-General, Cuba transmitted documentation pertaining to alleged terrorist acts committed by the United States Central Intelligence Agency against Cuba.

Chapter IV

Asia and the Pacific

The United Nations addressed major political and security challenges in the Asia and the Pacific region in 2001, especially in Afghanistan, East Timor and Iraq.

In Afghanistan, the military conflict between the Taliban and the United Front continued for most of the year. The restrictions imposed on the delivery of humanitarian assistance and other acts committed by the Taliban, such as the destruction of non-Islamic statues and shrines, further deteriorated an already tenuous relationship between the authorities in Kabul and the international community. The Secretary-General, during a visit to the region in March, called attention to the plight of Afghan refugees and strongly exhorted the Taliban to refrain from destroying non-Islamic statues, but to no avail. However, the 11 September attacks in the United States, carried out by Afghanistan-based Osama bin Laden and his terrorist network Al-Qa'idah, changed the Afghan political landscape. The Taliban's refusal to abide by Security Council resolutions and to hand over bin Laden to the proper authorities brought about a United States-led military intervention (Operation Enduring Freedom), which resulted in the overthrow of that regime. A UN-sponsored conference in Bonn, Germany, attended by various Afghan ethnic groups, laid the foundations for the beginning of a process of transition towards a freely elected and constitutional government. An Afghan Interim Administration, headed by Hamid Karzai, was established in December and the Security Council authorized the establishment of the International Security Assistance Force to help maintain security in Kabul and its surrounding areas. Lakhdar Brahimi was appointed as the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Afghanistan, supported by an Integrated Management Task Force. The United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan continued to promote political dialogue throughout the year, despite the restrictions imposed by the Taliban.

In East Timor, substantial progress was made in the transition towards independence and self-government. The first Constituent Assembly, which was elected in August, recommended 20 May 2002 as the date for independence and started the Constitution-drafting process. The United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor, which had been entrusted with full governing and military power over the territory, guided the transition process by devolving power to East Timorese institutions. The Security Council endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendations for a reduced UN integrated mission in the post-independence period and expressed concern at the continued presence of large numbers of East Timorese refugees in West Timor.

UN activities to verify Iraq's compliance with its weapons-related obligations under Council resolution 687(1991), which brought a formal ceasefire to the 1991 Gulf war, continued to be stalled following the withdrawal in December 1998 of the United Nations Special Commission (UNSCOM) and the International Atomic Energy Agency. The United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission, which assumed UNSCOM's monitoring and verification activities in 2000, was not able to carry out its activities inside Iraqi territory. The United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission continued to monitor the demilitarized zone between the two countries. The Council extended the humanitarian programme in Iraq, based on the oil-for-food formula, and worked on securing improvements to the sanctions regime and on modifications to the oil-for-food programme based on a goods review list. In November, it pledged to adopt such a list for implementation starting in May 2002.

In Fiji, a United Nations Electoral Observer Mission monitored the general elections in August, which represented a major step towards a return to full constitutional democracy following the May 2000 coup d'état. The activities of the United Nations Tajikistan Office of Peacebuilding were extended for another year, until June 2002, in order to continue to support Tajikistan in its post-conflict peace-building efforts.

Among other concerns brought to the attention of the United Nations were the long-standing dispute between India and Pakistan over Jammu and Kashmir; violations reported by Iran and Iraq of their 1988 ceasefire agreement and the 1991 agreement on the area of separation between them; and reciprocal accusations of border violations reported by Saudi Arabia and Iraq.

Afghanistan

Unending war and drought in Afghanistan made 2001 a long and difficult year both for the Afghans and for the United Nations, which had to confront numerous obstacles put in place by the Taliban regime concerning a variety of political and humanitarian issues. However, the 11 September attacks in the United States by Osama bin Laden's Al-Qa'idah terrorist network and the Taliban's refusal to abide by Security Council demands to hand over bin Laden to the proper authorities in order to bring him to justice led to an October military intervention in Afghanistan by a United States-led international force (Operation Enduring Freedom) together with the United Front (UF). The UF, a coalition of Afghan groups opposing the Taliban, represented the Government driven from power by the Taliban in 1996 and was still recognized by the United Nations as representing the State of Afghanistan. On 13 November, UF troops entered the capital, Kabul, and officially brought to an end the Taliban regime, though pockets of resistance continued in other parts of the country.

In October, the Secretary-General reappointed Lakhdar Brahimi (Algeria) as his Special Representative for Afghanistan. Francesc Vendrell (Spain), the Secretary-General's Personal Representative, was also nominated Deputy Special Representative and continued his political functions as Head of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan (UNSM). Mr. Brahimi assumed a leading role in coordinating international efforts to establish a stable post-conflict governing administration and peaceful society. A UN-sponsored conference, convened in Bonn, Germany, at the end of November, culminated in the Bonn Agreement of 5 December, in which Afghan parties pledged to engage in a process of transition to a freely elected constitutional and democratic government. On 22 December, an Interim Administration was established in Afghanistan under the chairmanship of Hamid Karzai.

Following the 11 September attacks, much of the Security Council's attention, and that of the UN system at large, focused on Afghanistan. The Council expressed its support for a transitional administration in Afghanistan, endorsed the Bonn Agreement and authorized the establishment of an International Security Assistance Force to assist the Afghan Interim Administration in the maintenance of security in Kabul and its surrounding areas. The United Kingdom agreed to lead that force for the first three months.

During a visit to South Asia in March, the Secretary-General met with heads of State and senior officials, including Taliban leaders. He focused his discussions on the plight of the Afghan refugees in the countries bordering Afghanistan and on the continued presence of bin Laden in Taliban-held territory. Together with the international community at large, he tried to dissuade the Taliban from carrying out an edict issued by the Taliban leader, Mullah Mohammad Omar, calling for the destruction of all non-Islamic statues and shrines in Afghanistan. Despite that appeal, the order was carried out and two statues of Buddha in Bamian province were destroyed.

During the year, the humanitarian situation of the population of Afghanistan worsened drastically due to the combined effects of chronic poverty, hunger, war, drought, displacement and abuse of civilians. In the months before its overthrow, the Taliban regime hampered the implementation of assistance programmes by restricting access to people in need, especially women.

The Afghanistan Sanctions Committee continued to monitor the implementation of sanctions against the Taliban regime and the Secretary-General submitted four progress reports on the humanitarian implications of those measures. In July, the Security Council introduced a mechanism to monitor the implementation of sanctions against the Taliban, as recommended by a committee of experts established to study how the arms embargo could be monitored and terrorist training camps closed. With the Taliban's collapse, the sanctions framework no longer applied.

Situation in Afghanistan

The situation in Afghanistan during 2001 was described by the Secretary-General in three progress reports, submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 55/174 A [YUN 2000, p. 266]. The first two were issued on 19 April [A/55/907-S/2001/384] and 17 August [A/55/1028-S/2001/789]; the third was an annual report issued in the last quarter of the year (see p. 264). The reports described the political and military developments in the country; the peacemaking activities of the Secretary-General's Personal Representative, of UNSMA and at UN Headquarters in New York; UN assistance and programmes to alleviate the progressively deteriorating humanitarian and human rights situations of the war victims; and UN efforts to curb terrorism within and from Afghanistan, and to reduce the illicit cultivation, production and trafficking of drugs. The annual report also detailed the situation in Afghanistan following the 11 September terrorist attacks in the United States and the military action launched on 7 October.

Communications (23 January–6 April). In identical letters of 23 January [A/55/740-S/2001/70] to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President, the Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Islamic State of Afghanistan reported that a number of new commando and artillery units of the Pakistan Army had been deployed in northern Afghanistan in support of the Taliban–Osama bin Laden coalition and in preparation for attacks on UN forces. The Acting Minister stated that Pakistan's military involvement in Afghanistan manifested its belligerence towards Council resolutions that placed an embargo on military aid to the Taliban and called for the immediate withdrawal of foreign military personnel from Afghanistan.

In a 7 February letter to the Secretary-General [A/55/775-S/2001/121], the President of the Islamic State of Afghanistan, Burhanuddin Rabbani, said that Pakistan had forcibly expelled thousands of Afghan refugee families. Instead of deporting oppressed refugees, he said, Pakistan should prevent the crossing of armed contingents, which continued to enter Afghanistan from Pakistan on a regular basis with the aim of carrying out mass executions. The Islamic State of Afghanistan was ready to put an end to the conflict and to start negotiations with the Taliban under the supervision of the United Nations.

In March, a number of States transmitted communications in which they urged the Taliban not to destroy the statues of Buddha in Bamian (see below and p. 1019).

In a 4 April letter to the Secretary-General [A/55/896-S/2001/346], Pakistan expressed its disappointment that UN agencies had yet to take steps to establish camps and mobilize relief efforts inside Afghanistan to stop the further influx of Afghan refugees into Pakistan. Consequently, it could not accept the intention of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) to allow the registration of refugees at the Jalozai camp without the provision of relief inside Afghanistan, as such registration would only induce Afghans to move in greater numbers to Pakistan.

On 6 April [A/55/897-S/2001/347], Pakistan forwarded to the Secretary-General additional comments on the Afghan refugee issue.

Report of Secretary-General (April). In his 19 April report [A/55/907-S/2001/384], submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 55/174 A [YUN 2000, p. 266], the Secretary-General said that from 10 to 12 March he visited Pakistan as part of a tour in the South Asian region. His stay in Pakistan included a meeting with Afghan refugees in the Shamshattoo refugee camp in the north-western part of the country. During discussions with Pakistan's Chief Executive, General Pervez Musharraf, it was agreed that Afghans who had recently entered Pakistan would be allowed to remain and that, while Pakistan would facilitate the provision of immediate relief assistance to the nearly 80,000 refugees at the Jalozai camp, the UN system would redouble its efforts to provide assistance to Afghans inside Afghanistan in order to discourage further outflows.

In discussions with the Taliban Foreign Minister, Wakil Ahmad Mutawakkil, in Islamabad, Pakistan, the Secretary-General urged the Taliban to reconsider its rejection, following the imposition of further sanctions under Security Council resolution 1333(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 273], of the 2 November 2000 written agreement [ibid., p. 270], whereby the two parties to the conflict agreed to pursue a process of dialogue under his auspices. Other topics covered included the humanitarian situation, the Taliban's progress towards eradicating poppy cultivation and the continued presence of Osama bin Laden in Afghanistan. A considerable portion of the discussion dealt with the order to destroy all statues and other objects of "un-Islamic worship". The Secretary-General asked that implementation of the order be halted and offered alternative solutions to the problem, including the possible removal of the statues for safekeeping outside Afghanistan. Despite that appeal, and many others made by Governments, Islamic ulemas (scholars), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the General Assembly in resolution 55/243 (see p. 1019), Taliban authorities carried out the order and destroyed two statues of Buddha in Bamian province. The Secretary-General said that those artefacts were part of the common heritage of mankind. Moreover, they not only symbolized the multifaceted history of the Afghan nation, but also embodied the values of religious, political and ethnic tolerance—the strongest foundation for a better, more peaceful and tolerant future for all Afghans.

The Secretary-General's Personal Representative for Afghanistan and Head of UNSMA, Francisc Vendrell, continued to pursue his contacts with the two Afghan warring sides and other Afghans, as well as with the Governments of the region, including some members of the "six plus two" group—the countries bordering Afghanistan (China, Iran, Pakistan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan) plus the Russian Federation and the United States.

UNSMAs Civil Affairs Unit continued its efforts to promote peace and human rights awareness in Afghanistan by conducting a regular dialogue with political authorities, engaging various sectors of civil society and observing political, human rights, social and economic trends in the country. The process of consolidating an UNSMA presence in the field had faced renewed difficulties following the closure of the Taliban office in New York in February and what the Taliban perceived as the uncertainty of its liaison presence at the United Nations.

Following the imposition of further sanctions by the Security Council in resolution 1333(2000) and as requested in that resolution, the Secretary-General appointed a committee of five experts to make recommendations on how the arms embargo and closure of terrorist camps could be monitored. On 31 March, the committee began a four-week visit to countries in the region to consult with government officials (see p. 269).

From late December 2000, fighting had been continuous throughout Afghanistan. That indicated that fighting in the country was no longer seasonal, the two sides being better equipped and prepared for winter warfare. Troop movements on both sides and the concentration of units along the main confrontation line and in the central part of Afghanistan suggested that large-scale fighting could be expected to resume in the spring and summer.

During the reporting period, there was further dramatic deterioration in the humanitarian situation. The combination of ongoing war and drought on an already impoverished population was pushing hundreds of thousands of people into destitution. The number of people displaced from rural areas to cities had grown to 500,000, as they searched for food, shelter, security and assistance. A further estimated 200,000 people had sought refuge and protection in neighbouring countries. Of that number, 170,000 had crossed into Pakistan, an unknown number had entered Iran and 10,000 remained on the border with Tajikistan. The strategy of the United Nations and its partners had been to assist families in their areas of origin to help prevent involuntary displacement. Although that strategy had worked well where it could be implemented, the widespread impact of both the drought and the conflict, together with insufficient financial resources, a limited humanitarian presence and the unwillingness of the authorities to provide assistance, had contributed to dismal conditions for the majority of the displaced. In February, the Secretary-General requested his Emergency Relief Coordinator, Kenzo Oshima, to visit Afghanistan to review the humanitarian situation and to highlight critical funding shortfalls. Over $250 million was required to address the tide of involuntary displacement, but only $85 million had been made available as at April 2001 (see also p. 838).

A preliminary assessment of the implementation of the decree banning all opium poppy cultivation in Afghanistan indicated that it was being implemented. However, the ban had brought serious economic and social consequences to the former growing areas, with farmers and their communities bearing the economic burden of the conversion to other types of cultivation. It had also contributed to displacement of people inside Afghanistan and to the influx of new refugees to Pakistan and Iran. The Secretary-General said that, for whatever motive, the Taliban regime had done what the international community had asked: it had drastically curtailed poppy cultivation. It was therefore incumbent on the international community to respond positively to that progress, or face an equally rapid increase in production at the end of the year if farmers were to return to poppy cultivation.

In the first quarter of 2001, the United Nations had been attempting to improve access to protection and assistance for the large numbers of Afghan refugees in Iran and Pakistan and along the border with Tajikistan. In the biggest influx since the early 1990s, more than 170,000 Afghans had sought assistance in Pakistan, the majority arriving during the first months of 2001. An estimated 80,000 were camped out in the open in the squalid Jalozaï camp. In November 2000, Pakistan, which hosted 1.2 million Afghan refugees, had closed its borders and imposed a ban on new arrivals, citing social, economic and security reasons. Permission to carry out any verification exercises had been withheld and the authorities maintained that no additional land could be made available to relieve the intense overcrowding that already existed in the camps. Thus, it was extremely difficult to provide protection assistance to those of most concern to UNHCR. The Secretary-General and General Musharraf, in their discussions in March, agreed on a two-pronged approach to address the refugee problem. The United Nations would continue to expand its assistance activities inside Afghanistan in order to avoid any further involuntary displacement and would remain committed to providing assistance within Pakistan to ensure the protection of genuine refugees. In return, Pakistan would support and facilitate assistance and protection support for refugees. In Iran, negotiations between UNHCR and the Government on a mechanism to identify Afghans in need of protection continued. With regard to the 10,000 Afghans on the border with Tajikistan, UNHCR was negotiating with local authorities to ensure unhindered access, protection at a safe location and the separation of civilians from combatants to allow for assistance to the civilians to continue.

The human rights problems faced by the Afghan people continued to be compounded by the war, by deep-rooted and widespread poverty and by the policies and practices of the authorities. In particular, the situation of women and girls remained unacceptable. The law that banned Afghan women from working in aid agencies, except in the health sector, which was issued by the Taliban in July 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 272], continued to be a major obstacle. It narrowed considerably the ability of the assistance community to reach Afghan women, since only women aid workers could directly reach female beneficiaries. In January 2001, Mullah Omar declared conversion or propagation of conversion of Muslims to Christianity or Judaism punishable by death, an edict that led to restrictions on the activities of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) for fear that their association with the Afghan people might be misinterpreted.

The Secretary-General observed that the situation in Afghanistan had continued to deteriorate and that the humanitarian crisis had reached alarming proportions. Conditions were liable to deteriorate further soon due to the likely increase in the fighting and the continuing effects of the drought. He therefore urged Member States to respond generously to the consolidated appeal for Afghanistan (see p. 838). If humanitarian assistance was not to continue indefinitely in Afghanistan, a new commitment was needed from Member States to find a comprehensive political solution. In the absence of a settlement, no significant voluntary return of refugees and internally displaced persons would occur. While the sanctions were not responsible for the humanitarian situation, the Taliban had sought to blame them, with mixed success among the local population, for the deteriorating internal situation, and had used them as an argument to suspend participation in the UN-sponsored dialogue process agreed to in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 270]. One unintentional fallout from the sanctions was the precarious position of UNSMA's offices and staff working inside Afghanistan, especially since the Taliban had threatened to close the UNSMA office in Kabul.

Communications (26 April-31 July). By a 26 April letter to the Secretary-General [A/55/916-S/2001/419], Kazakhstan proposed, in a document entitled "The conceptual approaches of Kazakhstan to resolving the situation in Afghanistan", that it should assist as a mediator in reactivating the negotiation process by organizing a round of peace talks between the warring Afghan groups in the city of Almaty.

On 14 May [A/55/939-S/2001/481], in identical letters to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Islamic State of Afghanistan declared, in principle, its readiness to attend, under the aegis of the United Nations, the proposed peace negotiations with the Taliban in Almaty.

In a 31 May letter [A/55/980-S/2001/553], Sweden, on behalf of the European Union (EU), informed the Secretary-General that Mullah Omar had ordered all Hindus in Afghanistan to wear identity marks. The EU stressed that forcing persons belonging to ethnic and religious minorities to wear distinctive clothing or identity marks was a form of discrimination prohibited by international human rights law.

By identical letters of 1 June to the Secretary-General and the Council President [A/55/978-S/2001/549], Afghanistan's representative to the United Nations transmitted a letter from the Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, stating that Pakistan continued to supply arms to the Taliban and to provide them with planning, logistical and recruitment support. In addition, Pakistan maintained in Afghanistan thousands of military personnel, armed nationals belonging to numerous Pakistan-based extremist organizations and volunteers from religious schools called the Madrasa, who were fighting alongside the Taliban mercenaries.

On 25 July [A/55/1021-S/2001/735], Mali transmitted to the Secretary-General the texts of the final communiqué and resolutions adopted at the twenty-eighth session of the Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Bamako, Mali, 25-27 June). The Conference, among other things, emphasized the impossibility of resolving the Afghan problem by military means and called on the Afghan parties to the conflict to put an end to hostilities. It also called on all States to refrain from providing weapons and ammunition to all Afghan parties. Member States and Islamic institutions were urged to extend assistance to the Afghan refugees in Pakistan and Iran.

Report of Secretary-General (August). In his 17 August report [A/55/1028-S/2001/789], the Secretary-General stated that his Personal Representative had been in frequent contact with the two warring sides, but there had been no talks, direct or indirect, between them. He also described contacts with non-belligerent Afghans and concerned Governments and noted that there had been a plethora of diplomatic activities related to Afghanistan since April. However, fighting had intensified since the beginning of May and the humanitarian situation had reached alarming proportions owing to the combined effects of 22 years of conflict and the worst drought in living memory. He observed that, after so many years of fruitless endeavours, the Security Council might wish to consider adopting a comprehensive approach to the settlement of the situation in Afghanistan, in its political, military, humanitarian and human rights dimensions, setting forth the basic requirements for a settlement of the conflict and the principles on which it should be based, together with a coherent strategy to achieve those objectives, including incentives and disincentives.

Communications (August). On 28 August [S/2001/829], Iran informed the Secretary-General that the Taliban, using armed forces and military equipment, had violated the Iranian border on 27 August and taken an Iranian border kiosk onto Afghan territory.

By a 31 August letter to the Secretary-General [A/56/332-S/2001/841], Pakistan denied that it was ejecting Afghan refugees from the Jalozai or Shamshattoo camps, where a joint screening by Pakistani officials and UNHCR was taking place. However, Pakistan was not in a position to absorb any further flows of Afghan refugees and it called on the international community to provide relief to displaced Afghans inside Afghanistan.

Post-11 September developments

Following the 11 September terrorist attacks in the United States (see p. 60), the United Kingdom and the United States informed the Security Council President that they had compelling information that Osama bin Laden and the Al-Qa'idah terrorist network, supported by the Taliban regime in Afghanistan, bore responsibility for the attacks and posed an ongoing threat (see p. 64). On 7 October [S/2001/946], the United States reported to the Council President that, in accordance with Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations, it had, together with other States, initiated action to prevent or deter further attacks on the United States, including measures against Al-Qa'idah terrorist training camps and Taliban military installations in Afghanistan (see p. 65).

Special Representative. In identical letters of 3 October to the Presidents of the General Assembly and the Security Council [A/56/432-S/2001/934], the Secretary-General said that, in view of the grave humanitarian and political situation affecting Afghanistan and the surrounding region, it was his intention to reappoint Lakhdar Brahimi (Algeria) as his Special Representative for Afghanistan, with overall authority for the humanitarian, political and rehabilitation endeavours of the United Nations in that country. The Special Representative would be supported by the two existing pillars of the UN system responsible for activities in Afghanistan: UNSMA and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs. Mr. Brahimi's terms of reference were annexed to the letter. In 1999, the Secretary-General had decided to freeze Mr. Brahimi's activities as Special Envoy until conditions warranted his renewed intervention [YUN 1999, p. 262].

On 4 October [S/2001/937], the Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention.

Communications (13 September-26 October). In identical letters of 13 September to the Secretary-General and the Council President [A/56/365-S/2001/870], the President of the Islamic State of Afghanistan, Mr. Rabbani, said that, after the terrorist attacks of 11 September and the 9 September assassination of Vice-President and Minister of Defence Ahmad Shah Massoud, the time had come for the international community to consider all aspects of terrorism in the Taliban-occupied territories and to put effective pressure on Pakistan, the Taliban's main backer, to cease immediately its aggression in Afghanistan. There was also a need to close down all terrorist training camps and centres of indoctrination within Pakistan, especially religious schools, so as to end the teaching of bigotry and hatred against humanity, which ran counter to Islam's genuine message. President Rabbani proposed the convening of a special meeting of the Security Council to address the presence of foreign military and armed personnel in Afghanistan.

On 8 October [S/2001/967], Belgium, on behalf of the EU, drew the Secretary-General's attention to the statement of the EU General Affairs Council, which said that all the information pointed clearly and convincingly to the responsibility of Osama bin Laden and the Al-Qa'idah network for the 11 September terrorist attacks in the United States. The Taliban regime had refused to take responsibility for handing over those suspected so that they could be brought to justice. The Taliban and Al-Qa'idah were now facing the consequences of their action. The EU stressed that the carefully targeted action launched on 7 October was an attack neither against Islam nor against the people of Afghanistan. The military action was one part of a wider multilateral strategy that involved a comprehensive assault on the organizations and financing structures that underpinned terrorism.

On 26 October [S/2001/1018], the text of the statement adopted at the meeting of heads of State of the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and the Islamic State of Afghanistan (Dushanbe, Tajikistan, 22 October) was transmitted to the Secretary-General. The participants stated that an essential precondition for the transfer of the resolution of the situation in Afghanistan to the political channel was the unconditional fulfilment of the demands set forth by the anti-terrorist coalition, including the handover of those responsible for the 11 September terrorist attacks in the United States, the removal of the Taliban regime, and the disbandment and complete disarmament of its armed units. Tajikistan and Russia confirmed their readiness to support Afghanistan in its struggle against the Taliban regime.

Establishment of transitional administration

Six plus two group. On 12 November, Foreign Ministers and senior representatives of the "six plus two" group—the countries bordering Afghanistan (China, Iran, Pakistan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan) plus the Russian Federation and the United States—held a meeting in New York under the chairmanship of the Secretary-General. The meeting concluded with the adoption of a joint statement [A/56/681-S/2001/1157, annex], in which the members pledged their support to efforts of the Afghan people to find a political solution to the crisis and agreed that a broad-based, multi-ethnic, politically balanced, freely chosen administration should be established in Afghanistan. They welcomed the central role of the United Nations in assisting the Afghan people and pledged continued support for the Organization's humanitarian efforts to alleviate their suffering, both inside the country and in refugee camps in neighbouring countries.

Security Council consideration. On 13 November [meeting 4414], the Security Council discussed the situation in Afghanistan. With the Council's consent, the President invited, at their request, representatives of Afghanistan, Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Canada, Egypt, Germany, India, Indonesia, Iran, Italy, Japan, Kazakhstan, Malaysia, Mexico, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, the Republic of Korea, Tajikistan, Turkey and Uzbekistan to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. He also invited the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan, Mr. Brahimi, to brief the Council on latest developments.

In his opening statement, the Secretary-General said that the 11 September terrorist attacks in the United States and the consequent military action in Afghanistan had created a new environment that presented daunting challenges to the international community, but also new opportunities. First and foremost, the humanitarian needs of the Afghan people had to be met, especially since winter was closing in, and thus there was a need to feed and shelter as many people as possible. Next, urgent action had to be taken to avoid a political and security vacuum in the post-Taliban period. A stable Afghanistan, living in peace, carrying out its international obligations and posing no threat to its neighbours, had to be the international community's common objective. To achieve it, any arrangement arrived at had to reflect the will, needs and interests of the Afghan people. That required the end of interference in Afghanistan's affairs by neighbouring countries, without which there could be little hope of lasting stability in Afghanistan. The Secretary-General added that UN agencies and NGOs had stepped up cross-border delivery and distribution of food and non-food assistance, though many areas, particularly in the north, remained inaccessible.

Mr. Brahimi said that the united international reaction to the 11 September terrorist attacks had transformed the conditions for international action in Afghanistan. During his visit to Pakistan, Iran and Saudi Arabia in late October, he held talks with heads of State, senior officials and Afghan groups and individuals, including women and students. Presidents Pervez Musharraf of Pakistan and Mohammad Khatami of Iran had stated that they would like the United Nations to play a pivotal role in the process of finding a political solution, one that would prevent Afghanistan from being used again as a breeding and staging ground for acts of terror. The six plus two group, at a 12 November meeting (see above), had also confirmed that a broad-based, multi-ethnic, politically balanced and freely chosen Afghan administration should be established.

Mr. Brahimi said that consensus among Afghanistan's neighbours was essential; without it, Afghans themselves would find it extremely difficult to achieve a durable solution. The international community also would need to make a massive political and financial commitment to the long-term stability of Afghanistan. It was therefore necessary to strengthen other mechanisms for multilateral cooperation and coordination in Afghanistan. The United Nations had, over the years, convened several groups of interested countries in addition to the six plus two group, such as the Group of 21, which comprised a broader range of countries that had been directly or indirectly affected by the Afghan crisis and could help contribute to its resolution. Mr. Brahimi was of the view that the Group of 21 should be reactivated and reinvigorated. The United Nations also participated in the Afghanistan Support Group convened by donor countries, the Geneva Initiative in support of peace efforts seeking to legitimize a transition through a loya jirga

(the Afghan council of elders) and other initiatives.

Mr. Brahimi stressed that the strategic objective of the international community's efforts was to help the people of Afghanistan to establish a responsible, representative, accountable Government; to promote respect for human rights; to foster good relations between Afghanistan and its neighbours; and to ensure that Afghanistan would never be used again as a breeding and staging ground for terrorists or drug traffickers. There was agreement among Afghan parties, and in the international community, on the goal of creating a broad-based Government that would be representative of all groups in the country, accountable to its citizens and friendly to its neighbours. The difficulty was in securing agreement among interested parties to design a series of concrete steps to reach that goal. The bitter experience of the previous 10 years had shown that the solution had to be carefully put together and home-grown so that it enjoyed the support of all internal and external players.

Discussions among Afghans themselves on how to achieve those objectives were taking place in many forums both inside and outside Afghanistan, including between former Afghan King Mohammad Zahir Shah and representatives of the United Islamic and National Front for the Salvation of Afghanistan (the Northern Alliance) and within the Cyprus process and at the Peshawar Conference (see p. 265). In those forums, Afghans had proposed a series of steps and mechanisms to establish a transitional administration that would pave the way for a stable Government, a common theme of which had been the emphasis on the convening role of the United Nations in order to bring the parties together. Mr. Brahimi said the Secretary-General was of the view that, instead of continuing with shuttle diplomacy, the Northern Alliance and the representatives of the existing initiatives should meet with the United Nations as early as possible so that a common framework could be created and enlarged to allow for fair representation for all Afghan communities.

Mr. Brahimi suggested, therefore, that the approach to solve the Afghan crisis could follow a sequence of events: the United Nations would convene a meeting of the Northern Alliance's representatives and existing processes to agree on a framework for the process of political transition; the meeting would suggest concrete steps for the convening of a provisional council—to be composed of a fairly large and representative group of Afghans drawn from all ethnic and regional communities, and chaired by an individual recognized as a symbol of national unity—the credibility and legitimacy of which would be enhanced by the participation of those individuals and groups, including women, who had not been engaged in armed conflict; the provisional council would propose the composition of a transitional administration and a programme of action for the period of political transition, to last no more than two years, and arrangements for security; an emergency loya jirga would then be convened to approve the transitional administration, its programme of action and proposals for security, and to authorize the transitional administration to prepare a constitution; and the transitional phase would result in the convening of a second loya jirga, which would approve the constitution and create the Government of Afghanistan.

For the Government to be sustainable, Afghans themselves had to be engaged in creating institutions and good governance. Working with UN agencies and international and local NGOs had given many Afghans wide experience in managing accountable organizations. There was also significant capacity among a new generation of Afghans in the diaspora, particularly in Iran and Pakistan. It was those Afghans who could help constitute a transitional administration that would be far more credible, acceptable and legitimate in the eyes of the country's population than a transitional administration run by the United Nations or another constellation of foreigners. Parachuting a large number of international experts into Afghanistan could overwhelm the nascent transitional administration and interfere with the building of local capacity.

However, without genuine and lasting security nothing would be possible. Even in a political settlement among Afghans, the parties could not ensure security on their own. The pervasive presence of non-Afghan armed and terrorist groups with no interest in a lasting peace would necessitate the introduction of a robust security force, able to deter and, if possible, defeat challenges to its authority. Three options were available for such a force, presented in order of desirability: an all-Afghan security force; a multinational force; or a UN peacekeeping force. Although work to establish an all-Afghan force should start as early as possible, it was unlikely that it could be constituted in the near term, which suggested that consideration would need to be given to the deployment of a national security presence that, if adequately trained and armed, could ensure security in the major city and preserve the political space in which negotiations towards the resolution of many problems could proceed.

An armed UN peacekeeping force was not recommended. The Secretary-General would require several months to obtain from Member States sufficient numbers of troops to pose a credible military deterrent and, subsequently, to deploy them. Furthermore, UN peacekeepers had proved most successful when deployed to implement an existing political settlement among willing parties, not to serve as a substitute for one.

As far as the humanitarian situation was concerned (see also p. 838), the challenge was clear: it was necessary to ship to the country, and distribute, at least 52,000 tonnes of food per month over the forthcoming months. The international community had to provide health care for 7.5 million people and shelter for over 1 million internally displaced persons, and to provide protection for those at risk from persecution. During the first week of November, the United Nations and its partners had improved the delivery of humanitarian aid to Afghanistan, though the challenges remained immense. Of special concern was the almost complete lack of information on new internal displacement.

Mr. Brahimi observed that the reconstruction of Afghanistan was going to be key in bringing peace and stability and was at the heart of the political transition. It would also provide opportunities for the absorption of large numbers of men engaged in war and opportunities for Afghan women. However, reconstruction would require a clear strategy and the subordination of the interests of individual agencies or donors to the overall agenda of peace and stability.

Addressing the Council, the United States said that all Member States had to support the United Nations in its efforts to bring Afghans together to form an interim authority in the liberated areas. That authority had to be representative of and acceptable to Afghans and had to be supported by all Member States, especially the countries of the region. An international presence had to be re-established as soon as possible. The United States called for restraint on the part of the Afghan liberation forces as they took up their new positions and continued their offensive.

The Russian Federation said that the United Nations should play the central role in facilitating the transformation of Afghanistan into a stable and prosperous State—not only because averting the threat to regional and international security emanating from the Taliban-controlled territory fell within the purview of the Security Council and the General Assembly, but also because only within the context of the United Nations could practical solutions, acceptable to all parties, be found, thereby ensuring the parties' cooperation in the peace process.

Pakistan endorsed the four-step approach proposed by Mr. Brahimi. However, it stressed that speed was of the essence. Withdrawal of the Taliban from Kabul had created a dangerous political vacuum. Unless the United Nations was able to put together a political dispensation that was representative of all segments of the Afghan population, conflict and turmoil would continue to afflict Afghanistan.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 14 November [meeting 4415], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1378 (2001). The draft [S/2001/1075] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions on Afghanistan, in particular resolutions 1267(1999) of 15 October 1999, 1333(2000) of 19 December 2000 and 1363(2001) of 30 July 2001,

Supporting international efforts to root out terrorism, in keeping with the Charter of the United Nations, and reaffirming also its resolutions 1368(2001) of 12 September 2001 and 1373(2001) of 28 September 2001,

Recognizing the urgency of the security and political situation in Afghanistan in the light of the most recent developments, particularly in Kabul,

Condemning the Taliban for allowing Afghanistan to be used as a base for the export of terrorism by the Al-Qa'idah network and other terrorist groups and for providing safe haven to Osama bin Laden, Al-Qa'idah and others associated with them, and in this context supporting the efforts of the Afghan people to replace the Taliban regime,

Welcoming the intention of the Special Representative to convene an urgent meeting of the various Afghan processes at an appropriate venue and calling on the United Front and all Afghans represented in those processes to accept his invitation to that meeting without delay, in good faith and without preconditions,

Welcoming the Declaration on the Situation in Afghanistan by the Foreign Ministers and other Senior Representatives of the Six plus Two of 12 November 2001, as well as the support being offered by other international groups,

Taking note of the views expressed at the meeting of the Security Council on the situation in Afghanistan on 13 November 2001,

Endorsing the approach outlined by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General at the meeting of the Security Council on 13 November 2001,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan,

Deeply concerned by the grave humanitarian situation and the continuing serious violations by the Taliban of human rights and international humanitarian law,

1. Expresses its strong support for the efforts of the Afghan people to establish a new and transitional administration leading to the formation of a government, both of which:

- Should be broad-based, multi-ethnic and fully representative of all the Afghan people and committed to peace with Afghanistan's neighbours,
  - Should respect the human rights of all Afghan people, regardless of gender, ethnicity or religion,
  - Should respect Afghanistan's international obligations, including by cooperating fully in international efforts to combat terrorism and illicit drug trafficking within and from Afghanistan, and
  - Should facilitate the urgent delivery of humanitarian assistance and the orderly return of refugees and internally displaced persons, when the situation permits;
2. Calls upon all Afghan forces to refrain from acts of reprisal, to adhere strictly to their obligations under human rights and international humanitarian law, and to ensure the safety and security and freedom of movement of United Nations and associated personnel, as well as personnel of humanitarian organizations;
3. Affirms that the United Nations should play a central role in supporting the efforts of the Afghan people to establish urgently such a new and transitional administration leading to the formation of a new government and expresses its full support for the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in the accomplishment of his mandate, and calls on Afghans, both within Afghanistan and among the Afghan diaspora, and Member States to cooperate with him;
4. Calls upon Member States to provide:
- Support for such an administration and government, including through the implementation of quick-impact projects,
  - Urgent humanitarian assistance to alleviate the suffering of Afghan people both inside Afghanistan and Afghan refugees, including in demining, and
  - Long-term assistance for the social and economic reconstruction and rehabilitation of Afghanistan and welcomes initiatives towards this end;
5. Encourages Member States to support efforts to ensure the safety and security of areas of Afghanistan no longer under Taliban control, and in particular to ensure respect for Kabul as the capital for all the Afghan people, and especially to protect civilians, transitional authorities, United Nations and associated personnel, as well as personnel of humanitarian organizations;
6. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Bonn Agreement

A UN-sponsored conference on Afghanistan (the Bonn Conference) took place in Bonn from 27 November to 5 December. Attended by delegations representing different Afghan groups, the Conference culminated in the signing of the Agreement on provisional arrangements in Afghanistan pending the re-establishment of permanent government institutions, which the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council on 5 December [S/2001/1154].

The implementation period of the Agreement was envisaged to last for two to three years and was intended to lead to a full-fledged government, chosen freely by the entire Afghan electorate. The Interim Authority would be succeeded by a Transitional Authority, selected through an emergency loya jirga that would convene within six months of the establishment of the Interim Authority. The participants in the loya jirga would be drawn from all segments of society, and the representation of women and all ethnic and religious communities would be ensured. The Transitional Authority would lead Afghanistan until a fully representative government could be elected through free and fair elections, which were to be held no later than two years after the date of the convening of the emergency loya jirga. A constitutional loya jirga to ratify a new constitution would convene within 18 months of the establishment of the Transitional Authority. The parties to the Agreement also called for the deployment of an international security force to assist in the maintenance of security for Kabul and its surrounding areas. Such a force could be progressively expanded to other urban centres and areas. Among other things, the Agreement provided for the establishment of a number of commissions, namely, a special independent commission for the convening of the emergency loya jirga, a human rights commission, a civil service commission and a judicial commission.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 4434], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1383 (2001). The draft [S/2001/1153] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions on Afghanistan, in particular its resolution 1378(2001) of 14 November 2001,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan,

Stressing the inalienable right of the Afghan people themselves freely to determine their own political future,

Determined to help the people of Afghanistan to bring to an end the tragic conflicts in Afghanistan and promote national reconciliation, lasting peace, stability and respect for human rights, as well as to cooperate with the international community to put an end to the use of Afghanistan as a base for terrorism,

Welcoming the letter of 5 December 2001 from the Secretary-General informing the Council of the signature in Bonn on 5 December 2001 of the Agreement on provisional arrangements in Afghanistan pending the re-establishment of permanent government institutions,

Noting that the provisional arrangements are intended as a first step towards the establishment of a broad-based, gender sensitive, multi-ethnic and fully representative government,

1. Endorses the Agreement on provisional arrangements in Afghanistan pending the re-establishment of permanent government institutions as reported in the Secretary-General's letter of 5 December 2001;

2. Calls upon all Afghan groups to implement this Agreement in full, in particular through full co-operation with the Interim Authority which is due to take office on 22 December 2001;

3. Reaffirms its full support to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and endorses the missions entrusted to him in annex 2 of the above-mentioned Agreement;

4. Declares its willingness to take further action, on the basis of a report by the Secretary-General, to support the interim institutions established by the above-mentioned Agreement and, in due course, to support the implementation of the Agreement and its annexes;

5. Calls upon all Afghan groups to support full and unimpeded access by humanitarian organizations to people in need and to ensure the safety and security of humanitarian workers;

6. Calls upon all bilateral and multilateral donors, in coordination with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, United Nations agencies and all Afghan groups, to reaffirm, strengthen and implement their commitment to assist with the rehabilitation, recovery and reconstruction of Afghanistan, in coordination with the Interim Authority and as long as the Afghan groups fulfil their commitments;

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications (27 November–18 December). In letters of 27 November to the Secretary-General [A/56/657-S/2001/1114, A/56/658-S/2001/1115], Qatar expressed concern about the fate of Arabs and others in Afghanistan. It called on the Northern Alliance to treat captured Taliban fighters and other groups as prisoners of war.

On 7 December [A/56/693-S/2001/1169], the Russian Federation transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the statement by the heads of State of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) on the situation in Afghanistan, adopted on 30 November in Moscow. CIS assessed positively the conduct of the anti-terrorist operation by the international coalition in Afghanistan and noted that its coordination with UN forces had made it possible to strike a serious blow at the infrastructure of terrorism and extremism inside Afghanistan. CIS advocated that the struggle against global terrorism should be conducted on a comprehensive and long-term basis in accordance, first and foremost, with the Charter of the United Nations. In order to eradicate the hotbeds of instability in Afghanistan, it was necessary to combine, in a flexible manner, measures based on force and political, legal and economic measures in order to bring pressure to bear on the sources of the terrorist, extremist and drug threats. CIS declared its support for the process of a political settlement in Afghanistan, under the auspices of the United Nations, leading to the replacement of the Taliban regime and to the formation in the country of a multi-ethnic and broadly representative government.

On 10 December [A/56/691], the Islamic State of Afghanistan transmitted to the Secretary-General a newspaper article published in the United States entitled "Pakistan ended aid to Taliban only hesitantly".

On 18 December [A/56/719-S/2001/1213], Uzbekistan expressed its support for UN efforts to bring about peace and a stable situation in Afghanistan and for the Bonn Agreement and the establishment of a provisional administration. As part of Uzbekistan's efforts to facilitate the provision of humanitarian assistance to the Afghan people, approximately 6,000 tons of various humanitarian supplies had been transported into Afghanistan from its territory. Uzbekistan expressed concern that large arsenals of military equipment remained at the disposal of various uncontrollable groups and armed units within Afghanistan.

Report of Secretary-General (December). In his 6 December annual report on the situation in Afghanistan [A/56/681-S/2001/1157], which covered developments since the issuance of his 20 November 2000 annual report [YUN 2000, p. 269] until 15 November 2001, the Secretary-General stated that, since the terrorist attacks of 11 September, much of his attention, and that of the UN system at large, had been focused on Afghanistan. An Integrated Management Task Force had been established to support Mr. Brahimi in his efforts as Special Representative. The Secretary-General's Personal Representative, Mr. Vendrell, would continue his political functions as Deputy Special Representative and Head of UNSMA.

The Secretary-General again described the situation in Afghanistan during the first half of 2001, as outlined in his earlier reports (see pp. 256 and 258). With regard to the United States-led coalition air strikes that began on 7 October, the Secretary-General reported that the first week of precision engagement was conducted by night, targeting mainly air defence and command centres. That was followed by daytime flights, after which strikes were conducted against concentrations of Taliban troops along the main confrontation line. On 9 November, UN troops captured the city of Mazar-e-Sharif and started a southern drive towards the capital, Kabul, which they occupied without a battle on 13 November, since the Taliban had already abandoned the city.

Since his reappointment on 3 October 2001, the Special Representative for Afghanistan, Mr. Brahimi, had undertaken numerous contacts with a wide range of Afghans and concerned Governments in order to accelerate the political process in the light of the rapidly changing circumstances. In addition to meeting with heads of State, Foreign Ministers and other senior officials in Saudi Arabia, Pakistan and Iran during a visit to the region from 27 October to 7 November, he also went to Rome, where he met with former King Mohammad Zahir Shah, who informed him that he was willing to help in a manner that was useful and acceptable to everyone.

The offices of UNSMA's Civil Affairs Unit, established by Council resolution 1214(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 297] to monitor the situation in Afghanistan, promote and support respect for minimum humanitarian standards, and deter massive and systematic violations of human rights, were closed in May when the Taliban implemented their earlier threat of closure as a reaction to the imposition of sanctions under Council resolution 1333(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 273]. The Unit's presence was then restricted to Kabul and Faizabad, until September, when all international UN staff left the country. In early November, UNSMA resumed its presence in Kabul and would return to other major cities as soon as the security situation permitted. In view of the challenges ahead for the United Nations in Afghanistan, the Secretary-General said that it was his intention to recommend in due time that the Mission be strengthened and its role enlarged, in particular its presence on the ground. As an immediate step, the Mission's administrative and logistical capacity needed to be enhanced.

By the second half of September, the Council for Peace and National Unity of Afghanistan (the "Bonn process") was fully merged with the Rome process, led by former King Zahir Shah, who initiated a large number of contacts with Afghan and foreign delegations. An agreement in principle was reached between Zahir Shah and the UF to form a 120-member Supreme Council for National Unity. The Cyprus Meeting for Implementation of Peace in Afghanistan (the "Cyprus process") decided, at a meeting of its executive committee on 20 and 21 October, to send a delegation to Rome to explore closer cooperation with the former King's loya jirga initiative. In Peshawar, Pakistan, on 24 and 25 October, a Conference for Peace and National Unity was attended by almost 1,000 representatives, the largest gathering to date of Pashtun tribal elders supporting a political solution to the conflict. Both events were attended by UNSMA representatives.

A central theme that the Secretary-General pursued during the course of the year was the need for the Security Council to adopt a comprehensive approach to Afghanistan, as the only way of ending the conflict, while at the same time addressing the specific concerns of the international community, such as terrorism, narcotics, human rights and the refugee crisis. Such an approach had two objectives: enabling the Afghans to exercise their right freely to determine their form of government through an internationally acceptable mechanism, such as elections or a fully representative loya jirga; and ensuring a stable and unified Afghanistan at peace with its neighbours. That approach, complemented by the creation of a rehabilitation and reconstruction plan for Afghanistan as an incentive to achieve and cement a political settlement, would address two major root causes of the Afghan conflict, namely, the lack of legitimacy of successive regimes since the 1970s and the continued degradation of Afghan institutions and infrastructure. The Secretary-General designated the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), Mark Malloch Brown, to take on the responsibility of leading the early recovery effort in Afghanistan in his capacity as Chairman of the United Nations Development Group.

The dramatic changes brought about by the terrorist attacks of 11 September had made the objectives of the comprehensive approach easier to achieve. The international community's renewed focus on Afghanistan after years of neglect, and the realization that a military campaign to root out terrorism from Afghanistan required a simultaneous political process leading to the formation of a legitimate Afghan government, offered renewed hope that the Afghan people might at last get the kind of government to which they had long aspired. The challenge that faced the international community was to speed up the delivery of humanitarian assistance, to help chart a path that would lead to a stable and unified Afghanistan and to rebuild a country shattered by over two decades of war.

Later developments. In a later report on the situation in Afghanistan [A/56/875-S/2002/278], the Secretary-General said that the Interim Authority was established on 22 December, with Hamid Karzai as its Chairman. The following day, Mr. Karzai held the first cabinet meeting. He also met with the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Afghanistan and sought UN assistance in a broad range of areas in order to facilitate the work of the Interim Administration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/220 A [draft: A/56/L.62 & Add.1] without vote [agenda items 20 (f) & 43].

The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/174 A of 19 December 2000 and all its previous relevant resolutions,

Recalling also all relevant Security Council resolutions and statements by the President of the Council on the situation in Afghanistan, in particular resolutions 1267(1999) of 15 October 1999, 1333(2000) of 19 December 2000, 1378(2001) of 14 November 2001 and 1383(2001) of 6 December 2001,

Reaffirming its continued strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan, and respecting its multi-cultural, multi-ethnic and historical heritage,

Reaffirming its condemnation of the use of Afghan territory for terrorist activities and the exporting of international terrorism from Afghanistan, and welcoming the successful efforts of the Afghan people to remove the Taliban regime, as well as the terrorist organizations it hosted, and to decide their own future,

Expressing its appreciation and strong support for the ongoing efforts of the Secretary-General, his Special Representative and the head of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan to promote peace and a lasting political settlement in Afghanistan,

Convinced that the main responsibility for finding a political solution lies ultimately with the Afghan people themselves, and strongly welcoming and endorsing therefore the agreement reached among various Afghan groups in Bonn, Germany, on 5 December 2001,

Convinced also that only a political settlement aimed at the establishment of a broad-based, gender-sensitive, multi-ethnic and fully representative government, which respects the human rights of all Afghans and the international obligations of Afghanistan and is committed to peace with its neighbours, can lead to durable peace and reconciliation,

Reiterating that the United Nations must continue to play its central and impartial role in the international efforts towards a peaceful resolution of the Afghan conflict as well as in efforts to provide humanitarian assistance, to provide for rehabilitation and reconstruction and to facilitate the orderly return of refugees, and therefore endorsing the request to the United Nations by the participants at the United Nations-sponsored talks on Afghanistan contained in annex III to the Bonn agreement,

Recognizing that the collapse of the Afghan economy requires, in addition to emergency assistance, integrated and multisectoral programmes of rehabilitation and reconstruction with a view to ensuring economic and social recovery and the sustainable development of the country, and that a strong international commitment to this end can serve as an incentive for the Afghan groups to implement the Bonn agreement,

Deeply concerned by the grave humanitarian situation and the serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Afghanistan, especially against women and children, committed, in particular, by the Taliban, and recognizing that the accountability of perpetrators of grave human rights violations is a key factor in ensuring reconciliation and stability,

Deeply disturbed by the use of Afghan territory for the cultivation, production and trafficking of narcotic drugs, which has dangerous repercussions in the region and far beyond,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its concern that the unstable situation in Afghanistan poses a continuing risk to peace and stability in the region, and expresses its determination to assist the efforts of the interim authority to prevent the use of Afghan territory for international terrorism;

3. Calls upon all Afghan groups to cooperate fully with the United Nations and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to promote peace and a lasting political settlement in Afghanistan;

4. Strongly supports the efforts of the Afghan people, consistent with the agreement reached in Bonn, Germany, to establish an interim authority, leading, through the convening of loya jirgas and free and fair elections, to the formation of a new government, which should all be broad-based, multi-ethnic, fully representative and committed to peace with Afghanistan's neighbours;

5. Calls upon all Afghan groups, in particular the interim authority, to implement the Bonn agreement fully;

6. Strongly supports the enhanced role of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan in helping the interim authority to implement the Bonn agreement until it is integrated in a new United Nations mission in Afghanistan;

7. Supports the efforts of groups of interested States and international organizations, underlines the importance of ensuring complementarity among these efforts, and towards this end calls upon all parties to co-ordinate closely with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General;

8. Strongly urges all Afghan groups to refrain from acts of reprisal, to respect human rights and to adhere to their obligations under international humanitarian law;

9. Stresses the importance of the full, equal and effective participation of women in civil, cultural, economic, political and social life and decision-making processes throughout the country at all levels, and calls upon all Afghan groups to protect and promote the equal rights of men and women, especially in the fields of education, work and health care;

10. Calls upon the international community to reinforce assistance to alleviate the urgent humanitarian needs of Afghanistan and, as long as the interim authority fulfils its commitments, to support generously post-conflict rehabilitation and reconstruction;

11. Calls upon all concerned countries to continue to provide assistance and protection to Afghan refugees and internally displaced persons in need of it and to work with the United Nations to facilitate their orderly return and effective reintegration, in safety and dignity, as soon as conditions permit;

12. Calls upon the interim authority to respect fully the international obligations of Afghanistan with regard to narcotic drugs, and calls upon the international community to increase its assistance for programmes aimed at reducing poppy cultivation in Afghanistan, including capacity-building for drug control, drug control monitoring systems and crop substitution programmes, as part of a comprehensive food security strategy and drug demand reduction support;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly every three months during its fifty-sixth session on the progress of the United Nations and the efforts of his Special Representative to promote peace in Afghanistan, and to report to the Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security".

Also on 21 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 56/220 B on emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan (see p. 839).

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464).

International Security Assistance Force

By a 19 December letter to the Council President [S/2001/1223], the Islamic State of Afghanistan confirmed that it had agreed to the deployment of multinational security forces inside its territory. It reiterated that, in each case of deployment of forces, previously recommended coordination terms were to be agreed upon with Afghan authorities in Kabul regarding the nationality and the size of the military units, their intended location on Afghan territory, the duration and the timetable of their assignment and the modalities of the role on the ground.

On the same day [S/2001/1217], the United Kingdom informed the Council President that it was willing to become the initial lead nation for the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) for Kabul and its surrounding area for a period of approximately three months under the terms of the Bonn Agreement (see p. 263) and upon receiving Council authorization. ISAF would assist the interim Afghan administration in the maintenance of security. The United Kingdom would transfer responsibility as the lead nation three months from the declaration of initial operational capability and no later than 30 April 2002. The United Kingdom requested the Council President to support efforts to identify a successor lead nation by asking Member States to consider urgently the possibility of taking over as the next lead nation.

The United Kingdom envisaged that the force's tasks could include: liaison with the new interim administration in Afghanistan to help in its establishment and with the Secretary-General's Special Representative; providing advice and support to the interim administration and to the United Nations on security issues; and assessing future requirements for helping the Afghan authorities in the establishment and training of new Afghan security and armed forces, key infrastructure development tasks and possible future expanded security assistance in other areas of Afghanistan. ISAF would have a particular mission authorized by a Council resolution that was distinct from Operation Enduring Freedom. The United Kingdom, as the lead nation, would exercise command of ISAF, which would include troops and equipment contributed by other nations and would have the support of the United States. For reasons of effectiveness, the United States Central Command would have authority over ISAF to avoid conflict between ISAF operations and those of Operation Enduring Freedom. A joint coordinating body would be developed with representatives from the United States Central Command, the Afghan interim administration and ISAF to deal with operational issues. To ensure political-military coordination, ISAF would establish a committee of contributors with the lead nation as the chair.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 4443], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1386 (2001). The draft [S/2001/1228] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions on Afghanistan, in particular its resolutions 1378(2001) of 14 November 2001 and 1383(2001) of 6 December 2001,

Supporting international efforts to root out terrorism, in keeping with the Charter of the United Nations, and reaffirming also its resolutions 1368(2001) of 12 September 2001 and 1373(2001) of 28 September 2001,

Welcoming developments in Afghanistan that will allow for all Afghans to enjoy inalienable rights and freedom unfettered by oppression and terror,

Recognizing that the responsibility for providing security and law and order throughout the country resides with the Afghan people themselves,

Reiterating its endorsement of the Agreement on provisional arrangements in Afghanistan pending the re-establishment of permanent government institutions, signed in Bonn on 5 December 2001 (the Bonn Agreement),

Taking note of the request to the Security Council in annex 1, paragraph 3, to the Bonn Agreement to consider authorizing the early deployment to Afghanistan of an international security force, as well as the briefing on 14 December 2001 by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on his contacts with the Afghan authorities in which they welcome the deployment to Afghanistan of a United Nations-authorized international security force,

Taking note of the letter dated 19 December 2001 from Dr. Abdullah Abdullah to the President of the Security Council,

Welcoming the letter from the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to the Secretary-General of 19 December 2001, and taking note of the United Kingdom offer contained therein to take the lead in organizing and commanding an International Security Assistance Force,

Stressing that all Afghan forces must adhere strictly to their obligations under human rights law, including respect for the rights of women, and under international humanitarian law,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan,

Determining that the situation in Afghanistan still constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Determined to ensure the full implementation of the mandate of the International Security Assistance Force, in consultation with the Afghan Interim Authority established by the Bonn Agreement,

Acting for these reasons under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Authorizes, as envisaged in annex 1 to the Bonn Agreement, the establishment for six months of an International Security Assistance Force to assist the Afghan Interim Authority in the maintenance of security in Kabul and its surrounding areas, so that the Afghan Interim Authority as well as the personnel of the United Nations can operate in a secure environment;

2. Calls upon Member States to contribute personnel, equipment and other resources to the International Security Assistance Force, and invites those Member States to inform the leadership of the Force and the Secretary-General;

3. Authorizes the Member States participating in the International Security Assistance Force to take all necessary measures to fulfil its mandate;

4. Calls upon the International Security Assistance Force to work in close consultation with the Afghan Interim Authority in the implementation of the force mandate, as well as with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General;

5. Calls upon all Afghans to cooperate with the International Security Assistance Force and relevant international governmental and non-governmental organizations, and welcomes the commitment of the parties to the Bonn Agreement to do all within their means and influence to ensure security, including to ensure the safety, security and freedom of movement of all United Nations personnel and all other personnel of international governmental and non-governmental organizations deployed in Afghanistan;

6. Takes note of the pledge made by the Afghan parties to the Bonn Agreement in annex 1 to that Agreement to withdraw all military units from Kabul, and calls upon them to implement this pledge in co-operation with the International Security Assistance Force;

7. Encourages neighbouring States and other Member States to provide to the International Security Assistance Force such necessary assistance as may be requested, including the provision of overflight clearances and transit;

8. Stresses that the expenses of the International Security Assistance Force will be borne by the participating Member States concerned, requests the Secretary-General to establish a trust fund through which contributions could be channelled to the Member States or operations concerned, and encourages Member States to contribute to such a fund;

9. Requests the leadership of the International Security Assistance Force to provide periodic reports on progress towards the implementation of its mandate through the Secretary-General;

10. Calls upon Member States participating in the International Security Assistance Force to provide assistance to help the Afghan Interim Authority in the establishment and training of new Afghan security and armed forces;

11. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications (December). By a 21 December letter to the Secretary-General [S/2001/1238], Germany said that, together with Denmark and the Netherlands, it was willing to contribute to ISAF for a period of up to six months with a combined contingent of some 1,450 troops, subject to the completion of constitutional requirements in all three countries. An advance party of some 200 troops would be on 48-hour notice to move immediately after the Bundestag (Parliament) had authorized German participation.

On the same day [A/56/754-S/2001/1255], Kazakhstan transmitted to the Secretary-General a document entitled "Position of Kazakhstan with regard to resolving the situation in Afghanistan", in which it reaffirmed, among other things, that all peacekeeping efforts in Afghanistan should be carried out under UN auspices in order to avert the renewed outbreak of civil war and ensure the delivery of humanitarian aid. It offered to supply food, fuel and construction materials as part of the humanitarian aid mobilized by the donor community; to set up in its territory, under the auspices of the United Nations and the international coalition, forward-based humanitarian warehouses; and to send its civilian specialists—doctors, teachers, builders and engineers—to Afghanistan. Kazakhstan would also consider participation by its peacekeeping battalion in ISAF in the post-conflict period.

Also on 21 December [S/2001/1257], France informed the Secretary-General that it was willing to participate in ISAF, for the same period of time as envisaged and expressed by the United Kingdom in its 19 December letter (see p. 267). For that purpose, France intended to deploy special units immediately available to help provide security for individuals and protection for the premises of the interim Afghan administration in Kabul. In addition, France was willing to help train Afghan demining teams and could participate in training Afghan security and armed forces in the future.

By a 27 December note verbale to the Secretary-General [S/2001/1296], Spain said that its Council of Ministers had authorized the participation of a maximum of 485 army and air force personnel in ISAF to be deployed in Afghanistan under UN auspices. The duration of that authorization would be three months from when the Force was ready to operate in the zone. The Spanish contingent would comprise a national liaison component and signals, helicopter, bomb disposal and aviation deployment support units, supported by a Logistics Support Unit.

On 28 December [S/2001/1321], Italy informed the Secretary-General that it had decided to contribute approximately 600 military personnel to ISAF.

Oman transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the final communiqué adopted at the Twenty-second Summit of the Supreme Council of the Gulf Cooperation Council (Muscat, Oman, 30-31 December) [A/56/797-S/2001/125]. The Supreme Council welcomed the formation of the Afghan interim administration under the chairmanship of Mr. Karzai and affirmed its readiness to cooperate with the new authorities.

Sanctions

Committee of Experts

Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1333 (2000) [YUN 2000, p. 273], the Secretary-General, on 8 March [S/2001/206], informed the Council President that he had established a committee of five experts to study for a 60-day period how to monitor the arms embargo against the Taliban and the closure of terrorist training camps in the Taliban-held areas of Afghanistan, as called for in Council resolutions 1267(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 265] and 1333(2000), and to make recommendations.

On 21 May [S/2001/511], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council President the report of the Committee of Experts. The Committee, which commenced work on 19 March, undertook a programme of visits to the region, holding fact-finding and information-gathering meetings with those States bordering Afghanistan (China, Iran, Pakistan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan) and with the other members of the six plus two group (Russian Federation and United States).

The Committee observed that the sanctions against the Taliban had to be seen and implemented as part of an overall package pursued by the United Nations to ensure peace and stability in Afghanistan. The enforcement of the sanctions had to rely on the will and initiative, primarily, of the six countries bordering Afghanistan. However, the capacities of most of those countries were inadequate and a hands-on engagement with them was absolutely essential to strengthen and develop their monitoring mechanisms, at the same time permitting continuous as-essment of capacity and follow-up of sanctions enforcement. The six countries had stated to the Committee that they would abide by the relevant Council resolutions and that they were implementing the resolutions' requirements with their border-control services, which, for the most part, were made up of customs, border guards or police and security service personnel. The effectiveness of the border services varied, depending on their training, the equipment they possessed and other local parameters, for example, supporting legislation. All six countries stated that they would welcome the international community's assistance in improving their monitoring capabilities.

The Committee concluded that the arms embargo and the closure of the terrorist training camps could be monitored by making use of mechanisms already in place in each of Afghanistan's neighbours, enhancing those mechanisms with a sanctions enforcement support team in each country. Those teams, made up of customs, border-security and counter-terrorism experts, should form the basis of a United Nations Office for Sanctions Monitoring and Coordination—Afghanistan. The Office, to be headed by a Director and staffed with specialist officers, would support the work of the teams in the field, as well as task the teams to verify and report to the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) (the Afghanistan Sanctions Committee) (see p. 270) on allegations of sanctions-busting and progress being made in each of the countries to improve the effectiveness of their border-control and counter-terrorism services. In the interest of safety and security and speed of implementation, the Committee recommended that the proposed sanctions enforcement support teams be based within the existing UN offices in the countries neighbouring Afghanistan.

Security Council consideration. On 5 June [meeting 4325], the Security Council considered the Committee of Experts' report. With the Council's consent, the President invited the representatives of Afghanistan, Iran, Pakistan and Uzbekistan, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. He also invited the Chairman of the Afghanistan Sanctions Committee and the Chairman of the Committee of Experts to brief the Council on the report's contents. Members of the Council expressed support for the proposal to establish a monitoring mechanism to oversee the sanctions regime and indicated their readiness to work on a draft resolution to realize that objective. They were also in agreement as to the importance of the commitment of the neighbouring countries if the sanctions were to succeed.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July [meeting 4352], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1363(2001). The draft [S/2001/741] was submitted by Colombia.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions, in particular resolution 1267(1999) of 15 October 1999 and resolution 1333(2000) of 19 December 2000, as well as the statements by its President on the situation in Afghanistan,

Determining that the situation in Afghanistan constitutes a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Stresses the obligation under the Charter of the United Nations of all Member States to comply fully with the measures imposed by resolutions 1267(1999) and 1333(2000);

2. Welcomes the report of the Committee of Experts established pursuant to resolution 1333(2000), and notes the conclusions and recommendations contained therein, following consultations with the States bordering the territory of Afghanistan under Taliban control which it had visited;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to establish, in consultation with the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999), within thirty days of the date of adoption of this resolution and for a period running concurrently with the application of the measures imposed by resolution 1333(2000), a mechanism:

(a) To monitor the implementation of the measures imposed by resolutions 1267(1999) and 1333(2000);

(b) To offer assistance to States bordering the territory of Afghanistan under Taliban control and other States, as appropriate, to increase their capacity regarding the implementation of the measures imposed by resolutions 1267(1999) and 1333(2000);

(c) To collate, assess, verify wherever possible, report and make recommendations on information regarding violations of the measures imposed by resolutions 1267(1999) and 1333(2000);

4. Decides that the composition of the monitoring mechanism, bearing in mind inter alia equitable geographical distribution, should comprise:

(a) A Monitoring Group in New York of up to five experts, including a Chairman, to monitor the implementation of all the measures imposed by resolutions 1267(1999) and 1333(2000), including in the fields of arms embargoes, counter-terrorism and related legislation and, in view of the link to the purchase of arms and financing of terrorism, money-laundering, financial transactions and drug trafficking;

(b) A Sanctions Enforcement Support Team, under the coordination of the Monitoring Group, of up to fifteen members with expertise in areas such as: customs, border security and counter-terrorism, to be located in those States referred to in paragraph 2 above, in full consultation and in close cooperation with those States;

5. Requests the Monitoring Group to report to the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) including through briefings of experts of the monitoring mechanism regarding the work of the monitoring mechanism as established in paragraph 3 above, and requests also the Sanctions Enforcement Support Team to report at least once a month to the Monitoring Group;

6. Requests also the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) to report to the Security Council on the implementation of the present resolution at regular intervals;

7. Calls upon all States, the United Nations and concerned parties to cooperate in a full and timely manner with the monitoring mechanism;

8. Urges all States to take immediate steps to enforce and strengthen through legislative enactments or administrative measures, where appropriate, the measures imposed under their domestic laws or regulations against their nationals and other individuals or entities operating on their territory, to prevent and punish violations of the measures imposed by resolutions 1267(1999) and 1333(2000), and to inform the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) of the adoption of such measures, and invites States to report the results of all related investigations or enforcement actions to the Committee unless to do so would compromise the investigation or enforcement action;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements to support the work of the monitoring mechanism, as an expense of the Organization and through a United Nations Trust Fund established for this purpose, affirms that this Trust Fund will be established by the Secretary-General, encourages States to contribute to the Fund and to contribute, through the Secretary-General, personnel, equipment and services to the monitoring mechanism and further requests the Secretary-General to keep the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) informed on a regular basis of the financial arrangements supporting the mechanism;

10. Expresses its intention to review the implementation of the measures imposed by resolutions 1267(1999) and 1333(2000) on the basis of the information provided by the monitoring mechanism through the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999);

11. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Pursuant to resolution 1363(2001) and in consultation with the Sanctions Committee, the Secretary-General, on 18 September, appointed five experts to serve on the Monitoring Group in New York [S/2001/887].

On 5 October [S/2001/952], the Secretary-General informed the Council President that, due to the fact that two experts were unable to assume their functions, he had appointed two new experts to replace them. On 7 November [S/2001/1056], the Secretary-General replaced one more expert.

Sanctions Committee activities

The Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 265] (the Afghanistan Sanctions Committee) submitted a report [S/2002/101] covering its activities from 29 December 2000 to 31 December 2001. During that period, the Committee held five meetings and numerous informal consultations at the expert level. After the terrorist attacks of 11 September in the United States, the Committee's activities concentrated on the lists of individuals and entities associated with Al-Qa'idah.

The Committee established lists of entry and landing areas for aircraft within Taliban-held territory and of organizations and governmental relief agencies providing humanitarian assistance that were exempted from the flight ban. It also approved several humanitarian flights and shipment of demining equipment, solely for use in the Humanitarian Demining Programme. Among other activities, it published lists of individuals and entities whose assets should be frozen and authorized requests made by the Taliban for the transport of Afghan pilgrims to Saudi Arabia for the purpose of performing the hajj.

On 4 April [S/2001/326], the Chairman transmitted to the Council a list of 46 Member States that had responded to his request for information regarding the measures imposed against the Taliban. On 21 November [S/2001/326/Add.1], the Chairman transmitted 20 additional replies. Three more replies were received from Burkina Faso [S/2001/462], Saudi Arabia [S/2001/302] and the United Arab Emirates [S/2001/455].

By a 14 December letter to the Council President [S/2001/1226], the Sanctions Committee Chairman said that, in the light of the rapidly changing situation in Afghanistan, maps of Afghan territory under Taliban control were either obsolete or rapidly becoming obsolete. The Committee reminded Member States of their continuing obligations under Council resolutions not to provide assistance to the Taliban, Al-Qa'idah or Osama bin Laden or to individuals and entities associated with them.

Humanitarian implications

In accordance with Security Council resolution 1333(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 273], the Secretary-General submitted four progress reports on the humanitarian implications of the sanctions regime against Afghanistan during 2001.

In his 20 March report [S/2001/241], the Secretary-General focused primarily on the reporting methodology and examined the implications for the humanitarian situation in the first 60 days of the sanctions regime. He observed that the vulnerability of the Afghan population was compounded by the continuing effects of the drought, the escalating conflict, massive internal displacement, the disruption of the livelihood of farmers and labourers normally engaged in poppy cultivation, the absence of significant economic recovery and the lack of a single effective national authority. That acute vulnerability provided the context within which sanctions were being monitored. There was widespread recognition of the importance of protecting the international humanitarian assistance programme from any possible adverse effects of the sanctions. Exemption mechanisms to achieve that appeared to have functioned smoothly, and humanitarian assistance operations had been able to continue largely unhindered by the sanctions. Urgent steps had to be taken to facilitate procurement of aircraft spare parts, and maintenance flights, for the Ariana Afghan Airlines fleet in order to meet internationally recognized safety standards. Other restrictions on the Taliban, including diplomatic restrictions, financial measures aimed at Osama bin Laden and the ban on acetic anhydride (the indispensable chemical precursor in refining heroin), did not have any noticeable humanitarian implications.

In his 13 July report [S/2001/695], the Secretary-General said that although the monitoring process had identified adverse humanitarian effects from the sanctions regime, those effects were limited and their scope and magnitude were greatly exceeded by other factors causing humanitarian suffering, most notably the unprecedented drought, the continuation of the conflict and the widespread deprivation of human rights. The clearest direct effects of the UN sanctions were still on civil aviation, through the reduced ability of the national airline to operate its planes, maintain safety, generate employment and income, and render services. A simple technical solution was developed for certification of requests by Ariana for exemptions from the aviation sanctions. Humanitarian exemption mechanisms had worked relatively well and agencies had faced no delays or obstacles arising directly from the sanctions. With regard to exemptions of humanitarian agencies from the aviation restrictions, the Secretary-General suggested that the Sanctions Committee should intervene with the Pakistani authorities to explain the limitations of the air ban and agency exemption procedures. With regard to Ariana's frozen overseas accounts, the Sanctions Committee should consider granting supervised access to those assets for approved maintenance work and crew training. Taliban sources were promoting the idea that the sanctions were causing widespread humanitarian effects, something which was believed by most Afghans. Thus, there was a clear need for the United Nations to be more proactive in providing public information regarding sanctions.

In his 19 November report [S/2001/1086], the Secretary-General said that, owing to the precarious security situation in Afghanistan, the United Nations had to relocate its international staff on 12 September. Consequently, the personnel and researchers assigned to monitor and assess the humanitarian implications of the sanctions regime had not been able to discharge their functions within Afghanistan. As a result, the Secretary-General was not in a position to submit the report envisaged for the third quarter of 2001.

In his 18 December report [S/2001/1215], the Secretary-General said that the latest political developments and the formation of an interim government for Afghanistan had fundamentally affected the framework under which sanctions were adopted. With the collapse of the Taliban, most sanctions measures appeared to have no focus. Therefore, he was not in a position to submit any further assessment of the humanitarian implications of the sanctions regime. He remarked that the frequent and efficient communication and interaction between the Sanctions Committee, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and the humanitarian programmes in the field had facilitated the effective handling of the humanitarian exemption procedure and functioned as a troubleshooting mechanism for humanitarian problems linked to the sanctions. Throughout the monitoring process, the exemption procedures worked well and in a timely and efficient manner. The established monitoring and assessment mechanism and the regular reviews of the sanctions' impact, as well as the subsequent briefings and consultations with the Security Council and its Sanctions Committee, had resulted in useful reflections and discussions on sanctions and their implications. The Secretary-General noted that the Council might wish to consider establishing such a procedure for future sanctions regimes to monitor and assess possible unintended negative effects on the civilian population of targeted countries.

East Timor

During 2001, the people of East Timor, in partnership with the United Nations, made great advances on the path to independence and self-government. The first elections for a Constituent Assembly were held peacefully in August. Soon afterwards, the Assembly recommended a date for independence—20 May 2002—and started the constitution-drafting process.

The United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET), which had been entrusted with a governance operation with full administrative and military power over the territory, had evolved, by the end of 2001, into a support structure for the embryonic government of East Timor and other institutions of State. At the heart of that process was UNTAET's devolution of power to East Timorese institutions. Full transfer of executive, legislative and judicial authority would occur on independence day. The Secretary-General proposed a plan for a continued and appropriately reduced UN integrated mission in the post-independence period.

The Security Council held nine open meetings during the year to discuss the situation in East Timor [meetings 4265, 4268, 4308, 4321, 4351, 4367, 4368, 4403, 4404], plus two closed ones [meetings 4358, 4397], at which it was briefed on the developments in the territory by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and Transitional Administrator of East Timor, Sergio Vieira de Mello, the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Jean-Marie Guéhenno, and the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Hédi Annabi. The General Assembly President, Harri Holkeri, also briefed the Council on his visit to East Timor, Indonesia and Singapore from 10 to 17 January. The Council extended UNTAET's mandate until 31 January 2002, and issued two presidential statements welcoming the successful staging of the national elections and endorsing 20 May 2002 as independence day. It also endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendations for a post-UNTAET presence in East Timor. However, the Council expressed concern at the continued presence of large numbers of East Timorese refugees in the province of East Nusa Tenggara (West Timor).

In December, the General Assembly, by resolution 56/104 (see p. 841), called on the international community to continue to address the remaining humanitarian relief needs of East Timor and to support the transition from relief and rehabilitation to development in preparation for independence.

UN Transitional Administration in East Timor

UNTAET, established under Security Council resolution 1272(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 293], continued to carry out its mandate in East Timor, which included the maintenance of law and order, assistance in the development of civil and social services, coordination and delivery of humanitarian assistance and capacity-building support for self-government. At the same time, as part of the transitional process towards independence, it gradually devolved governing authority to East Timorese institutions by strengthening local participation in the administration of the territory.

On 18 May [S/2001/509], the Secretary-General proposed that Slovakia be added to the list of Member States contributing military personnel to UNTAET. On 22 May [S/2001/510], the Council took note of the Secretary-General's proposal.

On 7 August [S/2001/781], the Secretary-General informed the Council of his intention to appoint Lieutenant General Winai Phattiyakul (Thailand) as the Force Commander of UNTAET with effect from 1 September. Lieutenant General Boonsrang Niumpradit (Thailand), who had served as Force Commander since July 2000, would relinquish his post on 31 August. On 13 August [S/2001/782], the Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention.

Report of Secretary-General (January). In a January report [S/2001/42], the Secretary-General described developments in East Timor and UNTAET's activities during the latter part of 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 286], and recommended that UNTAET's mandate be extended until 31 December 2001.

Communications (January). On 25 January [S/2001/83], Portugal provided the Security Council President with an overview of the support it had extended to UNTAET and to the transition of East Timor to independence. Portugal's contributions included substantial donations to the consolidated humanitarian appeal for East Timor (see p. 826); some 800 men in the military component of UNTAET with plans to raise the national contingent to about 1,000; and participation in UNTAET's plans to establish an East Timorese Defence Force (ETDF).

By a 29 January letter [S/2001/90] to the Council President, Indonesia said that it was committed to building a mutually beneficial and harmonious relationship with an independent, democratic and stable East Timor, and to resolving all outstanding issues, including the question of East Timorese refugees in the province of East Nusa Tenggara (West Timor). In that regard, Indonesia had provided food, medicine and shelter and had confiscated weapons from the camps. The steady rate of spontaneous return of refugees during recent months attested to the fact that they were able to decide their future freely. In addition, Indonesia was collaborating with UN agencies in preparation for the formal registration of refugees through which they would be able to decide whether to repatriate to East Timor or resettle in Indonesia. However, the situation in East Timor itself was a matter of relevance to the return of refugees as the issues of safety and security, and uncertainty surrounding the matter of property, were a commonly expressed concern among them. Indonesia reiterated its commitment to bring to justice those suspected of involvement in human rights violations in East Timor. The trial of six suspects involved in the killings of three UNHCR workers [YUN 2000, p. 282] was under way at the South Jakarta District Court. In addition, effective channels of communication had been established between Indonesia and UNTAET at all levels of governance. Links had also been promoted between East Timorese and Indonesian officials.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 31 January [meeting 4268], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1338 (2001). The draft [S/2001/92] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions on the situation in East Timor, in particular resolutions 1272(1999) of 25 October 1999 and 1319(2000) of 8 September 2000, and the relevant statements of its President, in particular those of 3 August 2000 (S/PRST/2000/26) and of 6 December 2000 (S/PRST/2000/39),

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 16 January 2001,

Commending the work of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor and the leadership of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General,

Expressing support for the steps taken by the Transitional Administration to strengthen the involvement and direct participation of the East Timorese people in the administration of their territory, and urging further measures to delegate authority to the East Timorese people as an essential part of the transition to independence,

Encouraging efforts to achieve the goal of independence for East Timor by the end of 2001, as set out in paragraphs 4 and 50 of the report of the Secretary-General, and acknowledging that it is the responsibility of the Transitional Administration to ensure free and fair elections in collaboration with the East Timorese people,

Reiterating its endorsement of the recommendations contained in the report of the Security Council Mission to East Timor and Indonesia of 21 November 2000, in particular the view of the Mission that a strong international commitment will be required in East Timor after independence,

Underlining its concern at the continued presence of large numbers of refugees from East Timor in the camps in the province of East Nusa Tenggara (West Timor), and at the security situation there, particularly as it relates to militia activity and the effect on refugees, and stressing the need to find a comprehensive solution to the problem,

Recalling the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel adopted on 9 December 1994, and emphasizing the need to take further steps to ensure the safety and security of international personnel in East Timor and Indonesia, in view of the dangers faced,

Welcoming and encouraging efforts by the United Nations to sensitize international personnel in the prevention and control of HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases in all its peacekeeping operations,

Emphasizing the need for continued international financial support to East Timor, and urging all those who have made pledges to the Trust Fund for East Timor to make their contributions expeditiously,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 16 January 2001;

2. Decides to extend the current mandate of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor until 31 January 2002, bearing in mind the possible need for adjustments related to the independence timetable;

3. Requests the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to continue to take steps to delegate progressively further authority within the East Timor Transitional Administration to the East Timorese people until authority is fully transferred to the government of an independent State of East Timor, as set out in the report of the Secretary-General;

4. Encourages the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor, bearing in mind the need to support capacity-building for self-government, to continue to support fully the transition to independence, including through development and training for the East Timorese people;

5. Calls upon the international financial institutions, the United Nations funds and programmes and bilateral donors who have committed resources to East Timor to fulfil their commitments and to accelerate disbursements, in particular in areas relevant to peace-building and development assistance, and reaffirms in this regard the continued need for effective coordination of development assistance to East Timor;

6. Urges the international community to provide financial and technical assistance to the creation of an East Timor Defence Force, and encourages and welcomes the coordinating role of the Transitional Administration in this endeavour;

7. Underlines that the Transitional Administration should respond robustly to the militia threat in East Timor, consistent with its resolution 1272(1999);

8. Emphasizes the need, in the light of the recommendations in the report of the Security Council Mission, for measures to address shortcomings in the administration of justice in East Timor, particularly with a view to bringing to justice those responsible for serious crimes in 1999, and for urgent action to expedite the training of the Timor LORASA's Police Service and to attract sufficient resources to develop this police service and the judicial system;

9. Encourages the Government of Indonesia, while acknowledging their efforts so far, to continue to take steps, in cooperation with the Transitional Administration and relevant international agencies, in accordance with its resolution 1319(2000) and the relevant recommendations in the statement by its President of 6 December 2000;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Security Council by 30 April 2001 a report on the implementation of the mandate of the Transitional Administration, which should include in particular military and political assessments of the situation on the ground and their implications for the size, structure and deployment of the Administration, and expresses its intention to take appropriate steps on the basis of this report expeditiously, taking into account the views of troop-contributing countries;

11. Stresses the need for a substantial international presence in East Timor after independence, and requests the Secretary-General to make detailed recommendations in this regard to the Council within six months of the adoption of the present resolution, which should be developed in close consultation with the East Timorese people and in coordination with other relevant international and bilateral actors, in particular the international financial institutions and the United Nations funds and programmes;

12. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communication (March). By a 7 March letter [S/2001/198] to the Security Council President, Indonesia said that any effort to depict the East Timorese refugees as continuing to languish in the camps in West Timor because they were being held against their will was without foundation. It had never been the policy of the Indonesian Government to condone the illegal actions taken by the militia to intimidate the refugees and/or to undermine security on the ground. Indonesia added that reconciliation among the East Timorese was vital, as it was the key to removing any actual or perceived hindrance for the refugees' return. Equally important was the issue of international humanitarian assistance. The security designation of West Timor as "Phase V" (evacuation) by the United Nations (see p. 275) had virtually prevented international agencies from providing assistance to the refugees there. Indonesia therefore called on the United Nations to dispatch its security experts from the Office of the United Nations Security Coordinator (UNSECOORD) to West Timor in order to re-rate the "Phase V" security designation of the West Timorese refugee camps.

Report of Secretary-General (May). In response to resolution 1338(2001), the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council, on 2 May, an interim report [S/2001/436] on the implementation of UNTAET's mandate, including military and political assessments of the situation on the ground and their implications for the size, structure and deployment of UNTAET.

The main development in East Timor's political transition to independence since January was the promulgation, on 16 March, of the regulation on the election of the Constituent Assembly, which would form the basis for the preparation of the electoral roll. While the Assembly had been given a target of 90 days to complete the constitution, the date of independence would become clearer only when the Assembly had made some headway in its deliberations. In order to encourage public participation in the constitutional development process and to facilitate a broad public consultation, a national civic education framework was developed in close consultation with major civil society groups, which provided for widespread civic education through mass information and multiple civil society initiatives. UNTAET also supported initiatives by NGOs to facilitate public participation in the development of the constitution. In preparation for the election, to be held in August, UNTAET had launched a comprehensive voter education programme, utilizing printed media, radio and television. The political parties were beginning to establish district and subdistrict offices, build their membership and prepare for national congresses at which manifestos would be adopted and candidates selected. However, only the East Timor National Liberation Front (FRETILIN) was well advanced in that process.

During the preceding year, gross domestic product (GDP) grew by an estimated 15 per cent and crop production reached over 70 per cent of the pre-September 1999 level. However, much of the economic growth occurred in the capital, Dili, in service-sector enterprises and in trade and construction related to donor-funded reconstruction programmes. Unemployment remained substantial, especially in urban areas where the ranks of the unemployed had been swelled by migrants from the rural districts. In order to slow that migration, World Bank programmes were seeking to channel investments to rural areas.

The issue of refugees in West Timor remained unresolved. After a brief upsurge in March, when 2,735 refugees returned, less than 400 returned in April, despite increased information efforts by UNTAET, culminating in a tour of four camps by its Chief of Staff from 9 to 11 April. The United Nations was working with Indonesian authorities on an appeal for donations to meet the costs of disseminating information in the camps, registering the refugees, repatriation and resettlement. Security "Phase V" (evacuation), which was put into effect in West Timor after the murder of three UNHCR workers in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 282], remained in place. Thus, there was no permanent presence of internationally recruited UN staff in West Timor. Although Indonesia had not implemented all the measures called for by the Security Council in resolution 1319(2000) [ibid., p. 283], including the disarmament and disbandment of the militias, UNSECOORD had decided to organize and lead an inter-agency security assessment mission to West Timor as soon as possible.

The East Timorese had readily accepted back into local communities returning refugees who had supported integration with Indonesia. At the same time, they agreed that those who had committed major crimes had to be prosecuted. In that connection, the Indonesian Parliament's decision to establish an ad hoc tribunal to deal with gross violations of human rights in East Timor was seen as a positive step. However, the relevant decree, signed by President Abdurrahman Wahid on 24 April, limited the jurisdiction of the tribunal to acts committed after the ballot on 30 August 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 280]. Therefore, a number of massacres and serious crimes, on which the Indonesian Attorney-General had been conducting investigations, would not be prosecuted.

Although the security situation had been generally good, both on the border and inside the territory, it remained unpredictable. In March, there had been violence in Baucau and Viqueque, including attacks on a Timorese District Administrator and other UN staff. The pro-Indonesian militias based in West Timor continued to advocate armed struggle to bring East Timor into Indonesia and had not laid down their arms. The involvement of the militias in illegal cross-border trade had increased, providing them with contacts and intelligence. The Secretary-General recommended maintaining UNTAET's military component until the East Timorese Government had established itself. The force stood at 8,162 all ranks as at 1 May, compared to its authorized strength of 8,950.

The Secretary-General stressed that East Timor would continue to need significant assistance after attaining independence, in order to ensure the country's stability. Towards that end, the Special Representative, in March, established a working group on post-UNTAET planning. The group initiated a complete review of the estimated level and skills of international staffing required to support the future Government and began consultations with Timorese authorities to ensure that any recommendations would be acceptable to the future Government. The working group noted that, although there was scope for reductions in the number of international civilian personnel, there remained a need for a significant international presence in the post-independence period. That presence should comprise international experts who would act as advisers to East Timorese civil servants and who had demonstrated skills in training and mentoring. In some cases, international staff would be needed to perform line functions that had a high technical content for which expertise was not available locally. Those needs were being assessed and evaluated within the framework of the overall allocation of resources. At UN Headquarters, an integrated mission task force had been established to support and complement the working group and to carry out coordination among the organizations concerned.

The development and training of the Timor Lorsa'e Police Service was proceeding in accordance with a plan that provided for the achievement of its full strength of 3,000 by the end of April 2003. Until that time, an international civilian police presence would be needed, at a level that would be gradually reduced, to provide assistance for the maintenance of law and order.

Once the new Government had established itself, and subject to the conditions prevailing at that time, it was envisaged that the troops deployed in the east could be gradually withdrawn, while those in the western sector and the Oecussi enclave would be maintained. In the meantime, the first ETDF battalion was undergoing introductory training by Portuguese personnel, using equipment provided by Australia.

Communication (June). On 20 June [S/2001/621], Indonesia transmitted to the Security Council President a document containing the findings of 12 international observers on the registration of East Timorese in Nusa Tenggara Timur, which was conducted on 6 June. The objective of the registration was to ascertain the precise number of East Timorese refugees there and to determine how many wished to remain in Indonesia and how many wished to return to East Timor. The international observers, including one from UNTAET, were present in five districts on the day of registration. The results of the registration process reflected that, from a total of 113,791 participants, 1,250 (1.1 per cent) East Timorese refugees elected to return to East Timor, while 111,540 (98.02 per cent) opted to remain in Indonesia and 1,010 (0.88 per cent) abstained.

Report of Secretary-General (July). In accordance with resolution 1338(2001), the Secretary-General submitted a 24 July report [S/2001/719] on the activities of UNTAET, developments in East Timor and progress made in planning for an international presence in East Timor after independence, covering the period since his May report.

With the dissolution of the National Council and the start of a six-week election campaign on 15 July, a new phase of organized political activity had begun. Sixteen parties registered with the Independent Electoral Commission to field candidates in the election for the 88-member Constituent Assembly, scheduled for 30 August. In early July, 14 of the 16 parties contesting in the election signed a pact of national unity by which they committed themselves to respect the outcome of the election, to conduct themselves in a peaceful and mutually respectful fashion and to defend multiparty democracy. The refusal by two minor parties to sign was not seen as detrimental to the positive stance that was being adopted overall in the campaign period. In June and July, nearly 10 per cent of the electorate took part in hearings, convened by the 13 district constitutional commissions, on systems of government, basic rights and other issues to be included in the constitution. The views, along with those of political parties, would be conveyed to the Constituent Assembly. The Assembly would meet from 15 September, with a target of 90 days in which to draft a constitution. It would also perform essential legislative functions under the authority of the Transitional Administrator, who would continue to exercise ultimate executive and legislative authority until independence. During the preceding six months, the nine-member Cabinet composed of East Timorese and UN staff members, and presided over by the Special Representative, continued to direct the work of the East Timor Transitional Administration (ETTA) and determine policy. The Special Representative intended to appoint, on 15 September, a new and enlarged transitional Cabinet composed entirely of East Timorese. The composition of the Cabinet of National Unity, expected to see East Timor through to independence, would broadly reflect the outcome of the election.

As the political process moved towards independence, ETTA's work was focused on the achievement of a series of key benchmarks that set out the steps in the transition of the Administration to independence. The benchmarks, contained in an annex to the report, covered the period from December 2000 to December 2001 and included the following areas: political affairs; administrative handover; defence force; foreign affairs; law and order; public finances; agriculture/economy; health; education; and infrastructure. East Timorese had been integrated into all major decision-making areas within ETTA, with 9,266 of the 10,554 civil service positions having been filled and 20 East Timorese having taken on senior management responsibilities. During the first half of 2001, steady progress had been made in achieving targets in civil service recruitment and training, and, among other things, adopting legislation on employment and labour administration. Although economic growth remained strong, sustained private sector growth continued to be limited. In July, Australian and East Timorese Cabinet ministers initialled the Timor Sea Arrangement, which provided East Timor with 90 per cent of the oil and gas production in the area covered under the 1989 Australia-Indonesia Timor Gap Treaty. The Arrangement also gave East Timor control over the development of its own fiscal scheme for future developments and taxation in the area.

The fourth donors' meeting on East Timor (Canberra, Australia, 14-15 June) endorsed a combined-sources budget of $65 million for East Timor for the fiscal year 2001-2002 (see also p. 841). While the meeting was not a pledging session, some donors indicated that they would provide additional contributions to the budget. Donors accepted their responsibility to take recurrent expenditures and future budgetary implications into account when designing their assistance programmes, but emphasized the need for fiscal sustainability and to strengthen revenues. Expenditure under the UNTAET Consolidated Trust Fund and the World Bank-administered Trust Fund for East Timor for 2000-2001 reached about $110 million. With regard to the consolidated budget, roughly 60 per cent was financed by donor contributions and 40 per cent from tax revenues or other income.

Agriculture remained the single largest contributor to the East Timorese gross national product. Efforts to increase crop production with the aim of ensuring food self-sufficiency and food security, together with a relatively favourable climate in early 2001, caused the volume of agriculture production to continue to recover, approaching the levels before the outbreak of the 1999 post-ballot violence [YUN 1999, p. 288]. Although the education sector received a significant portion of the budget allocations and bilateral assistance, considerable obstacles remained, including a need for teacher training and equipping of schools. In the health sector, the first half of 2001 saw an increase in reproductive health services, and a national polio immunization programme had achieved 80 per cent coverage. However, overall national immunization rates, at 15 per cent, were still low.

The East Timorese leadership and UNTAET stepped up their reconciliation efforts with militia leaders in West Timor and, in June, the National Council endorsed the establishment of the Commission for Reception, Truth and Reconciliation in East Timor, which would enable the East Timorese to create a public record of human rights abuses since 1975, to facilitate the reintegration of returning refugees and to promote community reconciliation by dealing with low-level offences committed in 1999. Despite persistent efforts by UNTAET, the memorandum of understanding on cooperation in legal, judicial and human rights matters, concluded with Indonesia in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 280], had failed to yield results. In fact, Indonesian authorities had yet to transfer persons for purposes of prosecution, as called for in the memorandum, and the establishment of a special human rights tribunal in Indonesia for the prosecution of serious crimes against the East Timorese people remained outstanding. In addition, the Indonesian Attorney-General had not appealed the light sentences handed down by a Jakarta court to six men in connection with the murder of three UNHCR workers in 2000 [ibid., p. 282]. The Serious Crimes Investigation Unit of the Office of the East Timor General Prosecutor continued to focus on the investigation of priority cases. The first trial on charges of crimes against humanity began in July with 11 persons accused of war crimes in the killings of clergy and other persons and the deportation of the civilian population in the Lautem district from April to September 1999. The UN civilian police, with a presence of 1,419 officers, continued its dual role of maintaining law and order and building the East Timor Police Service.

The UNTAET Human Rights Unit continued to assist in the development of East Timor's national institutions, such as the police and the courts, and to protect and promote human rights, in addition to facilitating and monitoring the safe reintegration of refugees returning from West Timor. It also worked in cooperation with other UNTAET units to support the constitutional consultative process.

A five-year plan for the future development of ETDF was presented at the second international conference of interested parties on the establishment of ETDF, held in June. The first battalion of 408 soldiers was scheduled for operational deployment in mid-2002. While training, infrastructure and equipment for ETDF depended on voluntary contributions, personnel, operating and maintenance costs would be borne by East Timor's Government.

The Secretary-General noted that Indonesia's registration of the refugees in Nusa Tenggara Timur (see p. 276) indicated that the overwhelming majority of them opted to remain in Indonesia. He said that continued disinformation and intimidation in the camps prior to the registration process, feelings of uncertainty on the part of the refugees about the political process in East Timor, and a lack of clarity as to whether the benefits to which they were entitled in Indonesia would continue in East Timor might have contributed to their reluctance to return. A UN inter-agency security assessment mission visited West Timor from 6 to 14 July and would soon report to the Secretary-General on its findings.

With regard to the security situation, there had been an overall decrease in the level of direct contact between militia forces and the UNTAET military component since December 2000. However, there was an aggressive attack against UNTAET troops in April 2001, which was followed by a number of other incidents. Illegal cross-border trade and movement had been associated with serious security incidents and remained of considerable concern. Also of concern was the ability of militias to operate and train unhindered in some areas. Within East Timor, there remained the potential for communal or inter-party violence over the transition period. Sporadic incidents in East Timor had developed rapidly into larger clashes and house burnings. Many East Timorese remained afraid of multiparty politics, associating them with the confrontation and violence of the past. In response, UNTAET and ETTA continued to upgrade the security measures entailing a coordinated approach between the civilian, military and police components.

With regard to a successor mission to UNTAET, the working group on post-UNTAET planning in East Timor (see p. 275), together with an integrated mission task force in New York, continued to plan for an international presence after independence. The civilian component of the mission would include the essential elements of a sizeable operation headed by a Special Representative of the Secretary-General. It was envisaged that the UNDP resident representative/UN resident coordinator would be appointed as the Deputy Special Representative and be supported by a small political office. A legal adviser's office, a gender focal point, an office of public affairs and an office of administration were also foreseen, as was the retention of a liaison office in Jakarta. The Secretary-General was of the view that an effective human rights component should be an essential part of the mission and that an electoral assistance component would be required. It would also be necessary to maintain within the mission a small team of professionals in various fields, to continue the work of Timorization and skills transfer. UNTAET was completing an assessment of the total skills package that would be available from all donor sources, to keep to an absolute minimum the number of staff needed within the new mission. By the end of UNTAET's current mandate (January 2002), it was expected that about 75 per cent of ETTA's international staff and up to 20 per cent of UNTAET's administrative staff could be eliminated. The development and training of the East Timor Police Service were proceeding according to schedule, the Secretary-General stated. The UN civilian police's role would continue to be one of executive policing, gradually shifting to one of mentoring and monitoring as the East Timorese police assumed increased responsibility for public security functions. A UN force would need to continue, in close cooperation with the Government of East Timor, to maintain a secure environment, with a particular emphasis on a strong presence in the border areas with West Timor. In the eastern sector, the number of infantry battalions could be reduced from three to one, provided the security situation remained stable. Subsequently, a similar reduction could take place in the central sector.

The Secretary-General observed that during the first half of 2001 the East Timorese people, in partnership with the United Nations, but increasingly on their own, had made broad advances towards independence and self-government. While a number of serious incidents had occurred, the overall security situation in the country had been stable. It was clear that the debate on the future constitution was drawing intense interest from broad segments of the population. The East Timorese leaders had acted with great responsibility to promote peace, tolerance and mutual respect. Many difficulties and challenges, however, remained. A key task was the establishment of effective administrative institutions that were fiscally sustainable. It was essential to ensure the smooth formation of the Constituent Assembly and the new Cabinet and to maintain a peaceful environment for the debate over the first constitution and the transition to independence.

Communications (August). By a 9 August letter [S/2001/779], Indonesia informed the Security Council President that its President, Megawati Soekarnoputri, had issued a presidential decree, which amended a previous decree (see p. 275) on the establishment of the ad hoc human rights courts. The new decree authorized the ad hoc human rights courts to investigate and render judicial decisions on cases of gross human rights violations that took place in the districts of Liquica, Dili and Suai, in East Timor, during the months of April and September 1999. Indonesia was in the process of appointing ad hoc judges to preside over those cases.

On 22 August [S/2001/817], Indonesia informed the Council President that, as part of the ongoing disarmament process, the police authorities in East Nusa Tenggara had confiscated large numbers of weapons and explosives.

Elections for Constituent Assembly

The Security Council held a closed meeting on 23 August to discuss the situation in East Timor, at which it heard a briefing by the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Hédi Annabi. Mr. Annabi gave details of the arrangements for the elections for East Timor's first Constituent Assembly, to be held on 30 August. He informed the Council that the electoral campaign had been conducted in a peaceful manner, with political parties and the population at large showing strong support for the pact of national unity.

In an official communiqué [S/PV.4358], the members of the Council emphasized the importance of the peaceful conduct of the elections. They believed that a peaceful, democratic process would be a major first step towards East Timor's independence in a complex process of stabilization. Speakers encouraged a spirit of peace, democracy and tolerance throughout the electoral process and beyond, and joined the Secretary-General in supporting the heroic efforts of the East Timorese people and in urging a large voter turnout.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 10 September [meeting 4368], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/23 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls its previous resolutions and the statements of its President on the situation in East Timor.

The Council warmly welcomes the successful staging on 30 August 2001 of the elections for East Timor's first Constituent Assembly, in particular the orderly and peaceful conduct of the elections and the very high voter turnout, which demonstrated the wish of the East Timorese people to establish a full participatory democracy. In that regard, the Council recognizes with appreciation the important role of the East Timorese leadership and welcomes the co-operation extended by the Government of Indonesia during the election period.

The Council expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor for facilitating a smooth and representative election process. The Council calls on all parties to fully respect and implement the election results which provide the basis for a broad-based Constituent Assembly. The Council looks forward to the establishment on 15 September of the Constituent Assembly and the new Cabinet within the framework of resolution 1272(1999). The Council calls upon all parties to work together to draft a constitution which reflects the will of the East Timorese people and to cooperate for the successful completion of the final steps towards independence, in a complex process of stabilization in East Timor which will take some time and will involve many actors.

The Council reiterates the importance of a substantial international presence in East Timor post-independence.

The Council looks forward to receiving the Secretary-General's October report focusing on the transition and post-independence periods.

Post-election developments

Report of Secretary-General (October). In accordance with resolution 1388(2001), the Secretary-General submitted a report [S/2001/983 & Corr.1] on the activities of UNTAET and developments in East Timor from 25 July to 15 October. The report also gave an update on efforts to support economic and social developments in East Timor and outlined the proposed structure for the successor mission to UNTAET.

The Secretary-General said that three crucial steps had been taken since his last report: the election of a Constituent Assembly; the start of the 90-day constitution-drafting process; and the formation of an all-Timorese Council of Ministers. After the peaceful elections for the Constituent Assembly on 30 August, in which 91.3 per cent of eligible voters participated, the Independent Electoral Commission announced the final certified results on 10 September, and assessed that the criteria for a free and fair election had been met. On 15 September, the Special Representative swore in the 88 members of the Assembly. A committee was established by the Assembly to make recommendations on the constitution and to oversee its drafting. The 13 Constitutional Commissions had prepared reports that summarized the views expressed by over 36,000 Timorese on such topics as national and territorial sovereignty; the country's name and flag; systems of government; the economy and taxation; and language and citizenship. On 20 September, the Special Representative appointed an all-Timorese "Second Transitional Government", which reflected the outcome of the elections of 30 August. A Council of Ministers, led by a Chief Minister, presided over the Transitional Government and supervised the East Timor Public Administration. For the first time, the executive branch of government in East Timor was controlled by East Timorese, albeit under the overall authority of the Special Representative.

The building of an all-Timorese civil service and its institutions from the ground up continued. By mid-September, UNTAET had recruited some 9,500 East Timorese civil servants, about 90 per cent of the revised target of 10,500. However, since the professional bureaucratic skills and capacity of many civil servants remained limited, the civil administration of East Timor was still highly reliant on international staff. Of particular concern were the areas of public finances, the judiciary, senior management and the development and maintenance of the central administrative systems of government. Maintaining the delivery of government services while diminishing dependence on UNTAET support would require realistic and sustainable standards of service to be set prior to independence. Following independence, the management of public finances would require a minimum level of international technical support, as mismanagement could threaten the overall functioning of the administration and undermine donor confidence in East Timor.

The Office of the Deputy Prosecutor for Ordinary Crimes continued to direct investigations into more than 400 criminal cases for offences committed since November 1999. The justice system, which was still in a nascent state, would continue to require significant international support, particularly judicial expertise, beyond independence.

The UN civilian police (1,485 officers) continued its dual role of maintaining law and order and training the East Timor Police Service. The reported crime rate remained low. A medium-term plan for the development of the Service was being finalized. The headquarters of ETDF had been established in Dili and a new training centre was fully functional. A code of military discipline had been developed, as well as other administrative procedures.

The amount of militia activity on the East Timor side of the Tactical Coordination Line (the informal boundary agreed to by UNTAET and the Indonesian armed forces (TNI), pending formal demarcation of the border) continued to decline. However, the frequency and size of illegal markets in the vicinity of that Line had grown, creating substantial security concerns, as various armed groups attempted to control and regulate those markets for their own ends. UNTAET and the Indonesian authorities had commenced discussion on a comprehensive border regime between East Timor and Indonesia. Reports of misinformation and intimidation in the refugee camps continued to be received and a core of hard-line militia in West Timor would continue to pose a potential threat to East Timor after independence, the Secretary-General stated. TNI and the Indonesian police had carried out operations to restrict the militia's movement, and had conducted sweeps for weapons in the refugee camps in West Timor. On 28 August, UNTAET and TNI signed the Military Technical Arrangement, a security agreement that would improve information-sharing and the coordination of military activity in the vicinity of the border.

A lack of experienced East Timorese investigators, prosecutors and a sufficient number of experienced judges had inhibited the issuance of indictments and prosecutions for serious crimes. The Office of the Deputy Special Representative had taken a direct role in addressing the problems of the Serious Crimes Unit. If fully provided with resources, the Unit should be able to complete the investigations and indictments for 10 priority cases of crimes against humanity by mid-2002.

Since July, more than 2,600 refugees had returned to East Timor. As anticipated, after the elections of 30 August both organized and spontaneous refugee returns began to increase. Since October 1999, 185,519 refugees had returned to East Timor and an estimated 60,000 to 80,000 remained in Indonesia. Indonesia had announced that after December 2001 it would no longer provide humanitarian assistance for the refugees. The priority was to ensure that the refugees were free to return voluntarily to East Timor, voluntary local resettlement in Indonesia being a secondary option. Negotiations between the United Nations and Indonesia regarding a memorandum of understanding delineating security responsibilities and requirements were ongoing.

UNTAET continued to prepare the populations in the districts for returnees, to facilitate their peaceful reintegration and longer-term reconciliation. Although there remained some concern over reprisals against some returnees, incidents of violence had been minimal. While perpetrators of serious crimes had to be dealt with by the courts, those implicated in lesser crimes would be dealt with by the Commission for Reception, Truth and Reconciliation. The Commission was also empowered to hold hearings and seek evidence in order to establish the truth about all relevant events that occurred in East Timor from 25 April 1974 to 25 October 1999. It would have a mandate of two years and would report, and make recommendations based on its findings, to the Government. The Commission would be predominantly staffed by East Timorese, assisted by an international technical assistance unit, and would be funded from voluntary contributions, which had yet to reach the target amount.

Significant progress in the fields of economic and social development in East Timor had been made during the transitional period. The administrative structures provided by UNTAET had assisted a range of humanitarian and development partners to implement wide-ranging recovery and development cooperation activities throughout the territory. The decrease of UN personnel and expenditure would inevitably have an adverse impact on growth, and special efforts, including poverty reduction initiatives and structural reforms, might be required to counteract a sudden reduction in the demand for labour and consumption expenditure linked to UNTAET's presence. Other structural constraints likely to inhibit sustained future growth, such as legislation on property rights and on land claims, would also have to be addressed. The newly established Commission on Planning within the East Timor

Public Administration continued to work on the development of a plan for medium-term expenditures to help ensure fiscal sustainability, with an emphasis on reducing poverty.

Much progress had been achieved in the education sector. The severity of the damage to educational facilities, however, meant that the support of international development programmes would need to continue well past independence to restore infrastructure and accommodate a fast-growing population and expanding enrolment rates. In the health sector, progress continued to be seen under the sector-wide approach to restoring access to basic services and establishing the policies, systems and human resources needed for a sustainable health system.

With regard to the transition to the successor mission, the reduction of UNTAET's military component was to commence in November. The plan was to reduce the authorized strength from 8,950 troops (actual deployment, 7,947) to some 5,000 military personnel, including 120 military observers, by independence. Commensurate reductions would be made in the military engineering, medical, aviation and support units, to be achieved through scheduled troop rotations. Likewise, it was envisaged that the civilian police component would be reduced to 1,250 from 1,640 by independence. By late September, UNTAET had already achieved the October target of reducing the staff of the East Timor Public Administration by 35 per cent; plans for a total reduction of 75 per cent were expected to be achieved by the end of the transition period. That reduction would be implemented in a phased manner to minimize the negative effect on the delivery of basic government services and on the local economy.

The primary focus of the successor mission would be to ensure the security of East Timor and the viability and stability of its government structures, allowing for the completion of UNTAET's mandate. The mission would be based on the premise that operational responsibilities had to be fully devolved to the East Timorese authorities as soon as it was feasible. A continuing process of assessment and downsizing was therefore envisaged over a period of two years, starting from independence.

The military component of the western sector would continue to have a two-battalion group with a sector headquarters, while the Oecussi enclave would retain a battalion group, and the central and eastern sectors would be reduced to only one mobile battalion. Further staged reductions would take place during the life of the successor mission, subject to ongoing security assessments and progress achieved in the development of ETDF. In the border area, the force would continue to take measures to deter unlawful armed groups and ensure security, pending the full deployment of ETDF. The mission's military observers would play a role in maintaining liaison with both the Indonesian and East Timor defence forces. As to the development of ETDF, it was envisaged that a battalion would be ready for operational tasks in the eastern sector in June 2002; a second battalion would be ready by late 2003. However, the schedule for the development of ETDF could be shortened, subject to the provision of donor funds for the necessary capital investments. It was foreseen that East Timor would take over full responsibility for its own defence arrangements by mid-2004 at the latest.

The United Nations would continue its police work to ensure that the East Timor Police Service was developed as a service and an institution that was credible, accountable and professional. Drawing on the lessons learned from other operations, the main objective of the successor mission's police component would be to promote the capacity and integrity of the Service and its personnel. The civilian police component would be led by an international police commissioner, and would continue to perform a dual role of executive policing, while supporting the development of the East Timor Police Service. UNTAET expected that 1,500 East Timorese police officers would be operationally deployed by 31 January 2002. If the projected East Timorese police force of 3,000 was reduced, depending on consultations with and decisions taken by the new East Timorese Government, there would be corresponding reductions within the UN civilian police component. It was also expected that reductions in the civilian police component would occur throughout the life of the successor mission as the East Timorese police force acquired the capacity to assume full executive responsibilities. In order to ensure the viability of the East Timor Police Service—which had only a rudimentary infrastructure and no logistical or administrative framework, and continued to be almost completely reliant on UNTAET resources for transport, communication and administration—it would be essential for additional resources that could not be transferred from UNTAET to be secured through bilateral and multilateral donors. The Secretary-General said that since the strategy and implementation plan of the new mission would depend largely on the successful preparation of ETDF and the Police Service to take over the responsibility for East Timor's external and internal security, it was essential that those two organizations be properly funded and that their operations be sustainable under the budget of the new administration. He therefore appealed to Member States to support an adequate and sustainable capital programme to equip both organizations.

As to the civilian component, the United Nations had identified approximately 100 core functions for which local expertise did not exist, but which were essential to the stability and functioning of government; those core functions therefore required assured funding for a short period after independence to permit the completion of the Security Council mandate and to ensure that the investments made to date were not jeopardized. Two thirds of those positions were intended as mentoring functions (advisory and training), and one third would primarily cover public finance and banking, justice, and central and common services necessary to maintaining government functioning. In the justice sector, the successor mission would include court of appeal judges, special panel judges, court administrators and public defenders, as well as prison staff advisers and trainers. Other core civilian functions within the new mission would focus on strengthening internal administration and the infrastructure sector. Experts would also provide capacity-building in management, procurement, supplies and inventory in the area of central administrative services and assist in the drafting of legislative documents and in ensuring compliance with international human rights instruments. Expert advisers would be required to assist the new State in establishing demographic information, conducting foreign affairs, formulating economic policy, undertaking donor coordination and supporting decision-making by constitutional organs. With the support of UNDP, the Transitional Administration had prepared an overall framework for governance and public sector management, identifying priority areas in the short, medium and long term which would require funding from voluntary contributions.

The Secretary-General observed that the essential requirement in the case of East Timor was to ensure that the enormous sacrifices of the East Timorese, the substantial investments of the international community, and the cooperation of the parties required to bring about a successful transition to independence were not squandered for lack of international attention and support for the new State. At the same time, it was important to move towards a normal development assistance framework as quickly as was responsibly possible. The Secretary-General would recommend to the Security Council a date for East Timor's independence, following consultations with his Special Representative and the Constituent Assembly. The successor mission would be established on that date. The responsibility for establishing a viable State in East Timor belonged to its people, who had amply demonstrated the depth of their commitment to that task through sacrifice, imagination and determination.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 October [meeting 4404], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/32 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the Secretary-General's report of 18 October 2001.

The Council expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General's Special Representative in East Timor and to the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor for their efforts in developing detailed plans for the future United Nations presence in East Timor.

The Council welcomes the political progress achieved to date towards establishing an independent East Timorese State and endorses the recommendation by the Constituent Assembly that independence be declared on 20 May 2002.

The Council recalls resolutions 1272(1999) of 25 October 1999 and 1338(2001) of 31 January 2001 and other relevant resolutions. It agrees with the Secretary-General's assessment that premature withdrawal of the international presence could have a destabilizing effect in a number of crucial areas. It further agrees with the Secretary-General's assessment that the United Nations should remain engaged in East Timor to protect the major achievements so far realized by the Transitional Administration, to build upon those achievements in co-operation with other actors, and to assist the East Timorese Government in ensuring security and stability.

The Council takes note of the Secretary-General's observation that the mandate of the Transitional Administration should be extended until independence and endorses his plans for adjusting the size and configuration of the Transitional Administration in the months prior to independence.

The Council endorses the Secretary-General's recommendations for a continued and appropriately reduced United Nations integrated mission in the post-independence period, and requests the Secretary-General to continue planning and preparation for this mission, in consultation with the East Timorese people, and to submit further and more detailed recommendations to the Council. The Council agrees that the successor mission would be headed by a Special Representative of the Secretary-General and comprise a military component, a civilian police component and a civilian component, including experts who would provide crucial assistance to the emergent East Timorese administration. The Council notes that a core number of civilian positions will be critical to the stability of the independent East Timorese Government and agrees that these limited positions will require assessed funding for a period of between six months and two years after independence. The Council agrees that the new mission should be based on the premise that operational responsibilities should be devolved to the East Timorese authorities as soon as this is feasible, and it supports a continuing process of assessment and downsizing over a period of two years, starting from independence. In this regard, the Council recognizes the essential role of the General Assembly in peace-building and expresses its intention to continue planning for peace-building in close cooperation with the General Assembly. The Council acknowledges the importance of a strong focus on justice and human rights in the successor mission and, where appropriate, in other assistance provided to East Timor.

The Council agrees with the Secretary-General's assessment that it will be vital that the United Nations contribution is supplemented by multilateral and bilateral arrangements. The Council looks forward to receiving information on the financial implications of the follow-on mission and a detailed assessment of shared responsibilities among the principal interacting players, i.e. the United Nations system, international financial institutions, regional mechanisms and national donors, in their efforts to assist East Timor in its unprecedented transition to self-government.

Further report of Secretary-General. In a later report [S/2002/80 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General described UNTAET's activities and developments in East Timor during the latter part of 2001. He assessed progress made in the implementation of UNTAET's mandate and proposed measures to consolidate that progress, including detailed planning for an integrated UN mission that would be deployed in East Timor after independence. Annexed to the report was the proposed framework for the successor mission to UNTAET.

A milestone on the road towards East Timor's independence was the Security Council's endorsement, in its presidential statement of 31 October (see p. 282), of the Constituent Assembly's proposal that independence be declared on 20 May 2002. Other important political advances were made and steady gains achieved in the establishment of a public administration for East Timor. The security environment had continued to improve, and policies were being implemented that favoured economic and social development. At the same time, the comparative fragility of the political foundations of the new country, its very limited pool of professional and administrative expertise, the lack of strong independent security mechanisms and a nascent state of economic development meant that East Timor would continue to require significant assistance from the international community well after independence.

The Constituent Assembly had started in December to consider the new draft constitution; the review process was expected to be completed in late January 2002. The draft constitution would establish a unitary democratic State, based on the rule of law and the principle of separation of powers. Representative organs would be elected through direct and universal suffrage. It proposed a President, who would also be commander-in-chief of the armed forces, a Prime Minister, who would head a Council of Ministers, and a Parliament. The President's powers would be limited by Parliament, and the President would be required to consult the latter, as well as the Council of State and a Supreme Council on Defence and Security, before declaring a state of emergency or siege. Pursuant to the Constituent Assembly's resolution in support of direct presidential elections, adopted on 28 November, the Transitional Administrator announced that the election for East Timor's first President would take place on 14 April 2002. The Assembly was also considering transforming itself into a legislative body in an arrangement whereby its 88 seats would be maintained for a first term, and later reduced to between 52 and 65. However, opposition parties and some civil society organizations had called for new legislative elections, to be held either concurrently with the presidential elections or soon after independence.

The third meeting of the East Timor-Indonesia Joint Border Committee took place in Dili from 19 to 21 November 2001. As the first visit by an Indonesian delegation since the visit of former President Wahid in February 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 280], the meeting represented a significant step in building relations between the two neighbours.

During the reporting period, the East Timorese Public Administration continued to play an increasing role in running the daily affairs of the country. By the end of 2001, it had recruited 9,633 East Timorese civil servants, representing 91.2 per cent of the total budgeted positions. The education and health sectors remained the largest public service employers. The East Timorese were working to strengthen their administrative structures through, among other things, the activities of an Inspector General's Office. An East Timorese Adviser on Equality assumed her functions on 1 November. Over 180 customs officers were present in Dili, in Oecussi and on the border with West Timor, providing customs, immigration and quarantine services.

The East Timorese justice system still lacked experienced and trained judges, public defenders and prosecutors, while support services for the courts remained limited. The prison population increased by nearly one third during the last six months of 2001, reflecting a rise in criminal activity, particularly violence by delinquent groups.

The first ETDF infantry battalion was provisionally organized in October and would begin operations in 2002. The progress achieved in training was the result of effective and coordinated bilateral assistance. The Secretary-General said that such a level of support would need to be maintained up to and beyond independence, in order to permit the gradual downsizing and ultimate withdrawal of UN peacekeepers.

The United Nations civilian police (CIVPOL) continued to maintain law and order while training the East Timor Police Service. Peter Miller (Canada) assumed the functions of CIVPOL Commissioner in November. The East Timor police force had reached a level of 1,453 officers. Donor countries had organized overseas and in-country training programmes in areas ranging from criminal investigation and maritime policing to police management and crowd control. However, the development of the East Timor Police Service continued to be constrained by the lack of resources.

Although there had been few sightings of militia along the Tactical Coordination Line, hard-line militia could still pose a long-term threat. Stability along the border would require substantial progress in East Timor's discussions with Indonesia regarding a comprehensive border regime.

Security in East Timor also meant addressing the legacy of violence that was committed in 1999, including the return of refugees, support for reconciliation and effective prosecution of serious crimes. The rate of refugee returns accelerated in spite of misinformation and continuing intimidation in the camps. In 2001, 17,900 refugees returned to East Timor, for a total of 192,000 returns. An estimated 60,000 to 75,000 refugees remained in camps in West Timor. Continued monitoring and protection of returnees were needed to ensure a high rate of returns. It appeared that the most significant deterrents to further returns were economic concerns, rather than security issues and militia intimidation. In November, the Indonesian Government started paying a repatriation incentive, and the World Food Programme doubled the rice component of the reintegration package. Additionally, the question of pension payments for East Timorese formerly employed by Indonesia in its civil, military and police service appeared to be a factor in delaying the return of some 8,500 families. The United Nations was working towards the establishment of a special fund to compensate for loss of employment and/or pension benefits. Local settlement activities in West Timor began in late November, with the building of housing units for some 6,500 East Timorese refugees wishing to remain in the area. Also in November, the United Nations and the Indonesian Government launched a joint appeal, which included UNHCR/UNDP plans to support Indonesia in the local settlement of 3,010 refugee families in East Nusa Tenggara, outside West Timor, through contributions towards housing and economic livelihood packages for refugees and support to host communities.

Work continued towards the establishment of the Commission for Reception, Truth and Reconciliation. National Commissioners were nominated by an independent panel in December. Some progress had been made with the prosecution of serious crimes. The Office of the General Prosecutor had filed 33 indictments charging 83 individuals with crimes committed between 1 January and 25 October 1999. However, progress in the courts was slow due to limited human and financial resources. Judgement was passed in December 2001 on a case concerning the operations of the Tim Alfa militia in 1999; that was the first trial for crimes against humanity to take place in East Timor, and the first example worldwide of the application of laws originally formulated for the International Criminal Court. Ten men received sentences ranging from 4 to 33 years for crimes of torture, murder, forced deportation and persecution. Indonesia announced that 30 judges for the Ad Hoc Human Rights Court had been selected in October/November.

The reported crime rate in East Timor remained low. However, there was a drastic increase in reports of violence against women and children, which led to the launching of a series of workshops on domestic violence.

The growth of East Timor's GDP was estimated at 18 per cent in 2001, with annual inflation estimated to be less than 3 per cent. Some uncertainty in the economy prior to the August election had been resolved and economic activity continued to expand. Forward projections for external financing requirements in the three years after independence were presented to the Oslo donors' conference (Oslo, Norway, 11-12 December). Rehabilitation of the educational system was advancing rapidly and, with the gradual departure of international professionals, East Timorese workers were taking on increased responsibilities in the health sector, at both the national and district levels. Progress also continued in the restoration of public buildings and road and port repairs, drawing on support from the Trust Fund for East Timor and the Consolidated Fund for East Timor. East Timorese officials had reached an understanding with the petroleum companies operating in the Joint Petroleum Development Area of the Timor Sea on a gas and fiscal package that would allow gas development to proceed.

In preparation for the downsizing of UNTAET, the Planning Commission completed its assessment of the scale, timing and economic effect of the international drawdown, and recommended a series of measures to limit the impact, including an information strategy directed towards local UN employees, the establishment of a legal framework to support the private sector, improved access to information about skilled vacancies and a short-term job creation programme.

The Secretary-General said that several elements were key to a smooth transition to an independent government: the phased reduction of international staff; the incorporation within the government of essential common services and the transfer of UN assets supporting those services; the transfer of some residual functions of government from UNTAET; the development of the essential legislative and procedural machinery for the operation of government at independence; and the timely recruitment of civilian advisers for the post-independence government. In November, the stable security environment enabled UNTAET to begin reducing its military component from the current 7,212 troops to some 5,000 soldiers at the time of independence. As downsizing progressed, the peacekeeping force was being reconfigured to enable it to continue to promote stability both along the border and internally throughout East Timor. UNTAET was working with the East Timorese Public Administration to ensure that immediately upon independence the Government would conclude with the United Nations a status-of-forces agreement that would address the role of the military component and its relationship with ETDF. Similar legal arrangements would also need to be agreed and implemented with regard to the performance of police functions by CIVPOL and the East Timor Police Service.

Reduction of civilian staffing assisting the East Timorese Public Administration was under way. Approximately 200 international staff and 60 UN Volunteers would remain in place until independence, representing a 75 per cent reduction from the original authorized strength of that component. The East Timorese Public Administration was gradually developing and taking on the responsibility for essential common services that underpinned the operations of government.

Planning for the successor mission continued both at UN Headquarters and in the field. The need for assured funding for some 100 key functions within the administration, for periods ranging from 12 to 24 months after independence, was confirmed by a skills audit undertaken by UNDP, which was completed in late October. Based on extensive consultations with donors and with other relevant actors, it had been determined that the only way those needs could be met on an assured basis was through their inclusion in the assessed funding of the successor mission.

Further reductions of the military component were envisaged over two broad stages. The first would begin once normalization of border activity was achieved. That would require that two conditions be met: agreement between the Governments of Indonesia and East Timor on the location of the border and its subsequent demarcation; and the establishment of an adequate national border security and control system. Those conditions would permit withdrawal of the military component from the immediate vicinity of the border, constituting a reduction to a two-battalion force of 2,500-3,000 troops. Complete withdrawal of the military component would take place when ETDF became fully capable of responding to external threats.

Planning for the development of the East Timor Police Service envisioned a force of 2,600 officers. Should the Service be given the responsibility for border security, an additional border service component of 200 officers would be created. It was projected that the international civilian police strength would be reduced by an average of 5 per cent every month, leaving by January 2004 about 100 officers, who would have purely advisory functions.

The Secretary-General stated that the people of East Timor and the international community had much to be proud of in all that had been accomplished in laying the political foundations for a new State, in providing the elements of the practical machinery that it required, in successfully addressing challenges to security and in setting out the basis for economic development. Close partnership between East Timor and the international community would remain essential for the continued stability and development of the country. Throughout the UN engagement in East Timor, the international community's efforts to promote political reconciliation and address security risks were complemented by wide-ranging support for new administrative structures and assistance with development for appropriate economic and social policies. The Secretary-General said that it was important that international assistance to East Timor reverted to a normal development model as soon as feasible. In that context, it would be essential for all elements of the UN system to work in a coordinated manner, together with bilateral assistance.

On 24 December, the General Assembly decided that the agenda item on the situation in East Timor during its transition to independence would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464).

Financing of UN operations

During 2001, the General Assembly considered the financing of two UN missions in East Timor—UNTAET and the United Nations Mission in East Timor (UNAMET). UNTAET was established by Security Council resolution 1272(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 293] to administer East Timor during its transition to independence. UNAMET was established by Council resolution 1246(1999) [ibid., p. 283] to conduct the 1999 popular consultation on East Timor's autonomy [ibid., p. 288]; its mandate ended on 30 November 1999, in accordance with resolution 1262(1999) [ibid., p. 287].

UNTAET

In April [A/55/874], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended, pending the submission of UNTAET's budget, that the General Assembly approve and assess $282 million gross ($273,025,800 net) for UNTAET for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001. That amount was based on the budget of $563 million gross ($546,051,600 net) approved by the Assembly in resolution 55/228 A [YUN 2000, p. 291].

In May [A/55/925], the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly UNTAET's financial performance report for the period from 1 December 1999 to 30 June 2000. Expenditures for the period totalled $292,010,000 gross ($287,968,200 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $57,990,000 gross ($53,116,100 net) that was attributable to the delayed deployment of international staff, which, in turn, resulted in a higher vacancy rate, reduced requirements under air operations and lower requirements for utilities, construction/prefabricated buildings, communications equipment and transport of contingent-owned equipment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On 14 June [meeting 103], on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/55/664/Add.1], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/228 B without vote [agenda item 134].

Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1272 (1999) of 25 October 1999 regarding the establishment of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor and resolution 1338(2001) of 31 January 2001, by which the Council extended the mandate of the Transitional Administration,

Recalling its resolution 54/246 A of 23 December 1999 on the financing of the Transitional Administration and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 55/228 A of 23 December 2000,

Reaffirming the general principles underlying the financing of United Nations peacekeeping operations, as stated in General Assembly resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973 and 55/235 of 23 December 2000,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the trust fund for the multinational force,

Also noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Trust Fund for the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor, and inviting further such contributions to the Trust Fund,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Transitional Administration with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994, in particular those paragraphs regarding the peacekeeping budgetary cycles, which should be adhered to in the future budgetary process, where possible;

2. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor as at 30 April 2001, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 315.9 million United States dollars, representing some 35 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Transitional Administration to the period ending 30 June 2001, notes that some 12 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

5. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Transitional Administration in full and on time;

6. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

7. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

8. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective

tive and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

9. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Transitional Administration;

10. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Transitional Administration is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Transitional Administration against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Transitional Administration;

13. Approves, on an exceptional basis, the special arrangements for the Transitional Administration with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing contingents and/or logistic support for the Transitional Administration shall be retained beyond the period stipulated under financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

14. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in the amount of 282 million dollars gross (273,025,800 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Transitional Administration for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001, and decides to appropriate the amount of 17,027,947 dollars gross (14,943,699 dollars net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 1,778,786 dollars gross (1,597,340 dollars net) for the United Nations Logistics Base, representing the prorated share of the Transitional Administration in the support account and Logistics Base requirements for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002;

15. Decides to apportion among Member States the amount of 282 million dollars gross (273,025,800 dollars net) for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001 in accordance with the levels set out in General Assembly resolution 55/235, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolution 55/236 of 23 December 2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2001, as set out in its resolution 55/5 B of 23 December 2000;

16. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 15 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 8,974,200 dollars approved for the Transitional Administration for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001;

17. Decides further to apportion among Member States the amount of 17,027,947 dollars gross (14,943,699 dollars net) for the support account and the amount of 1,778,786 dollars gross (1,597,340 dollars net) for the United Nations Logistics Base for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002 in accordance with paragraph 15 above, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 2001 and 2002, as set out in General Assembly resolution 55/5 B, the scale of assessments for the year 2001 to be applied against a portion thereof, that is, 8,513,974 dollars gross (7,471,850 dollars net) for the support account and 889,393 dollars gross (798,670 dollars net) for the Logistics Base for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001, and the scale of assessments for the year 2002 to be applied against the balance, that is, 8,513,973 dollars gross (7,471,849 dollars net) for the support account and 889,393 dollars gross (798,670 dollars net) for the Logistics Base for the period from 1 January to 30 June 2002;

18. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 17 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 2,084,248 dollars for the support account and 181,446 dollars for the United Nations Logistics Base approved for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, 1,042,124 dollars for the support account and 90,723 dollars for the Logistics Base being amounts pertaining to the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001 and the balance, that is, 1,042,124 dollars for the support account and 90,723 dollars for the Logistics Base, pertaining to the period from 1 January to 30 June 2002;

19. Decides also that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Transitional Administration, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 15 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 57,990,000 dollars gross (53,116,100 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 2000, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in subsequent relevant resolutions and decisions for the ad hoc apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations, the latest of which were resolution 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and decisions 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999 for the period 1998-2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999;

20. Decides further that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Transitional Administration, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 57,990,000 dollars gross (53,116,100 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 2000 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations in accordance with the scheme set out in paragraph 19 above;

21. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

22. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Transitional Administration;

23. Invites voluntary contributions to the Transitional Administration in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

24. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor".

ANNEX

Special arrangements with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations

1. At the end of the twelve-month period provided for in financial regulation 4.3, any unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question relating to goods supplied and services rendered by Governments for which claims have been received or which are covered by established reimbursement rates shall be transferred to accounts payable; such accounts shall remain recorded in the Special Account for the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor until payment is effected.

2. In addition:

(a) Any other unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question owed to Governments for provision of goods and services rendered but not yet verified, as well as other obligations owed to Governments, for which claims have not yet been received shall remain valid for an additional period of four years following the end of the twelve-month period provided for in financial regulation 4.3;

(b) Claims received during this four-year period as well as approved verification reports shall be treated as provided for under paragraph 1 of the present annex, if appropriate;

(c) At the end of the additional four-year period, any unliquidated obligations shall be cancelled and the then remaining balance of any appropriations retained therefor shall be surrendered.

In November [A/56/624], the Secretary-General submitted a report containing UNTAET's proposed budget for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, which amounted to $490,060,000 gross ($475,780,000 net), inclusive of budgeted voluntary contributions in kind amounting to $60,000.

In December [A/56/685], ACABQ, taking into account the fact that the Secretary-General's next report on UNTAET's budget would contain the requirements of the successor mission and the assistance needed for the new Government after independence, recommended that the Assembly approve an appropriation of $455 million gross for UNTAET's operations for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, inclusive of the amount of $282 million gross ($273,025,800 net) already authorized and assessed by the Assembly in its resolution 55/228 B for the period 1 July 2001 to 31 December 2001. The recommended amount reflected a reduction of 7 per cent from the amount proposed by the Secretary-General. The Committee also recommended that the Assembly approve an additional assessment of $120 million gross for the period 1 January to 30 June 2002, at a monthly rate of $20 million gross, for a total assessment of $402 million gross for the period 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, and authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments (without assessment) in the amount of $53 million should the Security Council decide to extend UNTAET's mandate beyond 31 January 2002.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 24 December [meeting 92], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/56/715], adopted resolution 56/249 without vote [agenda item 136].

Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1272(1999) of 25 October 1999 regarding the establishment of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor and Council resolution 1338 (2001) of 31 January 2001, by which the Council extended the mandate of the Transitional Administration,

Recalling its resolution 54/246 A of 23 December 1999 on the financing of the Transitional Administration and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 55/228 B of 14 June 2001,

Reaffirming the general principles underlying the financing of United Nations peacekeeping operations, as stated in General Assembly resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973 and 55/235 of 23 December 2000,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the trust fund for the multinational force,

Also noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Trust Fund for the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor, and inviting further such contributions to the Trust Fund,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Transitional Administration with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor as at 15 November 2001, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 239.9 million United States dollars, representing some 20 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Transitional Administration to the period ending 31 December 2001, notes that some 19 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full and on time, and urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Transitional Administration in full and on time;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

5. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

6. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

7. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Transitional Administration;

8. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Transitional Administration is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Transitional Administration against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Transitional Administration;

11. Decides to appropriate the amount of 458,000,128 dollars gross (445,193,514 dollars net) for the operation of the Transitional Administration for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, inclusive of the amount of 3,000,128 dollars gross (2,773,914 dollars net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations, in addition to the amount of 17,027,947 dollars gross (14,943,699 dollars net) already appropriated for the support account and the amount of 1,778,786 dollars gross (1,597,340 dollars net) already appropriated for the United Nations Logistics Base by the General Assembly in its resolution 55/228 B, and inclusive of the amount of 282 million dollars gross (273,025,800 dollars net) authorized by the Assembly in resolution 55/228 B;

12. Decides also, taking into account the amount of 282 million dollars gross (273,025,800 dollars net) already apportioned for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2001 and the amount of 18,806,733 dollars gross (16,541,039 dollars net) already apportioned for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 55/228 B, to apportion among Member States the amount of

23,000,128 dollars gross (22,220,931 dollars net) for the period from 1 to 31 January 2002, in accordance with the levels set out in General Assembly resolution 55/235, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolution 55/236 of 23 December 2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2002, as set out in its resolution 55/5 B of 23 December 2000;

13. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 12 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 779,197 dollars approved for the Transitional Administration for the period from 1 to 31 January 2002;

14. Decides to apportion among Member States the amount of 100 million dollars gross (97,235,083 dollars net) for the period from 1 February to 30 June 2002, at a monthly rate of 20 million dollars gross (19,447,016 dollars net), in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2002, as set out in General Assembly resolution 55/5 B, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Transitional Administration beyond 31 January 2002;

15. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 14 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 2,764,917 dollars approved for the Transitional Administration for the period from 1 February to 30 June 2002;

16. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

17. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Transitional Administration;

18. Invites voluntary contributions to the Transitional Administration in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

19. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor".

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the financing of UNTAET would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464) and that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item at that session (decision 56/458).

UNAMET

On 7 September, the General Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its fifty-sixth (2001) session the item on UNAMET's financing (decision 55/494). On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the item would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464) and that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item at that session (decision 56/458).

Iraq

The stalemate between the United Nations and Iraq concerning Iraq's refusal to allow the Organization to verify compliance with Iraq's weapons-related obligations continued throughout 2001. The stalemate was precipitated by the withdrawal in December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 262] of the United Nations Special Commission (UNSCOM) and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)—both mandated by the Security Council's ceasefire resolution 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172] to disarm Iraq of its weapons of mass destruction and to ensure that it did not reconstitute or reacquire them. UNSCOM's monitoring and verification responsibilities had been assumed in 2000 by the United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission (UNMOVIC), which was established by resolution 1284(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 230]. However, since Iraq refused to accept that resolution, UNMOVIC had not been able to carry out its work inside Iraqi territory. The Council received four quarterly reports on UNMOVIC activities and two biannual reports from IAEA. In January, IAEA inspectors were able to verify the presence of known material under safeguards during an inspection carried out in Iraq.

The Secretary-General transmitted three reports on the repatriation or return of all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals from Iraq, and on the return of all Kuwaiti property seized by Iraq during its 1990 invasion and occupation of Kuwait [YUN 1990, p. 189]. The Secretary-General's high-level Coordinator for missing Kuwaiti and third-country nationals, Yuli M. Vorontsov, briefed the Security Council regularly on his work.

The United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM) continued to carry out its functions of surveillance, control and investigation in the demilitarized zone between Iraq and Kuwait, and maintained liaison with authorities from both countries. The Council, on the Secretary-General's recommendation, decided to maintain UNIKOM and to review its functions in 2002.

In the context of the continuing sanctions against Iraq, the temporary arrangements for the humanitarian programme for the Iraqi people, based on an oil-for-food formula, was extended three times during the year—the first time for a month in order to consider new arrangements for the sale or supply of commodities and products to Iraq, the second time for 150 days and the last time for 180 days. Throughout the year, the Council focused on securing improvements to the sanctions regime and on modifications to the oil-for-food programme based on a goods review list. In November, the Council pledged to adopt the proposed goods review list and procedures for its application for implementation beginning in May 2002.

By decisions 56/450 and 56/451 of 21 December, the General Assembly deferred consideration of, respectively, armed Israeli aggression against Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system on the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security; and the consequences of Iraq's occupation of and aggression against Kuwait. It included both items in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh (2002) session.

UN Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission and IAEA activities

UNMOVIC

In 2001, UNMOVIC continued its attempts, in the absence of Iraqi cooperation and refusal to allow field operations, to monitor Iraq's compliance with its weapons-related obligations under resolution 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172] and other relevant resolutions. UNMOVIC, which was a successor body to UNSCOM, prepared itself for full monitoring and verification operations in the field by recruiting and training new staff and examining information received from sources other than Iraq.

By letters dated 26 October [S/2001/1029] and 2 November [S/2001/1064], the Secretary-General proposed to the Security Council President that John S. Wolf (United States) and Li Junhua (China) be appointed to the UNMOVIC College of Commissioners as replacements for Robert Einhorn (United States) and Cong Guang (China), respectively. By letters dated 31 October [S/2001/1030] and 12 November [S/2001/1065], the Council President replied that the Council had taken note of the Secretary-General's proposals.

Reports of UNMOVIC (February, May, August, November). As called for by Security Council resolution 1284(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 230], UNMOVIC submitted to the Council, through the Secretary-General, four quarterly reports on its activities. Throughout the year, the Executive Chairman continued his practice of providing monthly briefings to the Council President and kept the Secretary-General informed about UNMOVIC's preparatory activities. UNMOVIC staff training courses were held throughout the year.

The February report [S/2001/177], covering the period from 1 December 2000 to 28 February 2001, noted that Iraq's failure to accept resolution 1284(1999) meant that the Commission had been unable to commence inspections on the ground. The fourth meeting of UNMOVIC's College of Commissioners (Vienna, 21-22 February) discussed, among other things, unresolved disarmament issues in each of the three disciplines for which UNMOVIC was responsible (chemical weapons, biological weapons and proscribed missiles). As on previous occasions, observers from IAEA and the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons also attended. The College received a briefing on progress made on revising and updating the lists of dual-use items and material to which the export/import monitoring mechanism, approved in Council resolution 1051 (1996) [YUN 1996, p. 218], applied. The College also had before it a draft of the UNMOVIC handbook, which provided guidance for the conduct of inspections in Iraq, and heard a briefing on the planned use of overhead imagery as a complement to on-site inspections.

The May report [S/2001/515], which covered the period from 1 March to 31 May, stated that UNMOVIC was continuing to prepare for work in Iraq, particularly by training staff, seeking to identify issues that would need special attention through monitoring and inspection, and consolidating the archives inherited from UNSCOM. The Commission's core staff had, by and large, been recruited. The completion of both the inventory of unresolved disarmament issues and the identification of the key remaining disarmament tasks would be possible only after the Commission's experts had commenced work in Iraq and had been able to assess what changes might have occurred during almost two and a half years of no on-site inspections or monitoring within the country. Nevertheless, the experts were able to make considerable progress through analysing and assessing the large volume of material taken over from UNSCOM. UNMOVIC experts had completed their review of the criteria for the classification of inspection facilities and sites throughout Iraq. They also continued to link IAEA and UNMOVIC databases, in particular with respect to information relevant to the operation of the joint unit established to implement the export/import monitoring mechanism. The new system would also integrate information held by IAEA and UNMOVIC on sites and facilities subject to inspection in Iraq. UNMOVIC held two meetings with representatives of interested Member States on suggested revisions to the missile, chemical and biological lists of dual-use items and materials to which the export/import monitoring mechanism applied. The fifth meeting of the College of Commissioners (New York, 21-22 May) focused on the identification of unresolved disarmament issues. Although UNMOVIC had not been able to conduct work in Iraq, it had undertaken as much preparatory work as was possible without incurring major financial commitments and without employing a large number of staff; it was ready to take up the full tasks mandated to it by the Council.

The August report [S/2001/833], which covered the period from 1 June to 31 August, noted that UNMOVIC had completed the review and updating of the lists of dual-use items to which the export/import monitoring mechanism applied. The Executive Chairman had forwarded to the Security Council on 1 June [S/2001/560] the revised lists of chemical, biological and missile-related items subject to notification under resolution 1051(1996); the new lists entered into force on 13 July. In the absence of on-site inspection and monitoring, UNMOVIC was seeking other sources of information based on overhead imagery and had diversified its sources by obtaining imagery from a commercial provider. The College of Commissioners, at its sixth meeting (New York, 28-29 August), continued to discuss key remaining disarmament tasks and unresolved disarmament issues, and received a briefing on UNMOVIC's plans for the implementation of a reinforced system of ongoing monitoring and verification (OMV) in Iraq.

The November report [S/2001/1126], covering the period 1 September to 30 November, stated that the first phase of analytical work on a draft inventory of unresolved disarmament issues had been completed. The second phase, which would try to obtain a better overall picture of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction, the gaps in knowledge and what remained to be verified, had begun. UNMOVIC continued to analyse the imagery that it was receiving through a commercial satellite, principally for infrastructure changes at sites in Iraq previously subject to monitoring. The new images were compared with those already in the Commission's database. The data were also being used to create line diagrams of sites for inspection purposes. UNMOVIC also continued to carry out analysis of open-source information, such as newspapers, academic journals and other published material, as well as television and radio broadcasts. The UNMOVIC/IAEA joint unit continued to receive notifications from Member States of supplies to Iraq of dual-use items. Technologies that might be relevant to future inspection and monitoring work were being explored by UNMOVIC staff. A draft handbook, describing systematically the policies and technical procedures for inspectors, was largely complete. The seventh meeting of UNMOVIC's College of Commissioners (New York, 26-27 November) discussed, among other things, international efforts to prevent the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction by all States and non-State actors. Views were expressed that the terrorist attacks of 11 September in the United States had brought a new urgency to those efforts.

IAEA

Safeguards inspection

On 12 February [S/2001/129], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council President a letter from the IAEA Director General concerning a safeguards inspection carried out by the Agency in Iraq in accordance with the safeguards agreement concluded between Iraq and IAEA, pursuant to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2373(XXII) [YUN 1968, p. 17]. Between 20 and 23 January, a four-person IAEA team carried out a physical inventory verification of the declared nuclear material remaining in Iraq under IAEA seal. The inspectors were able to verify the presence of the nuclear material subject to safeguards, which consisted of low enriched, natural and depleted uranium. Iraq provided the necessary cooperation for the inspection team to perform its activities effectively and efficiently. As was the case with the 2000 inventory verification [YUN 2000, p. 295], the inspection had the limited objective of verifying the presence of the nuclear material in question. It was not intended nor could it serve as a substitute for IAEA's activities under the relevant Council resolutions.

IAEA reports (April and October). In accordance with Security Council resolution 1051(1996) [YUN 1996, p. 218], IAEA submitted to the Council, through the Secretary-General, two consolidated six-monthly reports, on 6 April [S/2001/337] and on 5 October [S/2001/945], on the Agency's verification activities in Iraq. The Agency had not been in a position, since its withdrawal from Iraq on 16 December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 267], to implement its mandate in Iraq. It was thus unable to provide any measure of assurance with regard to Iraq's compliance with its obligations under relevant Council resolutions. In that context, IAEA had not received from Iraq the semi-annual declarations required by the Agency's OMV plan. Those declarations were the principal means for Iraq to provide information regarding the use and any changes in the use of certain facilities, installations and sites and regarding the inventory and location of certain materials, equipment and isotopes.

In the April report, IAEA noted that, pursuant to Council resolution 1284(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 230] and in consultation with UNMOVIC and Member States, the Agency had revised and updated the nuclear-related list of items and technology to which the export/import mechanism, approved by resolution 1051(1996), applied. That document also constituted annex 3 to the Agency's OMV plan approved by resolution 715(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 194], and listed those nuclear and nuclear-related items that were prohibited to Iraq or were subject to certain controls, including reporting by Iraq of their location and use. IAEA would forward the revision to the Council prior to 5 June, as requested by resolution 1330(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 310]. The Agency had continued to expand and refine the structure and content of its information system in the areas of computer support to inspections and analytical tools. Advances in commercially available satellite imagery had led to its integration in the Agency's Iraq-related information system. An enhanced analysis of the available original Iraqi documentation and results accumulated through the past inspection process had also continued. IAEA remained prepared to resume its verification activities in Iraq at short notice, with UNMOVIC's assistance and cooperation.

In October, IAEA noted that the revised and updated list of items and technology to which the export/import mechanism applied was submitted to the Council, through the Secretary-General, on 4 June [S/2001/561], and that the new list had been operative since 1 September [S/2001/818].

Iraq-Kuwait

POWs, Kuwaiti property and missing persons

Reports of Secretary-General (June, August, December). Pursuant to Council resolution 1284 (1999) [YUN 1999, p. 230], the Secretary-General submitted reports in June [S/2001/582], August [S/2001/796] and December [S/2001/1196] on compliance by Iraq with its obligations regarding the repatriation or return of all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals or their remains, and on the return of all Kuwaiti property, including archives, seized by Iraq.

In June, the Secretary-General said that Iraq continued to maintain that it had returned a large part of the Kuwaiti property found in Iraq and had expressed its readiness to return what it might find in the future. Kuwait maintained that the return of the national archives, military equipment and museum items remained the highest priority and that there had been no progress on those issues. The Secretary-General had discussed the issue of Kuwaiti property during a meeting in February with an Iraqi delegation [S/2001/715] and subsequently briefed the Security Council, as well as Kuwaiti high officials, on those discussions. The Iraqi delegation had promised to continue the search for Kuwaiti property.

The high-level Coordinator for compliance by Iraq with its obligations regarding the return of Kuwaiti nationals and property, Yuli M. Vorontsov (Russian Federation), continued to visit countries and international organizations to further intensify efforts aimed at the resolution of humanitarian and property issues. The Coordinator reported that no substantive progress had been made in the implementation of his mandate, owing to Iraq's unwillingness to cooperate with him. The Secretary-General observed that groundless Iraqi claims that the Coordinator was, among other things, not playing an impartial role and making statements that were hostile to Iraq (see p. 294) had to be rejected in the strongest possible terms. He added that the Coordinator's activities would not yield positive results until and unless a substantial change of attitude on the part of the Iraqi leadership occurred, and that the continuing absence of a credible explanation by Iraq with regard to the Kuwaiti archives, military material and museum items delayed the closure of that file.

In August, the Secretary-General described developments related to the repatriation of all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals or their remains in the period since December 2000. While briefing the Security Council on 20 April, the Coordinator stated that one year after his appointment to the post, he had been unable to report a breakthrough on the issue of the repatriation of all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals. The Council President, addressing the press, had said that the Council unanimously supported the Coordinator's work and hoped that there would be some progress on that strictly humanitarian issue.

During the reporting period, the Coordinator continued to visit countries and international organizations to further intensify efforts to resolve the issue of the repatriation of all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals or their remains. The outcome of the Tripartite Commission's meeting (Geneva, 19 July) again demonstrated that the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) remained committed to resolving the issue of repatriation. The meeting also addressed the issue of the missing pilots Muhammad Salih Nazirah (Saudi Arabia) and Michael Speicher (United States) (see p. 294). The Tripartite Commission, established in 1991 under ICRC auspices, dealt with the question of persons still unaccounted for, and was made up of representatives of France, Iraq, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, the United Kingdom and the United States. A Technical Subcommittee was established in 1994 to expedite the search for all persons for whom inquiry files had been opened. However, at the end of 1998, Iraq decided not to participate in the Commission's work, arguing that it no longer held captive Kuwaiti prisoners in its territory and, thus, the issue had become one of missing persons, not prisoners of war (POWs).

The Secretary-General observed that it was regrettable that Iraq was still unwilling to cooperate with the high-level Coordinator on the grounds that it rejected resolution 1284(1999). He added that Iraq should appreciate the fact that the international community was not selective and that all cases of missing persons, whether Kuwaiti, Saudi, Iraqi or others, would be addressed. (The nationals to be repatriated or returned included 570 Kuwaitis, 3 Lebanese, 1 Indian, 4 Iranians, 5 Egyptians, 4 Syrians, 1 Bahraini, 1 Omani and 14 Saudi Arabians. Iraq claimed 1,142 missing nationals.) As Iraq said it wished to seek a resolution to the issue of its own nationals, it was essential that it exercised an appropriate understanding of the position held by Kuwait and other countries concerned. Initiatives taken by the League of Arab States (LAS) and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC) in support of the Coordinator's efforts were welcomed and highly appreciated.

In December, the Secretary-General reported on activities related to repatriation of all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals or their remains, and the return of Kuwaiti property. He had continued to raise the issue of repatriation or return of all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals with representatives of Member States and heads of international organizations, among others. In pursuance of his mandate, the high-level Coordinator maintained close contacts with LAS and OIC. On 15 August, the Coordinator addressed letters to Bahrain, Egypt, India, Iran, Lebanon, Oman, Saudi Arabia and the Syrian Arab Republic, in which he provided information on their nationals who were yet to be repatriated, or their remains returned.

Regarding the return of Kuwaiti property, the Coordinator, in June, had reaffirmed to the Security Council his readiness to travel to Baghdad in order to facilitate the return of archives and military equipment, as well as other items belonging to Kuwait. Members of the Council, in their interventions, had pointed out, among other things, that it was legitimate for Kuwait to demand the return of the national archives and called on Iraq to cooperate fully with the Coordinator. The Coordinator met with the Executive Secretary of the Compensation Commission, Rolf G. Knutsson, in October and discussed the problem of the return of Kuwaiti property, including its financial aspects.

In his observations, the Secretary-General said that it was most regrettable that during the past two years not a single item had been returned to Kuwait from Iraq, and that the most disturbing aspect in that regard remained Iraq's refusal to address the issue of Kuwait's national archives.

Communications. In identical letters of 5 February to the Secretary-General and the Council President [S/2001/117], Iraq said that it had cooperated with ICRC and Saudi authorities in finding the remains of Saudi pilot Muhammad Salih Nazirah, whose aircraft was shot down by Iraq in 1991. Iraq affirmed its readiness to continue to investigate the fate of missing persons with the Tripartite Commission and its Technical Subcommittee. It also called attention to the issue of the 1,142 missing Iraqis and to the fact that Kuwaiti and Saudi authorities had provided no information in that regard.

Responding in identical letters of 26 March [S/2001/274], Saudi Arabia said, among other things, that Iraq had not cooperated in the finding of the Saudi pilot and had not provided the positive information required to demonstrate its seriousness in devising solutions to the humanitarian predicament of missing persons. Referring to that letter on 7 April [S/2001/340], Iraq objected to the use of the term "prisoners" in referring to the issue of missing Kuwaitis and Saudis. Iraq reiterated that it had cooperated with ICRC and the Tripartite Commission on the humanitarian issue of missing persons, but questioned Mr. Vorontsov's role, which, it said, could only be political. Responding to that letter on 21 May [S/2001/517], Saudi Arabia questioned the compliance by Iraqi authorities with their obligation to hand over all of the remains of the Saudi pilot to ICRC and reaffirmed that, on humanitarian grounds, it backed, endorsed, supported and welcomed any stance, role or effort that was conducive to addressing the issue of the Saudi, Kuwaiti and other prisoners, detainees and missing persons in Iraq.

On 1 May [S/2001/439], in identical letters to the Secretary-General and the Council President, Iraq said, among other things, that from the outset it had worked with ICRC, through the Tripartite Commission, in the search for missing Kuwaitis, but had stopped attending the Commission's meetings because of the military aggression committed by the United Kingdom and the United States against it in December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 262]. Iraq added that the appointment of Mr. Vorontsov had been contrived by the United Kingdom and the United States in deference to Kuwait's desire to obstruct the work on the humanitarian issue of missing persons.

By a 23 May letter [S/2001/528], Iraq informed the Secretary-General that the Secretariat had never responded to its requests that a specific time should be designated for the return of itemized Kuwaiti property that had been found on the local Iraqi market. It called on the Secretary-General to designate a time and place for the hand-over of the property without reference to the mechanisms established by resolution 1284(1999), whose true objective was to impose a long series of conditions on the lifting of the embargo maintained against Iraq.

On 24 May [A/55/956-S/2001/526], Bahrain submitted to the Secretary-General the joint communiqué of the eleventh session of the Ministerial Council of the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) and the EU (Manama, Bahrain, 23 April). Both sides underlined their concern at the continuing uncertainty over the Kuwaiti and other POWs and persons unaccounted for and held by Iraq after the Gulf war.

In letters to the Secretary-General of 17 [S/2001/804] and 20 August [S/2001/809], Iraq confirmed its desire to cooperate with ICRC and with those States that held files of missing persons. It also called on the Secretary-General to intervene with the United Kingdom and the United States regarding their insistence on participating in the Tripartite Commission's work.

On 12 December [S/2001/1188], Kuwait informed the Secretary-General that Iraq had yet to respond to his appeals concerning Kuwaitis and third-country nationals being held in Iraq. Kuwait also stated that Iraq did not need any new mechanism to solve the issue of missing persons, as the appropriate mechanisms (the Tripartite Commission and its Technical Subcommittee, ICRC, the Secretary-General and the high-level Coordinator) already existed. Kuwait affirmed its willingness to permit ICRC to conduct a free and thorough search in its territory for the missing Iraqis whose presence was alleged by Baghdad, on the understanding that Kuwait would obtain in return full and precise information from Iraq on the fate of the Kuwaitis and third-country nationals detained in Iraqi territory.

In a later document [A/56/797-S/2002/125], Oman transmitted to the Secretary-General the final communiqué adopted by the GCC Supreme Council at its twenty-second session (Muscat, Oman, 30-31 December). The Council, among other things, urged Iraq to discharge all of its obligations under relevant resolutions, with a view to devising a definitive solution to the problem of Kuwaiti and third-country prisoners.

UN Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

The United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM), established by Security Council resolution 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172], continued in 2001 to discharge its functions in accordance with its terms of reference, as expanded by resolution 806(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 406].

UNIKOM operations involved surveillance, control, investigation and liaison. Surveillance of the demilitarized zone (DMZ), an area about 200 to 240 kilometres long and extending 10 kilometres into Iraq and 5 kilometres into Kuwait, was based on ground and air patrols and observation points. Control operations included static checkpoints, random checks and maintenance of a mobile reserve force. For operational purposes, the DMZ was divided into the northern and southern sectors, with 10 and 7 patrol/observation bases, respectively. Investigation teams were stationed in those sectors and at UNIKOM headquarters. Continuous liaison was maintained with Iraqi and Kuwaiti authorities at all levels.

The military observers were responsible for patrol, observation, investigation and liaison activities. The infantry battalion, deployed at Camp Khor, Kuwait, at a company camp in Al-Abdali, at platoon camps in two DMZ sectors, and in the easternmost patrol/observation base on the DMZ's Iraqi side, conducted armed patrols within those areas and manned checkpoints at border-crossing sites, making random checks in co-operation with Iraqi and Kuwaiti liaison officers. It also provided security for UNIKOM personnel and installations.

UNIKOM maintained headquarters at Umm Qasr in Iraq, liaison offices in Baghdad and Kuwait City and a support centre at Camp Khor.

Communications. On 17 January [S/2001/53], 25 April [S/2001/412] and 21 August [S/2001/813], Kuwait said that senior Iraqi officials, including President Saddam Hussein, and the Iraqi satellite television channel had made threatening statements against Kuwait. By a 26 May letter to the Secretary-General [S/2001/533], Iraq responded to Kuwait's allegations. On 17 February [S/2001/146], Iraq informed the Secretary-General that British and United States aircraft had carried out attacks in the vicinity of Baghdad and its suburbs on 16 February, causing the death and injury of Iraqi civilians as well as the destruction of civilian property. Iraq said that UNIKOM had failed to fulfil its responsibilities, since one of the Mission's main functions was to monitor acts of military aggression carried out inside the DMZ and immediately to inform the Secretary-General thereof, taking action to prevent their recurrence.

By a 17 February statement [S/2001/149], Belarus expressed concern at the air strikes carried out by the United Kingdom and the United States against targets to the south-west of Baghdad. Such actions represented violations of international law, undermined the UN Charter and exacerbated the situation, both in the region and at the global level.

On 20 February [S/2001/152], Iraq informed the Secretary-General that the air strikes against its territory by American and British aircraft had been launched from Saudi and Kuwaiti territory, thus making Saudi Arabia and Kuwait partners in the aggression.

By a 21 February letter to the Iraqi Foreign Minister [S/2001/160], the Secretary-General said that since 1999 UNIKOM had recorded over 200 aerial violations. In the majority of cases, it had not been possible for the Mission to identify the aircraft involved or to determine their nationality. UNIKOM's inability to identify the States responsible for conducting such flights was in no way to be understood to constitute condonation of them. The Secretary-General noted that, in view of the fact that the United Kingdom and the United States had been conducting military air operations in the region, the United Nations had intervened with representatives of those States, urging them to respect the DMZ. He added that only the Security Council was competent to determine whether or not its resolutions were of such a nature and effect as to provide a lawful basis for the no-fly zones and for the actions that had been taken for their enforcement.

On 25 February [S/2001/169], Iraq transmitted a letter to the Secretary-General concerning the position that had to be taken under the UN Charter with regard to the British and United States aggression against Iraq on 16 February and with regard to the no-fly zones.

On 21 September [S/2001/899], Iraq drew the Secretary-General's attention to Kuwait's excessive exploitation of the Iraqi Rumailah oilfield, which was situated on the border and was an extension of a shared oilfield, in violation of international agreements and practice relating to the exploitation of frontier oilfields. Replying on 1 October [S/2001/925], Kuwait noted, among other things, that it alone retained the absolute sovereignty to exploit and develop its natural resources at any location in its territory and within its internationally recognized boundaries. On 10 December [S/2001/1208], Iraq said that any unilateral action by Kuwait to exploit and develop transboundary oilfields in a manner that damaged the corresponding fields in Iraqi territory was in violation of international conventions and customs.

On 21 October [S/2001/994], Iraq informed the Secretary-General of the increasing number of armed assaults carried out by Kuwaiti naval units on Iraqi fishing boats in Iraq's territorial waters.

By a 12 November letter to the Council President [S/2001/1070], Kuwait said that, on 11 November, Iraqi border forces had fired a number of projectiles in the direction of Kuwaiti territory. Replying on 10 December [S/2001/1176], Iraq refuted Kuwait's allegations.

Reports of Secretary-General (March and September). UNIKOM's activities were described in two reports of the Secretary-General, covering the periods 22 September 2000 to 27 March 2001 [S/2001/287] and 28 March to 24 September 2001 [S/2001/913].

The reports noted that the situation in the DMZ remained generally calm. However, there had been no UNIKOM helicopter flights over the Iraqi side of the DMZ since they were suspended in December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 262], when Iraqi authorities informed UNIKOM that they could not guarantee the safety of such flights due to Iraq's conflict with the United Kingdom and the United States regarding the no-fly zone.

DMZ violations increased to 267 during the first period and decreased slightly to 255 during the second period. Most of the ground violations along the border involved Iraqi vehicles using the gravel road, which crossed in and out of Kuwaiti territory. During the reporting periods, UNIKOM received 43 official complaints, 5 from Kuwait and 38 from Iraq. Of the incidents reported by UNIKOM, several involved unexploded mines and other ordnance, which still posed a danger in the DMZ and injured a number of Iraqi civilians. A high level of activity was observed at the oil installations on the Kuwaiti side of the DMZ. Iraqi oil production in the same vicinity also expanded considerably during the first reporting period. UNIKOM continued to provide security and logistical support for ICRC's humanitarian activities.

The Secretary-General observed that UNIKOM received the cooperation of the Iraqi and Kuwaiti authorities in the performance of its tasks and recommended that it be maintained in view of its continued contribution to the maintenance of calm and stability in the DMZ.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council informed the Secretary-General on 5 April [S/2001/328] and on 4 October [S/2001/936] that, in the light of his reports, it concurred with his recommendation that UNIKOM be maintained. The Council would review the question again by 6 April 2002.

Composition

As at 20 September, UNIKOM had an overall strength of 1,319, comprising 192 military observers from 31 Member States; an infantry battalion of 775 from Bangladesh; 129 support personnel, including a 50-member engineering unit and a 30-member logistics unit from Argentina, a helicopter unit of 35 from Bangladesh and a medical unit of 14 from Germany; plus a civilian staff of 223, of whom 56 were recruited internationally.

On 13 November [S/2001/1082], the Secretary-General informed the Council of his intention to appoint General Miguel Angel Moreno (Argentina) as the new Force Commander of UNIKOM. Major General John Augustine Vize (Ireland), who had served as Force Commander since 1 December 1999, would relinquish his post on 30 November. On 16 November [S/2001/1083], the Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention.

Financing

On 14 June [meeting 103], the General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's reports on the financial performance of UNIKOM for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 [A/55/810] and its proposed budget for 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002 [A/55/811], together with the related report of ACABQ [A/55/874/Add.2]. On the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/971], the Assembly adopted resolution 55/261 without vote [agenda item 130 (a)].

Financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991 and 689(1991) of 9 April 1991, by which the Council decided to establish the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and to review the question of its termination or continuation every six months,

Recalling also its resolution 45/260 of 3 May 1991 on the financing of the Observation Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 54/18 B of 15 June 2000,

Reaffirming the general principles underlying the financing of United Nations peacekeeping operations, as stated in General Assembly resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973 and 55/235 of 23 December 2000,

Expressing its appreciation for the substantial voluntary contributions made to the Observation Mission by the Government of Kuwait and the contributions of other Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observation Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission as at 30 April 2001, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 13.3 million United States dollars, representing some 5 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission to the period ending 30 April 2001, notes that some 22 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its continued appreciation of the decision of the Government of Kuwait to defray two thirds of the cost of the Observation Mission, effective 1 November 1993;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

5. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Observation Mission in full and on time;

6. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

7. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

8. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

9. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Observation Mission;

10. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Observation Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Observation Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

13. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission the amount of 52,815,237 dollars gross (50,478,961 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Observation Mission for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, inclusive of the amount of 1,545,763 dollars gross (1,356,558 dollars net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 161,474 dollars gross (145,003 dollars net) for the United Nations Logistics Base, a two-thirds share of this amount, equivalent to 33,652,640 dollars, to be funded through voluntary contributions from the Government of Kuwait, subject to the review by the Security Council with regard to the question of termination or continuation of the Mission;

14. Decides also, taking into consideration the funding through voluntary contributions from the Government of Kuwait of the two-thirds share of the cost of the Observation Mission, equivalent to 33,652,640 dollars, to apportion among Member States the amount of 19,162,597 dollars gross (16,826,321 dollars net), representing one third of the cost of the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, the said amount to be apportioned at a monthly rate of 1,596,883 dollars gross (1,402,193 dollars net) in accordance with the levels set out in General Assembly resolution 55/235, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolution 55/236 of 23 December 2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 2001 and 2002, as set out in its resolution 55/5 B of 23 December 2000, subject to the review by the Security Council with regard to the question of termination or continuation of the Mission;

15. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 14 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 2,336,276 dollars approved for the Observation Mission for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002;

16. Decides that, taking into consideration the funding through voluntary contributions from the Government of Kuwait of the two-thirds share of the cost of the Observation Mission, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 14 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 1,216,833 dollars gross (884,833 dollars net), representing one third of the unencumbered balance of 2,986,500 dollars gross (2,654,500 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 2000, in accordance with the composition of groups as set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989 and adjusted by the Assembly in subsequent relevant resolutions and decisions for the ad hoc apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations, the latest of which were its resolution 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999 for the period 1998-2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999;

17. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Observation Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 1,216,833 dollars gross (884,833 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 2000 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations in accordance with the scheme set out in paragraph 16 above;

18. Decides further that two thirds of the net unencumbered balance of 2,654,500 dollars, equivalent to 1,769,667 dollars, shall be returned to the Government of Kuwait;

19. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

20. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Observation Mission;

21. Invites voluntary contributions to the Observation Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

22. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Financing of the activities arising from Security Council resolution 687(1991)", the sub-item entitled "United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission".

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the financing of the activities arising from Security Council resolution 687 (1991) would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464) and that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item at that session (decision 56/458).

Arms and related sanctions

The Security Council's reviews of the sanctions provisions against Iraq for the purpose of determining whether to reduce or lift the prohibitions against it imposed under resolution 687 (1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172] remained suspended in 2001, in accordance with resolution 1194(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 257]. As it later reaffirmed in resolution 1205(1998) (ibid., p. 258), the Council would act in accordance with the relevant provisions of resolution 687(1991) on the duration of the prohibitions referred to in that resolution.

Communications. By a 3 April statement [S/2001/323] transmitted to the Secretary-General, the Russian Federation proposed that all States interested in a comprehensive settlement of the Iraqi issue should unite their efforts on the basis of a "package" approach entailing the suspension and then the lifting of economic sanctions in exchange for the re-establishment in Iraqi territory of an international disarmament monitoring system. Within a short period of time, Iraq and the Secretary-General could draw up a concrete formula for giving effect to that idea, which would include, among other things, the objectives and modalities of inspection activity. If within a clearly defined reasonable period the monitoring organ found no activity by Iraq associated with prohibited military programmes, the Council would take a decision on the lifting of sanctions against Iraq. On 5 November [S/2001/1047], Kuwait alerted the Council President to the fact that Iraq had for some years engaged in the large-scale smuggling of petroleum and petroleum products through the waterways and seaports of the Arabian Gulf.

Sanctions Committee activities

The Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990) [YUN 1990, p. 192] (Sanctions Committee for Iraq), in its annual report [S/2002/647], described its activities from 1 December 2000 to 31 December 2001. In addition to its implementation activities under Council resolutions 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475] and 1175(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 274] relating to the humanitarian programme for the Iraqi people (see p. 300), the Committee processed 6,352 notifications and applications from States and international organizations to send humanitarian goods to Iraq under resolutions 661(1990) and 687(1991). Some 2,168 of those requests, with an estimated value of $8,041,384,653, were approved; 682, valued at $2,009,426,507, were placed on hold for further information or clarification; 3,313, valued at $27,550,806,741, were blocked; and 8, valued at $2,574,551, were withdrawn or annulled.

The Committee processed and responded to 447 communications concerning flights to Iraq. In September, it discussed the plan by Syrian Arab Airlines to start operating charter flights twice a week between Damascus and Baghdad. In the absence of consensus, the Committee continued to follow its practice of considering flight communications on a case-by-case basis, pending a solution with regard to the procedures for flights to Iraq.

As to financial matters, no agreement was reached by the Committee on the proposal by Iraq to donate 1 billion euros of oil revenue to the Palestinian people. The Committee decided to request further clarification on a proposal by UNESCO to open a bank account in Iraqi dinars to finance activities in Iraq. Concerning a request by Jordan that its share in a private joint venture held in Baghdad be released, the Committee decided that it needed further information on the matter. It also expressed the view that resolution 661(1990) prohibited a Jordanian company from providing insurance to a company in Baghdad. The UN Treasurer, in a briefing to the Committee, confirmed that an account in euros had been opened with the BNP-Paribas bank and cited administrative costs of $2.6 million for the change-over from dollars to euros in pricing Iraq's oil exports. The Treasurer also briefed the Committee on the diversification of banking services for the UN Iraq account and appealed to it to encourage States to transfer proceeds from the sale of illegal Iraqi oil cargoes into the escrow account established by resolution 778(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 320]. The Committee decided to request the Multinational Interception Force (MIF) to provide information regarding ships seized and diverted in the Gulf.

Concerning reported violations, the Committee sent letters to the United Arab Emirates and Qatar to ascertain whether a United Arab Emirates subsidiary of a Qatari company had donated an aeroplane to Iraq. Likewise, it had sent letters to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Arab Emirates regarding flights to Iraq that had taken place without notification to the Committee. Two flights to Iraq, from Bulgaria and Syria, had allegedly taken place without being brought to the Committee's attention. There had also been reports of Iraqi aircraft landing in other countries; the Committee did not reach a consensus on how to proceed with the matter. During a November briefing to the Committee, the MIF Coordinator noted that oil smuggling in the Persian Gulf continued, as did the unauthorized use of passenger ferries by certain States to carry cargo to and from Iraq. The Committee considered a letter from the captain of the turbine tanker Essex, forwarded by the Executive Director of the Office of the Iraq Programme (OIP), which stated that a large quantity of Iraqi crude oil had been exported outside the framework of the UN humanitarian programme. The Committee agreed: that OIP should make recommendations on improving the monitoring of oil loading at the oil pumping stations, and address letters to all States whose companies had been involved in the incident (Bahamas, France, Netherlands, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela); and that the oil overseers, who advised the Committee on oil-related matters, should forward to the Committee for review contracts of the oil companies implicated in the incident. France notified the Committee that it planned to withdraw Ibex Energy from the list of companies that could make approved national oil purchases until French authorities completed investigations of its activities, particularly its alleged involvement in the Essex case. In December, the Committee considered and approved an OIP proposal for additional operating procedures for crude oil monitoring at the Mina al-Bakr facility in Iraq.

The Committee considered a number of requests from Gulf States to open marine service lines to Iraq. Although most Committee members indicated that they would be positively inclined to approve ferry services, provided that effective controls to prevent the transport of prohibited commodities could be developed, no consensus was reached. While the Committee had agreed in principle to the 2001 aerial pesticide campaign of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), Iraq refused to accept the Committee's condition that FAO observers be allowed aboard the flights. The Committee decided that it would continue to discuss the application of Article 50 of the UN Charter in relation to India's claim that it had lost $25 billion to $30 billion as a result of UN sanctions against Iraq.

With regard to new projects, the Committee approved an IAEA request for seven technical co-operation projects in Iraq; endorsed the International Civil Aviation Organization's intention to initiate contacts with Iraq as part of the Universal Safety Oversight Audit Programme; agreed to a UN Secretariat request concerning the transfer to Iraq of equipment and spare parts used for the implementation of projects by UNDP; and approved a request from the Organization for the Protection of the Marine Environment to clean up the polluted waters of the Arabian Gulf and to prevent oil leakage from sunken Iraqi ships.

Concerning a request for the opening of a border crossing to allow humanitarian goods to pass from Saudi Arabia to Iraq, the Committee decided to seek further clarification from Saudi authorities. The request was also forwarded to the Secretary-General for his consideration. No agreement was reached by the Committee on requests from Jordan and Tunisia to transfer Iraqi civilian aircraft held in their territories since the Gulf war.

During the year, the Committee issued four reports on the implementation of the arms and related sanctions against Iraq, in accordance with the guidelines approved by Council resolution 700(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 198] for facilitating full international implementation of resolution 687 (1991). The reports were transmitted to the Council on 23 January [S/2001/72], 23 April [S/2001/400], 20 July [S/2001/721] and 23 October [S/2001/1003]. The October report indicated that the United Kingdom, on 7 September, had brought to the Committee's attention some German press articles reporting the alleged Iraqi attempt to develop its weapons of mass destruction programmes. The other three reports indicated that no other State had brought to the Committee's attention any information relating to possible violations of the arms and related sanctions against Iraq committed by other States or foreign nationals. All of the reports noted that no State or international organization had consulted the Committee on whether certain items fell within the provisions of paragraph 24 of resolution 687 (1991), or on cases relating to dual-use or multiple-use items; and no international organization had reported any relevant information requested under the guidelines.

Oil-for-food programme

In accordance with Security Council resolutions 1330(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 310] and 1360(2001) (see p. 305), extending for a 180-day period and a 150-day period, respectively, the provisions of resolution 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475], which authorized States to import Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products as a temporary measure to finance a humanitarian programme to alleviate the adverse consequences of the sanctions regime on the Iraqi people (also known as the oil-for-food programme) [YUN 1996, p. 225], the Secretary-General and the Sanctions Committee for Iraq separately submitted a report 90 days after entry into force of each resolution and again before the end of the respective periods. The 180-day period under the first resolution was extended from 6 December 2000 to 31 May 2001, and again by resolution 1352(2001) (see p. 303) from 1 June to 3 July (phase IX) in order to complete a review of the programme, more specifically to consider new arrangements for the sale or supply of commodities and products to Iraq and for the facilitation of civilian trade and economic cooperation with Iraq in civilian sectors. The 150-day period under resolution 1360(2001) was extended from 4 July to 30 November (phase X).

The reports described progress in implementing the arrangements specified by the resolutions, taking account of the provisions of the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding between the UN Secretariat and the Government of Iraq [YUN 1996, p. 226] and the procedures established by the Sanctions Committee [ibid., p. 228] for the implementation of resolution 986(1995). They also described the distribution of humanitarian relief, on behalf of Iraq, in the three northern governorates of Erbil, Dahuk and Sulaymaniyah under the United Nations Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme, to complement government distribution in central and southern Iraq, thereby ensuring equitable distribution to all segments of the Iraqi population. However, throughout 2001, the effective implementation of the programme continued to face a number of difficulties and obstacles, partly due to the fact that Iraqi oil exports under the oil-for-food programme had suffered significant financial losses.

The provisions of resolution 986(1995) were extended for a further 180-day period beginning on 1 December by resolution 1382(2001) (see p. 308), inaugurating phase XI of the programme.

Pursuant to resolution 1352(2001), the Council met in June to consider new arrangements for the sale or supply of commodities and products to Iraq and for the facilitation of civilian trade and economic cooperation with Iraq in civilian sectors on the basis of a goods review list. No agreement was reached on a proposal submitted by the United Kingdom on a new set of arrangements. In November, by resolution 1382(2001), the Council pledged to adopt the proposed goods review list and procedures for its application, subject to any refinements to them agreed by the Council, for implementation beginning on 30 May 2002.

A team of experts visited Iraq in March to assist the Secretary-General in formulating modalities for the use of cash in meeting programme requirements.

Allocation for oil-production equipment

Team of experts report. In response to resolution 1330(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 310], the Secretary-General submitted to the Council on 6 June [S/2001/566] the report of the team of experts established to assist him in developing the necessary arrangements to allow funds up to 600 million euros deposited in the escrow account created by resolution 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475] to be used for the cost of installation and maintenance, including training services, of equipment and spare parts for the Iraqi oil industry. The team visited Iraq from 18 March to 1 April 2001 and received full cooperation from Iraqi authorities.

As at 1 June 2001, the total value of oil spare parts and equipment delivered to Iraq was over $716 million. Additional supplies, valued at over $800 million under already approved applications, were in the production and delivery pipeline. The team of experts reiterated the views expressed in previous reports by expert missions that the oil industry in Iraq continued to face significant technical and infrastructural problems, which, unless addressed, would inevitably result in the reduction of crude oil production. The peak levels of production recorded in phases VI (1999) and VIII (2000) of the programme were only achieved at the expense of long-term damage to the oil-bearing structures utilized, and with increasing collateral damage to surface facilities operating beyond recommended and safe maintenance periods. It was therefore essential to take all necessary measures to address the rapid decline of oil-production capabilities of existing fields, as well as to ensure additional production capabilities in order to sustain production and export levels.

The team of experts formulated a set of arrangements and a budget for the utilization of the funds from the escrow account, which followed normal oil company methodology and addressed the cash component requirements of the Iraq oil industry over a period of 12 months. It also correlated the proposed projects with the oil spare parts and equipment already delivered. In a number of cases, however, proposed projects were based on the expectation of the Iraqi Ministry of Oil of the early delivery of spare parts and equipment not yet approved. According to the team of experts, the expectation of the Ministry of Oil for the renewal of the allocation of 600 million euros with each extension of the programme's mandate by the Council was commensurate with the size and complexity of the projects that were required to be installed, commissioned and maintained. It was proposed that the funds be initially transferred from the UN escrow account to the Rafidain Bank in Amman, Jordan. Subsequently, the funds would be transferred in euros, in monthly instalments, to the Ministry of Oil, for transfer to the operating companies in Iraqi dinars against the agreed cash flow requirements.

The Secretary-General welcomed the team's main conclusions and recommended that the Council approve the proposed arrangements for the utilization of the 600 million euros.

Phase IX

On 13 February [S/2001/134], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that he had approved the distribution plan for the purchase of humanitarian supplies during phase IX. The plan, submitted by Iraq, proposed spending $5.556 billion on food, medicines, education, infrastructure and spare parts and equipment for the Iraqi oil industry. Approval was given on the understanding that the implementation would be governed by Council resolutions 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475], 1281(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 250], 1284(1999) [ibid., p. 230], 1302(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 307] and 1330(2000) [ibid., p. 310] and the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding between the UN Secretariat and Iraq [YUN 1996, p. 226] and would be without prejudice to the Sanctions Committee procedures.

Reports of Secretary-General (March and May). Pursuant to resolution 1330(2000), the Secretary-General issued two progress reports, each covering a 90-day period under phase IX, which began on 6 December 2000. The reports, issued on 2 March [S/2001/186 & Corr.1] and 18 May [S/2001/505], provided information on all implementation aspects, including progress made in meeting the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people, up to 31 January and 30 April, respectively.

The reports reviewed revenue generation, including the status of the oil industry, UN accounts pertaining to the Iraq programme, and processing and approval of applications for contracts; observation and monitoring activities; and the effectiveness, equitability and adequacy of programme implementation in central and southern Iraq and in the three northern governorates of Dahuk, Erbil and Sulaymaniyah, by focusing on food, health, agriculture, water and sanitation, education, electricity, telecommunications, housing and mine action.

In his March report, the Secretary-General said that he was concerned that the funds required for the implementation of the distribution plan for phase IX (see above) might not be available, due to the substantial drop in oil exports from Iraq under the programme since December 2000. Although the programme was never meant to meet all the needs of the Iraqi people, it had contributed to arresting the decline of, and in some parts improving, living conditions in Iraq. However, its impact had not been uniform, as the existing disparities between Baghdad and the rest of the country, as well as between rural and urban areas, persisted. The nutritional situation of the Iraqi population had improved since the start of the programme's implementation in December 1996 and the average caloric value of the food ration provided had risen. Nevertheless, purchasing power had steadily declined and, while food items were readily available in markets, they were unaffordable to the average Iraqi citizen. In the three northern governorates, there had been considerable improvement in the nutritional status of children under five years of age. In the central and southern governorates, however, chronic malnutrition rates remained higher overall.

The Secretary-General observed that the programme could not be a substitute for normal economic activity in Iraq. However, as long as sanctions were in place, there was no alternative to the programme in providing for the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people. He recommended that Iraq clarify how the limited resources allocated in the distribution plan for phase IX would satisfy its own objectives to improve the nutritional status of children. He also urged Iraq to increase its daily average rate of oil exports to at least the levels in the previous phase, as it had lost about 2 billion euros in revenue due to the substantial drop in exports since December 2000. He regretted that the Sanctions Committee had not heeded the Council's urging, in resolution 1330(2000), to review applications in an expeditious manner and to decrease the level of applications on hold. The Secretary-General welcomed Iraq's confirmation of its willingness to cooperate with the programme and to allow UN personnel to observe throughout the country the equitable distribution of humanitarian supplies imported under the distribution plan, but expressed concern over the delays in the issuance of visas by Iraq to UN personnel. In connection with the killing of two FAO staff members and the injuring of eight others in June 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 309], the Secretary-General said that a criminal court in Baghdad was considering the case, though Iraq had yet to submit a report to him on its investigation into the deaths.

The Secretary-General said that, with the increased funding for the humanitarian component of the programme, the time had come to review the validity of applying procedures and practices, originally designed to cover food and medicine, to a vastly more expanded and more complex array of activities and equipment. It was essential not only to improve the process of the preparation and timely submission of the plan, but also to prepare a more targeted and result-oriented plan, with a clear statement of objectives to be achieved during a given phase, including benchmarks, which would improve the evaluation of the performance, achievements and effectiveness of the programme. In that context, a project approach, with a clear indication of targets and performance indicators, had been adopted for the implementation of the programme by UN agencies and programmes in the three northern governorates.

In his May report, the Secretary-General confirmed that, despite the increase in the daily average rate of oil exports under the programme to at least the levels of the previous phase, it was estimated that the total revenue of oil exports under the programme during phase IX would reach only 6.5 billion euros, or about $5.7 billion, which would provide only about $3.5 billion for the programme's implementation, after the deductions pursuant to relevant Council resolutions. An annex to the report gave the status of the UN Iraq Account established under resolution 986(1995), indicating that, by 30 April 2001, 3,253.8 million euros had been deposited into the account for phase IX, bringing total oil sales since the inception of the programme to $37,333.9 million and 4,833.4 million euros. The authorization for Iraq to export unlimited amounts of oil and to import a wider range of goods had transformed the programme's nature and range of activities from providing emergency humanitarian relief to encompassing many aspects of rehabilitation of essential civilian infrastructure. The Secretary-General recommended that the list of items already approved, relating to different sectors, be expanded to include all items, with the exception of those covered under resolution 1051(1996) [YUN 1996, p. 218]. Notwithstanding the range of opinions and discussions on a broader framework for the programme, the Secretary-General appealed to all parties concerned to preserve the distinct humanitarian identity of the programme.

A number of major difficulties continued to be encountered in the effective implementation of the programme, due to the absence of a viable arrangement for local procurement of goods and services and the provision of a cash component. An increasing range of equipment was being imported, with insufficient local resources available to undertake installation, training and maintenance. The Secretary-General appealed to Iraq to work with the United Nations in developing necessary and viable working arrangements for local procurement and a cash component, which would ultimately serve to stimulate local production. He informed the Council that he had instructed the Executive Director of the Iraq Programme, in consultation with the UN Humanitarian Coordinator for Iraq and the UN agencies and programmes concerned, to provide him with a list of essential medicines in short supply and measures required to resolve that problem. The total value of applications received during phase IX, as at 14 May, was $1.8 billion, including $1.2 billion for items for the food basket. Not a single application under the health, water and sanitation, education and oil sectors had been received. The Secretary-General appealed to Iraq to provide information to OIP and the UN Office of the Humanitarian Coordinator for Iraq on contracts signed, as such information would expedite the processing of the applications received. He also expressed concern over the visa situation and the negative impact that the interruption in essential activities was having on the humanitarian situation in the three northern governorates, and called on Iraq to issue the required visas to UN officials, experts and other personnel. He informed the Council that the criminal trial proceedings concerning the death of two FAO staff members in June 2000 was postponed, for the seventh time, to 28 May.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 1 June [meeting 4324], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1352(2001). The draft [S/2001/545] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions, including its resolutions 986(1995) of 14 April 1995, 1284(1999) of 17 December 1999 and 1330(2000) of 5 December 2000,

Convinced of the need, as a temporary measure, to provide for the civilian needs of the Iraqi people until the fulfilment by the Government of Iraq of the relevant resolutions, including notably resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991 and 1284(1999), allows the Council to take further action with regard to the prohibitions referred to in resolution 661(1990) of 6 August 1990, in accordance with the provisions of those resolutions,

Recalling the Memorandum of Understanding between the United Nations and the Government of Iraq of 20 May 1996,

Determined to improve the humanitarian situation in Iraq,

Reaffirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to extend the provisions of resolution 1330(2000) until 3 July 2001;

2. Expresses its intention to consider new arrangements for the sale or supply of commodities and products to Iraq and for the facilitation of civilian trade and economic cooperation with Iraq in civilian sectors, based on the following principles:

(a) That such new arrangements will improve significantly the flow of commodities and products to Iraq, other than commodities and products referred to in paragraph 24 of resolution 687(1991), and subject to review by the Committee established by resolution 661(1990) of the proposed sale or supply to Iraq of commodities and products on a Goods Review List to be elaborated by the Council;

(b) That such new arrangements will improve the controls to prevent the sale or supply of items prohibited or unauthorized by the Council, in the categories referred to in paragraph 2 (a) above, and to prevent the flow of revenues to Iraq outside the escrow account established pursuant to paragraph 7 of resolution 986(1995) from the export of petroleum and petroleum products from Iraq, and also expresses its intention to adopt and implement such new arrangements, and provisions on various related issues under discussion in the Council, for a period of 190 days beginning at 0001 hours on 4 July 2001;

3. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Communication. On 18 June [S/2001/603], Iraq transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter concerning the Security Council's consultations on the extension of the Memorandum of Understanding and review of the oil-for-food programme. According to Iraq, the Secretary-General had stated to the press on 4 June that the Council had not completed the review in the time required and that an automatic extension of the programme for one month had therefore been decided. Iraq said that the United Kingdom and the United States were endeavouring to terminate the Memorandum of Understanding and the humanitarian programme and to replace them with a so-called regime of smart sanctions that would impose international tutelage on Iraq for decades to come, would prevent it from using its resources and would ultimately lead to a further deterioration in the humanitarian situation in Iraq.

Security Council consideration. At the request of the Russian Federation [S/2001/597], the Security Council, on 26 and 28 June, discussed the situation between Iraq and Kuwait [meeting 4336]. With the Council's consent, the President invited the representative of LAS, at the request of Tunisia [S/2001/631], to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President also drew attention to Iraq's 18 June letter (see above).

Addressing the Council, the Russian Federation said that a draft resolution prepared by the United Kingdom, which proposed a goods review list for deliveries to Iraq, would preserve the sanctions regime with unacceptable consequences for the people and economy of Iraq. According to Russia, the United Kingdom proposal included goods from the so-called Wassenaar Arrangements, which brought together a limited group of countries on a voluntary basis and which were already being applied in practice in respect of Iraq. Giving those Arrangements a sanctions status under Chapter VII of the UN Charter would have serious legal and political consequences. The proposal also included a list of goods defined in such a way that it would be possible, through vague procedures for considering contracts, to block essential projects for the recovery of the energy, oil, industrial and other areas of Iraq's economy. In addition, the introduction of new sanctions, as proposed by the United Kingdom, could seriously damage the trade and economic interests of many countries. Consequently, Russia had introduced a specific proposal for suspending and then lifting sanctions (see p. 298) that was tied to the deployment in Iraq of the OMV system on the basis of implementation of existing Council resolutions.

The United Kingdom said its draft resolution contained a series of proposals to allow Iraq to import the full range of civilian goods without restriction. The Council, in resolution 1352 (2001) (see above), had agreed to spend a month examining and refining those proposals and, at the end of that month, to agree to a new set of arrangements. The aim was not to replace resolution 1284(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 230], but to set in place measures to liberalize the flow of goods to Iraq and, at the same time, to examine ways to make sure that military-related items were not exported to Iraq. The new proposals contained in the draft text would make a significant difference to the flow of goods to Iraq, as all types of exports would be allowed, except for a very limited range of items that had to be reviewed by the Sanctions Committee on the basis of criteria related to their potential military use. Even for those items, there would be no presumption of denial. There was no intention in the draft resolution to harm the economic interests of neighbouring States or others doing legitimate business with Iraq. On the contrary, the United Kingdom expected to see an expansion of civilian trade, which would benefit all. However, Iraq continued to export oil outside the UN system to build up illegal revenue with which it could purchase weapons and other proscribed items. The traffic of such items to Iraq had to be controlled if the Council resolutions were to have their intended effect. The draft resolution would ask the Secretary-General to consult and cooperate with the neighbouring States to address those problems and there would also be obligations on supplier countries. Other elements in the draft would move the situation forward: Iraq would be allowed to pay its UN dues from the escrow account, aircraft frozen and held in other States would be allowed to return to Iraq, and steps would be taken to address the problem of the illegal oil surcharge levied by Iraq on purchasers of Iraqi oil.

Kuwait said that, despite the strict humanitarian nature of the oil-for-food programme, Iraq had not worked to ensure the success of the programme or to ensure benefits from its modalities. Iraq's implementation of all relevant Council resolutions was the primary guarantee of the security and stability of the region. If Iraq had implemented its commitments under resolution 1284(1999), in all probability the sanctions would have been suspended, if not lifted, as had happened to other States subjected to a sanctions regime.

At the resumed meeting, on 28 June, Iraq said it had implemented all the obligations enshrined in the relevant Council resolutions. It had also recognized Kuwait's sovereignty and territorial integrity, its independence and its borders as delineated by the United Nations. While the Council continued to call on Iraq to comply with its resolutions, it had shown no reaction to the no-fly zones imposed on Iraq by the United Kingdom and the United States without any Council resolution authorizing those operations. In addition, the humanitarian objectives of the oil-for-food programme had not been achieved because of the complexity of the measures adopted by the Council for the implementation of the Memorandum of Understanding and interference by the United Kingdom and the United States in its implementation; unfairness in the distribution of revenues from the sale of Iraqi oil; and the persistence of the United Kingdom and the United States in putting contracts on hold on imaginary pretexts. With regard to the draft resolution proposed by the United Kingdom, Iraq said, among other things, that it would lead to an intervention in the pricing of Iraqi crude oil, which would entail the destruction of the relationship between supplier and buyer. The end result would be to use Iraqi oil as leverage, because it would be under tight control, and to transform the oil market and maintain it at all times as a buyer's market.

Sanctions Committee report (September).

The Sanctions Committee report for phase IX, which was extended by one month to 3 July by resolution 1352(2001), was transmitted to the Security Council on 4 September [S/2001/842]. Issues considered by the Committee included the sale of petroleum and petroleum products; humanitarian supplies to Iraq; and matters relating to oil spare parts and equipment for Iraq. The Committee also held informal meetings on sectoral activities on a monthly basis, with presentations by UN agencies and programmes concerned, as well as discussions on holds in each sector. The oil overseers continued to advise the Committee on oil pricing mechanisms, oil contract approval and amendments, management of revenue objectives and other pertinent questions related to export and monitoring.

During the initial period of phase IX, some 100 million barrels of crude oil export from Iraq, valued at some $2.5 billion, were lost as a result of erratic exports and a decline in market prices. A further $1.3 billion was lost during the latter part of phase IX due to Iraq's decision to suspend oil exports for about a month after the adoption of resolution 1352(2001). Applications received as at 30 June for the export of humanitarian supplies to Iraq (under phase VIII) totalled 2,650. Of the 1,565 circulated to the Committee, 1,257 were approved for payment from the UN Iraq Account, totalling some $3.2 billion. Pursuant to resolution 1330(2000), the Committee also approved a number of expanded lists of humanitarian items. The work of goods-arrival confirmation by the UN independent inspection agents continued according to the established procedures at four entry points to Iraq. As in previous phases, the Iraqi authorities had accorded the agents full cooperation in their work.

Communications. A number of communications on various subjects were received from Iraq during phase IX. In identical letters of 22 January to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President [S/2001/68], Iraq, in the light of Council resolution 1314(2000) on children and armed conflict [YUN 2000, p. 723], transmitted a study on the impact of the embargo on Iraqi children.

In a 25 February statement [S/2001/170], Iraq said that the United Kingdom and the United States were attempting to rewrite resolution 687(1991) in order to erase paragraph 14, which referred to the goal of establishing in the Middle East a zone free from weapons of mass destruction, and paragraph 22, which provided for the lifting of the economic sanctions imposed on Iraq.

On 3 April [S/2001/324], Iraq informed the Secretary-General that OIP had abused its power to request entry visas, had caused a great waste of Iraqi funds and had ignored the provisions of the Memorandum of Understanding requiring consultation with the Iraqi side with respect to the Programme's operations. Iraq had cooperated with the UN Office of the Humanitarian Coordinator in granting 991 entry visas in the year 2000 to UN personnel, despite a sense that the visa requests were excessive.

In a 6 May letter to the Secretary-General [S/2001/451], Iraq said that the Council, in resolution 1330(2000), allowed the sum of $15 million drawn from the sub-account of the Iraq Account designated for operational and administrative expenses to be used for the payment of the arrears in Iraq's contributions to the UN budget. That provision had not been applied, despite the fact that there was a sum of some half billion dollars lying dormant in the account.

On 2 July [S/2001/659], Iraq transmitted to the Secretary-General a number of tables containing statistical data for the health sector.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 3 July [meeting 4344], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1360(2001). The draft [S/2001/652] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions, including its resolution 986(1995) of 14 April 1995, 1284(1999) of 17 December 1999, 1330(2000) of 5 December 2000 and 1352(2001) of 1 June 2001, as they relate to the improvement of the humanitarian programme for Iraq,

Convinced of the need as a temporary measure to continue to provide for the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people until the fulfilment by the Government of Iraq of the relevant resolutions, including notably resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, allows the Council to take further action with regard to the prohibitions referred to in resolution 661(1990) of 6 August 1990, in accordance with the provisions of those resolutions,

Convinced also of the need for equitable distribution of humanitarian supplies to all segments of the Iraqi population throughout the country,

Determined to improve the humanitarian situation in Iraq,

Reaffirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the provisions of resolution 986(1995), except those contained in paragraphs 4, 11 and 12 and subject to paragraph 15 of resolution 1284 (1999), shall remain in force for a new period of 150 days beginning at 0001 hours eastern daylight time on 4 July 2001;

2. Also decides that from the sum produced from the import by States of petroleum and petroleum products originating in Iraq, including financial and other essential transactions related thereto, in the 150-day period referred to in paragraph 1 above, the amounts recommended by the Secretary-General in his report of 1 February 1998 for the food/nutrition and health sectors should continue to be allocated on a priority basis in the context of the activities of the Secretariat, of which 13 per cent of the sum produced in the period referred to above shall be used for the purposes referred to in paragraph 8 (b) of resolution 986(1995);

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take the actions necessary to ensure the effective and efficient implementation of the present resolution, and to continue to enhance as necessary the United Nations observation process in Iraq in such a way as to provide the required assurance to the Council that the goods produced in accordance with the present resolution are distributed equitably and that all supplies authorized for procurement, including dual-use items and spare parts, are utilized for the purpose for which they have been authorized, including in the housing sector and related infrastructure development;

4. Decides to conduct a thorough review of all aspects of the implementation of the present resolution 90 days after the entry into force of paragraph 1 above and again prior to the end of the 150-day period, and expresses its intention, prior to the end of the 150-day period, to consider favourably renewal of the provisions of this resolution as appropriate, provided that the reports referred to in paragraphs 5 and 6 below indicate that those provisions are being satisfactorily implemented;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide a comprehensive report to the Council 90 days after the date of entry into force of this resolution on its implementation and again at least one week prior to the end of the 150-day period, on the basis of observations of United Nations personnel in Iraq, and of consultations with the Government of Iraq, on whether Iraq has ensured the equitable distribution of medicine, health supplies, foodstuffs, and materials and supplies for essential civilian needs, financed in accordance with paragraph 8 (a) of resolution 986(1995), including in his reports any observations which he may have on the adequacy of the revenues to meet Iraq's humanitarian needs;

6. Requests the Committee established by resolution 661(1990), in close consultation with the Secretary-General, to report to the Council 90 days after the entry into force of paragraph 1 above and prior to the end of the 150-day period on the implementation of the arrangements in paragraphs 1, 2, 6, 8, 9 and 10 of resolution 986(1995);

7. Decides that from the funds produced pursuant to this resolution in the escrow account established by paragraph 7 of resolution 986(1995), up to a total of 600 million United States dollars may be used to meet any reasonable expenses, other than expenses payable in Iraq, which follow directly from the contracts approved in accordance with paragraph 2 of resolution 1175(1998) of 19 June 1998 and paragraph 18 of resolution 1284(1999), and expresses its intention to consider favourably the renewal of this measure;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to transfer the excess funds drawn from the account created pursuant to paragraph 8 (d) of resolution 986(1995) for the purposes set out in paragraph 8 (a) of resolution 986(1995) in order to increase the funds available for humanitarian purchases, including as appropriate the purposes referred to in paragraph 24 of resolution 1284(1999);

9. Decides that the effective deduction rate of the funds deposited in the escrow account established by resolution 986(1995) to be transferred to the Compensation Fund in the 150-day period shall be 25 per cent, further decides that the additional funds resulting from this decision will be deposited into the account established under paragraph 8 (a) of resolution 986(1995) to be used for strictly humanitarian projects to address the needs of the most vulnerable groups in Iraq as referred to in paragraph 126 of the report of the Secretary-General of 29 November 2000, requests the Secretary-General to report on the use of these funds in his reports referred to in paragraph 5 above, and expresses its intention to establish a mechanism to review, before the end of the 150-day period, the effective deduction rate of the funds deposited in the escrow account to be transferred to the Compensation Fund in future phases, taking into account the key elements of the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people;

10. Urges all States, and in particular the Government of Iraq, to provide their full cooperation in the effective implementation of the present resolution;

11. Calls upon the Government of Iraq to take the remaining steps necessary to implement paragraph 27 of resolution 1284(1999), and further requests the Secretary-General to include in his reports under paragraph 5 above a review of the progress made by the Government of Iraq in the implementation of these measures;

12. Stresses the need to continue to ensure respect for the security and safety of all persons directly involved in the implementation of the present resolution in Iraq;

13. Appeals to all States to continue to cooperate in the timely submission of applications and expeditious issue of export licences, facilitating the transit of humanitarian supplies authorized by the Committee established by resolution 661(1990), and to take all other appropriate measures within their competence in order to ensure that urgently needed humanitarian supplies reach the Iraqi people as rapidly as possible;

14. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Speaking after the vote, the United States said that it had worked hard to adopt a different sort of draft resolution from the one that the Council finally adopted. The goods review list, which was central to a new approach in the humanitarian programme, was supported by four of the five permanent members, and it merited the support of all Council members, including Russia. Although the Council had not reached agreement on the new set of arrangements proposed by the United Kingdom, that draft remained under active consideration. The United States agreed to the rollover of the oil-for-food programme for a further 150 days while continuing to work towards the adoption of the new list as soon as possible.

Tunisia said that, in supporting the adopted resolution, it stressed the importance of using the new rollover period in the humanitarian programme to intensify recent discussions within the Council, with a view to finding a comprehensive solution to the Iraqi problem in all its aspects and dimensions.

Communication from Secretary-General. The Secretary-General transmitted to the Council a 5 July exchange of letters [S/2001/682] between the UN Secretariat and Iraq extending, in the light of resolution 1360(2001), the provisions of the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding between them on the implementation of resolution 986(1995) for a new 150-day period, effective 4 July.

Phase X

Pursuant to paragraph 1 of Council resolution 1360(2001), the new 150-day extension (phase X) of the humanitarian programme established by resolution 986(1995) began on 4 July. The corresponding distribution plan was approved by the Secretary-General on 1 August [S/2001/758], on the understanding that its implementation would be governed by resolutions 986(1995), 1281(1999), 1284(1999), 1302(2000), 1330(2000) and 1360(2001) and the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding between the UN Secretariat and Iraq, and without prejudice to Sanctions Committee procedures. The accompanying list of supplies and goods was made available to that Committee, which concluded that, based on the information provided in the annexes, no prohibited items could be identified.

Communication. By a 17 July letter to the Council President [S/2001/703], Malaysia said that, like other countries, it had suffered enormous economic losses as a result of the implementation of the Council's sanctions against Iraq and that it was seeking to address those problems in accordance with the provisions of Article 50 of the UN Charter.

Reports of Secretary-General (September and November). Pursuant to resolution 1360(2001), the Secretary-General submitted two progress reports on phase X. The reports, issued on 28 September [S/2001/919] and 19 November [S/2001/1089], provided information on all implementation aspects up to 31 August and 31 October, respectively.

In his September report, the Secretary-General observed that, with the increased funding level and the growing magnitude and scope of the programme, which involved not only, as initially intended, the provision of food, health and medical supplies, but also the rehabilitation of infrastructure, including the oil sector, considerable difficulties were being faced in its effective implementation, especially in the three northern governorates. The difficulties had been compounded by the continuing impasse within the Sanctions Committee on a number of crucial matters, as well as the excessive number of holds placed on applications, the total value of which was $4.05 billion as at 15 September. Programme implementation had also suffered considerably because of the substantial reduction in revenues received from oil exports when the volume of oil exports under the programme had been reduced or totally suspended by Iraq, despite the lifting of the ceiling on oil revenues by the Council. The Secretary-General reiterated that the responsibility for the sectoral allocations in the distribution plans remained with the Iraqi Government, which was also responsible for the selection of its suppliers and contracting. The UN Secretariat was involved only after applications were submitted to OIP by the suppliers through their respective permanent and/or observer missions to the United Nations. The Secretary-General said that despite all the difficulties encountered and the criticisms levelled by various quarters against the programme, it had made a considerable difference to the average Iraqi citizen.

In his November report, the Secretary-General noted that the substantial shortfall in the funds available for programme implementation, particularly during phase X, continued to be a major concern. Although the distribution plan for that phase was budgeted at $5.5 billion, only about $2.2 billion was available for funding supplies and equipment, due mainly to the sharp decline in oil market prices during the preceding two months and the lower rate of export of Iraqi oil under the programme. Furthermore, because of the substantial drop in revenues received during the previous phase, over $1.6 billion worth of approved applications had been transferred to phase X for funding purposes. Accordingly, it was recommended that Iraq further review the relative sectoral allocations in the distribution plan for phase X and submit revised sectoral allocations in order to ensure the funding of priority sectors. The programme's implementation continued to experience difficulties, particularly in the electricity and demining sectors in the three northern governorates. The Secretary-General appealed to all parties to refrain from politicizing the implementation of the programme and instead to concentrate their efforts on maximizing the full benefits of the programme to the Iraqi people. An annex to the report noted that, as at 31 October, 3.78 billion euros had been deposited in the account for phase X, bringing total oil sale revenues since the inception of the programme to $37.33 billion and 12.03 billion euros.

Sanctions Committee report. The Sanctions Committee report on its activities during phase X, from 4 July to 30 November, was transmitted to the Council on 31 December [S/2001/1341]. The Committee reviewed the sale of petroleum and petroleum products; humanitarian supplies to Iraq; and matters relating to oil spare parts and equipment for Iraq. The oil overseers continued to advise the Committee on oil pricing mechanisms, oil contract approval and amendments, management of revenue objectives and other pertinent questions related to export and monitoring. The overseers had worked with the independent inspection agents (Saybolt Nederland BV) to ensure the effective monitoring of the relevant oil installations and the liftings. In that regard, they continued to receive the full cooperation of the Iraqi authorities.

Applications received under phase IX as at 30 November for the export of humanitarian supplies to Iraq totalled 1,967. Of the 855 circulated to the Committee for action, 601 were found eligible for payment from the UN Iraq Account, in the amount of approximately $1.64 billion. From the beginning of phase X until 30 November, the Committee approved 305 applications for the export of humanitarian supplies to Iraq, totalling approximately $1.28 billion. During the reporting period, 379 applications were released from hold with a total value of $1.28 billion. As at 30 November, a total of 1,113 applications were still on hold with a total value of $3.79 billion. The Committee approved, on 15 November, a list of oil spare parts and equipment submitted by OIP pursuant to resolution 1284(1999). From the beginning of the process, the total allocation for oil spare parts and equipment amounted to $3.6 billion.

Among other activities, the Committee, on 17 October, sent a letter to OIP's Executive Director conveying the Committee's agreement, in principle, with the approach and direction taken by the Secretary-General in his report to the Council on the issue of the cash component for the oil sector (see p. 300). OIP provided the Committee with a brief update on the situation of holds on contracts. On 6 November, the Committee considered a letter from the captain of the turbine tanker Essex, which stated that a large quantity of crude oil had been exported outside the United Nations humanitarian programme (see p. 299). The Multinational Interception Force (MIF) Coordinator updated the Committee on MIF activities in the Persian Gulf. While noting a substantial decrease in Iraqi oil smuggling through Iranian territorial waters, he said oil smuggling activities continued to destinations in India, the United Arab Emirates, Yemen and the Horn of Africa, as well as the unauthorized use of passenger ferries by certain States to carry cargo to and from Iraq.

Communication. On 27 November [S/2001/1120], the United States submitted to the Council President the dual-use goods and technologies list.

Phase XI

On 29 November [meeting 443], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1382 (2001). The draft [S/2001/1123] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, including resolutions 986(1995) of 14 April 1995, 1284(1999) of 17 December 1999, 1352(2001) of 1 June 2001 and 1360(2001) of 3 July 2001, as they relate to the improvement of the humanitarian programme for Iraq,

Convinced of the need as a temporary measure to continue to provide for the civilian needs of the Iraqi people until the fulfilment by the Government of Iraq of the relevant resolutions, including notably resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991 and 1284(1999), allows the Council to take further action with regard to the prohibitions referred to in resolution 661(1990) of 6 August 1990 in accordance with the provisions of those resolutions,

Determined to improve the humanitarian situation in Iraq,

Reaffirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the provisions of Security Council resolution 986(1995), except those contained in paragraphs 4, 11 and 12 and subject to paragraph 15 of resolution 1284(1999), and the provisions of paragraphs 2, 3 and 5 to 13 of resolution 1360(2001) shall remain in force for a new period of 180 days beginning at 0001 hours eastern standard time on 1 December 2001;

2. Notes the proposed Goods Review List as contained in annex 1 to the present resolution, and the procedures for its application, as contained in annex 2 to the present resolution, and decides that it will adopt the List and the procedures, subject to any refinements to them agreed by the Council in the light of further consultations, for implementation beginning on 30 May 2002;

3. Reaffirms the obligation of all States, pursuant to resolution 661(1990) and subsequent relevant resolutions, to prevent the sale or supply to Iraq of any commodities or products, including weapons or any other military equipment, and to prevent the making available to Iraq of any funds or any other financial or economic resources, except as authorized by existing resolutions;

4. Stresses the obligation of Iraq to cooperate with the implementation of the present resolution and other applicable resolutions, including by respecting the security and safety of all persons directly involved in their implementation;

5. Appeals to all States to continue to cooperate in the timely submission of technically complete applications and the expeditious issuing of export licences, and to take all other appropriate measures within their competence in order to ensure that urgently needed humanitarian supplies reach the Iraqi population as rapidly as possible;

6. Reaffirms its commitment to a comprehensive settlement on the basis of the relevant resolutions of the Council, including any clarification necessary for the implementation of resolution 1284(1999);

7. Decides that, for the purposes of the present resolution, references in resolution 1360(2001) to the 150-day period established by that resolution shall be interpreted to refer to the 180-day period established pursuant to paragraph 1 above;

8. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

ANNEX 1

Proposed Goods Review List

(Note: Arms and munitions are prohibited under Security Council resolution 687(1991), paragraph 24, and thus are not included on the review list.)

A. Items subject to the provisions of Security Council resolution 1051(1996).

B. The List contained in the annex to document S/2001/1120, (to the extent, if any, that the items on these lists are not covered by Council resolution 687(1991), paragraph 24). The List includes the following general categories and includes clarifying notes and statements of understanding: (1) advanced materials; (2) materials processing; (3) electronics; (4) computers; (5) telecommunications and information security; (6) sensors and lasers; (7) navigation and avionics; (8) marine; and (9) propulsion.

C. The following individual items, as further described in the annex:

Command, Control, Communication and Simulation

1. Specific advanced telecommunications equipment.

2. Information security equipment.

Sensors, Electronic Warfare, and Night Vision

3. Specialized electronic instrumentation and test equipment.

4. Image intensifier night vision systems, tubes, and components.

Aircraft and Related Items

5. Specialized radar equipment.

6. Non-civil-certified aircraft; all aero gas turbine engines; unmanned aerial vehicles; and parts and components.

7. Non-x-ray explosive detection equipment.

Naval-related Items

8. Air independent propulsion engines and fuel cells specially designed for underwater vehicles, and specially designed components therefor.

9. Marine acoustic equipment.

Explosives

10. Charges and devices specially designed for civil projects, and containing small quantities of energetic materials.

Missile-related Items

11. Specialized vibration test equipment.

Conventional Weapons Manufacturing

12. Specialized semiconductor manufacturing equipment.

Heavy Military Transport

13. Low-bed trailers/loaders with a carrying capacity greater than 30 metric tonnes and width equal to or greater than 3 metres.

Biological Weapons Equipment

14. Certain Biological Equipment.

Annex to Proposed Goods Review List Technical Parameters for Individual Items

1. Specific advanced telecommunication equipment

a. Any type of telecommunications equipment, specially designed to operate outside the temperature range from 218 K (-55° C) to 397 K (124° C);

b. Phased array antennas, containing active elements and distributed components, and designed to permit electronic control of beam shaping and pointing, except for landing systems with instruments meeting International Civil Aviation Organization standards (microwave landing systems);

c. Radio relay communications equipment designed for use at frequencies of 7.9 through 10.55 GHz or exceeding 40 GHz and assemblies and components therefor;

d. Optical fiber cables of more than 5 metres in length, and preforms or drawn fibers of glass or other materials optimized for manufacture and use as optical telecommunications transmission medium. Optical terminals and optical amplifiers;

e. Software specially designed for the development or production of the components or equipment in a to d above;

f. Technology for the design, development or production of the components, software, or equipment in a to d above.

2. Information security equipment

Information security equipment having any of the following characteristics:

- A symmetric encryption algorithm;
- An asymmetric encryption algorithm;
- A discrete-log encryption algorithm;
- Analog encryption or scrambling;
- TCSEC B1, B2, B3, or A1 or equivalent Multilevel

Secure computer systems;

f. Software specially designed for the development or production of a to d above;

g. Technology for the development design, or production of a to d above.

Note 1: This entry does not require review of items that meet all the following conditions:

a. Items are generally available to the public, by being sold, without restriction, from stock at retail selling points by means of any of the following:

- Over the counter transactions;
- Mail order transactions;
- Electronic transactions;
- Telephone call transactions;

b. The cryptographic functionality cannot easily be changed by the user;

c. Items are designed for installation by the user without further substantial support by the supplier; and

d. When necessary, details of the items are accessible and will be provided, upon request, to the appropriate authority in the exporter's country in order to ascertain compliance with conditions described in paragraphs a to c above.

Note 2: This entry does not require review of:

a. "Personalized smart cards" where the cryptographic capability is restricted for use in equipment or systems excluded from control under paragraphs b to f of this note. If a "personalized smart card" has multiple functions, the control status of each function is addressed individually;

b. Receiving equipment for radio broadcast, pay television, or similar restricted audience broadcast of the consumer type, without digital encryption except that exclusively used for sending the billing or programme-related information back to the broadcast providers;

c. Equipment where the cryptographic capability is not user-accessible and which is specially designed and limited to allow any of the following:

- Execution of copy-protected software;
- Access to any of the following:

c.2.a. Copy-protected contents stored on read-only media; or c.2.b. Information stored in encrypted form on media (e.g. in connection with intellectual property rights) where the media is offered for sale in identical sets to the public; or c.2.c. One-time copying of copyright protected audio or video data;

d. Cryptographic equipment specially designed and limited for banking use or money transactions;

Technical Note: "Money transactions" includes the collection and settlement of fares or credit functions.

e. Portable or mobile radio-telephones for civil use (e.g. for commercial civil cellular radio-communications systems) that are not capable of end-to-end encryption;

f. Cordless telephone equipment not capable of end-to-end encryption where the maximum effective range of unboosted cordless operation (i.e., a single, unrelayed hop between terminal and home base-station) is less than 400 metres according to the manufacturer's specifications.

3. Specialized electronic instrumentation and test equipment

a. Signal analysers from 4 through 31 GHz;
b. Microwave test receivers from 4 through 40 GHz;
c. Network analysers from 4 through 40 GHz;
d. Signal generators from 4 through 31 GHz;
e. Travelling wave tubes, pulsed or continuous wave, as follows:

e.1. Coupled cavity tubes, or derivatives thereof;
e.2. Helix tubes, or derivatives thereof, having any of the following characteristics:

e.2.a.1. An "instantaneous bandwidth" of half an octave or more; and e.2.a.2. The product of the rated average output power (expressed in kW) and the maximum operating frequency (expressed in GHz) of more than 0.2; e.2.b.1. An "instantaneous bandwidth" of less than half an octave; and e.2.b.2. The product of the rated average output power (expressed in kW) and the maximum operating frequency (expressed in GHz) of more than 0.4;

f. Equipment specially designed for the manufacture of electron tubes, optical elements and specially designed components therefor;

g. Hydrogen/hydrogen-isotope thyratrons of ceramic-metal construction and rate for a peak current of 500 A or more;

h. Digital instrumentation data recorders having any of the following characteristics:

h.1. A maximum digital interface transfer rate exceeding 175 Mbit/s; or

h.2. Space qualified;

i. Radiation and radioisotope detection and simulation equipment, analysers, software, and Nuclear Instrumentation Module (NIM) componentry and mainframes;

j. Software specially designed for the development or production of the components or equipment in a to i above;

k. Technology for the design, development or production of the components or equipment in a to i above.

Note: Items a to e above do not require review when contained in contracts for civil telecommunications projects, including ongoing maintenance, operation, and repair of the system, certified for civil use by the supplier government.

4. Image intensifier night vision systems, tubes, and components

a. Night vision systems (i.e., cameras or direct view imaging equipment) using an image intensifier tube that utilizes a microchannel plate and an S-20, S-25, GaAs, or GaInAs photocathode;

b. Image intensifier tubes that utilize a microchannel plate and an S-20, S-25, GaAs, or GaInAs photocathode with a sensitivity of 240  $\mu\text{A}/\text{Im}$  and below;

c. Microchannel plates of 15  $\mu\text{m}$  and above;

d. Software specially designed for the development or production of the components or equipment in a to c above;

e. Technology for the design, development or production of the components or equipment in a to c above.

5. Specialized radar equipment

a. All airborne radar equipment and specially designed components therefor, not including radars specially designed for meteorological use or Mode 3, Mode C, and Mode S civilian air traffic control equipment specially designed to operate only in the 960 to 1215 MHz band;

Note: This entry does not require initial review of airborne radar equipment installed as original equipment in civil-certified aircraft operating in Iraq.

b. All ground-based primary radar systems that are capable of aircraft detection and tracking;

c. Software specially designed for the development or production of the components or equipment in a and b above;

d. Technology for the design, development or production of the components or equipment in a and b above.

6. Non-civil-certified aircraft; all aero gas turbine engines; unmanned aerial vehicles; and parts and components

a. Non-civil-certified aircraft and specially designed parts and components therefor. This does not include parts and components solely designed to accommodate a carrying of passengers including seats, food services, environmental conditioning, lighting systems, and passenger safety devices;

Note: Civil-certified aircraft consist of aircraft that have been certified for general civil use by the civil aviation authorities of the original equipment manufacturer's government.

b. All gas turbine engines except those designed for stationary power generation applications, and specially designed parts and components therefor;

c. Unmanned aerial vehicles and parts and components therefor having any of the following characteristics:

c.1. Capable of autonomous operation;

c.2. Capable of operating beyond line of sight;

c.3. Incorporating a satellite navigation receiver (i.e. Global Positioning System);

c.4. A gross take-off weight greater than 25 kg (55 lbs);

d. Parts and components for civil-certified aircraft (not including engines);

Note 1: This does not include parts and components for normal maintenance of non-Iraqi owned or leased civil-certified aircraft that were originally qualified or certified by the original equipment manufacturer for that aircraft.

Note 2: For Iraqi-owned or leased civil aircraft, review of parts and components for normal maintenance is not required if the maintenance is performed in a country other than Iraq.

Note 3: For Iraqi-owned or leased aircraft, parts and components are subject to review except for equivalent one-for-one replacement of parts and components that have been certified or qualified by the original equipment manufacturer for use on that aircraft.

Note 4: Any specially designed parts or components that improve the performance of the aircraft remain subject to review.

e. Technology, including software, for the design, development and production of equipment and parts/components for the items in sub-items a to d above.

9. Marine acoustic equipment

a. Marine acoustic systems, equipment and specially designed components therefor, as follows:

a.1. Active (transmitting or transmitting-and-receiving) systems, equipment and specially designed components therefor, as follows:

a.1.a. Wide-swath bathymetric survey systems designed for seabed topographic mapping designed to measure depths less than 600 m below the water surface;

a.2. Passive (receiving, whether or not related in normal application to separate active equipment) systems, equipment and specially designed components thereof as follows:

a.2.a. Hydrophones with sensitivity better than minus 220 dB at any depth with no acceleration compensation;

a.2.b. Towed acoustic hydrophone arrays designed or able to be modified to operate at depths exceeding 15 metres but not exceeding 35 metres;

a.2.b.1. Heading sensors with an accuracy better than  $\pm 0.5^\circ$ ; a.2.c. Processing equipment specially designed for towed acoustic hydrophone arrays;

a.2.d. Processing equipment, specially designed for bottom or bay cable systems;

b. Correlation-velocity sonar log equipment designed to measure the horizontal speed of the equipment carrier relative to the seabed.

Technical Note: Hydrophone sensitivity is defined as twenty times the logarithm to the base 10 of the ratio of rms output voltage to a 1 V rms reference, when the hydrophone sensor, without a pre-amplifier, is placed in a plane wave acoustic field with an rms pressure of 1  $\mu$ Pa. For example, a hydrophone of -160 dB (reference 1 V per  $\mu$ Pa) would yield an output voltage of  $10^{-8}$  V in such a field, while one of -180 dB sensitivity would yield only  $10^{-9}$  V output. Thus -169 dB is better than -180 dB.

10. Charges and devices specially designed for civil projects, and containing small quantities of the following energetic materials:

1. Cyclotrimethylenetetranitramine (HMX) (CAS 2691-41-0) octahydro-1,3,5,7-tetra-nitro-1,3,5,7-tetrazine; 1,3,5,7-tetranitro-1,3,5,7-tetraza-cyclooctane; (octogen, octogene);

2. Hexanitrostilbene (HNS) (CAS 20062-22-0);

3. Triaminotrinitrobenzene (TATB) (CAS 3058-38-6);

4. Triaminoguanidinenitrate (TAGN) (CAS 4000-16-2);

5. Dinitroglycoluril (DNGU, DINGU) (CAS 55510-04-8); tetranitroglycoluril (TNGU, SORGUYL) (CAS 55510-03-7);

6. Tetranitrobenzotriazolobenzotriazole (TACOT) (CAS 25243-36-1);

7. Diaminohexanitrobiphenyl (DIPAM) (CAS 17215-44-0);

8. Picrylaminodinitropyridine (PYX) (CAS 38082-89-2);

9. 3-nitro-1,2,4-triazol-5-one (NTO or ONTA) (CAS 932-64-9);

10. Cyclotrimethylenetrinitramine (RDX) (CAS 121-82-4); cyclonite; T4; hexahydro-1,3,5-trinitro-1, 3, 5-triazine; 1, 3, 5-trinitro-1, 3, 5-triaza-cyclohexane (hexogen, hexogene);

11. 2-(5-cyanotetrazolato) penta amine-cobalt (III)-perchlorate (or CP) (CAS 70247-32-4);

12. cis-bis (5-nitrotetrazolato) tetra amine-cobalt (III)-perchlorate (or BNCP);

13. 7-Amino-4,6-dinitrobenzofurazane-1-oxide (ADNBF) (CAS 97096-78-1); amino dinitrobenzofurazan;

14. 5,7-diamino-4,6-dinitrobenzofurazane-1-oxide (CAS 117907-74-1), (CL-14 or diamino dinitrobenzofurazan);

15. 2,4,6-trinitro-2,4,6-triazacyclohexanone (K-6 or Keto-RDX) (CAS 115029-35-1);

16. 2,4,6,8-tetranitro-2,4,6,8-tetraazabicyclo [3,3,0]octanone-3 (CAS 130256-72-3)

(tetranitrosemiglycouril, K-55 or keto-bicyclic HMX);

17. 1,1,3-trinitroazetidine (TNAZ) (CAS 97645-24-4);

18. 1,4,5,8-tetranitro-1,4,5,8-tetraazadecalin (TNAD) (CAS 135877-16-6);

19. Hexanitrohexaazaisowurtzitane (CAS 135285-90-4) (CL-20 or HNIW); and chlathrates of CL-20;

20. Trinitrophenylmethyl nitramine (tetryl) (CAS 479-45-8);

21. Any explosive with a detonation velocity exceeding 8,700 m/s or a detonation pressure exceeding 34 GPa (340 kbar);

22. Other organic explosives yielding detonation pressures of 25 GPa (250 kbar) or more that will remain stable at temperatures of 523 K (250°C) or higher for periods of 5 minutes or longer;

23. Any other United Nations-Class 1.1 solid propellant with a theoretical specific impulse (under standard conditions) of more than 250 seconds for non-metallized, or more than 270 seconds for aluminized compositions; and

24. Any United Nations-Class 1.3 solid propellant with a theoretical specific impulse of more than 230 seconds for non-halogenized, 250 seconds for non-metallized and 266 seconds for metallized compositions.

Note: When not part of a charge or device specifically designed for civil projects in small quantities, the energetic materials above are considered military items and are subject to Security Council resolution 687(1991), paragraph 24.

11. Specialized vibration test equipment

Vibration test equipment and specially designed parts and components capable of simulating flight conditions of less than 15,000 metres:

a. Software specially designed for the development or production of the components or equipment above;

b. Technology for the design, development or production of the components or equipment above.

12. Specialized semiconductor manufacturing equipment

a. Items specially designed for the manufacture, assembly, packaging, test, and design of semiconductor devices, integrated circuits and assemblies with a minimum feature size of 1.0  $\mu$ m, including:

a.1. Equipment and materials for plasma etching, chemical vapor deposition, lithography, mask lithography, masks, and photoresists;

a.2. Equipment specially designed for ion implantation, ion-enhanced or photo-enhanced diffusion, having any of the following characteristics:

a.2.a. Beam energy (accelerating voltage) exceeding 200 keV; or a.2.b. Optimized to operate at a beam energy (accelerating voltage) of less than 10 keV; a.3. Surface finishing equipment for the processing of semiconductor wafers as follows:

a.3.a. Specially designed equipment for backside processing of wafers thinner than 100  $\mu\text{m}$  and the subsequent separation thereof; or a.3.b. Specially designed equipment for achieving a surface roughness of the active surface of a processed wafer with a two-sigma value of 2  $\mu\text{m}$  or less, total indicator reading; a.4. Equipment, other than general-purpose computers, specially designed for computer-aided design of semiconductor devices or integrated circuits;

a.5. Equipment for the assembly of integrated circuits, as follows:

a.5.a. "Stored program controlled" die bonders having all of the following characteristics:

a.5.a.1. Specially designed for "hybrid integrated circuits";

a.5.a.2. X-Y stage positioning travel exceeding 37.5 x 37.5 mm; and a.5.a.3. Placement accuracy in the X-Y plane of finer than +10  $\mu\text{m}$ ; a.5.b. Stored program controlled equipment for producing multiple bonds in a single operation (e.g., beam lead bonders, chip carrier bonders, tape bonders);

a.5.c. Semi-automatic or automatic hot cap sealers, in which the cap is heated locally to a higher temperature than the body of the package, specially designed for ceramic microcircuit packages and that have a throughput equal to or more than one package per minute;

b. Software specially designed for the development or production of the components or equipment in a above;

c. Technology for the development, design or production of the components or equipment in a above.

14. Certain Biological Equipment

a. Equipment for the microencapsulation of live micro-organisms and toxins in the range of 1 to 15  $\mu\text{m}$  particle size, to include interfacial polycondensers and phase separators.

ANNEX 2 Procedures

1. Applications for each export of commodities and products should be forwarded to the Office of the Iraq Programme by the exporting States through permanent or observer missions, or by United Nations agencies and programmes. Each application should include technical specifications and end-user information in order for a determination to be made on whether the contract contains any item referred to in paragraph 24 of Security Council resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991 or any item on the Goods Review List. A copy of the concluded contractual arrangements should be attached to the application.

2. Each application and the concluded contractual arrangements will be reviewed by customs experts in the Office of the Iraq Programme and experts from the United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission, consulting the International Atomic Energy Agency as necessary, in order to determine whether the contract contains any item referred to in paragraph 24 of resolution 687(1991) or included on the Goods Review List. The Office will identify an official to act as a contact point on each contract.

3. In order to verify that the conditions set out in paragraph 2 above are met, the experts may request additional information from the exporting States or Iraq. The exporting States or Iraq should provide the additional information requested within a period of sixty days. If the experts do not require any additional information within four working days, the procedure under paragraphs 5, 6 and 7 below applies.

4. If the experts determine that the exporting State or Iraq has not provided the additional information within the period set out in paragraph 3 above, the application will not proceed further until the necessary information has been provided.

5. If the experts of the Commission, consulting the Agency as necessary, determine that the contract contains any item referred to in paragraph 24 of resolution 687(1991), the application shall be considered lapsed and be returned to the mission or agency which submitted it.

6. If the experts of the Commission, consulting the Agency as necessary, determine that the contract contains any item referred to on the Goods Review List, they will forward to the Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990) full details of such items, including the technical specifications of the items and the associated contract. In addition, the Office of the Iraq Programme and the Commission, consulting the Agency as necessary, shall provide to the Committee an assessment of the humanitarian, economic and security implications, of the approval or denial of the items referred to on the List, including the viability of the whole contract in which the listed item appears and the risk of diversion of the item for military purposes. The Office shall also provide information on the possible end-use monitoring of such items. The Office will immediately inform the missions or agencies concerned. The remaining items in the contract, which are determined as not included in the List, will be processed according to the procedure in paragraph 7 below.

7. If the experts of the Commission, consulting the Agency as necessary, determine that the contract does not contain any item referred to in paragraph 2 above, the Office of the Iraq Programme will immediately inform the Government of Iraq and the exporting State in written form. The exporter will be eligible for payment upon verification by Cotecna that the goods have arrived as contracted in Iraq.

8. If the mission or agency submitting a contract disagrees with the decision to refer the contract to the Committee, it may appeal against that decision within two business days to the Executive Director of the Office of the Iraq Programme. In that event, the Executive Director of the Office, in consultation with the Executive Chairman of the United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission, will appoint experts to reconsider the contract in accordance with the procedures set out above. Their decision, endorsed by the Executive Director and Executive Chairman, will be final and no further appeals will be permitted. The application shall not be forwarded to the Committee until the appeal period has expired without an appeal being filed.

9. Experts from the Office of the Iraq Programme and the Commission who review contracts should be drawn from the broadest possible geographical base.

10. The Secretariat will report to the Committee at the end of each 180-day phase on the contracts submitted and approved for export to Iraq during this period and provide to any member of the Committee at the member's request copies of applications for information purposes only.

11. Any Committee member may call for an urgent meeting of the Committee to consider revising or re-voking these procedures. The Committee will keep these procedures under review and, in the light of experience, will amend them as appropriate.

In the light of the new 180-day extension of the humanitarian programme (phase XI) from 1 December, the UN Secretariat and Iraq, by a 1 December exchange of letters [S/2001/1172], agreed to extend for the same period the provisions of the 1996 Memorandum of Understanding between them on the implementation of Council resolution 986(1995).

UN Compensation Commission and Fund

The United Nations Compensation Commission, established in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 195] for the resolution and payment of claims against Iraq for losses and damage resulting from its 1990 invasion and occupation of Kuwait [YUN 1990, p. 189], continued in 2001 to expedite the prompt settlement of claims through the United Nations Compensation Fund, which was established at the same time as the Commission.

Governing Council. The Governing Council held four sessions during the year—the thirty-ninth (13-15 March) [S/2001/403], which was adjourned until 2 April [S/2001/404]; the fortieth (19-21 June) [S/2001/763]; the forty-first (25-27 September) [S/2001/1069]; and the forty-second (11-13 December) [S/2002/152]—at which it considered the reports and recommendations of the Panels of Commissioners appointed to review specific instalments of various categories of claims. The Governing Council also acted on the Executive Secretary's report submitted at each session, which, in addition to providing a summary of the previous period's activities, covered corrections to approved claim awards, claim withdrawals, the processing and payment of approved claims, and the 2001 progress report on the Commission's 1997-2003 work programme.

Other matters considered by the Council throughout the year included the distribution of payments and transparency, and the return of undistributed funds; the late filing of Palestinian claims; and the procedure for commencing the determination of interest rates on awards of compensation. At its resumed thirty-ninth session, on 2 April, which was convened to consider the provision of technical assistance to Iraq with respect to claims for environmental damage filed with the Commission, the Council agreed, in principle, that funds be made available for the purpose of hiring experts, through the Commission's budget, whose work would be of assistance to Iraq in responding to environmental claims.

Other issues

Iraqi complaints

Reaffirming its absolute rejection of the northern and southern air exclusion (no-fly) zones imposed by the United States, Iraq reported regularly on the issue to the Secretary-General and the Security Council throughout 2001. Iraq also alleged wanton military attacks by British and United States aircraft against Iraqi civilians and property, and condemned those countries that provided the logistic support for those attacks, namely Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and Turkey [S/2001/18, S/2001/37, S/2001/79, S/2001/116, S/2001/122, S/2001/141, S/2001/161, S/2001/168, S/2001/227, S/2001/248, S/2001/297, S/2001/316, S/2001/369, S/2001/484, S/2001/536, S/2001/559, S/2001/620, S/2001/638, S/2001/650, S/2001/692, S/2001/726, S/2001/756, S/2001/773, S/2001/805, S/2001/807, S/2001/816, S/2001/846, S/2001/850, S/2001/927, S/2001/954, S/2001/995, S/2001/1014, S/2001/1027, S/2001/1068, S/2001/1106, S/2001/1229, S/2001/1263].

In a further series of communications to the Secretary-General, Iraq detailed violations of its international boundaries committed by British and United States warplanes flying across the DMZ monitored by UNIKOM [S/2001/85, S/2001/115, S/2001/151, S/2001/230, S/2001/285, S/2001/329, S/2001/370, S/2001/475, S/2001/583, S/2001/602, S/2001/649, S/2001/702, S/2001/755, S/2001/786, S/2001/847, S/2001/879, S/2001/898, S/2001/955, S/2001/1026, S/2001/1057, S/2001/1105, S/2001/1145, S/2001/1230]. On 3 June [S/2001/554], Iraq claimed that United States aircraft had intercepted and trailed an Iraqi civilian plane, jeopardizing the safety of civilian passengers. On 7 September [S/2001/859], and again on 17 September [S/2001/878], Iraq said that British and United States aircraft engaged on 29 and 30 August in concentrated bombardment of civilian and military locations in Iraq, including the radar system of Basrah International Airport.

During the year, Iraq also alleged violations of its territorial waters and interceptions of Iraqi vessels by the United States [S/2001/32, S/2001/57, S/2001/647, S/2001/929].

In other letters to the Secretary-General [S/2001/109, S/2001/179, S/2001/259, S/2001/637, S/2001/724], Iraq alleged that humanitarian contracts had been placed on hold by the United Kingdom and the United States and requested the lifting of such holds.

Iraq submitted several reports [S/2001/163, S/2001/410, S/2001/658, S/2001/845, S/2001/974, S/2001/1260] concerning the finding and disposal of unexploded ordnance—left behind by what it called the 1991 30-Power aggression against it—which continued to be found in large quantities in the country.

By a 14 January letter to the Secretary-General [S/2001/44], Iraq requested an inquiry into the use of depleted-uranium munitions by the United Kingdom and the United States in their 1991 military campaign against Iraq. On 10 July [S/2001/687], Iraq informed the Secretary-General that, due to the lack of the necessary UN security clearances, the visit by a team of specialists from the World Health Organization (WHO) to Iraq had been postponed. WHO had agreed to dispatch experts to Iraq in order to finalize with Iraqi authorities project proposals for studies on the impact of depleted-uranium munitions. In addition, on 28 March [S/2001/298], Iraq drew the Secretary-General's attention to the outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease in neighbouring countries and to the great efforts that had been made to guard against the spread of the disease to Iraq; those efforts were being thwarted by UNSCOM's destruction in 1996 of laboratories that produced the vaccine and the inhuman position of the United Kingdom and United States in placing holds on contracts for the importation of serums and vaccines.

Iraq also protested, throughout 2001, continuing air incursions and armed aggression in its northern territory by Turkey [S/2001/31, S/2001/61, S/2001/1010].

On 9 August [S/2001/776], Iraq claimed that the United States naval forces stationed in the Arabian Gulf had searched vessels carrying goods of a humanitarian nature to Iraq, including goods being imported under the Memorandum of Understanding and the oil-for-food programme.

In other communications, Iraq alleged that the United Kingdom and the United States were funding and training terrorist groups for the purpose of undermining Iraq's security and territorial integrity [S/2001/532]; refuted allegations made by an American newspaper that it had tested a radiological bomb [S/2001/450]; and transmitted to the Secretary-General a 1 November letter on the question of disarmament from President Hussein to the peoples and Governments of the West, including the United States [A/C.1/56/6].

Cambodia

Throughout 2001, the United Nations continued to negotiate with the Government of Cambodia with regard to establishing a tribunal to try top Khmer Rouge leaders for crimes against humanity committed during the period of Democratic Kampuchea (1975-1979). The Law on the Establishment of Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia for the Prosecution of Crimes Committed during the Period of Democratic Kampuchea was promulgated on 10 August and the official translations from Khmer into English and French were submitted to the UN Secretariat on 30 August. During the remainder of the year, the Secretariat communicated to the Cambodian Government a number of issues of concern regarding the conduct of the Extraordinary Chambers.

In resolution 56/169 of 19 December (see p. 600), the General Assembly welcomed the promulgation of the Law and urged the Government and the United Nations to conclude an agreement without delay so that the Extraordinary Chambers could start to function promptly.

(For the situation of human rights in Cambodia, see p. 598.)

UNTAC financing and liquidation

On 7 September, the General Assembly decided to include the item on the financing and liquidation of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC), which terminated in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 371], in the draft agenda of its fifty-sixth (2001) session (decision 55/495). On 24 December, it decided that the item would remain for consideration at the resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464) and that the Fifth Committee would continue its consideration of the item at that session (decision 56/458).

Fiji

In 2001, the caretaker Government of Fiji organized general elections from 25 August to 1 September, in an effort to restore a system of constitutional democracy that was derailed by a coup d'état on 19 May 2000, one year after Fiji's Labour Party and its coalition partners had won the elections. As a result of the coup, the President had declared a state of emergency and Parliament was suspended. The Commander of the Fiji Military Forces subsequently took over executive authority and Laisenia Qarase was appointed Prime Minister of an interim caretaker Government. The caretaker Government requested the United Nations to attend and observe the general elections. The Organization dispatched an assessment mission to Fiji from 11 to 15 June. With the authorization of the General Assembly, the United Nations Electoral Observer Mission, together with observers from the EU and the Commonwealth, monitored the elections and the immediate post-election environment. The Secretary-General subsequently reported to the Assembly that the elections were credible and reflected the will of the people of Fiji.

Communication. On 13 July [A/55/1016], Fiji requested the Secretary-General to provide assistance and help to ensure that its general elections were conducted in a just and orderly manner and invited the United Nations to attend and observe those elections.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 July [meeting 109], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/280 [draft: A/55/L.90 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 39].

United Nations Electoral Observer Mission for the general elections in Fiji in August 2001

The General Assembly,

Noting the request of the caretaker Government of the Republic of the Fiji Islands to the Secretary-General for the participation of the United Nations in the observation of the general elections in Fiji,

Recalling its resolution 54/173 of 17 December 1999 on strengthening the role of the United Nations in enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections and the promotion of democratization,

Noting with satisfaction that increasing numbers of Member States are using elections as a peaceful means of national decision-making and confidence-building, thereby contributing to greater national peace and stability,

Taking note of the letter dated 31 October 2000 from the Permanent Representative of New Zealand to the United Nations, on behalf of the Pacific Islands Forum, addressed to the Secretary-General, which transmitted the communiqué of the thirty-first meeting of the Forum, held at Tarawa from 27 to 30 October 2000, and recognizing and endorsing the need to address the fundamental causes of political instability in the region,

Taking into account the positive impact on the regional promotion of democracy, peace and well-being that a stable democracy in Fiji will provide,

Taking note of the letter from the Minister for Foreign Affairs, External Trade and Sugar of the caretaker Government addressed to the President of the General Assembly, which registers the commitment of the caretaker Government to return Fiji to a full constitutional democracy through free and fair elections and invites the United Nations to observe the elections,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which provides that everyone has the right to take part in the government of his or her country, directly or through freely chosen representatives, that everyone has the right of equal access to public service in his or her country, that the will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of the government and that this will shall be expressed in periodic and genuine elections which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and shall be held by secret vote or by equivalent free voting procedures,

Taking into account the requested assistance provided by the United Nations in 1995, supporting the revision of the 1990 Constitution of Fiji leading to the promulgation of the Constitution Amendment Act 1997 of the Republic of the Fiji Islands,

Recalling that the verification of free and fair elections should cover the entire time span of the electoral process, and noting that assistance by the United Nations to Member States should continue on a case-by-case basis in accordance with the evolving needs of requesting countries,

Recognizing existing time constraints, which allow the Organization to observe only the election environment, polling, counting, computation of results, complaints and resolution mechanisms, the announcement of results and the post-election acceptance of results,

Welcoming the early exercise of free and fair elections by the caretaker Government seeking to reinstate constitutional democracy,

1. Decides to authorize the Secretary-General to establish the United Nations Electoral Observer Mission to monitor the general elections in Fiji and the immediate post-election environment;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to arrange, as soon as possible, for the deployment of the Electoral Observer Mission so that it may commence its monitoring functions;

3. Calls upon the authorities directly concerned to extend their fullest cooperation to the Electoral Observer Mission in order to facilitate the accomplishment of its task, as requested by the United Nations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution under the agenda item entitled "Support by the United Nations system of the efforts of Governments to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies".

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to resolution 55/280, the Secretary-General reported on 10 November on the United Nations Electoral Observer Mission for the general elections in Fiji [A/56/611], stating that the core team had arrived in Suva by mid-August and 38 international observers had been deployed across the Fiji Islands by 23 August. The observers visited 96 per cent of the 818 polling stations during the week of voting and monitored the entire counting process, the announcement of the results on 7 September and the post-election period.

The Secretary-General stated that the elections were conducted in a credible manner and that the results reflected the will of the people. However, during the post-election observation, a number of concerns were registered regarding the formation of the Government. In contravention of Fiji's Constitution, a multiparty Cabinet was not formed, resulting in a legal challenge. Given those circumstances, the Secretary-General stated that there was still an opportunity to assist and support Fiji in its expressed determination to return to full constitutional democracy. Continued participation by the United Nations was made viable, and its potential to contribute well served, by the credibility established by the Observer Mission.

With regard to complaints and a number of technical problems, including serious issues related to the electoral rolls, the Mission made recommendations to the Fijian authorities, which it hoped would prove useful for the future.

India-Pakistan

The United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan (UNMOGIP) continued in 2001 to monitor the situation in Jammu and Kashmir. As at 31 December, UNMOGIP had a strength of 45 military observers. On 13 July [S/2001/710], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Major General Hermann K. Loidolt (Austria) as Chief Military Observer of UNMOGIP, replacing Major General Manuel L. Saavedra (Uruguay), who served in that position until 10 July. The Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention on 18 July [S/2001/711].

Communications. On 30 May [S/2001/594], Sweden drew the Secretary-General's attention to a 29 May statement by the Presidency of the EU welcoming the invitation by India's Prime Minister, Atal Behari Vajpayee, to Pakistan's Chief Executive, General Pervez Musharraf, to visit India. By a 12 June letter to the Security Council President [S/2001/584], the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya also expressed its satisfaction with the initiative taken by India's Prime Minister and the acceptance of the invitation by Pakistan's Chief Executive. Annexed to the letter were the texts of the letters sent by Colonel Muammar Qaddafi to both parties.

In the final communiqué of the annual coordination meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (New York, 15 November) [A/56/779-S/2002/82], appreciation was expressed for Pakistan's initiative in participating in a results-oriented dialogue with India with a view to resolving all outstanding disputes, and the summit-level talks between the two parties (Agra, India, July) were welcomed.

Oman transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the final communiqué adopted at the twenty-second Summit of the Gulf Cooperation Council (Muscat, 30-31 December) [A/56/797-S/2002/125], in which it condemned the 13 December terrorist attack on India's Parliament House. The Council expressed concern about the tension between India and Pakistan and hoped that the two parties would exercise self-restraint and return to the positive atmosphere that had accompanied the contacts between the two leaders.

Iran-Iraq

Throughout 2001, Iran and Iraq continued to inform the Secretary-General of alleged repeated violations of their 1988 ceasefire agreement [YUN 1988, p. 193] and 1991 Tehran agreements [YUN 1991, p. 163] concerning the area of separation between them. They also alleged cross-border attacks and terrorist activities in each other's territory.

Iran alleged ceasefire violations by Iraq in an 8 January letter [S/2001/28]; Iraq made counter-allegations on 15 February [S/2001/144], 12 April [S/2001/368] and 23 May [S/2001/529]. Iran alleged violation of internal waters by Iraq on 17 January [S/2001/57] and Iraqi aggression at sea on 20 February [S/2001/159]. Iran further alleged terrorist attacks on its territory by an Iraqi-based organization on 22 March [S/2001/271] and 18 April [S/2001/381].

On 6 February [S/2001/124], Iraq stated that a book by a former UN employee disclosed that Iraq had been assigned responsibility for initiating the Iraq-Iran war in a deal to release Western hostages in Lebanon.

Korea question

By a 17 May letter to the Security Council President [S/2001/495], the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) transmitted a report on the delay in the construction of the light-water reactor (LWR) project under the 1994 DPRK-United States Agreed Framework [YUN 1994, p. 442]. Under the Framework, which was a step towards denuclearizing the Korean peninsula and maintaining peace and security in the region, the parties had agreed to cooperate in replacing the DPRK's graphite-moderated reactors and related facilities with LWR power plants; move towards full normalization of political and economic relations; and work together to strengthen the international nuclear non-proliferation regime. The DPRK indicated that it had complied with the Framework and entered into a complete freeze on the graphite-moderated reactors. It had also fully cooperated with IAEA and allowed it to monitor the freeze, and had completed the safe storage of spent-fuel rods out of an experimental atomic reactor. The DPRK expressed concern that LWR power plants the United States had pledged to complete by 2003 had witnessed too much delay and stated that, in the light of the DPRK-United States relations, the delay in the LWR project might lead to the scrapping of the Agreed Framework.

On 10 August [A/56/194], the Republic of Korea requested that an item on peace, security and reunification on the Korean peninsula be included in the agenda of the fifty-sixth (2001) session of the General Assembly. It explained that, following the inter-Korean summit in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 321], the DPRK and itself had been committed to the implementation of the inter-Korean agreements towards peace and stability in the Korean peninsula.

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the item requested would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464).

IAEA safeguards inspections

Pursuant to the agreement between IAEA and the DPRK for the application of safeguards in connection with the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2373(XXII) [YUN 1968, p. 17], IAEA continued to maintain an inspector presence in Nyongbyon to monitor the freeze of the DPRK's graphite-moderated reactors instituted in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 442]. The DPRK continued to accept IAEA's activities in that regard solely within the context of the 1994 Agreed Framework between it and the United States [ibid.] and not under its safeguards agreement with the Agency [S/2002/211].

IAEA, in May, proposed concrete steps to be taken towards verifying the DPRK's initial declaration of nuclear material, which it had thus far been unable to do. At a technical meeting in November, the DPRK did not agree to begin implementing those proposals, citing the delay in implementing the Agreed Framework (see p. 316).

In a 21 September resolution, the IAEA General Conference again urged the DPRK to comply fully with its safeguards agreement and strongly encouraged it to respond positively and at an early date to the Agency's detailed proposals for the first concrete steps needed to implement the generic requirements for the verification of the correctness and completeness of the DPRK's initial declaration.

Saudi Arabia-Iraq

Saudi Arabia informed the Secretary-General and the Security Council on 29 May [S/2001/547] that, on 23 May, an Iraqi patrol crossed the Saudi border and opened fire on Saudi border personnel, wounding a number of them. An Iraqi soldier was killed during the exchange of fire. Saudi Arabia also listed a number of other alleged Iraqi violations and infringements of Saudi territory. In a 6 June reply [S/2001/568], Iraq said that Saudi soldiers had ambushed and opened fire first on the Iraqi soldiers in the 23 May incident. It also refuted Saudi Arabia's other claims of violations.

By a 4 June letter to the Secretary-General [S/2001/567], Saudi Arabia said that, in view of the fact that Iraq had not maintained neighbourly relations or respected fraternal ties, it had decided to seize full control of the Iraqi pipeline built to carry Iraqi crude oil across Saudi territory. Responding on 13 June [S/2001/588], Iraq said that Saudi Arabia's confiscation of the Iraqi pipeline constituted an illegal seizure of the assets of another State in breach of a bilateral agreement and the norms of international law.

On 10 July, in identical letters to the Secretary-General and the Council President [S/2001/689], Saudi Arabia protested the entry into its territory of Iraqi citizens in possession of hashish on 11 June. In a 23 July reply [S/2001/725], Iraq refuted Saudi Arabia's allegations.

On 27 August [S/2001/823], Iraq informed the Secretary-General and the Council President that Saudi patrol personnel had violated Iraq's territorial integrity and had attacked units of the Iraqi Border Guard Force. Replying on 26 September [S/2001/923], Saudi Arabia said that Iraqi authorities were continuing their practice of violating Saudi territory.

Solomon Islands

On 25 October [A/56/508], Solomon Islands submitted a note verbale to the Secretary-General requesting a UN observer mission to monitor its general elections to be held on 5 December and to provide assistance to help ensure that its elections were conducted in a fair and orderly manner. The Expert Election Monitoring Team was deployed to carry out that task, interacting with international observers, including those from the Pacific Islands Forum.

Tajikistan

On 2 May [S/2001/445], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to continue the activities of the United Nations Tajikistan Office of Peace-building (UNTOP) for another year, until 1 June 2002, in view of its role over the preceding year and Tajikistan's need for continuing support in its post-conflict peace-building efforts. The Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention on 7 May [S/2001/446].

UNTOP, which was established in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 315], focused on facilitating the process of reconciliation and broadening national consensus in the political environment after a prolonged civil war conflict. Together with the UN country team, it contributed to the mobilization of international support for targeted programmes aimed at the creation of employment and the retraining of former irregular fighters and their integration into civilian life.

UNMOT financing

On 14 June [meeting 103], the General Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's report on the financial performance of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT) from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 [A/55/816 & Corr.1], together with ACABQ's related reports [A/55/874 & A/55/880], and on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/972], adopted resolution 55/263 without vote [agenda item 136].

Financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 968(1994) of 16 December 1994, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission of Observers, the latest of which was resolution 1274(1999) of 12 November 1999,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1138(1997) of 14 November 1997, by which the Council authorized the Secretary-General to expand the size of the Mission of Observers,

Recalling further its resolution 49/240 of 31 March 1995 on the financing of the Mission of Observers and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 54/272 of 15 June 2000,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission of Observers are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission of Observers, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission of Observers,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission of Observers with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan as at 30 April 2001, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 2.1 million United States dollars, representing some 3 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission of Observers to the period ending 15 May 2000, notes that some 32.8 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions in full;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission of Observers in full;

5. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

6. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

7. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

8. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

9. Decides to reduce the appropriation approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 53/19 B of 8 June 1999 to 16,370,309 dollars gross (15,291,434 dollars net);

10. Decides also that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission of Observers, there shall be set off against the apportionment, their respective share of the consequential unencumbered balance of 2,416,109 dollars gross (2,180,934 dollars net), in respect of the period ending 30 June 2000, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in subsequent relevant resolutions and decisions for the ad hoc apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations, the latest of which were resolution 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and decisions 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999 for the period 1998-2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999;

11. Decides further that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission of Observers, their share of the unencumbered balance of 2,416,109 dollars gross (2,180,934 dollars net)

in respect of the period ending 30 June 2000 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

12. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

13. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission of Observers;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan".

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the financing of UNMOT would remain for consideration at the resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464) and that the Fifth Committee would continue its consideration of the item at that session (decision 56/458).

Chapter V

Europe and the Mediterranean

In 2001, there were encouraging signs that a number of countries in Europe and the Mediterranean were moving closer towards achieving their goal of peace and security. In the Balkans, the contentious issue of State succession was finally settled on 29 June, when the States successors to the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (SFRY) signed the Agreement on Succession Issues, providing for the distribution of SFRY's rights, obligations, assets and liabilities. Following the change of Government in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) in 2000, relations with Croatia improved, leading to their joint statement of intent to further normalize bilateral relations and to elaborate a protocol on the identification of borders and the delimitation on land and sea, for which they established an inter-State border commission on 10 December.

The United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina continued to pursue its Mandate Implementation Plan, which was due to be completed by the end of 2002. In anticipation of the Plan's completion, the Security Council began to consider proposals as to what form continued UN and international civilian presences in Bosnia and Herzegovina would take thereafter.

Between March and May, the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo, headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, began laying the foundations for the interim period of self-government in the FRY province of Kosovo. That culminated in the Special Representative's promulgation on 16 May of a Constitutional Framework for Provisional Self-Government, which paved the way for Kosovo-wide elections on 17 November. Formation of a coalition Government and establishment of the provisional self-government institutions followed.

On the Secretary-General's recommendation, the Security Council, on 10 September, terminated the sanctions imposed on FRY and dissolved the committee that had been monitoring them. With the improved situation in the ground safety zone—the buffer zone between Kosovo and Serbia proper—the North Atlantic Treaty Organization allowed the phased return of Yugoslav forces to the area.

In the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, the President and the leaders of the four main political parties signed a Framework Agreement on 13 August. Among its main provisions were the cessation of hostilities, the voluntary disarmament and disbandment of the ethnic Albanian armed groups, an unconditional ceasefire and the development of a decentralized Government.

In Cyprus, the leaders of the Greek and Turkish Cypriot communities, in a 4 December face-to-face meeting in the presence of the Secretary-General's Personal Adviser for Cyprus, agreed to hold direct talks under the auspices of the Secretary-General's mission of good offices. They further agreed on the conditions for such talks, which would begin on 16 January 2002.

In Georgia, however, the peace process aimed at resolving the Georgian/Abkhaz armed conflict remained stalled. The long-awaited paper on the basic principles for the distribution of competencies between Tbilisi and Sukhumi was finalized in mid-December. The paper, which the Special Representative of the Secretary-General transmitted to the parties, was to serve as the basis for substantial negotiations towards a comprehensive settlement, including a definition of the political status of Abkhazia within the State of Georgia. Adamant in its rejection of any suggestion that Abkhazia was within the State of Georgia, the Abkhaz party was not prepared to receive the paper.

Attempts to bring about a settlement in the Nagorny-Karabakh region of Azerbaijan also proved unsuccessful. Both sides of the conflict remained entrenched in their positions: Azerbaijan maintained that Nagorny Karabakh was an integral part of the State of Azerbaijan, while Nagorny Karabakh's leadership considered the region a separate, independent entity, referring to it as the "Nagorno-Karabakh Republic".

The former Yugoslavia

UN operations

The United Nations continued efforts to restore peace and stability in the territories of the former Yugoslavia through its peacekeeping missions: the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH), the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP) and the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in the FRY province of Kosovo (UNMIK). The Secretary-General's Special Envoys for the Balkans, Carl Bildt (Sweden) and Eduard Kukan (Slovakia), also continued in their functions.

The Security Council extended the mandates of UNMIBH, which included the International Police Task Force, until 21 June 2002 and of UNMOP until 15 January 2002.

The Secretary-General, on 1 March [S/2001/194], informed the Security Council President that he had asked his Special Envoys to continue their efforts until midyear, and beyond if required, to promote peace and stability in the Balkans. The Council noted that request on 6 March [S/2001/195].

Financing of previous peacekeeping operations

UNPF and UNPF-HQ

In March [A/55/840], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 54/269 [YUN 2000, p. 325], submitted the financial performance report of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR), which ended in 1999, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia (UNCRO), which ended in 1996, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP), which ended in 1999—known collectively as the United Nations Peace Forces (UNPF)—and UNPF headquarters (UNPF-HQ).

Reimbursements to troop-contributing Governments for troop costs had been made in full, apart from $1,358,146 being held in accounts payable awaiting payment instructions from one Government. Also being held in accounts payable were certified claims totalling $219,991,166 for amounts owed for contingent-owned equipment and $15,022,361 for related losses. An estimated $29 million in additional claims for equipment losses was awaiting approval. Claims for goods and services amounting to $12.8 million were recorded in accounts payable as at 31 December 2000.

The unencumbered balance of appropriations stood at $174,743,027 gross ($175,519,370 net); however, there was no corresponding cash balance. In addition, although the operating deficit decreased from $353,288,018 in 1999 to $305,889,451 in 2000, the shortage of cash in the UNPF special account remained a critical problem, owing to the high level of unpaid assessed contributions to UNPF, which, at 31 December 2000, totalled $616,724,373. Consequently, certified government claims had had to be placed in accounts payable.

In the light of the chronic cash shortage of the combined forces, the Secretary-General sought the Assembly's agreement to the continued temporary suspension of financial regulations 4.3, 4.4 and 5.2 (d) in respect of the remaining surplus of $174,743,027 gross ($175,519,370 net). The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in its April report [A/55/886], concurred with the Secretary-General's recommendation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 June [meeting 103], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/55/961], adopted resolution 55/265 without vote [agenda item 140].

Financing of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 727(1992) of 8 January 1992 and 740(1992) of 7 February 1992, in which the Council endorsed the sending of a group of military liaison officers to Yugoslavia to promote maintenance of the ceasefire,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 743(1992) of 21 February 1992, by which the Council established the United Nations Protection Force, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended and expanded its mandate,

Recalling further Security Council resolution 981(1995) of 31 March 1995, by which the Council established the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, to be known as UNCRO,

Recalling Security Council resolution 983(1995) of 31 March 1995, by which the Council decided that the United Nations Protection Force within the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia should be known as the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1025(1995) of 30 November 1995, in which the Council decided to terminate the mandate of the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia on 15 January 1996,

Recalling further Security Council resolution 1031(1995) of 15 December 1995, in which the Council decided to terminate the mandate of the United Nations Protection Force on the date on which the Secretary-General reported that the transfer of authority from the United Nations Protection Force to the Implementation Force had taken place,

Recalling the letter dated 1 February 1996 from the President of the Security Council to the Secretary-General, informing him of the Council's concurrence in principle that the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force should become an independent mission,

Recalling also its resolution 46/233 of 19 March 1992 on the financing of the United Nations Protection Force and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 54/269 of 15 June 2000,

Reaffirming that the costs of the combined Forces are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the combined Forces, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such operations,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the combined Forces by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the combined Forces with the necessary financial resources to enable them to meet their outstanding liabilities,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the combined Forces as at 30 April 2001, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 615.8 million United States dollars, representing 13 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the United Nations Protection Force to the period ending 30 June 1997, notes that some 63 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions in full;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Also expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

5. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

6. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

7. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

8. Decides to suspend for the immediate future the provisions of regulations 4.3, 4.4 and 5.2 (d) of the financial regulations of the United Nations in respect of the remaining surplus of 174,743,027 dollars gross (175,519,370 dollars net) in order to allow for reimbursements to troop contributors and in the light of the cash shortage of the combined Forces, and requests the Secretary-General to provide an updated report in one year;

9. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters".

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the financing of UNPROFOR, UNCRO, UNPREDEP and UNPF-HQ would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464) and that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item at that session (decision 56/458).

UNTAES and UN Civilian Police Support Group

By decision 55/501 of 7 September, the General Assembly included in the draft agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item on financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) and the Civilian Police Support Group.

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the financing of UNTAES and the Civilian Police Support Group would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464) and that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item at that session (decision 56/458).

UNPREDEP

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session, considered the Secretary-General's September 2000 report [A/55/390] on the final disposition of UNPREDEP's assets [YUN 2000, p. 328], seeking authority from the Assembly for the transfer to the Government of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM) of assets consisting of observation towers and non-expendable equipment within the observation posts with an inventory value of $1,705,200.

ACABQ, in its related report [A/55/870], recommended approval of the transfer. Noting, however, that the transfer had already been made under "temporary possession" arrangements pending the Assembly's approval, ACABQ observed that such proposals should be submitted to it before the actual transfer, whether under "temporary possession" or otherwise. Noting also that assets of $79,600 had been written off as unaccounted for due to the liquidation team's inability to identify the names of military officials who received some of the equipment provided to the battalions, ACABQ trusted that, since the field assets control system (see p. 102) was fully operational, such instances would be reduced, pointing out that, as a general rule, UN officials should be designated to receive, inspect and report on equipment provided to missions.

By decision 55/484 of 14 June, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report and the related ACABQ report, and approved the donation of observation towers and non-expendable equipment within the observation posts to FYROM.

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the item on UNPREDEP's financing would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464) and that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item at that session (decision 56/458).

State succession issues

The High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina [YUN 1995, p. 544] reported in July [S/2001/723] that, in accordance with his mandate, he, together with the Special Negotiator, Sir Arthur Watts (United Kingdom), mediated the final round of negotiations for the succession of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (SFRY) in Vienna. That resulted in the Agreement on Succession Issues, providing for the distribution of the rights, obligations, assets and liabilities of SFRY, which its five successor States—Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Slovenia, FYROM and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY)—initialled on 25 May. The High Representative reported in September [S/2001/868] that the five States had formally signed the Agreement on 29 June in Vienna.

The General Assembly, in resolution 56/215 (see p. 327), welcomed the Agreement and its implementation.

Prevlaka peninsula

In 2001, the United Nations continued to explore ways to advance the political process relating to the dispute over the Prevlaka peninsula, particularly through the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP), which monitored the demilitarization of the peninsula and neighbouring territories in Croatia and FRY. The Security Council renewed UNMOP's mandate until 15 January 2002.

As relations between the two countries improved and with their declarations of intent to work towards a negotiated settlement, bilateral negotiations on Prevlaka, which had been stalled for two years, resumed in June 2001. The leaders of the two countries also issued a joint statement on the further normalization of bilateral relations, in accordance with the 1996 Agreement on Normalization of Relations between them [YUN 1996, p. 340]. In November, their Foreign Ministers agreed to elaborate a protocol on the identification of borders and the delimitation on land and sea. As a follow-up, the first meeting was held on 10 December, at which an inter-State border commission was established.

Despite the long-standing violations of the agreed security regime in the UN-controlled zones, including limitations on the free movement of UN military observers, the situation there remained stable and calm. In June, Croatia disbanded its Special Police stationed on its side of the demilitarized zone (DMZ), replacing it with a Police Intervention Unit, and also significantly reduced the number of its regular police there.

Bilateral negotiations

On 5 January [S/2001/13], Croatia said that the emergence of the new Government in FRY [YUN 2000, p. 384] raised hopes that an overall lasting solution could be reached on the question of Prevlaka through bilateral contacts between Croatia and FRY and its Republic of Montenegro. Croatia expected bilateral talks to commence as soon as possible and declared its intention to take account of FRY's security concerns and to endeavour to resolve the issue in the spirit of good-neighbourliness. The Secretary-General's April report on UNMOP [S/2001/350] indicated, however, that no further meetings of the negotiating teams had taken place and the parties continued to hold divergent views on resolving the dispute.

FRY stated its belief on 3 July [S/2001/668] that conditions existed for the two countries to arrive at a satisfactory solution through negotiations, with full respect for the interests of both sides. Regardless of their differing views, FRY continued to believe that gradualism, the strengthening of confidence and the taking of specific steps aimed at creating conditions conducive to reaching a final agreement on the determination of land, water and sea borders between FRY and Croatia were the best way to proceed.

In his July report on UNMOP [S/2001/661], the Secretary-General said that the two countries had held meetings on bilateral issues, including Prevlaka. In addition to working-level discussions, Croatian and Yugoslav officials had met in the Yugoslav capital of Belgrade on 11 June and in Vienna on 28 June. The United Nations did not participate in those meetings, during which the Prevlaka issue was broached.

On 9 July [S/2001/680], Croatia welcomed the resumption of bilateral contacts. It said that it was encouraged by FRY's political will to engage actively in the quest for a solution to the Prevlaka issue and was ready to start negotiations on the delimitation of the maritime border based on international law as soon as possible.

In a later report on UNMOP [S/2002/1], the Secretary-General said that Croatia and FRY continued to maintain contacts. Their Foreign Ministers met on 11 November in New York and issued a joint statement declaring their intention to set up an inter-State commission to address outstanding issues concerning their common land and sea borders and to examine further the issue of demilitarization. In separate meetings with the Secretary-General on 14 November, they expressed their Governments' commitment to continue working bilaterally towards a peaceful, negotiated solution to the Prevlaka dispute. The Secretary-General assured them of UN assistance, should it be required.

On 28 December [S/2001/1301], FRY informed the Security Council President that, as a follow-up to the Foreign Ministers' November decision to elaborate a protocol on the principle of the identification of borders and the delimitation on land and sea, a meeting was held on 10 December, at which an inter-State border commission was established.

Normalization of relations

The Presidents of Croatia, Stjepan Mesic, and of FRY, Vojislav Kostunica, issued a joint statement on their talks on 8 June in Verbania, Italy [A/56/116-S/2001/617], on the state of relations between their countries and on the situation in the broader region. They announced their readiness to continue to maintain periodic contacts in order to give a fresh impetus to the region's stabilization and reaffirmed their commitment in principle to a policy of peace and resolution of all outstanding questions through negotiations.

The Presidents acknowledged that Croatia-FRY relations should be built with a view to achieving full normalization and be expanded in all areas of mutual interest. To that end, special emphasis should be placed on facilitating the free movement of persons, commodities and ideas. Implementation of existing bilateral agreements should continue and measures undertaken to ensure the equal protection of minorities in both countries. All obstacles to the return of refugees and expelled persons should be removed, and maximum efforts exerted to ensure that persons missing in action were accounted for.

They acknowledged that a stable and democratic Bosnia and Herzegovina based on the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina [YUN 1995, p. 544] was in the lasting interest, not only of their two countries, but also of the region as a whole, and reaffirmed that Croatia and FRY had no claims to any part of the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

UN Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP)

The United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka continued in 2001 to monitor the demilitarization of the disputed Prevlaka peninsula and the neighbouring areas in Croatia and FRY, to hold periodic meetings with local authorities and to maintain contact with the Belgrade and Zagreb authorities. It further maintained co-operation with the multinational Stabilization Force (SFOR) in Bosnia and Herzegovina (see p. 344). UNMOP's areas of responsibility were in two UN-designated zones: the DMZ (Yellow Zone) and the UN-controlled zone (Blue Zone). Until 15 September, UNMOP, which comprised 27 military observers, had been under the command of Chief Military Observer Colonel Graeme Roger Williams (New Zealand). He was replaced by Colonel Rodolfo Sergio Mujica (Argentina), who was appointed through an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General [S/2001/872] and the Security Council [S/2001/873].

The Council extended UNMOP's mandate twice during the year, to 15 July 2001 and to 15 January 2002.

Although an independent mission, UNMOP was, for administrative and budgetary purposes, treated as part of UNMIBH. (For the financing of UNMOP, see p. 337.)

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 January [meeting 4256], the Security Council, having considered the Secretary-General's December 2000 report on UNMOP [YUN 2000, p. 335], unanimously adopted resolution 1335 (2001). The draft [S/2001/34] was prepared in prior consultations.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions, including resolutions 779(1992) of 6 October 1992, 981(1995) of 31 March 1995, 1088(1996) of 12 December 1996, 1147(1998) of 13 January 1998, 1183(1998) of 15 July 1998, 1222(1999) of 15 January 1999, 1252(1999) of 15

July 1999, 1285(2000) of 13 January 2000, 1305(2000) of 21 June 2000 and 1307(2000) of 13 July 2000,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 29 December 2000 on the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka,

Recalling the letters addressed to its President from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Mission of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia of 22 December 2000 and from the Permanent Representative of Croatia of 5 January 2001, concerning the disputed issue of Prevlaka,

Reaffirming once again its commitment to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia within its internationally recognized borders,

Noting once again that the Joint Declaration signed at Geneva on 30 September 1992 by the Presidents of the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, in particular articles 1 and 3 thereof, the latter reaffirming their agreement concerning the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula,

Noting with satisfaction that the overall situation in the area of responsibility of the Mission has remained stable and calm,

Reiterating its concern about continuing violations of the demilitarization regime, including limitations placed on the free movement of United Nations military observers,

Noting with satisfaction that the opening of crossing points between Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the demilitarized zone continues to facilitate civilian and commercial traffic in both directions without security incidents and continues to represent a significant confidence-building measure in the normalization of relations between the two parties, and urging the parties to utilize these openings as a basis for further confidence-building measures to achieve the normalization of relations between them,

Welcoming the commitment of the democratic governments of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, as expressed by the Prime Minister of the Federal Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the Foreign Minister of Croatia, to resume as soon as possible bilateral talks on the disputed issue of Prevlaka pursuant to the Agreement on Normalization of Relations between the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia of 23 August 1996, which would end a long period during which no substantive progress was made on the issue,

Expressing its concern over the delay in putting in place a comprehensive demining programme by the parties,

Commending the role played by the Mission, and noting that the presence of the United Nations military observers continues to be essential to maintaining conditions that are conducive to a negotiated settlement of the disputed issue of Prevlaka,

Recalling the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of the United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994 and the statement of its President of 10 February 2000,

Welcoming and encouraging efforts by the United Nations to sensitize peacekeeping personnel in the prevention and control of HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases in all its peacekeeping operations,

1. Authorizes the United Nations military observers to continue monitoring the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula, in accordance with resolutions 779(1992) and 981(1995) and paragraphs 19 and 20 of the report of the Secretary-General of 13 December 1995, until 15 July 2001;

2. Reiterates its call upon the parties to cease all violations of the demilitarized regime in the United Nations designated zones, to take steps further to reduce tension and to improve safety and security in the area, to cooperate fully with the United Nations military observers and to ensure their safety and full and unrestricted freedom of movement;

3. Calls upon the parties to resume talks on the disputed issue of Prevlaka as soon as possible and encourages them to make use of the recommendations and options to develop confidence-building measures with which they were provided pursuant to its request in resolution 1252(1999) with a view to, inter alia, further facilitating the freedom of movement of the civilian population, and requests the Secretary-General to report by 15 April 2001;

4. Urges once again that the parties abide by their mutual commitments and implement fully the Agreement on Normalization of Relations between the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, and stresses in particular the urgent need for them to fulfil rapidly and in good faith their commitment to reach a negotiated resolution of the disputed issue of Prevlaka in accordance with article 4 of the Agreement;

5. Requests the parties to continue to report at least bimonthly to the Secretary-General on the status of their bilateral negotiations;

6. Reiterates its call upon the parties to put a comprehensive demining programme in place in the identified minefields in the area of responsibility of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka;

7. Requests the United Nations military observers and the multinational Stabilization Force authorized by the Council in resolution 1088(1996) of 12 December 1996 and extended by resolution 1305(2000) of 21 June 2000 to cooperate fully with each other;

8. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Reports of Secretary-General (April and July). The Secretary-General, in his April report on UNMOP [S/2001/350], said that the situation in the DMZ and the UN-controlled zone remained stable and calm. In the latter zone, the long-standing violations of the security regime remained unchanged, with both parties continuing to maintain police positions on their respective sides of the zone and manned Croatian and Montenegrin checkpoints at Cape Kobila. On 21 March, the Chief Military Observer, escorting a visiting representative of a Security Council member, was denied permission to proceed through the Croatian-erected checkpoint. In violation of the regime forbidding entry of civilians into the zone, a civilian van was observed within it on 17 March, reportedly conducting a survey on behalf of the Croatian telecommunications authorities.

No new developments were reported concerning the 1999 package of recommendations and options for confidence-building [YUN 1999, p. 312] conveyed to the parties by the Secretariat. During recent consultations with UNMOP, neither party expressed an interest in pursuing the options that formed part of the package.

The Secretary-General said it was incumbent on the parties to resume discussions aimed at reaching a negotiated solution. In that regard, the package for confidence-building mentioned above remained available as a way of achieving progress, and UNMOP stood ready to assist in the development of practical arrangements to give effect to any agreement that the parties might reach. He intended to explore with them ways to move the political process forward.

In his July report [S/2001/661], the Secretary-General advised the Council that UNMOP had been informed by Croatia that it was disbanding the Special Police that helped to maintain control of the DMZ and replacing it with a newly formed Police Intervention Unit and regular uniformed police. The number of Croatian police stationed in the DMZ had since been significantly reduced. However, there was no change in the disposition of the Montenegrin Border Police and Special Police personnel stationed on the Yugoslav side. On 19 and 22 June, Croatian officials at the Brgat/Ivancia crossing point between Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia prevented UN vehicles carrying administrative supplies from UNMIBH to UNMOP from transiting through Croatia.

In the UN-controlled zone, where the number of Croatian police stationed had also been reduced, each side currently maintained a strength of 10 police. The agreed security regime in the zone continued to be violated by both sides permitting the unauthorized entry of civilians, including: police-escorted busloads of some 100 sightseers from Croatia on 16 April; a vehicle bearing Croatian military licence plates on 25 April; and, on 29 April, some 60 vehicles from Croatia carrying about 120 persons protesting a government decision on land ownership.

The Secretary-General concluded that, while the parties remained committed to reaching a negotiated solution on Prevlaka, he was of the view that more time was required for progress to be made. Croatia's reduction of the number of its police in the DMZ reflected its confidence that the area was likely to remain calm and stable—an assessment that accorded with UNMOP's. To ensure that calm and to maintain the stability essential for meaningful progress towards a political settlement, the Secretary-General recommended that UNMOP's mandate be extended for a further six months, to 15 January 2002.

That recommendation was supported by Croatia and FR Yugoslavia in letters of 9 [S/2001/680] and 3 [S/2001/668] July, respectively, to the Council President.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 11 July [meeting 4346], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1362(2001). The draft [S/2001/681] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions, including resolutions 779(1992) of 6 October 1992, 981(1995) of 31 March 1995, 1088(1996) of 12 December 1996, 1147(1998) of 13 January 1998, 1183(1998) of 15 July 1998, 1222(1999) of 15 January 1999, 1252(1999) of 15 July 1999, 1285(2000) of 13 January 2000, 1307(2000) of 13 July 2000, 1335(2001) of 12 January 2001 and 1357(2001) of 21 June 2001,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 3 July 2001 on the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka,

Recalling the letters to its President from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia of 5 July 2001 and from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Republic of Croatia of 9 July 2001 addressed to the President of the Security Council concerning the disputed issue of Prevlaka,

Reaffirming once again its commitment to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia within its internationally recognized borders,

Noting once again the Joint Declaration signed at Geneva on 30 September 1992 by the Presidents of the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, in particular articles 1 and 3, the latter reaffirming their agreement concerning the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula, and the Agreement on Normalization of Relations between the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia of 23 August 1996,

Noting with satisfaction that the overall situation in the area of responsibility of the Mission has remained stable and calm despite continuing violations of the demilitarization regime, including limitations placed on the free movement of United Nations military observers,

Noting with satisfaction that the opening of crossing points between Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the demilitarized zone continues to facilitate civilian and commercial traffic in both directions without security incidents and continues to represent a significant confidence-building measure in the normalization of relations between the two parties, and urging the parties to utilize these openings as a basis for further confidence-building measures to achieve the normalization of relations between them,

Welcoming the joint statement by the Presidents of the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia issued in Verbania, Italy, on 8 June 2001 in which they expressed their commitment to normalize the bilateral relations between their countries, with a special emphasis on facilitating the free movement of persons, commodities and ideas, and to implement bilateral agreements already signed,

Commending the role played by the Mission, and noting that the presence of the United Nations military observers continues to be essential to maintaining conditions that are conducive to a negotiated settlement of the disputed issue of Prevlaka,

Recalling the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of the United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994 and the statement by its President of 9 February 2000,

Welcoming and encouraging efforts by the United Nations to sensitize peacekeeping personnel in the prevention and control of HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases in all its peacekeeping operations,

1. Authorizes the United Nations military observers to continue monitoring the demilitarization of the Prevlaka Peninsula, in accordance with resolutions 779(1992) and 981(1995) and paragraphs 19 and 20 of the report of the Secretary-General of 13 December 1995, until 15 January 2002, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to report to the Council where appropriate;

2. Reiterates its call upon the parties to cease all violations of the demilitarized regime in the United Nations designated zones, to cooperate fully with the United Nations military observers and to ensure their safety and full and unrestricted freedom of movement;

3. Welcomes the resumption of talks between the Governments of the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, and urges the parties to continue their talks with the aim of fulfilling rapidly and in good faith their commitment to a negotiated resolution on the disputed issue of Prevlaka in accordance with article 4 of the Agreement on Normalization of Relations;

4. Encourages the parties to consider all confidence-building measures, including the options provided to them pursuant to resolution 1252(1999), that could help facilitate a solution to the disputed issue of Prevlaka;

5. Requests the parties to continue to report at least bimonthly to the Secretary-General on the status of their bilateral negotiations;

6. Requests the United Nations military observers and the multinational Stabilization Force authorized by the Council in resolution 1088(1996) of 12 December 1996 and extended by resolution 1357(2001) of 21 June 2001 to cooperate fully with each other;

7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Further developments. In a later report on UNMOP [S/2002/1], the Secretary-General said that more than 85 per cent of the recorded unauthorized entries in the UN-controlled zone in 2001 had occurred from the Croatian side. On 21 September, a twin-engine jet originating from Montenegro overflew the zone, and, on 8 November, Croatian workmen employed a trench-digger to lay a communications cable in the zone.

In November, Croatia began a demining programme in a section of the northern DMZ, which was to continue until May 2002. There was no systematic demining on the Yugoslav side.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

In 2001, the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH) continued its efforts to bring about as complete a fulfilment as possible of the provisions set forth in the 1995 General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the Peace Agreement) [YUN 1995, p. 544] by the two multi-ethnic entities of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina: the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (where mainly Bosnian Muslims (Bosniacs) and Bosnian Croats resided); and Republika Srpska (where mostly Bosnian Serbs resided).

As designated by the 1995 Peace Implementation Conference [ibid., p. 547] and with the Security Council's agreement in resolution 1031(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 548], the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina, under the overall management of the Peace Implementation Council and its Steering Board and in cooperation with UNMIBH, continued to monitor, mobilize and coordinate the implementation activities by the parties of the Peace Agreement's civilian aspects [ibid., p. 547]. The multinational Stabilization Force (SFOR), under the command of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), likewise continued to oversee their compliance with the Agreement's military aspects, in addition to lending support to UNMIBH.

Progress in the peace implementation process and related political developments in the country during the year (detailed in the following sections) was reported at regular intervals to the Council by the Secretary-General and by the High Representative and SFOR through the Secretary-General.

In anticipation of the completion of UNMIBH's core mandate by the end of 2002 as scheduled, the Council, in addition to extending UNMIBH until July of that year, began to consider what form a continued UN and international civilian presence in the country would take beyond 2002.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly adopted resolution 56/215 [draft: A/56/L.65 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 40].

The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 55/24 of 14 November 2000 and all previously adopted resolutions, as well as all relevant resolutions of the Security Council, regarding the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Reaffirming its support for the independence, sovereignty, legal continuity and territorial integrity of Bosnia and Herzegovina, within its internationally recognized borders, and also reaffirming its support for the equality of the three constituent peoples and others in Bosnia and Herzegovina as a united country, with two multi-ethnic entities, according to the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"), signed in Paris on 14 December 1995, which constitute the key mechanism for the achievement of a durable and just peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Noting the significant progress that has been made since 1995 in implementing the provisions of the Peace Agreement, strengthening the rule of law in all of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and consolidating Bosnia and Herzegovina as a modern democratic State and civic society, fully respectful of the rule of law and committed to encouraging economic growth and promoting well-being for all its citizens,

Welcoming the commitment of the Government to speeding up the overall process of the reconstruction and democratization of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and noting the gradual progress that has been made in the development of efficient common institutions of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Noting that corruption and the lack of transparency seriously hamper the economic development of Bosnia and Herzegovina, reiterating the need to combat all corruption, welcoming the important contribution made in that regard by the Customs and Fiscal Assistance Office, and expressing its full support for the efforts of the Council of Ministers of Bosnia and Herzegovina and local bodies and of others that are supportive in that regard,

Welcoming the overall progress that has been made in supporting the return of refugees to all parts of the country, and reaffirming the most important principle that all who were forced to leave should feel free and secure to return to their homes,

Noting the importance for the future of Bosnia and Herzegovina for prosecutors to conclude successfully their investigation of war crimes and the whereabouts of those still missing after the war in Bosnia and Herzegovina, as well as the importance of full cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, especially with regard to surrendering all already indicted war criminals to the Tribunal,

Welcoming the efforts of the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina, reaffirming the fundamental importance of strengthening all aspects of the rule of law, and noting in that regard the ruling of the Constitutional Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina on the equality of the three constituent peoples throughout the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina and progress made by the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina in ensuring a fully representative police force, free of corruption and dedicated to enforcing the laws of the country in an impartial way,

Reaffirming the importance for the future of Bosnia and Herzegovina of its successful integration into Europe, noting in that regard the progress made in fulfilling the conditions for entry into the Council of Europe, especially the adoption of the electoral law, welcoming the progress made in fulfilling conditions towards participation in the European Union Stabilization and Association Agreement, and stressing that the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe provides an additional contribution to the improvement of regional cooperation,

Welcoming the significant improvement of the overall mutual cooperation among the successor States of former Yugoslavia and the region as a whole, also welcoming the Memorandum of Understanding on intra-regional trade liberalization signed on 27 June 2001 in Brussels, the agreement reached in Vienna regarding the succession of former Yugoslavia and its implementation, and underlining the importance of the establishment of diplomatic relations between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Reaffirming the need to combat corruption, smuggling, human trafficking, organized crime, and extremism and other illegal activities, and noting in that regard the establishment of the State Border Service, which is expected to be completed in 2002,

Recognizing the importance of demining and assistance to mine victims for the safety of citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and for the return of refugees and internally displaced persons,

Welcoming the achievements, and encouraging further efforts, in reducing military assets in line with the Agreement on Subregional Arms Control, welcoming the finalizing of the negotiations led by the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe within the framework of article V of annex I-B of the Peace Agreement, and emphasizing the importance of the declaration issued by the Joint Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina to commence the process of the formal admission of Bosnia and Herzegovina to the Partnership for Peace,

1. Notes that it is the people and the Council of Ministers of Bosnia and Herzegovina who are ultimately responsible for the future of the country, and urges them to work rapidly and intently on economic reform, refugee returns, joint State institution-building and full respect for the rule of law;

2. Calls for the full and early implementation of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement") which is essential for stability and cooperation in the region and the reintegration of Bosnia and Herzegovina at all levels;

3. Welcomes the progress that has been made towards the implementation of the Peace Agreement by the Government and its commitment to the full, comprehensive and consistent implementation thereof;

4. Also welcomes the prompt action of the State and entity institutions in adopting the comprehensive plan of action to prevent terrorist activities, increase security and protect people and property in Bosnia and Herzegovina, further welcomes the active role of Bosnia and Herzegovina in global efforts against terrorism, and in that regard calls upon Bosnia and Herzegovina to work with the international community to establish the State Border Service and have it fully deployed by the end of 2002, in accordance with the time frame of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

5. Supports fully the efforts of the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina, in accordance with the Peace Agreement and subsequent declarations of the Peace Implementation Council, and notes the continuing need for the High Representative to use fully the authority of his office to deal with obstructionists, reaffirming the concept of "partnership" between the newly elected authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the international community;

6. Encourages the political leadership of Bosnia and Herzegovina to extend cooperation with the States of South-Eastern Europe so as to promote and strengthen stability and confidence in the region;

7. Urges the entity parliaments and cantonal assemblies to implement promptly and fully the provisions of the ruling of the Constitutional Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina on the equality of all three constituent peoples throughout the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and also urges the Constitutional Court to rule further on the status of those other than the three constituent peoples;

8. Demands that all the parties to the Peace Agreement fulfil their obligations towards the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, and encourages the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina to develop, in close cooperation with the international community, national court capacities to investigate and prosecute cases of war crimes;

9. Urges Member States, taking into account the orders and requests of the International Tribunal, to cooperate fully with it, in particular with regard to surrendering indictees, and to provide adequate financial support to the Tribunal;

10. Reaffirms the right of refugees and displaced persons to return voluntarily to their homes of origin in accordance with annex 7 of the Peace Agreement, encourages the acceleration of the peaceful, orderly and phased return of refugees and displaced persons, including in areas where they would be the ethnic minority, strongly condemns all acts of intimidation, violence and killings, including those acts designed to discourage the voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons, demands that such acts be investigated and prosecuted, supporting the effective engagement of the Commission for Real Property Claims of Displaced Persons and Refugees, and calls upon all sides to implement the property laws imposed on 27 October 1999, in particular by evicting illegal occupants from the homes of returning refugees, and to ensure respect for individual rights to return and the establishment of the rule of law;

11. Encourages all concerned parties to provide information on all persons unaccounted for through the tracing mechanisms of the International Committee of the Red Cross and to cooperate fully with the Committee in its efforts to determine the identities, whereabouts and fate of those persons;

12. Welcomes the efforts of international and regional organizations, Member States and non-governmental organizations in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including through the Board of Donors and the Slovenian International Trust Fund for Demining and Mine Victims Assistance, and calls upon Member States to continue to support mine-action activities in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

13. Stresses the importance of establishing, strengthening and expanding throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina a free and pluralistic media, and deplores any actions that seek to intimidate or restrict the freedom of the media;

14. Also stresses the importance of the restoration and rebuilding of the historical and cultural heritage of Bosnia and Herzegovina in its original form;

15. Further stresses the need for a more comprehensive approach to implementing economic reforms, and underlines the fact that a self-sustainable, market-oriented economy operating in a single economic space, expeditious and transparent privatization, improved banking and capital markets, reformed financial systems, the provision of adequate social protection and the adoption by both entities of a law on pension reforms that meet economic standards are crucial for achieving lasting peace and stability in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

16. Supports the efforts by the High Representative and the Commander of the multinational Stabilization Force to weaken the continued political and economic influence of remaining parallel structures obstructing peace implementation;

17. Notes that the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina have defined the common defence policy of Bosnia and Herzegovina, affirming the importance for the national development of Bosnia and Herzegovina of creating, on the basis of agreed principles, a joint military command and seeking to establish a military structure of the appropriate size based on future projections and the legitimate security needs of Bosnia and Herzegovina which will contribute to regional security, and encourages them to carry out its conclusions promptly, fully and in full accordance with the Peace Agreement;

18. Commends the efforts of the international community, recognizes the continued importance of its role, welcomes its readiness to continue and streamline its efforts towards a self-sustainable peace, and recalls that the responsibility for consolidating peace and security lies with the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

19. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the item entitled "The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina".

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464).

Implementation of Peace Agreement

Communications. The Croat member of the Bosnia and Herzegovina Joint Presidency, Ante Jelavic, by a 6 February letter [S/2001/114] to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President, protested the recent decision by the Mission of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) in Bosnia and Herzegovina that revised election rules and procedures in respect of the 11 November 2000 national elections [YUN 2000, p. 349], specifically the mode of electing Croat representatives to the House of Peoples of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina. He claimed the decision deprived the Federation's Croat constituency of the right to elect its own representatives to that legislative body, in clear violation of the concept of equal power-sharing established by the 1995 Peace Agreement.

That the OSCE Mission's representative had characterized the decision as "unconstitutional but democratic" and that the country's Constitutional Court had expressed itself as not competent to assess the decision's constitutional status pointed to the inconsistency in the interpretation of the Peace Agreement and thus to the need for its reformulation. In the circumstances, Mr. Jelavic called on the Council to mandate a conference to review the Agreement's implementation and necessary revision.

The European Union (EU), in a 22 February statement [S/2001/181], welcomed the formation on that date of the new Council of Ministers in Bosnia and Herzegovina and called on it to undertake serious reforms to improve the country's social and economic situation and work for the benefit of all its peoples. The EU also called on all political parties to respect the results of the November 2000 elections [YUN 2000, p. 349], adding that it expected no further delay either in the formation of governments at all other levels or in the election of delegates to the House of Peoples at the State and Federation levels.

In an 8 March declaration [S/2001/212], the EU condemned recent unilateral moves by the so-called Croat National Congress of Bosnia and Herzegovina led by the Croat Democratic Union (HDZ) to place itself outside the provisions of the Peace Agreement (see p. 339). It said such efforts were in vain and detrimental to the interests of the Bosnian Croats and all other peoples in Bosnia and Herzegovina. It called, in particular, on the Bosnian Croats to work within that country's legal institutions to defend their legitimate interests.

Security Council consideration. The Security Council, on 22 March [meeting 4303], was briefed by Wolfgang Petritsch (Austria), High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina. He said that, while the results of the November 2000 general elections in Bosnia and Herzegovina were seen as a disappointment, the shift to more moderate parties was both real and encouraging. That change had led to the formation of the country's first non-nationalist Government at the State level, as well as in the mainly Bosniac-Croat Federation. In the predominantly Serb entity of Republika Srpska, a moderate technocrat headed the Government. The country's new State-level Prime Minister, Bozidar Matic, had announced plans to implement market reforms, create jobs and get the hundreds of thousands of citizens who remained Bosnian refugees or displaced persons to return to their homes.

However, the High Representative was forced to remove Ante Jelavic, in March, as a member of the Joint Presidency and had banned his involvement with any political party, including HDZ, which he had led until recently. Three of his hard-line deputies were under the same ban. Mr. Jelavic had threatened the country's constitutional order and peace. In particular, his HDZ party, claiming to speak for the Bosnian Croats, had announced a plan for self-rule. HDZ was subsequently banned by OSCE for breaching election rules.

A record number of refugees (more than 67,000) returned home in 2000, despite criminal incidents aimed at scaring them away. In January 2001, the payments bureaux, the old communist monopoly on financial transactions, were finally closed down and replaced by commercial banks. The controversial law to end the cycle of pension payment arrears was working and the angry protests had stopped. The High Representative said that, unfortunately, he had had to impose too many of the positive advances in Bosnia and Herzegovina, but he believed that, with new administrations in place, the country for the first time had leaders who wanted to get on with the process of governing themselves. Both the new State and entity governments had ambitious plans to further the reforms to attract domestic and foreign investors and to balance official budgets.

Unfortunately, the High Representative also had to remove Edhem Bicakcic in February, until recently the Federation's Prime Minister and a senior member of the Bosniac Party of Democratic Action (SDA), from his post as director of the power utility, Elektroprivreda. Mr. Bicakcic was under four separate criminal investigations for fraud and abuse of public office. His removal sent a clear signal to officials to clean up their acts and, along with the State-level court created to arbitrate international trade disputes, had done much to bolster investor confidence.

The High Representative further reported that he had decided to set up constitutional commissions in both entities to ensure that the 2000 Constitutional Court decision on the so-called constituent peoples' case [YUN 2000, p. 349] was put in place on an interim basis until full implementation later in the year. Additionally, he had established the Independent Judicial Commission [ibid., p. 351] to effect reforms in the courts and prosecutors' offices across the country.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 March [meeting 4304], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/11 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the briefing by the High Representative for the implementation of the General Framework Agreement on Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the Peace Agreement) on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina and commends his efforts in implementing this agreement.

The Council encourages further regional political and economic cooperation, in compliance with the principles of the sovereignty and territorial integrity and the inviolability of the borders of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the other States of the region.

The Council welcomes the new State-level and entity-level Governments formed after the general elections of 11 November 2000 and calls on them to take active measures to make further progress on the return of refugees, consolidation of the State institutions, and economic reform. It welcomes the progress on creating a State Level Defence Identity in full compliance with the relevant provisions of the Peace Agreement and encourages the Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina to finalize the unresolved details without delay.

The Council welcomes the establishment of Constitutional Commissions to protect the vital interest of the constituent peoples to facilitate the implementation of the "Constituent Peoples decision" of the Constitutional Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina of 1 July 2000 and calls upon the entity parliaments to engage in the debate about the necessary amendments to their respective constitutions in the light of proposals examined by the Constitutional Commissions.

The Council notes the recent conclusion of the Agreement on a Special Relationship between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the Republika Srpska and urges the High Representative to monitor its implementation and any amendments to it, in order to ensure that it remains consistent with the territorial integrity and sovereignty of Bosnia and Herzegovina as a whole and with the Peace Agreement.

The Council condemns recent unilateral moves by the so-called Croat National Congress to establish Croat self-rule in open contradiction of the provisions of the Peace Agreement, and calls on all parties to work within the legal institutions and constitutional framework of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the entities. It expresses its support for the High Representative in taking actions against persons holding public office who are found to be in violation of legal commitments made under the Peace Agreement or the terms for its implementation.

The Council welcomes the progress made on the return of refugees and property law implementation in the year 2000, but remains concerned at the slow pace of refugee return, particularly in urban areas. The Council insists on the responsibility of the local authorities to accelerate the rate of return and property law implementation.

The Council urges all political parties in Bosnia and Herzegovina and their respective leaders to engage constructively within the legal institutions of that country in order to implement fully the Peace Agreement.

Civilian aspects

The civilian aspects of the 1995 Peace Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 544] entailed a wide range of activities, including humanitarian aid, infrastructure rehabilitation, establishment of political and constitutional institutions, the promotion of respect for human rights and the holding of free and fair elections. The High Representative, who chaired the Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council (PIC) and other key implementation bodies, was the final authority with regard to implementing the civilian aspects of the Peace Agreement. UNMIBH, which comprised a UN civilian office, the International Police Task Force (IPTF) and the Mine Action Centre (MAC), reported to the Secretary-General through the Special Representative and Coordinator of United Nations Operations in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Jacques Paul Klein (United States).

The PIC Steering Board, which met regularly at the political-director level, held meetings on 21 June, 12 September, 30 October and 6 December, during which it discussed streamlining the international civilian implementation of the Peace Agreement (see p. 337).

Reports of High Representative. During the year, the High Representative issued progress reports covering the periods from 1 October 2000 to 23 February 2001 [S/2001/219], 24 February to 11 June [S/2001/723] and 12 June to 25 August [S/2001/868]. A later report covered activities from 26 August to the end of the year [S/2002/209]. All described activities in the civilian implementation of the Peace Agreement, which he had been mandated to monitor, mobilize and coordinate. (For details, see below under specific subjects.)

UN Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH)

Report of Secretary-General (June). On 7 June [S/2001/571 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General, reporting on UNMIBH activities, said that, in the area of police reform, registration of all police personnel, including prison staff, court police, the State Border Service and local Interpol, had been completed by May. Of the 24,007 law enforcement personnel registered, over 9,300 had been granted provisional authorization to exercise police powers. The core reform programme would be completed by late 2002, with every law enforcement officer appropriately vetted before receiving final certification. A criterion for certification was the regularization of the housing status of police personnel, which continued, with 1,129 of them having done so in the preceding year. UNMIBH had repeatedly requested the High Representative to raise the salaries of police to enable them to rent private housing and to give them priority allocation of alternative municipal accommodation. Meanwhile, UNMIBH had been helping them, on a case-by-case basis, to repossess their own property, qualify for reconstruction assistance or find other legal accommodation.

UNMIBH's police training programme was nearing conclusion, with compulsory courses expected to be completed by June/July. Specialized training had been concluded, while training in handling hazardous materials and exercises in inter-entity police cooperation were ongoing. In February, UNMIBH issued a new policy for monitoring and sanctioning local police performance, comprising "performance reports", which recorded minor acts of inadequate performance, and "non-compliance reports", which recorded serious lapses of duty or violations of law requiring disciplinary measures and placement under intensive IPTF scrutiny. Officers issued with more than one non-compliance report were automatically considered for de-authorization. In February, the Bratunac Police Chief and the Chief Criminal Investigator were de-authorized and several police received non-compliance reports after repeated failures to respond adequately to serious crimes against returning Bosniac refugees and displaced persons. Six police chiefs were also de-authorized for signing a statement renouncing the Federation's authority following the 6 April mob violence in Mostar and Grude over the change of administration at the Herzegovacka Bank, funded and controlled by Croat separatist elements (see p. 344). Police failure to maintain public order during the stone-laying ceremonies for new mosques in Trebinje and Banja Luka in early May resulted in the removal of Trebinje's Public Security Centre Chief and the issuance of a non-compliance report to the town's Chief of Crime Investigation; five Banja Luka police officers were suspended. UNMIBH took the lead in establishing and training police support units for dealing with mob violence, which, to be effective, required vehicles and other equipment.

Police performance had improved, but investigation of incidents of return-related violence remained lethargic and inadequate, particularly in eastern Republika Srpska. Operational capacity and political will were too deficient to deal with violent demonstrations, as in Mostar, Banja Luka and Trebinje. Seriously impairing police performance were three endemic problems: irregular payment of already inadequate wages; the consequent inability of officers to resolve their housing status and unwillingness of minority officers to redeploy across entity lines; and lack of efficient and impartial judicial follow-up to police work, creating a disincentive to professionalism and allowing ethnic extremists and criminals to remain at large. Continuing political interference aggravated those problems.

As for police restructuring, a comprehensive IPTF co-location project called "Manage the Managers", launched in February to address the institutional capacity of law enforcement institutions, was under way in eight Federation cantons and was being extended to public security centres in Republika Srpska. Under the project, IPTF monitors were also being co-located with crime, legal, personnel, finance and budget departments. In February, the pilot project launched in Canton 9 (Sarajevo) under the UNMIBH police commissioner project, aimed at creating an apolitical police service, had to be suspended pending revisions to the Law on Internal Affairs to depoliticize selection procedures. Legislative amendments were also being prepared in three other cantons.

On 20 March, a Bosnian Croat was designated interim Director of the Federation's Ministry of the Interior, whom certain Bosniac political leaders sought to undermine and remove, along with his deputy. No progress was made in establishing a Director of Police for Republika Srpska.

The proportion of minorities in local police forces remained low: 5.7 per cent of a targeted 28 per cent in the Federation and 2.2 per cent of a targeted 20 per cent in Republika Srpska. Representation of females of all ethnicities was also low, averaging 3 per cent in both entities. Since the initiation of minority police officers projects in 1999, the police academies had enrolled or graduated over 830 minority cadets. The first four rounds of UNMIBH's voluntary redeployment programme had resulted in the transfer of 54 minority officers. Thirty-four minority members had completed refresher courses for former police officers; another such course was currently in progress.

UNMIBH's Criminal Justice Advisory Unit, besides continuing its primary task of advising IPTF on criminal procedure and the criminal justice process, instituted a major project whose goal was to improve the quality of police crime reports by using selected prosecutors to train key local police officers. Progress was slowly being made in the establishment of a court police service as a multi-ethnic Federation police force.

The State Border Service had made appreciable progress towards becoming a viable multi-ethnic State-level law enforcement institution, expanding from 376 personnel deployed at four border crossings in 2000 to over 1,180 deployed across 62 per cent of the 1,666-kilometre border. Wide deployment and full effectiveness of the service continued to be hampered, however, by a lack of financial and material resources.

Major strides were also made in fostering cooperation among police forces in Bosnia and Herzegovina and at the regional level. In March, under the auspices of the UNMIBH-chaired Ministerial Consultative Meeting on Police Matters (MCMPM), all domestic police organizations signed a Cooperative Law Enforcement Arrangement for a Border Police Academy in Suhodol, outside Sarajevo. Through MCMPM, UNMIBH concluded the regional Cooperative Law Enforcement Arrangement Combating Illegal Migration and Organized Crime. A document formalizing that Arrangement was signed on 14 May by the Bosnia and Herzegovina entities, Croatia, FR Yugoslavia and the State Border Service.

A campaign called "Your Police Serving You" was launched nationwide on 26 March to increase public awareness of the principles of democratic policing. Each police organization was encouraged to develop its own public relations programme. In June, another multi-ethnic police recruitment campaign was launched, aimed at increasing the percentage of female applicants to police academies.

The Secretary-General observed that, despite the difficult political environment, UNMIBH continued to make measurable progress in implementing its mission. In view of the progress it had achieved so far and of the planned completion of its core tasks by December 2002, he recommended that its mandate be extended for a further 12-month period, to June 2002.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 15 [meeting 4330] and 21 [meeting 4333] June, the Security Council met to consider the Secretary-General's report on UNMIBH. On 21 June, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1357(2001). The draft [S/2001/610] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions concerning the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, including resolutions 1031(1995) of 15 December 1995, 1035(1995) of 21 December 1995, 1088(1996) of 12 December 1996, 1144(1997) of 19 December 1997, 1168(1998) of 21 May 1998, 1174(1998) of 15 June 1998, 1184(1998) of 16 July 1998, 1247(1999) of 18 June 1999 and 1305(2000) of 21 June 2000,

Reaffirming its commitment to the political settlement of the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, preserving the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States there within their internationally recognized borders,

Underlining its commitment to supporting implementation of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"),

Emphasizing its appreciation to the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Commander and personnel of the multinational Stabilization Force, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the personnel of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including the Commissioner and personnel of the International Police Task Force, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, and the personnel of other international organizations and agencies in Bosnia and Herzegovina for their contributions to the implementation of the Peace Agreement,

Noting that the States in the region must play a constructive role in the successful development of the peace process in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and noting especially the obligations of the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in this regard as signatories to the Peace Agreement,

Welcoming, in this regard, the positive steps taken by the Governments of the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to strengthen their bilateral relations with Bosnia and Herzegovina, as well as their increasing cooperation with all relevant international organizations in implementing the Peace Agreement,

Emphasizing that a comprehensive and coordinated return of refugees and displaced persons throughout the region continues to be crucial to lasting peace,

Recalling the declarations of the Ministerial meetings of the Peace Implementation Conference,

Noting the reports of the High Representative, including his latest report of 13 March 2001,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 7 June 2001, and welcoming the Mandate Implementation Plan of the Mission,

Determining that the situation in the region continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security,

Determined to promote the peaceful resolution of the conflicts in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994 and the statement by its President of 9 February 2000,

Welcoming and encouraging efforts by the United Nations to sensitize peacekeeping personnel in the prevention and control of HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases in all its peacekeeping operations, Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

I

1. Reaffirms once again its support for the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"), as well as for the Dayton Agreement on Implementing the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina of 10 November 1995, calls upon the parties to comply strictly with their obligations under those Agreements, and expresses its intention to keep the implementation of the Peace Agreement and the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina under review;

2. Reiterates that the primary responsibility for the further successful implementation of the Peace Agreement lies with the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina themselves and that the continued willingness of the international community and major donors to assume the political, military and economic burden of implementation and reconstruction efforts will be determined by the compliance and active participation by all the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina in implementing the Peace Agreement and rebuilding a civil society, in particular in full cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, in strengthening joint institutions and in facilitating returns of refugees and displaced persons;

3. Reminds the parties once again that, in accordance with the Peace Agreement, they have committed themselves to cooperate fully with all entities involved in the implementation of this peace settlement, as described in the Peace Agreement, or which are otherwise authorized by the Security Council, including the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, as it carries out its responsibilities for dispensing justice impartially, and underlines that full cooperation by States and entities with the International Tribunal includes, inter alia, the surrender for trial of all persons indicted by the Tribunal and provision of information to assist in Tribunal investigations;

4. Emphasizes its full support for the continued role of the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina in monitoring the implementation of the Peace Agreement and giving guidance to and coordinating the activities of the civilian organizations and agencies involved in assisting the parties to implement the Peace Agreement, and reaffirms that the High Representative is the final authority in theatre regarding the interpretation of annex 10 on civilian implementation of the Peace Agreement and that in case of dispute he may give his interpretation and make recommendations, and make binding decisions as he judges necessary on issues as elaborated by the Peace Implementation Council in Bonn on 9 and 10 December 1997;

5. Expresses its support for the declarations of the ministerial meetings of the Peace Implementation Council;

6. Recognizes that the parties have authorized the multinational force referred to in paragraph 10 below to take such actions as required, including the use of necessary force, to ensure compliance with annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement;

7. Reaffirms its intention to keep the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina under close review, taking into account the reports submitted pursuant to paragraphs 18 and 25 below, and any recommendations those reports might include, and its readiness to consider the imposition of measures if any party fails significantly to meet its obligations under the Peace Agreement;

II

8. Pays tribute to those Member States which participated in the multinational Stabilization Force established in accordance with its resolution 1088(1996), and welcomes their willingness to assist the parties to the Peace Agreement by continuing to deploy a multinational Stabilization Force;

9. Notes the support of the parties to the Peace Agreement for the continuation of the Stabilization Force, set out in the declaration of the ministerial meeting of the Peace Implementation Council in Madrid on 16 December 1998;

10. Authorizes the Member States acting through or in cooperation with the organization referred to in annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement to continue for a further planned period of 12 months the Stabilization Force as established in accordance with resolution 1088(1996) under unified command and control in order to fulfil the role specified in annexes 1-A and 2 of the Peace Agreement, and expresses its intention to review the situation with a view to extending this authorization further as necessary in the light of developments in the implementation of the Peace Agreement and the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

11. Also authorizes the Member States acting under paragraph 10 above to take all necessary measures to effect the implementation of and to ensure compliance with annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement, stresses that the parties shall continue to be held equally responsible for compliance with that annex and shall be equally subject to such enforcement action by the Stabilization Force as may be necessary to ensure implementation of that annex and the protection of the Force, and notes that the parties have consented to the Force taking such measures;

12. Authorizes Member States to take all necessary measures, at the request of the Stabilization Force, either in defence of the Force or to assist the Force in carrying out its mission, and recognizes the right of the Force to take all necessary measures to defend itself from attack or threat of attack;

13. Authorizes the Member States acting under paragraph 10 above, in accordance with annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement, to take all necessary measures to ensure compliance with the rules and procedures established by the Commander of the Stabilization Force, governing command and control of airspace over Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all civilian and military air traffic;

14. Requests the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina to cooperate with the Commander of the Stabilization Force to ensure the effective management of the airports of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in the light of the responsibilities conferred on the Force by annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement with regard to the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

15. Demands that the parties respect the security and freedom of movement of the Stabilization Force and of other international personnel;

16. Invites all States, in particular those in the region, to continue to provide appropriate support and facilities, including transit facilities, for the Member States acting under paragraph 10 above;

17. Recalls all the agreements concerning the status of forces as referred to in appendix B to annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement, and reminds the parties of their obligation to continue to comply therewith;

18. Requests the Member States acting through or in cooperation with the organization referred to in annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement to continue to report to the Council, through the appropriate channels and at least at monthly intervals;

* *

Reaffirming the legal basis in the Charter of the United Nations on which the International Police Task Force was given its mandate in resolution 1035(1995),

III

19. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina, which includes the International Police Task Force, for an additional period terminating on 21 June 2002, and also decides that the Task Force shall continue to be entrusted with the tasks set out in annex 11 of the Peace Agreement, including the tasks referred to in the conclusions of the London, Bonn, Luxembourg, Madrid and Brussels Peace Implementation Conferences and agreed by the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed and to report at least every six months on the implementation of the mandate of the Mission as a whole;

21. Reiterates that the successful implementation of the tasks of the International Police Task Force rests on the quality, experience and professional skills of its personnel, and once again urges Member States, with the support of the Secretary-General, to ensure the provision of such qualified personnel;

22. Reaffirms the responsibility of the parties to cooperate fully with, and to instruct their respective responsible officials and authorities to provide their full support to, the International Police Task Force on all relevant matters;

23. Reiterates its call upon all concerned to ensure the closest possible coordination between the High Representative, the Stabilization Force, the Mission and the relevant civilian organizations and agencies so as to ensure the successful implementation of the Peace Agreement and of the priority objectives of the civilian consolidation plan, as well as the security of International Police Task Force personnel;

24. Urges Member States, in response to demonstrable progress by the parties in restructuring their law enforcement institutions, to intensify their efforts to provide, on a voluntary-funded basis and in coordination with the International Police Task Force, training, equipment and related assistance for local police forces in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to submit to the Council reports from the High Representative, in accordance with annex 10 of the Peace Agreement and the conclusions of the Peace Implementation Conference held in London on 4 and 5 December 1996, and later Peace Implementation Conferences, on the implementation of the Peace Agreement and in particular on compliance by the parties with their commitments under that Agreement;

26. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In his November report on UNMIBH [S/2001/1132 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General said that the number of police officers granted provisional authorization to exercise police powers had risen to 15,491 (6,625 in Republika Srpska, 8,229 in the Federation, 312 in Brcko District and the remainder in State institutions). Full certification would begin in early 2002 and be completed late that year. However, UNMIBH had identified a significant number of personnel serving in law enforcement positions without proper authorization. Moreover, de-authorized officers were often retained on the payroll or moved to administrative positions outside UNMIBH's authority or to public companies. Only rarely had local officials initiated disciplinary or criminal proceedings.

Under UNMIBH monitoring, local police conducted the majority of basic training courses, while UNMIBH conducted the first management training course for mid-level and senior-level police personnel and completed training programmes in a number of specialized areas. Training in hazardous materials and in anti-terrorism measures continued. With SFOR, UNMIBH developed a practical curriculum for joint training in riot control. In July, it established the Special Trafficking Operations Programme to address human trafficking, under which 90 victims had so far been assisted and seven individuals convicted. However, overall progress in combating that illegal trade was being hampered by weaknesses in the legal system.

Under the police commissioner project, ad interim commissioners had been appointed in the Federation's Ministry of the Interior and six of its cantons, and in Republika Srpska's Ministry of the Interior. However, the related ongoing project introducing necessary amendments to the Laws on Internal Affairs at the cantonal level and in Republika Srpska, in order to create a non-political police service, faced obstruction in the mixed Croat-Bosniac Canton 6 and in three Croat-majority cantons.

To improve internal management and accountability, UNMIBH introduced a disciplinary code that the State Border Police had already adopted and that would serve as a model for Republika Srpska. It also carried out a pilot audit of one canton, to be followed by comprehensive audits of all law enforcement institutions in 2002, with a view to developing modalities for police force restructuring.

Under UNMIBH's minority recruitment programmes, 934 provisionally authorized minority police (11.3 per cent of a total 8,229) were working in the Federation and 211 (3.2 per cent of a total 6,625) in Republika Srpska by November. The State Border Service and the Brcko District police services were totally multi-ethnic. A positive step towards further minority police deployment to Srebrenica was the appointment of a Bosniac as Deputy Station Commander at the newly opened Srebrenica police station.

The slow provision of donated vehicles and the lack of adequate funding had delayed deployment of the State Border Service field offices and mobile support units. At UNMIBH's request, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) had agreed to give priority to funding the Service in 2002 donor appeals. A joint Entity Task Force, created under MCMPM auspices, had developed a national anti-terrorist plan, following the 11 September 2001 terrorist attacks in the United States (see p. 60). The Service had put into effect tighter border controls and had drafted amendments to the Law on Immigration and Asylum to further assist in counter-terrorism activities. In the international fight against crime, UNMIBH facilitated the preparation of a draft law, currently before the Bosnia and Herzegovina Presidency, to create a State Information Protection Agency.

The Secretary-General observed that UNMIBH continued to make progress towards completing its core mandate by December 2002, as envisaged in its Mandate Implementation Plan [YUN 2000, p. 345]; thereafter, continued monitoring and assistance necessary to preserve what had been achieved could be undertaken by a police mission one fourth the size of UNMIBH's current strength, with regional actors assuming responsibility for it. Accordingly, he had instructed his Special Representative to cooperate fully with the organizations assessing requirements for a follow-on police mission. An early decision on the matter was important to ensure timely planning and a smooth transition. UNMIBH was also participating in discussions on streamlining the international presence in Bosnia and Herzegovina (see below).

Later developments. In a later report [S/2001/618], the Secretary-General stated that, in December, UNMIBH launched a nationwide systems analysis to complete the restructuring of key areas of internal police administration, involving the development of a manual of law enforcement standards and procedures and local self-assessment of compliance with them; on-site assessment by IPTF; the establishment of local police Change Management Teams within each law enforcement agency to consult with UNMIBH on the formulation of recommendations; and the implementation of the Teams' short- and long-term recommendations.

Future UNMIBH and international civilian presence

Security Council consideration (September). The Secretary-General's Special Representative and UNMIBH Coordinator told the Security Council on 21 September [meeting 4379] that UNMIBH was making good headway on its core mandate, notwithstanding the difficulties it faced. It had completed 30 out of 64 projects under the Mandate Implementation Plan [YUN 2000, p. 345], 28 were ongoing and eight were in the planning stage. However, as long as the international community continued its piecemeal approach to the Balkans, opportunities to close a tragic decade of war and instability would be missed. He advocated streamlining the structure and activities of the current international presence in Bosnia and Herzegovina, based on an agreed international strategic plan authorized and supported by the Council. Streamlining should therefore be based on certain elements, among them a comprehensive 2002-2005 Dayton Implementation Plan, with benchmarks and time lines endorsed by key international bodies—the United Nations, the Peace Implementation Council (PIC), the EU, OSCE and NATO—and guaranteed multi-year funding of the agreed programmes. In the medium term, activities for the core programmes—rule of law, refugee return, institution-building and economic development—should be functionally consolidated so that one organization would have primary responsibility for each programme and be held accountable for its execution. SFOR should be included in the process.

In view of the scheduled completion of UNMIBH's core mandate in December 2002, urgent decisions were required for its downsizing and liquidation and to enable the successor organizations to plan the future mission.

In that regard, a post-2002 intrusive police-monitoring mission would be needed to ensure that UNMIBH's achievements were not lost and that the international community's ongoing work was not compromised. The Special Representative proposed two options: a stand-alone police-monitoring mission or a comprehensive rule-of-law mission. The first would ensure the intensive monitoring of local police planning and performance in respect of returnee security, public order and human rights, the maintenance of internal and regional coordination and cooperation, continued minority recruitment, and that police structures were not compromised.

That suggested a mission of between 450 and 500 international police personnel. The second option would bring together under one roof the police, the judiciary and the penal system, consistent with the principle of one organization and one responsibility, which would facilitate the introduction of a more efficient "pillar" structure for the organization of the international effort in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Peace implementation by the international community would continue to be a collective endeavour among the five key organizations, but with clearer mandates and responsibilities.

Security Council consideration (December). At the Security Council's 5 December meeting [meeting 4433], the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Hedi Annabi, updated information on UNMIBH operations and plans for a post-UNMIBH mission. He said that, of the Mandate Implementation Plan's 66 specific projects, 43 had been completed and 23 were ongoing, indicating that UNMIBH was on track to complete its mandate in December 2002. At the same time, important political and operational challenges still lay ahead. Some projects, including those for the removal of police officers based on their wartime record, faced political opposition; legislation for the police commissioner project was still opposed by nationalist parties, mainly in Croat-dominated cantons; and voluntary redeployment of minority police officers remained slow and difficult. Other projects, such as the State Border Service, or the training of riot-control units, depended on securing additional financial assistance. In addition, projects that were designed to establish ongoing mechanisms and structures, such as those for minority recruitment or for inter-entity and regional police cooperation, would require nurturing in a post-UNMIBH setting and continued monitoring and assistance.

Mr. Annabi noted the Secretary-General's belief that regional actors should assume responsibility for a follow-up mission with the capacity to preserve UNMIBH's accomplishments, bring to fruition those ongoing projects that would be left by UNMIBH and combine under one roof responsibilities for the police, the judiciary and the penal system. He assessed that that task could be carried out by a mission one fourth the strength of UNMIBH, to include some 450 police officers.

He said the United Nations welcomed the initial steps taken by the High Representative, the EU and OSCE in planning a post-UNMIBH international police-monitoring presence. The Special Representative was cooperating fully with those organizations. The issue was also being discussed at the PIC Steering Board meeting currently in progress in Brussels, Belgium. The Council would be kept informed of developments (see below).

Consideration by PIC Steering Board. At its meeting in Stockholm, Sweden, on 21 June, the PIC Steering Board reviewed progress in the implementation of the 1995 Peace Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 544], discussing, among other issues, the streamlining of current international civilian implementation structures in Bosnia and Herzegovina. To facilitate the process, it agreed on a strictly functional and phased approach that should be fully transparent.

Accordingly, at its 6 December meeting in Brussels, the Board endorsed the High Representative's draft action plan for such streamlining, which called for policy coordination task forces on the rule of law, institution-building, economic policy, and return and reconstruction, as well as for a situation group. At the top of the coordinating structure was a cabinet of lead agencies chaired by the High Representative. The plan also integrated mechanisms to implement the concept of partnership between the international community and the newly elected Bosnia and Herzegovina authorities at various levels, the main one being a consultative partnership forum. The Office of the High Representative subsequently refined the plan to include an assessment of matching multi-year funding requirements and options for the follow-on police mission, for presentation to the Board's next meeting, scheduled for 28 February 2002.

UNMIBH financing

In June, the General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's reports on the financial performance of UNMIBH for the period 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 [A/55/683] and the proposed budget for its maintenance and that of UNMOP (see p. 324) and the UN liaison offices in Belgrade and Zagreb for the period 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002 [A/55/752], together with ACABQ's related comments and recommendations [A/55/874/Add.5].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 June [meeting 103], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/965], adopted resolution 55/268 without vote [agenda item 148].

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1035(1995) of 21 December 1995, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina for an initial period of one year, and Council resolution 1305(2000) of 21 June 2000, by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission until 21 June 2001,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1335(2001) of 12 January 2001, in which the Council authorized the United Nations military observers to continue to monitor the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula until 15 July 2001,

Recalling further its decision 50/481 of 11 April 1996 on the financing of the Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 54/273 of 15 June 2000,

Reaffirming the general principles underlying the financing of United Nations peacekeeping operations, as stated in General Assembly resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973 and 55/235 of 23 December 2000,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina as at 30 April 2001, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 78.1 million United States dollars, representing 9 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission to the period ending 21 June 2001, notes that some 17 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

4. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

5. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

6. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

7. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Mission;

8. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

11. Decides to appropriate the amount of 144,676,630 dollars gross (135,728,725 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, inclusive of the amount of 4,234,303 dollars gross (3,716,018 dollars net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 442,327 dollars gross (397,207 dollars net) for the United Nations Logistics Base, to be apportioned among Member States at a monthly rate of 12,056,385 dollars gross (11,310,727 dollars net) in accordance with the levels set out in General Assembly resolution 55/235, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolution 55/236 of 23 December 2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 2001 and 2002, as set out in its resolution 55/5 B of 23 December 2000, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 30 June 2001;

12. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 11 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 8,947,905 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002;

13. Decides further that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 11 above, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 25,990,381 dollars gross (24,826,081 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 2000, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989 and adjusted by the Assembly in subsequent relevant resolutions and decisions for the ad hoc apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations, the latest of which were resolution 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and decisions 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999 for the period 1998-2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999;

14. Decides that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 25,990,381 dollars gross (24,826,081 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 2000 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations in accordance with the scheme set out in paragraph 13 above;

15. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

16. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission;

17. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina".

On 12 December [A/56/698], the Secretary-General submitted the UNMIBH financial performance report for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001.

The General Assembly decided, on 24 December, that the item on the financing of UNMIBH would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464) and that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item at that session (decision 56/458).

International Police Task Force

During 2001, the IPTF component of UNMIBH remained below its authorized strength of 2,057 due to difficulties faced by police-contributing countries in meeting the requirements of all peacekeeping missions. As at 31 December, its actual strength stood at 1,674. The overall mandate completion target was predicated on maintaining IPTF strength at 1,850 until July 2002.

Led by Commissioner Vincent Coeurderoy (France), IPTF continued to assist in the restructuring and reform of the police services in the Federation and to monitor local police. To that end, it launched in February a comprehensive co-location project that extended to legal, personnel, finance and budget departments.

Civil affairs

The High Representative reported in March [S/2001/219] that, following the November 2000 elections in Bosnia and Herzegovina [YUN 2000, p. 349], lengthy delays in establishing the Parliamentary Assembly and the Council of Ministers hampered the functioning of State institutions. Forming a State Government also proved difficult. The House of Representatives rejected the nomination of a Croat, Bozidir Matic, as Chairman of the new Council of Ministers. Nonetheless, the Alliance for Change, a post-election coalition of moderate non-nationalist parties, made important gains that eventually led to the formation, on 22 February, of the new Council, chaired by Mr. Matic. HDZ, which had chosen to boycott the election implementation process and prevented the selection of cantonal delegates to the House of Peoples of the Federation and of Bosnia and Herzegovina, agreed, following the High Representative's intervention, to implement the election results in the cantonal assemblies it controlled. However, unhappy with the Constitutional Court's decision that it had no jurisdiction over the Provisional Election Commission and its decision-making body, the Election Appeals Subcommission, HDZ vowed to continue its boycott of the Federation House of Peoples. On 9 February, the High Representative issued a legal opinion, stating that both the House of Peoples and the cantonal assemblies could be constituted by those delegates who had taken their seats, and that boycotting parties and individuals had no right to block the functioning of those bodies.

On 11 January, the High Representative issued a decision restructuring the constitutional commissions in the Federation and the Republika Srpska Parliaments. The commissions would propose amendments to the constitutions of both entities and provisionally protect the constituent peoples and others against discrimination.

In July [S/2001/723], the High Representative further reported that, on 27 March, the Bosnia and Herzegovina House of Representatives elected Beriz Belkic and Jozo Krizanovic as the Bosniac and Croat members, respectively, of the Bosnia and Herzegovina Presidency; the House of Peoples confirmed the election on 30 March. The new Council of Ministers had begun functioning, making progress in implementing its work programme. However, legislative activities and the implementation process were regularly challenged and obstructed by Republika Srpska authorities on the grounds that the Council's legislative agenda invaded Republika Srpska competencies. Progress in the Bosnia and Herzegovina Parliamentary Assembly was less satisfactory, as it had passed no new legislation of major importance. In the House of Representatives, holding together the Alliance for Change coalition was proving difficult; the HDZ delegates, on the other hand, had ended their several months' boycott.

On 12 March, the Alliance for Change coalition formed the Federation's first non-nationalist Government. However, the new Government was challenged by the HDZ leadership and the "Croat National Assembly", which, on 3 March, voted to establish the unconstitutional "Croat Self-Rule in Bosnia and Herzegovina". In late March, HDZ radicals in Mostar tried but failed to oust that city's Mayor, considered an obstacle to the establishment of a separate Croat entity. The "Croat National Assembly" also rejected the Federation Government. On 13 March, HDZ officials ordered the Croat components of the Federation Army to disband; on 28 March, Croat officers and soldiers walked out of their barracks.

On 16 May, the Federation Defence Minister and some Bosnia and Herzegovina Croat Generals brokered a tentative agreement giving Croat soldiers one month to return to their barracks.

In February, the High Representative imposed binding arbitration on Republika Srpska and the Federation to resolve their dispute over the delineation of the inter-entity boundary line in the Bobrinja suburb of Sarajevo. The Arbitrator issued the award on 24 April.

As reported by the High Representative in September [S/2001/868], the Chairman of the Council of Ministers resigned on 22 June, due to the failure of the House of Representatives to adopt the Election Law. He was replaced on 18 July by Foreign Minister Zlatko Lagumdžija of the Social Democratic Party. The High Representative continued to deal with the issue of the so-called Croat Self-Rule, by chipping away at HDZ's financial resources, while assuring the Bosnia and Herzegovina Croats that the international community was aware of and responsive to their legitimate concerns. One result was that a significant but indeterminate number of Bosnian Croat officers and soldiers had renewed their contracts with the Federation Army by the 15 June deadline.

On 23 August, the Bosnia and Herzegovina Parliamentary Assembly finally passed the Election Law, paving the way for the formation of an Election Commission.

To develop a relationship on shared responsibility between the Office of the High Representative and the Council of Ministers, a Consultative Partnership Forum was established for the discussion and resolution of urgent issues, mainly related to the 2000 PIC agenda for accelerating the Peace Agreement's implementation [YUN 2000, p. 338]. The Forum held its first meeting on 2 August. The High Representative also undertook to consult with civil society representatives through a separate consultative structure called the Civic Forum. On 17 July, he imposed harmonizing amendments to both entities' laws on privatization and socially-owned apartments, to eliminate provisions in the Republika Srpska law that disadvantaged returnees in the privatization process and to remove the Federation's rule requiring two years' occupancy following repossession prior to purchasing a pre-war apartment. On 13 July, the Presidency officially transmitted to NATO Bosnia and Herzegovina's wish to join the Partnership for Peace Programme. Under the auspices of the High Representative, Bosniac and Croat representatives signed an agreement on 2 August reuniting the municipalities of Gornji Vakuf and Uskoplje.

In a later report [S/2002/209], the High Representative stated that, at the HDZ Party Congress in Mostar on 6 October, Ante Jelavic, whom he had removed as party president (see p. 330), ran unopposed and was re-elected president, as were most of the vice-presidents who were removed at the same time. Nevertheless, significant changes had occurred to make the so-called Croat/HDZ issue less dangerous for peace implementation: the imposition of a Provisional Administrator in Hercegovacka Banka (the financial backbone of the illegal Bosnia and Herzegovina Croat structures) (see p. 344); the loss of financial and political support from Croatia; and the policy of the Alliance Government of dismantling parallel institutions. By returning to the Federation House of Representatives on 28 November, HDZ had implicitly acknowledged that the self-rule project was untenable. Moreover, the successful implementation of the agreements on the unification of Gornji Vakuf (Bosniac) and Uskoplje (Croat) and on the integration of the Croat-majority municipality of Zepce into the Bosniac-majority canton of Zenica-Doboj, the unification of the Pension Fund in the Federation, progress in the divided city of Mostar and the Alliance Government's outreach to the Croat stronghold of Herzegovina, all indicated that the old bipolar world of ethnic politics was slowly moving to a more functional approach. At the third Congress of the main nationalist Bosniac party, the Party of Democratic Action (Sarajevo, 13 October), Alija Izetbegovic stepped down as a party president; he was succeeded by Sulejman Tihic, Deputy Speaker of the Republika Srpska National Assembly.

The Federation Law on Citizenship was finally adopted in September, thereby enabling citizens of the former Yugoslavia who had taken up permanent residence in Bosnia and Herzegovina before 1998 and were eligible for Bosnia and Herzegovina citizenship to exercise that right.

Responding to the PIC Steering Board's call in October for the Bosnia and Herzegovina authorities to accelerate the pace of preparation for the general elections scheduled for 5 October 2002, the High Representative, on 16 November, appointed the four national members of the Bosnia and Herzegovina Election Commission to work with its three international members, whom he had appointed on 27 September.

Republika Srpska issues

The High Representative, reporting in March [S/2001/219] on issues related specifically to Republika Srpska, the Serb-majority entity of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, stated that implementation of the election results in that entity had advanced relatively quickly. Mladen Ivanic of the moderate Party of Democratic Progress was appointed Prime Minister on 12 January and formed a "Government of experts" free of senior Serb Democratic Party (SDS) figures, which, with the support of several other parties, had a comfortable majority in the entity's parliament. In his June report [S/2001/723], the High Representative stated that the Prime Minister had managed to stabilize the socio-economic situation by improving tax collection and fiscal discipline. Important constitutional progress was made in April as the reshaped Constitutional Commission agreed on draft amendments to the Republika Srpska Constitution. Unfortunately, the reconstruction of mosques demolished during the war was set back when cornerstone-laying ceremonies for new mosques in Trebinje and Banja Luka were disrupted by violent protests and had to be postponed. Subsequently, the High Representative made several demands of Republika Srpska: an investigation into the violence; immediate changes of leadership in the Ministry of Interior; public condemnation and an apology by top officials; the reconvening of the ceremonies; and the establishment of a multi-ethnic Reform and Reconciliation Committee under the President's auspices. Most of those demands had been complied with.

On 5 March, Republika Srpska and FRY signed an agreement on special parallel relations, as provided for in the Peace Agreement, the implementation of which was to be supervised by the Office of the High Representative. The agreement was ratified on 7 June by the Republika Srpska National Assembly, despite the opposition of some Bosniac and Croat members of the Constitutional Commission who claimed that the agreement should be between Bosnia and Herzegovina and FRY. The High Representative's September report [S/2001/868] noted that the agreement had given rise to two annexes, one on defence issues and the other on sports. However, since the procedures specified in article 9 of the agreement were not complied with, the annex on defence issues had no legal effect. Acknowledging the suspension of the annex, both parties agreed on a way ahead on the issue. The Office of the High Representative had also reviewed the annex on sports and proposed holding a meeting to discuss amendments to it.

In September, the Republika Srpska National Assembly passed the draft Law on Cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY). However, the entity's co-operation with ICTY had yet to yield any specific results, the High Representative later reported

[S/2002/209]. Not a single indicted war criminal had been apprehended, and Republika Srpska officials had let it be known that the most-wanted Bosnian Serb indictees, Radovan Karadzic and Ratko Mladic, would have to be arrested by the international community alone.

The socio-economic situation in Republika Srpska remained gloomy, as the many strikes by teachers and medical workers and protests by pensioners illustrated. Little had been done to advance the reconciliation process among the three constituent peoples. The Reconciliation and Reform Committee, set up after the May outbreak of violence in Banja Luka and Trebinje (see above), had met only once. Although SDS took tentative steps towards reform during its Congress on 24 December, its new platform remained devoid of a clear commitment to the State of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Brcko District

In July [S/2001/723], the High Representative reported his continued satisfaction with developments in the Brcko District since its establishment in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 350]. The entities comprising Bosnia and Herzegovina (the Bosniac-Croat Federation and Republika Srpska) and the District government were enacting a joint housing reconstruction programme for returning displaced persons, with an anticipated 500 housing units reconstructed during 2001. Under the Property Law Implementation Programme, the District was reinstating 100 properties a month on average. A modern judicial system, established on 1 April and consisting of a basic court, an appellate court, a legal aid centre and a judicial commission, was in place and functioning well. A transparent budget was adopted in April and, with improved revenue collection, the District was financially self-sustainable. In general, the entity governments had been supportive of the District and had appointed liaison officers to facilitate dialogue and communication among them. In September [S/2001/868], the High Representative observed that the commencement of reconstruction of the destroyed White Mosque in the Brcko town centre was an encouraging sign of increasing inter-ethnic tolerance.

In a later report [S/2002/209], he stated that reorganization of the District government was completed by the end of 2001, together with the hiring and rehiring of public employees in an open, competitive process.

Refugee/displaced person returns

In 2001, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) registered

the return of 92,061 persons to their pre-war home areas where they were in the ethnic minority—a 36.5 per cent rise from the final minority return figure of 67,445 in 2000. A promising increase in cooperation had emerged between the Bosnia and Herzegovina entities, particularly in information exchange on returnees and property repossession, and in the initiation of entity-funded reconstruction projects [S/2002/209].

The High Representative reported that, in June [S/2001/868], Croatia and international representatives in that country established a legal working group aimed at removing impediments to cross-border returns. He was encouraged by the adoption, under the Regional Return Initiative of the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe [YUN 1999, p. 398], of an Agenda for Regional Action providing for a framework to facilitate cross-border returns and the identification of lasting solutions for refugees yet to return to their pre-war homes.

Human rights

The High Representative reported in July [S/2001/723] that the 1997 Mostar “Liska Street” incident [YUN 1997, p. 307] was under criminal investigation by Mostar judicial authorities, as recommended by the Bosnia and Herzegovina Ombudsman. The Office of the High Representative was developing policies and strategies to remedy discriminatory practices in health care and access to utilities and employment. It continued to monitor implementation of the Bosniac-Croat Federation labour laws relating to re-employment or compensation for those dismissed during the war and to work towards establishing an equitable employment market. The Office also helped to facilitate a system allowing returnee pensioners to receive their pensions in their place of return, drafted the Bosnia and Herzegovina Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking in Human Beings, which was pending before Parliament, and assisted in reviewing draft legislation on minority rights and gender equality. In March, the boundaries of the Potocari site, designated by the High Representative in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 353] for the burial and commemoration of the victims of the 1995 Srebrenica massacre [YUN 1995, p. 529], were identified and marked. The Foundation for the Srebrenica/Potocari Memorial and Cemetery was created and registered and had agreed on the design and location for a stone to mark the site.

Implementation of the Human Rights Chamber's decisions had increased from 33 per cent in late 1999 to 73 per cent by the end of 2001, noted the High Representative in a later report [S/2002/209]. The Federation registered significant progress in implementing occupancy rights and compensation awards. While Republika Srpska showed progress by paying monetary compensation in some 10 cases, its overall implementation rate was far from satisfactory.

As to social, economic and gender rights, the Office of the High Representative assisted in preparing Fair and Equal Employment Principles and in revising the Fair Employment Practices Strategy Policy Paper, both of which articulated standards for employment practices and outlined mechanisms to ensure compliance with inclusive, non-discriminatory hiring practices. It also contributed to finalizing the Inter-Entity Agreement on Health Care for insured persons in Bosnia and Herzegovina, which was signed on 3 December.

In collaboration with ICTY, the Office continued to pressure the Bosnia and Herzegovina authorities, especially those of Republika Srpska, into full cooperation with ICTY. The High Representative said he was considering having a team of experts address what needed to be done if future domestic war crimes were to be tried in the soon-to-be-established Bosnia and Herzegovina Court. An appropriate strategy was under formulation in response to the ICTY Prosecutor's proposal to the Security Council on 27 November [meeting 4429] to remit ICTY cases to a special court in Bosnia and Herzegovina during or following completion of ICTY's mandate. That would ensure that ICTY concerns with the Bosnia and Herzegovina judicial system relating to war crimes prosecutions were addressed and that domestic war crimes prosecutions met the highest professional standards and were expedited.

Judicial reform

The High Representative issued a decision on 14 March [S/2001/723] providing the Independent Judicial Commission (IJC), established in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 351], with a comprehensive mandate regarding the promotion of the rule of law and judicial reform. An internal directive clarified the scope of administrative competencies and powers between his Office and IJC. Headquartered in Sarajevo, with field offices in Banja Luka, Mostar, Sarajevo and Tuzla, and a fifth to be opened in Bihac, IJC had started implementing its strategic plan and identified areas of particular importance to the strengthening of the rule of law: the review of laws on the appointment of judges and prosecutors; criminal and civil procedure reform; the review of legislation on the enforcement of civil judgements; and court administration and management. It had also begun to monitor and guide the work of the national commissions and councils established to improve the recruitment of judges and prosecutors and to conduct a comprehensive review of all those currently serving.

In July [S/2001/868], the High Representative approved IJC's Strategy Paper for 2001-2002. Its major priorities were: completion of the review of judges and prosecutors; reform of the judiciary appointment process; reform of court administration and management; and revision of legislation in civil procedure and enforcement of judgements. Also in July, the two entities of Bosnia and Herzegovina signed a memorandum of understanding regulating the appointment process for judges and prosecutors throughout the country. On 3 August, the High Representative imposed amendments to the Federation Law on Judicial and Prosecutorial Service to eliminate political obstruction, streamline the appointment and dismissal processes and strengthen the role of the Federation commissions dealing with the nomination of candidates for judicial and prosecutorial service.

Economic reform and reconstruction

The High Representative stated, in July [S/2001/723], that his Office was devoting a great deal of attention and resources to the major priorities of the privatization and restructuring of public utilities and the creation of a favourable investment climate. In Republika Srpska, through a voucher offer that ran from November 2000 to 15 March 2001, citizens and 13 privatization investment funds were offered 55 per cent of State equity in 830 enterprises. Of the 49 million vouchers issued, over 84 per cent were utilized. In a later report [S/2002/209], the High Representative said that, for the first time, three of the 50 largest enterprises in Republika Srpska were sold successfully to international investors. The sale of the remaining State-owned capital in every company was ongoing. In the Federation, the first public offering of shares was completed on 28 March; 542 enterprises were offered to certificate holders, with a subscription of 4.25 billion konvertible marka (KM). The second round was completed by the end of the year, with one or two more rounds to follow. A new Directorate of Privatization was established.

The Office of the High Representative, through the International Advisory Group on Taxation, accelerated the process of tax reform. An agreement on the harmonization of sales taxes was concluded between the two entity governments under the IMF project on the subject, which ended in April. Agreement was also reached for the Brcko District to harmonize its sales tax law with those of the entities by August. A harmonized income tax law was expected to be in place throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina by January 2002.

The report of the Foreign Investment Advisory Service on Bosnia and Herzegovina outlining investment impediments and recommendations for improving the situation was officially presented in Sarajevo and Banja Luka on 29 and 30 June, respectively.

In the transport sector, the Railway Public Corporation was legally registered in both entities. A 61 million euro railway recovery loan was signed on 11 June for the reconstruction of 750 kilometres of main track in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The High Representative's Office organized on 4 May an international conference on the Bosnia and Herzegovina rail transport situation, which recommended drastic reorganization. As a tangible sign of recovery, international passenger service on the Sarajevo-Banja Luka-Zagreb and Doboj-Banja Luka-Zagreb-Ljubljana railway lines reopened on 10 June, after a nine-year hiatus. The Federation and Republika Srpska were in negotiation with the European Investment Bank for a 60 million euro road improvement loan, while the World Bank was preparing a new road management and safety project worth $30 million. Bosnia and Herzegovina signed an agreement with Central European Air Traffic Services on 14 September and a contract with Croatia Control Limited to provide air traffic control services to the country effective 27 December. Deployment of the State Border Service was completed at the Banja Luka and Mostar airports. Recently passed transport legislation included a Federation law creating (from two old companies) the new Railways of the Bosnia and Herzegovina Federation and a State law providing for State-level licensing and regulation of international and inter-entity truck and bus transport.

In the telecommunications sector, the High Representative issued a 2 March decision establishing the Communications Regulatory Agency. The World Bank offered technical assistance for the sector's restructuring, privatization and other transition measures relating to postal services, radio transmission infrastructure and e-commerce.

In the energy sector, the State's Commission on Public Corporations agreed on 17 April to move forward with the analysis and design of new public corporations for gas transportation, power transmission, radio transmission infrastructure and posts. The World Bank and the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development approved a $230 million loan for a power generation and distribution project, conditional on the adoption by the Council of Ministers of a State electricity law providing for a regulatory commission for electricity transmission, an independent service operator and a single transmission company. That condition was fulfilled and the project was under way.

Anti-corruption and transparency issues

The High Representative reported in July [S/2001/723] that the emergence of so-called "Croat Self-Rule" (see p. 339) and its proclamation that it would take over Federation revenues forced him to take action against the financial centre of that illegal parallel structure by placing the Croat-controlled Hercegovacka Banka under his provisional administration. The takeover of the bank on 6 April was resisted by HDZ-organized riots, during which staff of the High Representative's Office and other international and local staff were injured, threatened and taken hostage. The bank was eventually taken over on 18 April with SFOR backing. Although an investigation was initiated by the Federation, the High Representative transferred jurisdiction for the investigation and prosecution to the Cantonal Court of Sarajevo because of well-grounded suspicion of local police involvement and doubts about the impartiality of the local prosecutors and judges. The bank's provisional administrator was faced with lack of management and shareholder cooperation, thus slowing down the consolidation of accounts and the investigative process.

Due to the lack of transparency and continuing suspicion of corruption in the public finance system, the High Representative appointed a Special Auditor to audit and report on the condition of government finances. As a result of the report's confirmation that the system was susceptible to fraud and corruption and lacked appropriate control mechanisms, the High Representative's Office was developing a strategy to reform administrative accounting procedures and to strengthen the Supreme Audit Institution (SAI), and treasury and parliamentary control mechanisms.

In September [S/2001/868], the High Representative stated that, with the assistance of the United States Treasury, his Office had presented to both entity governments a strategy for restructuring the Financial Police Agency, a critical pillar of an independent and effective investigative mechanism against high-level corruption, fraud and money-laundering.

The High Representative subsequently indicated that, following the SAI comprehensive audit early in the year, charges were filed against former and serving officials of Republika Srpska in five cases involving the misappropriation of some KM 300,000 (150,000 euros) in government funds [S/2002/209]. He also reported that, on 6 November, he issued a decision amending the Federation Law on Banks to allow provisional bank administrators to make payouts of up to KM 5,000 before completing their financial reports. That would enable the provisional administrator of Hercegovacka Banka to start paying in December those small depositors whose savings had been frozen since April.

Media issues

The continuing restructuring of the public broadcasting system (PBS) of Bosnia and Herzegovina saw the simultaneous launch on 7 May of PBS radio (broadcasting over the whole territory) and Federation radio, giving the country, for the first time since the disintegration of the former Yugoslavia, a Statewide broadcasting capability. Subject to funding, work would continue to extend the radio signal's reach to 85 per cent of the population, from its current coverage of 72 per cent. The Communications Regulatory Agency continued to evaluate broadcasters. By September, 126 had qualified for full licences. The evaluation was expected to be concluded by year's end, and consultations had begun to ensure that opportunities for new licences met citizens' needs. A working group had drafted a law for Republika Srpska Radio-Television. The Law on Federation Radio-Television was being amended and a PBS State law was in the drafting stage. On 27 October, the new Federation TV was launched and significant measures were taken to enfranchise Croats by improving signal coverage and developing a Croat component. The top managers for the State-level PBS had been appointed and the High Representative's Broadcasting Agent was working closely with them to create a PBS for the entire country that was financially viable and journalistically professional.

The draft Law on Freedom of Access to Information, prepared by an expert group in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 352], was adopted by the State and entity governments. In June, the Federation Parliament adopted the draft Defamation Act.

Military aspects

Stabilization Force

Under the command of NATO, the multinational Stabilization Force (SFOR), also known as Operation Joint Guard, continued in 2001 to oversee the implementation of the military aspects of the 1995 Peace Agreement. Its activities from 13 November 2000 to 31 October 2001 were recorded in nine reports [S/2001/16, S/2001/290, S/2001/437, S/2001/542, S/2001/688, S/2001/820, S/2001/911, S/2001/1001, S/2001/1167], submitted by the NATO Secretary-General through the UN Secretary-

General to the Security Council, in accordance with Council resolution 1088(1996) [YUN 1996, p. 310]. Activities during the remainder of 2001 were covered in later reports [S/2002/17, S/2002/154].

The strength of SFOR fell from 22,000 in December 2000 to some 18,000 in December 2001. The troops, deployed in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, were contributed by all NATO members and 15 non-NATO countries. The Council, by resolution 1357(2001) of 21 June (see p. 333), authorized the continuation of SFOR for a further period of 12 months.

During the year, SFOR continued to conduct reconnaissance and surveillance, by means of ground and air patrols, to: monitor the border with FRY and the entity armed forces (EAF); conduct weapons storage site inspections; provide support to the international organizations operating in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including the Office of the High Representative; and collect weapons and ammunition. In addition, it assisted the local police and IPTF in providing a safe and secure environment in the Sarajevo suburb of Dobrinja before and after the international arbitrator's final ruling on the disposition of the inter-entity boundary line; conducted operations to ensure a safe and secure environment throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina to counter the destabilizing effects of Croat action to create a third entity (see p. 339); and supported IPTF and local police in their efforts to quell mob violence and maintain police order. Other major activities included an information campaign to reassure the population and deter support for terrorist acts. It discovered two underground bunkers containing military equipment and ammunition near Han Pijesak, north-east of Sarajevo.

The SFOR/OSCE Joint Restructuring Steering Board, on 13 March in Sarajevo, presented to the entities the master plan for restructuring EAF. The Federation and the Joint Presidency endorsed the Common Defence Policy Paper, a key element in that restructuring, and established several working groups. In the meantime, SFOR was verifying the reported 15 per cent troop reduction of EAF in 2000. It continued to support UNHCR efforts to encourage the return of Bosnian Serbs living in Republika Srpska to their home areas.

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

The year 2001 saw a number of positive developments in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) and in its province of Kosovo. In early March, NATO informed the Secretary-General of its decision, in anticipation of the ultimate abolition of the ground safety zone—the buffer zone between Kosovo and Serbia proper—to allow the controlled return of FRY forces into the zone, which took place between March and May.

Also during that period, the United Nations Interim Administration in Kosovo (UNMIK) began to lay the foundations for Kosovo's interim period of self-government, as envisaged in Security Council resolution 1244(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 353]. The main achievement in that effort was the promulgation on 16 May by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of UNMIK of the Constitutional Framework for Provisional Self-Government, which determined the new provisional government institutions and their powers and responsibilities. That paved the way for the Kosovo-wide elections on 17 November, in which all communities participated. Since none of the contending parties gained enough Assembly seats to govern alone, negotiations began for the formation of a coalition Government. Accordingly, UNMIK assisted in the establishment of the necessary provisional institutions in accordance with the Constitutional Framework and engaged all communities in the transitional process, aimed at the progressive transfer of public administration to local control. UNMIK also, in cooperation with the EU, OSCE and UNHCR, stepped up measures relating to the reform of Kosovo's police and justice system, economic reform and reconstruction, the return of refugees and displaced persons and the improvement of security, in particular along the border with the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. In support of UNMIK's efforts, the Council had sent a mission to Kosovo in June to convey a strong message to its local leaders and all concerned to reject violence and promote inter-ethnic reconciliation.

In September, the Secretary-General informed the Council of the constructive cooperation of the new FRY authorities with the international community to bring peace and stability to the Balkan region and expressed his belief that FRY had complied with Council resolution 1160(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 369]. Accordingly, on 10 September, the Council lifted all sanctions imposed against FRY and dissolved the committee it had established to monitor them.

Situation in Kosovo

The United Nations continued to work towards the full implementation of Security Council resolution 1244(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 353], which set out the modalities for a political solution to the crisis in the FRY province of Kosovo, as well as resolutions 1160(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 369], 1199 (1998) [ibid., p. 377], 1203(1998) [ibid., p. 382] and 1239(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 349]. The civilian aspects of resolution 1244(1999) were being implemented by UNMIK and the military aspects by the international security presence (KFOR).

Ground safety zone and southern Serbia

In 2001, the security situation in the ground safety zone (GSZ) (the buffer zone between Kosovo and the rest of Serbia) and in southern Serbia, first brought to the Security Council's attention in December 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 378], continued to deteriorate. On 27 January [S/2001/86], FRY reported to the Council that, on the previous day, Albanian terrorists attacked an army unit on the Bujanovac-Presevo road in the vicinity of Gomja Susaja village, near Bujanovac, outside the GSZ. A soldier was seriously wounded and later died. FRY said those activities were aimed at endangering security, sowing terror among the civilians in the Bujanovac, Presevo and Medvedja municipalities in southern Serbia and provoking the Yugoslav police and army. It called for an urgent Council meeting so that measures could be taken to find the perpetrators and bring them to justice.

FRY also requested the Council to ensure that the provisions of its statement S/PRST/2000/40 [YUN 2000, p. 380] were fully implemented and that the GSZ regime was fully respected.

Security Council consideration (January). The Council, during informal consultations of the whole on 30 January, was briefed by the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations on the situation in the Presevo Valley, including the foregoing incident [A/56/2]. He stated that, between 18 and 28 January, there was a notable increase in small-scale attacks on FRY forces by elements of the Liberation Army of Presevo, Medvedja and Bujanovac (UCPMB) and a splinter group (the ethnic Albanian armed groups). Eighteen attacks on FRY forces were reported in the central and northern parts of the GSZ. The fighting created a flow of internally displaced persons into Kosovo. Although KFOR continued to conduct proactive operations to interdict and prevent armed groups from crossing into the GSZ, tension in the area was rising.

In a statement to the press on behalf of the Council, the President said that the Council condemned the attacks and stressed the need to bring the perpetrators to justice. The Council recalled the call made in its December 2000 statement [YUN 2000, p. 380] for the immediate and complete cessation of violence, the dissolution of ethnic Albanian extremist groups and the immediate withdrawal from the GSZ of all non-residents engaged in extremist activities. Welcoming FRY's commitment to work towards a peaceful settlement, the Council also called on ethnic Albanian leaders in southern Serbia to work with the FRY Government to achieve a peaceful settlement. It welcomed the measures taken by KFOR and called on it to continue to address the problem.

Security Council consideration (February). On 13 February [meeting 4277], the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations reported to the Council that there had been increased clashes, illegal checkpoints and training activities in the GSZ. UNMIK and KFOR continued to take action against persons and activities inside Kosovo known to support the ethnic Albanian fighters using the GSZ as a staging area. They were also working in selected areas along the Kosovo side of the administrative boundary to control more effectively the movements of individuals attempting to support ethnic Albanian fighters. KFOR had over 100 suspected ethnic Albanian fighters in detention.

Discussions were continuing with FRY and Serbia and with ethnic Albanian leaders on halting the displacement of persons and on encouraging returns to the Presevo area. An inter-agency team of representatives from the United Nations Development Programme, UNHCR, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, the United Nations Children's Fund and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights had been sent to the region to assess basic humanitarian needs in the Presevo Valley area.

Addressing the Council, the FRY representative said his Government had recently adopted a three-phase plan for resolving the crisis in the Bujanovac, Presevo and Medvedja municipalities. Also known as the Civic Plan, it included the establishment of the State sovereignty and territorial integrity of Serbia and FRY in that part of their territory, the preservation and development of the region's multi-ethnic character, respect for all civil and human rights of the ethnic Albanian community, protection of the basic interests of Serbs and of their personal property and security, and the building of a multi-ethnic democratic society, with the viable economic development of the three municipalities. In the first phase, already under way, an appeal had been sent to the ethnic Albanian community to refrain from any terrorist acts during negotiations, with FRY's army and police undertaking only defensive activity. The second phase, to be preceded by the reduction or total elimination of the GSZ, would include the permanent cessation of all terrorist acts, the disarmament of terrorists and dismantling of fortifications, followed by the withdrawal of military and police forces; regular mixed local police and military units would remain. Those who had not taken part in violent action up to the end of the second phase would not be prosecuted.

In the third phase, full security and peace in the region would be established, enabling the ethnic Albanian community to be integrated into the political, State and social systems and to have their human rights respected. That integration would reflect the local ethnic composition in the State institutions, economy and social activity, entailing appropriate representation on the executive boards of municipalities and in the Government of Serbia, the elimination of all forms of human rights violations through more effective control of police and other government bodies and free access for accredited human rights organizations.

Communication. The EU, on 15 February [S/2001/153], welcomed the plan adopted by FRY and Serbia on 8 February, which had been presented to it by Serbia's Deputy Prime Minister Nebojsa Covic on 15 February as a comprehensive response to the crisis. The EU looked forward to the implementation by Serbia and FRY of measures to fully integrate the ethnic Albanian community as soon as possible, and expected the ethnic Albanian community in southern Serbia to designate representatives to engage in constructive dialogue with Serbia and FRY. That implied an immediate cessation of violence by armed extremist Albanian groups in the GSZ.

NATO decision

On 8 March [S/2001/214], the NATO Secretary-General informed the UN Secretary-General that, following the previous week's fact-finding mission to southern Serbia and visits of a NATO political-military team to Skopje, FYROM, the North Atlantic Council (NAC) had decided on a number of steps regarding the GSZ to be implemented in the near future, together with confidence-building measures, including a ceasefire to be agreed between FRY and Serbian and ethnic Albanian representatives, and the initiation of direct negotiations between the parties. NAC confirmed NATO's intention ultimately to abolish the GSZ, but reaffirmed that the KFOR Commander should retain authority over it and the air safety zone under the terms of the 1999 military-technical agreement [YUN 1999, p. 356]. As a first step in a phased and conditioned reduction of the GSZ, NAC authorized the Commander to allow the controlled return of FRY forces into the GSZ sector along Serbia's border with FYROM (Sector C (East)). Further controlled return should continue rapidly thereafter along the northern boundary of Kosovo with Serbia proper (Sector A), including the strip of the FRY border with Albania (Sector C (West)). That part of the GSZ in the municipality of Medvedja (Sector D) could be released at the same time as Sector A or later.

Further returns of FRY/Serbian forces were authorized on 22 March [S/2001/267] to Sectors A and C (West) of the GSZ, subject to FRY's agreement to the specific conditions set by the KFOR Commander on 24 March; on 11 April [S/2001/360] to Sector D with effect from 12 April; and on 14 May [S/2001/497] to Sector B with effect from 24 May. The return to Sector B completed the phased and conditioned reduction of the GSZ. NAC also noted the FRY/Serbia proposals on key capacity-building measures contained in the "Outline of the Plan for the Joint Security Forces Entry into the GSZ Sector Bravo" and further assurances made by Serbia's Deputy Prime Minister in his letters of 4 and 13 May.

Ceasefire agreement

During the Security Council's meeting on 16 March [meeting 4296], the FRY representative informed the Council of the agreement on a ceasefire in the GSZ in southern Serbia and the agreement between FRY and KFOR on the entry of Yugoslav forces into that part of the GSZ bordering FYROM. FRY considered that conditions had been created for the full implementation of the Council's repeated requests to end the violence and to have armed Albanian groups disarmed, disbanded and withdrawn from the GSZ. Steps towards a gradual and complete elimination of the GSZ would contribute to a comprehensive implementation of the FRY/Serbia plan for a resolution of the crisis (see p. 346).

The Council, in statement S/PRST/2001/8 (see p. 350) of the same date, welcomed the ceasefire agreement and called for strict compliance with its provisions. It also welcomed FRY's plan for southern Serbia and NATO's decision to authorize the controlled return of FRY forces to the GSZ.

Other developments

Communication. The EU, in a 22 May statement on the demobilization of ethnic Albanian armed groups in the Presevo Valley [S/2001/539], welcomed the commitment by representatives of ethnic Albanian armed groups to full demobilization in southern Serbia, signed on 21 May by UCPMB Commander Shefket Musliu. The EU urged all concerned to fully respect that commitment and to hand over their weapons to KFOR and return to civilian life. It encouraged FRY/Serbian authorities and ethnic Albanian representatives to continue talks to consolidate implementation of confidence-building measures, including the early establishment of a multi-ethnic police force.

UN Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo

The United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo, established in June 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 357], set up, for the purpose of executing its tasks, what were referred to as pillars, concerned with interim administration (led by the United Nations), institution-building (led by OSCE), economic reconstruction (led by the EU), humanitarian affairs (led by UNHCR), and police and justice (formally launched by the United Nations on 21 May). UNMIK was headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Hans Haekkerup (Denmark), who replaced Bernard Kouchner (France) on 13 January.

Upon assuming office, the new Special Representative laid out the following priorities for UNMIK: to establish a legal framework for provisional self-government in Kosovo as a precondition for the holding of Kosovo-wide elections; to develop further an effective law enforcement and judicial system; and to advance economic reconstruction. The Special Representative would foster regular dialogue with FRY and Serbia and open an UNMIK office in Belgrade to contribute to the implementation of those priorities. In addition, UNMIK continued to address a number of serious challenges related to the security of all Kosovo communities, to the ongoing struggle to establish durable and universal law and order, and to the preparation of joint administrative structures.

UNMIK's efforts were facilitated and advanced by the series of regulations that the Special Representative issued during the year. In that connection, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council in March [S/2001/218/Add.1] the texts of regulations 2000/62-69 and 2001/1-4 and, in October [S/2001/926/Add.1], those of regulations 2001/23 and 2001/24.

Security Council consideration (January, February, March). The Council met on 18 January and 13 February to consider the implementation of its resolutions relating to the situation in Kosovo. On 18 January [meeting 4258], the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations updated the Council on UNMIK's progress in discharging its priority tasks, as identified by the new Special Representative. He also briefed the Council on the return of Albanian Kosovars detained in FRY, the situation in the Presevo Valley and the problem of depleted uranium.

In a further briefing to the Council on 13 February [meeting 4277], the Under-Secretary-General reported that the elaboration of the key principles for discussions on the legal framework for a provisional self-government was in progress. When completed, UNMIK would begin consultations with local interlocutors and the international community on mechanisms for the transfer of governmental powers. OSCE estimated that preparations for province-wide elections would take eight months. Therefore, decisions on key elements of the legal framework had to be completed by April for elections to take place in 2001. Progress had already been made in updating voter lists. Meanwhile, UNMIK had begun to restructure the Joint Interim Administrative Structure (JIAS) to take account of the 2000 municipal election results [YUN 2000, p. 367] and to prepare for a smooth transition to a locally managed structure. In the continued implementation of those results, 18 of Kosovo's 30 municipalities had appointed their chief executive officers and seven had set up their boards of directors.

To enhance the rule of law, UNMIK had under consideration a more unified judicial, police and civil administration coordination structure. To improve the quality of the judiciary, it had begun assessing the performance of 400 local judges and prosecutors who had been urgently appointed when UNMIK started. On the police side, UNMIK established the Police Organized Crime Intelligence Unit and 3,138 cadets had graduated from the Kosovo Police Service School.

The democratic changes in FRY and Serbia proper [YUN 2000, p. 384] provided an opportunity for a more constructive relationship with Belgrade. In that regard, the establishment of an UNMIK office there to facilitate dialogue had been agreed in principle. Negotiations were continuing with FRY on detainees and missing persons from Kosovo, as well as on a prepared amnesty bill, which UNMIK said should be extended to all Kosovo Albanian detainees.

UNMIK was working to improve economic regulation and decrease Kosovo's economic isolation by encouraging direct foreign investment. Plans were being made to restore the viability of the Trepca industrial complex [YUN 2000, p. 377]. A number of policy issues were being considered, as well as issues of interim management, ownership and debt claims, environmental damage reconciliation, restructuring and worker retraining, and the establishment of appropriate mining laws.

As to security issues, recent demonstrations in south Mitrovica, sparked by the death of a Kosovo Albanian youth in a 29 January grenade attack, became the focus for protests by Kosovo Albanians wanting to show that they did not trust KFOR to provide them with the necessary security. While the protests drew little reaction from the Kosovo Serbs, threats against the Kosovo Albanian minority in north Mitrovica were reported. To defuse tensions, the Special Representative and the KFOR Commander visited Mitrovica to hold discussions with the local Albanian and Serb leaders. A joint declaration was signed by the Special Representative, the KFOR Commander, the Mitrovica Municipal Assembly and local political representatives, calling for enhanced security and expansion of the zone of confidence to ensure freedom of movement for residents, the return of displaced persons and the establishment of functioning political structures. However, representatives of all local Serb factions signed a statement of non-concurrence, arguing that the plan excluded Kosovo Serbs and that expansion of the zone of confidence was only for north Mitrovica.

Another security concern related to tension in the Presevo Valley and in southern Serbia (see p. 346). Besides an increase in attacks on Kosovo Serbs and their property in Prizren, Mitrovica, Gnjilane and Pristina, pressure on Kosovo Serbs to sell their property remained high, particularly in mixed municipalities. Dialogue had begun with FRY, Serbian and Kosovo Serb and Kosovo Albanian political and community leaders on the envisioned framework for Serb returns to Kosovo.

On the question of depleted uranium, a draft report on its effects, prepared by a World Health Organization assessment team, concluded that its threat to public health and the environment was minimal. It recommended an information campaign to encourage public reporting of discoveries of depleted-uranium rounds, improved medical health data and an effective information system on the health situation in Kosovo to help monitor all of its aspects, including with respect to depleted uranium.

On 6 March [meeting 4286], the Security Council held a private meeting with the participation of FRY's Prime Minister, Zoran Zizic, to exchange views on the Kosovo situation and on the implementation of resolution 1244(1999). In a statement to the press [A/56/2], the President said that Council members welcomed the Special Representative's ongoing efforts to implement fully resolution 1244(1999), including the development of an institutional framework for the provisional self-governing institutions of Kosovo. They called on all parties to support UNMIK in building a stable and multi-ethnic democracy in Kosovo and to ensure suitable conditions for Kosovo-wide elections for those institutions as soon as feasible, including through the registration of all habitual residents of Kosovo, the return of refugees and adequate security for all.

Council members also welcomed the continued improvement of relations between the FRY Government and UNMIK and KFOR, and supported the early opening of an UNMIK office in Belgrade. They stressed the importance of substantial dialogue between Kosovo political leaders and the FRY Government.

Council members called for an end to all acts of violence in Kosovo, in particular those ethnically motivated, and urged all Kosovo political leaders to condemn those acts and to increase efforts to create inter-ethnic tolerance. They welcomed the adoption of an amnesty law in FRY, and stressed the importance of the immediate release of all Kosovo Albanian prisoners held without charge or on political grounds as a confidence-building measure.

They further welcomed the efforts undertaken, in particular by the EU and NATO, to support FRY in solving the problems in southern Serbia (see p. 347).

Report of Secretary-General (March). The Secretary-General, reporting in March on UNMIK [S/2001/218], stated that the current political situation among Kosovo Albanians was characterized by tensions between the two major parties, the Democratic League of Kosovo (LDK), which had a majority in 24 municipalities, and the Democratic Party of Kosovo (PDK), which had a majority in three. Tensions arose from the two parties' inability to reach agreement on co-governance, highlighting the continuing mistrust between them. Nevertheless, they were united in their desire for Kosovo-wide elections in 2001 and in their condemnation of the most recent violence against Kosovo Serbs.

The Kosovo Serb community was likewise divided. The recent change of government in Belgrade [YUN 2000, p. 384] contributed to a further decrease in the influence of the Serb National Council-Gracanica in central Kosovo and of the Serb National Council in north Mitrovica. Although the former continued to participate in UNMIK's Kosovo-wide institutions, its standing among the Kosovo Serb community had diminished. On the other hand, particularly in the Mitrovica region, those forces associated with the Democratic Opposition of Serbia (DOS) had consolidated. Triggered by the violent events in Mitrovica in January and February (see p. 350), the positions of some Kosovo Serb leaders had hardened, with the creation of a self-styled "Committee for the Defence of Mitrovica". UNMIK had made an intense effort to re-engage Kosovo Serb leaders in the Mitrovica region on key issues affecting their communities.

To ensure the representative nature of the provincial institutions, UNMIK had been examining ways to reform JIAS.

Persistent instances of ethnically and politically motivated violence continued to pose a threat to the fulfilment of UNMIK's mandate. In late January and early February, violent protests by the Kosovo Albanian population in south Mitrovica resulted in the burning of KFOR and UNMIK police vehicles. To put an end to the demonstrations, UNMIK and KFOR persuaded Kosovo Albanian leaders to sign a joint declaration and plan of action. In Prizren and Pristina, violence between Kosovo Serbs and Kosovo Albanians was on the rise. On 24 January, in Velika Hoca, near Orahovac municipality (Prizren region), six Kosovo Serb-owned houses were damaged by mortar fire. In early February, several attacks on Kosovo Serb homes and churches occurred, including an explosion that destroyed an Orthodox church west of Gnjilane on 7 February, as well as a number of attacks against Kosovo Serb houses, many of them potential dwellings for Kosovo Serb returnees, and cultural sites in the Gnjilane, Prizren and Pristina regions. A spate of more serious attacks targeting Kosovo Serbs occurred in mid-February, the worst being the 16 February attack near Podujevo on a KFOR-escorted convoy of civilian buses en route from Nis in Serbia proper to Gracanica near Pristina [S/2001/145].

Further Security Council consideration. At a 16 March Security Council meeting [meeting 4296], which had before it the Secretary-General's March report, the Special Representative stated that, in order to accelerate the process of defining a legal framework, he had established on 6 March a working group of international and Kosovar legal experts, including representatives of the major ethnic groups, to elaborate the structure of the future institutions of provisional self-government in Kosovo. The group would indicate clearly those powers and competencies to be transferred and those to remain under his control, but would not address the question of sovereignty. Nor would the legal framework address or in any way prejudice the final political settlement on Kosovo's status. The Special Representative regretted the withdrawal of the group's Kosovo Serb member.

The Special Representative further reported that FR Yugoslavia's Parliament had passed an amnesty law, covering, however, only a small number of the Kosovo Albanian detainees, of whom close to 500 remained imprisoned in Serbia. He called on Belgrade to transfer all detainees to UNMIK for a review of their cases according to international standards. To further the normalization process, the Special Representative said two clear messages from Belgrade were needed: one to the Kosovo Albanians, that Belgrade's new democratic Government was prepared to take the steps necessary to normalize relations between it and Pristina; and another to the Kosovo Serbs, that their future lay in Kosovo and that they should therefore participate in the structures established to govern the area.

According to the Special Representative, extremist actions in FYROM (see p. 368) were destabilizing the situation in the region. Although the problem was an internal one, it was important for KFOR and UNMIK to support FYROM in its efforts to solve it, including sealing off the border.

The Special Representative stated later in the meeting that he would welcome a visit by the Security Council to Kosovo, which should help in addressing the implementation of resolution 1244(1999).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 March [meeting 4298], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/8 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on progress in the implementation of its resolution 1244(1999) of 10 June 1999.

The Council commends the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the commander of the Kosovo Force for their ongoing efforts to implement fully resolution 1244(1999), undertaken under difficult circumstances, and welcomes the priority areas of work identified by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General.

The Council welcomes the establishment of a working group under the authority of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General aimed at developing a legal framework for provisional institutions for democratic and autonomous self-government in Kosovo and stresses the need for all ethnic groups to be represented in the work of this group. It underlines the need to keep the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia informed on the process. It calls on all parties to support the efforts of the United Nations Mission in Kosovo to build a stable multi-ethnic democratic society in Kosovo and to ensure suitable conditions for Kosovo-wide elections. It stresses the importance of a number of steps being taken for the holding of these elections: the establishment of the legal framework, in particular the definition of the functions and powers of the elected bodies; the development of an integrated voter registry which should include the refugees and internally displaced persons; full involvement of all the communities in the ballot; and a high security environment for the voting.

The Council welcomes close contact between the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the Mission and the international security presence, in particular the steps taken towards the opening of a Mission office in Belgrade, which will facilitate these consultations. It stresses the importance of substantial dialogue between Kosovo political leaders and the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

The Council calls for an end to all acts of violence in Kosovo, in particular those which are ethnically motivated and urges all political leaders in Kosovo to condemn these acts and to increase their efforts to create inter-ethnic tolerance. It reiterates the importance of resolving the problem of the missing and detainees and notes that this would be a major confidence-building measure. It welcomes the initial steps taken by the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in this regard.

The Council remains concerned about the security situation in certain municipalities in southern Serbia as a result of the violent actions of ethnic Albanian armed groups. It welcomes the ceasefire agreements signed on 12 March 2001 and calls for strict compliance with their provisions. It stresses that a peaceful settlement of this crisis can only be achieved through substantial dialogue. It commends the continued restraint of the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Serbia. The Security Council welcomes the plan of the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia for southern Serbia and supports its initiative to find a peaceful and durable solution through a process of dialogue and confidence-building measures. It expresses the opinion that the swift implementation of confidence-building measures would be an important element in a peaceful settlement, and underlines the importance of continued political and financial support for this process by the international community.

The Council welcomes the decision taken by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to authorize the commander of the international security presence to allow the controlled return of forces of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to the Ground Safety Zone as defined in the military-technical agreement signed in Kumanovo on 9 June 1999, referred to in annex II of resolution 1244(1999), as a first step in a phased and conditioned reduction of the Ground Safety Zone.

The Council reiterates its strong support for the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia as set out in the statement of its President of 7 March 2001. It strongly condemns the continuing extremist violence in parts of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, supported from outside the country, which constitutes a threat to the stability and security of the entire region, and underlines the importance of maintaining the territorial integrity of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and all other States in the region. It supports efforts by the Government of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia to cooperate with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and other international organizations to end this violence in a manner consistent with the rule of law.

The Security Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications. On 19 April [S/2001/382], FRY reported that, the previous day, a bomb activated by remote control went off in front of the offices of the Committee of the Yugoslav Government for Cooperation with UNMIK in Pristina, killing one person and wounding three others. On the same date [S/2001/386], the FRY President, Vojislav Kostunica, expressed his exasperation over the incident, which, he said, was further evidence of the extremely poor security situation in Kosovo, particularly affecting the few remaining non-Albanians, and of the failure of UNMIK and KFOR to fulfil their tasks in accordance with Security Council resolution 1244(1999). He recalled that at his 30 March meeting with the Secretary-General, he had pointed out the escalation of terrorism among Albanian extremists, who had been reinforced and, to all appearances, encouraged or at least incited by insufficient UNMIK and KFOR measures.

Serbia's National Assembly, by a 4 May resolution [S/2001/443], stated that, two years after the establishment of civil and security presences, the security situation in Kosovo and Metohija was becoming increasingly serious. The return of expelled persons was more uncertain than ever, and the daily life of the remaining Serbs and other non-Albanians was uncertain and risky. International representatives were working more for the adoption of regulations on interim self-governance than on ensuring the population's safety and security. The National Assembly demanded that UNMIK conduct an investigation within a month into the fate of all abducted and missing persons and inform their families as well as the public about the results. It appealed to all international human rights institutions to intensify their efforts to ascertain the fate of 1,300 abducted and missing Serbs and other non-Albanians.

The establishment of customs points at the administrative boundary of Kosovo and Metohija with central Serbia caused added concern and violated resolution 1244(1999) (see p. 363). The Assembly fully supported the population's resistance to that gross breach of Yugoslav customs laws and Serbia's tax legislation.

Moreover, the basic text of the draft legal framework for provisional self-government for Kosovo, as prepared by UNMIK, did not provide even minimum guarantees for protecting the rights of Serbs and other non-Albanian communities. It was unacceptable to adopt any "legal framework for provisional self-government for Kosovo", or to contemplate the holding of elections, without the prior fulfilment of all obligations stemming from paragraph 9 of resolution 1244(1999), particularly those relating to the full demilitarization of the so-called Kosovo Liberation Army and other armed groups, as well as to the establishment of a safe environment in which displaced persons could return to their homes in conditions of full public safety and order.

The National Assembly demanded that the working group on the elaboration of the legal framework adopt Serbia's amendments ensuring the maintenance of a multi-ethnic Kosovo and Metohija within Serbia and FRY and guaranteeing the rights of ethnic communities, and the establishment of an interim system of consensual democracy in which national and ethnic differences were institutionally safeguarded.

Constitutional Framework for Provisional Self-Government

The Secretary-General, in his June report on UNMIK activities (S/2001/565), informed the Security Council that the joint working group constituted on 6 March had, over a nine-week period, elaborated a constitutional framework for Kosovo's provisional self-government. Represented in the group were the three ethnic Albanian political parties, a Kosovo Serb member and a Bosniac representing other minorities, in addition to a civil society representative, an independent expert and seven international members, including the chairman. The final document reflected the large measure of agreement reached in the group, including comprehensive provisions on the structure and powers of the legislature, the judiciary and the executive branch. Five issues on which there had been no agreement (the title of the document, the request for a directly elected President, a Constitutional Court, a referendum and a sunset clause spelling out the time period of provisional self-government) were resolved by the Special Representative, in consultation with the Secretary-General. On 16 May, the Special Representative signed into law Regulation 2001/9 on the Constitutional Framework for Provisional Self-Government and established, on 18 May, the Steering Group on Issues of Implementation of the Constitutional Framework to coordinate the efforts of five working groups dealing with implementation.

The Constitutional Framework provided for a 120-seat Assembly based on proportional representation, with the first 100 seats reserved for all registered parties and 10 seats each for Kosovo Serbs and other communities. A seven-member presidency of the Assembly would guide its work. The Assembly would elect a President, who in turn would nominate a Prime Minister. The Framework contained extensive safeguards for the protection of communities and human rights, including: an extensive list of guaranteed rights of communities and their members in such areas as language, education, employment, media and public services, with a reservation giving the Special Representative the power to intervene to protect those rights; strong human rights provisions, including one on the right of all refugees and displaced persons to return to their homes and to recover their property, and another requiring that competent institutions had to facilitate returns; the creation of a Committee on the Rights and Interests of Communities in the Assembly with guaranteed and equal representation of communities and special rights to review proposed legislation to ensure that the communities' rights and interests were adequately addressed and to enable the Special Representative strictly to monitor the legislative process; guaranteed set-aside seats for Kosovo Serbs and other communities in the Assembly to ensure adequate representation, as well as guaranteed representation of all communities in the Assembly presidency and other bodies, including main and functional committees; full control and authority by the Special Representative over the judiciary, including the power to determine the assignment of international judges and prosecutors to cases so as to ensure the fair administration of justice, particularly in sensitive cases involving communities; and broad authority for the Special Representative to intervene and correct any actions of the provisional institutions of self-government that were inconsistent with resolution 1244(1999), including the power to veto Assembly legislation where necessary.

The Framework also provided for the following mechanisms to address Kosovo Serb concerns: a procedure enabling the Assembly's community members to object to legislation they felt violated their "vital interests" and to initiate a special process to avoid adoption of legislation without prior scrutiny by a panel in which a representative of the Special Representative and a community representative would have a majority; a requirement that the Ombudsperson give priority to allegations of discrimination against communities and their members and allegations of violations of community rights; preambular language reaffirming the commitment to the safe return of refugees and displaced persons and to freedom of movement; and preambular language stressing the importance of a free, safe and open political environment for members of the communities.

The Secretary-General said that key to the success of the Constitutional Framework was local acceptance of the document. In the main, reactions to its signing among Kosovo Albanian members of the Interim Administrative Council were encouraging. Ibrahim Rugova and Ramush Harađinaj, leaders of LDK and the Alliance for the Future of Kosovo, respectively, expressed their support for the document, despite the exclusion of certain key requests that they intended to pursue. However, the PDK president, Hashim Thaci, said the document would hold hostage the aim of Kosovo's people, which was political independence. According to local media reports, the FRY authorities and the Kosovo Serbs considered the Framework "unacceptable". On 14 May, the Special Representative appeared on local television to announce the promulgation of the Constitutional Framework and 17 November as the date for Kosovo-wide elections.

Communications. The EU, on 16 May [S/2001/538], welcomed the promulgation of the Constitutional Framework and the announcement of a date for elections. The EU urged all individuals and communities to participate in the elections and to refrain from violence in the process leading to them.

FRY, on 5 June [S/2001/563], informed the Security Council that, while it supported the establishment of provisional institutions of self-government and was ready to cooperate fully with the United Nations, UNMIK and the Special Representative, it had serious concerns and reservations regarding the Constitutional Framework and the holding of general elections, stressing that certain of the Framework's elements disregarded the principle of respect for FRY's territorial integrity and sovereignty. In particular, it omitted any express reference to Kosovo and Metohija as being part of FRY and Serbia—an unacceptable omission; the term "constitutional" in the title implied that the document was a constitution of a State, which it was not nor could it be; references to "the people of Kosovo" could neither bear nor imply any connection with the notion of "peoples" or the principle of "equal rights and self-determination of peoples" as contained in the UN Charter or in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the UN, adopted by General Assembly resolution 2625(XXV) [YUN 1970, p. 789]; and the provisions on the President of Kosovo and Metohija and his/her responsibilities "in the field of external relations", as well as the related provisions concerning certain responsibilities of provisional institutions, were contrary to the letter and the spirit of resolution 1244(1999). As a part of FRY and Serbia, Kosovo and Metohija was represented in international relations by the FRY Government, or by the Special Representative to the extent allowed under that resolution. The reference to "the will of the people" in the Framework's preamble had to be interpreted without prejudice to the respect for the principle of sovereignty and territorial integrity and should be understood as including the will of all citizens of Serbia and FRY, expressed directly or through their elected representatives.

In addition, the Framework did not contain sufficient institutional guarantees for the protection of rights and interests of national communities. It was premature to transfer judicial responsibilities to provisional institutions of self-government, since conditions for a truly independent and impartial judiciary did not exist; therefore, judicial affairs should have remained within the reserved powers of the Special Representative. Also, any reference to the Kosovo Protection Corps [YUN 2000, p. 364] was unacceptable.

FRY emphasized its support in principle for the elections, provided the conditions necessary for the holding of truly all-inclusive, free and fair elections existed well before the election date.

Report of Secretary-General (June). Reporting on the political situation in his June report on UNMIK [S/2001/565], the Secretary-General said that the political engagement of the Kosovo Serb community remained a major challenge for UNMIK, rendered more difficult by the branding of the Constitutional Framework as "unacceptable" by FRY authorities and by the continuing divisions within the community itself. In the Mitrovica region, the self-styled Political Committee for the Defence of Kosovska Mitrovica, formed in February, had gained influence, with radical Kosovo Serb leaders seizing on the issue of UNMIK tax collection points along the northern administrative boundary line (see p. 363) to further harden the stance of the Kosovo Serb community in the region. The ensuing roadblocks and the linkage made between the tax collection points and the Constitutional Framework made progress on the issues in the divided city of Mitrovica and on Kosovo Serb cooperation with UNMIK very difficult. Faced with those difficulties, UNMIK made efforts to re-engage Kosovo Serb leaders in the Mitrovica region and to encourage FRY to use its influence in that regard. To that end, the Secretary-General met with FRY President Kostunica in New York on 8 May, resulting in some recent positive indications, including encouragement by FRY authorities of Kosovo Serb participation in civil registration and an agreement on tax collection points.

Continuing instances of ethnically and politically motivated violence, as well as organized crime, remained of great concern. Tensions in the Mitrovica, Gnjilane and Pristina regions had increased, as had targeted attacks on specific individuals, particularly of the Kosovo Serb community. There was a severe limitation on freedom of movement as a result of the temporary suspension of UNHCR-operated bus lines and the interruption of train services. The single most disturbing and extreme act of violence was the 18 April bomb attack in the centre of Pristina (see p. 351). Kosovo Albanian leaders were swift to condemn that attack, reflecting their relatively recent readiness to condemn such terrorist acts. Violence against the international community was on the rise. Openly aggressive behaviour towards law enforcement and security personnel had become commonplace, taking the form of threats and assaults against members of the Kosovo Police Service, UNMIK police and KFOR. On 11 April, a Russian KFOR soldier was fatally shot in the Kamenica area.

The Mitrovica region continued to be a focal point for violence and civil disobedience within the Kosovo Serb community. Following the arrest by UNMIK police of three Kosovo Serbs on 14 March, the level of violence escalated, resulting in the injury of 21 UNMIK police officers and damage to seven police vehicles and several houses. UNMIK police temporarily suspended patrols in northern Mitrovica, resuming them in early May with KFOR assistance. The blockades of critical road junctions in the largely Kosovo Serb-controlled northern municipalities of Leposavic, Zubin Potok, Zvecan and north Mitrovica from mid-April to early May further exacerbated the situation in the region. On 24 May, the Special Representative promulgated regulation 2001/10 on the prohibition of unauthorized border/boundary crossings, making crossing at locations other than at authorized border or boundary crossings a criminal offence.

In an effort to minimize the effect on Kosovo of the instability in the region, UNMIK fostered close cooperation with neighbouring States. In that context, the Special Representative met with Albanian representatives on 15 and 16 April and again on 16 May, as well as with FYROM authorities on 7 May.

An outbreak of inter-ethnic violence in FYROM and the resulting month-long closure of its border with Kosovo until 3 April adversely affected the political and security situation in Kosovo and severely limited UNMIK's freedom of movement and the delivery of essential supplies.

Although UNMIK was concerned over the phased re-entry into the GSZ of the joint Yugoslav forces, particularly the last phased re-entry into sector B effective 24 May (see p. 347), all phased redeployments went smoothly. Under consideration were programmes for the social rehabilitation of former UCPMB fighters to avoid further activity should they remain unemployed. To reduce the possibility of their becoming engaged in the ongoing conflict in FYROM, KFOR was also increasing its efforts at the border with that country.

Communication. In an 8 June press release [S/2001/601], the Russian Federation stated that, since the adoption of resolution 1244(1999), the overall situation in Kosovo had remained tense. Despite the massive international presence there, an unacceptably high level of violence persisted, and ethnic Albanian extremists and separatists continued to intimidate and force out Serbs and other non-Albanians, and persisted in aggravating the situation in southern Serbia and FYROM.

UNMIK and KFOR efforts to ensure safe living conditions for all communities and to achieve stability had so far failed to bring about the expected results. The UNMIK leadership had taken decisions and actions without properly clearing them with the Yugoslav leadership; it neither took full account of the lawful interests of the Serb and other Kosovo communities, nor respected FRY's sovereignty and territorial integrity, in particular the promulgation by UNMIK's head of the Constitutional Framework for Provisional Self-Government in Kosovo and his announcement of the holding of province-wide elections in November.

The Russian Federation was convinced that the Kosovo problem could be settled only on the basis of the strict and full implementation of resolution 1244(1999); it intended to do everything possible to contribute to that goal.

Security Council mission

A Security Council mission on the implementation of resolution 1244(1999) visited Kosovo, FRY, from 16 to 18 June [S/2001/600]. Organized pursuant to the Council's 15 May decision [S/2001/482], the mission was to: find ways to enhance support for the implementation of the resolution; observe the situation on the ground and UNMIK's operations, including the difficult challenges facing it; look at the impact of the regional situation on UNMIK's work; convey a strong message to local leaders and all others concerned about the need to reject all violence, ensure public safety and order, promote stability, safety and security, inter-ethnic reconciliation and inclusion, support the full and effective implementation of resolution 1244(1999) and fully cooperate with UNMIK to those ends; and review ongoing implementation of the prohibitions imposed by the Council in resolution 1160(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 369].

The mission comprised the Permanent Representatives to the United Nations of Bangladesh

(head of mission), China, Colombia, France, Ireland, Jamaica, Mauritius, Norway, the Russian Federation, Tunisia, the United Kingdom and the United States, a Counsellor of Mali and Minister-Counsellors of Singapore and Ukraine.

The mission held discussions with: the Special Representative and other related UN, OSCE and EU officials; a representative group of Kosovo women; members of the Yugoslav Committee on Kosovo and the Kosovo Serb representative in the joint working group on the drafting of the Constitutional Framework; the UN regional administration in Mitrovica and, separately, Kosovo Albanian and Kosovo Serb representatives; the Russian Federation President, who was visiting the region; the KFOR Commander; and the FRY President, Foreign Minister and Interior Minister.

The mission found that, in the two years since its inception, UNMIK had made considerable progress in implementing resolution 1244(1999), although much remained to be done. At the current critical stage of its mandate, the continued effectiveness of UNMIK required a major effort on its part and by KFOR and UNMIK police, backed up by the Council and by a sustained input of resources from the international community.

While the mission was left in no doubt that strong reservations existed about the difficulties involved in advancing preparations for the Kosovo elections on the basis of the Constitutional Framework, it recognized that the status quo was unacceptable and that a political process had to be taken forward in accordance with resolution 1244(1999). In underscoring that elections would enhance the democratic process in Kosovo and the region's stability, the mission stressed that secure conditions for holding them should be ensured. The participation of all communities in the elections, as well as the return of refugees and displaced persons so that they might also participate, should be encouraged.

The mission supported UNMIK's efforts to create a multi-ethnic Kosovo and emphasized the need to remove current obstacles to it, such as inadequate physical, social and economic security, and lack of freedom of movement and equal access to public services. It welcomed the Special Representative's establishment of the new UNMIK police and justice pillar (see p. 348) and legislation to combat organized crime, illegal weapons possession and terrorism. It noted the consequent additional resources required for justice and policing, an Assistant Secretary-General position to head the new pillar, increasing the number of international judges and prosecutors and additional detention facilities. It recommended that KFOR regularly provide detailed information on weapons seized so as to enable the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1160(1998) to pursue possible violations.

The mission also recommended that intensified efforts be exerted towards resolving the issue of missing and detained persons (see p. 351). It supported the development of a comprehensive strategy to resolve the complex situation in Mitrovica, and emphasized the need for multi-ethnic initiatives in the social, economic and religious areas to start rebuilding confidence between the communities.

The mission underlined the responsibility of the Kosovo leadership for creating conditions conducive to improving inter-communal relations and promoting reconciliation. It conveyed to all community leaders that the responsibility lay with them clearly and openly to reject violence, extremism and terrorism, and that the majority should ensure respect for the rights of the minority communities. It advised the Kosovo Albanian leadership to be more forthcoming with regard to improving the treatment of the minority communities. In turn, minority communities should realize that there was no alternative to establishing a multi-ethnic society. The mission acknowledged that those communities had legitimate grievances, which it urged UNMIK and KFOR to address, but believed that participation was the only viable future for all communities. The Kosovo Serb community, in particular, should integrate into the structures being set up by UNMIK, rather than attempt to set up parallel ones. UNMIK should enhance its dialogue with the FRY authorities, whose influence in Kosovo was key in the implementation of resolution 1244(1999). Further efforts to ensure full implementation of that resolution remained a high priority of the Council.

The mission's report was presented to the Council on 19 June [meeting 4331] and debated on 22 June [meeting 4335], during the Council's consideration of the Secretary-General's June report on UNMIK (see p. 353).

Further developments

Security Council consideration (July, August, September). The Security Council, at its meetings on 26 July [meeting 4350] and 28 August [meeting 4359] and a private meeting on 17 September [meeting 4373], continued to review the political and security developments in Kosovo and the effects on it of the security situation in FYROM.

At the July meeting, the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations informed the Council that, in terms of implementing the Constitutional Framework, UNMIK was continuing to determine its provisions and to prepare for the transfer of authority after the elections. Specifically, UNMIK's focus was on the development of the institutions of the executive branch, as they were not spelled out in the Constitutional Framework, and on the support and oversight UNMIK was to provide to those institutions. Preparations for the transition had stressed the "Kosovarization" of senior management and the capacity-building of local staff in administration, procurement, market management policy, budget and finance.

The Under-Secretary-General also touched on relations with Belgrade, which, he said, continued to intensify. The appointment of Serbia's Deputy Prime Minister as the Coordinator for Kosovo added a new dimension to that relationship. Those relations were being complicated, however, by the increasingly direct activity of the authorities of FRY and Serbia in Kosovo, including attempts by the Federal Committee for Kosovo to establish its own executive functions and business registration activities in Kosovo, as well as the opening of regional offices without UNMIK consent. An additional complicating factor was the humanitarian convoy organized on 14 July by the Kosovo Albanian party, PDK.

In his briefing of the Council at the August meeting, the Under-Secretary-General said that UNMIK was finalizing the structure of the institutions of provisional self-government, in which the JIAS departments would be streamlined into a more manageable number of government ministries. To build political consensus on the future structures, the Special Representative consulted the local leadership, who had expressed support for the streamlining. Along with preparations at the central level, the consolidation of municipal structures continued, with further efforts to devolve authority to municipalities. He informed the Council that relations with Belgrade had improved. A step forward was the 15 August meeting between the Special Representative, the KFOR Commander and Serbia's Deputy Prime Minister, at which the Special Representative reiterated the need to implement resolution 1244 (1999) in all of Kosovo and to ensure that no parallel security and administrative structures were in place, especially in Mitrovica and northern Kosovo. UNMIK was currently exploring administrative ways to improve working relations with FRY's Joint Coordination Centre for Kosovo. In keeping with the parties' agreement to meet regularly, they held another meeting near Pristina on 21 August.

At the private meeting on 17 September, the Council was briefed by Serbia's Deputy Prime Minister, who was also head of FRY's Coordination Centre for Kosovo. He expressed concern about the continuing violence in Kosovo, the very small number of displaced persons returning to the province and the certification of extremist parties. He appealed for cooperation between UNMIK and FRY authorities along the lines of the cooperation developed between KFOR and Yugoslav authorities in the GSZ (see p. 347).

Communication. On 25 July [S/2001/740], the FRY Foreign Minister, in a letter addressed to the Special Representative, complained that the "Guidelines for visits of government officials and political entity representatives from the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia" to Kosovo, adopted by UNMIK and conveyed to him on 17 July, were likely to impede rather than facilitate visits of government officials and political party representatives. The formalities required, including conditions for approval and periods for the submission of requests for visits, contained serious restrictions that implied relations between sovereign States, which were clearly inappropriate for visits by individuals from the rest of FRY to Kosovo and Metohija, an integral part of FRY and its constituent Republic of Serbia. Those measures were not conducive to fruitful cooperation with the international community. The Foreign Minister asked the Special Representative to reconsider the Guidelines, and expressed FRY's readiness to settle that and other matters by an agreement on cooperation with, and on the status of, UNMIK.

Report of Secretary-General (October). In his October report on UNMIK [S/2001/926], the Secretary-General noted that, despite PDK's initial reticence in respect of the Constitutional Framework, all major Kosovo Albanian political forces appeared to have lent their support to important political and security initiatives and crucial legislation to combat terrorism and organized crime.

On the sensitive issue of the Framework for Return of Kosovo Serbs, the stated preference of the Kosovo Albanian members of the Interim Administrative Council was for that return process to start after the November elections. In public statements, however, they acknowledged the role of the Kosovo Serb community in Kosovo's future, marking a significant departure from the previously held position of the main political parties. They moreover joined UNMIK in calling on the Kosovo Serb community to register and participate in the November elections and agreed that special measures had to be taken to protect the Kosovo Serb community and guarantee its presence in Kosovo.

The political engagement of the Kosovo Serb communities was an ongoing challenge, as their political entities continued to look to Belgrade for sponsorship and direction. The communities remained divided and reluctant to participate in the administrative structures. Progress in incorporating minority communities in the municipal assemblies and related structures was mixed, although recent advances were noted, particularly the assumption of seats in the Pristina Municipal Assembly by three Kosovo Serb appointees.

Ethnically motivated violence against Kosovo minority communities continued, including an increase in the number of attacks at the beginning of August and of September. Nevertheless, freedom of movement of minority communities incrementally improved, following UNMIK's full assumption of operational responsibility for the bus lines, hitherto sponsored by UNHCR, and for the "freedom of movement" trains between key Kosovo communities. The number of incidents involving the use of weapons remained alarming. UNMIK and KFOR continued to eliminate unauthorized weapons in Kosovo and, in a Kosovo-wide operation, KFOR continued to confiscate weapons and seek out suspected members of armed groups. Following a number of apparently politically motivated criminal incidents, including the attempted assassination of an LDK politician in Srbica (Mitrovica region), UNMIK re-established the Political Violence Task Force to coordinate response to any such future attempts.

UNMIK worked with KFOR to reduce the impact on FYROM of ethnic Albanian armed groups operating from Kosovo and to sever possible ties between radical elements in Kosovo and the so-called National Liberation Army operating in FYROM (see p. 372). More than 1,200 people had been detained and processed under regulation 2001/10 on the prohibition of unauthorized border/boundary crossings. KFOR reported no evidence of any involvement of the Kosovo Protection Corps in FYROM. UNHCR estimated that 26,000 refugees from FYROM remained in Kosovo as at 30 September, mainly in the Gnjilane region. UNMIK was increasingly concerned about the potential impact on inter-ethnic relations of ethnic Albanian refugees from FYROM taking up residence in Kosovo. It feared that the presence of those refugees in the Gnjilane and Prizren regions, where the majority were interspersed among mixed and minority communities, could affect areas being considered for minority returns.

Substantial progress had been made in the preparations for the transfer of authority to the institutions of provisional self-government. On 13 September, the Special Representative promulgated regulation 2001/19 on the Executive Branch, setting out the functions and competencies of the ministries of the provisional self-government. Work was under way to streamline the 20 JIAS departments into 10 ministries, covering the executive functions listed in chapter 5 of the Constitutional Framework. The regulation also defined the functions and responsibilities of the senior civil service of the provisional institutions of self-government and laid out general principles for its establishment, including a requirement that its composition should generally reflect the participation of Kosovo's various communities in the Assembly.

UNMIK continued preparations for the elections to the Kosovo Assembly. Voter and civil registrations were conducted from 30 July to 22 September. New Kosovo Albanian registrants totalled 23,940, while new minority community registrants (mainly Kosovo Serbs) totalled 69,349. In Serbia proper, 98,380 people registered, and 5,873 in Montenegro. Mail-in registration applications numbered 58,456. The institution-building pillar estimated that over 170,000 new registrants from non-Albanian Kosovo communities had registered, some 150,000 of whom were Kosovo Serbs.

To encourage participation of all communities in the electoral process and in the ensuing institutions of provisional self-government, the institution-building pillar established a special task group with five mobile teams to reach out to Kosovo Serbs and communities of internally displaced persons currently living in and outside Kosovo. A call on Kosovo Serbs to register by FR Yugoslavia's President and by Serbia's Prime Minister at the end of August gave momentum to the process, triggering an average daily registration of 3,000 to 4,000 Kosovo Serbs.

Between 22 June and 20 July, 33 political entities applied for certification, of which 25 had so far been certified by the Central Election Commission. An estimated 12,000 to 14,000 candidates were expected to run for office. The Commission had adopted electoral rules covering the role of municipal election commissions, the status of observers during the electoral process, the issue of candidate registration and equitable media access for political entities. The Commission had also determined that one third of the candidates in the first two thirds of the registration list should be women. The institution-building pillar re-established the Political Party Consultative Forum, which had proved effective in disseminating election information for the 2000 municipal elections [YUN 2000, p. 367]. OSCE continued its educational project, "Voters' voices", to hear voters' concerns about Kosovo-wide issues.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 5 October [meeting 4388], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/27 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the report of the Secretary-General and commends the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the commander of the international security presence (KFOR) for their ongoing efforts to implement fully resolution 1244(1999).

The Council welcomes the elections to be held on 17 November as a basis for the establishment of democratic self-governing institutions as specified in the Constitutional Framework for Provisional Self-Government, under which the people of Kosovo, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, will enjoy substantial autonomy in accordance with resolution 1244 (1999). It emphasizes the responsibility of Kosovo's elected leaders to respect fully the final status provisions of resolution 1244(1999). It reaffirms its commitment to the full implementation of resolution 1244(1999), which remains the basis for building Kosovo's future.

The Council supports the continuing efforts by the United Nations Mission in Kosovo and KFOR to improve public security, including through the confiscation of weapons and the package of legislation to combat violence, and to facilitate the return of displaced Serbs and members of other communities. It calls on Kosovo Albanian leaders to actively support these efforts to promote security and return, and to combat extremism, including terrorist activities. It further calls on all Kosovo leaders to publicly condemn violence and ethnic intolerance. It calls on them to exert all their influence and assume their responsibility for actively ensuring that the campaign and the elections are peaceful, democratic and inclusive. It stresses the need for proper organization and adequate security for the elections on 17 November, and welcomes continuing steps taken in that regard.

The Council calls on all women and men of Kosovo to vote in the elections of 17 November. This will provide for the broadest possible representation of views in the institutions of the provisional self-government. The Council commends the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, particularly President Kostunica, for their encouragement to the Kosovo Serb community to register, which confirms the multi-ethnic character of Kosovo, and calls on them to also actively encourage the fullest possible participation in the vote. It underlines the importance, for the Kosovo Serb community, to integrate in the structures set up by the Mission. It encourages the further development of a constructive dialogue between UNMIK and the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

The Security Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications. FRY's President, in a 6 November letter [S/2001/1051], drew the Secretary-General's attention to the FRY-UNMIK joint document known as the Common Document, signed the previous day, defining issues and cooperation between FRY and UNMIK for the consistent and comprehensive implementation of resolution 1244(1999). The President noted that the Document included agreement on provisions related to the judiciary and to the police in the Serb-majority areas, without which the Document would not have been complete. The President said he was convinced that implementation of the Document, together with the establishment of the related high-ranking working group, would ensure better communication and open institutional cooperation between UNMIK, FRY and Serbia to resolve accumulated problems in Kosovo and Metohija, in compliance with resolution 1244(1999) and FRY's territorial integrity and sovereignty. He also referred to his and Serbia's call on Kosovo Serbs to take part in the 17 November elections, which he believed was in their best interest.

In a 6 November statement [S/2001/1081], the EU welcomed the 3 November call on Kosovo Serbs to participate in the 17 November elections and the signing on 5 November of the UNMIK-FRY joint document.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 9 November [meeting 4409], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2001/34 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the progress made in preparing the Kosovo-wide elections on 17 November 2001 and calls on the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and all parties concerned to continue to strive for full implementation of resolution 1244(1999) of 10 June 1999. It further calls upon all women and men of Kosovo, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, to vote.

The Council welcomes the helpful role played by the President of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the Governments of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the Republic of Serbia in recommending Kosovo Serb participation in the elections. Participation will allow them to take part in shaping Kosovo's multi-ethnic future.

The Council welcomes the signing on 5 November 2001 of the UNMIK-FRY Common Document by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the Special Representative of the President of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the Government of the Republic of Serbia. This document is consistent with resolution 1244(1999) and the Constitutional Framework for Provisional Self-Government in Kosovo.

The Council reaffirms the statement of its President of 5 October 2001. It encourages the further development of a constructive dialogue between the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo and the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. It emphasizes the responsibility of the provisional institutions of self-government and all concerned to respect fully the final status provisions of resolution 1244(1999). It underlines its continued commitment to the full implementation of resolution 1244(1999), which remains the basis for building Kosovo's future.

Transitional arrangements

The Special Representative, reporting to the Security Council on 5 October [meeting 4387], said that UNMIK was moving into a determining phase of interim administration in Kosovo. After the November elections, its role of direct administrative responsibility would evolve into one of oversight. UNMIK would transfer many of its interim administrative responsibilities to the provisional institutions of self-government, but would continue closely to monitor and support those institutions to ensure compliance with resolution 1244(1999), the Constitutional Framework and other relevant UNMIK regulations. During that period, its overarching mandate would remain the same, as would the Special Representative's ultimate authority.

In accordance with UNMIK regulation 2001/19, ten ministries would compose the Executive Branch of the provisional self-government (see p. 357). One of the ministers would come from the Kosovo Serb community and one from the non-Albanian community. To lay the groundwork for the transfer of responsibility to the ministries, the JIAS departments were merged into transitional administrative departments, whose composition reflected the distribution of responsibilities set out in regulation 2001/19. From 3 October until the certification of the general elections, UNMIK would continue to consolidate the transitional administrative departments, while preparing for their separation into provisional self-government ministries and reserved UNMIK structures. Also on 3 October, the function of "Co-heads" ceased and all Co-heads were given leave with pay until 17 November.

As part of the transition, the Kosovo Transitional Council concluded its activities on 2 October, but the Interim Administrative Council would continue to operate until the date of the transfer of powers to the provisional institutions. Functional responsibility for the administration of Kosovo would be divided between UNMIK and the provisional institutions of self-government. The transfer once made, the UNMIK structures and the provisional institutions of self-government would become separate and distinct entities. The future Assembly, however, would be able to pass legislation only within the transferred areas of responsibility.

The Executive Branch would consist of the Office of the Prime Minister and the Ministries of Finance and Economy; Trade and Industry; Education, Science and Technology; Culture, Youth and Sports; Health, Environment and Spatial Planning; Labour and Social Welfare; Transport and Communications; Public Services; and Agriculture, Forestry and Rural Development. The Ministers would be political appointees selected by the Prime Minister and confirmed by the Assembly. They would be responsible for setting policy and political direction for the Ministries but would not exercise direct administrative control over them. The Ministers would be assisted by up to five political appointees, one or more of whom would serve as a Vice-Minister, to whom the Minister could delegate authority in the latter's absence. Although most structures associated with JIAS would be absorbed into the Ministries, some, such as law enforcement, the judiciary and emergency preparedness, would remain under UNMIK's immediate control.

International staff members would be placed in the reserved and transferred structures. In the former, they would implement reserved functions, in line with resolution 1244(1999) and chapter 8 of the Constitutional Framework. In addition, a number of international staff members would be seconded to the provisional institutions of self-government, mostly to the Ministries, to oversee and monitor compliance with resolution 1244(1999), the Constitutional Framework and key UNMIK regulations. To that end, a senior international officer would sit next to each Minister to oversee, monitor and advise the Minister.

Other international staff members would sit in actual line management positions within the Ministry, where they would implement certain transferred functions for a limited time under the authority of the local Minister. They would gradually exchange their functional responsibilities for a purely advisory and oversight role as additional qualified Kosovo civil servants were identified and recruited.

Although there would be a clear functional and organizational separation between UNMIK and the provisional institutions of self-government, procedures would be in place to ensure that the Assembly and the Government fully respected resolution 1244(1999) and the Constitutional Framework for Provisional Self-Government.

Kosovo-wide elections

The Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, in his briefing of the Security Council on 27 November [meeting 4430], said that the period leading up to the elections was relatively calm and free of violence. All parties carried out rallies throughout Kosovo that were peaceful and that largely adhered to the electoral rules.

Eligible voters totalled 1,250,318 (1,108,787 in Kosovo, 105,159 in Serbia and Montenegro and 36,372 by mail), of whom an estimated 150,000 were Kosovo Serbs. More than 1,300 candidates from 26 political parties contested the elections, including 60 from the Kosovo Serb Return Coalition. The signing of the UNMIK-FRY Common Document (see p. 358) largely made it possible for that Coalition to decide to participate in the elections and to provide its list of candidates. FRY's and Serbia's 3 November endorsement of Kosovo Serb participation in the elections also helped. At the same time, it was agreed that a memorandum of understanding would be signed with the respective commissariats for refugees, enabling UNMIK's OSCE-led institution-building pillar to carry out technical preparations for the elections in Serbia and Montenegro in conjunction with the International Organization for Migration (IOM).

The election for the Assembly went smoothly. There were 13,286 local observers from all communities, as well as several hundred others from the Belgrade-based Centre for Free Elections and Democracy. The overall turnout was 64.3 per cent of Kosovo's 1.25 million registered voters, with an estimated 65 per cent in primarily Kosovo Albanian areas and about 46 per cent in non-Albanian areas. Kosovo Serb participation was patchy, with a higher turnout in the enclaves than in northern Mitrovica.

On 24 November, the Special Representative certified the final results of the vote as follows: the Democratic League of Kosovo (LDK) received 45.65 per cent (359,851 votes); the Democratic Party of Kosovo (PDK), 25.7 per cent (202,622 votes); the Return Coalition, 11.34 per cent (89,388 votes); and the Alliance for the Future of Kosovo (AAK), 7.83 per cent (61,688 votes).

Seven smaller political parties, including three from the minority communities, received enough votes to obtain one seat each in the Assembly: the VATAN Coalition, a coalition of Bosniacs and Gorani; the National Movement for the Liberation of Kosovo (LKCK); the Turkish People's Party of Kosovo (KDTP); the Christian Democratic Party of Kosovo (PSHDK); the Justice Party (PD); the People's Movement of Kosovo (LPK); and the New Democratic Initiative of Kosovo (IRDK), a new Egyptian political party.

On the basis of those results, 14 parties would be represented in the Assembly, 11 through direct elections and 3 with set-aside seats. LDK would be allocated 47 seats; PDK 26; the Return Coalition 22, which included the 10 seats set aside for the Kosovo Serb community in the Constitutional Framework; AAK 8; VATAN 4, including 3 set-aside seats; KDTP 3, including 2 set-aside seats; the Ashkali Albanian Democratic Party 2 set-aside seats; IRDK 2, including 1 set-aside seat; LKCK 1; LPK and PD 1; PSDK 1; and 1 set-aside each for the United Roma Party of Kosovo and the Bosniac Party of Democratic Action of Kosovo.

The Assistant Secretary-General said it was clear from the results that no party would be able to govern alone, since 61 seats in the Assembly were required for a majority. Negotiations had therefore begun on coalition-building.

The Council, in a 19 November press statement by its President [S/2002/160], welcomed the 17 November elections, which were held in peaceful and orderly conditions and with a good turnout of all communities. It was an important step in the implementation of resolution 1244(1999) and would make possible the establishment of democratic institutions of self-government. The Council recalled the responsibility of Kosovo's elected leaders to respect that resolution fully, in particular its final status provisions, and to comply with the Constitutional Framework, which would contribute to building a democratic, pluralist and prosperous future for all of Kosovo's communities.

Establishment of provisional institutions of self-government

In a later report on UNMIK [S/2002/62], the Secretary-General stated that, since no party gained enough seats in the Assembly to govern alone, attention was focused on forming a coalition. The main efforts concentrated on a power-sharing arrangement between the three main Kosovo Albanian parties. On 7 December, UNMIK arranged a meeting between Mr. Rugova, leader of LDK, and Mr. Thaci, leader of PDK. Representatives of foreign Governments also hosted meetings with the main party representatives in the Assembly.

On 10 December, the Assembly held its inaugural session, at which both the seven-member presidency of the Assembly and the President of Kosovo were to be elected; the latter would then nominate a Prime Minister for endorsement by the Assembly. However, PDK did not submit candidates for the two presidency seats reserved for it, and the Assembly elected only its President, Nexhet Daci of LDK, and four other members (one from LDK, two from the Kosovo Serb Return Coalition and one from the United Roma Party). On 13 December, the Assembly met again to elect the President of Kosovo. The only candidate was

Mr. Rugova, who received 49 votes—well short of the 80 votes required.

The Secretary-General also reported that security and freedom of movement for Kosovo minority communities remained a serious concern. On 1 December, KFOR and UNMIK police launched the largest simultaneous weapons search operation, involving 3,000 soldiers from all five multinational brigades, which resulted in the arrest of 12 people and the seizure of an assorted range of weaponry.

Sectoral developments

Kosovo minority communities

The number of persons returning to Kosovo continued to decline. In January, IOM assisted some 430 persons to return voluntarily, while the UNMIK border police reported that some 530 persons had been forcibly returned. The Framework on Return of Kosovo Serbs, adopted in January by the Joint Committee on Returns of Kosovo Serbs in Gracanica, outlined measures for establishing conditions conducive to safe and sustainable return, such as the provision of basic services and effective policing. Consultations on the Framework had begun with Kosovo Albanian political and community leaders, as well as with human rights activists, religious leaders and journalists. To further create conditions conducive to returns, the Joint Committee adopted an action plan for the 10 most advanced potential return locations in Kosovo, which was set in motion by local working groups. The first organized returns began on a small scale, with the voluntary return on 13 August of 53 Kosovo Serbs to the Osojane Valley (Pec region), one of the 10 sites identified in the action plan, followed by the return of 30 more internally displaced persons on 22 August. More returns to Osojane followed and more were expected. Mixed returns began at the end of August in the Leshtar area near Kamenica (Gnjilane region). UNHCR, with funding from the European Agency for Reconstruction and bilateral donors, was providing temporary shelter and basic needs while the returnees reconstructed their houses. Work also continued to facilitate the potential return of members of the Kosovo Roma, Ashkali and Egyptian communities.

However, the non-Albanian communities, particularly the Kosovo Serbs, continued to suffer disproportionately from major crimes and ethnically motivated acts of intimidation, eroding the confidence of minority communities and undermining the Special Representative's efforts to include all of Kosovo's inhabitants in the current administrative structures and in the future self-government. Some progress was made in incorporating Kosovo minority communities at the municipal level. Most Kosovo Turks, Roma, Ashkali, Egyptians and Bosniacs had taken up their reserved seats in the municipal assemblies and had been generally accepted by their Kosovo Albanian colleagues. The participation of Kosovo Serbs, however, had been uneven at best.

To coordinate UNMIK's approach towards engaging the Kosovo Serb community, several priority initiatives were being pursued to address that community's day-to-day concerns, including the allocation of revenues from taxes collected in Kosovo to minority communities; the implementation of employment-generating projects; improved public services and utilities; integration of the 24 local community offices as part of the local administration structure to ensure equal access to public services; and the provision of more educational and health facilities, as well as social welfare benefits. In addition, the OSCE-led institution-building pillar had established the Small Investment Minorities Fund for particularly vulnerable minority groups, which focused on income-generating projects or projects related to health, education and culture.

Multi-ethnic capacity-building was also promoted through the Kosovo Police Service, where 15 per cent of the cadets were from minority communities. In addition, Kosovo Albanians and Kosovo Serbs were cooperating in fire and rescue services and in demining activities. At the end of April, the first two Kosovo Serbs, alongside two Kosovo Turks, were inducted into the Kosovo Protection Corps.

A major advance on the issue of missing persons was the establishment on 19 June of the UNMIK/FRY contact groups on missing persons and detainees, which had since met twice monthly in Pristina and Belgrade. Their work resulted in increased Kosovo Serb participation in the judicial system and support for the UNMIK recruitment campaign in Serbia proper for judges and prosecutors; the development of mechanisms to coordinate administrative and operational support for defence counsels, witnesses and family members; the assistance of Serbian forensic pathologists in the confirmation of post-mortem results; the production of a consolidated list of missing Kosovo Serbs and other minorities; and the development of protocols for joint verification and forensic teams and for the cross-boundary repatriation of identified remains. Another key development was the signing of a memorandum of understanding between UNMIK and the International Commission for Missing Persons on 24 July to begin the process of DNA testing to facilitate the identification of missing persons.

Investigations continued on a number of mass graves in Serbia proper, believed to contain the remains of Kosovo Albanians. UNMIK had been provided with some details on the graves' contents and on recent post-mortem findings.

Regarding the problem of Kosovo Albanian detainees in Serbia proper, discussions were in progress on the possible handing over of their cases to UNMIK for judicial review. Talks were also in progress with the Belgrade authorities about Kosovo Serb detainees in Kosovo, addressing concerns of bias, miscarriage of justice and security.

The main strategy to deal with education issues focused on building a sustainable Kosovo Serb education system, with full recognition of the structures under the Constitutional Framework and maintaining strong ties with educational reforms in Serbia. A delegation headed by the international joint head of the Department of Education visited Belgrade to discuss issues relating to Kosovo Serb schools, teachers' contracts and curricula. The core curriculum would allow the Kosovo Serb community to retain its special syllabus for general and vocational education. The language issue had also come close to a practicable solution: Albanian would be offered as an option in Kosovo Serb schools, but would not be compulsory.

Judicial system and rule of law

A major focus of UNMIK efforts was on improving the quality and functioning of the judiciary in Kosovo. The credentials and performance of current judges and prosecutors were undergoing rigorous assessment, while screening of prospective candidates continued. The institution-building pillar had begun taking steps towards the provision of advocacy and legal aid. A working group was set up to coordinate plans to systematize and expand legal aid and guarantee minority access to it. The problem of access to the judiciary was compounded by difficulties in recruiting non-Albanian Kosovo judges and prosecutors, especially in the light of security threats against those groups. The ombudsperson institution was fully operational and currently investigating cases pertaining to employment disputes, to violations of property rights, social rights and equal access to public services, and to discriminatory practices.

The institution-building pillar, UNMIK police and the Department of Justice were jointly endeavouring to bring the practices and procedures of the Kosovo law enforcement and judicial authorities in line with international human rights standards. It established a working group with the Department of Justice to implement the recommendations set out in its Six-month Review of the Criminal Justice System. A review of the criminal code, juvenile law and commercial legislation in Kosovo was under way. The Kosovo Law Centre was cooperating with the University of Pristina Law Faculty in the implementation of academic reform and development of the law curriculum.

The creation of the new police and justice pillar (see p. 348) coincided with robust measures by UNMIK to bolster the legislative basis for prosecuting serious crime, including terrorism and organized crime. On 24 May, the Special Representative signed regulation 2001/10 on the prohibition of unauthorized border/boundary crossings, which came into effect on 4 June, together with regulation 2001/7 on the authorization of possession of weapons in Kosovo, following a month-long amnesty. Other initiatives included the elaboration of legislation to combat terrorism, the creation of more robust mechanisms for detaining alleged criminals, and implementation of systems to make the criminal prosecution institutions more just.

Key to UNMIK efforts to improve the justice system were its activities, through the Prosecution Services and Court Administration (PSCA), to coordinate and implement local judiciary reform. Currently employed in local courts and other non-correctional judicial institutions were 325 local judges, with 51 prosecutors plus a further 617 lay judges and about 1,000 operational support staff. PSCA developed a comprehensive inspection system to ensure the judiciary's independence and impartiality. Administrative direction 2001/4, issued on 11 May, established the Judicial Inspection Unit to conduct inspections, audits and investigations within the judicial system.

On the legislative front, three key regulations were signed on measures against organized crime, on cooperative witnesses and on the protection of injured parties and witnesses in criminal proceedings. Work started on refurbishing a witness protection office; a witness protection director was appointed, who had begun developing a witness protection programme. Progress was also made in forming the Kosovo Organized Crime Bureau. On 25 August, regulation 2001/18 on the establishment of a detention review commission for extrajudicial detention based on executive orders was promulgated, providing a mechanism for the review of extrajudicial detentions based on such orders, additional procedural protection and enhanced transparency.

The Department of Justice continued its recruitment efforts to increase the number of international judicial personnel, currently comprising eight international judges and six international prosecutors. An additional four judges and four prosecutors were under recruitment and, in August, an international prosecutor was appointed to the Office of the Public Prosecutor.

To raise the quality of the domestic judicial system, the Kosovo Judicial and Prosecutorial Council began the first disciplinary hearings in mid-September against local judges and prosecutors, stemming from investigations by the Judicial Inspection Unit. Progress was also made in the selection of judges and prosecutors, establishment of codes of conduct, judicial evaluations and the bar examination.

A more complex prison infrastructure was developing: five detention centres and two prisons were in operation and housed 664 inmates. The quick-build detention facility project to provide an additional 200 beds was proceeding, together with the refurbishment of Dubrava prison, providing another 300 beds. The construction of a special secure unit at Dubrava prison for high-risk prisoners was nearing completion. The Department of Justice had also begun implementing basic programmes in education and vocational training in the Lipljan and Dubrava prisons. Two urgent priorities were the development of a parole and probation service and addressing the needs of mentally ill inmates.

Communication. On 26 April [S/2001/428], the EU issued a statement welcoming the decision by Serbia's Supreme Court to release 145 Kosovo Albanians of the so-called Djakova/Djakovica group, sentenced in May 2000 to prison terms of between seven and 13 years for acts of terrorism allegedly carried out during the NATO campaign in 1999. The EU expected Serbia to complete the review of the remaining cases as rapidly as possible in order to correct the injustices of the Milosevic era.

Economic reconstruction and development

Through the UNMIK economic reconstruction pillar, Kosovo's emergency reconstruction needs had been largely met, so that emphasis began shifting towards developing economic sustainability. International donors, led by the EU and its member States, the United States and Japan, continued to support Kosovo's development drive. The 2001 Kosovo consolidated budget sought 700 million deutsche mark (DM) in new commitments to fund public reconstruction and investment programme activity, of which some DM 381 million had been committed by the end of March.

Meanwhile, domestically generated revenue increased as tax collection improved. That was achieved through UNMIK's tax policy, notified to FRY in February, under which tax collection points were set up on 15 April along Kosovo's borders and boundary lines, where a 15 per cent sales tax was levied on all saleable goods (except wheat, flour, fruit and vegetables) and an excise tax on alcohol, cigarettes and fuel. A 10 per cent customs duty was also levied, except for goods originating in FYROM and the rest of FRY. Despite efforts to explain the legality and necessity of the tax collection points to the public, the Kosovo Serb population interpreted their emplacement as compromising FRY's sovereignty and Security Council resolution 1244(1999). At the end of May, FRY authorities, in a joint statement signed with UNMIK's economic reconstruction pillar, agreed to the tax collection points along the administrative boundary line in northern Kosovo. By October, 90 per cent of the official commercial traders were reporting to tax collection offices in Mitrovica, approaching the level of compliance in the rest of Kosovo. Businesses in northern Kosovo were also registering with UNMIK to pay tax. As part of the strategy for creating a sustainable tax system for Kosovo, a 15 per cent value added tax (VAT) on most goods and services to replace the previous sales tax of the same rate came into effect in July. As donor funding tapered off, VAT would become the main tax in Kosovo and was expected to support growth in the export sector.

In the private sector, efforts were made to attract investment and foster industry through commercialization projects. Some 58 commercialization tenders had been issued, for about half of which bids had been received. Extra investment had come into Kosovo as a result of the commercialization process. The economic reconstruction pillar made progress in creating a banking sector. The Banking and Payments Authority of Kosovo approved two new branches for the New Bank of Kosovo in Orahovac (Prizren region) and Djakovica (Pec region). On 1 September, the Micro Enterprise Bank opened a branch in the "Confidence Zone" in Mitrovica.

Progress was also made in the communications and transportation sectors. Under a project to upgrade the communications network, transmission links were restored in many municipalities. A new digital telephone exchange, with a capacity of 23,000 lines, was installed in Pristina and the extension of the mobile network was continuing. Improvements in the transportation and communications infrastructure had also facilitated economic development and interaction between the different areas. Pristina airport was undergoing expansion and improvement of services. The experimental Pristina-Pec passenger train service had become permanent and freight rail traffic between FYROM and Kosovo had been running with increased frequency and payload. Work was also ongoing to improve Kosovo's power supply.

UNMIK police

At the end of 2001, UNMIK's police strength stood at 4,465 from 24 countries, out of the 1999 authorized strength of 4,718 [YUN 1999, p. 360]. Its priorities remained to increase success in solving serious crimes, in particular ethnically and politically motivated crimes. Work continued to reduce non-critical policing functions to allow an increased concentration of resources on core police priorities. Greatly helping that effort was the entry into force on 25 April of legislation on the operation of security service providers, which would free up UNMIK police resources.

With the launching in May of the police and justice pillar, the UNMIK police and the Department of Judicial Affairs were realigned into a single structure. That structure, headed by a Deputy Special Representative, who assumed duty on 16 August, had as its objectives to: consolidate a law and order structure that was responsive to peacekeeping and peace-building objectives and contributed to the promotion of the rule of law institutions in Kosovo; maintain effective international control and oversight over police and justice activities during the transition period; increase the short-term impact of law and order efforts through enhanced coordination of information and work; enable effective police and judicial response against destabilizing serious criminal activity in Kosovo; and establish an unbiased judicial process through initial international participation and reform of the judicial system.

The police and justice pillar would oversee the planned expansion of the Kosovo Police Service (KPS) from the current target of 4,000 police officers to a total of 6,000 by the end of 2002. The focus of training activities would shift from basic training to more supervisory and special training, anticipating the handover strategy of supervisory responsibility by UNMIK police to the KPS officers.

Communications. On 16 March [S/2001/238], Zimbabwe, a police-contributing country to UNMIK, informed the Security Council President that the United Kingdom had constrained Zimbabwe's efforts to deliver arms and ammunition to its civilian police in Kosovo, because British Airways, the only airline flying to Kosovo, refused to transport them. The reason given for the airline's refusal was that it was consistent with the British Government's current policies on the Government of Zimbabwe. Zimbabwe felt that UN peacekeeping operations should not be held hostage to bilateral relations between Member States. It asked that the Secretary-General bring the matter to the attention of relevant UN authorities with a view to its speedy resolution.

The United Kingdom replied on 20 March [S/2001/260] that that was the first time it had heard of the matter. Its investigation revealed that British Airways, a private company totally independent of the British Government, had informed Zimbabwe of its inability to carry the equipment in question because of the United Kingdom embargo on arms exports to Zimbabwe and concerns over their transport across London, but had suggested alternative carriers. The United Kingdom said it was unlikely that its arms embargo would have applied in that case, and its Acting High Commissioner, when informed of the matter, had advised that it appeared to be a minor, practical problem and he was ready to find a solution if contacted. No subsequent contact was made by Zimbabwe's Foreign Ministry or police. The United Kingdom remained open to discussing the matter directly with the Zimbabwe authorities and in no way wished to obstruct Zimbabwe's participation in UNMIK.

UNMIK financing

In June, the General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's report on UNMIK financial performance for the period 10 June 1999 to 30 June 2000 [A/55/724], the proposed budget for UNMIK's maintenance for the period 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002 and ACABQ's related observations and recommendations [A/55/874/Add.6]. On 14 June [meeting 103], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/55/663/Add.1], adopted resolution 55/227 B without vote [agenda item 133].

Financing of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1244 (1999) of 10 June 1999 regarding the establishment of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo,

Recalling its resolution 53/241 of 28 July 1999 on the financing of the Mission and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 55/227 A of 23 December 2000,

Acknowledging the complexity of the Mission,

Reaffirming the general principles underlying the financing of United Nations peacekeeping operations as stated in General Assembly resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973 and 55/235 of 23 December 2000,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolution of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo as at 30 April 2001, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 202.4 million United States dollars, representing 24 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission to the period ending 30 June 2001, notes that some 20 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

5. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

6. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

7. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

8. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Mission;

9. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, in particular paragraph 9, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

10. Expresses concern about the high level of unliquidated obligations in the Mission as at 30 June 2000;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to improve the timeliness and accuracy of the expenditure data for the Mission;

12. Approves, on an exceptional basis, the special arrangements for the Mission with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing formed units and/or logistic support to the Mission shall be retained beyond the period stipulated under financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Mission against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Mission;

15. Decides to appropriate the amount of 413,361,800 dollars gross (385,256,870 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002, inclusive of the amount of 12,098,009 dollars gross (10,617,193 dollars net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the amount of 1,263,791 dollars gross (1,134,877 dollars net) for the United Nations Logistics Base, to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the levels set out in General Assembly resolution 55/235, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolution 55/236 of 23 December 2000, the scale of assessments for the year 2001 to be applied against a portion thereof, that is, 206,680,900 dollars gross (192,628,435 dollars net), which is the amount pertaining to the period ending 31 December 2001, and the scale of assessments for the year 2002 to be applied against the balance, that is, 206,680,900 dollars gross (192,628,435 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 30 June 2002;

16. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 15 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 28,104,930 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 July 2001 to 30 June 2002;

17. Decides further that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 15 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 65,272,000 dollars gross (57,860,300 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 2000, in accordance with the composition of groups as set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989 and as adjusted by the Assembly in subsequent relevant resolutions and decisions for the ad hoc apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations, the latest of which were resolution 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and decisions 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999 for the period 1998-2000, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999;

18. Decides that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 65,272,000 dollars gross (57,860,300 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 30 June 2000 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations in accordance with the scheme set out in paragraph 17 above;

19. Emphasizes that no peacekeeping mission shall be financed by borrowing funds from other active peacekeeping missions;

20. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to take additional measures to ensure the safety and secu-

riety of all personnel under the auspices of the United Nations participating in the Mission;

21. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

22. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo".

ANNEX

Special arrangements with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations

1. At the end of the twelve-month period provided for in financial regulation 4.3, any unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question relating to goods supplied and services rendered by Governments for which claims have been received or which are covered by established reimbursement rates shall be transferred to accounts payable; such accounts shall remain recorded in the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo until payment is effected.

2. In addition:

(a) Any other unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question owed to Governments for provision of goods and services rendered but not yet verified, as well as other obligations owed to Governments, for which claims have not yet been received shall remain valid for an additional period of four years following the end of the twelve-month period provided for in financial regulation 4.3;

(b) Claims received during this four-year period as well as approved verification reports shall be treated as provided for under paragraph 1 of the present annex, if appropriate;

(c) At the end of the additional four-year period, any unliquidated obligations shall be cancelled and the then remaining balance of any appropriations retained therefor shall be surrendered.

The Assembly further decided on 24 December that the item on UNMIK financing would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-sixth (2002) session (decision 56/464) and that the Fifth Committee should consider the item at that session (decision 56/458).

International security presence (KFOR)

During the year, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council, in accordance with resolution 1244(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 353], reports on the activities of KFOR, also known as Operation Joint Guardian, covering the period 23 November 2000 to 31 October 2001 [S/2001/52, S/2001/205, S/2001/333, S/2001/465, S/2001/578, S/2001/707, S/2001/832, S/2001/910, S/2001/1002, S/2001/1131]. Two later reports covered activities during the remainder of the year [S/2002/122, S/2002/183]. As at 31 December, the force, which operated under NATO leadership, comprised 38,500 troops from all NATO countries, as well as from non-NATO countries.

KFOR continued to uncover and confiscate significant amounts of weapons, ammunition and explosives, ranging from rifles to rockets and mines, during search operations. As at December, the total number of weapons destroyed under the weapons destruction programme stood at 10,132. The programme, temporarily suspended to allow repairs to be made to the destruction facility, was scheduled to resume in January 2002. KFOR continued to support UNMIK in the restoration of law and order. From mid-April, KFOR had to deal with public disorder in Mitrovica and northern Kosovo, in reaction to the implementation of the UNMIK excise and sales tax collection policy (see p. 363). On 18 May, it carried out jointly with UNMIK a search operation in Pec that resulted in the arrest of 26 persons and the confiscation of large amounts of weapons, documents and computer hardware and software. KFOR forces continued to provide appropriate control of Kosovo's internal boundaries, external borders and recognized crossing points. In reinforcing its presence along the border with FYROM, KFOR interdicted the movement of personnel and weapons into and out of the northern part of FYROM and between Albania and Kosovo. At the end of August, KFOR established mobile weapons collection teams close to the border with FYROM to collect weapons and screen suspected members of the National Liberation Army.

On 17 August, the KFOR Commander signed temporary operating procedures with FRY setting conditions for future cooperation and coordination on ending the conflict in the GSZ, following the North Atlantic Council's decision on the relaxation of the Zone (see p. 347). KFOR also supported UNMIK and OSCE during the Kosovo-wide elections on 17 November.

KFOR continued to provide regular assistance on request to international organizations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) throughout Kosovo and to provide framework security in support of UNMIK police operations targeting organized crime, prostitution and smuggling. In addition, it continued to support safe conditions for minority returns. On 9 May, the KFOR Commander promulgated a directive, "KFOR and KPC (Kosovo Protection Corps)—Partners for the Future", setting out guidelines for the future relationship between them.

Sanctions against FRY

On 14 June [S/2001/592], FRY requested the Security Council to terminate the prohibitions relating to the shipment of arms imposed against it by resolution 1160(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 369]. It said that, since all the reasons that had led to the imposition of the prohibitions specified in paragraph 8 of that resolution no longer existed, FRY expected a favourable review of its request.

On 6 September [S/2001/849], the Secretary-General informed the Council that, since the adoption of resolution 1160(1998), the political and security situation in the region had changed considerably. The new FRY authorities were cooperating constructively with the international community in efforts to bring peace and stability to the Balkan region. The Council, in statement S/PRST/2001/8 (see p. 350), had welcomed the close contact between FRY and UNMIK and KFOR and stressed the importance of dialogue between Kosovo political leaders and FRY. Accordingly, he believed that FRY had complied with the provisions of resolution 1160(1998); the Council might therefore wish to reconsider the prohibitions in paragraph 8 of that resolution.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 10 September [meeting 4366], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1367 (2001), based on a draft [S/2001/854] prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1160(1998) of 31 March 1998, 1199(1998) of 23 September 1998 and 1203(1998) of 24 October 1998, and reaffirming, in particular, its resolutions 1244(1999) of 10 June 1999 and 1345(2001) of 21 March 2001,

Noting with satisfaction that the conditions listed in paragraph 16 (a) to (e) of its resolution 1160(1998) have been satisfied,

Noting, in that respect, the letter of the Secretary-General dated 6 September 2001,

Noting further the difficult security situation along Kosovo's administrative boundary and parts of the border of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and emphasizing the continuing authority of the Secretary-General's Special Representative as head of the international civil presence and of the Commander of the international security presence (KFOR) to restrict and strictly control the flow of arms into, within and out of Kosovo, pursuant to resolution 1244(1999),

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to terminate the prohibitions established by paragraph 8 of resolution 1160(1998);
2. Decides further to dissolve the Committee established by paragraph 9 of resolution 1160(1998).

Sanctions Committee final report. In October, the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1160(1998) (Sanctions Committee) submitted a final report covering the Committee's activities from 1 January to 10 September 2001 [S/2001/931].

According to the report, the Committee had approved Bulgaria's request to export 2,000 tons per month of industrial explosives to several mining companies in FRY. Switzerland brought to the Committee's attention the case of an arms shipment to FRY reported in the Chinese press, stating that criminal proceedings had been conducted by the Geneva authorities and two persons were arrested on 13 July 2000 and charged. The Committee approved under the no-objection procedure a request by the United Kingdom to transfer demining equipment to humanitarian demining organizations working for UNMIK.

The Committee drew attention to the Council's mission to Kosovo in June (see p. 354) and its request that KFOR provide detailed information on weapons seized to enable the Committee to pursue any possible violations. The Secretary-General informed NATO's Secretary-General of that request but no such information had been provided to the Committee by 10 September.

The Committee received no reports on actual violations or alleged violations of sanctions measures from States and relevant regional and international organizations. It sought and received additional information on the case of violations under investigation by the Geneva authorities. Reports on the activities of KFOR and the Stabilization Force in Bosnia and Herzegovina contained no information on violations.

Arrest of Slobodan Milosevic

The Secretary-General, in a press statement on 2 April [SG/SM/7761], said that the arrest of Slobodan Milosevic, former FRY President, was an important step in the healing process in the Balkans and commended the FRY authorities for that decisive action. The Secretary-General noted that the FRY authorities had an obligation to cooperate with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY) and urged them immediately to discuss with the Tribunal how that cooperation could be extended.

In a press release issued on 28 June [SG/SM/7870], the Secretary-General welcomed the decision of the FRY authorities to transfer Mr. Milosevic to ICTY in The Hague, saying it was a victory for accountability over impunity. He hoped that that day would mark a true break with the past and the beginning of a new spirit of co-existence throughout the former Yugoslavia. (For further details, see PART FOUR, Chapter II.)

Relations with Montenegro

The European Council, at its meeting in Stockholm, Sweden (23-24 March) [S/2001/305], among its concluding statements, called on Montenegro and FRY/Serbian authorities to agree on new constitutional arrangements within the federal framework through an open and democratic process in order to contribute to stability in the region.

The EU, in a 23 April statement [S/2001/415], welcomed the orderly conduct of the 22 April parliamentary elections in Montenegro, FRY, and looked forward to the formation of a Government that would continue the path of democratic reform. The EU urged the new Montenegrin Government to resume dialogue with Belgrade without delay towards an agreed definition of federal relations. The successful outcome of that dialogue, which should exclude any unilateral action, would enable the EU to continue its political, economic and financial support to Montenegro.

Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia

The situation along the border of the FRY province of Kosovo with the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM), which had been brought to the Security Council's attention in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 384], escalated in 2001 as armed ethnic Albanian insurgent groups launched attacks on FYROM forces across the border. In the FYROM capital of Skopje, on 23 February [A/56/60-S/2001/234], FRY President Vojislav Kostunica and FYROM President Boris Trajkovski signed the "Agreement for the delineation of the borderline between the Republic of Macedonia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia" demarcating the border between their two countries.

The EU, in a 28 February statement of its Presidency [S/2001/203], urged all parties to respect the border demarcation agreement and reiterated its strong attachment to the principle of inviolability of borders, including FYROM's territorial integrity. It also expressed concern about the recent escalation of violence in the border region between FRY/Kosovo and FYROM, particularly in the village of Tanusevci.

The Tanusevci incident, involving the landmine and sniper killing of three FYROM soldiers, was reported to the Council by FYROM in a 4 March letter [S/2001/191], calling for an urgent Council meeting and KFOR action to clear the Kosovo border area near Tanusevci. FYROM's President, at a meeting that included the Prime Minister, the Speaker of the Parliament, the ambassadors of EU and NATO countries and OSCE representatives, also proposed that NATO and the EU support his request for immediate KFOR action, as well as public support for FYROM's self-defence and preservation of its territorial integrity and sovereignty. It was the intention of FYROM's Foreign Minister to present to the Council meeting an action plan for the cessation of violence and lasting stabilization on the Kosovo section of the border with FRY and to prevent a spillover of violence into FYROM.

Action plan

FYROM's Minister for Foreign Affairs, in briefing the Security Council on 7 March [meeting 4289], said that in the past few weeks, his country had been confronted with a serious problem caused by unidentified extremist militant groups stationed on its northern border, which had occupied the village of Tanusevci from where they had been continuously provoking armed incidents; on 4 March, three FYROM soldiers were killed.

The extremists had not put forth their demands or requests, and were holding the local Albanian population hostage, and, as the border belt with Kosovo was inhabited mostly by ethnic Albanians, they were also affecting the inter-ethnic relations in FYROM. Tanusevci was a serious warning that the FYROM border area with Kosovo could be used constantly for provoking those kinds of incidents, thus threatening the peace, security and stability of FYROM and the entire region.

FYROM was undertaking numerous activities to find a peaceful solution in close cooperation with the international community, and had undertaken a measured security response to the provocations. KFOR activities in the initial stage were not as effective as necessary, thus causing additional problems for the operations of FYROM's security forces. However, those cooperation difficulties had been overcome.

To resolve the situation, the Government adopted an action plan to prevent a spillover of the conflict from both sides of the border. Specifically, the plan proposed full observance of Council resolution 1244(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 353]; the immediate establishment of a ground safety area along the entire Kosovo side of the FYROM-Yugoslav border by KFOR and willing countries; the undertaking of urgent actions by KFOR for strict compliance of the provisions related to the movement of military and paramilitary formations, arms shipments and a ban on the move-
