The Central Housing Committee was established as the coordinating board for housing reconstruction, and UNMIK and its partners had agreed on a common approach to reconstruction to maximize the impact of available aid and to ensure fair and transparent distribution. Coordination structures were also being established at the local level. Some 20,000 houses were rebuilt during the year for vulnerable families whose houses had been damaged or destroyed during the conflict. A similar number had been rebuilt by the local population themselves. The new public reconstruction and investment programme 2001-2003 would outline a medium-term road map for donors, refining and building on priorities set in "Kosovo: Reconstruction 2000".

In other sectoral areas, a health facility master plan to guide donors and NGOs in the reconstruction of health-care facilities had been prepared. A $3 million World Bank-funded project was initiated to design a strategy for health-care financing, strengthen the capacity of the health insurance fund, prepare an implementation plan for restructuring the health sector and monitor the impact of social reforms. Significant progress was made in refurbishing and re-equipping health-care institutions throughout Kosovo, including the construction of three mental health centres.

UNMIK, with international agencies, donors and local participants, initiated the formulation of a blueprint for the education system in Kosovo. The World Bank sponsored a project at Pristina University, which included the formulation of new statutes, the introduction of a modern management system and the establishment of a programme for the certification of physicians and lawyers. Some 1.8 million textbooks were printed and distributed to students of all ethnic groups after being screened for content. A school rehabilitation and reconstruction cell was established to oversee the building and rehabilitation of schools.

Efforts to rehabilitate and improve the transport and infrastructure sector had intensified. Eleven projects in various regions had been initiated on facilitating and managing urban traffic, maintaining streets and installing traffic signs and signals. Major road repair and rehabilitation works were undertaken throughout Kosovo, as well as repair to damaged bridges. Significant progress was also made in upgrading Pristina airport.

UNMIK, together with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Bank, was making vigorous efforts to revitalize agricultural activity. A $25 million World Bank-funded project to relaunch farming activities and reorganize veterinary services was initiated. The EU was committing DM 20 million to agricultural projects in 2000.

The development of a non-politicized and efficient civil service for Kosovo remained one of UNMIK's important objectives. Progress was made in developing a professional local civil service at the central and municipal levels. A significant achievement was the smooth transition from the system of stipend payments to salary payments for all public employees paid from the Kosovo consolidated fund. The Institute for Civil Administration, the official training body for the public sector, was formally opened on 20 September.

To encourage the restart of economic activity, manage existing assets and attract new investment, a private sector development strategy was finalized. It included a transparent process to determine ownership of commercial assets and property and to pay fair compensation. To foster the development of the private sector, regulations covering business organizations, foreign investment, sales contracts and secured transactions were to be issued by the end of the year. A regulation on bankruptcy was also in preparation. Extensive efforts to assist the courts to deal with those new regulations and to develop the necessary administrative procedures and registries to implement them were under way. Steps were taken to commercialize viable socially owned enterprises and teams were established to help them attract foreign investment partners and bring them under private management. A programme of technical assistance for small and medium-sized private enterprises was launched to help them draw up business plans, assist with financing and improve management. In addition, a women's business association assisted women to identify and develop opportunities in the private sector.

On 14 August, UNMIK assumed responsibility for and subsequently shut down the Zvecan lead smelter in the Mitrovica region, which was part of the Trepca mining complex. The smelter's operation had resulted in a major health hazard. Clean-up operations were under way and medical facilities had been set up to test levels of lead in the blood of workers and the local population. An initial inspection of the smelter indicated widespread neglect and poor safety and environmental standards. UNMIK administrators would repair or replace safety and production equipment throughout the facility. As part of that effort, up to 2,000 local Trepca workers would be employed over the next year. Most of the $16 million required for Trepca's renovation had already been raised.

Communications. FRY, on 19 July [S/2000/716], requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider UNMIK's intention to take over the metallurgical section of Trepca and the threatened use of force to do so. It said that the question of the ownership of the corporation was complex, with a number of private entities laying claim to it, and should be resolved by an arbitration tribunal or competent court. The takeover would have serious reverberations for the ethnic cleansing of Serbs in Mitrovica, all the more so as the section was a key source of income for the Serbian population of the town. On 14 August [S/2000/801] and 12 September [S/2000/866], FRY lodged a strong protest over the armed attack on and takeover of Trepca by KFOR. It demanded that the Council condemn the takeover and restore the status quo ante so that Trepca and its employees could continue normal work. On 14 September [S/2000/871], FRY advised that over 60,000 litres of sulphuric acid had been released into the Ibar River from a Trepca battery plant. The disaster was illustrative of the tragic consequences of the seizure of Trepca. FRY had requested the United Nations Environment Programme to help relieve the consequences of the disaster and called for the reinstatement of the Trepca management and employees.

International security presence (KFOR)

During the year, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council, in accordance with resolution 1244(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 353], reports on the activities of KFOR, also known as Operation Joint Guardian, covering the period 24 November 1999 to 22 November 2000 [S/2000/50, S/2000/152, S/2000/235, S/2000/318, S/2000/489, S/2000/634, S/2000/814, S/2000/891, S/2000/1024, S/2000/1120, S/2000/1246]. Later reports covered activities in the remainder of the year [S/2001/52, S/2001/205]. As at 10 December, the Force, which operated under NATO leadership, comprised 44,000 troops from all the NATO countries, as well as from non-NATO countries. On 18 April, Lieutenant-General Juan Ortuño assumed command of KFOR from General Klaus Reinhardt; on 16 October, Lieutenant-General Carlo Cabigiosu succeeded Lieutenant-General Ortuño.

KFOR continued to uncover and confiscate caches of weapons, ammunition and explosives during house searches and at traffic control checkpoints. Among the most significant finds were the discovery on 10 May near Glogovac of 2 sagger missiles, 20 rocket-propelled grenade warheads, 7 grenade launchers, a machine gun and ammunition. Most explosives recovered were destroyed in situ. Confiscated weapons were being destroyed as part of the commercial destruction programme.

KFOR continued to work closely with the United Nations Mine Action Coordination Centre and other demining organizations in Kosovo, focusing on the eradication of cluster-bomb units, with ordnance disposal teams destroying bomblets marked during the winter. The Force provided appropriate control of Kosovo's internal and external borders and recognized crossing points, and tightened control of the provincial borders and boundaries to prevent extremists based in Kosovo from operating elsewhere. All but two of the recognized crossing points within each Multinational Brigade into the ground safety zone (see below) had been closed. Although those measures generally appeared to have been effective, KFOR noted a number of incidents relating to illegal border crossings. KFOR also supported UNMIK at all levels of the civilian administration. In March, they established a systematic framework to identify, coordinate and supervise the Kosovo Protection Corps (KPC), established in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 366]. They also continued to ensure KPC's adherence to its civilian mandate. KFOR worked, at the district level, with the appointed civil administrators and provided personnel liaison with UNMIK civil administration officers in each district. KFOR continued to provide humanitarian assistance to international organizations and NGOs throughout Kosovo on a daily basis and on request, with a focus on the distribution of stoves, firewood, fuel, water, shelter kits and construction material. Troops also supported the food distribution efforts of international organizations, protected and escorted refugees and internally displaced persons and assisted NGOs in providing humanitarian aid to remote and isolated minorities and with a spring/summer housing and school construction programme.

Communications. In February [S/2000/139] and May [S/2000/425], FRY complained about violations of its airspace by NATO and SFOR.

Situation in the ground safety zone

In July [S/2000/744], FRY brought to the Security Council's attention the security situation in the ground safety zone (GSZ), the buffer zone that extended 5 kilometres beyond the Kosovo and Metohija administrative border into the rest of FRY, which was seriously threatened by persistent attacks on civilians and police by Albanian terrorists infiltrating from Kosovo and Metohija and often from Albania. Those attacks intensified in June and July, in particular. Heavy weapons were used ever more frequently and more ruthlessly. It was evident that their aim was to destabilize the GSZ. Failure of the international presences to take action had emboldened Albanian terrorists and accounted for the tragic loss of lives and extensive material damage. FRY called on the Council to condemn the attacks and to take effective measures to put an end to them and prevent their spread outside Kosovo and Metohija.

The Secretary-General, in December [S/2000/1196], said that on 22 November the house of the senior FRY representative in Kosovo, Ambassador Vucikevic of the FRY liaison committee with UNMIK, was fire-bombed, resulting in the death of a Serb security guard and injury to three other persons. The following day, a senior LDK politician was murdered in central Pristina. In mid-November, three Serb police officers were killed in the GSZ.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 22 November [meeting 4232], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/35 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its shock at, and strongly condemns, the criminal attacks perpetrated on the home of the head of the liaison committee of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in Pristina on 22 November 2000, as well as on Serbian policemen in the south of Serbia on 21 November 2000, both of which resulted in several deaths and injuries.

The Council calls for an immediate and full investigation to bring the perpetrators to justice.

Fully aware of all the measures already taken to provide security for all inhabitants of that region, the Council calls upon the Kosovo Force and the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo to continue to make all necessary efforts, including along the ground safety zone, to prevent further attacks.

The Council demands that all those concerned refrain from any act of violence, in particular against ethnic minorities, and cooperate with the Force and the Mission.

The Council will continue to follow the matter closely.

Communications. On 27 November [S/2000/1147], the EU condemned the attacks on the Yugoslav representative in Pristina and on the three Serb policemen, which it said were a reminder to the international community that extremist forces, bent on preventing coexistence between communities, were determined to continue their activities against Kosovo Serbs, in spite of resolution 1244(1999), the results of the 28 October municipal elections in Kosovo and the democratic change in FRY since the elections on 24 September.

On the same date [S/2000/1123], FRY President Kostunica warned of the deteriorating situation in the Presevo Valley in the GSZ inside Serbia proper. He said that KFOR and UNMIK had allowed the crossing of large groups of armed Albanian paramilitaries into the zone, forcing lightly armed local police to leave their checkpoints. He hoped the Security Council would act promptly to address the situation and assured it that FRY police and military would not enter the GSZ to fight the terrorists. However, viable conditions for the return of local police to the zone had to be created as soon as possible.

On 6 December [S/2000/1160], FRY said that it had taken urgent diplomatic steps to calm the situation in the GSZ, requesting UNMIK and KFOR to take appropriate measures. However, no measures were being taken to compel the infiltrated armed groups to withdraw and disarm without delay. According to reports, over 1,000 terrorists from Kosovo and Metohija were still in the GSZ, from where they threatened the security of citizens and major routes in southern Serbia, cutting off communications of some tens of thousands of Serbs with other parts of Serbia. Considering the gravity of the situation, FRY requested the Council urgently to consider the question again, condemn the terrorist acts of the Albanian extremists and ask KFOR and UNMIK to take effective measures to compel them to withdraw and to have the GSZ fully respected. The request for an urgent meeting of the Council was reiterated by President Kostunica on 13 December [S/2000/1184].

FRY, in a Declaration on the Principles of the Protection of the National and State Interests of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia [S/2000/1219], adopted by the FRY Government and the interim Government of Serbia at their joint session in Bujanovac on 16 December and submitted for adoption to the Federal Assembly, requested the Council to set the shortest deadline and take measures for an urgent withdrawal of Albanian terrorists from the GSZ. Otherwise it would invoke its legal and legitimate right to solve that problem by itself by resorting to all internationally allowed measures to combat terrorism.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in his 15 December report on UNMIK [S/2000/1196], confirmed that there was an escalation of armed confrontation in mid-November between Serbian security forces and the self-styled Liberation Army of Presevo, Medvedja and Bujanovac (UCPMB) in the GSZ. Initially limited to harassing fire against the Serbian police, the attacks increased in size, duration, sophistication and aggressiveness. On 23 November, three Serb police were killed in attacks some 5 kilometres south-west of Bujanovac, triggering an influx of almost 5,000 displaced persons from the GSZ and other locations into Kosovo.

UNHCR had reported that the internally displaced persons had fled out of fear of being caught between firing lines, and of a general concern about the build-up of police and military forces in Presevo Valley. While ethnic Albanian representatives claimed not to be disturbed by local police from southern Serbia proper, they indicated that the presence of security forces previously stationed in Kosovo served as a major source of intimidation. KFOR responded to armed activity in Presevo Valley, including by mounting successful operations to interdict UCPMB operations financially and logistically. It garnered support among key Kosovo Albanian leaders, encouraging them to exert their influence to moderate the activities of the Albanian extremists. By the beginning of December, the situation had begun to calm, with some 2,000 internally displaced persons returning to their homes.

In early December, the Special Envoy of UNHCR travelled to Belgrade and southern Serbia proper to assess the humanitarian situation. Government officials in Belgrade with whom the Special Envoy met were eager to find a solution to the problem in the Presevo Valley and were committed to the return of internally displaced persons to their homes. They acknowledged that ethnic Albanians had been the victims of social and institutional discrimination and accepted that confidence-building measures, such as the inclusion of Albanians in the local police force and increased representation in political structures, would go a long way towards decreasing tensions and longer-term stability in the region.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

The Security Council met on 19 December [meeting 4249] to consider the Secretary-General's December report on UNMIK [S/2000/1196]. On the same day [meeting 4250], following consultations among its members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/40 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the briefing by Mr. Hédi Annabi on 19 December and the presence of the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia at the meeting.

The Council expresses its grave concern at the situation in certain municipalities in southern Serbia, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, and particularly in the ground safety zone, as defined in the military-technical Agreement referred to in annex II to resolution 1244(1999) of 10 June 1999. It strongly condemns the violent action by ethnic Albanian extremist groups in southern Serbia, and calls for an immediate and complete cessation of violence in this area. The Council reiterates its resolution 1244 (1999) in its entirety.

The Council calls for the dissolution of ethnic Albanian extremist groups. The Council also calls for the immediate withdrawal from the area, and in particular from the ground safety zone, of all non-residents engaged in extremist activities.

The Council welcomes the start of a dialogue between the Serbian and Yugoslav authorities and representatives of the affected communities which could facilitate a lasting settlement to the problem.

In this regard, the Council welcomes the commitment of the Yugoslav authorities to work towards a peaceful settlement, based on democratic principles, and to respect the provisions of resolution 1244 (1999) and the military-technical Agreement, as expressed in the letter dated 13 December 2000 from the President of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to the President of the Security Council.

The Council welcomes specific measures taken by the international security presence to address the problem, including increased surveillance of the border, confiscation of weapons and the disruption of identified and illegal activity within Kosovo in the vicinity of the eastern administrative boundary. It welcomes the constructive dialogue between the Kosovo Force and the Yugoslav and Serbian authorities, including through the Joint Implementation Commission. The Council calls upon the Kosovo Force and the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo to continue to make all necessary efforts to address the problem. The Council also calls on Kosovo Albanian leaders to contribute to the stability of the situation.

The Council welcomes the detailed public statement by the Secretary-General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization of 29 November 2000, and the strong message which this sent to extremist groups in the Presevo-Medvedja-Bujanovac area.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Sanctions against FRY

Sanctions Committee activities

On 27 June [S/2000/633], the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1160(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 369], which imposed an arms embargo on FRY, transmitted to the Council President a report covering its work from 1 January to 31 December 1999. During that period, the Committee had received only one reply (Oman) on measures that States had been requested to institute in meeting their obligations in respect of the prohibitions imposed by the resolution. The Committee had brought to the attention of Bosnia and Herzegovina that it was the only country bordering FRY that had not reported on steps taken to give effect to those prohibitions. It did not approve a request from Bulgaria for the shipment of industrial explosives to FRY, and ruled that the matter of the export of ammunition for M84 tanks from FRY to Kuwait under a 1989 contract did not fall within its mandate. The Committee reminded Albania, as a neighbour of FRY, that it had an important role in ensuring implementation of resolution 1160(1998), in particular the provision requiring States to prevent the sale or supply to FRY, including Kosovo, by their nationals or from their territories, of arms and related materiel and spare parts, and to prevent arming and training for terrorist activities there. The Committee requested the Secretary-General to forward its invitation to UNMIK and KFOR to consider arrangements that would allow them to report on possible violations of the prohibitions.

At several meetings, the Committee considered reports on violations of the prohibitions established by resolutions 1160(1998) and 1199 (1998) [YUN 1998, p. 377]. OSCE had indicated that smuggling from Albania to Kosovo continued.

The Committee reported that its work continued to be affected by the absence of an effective monitoring mechanism and the lack of information on possible violations. The information provided by the Secretariat from public sources on possible violations did not often allow the Committee to forward information to Member States enabling them to launch investigations on possible violations. With a view to assisting and encouraging Governments to implement the arms embargo and other prohibitions, the Committee was contemplating sending a mission to the region, headed by its Chairman.

In a report covering its work from 1 January to 31 December 2000 [S/2001/102], the Committee indicated that it had received no replies concerning measures that States had been requested to institute in meeting their obligations under paragraph 12 of resolution 1160(1998). The Committee approved, under the no-objection procedure, three requests from the United Kingdom for approval to transfer demining equipment to humanitarian demining organizations working for UNMIK in Kosovo.

On 20 June, the Committee drew the Secretary-General's attention to the section of the report of the Council mission to Kosovo on the implementation of resolution 1244(1999) [S/2000/363] (see p. 361). The mission had been requested, among other actions, to review ongoing implementation of the prohibitions imposed by resolution 1160(1998). The mission highlighted the discussions it had held with KFOR on strengthening the monitoring of the arms embargo. The Committee supported the findings contained in the mission's report, in particular that detailed information on KFOR activities in the implementation of resolution 1160(1998) should be provided to the Committee by the NATO Secretary-General on a regular basis.

The UN Department for Disarmament Affairs, replying to a Committee request for advice, said that the spare parts for MI-8 helicopters, reportedly detained on a Bulgarian lorry for lack of a special export permit, could be used for both military and civilian purposes. The Committee received information from FYROM on two incidents of arms trafficking on its territory, and raised no objection to a request from Bulgaria for approval to export the chemical substance pentaerythritol tetranitrate to FRY to be used in the manufacture of medications.

On 5 June, FYROM informed the Committee of violations of the prohibitions under resolution 1160(1998) and of that country's actions to prevent arms trafficking in its territory. The Committee also received several reports on KFOR activities and reports on activities of the Stabilization Force in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Both reported no violations.

EU sanctions

On 31 July [S/2000/753], FRY drew the attention of the Security Council President to the lack of legal basis for the EU sanctions imposed on it and the damage they had caused to the economy and society. Imposed since 1998, those sanctions were without legal grounding in any UN document, violated several provisions of the UN Charter and were contrary to the goals of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 419].

A 30 June EU decision strengthened financial sanctions against FRY. The list of 190 firms in FRY that were allowed transactions with partners in EU member States constituted a flagrant violation of the rights of free movement of goods and capital, discriminated against economic subjects in FRY and violated the rights to life, to work, to development and to education, as well as the right to association of economic and social factors in a sovereign European country. The EU sanctions stopped and hindered FRY's stable and dynamic economic development, caused a rise in unemployment and the standard of living of the population to fall and affected neighbouring countries and all of South-Eastern Europe. FRY called on the Council to declare them illegal and propose that they be lifted urgently. FRY reserved the right to protect its interests and to request material and other indemnity from the EU in court.

On 20 September [S/2000/885], FRY drew attention to the announcement by the EU and the United States that they were ready to lift sanctions on FRY if its voters elected the opposition candidate in the 24 September presidential elections.

The EU announced the lifting of all sanctions against FRY, including the oil and air embargoes, on 11 October, following the presidential elections (see p. 384).

Internal and external conflict

Relations with Montenegro

Slovenia transmitted to the Security Council President on 21 June [S/2000/611] a non-paper entitled "Montenegro and the Balkan crisis", prepared by the Government of the FRY Republic of Montenegro and submitted in the context of the Council's debate on the situation in the Balkans on 23 June. Slovenia said, in its letter of transmittal, that it believed the document could usefully contribute to the understanding of that situation by the general membership of the United Nations.

In the non-paper, Montenegro declared that the policy of destruction, autocracy, confrontation with the international community and self-isolation of the Belgrade leadership was not reconcilable with the democratic choice of the citizens of Montenegro. That leadership was also using all methods to destabilize Montenegro and undermine its choice. Montenegro and the international community were facing the possibility of a new crisis breaking out. It remained committed and open to cooperation with Serbia, which it had offered as a basis for new relations, full equality of the two States and the creation of a common framework for the citizens of the two countries. Montenegro stated that peace, stability and prosperity of the former Yugoslavia and the Balkans depended on establishing new democratic relations in Serbia by organizing free and fair elections; strengthening the political-diplomatic isolation of the current policy and regime in Serbia; and creation of international support to Montenegro in its commitment to democracy, transformation of its economy and integration into all European and international processes. The Government of Montenegro did not accept the leadership of Serbia and its political and diplomatic representatives and services to be the representatives of the policy and interests of Montenegro.

FRY, on 24 June [S/2000/625], protesting the circulation of Montenegro's non-paper, said that it was unacceptable and contrary to the Charter and international law to allow a part of a sovereign country to communicate with the Council. Slovenia's request for the text to be circulated was a direct interference in FRY's internal affairs, which was a dangerous provocation for peace and security in the region and beyond. It was unacceptable for Slovenia to figure as a "representative" of Montenegro, which was an equal federal unit of FRY.

Security Council consideration (23 June). On 22 June [S/2000/617], FRY informed the Security Council President that certain persons would be attending the Council's meeting on 23 June, claiming to represent Montenegro. Considering that Montenegro was part of FRY, allowing any other persons to represent a part of a sovereign territory violated FRY's Constitution and the Charter and was in breach of international law, the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations [YUN 1961, p. 512] and the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations [YUN 1947-48, p. 199]. FRY asked the Council to reject the dangerous precedent and protect the Council's integrity and the Charter.

During the Council's 23 June meeting [S/PV.4164], the President stated that, since it was not possible to reach an understanding in prior consultations, the Council would have to decide on whether to invite the Secretary-General's Special Envoy for the Balkans to participate in the debate. It would also have to decide on requests from a number of Member States and the EU to participate under either rule 37 or rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, and on a similar request from Vladislav Jovanovic, FRY Chargé d'affaires, which referred to neither rule.

The Council, by a vote of 4 in favour, 10 against and 1 abstention, did not adopt a Russian Federation proposal that a single decision be taken on all the requests, considered as a whole. By the no-objection procedure, it invited those Member States that had requested to participate, the Special Envoy for the Balkans and the EU Secretary-General to participate. By a vote of 4 in favour, 7 against and 4 abstentions, Mr. Jovanovic's request was not approved.

Following the vote, China expressed regret regarding the Council's decision. It said that FRY was an important country of the Balkan region and a party to the Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 544]. It did not matter whether or not one agreed with FRY's policy; excluding FRY and not allowing it to speak would not solve the Balkan problem. The Council should not deprive a sovereign State of its right to state its position when it wanted to do so.

Argentina said that its abstention did not imply support for, endorsement of or sympathy for the Belgrade regime, but it had serious doubts regarding the underlying reasons for denying Mr. Jovanovic's participation in the debate.

The Russian Federation said that a very dangerous precedent was being created when States that were unpalatable for political reasons were excluded from participation in the work of the United Nations. The Council meeting on the Balkans without FRY's full participation lost its practical meaning.

On 23 June [S/2000/621], FRY, in protesting the Council's decision, said that, as a country situated in the Balkans, a signatory and a guarantor of the Peace Agreement, as well as a country with whose agreement the international civil and military presences had been deployed in its territory, FRY had more right than any other country to participate in the meeting. The rejection of its request was discriminatory and contrary to the principles of the Charter.

The Special Envoy for the Balkans, briefing the Council, said he believed that the most pressing issue in the region was the question of the future of FRY. There could not be self-sustaining stability in the region if there was not self-sustaining stability in its different parts. In that respect, the situation in FRY gave cause for concern. In his opinion, Yugoslavia's current structures were unsustainable, primarily due to the acute constitutional crisis between the Republic of Montenegro and the federal authorities in Belgrade, where the federal institutions had been grossly misused to exclude the representatives of the elected authorities of Montenegro. They were on a slow but steady collision course. He believed that it was important that the elected authorities in Montenegro be supported in their efforts to pave the way for the new deal they were seeking. Added to that acute constitutional crisis was the unresolved issue of the future status of Kosovo. Although on paper still an integral part of the Republic of Serbia, the reality was different. He failed to see any circumstances under which a peace agreement would not have to include a clear constitutional separation between the two.

The search for peace was handicapped by the fact that key persons in public positions in FRY were refusing to respect indictments that had been issued by ICTY. That situation was dangerous for FRY and the wider region. It was important to recall that, in the Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement, FRY subscribed to the position that persons indicted by the Tribunal and not cooperating with it could not hold public office. What was being demanded of them was no more than what they themselves had previously agreed to demand of others as part of the search for peace in the region, and the sooner the authorities there saw the logic of that, the sooner all could work together to create self-sustaining structures within FRY's borders and as part of the search for self-sustaining stability in the region as a whole.

Communications. On 11 July [S/2000/679], Slovenia forwarded to the Security Council President the text of an 8 July resolution adopted by the Parliament of the FRY Republic of Montenegro on the protection of rights and interests of Montenegro and its citizens. By that resolution, the Parliament declared its intention not to recognize any legal or political act passed by the federal legislative, executive and judicial authorities without participation of its own representatives, or any amendments to the FRY Constitution adopted by the federal Parliament against the majority will of the citizens of Montenegro. The Parliament called on the citizens of Montenegro and Serbia, as well as the international community, to help find peaceful solutions to the problems between Montenegro and the State authorities.

On 18 July [S/2000/724], FRY called the resolution a gross interference in its internal affairs. Slovenia had no right to circulate Montenegro's paper as a Council document. FRY called on the Council to reject the document as it contravened Council procedures and practice.

Earlier, on 11 July [S/2000/749], the Presidents of Croatia, the Czech Republic and Slovenia, in a joint statement following their meeting in Dubrovnik, Croatia, on 10 and 11 July, expressed their disquiet over the latest developments in FRY, especially the constitutional changes adopted by the Yugoslav Parliament, which jeopardized democracy, discriminated between the subjects of the Federation and rejected internationally respected principles. They held that, although the objective of those changes was to abolish the standing of Montenegro, they might in reality lead to FRY's dissolution. The international community should do its utmost to protect the human, civic and constitutional rights of FRY citizens and those of Montenegro, and prevent the current situation from evolving into a new wave of violence. They would deem unacceptable any power-based or confrontational solution the Belgrade regime might seek.

On 13 July [S/2000/692], Slovenia forwarded to the Council President a letter from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Montenegro regarding Montenegro's representation in international relations and an aide-memoire on Montenegro's history, which further clarified some of Montenegro's views on the problem expressed in its earlier document (see p. 381). The aide-memoire said that the authorities in Serbia had never accepted the outcome of the 1997 and 1998 presidential elections in Montenegro and had obstructed the formation of common federal State bodies based on the majority will of the citizens of Montenegro. Instead, they appointed their partisan and political sympathizers, who were the opposition in Montenegro, to be Montenegro's representatives to the federal bodies. Since then, Montenegro had no access to the federal authorities, did not participate in their work and did not recognize their legitimacy. Montenegro gave examples of how the federal authorities had been used against it with a view to its economic and general exhaustion, political destabilization and the toppling of the democratically elected government. They included the removal of legal Montenegrin authorities from all institutions of the federal State and the work of those bodies, including in defence, internal and foreign affairs, finances, foreign trade, customs and the central bank, and the imposition of a comprehensive blockage of the overall payment operations and commodity trade with Montenegro for several months. Montenegro had therefore assumed control of the activities in foreign trade and import and export of goods and services, insurance and investment guarantees, production cooperation and joint ventures, the tax system, customs, border control, and monetary operations by legalizing the deutsche mark as parallel legal tender, together with the dinar.

On 27 July [S/2000/745], Serbia's Ministries of Finance and Justice issued a notification that all sales contracts concluded anywhere between Albanians and displaced Serbs and Montenegrins and members of other national communities after 10 June 1999 and relating to immovable property in Kosovo and Metohija were invalid.

FRY relations with other States

On 25 February [S/2000/154], FRY drew the attention of the Security Council President to the negotiations between UNMIK and FYROM concerning a memorandum on the construction of border infrastructure and customs cooperation at the Yugoslav-FYROM border. Stating that UNMIK was not authorized to enter into agreements with neighbouring States without its consent, FRY said that it would consider null and void any agreement reached by UNMIK in contravention of its authority changing the nature of border crossings between the two countries.

FYROM, for its part, drew attention on 8 June [S/2000/552] to several incidents at the FYROM border with the Kosovo province of FRY, which, it said, risked endangering the security situation in the region. The two most serious were the abduction on 2 April of four FYROM Army soldiers who were held for 24 hours before being released and the wounding by sniper shots coming from Kosovo of two soldiers on 5 June. The Government had requested an urgent investigation and the taking of immediate measures to identify and apprehend the perpetrators of those terrorist acts. It said that such incidents, most likely connected to the growing organized crime in Kosovo, presented a threat to FYROM's stability and that of neighbouring countries and could undermine joint efforts for stabilizing and promoting security in the region, particularly in Kosovo.

FRY protested on 25 May the visit of the Albanian President to Kosovo and Metohija [S/2000/490]. According to media reports, he had called on Kosovo and Metohija Albanians to work towards the creation of a "Greater Albania" that would include, in addition to the Serbian province and Albania, parts of FRY's Republic of Montenegro and FYROM. The illegal visit of the highest-ranking Albanian official to a sovereign territory without prior agreement of its Government was contrary to international law and violated FRY's sovereignty and territorial integrity and resolution 1244(1999). FRY accused UNMIK, by failing to prevent that illegal act, of aligning itself with and giving UN approval to those who committed terror and crimes against the Serbs and other non-Albanians, and asked the Council to condemn the practice of illegal visits.

On 2 August [S/2000/765], FRY protested the establishment, on 24 July, of the Albanian liaison office in Pristina. It repeated its request for the Council to annul UNMIK's decision to allow Albania to establish the liaison office to serve the goals of furthering Albania's illegitimate and hostile claims against FRY. FRY reiterated its protest and request on 6 October [S/2000/965], citing reports that the "mission" would be further strengthened and transformed into a diplomatic representative office, which would render an inter-State character to Albania/Kosovo relations.

On 25 September [A/55/421], FRY drew the Secretary-General's attention to the statement made by the Albanian Minister for Foreign Affairs on 16 September to the fifty-fifth session of the General Assembly, which, it said, was illustrative of the persistence of Albania's policy of interference in FRY's internal affairs, paternalism in its relations with the ethnic Albanian minority in FRY and the territorial aspirations towards parts of FRY.

In other communications, FRY protested the visit of the Bulgarian Prime Minister, Ivan Kostov, to the Bulgarian units within KFOR on 19 March [S/2000/246]; the visit of Queen Rania of Jordan to Kosovo and Metohija on 27 March without its approval [S/2000/314]; the UNMIK initiative to host a conference on traffic corridors of the Balkans in Skopje, FYROM, in April, to which the "territory of Kosovo" was to be invited [S/2000/313]; and the UNMIK practice of flying Albanian flags on UN buildings in Kosovo and Metohija, despite its protests [S/2000/331]. FRY brought to the Council President's attention on 19 May [S/2000/457] UNMIK's intention to conclude an agreement with the Red Crescent of Saudi Arabia on the construction of a cultural centre near an Orthodox cemetery in Pristina.

Change of Government

On 7 October, Vojislav Kostunica, who was elected President of FRY on 24 September, took office. He replaced Slobodan Milosevic, who had been charged with crimes against humanity by ICTY in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 1214]. The new Government, which was formed on 4 November, dropped any claim to being the sole successor

State of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (which dissolved in 1992), and was recognized by the international community.

Communications. In a 3 March statement [S/2000/196], the EU expressed concern about the continued violations by Serbian authorities of the right of free expression of opinion. It stated that public threats against the independent media showed that the regime pursued an arbitrary and discriminatory policy to clamp down on independent voices, as demonstrated by the indictment of Dusan Mihajlovic, President of the New Democracy Party, for allegedly spreading false information and disrupting law and order. The EU stated that the Serbian people should be allowed to freely express their political will. On 10 May [S/2000/438], the EU said that it was disturbed by the intensification of repression against democratic forces, civil society and independent media in Serbia. The measures taken by FRY authorities to prevent a lawful and democratic rally in Pozarevac on 9 May was one more denial of democracy and a violation of the right to freedom of expression. The EU also condemned the recent arbitrary arrests of politicians, journalists and students and reiterated its support for the struggle of the Serbian people for freedom and democracy.

On 18 and 22 May [S/2000/463, S/2000/485], the EU condemned the takeover of Belgrade's independent television station, Studio B, on 17 May, and the simultaneous actions against Radio B292, Radio Index, the daily newspaper Blic, and TV Mladenovac. That action, following continuing mass arrests and detention of opposition representatives and student leaders, heavy punishment of independent media, repression of journalists and obstacles to public rallies of the democratic forces, was the latest in a series of repressive actions by the Milosevic regime. Increasing repression by that regime was leading FRY into a position of greater distance from free and democratic Europe, increasing its isolation and running against the wishes of the Serbian people. FRY remained the only South-Eastern European State still isolated from the mainstream of Europe, and President Milosevic's regime alone was responsible for that situation.

On 20 September [S/2000/885], FRY drew the attention of the Security Council President to the announcement by the EU and the United States that they were ready to lift sanctions on FRY if its voters elected the opposition candidate at the 24 September presidential elections. In addition, the United States and some EU member States continued to finance the activities of a number of political organizations and media in FRY and had substantially increased funding during the election campaign. Those actions, designed to swing the will of its electorate, constituted a flagrant violation of the Charter, relevant OSCE documents and international law and was condemned by the FRY Government. Those countries had encroached upon the inalienable right of Yugoslav voters to elect their own legitimate representatives and violated General Assembly resolution 54/168 [YUN 1999, p. 632] regarding respect for the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States in their electoral processes. FRY requested the Council to consider the issue at its next meeting.

FRY also lodged a protest on 18 September [A/55/395-S/2000/880] regarding the establishment on 15 August of a "United States Bureau for Yugoslavia" in Budapest, Hungary, to assist the opposition in FRY and Serbia to swing the will of the people in the forthcoming elections, to establish and fund pro-United States and pro-NATO organizations in FRY, and to finance opposition parties and the so-called independent media. Hungary's consent to the opening of the "Bureau" and the use of Hungarian territory against a third country were unprecedented in international relations. FRY protested United States activities from Hungary and other countries, aimed at overt interference in FRY's internal affairs, destabilization of the country and the violation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity. It expected the Council to condemn that behaviour and to call on the United States to respect the Charter, United States international obligations and international law. FRY further elaborated those views and observations in a memorandum of 5 October [S/2000/961] regarding the elections in FRY in September-October. It also accused NATO countries, the EU and other European States of exerting political, psychological and military pressures, of subversive activities and of funding the opposition.

EU statement. On 11 October [A/55/486-S/2000/991], the EU welcomed the election of Mr. Kostunica as FRY's new President. It said that the people of FRY had chosen democracy and Europe. As a result, the EU decided to lift all sanctions imposed on the country since 1998, with the exception of the provisions affecting former President Milosevic and those associated with him. The EU also decided to lift the oil and air embargoes immediately and to allow FRY to benefit from the Community Assistance to Reconstruction, Development and Stabilization programme. The activities of the European Agency for Reconstruction would also be extended to FRY.

Among other initiatives, the EU Finance Ministers would examine, in consultation with international financial institutions, the conditions for integrating FRY into the international financial community as rapidly as possible. The Council of the EU had asked the European Commission and the World Bank, under the aegis of the Steering Committee for the Balkans, to be jointly responsible for evaluating FRY's needs and for coordinating economic and financial assistance to it.

Each of the 15 EU member States expressed its desire to re-establish or to normalize diplomatic relations with FRY and hoped that FRY would start a reconciliation process with its neighbours and re-establish relationships of trust and cooperation. The EU would help meet those objectives as far as it was able.

Georgia

At the end of 2000, there was still no breakthrough in efforts to reach a political settlement of the Abkhaz/Georgian conflict. During the year, the Secretary-General's Special Representative, the Russian Federation, in its capacity as facilitator, the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General (France, Germany, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States) and OSCE worked with the Georgian and Abkhaz sides to reinvigorate the peace process and engage in bilateral discussions on specific related issues. Through those efforts, three meetings of the Coordinating Council were held during the year, at which agreement was reached on revitalizing the Council's working groups on security, on refugees and internally displaced persons and on social and economic questions. The Special Representative continued to refine the draft document "Basic principles for the distribution of constitutional competences between Tbilisi and Sukhumi" but the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General could not arrive at a shared position on the draft proposal.

Meanwhile, to address the deteriorating security situation in the zone of conflict, the parties signed a 3 May Protocol on the stabilization of the situation in the security zone. They also reached decisions on accelerating work on the draft protocol on the return of refugees to the Gali district and measures for economic rehabilitation, and the agreement on peace and guarantees for the non-resumption of hostilities. Special efforts were also made to improve confidence-building measures.

The Security Council, in November, noted with concern the continued failure of the parties to achieve a comprehensive settlement, including the political status of Abkhazia within the State of Georgia, and called on them to take immediate measures to move beyond the impasse and to spare no effort to achieve progress without further delay.

UN Observer Mission in Georgia

The United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG), established by Security Council resolution 858(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 509], continued to monitor and verify compliance with the 1994 Agreement on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces (Moscow Agreement) [YUN 1994, p. 583] and to fulfil other tasks as mandated by resolution 937(1994) [ibid., p. 584]. The Mission operated in close collaboration with the collective peacekeeping force of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) that had been in the zone of conflict, at the request of the parties, since 1994 [ibid., p. 583]. The Council extended the Mission's mandate twice during the year, the first time until 31 July 2000 and the second until 31 January 2001.

UNOMIG's main headquarters was located in Sukhumi (Abkhazia, Georgia), with administrative headquarters in Pitsunda, a liaison office in the Georgian capital of Tbilisi and team bases and a sector headquarters in each of the Gali and Zugdidi sectors. A team base in the Kodori Valley was manned by observers operating from Sukhumi. UNOMIG, as at October 2000, had a strength of 103 military observers.

The Mission was headed by Dieter Boden (Germany). Major-General Anis Ahmed Bajwa (Pakistan) succeeded Major-General Tariq Wa-seem Ghazi (Pakistan) as UNOMIG's Chief Military Observer in mid-January [S/2000/15, S/2000/16].

Activities

Report of Secretary-General (January). The Secretary-General, in response to resolution 1255(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 380], submitted a January report [S/2000/39] on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, including UNOMIG operations. He stated that, since assuming his duties in November 1999, his Special Representative had met with Georgia's President, Eduard Shevardnadze, Abkhaz leader Vladislav Ardzinba, other representatives of both sides, the Russian Federation, in its capacity as facilitator, OSCE and members of the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General. The negotiating process resumed on 18 and 19 January, with the convening of the ninth session of the Coordinating Council of the Georgian and Abkhaz sides in Tbilisi, after a nine-month hiatus. The session, organized around small bilateral working groups, reached agreement on the protocol establishing a mechanism for joint investigation of violations of the Moscow Agreement and other violent incidents in the zone of conflict; the disinterring and reburial of Georgian remains buried near Sukhumi and assistance from the Georgian side in locating the buried remains of Abkhaz killed during the war; and further steps for the rehabilitation and use of the Inguri dam and power station. They also agreed to renew negotiations on a draft document on peace and the non-resumption of hostilities, and requested the Special Representative to carry out preparatory work for a third meeting on confidence-building measures. In parallel to those talks, the Special Representative called for work to proceed on issues relating to a comprehensive settlement of the conflict. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1255(1999), a draft document entitled "Basic principles for the distribution of constitutional competences between Tbilisi and Sukhumi" was submitted for comments to the Russian Federation, OSCE and the Friends of the Secretary-General. Although the Abkhaz side had so far been reluctant to discuss that subject, the Secretary-General envisaged that ways of moving the issue forward would be explored at a later stage.

The Secretary-General reported that the situation in the UNOMIG area of responsibility remained calm but unstable and there were no serious violations of the Moscow Agreement. Two violent incidents in January, the detonation of a mine by a civilian bus and the abduction of two UNOMIG observers (who were subsequently released unharmed), created serious concern about security in the area and hindered UN and NGO activities. Meanwhile, despite the lack of proper security conditions for returning refugees and internally displaced persons, and the lack of agreement on that issue, a process of administrative and economic normalization was under way in the Gali district, affecting positively the lives of its residents, who were showing signs of optimism for a better future.

The Secretary-General observed that the critical issue of the return of refugees and internally displaced persons needed to be addressed urgently. He called on the two sides and the international community to find a formula for their return. Since negotiations on earlier draft documents addressing the issue had reached a standstill, he urged the two sides to put forward and implement new approaches to resolving the problem of displacement, including the revival of Working Group II of the Coordinating Council. The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend UNOMIG's mandate until 31 July 2000.

Communication. On 26 January [S/2000/52], the Russian Federation informed the Council President that the CIS Council of Heads of State had decided to extend the presence of its collective peacekeeping force in Abkhazia, Georgia, for a further six months and to continue as soon as possible the consultations on ensuring implementation of previous decisions of the Council of Heads of State, particularly with respect to the expansion of the security zone and elaboration of a procedure for its implementation.

12. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Council regularly informed and to report three months from the date of the adoption of the present resolution on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (April). In his April report on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia [S/2000/345], the Secretary-General said that, accompanied by his Special Representative, he had visited Moscow from 27 to 29 January and discussed the Abkhaz/Georgian peace process with the Russian Federation Acting President, Vladimir Putin, and other officials. The Special Representative also continued consultations and preparatory work within the framework of the UN-led Geneva peace process. At the same time, work continued on the distribution of constitutional competences between Tbilisi and Sukhumi. A revised draft paper on that issue was distributed in mid-March to the Russian Federation and members of the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General, incorporating their comments on the original draft. Further discussions were continuing on finalizing the draft with a view to submitting it to the two sides in the near future. The Abkhaz side had indicated its interest in not being excluded from those discussions, though its basic position on the question of the status of those negotiations had not changed. In February and in April, the Abkhaz leader drew the Secretary-General's attention to some legal aspects related to the settlement of the conflict and asserted that, during the negotiations, the UN position had departed from principles agreed on in earlier signed documents. The Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, replying on the Secretary-General's behalf, stressed that the United Nations had consistently maintained that a comprehensive settlement had to be based on the principles of full respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia and the right of all refugees and internally displaced persons to a safe, secure and voluntary return to Abkhazia within Georgia.

To alleviate the deteriorating security situation, the Special Representative, at the request of the leaders of the two sides, convened a meeting in Sukhumi on 3 February between the State Minister of Georgia and the de facto "Prime Minister" of Abkhazia, with the participation of the Commander of the CIS peacekeeping force. The meeting resulted in the signing of a Protocol on a series of concrete measures to improve the situation. Discussions at a further meeting between the two sides in Sukhumi on 27 and 28 February focused on the non-use of force, the return of refugees and internally displaced persons to the Gali district and economic rehabilitation measures, based on two draft texts entitled "Agreement on peace and guarantees for the prevention of armed confrontation" and "Protocol on the return of refugees to the Gali district and measures for economic rehabilitation". The two sides clarified their views, produced new working drafts of both documents and agreed to continue bilateral consultations. On 26 March, the Georgian press agency Caucasus Press and Abkhaz counterparts reached agreements on bilateral cooperation in information.

UNOMIG continued its daily ground patrols from Sukhumi and the two sector headquarters in Gali and Zugdidi, as well as weekly helicopter patrols of its area of responsibility, except in the upper Kodori Valley, where the Georgian authorities had been unable to provide security guarantees for UNOMIG to carry out its observation mandate there and to bring to justice the perpetrators of the October 1999 hostage-taking incident [YUN 1999, p. 382]. Since its establishment in January, the Joint Investigation Group had taken up five new investigations and 14 investigations begun earlier continued. By emphasizing transparency in investigations and allowing personal contacts at the working level, the Group had reduced mistrust and tension on the ground and had itself become a valuable element of improved security, despite the still unresolved issue of the status of the Georgian representatives in the Group.

The Secretary-General reported that tensions reached a peak on 25 January, when two Abkhaz militiamen were killed in an ambush near Dikazurga in the Gali district. Three Abkhaz men, reportedly linked to organized crime, were also killed and two Abkhaz who survived the shooting were taken into custody by Georgian law enforcement personnel. Demonstrations in the aftermath of those incidents created tension and raised fears of retaliatory measures. Those events occurred against a background of tit-for-tat abductions on both sides of the ceasefire line. Implementation of the 3 February Protocol to address the situation (see above) resulted in the release of one abductee by the Abkhaz side, but the process broke down because of Georgia's declared inability to implement some of the Protocol's provisions within the established time frame. Further exchanges between the two sides eventually took place on 29 March, following mediation efforts by the Special Representative and the Chief Military Observer. The successful exchange noticeably improved mutual confidence in the conflict zone and decreased tensions. However, in April, two serious ambush attacks against Abkhaz law enforcement personnel in the lower Gali district, in which eight militiamen were killed and seven wounded, sharply heightened tensions and fears of retaliation. At the urging of the Special Representative and the Chief Military Observer, the two sides engaged in direct bilateral communications to discuss the matter.

UNOMIG's efforts to implement the 3 February Protocol had met with mixed results, since the verification of the numbers of security personnel on both sides of the ceasefire line and their reduction, in accordance with pre-established ceilings, were hampered by sometimes imprecise information from local commanders and by discrepancies in figures. In terms of the withdrawal of illegal armed groups from the security and restricted weapons zones, UNOMIG had deployed the necessary observation and reporting mechanism but had no mandate to actually remove such groups.

With regard to the humanitarian situation, the activities of the humanitarian community remained limited in the Gali district and failed to meet required needs. International aid agencies continued to find it difficult to assist returnees because of the security conditions. Looting associated with criminal activities compelled agencies at times to deliver humanitarian assistance under the armed protection of the CIS peacekeeping force. In the absence of security guarantees, agencies were reluctant to undertake programmes to encourage returns. Georgia, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), UNHCR, the World Bank and the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs developed a new approach to assist internally displaced persons, which recognized their right to be treated in the same manner as all Georgian citizens and favoured giving them the opportunity to build skills and a level of self-reliance that would enable them to reintegrate into society. President Shevardnadze established a commission to facilitate the elaboration of the new approach in conjunction with UN agencies and the World Bank. Preliminary pledges to the Self-Reliance Pilot Fund, established under the new approach to finance innovative projects to contribute to the self-sufficiency of internally displaced persons, totalled over $1 million.

The United Nations Human Rights Office in Abkhazia, Georgia, continued to monitor the human rights situation in the region. Most of the cases of human rights violations related to property rights and residence permits; pension entitlements and humanitarian allowances; robberies; and harassment in the workplace or in the neighbourhood on ethnic or gender grounds.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 11 May [meeting 4137], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/16 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 24 April 2000 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia.

The Council welcomes the efforts by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to enhance contacts at all levels between the Georgian and Abkhaz sides, and calls upon the parties to continue to expand such contacts. It supports the appeal by the Secretary-General to both sides to make more active use of the Coordinating Council machinery, and actively to consider the paper prepared by the Special Representative concerning the implementation of the agreed confidence-building measures. In this context, the Council recalls with appreciation the invitation of the Government of Ukraine to host a meeting in Yalta.

The Council believes that resolution of issues related to the improvement of the humanitarian situation, to socio-economic development and to ensuring stability in the conflict zone would facilitate the peace process. In this regard, it calls upon the parties to finalize their work on and to sign a draft agreement on peace and guarantees for the prevention of armed confrontation and a draft protocol on the return of refugees to the Gali region and measures for economic rehabilitation.

The Council notes with deep concern the continued failure of the parties to achieve a comprehensive political settlement, which includes a settlement on the political status of Abkhazia within the State of Georgia. It also notes the adverse impact that this failure has on the humanitarian situation, economic development and stability in the region. It calls upon the parties to display the political will required for a breakthrough and to spare no efforts in order to achieve substantive progress without further delay. In this regard, it joins the Secretary-General in encouraging the parties to be ready to consider proposals, based on the Council decisions, to be presented in due course by the Special Representative on the question of the distribution of constitutional competences between Tbilisi and Sukhumi.

The Council strongly reaffirms the imprescriptible right of all refugees and internally displaced persons directly affected by the conflict to return to their homes in secure and dignified conditions. It calls upon the parties to agree upon and to take, in the nearest future, concrete steps towards implementing effective measures to guarantee the security of those who exercise their unconditional right to return, including those who have already returned. In particular, the undefined and insecure status of spontaneous returnees to the Gali district is a matter that must be addressed urgently. The Council encourages the Abkhaz side to continue the process of improvement of security conditions for returnees, which, the Secretary-General notes, may be beginning in the Gali region.

The Council encourages the Special Representative, in this context, to continue his efforts, in close cooperation with the Russian Federation, in its capacity as facilitator, the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe.

The Council expresses its appreciation for the measures undertaken by the Government of Georgia, the United Nations Development Programme, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and the World Bank, in order to improve the situation of those refugees and internally displaced persons who have not been in a position to exercise their right of return, to develop their skills and to increase their self-reliance.

The Council notes that the situation on the ground in the area of responsibility of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia has remained generally calm although unstable during the reporting period. It welcomes all the efforts that have been undertaken, in particular by the Special Representative, with a view to alleviating tensions and increasing confidence between the parties. It regrets that the Protocol of 3 February 2000 has not been implemented in full and, in particular, that the withdrawal of illegal armed groups has not been brought about. It is concerned at the tension created by recent attacks against Abkhaz militiamen. It deplores these attacks and the high level of criminal activity in the conflict zone, as well as acts of violence against Mission personnel and members of their families. In this context, the Council recalls the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994 and the statement by its President of 9 February 2000. It calls upon the parties to refrain from any actions which could increase tensions on the ground and to ensure the safety of Mission personnel.

The Council welcomes the important contribution that the Mission and the collective peacekeeping force of the Commonwealth of Independent States continue to make in stabilizing the situation in the conflict zone, notes that the working relationship between the Mission and the collective peacekeeping force has been good at all levels, and stresses the importance of continuing and increasing close cooperation and coordination between them in the performance of their respective mandates.

Communications. Georgia, on 15 June [S/2000/594], expressed concern over the intensified violence in Abkhazia, Georgia. It contended that the Abkhaz regime had not spared efforts to legalize the forcibly changed demographic situation as a consequence of the ethnic cleansing, and was creating unbearable living conditions for the Georgian returnees in the Gali district. Moreover, threats to repeat the Gali events of May 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 394] had become a common denominator of the developments in the region.

Georgia declared that it would make all efforts to promote security in the zone of conflict and achieve a comprehensive resolution. In that respect, it attached great importance to the document on the distribution of constitutional competences between the central authorities of Georgia and the authorities of Abkhazia, Georgia, drafted by the United Nations and the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General. Implementation of the UNDP economic rehabilitation programme for the region, which was equally important for the settlement of the conflict, would start as soon as the political status of Abkhazia within Georgia was determined.

Georgia reaffirmed the unacceptability of violence directed at undermining the process of peaceful resolution and condemned the tensions in the zone of conflict stemming from the failure of the Abkhaz side to meet its obligations under the peace process and Security Council resolutions. It called on the Secretary-General, his Special Representative, the Security Council, the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General, the Russian Federation and UN specialized agencies to intensify their efforts in the Gali district to ensure security, as well as full implementation of Council resolutions.

On 26 June [S/2000/629], the Russian Federation informed the Council President that the CIS Council of Heads of State, on 21 June, had decided to extend the stay of the collective peacekeeping force until 31 December 2000.

Report of Secretary-General (July). The Secretary-General reported in July [S/2000/697] that his Special Representative had continued consultations with all parties concerned but progress was slow, mainly owing to a lack of effort by the two sides to achieve tangible results. Delays were also caused by the reshuffling of key players in the Government of Georgia following the re-election on 9 April of President Shevardnadze. On 4 July, the President named the newly appointed State Minister as head of the Georgian delegation to the Coordinating Council and created the new post of Minister for Special Assignments, with direct responsibility for conflict settlement in Georgia.

The Special Representative continued to work closely with the Group of Friends to refine further the draft document on the distribution of competences between Tbilisi and Sukhumi and discussed the issue with the Russian Federation in Moscow on 9 and 10 May. A 25 May version of the draft document was circulated among the Group of Friends in the expectation that it might serve in the near future as a basis on which to open a political dialogue between the Georgian and Abkhaz sides. However, differences of views had since arisen among the Group of Friends themselves concerning both content and strategy, and strong concerted efforts were urgently needed to produce a coordinated draft and approach. Meanwhile, the Georgian side continued to express its eagerness to commence negotiations on Abkhazia's future status on the basis of the document. The Abkhaz side, however, maintained that it would not engage in a dialogue with the Georgian side on the issue but did not wish to be left out of the debate completely. In consultations with the Special Representative, it renewed its interest in the convening of a conference of experts to discuss legal aspects of the conflict.

On 3 May, the Special Representative chaired a high-level emergency meeting of both sides to address the rapidly deteriorating security situation on the ground in the wake of the killing of some 12 members of the Abkhaz militia in a series of ambushes in the Gali district. Following the meeting, a draft Protocol on the stabilization of the situation in the security zone was produced, which provided for the monitoring by UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force of an agreed ceiling in the number of armed law enforcement personnel stationed in the security zone, and for the creation of a new structure of increased cooperation by the two sides in the fight against crime.

On 11 July, the Special Representative convened the tenth session of the Coordinating Council in Sukhumi, at which the Protocol was signed. The Council decided that Working Group I on security issues should meet monthly to monitor its implementation and that the two sides would accelerate work on the draft Protocol on the return of refugees to the Gali district and measures for economic rehabilitation and the agreement on peace and guarantees for the non-resumption of hostilities, which had been discussed intermittently since 1998. The Council took note of the Special Representative's suggestions to improve implementation of confidence-building measures, including the creation of a database of existing projects.

A number of confidence-building projects were carried out. Of particular significance was the agreement reached in June that books and materials pertaining to Abkhazia, Georgia, would be sought among Georgian holdings and given to the Abkhaz side as a partial replacement for the Abkhaz Archives destroyed during the 1992-1993 war. The first presentation of such materials was made by the Georgian side during the 11 July session of the Coordinating Council and further co-operation in that area was planned.

The Joint Fact-finding Group established on 19 January continued to meet weekly. While the Abkhaz side formally refused to work with the Georgian representatives, all of whom were members of the Abkhaz "government-in-exile", there was satisfactory cooperation on the ground with local officials from Zugdidi representing the Georgian side. UNOMIG successfully introduced the concept of "quick reaction investigators", military observers posted in both sectors whose task was to go to the scene of an incident as quickly as possible after it occurred to record evidence before it was lost or contaminated.

The general situation in the conflict zone remained relatively calm although unstable, with peaks in tension in April and in the days leading up to the Georgian National Day on 26 May. The tension was defused due to the efforts of the two sides and to preventive measures taken by UNOMIG, including active liaison at every level and nearly doubling of the regular air and ground patrolling, thus creating a far more visible presence and providing the ability to dispel rumours through accurate reporting.

There was one confirmed violation of the Moscow Agreement on 12 June, when a UNOMIG helicopter patrol spotted an armoured vehicle at an Abkhaz observation post within the restricted weapons zone. The armoured vehicle, which had apparently been deployed in response to an armed attack on the post several days earlier, was withdrawn to a heavy weapons storage site. There were few exchanges of fire across the ceasefire line, but a number of ambushes were carried out in which 25 people were killed.

Endemic crime throughout the area remained a serious problem. Organized crime, particularly smuggling, was growing in scope and profitability, and there were indications that it was reaching into institutions on both sides.

The spring and summer seasons had brought local residents displaced from the Gali district back home to farm their land; up to 80 per cent of the pre-war population was reported to have returned. Funding for schools in the Gali district had increased slightly, including allocation of funds in the Georgian budget. There were also signs that the Abkhaz authorities were taking a more pragmatic and flexible view on the use of the Georgian language in Gali district schools attended by Mingrelian children.

The security and safety of its personnel remained the highest priority for UNOMIG. On 17 April, the father of a UNOMIG interpreter was shot dead during a robbery attempt in Gali town, on 26 April, the home of another UNOMIG interpreter was looted and, on 15 June, a group of armed men opened fire on the vehicles of a UNOMIG ground patrol in the lower Gali area. On 1 June, in the Kodori Valley, a UNOMIG foot patrol was taken hostage. They were released unharmed on 5 June, following consultations by the Special Representative with all the parties concerned. After the incident, the Special Representative reminded Georgia of the international community's expectation that the perpetrators would be brought to justice and UNOMIG would be provided with the security it required to implement its mandate in the Kodori Valley. UNOMIG patrols to the upper Kodori Valley remained suspended.

In June, an International Monetary Fund (IMF) mission visited Georgia to assist in developing a financial programme for the year 2000 and in outlining the macroeconomic programme for 2001. During the mission, it was agreed that adjustment efforts by Georgia were needed to create conditions to allow the resumption of the suspended IMF programme, including revising its budget and establishing a track record in implementing the budget and other financial policies by the end of November, implementation of measures to tackle problems of governance and corruption and elaboration of a poverty-reduction strategy. With support from the United Nations, the World Bank and IMF, the Government had started to prepare a comprehensive strategy to reduce poverty.

The Secretary-General said that, despite the slow progress, UNOMIG continued to play an essential role in the search for a peaceful solution to the Abkhaz/Georgian conflict through its sustained efforts to further the peace process. It remained a central element in efforts to stabilize the situation. He therefore recommended that the Council extend the UNOMIG mandate until 31 January 2001.

Communication. In a 25 July communiqué [S/2000/742], the Russian Federation rejected as groundless and detrimental to Russian-Georgian relations remarks made by the head of the Georgian delegation to an Economic and Social Council meeting to the effect that the Russian Federation was involved in the outbreak of the Abkhaz/Georgian conflict and that Russian peacekeepers deployed in the zone of separation were not carrying out their mission effectively.

The Russian Federation recalled that it was the only country to send peacekeepers, who at times laid down their lives to prevent new outbreaks of violence between the sides. The fact that the conflict between Tbilisi and Sukhumi had not been settled was evidence that the sides themselves had not done everything to restore lost confidence and convince each other of the desirability and possibility of living in one common home.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

8. Urges the parties, in this context, to address urgently and in a concerted manner, as a first step, the undefined and insecure status of spontaneous returnees to the Gali district, including through the re-establishment of functioning local administrative structures in which the returnee population is appropriately represented;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Council regularly informed and to report three months from the date of the adoption of the present resolution on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia;

15. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (October). In October [S/2000/1023], the Secretary-General stated that he had discussed issues related to the comprehensive political settlement of the conflict in Abkhazia, Georgia, with President Shevardnadze in New York on 5 September. Meanwhile, his Special Representative, in continuing efforts to move the peace process forward, chaired a series of bilateral consultations on key aspects of the political settlement, confidence-building contacts between the two sides in a variety of fields and steps to reinvigorate the machinery of the Coordinating Council, including the Council's three working groups. That included the revival of Working Group I on security issues, which convened twice during the reporting period, as well as separate visits to Sukhumi for consultations with the Abkhaz side by the heads of UNHCR and UNDP in Georgia, as coordinators of Working Group II on refugees and internally displaced persons and of Working Group III on social and economic questions, respectively. Unfortunately, the efforts of the Group of Friends, including visits by the Special Representative to capitals, to arrive at a coordinated draft document on basic principles for the distribution of competences between Tbilisi and Sukhumi had not succeeded.

On 6 and 7 August in Tbilisi, and again on 20 August in Sukhumi, the Special Representative chaired consultations between the Georgian Minister for Special Affairs and the personal representative of Abkhaz leader Ardzinba on the basis of the 11 July Protocol (see p. 391). Although the Georgian side put forward new versions of the draft protocol on the return of refugees to the Gali district and measures for economic rehabilitation and the draft agreement on peace and guarantees for the prevention of hostilities, disagreement between the two sides persisted. The consultations also included broader discussions of central aspects of a comprehensive political settlement. On the basis of the 11 July Protocol, both sides submitted to the Special Representative proposals concerning further work in confidence-building measures, with a view to preparing for the third meeting on confidence-building measures to be convened in Yalta, Ukraine, in November.

The Special Representative and UNOMIG continued to provide good offices and substantial logistical support for a wide array of cooperation projects between the two sides. Georgia agreed to an Abkhaz request that the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization fund the renovation of cultural monuments in Abkhazia, Georgia. On 28 and 29 September in Sukhumi, the United Nations facilitated the first contact between Georgian and Abkhaz technical experts and their Russian colleagues on a solution to the problem of safe storage of radioactive materials located at the Physico-technical Institute in Sukhumi. On 5 and 6 October, a delegation from the European Commission visited the Inguri power station and dam to concretize plans for their repair. The Director of the Georgian National Library gathered further materials to present to the Abkhaz side; the third round of restoration of films shot during the last century in Abkhazia, Georgia, was completed, with financing from Germany. Many of those projects were also facilitated by the Georgian/Abkhaz Coordination Commission.

On 22 September, the Ministers of Education of the two sides met in Sukhumi to discuss cooperation in improving education in the Gali district and resolving the matter of the language of education used in schools. On 9 October, the Abkhaz de facto "Minister of Health" travelled to Tbilisi and met her counterpart to discuss potential collaboration.

After extensive consultations in the aftermath of the hostage-taking incidents in the upper Kodori Valley, Georgia assured UNOMIG in August that the necessary security conditions existed to resume helicopter patrolling of the valley. That development took place as the CIS peacekeeping force prepared to open a new checkpoint on the ceasefire line between the upper Kodori Valley and the Abkhaz-controlled lower part, which was expected to enhance general security in the area and improve freedom of movement for UNOMIG patrols.

On 20 August in Sukhumi, and on 4 October in Tbilisi, the Chief Military Observer chaired sessions of Working Group I of the Coordinating Council dealing with security issues, which focused on the implementation of the specific security agreements listed in the Protocol to the 3 May high-level meeting in Gali and on improving the functioning and efficacy of the Joint Fact-finding Group. Among the measures discussed, and later carried out on the ground, were the verification by UNOMIG and the CIS peace-keeping force of the strength of the respective security personnel of the two sides in the security zone and the establishment of better communications between the heads of Georgian and Abkhaz law enforcement agencies in the security zone.

Although attendance was sporadic, the Joint Fact-finding Group continued to convene weekly, despite rising frustration on all sides with the lack of progress on specific cases. On 22 September, the Special Representative and the Abkhaz de facto "Prime Minister" officially opened a bridge located along the main trunk road through the conflict zone, which had been renovated by UNOMIG. A number of road surface repairs and road reconstruction projects were also completed, and projects in the Kodori Valley and on the road leading to the Inguri hydroelectric power station were under way.

The Secretary-General concluded that the improvement in the security climate might be attributed in part to the reactivation of Working Group I and the increasing cooperation of the Georgian and Abkhaz sides in implementing agreements reached in the Coordinating Council. In the Gali sector, the usual summer lull in partisan and criminal activity had been particularly noticeable. However, the undercurrent of endemic lawlessness continued, and the hazelnut harvest was the trigger for a sudden rise in armed robberies, primarily in the Gali security zone. To improve the security climate, the Abkhaz administration of the Gali district increased militia patrolling and formed additional village guards, while the CIS peacekeeping force introduced daily armoured patrols to provide security and escort local residents bringing large quantities of hazelnuts to collection points. While those initiatives had some positive impact, they could not address the underlying reasons for the general climate of insecurity.

In the Zugdidi sector, the appearance of several notorious figures from the criminal and rebel underworlds gave rise to concern at the overall political and security climate in which UNOMIG was operating. On 12 September, Georgian police in Zugdidi arrested the leader of a partisan group (the so-called "Forest Brothers") and a reputed organized crime figure in the zone of conflict. Meanwhile, a leader of the group that took UNOMIG members hostage in Zugdidi in February 1998 made threatening demands to the Government of Georgia for the release from prison of some of his allies. On 15 August, a legal assistant to the United Nations Human Rights Office in Sukhumi was shot and killed.

During the reporting period, the humanitarian situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, was exacerbated by the continued deterioration of the infrastructure, the lack of economic development and the precarious security situation. UNHCR, in consultations with the Georgian and Abkhaz sides, explored the possibility of reanimating Working Group II on refugees and internally displaced persons. In September, it conducted a preliminary assessment of needs among spontaneous returnees to the Gali district, and concluded that a limited resumption of protection monitoring had become necessary in view of the size of the returnee population.

The Secretary-General said that it was encouraging that the two sides had demonstrated a willingness to engage in talks on key aspects of a political settlement. However, the lack of progress in defining the status of Abkhazia within the State of Georgia was regrettable. He appealed to both sides to undertake immediate efforts to move beyond that impasse. Negotiations on the draft paper on basic principles for the distribution of competences between Tbilisi and Sukhumi should be the next step. In that context, it was imperative that the members of the Group of Friends reach as soon as possible a shared position on the draft paper, which took into account the Security Council's view that any solution to the conflict had to be based on the territorial integrity of Georgia.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 14 November [meeting 4221], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2000/32 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 25 October 2000 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia.

The Council welcomes the efforts by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to enhance contacts at all levels between the Georgian and Abkhaz sides, in close cooperation with the Russian Federation, in its capacity as facilitator, as well as the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe. It notes with appreciation the expansion of such contacts, which resulted recently in a series of meetings and steps towards the implementation of concrete cooperation projects between the two sides. It notes the holding of the eleventh session of the Coordinating Council and urges further reinvigoration of this mechanism. It welcomes the readiness of the Government of Ukraine to host the third meeting on confidence-building measures in Yalta at the end of November and notes the important contribution a successful conference held in a timely fashion would make to the peace process.

The Council notes with deep concern, however, the continued failure of the parties to achieve a comprehensive political settlement, which includes a settlement of the political status of Abkhazia within the State of Georgia. It calls upon the parties, in particular the Abkhaz side, to undertake immediate efforts to move beyond the impasse and urges them to spare no effort in order to achieve substantive progress without further delay. In this regard, it strongly supports the efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, undertaken with the support of the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General, to address the issue of the future constitutional status of Abkhazia and, in particular, his intention to submit, in the near future, a draft paper containing proposals to the parties on the question of the distribution of competences between Tbilisi and Sukhumi as a basis for meaningful negotiations on that issue.

The Council calls upon the parties to agree upon and to take, in the nearest future, concrete steps towards implementing effective measures to guarantee the security of the refugees and internally displaced persons who exercise their unconditional right to return to their homes. In particular, the undefined and insecure status of spontaneous returnees to the Gali district is a matter that must be addressed urgently. The Council therefore urges the parties to engage in genuine negotiations to resolve concrete aspects of the matter and not to link this issue to political matters. In this regard, it joins the Secretary-General in encouraging the Abkhaz side to muster the requisite political will to resolve the problem of Georgian language education in the schools of the district, as well as to find the resources that those schools need, which, the Secretary-General notes, may affect directly the magnitude of the seasonal migration in the area.

The Council welcomes the results achieved within the framework of the policy implemented by the Government of Georgia, the United Nations Development Programme, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and the World Bank, aimed at ensuring that the internally displaced persons enjoy their right to be treated in the same manner as all other Georgian citizens.

The Council notes that the situation on the ground in the area of responsibility of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia has remained generally calm although unstable during the reporting period. It welcomes all the efforts that have been undertaken, in particular by the Special Representative, with a view to alleviating tensions and increasing confidence between the parties. It urges the parties to cooperate closely in combating crime and improving the work of their respective law enforcement agencies.

The Council strongly condemns the murder of Mr. Zurab Achba, legal assistant to the United Nations Human Rights Office in Sukhumi, recalls the commitment of the Abkhaz side to keep the Mission fully informed on the course of the investigation into this crime, and urges the Abkhaz side to shed light on this matter. It also deplores abductions of United Nations and humanitarian personnel. In this context, the Council recalls the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994 and the statement by its President of 9 February 2000. It calls upon the parties to refrain from any actions that could increase tensions on the ground and to ensure the safety of Mission personnel.

The Council welcomes the contribution that the Mission and the collective peacekeeping force of the Commonwealth of Independent States continue to make in stabilizing the situation in the conflict zone, notes that the working relationship between the Mission and the collective peacekeeping force has remained close, and stresses the importance of continuing and increasing active cooperation and coordination between them in the performance of their respective mandates. It calls on the parties to observe their obligations to prevent acts that violate the Agreement on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces, signed in Moscow on 14 May 1994, and could pose a threat to the life and security of personnel of the Mission, the collective peacekeeping force and other international personnel.

Communications. On 13 November [S/2000/1100], Georgia said that, on 8 and 9 November, the Abkhaz "military forces" reportedly conducted training exercises in the restricted weapon zone, employing heavy armaments and firing a number of missiles. The Abkhaz side impeded the international observers deployed in the conflict zone from surveying the restricted weapon zone and ignored their requests to meet with the "commanders of the units" participating in the exercises. During the military manoeuvres, the airspace of the territory was also closed. The Abkhaz side deliberately violated commitments undertaken in the 1994 Moscow Agreement [YUN 1994, p. 583], and the inaction of the CIS peacekeeping force was also alarming. The Georgian side condemned the exercises and called on the Abkhaz side to refrain from actions that undermined the results achieved in the process of conflict resolution.

On 7 December [S/2000/1163], Georgia protested the participation by the so-called "Ministers for Foreign Affairs" of Abkhazia and Tskhinvali, the separatist regions of Georgia, in the meeting of representatives of self-proclaimed republics on the territory of the former Soviet Union (Tiraspol, Moldova, 20-22 November).

The Russian Federation, in a 7 December statement [S/2000/1176], said it had introduced on 5 December a visa regime with Georgia; the situation remained calm at the crossing points on the Russian-Georgian border. The Russian side was taking all measures to reduce to a minimum any inconvenience and planned to propose to the Georgian side in the near future the opening of additional consular offices in Georgia. It was amazed at attempts to depict the Russian Federation's legitimate actions to ensure its security as interference in Georgia's internal affairs. Georgian leaders knew that the Russian Federation continued to respect Georgia's sovereignty and territorial integrity and favoured the development of good-neighbourly relations. The introduction of the visa regime in no way affected those fundamental principles.

In a 19 December statement [S/2000/1221], Georgia said that it had responded with understanding to the introduction of the visa regime, since it assumed that it was to be in full compliance with the norms of international law. Its initial protests were caused by the Russian Federation's violation of that principle, which was manifested in a simplified border crossing on some segments of the State border between Georgia and the Russian Federation, in particular those of the Abkhazia, Georgia, and Tskhinvali regions. If the true sense of the introduction of a visa regime was to prevent the movement of terrorists and their accomplices, then intensified control over border crossings should have been introduced specifically for the area where separatist regimes predominated. There were serious grounds for presuming that the unilateral introduction of a simplified border crossing on some segments of the State border between Georgia and the Russian Federation was an attempt to support separatist regimes.

Further report of Secretary-General. In a later report [S/2001/59], the Secretary-General stated that the eleventh session of the Coordinating Council was held on 24 October in Tbilisi. The Council confirmed the reactivation of Working Group I on security matters, whose recommendations were adopted. The Working Group subsequently held its sixth session on 13 December in Sukhumi, at which it reached agreement on the need to modify slightly the boundaries of the restricted weapon zone to exclude exercise areas used by the Georgian and Abkhaz sides, which were situated on the fringes of the zone. It also considered a proposal that a joint information centre be established to collect and provide information on criminal activity in the zone of conflict. After an interruption of almost three years, Working Group III on social and economic questions held its third session on 5 December in Tbilisi, at which agreement was reached on a number of specific projects aimed at rehabilitating the communications systems in the zone of conflict and adjacent areas. Efforts were continuing on the convening of Working Group II on refugees.

From 14 to 18 November, the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations visited the UNOMIG area of operations to review its work and the ongoing peace efforts. Under the aegis of the United Nations, a joint assessment mission, including OSCE, UNHCR, UNDP and the Council of Europe, was carried out in the Gali district between 20 and 24 November to evaluate conditions for the safe, secure and dignified return of refugees and displaced persons to the district. The mission, in its preliminary findings attached to the Secretary-General's report, recommended that the Special Representative explore the opening in Gali city of a branch office of the UN Human Rights Office; consider with the two sides how to improve law enforcement training and further integration of the local population in the law enforcement structures; seek broader cooperation between the law enforcement organs of both sides; and assist in finding a non-discriminatory solution to the question of the language of instruction in Gali district schools.

With regard to the situation on the ground, the Secretary-General reported that the most serious violation of the Moscow Agreement was an Abkhaz military exercise on 9 and 10 November at the training area near Ochamchira, involving the use of heavy weapons, during which UNIMOG and CIS peacekeepers were prohibited from flying over the area. In another violation, a detachment from the Abkhaz "armed forces" was deployed from 21 to 28 November in a village in the security zone. On 10 December, two UNOMIG vehicles, returning from a patrol in the lower Kodori Valley, were ambushed and two military observers abducted and moved to the upper part of the valley, which was under Georgian control. The officers were released on 13 December. The Special Representative reminded the Georgian side that no one had been brought to justice for previous deeds in the Kodori Valley and that climate of impunity could not be allowed to continue.

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's reports on UNOMIG's financial performance for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 [A/54/721], the proposed budget for the Mission's maintenance for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 [A/54/735] and ACABQ's comments and recommendations thereon [A/54/841 & Add.5], adopted without vote, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/902], resolution 54/271 [agenda item 137].

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 854(1993) of 6 August 1993, by which the Council approved the deployment of an advance team of up to ten United Nations military observers for a period of three months and the incorporation of the advance team into a United Nations observer mission if such a mission was formally established by the Council,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 858(1993) of 24 August 1993, by which the Council decided to establish the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Observer Mission, the latest of which was resolution 1287(2000) of 31 January 2000,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observer Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observer Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observer Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia as at 30 April 2000, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 11.6 million United States dollars, representing 10 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Observer Mission to the period ending 30 June 2000, notes that some 20 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

6. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Observer Mission, and for this purpose requests the Secretary-General to speed up the implementation of the asset management system at all peacekeeping missions in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/1 A of 15 October 1997;

Armenia-Azerbaijan

In 2000, Armenia and Azerbaijan made no progress in efforts to reach a settlement of the armed conflict between them, which had erupted in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 388] over the Nagorny Karabakh region in Azerbaijan, despite the efforts of the Minsk Group of OSCE (France, the Russian Federation and the United States) to advance the peace process. Both sides addressed communications to the Secretary-General during the year regarding developments in the conflict. Nagorny Karabakh's communications were transmitted by Armenia.

Communications. In a 15 February statement [S/2000/138], Azerbaijan referred to press reports indicating that the "prime minister" of the so-called "Nagorny Karabakh republic" began a "business visit" on 11 February to several Western European countries, at the invitation of businessmen from Hungary, Italy and Switzerland. The visit was reportedly to encourage European companies to invest in Nagorny Karabakh's economy, present a programme for the development of the agro-industrial complex and mining industry and the promotion of tourism in Nagorny Karabakh, and to establish joint enterprises.

Azerbaijan stated that Armenia, which seized power in the Nagorny Karabakh region of Azerbaijan, and the illegitimate regime that it established some 10 years previously continued to dictate their will to the international community. Armenia had recently been attempting to strengthen its military occupation through economic means by announcing a Programme for the Rehabilitation and Development of Nagorny Karabakh and was seeking, through that "programme", to attract investors to the occupied territories.

Azerbaijan was interested in normalizing life in the region and in its comprehensive economic development but that would be possible only after a just and consistent settlement of the conflict between Armenia and Azerbaijan and complete agreement on peace. The World Bank, the EU and other influential international organizations had already expressed their readiness to invest in the region, but only after the consequences of the occupation had been eliminated and peace achieved.

Over the preceding year, there had been some prospects for a peaceful settlement. The Presidents of Azerbaijan and Armenia had held talks with a view to solving the problem through peaceful means and had decided at their last meeting in Davos, Switzerland, to continue those talks. In the circumstances, any cooperation with the illegitimate regime and the conduct in the Nagorny Karabakh region of any activities that contravened the laws of Azerbaijan would be a serious blow to the fragile peace that was being observed.

Azerbaijan viewed the establishment by any country or international economic and financial organizations of military, political or economic ties with the Nagorny Karabakh region of Azerbaijan before a peace agreement was reached as a violation of inter-State, intergovernmental and other bilateral agreements with Azerbaijan, and interference in its internal affairs. It called on all States and organizations not to undertake such measures.

In response, the "Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Nagorno-Karabagh Republic", in a 15 March statement [S/2000/221] submitted to the Secretary-General by Armenia, said that Azerbaijan's 15 February statement could negatively influence the peacemaking process. Efforts had been made in the "Nagorno-Karabagh Republic" over the last year towards the maintenance of stability in the society, the consolidation of law and order and the creation of favourable conditions for the development of entrepreneurship, which had stimulated the serious interest of foreign financial and industrial circles. It was significant that no State, except Armenia and the United States, assisted the "Nagorno-Karabagh Republic" in resolving humanitarian problems.

Azerbaijan had for two years rejected the peace proposals put forward by the OSCE Minsk Group Co-Chairmen, which were the most acceptable compromise for settling the conflict. Azerbaijan's irreconcilable position disclosed that its real intentions were to isolate Nagorny Karabakh and preserve and aggravate the economic and humanitarian crisis with the aim of displacing the autochthonal Armenian population from the region.

The Nagorny Karabakh leadership wished to reassure international organizations and States interested in the quickest possible final settlement of the Karabakh conflict of its adherence to the principle of a political settlement and stressed that the constructive mood of its people was indisputable evidence of its aspirations for peace and stability.

On 17 April [S/2000/329], Azerbaijan, referring to the Nagorny Karabakh statement, reiterated that there was no such administrative-territorial entity as the "Nagorny Karabakh Republic". There was a Nagorny Karabakh region of the Republic of Azerbaijan, which was occupied by the armed forces of Armenia. The statement circulated by Armenia was misleading and showed that country's true intent to legitimize the occupation of an integral part of its country. None of the Security Council resolutions reaffirming Azerbaijan's sovereignty and territorial integrity and demanding the immediate, complete and unconditional withdrawal of the occupying forces had been implemented, which allowed the Armenian aggressors to feel comfortable and to continue their annexationist policy.

Azerbaijan informed the Secretary-General, in a 20 April statement [S/2000/371], of Armenian media reports that elections to the "Parliament" of the so-called "Nagorny Karabakh Republic" were scheduled for 18 June. The holding of those elections was completely illegal and a flagrant violation of international law. Azerbaijan would not recognize the results and it was certain that States and parliaments throughout the world would take the same position. It called on all international organizations, the United Nations, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, and States members of the OSCE Minsk Group and its Co-Chairmen to condemn the illegal elections and to use all possible means to avert that political farce and to refuse to recognize the results. Similar sentiments were expressed in a statement by the head of the Azerbaijan community of Nagorny Karabakh to the Co-Chairmen of the OSCE Minsk Group, transmitted to the Secretary-General by Azerbaijan in the same communication. The head of that community described the elections as nothing more than an artificial freezing of the forthcoming talks within the OSCE Minsk process. Those sentiments were echoed by Azerbaijan's Milli Mejlis (Parliament) in a 28 April statement [S/2000/390], in which it said that the holding of the illegal "elections" would have an adverse effect on the course of the peace talks and called on the Armenian community of Nagorny Karabakh to renounce those actions and put an end to the violations of Azerbaijan's Constitution. It called on the Armenian side to take a constructive position in the peace process and to refrain from actions that could complicate the OSCE Minsk Group talks.

On 2 May [S/2000/375 & Corr.1], Azerbaijan expressed concern over the command staff training carried out from 27 to 30 March between Russian Federation military personnel and the national army of Armenia at the Marshal Bagramyan military training ground in the Armavir district. It was also following with concern the situation arising out of the signing on 1 March of a protocol transferring the Russian military base from Kafan to Gyumri for a period of 25 years and the signing on 16 March of a treaty between Armenia and the Russian Federation on joint military responsibilities in anti-aircraft defence and on the military training of Armenian forces on Russian military training grounds. Azerbaijan called on the Russian Federation to suspend plans to expand and strengthen the military alliance between itself and Armenia until the conflict between Armenia and Azerbaijan over Nagorny Karabakh had been settled and to reconsider its position on that question.

On 9 October [S/2000/978], Azerbaijan characterized as a gross violation of its national legislation and of the norms and principles of international law, reports of the signing by Armenia and the "Nagorny Karabakh" occupation regime of a memorandum on mutual cooperation in various areas and on additions to the laws of that regime relating to "local self-government" and "administrative-territorial units". Azerbaijan did not recognize the legality of such decisions and rejected actions that consolidated the consequences of Armenia's aggression against it.

In a 19 October statement [S/2000/1034], transmitted by Armenia, the "Nagorny Karabakh Ministry of Foreign Affairs" said that Azerbaijan's claims in its 9 October statement were gross interference in its internal affairs. It reminded Azerbaijan that, even in the Soviet period, questions regarding the administrative and territorial division of Nagorny Karabakh fell within the competence of its authorities. It drew the international community's attention to the fact that the actions of Azerbaijani officials ran counter to its stated readiness to establish peace and stability in the region and its policy aimed at disrupting the socio-economic development of Nagorny Karabakh was openly hostile.

Cyprus

United Nations efforts to achieve a resolution of the Cyprus problem gained momentum in 2000 as five rounds of the proximity talks, initiated by the Secretary-General in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 389], were held and further sessions were scheduled. The talks were aimed at preparing the ground for meaningful negotiations leading to a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus question. Increasing contacts between Greek and Turkish Cypriots, which were an important factor in improving the political climate on the island, continued during the year. That climate was further enhanced by the May decision of the Turkish Cypriot side to lift onerous measures affecting visits to Greek Cypriots and Maronites living in the north.

The United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) continued to assist in the restoration of normal conditions and in humanitarian functions. The Security Council twice extended its mandate, the second time until 15 June 2001.

By decision 54/493 of 5 September, the General Assembly included in the draft agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Question of Cyprus". On 23 December (decision 55/458), it decided that the item would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session and that it would be considered by the Fifth Committee at that session (decision 55/455).

Incidents

Communications. Throughout 2000, the Secretary-General received numerous letters from the Government of Cyprus and from the Turkish Cypriot authorities containing charges and countercharges, protests and accusations and explanations of position. The letters from the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" were transmitted by Turkey.

In communications dated between 3 January and 18 December, Cyprus protested violations of its airspace and unauthorized intrusions into the flight information region of Nicosia by military aircraft of the Turkish Air Force and Turkey transmitted letters from the "Representative of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" refuting those allegations, stating that the flights took place within its sovereign airspace [A/54/698-S/2000/4, A/54/728-S/2000/66, A/54/743-S/2000/100, A/54/790-S/2000/204, A/54/816-S/2000/263, A/54/852-S/2000/370, A/54/892-S/2000/539, A/54/911-S/2000/551, A/54/937-S/2000/666, A/54/951-S/2000/755, A/54/955-S/2000/763, A/54/963-S/2000/813, A/55/454-S/2000/959, A/55/503-S/2000/1004, A/55/527-S/2000/1041, A/55/693-S/2000/1193, A/55/701-S/2000/1210].

In other letters communicated to the Secretary-General between 9 February and 7 December, the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" drew attention to a paper submitted by the "Greek Cypriot administration" and statements made by its representatives in several UN bodies, which the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" described as containing false allegations and misrepresentations of the Cyprus situation [A/54/747-E/2000/6, A/55/445-S/2000/940, A/55/539-S/2000/1064, A/55/627-S/2000/1094, A/55/646-S/2000/1115, A/55/672-S/2000/1161]. Also submitted to the Secretary-General was a letter from Cyprus [A/55/524-S/2000/1035] on its application for membership in the EU and the response of Turkey [A/55/547-S/2000/1075], which also transmitted the views of the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" on the subject.

Good offices mission

Proximity talks

Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1250(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 388], proximity talks continued in 2000 with the two Cyprus parties, led by Cyprus President Glafcos Clerides and Turkish Cypriot Leader Rauf R. Denktash, to prepare the ground for meaningful negotiations leading to a comprehensive settlement. The talks were facilitated on the Secretary-General's behalf by his Special Adviser on Cyprus, Alvaro de Soto. The first round of talks was held in 1999 [ibid., p. 389]. During 2000, five rounds of proximity talks took place: the second from 31 January to 8 February; the third from 5 to 12 July and the fourth from 24 July to 4 August, all in Geneva; the fifth was held from 12 to 26 September in New York; and the sixth from 1 to 10 November, again in Geneva.

During informal consultations of the Security Council on 15 February [A/55/2], the Special Adviser briefed Council members on the results of the second round of proximity talks. Following those consultations, the Council President, in a statement to the press on behalf of the Council, said that negotiation of a comprehensive settlement in Cyprus was a matter that the Council continued to follow with the closest interest; it had stated repeatedly that the status quo in Cyprus was unacceptable. Council members commended the continuing commitment shown by the parties to the talks and the fact that they had been conducted in a positive atmosphere and without preconditions. They encouraged all concerned to continue their efforts towards a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus question and looked forward to the resumption of the talks in New York on 23 May.

In May [S/2000/496], the Secretary-General reported that, following the second round of proximity talks, his Special Adviser met separately with the two leaders and visited Athens, Greece, and Ankara, Turkey, in connection with those talks. However, the third round of talks, scheduled for 23 May in New York, had to be put off for health reasons. Both leaders accepted the Secretary-General's invitation to meet in Geneva starting 5 July.

On 10 May [S/2000/431], the Secretary-General informed the Council President that, to give priority to the good offices effort under way, he had asked his Special Adviser to remain in New York for the time being.

On 13 July [A/54/938-S/2000/688], the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus", in a letter transmitted to the Secretary-General by Turkey, complained that, while the third round of talks was being held in Geneva, Greek Cypriot rearmament activities continued, casting a shadow on the spirit and purpose of the talks, which were aimed at preparing the ground for meaningful negotiations to a peaceful settlement. It also drew attention to a 27 February statement by the Cypriot Defence Minister to the effect that the current process of proximity talks and the expected third round would not have an effect on their rearmament efforts. The "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" believed that the Council should take note of those serious developments, which did not augur well for the success of the proximity talks, and urge the Greek side to stop its arming frenzy.

Cyprus, on 20 July [A/54/944-S/2000/711], recalled that the Special Envoy, on 12 July, the last day of the third round of the proximity talks, had reiterated an appeal on the Secretary-General's behalf to the two sides to play down the tone, size and content of the official rhetoric during the period between the last and the forthcoming round of talks. Cyprus drew attention to provocative actions by the Turkish side, which ignored the appeal, including violations of the airspace of the Republic of Cyprus and reinforcement of the Turkish occupying forces. Cyprus protested those actions and expressed the hope that the necessary positive attitude would be shown by Turkey so that the proximity talks in progress, as well as other efforts for finding a just and viable solution to the Cyprus problem, would not be adversely affected.

On 28 November [S/2000/1188], the Secretary-General, reporting to the Council on his good offices mission in Cyprus, stated that, in furtherance of the mission, which included consultations in the region, as well as with various capitals, the Special Adviser had been assisted by a small team of Secretariat and UNFICYP staff, a legal adviser and international consultants. The Secretary-General expected the mission to continue from January until at least June 2001, at which point resource requirements in support of that mandate could be incorporated into UNFICYP's budget, on which he would report separately. On 14 December [S/2000/1189], the Council took note of the contents of the Secretary-General's letter and his expectations regarding the continuation of his mission of good offices in Cyprus.

Goodwill measures

As indicated during the second round of proximity talks, the "Turkish Cypriot Republic of Northern Cyprus", in a 19 May communication [A/54/878-S/2000/462] transmitted by Turkey, announced a series of unilateral goodwill measures aimed at further enhancing the living standards of the Greek Cypriots and Maronites residing in the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus". Those measures included reducing crossing fees; issuing permits for visits to close relatives for a reasonable period of time, with the possibility of extension for family, health or other extenuating circumstances; removal of the age restriction applied to Greek Cypriot students wishing to visit their families and who had yet to fulfil military service; the granting of permission to the spouse of a Greek Cypriot or Maronite residing in the North who married a Greek Cypriot or Maronite or any other third party national residing outside the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" to take up residency in the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus"; ensuring the freedom of movement throughout the territory of the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus", on a par with its citizens; and allowing any Maronite or Greek Cypriot residing in the "Turkish Cypriot Republic of Northern Cyprus" to apply for citizenship.

UNFICYP

The United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus, established by Security Council resolution 186(1964) [YUN 1964, p. 165], continued in 2000 to monitor the ceasefire lines between the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces on the northern side and the Cypriot National Guard on the southern side; to maintain the military status quo and prevent a recurrence of fighting; and to undertake humanitarian and economic activities. In the absence of a formal ceasefire agreement, the military status quo, as recorded by UNFICYP in 1974, remained the standard by which the Force judged whether changes constituted violations of the status quo.

UNFICYP, under the overall authority of the Deputy Special Representative and Chief of Mission, continued to keep the area between the ceasefire lines, known as the buffer zone, under constant surveillance through a system of observation posts, and through air, vehicle and foot patrols.

During the year, Alvaro de Soto continued as the Secretary-General's Special Adviser on Cyprus. On 10 May [S/2000/431], the Secretary-General informed the Council of his intention to appoint Zbigniew Wlosowicz (Poland) as Acting Special Representative and Chief of Mission of UNFICYP as of 1 June; he would succeed James Holger, whose term came to an end on 31 May.

As at 31 December, UNFICYP, under the command of Major-General Victory Rana (Nepal), comprised 1,213 troops and 33 civilian police. The military personnel were from Argentina, Austria, Canada, Finland, Hungary, Ireland, the Netherlands, Slovenia and the United Kingdom. The Argentine contingent included soldiers from Brazil, Paraguay and Uruguay. The civilian police were from Australia and Ireland. The civilian component comprised 42 international and 147 local staff.

Activities

Report of Secretary-General (May). The Secretary-General, in his report covering developments and UNFICYP activities from 30 November 1999 to 31 May 2000 [S/2000/496 & Corr.1], said that the situation along the ceasefire lines remained stable, with a significant reduction in the overall number of incidents. Threats against UN soldiers on patrol remained a concern. Local restrictions by the National Guard on the freedom of movement of the United Nations in the area of the Kokkina pocket and Kato Pyrgos at the western end of the buffer zone had impeded access to a number of UN observation posts. Efforts continued to have those restrictions removed. Air violations of the UN buffer zone increased. In addition, National Guard personnel in military vehicles were observed in the zone on 4 April.

Contacts between Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots on the island increased, most of them occurring with UNFICYP's help. For the first time in several years, two meetings took place between political party representatives from both sides. UNFICYP continued to support civilian activities in the buffer zone, including farming, industry and recreational activities. Regular contacts and cooperation continued with both sides to resolve questions concerning movement and access, shared resources, such as water, and proposed works in the buffer zone. UNFICYP also maintained liaison with the police on both sides and carried out humanitarian tasks. On 5 May, the Turkish Cypriot authorities announced measures to ease restrictions affecting movement between the two sides, which had been instituted in February 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 413]. UNFICYP helped to arrange several large pilgrimages of Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots to their respective holy places.

After an interruption of more than three years, the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus met from November 1999 to January 2000 and discussed the possibility of resuming its investigative work.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend UNFICYP's mandate for a further period of six months, until 15 December 2000.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 14 June [meeting 4155], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1303(2000). The draft [S/2000/549] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 26 May 2000 on the United Nations operation in Cyprus, in particular the call to the parties to assess and address the humanitarian issue of missing persons with due urgency and seriousness,

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus beyond 15 June 2000,

Welcoming and encouraging efforts by the United Nations to sensitize peacekeeping personnel in the prevention and control of HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases in all its peacekeeping operations,

1. Reaffirms all its relevant resolutions on Cyprus, in particular resolutions 1251(1999) of 29 June 1999 and 1283(1999) of 15 December 1999;

2. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus for a further period ending 15 December 2000;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report by 1 December 2000 on the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (December). In December [S/2000/1138], the Secretary-General reported no significant change in the military situation along the ceasefire lines. However, air violations of the buffer zone by Turkish military aircraft rose to 47, compared with 7 in the same period the previous year. In addition, on 22 October, Turkish military aircraft reportedly came within a little over three nautical miles offshore from the Paphos air base, causing a National Guard air defence element to lock on its radar. Air violations of the buffer zone by military and civilian aircraft from the other side decreased to 10, compared with 18 in the same period the previous year. On 30 June, the Turkish Cypriot authorities and Turkish forces instituted a number of measures against UNFICYP, the main one being the closure of all crossings of the Turkish forces' ceasefire line, except for the one at the former Ledra Palace Hotel in Nicosia. In conjunction with existing restrictions on its movement in the north, that measure would have completely isolated UN troops in three camps in the north and at Strovilia. Three additional crossing points were subsequently reopened to allow access to the camps from the south. The next day, the Turkish forces/Turkish Cypriot security forces moved forward of their ceasefire line at Strovilia and had since controlled UNFICYP's access to its post there. Since October, the Turkish forces had prevented UNFICYP from moving along the Famagusta-Dherinia road. The impact of those restrictions was significant: UNFICYP's operational effectiveness had suffered; response times had increased; and command, logistic and administrative movements had lengthened significantly. The Turkish Cypriot authorities also imposed mandatory additional insurance for UN vehicles, which had to be obtained from insurance companies in the north, and announced that they would require UNFICYP to pay for electricity and other utilities for its bases in the north.

UNFICYP continued to monitor the status quo in the fenced area of Varosha, which continued to change. There were frequent crossings of the maritime security line, the seaward extension of the median of the buffer zone, by Greek Cypriot fishing and tourist boats offshore from Dherinia, occasionally triggering warning shots from the Turkish forces. In the north-west, the Turkish forces' supply boats on their way to and from Kokkina crossed the line on a daily basis.

Contacts between Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots continued to increase, including at large public events, such as the Festival of Mutual Understanding organized by political parties in September and the United Nations Day celebration in October. Other initiatives ranged from meetings of politicians, youth workshops and a summer school to forums for business representatives, media and teachers. Regarding the easing of certain restrictions on movement between the two sides, which the Turkish Cypriot authorities announced in May, although crossing fees had been reduced, Greek Cypriots seeking to extend their visits to relatives in the Karpas beyond three days had encountered obstacles. The Turkish Cypriot authorities had also been less forthcoming than in the past with respect to crossings arranged by UNFICYP for humanitarian reasons.

UNFICYP assisted various projects in the buffer zone with the cooperation of the local authorities from both sides. Progress was achieved on water supply matters, urban renovation work, use of farmland and roadways and other issues.

The Secretary-General recommended that UNFICYP's mandate be extended until 15 June 2001.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 13 December [meeting 4246], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1331 (2000). The draft [S/2000/1177] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 1 December 2000 on the United Nations operation in Cyprus, in particular the call to the parties to assess and address the humanitarian issue of missing persons with due urgency and seriousness,

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus beyond 15 December 2000,

Welcoming and encouraging efforts by the United Nations to sensitize peacekeeping personnel in the prevention and control of HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases in all its peacekeeping operations,

1. Reaffirms all its relevant resolutions on Cyprus, in particular resolution 1251(1999) of 29 June 1999 and subsequent resolutions;

2. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus for a further period ending 15 June 2001;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report, by 1 June 2001, on the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Urges the Turkish Cypriot side and Turkish forces to rescind the restrictions imposed on 30 June 2000 on the operations of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus, and to restore the military status quo ante at Strovilia;

5. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

On 28 December [A/55/717-S/2000/1241], Turkey transmitted to the Secretary-General the views of Mr. Denktas regarding resolution 1331(2000). He complained that, while the resolution mentioned the consent of the "so-called" Government of Cyprus to the extension of UNFICYP's mandate, no mention was made of the consent of the Turkish Cypriot party. Mr. Denktas reminded the Secretary-General that UNFICYP's deployment in the territory of the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" was subject to the approval of its authorities and the continuation of UNFICYP's operations could be possible only with the cooperation of the authorities and on the basis of a properly authorized framework. It again stressed the necessity of concluding an agreement to put its relations with UNFICYP on a sound basis. Mr. Denktas added that the resolution contradicted the principle of the political equality of the two parties, as well as the political, legal and practical realities prevailing in Cyprus.

Financing

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's report on UNFICYP's financial performance for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 [A/54/704], the proposed budget for UNFICYP's maintenance for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 [A/54/729] and ACABQ's comments and recommendations [A/54/841 & Add.4], adopted, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/901], resolution 54/270 without vote [agenda item 136].

Financing of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 186(1964) of 4 March 1964, by which the Council established the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was resolution 1303(2000) of 14 June 2000,

Recalling also its resolution 53/231 of 8 June 1999 on the financing of the Force,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Force that are not covered by voluntary contributions are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Force by certain Governments,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Expressing its appreciation to all those Member States and observer States which have made voluntary contributions to the Special Account established for the financing of the Force for the period prior to 16 June 1993,

Noting that voluntary contributions were insufficient to cover all the costs of the Force, including those incurred by troop-contributing Governments prior to 16 June 1993, and regretting the absence of an adequate response to appeals for voluntary contributions, including that contained in the letter dated 17 May 1994 from the Secretary-General to all Member States,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus as at 30 April 2000, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 17.7 million United States dollars, representing some 11.2 per cent of the total assessed contributions from 16 June 1993 to the period ending 15 June 2000, notes that some 22 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursements to troop contributors that bear additional burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Force in full and on time;

5. Expresses concern at the delay experienced by the Secretary-General in deploying and providing adequate resources to some recent peacekeeping missions, in particular those in Africa;

6. Emphasizes that all future and existing peacekeeping missions shall be given equal and non-discriminatory treatment in respect of financial and administrative arrangements;

7. Also emphasizes that all peacekeeping missions shall be provided with adequate resources for the effective and efficient discharge of their respective mandates;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Force, and for this purpose requests the Secretary-General to speed up the implementation of the asset management system at all peacekeeping missions in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/1 A of 15 October 1997;

9. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to reduce the cost of employing General Service staff, to continue efforts to recruit local staff for the Force against General Service posts, commensurate with the requirements of the Force;

12. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus the amount of 43,422,065 dollars gross (41,404,128 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Force for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, inclusive of the amount of 2,060,180 dollars gross (1,743,344 dollars net) for the support account for peacekeeping operations, and the amount of 322,085 dollars gross (286,584 dollars net) for the United Nations Logistics Base;

13. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, taking into consideration the funding through voluntary contributions of one third of the cost of the Force, equivalent to 13,801,375 dollars, by the Government of Cyprus and the annual pledge of 6.5 million dollars from the Government of Greece, to apportion among Member States the amount of 23,120,690 dollars gross (21,102,753 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, at a monthly rate of 1,926,724 dollars gross (1,758,563 dollars net), in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996, 51/218 A to C of 18 December 1996 and 52/230 of 31 March 1998 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, 50/451 B of 23 December 1995 and 54/456 to 54/458 of 23 December 1999, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 2000, as set out in its resolutions 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 and 54/237 A of 23 December 1999, and for the year 2001, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Force;

14. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 13 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 2,017,937 dollars approved for the Force for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001;

15. Decides that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Force, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 13 above, their respective share of the unencumbered balance of 374,000 dollars gross (421,700 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999;

Cooperation with OSCE

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/117 [YUN 1999, p. 394], the Secretary-General submitted a June report [A/55/98], describing co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE).

During the year, a number of meetings took place between UN and OSCE officials in New York, Geneva and Vienna. Of particular note was the ninth high-level meeting of the United Nations-OSCE-Council of Europe tripartite process of informal consultations (Geneva, 24-25 February), which discussed peace and stability in South-Eastern Europe. The meeting was preceded by a target-oriented tripartite meeting on "Law enforcement, in particular the police: operations in South-Eastern Europe". Such meetings demonstrated the continued relevance of the process of improving the complementarity of activities undertaken by participating organizations. The two organizations also continued to practise a division of labour based on their comparative advantages. UNDP's cooperation with OSCE, particularly with its Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights (ODIHR) and with the High Commissioner on National Minorities (HCNM), included a continuous exchange of information, publications and coordination of activities and organization of events, such as the workshop for ombudsmen and human rights institutions in Almaty, Kazakhstan. Other mutual activities included projects in human rights protection institutions, gender issues, civil society and the rule of law; joint assistance in the drafting of a law on ombudsman institutions in Central Asia; and coordination of assistance to institutions in Albania, Estonia and Georgia. OSCE and UNDP also provided support for the holding of elections. The Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) and OSCE member Governments had given a strong mandate to their respective organizations to foster cooperation in view of the challenges they both faced with regard to economic post-conflict reconstruction and the implementation of the Stability Pact in South-Eastern Europe [YUN 1999, p. 398]. The two organizations had begun to give more attention to economic and environmental factors and their security implications. The relationship between UNHCR and OSCE had developed into a comprehensive strategic partnership, focusing on the prevention of mass displacement, the recognition of the critical linkage between displacement and security and the need to address the human dimension of conflict resolution. Cooperation at headquarters level included consultations on operational design and policy development. However, the field-level UNHCR-OSCE partnership needed to be continuously refined and focused to minimize duplication while maximizing synergies.

The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and OSCE had a number of cooperative efforts under way in the Kosovo province of FRY, including the implementation of the UNICEF juvenile justice project and a number of complementary juvenile justice activities. The World Food Programme also maintained mutually beneficial cooperation with OSCE in Kosovo. In Albania, UNICEF and OSCE collaborated extensively on institution-building and on strengthening the rights of the child. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights also maintained constructive contacts with OSCE through its field offices in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and Kosovo, consulting on a wide range of human rights issues. The bulk of cooperation between the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and OSCE took place in the context of UN operations in Georgia, Tajikistan and, to a more limited extent, the Russian Federation. They also cooperated on issues of mutual interest, such as attracting donor assistance to the region and regular liaison with de facto authorities in situ, aimed at facilitating the creation of humanitarian space within which agencies could operate.

Stability and development in South-Eastern Europe

On 12 February [A/54/755-S/2000/125], the Third Meeting of Heads of State and Government of South-East European Countries (Bucharest, Romania) adopted the Bucharest Declaration, in which they recognized their countries' responsibility to work within the international community to develop a shared strategy for stability and growth in the region and to cooperate with each other and the international community to implement that strategy. They expressed their appreciation to the EU for launching the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe [YUN 1999, p. 398] and appreciated the first practical steps taken to implement it. They looked forward to the Regional Financing Conference to give strong impetus to the Pact's implementation and reiterated their commitment to carrying out the reform processes endorsed by the Stability Pact.

The heads of State and Government signed a Charter on Good-Neighbourly Relations, Stability, Security and Cooperation in South-Eastern Europe [A/54/781], emphasizing their commitment to economic and democratic reforms. The Charter constituted a Code of Conduct for relations among their countries and an action programme for future cooperation.

The Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the countries participating in the South-East European Cooperation Process (SEEC), at their annual meeting (Ohrid, FYROM, 14 July) [A/55/165], underlined the need for accelerated and full implementation of the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe as a prerequisite for political stability and wider democratization in the region. They welcomed the progress in the realization of initiatives and projects within the Pact, especially the Investment Compact and the Anti-Corruption Initiative.

The G-8 countries, in a statement on regional issues, adopted at the Kyushu-Okinawa Summit Meeting (Okinawa, Japan, 21-23 July) [A/55/220-S/2000/759], expressed their commitment to supporting peace, stability, foreign and national investment and development in South-East Europe and welcomed the coordination provided by the Stability Pact, which was contributing to enhanced regional political and economic cooperation in South-Eastern Europe. They also supported the projects being implemented within the framework of the Stability Pact by the World Bank, the European Commission, the European Investment Bank and the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

Further support for the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe was expressed in the Zagreb Declaration [A/55/406-S/2000/892], adopted by the Parliamentary Summit of the countries participating in the Pact (Zagreb, Croatia, 11-13 September).

The Foreign Ministers of the States participating in SEEC, meeting on 12 September in New York [A/C.1/55/4], agreed that the activities of the Process were in accordance with the commitments contained in the Millennium Declaration (see p. 49) for intensifying cooperation between the United Nations and regional agencies, institutions and organizations to strengthen international peace and security.

On 25 October [A/55/522-S/2000/1028], the heads of State and Government of the countries participating in SEEC, at an informal summit in Skopje, FYROM, discussed the ongoing process of the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe and stated their strong commitment to its early implementation and to the undertaking of joint activities. They believed that SEEC represented a solid basis for strengthening cooperation in the region and expressed their commitment that it would assume a more important role in the future development of the region.

Chapter VI

Middle East

In 2000, the work of the United Nations in the Middle East was affected by two major events, one of which was positive—the complete withdrawal of Israeli forces from southern Lebanon in June. The other—the escalation of violence in the Occupied Palestinian Territory in late September—resulted in the breakdown of the peace process between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO). Despite that setback, the United Nations continued, through its peace-keeping operations, the good offices of the Secretary-General and programmes of economic, social and other forms of assistance, as well as active participation in multilateral negotiations, to support and promote peace and economic development in the region.

Throughout the year, the international community made strenuous efforts to break the stalemate in the Middle East peace process by building on the 1999 Sharm el-Sheikh (Egypt) Memorandum, signed by Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak and PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat. Although no comprehensive agreement between the two parties was reached at the July Middle East Peace Summit, held at Camp David, Maryland, under the auspices of United States President William J. Clinton, Prime Minister Barak and Chairman Arafat committed themselves to continue their efforts to conclude an agreement on permanent status issues.

The Palestinian intifada (uprising) erupted at the end of September following the visit of Israeli opposition leader Ariel Sharon to a holy Islamic site in the Old City of Jerusalem. In an effort to end the violence, high-level meetings took place in early October in Paris and Sharm el-Sheikh but no agreement was reached. In the face of the continuing crisis, President Clinton and President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt convened the Sharm el-Sheikh Middle East Peace Summit on 16 and 17 October, which produced understandings aimed at ending the confrontation and established a Fact-Finding Committee, chaired by former United States Senator George Mitchell, to investigate the causes of the violence. Nevertheless, the security situation deteriorated further at the end of the year, with hundreds of civilians, the majority Palestinians, either killed or injured.

Following the September uprising, the Security Council convened in a three-day emergency meeting. In a 7 October resolution, the Council called for the immediate cessation of violence and for Israel to abide by its obligations under the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention). In December, a draft resolution, by which the Council would have expressed its determination to establish a UN observer force in the territories occupied by Israel, was not adopted as it did not obtain the required number of votes.

In October, the General Assembly resumed its tenth emergency special session, which first convened in 1997, to discuss the item "Illegal Israeli actions in the Occupied Palestinian Territory". It condemned the violence that erupted in late September and the excessive use of force by the Israeli forces against Palestinian civilians and, among other things, urged all parties concerned to implement the understandings reached at the Sharm el-Sheikh Summit.

In southern Lebanon, guns fell silent after more than two decades as the United Nations confirmed the withdrawal of Israeli troops from the area on 16 June 2000 in compliance with Security Council resolution 425(1978) [YUN 1978, p. 312]. An international boundary line between Israel and Lebanon, the so-called Blue Line, was established by the United Nations for the sole purpose of confirming the withdrawal. Although both parties undertook to respect that boundary, violations and attacks across the Blue Line occurred during the second half of the year. The Secretary-General visited regional leaders in June to discuss the situation. He also appointed Rolf G. Knutson as his Personal Representative for southern Lebanon to coordinate UN activities in the area. The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) pursued efforts to limit the conflict and protect inhabitants from its consequences and, following the Israeli withdrawal, was reinforced and redeployed in the vacated areas. Although the Lebanese Government re-established its effective authority in the area, Lebanese security forces did not operate close to the Blue Line, where control was left to the paramilitary group Hezbollah.

The mandates of UNIFIL and of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) in the Golan Heights were extended twice during the year, and the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO) continued to assist both peacekeeping operations in their tasks.

The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), despite ongoing financial difficulties, continued to provide a wide-ranging programme of education, health, relief and social services to 3.7 million Palestinian refugees living both in and outside camps in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, as well as in Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic. Following the September escalation of violence, UNRWA launched an urgent appeal to fund a three-month contingency plan to buy food and medical supplies for Palestinian refugees.

During the year, the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories reported to the Assembly on the situation in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights. The Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People continued to mobilize international support for the Palestinians.

By decision 55/431 of 14 December, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the agenda item "Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful use of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security" and included it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth (2001) session. The item had been inscribed yearly on the Assembly's agenda since 1981, following the bombing by Israel of a nuclear research centre near Baghdad [YUN 1981, p. 275].

Peace process

Overall situation

During the first nine months of 2000, Israel and the PLO continued to implement the 1999 Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum [YUN 1999, p. 401]. Actions included the further redeployment of Israeli troops from parts of the West Bank, an agreement on the release of Palestinian prisoners, the opening of a southern safe passage between the West Bank and the Gaza Strip and the resumption of negotiations on permanent status issues.

The resumed negotiations between Israel and the PLO took place in the United States in March/April at Bolling Air Force Base near Washington, D.C., and at the Middle East Peace Summit, held in July under the auspices of President William J. Clinton, at Camp David, Maryland. Although Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak and PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat failed to reach a comprehensive agreement, they committed themselves, in the trilateral statement made at the conclusion of the Summit, to continue their efforts to conclude an agreement on all permanent status issues as soon as possible.

The eruption of the Palestinian intifada (uprising) in protest over the visit of Israeli opposition leader Ariel Sharon, accompanied by Likud Knesset members and hundreds of security personnel and police, to the holy Islamic site of Al-Haram Al-Sharif (the Dome of the Rock) compound in the Old City of Jerusalem on 28 September marked the end of peace negotiations and the beginning of a spiral of violence, which had devastating effects on the security and economic situation of the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

In an effort to stop the violence, Chairman Arafat and Prime Minister Barak met in Paris on 4 October with United States Secretary of State Madeleine Albright, French President Jacques Chirac and the Secretary-General. A further meeting took place in Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt, on 5 October but Prime Minister Barak did not attend. Following the adoption of a Security Council resolution on 7 October and in order to bring about an end to the crisis, President Clinton and Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak convened the Sharm el-Sheikh Middle East Peace Summit on 16 and 17 October, which was also attended by King Abdullah II of Jordan, Prime Minister Barak, Chairman Arafat, President Javier Solana of the European Union (EU) and the Secretary-General. The Summit produced understandings in three areas—security cooperation, establishment of a fact-finding committee and renewal of the peace process aimed at ending the confrontation and restoring calm in the region. The further escalation of violence following the Summit made the achievement of those objectives all but impossible, with the exception of the establishment in November of the Fact-Finding Committee, which was expected to report in 2001.

In a November report [A/55/639-S/2000/1113], the Secretary-General said that the quest for a lasting peace between Israel and the Palestinians reached a crucial stage at the Camp David Summit in July. Though an overall agreement was not reached, for the first time the most difficult issues were seriously addressed. However, following Mr. Sharon's visit to the Temple Mount/Al-Haram Al-Sharif in Jerusalem, protests and violence erupted in which more than 230 people were killed, the vast majority Palestinians. The crisis held the potential for further escalation with dangerous consequences for the entire Middle East. The Israelis and Palestinians had to live side by side with each other and had to reconcile their differences through dialogue and co-operation. The question was how to respond to the legitimate aspirations of the Palestinian people to personal dignity and national independence and to the legitimate security concerns of Israel.

In resolution 55/55 of 1 December (see p. 440), the General Assembly noted the signing of the 1999 Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum and continued to express its full support for the peace process, which began in Madrid in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 221], the 1993 Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements [YUN 1993, p. 521] and the 1995 Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip [YUN 1995, p. 626]. However, the Assembly stressed its deep concern over the clashes between the Israeli forces and the Palestinian police in the Occupied Palestinian Territory since 28 September, which had resulted in a high number of deaths and injuries.

Committee on Palestinian Rights. In its annual report [A/55/35], the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian Rights) expressed grave concern over the violent confrontations between Israeli security forces and Palestinians in the Old City of Jerusalem that had erupted on 28 September, and noted that excessive force had been used by the Israel Defence Forces (IDF) against the Palestinian protesters. The Committee reiterated that those events were a direct result of the policies and practices of the Israeli occupation and Israel's failure to respect its obligations under the Fourth Geneva Convention and the provisions of relevant Security Council and General Assembly resolutions. Israel's persistent refusal to live up to those principles, as well as the continued lack of progress in the peace negotiations, jeopardized the peace process and increased volatility in the region. The Committee viewed the understandings reached at Sharm el-Sheikh as a useful step towards halting the violence.

Occupied Palestinian Territory

Communications (16 March–7 September). On 16 March [A/54/799-S/2000/220], Israel informed the Secretary-General of anti-Israel and anti-Jewish incitement emanating from some Arab countries. The campaign did not refrain from advocating violence and the rhetoric had been unleashed by official organs, appearing in official and governmental media, including in countries party to peace negotiations with Israel.

Responding on 31 March [A/54/821-S/2000/276], the United Arab Emirates, as Chairman of the Arab Group for the month of March, said that Israel's statement deliberately overlooked the fact that the fundamental reason for the condemnation of Israel was the shelling and bombing of civilians in Lebanon and the consequent destruction of Lebanese infrastructure. Israel also sought to cloak its acts of aggression, as illustrated by the fact that occupation, the building of settlements, the expropriation of land, the attempted Judaization of Jerusalem and repressive practices against Arab citizens in the Occupied Palestinian Territory continued.

On 19 June [A/54/924-S/2000/600], the Permanent Observer of Palestine informed the Secretary-General that Israel's army chief of staff had verbally threatened to use extreme force against the Palestinian people. Such threats were not only inconsistent with the peace process, but also increased tension between the Palestinian and Israeli peoples.

By a 29 June follow-up letter [A/54/930-S/2000/637] to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President, the Permanent Observer said that unusual military movements and preparations were being carried out by the Israeli forces in the occupied Gaza Strip. Such preparations were related to the verbal threats of force made by Israeli officials.

On 30 June [A/54/932-S/2000/644], the Permanent Observer said that Israel's Attorney-General had stated that UN resolutions calling for the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the occupied territories were not applicable to the West Bank, including East Jerusalem and the Gaza Strip.

By a 7 September letter to the Secretary-General [A/55/378-S/2000/868], Malaysia transmitted the final communiqué and recommendations adopted by the Al-Quds Committee at its eighteenth session (Agadir, Morocco, 28 August). The Committee, among other things, supported Palestinian sovereignty over Al-Quds Al-Sharif (Jerusalem), including the Mosque of Al-Haram Al-Sharif and all other Christian and Islamic sanctuaries situated inside the city.

Escalation of violence

Communications (29 September–3 October).

By a 29 September letter to the Secretary-General [A/55/432-S/2000/921], the Permanent Observer of Palestine said that on 28 September Mr. Sharon, a member of the Israeli parliament and the leader of the Likud Party, led a group of parliamentarians in a provocative visit to Al-Haram Al-Sharif in Occupied East Jerusalem, in order to emphasize Israeli sovereignty over the place. Hundreds of Israeli security forces accompanied Mr. Sharon, which further aggravated tensions, leading to clashes between Palestinian civilians and Israeli soldiers. On 29 September, Israeli security forces stormed Al-Haram Al-Sharif using rubber bullets and live ammunition against the worshippers, killing five Palestinian civilians and wounding about 200 others. Clashes later spread to the rest of East Jerusalem, Bethlehem, Ramallah and Gaza.

By a 2 October follow-up letter to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President [A/55/437-S/2000/930], the Permanent Observer said that Israel had continued its campaign against the Palestinians. As at 1 October and since the visit to Al-Haram Al-Sharif by Mr. Sharon, Israeli soldiers had killed 28 Palestinians and injured at least 800 others. Israel had deployed snipers and used high-velocity ammunition, as well as anti-tank missiles, rockets, grenades and helicopter gunships. Israeli tanks had moved towards several Palestinian cities and some posts manned by Palestinian police. The Permanent Observer called for an immediate meeting of the Council to consider the situation.

In a 2 October letter to the Secretary-General [A/55/440-S/2000/936], the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights expressed concern at the continued confrontation in the Old City of Jerusalem and throughout the West Bank and Gaza. According to media reports, 40 Palestinians had died and 1,500 others had been wounded since 28 September. The Committee was of the view that the events of the past several days were a direct result of the policies and practices of the Israeli occupation; Israel continued to violate its obligations under the Fourth Geneva Convention and the provisions of Security Council and General Assembly resolutions.

Responding on 2 October [A/55/441-S/2000/937], Israel said that the events of 28 September on the Temple Mount represented a further escalation of Palestinian violence. Muslim worshippers hurled rocks at Jewish worshippers gathered at the Western Wall on the eve of the Jewish New Year, and then attempted to force their way out of the Temple Mount area and through the Mughrabim gate to the Western Wall plaza. At that point, Israeli forces were compelled to enter the area to push back the charging crowd. Since then, the Palestinian violence had continued unabated, and there had been numerous instances of live fire emanating from within protesting crowds. Israeli security personnel returned fire only when absolutely necessary and exercised all possible restraint in their efforts to restore calm and security. Israel stressed that the responsibility for the escalation lay with the Palestinian Authority (PA) because of, among other things, its incitement of the population through inflammatory rhetoric and calls to violence. Furthermore, PA policemen and security forces had taken an active role in the events, including the use of live ammunition against Israelis.

On 3 October [A/55/449-S/2000/956], Malaysia transmitted to the Secretary-General the statement adopted by the Islamic Group at the United Nations at its meeting on the situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including the situation in Al-Quds Al-Sharif (New York, 2 October). The Islamic Group condemned the actions of the Israeli security forces against Palestinian civilians and called for the full respect of Jerusalem's Holy Places. It called on Israel to abide by its obligations under the Fourth Geneva Convention and relevant Council resolutions and supported the Palestinian and Arab request for an immediate meeting of the Council to consider the situation in Occupied East Jerusalem and the rest of the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (3-5 October)

At the request of Iraq [S/2000/928], Malaysia [S/2000/929, S/2000/935] and South Africa [S/2000/934], and that of 2 October from the Permanent Observer of Palestine (see above), the Security Council, on 3, 4 and 5 October [meeting 4204], discussed the situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question. With the Council's consent, the President invited, among others, Egypt and Israel, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President also invited the Permanent Observer of Palestine to participate, at his own request [S/2000/938].

On 3 October, the Permanent Observer of Palestine said that Mr. Sharon's provocative visit to Al-Haram Al-Sharif and the subsequent Israeli forced entry into Al-Haram Al-Sharif resulted in a large number of injuries and touched off massive protests by Palestinian civilians throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Israeli forces reacted by using considerable military power, including snipers, live ammunition, hand grenades, anti-tank missiles, helicopters and tanks. The Palestinian police, having witnessed firsthand the severity of the Israeli forces' attacks against Palestinian civilians, engaged in clashes with those forces. That exchange of fire did not change the basic nature of the events in question, which were in essence acts of oppression and brutality by Israel against Palestinians. In addition, Israeli Arabs, who had staged demonstrations inside Israel in solidarity with their brethren in the Palestinian territories, were killed and injured by Israeli forces. The Permanent Observer stated that the Council had to put an immediate end to Israel's brutal campaign and to its violation of international law.

Israel said that although some were inclined to assign exclusive responsibility to Israel for the latest acts of provocation, the reality was far less simplistic. The Palestinian escalation dated back to well before the Temple Mount disturbances, when, on 13 September, stones and Molotov cocktails were thrown at Israeli positions in the vicinity of the Netzarim junction in Gaza. That was followed by a number of increasingly violent attacks against Israeli security forces. The events on the Temple Mount escalated the violence even further. Israel was not faced with peaceful demonstrators but, rather, with a coordinated escalation of violent confrontation throughout the West Bank and Gaza. In a phenomenon that had become a commonplace occurrence, there had been numerous instances of live fire emanating from within rioting crowds. Israel stressed that the responsibility for the escalation of violence lay with the PA, not only because of its failure to take action to halt those events, but also because it incited the population through inflammatory rhetoric and calls to violence. Furthermore, PA security forces and paramilitary groups, such as Fatah's Tanzim, had taken a leading role in the events. Even more disturbing for Israel was the violation of signed agreements regarding the use of weapons by Palestinian policemen. Israel called on the PA to put an end to the use of gunfire by Palestinian police, to collect the illegal weapons in the hands of the Tanzim and to keep Palestinian protesters at a distance from Israeli positions.

The United States said that President Clinton and his administration were involved in ongoing consultations with the parties in a search for ways to end the violence. The parties were expected to meet on 4 October in Paris with the United States Secretary of State and on 5 October in Cairo, Egypt, with President Mubarak. As soon as conditions permitted, the United States would chair an Israeli-Palestinian meeting for the purpose of fact-finding.

France condemned the visit by Mr. Sharon on 28 September to the sacred site of the Mosque Plaza, undertaken for reasons of domestic politics and at the most sensitive time in the peace negotiations. It noted that at issue was the responsibility of those who were in charge of maintaining order and that the disproportionate use of armed force violated the Fourth Geneva Convention. Speaking on behalf of the EU, France stated that the EU supported the creation of an objective fact-finding international commission.

Malaysia, as Chairman of the Islamic Group, condemned the actions of the Israeli security forces against Palestinian civilians, as well as the visit of the Likud Party leader to Al-Haram Al-Sharif in disregard of the religious sensitivities of the Palestinians. His visit at a delicate juncture in the peace process was intended to provoke a Palestinian reaction. Malaysia called on the Israeli authorities to put an end to the high-handed actions of their security forces and to bring to justice those directly responsible for violence. It reaffirmed its position that a comprehensive, just and lasting peace could be achieved only with the complete withdrawal of Israel from all Arab and Palestinian land occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem and occupied Syrian Golan. It also stated that the establishment of an independent State of Palestine, with Jerusalem as its capital, along with the implementation of all international resolutions on the Palestinian issue, were the only guarantees for lasting peace between Israel and Palestine.

Egypt questioned the position of the Israeli Government, which, while claiming to be working towards peace, allowed Mr. Sharon to undertake the provocative visit to Al-Haram Al-Sharif. Egypt viewed that situation as an attempt to bring pressure to bear on the Palestinians with regard to the issue of sovereignty over Jerusalem's holy sites. In fact, Egypt said that the crux of the crisis remained the question of Jerusalem—East Jerusalem and the Old City in particular, which had been occupied by Israel since 1967. Egypt called on the Council, among other things, to take measures to guarantee the non-entry by the Israeli armed forces, including security and army troops, into the courtyard of Al-Haram Al-Sharif; to investigate the events that had occurred since 28 September; and to condemn Mr. Sharon's visit.

On 5 October, Israel said that, whatever its motives and implications, Mr. Sharon's visit was undertaken in full compliance with the principles of Israeli democracy, thus Prime Minister Barak could not impede Mr. Sharon's visit to the Temple Mount. In addition, it affirmed that the Temple Mount, sacred to Islam on the side where Al-Haram Al-Sharif was located, was equally sacred to Judaism for its ancient layers, on which Jewish identity and history were based. Only if the two sides were able to consider and accept each other's symbolic and political systems could peace be achieved.

The Permanent Observer of Palestine replied that violence continued in the occupied territories, despite the efforts deployed in Paris and in Sharm el-Sheikh. At the 4 October meeting in Paris, no agreement was reached because Israel rejected the idea of an international commission of inquiry. In addition, Prime Minister Barak did not go to Sharm el-Sheikh on 5 October, despite the fact that Chairman Arafat and the United States Secretary of State did attend. Therefore, the four-party meeting was not held. The Permanent Observer reaffirmed that Al-Haram Al-Sharif was part of East Jerusalem, which was part of the occupied Palestinian land. It belonged to the Muslims and had to be under Palestinian-Arab-Muslim sovereignty, and the Palestinian people would not accept any claim of Israeli sovereignty over that part. At the same time, the Palestinians were ready to accept the control of Israel over the Wailing Wall.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (7 October)

On 7 October [meeting 4205], the Security Council adopted resolution 1322(2000) by vote (14-0-1). The draft text [S/2000/963] was submitted by Bangladesh, Jamaica, Malaysia, Mali, Namibia, Tunisia and Ukraine.

Further developments

Communications (4-16 October). In a 4 October letter [A/55/450-S/2000/957], the Permanent Observer of Palestine said that Israeli security forces continued to increase their presence in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem, had reoccupied parts of the area under Palestinian jurisdiction and had actually used tanks to fire against Palestinian targets.

On 7 October [A/55/460-S/2000/970], Israel said that during the course of rioting in the West Bank, the Jewish holy site of Joseph's Tomb became a target of gunfire and violent attacks by Palestinian civilians and by armed militia and members of the Palestinian police, which had led to the death of an Israeli police officer. With a view to reducing tension, an agreement was reached on 6 October, between IDF and the Palestinian police, whereby Israeli personnel on duty at the Tomb would be removed from the site as a temporary measure, while the PA was to ensure its continued protection and preservation. However, with the removal of the Israeli personnel, Palestinians entered the site, set the Tomb ablaze and commenced dismantling the structure.

In identical letters of 9 October to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President [A/55/466-S/2000/971], the Permanent Observer of Palestine said that Israel had effectively transformed Youssef's Tomb into a military post. Israeli security forces had killed 18 Palestinians there since 29 September, which explained why the population, enraged over the killings, destroyed the place after the withdrawal of the Israeli personnel. The Palestinian side had already taken action to repair the original part of the site and to provide for effective protection. The Observer pointed out that acts had been committed against Israeli Arabs in Israel itself, like the desecration of a mosque in Tiberias, Galilee, and that Israeli settlers had been committing crimes against Palestinians in the occupied territories.

In an 11 October letter [A/55/470-S/2000/980], Israel said that during the course of the violence and rioting in the West Bank and Gaza, the Palestinian leadership had continually violated the concept of peaceful resolution of disputes and had breached explicit agreement between the two sides in an effort to bring the peace process to a halt. Israel listed a number of violations committed by the PA, including incitement, incidents of mob violence, the release of convicted terrorists from prisons and the desecration of religious sites.

In identical letters of 12 October to the Secretary-General and the Council President [A/55/474-S/2000/984], the Permanent Observer of Palestine said that Israel had taken military actions that were tantamount to a declaration of war against the Palestinians. Israeli forces had dramatically increased their presence in the vicinities of Palestinian cities, and fired rockets from helicopter gunships and Israeli military ships to destroy several official PA locations in Ramallah and near Gaza City.

On the same day, in identical letters to the Secretary-General and the Council President [S/2000/985], Israel stated that two Israeli reserve soldiers were brutally murdered after they mistakenly entered the Palestinian town of Ramallah. The soldiers were brought by Palestinian police to the police headquarters, following which a Palestinian mob infiltrated the complex and killed them. In responding to that attack, Israel exercised restraint, taking care to prevent the loss of life as much as possible. In fact, in attacking the Palestinian police headquarters where the soldiers were murdered, IDF took steps to prevent damage to surrounding areas and provided advance warning to the PA to evacuate personnel from the building. Chairman Arafat had inaccurately labelled those retaliatory strikes as a declaration of war. Israel had no interest in declaring war on the Palestinian people and, in fact, was meeting its obligation under international law to maintain order in the area and to protect its citizens. In another development, the PA freed a number of Hamas prisoners who had been convicted in Palestinian courts of committing violent acts against Israelis. Members of Hamas and Islamic Jihad terrorist groups were invited to participate in a meeting of the Palestinian Cabinet, an act which legitimized their commitment to terrorism as an alternative to peaceful negotiations.

In three letters dated 10 October [A/55/483-S/2000/988, A/55/484-S/2000/989, A/55/485-S/2000/990], the EU expressed concern over the violent clashes in Jerusalem and in the occupied territories. It considered that the disproportionate recourse to force could only further aggravate the situation and supported the forming of an international commission to establish objectively what had actually happened since 28 September.

On 16 October [A/55/490-S/2000/993], the Permanent Observer of Palestine said that Israel had imposed a virtual siege on the entire Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem. The siege included the shutting down of the airspace of Gaza International Airport, as well as the closure of other international crossing points.

Sharm el-Sheikh Summit

Presidents Clinton and Mubarak co-chaired a Middle East Peace Summit in Sharm el-Sheikh on 16 and 17 October. Participants included Jordanian King Abdullah II, Israeli Prime Minister Barak, PA Chairman Arafat, the Secretary-General of the United Nations and EU President Solana.

The primary objective of the Summit was to end the cycle of violence in order to resume the peace process. The leaders agreed on three steps to achieve that objective. First, both sides agreed to issue public statements unequivocally calling for an end to violence and to take immediate, concrete measures to end the confrontation, eliminate points of friction, ensure an end to violence and incitement, maintain calm and prevent a recurrence of recent events. To accomplish that, both sides would act immediately to return the situation to that which existed prior to the current crisis, in areas such as restoring law and order, redeploying forces, eliminating points of friction, enhancing security cooperation and ending the closure of, and reopening, the Gaza airport. The United States undertook to facilitate security cooperation between the parties as needed. Second, it was agreed that the United States would develop with the Israelis and the Palestinians, as well as in consultation with the UN Secretary-General, a committee to undertake fact-finding on the events since 28 September and to seek ways to prevent their recurrence. President Clinton would share the committee's report with the Secretary-General and the parties prior to publication. A final report would be submitted under the auspices of the President for publication. Third, it was agreed that, in order to address the underlying roots of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, there had to be a pathway back to negotiations and a resumption of efforts to reach a permanent status agreement based on resolutions 242(1967) [YUN 1967, p. 257] and 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213] and subsequent understandings. President Clinton announced that, towards that end, the leaders had agreed that the United States would consult with the parties within the next two weeks about how to move forward.

Communications (17-20 October). By a 17 October letter [A/55/501-S/2000/1001], the United States transmitted to the Secretary-General President Clinton's statement on the occasion of the conclusion of the Middle East Peace Summit at Sharm el-Sheikh, which detailed the three major agreements reached by the parties.

By a 20 October letter to the Secretary-General [A/55/508-S/2000/1007], Israel submitted an update regarding its compliance with the understandings reached at the Sharm el-Sheikh Summit, as well as an assessment of the situation on the ground. Israel noted that while it had immediately issued a public statement that unequivocally called for a complete end to all violence, as agreed at the Summit, it took the PA over 24 hours to reciprocate. During that time, Palestinian gunmen continued provoking Israel's security forces throughout the territories and in Jerusalem. That outbreak of violence was carried out by the Tanzim paramilitary armed group, sponsored by the Fatah organization. Israel said that it would fully cooperate with the fact-finding committee, and that IDF troops and armoured vehicles had been redeployed, the Gaza airport had been reopened and the closure within the territories had been removed, as agreed at the Summit.

Speaking before the vote [A/ES-10/PV.13], the Permanent Observer of Palestine said that in response to the Palestinian protest over Mr. Sharon's visit to Al-Haram Al-Sharif and the storming of Al-Haram by IDF, Israel had used its war machine to launch a bloody campaign of repression, which caused many civilian deaths, including many children, and also imposed severe restrictions on the movement of persons and goods. A number of Palestinian cities and villages had been placed under siege by Israeli forces. Contrary to Israel's allegations, there had not been any large-scale exchanges of fire between the Palestinian police and Israeli forces. The Observer condemned the damage caused by Palestinian civilians to Joseph's Tomb near Nablus, and the killing of two Israeli soldiers at the police station in Ramallah. Palestinian authorities had issued instructions to repair Joseph's Tomb and to apprehend those who had committed the killing. Nevertheless, those issues and others could not change the real nature of what was happening—namely, the excessive and unjustifiable use of force by Israel against the Palestinians, a people that expressed their anger and frustration because of the occupation. Despite the adoption of resolution 1322(2000), the situation on the ground had not changed, and Israel had failed to comply with any of its provisions. Israel had in fact escalated the level of violence by shelling, on 12 October, some Palestinian locations in Ramallah and Gaza, which was tantamount to a declaration of war against the Palestinian people. A new attempt to rescue the situation and to revive the peace process was made by the convening of the Sharm el-Sheikh Summit on 16 and 17 October. The Observer welcomed the participation of the Secretary-General at the Summit, as well as all the efforts he made during his visit to the region. It was hoped that the United Nations would participate in the mechanism of inquiry into what happened, as called for in resolution 1322 (2000) and as agreed upon by the parties in Sharm el-Sheikh. The Observer said that the speedy establishment and immediate work of that committee of inquiry would be effective in ending the situation created since 28 September.

Israel expressed the hope that the statement made in Sharm el-Sheikh would succeed in restoring calm and quiet to the region, but noted that the deliberations of the Assembly's special session threatened, and were contrary to, the spirit of that declaration and had the potential to aggravate and disrupt efforts to bring an end to the violence. The killing of the two Israeli reserve soldiers inside the Palestinian police headquarters in Ramallah was not the first instance in which official PA organs had tolerated, encouraged or even directly engaged in violent actions against Israelis. In fact, Palestinian policemen, security personnel and armed militias had participated in many clashes with Israeli soldiers and civilians. In particular, Israel referred to the attack and dismantling of Joseph's Tomb, a site holy to both Jews and Muslims, by Palestinian civilians and police. The PA, rather than using its position to prevent violence and urge restraint, had allowed its official television and radio to be used for purposes of incitement, calling on its people to carry out attacks on Israeli citizens. The PA had also freed terrorist prisoners who had been convicted in Palestinian courts of committing violent acts against Israelis. Allegations that Israel used excessive force in confrontations with the Palestinians were unfounded. Israel had permitted, and would continue to permit, the passage of humanitarian aid to Palestinians in the territories. Its actions were intended not to harm but to maintain order in the area, and were in full accordance with international law. Only a negotiated solution, arrived at in an atmosphere free from violence, could put a permanent end to bloodshed and unrest in the Middle East. Israel called on Chairman Arafat to order his security forces and his people to stop the confrontations and the provocations, to disarm the militias as he had previously agreed, and to re-arrest members of Hamas and other terrorist organizations who were still at large. Israel was opposed to the draft resolution because, apart from being one-sided, unfair and biased, it demanded the unilateral condemnation of Israel. The text as it stood did not mention Palestinian excesses of any kind. Palestinians and Israelis had to rely on their own resources and on mutual assistance rather than on a draft resolution that was a repository of indignation for some and of bitterness for others.

The Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights said that deadly violence had been raging in all Palestinian areas since Mr. Sharon's visit to Al-Haram Al-Sharif. In the ensuing clashes, more than 110 people, mostly Palestinians, were killed and some 3,000 injured. IDF reacted to the demonstrations with disproportionate force, often making use of metal bullets, live ammunition and tanks. Another disturbing development involved armed Jewish settlers, authorized to move within the towns and villages controlled by the PA, and able to use their firearms. To compound the situation, the Israelis proceeded to seal off Palestinian territory, immobilizing almost 3 million inhabitants and preventing them from working. The Committee welcomed all the efforts by the international community to bring an end to the violence, in particular the Sharm el-Sheikh Summit. For its part, the Committee, at a meeting on 10 October, adopted a declaration in which it reaffirmed that the United Nations had to continue to shoulder its permanent responsibility regarding all aspects of the question of Palestine, including Jerusalem, until that issue was resolved in a satisfactory manner.

The Secretary-General said that he had just returned from the Middle East region where he met with the principal players, attended the Sharm el-Sheikh Summit, and visited Lebanon to discuss regional issues and the capture of three Israeli soldiers from the Shaba area of the occupied Golan. His main purpose was to try to help the Israelis and Palestinians to resolve the crisis that had developed since 28 September by reaching an agreement with the following elements: disengagement, an end to violence and a return to normalcy; a resumption of the peace process; and the establishment of a mechanism to inquire into recent events and ways of avoiding a recurrence. Throughout his visit, the situation on the ground in Jerusalem, the West Bank and Gaza was extremely tense. While he was in the region, more than 50 Palestinians were killed and two Israeli reservists were lynched in Ramallah. That was the backdrop against which his peace efforts were set. The situation had, in his view, reached the brink of the abyss. His primary objective was therefore to get the two principal players, Prime Minister Barak and Chairman Arafat, to address public appeals to their respective populations for calm, and to ask them to indicate some specific measures that they were prepared to take in order to de-escalate the tension. Unfortunately, it became apparent that the rapidly deteriorating situation on the ground and the consequent hardening of public opinion on both sides had made it impossible for both leaders to make conciliatory statements. Despite initial reluctance to attend the Sharm el-Sheikh Summit, especially on the part of Chairman Arafat, both parties agreed to attend and reached agreement on three main objectives (see p. 420). The Secretary-General said that the Sharm el-Sheikh agreements were a vital first step back from the brink and towards a resumption of the peace process. It was essential that they should be faithfully implemented in their entirety by both sides. Both parties needed to demonstrate good faith—above all by their actions.

Communications (23 October–24 November).

On 23 October [A/55/513-S/2000/1010], Egypt transmitted to the Secretary-General the final communiqué of the Extraordinary Arab Summit (Cairo, 21–22 October). The Arab leaders held Israel responsible for returning the region to tension and violence as a result of its practices, assaults and blockade of the Palestinian people in violation of its obligations as the occupying Power under the terms of the Fourth Geneva Convention. They affirmed that the Palestinian uprising had broken out as a result of the maintenance and perpetuation of the occupation and because of Israel's encroachment on Al-Haram Al-Sharif and other Holy Places in the occupied territories. In response to a proposal by Saudi Arabia, the Arab leaders decided to establish two funds. The Al-Aqsa Fund would be allocated a sum of $800 million to fund projects designed to preserve the Arab and Islamic identity of Jerusalem and prevent its loss and to enable the Palestinian people to disengage from their subordination to the Israeli economy. The Al-Quds Intifada Fund would have a capital of $200 million to be disbursed to the families of Palestinians who had fallen in the intifada and to provide for the care and education of their children. The Arab leaders called for the formation, within the framework of the United Nations, of an impartial international commission of inquiry to report to the Security Council and the Commission on Human Rights on the causes of and responsibility for the deterioration in the occupied territories and the acts committed by Israel against Palestinian, Lebanese and other Arab residents. They called on the Council and the General Assembly to provide protection to the Palestinian people under Israeli occupation by considering the establishment of a force or an international presence for that purpose. Since the halt in the peace process caused by Israel's policy and practices made talk of a common future in the region untimely, the leaders decided not to resume or participate in any official or informal activity in the multilateral framework, to suspend all measures and activities for regional economic cooperation with Israel, and to link their resumption to the attainment of tangible progress towards a comprehensive peace on all tracks of the peace process.

In a series of communications dated between 23 and 30 October [A/ES-10/39-S/2000/1015, A/ES-

10/40-S/2000/1025, A/ES-10/41-S/2000/1046], the Permanent Observer of Palestine said that Israel continued its terror campaign and the imposition of restrictive blockades on the movement of persons and goods into, out of and throughout the occupied territories and, once again, had shut down the Gaza airport. He called on the Council to convene a meeting to consider the situation in the region and to establish a UN protection force for the occupied territories, including Jerusalem.

On 25 October [S/2000/1027], Iraq, in its capacity as Chairman of the Arab Group for October, requested a meeting of the Council to consider the situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the establishment of a UN protection force.

In a 2 November letter to the Secretary-General [A/55/540-S/2000/1065], Israel said that on that day a car bomb exploded near the marketplace of Mahane Yehuda, killing two civilians and injuring several others. The Islamic Jihad claimed responsibility for the attack. Israel held the PA responsible as it had released Hamas and Islamic Jihad prisoners in recent weeks. The attack occurred less than 24 hours after an agreement was reached between Chairman Arafat and Israel's Minister for Regional Cooperation, Shimon Peres, to resume security cooperation and take steps to implement the provisions of the Sharm el-Sheik understanding.

In a series of communications dated between 6 and 20 November [A/ES-10/42-S/2000/1068, A/ES-10/43-S/2000/1078, A/ES-10/44-S/2000/1093, A/ES-10/45-S/2000/1104, A/ES-10/46-S/2000/1107], the Permanent Observer of Palestine informed the Secretary-General and the Security Council President that Israeli forces continued to kill and injure Palestinian civilians and had intensified measures to ensure the total isolation of Palestinian cities throughout the occupied territory. On 20 November, Israel launched massive bombardments of Gaza City and other locations in the Gaza Strip. Some Israeli missiles hit locations of the PA and caused injury to approximately 50 Palestinians.

On 20 November [A/55/634-S/2000/1108], Israel said that three Palestinian terrorists had carried out an attack on a bus carrying children and their chaperones near Kfar Darom, south of Gaza, killing two civilians and injuring 10 others, including children as young as seven. Israel held the PA responsible for the attack, which served as proof of Chairman Arafat's lack of credibility in claiming to combat Palestinian violence.

In a 22 November letter to the Secretary-General [A/55/641-S/2000/1114], Israel said that on that day a bomb was detonated near a local bus in the town of Hadera, killing two Israeli civilians and wounding over 41 others.

Also on 22 November, in a letter to the Security Council President [S/2000/1111], Qatar, as Chairman of the Ninth Islamic Summit Conference, and in compliance with the final communiqué of the Summit at which a Ministerial Committee was formed, requested the Council to convene to discuss the situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question. On 24 November [S/2000/1112], Malaysia, as a member of the delegation of the Ministerial Committee of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC), supported Qatar's request.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (22 November)

At the request of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya [S/2000/1109], the Security Council, on 22 November, discussed the situation in the Middle East, including the Palestinian question [meeting 4231]. With the Council's consent, the Council President invited, among others, Israel, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and South Africa, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President also invited the Permanent Observer of Palestine to participate, at his request [S/2000/1112]. The 22 November meeting was preceded on 10 November by private meetings with Chairman Arafat [meeting 4217] and the representative of Israel [meeting 4218].

The Permanent Observer of Palestine said that, since 29 September, Israel had made excessive, disproportionate and indiscriminate use of its war machine, causing the death and injury of many Palestinians, as well as the destruction of infrastructure. Those actions had been accompanied by a stalemate in the peace process imposed by Israel's Government. Israeli policies and practices stemmed from the presence of Israeli occupiers and the policy of settlement—a policy that had continued even after the beginning of the peace process. Since 25 October, the Palestinians had been requesting the establishment of a UN observer force. At his private meeting with the Council on 10 November, Chairman Arafat requested 2,000 military observers who would operate under the UN emblem, auspices and supervision. Their only objective would be to ensure the safety and security of Palestinian civilians. Israel's approval was not a prerequisite for the Council measures to be enacted, said the Observer, as the Council was not dealing with a domestic situation of one Member State, but with a Member State that the Council had recognized as an occupying Power. The Council agreed to entrust the Secretary-General with conducting the necessary consultations on that issue.

Israel said that the situation in Israel and the Palestinian territories continued to deteriorate. Points of friction that had previously been localized and contained in certain areas had spread, engulfing the streets of Jerusalem and other Israeli towns and cities. A car bomb that had exploded on that day in the city of Hadera, causing the deaths of two Israeli citizens and injuries to 41, was the result of the release of prisoners from PA jails. Despite that attack and others against Israelis, the international community had failed to condemn Palestinian actions, thus encouraging the Palestinians to continue along a violent route. Moreover, the international community had not called for the establishment of a commission of inquiry to investigate Palestinian wrongdoing. In calling for the deployment of a UN protection force, the Palestinians were seeking to depart from bilateral negotiations and to pursue their goals unilaterally. An international force was not needed to stop the violence, nor was it clear that such a force would even be successful. The direct way to end the bloodshed was for the international community to call on the Palestinian leadership to exert every effort to stop the violence, the rioting, the use of live ammunition, the use of machine guns, the sending of children to the front and the use of terror against civilians.

The United States said that the violence in the Middle East had escalated again with the bombing of another busload of Israeli citizens, while a number of Palestinians were killed by IDF in circumstances that were still unclear. In consultation with the Secretary-General, the United States had worked towards establishing the Fact-Finding Committee agreed to at Sharm el-Sheikh (see p. 420). Former United States Senator George Mitchell, the Committee's Chairman, had met with the Secretary-General on 9 November and had outlined the Committee's mandate, which was to investigate the recent violence with the objective of preventing its recurrence. The Committee was to meet at the end of November in New York. The United States added that the United Nations, instead of lending support for efforts undertaken at Sharm el-Sheikh, had taken actions that undermined bilateral efforts at reaching peace. The Economic and Social Council had endorsed a resolution condemning Israel and calling for the creation of an inquiry commission and the dispatch of rapporteurs (see p. 434), an unnecessary measure that was supported by less than half the Council membership. Regarding a UN observer or military presence in the region, the United States said that the proposal required the agreement of the parties to the conflict.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on behalf of the Arab Group, called for an international observer force to protect the Palestinian people in the occupied territories; for the establishment of a fact-finding mission to inquire into all acts of violence perpetrated against the Palestinians, whose conclusions should be submitted to the International Criminal Court; and for the relevant Security Council resolutions to be implemented.

South Africa, on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement, called on Israel to stop subjecting Palestinian civilians to collective punishment. The question of Palestine constituted the nucleus of the Middle East conflict and the achievement of the inalienable right of the Palestinian people to self-determination and to an independent State, with East Jerusalem as its capital, was pivotal to the achievement of a sustainable peace. The condition of land for peace was essential if meaningful progress in the peace process was to be attained, and negotiations towards final status issues had to be in accordance with the relevant UN resolutions and international legitimacy.

In response to statements made, Israel said that Prime Minister Barak had committed himself at the July Camp David Summit (see p. 415) to an innovative peace policy. Through a negotiated solution at the Summit, Chairman Arafat could have given rise to a Palestinian State and to the beginning of true reconciliation between the two peoples; instead, he had opted to achieve his political ends through violence.

The Permanent Observer of Palestine replied that it was Prime Minister Barak who had brought the situation to the brink of catastrophe, and that the occupation of Palestinian land and the violation of international law on the part of Israel were the real causes for the escalation of violence.

Communications (24 November–13 December). In a series of letters dated between 24 November and 13 December [A/ES/10/47-S/2000/1116, A/ES-10/48-A/2000/1129, A/ES-10/49-S/2000/1154, A/ES-10/50-S/2000/1173, A/ES/10/51-S/2000/1185], the Permanent Observer of Palestine stated that the killing and injuring of Palestinians by Israeli forces continued; he submitted lists of the names of those killed.

In identical letters of 26 November to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President [S/2000/1119], Iraq requested the Council to allocate to the Palestinian people part of the oil-export revenue governed by the Memorandum of Understanding signed by Iraq and the UN Secretariat on 20 May 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 226], in order to support the Palestinians in defence of their land. In a series of subsequent communications [S/2000/1174, S/2000/1216, S/2000/1217, S/2000/1218], Iraq requested that a billion euros from its oil-export revenues be allocated to the Palestinian people. On 4 December [S/2000/1152], Tunisia called on the Council to pay particular and benevolent attention to Iraq's request.

On 6 December [S/2000/1159], South Africa, as Chairman of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, called on the Council to consider the adoption of a draft resolution prepared by the Movement's Security Council caucus pertaining to the deployment of a UN observer force in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (see below).

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (18 December)

On 18 December [meeting 4248], the Security Council discussed the situation in the Middle East, including the Palestine question, and considered the text of a draft resolution [S/2000/1171] submitted by Bangladesh, Jamaica, Malaysia, Mali, Namibia and Tunisia. By that draft, the Council would have expressed its determination to establish a UN force of military and police observers to be dispatched throughout the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, with the aim of contributing to the implementation of the Sharm el-Sheikh agreements, the cessation of violence and the enhancement of the safety and security of Palestinian civilians.

With the Council's consent, the Council President invited the Permanent Observer of Palestine, at his own request [S/2000/1206], to participate in the discussion. The President also invited Israel to participate without the right to vote.

On 27 November, the Council had held private meetings on the subject with the Ministerial Committee of OIC [meeting 4233] and with the representative of Israel [meeting 4234].

Speaking before the vote, Israel said that it was opposed to the draft resolution, but not to some form of international presence, provided it was established within the context of a comprehensive bilateral agreement, as that had always been the accepted sequence. An international presence had to be used to cement an agreement and not as an alternative to one. Sending a UN force into the region had the potential to escalate the violence as it would send a message to the Palestinians that there was no need to negotiate or co-ordinate with Israel and no need to compromise. Furthermore, international intervention did not appear necessary; Chairman Arafat had the ability to protect the lives of his people by relinquishing the path of confrontation, disarming the militias and controlling Hamas and Islamic Jihad groups, all of which he had already committed himself to do. Israel assured the Council that the violence would cease if the PA was to take those steps. The draft resolution was a recipe for long-term instability in the region, and Israel therefore urged the members of the Council not to support it.

Namibia, speaking on behalf of the members of the Non-Aligned Movement and Ukraine, said that the violence continued and the Council had not taken any action to address the situation. It was in that regard that the Movement's caucus had proposed the establishment of a protection force for Palestinian civilians in the occupied territories. The Movement did not believe that the consent of the parties was required to establish the force, but it agreed that their cooperation was needed.

France said that, together with the United Kingdom, it had argued in favour of an agreement on creating an observer mission. But France considered that it was not the most suitable time for adopting the draft resolution, in the light of ongoing efforts by the Secretary-General and the resumption of bilateral negotiations.

Speaking after the Council's vote (8-0-7) on the draft resolution, which was not adopted because it did not obtain the required number of votes, the United States said that the Council had acted wisely; if there had been a chance for the draft resolution to be adopted, the United States would have cast a veto. The United States supported the renewal of negotiations and dialogue, but was against action that did not advance the cause of peace. Negotiations would resume the following day, 19 December, in Washington, D.C., between the Israeli and Palestinian delegations.

The Permanent Observer of Palestine expressed his regret that the draft resolution had not been adopted. The Palestinian people and the Arab countries, as well as the members of OIC and the Non-Aligned Movement, had requested adequate protection for the Palestinian people through the establishment of a UN observer force. Negotiations scheduled for the next day should not have precluded action in the Council, and the Palestinians would not accept Israel's approval as a precondition for the Council's assumption of its responsibilities. The Permanent Observer said that the defeat of the draft resolution had only one explanation—the position of the United States, which was openly linked to that of Israel, and the pressure exerted by the United States on all the other members of the Council. The Council's action had persuaded the Palestinians and other Arabs that they could not rely on the Council.

Communications (19-28 December). In letters dated 19 [A/ES-10/52-S/2000/1215] and 28 [A/ES-10/53-

S/2000/1247] December, the Permanent Observer of Palestine said that the killing and injuring of Palestinians by Israeli forces continued, and submitted lists of names of those killed.

On 21 December [A/55/716-S/2000/1236], Qatar transmitted to the Secretary-General the documents of the ninth session of the Islamic Summit Conference, Session of Peace and Development (Doha, Qatar, 12-14 November), which the Secretary-General attended. The documents included the text of the final communiqué; the Declaration of the Summit on the Al-Aqsa intifada—Palestinian independence intifada, the Doha Declaration and resolutions. The Conference, among other things, reiterated the necessity to put an end to all Israeli settlement activities; requested the Council to set up an international commission of inquiry to investigate Israeli actions; called on Member States to sever relations with Israel; reaffirmed the immutable responsibility of the United Nations towards the question of Palestine; and called on all States to recognize the State of Palestine with Al-Quds Al-Sharif as its capital.

On 28 December [A/55/719-S/2000/1252], Israel said that on that day two bombs exploded in a bus in Tel Aviv, injuring 12 people. It was the latest in a string of such attacks. Despite various agreements calling for an end to violence and the resumption of security cooperation between the sides, the PA had failed to call for an end to the violence and to reincarcerate released terrorist prisoners—steps that could have prevented those attacks.

Special Committee on Israeli Practices. In its thirty-second report [A/55/453], the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Special Committee on Israeli Practices) stated that the confiscation of Palestinian-owned land, as well as Israeli settlement activity, continued. Unofficial estimates placed the percentage of the West Bank land that had been confiscated at 41 per cent in 1984 and 73 per cent in 1998. Since the 1995 Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip [YUN 1995, p. 626], confiscation had continued at a rate of about 37 square kilometres (0.6 per cent of the West Bank) a year. The number of Israeli settlements in the Gaza Strip totalled 19, some of which were inhabited by no more than 10 people, while the total population of those settlements was about 5,000 settlers. The settlements were located in the most strategic areas of the Gaza Strip and included within their territories the most fertile land and most important water sources in the area. The election of a new Government in Israel in May 1999 had not changed the situation. In fact, in October 1999, the Israeli Ministerial Committee on Settlements adopted a proposal by the Minister of Housing to establish 2,600 settlement units in the West Bank.

Report of Secretary-General. On 4 August [A/55/263], the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that Israel had not replied to his July request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement the relevant provisions of resolution 54/78 [YUN 1999, p. 407], demanding that Israel, among other things, cease all construction of new settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee [A/55/571], adopted resolution 55/132 by recorded vote (152-4) [agenda item 85].

Jerusalem

East Jerusalem, where most of the city's Arab inhabitants lived, remained one of the most sensitive issues in the Middle East peace process and a focal point of concern for the United Nations in 2000. The visit on 28 September by Mr. Sharon, leader of the opposition Likud Party in Israel, to the holy Islamic site of Al-Haram Al-Sharif in Jerusalem and the subsequent escalation of violence led to the convening of a three-day Security Council emergency meeting and to the resumption of the General Assembly's tenth emergency special session (see pp. 417 and 421).

Special Committee on Israeli Practices. In its annual report [A/55/453], the Special Committee on Israeli Practices described restrictions imposed by Israeli authorities on Jerusalem's Palestinian population and Israeli violations of their human rights.

The general situation with respect to housing seemed to have remained very much as it had been in previous years. The Special Committee was informed that Israel was investing a large amount of resources in building Jewish neighbourhoods in East Jerusalem while curtailing Palestinian development, the Palestinian population being viewed as a demographic threat to Israeli control of the city. Over a third of East Jerusalem lacked town-planning schemes, which made construction impossible, and those planning schemes that existed defined vast land tracts as green area, where building was forbidden. While some green areas were designed to protect the environment, others held land in reserve for the Jewish population, as in the case of the Jabal Abu-Ghneim, which, although originally defined as a green area, was later rezoned for residential construction of the Jewish neighbourhood of Har Homa. Palestinian building was only allowed in 7 per cent of East Jerusalem, and already-existing Palestinian neighbourhoods comprised most of that area. Israel had succeeded in creating an enormous Jewish population in East Jerusalem while reducing the Palestinian population. Israeli policies had created a housing shortage in Palestinian neighbourhoods and exacerbated overcrowding by denying building permits. The housing shortage among Palestinians in Jerusalem exceeded 20,000 housing units. In addition, land owned by an absentee was not given a building permit. That was a particularly harsh situation in East Jerusalem, where the term absentee included those with West Bank resident status.

Transfer of diplomatic missions

Report of Secretary-General. On 2 November [A/55/538], the Secretary-General reported that four Member States, including Israel, had replied to his request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement General Assembly resolution 54/37 [YUN 1999, p. 409], which addressed the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980) [YUN 1980, p. 426] and called on them to abide by the relevant UN resolutions. Israel said that the one-sided approach reflected in those resolutions threatened to prejudge the outcome of bilateral negotiations between the parties concerned and undermined the prospects of achieving a just and lasting peace settlement based on directly negotiated and mutually agreed solutions.

Committee on Palestinian Rights. In its annual report [A/55/35], the Committee on Palestinian Rights said that Israel's settlement policy and actions continued to damage the peace process. According to figures from Israel's Ministry of Construction and Housing, construction in settlements increased by 96 per cent in the first half of 2000. In fact, work began on 1,067 residential units in the first six months of the year (860 of which were located in settlements in the Jerusalem district), compared to 545 during the same period in 1999. In particular, the Committee was appalled by the intensified construction at the Jabal Abu-Ghneim and Ras al-Amud neighbourhoods of East Jerusalem. The Committee also stressed the inadmissibility and illegality of the Israeli policy of revoking the residency rights of Palestinian Jerusalemites. Although the Israeli Minister of the Interior declared the cessation of the revocation-of-residency policy in October 1999, no clear procedures had been introduced regarding the new policy, and the rules applied by the Ministry officials in East Jerusalem remained unclear.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 78], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/50 [draft: A/55/L.49 & Add.1] by recorded vote (145-1-5) [agenda item 40].

Jerusalem

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/120 E of 10 December 1981, 37/123 C of 16 December 1982, 38/180 C of 19 December 1983, 39/146 C of 14 December 1984, 40/168 C of 16 December 1985, 41/162 C of 4 December 1986, 42/209 D of 11 December 1987, 43/54 C of 6 December 1988, 44/40 C of 4 December 1989, 45/83 C of 13 December 1990, 46/82 B of 16 December 1991, 47/63 B of 11 December 1992, 48/59 A of 14 December 1993, 49/87 A of 16 December 1994, 50/22 A of 4 December 1995, 51/27 of 4 December 1996, 52/53 of 9 December 1997, 53/37 of 2 December 1998 and 54/37 of 1 December 1999, in which it, inter alia, determined that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, which have altered or purported to alter the character and status of the Holy City of Jerusalem, in particular the so-called "Basic Law" on Jerusalem and the proclamation of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, were null and void and must be rescinded forthwith,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 478(1980) of 20 August 1980, in which the Council, inter alia, decided not to recognize the "Basic Law" and called upon those States which had established diplomatic missions in Jerusalem to withdraw such missions from the Holy City,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Determines that the decision of Israel to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Holy City of Jerusalem is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

2. Deplores the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980) and their refusal to comply with the provisions of that resolution;

3. Calls once more upon those States to abide by the provisions of the relevant United Nations resolutions, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 55/50:

Economic and social situation

A June report on the economic and social repercussions of the Israeli occupation on the living conditions of Palestinians in the occupied territory, including Jerusalem, and of the Arab population of the occupied Syrian Golan [A/55/84-E/2000/16] was prepared by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA), in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/53 [YUN 1999, p. 410] and General Assembly resolution 54/230 [ibid., p. 411]; it covered the period since ESCWA's previous report [ibid., p. 409].

The report stated that the delays in implementing the agreements reached between Israel and the PLO, together with Israeli practices, particularly the settlement expansion and the closure of passage routes from areas controlled by the PA to Israel, continued to aggravate the Palestinians' living conditions. Approximately 200,000 Israelis resided in East Jerusalem and 7,000 settlers lived in 16 settlements in Gaza. In the Golan Heights, 17,000 settlers resided in 33 settlements. By the end of 2000, more than 400,000 Israelis would be living in over 200 communities established since 1967 in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. In East Jerusalem, Israel had expropriated more than 5,845 acres of mostly Palestinian-owned land—one third of East Jerusalem—for the construction of 10 Israeli settlement neighbourhoods. The number of Palestinians holding Jerusalem identity documents issued by Israel was generally believed to number almost 200,000, putting the Palestinian percentage of the entire city at 30 per cent. Investigations undertaken by Palestinian officials suggested that the number of Palestinians actually residing in the city was half that number. According to a study by the Badil Resource Centre for Palestinian Refugee Rights, 8 per cent of Jerusalem residents were forced to leave Jerusalem and reside in the West Bank every year owing to Israeli discriminatory measures in the city. The revocation of residency rights of Palestinians in Jerusalem continued to be a problem, while requests of those who had appealed in the past to register births and marriages went unfulfilled, forcing many Arabs (estimated at some 30,000) to live in East Jerusalem without identity cards.

The Israeli occupation was affecting and undermining the supply of drinking water to Palestinians, as Israel controlled permits for drinking water networks and for drilling wells. In addition, Palestinians were faced with the growing problem of water waste coming from Israeli settlements.

Israel's control of the Occupied Palestinian Territory also had negative repercussions on the environment. Approximately 260 Israeli-owned industrial concerns existed in the West Bank, located either in Israeli-operated industrial zones or inside settlements. Environmental regulations on soil, air and water quality, and restrictions on industrial development were generally less comprehensive and much less assiduously enforced in the occupied territory compared with in Israel itself.

The Israeli occupation had inhibited investment and growth due to the continued ambiguity of the legal and political situation. There was no basic investment code nor a settled legal code in the areas controlled by the PA. In nominal terms, Palestinian registered exports to Israel amounted to $222.6 million, while registered imports from Israel totalled $843.5 million in the first half of 1999. Beginning in March 2000, Israel imposed a number of restrictions on Palestinian economic transactions, including suspending the "convoy system", which allowed vehicles from Gaza to pass through Israeli territory under military escort for the purpose of export and import. Restrictions on the movement of goods contributed to a further decline in economic growth.

Israeli settlement expansion in the Golan Heights continued, while employment opportunities and access to education for the Arab population remained limited.

Other aspects

Special Committee on Israeli Practices. On 5 October, the Special Committee on Israeli Practices reported for the thirty-second time to the General Assembly on events in the territories it considered to be occupied—the Golan Heights, the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and the Gaza Strip [A/55/453].

In addition to that annual report, the Special Committee, in response to a request by the Assembly in resolution 54/76 [YUN 1999, p. 414], submitted two periodic reports in 2000, one covering the period from 21 August 1999 to 29 February 2000 [A/55/373] and the other covering the period from 1 March to 31 July 2000 [A/55/373/Add.1]. The three reports contained information obtained from the Arab and Israeli press; testimony from persons from the occupied territories; and communications and reports from Governments, organizations and individuals. The Committee benefited from the cooperation of Egypt, Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Palestinian representatives, the UN resident coordinator/United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) Resident Representative in Syria, and representatives from the International Labour Organization. As in the past, the Committee received no response from Israel to its request for cooperation and was unable to obtain access to the occupied territories, which had been the case since 1968, when the Committee was established [YUN 1968, p. 556]. However, the Special Committee was pleased that a number of Israeli nationals working in the field of human rights appeared before the Committee to speak about their work with Palestinians.

The Special Committee was informed that restrictions in the occupied territories of Gaza, the West Bank and East Jerusalem, with respect to land, housing and water, severely affected the Palestinians, and the confiscation of Palestinian-owned land continued, as well as the establishment of new and expansion of existing settlements. Demolition of Palestinian houses had also continued throughout the period under review. The building of bypass roads to ensure the safety of the Israeli settlers in the West Bank often resulted in confiscation of land and house demolition.

The extremely sensitive and tense relations between settlers and Palestinians—one of the most unfortunate consequences of the occupation—reached higher levels of intensity and violence in times of crisis. The condition of those relations was caused by the confiscation of land, the uprooting of olive trees, the scarcity of water and the privileged position Israeli settlements had with respect to water, the fact that settlers carried arms and lived in barrier-enclosed areas, and the support provided by Israeli authorities and their army.

As Israeli settlements in the occupied territories were usually located on hilltops, spring water used by Palestinians had often been polluted by sewage water from the settlements or army centres. In addition, factories and industrial centres established within the settlements were trying to pump their wastes into adjacent Palestinian areas, without taking into consideration the consequences on the environment and on the Palestinians living nearby. Many of those factories had been established in Israeli settlements because they were not able to obtain permission to operate in Israel, due to their harmful impact on the environment and the threat they posed to the health of the population.

The permanent state of closure of the occupied territories continued to be applied and the movement of the population within the territories continued to be regulated by the Israeli authorities. Access to Israel and movement between the occupied territories were blocked during Jewish holidays and when security incidents occurred in Israel. A new development regarding the freedom of movement was the construction of a checkpoint near Bethlehem, which would de facto separate the northern part of the West Bank from the southern part. Furthermore, Israel had imposed restrictions on movement between areas that were under the PA's rule.

A positive development was the decline in the number of Palestinian administrative detainees. At the beginning of 1999, about 100 Palestinian detainees were under administrative detention in Israeli prisons; at the end of 1999, that number had been reduced to 14. Amendments were also introduced to the law governing administrative detention, making it possible, during the first 10 days of administrative detention, to bring the detainee before a committee under a military judge in order to ascertain whether the order, or the time period of the detention, was legal. However, the Israeli intelligence service did not respect the committee's decisions and could override the decisions of judges concerning extensions of detention. It was estimated that some 1,500 Palestinian detainees were held in Israeli jails, some of whom were not allowed to receive family visits for periods of up to a year. In 1999, the Israeli prison administration had adopted measures against Palestinian lawyers members of the Palestinian Union of Lawyers. Their visits to clients had to be in the presence of an Israeli policeman who listened in on the conversation. Although that measure contravened all laws governing legal representation, Israeli authorities argued that Palestinian lawyers did not have the right to defend before Israeli courts and therefore should be considered as family members visiting the detainee.

In September 1999, the Israeli Supreme Court of Justice ruled that the interrogation methods used by the General Security Service (GSS) were illegal and forbidden. It stated, however, that if the State wished to enable GSS investigators to use physical means of interrogation, it should seek the enactment of legislation for that purpose. Thus, the decision banned the practices because of the lack of a legal text that could be invoked. The Special Committee was informed that, following that decision, there had been continuous efforts to enact legislation to allow physical force to be used during interrogations, and the Israeli Government had pledged to confer immunity on investigators who used torture.

Administrative security measures hampered the development of industrial and commercial activities by Palestinian employers. The Israeli authorities continued to impede the movement of trucks carrying Palestinian goods and products, resulting in products being spoiled owing to long periods spent at checkpoints. Driven by the need to earn a decent income or even to find a job, a large number of Palestinian workers in the occupied territories had turned to the Israeli labour market. However, Palestinian workers continued to be humiliated at Israeli checkpoints; on some occasions, workers had also been arrested. In Gaza, Palestinian fishermen were allowed to fish only within a perimeter of 20 nautical miles out to sea and, among other restrictions, were not allowed to sell their products in the West Bank or in Israel. The Israelis had also hampered the work of Palestinian journalists by limiting their freedom of movement or preventing them from disseminating information inside or outside the occupied territories.

The Special Committee visited the Syrian Arab Republic and reported on the Israeli-occupied Syrian Golan Heights (for details, see p. 477).

The Special Committee observed that the Israeli authorities had put in place a comprehensive and elaborate system of laws and regulations that affected all aspects of the lives of the Palestinian and Syrian peoples in the occupied territories. The rigorous implementation of laws and regulations and administrative measures created a sense of fear and dependency among the inhabitants. Bitterness at their treatment by the authorities and the sense of dispossession, hopelessness and despair of the people in the occupied territories, caused to a large extent by lack of progress in the peace process and a lack of tangible benefits for the Palestinians, made the situation in the region one of the greatest urgency. The Committee called on the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to establish a system of continuous communication with the Israeli authorities with a view to improving the difficult circumstances under which the Palestinian and Syrian peoples of the occupied territories lived.

In a later report [A/56/428], the Committee presented updated information on the human rights situation in the occupied territories during the last five months of 2000, providing details on restrictions relating to land, housing and water, as well as those affecting movement of Palestinians within and between the occupied territories, and the manner of implementation of restrictions and their economic, social and cultural effects on the Palestinian population. Information was provided on the escalation of violence in the occupied territories following the 28 September visit by Mr. Sharon to the Temple Mount. Also included was information on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan.

Report of Secretary-General. On 4 August [A/55/264], the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that Israel had not replied to his July request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement Assembly resolution 54/79 [YUN 1999, p. 413] demanding that Israel, among other things, cease all practices and actions that violated the human rights of the Palestinian people and accelerate the release of all remaining Palestinians arbitrarily detained or imprisoned.

Commission on Human Rights. In October, the Commission on Human Rights held a special session on grave and massive violations of the human rights of the Palestinian people by Israel and adopted a resolution on the subject (see p. 776). By decision 2000/311 of 22 November, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decisions to establish a human rights inquiry commission to gather and compile information on Israel's human rights violations in the occupied Palestinian territories; to request the High Commissioner for Human Rights to undertake an urgent visit to the territories; and to request rapporteurs, the Representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons and the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to carry out immediate missions to the territories.

The High Commissioner for Human Rights undertook a visit to the Middle East in November (see p. 776).

Palestinian women

The Secretary-General, in a report [E/CN.6/2000/2] to the Commission on the Status of Women on follow-up to and progress in the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170], reviewed, in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/15 [YUN 1999, p. 418], the situation of Palestinian women and described assistance provided by UN organizations during the period September 1998 to September 1999. He stated that the overall improvement of the economic performance in the West Bank and Gaza since 1997 had led to an increase in employment and higher household incomes in the occupied territories. Although women's unemployment rate in 1998 declined by 21.3 per cent, to 16.9 per cent, women's wages remained consistently below those of men. An increase in household income in 1998 was due to a real increase in average wages, and household expenditures declined by 2.1 per cent during the same period. Also in 1998, income and productivity were enhanced by fewer comprehensive and internal closure days in the West Bank and Gaza. The expansion of existing Israeli settlements and the building of new ones, as well as the construction of bypass roads, continued to affect the socio-economic life of Palestinians. Cases of confrontations between Palestinian women and Israeli settlers were reported.

Organizational mechanisms had been created to fulfil the goals of the Beijing Platform for Action. At the governmental level, a coordination framework (the Interministerial Coordination Committee) was formed of representatives from the women's affairs departments in ministries and State institutions with a view to promoting the national status of Palestinian women. According to the PA, activities were undertaken in accordance with the Platform with particular emphasis on the eight priority areas. Traditions notwithstanding, the gender concept was currently accepted in Palestinian society and the stereotypical image of women had begun to change. More education and employment were available for women, and their capacity to work and participate in the production and use of modern technologies was expected to grow.

The UN system continued to support Palestinian women and sought to maintain a gender perspective in its assistance programmes and funds. That assistance ranged across areas such as education, income-generation activities, capacity-building and institution-building. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights supported the establishment of a Women's Human Rights Unit in a local non-governmental organization (NGO) and assisted legislators and civil society organizations in a review of personal status legislation. It also participated in the United Nations Gender Task Force, which organized a campaign on the prevention of violence against women. ESCWA provided, among other things, technical assistance and advisory services to the National Committee for Palestinian Women for Follow-up to Beijing in preparation of the Palestinian national report on implementation of the Platform for Action. In 1998, the World Food Programme began a two-year project that supported the social safety net programme of the Ministry of Social Affairs, addressing the urgent food security needs of poor households.

The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) assisted Palestinian women within the context of its regular programmes. In the education programme, women accounted for 62 per cent of all trainees enrolled in technical/semi-professional courses in 1998/99. UNRWA provided expanded maternal and child health care and family planning services to Palestinian refugees, in recognition of the fact that the burden of child and reproductive ill-health fell overwhelmingly on women. With women of reproductive age and children comprising two thirds of the 3.6 million registered Palestinian refugees, that investment in maternal and child health was key for socio-economic development. Also, more than 50 per cent of UNRWA's special hardship case families, who received direct food and material assistance from the Agency, were headed by women. During the period under review, a total of 20,534 participants benefited from programme activities, such as lectures on health and civil society, childcare, and computer and language skills. During 1998/99, UNRWA's Income Generation Programme granted loans valued at $1.67 million to 2,612 women who supported 13,060 dependants. A total of 1,526 women benefited from the UNRWA Poverty Alleviation Programme, which provided small amounts of credit for income-generation projects.

UNDP completed a project to support women's departments within various ministries to promote gender equality. Activities included a poverty alleviation project within the Ministry of Social Affairs to support deprived families and groups and a one-year pilot project, the Rural Girls Development Project, in three centres in the West Bank and Gaza.

The Secretary-General observed that, in spite of considerable efforts on the part of the PA, civil society and UN organizations to improve the economic and social conditions of Palestinian women, their situation still required special attention. Their status and living conditions were closely linked to the progress of the peace process. Women in the occupied territories continued to be affected in an adverse manner by a variety of measures, such as closures and settlement activities. The mainstreaming of a gender perspective into nation-building programmes and the full and equal participation of Palestinian women were critical to the sustainable outcome of the peace. The UN system would continue to assist Palestinian women to increase their capabilities to participate fully and equally in the peace process and to build and develop Palestinian society.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/2000/27], adopted resolution 2000/23 by recorded vote (42-1-2) [agenda item 14 (a)].

Issues related to Palestine

General aspects

The General Assembly again considered the question of Palestine in 2000. Having discussed the annual report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian Rights) [A/55/35], the Assembly adopted four resolutions, reaffirming, among other things, the necessity of achieving a peaceful settlement of the Palestine question—the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict—and stressing the need for the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinians, primarily the right to self-determination, for Israeli withdrawal from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967 and for resolving the problem of the Palestine refugees.

In commemoration of the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People, celebrated annually on 29 November, in accordance with Assembly resolution 32/40 B [YUN 1977, p. 304], the Committee held a solemn meeting and other activities. Under the Committee's auspices, an exhibit entitled "The Land" was presented by the Permanent Observer Mission of Palestine.

Report of Secretary-General. In a November report on the question of Palestine [A/55/639-S/2000/1113], the Secretary-General made observations on the Middle East peace process (see p. 415).

By a 9 August note verbale, the Secretary-General sought the positions of the Governments of Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, as well as the PLO, regarding steps taken by them to implement the relevant provisions of resolution 54/42 [YUN 1999, p. 420]. As at 16 November, only Israel and the PLO had responded.

Israel said that it viewed the resolution as unbalanced and an undue interference in the Israeli-Palestinian bilateral negotiations. Since both Israeli and Palestinian leaders had agreed that their differences would be resolved only by good-faith negotiations, the one-sided approach reflected in the resolution threatened to prejudice the outcome of that process. A comprehensive solution to the conflict could be based only on directly negotiated and mutually agreed solutions.

The Permanent Observer of Palestine said that the resolution provided support for the peace process and implementation of the agreements reached between the two sides, and also provided the basis for the just settlement of the Palestine question. The resolution also emphasized the importance of a more active and expanded role for the United Nations in that process. As such, the resolution should serve as an acceptable basis for all parties to work on those issues. The Permanent Observer stated that Israel had failed to implement most of the overdue provisions and commitments agreed upon in the 1999 Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum [YUN 1999, p. 401], including the third redeployment of its occupying forces, the release of Palestinian prisoners and the return of Palestinian displaced persons. It had also failed to adhere to the agreed timetable. The optimistic expectations for a positive change in the status of the peace process in the Middle East and the conclusion of a final settlement between the Palestinian and Israeli sides had not been fulfilled. Instead, the region had witnessed a dramatic deterioration of the situation and an unprecedented level of aggression against the Palestinian people since the 28 September visit by Ariel Sharon to Al-Haram Al-Sharif.

The Secretary-General visited the region in October and attended the Sharm el-Sheikh Summit (see p. 420). Of the three major understandings reached at the Summit (security co-operation, establishment of a fact-finding committee, renewal of the peace process), progress had been made only in relation to the establishment of the committee. On 7 November, United States President William J. Clinton announced the membership of the Fact-Finding Committee, chaired by former United States Senator George Mitchell, which was developed with the parties and in consultation with the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General remained concerned that the other understandings remained unimplemented and stressed that the full and good-faith implementation of those understandings was vital to restore calm and to create the right atmosphere for the resumption of peace talks. In his view, there was no alternative to a return to the negotiating table. He also participated in the Summit of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC) (see p. 427), where he discussed the crisis in the Middle East with heads of State and Foreign Ministers. All of them expressed grave concern at the situation and many deplored the excessive use of force by Israel.

The crisis in the region had led to a serious deterioration of the humanitarian and economic situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. In order to improve the coordination of the UN humanitarian assistance to the Palestinians, a task force had been established, chaired by the UN Special Coordinator in Gaza. Also, UNRWA had launched an urgent appeal for $39 million to fund a three-month contingency plan to buy food and medical supplies. As the Assembly had underscored on many occasions, achieving a final and peaceful settlement of the question of Palestine was imperative for the attainment of a comprehensive and lasting peace in the Middle East. The Secretary-General hoped that there would also be movement on the Syrian and Lebanese tracks so that peace, security and stability could be achieved on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) [YUN 1967, p. 257] and 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 55/55:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Andorra, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Nauru.

Speaking before the vote, the United States said that the draft resolution presented the position of only one party to the negotiations—a position that was unacceptable to the other party. Direct negotiations between the parties had yielded significant progress and the draft resolution could only complicate efforts to achieve a settlement.

Israel stated that all diplomatic breakthroughs in the Middle East were arrived at exclusively through direct negotiations between the parties. The draft resolution sought to predetermine the issues to be resolved by those negotiations, violated existing agreements and undermined the foundations of the peace process.

Speaking after the vote, the Permanent Observer of Palestine said that the resolution was of great importance to the Middle East region and to the Palestinian people, and affirmed the responsibility of the United Nations vis-à-vis the question of Palestine.

By decision 55/458 of 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda items entitled "Question of Palestine" and "The situation in the Middle East" would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session.

Committee on Palestinian Rights

As mandated by General Assembly resolution 54/39 [YUN 1999, p. 424], the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People continued to review the situation relating to the Palestine question, reported on it and made suggestions to the Assembly or the Security Council.

The Committee's Bureau continued its consultations with NGO representatives on the future shape of cooperation with civil society during the course of the UN seminar on prospects for Palestinian economic development and the Middle East peace process, held in Cairo, Egypt, in June 2000 (see p. 448). The Bureau urged NGOs to focus their initiatives on the most crucial issues at stake and to mobilize solidarity movements in support of Palestine refugees.

The Committee continued to follow the Palestine-related activities of intergovernmental bodies, such as the Organization of African Unity, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Group of 77 developing countries, and, through its Chairman, participated in a number of high-level meetings of those bodies. Through its Bureau, the Committee continued to cooperate on the question of Palestine with the EU. The Committee took part in the United Nations Asian Meeting on the Question of Palestine (Hanoi, Viet Nam, 1-3 March). The Hanoi Declaration, the meeting's final document, supported the right of the Palestinians to self-determination and the establishment of an independent and sovereign Palestinian State.

In cooperation with OIC and the League of Arab States, the Committee organized the International Conference on Palestine Refugees (Paris, 26-27 April). The Conference stressed that the social and economic conditions of some 3.7 million Palestine refugees required urgent intervention on the part of the international community. It stated that the multilateral track of negotiations remained an essential part of the peace process and reaffirmed the inalienable right of the Palestinian people to return to their land and property. Immediately following the Conference, the United Nations NGO Meeting on Palestine Refugees was convened (Paris, 28 April). Issues discussed included the role of NGOs in promoting a just settlement of the Palestine refugee problem, the experience of NGOs in delivering basic social services to refugee communities and promoting stronger support to UNRWA.

The Committee sponsored the United Nations International Meeting in Support of a Peaceful Settlement of the Question of Palestine and the Establishment of Peace in the Middle East (Athens, Greece, 23-24 May). The Final Statement called on the parties concerned to achieve interim and final settlement agreements, and noted that the Israeli-Palestinian negotiations had been offset on a number of occasions by Israeli actions and statements, incompatible with the spirit and letter of the peace process.

In its annual report to the Assembly [A/55/35] covering the period from 12 November 1999 to 10 October 2000, the Committee said that it had observed with hope a series of actions taken on the ground in implementation of the 1999 Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum [YUN 1999, p. 401]. They included the further redeployment of Israeli troops from parts of the West Bank, the agreement on the release of Palestinian prisoners, the opening of a southern safe passage between the West Bank and the Gaza Strip and the resumption of negotiations on permanent status issues. The Committee welcomed the signing, on 7 June, of the Israeli-Palestinian agreement on the implementation of economic issues, as well as the agreement concerning the Gaza seaport, signed on 20 September. It supported the September 2000 Palestinian Central Council decisions to postpone the establishment of a Palestinian State and on steps to be taken in preparation for statehood, including the completion of work on the constitutional declaration and laws for presidential and parliamentary elections, and the submission of an application by Palestine for membership in the United Nations. The Committee welcomed the negotiations on permanent status issues conducted in March/April 2000 at Bolling Air Force Base near Washington, D.C., and the intense discussions at the Middle East Peace Summit, held in July at Camp David, Maryland (see p. 415). The Committee was of the view that with the meetings at Camp David the Israeli-Palestinian negotiations had reached a high-water mark. It was troubled, therefore, by the failure of the parties to bridge the gaps in their positions and reach a comprehensive agreement. It welcomed, however, the final trilateral statement made at the conclusion of the Summit, in which both parties committed themselves to continue their efforts to conclude an agreement on all permanent status issues as soon as possible. The Committee observed with much concern, however, the failure to create the necessary momentum for the conclusion of a final agreement on 15 September 2000, as stipulated by the provisions of the Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum. In that regard, the Committee noted the determined effort of the United States President to re-engage the two sides on specific elements of the final settlement, in particular on the question of Jerusalem, in the course of the meetings held on the sidelines of the United Nations Millennium Summit in September 2000. Despite that optimism, the confrontation and escalation of violence that developed following Mr. Sharon's visit to Al-Haram Al-Sharif on 28 September placed the peace process in considerable jeopardy and led to increased volatility on the ground.

The Committee was alarmed by the fact that the Israeli settlement drive in the course of the year under review had been as vigorous as it had been in previous years. In July, Israel's Ministry of the Interior announced that the number of settlers in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip had risen in the past year by 13,600 to some 200,000. The Committee reiterated its concern over the provocative and often violent actions of extremist settlers occupying Palestinian land, erecting makeshift houses and engaging in violent confrontations with Palestinians. During the year, settlers were collecting donations in Israel and abroad to purchase special military and rescue equipment. According to the Council of Jewish Communities in Judea, Samaria and Gaza, the equipment was purchased in coordination with the Israel Defence Forces.

The Committee expressed concern that, although a number of Palestinian prisoners had been released, some 1,650 of them still remained imprisoned in Israel. It was especially alarmed by, among other things, reports of administrative detention of Palestinians without charge or trial; overcrowded confinement conditions; solitary confinement as a means of severe punishment; inadequate medical care; and deprivation of basic facilities, such as a place to practise religion.

The Palestinian economy remained beset by a number of restrictions on Palestinian economic transactions, limited passage between the West Bank and Gaza, and persistent unemployment. There was also a pressing need to improve the physical underdeveloped infrastructure, including water, energy, transportation and the sewage system. The Committee stressed the urgency of assisting the Palestinian people in meeting their social and economic development needs.

The Committee, in its conclusions and recommendations, said that illegal "facts on the ground" continued to be created in violation of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, jeopardizing the possibility of making tangible progress in the peace negotiations. The Committee considered it unacceptable that, on the threshold of the third millennium, the Palestinian people were still carrying the heavy weight of occupation. A core issue in the permanent status negotiations was the question of Jerusalem, which, according to the Committee, should be resolved based on Council resolution 242(1967) [YUN 1967, p. 257] and other relevant UN resolutions, the exercise by the Palestinian people of their inalienable rights, and with due regard to the universal spiritual meaning of Jerusalem for all humankind. Among other permanent status issues, the question of Palestine refugees remained a difficult one. Generations of Palestinians had grown up as refugees, living in dismal conditions in refugee camps or under occupation, many away from their homeland, denied their natural right to self-determination, with bleak economic prospects, their freedom of movement restricted, their hopes for a better future dependent on the outside world. If that problem was not resolved with due care and in accordance with international law, the potential for peace and stability in the region would be seriously jeopardized. The Committee reiterated that the solution to the problem should be based on Assembly resolution 194(III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 174]. In addition, the illegal settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory since 1967 had changed the geography of the area and had devastated the livelihood of individual Palestinian households and the Palestinian economy in general.

The Committee strongly believed that the United Nations should continue to exercise its permanent responsibility towards all aspects of the question of Palestine until it was resolved in a satisfactory manner, in conformity with relevant UN resolutions and international legitimacy, and until the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people were fully realized. The Committee shared the view that the work carried out by UNRWA should be continued and supported the view that the reactivation of the work of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine (UNCCP), established by Assembly resolution 194(III), and the use of the Commission's records related to land ownership in Palestine should be considered. The Committee planned to continue to review and assess its programme of activities with a view to making it more focused and responsive to developments in the peace process and on the ground.

As requested in General Assembly resolution 54/41 [YUN 1999, p. 426], the UN Department of Public Information (DPI) in 2000 continued its special information programme on the question of Palestine, which included the organization of its annual training programme for Palestinian broadcasters and journalists and the production of an exhibit entitled "The United Nations and the Question of Palestine".

DPI provided press coverage of all meetings held at UN Headquarters, including those of the Committee on Palestinian Rights, as well as coverage of conferences and meetings held elsewhere under the auspices of the Committee. The quarterly publication UN Chronicle continued to cover the Palestine question and regularly reported on peacekeeping operations in the Middle East. The Radio News Unit covered aspects of the Palestine question and related issues in its news and current affairs programmes in various languages for regional and worldwide dissemination.

As in previous years, a major focus of the United Nations information centres was the promotion of the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People through extensive print and electronic media coverage. Throughout the year, many UNICs dealt with the Palestine question and organized special outreach activities related to the issue.

Assistance to Palestinians

UN activities

Report of Secretary-General. In a July report [A/55/137-E/2000/95], the Secretary-General described UN assistance to the Palestinian people between May 1999 and May 2000, assessed ongoing programmes and needs still unmet and presented proposals for additional assistance.

Throughout the reporting period, the UN Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process and Personal Representative of the Secretary-General to the PLO and the Palestinian Authority (PA), Terje Roed-Larsen, continued to ensure better coordination between the relevant institutions of the PA and UN agencies, as well as the donor community, and monitored and documented economic and social conditions in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. He was also responsible for coordinating UN development assistance related to the peace process in Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, which included anticipating and strengthening the foundations of development cooperation. The sixth annual UN inter-agency meeting (14-15 June 2000) focused on further deepening cooperation between the resident and non-resident UN agencies and PA representatives.

The Secretary-General said that although, overall, progress continued to be made in meeting some of the urgent and most significant priorities that confronted the Palestinian people, additional support was necessary to address basic human needs. Technical and financial support was also required to improve the physical environment and infrastructure, including water, energy and transportation, and institutions and human resources had to be strengthened to cope with those challenges. The PA, with some support from the United Nations and other international partners, had undertaken institutional, economic and financial reforms, which would also benefit from assistance to ensure their implementation and impact. Institutional mechanisms that had been established to facilitate dialogue and coordination between the PA and donors were working well, and were supported by the Office of the UN Special Coordinator, in collaboration with the World Bank and other UN agencies.

UN organizations and specialized agencies continued to play a significant role in support of the Palestinian people. The UN development system worked as a complement and supplement to other international partners and had implemented sizeable multilateral and bilateral assistance. UNRWA and UNDP administered special, large-scale programmes. Other UN funds, agencies and programmes contributed to socio-economic development priorities.

It was evident that many needs had been met and, due largely to the strengthening of the PA's capacity for planning and policy-making, the Palestinian Development Plan had been increasingly employed to influence the direction of donor assistance. The Plan represented the PA's commitment to develop national capacity in medium-term development planning and in the implementation of development projects. The Plan was reinforced in 2000 by the publication of the One-Year Action Plan, which provided a ranking of projects for the year according to national priority. Many UN agencies had contributed expertise to the PA to help with sectoral policies and strategies, needs assessments and programme formulation. Nevertheless, lack of sufficient assistance in certain priority sectors/subsectors had left the planned development process lagging in crucial areas. In the process of development cooperation, the coverage of priority needs should continue to be examined: in monetary terms, in terms of whether or not the funds available were being well targeted to the real needs spelled out by the PA, and in terms of information exchange and cooperation between donors, to foster complementarity and avoid overlap. Therefore, continued coordination between the PA and the donor community, and within the donor community itself, was vital if Palestinian development was to evolve and attain its intended objectives.

Progress in the development of the Occupied Palestinian Territory had been facilitated by the assistance provided by the international community with a total of approximately $2.75 billion having been distributed between 1993 and 1999. At the same time, the Secretary-General expressed concern about the declining trend of both new commitments and disbursements for development cooperation.

Seminar on assistance to Palestinian people. By a 3 July letter [A/55/L.44-E/2000/87], the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights transmitted to the Secretary-General the report of the seminar on prospects for Palestinian economic development and the Middle East peace process (Cairo, 20-21 June). The seminar provided the framework for a discussion on the state of the Palestinian economy, the factors that affected it and its future prospects. It also heightened awareness and promoted support for the Bethlehem 2000 Project (see p. 1040). The seminar was attended by donor and other Governments, intergovernmental organizations, UN agencies, PA officials and NGOs active in the field, as well as experts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/173 [draft: A/55/L.63 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (c)].

UNRWA

In 2000, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, in its fifty-first year of operation, continued to provide vital education, health and relief and social services to a growing refugee population, despite a critical budget deficit and cash-flow crisis.

On 30 June, 3.7 million refugees were registered with UNRWA, an increase of 3.1 per cent over the 1999 figure of 3.62 million. The largest refugee population was registered in Jordan (42 per cent of the Agency-wide total), followed by the Gaza Strip (22 per cent), the West Bank (15.6 per cent), the Syrian Arab Republic (10.3 per cent) and Lebanon (10.1 per cent). Of the registered population, 36.5 per cent were aged 15 or under and about one third lived in 59 refugee camps, while the remainder resided in towns and villages.

In his annual report on the work of the Agency (1 July 1999–30 June 2000) [A/55/13], the UNRWA Commissioner-General said that the Agency's performance during the reporting period was satisfactory, given the constraints on funding. In general, UNRWA managed to maintain the standard of its education and health services, although staff and infrastructure were increasingly under pressure, with unacceptably high teacher/student and doctor/patient ratios, overcrowding in clinics and classrooms and a shortage of funds to carry out essential maintenance.

The Agency continued to seek greater efficiency through an internal restructuring and reform programme. Donor funding was used to continue technical assistance in three areas: reform of the Agency's financial systems; improving educational planning mechanisms; and improving procurement policies and procedures. By mid-2000, the Agency had selected a new financial system, which was intended to be operational by mid-2001.

Palestine refugees remained anxious about their future status. UNRWA's continuing financial difficulties were interpreted by some as politically motivated, signalling a weakening in the international community's commitment to the refugee issue. The withdrawal of Israeli forces from southern Lebanon in May (see p. 461) was welcomed in the region and led to a period of relative calm.

The strife that broke out in late September following the visit of Mr. Sharon to the Temple Mount/Al-Haram Al-Sharif in Jerusalem undermined several years of economic progress and infrastructure development, with profound effects on the refugees in terms of lives, livelihoods and shelter lost. UNRWA launched a flash emergency appeal on 4 October for $4.83 million, concentrating on the provision of medical supplies. That was followed by the first consolidated emergency appeal on 8 November for $39.1 million to provide refugees with food and cash assistance, among other forms of aid, for the period from December 2000 through February 2001.

OIOS report. The General Assembly had before it a report by the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the investigation into the UNRWA field office in Lebanon [A/54/367]. The Office had investigated allegations of financial impropriety, the embezzlement of medical supplies and bribery by construction contractors. With regard to the bribery allegations, OIOS found them to be unsubstantiated but made recommendations for improving UNRWA tendering procedures to reduce the risk of fraud and suspicion of corruption. The allegations of financial impropriety and embezzlement of medical supplies were found to be without merit.

By resolution 54/257 of 7 April, the Assembly took note of the OIOS report.

Advisory Commission. By a 28 September letter to the Commissioner-General, which he included in his report [A/55/13], the Advisory Commission of UNRWA recognized that the Agency's services to the refugees over the past 50 years had contributed to their socio-economic well-being and, thus, to stability in the region, and in that light recognized the need to mobilize an adequate level of resources for the Agency's core budget. It noted with appreciation the new format of the Agency's budget that had been welcomed by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ). The Commission noted with concern the imminent cash crisis that UNRWA was facing and called on donors to provide adequate, predictable and early payments to alleviate that situation. It welcomed UNRWA's efforts to improve the efficiency, productivity and effectiveness of its programmes, as well as the introduction of new administrative reform measures. It noted with concern the difficulties faced by the Agency due to the restrictions imposed by the Israeli authorities and called for measures to remove them.

Peace Implementation Programme

In its seventh year of operation, UNRWA's Peace Implementation Programme (PIP) remained the main channel for extrabudgetary funding of activities associated with the Agency's education, health and relief and social services programmes, as well as income generation. Since its inception in October 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 569], PIP had improved the refugees' overall living conditions, created employment opportunities and developed infrastructure. Following the adoption of the 2000-2001 programme-based biennium budget, which divided the Agency's budget into regular budget and projects budget sections, all new non-core contributions were credited to the projects budget. A new "Projects 2000-2002" programme was introduced in January 2000 to track all contributions to the biennium projects budget.

Between mid-1999 and mid-2000, with PIP funding, UNRWA completed the construction of 12 schools, 32 additional classrooms, one vocational education room, two water reservoirs and eight latrine units, a polyclinic, a health centre and the upgrading of a second, the expansion of a mother and child health centre, and a youth activities centre. PIP funds also enabled the Agency to rehabilitate 154 shelters of special hardship families. Several elements of the environmental health scheme in the Gaza Strip were completed, while some other components were still ongoing. Camp infrastructure projects ongoing at mid-2000 included the construction of a public health laboratory in the West Bank; the construction of several schools and additional classrooms Agency-wide; a women's programme centre and two community rehabilitation centres; and a major sewerage and drainage project for eight refugee camps in Lebanon. Other PIP activities included a slow learners' programme in Jordan; the integration of visually impaired children into the regular school system; and care for the destitute aged. PIP also helped to sustain regular Agency programmes by funding the running costs of two health centres in Gaza, the cost of university scholarships for refugee students and the procurement of medical supplies. Further funding went into the upgrading of facilities and courses at several of the Agency's vocational training centres. Cash expenditure under PIP amounted to $25.8 million during the reporting period, not including expenditures on the European Gaza Hospital.

UNRWA received $8.1 million in pledges and contributions for PIP projects during the reporting period. Of the new funding, $5.8 million went to projects in the education sector, while $0.9 million was allocated for the health sector and $1.4 million for the relief and social services sector. No funding was received for income-generation activities.

Lebanon appeal

Most of the over 370,000 registered Palestine refugees in Lebanon continued to face deplorable living conditions and depended almost entirely on UNRWA for basic services. By mid-2000, the Agency had received $9.2 million of the $11 million sought in additional contributions under the special emergency appeal, launched in 1997 to support essential health, education, relief and social services activities for Palestine refugees in Lebanon. Completed projects included the construction of a secondary school and a computer laboratory and the procurement of textbooks required under the new curriculum.

Major service areas

UNRWA continued to provide educational, health, and relief and social services to, and carried out income-generation activities for, Palestinian refugees throughout the occupied territories.

During the 1999/2000 school year, the 637 UNRWA schools across the region accommodated 466,955 pupils, most of whom were in elementary and preparatory cycles, apart from 1,696 students at the three Agency secondary schools in Lebanon. Total enrolment increased by 2.1 per cent, or 9,606 pupils, over the 1998/99 school year. The Jordan and Gaza fields each accounted for approximately one third of total Agency pupil enrolment, while the other three fields (Lebanon, Syria, West Bank) together accounted for the remaining third. UNRWA's school system continued to maintain full gender equity, with 50 per cent of pupils being female. The education programme, which was run in cooperation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), remained the largest single area of UNRWA activity, with the 14,485 education personnel representing 66 per cent of all Agency staff. The proposed education budget for the 2000-2001 biennium was established at $328.3 million for regular programmes, or 54 per cent of UNRWA's regular budget for the period. The policy of operating schools on a double-shift basis (housing two schools in a single building) continued due to financial constraints and steadily rising student enrolment. Also due to financial constraints, the Agency remained unable to carry out the extension of the basic education cycle in the West Bank and Gaza from 9 to 10 years, which widened the gap between the Agency's and the host authorities' education systems. In June 2000, the Agency began a donor-funded project aimed at strengthening and supporting UNRWA's efforts to promote concepts and principles of basic human rights, raise awareness of the importance of tolerance and train Palestine refugee children and youth in non-violent means of conflict resolution. Total enrolment in the eight UNRWA vocational and technical training centres was 4,635 in the 1999/2000 school year, a decrease of 20 over the previous year. Overall, women accounted for 31.7 per cent of all trainees. UNRWA also provided placement and career guidance and continued with project funding to support some scholars until they graduated. In coordination with a United Kingdom consultancy team and senior education staff at both headquarters (Amman, Jordan) and in the field, a five-year development plan (2000-2004) was completed, covering educational planning, staff and management development, vocational and technical education, education management information system, personnel and finance.

UNRWA's health-care programme remained focused on comprehensive primary health care, including a full range of maternal and child health and family planning services; school health services, health education and promotion activities; outpatient medical care services; prevention and control of communicable and non-communicable diseases; and specialist care with emphasis on gynaecology and obstetrics, paediatrics and cardiology. Dental and basic support services, such as radiology and laboratory facilities, were also provided. Services were delivered through a network of 123 primary health-care facilities located in and outside refugee camps. UNRWA participated in two rounds of national immunization campaigns for the eradication of poliomyelitis in the context of a World Health Organization (WHO) regional strategy. Funding shortfalls continued to threaten the sustainability of hospitalization services, making the effective management of scarce resources a top priority. The Agency continued to emphasize the development of human resources for health through basic, in-service and postgraduate training as a key element to improve the quality of care. Approximately 1.2 million Palestine refugees in 59 official camps in the five fields of operation, representing 32 per cent of the total registered population, benefited from environmental health services provided by UNRWA, including sewage disposal, provision of safe drinking water, collection and disposal of refuse, and control of insect and rodent infestation. The proposed health budget for the 2000-2001 biennium was established at $107.7 million under the regular programme, representing 17.6 per cent of the Agency's total operating budget. UNRWA continued its cooperation with the PA, the EU and other UN agencies.

The relief and social services programme supported those Palestine refugees who were unable to meet basic needs for food, shelter and other essentials. It also maintained records on Palestine refugees in order to determine eligibility for all UNRWA services. Further progress was made on the unified registration system, which aimed to integrate two existing computerized databases—the registration database and the socio-economic database—with the family files archives. The principal means of assistance to special hardship case (SHC) families were food support, shelter rehabilitation, selective cash assistance, hospitalization subsidies and preferential access to UNRWA training centres. The number of refugees in households that met the eligibility criteria—no male adult medically fit to earn an income and no other identifiable means of financial support above a defined threshold—increased by 3.5 per cent, from 200,078 at 30 June 1999 to 207,150 at 30 June 2000. The percentage of refugees enrolled in the programme was highest in Lebanon (10.8 per cent) and the Gaza Strip (8.6 per cent) and lowest in Jordan (2.6 per cent). The regular budget allocation for selective cash assistance, which was frozen in August 1997, was partially reinstated in January 2000. During the first half of 2000, small grants averaging $140 were provided on a case-by-case basis to 1,766 SHC families facing emergency situations. UNRWA also rehabilitated a total of 217 shelters of SHC families, as compared to 1,305 in the previous reporting period. The poverty alleviation programme continued to address poverty at the micro level. Most loans under the group guaranteed lending schemes and to SHC families were for between $500 and $10,000. UNRWA-sponsored centres within the refugee camps, or community-based organizations (CBOs), increased from 131 at mid-1999 to 133 at mid-2000, with a total of 71 women's programme centres, 27 youth activity centres and 35 community rehabilitation centres for the physically and mentally challenged. CBOs offered social development activities, including skills-training opportunities for women and disabled people. UNRWA's role in the implementation of social services programmes continued to evolve from that of service provider to that of facilitator, with emphasis on a community development approach that promoted, among other things, participation, self-reliance, revenue generation, and implementation and management skills. The proposed 2000-2001 budget of the relief and social services programme was $62.4 million for regular programmes, representing just over 10 per cent of UNRWA's total regular budget.

UNRWA's income-generation programme supported small and microenterprises within the refugee community by providing technical assistance, as well as capital investment and working capital loans through field-based revolving loan funds. The programme's objective was to create employment, generate income, reduce poverty and empower refugees, particularly women, through socio-economic growth. During the reporting period, the programme provided 10,875 loans worth $13.2 million to Palestinian-owned enterprises. UNRWA's income-generation activities continued to be concentrated in the Gaza Strip, although the programme in the West Bank was rapidly reducing the outreach gap between the two programmes. The programme targeted formal business enterprises that had the capacity to create jobs for the unemployed and the informal and microenterprises that could generate income for poor families. Although no additional capital funds were received during the reporting period, the number of loans disbursed increased from 7,014, valued at $8.33 million during the previous reporting period, to 8,135 valued at $10.2 million during 1999/2000. The Gaza income-generation programme was composed of four subprogrammes, three of which provided credit to various target groups and the fourth provided business training services. The microenterprise credit (MEC) subprogramme targeted working capital loans to the more than 20,000 microenterprises operating in Gaza. The solidarity group lending subprogramme also provided short-term working capital loans, but they were targeted at women working in microenterprises or women microenterprise owners. The small-scale enterprise subprogramme provided both working capital and capital investment loans to new and established businesses in the industry and service sectors to promote job creation, exports and import substitution. The small and microenterprise training subprogramme provided non-financial services to the business community and encouraged entrepreneurship through business training. The MEC subprogramme in the West Bank was the fastest growing of UNRWA's credit subprogrammes. In the second half of 2000, UNRWA formally changed the name of its income-generation programme in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip to the microfinance and microenterprise programme.

9. Welcomes the consultative process between the Agency, host Governments, the Palestinian Authority and donors on management reforms;

10. Notes with profound concern that the continuing shortfall in the finances of the Agency has a significant negative influence on the living conditions of the Palestine refugees most in need and that it therefore has possible consequences for the peace process;

11. Calls upon all donors, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the Agency, including the remaining costs of moving the headquarters to Gaza, encourages contributing Governments to contribute regularly and to consider increasing their regular contributions, and urges non-contributing Governments to contribute.

UNRWA financing

In 2000, UNRWA continued to face a difficult financial situation, characterized by large funding shortfalls in the regular budget, depleted working capital and cash reserves, and cumulative deficits in certain project accounts. The structural deficit—representing the inability of income to keep pace with needs arising from natural growth in the refugee population and inflation, which increased the cost of maintaining a constant level of services—remained a problem. However, through a combination of ad hoc additional donor contributions and prudent financial management, UNRWA was making some progress in reducing the deficit. Nevertheless, a budget deficit was expected by the end of 2000 unless additional contributions were made during the year.

At mid-2000, the cash position remained extremely weak, forcing the Agency to live from hand to mouth in terms of balancing incoming funds and outgoing payments. Expected cash expenditure in the regular programme was $280.4 million, as against expected cash income of $250 million. Working capital, defined as the difference between assets and liabilities in the regular budget for the calendar year, was for all practical purposes non-existent, making UNRWA vulnerable to any change in expected income or expenditure. Estimates indicated that the Agency's regular budget for 2000 would face a deficit of $30.4 million by year's end.

The Agency's biennium budget for 2000-2001 [A/54/13/Add.1] was well received by donors and ACABQ for the clarity of its presentation and objectives. A new preparation process and format sought to enhance the budget's usefulness as a planning, management and fund-raising tool. By mid-2000, an Agency-wide exercise was under way to monitor expenditure against budget proposals.

Working Group. The Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA held two meetings in 2000, on 11 September and 6 October. In its report to the General Assembly [A/55/456], the Working Group said that the critical financial situation of 1999 had continued in 2000. In 1999, UNRWA received income of $260.7 million against a cash budget of $322.1 million, leaving a deficit of some $61.4 million. In cash terms, the Agency ended the year with a balance of $14 million in its General Fund, although that amount included $12 million advanced from year 2000 pledges in order to enable the Agency to meet its December payroll.

Deficits in the cash budgets for previous years had been covered out of working capital, a reserve that had been virtually depleted by the beginning of 1999. At the end of 1999, outstanding and unpaid pledges amounted to $36.9 million: $12.7 million pertaining to the regular budget and $24.2 million to project funding. Further strain was exerted by the non-reimbursement by the PA of the value-added tax that the Agency had paid in the course of its operations in Gaza and the West Bank, which totalled some $18.5 million as at June 2000. In addition, some $4.5 million for port charges remained to be recovered. There also was a shortfall in funding for the European Gaza Hospital, and a deficit of $5.2 million in the account set up to fund the costs of transferring UNRWA headquarters from Vienna to Gaza and Amman.

The Working Group noted that UNRWA had made significant progress towards eliminating the structural deficit problem that plagued the Agency in previous years, in particular through the use of contract teachers, reductions in international staffing and other reforms. Nevertheless, it expressed alarm that austerity measures continued to prevent UNRWA's programmes from expanding at a rate commensurate with the growth in the refugee population.

The Working Group stressed that UNRWA services had to be viewed as the minimum required to enable the refugees to lead decent human lives. Any further reduction in those services would not only deprive the refugees of the minimum level of support to which they were entitled, but could also have a destabilizing effect on the entire region. The Group urged Governments to continue contributing generously and to consider additional contributions to finance deficit amounts so that services could continue uninterrupted.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/55/570], adopted resolution 55/124 without vote [agenda item 84].

Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2656(XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2728(XXV) of 15 December 1970, 2791(XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 54/70 of 6 December 1999 and the previous resolutions on this question,

Recalling also its decision 36/462 of 16 March 1982, by which it took note of the special report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East,

Having considered the report of the Working Group,

Taking into account the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East covering the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000,

Deeply concerned about the continuing financial situation of the Agency, which has affected and affects the continuation of the provision of necessary Agency services to Palestine refugees, including the emergency-related programmes,

Emphasizing the continuing need for extraordinary efforts in order to maintain, at least at the current minimum level, the activities of the Agency, as well as to enable the Agency to carry out essential construction,

1. Commends the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for its efforts to assist in ensuring the financial security of the Agency;

2. Takes note with approval of the report of the Working Group;

3. Requests the Working Group to continue its efforts, in cooperation with the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General, to find a solution to the financial situation of the Agency;

4. Welcomes the new, unified budget structure for the biennium 2000-2001, which can contribute significantly to improved budgetary transparency of the Agency;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary services and assistance to the Working Group for the conduct of its work.

Displaced persons

In a September report [A/55/391] on compliance with General Assembly resolution 54/71 [YUN 1999, p. 438], which called for the accelerated return of all persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, the Secretary-General said that since UNRWA was not involved in arrangements for the return of either refugees or displaced persons not registered with it, the Agency's information was based on requests by returning registered refugees for the transfer of their entitlements to their areas of return. Displaced refugees known by UNRWA to have returned to the West Bank and Gaza Strip since 1967 numbered 19,876. Records indicated that, between 1 July 1999 and 30 June 2000, 1,278 refugees had returned to the West Bank and 218 to Gaza. Some of the refugees might not have been displaced in 1967, but might be family members of a displaced registered refugee whom they either had accompanied on return or had joined later.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/55/570], adopted resolution 55/125 by recorded vote (156-2-2) [agenda item 84].

Persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2252(ES-V) of 4 July 1967, 2341 B (XXII) of 19 December 1967 and all subsequent related resolutions,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 237(1967) of 14 June 1967 and 259(1968) of 27 September 1968,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General submitted in pursuance of its resolution 54/71 of 6 December 1999,

Taking note also of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East covering the period from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000,

Concerned about the continuing human suffering resulting from the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities,

Taking note of the relevant provisions of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, signed in Washington, D.C., on 13 September 1993 by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, with regard to the modalities for the admission of persons displaced in 1967, and concerned that the process agreed upon has not yet been effected,

1. Reaffirms the right of all persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities to return to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

2. Expresses concern that the mechanism agreed upon by the parties in article XII of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements on the return of displaced persons has not been effected, and expresses the hope for an accelerated return of displaced persons;

3. Endorses, in the meanwhile, the efforts of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to continue to provide humanitarian assistance, as far as practicable, on an emergency basis, and as a temporary measure, to persons in the area who are currently displaced and in serious need of continued assistance as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities;

4. Strongly appeals to all Governments and to organizations and individuals to contribute generously to the Agency and to the other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned for the above-mentioned purposes;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly before its fifty-sixth session on the progress made with regard to the implementation of the present resolution.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 55/125:

Education, training and scholarships

In a September report [A/55/402], the Secretary-General transmitted responses to the General Assembly's appeal in resolution 54/72 [YUN 1999, p. 439] for States, specialized agencies and NGOs to augment special allocations for scholarships and grants to Palestine refugees, for which UNRWA acted as recipient and trustee.

In the 2000 fiscal year, Japan awarded 12 fellowships to Palestine refugees who were employed by UNRWA as vocational training staff at the eight vocational training centres in the Agency's area of operations. In 1999, owing to the cancellation of the portion of the university scholarship fund for secondary school graduates financed from UNRWA's General Fund budget and the fact that financing was not forthcoming from donors to fund the subprogramme, UNRWA's Education Department used funds already available from the Japanese contribution, as well as from contributions made by Switzerland, to finance the studies of some students through their graduation. UNESCO granted 25 scholarships to Palestinian students in 1999/2000, while WHO provided 55 fellowships/study tours for qualified Palestinian candidates. The United World Colleges offered one scholarship for 1998/99 and one for 1999/2000.

Proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds"

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/75 [YUN 1999, p. 440], the Secretary-General submitted a September report on the proposal to establish a university for Palestine refugees in Jerusalem [A/55/425]. First mentioned by the Assembly in resolution 35/13 B [YUN 1980, p. 443], the issue had been the subject of annual reports by the Secretary-General.

To assist in the preparation of a feasibility study and at the Secretary-General's request, the Rector of the United Nations University again asked expert Mihaly Simai to visit the area and meet with Israeli officials. In response to the Secretary-General's note verbale of 8 August, requesting Israel to facilitate the visit, Israel, in a 6 September reply, stated that it had consistently voted against the resolution on the proposed university and that its position remained unchanged. It charged that the resolution's sponsors sought to exploit higher education for political purposes extraneous to genuine academic pursuits. Accordingly, Israel was of the opinion that the proposed visit would serve no useful purpose. The Secretary-General reported that it had not been possible to complete the study as planned.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/55/570], adopted resolution 55/129 by recorded vote (156-2-2) [agenda item 84].

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 55/129:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Tonga, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Property rights

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/74 [YUN 1999, p. 441], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/55/428] on steps taken to protect and administer Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel and to establish a fund for income derived therefrom, on behalf of the rightful owners. He indicated that he had transmitted the resolution to Israel and all other Member States, requesting information on any steps taken or envisaged with regard to its implementation.

In a 6 September reply, reproduced in the report, Israel stated that its position on the resolutions on Palestine refugees had been set forth in successive annual replies, the latest of which had been included in the Secretary-General's 1999 report on the subject [YUN 1999, p. 441]. Israel regretted that the resolutions regarding UNRWA remained rife with political issues irrelevant to the Agency's work and detached from the reality in the area. While Israel believed that UNRWA could play an important role in promoting the social and economic advancement foreseen in agreements between Israel and the Palestinians, it called on the Assembly to consolidate the resolutions on UNRWA into one directly related to the Agency's humanitarian tasks. No replies were received from other Member States.

Report of Conciliation Commission. The United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, in its fifty-fourth report covering the period from 1 September 1999 to 31 August 2000 [A/55/329], noted that, pursuant to Assembly resolution 51/129 [YUN 1996, p. 423], the project to preserve and modernize its records was completed.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/55/570], adopted resolution 55/128 by recorded vote (156-2-2) [agenda item 84].

Peacekeeping operations

In 2000, the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO), originally set up to monitor the ceasefire called for by the Security Council in resolution S/801 of 29 May 1948 [YUN 1947-48, p. 427] in newly partitioned Palestine, continued its work. UNTSO's unarmed military observers fulfilled changing mandates—from supervising the original four armistice agreements between Israel and its neighbours (Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic) to observing and monitoring other ceasefires, as well as performing a number of additional tasks. During the year, UNTSO personnel worked with the two remaining UN peacekeeping forces in the Middle East—the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) in the Golan Heights and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL).

On 13 March [S/2000/223], the Secretary-General informed the Council of his intention to appoint Major-General Franco Ganguzza (Italy) as the new Chief of Staff of UNTSO, replacing Major-General Timothy Roger Ford (Australia). On 17 March [S/2000/224], the Council took note of the appointment.

Lebanon

The United Nations confirmed the withdrawal of Israeli forces from southern Lebanon as at 16 June 2000, in compliance with Security Council resolution 425(1978) [YUN 1978, p. 312]. Both Lebanon and Israel undertook to respect the line of withdrawal—the so-called Blue Line—identified by the United Nations on the ground. Nevertheless, numerous violations and attacks across the line by both sides occurred throughout the second half of the year.

In August, the Secretary-General appointed Rolf G. Knuttson as his Personal Representative for southern Lebanon, responsible for coordinating UN activities in the area. Mr. Knuttson completed his assignment in mid-December. Staffan de Mistura was named to succeed him in January 2001.

In a series of monthly communications [A/54/703-S/2000/11, A/54/756-S/2000/126, A/54/786-S/2000/193, A/54/843-S/2000/299, A/54/871-S/2000/447, A/54/928-S/2000/626, A/54/961-S/2000/794, A/55/678-S/2000/1172, A/55/707-S/2000/1223, A/55/721-S/2000/1258], Lebanon detailed Israeli attacks on southern Lebanon and the Western Bekaa, as well as Israel's violations of Lebanese sovereignty.

Communications (25 January–3 March). On 25 January [A/54/723-S/2000/55], Israel informed the Secretary-General that Lebanon continued to openly support a terror campaign against a neighbouring State, while endorsing opposition to any peace agreement. Lebanon also refused to respond to Israel's repeated invitations to negotiate a solution to restore peace and security along their common border. In addition, organizations operating on Lebanese soil practised terrorist operations against Israel, and Lebanon took no action to prevent or restrain them. Lebanon's policies left Israel with no alternative but to exercise its sovereign right of self-defence in accordance with international law.

In a 31 January letter to the Secretary-General [A/54/731-S/2000/71], Lebanon said that Israel, after it had announced that it wished to withdraw from Lebanon, had directed its army to engage in actions that could result in the redrawing of Lebanon's southern boundaries.

On 8 February [A/54/741-S/2000/94], Lebanon informed the Secretary-General that Israeli aircraft had that day carried out a series of attacks against electric power stations in three Lebanese cities, including Beirut. Those attacks followed the escalation of Israeli aggression in southern Lebanon.

Responding on 9 February [A/54/745-S/2000/99], Israel said that it was its intention to pull its troops from the security zone by the end of July 2000, preferably within the framework of an agreement. Contrary to the Lebanese allegations, the Israeli army was not engaged in any activity aimed at redrawing the boundaries between Israel and Lebanon; its activities in the area were part of the preparations for pulling troops out, pending a decision of the Israeli Government.

On the same day [A/54/744-S/2000/98], Israel said that it had witnessed an escalation of attacks launched by Hezbollah from villages in Lebanon, which resulted in the killing of six Israeli soldiers and the wounding of 12 others. No restraining action had been undertaken by either the Lebanese or the Syrian Government. Against that background, the Israeli air force carried out strikes against a Hezbollah arms depot and three infrastructure targets. Since Hezbollah command posts and other terrorist targets were located within Lebanese villages, Israel had chosen not to strike at those targets in order to curtail injury to civilians. Israel said that it would continue to defend and protect residents of northern Israel and would take all necessary measures to strike at terrorists and those who supported them. At the same time, the negotiations between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic were in a state of uncertainty. Israel expected Syria to exert restraint upon the Hezbollah and its aggression.

Responding on 14 February [A/54/753-S/2000/121], the Syrian Arab Republic said that Israel's letter characterized the actions of the Lebanese national resistance as terrorism that had to be curbed by the Lebanese and Syrian Governments. Israel sought to ignore the fact that resistance to foreign occupation was a legitimate right enshrined in international covenants and exercised by the peoples of the world throughout history. The international community addressed the volatile situation in southern Lebanon and for that purpose established a group to monitor the understanding of April 1996 between Israel and Lebanon [YUN 1996, p. 428]. Syria, which was a member of the monitoring group, together with France, Israel, Lebanon and the United States, continued to support the understanding and held Israel responsible for impeding the work of the group.

In a 9 February statement [S/2000/114], the EU said that it was concerned by the escalation of hostilities in southern Lebanon. It noted that in response to attacks on its forces, Israel had launched air attacks against the Lebanese infrastructure. In that context, the EU recalled that the April 1996 understanding aimed, in particular, at protecting civilians from attack. The EU called on all sides to show restraint and to observe the terms of the ceasefire understanding of April 1996; it also called for the early convening of the monitoring group to secure a de-escalation of tension and prevent further violations of the understanding.

On 18 February [A/54/759-S/2000/135], Lebanon said that while international efforts were being made to secure the resumption of the meetings of the monitoring group, Israel had decided to escalate the situation with the announcement that an Israeli ministerial troika, headed by Prime Minister Barak, had been given the authority to decide on strikes against Lebanese civilians and Lebanon's infrastructure.

Responding on 29 February [A/54/772-S/2000/163], Israel said Lebanon's letters obscured the fact that the continuation of violence in southern Lebanon was the direct result of the policies of the Lebanese and Syrian Governments in supporting and encouraging terrorism by Hezbollah and other organizations. In its campaign against Israel, Hezbollah had resorted to using civilian areas to provide a human shield for its terrorist activity. Lebanese sovereignty as a whole was undermined by the fact that Syrian forces were deployed and active inside its borders, using Hezbollah as a proxy, and thereby perpetuating a conflict that sabotaged the chances for bringing peace to the area.

By a 3 March letter to the Secretary-General [A/54/783-S/2000/184], Burkina Faso, as Chairman of the Islamic Group, submitted the text of a statement adopted by the Group at its meeting concerning the Israeli attacks against Lebanon (New York, 3 March). The Group expressed grave concern over the attacks, reiterated its solidarity with the Government and people of Lebanon in their struggle for the liberation of the southern part of their country and the Western Bekaa, and reaffirmed Lebanon's right to resist the occupation in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and its relevant resolutions and international law and norms.

Israel's withdrawal from Lebanon

On 6 April [S/2000/294], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his meeting in Geneva on 4 April with David Levy, Foreign Minister of Israel, who reaffirmed his Government's decision to withdraw Israeli troops from southern Lebanon in accordance with Council resolution 425(1978) [YUN 1978, p. 312], fully and without conditions. The withdrawal would be implemented in a continuous operation, "in one go", by the end of July 2000 and Israel would cooperate fully with the United Nations throughout the process. The Secretary-General stressed that cooperation by all parties concerned would be needed in order to avoid any deterioration of the situation during the withdrawal.

On 17 April [S/2000/322], the Secretary-General transmitted to the President of the Security Council the formal notification by Foreign Minister Levy of Israel's decision to withdraw its forces from Lebanon by July 2000. The Secretary-General initiated preparations to enable the United Nations to carry out its responsibilities under Council resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) [YUN 1978, p. 312]. He also intended to consult with the parties and interested Member States, including those contributing troops to UNIFIL. Towards that end, he requested his Special Envoy, Terje Roed-Larsen, to travel to the region for consultations.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 20 April [meeting 4131], the President of the Security Council made statement S/PRST/2000/13 on behalf of the Council members:

The Security Council welcomes the letter from the Secretary-General to its President dated 6 April and the letter dated 17 April 2000, which includes notification of the decision of the Government of Israel, as stated in the letter also dated 17 April 2000 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Israel to the Secretary-General, to withdraw its forces present in Lebanon in full accordance with resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978 and its intention to cooperate fully with the United Nations in the implementation of its decision.

The Council endorses the decision of the Secretary-General to initiate preparations to enable the United Nations to carry out its responsibilities under resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978), as described in his letter dated 17 April 2000.

The Council shares the view expressed by the Secretary-General in his letter dated 6 April 2000 that cooperation by all parties concerned will be required in order to avoid a deterioration of the situation. It welcomes his decision to send his Special Envoy to the region as soon as practicable and encourages all parties to cooperate fully in the complete implementation of resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978).

The Council looks forward to the Secretary-General reporting back as soon as possible on relevant developments, including the outcome of the consultations with the parties and all interested Member States and those contributing troops to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, and his conclusions and recommendations regarding the plans and requirements for implementation of resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions.

The Council stresses the importance of, and the need for, achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, based on all relevant Council resolutions, including resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973.

Report of Secretary-General (May). In May [S/2000/460], the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report on his conclusions and recommendations regarding the plans and requirements for the implementation of resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions. The Special Envoy, together with the UNIFIL Commander and a team of experts, travelled to the region from 26 April to 9 May and reviewed with the Governments of Israel and Lebanon and other concerned Member States in the region, including Egypt, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic, the requirements established under those resolutions for their full implementation.

The Secretary-General said that for the practical purpose of confirming the Israeli withdrawal, the United Nations needed to identify a line to be adopted conforming to the internationally recognized boundaries of Lebanon based on the best available cartographic material. The United Nations stressed in its consultations with all parties that it was not seeking to establish an international border, as that was a matter for States to undertake in accordance with international law and practice. Rather, it was requesting the help of the parties and others in the purely technical exercise of identifying a line for the purpose of confirming compliance with resolution 425(1978).

The international boundary between Israel and Lebanon was established pursuant to the 1923 Agreement between France and the United Kingdom entitled "Boundary Line between Syria and Palestine from the Mediterranean to El Hamme". Concerning the portion of Lebanon's border that it shared with the Syrian Arab Republic relevant to the Israeli withdrawal, there seemed to be no official record of a formal international boundary agreement between Lebanon and Syria that could easily establish the demarcation line. On 4 May, Lebanon informed the Secretary-General's Special Envoy that certain farmlands in the Shab'a area located outside UNIFIL's zone of operation as defined since 1978 would be claimed by Lebanon in the context of Israel's withdrawal. Lebanon subsequently provided the United Nations with title deeds of Lebanese ownership of farmlands in that area, as well as with documentation that indicated that Lebanese governmental and religious institutions had enjoyed, at various points in time, jurisdiction over those farmlands. Lebanon also informed the United Nations of a joint understanding between Lebanon and Syria that the farmlands were Lebanese. In May, the United Nations received documentation and a map, dated 1966, from the Lebanese Government [A/54/870-S/2000/443 & Add.1,2], which reflected Lebanon's position that those farmlands were located inside its territory. However, the United Nations possessed 10 other maps issued after 1966 by various Lebanese government institutions that placed the farmlands inside Syrian territory. On the basis of the 1974 Agreement on Disengagement between Israeli and Syrian forces of and its Protocol concerning UNDOF [YUN 1974, p. 198], the Shab'a farmlands fell within the scope of UNDOF's area of operations. It followed that in adopting resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978), the Security Council could not have included as part of UNIFIL's area of operations a zone that had already formed part of UNDOF's area of operations. It was worth noting that, notwithstanding the conflicting evidence, those farmlands were in the area occupied by Israel since 1967 and were therefore subject to resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) calling for an Israeli withdrawal from occupied territory.

In the light of all the documents in UN possession, the Secretary-General recommended that a viable solution, which was without prejudice to the positions of Lebanon and Syria concerning their international boundaries, would be to proceed on the basis of the line separating the areas of operation of UNIFIL and UNDOF along the relevant portions of the Lebanese-Syrian boundary. The adoption of that line by the United Nations for the practical purpose of confirming the Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon was without prejudice to any internationally recognized border agreement that Lebanon and Syria might wish to conclude in the future, stressed the Secretary-General. The UNIFIL-UNDOF line coincided with the border line most commonly found on maps issued by the Government of Lebanon and had also been accepted by Lebanon for 22 years in the context of the UNIFIL area of operations. In addition, that same line was approved by Israel and Syria in their 1974 Disengagement Agreement and had thus defined the UNDOF area of operations for 26 years. Finally, that line would not prejudice the existing areas of operation of UNIFIL and UNDOF as approved by the Council.

The Secretary-General defined the main requirements that Israel would have to meet in order for the United Nations to confirm that the Israeli withdrawal had been completed in full compliance with relevant Council resolutions. They included the withdrawal of Israel's military and civilian personnel from Lebanon; the dismantling by Israel of the South Lebanon Army (SLA) command structure, the cessation of logistical support and supplies from Israel to SLA and the removal of its heavy weapons; and the handing over of prisoners in Al-Khiam detention centre. The full cooperation of Israel would also be required in identifying the withdrawal line.

From Lebanon, the Secretary-General requested full cooperation in the process of identifying, on the ground, the line to be used for the purpose of confirming the Israeli withdrawal. The return of effective Lebanese authority over the area would require decisive action by the Government of Lebanon to resume public services, as well as law and order functions, in order to resume its responsibility for providing for security and safety throughout the area. From Syria, the United Nations would require full cooperation on all relevant matters, including in identifying on the ground that portion of the Lebanese-Syrian boundary necessary to confirm the withdrawal. Lebanese and other armed groups in Lebanon, and Member States having influence over them, had to provide their cooperation and support to UNIFIL. The Secretary-General emphasized that before, during and after the withdrawal, all interested parties should exercise maximum restraint both in their actions and in their public statements. In that connection, the security of UN personnel was a central concern.

For the purpose of confirming the withdrawal, UNIFIL would dispatch verification teams protected by infantry detachments in armoured vehicles and supported by helicopters. The teams would also be accompanied by engineers to deal with unexploded ordnance and mines in the area. The Secretary-General welcomed the commitment given by Israel to provide detailed information on the location of mines. The verification teams would move throughout the area to confirm whether the positions held by Israeli forces and SLA had been vacated and whether Israel had withdrawn its military forces and civilians from Lebanon.

Before the reinforcement and redeployment of UNIFIL, the Secretary-General would confirm to the Council that a full Israeli withdrawal had taken place in fulfilment of the relevant resolutions. Following the redeployment, UNIFIL's area of operations would include the area between the eastern and western parts of its current area of deployment and the stretch of land along the international boundary. UNIFIL would use its best efforts to help prevent recurrence of fighting and to create conditions for the restoration of effective Lebanese authority in that area. As soon as the United Nations had confirmed that the Israeli withdrawal had been completed, the Government of Lebanon should resume the normal responsibilities of a State throughout the area. The Government had informed the United Nations that it would re-establish local civilian administration functions, which would include the assumption of law and order responsibilities through the re-establishment of civilian police forces. The United Nations could not assume law and order functions that were properly the responsibility of the Government. The Lebanese armed forces had to ensure that all national territory fell under the effective authority of the Government. With those actions taken, UNIFIL would complete its mission in Lebanon, said the Secretary-General. The Government of Lebanon had assured the United Nations that in re-establishing its authority in the area previously controlled by Israel and SLA, it would treat the inhabitants of the formerly occupied zone as equal citizens of Lebanon, in accordance with Lebanese law and in respect for the principles of the rule of law and international human rights standards. The Lebanese Government, together with UNDP, had developed a plan for the reconstruction of southern Lebanon. The United Nations would give its full support to that plan and called on donor countries to help Lebanon through the provision of necessary financial and technical assistance. The Secretary-General envisaged an increase in the civilian staff of UNIFIL to facilitate that work.

In order to carry out its responsibilities under resolution 425(1978) and taking into account the additional territory that UNIFIL would have to cover following the Israeli withdrawal, UNIFIL would require phased reinforcement. To enable the Force to carry out its tasks related to confirmation of Israeli withdrawal, the existing six infantry battalions were being increased and provided with additional armoured personnel carriers. UNIFIL would also require two additional helicopters with their crews and a number of engineer detachments specialized in explosive ordnance disposal, mine reconnaissance and mine-clearing operations. Additional logistics capability would also be required to support that increase. The total troop strength for carrying out the tasks related to confirming the withdrawal would thus increase from the current level of 4,513 to approximately 5,600. Once the withdrawal was confirmed and if the security situation permitted, UNIFIL would have to be immediately reinforced with two mechanized infantry battalions, and the engineer component of the Force would have to be increased to regimental level. Monitoring equipment, including that for airspace and territorial waters, would also be required at that time. With those reinforcements, the strength of UNIFIL would be brought to a total of eight battalions plus appropriate support units, or approximately 7,935 peacekeepers. Owing to constraints of time, the troop reinforcements would be required to possess a high degree of self-sufficiency and the capability to deploy to the mission area using their own national assets.

The Secretary-General said that if the Council agreed with his recommendations, the Special Envoy and his team would then return to the region to pursue the implementation of the plan outlined in his report.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 23 May [meeting 4146], the President of the Council made statement S/PRST/2000/18 on behalf of the Council members:

The Security Council welcomes and strongly endorses the report of the Secretary-General of 22 May 2000. The Council stresses again the importance of, and the need for, achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, based on all its relevant resolutions, including resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973.

The Council welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to enable the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon to confirm that a complete withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanon has taken place in compliance with resolution 425(1978), and to take all necessary steps in order to deal with any eventuality, bearing in mind that the cooperation of all parties will be essential. The Council welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to report on the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanon, in accordance with resolution 425(1978).

The Council fully endorses the requirements put forward by the Secretary-General for confirming the compliance of all parties concerned with resolution 425(1978), calls upon all parties concerned to cooperate fully in implementing the recommendations of the Secretary-General, and requests the Secretary-General to report on their fulfilment of the requirements when he reports on the withdrawal.

The Council calls upon the States and other parties concerned to exercise utmost restraint and to cooperate with the Force and the United Nations to ensure the full implementation of resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978). The Council shares the view of the Secretary-General that it is crucial that the States and other parties concerned do their part to calm the situation, ensure the safety of the civilian population, and cooperate fully with the United Nations in its efforts to stabilize the situation, restore international peace and security, and assist the Government of Lebanon in ensuring the return of its effective authority in the area following confirmation of withdrawal.

The Council welcomes the decision of the Secretary-General to send his Special Envoy back to the region immediately to ensure that the requirements put forward by the Secretary-General are met and to ensure the commitment of all the parties concerned to cooperate fully with the United Nations in the complete implementation of resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978).

The Council takes this opportunity to express its appreciation and its full support for the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General, his Special Envoy to the region and his staff. It commends the troops of the Force and troop-contributing countries for their commitment to the cause of international peace and security under difficult circumstances. The Council stresses its concern that all the parties concerned cooperate with the United Nations, and recalls the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994.

Communications (22 May–19 June). On 22 May [A/54/880-S/2000/465], Lebanon informed the Secretary-General that Israeli helicopters and tanks had opened fire on Lebanese civilians who were returning to inspect their homes after the withdrawal of Israeli forces from certain villages in south Lebanon. Preliminary reports indicated that six persons were killed and 22 injured.

Responding on 31 May [A/54/890-S/2000/512], Israel said that IDF had completed the withdrawal from southern Lebanon swiftly and with maximum restraint, despite efforts by terrorists to provoke a confrontation. The only instances in which force was used occurred when lives were at risk, and even then in a manner designed to avoid further casualties. Israel called on Lebanon to fulfil its responsibility of ensuring peace and security within its borders.

On 9 June [A/54/914-S/2000/564], the President of Lebanon, Émile Lahoud, drew the Secretary-General's attention to a number of issues pertaining to the UN delimitation of the boundary lines between Lebanon and Israel, as well as between Lebanon and Syria. In particular, President Lahoud said that some discrepancies had emerged between the boundary lines defined in the Secretary-General's 22 May report and statements made by UN representatives during meetings with Lebanese authorities. In addition, President Lahoud called for the immediate release of Lebanese detainees held in Israeli prisons and raised the issue of the diversion of water from Lebanese territory.

On 14 June [S/2000/598], the Secretary-General informed the President of the Security Council that Ukraine had offered an engineering battalion and Sweden a unit specialized in the destruction of explosives and ammunition as part of the reinforcements needed by UNIFIL to perform its functions after the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanon. He proposed that Ukraine and Sweden be added to the list of States providing contingents to UNIFIL. On 19 June [S/2000/599], the Council took note of the Secretary-General's proposal.

Report of Secretary-General (June). In a June report [S/2000/590 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that Israel had met the requirements defined in his report of 22 May and, therefore, he confirmed that Israeli forces had withdrawn from Lebanon as at 16 June, in compliance with resolution 425(1978).

On the return of the Secretary-General's Special Envoy and his team to Lebanon on 24 May, the question of translating the boundary line identified by the United Nations from a map to a line on the ground was discussed with the parties. Notwithstanding reservations of both Israel and Lebanon about the withdrawal line, both countries confirmed that identifying that line was solely the responsibility of the United Nations and that they would respect it. On 16 June, UNIFIL confirmed that Israeli forces had withdrawn; that SLA was disbanded, and thus supply lines no longer existed; Israel's heavy weapons were removed or destroyed or were in the hands of the Lebanese Government; and detainees were no longer held at the Al-Khiam prison, which was opened by the local inhabitants on 22 May. The Lebanese Government cooperated with the United Nations in the implementation of the report of 22 May and had moved quickly to re-establish its effective authority in the area through the deployment of security forces; no acts of vengeance against the inhabitants of southern Lebanon were reported by UNIFIL following the withdrawal of Israeli forces. On 12 June, Lebanon informed the United Nations that it would send a composite unit composed of army and internal security personnel to be based in Marjayoun. Although the Government had not yet deployed the armed forces throughout southern Lebanon, it had stated that it would consider doing so as soon as the Secretary-General had confirmed Israel's withdrawal. The Syrian Government was very cooperative throughout the latest mission of the Special Envoy, as were other interested Member States in the region and elsewhere.

The Secretary-General described the military and security situation in the former Israeli-controlled area as calm and relatively stable, despite a number of shooting incidents. The Lebanese authorities had restricted passage to the border in order to avoid further incidents. The presence of armed elements was steadily decreasing throughout the region and their checkpoints were being removed. UNIFIL maintained a visible presence by means of proactive patrolling, which had a very useful and calming effect on the security situation, and it provided humanitarian assistance throughout the area.

The Secretary-General said that the first phase of UNIFIL's reinforcement was currently under way; he expected that the Force would reach the level of 5,600 troops in early July. However, he stressed that no firm commitments had been made for the further reinforcement with two mechanized infantry battalions, as requested in his 22 May report, and, therefore, he was not in a position to state when they would be available and deployed. In the meantime, UNIFIL would use its available resources to extend its deployment in those areas that it did not cover. To that end, the Force would establish patrol bases in a number of locations, set up temporary observation posts as appropriate and undertake active patrolling throughout those areas, as well as continue to provide humanitarian assistance to the local population. UNIFIL would use its best efforts to help prevent the recurrence of fighting and to create the conditions for the restoration of effective Lebanese authority in that area.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 18 June [meeting 4160], the President of the Council made statement S/PRST/2000/21 on behalf of the Council members:

The Security Council welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 16 June 2000 and endorses the work done by the United Nations as mandated by the Council, as well as the conclusion of the Secretary-General that, as of 16 June 2000, Israel has withdrawn its forces from Lebanon in accordance with resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978 and met the requirements defined in the report of the Secretary-General of 22 May 2000. In this regard, the Council notes that Israel and Lebanon have confirmed to the Secretary-General, as stated in his report of 16 June 2000, that identifying the withdrawal line was solely the responsibility of the United Nations and that they would respect the line as identified. It notes with serious concern reports of violations that have occurred since 16 June 2000 and calls upon the parties to respect the line identified by the United Nations.

The Council welcomes the steps already taken by the parties to implement the recommendations of the Secretary-General contained in his report of 22 May 2000.

The Council calls upon all parties concerned to continue to cooperate fully with the United Nations and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and to exercise utmost restraint. The Council re-emphasizes the need for strict respect for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries.

The Council, recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, calls upon the Government of Lebanon to ensure the restoration of its effective authority and presence in the south. The Council notes that the United Nations cannot assume law and order functions, which are properly the responsibility of the Government of Lebanon. In this regard, the Council welcomes the first steps taken by the Government of Lebanon and calls upon it to proceed with the deployment of the Lebanese Armed Forces as soon as possible, with the assistance of the Force, in the Lebanese territory recently vacated by Israel.

The Council welcomes the measures taken by the Secretary-General and the troop-contributing countries relating to augmentation of the Force, in accordance with paragraph 32 of the report of the Secretary-General of 22 May 2000. The Council stresses that the redeployment of the Force should be conducted in coordination with the Government of Lebanon and with the Lebanese Armed Forces, as stated in paragraph 21 of the report of the Secretary-General of 16 June 2000. In that context, the Council invites the Secretary-General to report back on the measures taken to that effect and those taken by the Government of Lebanon to restore its effective authority in the area, in accordance with resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978). The Council looks forward to the completion of the mandate of the Force and will review, by 31 July 2000, the need to extend its present mandate, taking into account the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978), including the actions taken by the Government of Lebanon to restore its effective authority in the area.

The Council expresses its appreciation and full support for the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General, his Special Envoy to the region, the Chief Cartographer, and their staff. It commends the troops of the Force and the troop-contributing countries for their commitment to the cause of international peace and security under difficult circumstances. The Council calls upon all parties concerned to continue to cooperate with the United Nations, and reiterates the relevant principles contained in the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994.

The Council stresses again the importance of, and the need for, achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, based on all its relevant resolutions, including resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973.

Communications (24 June–31 December). On 24 June [A/54/927-S/2000/624], Lebanon said that Israeli troops had opened fire that day on a Jordanian trade union delegation that was visiting the Lebanese border, wounding four of its members.

Responding on 29 June [A/54/931-S/2000/638], Israel said that Lebanon had refused to fulfil its responsibilities under resolution 425(1978) and to establish its effective authority in southern Lebanon. As a result, the area was witnessing an escalating wave of violence on the Lebanese side of the border, directed against Israel. On 24 June, when dozens of Lebanese hurled stones and objects at passing Israelis and two individuals from the Lebanese side actually infiltrated into Israel, Israeli soldiers were faced with no alternative but to use force to stop the intruders. Israel called on the Lebanese Government to take all necessary steps to prevent the continued flare-ups, infiltrations and provocations.

In a series of communications between 6 July and 23 October [A/54/936-S/2000/661, A/54/939-S/2000/689, A/54/957-S/2000/769, S/2000/805, S/2000/1002, S/2000/1011], Israel detailed Lebanese territorial encroachments on Israeli territory, as well as hostile acts committed from the Lebanese side of the border against Israelis. The violations included the forced abduction of three Israeli soldiers and an Israeli businessman.

Responding on 24 October [S/2000/1020] to Israel's 7 October letter [S/2000/969] stating that Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic were directly responsible for acts of aggression at the border between Israel and Lebanon, Syria said that it held Israel directly responsible for the escalation of the situation in the Middle East. It cited Israel's persistence in ignoring the resolutions of international legitimacy, its failure to complete its withdrawal from south Lebanon, including the Shab'a farmlands, and its continued occupation of Arab lands seized in June 1967.

In a series of communications between 2 and 26 November [S/2000/1066, S/2000/1071, S/2000/1087, S/2000/1102, S/2000/1118], Lebanon transmitted details of Israeli violations of Lebanese territorial boundaries. In addition, Lebanon said that on 26 November the Israeli army fired 90 artillery shells on the Kfar Shuba area and carried out an aerial attack on the hills in the same region.

In two separate letters [S/2000/1121, S/2000/1145], Israel responded to the Lebanese allegations. In particular, it noted that on 26 November a roadside charge was detonated against an Israeli patrol by terrorists who had infiltrated from Lebanon, killing an Israeli soldier and wounding two others.

On 31 December [S/2001/1], Lebanon said that on 30 December an Israeli patrol opened fire and killed a Lebanese citizen inside Lebanon's territory.

UNIFIL

The Security Council twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon in 2000, in January and July, each time for a six-month period.

UNIFIL, which was established by Council resolution 425(1978) following Israel's invasion of Lebanon [YUN 1978, p. 296], was originally entrusted with confirming the withdrawal of Israeli forces, restoring international peace and security, and assisting the Lebanese Government in ensuring the return of its effective authority in southern Lebanon. Following a second Israeli invasion in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 428], the Council, in resolution 511(1982) [ibid., p. 450], authorized the Force to carry out, in addition to its original mandate, the interim task of providing protection and humanitarian assistance to the local population, while maintaining its positions in the area of deployment.

The Force headquarters, based predominantly in Naqoura, provided command and control, as well as liaison with Lebanon and Israel, UNDOF, UNTSO and a number of NGOs.

Composition and deployment

As at 30 December 2000, UNIFIL comprised 5,800 troops from Fiji (594), Finland (645), France (254), Ghana (787), India (791), Ireland (609), Italy (68), Nepal (723), Poland (633) and Ukraine (650). The Swedish component (45) left on 27 December, as planned. The Force was assisted in its task by 51 military observers of UNTSO. In addition, UNIFIL employed 480 civilian staff, of whom 130 were recruited internationally and 350 locally. Major-General Seth Kofi Obeng (Ghana) continued as Force Commander.

Since the establishment of UNIFIL, 235 members of the Force had lost their lives: 78 as a result of firings or bomb explosions, 99 in accidents and 58 from other causes. A total of 344 were wounded by shooting or by mine or bomb explosions.

Activities

Report of Secretary-General (January). In a report on developments from 16 July 1999 to 15 January 2000 in the UNIFIL area of operations [S/2000/28], the Secretary-General said that fighting continued in southern Lebanon and the situation remained volatile, although the level of hostility was somewhat reduced and civilian casualties decreased. Negotiations between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic, as brokered by the United States, had resumed. He reaffirmed his belief that UNIFIL's contribution to stability and the protection it provided to the population of the area remained important. Therefore, he recommended that the Force's mandate be extended for another six months, until 31 July 2000, as requested by Lebanon on 28 December 1999 [S/1999/1284].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 31 January [meeting 4095], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1288(2000). The draft text [S/2000/57] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned with the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Council thereon.

At the same meeting, the Council President made statement S/PRST/2000/3 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has noted with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General of 17 January 2000 on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, submitted in conformity with resolution 1254(1999) of 30 July 1999.

The Council reaffirms its commitment to the full sovereignty, political independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries. In this context, the Council asserts that all States shall refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations.

As the Council extends the mandate of the Force for a further interim period on the basis of resolution 425(1978), the Council again stresses the urgent need for the implementation of that resolution in all its respects. It reiterates its full support for the Taif Agreement of 22 October 1989 and for the continued efforts of the Lebanese Government to consolidate peace, national unity and security in the country, while successfully carrying out the reconstruction process. The Council commends the Lebanese Government for its successful effort to extend its authority in the south of the country in full coordination with the Force.

The Council expresses its concern over the continuing violence in southern Lebanon, regrets the loss of civilian life, and urges all parties to exercise restraint.

The Council takes this opportunity to express its appreciation for the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General and his staff in this regard. The Council notes with deep concern the high level of casualties the Force has suffered and pays a special tribute to all those who gave their lives while serving in the Force. It commends the troops of the Force and troop-contributing countries for their sacrifices and commitment to the cause of international peace and security under difficult circumstances.

Report of Secretary-General (July). In a report on developments from 17 January to 17 July [S/2000/718], the Secretary-General said that after more than two decades the guns had fallen silent in southern Lebanon. The Israeli forces had left the area, their local Lebanese auxiliary had been disbanded and the risks inherent in such a withdrawal did not, for the most part, materialize. He noted, in particular, that the fighters of the Lebanese resistance conducted themselves in a controlled manner that deserved to be acknowledged; no acts of vengeance had taken place as they reclaimed the region vacated by the Israeli forces. The Lebanese authorities had assured his Special Envoy that those who cooperated with Israel during the years they lived under its control would be treated in accordance with the rule of law. Both sides, despite their misgivings, had undertaken to respect the line of withdrawal identified by the United Nations on the ground.

From 17 to 23 June, the Secretary-General visited the Middle East, including Egypt, Iran, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic. He also visited Morocco, where he met King Mohammed V of Morocco and Crown Prince Abdullah of Saudi Arabia. The implementation of resolution 425(1978) was the principal topic of discussion at those meetings.

Following the verification of the Israeli withdrawal, UNIFIL confirmed a number of violations pertaining to the crossing of the withdrawal line by Israeli forces. Lebanon stated that it would consent to UNIFIL deployment in the vacated areas only after the Israeli violations had been corrected. For its part, Israel had committed itself to the removal of all Israeli violations by the end of July. At the time of reporting, Israeli authorities had corrected all but two of the violations identified by UNIFIL.

Since the end of May, the situation in the area of operation had remained generally calm. Signs of tensions had been reported between members of the militia groups Hezbollah and Amal over the elections that were to be held in Lebanon at the end of August or early September 2000. The Lebanese army, gendarmerie and police established checkpoints in the vacated area, controlling movement, maintaining law and order and retrieving heavy weapons abandoned by IDF and their Lebanese auxiliary. UNIFIL patrolled the area and, together with the Lebanese authorities, provided humanitarian assistance by supplying water, medical treatment and food to needy families.

The situation had been calm along the withdrawal line, except for sporadic incidents. UNIFIL monitored that line for possible violations on a daily basis by means of ground and air patrols. The Force's liaison arrangements provided a constant link with IDF's Chief of Operations and the Director of Lebanese General Security, as well as with the normal chain of command on each side. Armed elements continued to maintain a presence in the area and on a number of occasions had not allowed UNIFIL patrols to continue. The Lebanese authorities had promised that such incidents would stop.

The reintegration of the relatively underdeveloped area vacated by Israel imposed a heavy burden on the Lebanese economy. UNDP had been leading the efforts of the UN system in working with the Lebanese authorities on a programme for the development and rehabilitation of the area, with emphasis on rebuilding infrastructure, loans to small enterprises, vocational training and reactivating the municipalities. Immediate needs included the provision of drinking water to villages that used to be supplied from Israel, the rehabilitation of medical services, electricity and sewage systems, housing and road networks. The clearing of mines and unexploded ordnance was an urgent task. IDF had provided UNIFIL with maps of mined areas known to them, but the majority remained unmarked. In June, the Force established a regional mine action co-ordination cell to conduct mine awareness educational activities.

The Secretary-General said that the first phase of UNIFIL's reinforcement, required to carry out its tasks under resolutions 425(1978) and 426 (1978), was under way. In June, UNIFIL's mine-clearance capacity was reinforced with two units from Sweden and Ukraine. In addition, an engineer battalion of 600 all ranks from Ukraine would arrive by the end of July. Finland was providing an additional 64 armoured personnel carriers, of which 42 had arrived in theatre. The units from Finland, Ghana, Ireland and Nepal had been reinforced; Fiji and India had also undertaken to reinforce their units. Two additional helicopters from Italy were expected to arrive by the end of July. The United Nations had yet to receive commitments for the additional two infantry battalions that would meet the requirements set by the Secretary-General in his May report (see p. 462), namely a high degree of self-sufficiency and the capability to deploy to the mission area using national assets. In the absence of those reinforcements, the Force Commander had devised a deployment plan using existing resources and reinforcements to cover the area vacated by IDF, through a combination of mobile patrols, patrol bases and temporary observation posts. Five Force members had lost their lives during the reporting period.

The Secretary-General planned to submit to the General Assembly, during its fifty-fifth (2000) regular session, the revised budget proposals for UNIFIL, since the Assembly's appropriation of $146.8 million gross for the Force's maintenance for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 (resolution 54/267 below) did not take into account the additional requirements needed by UNIFIL to carry out its responsibilities under resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978). In the interim, ACABQ had concurred with the use of the approved initial 12-month budget for the Force for the period from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 to meet the cost of the most immediate operational requirements. As at 30 June 2000, unpaid assessments to the Special Account for UNIFIL for the period from the inception of the Force to 30 June 2000 amounted to $117.8 million.

While an enormous improvement compared to the past, the situation in the Israel-Lebanon sector fell well short of peace and the potential for serious incidents persisted. The Secretary-General stressed that both sides should maintain effective liaison with UNIFIL and take prompt action to rectify any violations or incidents brought to their attention. Therefore, he recommended that the Force's mandate be extended for another six months, until 31 January 2001, as requested by Lebanon on 11 July [S/2000/674], on the understanding that UNIFIL would be enabled to deploy and function throughout its area of operation and that the Lebanese authorities would strengthen their own presence in the area by deploying additional troops and internal security forces. Since there was a good chance of achieving the objectives of resolution 425(1978) and for the Force to complete the tasks originally assigned to it, the Secretary-General planned to report to the Council at the end of October 2000 so that it might review developments and consider any steps it might wish to take, in the light of the progress achieved in the restoration of the effective authority of the Government of Lebanon in the area. In that regard, it was essential that the redeployment of UNIFIL be closely coordinated with the Lebanese forces. Member States were encouraged to cooperate with Lebanese authorities and UN agencies and programmes in support of the reconstruction and development of southern Lebanon. In addition, in order to help coordinate UN activities in the area, the Secretary-General planned to appoint a senior official as his personal representative for southern Lebanon, who would work closely with the Special Envoy.

Communication (24 July). By a 24 July letter [S/2000/731] to the President of the Security Council, the Secretary-General said that the Israeli authorities had removed all violations of the line of withdrawal. Further, in a meeting with the Special Envoy, Lebanon's President Lahoud and Prime Minister Salim Hoss gave their consent to the full deployment of UNIFIL. The Force's deployment would take place on 26 July and was to be immediately followed by the deployment of the composite Lebanese unit referred to in the Secretary-General's June report (see p. 465).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 27 July [meeting 4177], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1310(2000). The draft [S/2000/741] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

14. Stresses the importance of, and the need of achieving, a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, based on all relevant resolutions including its resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973.

Communications (4-8 August). On 4 August [S/2000/778], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Rolf G. Knutsson (Sweden) as his Personal Representative for Southern Lebanon. He would take up his assignment in Beirut as soon as possible for an initial period of six months. On 8 August [S/2000/779], the Council took note of the Secretary-General's decision.

Report of Secretary-General (October). In October [S/2000/1049], the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council an interim report on UNIFIL. He said that from the end of July until early October, the situation in the UNIFIL area of operations had remained calm, except for numerous minor violations of the line of withdrawal, the so-called Blue Line. Those violations were attributable mainly to Israeli construction of new military positions and fencing along the line; they were corrected in each case after intervention by UNIFIL. Minor Lebanese violations also took place. Two serious incidents occurred on 7 October. In the context of the tension in the occupied territories and Israel, about 500 Palestinians and supporters approached the line to demonstrate against Israel. As they attempted to cross the fence, Israeli troops opened fire, killing three and injuring 20. In the other incident, Hezbollah launched an attack across the Blue Line and took three Israeli soldiers prisoner. Hezbollah stated that its operation had been planned for some time in order to obtain the release of 19 Lebanese prisoners who were still held by Israel. The Secretary-General, who had been pursuing the question of those prisoners with the Israeli authorities, remained ready to work with the Governments of Israel and Lebanon with a view to resolving that matter.

Lebanese administrators, police, security and army personnel were carrying out their functions throughout the area and their presence and activities continued to grow. They re-established local administration in the villages and had made progress in reintegrating the communications, infrastructure, health and welfare systems with the rest of the country. In late August, the former Israeli-controlled area participated for the first time since 1972 in a parliamentary election. However, near the Blue Line the authorities had, in effect, left control to Hezbollah. Its members worked in civilian attire and were normally unarmed. They maintained good discipline and were under effective command and control. They monitored the Blue Line, maintained public order and, in some villages, provided social, medical and educational services. On several occasions, Hezbollah personnel restricted UNIFIL's freedom of movement. Two serious incidents took place in October when Hezbollah forced UNIFIL personnel at gunpoint to hand over vehicles and military hardware they had found on the terrain. Lebanon had taken the position that, so long as there was no comprehensive peace with Israel, the army would not act as a border guard for Israel and would not be deployed to the border.

UNIFIL monitored the area through ground and air patrols and a network of observation posts. It acted to correct violations by raising them with the side concerned and used its best efforts, through continuous, close liaison with both sides, to prevent friction and limit incidents. By early August, the Force had redeployed southwards and up to the Blue Line. The redeployment proceeded smoothly, and the Lebanese authorities assisted in securing land and premises for new positions. In order to free the capacity needed for the move south, UNIFIL vacated an area in the rear and handed it over to the Lebanese authorities. However, UNIFIL had not been able to persuade the Lebanese authorities to assume their full responsibilities along the Blue Line. UNIFIL also assisted in demining activities and set up an information management system for mine action. In Tyre, Lebanon, a regional mine action cell was established with the help of the United Nations Mine Action Service, which cooperated closely with the Lebanese national demining office.

UNDP continued to lead the efforts of the UN system in working with the Lebanese Government on a plan of action for the development and rehabilitation of the area vacated by Israel. In that regard, UNDP cooperated closely with the UN Special Coordinator, who led the efforts at the international level with the EU and the World Bank, and with the Secretary-General's Personal Representative. On 27 and 28 September, UNDP organized in Beirut a conference of NGOs, funded by the Italian Government.

The Secretary-General observed that, while much remained to be done to restore the full range of government services to a standard comparable to that in the rest of Lebanon, there had been tangible progress in that direction. The sequence of steps foreseen in resolution 425(1978) was clear and logical: the Israeli forces had to withdraw, there had to be no further hostilities, and the effective authority of the Lebanese Government had to be restored. Thereafter, Israel and Lebanon were to be fully responsible for preventing any hostile acts from their respective territory against that of their neighbour.

The Secretary-General believed that the time had come to establish the state of affairs envisaged in the resolution. That required, first and foremost, that the Lebanese Government should take effective control of the whole area vacated by Israel and assume its full international responsibilities, including putting an end to the dangerous provocations that had continued on the Blue Line. The Secretary-General had discussed those matters with the President and Prime Minister of Lebanon during his visit to Beirut in June. He had also discussed Lebanon's need for international assistance to address long-standing problems, in particular the reintegration of the area that had been occupied by Israel. He appealed to donors to help Lebanon meet urgent needs for relief and economic revival in the south, pending the holding of a full-fledged donor conference. The Secretary-General added that his interim report was being written at a time of high tension in Arab-Israeli relations and continuing confrontations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Under the circumstances, he deemed it prudent not to submit suggestions for the reconfiguration of the UN presence in south Lebanon, as re-requested by resolution 1310(2000). He proposed to address that subject in the report to be submitted prior to the expiration of UNIFIL's mandate.

Further developments

In a report on developments during the second half of 2000 [S/2001/66], the Secretary-General noted that the general situation in south Lebanon had remained calm and orderly and minor violations had been quickly corrected. However, reckless behaviour by Lebanese demonstrators on the Blue Line continued, drawing at times an overly harsh response from Israeli soldiers. The greatest cause of concern, however, were the attacks across the Blue Line in the Shab'a farms area, which were deliberate acts in direct breach of the Security Council's decisions. In November, Lebanon asserted that the Blue Line was not valid in the Shab'a farms area, which had been left outside the Blue Line, and claimed the right to use every means, including force, against the Israeli forces occupying it.

The overall security situation in UNIFIL's area of operation had remained good and showed further improvement since October. Those residents who had left the area during the Israeli occupation continued to return, and members of the former de facto forces and their families, about 1,600 in all, had returned to Lebanon. As before, the Lebanese army and security forces did not operate close to the Blue Line, where control was left to Hezbollah. UNIFIL continued to assist the civilian population in the form of medical care, water projects, equipment or services for schools and orphanages, and supplies of social services to the needy. The large number of mines and unexploded ordnance remained a matter of concern. Since July, a total of five persons had died and 26 were injured as a result of exploding mines and ordnance. UNDP continued its support to the Lebanese Council for Development and Reconstruction for a programme of socio-economic rehabilitation and development in southern Lebanon.

Communications (6 December). On 6 December [S/2000/1167], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Staffan de Mistura (Sweden) as his Personal Representative for Southern Lebanon, who would be succeeding Mr. Knutsson. On 8 December [S/2000/1168], the Council took note of the Secretary-General's decision.

Financing

Reports of Secretary-General and ACABQ (January-April). In a January report [A/54/708], the Secretary-General submitted the financial performance report of UNIFIL for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999. Expenditures for the period totalled $134,655,200 gross ($131,048,500 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $8,329,300 gross ($8,084,600 net), compared to the amount appropriated for the maintenance of UNIFIL by the General Assembly in resolution 52/237 [YUN 1998, p. 478]. The unencumbered balance was due largely to actual troop strength being lower than budgeted; a high vacancy rate for civilian staff caused by the temporary assignment of experienced UNIFIL international staff to assist in other peacekeeping missions; savings under purchase of vehicles because of better unit cost rates; and receipt of other vehicles, equipment and supplies from the UN Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy, and other peacekeeping missions, which reduced budgeted expenditures.

Also in January [A/54/724], the Secretary-General submitted the proposed budget for UNIFIL for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, in the amount of $139,547,600 gross ($135,721,900 net), inclusive of $180,000 of budgeted voluntary contributions.

The comments and recommendations of ACABQ were contained in an April report [A/54/841/Add.2].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/54/897], adopted resolution 54/267 by recorded vote (110-2) [agenda item 128 (b)].

10. Requests the Secretary-General to make the fullest possible use of facilities and equipment at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, in order to minimize the costs of procurement for the Force, and for this purpose requests the Secretary-General to speed up the implementation of the asset management system at all peacekeeping missions in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/1 A of 15 October 1997;

11. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 54/267:

In favour: Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Egypt, Estonia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gabon, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Morocco, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Tonga, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

The Assembly and the Committee each had adopted the first preambular paragraph and operative paragraphs 2, 3 and 14 by a single recorded vote of, respectively, 64 to 2, with 43 abstentions, and 59 to 2, with 40 abstentions.

Speaking before the vote in the Assembly, Israel said that it was forced to vote against the resolution because it singled out and faulted Israel unfairly and entirely for the April 1996 incident at Qana, Lebanon [YUN 1996, p. 429], which was initiated by a terrorist group using human shields. Moreover, Israel noted that it was the only time a draft resolution called for one particular party to pay damages for the property of UN peacekeepers as a result of a clash.

Speaking after the vote, Lebanon said that the resolution confirmed that it was the responsibility of the occupying State—Israel—to assume full responsibility for its acts of aggression against Lebanon, especially since the aggression was deliberate and directed against the United Nations.

Reports of Secretary-General and ACABQ (October). In a 13 October report [A/55/482], the Secretary-General submitted the revised budget of UNIFIL for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001, which amounted to $225,715,700 gross ($221,506,300 net), inclusive of budgeted voluntary contributions in kind amounting to $180,000. The new budget incorporated additional requirements for the expansion of the Force as proposed in the Secretary-General's May report (see p. 462).

The comments and recommendations of ACABQ were contained in a 24 October report [A/55/516].

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 55/180 A:

In favour: Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Myanmar, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Against: Israel, Marshall Islands, United States.

The Assembly and the Committee each had adopted the fourth preambular paragraph and operative paragraphs 2, 3 and 14 by a single recorded vote of, respectively, 85 to 3, with 47 abstentions, and 68 to 3, with 35 abstentions.

Speaking before the vote, Israel recalled the established practice that resolutions relating to budgetary questions were to be adopted by consensus. Due to the introduction of political elements in the resolution, that practice had been broken. The decision to place on Israel alone the burden of the cost of the damage resulting from the Qana incident was an unprecedented and one-sided initiative. Israel supported funding of UN peacekeeping operations but because of the fourth preambular paragraph and operative paragraphs 2, 3 and 14 it would vote against the draft resolution.

Speaking after the vote, Egypt, on behalf of the Arab Group, said that it supported the resolution because the sanctity of the principle of maintaining the security and safety of peacekeeping personnel was the cornerstone of the funding of peacekeeping operations. Any hesitation in the implementation of that principle would send the wrong message to States that violated UN resolutions and would allow them to circumvent their responsibility for the safety and security of UN peacekeeping personnel. The Arab Group expressed concern vis-à-vis Israel's disregard of the Secretary-General's letters, in which he sought reimbursement of the costs incurred as a result of Israel's attack on the UN compound in Qana. That sum had been recorded as a debit in UNIFIL's Special Account.

By decision 55/455 of 23 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of UNIFIL's financing at the resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session.

Syrian Arab Republic

In 2000, the General Assembly again called for Israel's withdrawal from the Golan Heights in the Syrian Arab Republic, which it had occupied since 1967. The area was effectively annexed by Israel when it extended its laws, jurisdiction and administration to the territory towards the end of 1981 [YUN 1981, p. 309].

Israeli policies and measures affecting the human rights of the population in the Golan Heights and other occupied territories were monitored by the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli Practices) and were the subject of resolutions adopted by the Commission on Human Rights (see PART TWO, Chapter III) and the Assembly.

Special Committee on Israeli Practices. In its annual report [A/55/453], the Committee on Israeli Practices stated that it had visited Damascus and the Quneitra province, which bordered the occupied area, where it received information from witnesses on the current situation in the Syrian Arab Golan. The Committee was informed that there had been no change in Israeli policy regarding the occupied Golan, that the number of settlers had increased and that existing settlements had been expanded during the period under review, though no new ones were established. The human rights situation also did not improve. Relations between the settlers and the Arab population of the occupied Golan were tense and often of a violent nature. The attention of the Committee was drawn to the fact that all settlers were armed, while the Arab inhabitants were not allowed to carry weapons.

The Committee received information on the widespread nature of the consequences of the occupation: the intention of the Israeli authorities to increase the number of settlers, persistent Judaization of life in the occupied Golan and falsification of history at the expense of the Arab population. The economic constraints exercised by Israel were reflected in the lack of equal employment opportunities, heavy taxes, fixed low prices imposed on apples, the main agricultural produce, arbitrary arrest and detention and inadequate health care. In addition, the uprooting of trees, burning of forests, chemical residue from Israeli factories and waste from settlements had caused environmental deterioration. Settlers competed with Syrians in economic terms in the area of agriculture, the principal activity of the Arab population. The competition was rendered more uneven by the restricted access of the Syrian inhabitants to water compared with the settlers.

The separation of families who lived on either side of the valley constituting the demarcation line remained one of the principal negative impacts of the Israeli occupation of the Syrian Golan. However, a positive development was the issuance by the Israeli authorities of permits for Syrians from the occupied Golan to travel to Jordan for five days to meet their family and relatives living in the Syrian Arab Republic. The Committee called on the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to establish a system of communication with the Israeli authorities with a view, among other things, to permit long-separated families in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and in the Syrian Golan to meet freely and often.

Reports of Secretary-General. On 4 August [A/55/265], the Secretary-General reported that no reply had been received from Israel to his July request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement General Assembly resolution 54/80 [YUN 1999, p. 451], which called on Israel to desist from changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the Golan, and from its repressive measures against the population.

By a 2 November report [A/55/538], the Secretary-General transmitted replies received from four Member States, including Israel, in response to his request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement Assembly resolutions 54/38 [YUN 1999, p. 450], which dealt with Israeli policies in the Syrian territory occupied since 1967, and 54/37 [YUN 1999, p. 409] on the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem (see p. 429).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 December [meeting 78], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/51 [draft: A/55/L.50 & Add.1] by recorded vote (96-2-55) [agenda item 40].

Stressing the illegality of the Israeli settlement construction and activities in the occupied Syrian Golan since 1967,

Noting with satisfaction the convening in Madrid on 30 October 1991 of the Peace Conference on the Middle East, on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967, 338(1973) of 22 Octo- ber 1973 and 425(1978) of 19 March 1978 and the formula of land for peace,

3. Reaffirms its determination that all relevant provisions of the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention of 1907, and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, continue to apply to the Syrian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, and calls upon the parties thereto to respect and ensure respect for their obligations under those instruments in all circumstances;

UNDOF

The mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, established by Security Council resolution 350(1974) [YUN 1974, p. 205] to supervise the observance of the ceasefire between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic in the Golan Heights area and ensuring the separation of their forces, was renewed twice in 2000, in May and November, each time for a six-month period.

UNDOF maintained an area of separation, which was some 80 kilometres long and varied in width between approximately 10 kilometres in the centre to less than 1 kilometre in the extreme south. The area of separation was inhabited and policed by the Syrian authorities, and no military forces other than UNDOF were permitted within it.

Composition and deployment

As at 30 October 2000, UNDOF comprised 1,039 troops from Austria (369), Canada (188), Japan (30), Poland (359) and Slovakia (93). It was assisted by 78 UNTSO military observers. Major-General Bo Wrangler (Sweden) became Force Commander on 14 August, taking over from Major-General Cameron Ross (Canada), who completed his tour of duty on 7 July. The Secretary-General informed the Security Council on 6 July [S/2000/664] of his intention to appoint General Wrangler; the Council took note of that intention on 10 July [S/2000/665]. The Force was entirely deployed within and close to the area of separation, with two base camps, 44 permanently manned positions and 11 observation posts. UNDOF's headquarters was located at Camp Faouar and an office was maintained in Damascus.

The Austrian battalion, which included a Slovak company, was deployed in the northern part of the area of separation, and the Polish battalion was deployed in the southern part. Both battalions conducted mine-clearing operations. The Canadian and Japanese logistic units, based in Camp Ziouani, with a detachment in Camp Faouar, performed second-line general transport tasks, rotation transport, control and management of goods received by the Force and maintenance of heavy equipment.

Activities

UNDOF continued in 2000 to supervise the area of separation between Israeli and Syrian troops in the Golan Heights, to ensure that no military forces of either party were deployed there, by means of fixed positions and patrols. The Force, accompanied by liaison officers from the party concerned, carried out fortnightly inspections of armament and force levels in the areas of limitation. As in the past, both sides denied inspection teams access to some of their positions and imposed some restrictions on the Force's freedom of movement.

UNDOF assisted the International Committee of the Red Cross with facilities for mail and the passage of persons through the area of separation. Within the means available, medical treatment was provided to the local population on request.

Reports of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on UNDOF activities between 16 November 1999 and 19 May 2000 [S/2000/459] and between 23 May and 21 November 2000 [S/2000/1103]. Both reports noted that UNDOF continued to perform its functions effectively, with the cooperation of the parties. In general, the ceasefire in the Israel-Syria sector was maintained without serious incident, and the UNDOF area of operation remained calm. Minefields, especially in the area of separation, continued to be a concern. In consultation with Syrian authorities, UNDOF instituted a minefield security and maintenance programme in the area of separation to identify and mark all minefields.

The Secretary-General observed that, despite the quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the Middle East continued to be potentially dangerous and was likely to remain so unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem could be reached. He hoped for determined efforts by all concerned to tackle the problem in all its aspects, with a view to arriving at a just and durable peace settlement, as called for by Council resolution 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213]. Stating that he considered the Force's continued presence in the area to be essential, the Secretary-General, with the agreement of both Syria and Israel, recommended that UNDOF's mandate be extended for a further six months, until 30 November 2000 in the first instance and 31 May 2001 in the second.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 May [meeting 4148], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1300(2000). The draft [S/2000/482] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Welcoming and encouraging efforts by the United Nations to sensitize peacekeeping personnel in the prevention and control of HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases,

Decides:

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the development in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

On 27 November [meeting 4235], the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1328(2000). The draft [S/2000/1124] was prepared during consultations.

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 17 November 2000 on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, and reaffirming Security Council resolution 1308(2000) of 17 July 2000,

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the development in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

After the adoption of each resolution, the President made statements S/PRST/2000/19 [meeting 4148] and S/PRST/2000/36 [meeting 4235] on behalf of the Council:

In connection with the resolution just adopted on the renewal of the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, I have been authorized to make the following complementary statement on behalf of the Security Council:

"As is known, the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force states, in paragraph 11: 'Despite the present quiet in the Israeli-Syrian sector, the situation in the Middle East continues to be potentially dangerous and is likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem can be reached.' That statement of the Secretary-General reflects the view of the Security Council."

Financing

Reports of Secretary-General and ACABQ.

On 14 January, the Secretary-General presented a report on UNDOF's financial performance for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 [A/54/707 & Corr.1]. On 1 February, he also submitted UNDOF's proposed budget for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001 [A/54/732], totalling $34,946,700 gross ($34,195,300 net), which reflected a 5.1 per cent increase in gross terms compared with the resources approved for the preceding 12 months.

ACABQ's comments and recommendations on the two reports were contained in an April report to the Assembly [A/54/841/Add.1].

Chapter VII

Disarmament

In 2000, differences among Member States persisted on various disarmament issues. The Conference on Disarmament remained unable to take any action on the agenda items during its 2000 session due to continuing disagreement on what would constitute a balanced programme of work, especially regarding nuclear disarmament and the prevention of an arms race in outer space. The Disarmament Commission, in view of its inability to achieve consensus between 1997 and 1999 on the agenda and objectives of a fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, considered in 2000 ways and means to achieve nuclear disarmament and practical confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms. On the positive side, the 2000 Review Conference of the Parties to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons broke new ground by identifying practical steps for the systematic pursuit of global nuclear disarmament. Those steps included the unequivocal commitment by nuclear-weapon States, for the first time, to the total elimination of their nuclear arsenals.

At the bilateral level, the Russian Federation ratified the 1993 Treaty with the United States on the Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START II) and its related 1997 agreements on anti-missile defence. During the year, the two parties held further discussions on START III and issues relating to the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty.

In May, the Secretary-General and the Executive Secretary of the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization signed an agreement to regulate the relationship between the two organizations, establishing a formal working relationship between them. Following a request of the majority of ratifying States party to the 1996 Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty, the Secretary-General decided to convene a second conference in 2001 to facilitate the Treaty's entry into force.

The Ad Hoc Group of the States Parties to the 1971 Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction continued efforts to strengthen the Convention through the development of a protocol on verification and confidence-building measures. The Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons continued efforts to achieve the objective and purpose of the 1993 Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction.

The Preparatory Committee for the 2001 UN Conference on the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects held its first session in February/March in New York, during which views on the work of the Conference were expressed at the national, subregional and regional levels. In March, the Security Council recognized that effective action to curb the illegal flow of small arms into areas of conflict could contribute to the success of disarmament. The United Nations Register of Conventional Arms and the standardized instrument of international reporting of military expenditures continued to contribute to building transparency in military matters.

Regarding anti-personnel mines, the Second Meeting of the States Parties to the 1997 Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction took place in September, and the States parties to the 1996 amended Protocol on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II) to the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects held their Second Annual Conference in December.

UN role in disarmament

UN machinery

Disarmament issues before the United Nations in 2000 were addressed mainly through the General Assembly and its First (Disarmament and International Security) Committee, the Disarmament Commission (a deliberative body) and the Conference on Disarmament (a multilateral negotiating forum which met in Geneva).

The Department for Disarmament Affairs (DDA) of the UN Secretariat continued to support the work of Member States and treaty bodies, to service the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters and to administer the UN disarmament fellowship programme.

On 23 December, the General Assembly decided that the item entitled "General and complete disarmament" would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458).

UN Millennium Assembly

The Secretary-General, in his March report to the Millennium Assembly [A/54/2000] (see p. 55), noted that small arms and light weapons and nuclear weapons were of special concern. Pointing out that there was still no global non-proliferation regime to limit the spread of small arms, he urged serious action by Member States to curtail the illicit traffic in those weapons. Regarding nuclear weapons, the Secretary-General proposed a major international conference that would help identify ways of eliminating them.

In August [A/54/959], the Secretariat transmitted the final document of the Millennium Forum (see p. 66), urging the United Nations and interested Governments to draft a proposal for global disarmament for discussion in a fourth special session of the General Assembly on disarmament, specifically aimed at, among other measures, abolishing nuclear weapons.

Fourth special session devoted to disarmament

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/54 U [YUN 1999, p. 457], the Secretary-General, in a July report with later addendum [A/55/130 & Add.1], presented the views of three Member States on the objectives, agenda and timing of the fourth special session of the Assembly devoted to disarmament.

The Assembly had decided, by resolution 51/45 C [YUN 1996, p. 447], to convene the special session in 1999, subject to the emergence of a consensus on its agenda and objectives.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/559], adopted resolution 55/33 M without vote [agenda item 73 (v)].

Convening of the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/75 I of 15 December 1994, 50/70 F of 12 December 1995, 51/45 C of 10 December 1996, 52/38 F of 9 December 1997, 53/77 AA of 4 December 1998 and 54/54 U of 1 December 1999,

Recalling also that, there being a consensus to do so in each case, three special sessions of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament were held in 1978, 1982 and 1988, respectively,

Bearing in mind the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, adopted by consensus at the first special session devoted to disarmament, which included the Declaration, the Programme of Action and the Machinery for disarmament,

Bearing in mind also the objective of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Taking note of paragraph 145 of the Final Document of the Twelfth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Durban, South Africa, from 29 August to 3 September 1998, which supported the convening of the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, which would offer an opportunity to review, from a perspective more in tune with the current international situation, the most critical aspects of the process of disarmament and to mobilize the international community and public opinion in favour of the elimination of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction and of the control and reduction of conventional weapons,

Taking note also of the report of the 1999 substantive session of the Disarmament Commission and of the fact that no consensus was reached on the item entitled "Fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament",

Desiring to build upon the substantive exchange of views on the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament during the 1999 substantive session of the Disarmament Commission,

Reiterating its conviction that a special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament can set the future course of action in the field of disarmament, arms control and related international security matters,

Emphasizing the importance of multilateralism in the process of disarmament, arms control and related international security matters,

Noting that, with the recent accomplishments made by the international community in the field of weapons of mass destruction as well as conventional arms, the following years would be opportune for the international community to start the process of reviewing the state of affairs in the entire field of disarmament and arms control in the post-cold-war era,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General regarding the views of States Members of the United Nations on the objectives, agenda and timing of the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament,

1. Decides, subject to the emergence of a consensus on its objectives and agenda, to convene the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of States Members of the United Nations on the objectives, agenda and timing of the special session and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Convening of the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament".

Disarmament Commission

The Disarmament Commission, composed of all UN Member States, held five plenary meetings in 2000 (New York, 26 June–7 July) [A/55/42] and organizational meetings on 15 February, 26 June and 1 December.

In 2000, the Commission considered ways and means to achieve nuclear disarmament (see p. 490), and practical confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms (see p. 523). The Commission adopted consensus texts on those topics following consideration of the items by its working groups.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/561], adopted resolution 55/35 C without vote [agenda item 75 (a)].

Report of the Disarmament Commission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Disarmament Commission,

Recalling its resolutions 47/54 A of 9 December 1992, 47/54 G of 8 April 1993, 48/77 A of 16 December 1993, 49/77 A of 15 December 1994, 50/72 D of 12 December 1995, 51/47 B of 10 December 1996, 52/40 B of 9 December 1997, 53/79 A of 4 December 1998 and 54/56 A of 1 December 1999,

Considering the role that the Disarmament Commission has been called upon to play and the contribution that it should make in examining and submitting recommendations on various problems in the field of disarmament and in the promotion of the implementation of the relevant decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session,

Bearing in mind its decision 52/492 of 8 September 1998,

1. Takes note of the report of the Disarmament Commission;

2. Reaffirms the importance of further enhancing dialogue and cooperation among the First Committee, the Disarmament Commission and the Conference on Disarmament;

3. Also reaffirms the role of the Disarmament Commission as the specialized, deliberative body within the United Nations multilateral disarmament machinery that allows for in-depth deliberations on specific disarmament issues, leading to the submission of concrete recommendations on those issues;

4. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue its work in accordance with its mandate, as set forth in paragraph 118 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and with paragraph 3 of Assembly resolution 37/78 H of 9 December 1982, and to that end to make every effort to achieve specific recommendations on the items of its agenda, taking into account the adopted "Ways and means to enhance the functioning of the Disarmament Commission";

5. Recommends that the Disarmament Commission, at its 2000 organizational session, adopt the following items for consideration at its 2001 substantive session:

(a) Ways and means to achieve nuclear disarmament;

(b) Practical confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms;

6. Requests the Disarmament Commission to meet for a period not exceeding three weeks during 2001 and to submit a substantive report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Disarmament Commission the annual report of the Conference on Disarmament, together with all the official records of the fifty-fifth session of the General Assembly relating to disarmament matters, and to render all assistance that the Commission may require for implementing the present resolution;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure the full provision to the Disarmament Commission and its subsidiary bodies of interpretation and translation facilities in the official languages and to assign, as a matter of priority, all the necessary resources and services, including verbatim records, to that end;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Report of the Disarmament Commission".

Conference on Disarmament

The Conference on Disarmament, a multilateral negotiating body, held a three-part session in Geneva in 2000 (17 January–24 March, 22 May–7 July and 7 August–22 September) [A/55/27].

The Conference considered the cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament; prevention of nuclear war; prevention of an arms race in outer space; effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons; new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons; a comprehensive programme of disarmament; and transparency in armaments.

During the session, successive Presidents of the Conference held intensive consultations with a view to reaching consensus on the programme of work, especially on nuclear disarmament and prevention of an arms race in outer space. At the end of their respective terms of office, two Presidents submitted proposals for the programme of work [CD/1620, CD/1624]. The second, by Celso Amorim (Brazil), which was widely recognized as a basis for further consultations, envisaged the establishment of ad hoc committees with non-negotiating mandates on both issues. In order to secure the agreement of States that had advocated negotiating mandates for either or both ad hoc committees, the Amorim proposal suggested that their establishment be accompanied by a presidential declaration, which, stressing the negotiating character of the Conference and the necessity of understanding the mandates and work of the subsidiary bodies in that light, left open the possibility of reconsidering the mandates of the ad hoc committees if developments in the international strategic scene affecting the security interests of Conference members warranted it.

While several States had submitted proposals, none of them achieved consensus. Thus, the Conference asked its President and the incoming President to hold consultations during the inter-session period and to make recommendations that could help work begin early in 2001.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/561], adopted resolution 55/35 B without vote [agenda item 75 (b)].

Report of the Conference on Disarmament

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament,

Convinced that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum of the international community, has the primary role in substantive negotiations on priority questions of disarmament,

Recognizing the need to conduct multilateral negotiations with the aim of reaching concrete agreements,

Recalling, in this respect, that the Conference has a number of urgent and important issues for negotiation,

1. Reaffirms the role of the Conference on Disarmament as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum of the international community;

2. Urges the Conference to fulfil that role in the light of the evolving international situation, with a view to making early substantive progress on priority items on its agenda;

3. Welcomes the strong collective interest of the Conference in commencing substantive work as soon as possible during its 2001 session;

4. Also welcomes the decision of the Conference to request its President to conduct jointly with the incoming President intensive consultations during the inter-session period in order to try to achieve this goal, as expressed in paragraph 35 of the report of the Conference;

5. Encourages the Conference to continue the ongoing review of its membership, agenda and methods of work;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure the provision to the Conference of adequate administrative, substantive and conference support services;

7. Requests the Conference to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Report of the Conference on Disarmament".

Nuclear disarmament

Non-Proliferation Treaty

In 2000, the number of States parties to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT), adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2373(XXII) [YUN 1968, p. 17], remained at 187. NPT entered into force on 5 March 1970.

NPT Review Conference

The 2000 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (New York, 24 April-19 May) [NPT/CONF.2000/28 (Parts I-III)] was held to review the Treaty's operation, as provided for in article VIII, paragraph 3, and taking into account the decisions of the 1995 Review and Extension Conference [YUN 1995, p. 189], which extended NPT indefinitely, strengthened its review process and provided for further review conferences at five-year intervals. Previous quinquennial review conferences had been held in 1975 [YUN 1975, p. 27], 1980 [YUN 1980, p. 51], 1985 [YUN 1985, p. 56], 1990 [YUN 1990, p. 50] and 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 189].

The Preparatory Committee for the 2000 Conference had met in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 478], 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 509] and 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 473].

States parties participating in the Conference numbered 158. Representatives of the United Nations and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) also participated, as well as a number of non-States parties, intergovernmental organizations and agencies, research institutes and non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

The Conference established three Main Committees, a Drafting Committee and a Credentials Committee. Substantive issues were discussed largely by the Main Committees, including a review of the implementation of the Treaty's provisions on nuclear non-proliferation, disarmament and international security, including the security of non-nuclear-weapon States; nuclear-weapon-free zones; nuclear safeguards; and the peaceful uses of nuclear energy.

On 19 May, the Conference adopted by consensus a Final Document, which reaffirmed the central role of NPT in ongoing global efforts to strengthen nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament, and reflected consensus language dealing with all major aspects of NPT. The Final Document incorporated a set of practical steps for efforts to implement article VI (cessation of the nuclear arms race and disarmament). The most significant of those steps was the unequivocal commitment by nuclear-weapon States, for the first time, to totally eliminate their nuclear arsenals.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/559], adopted resolution 55/33 D by recorded vote (163-1-3) [agenda item 73].

2000 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling the decision on strengthening the review process for the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons of the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty, in which it was agreed that Review Conferences should continue to be held every five years and that, accordingly, the next Review Conference should be held in the year 2000,

Recalling also its resolutions 50/70 Q of 12 December 1995 and 51/45 A of 10 December 1996,

Recalling further that the parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons met in New York from 24 April to 19 May 2000 to review the operation of the Treaty, as provided for in its article VIII, paragraph 3, taking into account the decisions and the resolution adopted by the 1995 Review and Extension Conference,

Welcomes the adoption by consensus on 19 May 2000 of the Final Document of the 2000 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, including in particular the documents entitled "Review of the operation of the Treaty, taking into account the decisions and the resolution adopted by the 1995 Review and Extension Conference" and "Improving the effectiveness of the strengthened review process for the Treaty".

Against: India.

Abstaining: Cuba, Israel, Pakistan.

Conference on Disarmament

In 2000, disagreements over the mandate of a potential subsidiary body to deal with nuclear disarmament prevented the Conference on Disarmament from undertaking any substantive work on that issue, despite possible compromises put forward by two Presidents of the Conference (see p. 485).

Progress was also blocked because some States of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries insisted on linking nuclear disarmament to the negotiation of a treaty for the prohibition of the production of fissile material for military purposes and the prevention of an arms race in outer space, to which other delegations disagreed.

Differences were exacerbated by conflicting positions in the controversy over missile-related issues, with regard to the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty (see p. 498), which intensified during the year.

Fissile material

During the year, the Conference on Disarmament was not able to establish the ad hoc committee on the prohibition of the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other explosive devices due to the persisting impasse regarding the adoption of a comprehensive programme of work (see p. 485). Calls from Eastern and Western European countries for work to begin on the issue were resisted by the non-aligned countries, which insisted that the programme of work should be adopted as a whole, and should include other States' priorities as well.

The 2000 NPT Review Conference had urged the Conference on Disarmament to agree on a work programme under which it should commence immediate negotiations on a non-discriminatory, multilateral and internationally and effectively verifiable treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices, with a view to concluding negotiations within five years.

The General Assembly, in 2000, returned to the question of the establishment of an ad hoc committee to negotiate a treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices, which it had previously considered in resolutions 48/75 L [YUN 1993, p. 118] and 53/77 I [YUN 1998, p. 493].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/559], adopted resolution 55/33 Y without vote [agenda item 73].

The Conference on Disarmament decision (CD/1547) of 11 August 1998 to establish, under item 1 of its agenda entitled "Cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament", an ad hoc committee to negotiate, on the basis of the report of the Special Coordinator (CD/1299) and the mandate contained therein, a non-discriminatory, multilateral and internationally and effectively verifiable treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/75 L of 16 December 1993 and 53/77 I of 4 December 1998,

Convinced that a non-discriminatory, multilateral and internationally and effectively verifiable treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices would be a significant contribution to nuclear disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation,

Recalling the 1998 report of the Conference on Disarmament, in which, inter alia, the Conference records that, in proceeding to take a decision on this matter, that decision is without prejudice to any further decisions on the establishment of further subsidiary bodies under agenda item 1 and that intensive consultations will be pursued to seek the views of the members of the Conference on Disarmament on appropriate methods and approaches for dealing with agenda item 1, taking into consideration all proposals and views in that respect,

1. Recalls the decision by the Conference on Disarmament to establish, under item 1 of its agenda entitled "Cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament", an ad hoc committee which shall negotiate, on the basis of the report of the Special Coordinator and the mandate contained therein, a non-discriminatory, multilateral and internationally and effectively verifiable treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices;

2. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to agree on a programme of work that includes the immediate commencement of negotiations on such a treaty.

Security assurances

The Conference on Disarmament addressed the issue of security assurances for non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons in the context of the development of its programme of work. All proposals in that regard concurred with the establishment of an ad hoc committee to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. However, the ad hoc committee was not established due to the lack of consensus on a comprehensive programme of work (see p. 485), which had also prevented action on the issue in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 460].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/557], adopted resolution 55/31 by recorded vote (111-0-54) [agenda item 71].

Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need to allay the legitimate concern of the States of the world with regard to ensuring lasting security for their peoples,

Convinced that nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to mankind and to the survival of civilization,

Welcoming the progress achieved in recent years in both nuclear and conventional disarmament,

Noting that, despite recent progress in the field of nuclear disarmament, further efforts are necessary towards the achievement of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Convinced that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Determined to abide strictly by the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations on the non-use of force or threat of force,

Recognizing that the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of non-nuclear-weapon States need to be safeguarded against the use or threat of use of force, including the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures and arrangements to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing that effective measures and arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can contribute positively to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Bearing in mind paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, and desirous of promoting the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Document,

Recalling the relevant parts of the special report of the Committee on Disarmament<sup>8</sup> submitted to the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, and of the special report of the Conference on Disarmament submitted to the Assembly at its fifteenth special session, the third special session devoted to disarmament, as well as the report of the Conference on its 1992 session,

Recalling also paragraph 12 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, which states, inter alia, that all efforts should be exerted by the Committee on Disarmament urgently to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the in-depth negotiations undertaken in the Conference on Disarmament and its Ad Hoc Committee on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to reaching agreement on this question,

Taking note of the proposals submitted under the item in the Conference on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention,

Taking note also of the relevant decision of the Twelfth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Durban, South Africa, from 29 August to 3 September 1998, as well as the relevant recommendations of the Organization of the Islamic Conference,

Taking note further of the unilateral declarations made by all the nuclear-weapon States on their policies of non-use or non-threat of use of nuclear weapons against the non-nuclear-weapon States,

Noting the support expressed in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, as well as the difficulties pointed out in evolving a common approach acceptable to all,

Taking note of Security Council resolution 984(1995) of 11 April 1995 and the views expressed on it,

Recalling its relevant resolutions adopted in previous years, in particular resolutions 45/54 of 4 December 1990, 46/32 of 6 December 1991, 47/50 of 9 December 1992, 48/73 of 16 December 1993, 49/73 of 15 December 1994, 50/68 of 12 December 1995, 51/43 of 10 December 1996, 52/36 of 9 December 1997, 53/75 of 4 December 1998 and 54/52 of 1 December 1999,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to reach an early agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Conference on Disarmament there is no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, although the difficulties with regard to evolving a common approach acceptable to all have also been pointed out;

3. Appeals to all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, to work actively towards an early agreement on a common approach and, in particular, on a common formula that could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding character;

4. Recommends that further intensive efforts be devoted to the search for such a common approach or common formula and that the various alternative approaches, including, in particular, those considered in the Conference on Disarmament, be further explored in order to overcome the difficulties;

5. Recommends also that the Conference on Disarmament actively continue intensive negotiations with a view to reaching early agreement and concluding effective international arrangements to assure the non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, taking into account the widespread support for the conclusion of an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

*Redesignated the Conference on Disarmament as from 7 February 1984.

Disarmament Commission

In July [A/55/42], Working Group I of the Disarmament Commission considered the Chairman's working paper on ways and means to achieve nuclear disarmament. Following discussions on elements contained in the paper and proposals made by delegations, the Group adopted by consensus its report on the item, annexed to which was the Chairman's paper.

The Chairman's paper discussed the interrelationship between nuclear disarmament and international peace and security, existing mechanisms dealing with nuclear disarmament, and ways and means to achieve nuclear disarmament.

It reviewed achievements, current developments and emerging initiatives. The Chairman's conclusions and recommendations were to be finalized in future sessions of the Working Group.

START and other bilateral agreements and unilateral measures

The United States and the Russian Federation continued to implement the 1991 Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START I) [YUN 1991, p. 34], which entered into force on 5 December 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 145], by reducing their nuclear arms stockpiles.

A major development in 2000 was the approval by the Russian Duma, on 14 April [A/55/64], of the ratification of the 1993 START II Treaty [YUN 1993, p. 117], and of related 1997 agreements on anti-missile defence. On 4 May, Russia enacted legislation to implement the Treaty. Although the United States had ratified START II in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 465], the Treaty would enter into force only after its 1997 Protocol was also ratified, shifting the deadline for reductions from January 2003 to 31 December 2007.

During the year, further discussions on START III and issues relating to the 1972 ABM Treaty took place between the Russian Federation and the United States. However, no progress was reported, especially on resolving the contentious issues of the announced intention in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 469] of the United States to develop a national missile defence (NMD) system, as well as its efforts to amend the ABM Treaty. There were also no major breakthroughs on those issues during a summit meeting (Moscow, 3-4 June) [A/55/87, CD/1617] between Acting President Vladimir V. Putin of the Russian Federation and President William J. Clinton of the United States. Nonetheless, the two States issued a Joint Statement on Principles of Strategic Stability, in which they agreed to maintain strategic nuclear stability and reaffirmed their commitment to strengthening the ABM Treaty as a cornerstone of that stability. They also announced their intention to intensify discussions on START III. The summit also produced agreements on the management and disposal of weapons-grade plutonium and on the establishment of a joint centre for the exchange of data (JDEC) from early warning systems and notifications of missile launches. As a follow-up to JDEC, on 16 December [A/55/807], both parties signed a Memorandum of Understanding in Brussels on notifications of missile launches.

A proposal put forward on 24 May by United States presidential candidate George W. Bush called for a broader missile defence system that would protect the United States and its allies, while also calling for a significant cut in the United States nuclear arsenal. On 13 November, President Putin proposed that the Russian Federation and the United States could each reduce their respective nuclear warheads to 1,500 by 2008.

Communications. In March [A/54/794-S/2000/210], New Zealand transmitted a resolution on nuclear disarmament adopted by its Parliament, calling on Member States to conclude negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament.

On 6 June [A/54/917-S/2000/580], South Africa, as Chairman of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, transmitted the final document of the Thirteenth Ministerial Conference of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (Cartagena, Colombia, 8-9 April). The Ministers, among other things, called for an international conference to arrive at an agreement on a phased programme for the complete elimination of all nuclear weapons.

In June [A/55/93], the Russian Federation transmitted a statement by the heads of State of the Commonwealth of Independent States on maintaining strategic stability, adopted at a meeting of the Council of Heads of State of the Commonwealth (Moscow, 21 June). Welcoming the ratification by the Russian Federation of START II (see p. 490), the heads of State declared their commitment to strengthening strategic stability and international security.

In September [A/C.1/55/31], the Foreign Ministers of the New Agenda Coalition Countries (Brazil, Egypt, Ireland, Mexico, New Zealand, South Africa, Sweden) transmitted the text of a communiqué on their joint initiative "Towards a nuclear-weapon-free world: the need for a new agenda". They stressed that the total elimination of nuclear weapons must be achieved through accelerated negotiations on all fronts.

Reports of Secretary-General. In August [A/55/217], the Secretary-General described action taken to implement General Assembly resolution 54/54 G [YUN 1999, p. 466], entitled "Towards a nuclear-weapon-free world: the need for a new agenda".

The Secretary-General said that despite some progress in bilateral and unilateral nuclear weapons reduction, the international community remained deeply concerned at the persisting risk posed to humanity by the possible use of nuclear weapons. He recalled that his March report to the Millennium Assembly [A/54/2000] (see p. 55) stressed the need for reaffirmation of political commitment to reduce the dangers posed by nuclear weapons and their further proliferation. The Secretary-General noted the adoption of the Final Document of the 2000 NPT Review Conference, particularly the steps to implement article VI (see p. 487).

The report contained the views of IAEA, the South Pacific Forum secretariat, as depositary of the 1985 South Pacific Nuclear-Free Zone Treaty, the provisional technical secretariat of the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization and Thailand, as depositary of the 1995 Treaty on the South-East Asia Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone.

Also in August [A/55/324], the Secretary-General, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/54 K [YUN 1999, p. 468], presented the views of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters (see p. 536) regarding measures that would significantly reduce the risk of nuclear war. There was broad agreement that emphasis should be placed on de-alerting nuclear weapons, reviewing nuclear doctrines, eliminating tactical nuclear weapons and creating a climate for implementing nuclear disarmament. Other measures received varying degrees of support.

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/54 P [YUN 1999, p. 464], the Secretary-General, on 3 October [A/55/444], stated that despite some progress towards the reduction of nuclear weapons, the time factor was crucial when addressing the risk that nuclear weapons still posed. He noted the outcome of the 2000 NPT Review Conference, particularly the commitment of nuclear-weapon States to totally eliminate their nuclear arsenals, as well as the commitment of Member States to strive for the elimination of weapons of mass destruction, as expressed in the United Nations Millennium Declaration (see p. 49). The Secretary-General remained concerned, however, that the efforts of the Conference on Disarmament to make progress on nuclear disarmament and other issues had been frustrated by a lack of consensus.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/559], adopted a series of resolutions related to nuclear disarmament.

The Assembly adopted resolution 55/33 R by recorded vote (155-1-12) [agenda item 73].

10. Calls for the immediate commencement of negotiations in the Conference on Disarmament, on a non-discriminatory, multilateral and internationally and effectively verifiable treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices on the basis of the report of the Special Coordinator and the mandate contained therein;

6. Calls also for the early entry into force and full implementation of the Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START II) and the conclusion of START III as soon as possible, while preserving and strengthening the Treaty on the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missile Systems as a cornerstone of strategic stability and as a basis for further reductions of strategic offensive weapons, in accordance with the provisions of that Treaty;

7. Calls further for the completion and implementation of the Trilateral Initiative between the United States of America, the Russian Federation and the International Atomic Energy Agency;

8. Calls for steps to be taken by all nuclear-weapon States that would lead to nuclear disarmament in a way that promotes international stability and, based upon the principle of undiminished security for all, for:

(a) Further efforts to be made by the nuclear-weapon States to reduce their nuclear arsenals unilaterally;

(b) Increased transparency by the nuclear-weapon States with regard to nuclear weapons capabilities, and the implementation of agreements pursuant to article VI of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and as a voluntary confidence-building measure to support further progress in nuclear disarmament;

(c) The further reduction of non-strategic nuclear weapons, based on unilateral initiatives and as an integral part of the nuclear arms reduction and disarmament process;

(d) Concrete agreed measures to reduce further the operational status of nuclear weapons systems;

(e) A diminishing role for nuclear weapons in security policies so as to minimize the risk that these weapons will ever be used and to facilitate the process of their total elimination;

(f) The engagement, as soon as appropriate, of all the nuclear-weapon States in the process leading to the total elimination of their nuclear weapons;

9. Calls also for arrangements by all nuclear-weapon States to place, as soon as practicable, the fissile material designated by each of them as no longer required for military purposes under International Atomic Energy Agency or other relevant international verification and arrangements for the disposition of such material for peaceful purposes in order to ensure that such material remains permanently outside military programmes;

10. Reaffirms that the ultimate objective of the efforts of States in the disarmament process is general and complete disarmament under effective international control;

11. Calls for regular reports, within the framework of the strengthened review process for the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, by all States parties on the implementation of article VI of the Treaty and paragraph 4 (c) of the decision on principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament of the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty, and, in this regard, recalls the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 8 July 1996;

12. Agrees to pursue the further development of the verification capabilities that will be required to provide assurance of compliance with nuclear disarmament agreements for the achievement and maintenance of a nuclear-weapon-free world;

13. Calls upon all States not yet party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to accede to the Treaty as non-nuclear-weapon States, promptly and without condition, in particular those States that operate unsafeguarded nuclear facilities, and also calls upon those States to bring into force the required comprehensive safeguards agreements, together with additional protocols, consistent with the Model Protocol Additional to the Agreement(s) between State(s) and the International Atomic Energy Agency for the Application of Safeguards approved by the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency on 15 May 1997, for ensuring nuclear non-proliferation, and to reverse clearly and urgently any policies to pursue any nuclear weapons development or deployment and refrain from any action that could undermine regional and international peace and security and the efforts of the international community towards nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear weapons proliferation;

14. Calls upon those States that have not yet done so to conclude full-scope safeguards agreements with the International Atomic Energy Agency and to conclude additional protocols to their safeguards agreements on the basis of the Model Protocol;

15. Notes the paramount importance of effective physical protection of all nuclear material, and calls upon all States to maintain the highest possible standards of security and physical protection of nuclear materials;

16. Notes also that the 2000 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons agreed that legally binding security assurances by the five nuclear-weapon States to the non-nuclear-weapon States parties to the Treaty strengthen the nuclear non-proliferation regime, and that it called upon the Preparatory Committee to make recommendations on this issue to the 2005 Review Conference;

17. Reaffirms the conviction that the establishment of internationally recognized nuclear-weapon-free zones on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned enhances global and regional peace and security, strengthens the nuclear non-proliferation regime and contributes towards realizing the objective of nuclear disarmament, and supports proposals for the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones where they do not yet exist, such as in the Middle East and South Asia;

18. Affirms that a nuclear-weapon-free world will ultimately require the underpinning of a universal and multilaterally negotiated legally binding instrument or a framework encompassing a mutually reinforcing set of instruments;

19. Acknowledges the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 54/54 G, and requests him, within existing resources, to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

20. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Towards a nuclear-weapon-free world: the need for a new agenda", and to review the implementation of the present resolution at that session.

Reducing nuclear danger

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the use of nuclear weapons poses the most serious threat to mankind and to the survival of civilization,

Reaffirming that any use or threat of use of nuclear weapons would constitute a violation of the Charter of the United Nations,

Convinced that the proliferation of nuclear weapons in all its aspects would seriously enhance the danger of nuclear war,

Convinced also that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Considering that, until nuclear weapons cease to exist, it is imperative on the part of the nuclear-weapon States to adopt measures that assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering also that the hair-trigger alert of nuclear weapons carries unacceptable risks of unintentional or accidental use of nuclear weapons, which would have catastrophic consequences for all mankind,

Emphasizing the imperative need to adopt measures to avoid accidental, unauthorized or unexplained incidents arising from computer anomaly or other technical malfunctions,

Conscious that limited steps relating to detargeting have been taken by the nuclear-weapon States and that further practical, realistic and mutually reinforcing steps are necessary to contribute to the improvement in the international climate for negotiations leading to the elimination of nuclear weapons,

Mindful that reduction of tensions brought about by a change in nuclear doctrines would positively impact on international peace and security and improve the conditions for the further reduction and the elimination of nuclear weapons,

Reiterating the highest priority accorded to nuclear disarmament in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and by the international community,

Recalling that in the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons it is stated that there exists an obligation for all States to pursue in good faith and bring to a conclusion negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament in all its aspects under strict and effective international control,

Welcoming the call in the United Nations Millennium Declaration to seek to eliminate the dangers posed by weapons of mass destruction and the resolve to strive for the elimination of weapons of mass destruction, particularly nuclear weapons, including the possibility of convening an international conference to identify ways of eliminating nuclear dangers,

1. Calls for a review of nuclear doctrines and, in this context, immediate and urgent steps to reduce the risks of unintentional and accidental use of nuclear weapons;

2. Requests the five nuclear-weapon States to take measures towards the implementation of paragraph 1 of the present resolution;

3. Calls upon Member States to take the necessary measures to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons in all its aspects and to promote nuclear disarmament, with the objective of eliminating nuclear weapons;

4. Takes note of the report prepared by the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters and submitted by the Secretary-General in pursuance of paragraph 4 of General Assembly resolution 54/54 K of 1 December 1999, including the need for the Board to continue its discussions on the subject;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to continue to seek inputs from the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters on information with regard to specific measures that would significantly reduce the risk of nuclear war, including the proposal contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration for convening an international conference to identify ways of eliminating nuclear dangers, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of the fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Reducing nuclear danger".

ABM Treaty and other missile issues

Missile defence issues and the status of the ABM Treaty, especially regarding the United States announcement in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 469] of its plans to develop an NMD system, remained an issue of major international concern. The Russian Federation held an international experts meeting (Moscow, 16 March) to exchange views on its proposal to create a global control system for the non-proliferation of missiles and missile technology. Following the meeting, President Putin proposed that the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), Europe and Russia establish a joint anti-missile shield against missile threats from certain States. He believed that the shield could replace the NMD system. The United States viewed the proposal only as a possible complement to its own NMD plans.

The Ministers for Foreign Affairs of China, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation and Tajikistan adopted the Dushanbe Declaration (Dushanbe, Tajikistan, July) [A/55/133-S/2000/682], by which they declared that the deployment of closed bloc-based anti-ballistic missile defence systems in Asia and the Pacific might upset the stability and security of the region.

On 18 July [A/55/276, CD/1622], China and the Russian Federation issued a joint statement on anti-missile defence, calling for the gradual establishment of a global system for monitoring the non-proliferation of missiles and missile technology.

Although the United States held several rounds of discussions on missile issues with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK), particularly concerning the DPRK's ballistic missile programme and related issues, there were no major breakthroughs. As further steps to develop an NMD system, the United States conducted a second and third missile interceptor test on 18 January and 7 July, respectively. In September [CD/1625], President Clinton reaffirmed the commitment of the United States to develop the system, but also announced that due to insufficient technical information, he would leave the decision for deployment to the next Administration.

On 12 October [A/C.1/55/8], the Russian Federation stated that the September statement [CD/1625] asserted that the Joint Statement on Principles of Strategic Stability between Russia and the United States [CD/1617] (see p. 490) contained a provision on the need to address the threat of the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, missiles and missile technologies, "including through consideration of changes to the ABM Treaty". Russia stated that the Joint Statement contained no such provision, nor did any other document adopted jointly.

On 6 September in New York [CD/1626], Presidents Putin and Clinton issued a joint statement on a strategic stability cooperation initiative, in which they agreed to enhance strategic stability, to counter the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, missiles and related technology, and to strengthen the ABM Treaty. In November [A/55/625], while acknowledging changes in the international strategic environment, President Putin said those changes could be dealt with, and missile proliferation counteracted, without exceeding the limits of the ABM Treaty.

Report of Secretary-General. In a July report with later addendum [A/55/116 & Add.1], the Secretary-General presented the views of seven Member States on the issue of missiles in all its aspects, as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 54/54 F [YUN 1999, p. 470].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/559], adopted resolution 55/33 A by recorded vote (97-0-65) [agenda item 73 (h)].

Missiles

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 54/54 F of 1 December 1999,

Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty

Status

As at 31 December, 160 States had signed the 1996 Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty (CTBT), adopted by General Assembly resolution 50/245 [YUN 1996, p. 454], and 69 had ratified it.

During the year, the Treaty was ratified by Bangladesh, Belarus, Cambodia, Chile, Gabon, Iceland, Kenya, Kiribati, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lithuania, Maldives, Morocco, Nicaragua, Portugal, the Russian Federation, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkey and the United Arab Emirates.

In accordance with article XIV, CTBT was to enter into force 180 days after the 44 States possessing nuclear reactors, listed in annex 2 to the Treaty, had deposited their instruments of ratification. By year's end, 30 of those States had ratified the Treaty.

Following the request of a majority of ratifying States, the Secretary-General, as depositary, decided to convene a second conference in September 2001 to facilitate CTBT's entry into force. The first such conference was held in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 471].

Communications. The Russian Federation transmitted a statement of 18 May [A/55/79] regarding its ratification of the Treaty.

The Secretary-General transmitted a decision of 23 August [A/55/336] adopted by the Preparatory Commission for the CTBT Organization calling upon all States that had not signed or ratified the Treaty to do so.

Nuclear testing

Regarding the joint Kazakhstan-United States Omega-3 calibration experiment, Kazakhstan stated that, on 29 July [A/55/255], the last tunnel at the Semipalatinsk former test site was destroyed by 100 metric tons of granulated trytol. The explosion was also used to check and calibrate the international monitoring system (see p. 501) for nuclear tests under CTBT.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/567], adopted resolution 55/41 by recorded vote (161-0-6) [agenda item 81].

1. Stresses the importance and urgency of signature and ratification, without delay and without conditions and in accordance with constitutional processes, to achieve the early entry into force of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty;

2. Welcomes the contributions by the States signatories to the work of the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization, in particular to its efforts to ensure that the Treaty's verification regime will be capable of meeting the verification requirements of the Treaty upon its entry into force, in accordance with article IV of the Treaty;

3. Urges States to maintain their moratoria on nuclear weapons test explosions or any other nuclear explosions, pending the entry into force of the Treaty;

4. Calls upon all States that have not yet signed the Treaty to sign and ratify it as soon as possible and to refrain from acts that would defeat its object and purpose in the meanwhile;

5. Calls upon all States that have signed but not yet ratified the Treaty, in particular those whose ratification is needed for its entry into force, to accelerate their ratification processes with a view to their early successful conclusion;

6. Urges all States to remain seized of the issue at the highest political level;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty".

Preparatory Commission for the CTBT Organization

The Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization, established in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 452], continued efforts towards setting up the Treaty's verification regime. Work progressed on building the global network of some 321 technical stations for the International Monitoring System (IMS) [YUN 1999, p. 472], designed to track and detect nuclear explosions prohibited by CTBT via a global satellite communications system to the International Data Center (IDC) in Vienna. About 60 per cent of the site surveys for finding suitable locations for the stations were completed, with some 20 per cent of the stations fully installed. Since February, IDC had been sending IMS data and IDC products on a test basis to about 40 States parties to CTBT.

The Commission held its eleventh (2-5 May) [CTBT/PC-11/1], twelfth (22-24 August) [CTBT/PC-12/1] and thirteenth (20-21 November) [CTBT/PC-13/1 & Corr.1] sessions, all in Vienna, to consider the draft relationship agreement between the United Nations and the Commission, as well as to discuss organizational, budgetary and other matters.

In May, the Commission approved the draft agreement, which established a formal relationship between the two organizations, under which they would cooperate closely on matters of mutual interest. The Agreement was signed by the Secretary-General and the Commission's Executive Secretary on 26 May [A/54/884] and entered into force in June following approval by the General Assembly (see below). In other action, the Commission adopted a budget of $83.49 million for 2001, of which approximately half was earmarked for the global network of stations for IMS. The remainder would be used to develop IDC, the global communications infrastructure, and procedures and guidelines to support on-site inspection once the Treaty entered into force.

In October [A/55/433], the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the Executive Secretary covering 1999, in accordance with article IV, paragraph 1, of the Agreement, under which the Executive Secretary also addressed the General Assembly in October [A/55/PV.44].

By decision 54/501 of 5 September, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of Austria [A/54/966], decided to include in the draft agenda of its fifty-fifth (2000) session the item on cooperation between the United Nations and the Preparatory Commission for CTBT. By decision 55/408 of 30 October, the Assembly decided to include the item in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth (2001) session.

IAEA safeguards

As at 31 December, the Model Protocol Additional to Safeguards Agreements strengthening IAEA's safeguards regime, approved by the IAEA Board of Governors in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 486], had been signed by 57 States, including the 5 nuclear-weapon States, and was in force or being provisionally applied in 19 States.

The IAEA General Conference [GC(44)/RES/19] once again requested all concerned States and other parties to safeguards agreements that had not done so to sign additional protocols promptly. Those that had signed were requested to bring the protocols into force or provisionally apply them, while Member States were asked to consider a plan of action to facilitate the protocols' application.

During the year, IAEA was not able to implement its mandate with regard to Iraq under the relevant Security Council resolutions, having had to withdraw its inspectors in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 258]. Thus, IAEA was not in a position to provide any assurances that Iraq was in compliance with its obligations under those resolutions. In the absence of any Council-mandated activities, IAEA conducted a physical inventory verification in January related to the 1999 programme under the safeguards agreement between Iraq and IAEA pursuant to NPT. Agency inspectors verified the presence of nuclear material under safeguards at the Tuwaitha storage facility (see also p. 294).

Regarding the implementation of the agreement between IAEA and the DPRK for the application of safeguards under NPT, the Director General stated in September that the Agency remained unable to verify fully that all nuclear material subject to safeguards in the DPRK had been declared to IAEA. On 22 September [GC(44)/RES/26], the General Conference expressed continuing concern about the lack of co-operation by the DPRK, urging it to cooperate fully and promptly (see also p. 321).

Middle East

In 2000, the General Assembly (see below) and the IAEA General Conference [GC(44)/RES/28] took action regarding the risk of nuclear proliferation in the Middle East. While the Assembly called on the non-party in the region to accede to NPT and to place all its nuclear facilities under IAEA safeguards, IAEA reaffirmed the need for all States in the Middle East to accept the application of full-scope Agency safeguards and to adhere to international non-proliferation regimes, including NPT.

Pursuant to Assembly resolution 54/57 [YUN 1999, p. 474], the Secretary-General reported in October [A/55/448] that, apart from the IAEA resolution on the application of IAEA safeguards in the Middle East, he had not received any additional information since his 1999 report on the subject [YUN 1999, p. 474]. The IAEA resolution was annexed to the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First

Committee [A/55/562], adopted resolution 55/36 by recorded vote (157-3-8) [agenda item 76].

The risk of nuclear proliferation in the Middle East

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind its relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions adopted by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency, the latest of which is resolution GC(44)/RES/28, adopted on 22 September 2000,

Cognizant that the proliferation of nuclear weapons in the region of the Middle East would pose a serious threat to international peace and security,

Mindful of the immediate need for placing all nuclear facilities in the region of the Middle East under full-scope safeguards of the International Atomic Energy Agency,

Recalling the decision on principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament adopted by the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons of 11 May 1995, in which the Conference urged universal adherence to the Treaty as an urgent priority and called upon all States not yet parties to the Treaty to accede to it at the earliest date, particularly those States that operate unsafeguarded nuclear facilities,

Recognizing with satisfaction that, in the Final Document of the 2000 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, the Conference undertook to make determined efforts towards the achievement of the goal of universality of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, and called upon those remaining States not parties to the Treaty to accede to it, thereby accepting an international legally binding commitment not to acquire nuclear weapons or nuclear explosive devices and to accept International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards on all their nuclear activities, and underlined the necessity of universal adherence to the Treaty and of strict compliance by all parties with their obligations under the Treaty,

Recalling the resolution on the Middle East adopted by the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons on 11 May 1995, in which the Conference noted with concern the continued existence in the Middle East of unsafeguarded nuclear facilities, reaffirmed the importance of the early realization of universal adherence to the Treaty and called upon all States in the Middle East that had not yet done so, without exception, to accede to the Treaty as soon as possible and to place all their nuclear facilities under full-scope International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards,

Noting that Israel remains the only State in the Middle East that has not yet become party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Concerned about the threats posed by the proliferation of nuclear weapons to the security and stability of the Middle East region,

Stressing the importance of taking confidence-building measures, in particular the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East, in order to enhance peace and security in the region and to consolidate the global non-proliferation regime,

Emphasizing the need for all parties directly concerned to consider seriously taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and, as a means of promoting this objective, inviting the countries concerned to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, and pending the establishment of the zone, to agree to place all their nuclear activities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards,

Noting that one hundred and sixty States have signed the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty, including a number of States in the region,

1. Welcomes the conclusions on the Middle East of the 2000 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Reaffirms the importance of Israel's accession to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and placement of all its nuclear facilities under comprehensive International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards, in realizing the goal of universal adherence to the Treaty in the Middle East;

3. Calls upon that State to accede to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons without further delay and not to develop, produce, test or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons, and to renounce possession of nuclear weapons, and to place all its unsafeguarded nuclear facilities under full-scope International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards as an important confidence-building measure among all States of the region and as a step towards enhancing peace and security;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "The risk of nuclear proliferation in the Middle East".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 55/36:

The First Committee adopted paragraph 6 by a recorded vote of 138 to 2, with 5 abstentions, as did the Assembly by 158 to 2, with 5 abstentions.

Prohibition of use of nuclear weapons

In 2000, the Conference on Disarmament was not able to undertake negotiations on a convention on the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons, as called for in General Assembly resolution 54/55 D [YUN 1999, p. 474].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/560], adopted resolution 55/34 G by recorded vote (109-43-16) [agenda item 74 (d)].

Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the use of nuclear weapons poses the most serious threat to the survival of mankind,

Bearing in mind the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 8 July 1996 on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons,

Convinced that a multilateral, universal and binding agreement prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons would contribute to the elimination of the nuclear threat and to the climate for negotiations leading to the ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons, thereby strengthening international peace and security,

Conscious that some steps taken by the Russian Federation and the United States of America towards a reduction of their nuclear weapons and the improvement in the international climate can contribute towards the goal of the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Recalling that, in paragraph 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it is stated that all States should actively participate in efforts to bring about conditions in international relations among States in which a code of peaceful conduct of nations in international affairs could be agreed upon and that would preclude the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming that any use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity, as declared in its resolutions 1653(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 33/71 B of 14 December 1978, 34/83 G of 11 December 1979, 35/152 D of 12 December 1980 and 36/92 I of 9 December 1981,

Determined to achieve an international convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of nuclear weapons, leading to their ultimate destruction,

Stressing that an international convention on the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons would be an important step in a phased programme towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons, with a specified framework of time,

Noting with regret that the Conference on Disarmament, during its 2000 session, was unable to undertake negotiations on this subject as called for in General Assembly resolution 54/55 D of 1 December 1999,

1. Reiterates its request to the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations in order to reach agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly on the results of those negotiations.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 55/34 G:

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nauru, Nepal, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Advisory opinion of International Court of Justice

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/54 Q [YUN 1999, p. 475] on the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice that the threat or use of nuclear weapons was contrary to the UN Charter [YUN 1996, p. 461], the Secretary-General presented information received from Cuba, Iraq, New Zealand and Qatar on measures they had taken to implement the resolution and nuclear disarmament [A/55/131 & Add.1]. On 27 November [A/55/647], Saudi Arabia, referring to the information from Iraq, dissociated itself from Iraq's claim that it had participated in the alleged use of force against Iraq in the no-flight zones. In addition, there was no supporting evidence regarding Iraq's claim that the United States had extensively used depleted-uranium munitions against Iraq in 1991.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/559], adopted resolution 55/33 X by recorded vote (119-28-22) [agenda item 73 (r)].

Follow-up to the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/75 K of 15 December 1994, 51/45 M of 10 December 1996, 52/38 O of 9 December 1997, 53/77 W of 4 December 1998 and 54/54 Q of 1 December 1999,

Convinced that the continuing existence of nuclear weapons poses a threat to all humanity and that their use would have catastrophic consequences for all life on Earth, and recognizing that the only defence against a nuclear catastrophe is the total elimination of nuclear weapons and the certainty that they will never be produced again,

Reaffirming the commitment of the international community to the goal of the total elimination of nuclear weapons and the creation of a nuclear-weapon-free world,

Mindful of the solemn obligations of States parties, undertaken in article VI of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, particularly to pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament,

Recalling the principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament adopted at the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Welcoming the unequivocal undertaking by the nuclear-weapon States to accomplish the total elimination of their nuclear arsenals leading to nuclear disarmament,

Recalling the adoption of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty in its resolution 50/245 of 10 September 1996, and expressing its satisfaction at the increasing number of States that have signed and ratified the Treaty,

Recognizing with satisfaction that the Antarctic Treaty and the treaties of Tlatelolco, Rarotonga, Bangkok and Pelindaba are gradually freeing the entire southern hemisphere and adjacent areas covered by those treaties from nuclear weapons,

Noting the efforts by the States possessing the largest inventories of nuclear weapons to reduce their stockpiles of such weapons through bilateral agreements or arrangements and unilateral decisions, and calling for the intensification of such efforts to accelerate the significant reduction of nuclear-weapon arsenals,

Recognizing the need for a multilaterally negotiated and legally binding instrument to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the threat or use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming the central role of the Conference on Disarmament as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, and regretting the lack of progress in disarmament negotiations, particularly nuclear disarmament, in the Conference on Disarmament during its 2000 session,

Emphasizing the need for the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations on a phased programme for the complete elimination of nuclear weapons with a specified framework of time,

Desiring to achieve the objective of a legally binding prohibition of the development, production, testing, deployment, stockpiling, threat or use of nuclear weapons and their destruction under effective international control,

Recalling the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, issued on 8 July 1996,

Taking note of the relevant portions of the note by the Secretary-General relating to the implementation of resolution 54/54 Q,

1. Underlines once again the unanimous conclusion of the International Court of Justice that there exists an obligation to pursue in good faith and bring to a conclusion negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament in all its aspects under strict and effective international control;

2. Calls once again upon all States immediately to fulfil that obligation by commencing multilateral negotiations in 2001 leading to an early conclusion of a convention prohibiting the development, production, testing, deployment, stockpiling, transfer, threat or use of nuclear weapons and providing for their elimination;

3. Requests all States to inform the Secretary-General of the efforts and measures they have taken on the implementation of the present resolution and nuclear disarmament, and requests the Secretary-General to apprise the General Assembly of that information at its fifty-sixth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Follow-up to the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons".

Africa

As at 31 December, 16 States had ratified the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Pelindaba) [YUN 1995, p. 203], which was opened for signature in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 486]. China and France had ratified Protocols I and II thereto and France had also ratified Protocol III.

The Secretary-General believed that the Working Group could be useful as a forum for discussing the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone and reaffirmed the readiness of the United Nations to assist in that regard. He observed that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone received attention at the 2000 NPT Review Conference (see p. 487), particularly the implementation of the resolution adopted at the 1995 NPT Review and Extension Conference calling on States in the region to accede to NPT [YUN 1995, p. 189]. The report included the views of Egypt, Qatar and the Russian Federation on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region.

South Pacific

In October [A/55/536], New Zealand transmitted a communiqué issued by the heads of State and Government of the 16-member Pacific Island Forum, formerly the South Pacific Forum, at its thirty-first meeting (Tarawa, Kiribati, 27-30 October). The Forum considered a range of key issues of concern to the region and, while noting that there had been no new signatures or ratifications to the 1985 South Pacific Nuclear-Free-Zone Treaty (Treaty of Rarotonga) [YUN 1985, p. 58], called on the United States to ratify the relevant Protocols to the Treaty. Tonga's ratification, in December, brought the number of parties to the Treaty to 17. China and the Russian Federation had ratified Protocols 2 and 3, and France and the United Kingdom had ratified all three Protocols.

Under Protocol 1, the States internationally responsible for territories situated within the zone would undertake to apply the relevant prohibitions of the Treaty to those territories; under Protocol 2, the five nuclear-weapon States would provide security assurances to parties or to territories within the same zone; and under Protocol 3, the five would not carry out nuclear tests in the zone.

Bacteriological (biological) weapons

Efforts continued in 2000 to strengthen the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction (BWC), adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2826(XXVI) [YUN 1971, p. 19]. The Ad Hoc Group of the States Parties to the Convention attempted to achieve that goal through the development of a protocol on verification and confidence-building measures. Members of the Group, including the three depositary States (Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States), undertook their sixth year of negotiations on the protocol and reaffirmed their determination to end the negotiations before the Convention's fifth review conference in 2001. Similar commitments were made by the leaders of the Group of 8 (G-8) major industrialized countries, in their G-8 Communiqué "Okinawa 2000" [A/55/257-S/2000/766], and by Presidents Vladimir V. Putin of the Russian Federation and William J. Clinton of the United States, in their joint statement on the strategic stability cooperation initiative [A/C.1/55/9] (see p. 498). However, obstacles still remained at year's end.

Ad Hoc Group

The Ad Hoc Group of the States Parties to BWC held its eighteenth (17 January–4 February) [BWC/AD HOC GROUP/50], nineteenth (13–31 March) [BWC/AD HOC GROUP/51], twentieth (10 July–4 August) [BWC/AD HOC GROUP/52] and twenty-first (20 November–8 December) [BWC/AD HOC GROUP/54] sessions in 2000, all in Geneva.

The Group continued to consider elements of the rolling text of a future draft protocol on verification and confidence-building relating to the preamble; general provisions; definitions of terms and objective criteria; measures to promote compliance; confidentiality issues; national implementation and assistance; measures related to article X of the Convention (scientific and technological exchange and technical cooperation); investigations; legal issues; and the seat of the organization. The work continued to be conducted under the guidance of the Chairman and Friends of the Chair. As at previous sessions, the results of discussions were incorporated in the rolling text, with brackets reflecting sections on which agreement was not yet possible. Textual proposals were annexed to the rolling text.

In August, the Chairman reported some progress in the negotiations on investigations and cooperation, with less progress on compliance measures. In December, the rolling text comprised a preamble, 23 articles, 6 annexes that provided detailed procedures on the implementation of the protocol, and 8 appendices. The Group decided that it would hold three sessions in 2001.

Parallel to their efforts to develop a verification mechanism, States parties continued their information exchange in the agreed framework of politically binding confidence-building measures, exchanging information on, among other things, relevant research centres and laboratories; national biological defence research and development programmes; outbreaks of infectious diseases and similar occurrences caused by toxins; relevant legislation, regulations and other measures; past activities in offensive and/or defensive biological research and development programmes; and vaccine production facilities. In 2000, 36 States parties submitted reports to the United Nations.

Chemical weapons

Chemical weapons convention

In 2000, Azerbaijan, Colombia, Eritrea, Gabon, Jamaica, Kazakhstan, Kiribati, Malaysia, Mozambique, the United Arab Emirates, Yemen and Yugoslavia ratified or acceded to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction, bringing the total number of States parties to 141. The number of signatories stood at 165. The Convention was adopted by the Conference on Disarmament in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 65] and entered into force in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 499].

At the fifth session of the Conference of the States Parties to the Convention (see below), the Director-General of the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW) noted that all States parties had submitted their initial declarations, as required under the Convention. (Under article III of the Convention, a State party was obligated to declare, 30 days after entry into force, whether or not chemical weapons or facilities existed on its territory, and to report on plans to destroy or convert existing chemical weapons and related facilities and on related laboratories and equipment that could be used to make chemical weapons. A State party was also obliged to declare all riot control agents.)

Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons

In 2000, the fifth session of the Conference of the States Parties (The Hague, Netherlands, 15-19 May) [OPCW, C-V/6] adopted the 2001 OPCW programme and budget, as well as a decision regarding the model agreement for chemical weapons destruction facilities and a recommendation on ensuring the universality of the Convention. Other decisions related to national implementation measures, requests to use chemical weapons production facilities for purposes not prohibited under the Convention, privileges and immunities agreements, and the request of the Russian Federation for an extension of its obligation to meet the first intermediate deadline for the destruction of its chemical weapons stockpiles.

Regarding inspections, at year's end OPCW had conducted more than 300 inspections in 45 States parties and extended inspection activities to 14 new States parties. In addition, one half of the 61 production plants declared by 11 States parties had been destroyed or converted to peaceful purposes, and 7 per cent of the world's declared stockpile of 70,000 tons of chemical agents and 15 per cent of the 8.4 million chemical munitions covered by the Convention had been destroyed.

In October, the relationship agreement for close cooperation on matters of mutual interest between the United Nations and OPCW was signed, and would be implemented provisionally until its adoption in 2001 by the Conference of the States Parties to OPCW and the General Assembly.

The OPCW Executive Council considered a wide range of issues at its eighteenth (15-18 February), nineteenth (3-7 April), twentieth (27-28 June), twenty-first (3-6 October) and twenty-second (5-8 December) sessions. Among other matters, it discussed issues relating to the practical elimination of chemical weapons stockpiles, including the destruction of production plants and the Convention's inspection regime.

On 23 December, the General Assembly decided that the item on cooperation between the United Nations and OPCW would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/559], adopted resolution 55/33 H without vote [agenda item 73 (g)].

Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject of chemical weapons, in particular resolution 54/54 E of 1 December 1999, adopted without a vote, in which it noted with appreciation the ongoing work to achieve the objective and purpose of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction,

Determined to achieve the effective prohibition of the development, production, acquisition, transfer, stockpiling and use of chemical weapons and their destruction,

Noting with satisfaction that since the adoption of resolution 54/54 E, fourteen additional States have ratified or acceded to the Convention, bringing the total number of States parties to the Convention to one hundred and forty,

1. Emphasizes the necessity of universal adherence to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction, and calls upon all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the Convention without delay;

2. Notes with appreciation the ongoing work of the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons to achieve the objective and purpose of the Convention, to ensure the full implementation of its provisions, including those for international verification of compliance with it, and to provide a forum for consultation and cooperation among States parties;

3. Stresses the importance of the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons in verifying compliance with the provisions of the Convention as well as in promoting the timely and efficient accomplishment of all its objectives;

4. Also stresses the vital importance of full and effective implementation of and compliance with all provisions of the Convention;

5. Urges all States parties to the Convention to meet in full and on time their obligations under the Convention and to support the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons in its implementation activities;

6. Stresses the importance to the Convention that all possessors of chemical weapons, chemical weapons production facilities or chemical weapons development facilities, including previously declared possessor States, should be among the States parties to the Convention, and welcomes progress to that end;

7. Welcomes the cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons and the signature of the Relationship Agreement between the United Nations and the Organization, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction".

Conventional weapons

In 2000, the United Nations, in collaboration with other international organizations, and at the request of the States concerned, continued to assist States in curbing the illicit traffic in small arms and collecting them. On 23 March [S/PRST/2000/10], the Security Council President stated that the Council recognized that effective action to curb the illegal flow of small arms and light weapons could contribute to the success of programmes for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants in areas of conflict.

Although the Register of Conventional Arms remained the most well-known instrument of transparency for conventional weapons and the number of replies received for 1999 had increased, differences persisted among Member States regarding the Register's future development. In 2000, the expert group on the Register could not agree on expanding its scope to include data on military holdings and procurement through national production, on the same basis as data on transfers (see p. 524). The level of participation of Member States in the standardized reporting instrument for military expenditures remained low, while the upward trend in military expenditures reported in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 486] seemed to persist.

Efforts continued to further strengthen the two legal instruments dealing with anti-personnel mines. The Second Meeting of the States Parties to the 1997 Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction [YUN 1997, p. 503] took place (Geneva, 11-15 September), as did the Second Annual Conference of the States Parties to Amended Protocol II to the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects [YUN 1980, p. 76] (Geneva, 11-13 December).

Small arms

Reports of Secretary-General. In a July report with later addendum [A/55/189 & Add.1], the Secretary-General presented the views of six States on the 1999 report of the Group of Governmental Experts on Small Arms [YUN 1999, p. 486], pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/54 V [ibid., p. 487].

In accordance with Security Council presidential statement S/PRST/1999/28 [YUN 1999, p. 48], the Secretary-General, in November [S/2000/1092], reported on the methods of destruction of small arms, light weapons, ammunition and explosives. The report, prepared with the assistance of governmental experts and in collaboration with relevant UN bodies, highlighted the advantages and disadvantages of various practical destruction methods available and their environmental impact, and was intended to provide guidance for the production of a reference manual. Technical experts had recommended the preparation of a UN reference manual for use in the field, emphasizing planning, management and supervision, as well as military/civilian manuals to deal with methods of destruction.

Expert meetings. The Group of Governmental Experts on Small Arms, established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/54 V [YUN 1999, p. 487], proceeded with preparing a report on the feasibility of restricting the manufacture and trade of small arms and light weapons to the manufacturers and dealers authorized by States. The Group held two sessions (New York, 14-19 May and 10-14 July), as well as an informal workshop (Sofia, Bulgaria, 17-19 October).

Communication. In November [A/55/631], Mali, on behalf of an eminent persons group, transmitted a document on the role of a small arms control regime in stemming small arms and light weapons proliferation (Rocard-Konaré report).

Illicit traffic

Reports of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/54 J [YUN 1999, p. 491], the Secretary-General, in August [A/55/216], outlined activities taken by the United Nations, as well as regional and subregional initiatives, to assist States to curb the illicit traffic in small arms and to collect them. He described requests for assistance, and the UN response thereto, from Albania, the Congo, Guinea-Bissau, the Niger and Sierra Leone.

In response to Assembly resolution 54/54 R [YUN 1999, p. 490], the Secretary-General, in an August report with later addendum [A/55/323 & Add.1], provided an overview of his broad-based consultations on illicit trafficking in small arms. He presented the outcome of meetings convened under UN auspices, as well as those convened by regional and subregional organizations and by States or groups of States. Annexed to the report were views on illicit traffic submitted by 10 States, in addition to France and Portugal on behalf of the European Union (EU), a description of activities taken by civil society, and a questionnaire prepared by the UN Department for Disarmament Affairs (DDA) that was transmitted to regional groups and organizations, research institutes and NGOs.

Other action. Ministers for Foreign Affairs attending the Great Lakes Region and the Horn of Africa Conference on the Proliferation of Small Arms (Nairobi, Kenya, 12-15 March) [A/54/860-S/2000/385] adopted the Nairobi Declaration on the Problem of the Proliferation of Illicit Small Arms and Light Weapons in the Great Lakes Region and the Horn of Africa. The Declaration called on States to strengthen subregional co-operation among police, intelligence, customs and border control officials to combat the illicit circulation and trafficking in small arms and light weapons. The Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), at its thirty-sixth ordinary session (Lomé, Togo, 10-12 July) [A/55/286], affirmed that the uncontrolled spread of arms and light weapons, as well as the problem of landmines, posed a threat to peace and security in Africa. The G-8 Foreign Ministers (Miyazaki, Japan, 13 July) [A/55/161-S/2000/714], in the Miyazaki Initiatives for Conflict Prevention, expressed support for national, regional and international efforts to ensure that transfers of small arms were carried out responsibly and legally. OAU member States appealed to suppliers to limit the arms trade to Governments and licensed agents identified in the Bamako Declaration on an African Common Position on the Illicit Proliferation, Circulation and Trafficking of Small Arms and Light Weapons (Bamako, Mali, 30 November-1 December) [A/CONF.192/PC/23].

Preparatory Committee for 2001 Conference

The Preparatory Committee for the 2001 UN Conference on the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, established by General Assembly resolution 54/54 V [YUN 1999, p. 487], at its first session (New York, 28 February-3 March) [A/CONF.192/PC/9], decided to hold its second session from 8 to 19 January 2001, in New York, and its third from 19 to 30 March 2001. It decided to continue its consideration of recommendations to the Conference on all relevant matters, including the objective, a draft agenda, draft rules of procedure and draft final documents, but deferred any decision on the date and venue of the Conference to the Assembly's fifty-fifth (2000) session.

By decision 55/415 of 20 November, the Assembly decided to convene the Conference from 9 to 20 July 2001, in New York, and the Preparatory Committee's third session from 19 to 30 March 2001. It decided to include the item entitled "Small arms" in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth (2001) session.

The Committee considered views on a final document for the Conference submitted by Canada [A/CONF.192/PC/14], China [A/CONF.192/PC/13], France and Switzerland [A/CONF.192/PC/7, A/CONF.192/PC/25], Japan [A/CONF.192/PC/22], South Africa [A/CONF.192/PC/5] and Switzerland [A/CONF.192/PC/16]. Proposals on various items were put forth by Algeria [A/CONF.192/PC/17], Canada [A/CONF.192/PC/15], the EU [A/CONF.192/PC/6], France on behalf of the EU [A/CONF.192/PC/18] and Indonesia on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries [A/CONF.192/PC/8].

Documents transmitted by States included, in February, by Algeria [A/CONF.192/PC/2], a 1999 OAU decision [YUN 1999, p. 486] and, by Portugal on behalf of the EU [A/CONF.192/PC/3], the EU Programme for Preventing and Combating Illicit Trafficking in Conventional Arms and the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports; in June, by Portugal on behalf of the EU and the United States [A/CONF.192/PC/10], the United States-EU Statement of Common Principles and Action Plan on Small Arms and Light Weapons and, by Portugal on behalf of the EU [A/CONF.192/PC/11], a Canada-EU statement on small arms and light weapons; in July, by the United States [A/CONF.192/PC/12], the United States Comprehensive Initiative on Small Arms and Illicit Trafficking; and, in December, by Austria [A/CONF.192/PC/20], a document on small arms and light weapons adopted by the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) and, by France on behalf of the EU [A/CONF.192/PC/21], the text of a plan of action to prevent, combat and eradicate the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons in all its aspects.

In October [A/CONF.192/PC/24], the Pacific Island Forum countries transmitted information regarding their agreement to develop model legislation to facilitate implementation and enforcement of the common approach to weapons control contained in the Nadi Framework, which covered non-firearm weapons as well as firearms.

Brazil transmitted the Brasilia Declaration adopted by the Latin American and Caribbean Regional Preparatory Meeting for the Conference (Brasilia, 22-24 November) [A/55/679, A/CONF.192/PC/19].

The study completed by the Group of Governmental Experts on Small Arms [YUN 1999, p. 486] was to be submitted as a background document for the Conference.

Report of Secretary-General. In a February report with later addenda [A/54/260 & Add.1-3], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolutions 53/77 E [YUN 1998, p. 525] and 54/54 V [YUN 1999, p. 487], presented the views of five Member States on the objective, scope, agenda and venue of and preparatory work for the Conference.

Recalling that the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa and the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean, respectively, held workshops on illicit trafficking in small arms at Lomé and Lima in 1999, and noting with appreciation the regional seminar held at Jakarta on 3 and 4 May 2000 under the auspices of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific,

Mindful of the impact of surplus small arms and light weapons on the illicit trade in these weapons, and welcoming the practical measures taken by States to destroy surplus weapons and confiscated or collected weapons, in accordance with the recommendations of the Secretary-General in his report on small arms,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his broad-based consultations, within available financial resources and with any other assistance provided by States in a position to do so, and to provide the 2001 United Nations Conference on the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects with information on the magnitude and scope of illicit trafficking in small arms and light weapons, measures to combat illicit trafficking in and circulation of small arms and light weapons, and the role of the United Nations in collecting, collating, sharing and disseminating information on illicit trafficking in small arms and light weapons;

2. Encourages States to promote regional and sub-regional initiatives and requests the Secretary-General, within available financial resources, and those States in a position to do so, to assist States in undertaking such initiatives to address the illicit trafficking in small arms and light weapons in affected regions, and invites the Secretary-General to utilize these initiatives as part of his consultations; and requests the Secretary-General to circulate this information annually to all States;

4. Invites States in a position to do so to continue to provide assistance, bilaterally, regionally and through multilateral channels, such as the United Nations, in support of measures associated with combating illicit trafficking in small arms and light weapons, including assistance, in response to requests by States, in collecting and destroying surplus, confiscated or collected small arms and light weapons;

Convention on excessively injurious conventional weapons and Protocols

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/58 [YUN 1999, p. 492], the Secretary-General reported on the status, as at 31 May 2000 [A/55/97], of the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects and its three annexed Protocols [YUN 1980, p. 76]: on Non-Detectable Fragments (Protocol I); on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices, as amended on 3 May 1996 (Protocol II) [YUN 1996, p. 484]; and on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Incendiary Weapons (Protocol III); as well as the 1995 Protocol on Blinding Laser Weapons (Protocol IV) [YUN 1995, p. 221], which had taken effect on 30 July 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 530].

The accession of Bangladesh, Colombia, El Salvador, Estonia, Lesotho, Maldives, Moldova and Seychelles and the ratification of Nicaragua in 2000 brought the number of States parties to the Convention as at 31 December to 84.

Pursuant to resolution 53/81 and based on the decisions and recommendations of the First Annual Conference of the States Parties to Amended Protocol II in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 492], the Second Annual Conference met in Geneva from 11 to 13 December [CCW/AP.II/CONF.2/1].

The Conference had before it 29 national annual reports, containing data on dissemination of information on the Protocol to armed forces and civilians; mine clearance and rehabilitation programmes; steps taken to meet technical requirements of the Protocol and any other relevant information pertaining thereto; legislation related to the Protocol; measures taken on international technical information exchange, on international cooperation on mine clearance, and on technical cooperation and assistance; and other relevant matters. On 13 December, the Conference issued a declaration urging all States that had not done so to accede to amended Protocol II as soon as possible. It also recommended that the Secretary-General, as depositary, and the President of the Conference exercise their authority to achieve the goal of universality of the Protocol. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 55/37 (see below), the Conference decided to convene the Third Annual Conference on 10 December 2001, in Geneva.

2001 second review conference

In accordance with a decision of the First Review Conference of the States Parties to the Convention in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 484] to convene a further conference five years after the entry into force of the amendments it had adopted, but not later than 2001, the Preparatory Committee for the Second Review Conference held its first session (Geneva, 14 December) [CCW/CONF.II/PC.I/1].

The Committee reviewed the operation and status of the Convention and its Protocols, and considered related proposals. After addressing, among other things, the organization of work of the review conference and its subsidiary bodies, the Committee agreed that more consultations were needed and deferred decisions on those matters to its second session in April 2001. Noting the recommendation of General Assembly resolution 55/37 (see below), the Committee scheduled the review conference from 11 to 21 December 2001, in Geneva.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/563], adopted resolution 55/37 without vote [agenda item 77].

Practical disarmament

The Group of Interested States, established in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 531] to examine and support concrete projects of practical disarmament, met four times in 2000 (10 February, 6 June, 11 September, 12 December) to discuss practical disarmament measures in Albania, the Congo and the Niger (see p. 518). Working closely with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and DDA, the Group explored the use of the United Nations Trust Fund for the Consolidation of Peace through Practical Measures, also established in 1998 [ibid.], to support weapons collection and destruction programmes in those countries.

Disarmament Commission action. In 2000 [A/55/42], the Disarmament Commission allocated to Working Group II the item entitled "Practical confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms". On 6 July, the Working Group adopted its report by consensus.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/559], adopted resolution 55/33 G without vote [agenda item 73 (j)].

Consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/45 N of 10 December 1996, 52/38 G of 9 December 1997, 53/77 M of 4 December 1998 and 54/54 H of 1 December 1999,

Convinced that a comprehensive and integrated approach towards certain practical disarmament measures, such as arms control, particularly with regard to small arms and light weapons, confidence-building measures, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants, demining and conversion, often is a prerequisite to maintaining and consolidating peace and security and thus provides a basis for effective rehabilitation and social and economic development in areas that have suffered from conflict,

Noting with satisfaction that the international community is more than ever aware of the importance of such practical disarmament measures, especially with regard to the growing problems arising from the excessive and destabilizing accumulation and proliferation of small arms and light weapons, which pose a threat to peace and security and reduce the prospects for economic development in many regions, particularly in post-conflict situations,

Stressing that further efforts are needed in order to develop and effectively implement programmes of practical disarmament in affected areas,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General prepared with the assistance of the Group of Governmental Experts on Small Arms, and in particular the recommendations contained therein, as an important contribution to the consolidation of the peace process through practical disarmament measures,

Taking into account the deliberations at the 2000 substantive session of the Disarmament Commission in Working Group II on agenda item 5, entitled "Practical confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms", and encouraging the Disarmament Commission to continue its efforts aimed at the identification of such measures,

1. Stresses, in the context of the present resolution, the particular relevance of the "Guidelines on conventional arms control/limitation and disarmament, with particular emphasis on consolidation of peace in the context of General Assembly resolution 51/45 N", adopted by the Disarmament Commission by consensus at its 1999 substantive session;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures, submitted pursuant to resolution 51/45 N, and once again encourages Member States, as well as regional arrangements and agencies, to lend their support to the implementation of the recommendations contained therein;

3. Welcomes the activities undertaken by the group of interested States that was formed in New York in March 1998, and invites the group to continue to analyse lessons learned from previous disarmament and peace-building projects, as well as to promote new practical disarmament measures to consolidate peace, especially as undertaken or designed by affected States themselves;

4. Encourages Member States, including the group of interested States, to lend their support to the Secretary-General in responding to requests by Member States to collect and destroy small arms and light weapons in post-conflict situations;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures".

Transparency

Conference on Disarmament. In 2000, the issue of transparency in armaments was considered during plenary meetings of the Conference on Disarmament [A/55/27], mainly in connection with efforts to find a comprehensive agreement on the establishment of subsidiary bodies on the agenda items. The two main proposals in that regard [CD/1620, CD/1624] envisaged the appointment of a special coordinator to seek the views of Conference members on the most appropriate way to deal with transparency, which could not be done due to the lack of consensus on a comprehensive programme of work (see p. 485).

UN Register of Conventional Arms

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/54 O [YUN 1999, p. 496], the Secretary-General submitted the eighth annual report on the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms [A/55/299 & Corr.1 & Add.1-6], which was established in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 75] to enhance levels of transparency on arms transfers.

The report presented information provided by 96 Governments on imports and exports during the 1999 calendar year in the seven categories of conventional arms (battle tanks, armoured combat vehicles, large-calibre artillery systems, attack helicopters, combat aircraft, warships, and missiles and missile launchers). Governments also provided information on procurement from national production and military holdings. The report indicated a slight increase in the number of submissions.

Group of Governmental Experts

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/54 O [YUN 1999, p. 496], the Secretary-General, in August [A/55/281], reported on the continuing operations of the Register and its further development, with data provided from the Group of Governmental Experts, which had held three sessions between March and August (New York). Regarding further development, the Group considered expanding the scope of the Register to include data on military holdings and procurement through national production on the same basis as data on transfers, and to add a new category to include weapons of mass destruction. The question of the relationship between existing categories and possible new categories of equipment of conventional arms, including light weapons and small arms, was discussed, as was the way that relationship could be of relevance to the purpose of the Register. The Group made a series of recommendations to Member States and to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/559], adopted resolution 55/33 U by recorded vote (149-0-16) [agenda item 73 (k)].

Transparency in armaments

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/36 L of 9 December 1991, 47/52 L of 15 December 1992, 48/75 E of 16 December 1993, 49/75 C of 15 December 1994, 50/70 D of 12 December 1995, 51/45 H of 10 December 1996, 52/38 R of 9 December 1997, 53/77 V of 4 December 1998 and 54/54 O of 1 December 1999 entitled "Transparency in armaments",

Continuing to take the view that an enhanced level of transparency in armaments contributes greatly to confidence-building and security among States and that the establishment of the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms constitutes an important step forward in the promotion of transparency in military matters,

Welcoming the consolidated report of the Secretary-General on the Register, which includes the returns of Member States for 1999,

Welcoming also the response of Member States to the request contained in paragraphs 9 and 10 of resolution 46/36 L to provide data on their imports and exports of arms, as well as available background information regarding their military holdings, procurement through national production and relevant policies,

Welcoming further the report of the Secretary-General on the continuing operation of the Register and its further development,

Stressing that the continuing operation of the Register and its further development should be reviewed in order to secure a Register that is capable of attracting the widest possible participation,

1. Reaffirms its determination to ensure the effective operation of the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms, as provided for in paragraphs 7 to 10 of resolution 46/36 L;

2. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General on the continuing operation of the Register and its further development and the recommendations contained therein;

3. Calls upon Member States, with a view to achieving universal participation, to provide the Secretary-General by 31 May annually with the requested data and information for the Register, including nil reports if appropriate, on the basis of resolutions 46/36 L and

47/52 L, the recommendations contained in paragraph 64 of the 1997 report of the Secretary-General on the continuing operation of the Register and its further development and the recommendations contained in paragraph 94 of the 2000 report of the Secretary-General and the appendices and annexes thereto;

4. Invites Member States in a position to do so, pending further development of the Register, to provide additional information on procurement from national production and military holdings and to make use of the "Remarks" column in the standardized reporting form to provide additional information such as types or models;

5. Reaffirms its decision, with a view to further development of the Register, to keep the scope of and participation in the Register under review and, to that end:

(a) Recalls its request to Member States to provide the Secretary-General with their views on the continuing operation of the Register and its further development and on transparency measures related to weapons of mass destruction;

(b) Requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of a group of governmental experts to be convened in 2003, on the basis of equitable geographical representation, to prepare a report on the continuing operation of the Register and its further development, taking into account the work of the Conference on Disarmament, the views expressed by Member States and the reports of the Secretary-General on the continuing operation of the Register and its further development, with a view to a decision at its fifty-eighth session;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to implement the recommendations in his 2000 report on the continuing operation of the Register and its further development and to ensure that sufficient resources are made available for the Secretariat to operate and maintain the Register;

7. Invites the Conference on Disarmament to consider continuing its work undertaken in the field of transparency in armaments;

8. Reiterates its call upon all Member States to cooperate at the regional and subregional levels, taking fully into account the specific conditions prevailing in the region or subregion, with a view to enhancing and coordinating international efforts aimed at increased openness and transparency in armaments;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on progress made in implementing the present resolution;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Transparency in armaments".

Anti-personnel mines

1997 Convention

The number of States parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction (Mine-Ban Convention), which was adopted in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 503] and entered into force in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 498], totalled 109 as at 31 December. During the year, 18 States ratified or acceded to the Convention.

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/54 B [YUN 1999, p. 499], the Second Meeting of the States Parties to the Convention was convened in Geneva from 11 to 15 September [APLC/MSP. 2/2000/1].

The Meeting reviewed the status and operation of the Convention and held consultations on international cooperation and assistance on mine clearance, victim assistance, socio-economic reintegration and mine awareness, the destruction of stockpiled anti-personnel mines, and the development of technologies for mine action. It adopted the President's Action Programme, which provided a summary of concrete initiatives and activities that flowed from the work of the five Standing Committees of Experts (SCEs), as well as other initiatives that had been announced since the conclusion of the work of the SCEs or during the Second Meeting. The States parties attending the Meeting adopted a declaration, reaffirming their commitment to eradicating anti-personnel mines, and calling on those who continued to use those weapons, as well as those who developed, acquired, stockpiled and transferred them, to join in the task.

The SCE on the general status and operation of the Convention noted that there was no evidence of either production or transfer of anti-personnel mines from States parties and that the number of countries producing mines, including non-States parties, had decreased from 55 to 16. Regarding the destruction of stockpiles, it noted that 25 States parties had completed the destruction process, in another 24 the process was under way, but in 17 it had not yet begun. The Committee was informed that there had been new mine victims in more than 70 countries since the Convention entered into force, and that 88 countries were considered to be mine-affected.

The SCE on victim assistance, socio-economic reintegration and mine awareness made progress regarding the development of a strategic, comprehensive and integrated approach to victim assistance.

The Third Meeting of the States Parties was scheduled for September 2001 in Managua, Nicaragua.

Regional and other approaches to disarmament

Africa

OAU, with the support and collaboration of the Institute of Security Studies (Pretoria) and the UN Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa (see p. 538) and the assistance of the Eminent Persons Group on Curbing Illicit Trafficking in Small Arms and Light Weapons, convened the first continental meeting of African experts on small arms and light weapons (Addis Ababa, 17-19 May) [A/55/323], which considered, among other things, common elements that might increase the capacity of existing institutional arrangements to address illicit proliferation, circulation and trafficking in small arms. At the thirty-sixth ordinary session of the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government (Lomé, Togo, 10-12 July) [A/55/286], member States adopted the Lomé Declaration, which contained a plan of action for ending the illicit proliferation and trafficking in small arms and light weapons that had played a major role in perpetuating conflicts on the continent.

In 2000, guidelines were finalized for national commissions on proliferation of small arms, to be established in all countries of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) in support of its 1998 moratorium on the importation, exportation and manufacture of small arms and light weapons [YUN 1998, p. 537]. The first ministerial meeting between the EU and ECOWAS (Abuja, Nigeria, 16 October) discussed co-operation on the ECOWAS moratorium, among other things. ECOWAS continued its efforts at conflict prevention and management in West Africa, and, at the Fifth Ministerial Meeting of its Mediation and Security Council (Bamako, Mali, 12-13 December), participants considered country situations.

During the year, member States of the Southern African Development Community (SADC) were in the process of negotiating a protocol on the control of firearms, ammunition and other related materials in the region. In December [A/55/696-S/2000/1200], the United States and SADC member States issued the joint United States-SADC Declaration on United Nations Sanctions and Restraint in Sale and Transfers of Conventional Arms to Regions of Conflict in Africa, which urged States, particularly suppliers, to observe UN arms embargoes, to exercise restraint in the sale and transfer of those weapons to areas of conflict on the continent and to adopt national controls over surplus stocks.

(See also p. 518 for regional activities related to small arms.)

Standing Advisory Committee

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/55 A [YUN 1999, p. 501], the Secretary-General, in July [A/55/170], described the activities of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa. In response to a 1999 decision [YUN 1999, p. 501] to incorporate the Council for Peace and Security in Central Africa (COPAX) into the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS), the Committee had decided to convene jointly with ECCAS a meeting (Malabo, Equatorial Guinea, 14-17 February 2000), which drafted the Protocol on the Council for Peace and Security in Central Africa and the Mutual Assistance Pact between the member States of ECCAS. ECCAS members adopted the two documents (Malabo, 24 February) and committed themselves to speedy ratification in order to allow their entry into force as quickly as possible. At its thirteenth ministerial meeting (N'Djamena, Chad, 2-6 May) [A/54/889-S/2000/506], the Committee, to accelerate the process of rendering COPAX operational, decided to convene a meeting of experts to consider the proposed legislative mandates of the COPAX structures, which included the early-warning mechanism, the Central African Multinational Force and the Defence Commission for the Central African countries. However, the meeting was held under ECCAS auspices (Malabo, 19-22 June).

During its fourteenth ministerial meeting (Bujumbura, Burundi, 17-18 August) [A/55/505-S/2000/1005], the Committee reviewed developments related to COPAX, as well as the implementation of the recommendations of the 1999 subregional conference on the proliferation of and illicit traffic in small arms in Central Africa [YUN 1999, p. 501].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/560], adopted resolution 55/34 B without vote [agenda item 74 (a)].

Asia and the Pacific

The Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN), its Regional Forum (ARF) and the Council for Security Cooperation in the Asia Pacific addressed issues related to security, regional stability and confidence-building. The UN Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific also contributed to security and stability in the region through its activities (see p. 539).

Foreign Ministers taking part in the thirty-third ASEAN ministerial meeting (Bangkok, 24-25 July) and the seventh meeting of ARF (Bangkok, 27 July) emphasized the importance of confidence-building measures and agreed that such efforts should be intensified. While confidence-building measures remained the primary focus of ARF, they believed that advances could be made to develop measures for preventive diplomacy. In that context, the Foreign Ministers commended the ARF intersessional support group (Singapore, 5-6 April), which had considered preventive diplomacy.

A number of other meetings concerning small arms issues were held at the regional, governmental and non-governmental levels, including a regional seminar (Jakarta, Indonesia, 3-4 May) and two conferences (Kandalama, Sri Lanka, 20-23 June; Kandy, Sri Lanka, 23-25 June), both of which emphasized the importance of co-operation and information exchange in combating the problem of illicit trafficking and proliferation of small arms in the region.

On 5 September in Tokyo [A/55/462-S/2000/974], the Russian Federation and Japan, in a joint statement on cooperation, accorded priority to contributing constructively to confidence-enhancement and stability in the Asia-Pacific region. The Russian Federation and Mongolia, on 14 November in Ulaanbaatar [A/55/644], in the Ulaanbaatar Declaration, expressed their intention to contribute to ARF and to join forces against illicit trafficking in arms and other security threats in the region.

Europe

Major security concerns in Europe related to developments in the Balkans, particularly the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) (see p. 358), which led to the proliferation of small arms and light weapons in the region.

NATO continued its activities through various bodies and through the NATO-Russian Permanent Joint Council and the Euro-Atlantic Partnership Council, both established in 1997 [YUN 1997, pp. 518 & 519]. Under OSCE, work proceeded on the 1995 General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina (the Peace Agreement) [YUN 1995, p. 544]. The States parties to the 1996 Agreement on Regional Arms Control [YUN 1996, p. 493], signed by Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, FRY, the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Republika Srpska, continued to destroy surplus weapons, despite FRY's temporary suspension of its participation in the Peace Agreement owing to the escalation of violence in Kosovo.

States participating in the negotiations on regional stability in South-Eastern Europe continued to consider confidence- and security-building measures and initiated discussions on information exchange on military forces. The EU and the United States (Queluz, Portugal, 31 May) stated that they remained committed to the goals of the 1999 Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe [YUN 1999, p. 397], designed to foster co-operation among countries of the region towards long-term stability, security and economic reconstruction and development of the region.

States parties to the 1990 Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe [YUN 1990, p. 79] continued to implement the Treaty's provisions, as well as the Vienna Document 1999 on the Negotiations on Confidence- and Security-Building Measures [YUN 1999, p. 503], which entered into force on 1 January 2000. A series of conferences and workshops relating to small arms were held under the auspices of the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe (Ljubljana, Slovenia, 27 January) and the South-East European Co-operation Process (Ohrid, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, 14 July) [A/55/323, p. 12].

Latin America

The Organization of American States (OAS) continued to be involved in disarmament and security matters in the region, especially in promoting and implementing mine clearance and transparency in conventional weapons and in curbing illicit manufacturing and trafficking in firearms. At its June meeting (San José, Costa Rica, 3-5 June) the OAS General Assembly adopted a number of resolutions relating to those issues.

With regard to mine action, OAS, Argentina and Canada, in cooperation with the UN Mine Action Service and the UN Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean (see p. 540), organized a regional seminar on the destruction of stockpiled anti-personnel mines (Buenos Aires, November). The seminar was conceived as a practical exercise to assist Latin American parties to the Mine-Ban Convention (see p. 525) in fulfilling their legal obligations to destroy all stocks within four years of the Treaty's entry into force, which had occurred on 1 March 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 498].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/559], adopted resolution 55/33 O without vote [agenda item 73 (p)].

Regional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/58 P of 4 December 1990, 46/36 I of 6 December 1991, 47/52 J of 9 December 1992, 48/75 I of 16 December 1993, 49/75 N of 15 December 1994, 50/70 K of 12 December 1995, 51/45 K of 10 December 1996, 52/38 P of 9 December 1997, 53/77 O of 4 December 1998 and 54/54 N of 1 December 1999 on regional disarmament,

Believing that the efforts of the international community to move towards the ideal of general and complete disarmament are guided by the inherent human desire for genuine peace and security, the elimination of the danger of war and the release of economic, intellectual and other resources for peaceful pursuits,

Affirming the abiding commitment of all States to the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations in the conduct of their international relations,

Noting that essential guidelines for progress towards general and complete disarmament were adopted at the tenth special session of the General Assembly,

Taking note of the guidelines and recommendations for regional approaches to disarmament within the context of global security adopted by the Disarmament Commission at its 1993 substantive session,

Welcoming the prospects of genuine progress in the field of disarmament engendered in recent years as a result of negotiations between the two super-Powers,

Taking note of the recent proposals for disarmament at the regional and subregional levels,

Recognizing the importance of confidence-building measures for regional and international peace and security,

Convinced that endeavours by countries to promote regional disarmament, taking into account the specific characteristics of each region and in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest level of armaments, would enhance the security of all States and would thus contribute to international peace and security by reducing the risk of regional conflicts,

1. Stresses that sustained efforts are needed, within the framework of the Conference on Disarmament and under the umbrella of the United Nations, to make progress on the entire range of disarmament issues;

2. Affirms that global and regional approaches to disarmament complement each other and should therefore be pursued simultaneously to promote regional and international peace and security;

3. Calls upon States to conclude agreements, wherever possible, for nuclear non-proliferation, disarmament and confidence-building measures at the regional and subregional levels;

4. Welcomes the initiatives towards disarmament, nuclear non-proliferation and security undertaken by some countries at the regional and subregional levels;

5. Supports and encourages efforts aimed at promoting confidence-building measures at the regional and subregional levels in order to ease regional tensions and to further disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation measures at the regional and subregional levels;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Regional disarmament".

Also on 20 November [meeting 69], on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/559], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/33 P by recorded vote (163-1-1) [agenda item 73 (a)].

Conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/75 J of 16 December 1993, 49/75 O of 15 December 1994, 50/70 L of 12 December 1995, 51/45 Q of 10 December 1996, 52/38 Q of 9 December 1997, 53/77 P of 4 December 1998 and 54/54 M of 1 December 1999,

Recognizing the crucial role of conventional arms control in promoting regional and international peace and security,

Convinced that conventional arms control needs to be pursued primarily in the regional and subregional contexts since most threats to peace and security in the post-cold-war era arise mainly among States located in the same region or subregion,

Aware that the preservation of a balance in the defence capabilities of States at the lowest level of armaments would contribute to peace and stability and should be a prime objective of conventional arms control,

Desirous of promoting agreements to strengthen regional peace and security at the lowest possible level of armaments and military forces,

Noting with particular interest the initiatives taken in this regard in different regions of the world, in particular the commencement of consultations among a number of Latin American countries and the proposals for conventional arms control made in the context of South Asia, and recognizing, in the context of this subject, the relevance and value of the Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe, which is a cornerstone of European security,

Believing that militarily significant States and States with larger military capabilities have a special responsibility in promoting such agreements for regional security,

Believing also that an important objective of conventional arms control in regions of tension should be to prevent the possibility of military attack launched by surprise and to avoid aggression,

1. Decides to give urgent consideration to the issues involved in conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament, as a first step, to consider the formulation of principles that can serve as a framework for regional agreements on conventional arms control, and looks forward to a report of the Conference on this subject;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 55/33 P:

Other disarmament issues

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

In 2000, the Conference on Disarmament did not establish an ad hoc committee on the prevention of an arms race in outer space. However, many delegations raised the issue of the militarization of outer space, especially in connection with ongoing plans by the United States to develop a national missile defence system (see p. 490).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/558], adopted resolution 55/32 by recorded vote (163-0-3) [agenda item 72].

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the common interest of all mankind in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Reaffirming the will of all States that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be for peaceful purposes and shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development,

Reaffirming also the provisions of articles III and IV of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,

Recalling the obligation of all States to observe the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the use or threat of use of force in their international relations, including in their space activities,

Reaffirming paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that in order to prevent an arms race in outer space further measures should be taken and appropriate international negotiations held in accordance with the spirit of the Treaty,

Recalling its previous resolutions on this issue, and taking note of the proposals submitted to the General Assembly at its tenth special session and at its regular sessions, and of the recommendations made to the competent organs of the United Nations and to the Conference on Disarmament,

Recognizing that prevention of an arms race in outer space would avert a grave danger for international peace and security,

Emphasizing the paramount importance of strict compliance with existing arms limitation and disarmament agreements relevant to outer space, including bilateral agreements, and with the existing legal regime concerning the use of outer space,

Considering that wide participation in the legal regime applicable to outer space could contribute to enhancing its effectiveness,

Noting that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, taking into account its previous efforts since its establishment in 1985 and seeking to enhance its functioning in qualitative terms, continued the examination and identification of various issues, existing agreements and existing proposals, as well as future initiatives relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space, and that this contributed to a better understanding of a number of problems and to a clearer perception of the various positions,

Noting also that there were no objections in principle in the Conference on Disarmament to the re-establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee, subject to re-examination of the mandate contained in the decision of the Conference on Disarmament of 13 February 1992,

Emphasizing the mutually complementary nature of bilateral and multilateral efforts in the field of preventing an arms race in outer space, and hoping that concrete results will emerge from those efforts as soon as possible,

Convinced that further measures should be examined in the search for effective and verifiable bilateral and multilateral agreements in order to prevent an arms race in outer space, including the weaponization of outer space,

Stressing that the growing use of outer space increases the need for greater transparency and better information on the part of the international community,

Recalling in this context its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 45/55 B of 4 December 1990, 47/51 of 9 December 1992 and 48/74 A of 16 December 1993, in which, inter alia, it reaffirmed the importance of confidence-building measures as means conducive to ensuring the attainment of the objective of the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Conscious of the benefits of confidence- and security-building measures in the military field,

Recognizing that negotiations for the conclusion of an international agreement or agreements to prevent an arms race in outer space remain a priority task of the Ad Hoc Committee and that the concrete proposals on confidence-building measures could form an integral part of such agreements,

1. Reaffirms the importance and urgency of preventing an arms race in outer space and the readiness of all States to contribute to that common objective, in conformity with the provisions of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies;

2. Reaffirms its recognition, as stated in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, that the legal regime applicable to outer space by itself does not guarantee the prevention of an arms race in outer space, that this legal regime plays a significant role in the prevention of an arms race in that environment, that there is a need to consolidate and reinforce that regime and enhance its effectiveness, and that it is important to comply strictly with existing agreements, both bilateral and multilateral;

3. Emphasizes the necessity of further measures with appropriate and effective provisions for verification to prevent an arms race in outer space;

4. Calls upon all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space and of the prevention of an arms race in outer space and to refrain from actions contrary to that objective and to the relevant existing treaties in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international cooperation;

5. Reiterates that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, has the primary role in the negotiation of a multilateral agreement or agreements, as appropriate, on the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

6. Invites the Conference on Disarmament to complete the examination and updating of the mandate contained in its decision of 13 February 1992, and to establish an ad hoc committee as early as possible during the 2001 session of the Conference;

7. Recognizes, in this respect, the growing convergence of views on the elaboration of measures designed to strengthen transparency, confidence and security in the peaceful uses of outer space;

8. Urges States conducting activities in outer space, as well as States interested in conducting such activities, to keep the Conference on Disarmament informed of the progress of bilateral and multilateral negotiations on the matter, if any, so as to facilitate its work;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space".

Disarmament and development

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/54 T [YUN 1999, p. 507], the Secretary-General, in August [A/55/258], described activities to implement the action programme adopted at the 1987 International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development [YUN 1987, p. 83]. In that context, he referred to panel discussions, meetings and expert consultations organized by the Steering Group on Disarmament and Development, established in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 506].

The UN Department for Disarmament Affairs (DDA) continued its cooperation with UNDP on the disarmament and development approach, reflected in the weapons-for-development programmes pursued to combat the proliferation of small arms and light weapons. In July, DDA began consultations with independent experts, to seek their views on the changing paradigm of disarmament and development.

Annexed to the report was the view of one State (Colombia) on the implementation of the 1987 action programme, pursuant to resolution 54/54 T.

Studies, information and training

Disarmament studies programme

The Group of Experts on the continuing operation of the UN Register of Conventional Arms and its further development, appointed by the Secretary-General pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/54 O [YUN 1999, p. 496], completed and submitted its report [A/55/281] in August (see p. 524). The Group of Governmental Experts on Small Arms, appointed by the Secretary-General in response to Assembly resolution 54/54 V [YUN 1999, p. 487], also met during the year (see p. 517).

In 2000, the Assembly, in resolution 55/33 A, requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the issue of missiles in all its aspects for consideration in 2002. By resolution 55/33 E, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to prepare, with the assistance of governmental experts, a study on disarmament and non-proliferation education.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/559], adopted resolution 55/33 E without vote [agenda item 73].

United Nations study on disarmament and non-proliferation education

The General Assembly,

Desirous of stressing the urgency of promoting concerted international efforts at disarmament and non-proliferation, especially in the field of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction and their delivery systems, with a view to strengthening international security and enhancing sustainable economic and social development,

Conscious of the need, more than a decade after the end of the cold war and at the start of the twenty-first century, to combat the negative effects of cultures of violence and complacency in the face of current dangers in this field through long-term programmes of education and training,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, with the assistance of a group of qualified governmental experts, a study on disarmament and non-proliferation, that would have the following aims:

(a) To define contemporary disarmament and non-proliferation education and training, taking into account the need to promote a culture of non-violence and peace;

(b) To assess the current situation of disarmament and non-proliferation education and training at the primary, secondary, university and postgraduate levels of education, in all regions of the world;

(c) To recommend ways to promote education and training in disarmament and non-proliferation at all levels of formal and informal education, in particular the training of educators, parliamentarians, municipal leaders, military officers and government officials;

(d) To examine ways to utilize more fully evolving pedagogic methods, particularly the revolution in information and communications technology, including distance learning, to enhance efforts in disarmament education and training at all levels, in the developed and the developing world;

(e) To recommend ways in which organizations of the United Nations system with special competence in disarmament or education or both can harmonize and coordinate their efforts in disarmament and non-proliferation education;

(f) To devise ways to introduce disarmament and non-proliferation education into post-conflict situations as a contribution to peace-building; and considers that the group of experts should invite representatives of organizations of the United Nations system with special competence in disarmament or education or both to participate in its work, and should also invite university educators, disarmament and peace-related institutes and non-governmental organizations that have special qualifications in education and training or in the field of disarmament and non-proliferation to make written and oral presentations to it;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on this question.

Disarmament Information Programme

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/78 E [YUN 1998, p. 548], the Secretary-General, in July [A/55/128], submitted a report on the performance of the Disarmament Information Programme from July 1998 to June 2000 and on activities planned for the next two years. The report described the activities of the UN Department for Disarmament Affairs (DDA) and efforts of the UN Department of Public Information to publicize arms limitation and disarmament. Activities, which focused on weapons of mass destruction, especially nuclear weapons, and conventional weapons, particularly small arms and light weapons, included publications, web-site access, exhibits, cooperation with civil society, training programmes, symposiums, radio broadcasts, video products and press briefings. United Nations information centres, services and offices produced or translated and disseminated information material, launched initiatives, and organized or supported local, regional and international meetings on disarmament.

In an August addendum [A/58/128/Add.1], the Secretary-General reported on the status of the Voluntary Trust Fund for the Disarmament Information Programme, which supported DDA information and outreach activities. At the end of the 1998-1999 biennium, the Fund's available balance totalled $487,012.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/560], adopted resolution 55/34 A without vote [agenda item 74 (g)].

United Nations Disarmament Information Programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision taken in 1982 at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, by which the World Disarmament Campaign was launched,

Bearing in mind its resolution 47/53 D of 9 December 1992, in which it decided, inter alia, that the World Disarmament Campaign should be known thereafter as the "United Nations Disarmament Information Programme" and the World Disarmament Campaign Voluntary Trust Fund as the "Voluntary Trust Fund for the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme",

Recalling its resolutions 49/76 A of 15 December 1994, 51/46 A of 10 December 1996 and 53/78 E of 4 December 1998,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme;

2. Commends the Secretary-General for his efforts to make effective use of the limited resources available to him in disseminating as widely as possible, including by electronic means, information on arms limitation and disarmament to Governments, the media, non-governmental organizations, educational communities and research institutes, and in carrying out a seminar and conference programme;

3. Stresses the importance of the Programme, as a significant instrument in enabling all Member States to participate fully in the deliberations and negotiations on disarmament in the various United Nations bodies, and in assisting them in complying with treaties, as required, and in contributing to agreed mechanisms for transparency;

4. Notes with appreciation the cooperation of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat and its information centres in pursuit of the objectives of the Programme;

5. Recommends that the Programme focus its efforts:

(a) To inform, to educate and to generate public understanding of the importance of multilateral action and support for it, including action by the United Nations and the Conference on Disarmament, in the field of arms limitation and disarmament, in a factual, balanced and objective manner, and, inter alia, to continue to publish in all official languages The United Nations Disarmament Yearbook, periodic hard copy and regular electronic updates of the Status of Multilateral Arms Regulation and Disarmament Agreements and ad hoc publications in hard copy and electronic form;

(b) To continue to coordinate, produce and manage the disarmament Internet web site as a part of the United Nations web site with a view to maintaining an updated source of accessible information, and, within available resources, to produce versions of the site in as many official languages as feasible;

(c) To continue to intensify United Nations interaction with the public, principally non-governmental organizations and research institutes, to help further an informed debate on topical issues of arms limitation, disarmament and security;

(d) To continue to organize discussions on topics of interest in the field of arms limitation and disarmament with a view to broadening understanding and facilitating an exchange of views and information among Member States and civil society;

6. Emphasizes the importance of contributions to the Voluntary Trust Fund for the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme to sustain a strong outreach programme, and invites all Member States to make contributions to the Fund;

7. Commends the Secretary-General for supporting the efforts of universities, other academic institutions and non-governmental organizations active in the education field in widening the worldwide availability of disarmament education, invites him to continue to support and cooperate with educational institutions and non-governmental organizations engaged in such efforts, without cost to the regular budget to the United Nations, and takes note of the proposal made by the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters in July 2000 for a study on disarmament and non-proliferation education;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report covering both the implementation of the activities of the Programme by the United Nations system during the two previous years and the activities of the Programme contemplated by the system for the following two years;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the item entitled "United Nations Disarmament Information Programme".

Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters

The Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters, which advised the Secretary-General on the disarmament studies programme and implementation of the Disarmament Information Programme and served as the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR) (see below), held its thirty-fourth and thirty-fifth sessions (New York, 31 January–2 February; Geneva, 5–7 July) [A/55/349].

At the first session, the Board recommended that a study be commissioned on disarmament and non-proliferation education and training, with the view to combating governmental and public complacency regarding threats to international security, such as an enhanced emphasis on nuclear weapons in military doctrines, missile proliferation and possible deployment of national missile defence systems. It considered the issue of small arms proliferation in the light of the 2001 UN Conference on small arms (see p. 518), and identified a triple-track approach to the Conference: global consciousness-raising, the creation of international norms, and regional and subregional initiatives.

In July, the Board examined the question of the revolution in military affairs and agreed to study the issue further. Under its future work programme, the Board proposed to consider, among other issues, measures to reduce the risk of nuclear war significantly, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/54 K [YUN 1999, p. 468], and a review of its mandated function to advise the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Disarmament Information Programme.

UN Institute for Disarmament Research

The Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the UNIDIR Director covering the period from July 1999 to June 2000, as well as the report of the UNIDIR Board of Trustees on the proposed 2000–2001 programme of work [A/55/267].

The Institute's research activities continued to focus on global security, regional security and human security. The report highlighted UNIDIR's cooperation with research institutes, DDA and other UN system agencies, and contained a list of publications issued during the reporting period.

The Board of Trustees recommended a subvention of $213,000 from the UN regular budget for 2001, which was approved by the Assembly on 23 December (resolution 55/238, section VI), on the understanding that no additional appropriation would be required under section 4, Disarmament, of the proposed programme budget for the 2000-2001 biennium.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/561], adopted resolution 55/35 A without vote [agenda item 75 (d)].

Twentieth anniversary of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 34/83 M of 11 December 1979, in which it requested the Secretary-General to establish the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research on the basis of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General,

Reaffirming its resolution 39/148 H of 17 December 1984, in which it approved the statute of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research, renewed the invitation to Governments to consider making voluntary contributions to the Institute and requested the Secretary-General to continue to give the Institute administrative and other support,

Recalling its resolution 45/62 G of 4 December 1990 adopted on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the Institute,

Considering the continuing need for the international community to have access to independent and in-depth research on security issues and prospects for disarmament, taking note of the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the in-depth evaluation of the disarmament programme, in which the Office indicated the erosion of the value of the United Nations subvention to the Institute in real terms and recommended the development of proposals for alleviating difficulties regarding the current financial and organizational arrangements adopted in implementation of the statute of the Institute and that those proposals should be submitted to the General Assembly for consideration at its fifty-fifth session, and having considered the annual report of the Director of the Institute and report of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters in its capacity as the Board of Trustees of the Institute, in which hope was expressed that the United Nations subvention to the Institute would be restored to its pre-1996 level and adjusted for inflation,

1. Welcomes the twentieth anniversary of the establishment of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research;

2. Recognizes the importance and high quality of the work of the Institute;

3. Reiterates its conviction that the Institute should continue to conduct independent research on problems relating to disarmament and security and to undertake specialized research requiring a high degree of expertise;

4. Requests all Member States to consider making financial contributions to the Institute in order to ensure its viability and the quality of its work over the long term;

5. Recommends that the Secretary-General seek ways to increase the funding of the Institute, within existing resources.

Disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services

In 2000 [A/55/152 & Corr.1], 28 fellows participated in the UN disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme. The programme, which began in Geneva on 4 September and ended in New York on 3 November, included a study session in Geneva; study trips to Austria, The Hague (Netherlands), Germany and Japan; and a study session at Headquarters.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/560], adopted resolution 55/34 C without vote [agenda item 74(h)].

United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme,

Recalling its decision, contained in paragraph 108 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, to establish a programme of fellowships on disarmament, as well as its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, in which it decided, inter alia, to continue the programme,

Noting with satisfaction that the programme has already trained an appreciable number of public officials selected from geographical regions represented in the United Nations system, most of whom are now in positions of responsibility in the field of disarmament affairs in their respective countries or Governments,

Recalling all the annual resolutions on the matter since the thirty-seventh session of the General Assembly, in 1982, including resolution 50/71 A of 12 December 1995,

Noting with satisfaction that the programme as designed continues to enable an increasing number of public officials, in particular from the developing countries, to acquire more expertise in the sphere of disarmament,

Believing that the forms of assistance available to Member States, in particular to developing countries, under the programme will enhance the capabilities of their officials to follow ongoing deliberations and negotiations on disarmament, both bilateral and multilateral,

1. Reaffirms its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly and the report of the Secretary-General approved by the Assembly in its resolution 33/71 E of 14 December 1978;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Germany and Japan for inviting the 1999 and 2000 fellows to study selected activities in the field of disarmament, and to the Government of the United States of America for having organized in 1999 a specific study programme in the field of disarmament thereby contributing to the fulfilment of the overall objectives of the programme;

3. Expresses its appreciation also to the International Atomic Energy Agency, the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization and the Monterey Institute of International Studies for having organized specific study programmes in the field of disarmament in their respective areas of competence, thereby contributing to the objectives of the programme;

4. Commends the Secretary-General for the diligence with which the programme has continued to be carried out;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to implement annually the Geneva-based programme within existing resources and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session the item entitled "United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services".

Recognizing that the changes that have taken place in the world have created new opportunities as well as posed new challenges for the pursuit of disarmament and, in this regard, bearing in mind that the regional centres for peace and disarmament can contribute substantially to understanding and cooperation among the States in each particular region in the areas of peace, disarmament and development,

Noting that in paragraph 146 of the Final Document of the Twelfth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Durban, South Africa, from 29 August to 3 September 1998, the heads of State or Government welcomed the decision adopted by the General Assembly on maintaining and revitalizing the three regional centres for peace and disarmament in Nepal, Peru and Togo,

1. Reiterates the importance of the United Nations activities at the regional level to increase the stability and security of its Member States, which could be promoted in a substantive manner by the maintenance and revitalization of the three regional centres for peace and disarmament;

2. Reaffirms that, in order to achieve positive results, it is useful for the three regional centres to carry out dissemination and educational programmes that promote regional peace and security aimed at changing basic attitudes with respect to peace and security and disarmament so as to support the achievement of the purposes and principles of the United Nations;

3. Appeals to Member States in each region and those that are able to do so, as well as to international governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations, to make voluntary contributions to the regional centres in their respective regions to strengthen their programmes of activities and implementation;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary support, within existing resources, to the regional centres in carrying out their programmes of activities;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "United Nations regional centres for peace and disarmament".

Africa

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/55 B [YUN 1999, p. 512], the Secretary-General described the activities of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa [A/55/171], covering the period from September 1999 to July 2000. The Centre was established in Lomé, Togo, in 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 85].

The Secretary-General reported that the Centre continued its revitalization process in the priority areas endorsed in 1999 by the Group of African States at the United Nations [YUN 1999, p. 511], which included support for peace initiatives in Africa; arms control and disarmament; and information, research and publications.

During the reporting period, the Centre participated in activities that supported the implementation of the ECOWAS Declaration of a Moratorium on the Importation, Exportation and Manufacture of Small Arms and Light Weapons in West Africa, adopted in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 537], and facilitated weapons collection exercises in Togo.

The Centre assisted the UN Peace-building Support Office in Guinea-Bissau in promoting the collection, neutralization and destruction of small arms in the country. It provided support to a conference (Niamey, Niger, March) to sensitize civil society on weapons proliferation in the Niger; to regional meetings, also in March, in preparation for the 2001 UN Conference on small arms (see p. 518); and to the West African Conference on Child Soldiers (Accra, Ghana, 27-28 April).

In July, the Centre initiated assessment missions to the Central African subregion to develop a "disarmament for development" programme.

Asia and the Pacific

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 54/55 C [YUN 1999, p. 513], the Secretary-General reported in July on the activities of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific from August 1999 to July 2000 [A/55/181]. The Centre was inaugurated in Kathmandu, Nepal, in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 88].

During the reporting period, the Centre organized the twelfth regional disarmament meeting in the Asia and Pacific region (Kathmandu, 15-17 February 2000) on issues relating to strategic stability, nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament, with a focus on measures and strategies towards a world free of nuclear weapons. The fourth and fifth (Sapporo, Japan, 5-8 October 1999; 2-5 April 2000) UN-sponsored expert group meetings to assist the five Central Asian States in drafting a treaty to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Central Asia (see p. 508) were organized by the Centre. A regional seminar (Jakarta, Indonesia, 4 May 2000), held with the assistance of DDA, identified common concerns relating to problems from trafficking in small arms and light weapons.

Owing to the lack of sufficient extrabudgetary resources to finance the physical establishment and operation of the Centre in Kathmandu, the Director continued to operate from Headquarters.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/55/560], adopted resolution 55/34 H without vote [agenda item 74 (c)].

United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific

The General Assembly,

Latin America and the Caribbean

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 54/55 F [YUN 1999, p. 514], the Secretary-General reported in July on the activities of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean from August 1999 to July 2000 [A/55/169]. The Centre was inaugurated in Lima, Peru, in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 88].

The Secretary-General reported that activities in the period under review related to: firearms, ammunition and explosives; conventional arms and peace operations; nuclear disarmament issues; UN system activities; and information and public events.

Several activities were carried out under the "Regional clearing house on firearms, ammunition and explosives" project, an initiative intended to serve as a tool for nurturing national and regional expertise in the area of practical disarmament, through workshops, training courses and preventive programmes. In that regard, two awareness-building workshops (Lima, 23-24

November 1999; Fort-de-France, Martinique, 23-24 May 2000) were held in cooperation with the Inter-American Drug Abuse Control Commission, and focused on the import, export and in-transit movement of firearms, their parts and ammunition in the region.

Under conventional arms and peace operations, the Centre organized a workshop (Lima, 19 May 2000) on the military perspective of regional security: consultations with Lima military attachés, which discussed, among other things, the Centre's mandate, the role of the United Nations in enhancing regional security and cooperation in peace operations. The Centre helped organize a seminar on the destruction of stockpiles of anti-personnel mines (Buenos Aires, Argentina) and provided support to the regional preparatory meeting for the 2001 UN Conference on small arms (Brasilia, Brazil) (see p. 518).

At the end of the 1998-1999 biennium, the balance of the Trust Fund for the Centre totalled $132,678.

Chapter VIII

Other political and security questions

United Nations consideration of other political and security questions in 2000 included the Organization's activities to support new or restored democracies, the promotion of self-determination of the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories, and the peaceful uses of outer space.

The Fourth International Conference of New or Restored Democracies was held in Cotonou, Benin, in December. The Conference adopted the Cotonou Declaration, by which the participants undertook to foster a culture of peace and of democracy in all its dimensions, with full respect for human rights, and to create conditions conducive to sustainable development. To implement those undertakings, the Conference urged that the follow-up mechanism established by the Third (1997) Conference be strengthened and that the Secretary-General designate a focal point in the Organization to support government efforts and provide assistance to the follow-up mechanism for the Fourth Conference.

The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples continued to review progress in implementing the 1960 Declaration, particularly the exercise of self-determination by the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories. In December, the General Assembly observed the fortieth anniversary of the adoption of that Declaration, reviewed the achievements of the first International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (1990-2000), which ended during the year, and declared the period 2001-2010 as the Second International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism.

The United Nations continued to adopt measures to reorient its public information and communications policies to better disseminate information on the work of the Organization and a unified message of its continuing relevance. To that end, it worked to expand its use of up-to-date technology and to improve coordination of the UN system's information and communications activities.

Also in December, the Assembly noted the plan of action to implement the recommendations of the Third (1999) United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and requested the Secretary-General to implement that plan.

The Assembly further adopted a resolution on the role of science and technology in the context of international security and disarmament and another on developments in information and telecommunications in the context of international security.

Support for democracies

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 54/36 [YUN 1999, p. 516], the Secretary-General submitted two reports in October on UN support for the efforts of Governments to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies. The first report [A/55/489] described the activities of the follow-up mechanism to the Third (1997) International Conference of New or Restored Democracies on Democracy and Development [YUN 1997, p. 530]. That mechanism, comprising participants from interested countries, the UN system, academia and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), met in June in New York under Romania's chairmanship to review preparations for the forthcoming Fourth International Conference (see p. 544) and discuss UN system democratization activities and the Secretary-General's March note verbale to Member States (see p. 543) requesting comments on the review and on the suggestions in his 1999 report on new or restored democracies [YUN 1999, p. 515]. Ongoing preparatory activities included: a forum for youth and another for civil society; specific regional conferences or seminars on lessons learned about democratic transition in various parts of the world; and setting the agenda of the Conference, in order to arrive at its objectives of identifying the best practices in building democracy and human rights, defining an analytical framework showing, through case studies, the interdependence among peace, security, development and democracy, and illustrating the implications of the democratic process for sustainable development.

The report examined the interlinkages among the key concepts of good governance, human rights, sustainable development and peace. It pointed out that, in the light of increased recognition by the UN system of the importance of strengthening democratic institutions and improving governance, already 50 per cent of United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) resources had been allocated to programmes promoting political, economic and social governance. The United Nations itself was currently supporting initiatives that promoted policy dialogue to widen development choices; strengthened the capacities of key democratic governing institutions for people-centred development; promoted decentralization for stronger local governance and community empowerment; and increased efficiency and accountability in the public sector. The developing countries were requesting more services, however, for the furtherance of good governance as a tool for achieving human development goals. To foster a culture of human rights, the UN treaty-based human rights system provided the normative foundation for implementing and monitoring human rights in all countries. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights could provide advisory services and technical assistance to conduct educational campaigns and to prepare reports under the core human rights treaties.

Also examined were insights for democratization gained from UN experience in electoral assistance, which suggested several areas for further work that would contribute to a broader framework for UN assistance to the democratization process, most critically in the expansion of the rule of law.

The Secretary-General concluded his report by repeating the main thrust of what he called the "forward-looking" recommendations of the International Institute for Democracy and Electoral Assistance, which had emerged from its two seminars (Stockholm, Sweden, February and June) on UN assistance in the democratization process. Those recommendations called on the United Nations to: adopt a learning approach; develop a "democracy database" and strategic partnerships; involve local political, social and communal actors; develop integrated programmes; design common country strategies and ensure continuous assessments; develop a roster of experts, avoiding mainly Western or "Westernized" experts; establish a strategic Secretariat unit to provide an "overall picture"; and improve coordination and information sharing.

The Secretary-General believed that the Institute's suggestions deserved the international community's serious consideration, noting, however, that their implementation necessitated more resources than were currently available from UN regular and extrabudgetary sources. He said the UN system stood ready to see democracy-building and democratization assistance placed among its foremost priorities, but for that to happen, it needed the political, administrative and financial support of all Member States.

In his second October report [A/55/520], the Secretary-General indicated that, to date, Cuba, Germany, Japan, Romania and San Marino had replied to his March note verbale communicating their views on the review contained in his 1999 report [YUN 1999, p. 515] and on their experiences and "lessons learned" as new, restored or established democracies and/or as donors supporting democratic institutions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 27 November [meeting 71], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/43 without vote [draft: A/55/L.32/Rev.1 & Add.1] [agenda item 39].

Support by the United Nations system of the efforts of Governments to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies

The General Assembly,

6. Stresses that activities undertaken by the Organization must be in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

7. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to improve the capacity of the Organization to respond effectively to the requests of Member States through co-

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Support by the United Nations system of the efforts of Governments to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies".

On 4 December, the Assembly, in resolution 55/96, bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/47 of 25 April [E/2000/23 & Corr.1], called on States to consolidate democracy by promoting pluralism, the protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, maximizing the participation of individuals in decision-making and the development of effective public institutions, including an independent judiciary, accountable legislature and public service and an electoral system that ensured periodic, free and fair elections.

Fourth International Conference

The Fourth International Conference of New or Restored Democracies was held in Cotonou, Benin, from 4 to 6 December [A/55/889]. Organized and hosted by Benin with UNDP assistance, the Conference held a general debate on: the best practices for strengthening democracy; conflict prevention, management and settlement in ways to preserve democracy; maximization of participation by youth and women in democratization; and obstacles to the consolidation of democracy. Parallel thematic debates were held on democracy in relation to good governance and development, and on the question of conflict prevention, management and resolution in Africa. The Conference concluded with the adoption of the Cotonou Declaration on peace, security, democracy and development.

In the Declaration, the participants, reaffirming the significant contribution of disarmament and arms control to international peace and security, undertook to promote a culture of peace within their respective countries. They pledged to consolidate democracy through political pluralism, greater citizen participation in decision-making, particularly by women and minorities, good governance and efforts to fight corruption. They further pledged to guarantee the rule of law and separation of constitutional powers and to contribute to the emergence of a free civil society, as well as to promote a culture of democracy in all its dimensions, with full respect for human rights.

Other undertakings concerned the creation of conditions conducive to sustainable development, primarily through the eradication of poverty and endemic diseases, such as HIV/AIDS and malaria; promotion of gender equality and women's economic independence; prioritizing protection of the rights, development and survival of the child; and support for initiatives for external debt relief or cancellation and efforts to find lasting solutions to the debt burden of new or restored democracies.

To enable the implementation of the foregoing undertakings, the participants urged the expansion of the services and other support activities of the UN system, other international organizations and NGOs, and called for more substantial development assistance from States and international financial institutions. They also recommended a series of actions to be taken by civil society organizations, the private sector, donor countries and the UN system. Finally, they called on the Secretary-General to designate a focal point within the UN system to support efforts to consolidate democracy and provide assistance to the follow-up mechanism for the Fourth International Conference.

As requested in General Assembly resolution 54/35 [YUN 1999, p. 517], the Secretary-General submitted an October report on the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic [A/55/476], declared in 1986 to promote cooperation among States of the region in the political, economic, scientific, technical, cultural and other fields [YUN 1986, p. 369]. The Secretary-General stated that, as at 10 October, one Government and eight UN organizations and bodies had responded to his request for views on the implementation of the declaration's objectives.

Nigeria transmitted to the Assembly the Declaration and the Havana Programme of Action adopted by the South Summit of the Group of 77 (Havana, Cuba, 12-14 April) [A/55/74].

Decolonization

The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Special Committee on decolonization) held its annual session in New York in two parts—18 February, 24 and 28 March and 25 April for the first part, and from 5 to 20 July for the second. It considered various aspects of the implementation of the 1960 Declaration, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 1514(XV) [YUN 1960, p. 49], including general decolonization issues and the situation of individual Non-Self-Governing Territories (NSGTs). Pursuant to Assembly resolution 54/91 [YUN 1999, p. 523], the Special Committee transmitted to the Assembly the report on its 2000 activities [A/55/23].

Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism

Fortieth anniversary

The Chairman of the Special Committee on decolonization, in a 28 August letter to the Secretary-General [A/55/337], noted that the year 2000 marked the fortieth anniversary of the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and, in accordance with the recommendation of the Special Committee's Pacific regional seminar (see p. 548), proposed that the General Assembly devote a plenary meeting to observe the anniversary. By decision 55/410 of 14 November, the Assembly took note of the letter and decided to hold a plenary meeting for that purpose during the main part of its fifty-fifth (2000) session.

The observance took place on 8 December [meeting 83]. In his message to the Assembly on that occasion, the Secretary-General said that not only was the Declaration an expression of support by the majority of Member States for the liberation struggle of colonial territories, but it had also become a forceful tool with which to spur the implementation of the provisions on NSGTs in the Charter of the United Nations. While there was cause for celebration, there was also a need for awareness of the challenges ahead, as the United Nations faced the task of completing the implementation of the Declaration and of all the Organization's relevant resolutions on decolonization in the remaining NSGTs. The Secretary-General appealed to the administering Powers concerned to assist the Special Committee in the discharge of its mandate.

End of first International Decade

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 46/181 [YUN 1991, p. 777], submitted in October a final report [A/55/497] on the achievements of the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (1990-2000), declared by the Assembly in resolution 43/47 [YUN 1988, p. 734].

In pointing to a number of notable decolonization events that had taken place during the Decade, the Secretary-General observed that the task of eradicating colonialism remained unfinished and required further concerted and determined efforts. There were still peoples, mostly in the small island NSGTs in the Pacific and the Caribbean, who had been unable to exercise their right to self-determination in accordance with Assembly resolution 1524(XV) [YUN 1960, p. 49] and other relevant resolutions. Those Territories often faced problems stemming from their small size and population, geographical remoteness, limited natural resources and vulnerability to environmental change and natural disasters.

It was encouraging that, during the Decade, there had emerged a new international awareness of the unique development needs of the small island NSGTs. Some specialized agencies and regional commissions had exerted significant efforts to facilitate NSGT participation in their bodies as observers or associate members. Other positive developments included the critical review of the Special Committee's work to improve the effective discharge of its mandate, and to strengthen the mechanisms for consultation with the administering Powers so as to advance the implementation of the Declaration in the Territories under their administration. The establishment of a generic work plan to be applied to each Territory on a case-by-case basis and the informal meetings with the administering Powers on American Samoa and Pitcairn were steps in the right direction. The Secretary-General encouraged the administering Powers to continue to cooperate fully with the Committee and stressed the importance of continuous consultation with the peoples of those Territories to ascertain their wishes on their future.

The Secretary-General concluded that, while progress might have been limited during the Decade, it had provided a framework for concerted international action for the eradication of colonialism and served as a measure of what remained to be done. The trends described pointed to encouraging signs for the future.

Second International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism

As indicated by the Secretary-General's foregoing October report [A/55/497], the Special Committee on decolonization, in its examination of the first International Decade's achievements, took account of the proposal by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries at its Thirteenth Ministerial Conference (Cartagena, Colombia, 8-9 April) [A/54/917-S/2000/580] for the declaration of a new decade, to commence in 2001. That proposal was subsequently endorsed by the Pacific regional seminar (see p. 548), which also stressed the need to formulate an updated action plan for the eradication of colonialism, focusing on the self-determination of NSGTs, with the continued use of regional seminars as a means of hearing the views of the peoples concerned.

The Special Committee [A/55/23], having reviewed progress in the implementation of the plan of action for the first Decade [YUN 1991, p. 777] and having noted with concern that implementation could not be completed by the end of 2000 as envisaged, recommended a draft resolution for adoption by the General Assembly by which, among other things, it would declare the period 2001-2010 the Second International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Committee on decolonization [A/55/23], adopted resolution 55/146 by recorded vote (125-2-30) [agenda item 18].

Second International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism

The General Assembly,

Recalling that 2000 marks the fortieth anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling also its resolution 43/47 of 22 November 1988, by which the General Assembly declared the period 1990-2000 as the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism, and recalling further resolution 46/181 of 19 December 1991, by which it adopted a plan of action for the Decade,

Bearing in mind the related recommendations of the Thirteenth Ministerial Conference of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held in Cartagena, Colombia, on 8 and 9 April 2000, which proposed, inter alia, the declaration of a new decade for the elimination of colonialism, and which supported the effective implementation of the related plan of action,

Bearing in mind also the endorsement of the proposed declaration of a new decade for the eradication of colonialism by the participants in the Pacific regional seminar organized by the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to review the political, economic and social conditions in the small island Non-Self-Governing Territories, held in Majuro, Marshall Islands, from 16 to 18 May 2000,

Taking into account its resolution 54/90 A of 6 December 1999, in which it noted with concern that the plan of action for the International Decade could not be concluded by 2000,

Guided by the fundamental and universal principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Having examined the relevant reports of the Secretary-General concerning the implementation of the plan of action for the International Decade,

Taking into account the important contribution of the United Nations in the field of decolonization, in particular through the Special Committee,

1. Declares the period 2001-2010 the Second International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism;

2. Calls upon Member States to redouble their efforts to implement the plan of action, as contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General, updated where necessary, to serve as the plan of action for the Second International Decade;

3. Calls upon the administering Powers to cooperate fully with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to develop a constructive programme of work on a case-by-case basis for the Non-Self-Governing Territories to facilitate the implementation of the mandate of the Special Committee and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations on decolonization, including resolutions on specific Territories;

4. Invites Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, and other governmental and non-governmental organizations, actively to support and participate in the implementation of the plan of action during the Second International Decade;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary resources for the successful implementation of the plan of action;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 55/146:

In favour: Algeria, Andorra, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nauru, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Tonga, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Croatia, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Latvia, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Micronesia, Monaco, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Romania, Slovakia, Slovenia, Sweden, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkey.

The United Kingdom stated that there was scant evidence that the activities of the first Decade were of any great benefit to the interests of the peoples of NSGTs, which were more likely to be furthered through informal dialogue between the administering Powers and the Special Committee. No plan of action for the Second Decade had been submitted, and the United Kingdom could not support a request either for resources for unspecified activities, or to renew activities that had failed to achieve their objectives.

Pacific regional seminar

As part of its activities to implement the action plan of the first International Decade, the Special Committee on decolonization [A/55/23] organized a Pacific regional seminar (Majuro, Marshall Islands, 16-18 May) to review the political, economic and social conditions in the small island NSGTs.

The seminar concluded that, throughout the Decade, such regional seminars had served as effective forums for discussing the concerns of NSGTs and for presenting their views and recommendations to the Special Committee. Implementation of the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples [YUN 1960, p. 49] was not complete as long as there remained NSGTs that had yet to exercise their right to self-determination, whose specific characteristics should in no way prevent their populations from exercising that right.

In addition to recommending measures to bring NSGTs closer to the exercise of self-determination, the seminar called for closer co-operation between the Special Committee and the Economic and Social Council to promote increased UN economic and social assistance to NSGTs, which should be given access to relevant UN programmes in furtherance of capacity-building; preparation of a report by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly on the implementation of its decolonization resolutions since the declaration of the first International Decade; organization of commemorative activities by the Special Committee for the fortieth anniversary of the 1960 Declaration and the final year of the first Decade, including a solemn Assembly meeting; use of the newly established decolonization web page by the Secretariat's Department of Political Affairs (DPA) and Department of Public Information (DPI) to intensify information dissemination on UN decolonization activities so as to raise awareness of the political rights of NSGTs and options for determining their political status; and UN supervision of acts of self-determination in the NSGTs, which should be eligible for assistance from the Electoral Assistance Division of DPA.

The seminar also endorsed the proclamation of a Second Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (see p. 547) and stressed the need for an updated action plan for the purpose.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/147 [draft: A/55/L.58 & Add.1] by recorded vote (138-2-18) [agenda item 18].

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Bearing in mind the end of the first International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism, and the declaration of the period 2001-2010 as the Second International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism, and that it is necessary to examine ways to ascertain the wishes of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories on the basis of resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions on decolonization,

Recognizing that the eradication of colonialism has been one of the priorities of the Organization and continues to be one of its priorities for the decade that begins in 2001,

Reconfirming the need to take measures to eliminate colonialism before 2010, as called for in its resolution 55/146 of 8 December 2000,

Reiterating its conviction of the need for the eradication of colonialism, as well as of racial discrimination and violations of basic human rights,

Noting with satisfaction the achievements of the Special Committee in contributing to the effective and complete implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations on decolonization,

Stressing the importance of the participation of the administering Powers in the work of the Special Committee,

Noting with concern that the non-participation of certain administering Powers has adversely affected the implementation of the mandate and work of the Special Committee,

Noting with satisfaction the cooperation and active participation of some administering Powers in the work of the Special Committee,

Noting that the other administering Powers have now agreed to work informally with the Special Committee,

Taking note of the consultations and agreements between the parties concerned in some Non-Self-Governing Territories and the action taken by the Secretary-General in relation to certain Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Aware of the pressing need of newly independent and emerging States for assistance from the United Nations and its system of organizations in the economic, social and other fields,

Eradication of Colonialism, and calls upon the administering Powers, in accordance with those resolutions, to take all necessary steps to enable the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories concerned to exercise fully as soon as possible their right to self-determination, including independence;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism;

3. Reaffirms once again that the existence of colonialism in any form or manifestation, including economic exploitation, is incompatible with the Charter of the United Nations, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

4. Reaffirms its determination to continue to take all steps necessary to bring about the complete and speedy eradication of colonialism and the faithful observance by all States of the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

5. Affirms once again its support for the aspirations of the peoples under colonial rule to exercise their right to self-determination, including independence, in accordance with relevant resolutions of the United Nations on decolonization;

6. Approves the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples covering its work during 2000, including the programme of work envisaged for 2001;

7. Calls upon the administering Powers to cooperate fully with the Special Committee to finalize before the end of 2001 a constructive programme of work on a case-by-case basis for the Non-Self-Governing Territories to facilitate the implementation of the mandate of the Special Committee and the relevant resolutions on decolonization, including resolutions on specific Territories;

(d) To finalize before the end of 2001 a constructive programme of work on a case-by-case basis for the Non-Self-Governing Territories to facilitate the implementation of the mandate of the Special Committee and the relevant resolutions on decolonization, including resolutions on specific Territories;

(e) To take all necessary steps to enlist worldwide support among Governments, as well as national and international organizations, for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration and the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

(g) To observe annually the Week of Solidarity with the Peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories;

9. Calls upon all States, in particular the administering Powers, as well as the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to give effect within their respective spheres of competence to the recommendations of the Special Committee for the implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

10. Calls upon the administering Powers to ensure that all economic activities in the Non-Self-Governing Territories under their administration do not adversely affect the interests of the peoples but instead promote development, and to assist them in the exercise of their right to self-determination;

Implementation by international organizations

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 54/85 [YUN 1999, p. 527] on the implementation of the 1960 Declaration on decolonization, the Secretary-General reported in May [A/55/72 & Corr.1] that he had brought that resolution to the attention of the specialized agencies and other bodies of the UN system, as well as of international institutions associated with the United Nations, with a request for information on their implementation activities in support of NSGTs. Replies were subsequently received from the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, UNDP, the United Nations Environment Programme and the Organization of African Unity, and were summarized in a June report [E/2000/68].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Military activities and arrangements in colonial countries

The Special Committee on decolonization considered military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration. It had before it Secretariat working papers containing, among other things, information on military activities and arrangements in Bermuda, Guam and the United States Virgin Islands [A/AC.109/2000/13, A/AC.109/2000/6, A/AC.109/2000/17 & Corr.1]. On 17 July, it recommended a draft decision for adoption by the General Assembly (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/55/575], adopted decision 55/426 by recorded vote (100-47-5) [agenda items 89 & 18].

Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration

At its 83rd plenary meeting, on 8 December 2000, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political and Decolonization Committee (Fourth Committee), adopted the following text by a recorded vote of 100 to 47, with 5 abstentions:

"1. The General Assembly, having considered the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to an item on the agenda of the Special Committee entitled 'Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration', and recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and all other relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to military activities in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories, reaffirms its strong conviction that military bases and installations in the Territories concerned could constitute an obstacle to the exercise by the people of those Territories of their right to self-determination, and reiterates its strong views that existing bases and installations, which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, should be withdrawn.

"2. Aware of the presence of such bases and installations in some of those Territories, the General Assembly urges the administering Powers concerned to continue to take all necessary measures not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States.

"3. The General Assembly reiterates its concern that military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration might run counter to the rights and interests of the colonial peoples concerned, especially their right to self-determination and independence. The Assembly once again calls upon the administering Powers concerned to terminate such activities and to eliminate such military bases in compliance with its relevant resolutions. Alternative sources of livelihood for the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories should be provided.

"4. The General Assembly reiterates that the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories and areas adjacent thereto should not be used for nuclear testing, dumping of nuclear wastes or deployment of nuclear or other weapons of mass destruction.

"5. The General Assembly deplores the continued alienation of land in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories, particularly in the small island Territories of the Pacific and Caribbean regions, for military installations. The large-scale utilization of local resources for this purpose could adversely affect the economic development of the Territories concerned.

"6. The General Assembly takes note of the decision of some of the administering Powers to close or downsize some of those military bases in the Non-Self-Governing Territories.

"7. The General Assembly requests the Secretary-General to continue to inform world public opinion of those military activities and arrangements in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories which constitute an obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

"8. The General Assembly requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the Assembly at its fifty-sixth session."

Study and training

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/86 [YUN 1999, p. 533], the Secretary-General reported on offers by the following Member States of study and training scholarships for inhabitants of NSGTs during the period 13 August 1999 to 31 May 2000: Argentina, Australia, the Czech Republic, Malaysia and Qatar [A/55/81 & Add.1]. Forty-eight Member States and one non-member State had made similar offers over the years.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/55/577], adopted resolution 55/140 without vote [agenda item 91].

Offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 54/86 of 6 December 1999,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories, prepared pursuant to its resolution 845(IX) of 22 November 1954,

Conscious of the importance of promoting the educational advancement of the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Strongly convinced that the continuation and expansion of offers of scholarships is essential in order to meet the increasing need of students from Non-Self-Governing Territories for educational and training assistance, and considering that students in those Territories should be encouraged to avail themselves of such offers,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States that have made scholarships available to the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories;

3. Invites all States to make or continue to make generous offers of study and training facilities to the inhabitants of those Territories that have not yet attained self-government or independence and, wherever possible, to provide travel funds to prospective students;

4. Urges the administering Powers to take effective measures to ensure the widespread and continuous dissemination in the Territories under their administration of information relating to offers of study and training facilities made by States and to provide all the necessary facilities to enable students to avail themselves of such offers;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution.

Visiting missions

In July, the Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of sending visiting missions to NSGTs [A/55/23]. It adopted a resolution by which it stressed the need for the periodic dispatch of such missions to help expedite the full implementation of the 1960 Declaration on decolonization, called on the administering Powers to receive those missions in the Territories under their administration, and asked its Chairman to enter into consultations with the administering Power of Guam to facilitate a mission to that Territory.

Subsequently, in two draft resolutions it recommended for adoption by the General Assembly, the Committee endorsed a number of conclusions and recommendations on the questions of Tokelau (see p. 563) and of the 11 island NSGTs (see p. 565).

Puerto Rico

In accordance with the 1998 decision of the Special Committee on decolonization concerning self-determination and independence for Puerto Rico [YUN 1998, p. 570], the Committee's Rapporteur, in a June report [A/AC.109/2000/L.3], described recent political developments and United States military and crime prevention activities in Puerto Rico, UN action and the views of the parties concerned on the question of Puerto Rico's political status.

Based on its usual practice, the Committee acceded to requests for hearings from representatives of a number of organizations, who presented their views on 12 July [A/55/23]. Subsequently, the Committee adopted a resolution without vote that reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Puerto Rico to self-determination and independence, expressed the hope that the United States would assume its responsibility to expedite a process towards the full exercise of that right, and requested the Rapporteur to report in 2001 on the resolution's implementation.

Territories under review

East Timor

On 5 July, the Special Committee on decolonization considered the issue of East Timor

[A/55/23]. Before it was a June working paper mainly summarizing 1999 political developments in East Timor, together with related UN action in that Territory [A/AC.109/2000/12]. It further provided information on the creation of the National Consultative Council of East Timor as the primary mechanism for East Timorese representatives to participate in the decision-making process, and on the Secretary-General's visit to East Timor in February 2000 for meetings with the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor and local political leaders, as well as to Indonesia for meetings with President Abdurrahman Wahid and other government officials.

The Committee granted requests for hearings from a number of NGOs and heard a statement by Indonesia. It took account of the 27 June briefing of the Security Council by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and Transitional Administrator for East Timor [meeting 4165], during which he stated that elections and, possibly, independence would take place in 2001, at some point between 30 August and December, depending on the attainment of the key benchmarks requested to be developed by the Secretary-General during his February visit to East Timor.

(For other political and security developments and human rights issues relating to East Timor, see PART ONE, Chapter IV, and PART TWO, Chapter III, respectively.)

Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

The Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) on 11 July [A/55/23], when it examined a Secretariat working paper on constitutional and political developments and on the economic, social and educational conditions in that Territory [A/AC.109/2000/11 & Corr.1].

The paper reproduced a 3 January press communiqué from Argentina [A/54/701], reiterating its determination to recover the full exercise of sovereign power over the territory and maritime areas of the Malvinas by peaceful settlement and declaring its intention to continue dialogue with the United Kingdom to consolidate mutual trust and bilateral cooperation. Argentina believed that resumption of negotiations on the question of sovereignty would help to create a favourable framework for achieving a just and definitive settlement of their dispute. Also reproduced was the 23 March reply of the United Kingdom [A/54/811], stating it had no doubt about its sovereignty over the Falkland Islands and South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands; it rejected Argentina's claims to sovereignty over those islands and the surrounding maritime areas and that the islands were under illegal occupation by the United Kingdom.

The Special Committee concluded its consideration of the question by adopting a resolution requesting Argentina and the United Kingdom to consolidate the current process of dialogue and cooperation through the resumption of negotiations in order to find, as soon as possible, a peaceful solution to their sovereignty dispute.

The President of Argentina, in concluding his statement before the Millennium Summit on 7 September [meeting 6] (see p. 47), noted that the United Nations, through several resolutions, had made similar requests of Argentina and the United Kingdom to end a colonial situation imposed by force in 1833. The United Kingdom replied [A/55/550] that it was pleased at the continued strengthening of bilateral relations with Argentina, as demonstrated by their 1999 joint statement [YUN 1999, p. 536]. However, the United Kingdom had a duty to respect and defend the right to self-determination of the people of the Falkland Islands, whose representatives had, on 11 July 2000, asked the Special Committee to recognize that they, like any other democratic people, were entitled to exercise that right, reiterating that they wanted to remain British and did not want to be part of Argentina. The United Kingdom remained committed to the joint statement despite its differences with Argentina on the subject of sovereignty. It was confident that both countries could build on that agreement in the spirit of reconciliation, cooperation and mutual interest.

By decision 55/411 of 20 November, the Assembly deferred consideration of the item on the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) and included it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth (2001) session.

Gibraltar

The Special Committee on decolonization took up the question of Gibraltar on 5 July [A/55/23]. Before it was a Secretariat working paper describing political developments and the economic, social and educational conditions in that Territory [A/AC.109/2000/10], and setting forth the positions of the United Kingdom (the administering Power), Gibraltar and Spain concerning Gibraltar's future status. The paper noted that, on 19 April, Spain and the United Kingdom successfully concluded discussions to resolve difficulties relating to Gibraltar authorities in the context of European Union and European Community instruments and related treaties. They also agreed that those arrangements did not imply any change in their respective positions on the question of Gibraltar or on the limits of that territory.

After hearing statements by Spain, the Chief Minister of Gibraltar and the Leader of the Opposition, the Special Committee decided to continue consideration of the question in 2001.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/55/578], adopted decision 55/427 without vote [agenda item 18].

Question of Gibraltar

At its 83rd plenary meeting, on 8 December 2000, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political and Decolonization Committee (Fourth Committee), adopted the following text:

"The General Assembly, recalling its decision 54/423 of 6 December 1999, and recalling at the same time that the statement agreed to by the Governments of Spain and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland at Brussels on 27 November 1984 stipulates, inter alia, the following:

"The establishment of a negotiating process aimed at overcoming all the differences between them over Gibraltar and at promoting cooperation on a mutually beneficial basis on economic, cultural, touristic, aviation, military and environmental matters. Both sides accept that the issues of sovereignty will be discussed in that process. The British Government will fully maintain its commitment to honour the wishes of the people of Gibraltar as set out in the preamble of the 1969 Constitution", takes note of the fact that, as part of this process, the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Spain and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland hold annual meetings alternately in each capital, the most recent of which was held in London on 10 December 1997, and urges both Governments to continue their negotiations with the object of reaching a definitive solution to the problem of Gibraltar in the light of relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and in the spirit of the Charter of the United Nations."

On 18 December [S/2000/1205], Spain drew attention to the summary report of the exploratory hearing on Sierra Leone diamonds (see p. 204), containing references to Gibraltar as a country. Spain wished to make clear that Gibraltar was an NSGT administered by the United Kingdom, which was subject to the decolonization process and over which Spain maintained a claim of sovereignty.

New Caledonia

The Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of New Caledonia on 10 and 12 July [A/55/23]. It had before it a Secretariat working paper describing political and economic developments in that Territory [A/AC.109/2000/4].

In accordance with the 1998 Nouméa Accord on the Territory's future status [YUN 1998, p. 574], the transfer of powers from France (the administering Power) began in 2000 and was to end in 15 to 20 years, when the Territory would opt for either full independence or a form of associated statehood. New Caledonia's Economic and Social Council, composed of 39 members, of whom 28 represented professional organizations, labour unions and associations, was formally established on 2 February.

Ratification of the 1999 constitutional amendment on voter eligibility [YUN 1999, p. 538] by a special session of the French Congress (a joint sitting of the National Assembly and Senate), scheduled for 24 January 2000, had been postponed. The Front de libération nationale kanake socialiste (FLNKS) reiterated that the amendment was a key point of the Nouméa Accord and asked that a new date be set for the session.

In February, France announced that it was proceeding with a 1999 agreement [ibid.] to divest some of its Eramet holdings and to transfer them to a public organization to be formed by New Caledonia's three provinces. Forty per cent of the transferred assets would go to each of the North and South provinces and the remaining 20 per cent to the Loyalty Islands.

A later Secretariat working paper [A/AC.109/2001/14] reported that, in July, elections were repeated in the Loyalty Islands after the French State Council ruled that there had been irregularities during the 1999 elections [YUN 1999, p. 538]. The results confirmed the majority held by FLNKS in the Loyalty Islands provincial assembly.

The opposing positions of the Rassemblement pour la Calédonie dans la République (RPCR) and FLNKS over their interpretation of the concept of "collegiality" in government matters remained in place throughout the year. On 2 May, representatives of both parties met with the French Secretary of State for Overseas Territories for the first meeting of the Committee of Signatories of the Nouméa Accord. While both delegations expressed satisfaction at the establishment of new institutions, each restated their differing understanding of the idea of collegial government. The meeting also discussed the need to agree on general policy and the application of the Nouméa Accord provisions and the 1999 organic law on Kanak identity and culture; training policies for secondary school students and establishment of the new "cadres avenir" (managers of the future) project; external relations; and the drafting of a special agreement on the status of people from Wallis and Futuna living in New Caledonia. The meeting also agreed on the importance of developing trade and other relations within the Pacific region and decided to establish a steering group on external relations to coordinate action by the State, New Caledonia and the provinces.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/55/578], adopted resolution 55/142 without vote [agenda item 18].

Tokelau

The Special Committee on decolonization considered, on 10 and 12 July, the question of Tokelau (the three small atolls of Nukunonu, Fakaofu and Atafu in the South Pacific), administered by New Zealand [A/55/23]. A Secretariat working paper detailed progress in the Territory's constitutional and political developments, as well as economic and social conditions, and set out the positions of the administering Power and the people of Tokelau concerning the future status of the Territory [A/AC.109/2000/5].

According to the administering Power, the organs of national self-government had progressively been given functions and powers previously exercised by New Zealand and there was a growing readiness by Tokelau's traditional leaders to join in the building of new structures to meet the Territory's needs. At meetings held with traditional leaders in the week of 6 March, senior elected leaders expressed readiness to embark fully on the Modern House of Tokelau project [YUN 1998, p. 575]. The 2000-2001 Plan of Action, undertaken in collaboration with New Zealand, aimed to integrate traditional decision-making processes with modern advice; set out the benefits; describe the programme and resources required to build the Modern House, indicating funding sources (New Zealand and UNDP) within the 2000-2001 budget; show how the delivery of public services could be changed by redistributing the workforce among the three Taupulega (Councils of Elders) and the nation; enhance public understanding of the work of the General Fono's (the national representative body of Tokelau) Special Constitution Committee to advance the goal of self-government; and underline the scope for each atoll to proceed in ways to reflect its different characteristics.

New Zealand currently had legislation in place to enable responsibility for the Tokelau Public Service to be passed from the State Services Commission in New Zealand to Tokelau, the timing to be set by mutual agreement as soon as the Territory had established a suitable employment framework, but not later than 30 June 2001.

A later Secretariat working paper [A/AC.109/2001/5] reported that the Modern House project was being overseen by a Joint Committee on management structure comprising Tokelau's six senior elected leaders, the Public Service Commissioner and the Administrator. A transition team of Tokelau heads of departments and a number of New Zealand-based specialists was also set up to provide, among other things, project oversight, management, coordination, planning and evaluation. In September, a discussion document was presented to the three Taupulega and the Tokelauans, who endorsed the key point that the Taupulega, the traditional foundation of the nation, should be the basis of a future Government. In November, the Joint Committee agreed on a programme that involved good governance, including a governance framework, constitutional development, management and operational structures and employer responsibility; capacity development, including the review of national and village administrations, development of a management support training workshop, identification of training needs and development of appropriate programmes; the "Friends of Tokelau", an organization to link outside individuals and organizations into Tokelau's development; and sustainable national and village development plans. The General Fono endorsed a Joint Committee statement noting the readiness of the three villages to embark on the Modern House project, Nukunonu's wish to start immediately, and the Committee's request that the transition team proceed, recognizing the needs of each village and the adjustments required to accomplish the Modern House. In December, UNDP sponsored a workshop on management support training to provide training in project planning and management, writing skills and financial management, and to assess further training needs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/55/578], adopted resolution 55/143 without vote [agenda item 18].

Question of Tokelau

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Tokelau,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the question of Tokelau,

Recalling the solemn declaration on the future status of Tokelau, delivered by the Ulu-o-Tokelau (the highest authority on Tokelau) on 30 July 1994, that an act of self-determination in Tokelau is now under active consideration, together with the constitution of a self-governing Tokelau, and that the present preference of Tokelau is for a status of free association with New Zealand,

Recalling also its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to Non-Self-Governing Territories, in particular General Assembly resolution 54/89 of 6 December 1999,

Recalling further the emphasis placed in the solemn declaration on the terms of Tokelau's intended free association relationship with New Zealand, including the expectation that the form of help that Tokelau could continue to expect from New Zealand in promoting the well-being of its people, besides its external interests, would be clearly established in the framework of that relationship,

Noting with appreciation the continuing exemplary cooperation of New Zealand as the administering Power with regard to the work of the Special Committee relating to Tokelau and its readiness to permit access by United Nations visiting missions to the Territory,

Noting also with appreciation the collaborative contribution to the development of Tokelau by New Zealand and the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme and the International Telecommunication Union,

Recalling the dispatch in 1994 of a United Nations visiting mission to Tokelau,

Noting that, as a small island Territory, Tokelau exemplifies the situation of most remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Noting also that, as a case study pointing to successful decolonization, Tokelau has wider significance for the United Nations as it seeks to complete its work in decolonization,

1. Notes that Tokelau remains firmly committed to the development of self-government and to an act of self-determination that would result in Tokelau assuming a status in accordance with the options on future status for Non-Self-Governing Territories contained in principle VI of the annex to General Assembly resolution 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960;

2. Also notes the desire of Tokelau to move at its own pace towards an act of self-determination;

3. Further notes the inauguration in 1999 of a national Government based on village elections by universal adult suffrage;

4. Acknowledges the participation of the Ulu-o-Tokelau in the Pacific regional seminar, held at Majuro, from 16 to 18 May 2000, and his account of how the Modern House of Tokelau project, in both its governance and its economic development dimensions, is seen by Tokelauans as the means to achieving its act of self-determination;

5. Welcomes the statement of the Council of Faipule of July 2000 that, following consultations in each village and a meeting of the General Fono in June 2000, full and overwhelming support has been given to the implementation of the project;

6. Notes the confirmation by the Council of Faipule that in the twelve months from July 2000 there will be significant movement in implementing the project, in conjunction with New Zealand;

7. Acknowledges that New Zealand has committed substantial additional funding to the project in 2000-2001, and its intention to collaborate with Tokelau in ways that can produce a significant momentum;

8. Notes the changes being made in arrangements for the delivery of public services, within an environment in which the institution of the village is truly recognized as the foundation of the nation, and the expectation that the New Zealand State Services Commissioner may be able to withdraw from his role as employer of the Tokelau Public Service at a time to be set by mutual agreement when Tokelau has established a suitable local employment framework;

9. Also notes that the constitution of a self-governing Tokelau will continue to develop as a part and as a consequence of the building of the Modern House of Tokelau, and that both have national and international importance for Tokelau;

10. Acknowledges Tokelau's need for reassurance, given that local resources cannot adequately cover the material side of self-determination, and the ongoing responsibility of Tokelau's external partners to assist Tokelau in balancing its desire to be self-reliant to the greatest extent possible with its need for external assistance;

11. Notes the special challenge inherent in the situation of Tokelau, among the smallest of the small Territories, and how a Territory's exercise of its inalienable right to self-determination may be brought closer, as in the case of Tokelau, by the meeting of that challenge in innovative ways;

12. Welcomes the assurance of the Government of New Zealand that it will meet its obligations to the United Nations with respect to Tokelau and abide by the freely expressed wishes of the people of Tokelau with regard to their future status;

13. Calls upon the administering Power and United Nations agencies to continue their assistance to Tokelau, as it further develops its economy and governance structures within the context of its ongoing constitutional evolution;

14. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine the question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session.

Questions of American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands

A General

The General Assembly,

Having considered the questions of American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands, hereinafter referred to as "the Territories",

Having examined the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to those Territories, including, in particular, the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the individual Territories covered by the present resolution,

Recognizing that the specific characteristics and the sentiments of the peoples of the Territories require flexible, practical and innovative approaches to the options of self-determination, without any prejudice to territorial size, geographical location, size of population or natural resources,

Recalling its resolution 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960, containing the principles that should guide Member States in determining whether or not an obligation exists to transmit the information called for under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations,

Expressing its concern that even forty years after the adoption of the Declaration there still remain a number of Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Acknowledging the significant achievements by the international community towards the eradication of colonialism in accordance with the Declaration, and conscious of the importance of continuing effective implementation of the Declaration, taking into account the target set by the United Nations to eradicate colonialism by the year 2000 and the plan of action for the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism,

Noting the positive constitutional developments in some Non-Self-Governing Territories about which the Special Committee has received information, while also acknowledging the need for recognition to be given to expressions of self-determination by the peoples of the Territories consistent with practice under the Charter,

Recognizing that in the decolonization process there is no alternative to the principle of self-determination as enunciated by the General Assembly in its resolutions 1514(XV), 1541(XV) and other resolutions,

Welcoming the stated position of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland that it continues to take seriously its obligations under the Charter to develop self-government in the dependent Territories and, in cooperation with the locally elected Governments, to ensure that their constitutional frameworks continue to meet the wishes of the people, and the emphasis that it is ultimately for the peoples of the Territories to decide their future status,

Welcoming also the stated position of the Government of the United States of America that it supports fully the principles of decolonization and takes seriously its obligations under the Charter to promote to the utmost the well-being of the inhabitants of the Territories under United States administration,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of each Territory, and bearing in mind the necessity of promoting economic stability and diversifying and strengthening further the economies of the respective Territories as a matter of priority,

Aware of the usefulness both to the Territories and to the Special Committee of the participation of appointed and elected representatives of the Territories in the work of the Special Committee,

Convinced that the wishes and aspirations of the peoples of the Territories should continue to guide the development of their future political status and that referendums, free and fair elections and other forms of popular consultation play an important role in ascertaining the wishes and aspirations of the people,

Convinced also that any negotiations to determine the status of a Territory must not be held without the active involvement and participation of the people of that Territory,

Recognizing that all available options for self-determination of the Territories are valid as long as they are in accordance with the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned and in conformity with the clearly defined principles contained in resolutions 1514(XV), 1541(XV) and other resolutions of the General Assembly,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the Territories, and considering that the possibility of sending further visiting missions to the Territories at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Powers should be kept under review,

Noting that the Special Committee held a Pacific regional seminar at Majuro from 16 to 18 May 2000 to hear the views of the representatives of the Territories, as well as Governments and organizations in the region, in order to review the political, economic and social conditions in the Territories,

Mindful that, in order for the Special Committee to enhance its understanding of the political status of the peoples of the Territories and to fulfil its mandate effectively, it is important for it to be apprised by the administering Powers and to receive information from other appropriate sources, including the representatives of the Territories, concerning the wishes and aspirations of the peoples of the Territories,

Mindful also in this connection that the Special Committee regards the holding of regional seminars in the Caribbean and Pacific regions and at Headquarters and other venues, with the active participation of representatives of the Non-Self-Governing Territories, as a helpful means to fulfil its mandate, while recognizing the need for reviewing the role of those seminars in the context of a United Nations programme for ascertaining the political status of the Territories,

Mindful further that some Territories have not had any United Nations visiting mission for a long period of time and that no such visiting missions have been sent to some of the Territories,

Noting with appreciation the contribution to the development of some Territories by specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, and regional institutions such as the Caribbean Development Bank,

Noting that some territorial Governments have made efforts towards achieving the highest standards of financial supervision, but that some others have been listed by the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development as having met the criteria of the Organisation defining a tax haven, and noting that some territorial Governments have expressed concern about insufficient dialogue between them and the Organisation,

Noting also the ongoing efforts of the Special Committee in carrying out a critical review of its work with the aim of making appropriate and constructive recommendations and decisions to attain its objectives in accordance with its mandate,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of the Territories to self-determination, including, if they so wish, independence, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

2. Reaffirms also that it is ultimately for the peoples of the Territories themselves to determine freely their future political status in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration and the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and in that connection calls upon the administering Powers, in cooperation with the territorial Governments, to facilitate programmes of political education in the Territories in order to foster an awareness among the people of their right to self-determination in conformity with the legitimate political status options, based on the principles clearly defined in General Assembly resolution 1541(XV);

3. Requests the administering Powers to transmit to the Secretary-General information called for under Article 73 e of the Charter and other updated information and reports, including reports on the wishes and aspirations of the peoples of the Territories regarding their future political status as expressed in fair and free referendums and other forms of popular consultation, as well as the results of any informed and democratic processes consistent with practice under the Charter that indicate the clear and freely expressed wish of the people to change the existing status of the Territories;

4. Stresses the importance for the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to be apprised of the views and wishes of the peoples of the Territories and to enhance its understanding of their conditions;

5. Reaffirms that United Nations visiting missions to the Territories at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Powers are an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the Territories, and requests the administering Powers and the elected representatives of the peoples of the Territories to assist the Special Committee in this regard;

6. Reaffirms also the responsibility of the administering Powers under the Charter to promote the economic and social development and to preserve the cultural identity of the Territories, and recommends that priority continue to be given, in consultation with the territorial Governments concerned, to the strengthening and diversification of their respective economies;

7. Requests the administering Powers, in consultation with the peoples of the Territories, to take all necessary measures to protect and conserve the environment of the Territories under their administration against any environmental degradation, and requests the specialized agencies concerned to continue to monitor environmental conditions in those Territories;

8. Calls upon the administering Powers, in co-operation with the respective territorial Governments, to continue to take all necessary measures to counter problems related to drug trafficking, money-laundering and other offences;

9. Notes with concern that the plan of action for the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism cannot be concluded by the year 2000;

10. Calls upon the administering Powers to enter into constructive dialogue with the Special Committee before the fifty-sixth session of the General Assembly to develop a framework for the implementation of the provisions of Article 73 e of the Charter and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples for the period beyond 2000;

11. Notes the particular circumstances that prevail in the Territories concerned, and encourages the political evolution in them towards self-determination;

12. Urges Member States to contribute to the efforts of the United Nations to usher in the twenty-first century in a world free of colonialism, and calls upon them to continue to give their full support to the Special Committee in its endeavours towards that noble goal;

13. Invites the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to initiate or to continue to take all necessary measures to accelerate progress in the social and economic life of the Territories, and calls for closer cooperation between the Special Committee and the Economic and Social Council in the furtherance of the provision of assistance to the Territories;

14. Takes note of statements made by the elected representatives of the Territories concerned emphasizing their willingness to cooperate with all international efforts aimed at preventing abuse of the international financial system and to promote regulatory environments with highly selective licensing procedures, robust supervisory practices and well-established anti-money-laundering regimes;

15. Calls for an enhanced and constructive dialogue between the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development and the concerned territorial Governments with a view to bringing about the changes needed to meet the highest standards of transparency and information exchange in order to facilitate the removal of those Non-Self-Governing Territories from the list of jurisdictions classified as tax havens, and requests the administering Power to assist those Territories in resolving this matter;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly on the implementation of resolutions concerning decolonization adopted since the declaration of the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism;

17. Requests the Special Committee to continue to examine the question of the small Territories and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session with recommendations on appropriate ways to assist the peoples of the Territories in exercising their right to self-determination.

UN public information

The General Assembly's 95-member Committee on Information, at its twenty-second session, held in New York from 1 to 12 May [A/55/21], continued to consider UN information policies and activities and to evaluate and follow up efforts made and progress achieved in information and communications. The Committee had before it reports on the reorientation of UN activities in public information and communications, a case-by-case review of the integration of UN information centres with UNDP field offices, and guidelines for the functioning of those centres and the allocation of resources to them. It also considered a progress report on the pilot project for the development of an international radio broadcasting capacity for the United Nations, the multilingual development, maintenance and enrichment of UN web sites, the section of the proposed 2002-2005 medium-term plan relating to public information, the 1999 activities of the Joint United Nations Information Committee in 1999 and the millennium promotional campaign.

By decision 55/425 of 8 December, the Assembly increased the Committee's membership from 95 to 97.

Reorientation of information and communications activities

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/82 B [YUN 1999, p. 552], the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on Information a March report [A/AC.198/2000/2] emphasizing recent measures to develop further the conceptual framework and operational priorities for the reorientation of the Organization's communications and information policies, as presented to the Committee in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 583]. To translate those priorities into an operational framework, the Department of Public Information (DPI) was taking new initiatives and making progress in the key areas of policy and strategic direction, the Internet and new technology, media access, radio and television programming, information activities in the field, development of thematic programmes, building global partnerships, and enhancing publications and library resources.

In all of its activities and materials, DPI continued to develop a unified message of the continuing relevance of the United Nations. In that regard, it implemented the millennium promotional campaign leading up to the Millennium Summit and Assembly (see p. 47) under the title "The United Nations Works".

The United Nations was rapidly expanding its multimedia presence on the Internet. DPI worked to improve the UN web sites, making them more user-friendly and avoiding duplication. It also coordinated and chaired the inter-departmental group on Internet matters. The Publications Board was to issue guidelines for Internet publishing.

A key component of the reorientation strategy was the creation of a new, integrated, fully fledged UN news service, cutting across all media and delivering a regionally oriented daily package of news directly to the media worldwide. DPI established a daily news service on the UN web site to facilitate reporting on the United Nations around the world. Efforts were also under way to integrate news stories directly from UN field offices into the UN news service. The enhanced United Nations News Centre site provided a one-site access to all significant UN system news sites and to audio-visual services and online magazines. The news service, available in English and French, would increasingly combine text-based audio and visual material in its dissemination of news on the Web. DPI would shortly launch a more proactive electronic mail/facsimile-based version that would go directly to media news desks around the world, as well as to other important target audiences, providing news "alerts" of breaking stories and upcoming events and links to further information sources.

DPI continued its coordinated placement of Op-Ed articles and other materials by UN officials. Research was under way to explore the possibility of developing a pool of field "stringer" correspondents for radio, print, photography and television so that timely and relevant raw materials might be gathered to enrich UN news stories.

DPI was also undertaking a comprehensive review of its radio and television operations, key to which would be the utilization of new communications technology to take advantage of the speed and cost-effectiveness offered by the growing convergence of radio, television and Internet media. A team of consultants was to review DPI's medium- and long-term technology needs in that regard, focusing on strengthening the ability to reach broadcast news media with useful materials. A synergetic, integrated multimedia approach was being formulated, paying particular attention to how best to use the Internet to reinforce traditional radio and television and to channel to it radio and television contents.

United Nations Radio continued to use new technology to expand its news-gathering and dissemination capacity. It was studying programme reorientation and streamlining in an effort to establish a daily news operation; it created a news development group to look into all aspects of that project, including promotion, monitoring and feedback mechanisms.

DPI proceeded with the preparations for a pilot project on the development of an international radio broadcasting capacity for the United Nations (see below). It was also investigating new ways to provide greater public access to UN-produced television material. Efforts were under way to introduce UN video stories in several languages onto the UN web sites. United Nations Television was increasing its output of live feeds and other easy-to-assemble raw materials for use by redisseminators. DPI planned to develop an integrated digital photo management system, which would also streamline photo production procedures. A study would shortly be undertaken on ways to deploy public information technology rapidly to new peacekeeping and humanitarian missions.

As part of the reorientation process, DPI strengthened its cooperation with Secretariat departments and other entities to convey the UN message more effectively. In developing strategies and planning steps for practical implementation of public information and communications campaigns in thematic areas, DPI would be guided by the new millennium promotional campaign.

DPI continued to attach great importance to its traditional print publications. Its magazine UN Chronicle expanded the use of colour illustrations, in line with its extended use of human interest stories and in-depth articles on specific issues and themes relevant to the Organization's goals; many of them were written by prominent personalities, leading experts and representatives of international agencies and NGOs. Africa Recovery continued to be the unique source of sustained coverage of UN system activities in Africa. Technological innovation was greatly helping the Yearbook of the United Nations to shorten the time lag between the end of the year covered and the publication date. Development Business continued to forge strong partnerships with international financial and other institutions to expand its services to the growing international business community. It was currently engaged in aggressive promotional campaigns to ensure greater participation in global business opportunities by both industrialized and developing countries.

The Dag Hammarskjöld Library continued to place emphasis on Web-related activities, digitization of UN documents, inter-agency resource sharing, training programmes for permanent missions to the United Nations and for Secretariat and depository library staff, and the creation of multilingual reference tools.

UN international radio broadcasting capacity

The Committee on Information had before it an April progress report by the Secretary-General, submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/82 B [YUN 1999, p. 532], on the implementation of the pilot project for the development of an international radio broadcasting capacity for the United Nations [A/AC.198/2000/6]. He indicated that two surveys were conducted, one in 1999 by DPI and the other in 2000 by an independent consultant, the results of which suggested that there was sufficient interest in the project to take it further. The surveys provided a good foundation to build on, to ensure that the pilot project's development was based on an understanding of the needs of individual radio stations in different regions. Steps were being taken to contact those major national broadcasters that had not responded to the second survey with the aim of developing an enhanced broadcasting relationship with them through the project.

The survey also revealed that airtime availability for the pilot project differed markedly by region, suggesting that consideration should be given to developing the project in progressive stages. Further steps should be taken to encourage additional national broadcasting organizations to support the project by providing airtime or satellite distributions, which would help overcome the difficulty of servicing a large number of small stations with fragmented audiences. It was suggested that the pilot project held less interest for the major broadcasters, which had correspondents stationed at the United Nations or already had good access to sources of UN information. In view of the survey results, DPI was considering ways to effectively allocate resources to ensure global dissemination of daily radio news from the United Nations through the project, which meant focusing on key markets and underserved regions.

DPI received limited responses to its request to Member States for contributions towards the implementation of the project in the form of airtime or cash contributions to a trust fund. A total of 114 radio stations and networks in 58 countries had expressed interest in participating in the pilot project by making available a daily segment of airtime on their transmission facilities for UN radio broadcasts. Since none offered any financial contribution or commitment, DPI was obliged to redeploy $1,760,300 from its approved 2000-2001 programme budget for the project's implementation but would continue to seek extrabudgetary support.

In a later report [A/AC.198/2001/7], the Secretary-General informed the Committee that DPI launched the pilot project on 28 August, targeting audiences in Africa, Asia, Europe and Latin America and the Caribbean, in time for the Millennium Summit (see p. 47). Arrangements were made with several communications service distributors to provide short-wave transmissions to Africa and the Middle East in Arabic, English and French, as well as with satellite service providers to transmit the programming to the Caribbean region. In addition, DPI ensured the establishment of an effective and multi-pronged delivery system, since distribution needs varied from one region to another. Other options for broadcasters included analogue telephone feeds, digital telephone systems lines and electronic file transfer.

DPI activities

In his October report on questions relating to information [A/55/452], the Secretary-General noted that DPI continued to strengthen the communications function within the United Nations and in its field offices in order to build broad-based global support for the Organization's work. It also continued to strengthen its coordination, management and policy guidance of the UN web site. In June, the Publications Board approved the Internet publishing guidelines, which provided for a Working Group on Internet Matters to help the Board better coordinate and enhance Internet publishing. DPI also initiated web site traffic analysis to reveal detailed usage patterns. A new design was launched in September allowing for easier navigation and better access.

General public information activities to the media included those carried out by the Office of the Spokesman for the Secretary-General, which continued to inform the accredited press, delegations and the public at large on the broad scope of UN activities and to utilize Internet technology to expand the audience for its products. New sections of its web page widened coverage of the Secretary-General's activities, including "The Secretary-General: off the cuff", introduced in January to allow electronic access to the Secretary-General's media encounters and press conferences.

DPI made important strides to better serve the global news media through intensified use of new communications technology, live radio and television/video feeds to broadcasters, as well as increased outreach to journalists. To help bridge the gap between developed and developing countries in their ability to access UN news and other information material immediately, DPI embarked on a project to create direct links to journalists worldwide by alerting them via electronic mail to new developments emanating from the United Nations. In addition, the Web-based United Nations News Centre provided news updates throughout the day. In a related activity, DPI was executing a pilot project to enable United Nations Radio to produce and deliver to radio stations around the globe daily 15-minute news bulletins in all six UN official languages (see p. 573). United Nations Television covered and distributed an increased number of live events at UN Headquarters, making available ready-for-television footage packages on key occasions as part of DPI's overall information strategy.

DPI continued to develop innovative ways to communicate with its 1,600 associated NGOs, including the introduction of a series of communications workshops to assist them in creating an informed understanding of the Organization's work; to reach out to young people by strengthening partnerships with educational and other NGOs and sponsoring teachers' workshops, programmes for students and projects over the Internet, often linked to specific observances; and to build partnerships through co-sponsorships of special events and programmes within the UN system and with civil society.

In addition, DPI continued to promote its thematic information programmes, including mobilization of public opinion in support of issues addressed in the follow-up to UN global conferences on development held during the 1990s, priority issues on the UN agenda, including the promotion of information technology for development, human rights, in particular the issue of racism, and peace and security.

Library services

The Dag Hammarskjöld Library continued to move in the direction of a virtual library, focusing on the delivery of electronic information, support for multilingualism and outreach to depository libraries. The Library's Internet presence was increasing and its web page was now available in Spanish. The United Nations Documentation Research Guide was currently available in English, French and Russian and work on its translation into the remaining official languages was well advanced. The Library also made substantial progress in translating the United Nations Bibliographic Information System Thesaurus into Arabic, Chinese and Russian. A software package that would permit full Thesaurus capability simultaneously in all scripts was being sought.

To strengthen UN connection to civil society partners, the Library enhanced its outreach programme for depository libraries through increased training and dissemination activities. The range of the News Updates service for depository libraries broadened substantially and the feedback to the expanded service was positive. The Library also established an additional outreach programme for depository libraries, consisting of the full-text transmission of selected materials in the official languages. A key initiative to improve and expand DPI's cartographic and geographic services was the formal establishment in March of the United Nations Geographic Information Working Group to coordinate activities and formulate UN system policies on geographic information. One of its principal objectives was to develop and maintain a common UN geographic database.

UN information centres

The United Nations information centres (UNICs) continued to demonstrate their strength as the local voice of the United Nations. They were increasingly active in placing Op-Ed articles by senior UN officials in leading newspapers and in responding to media queries. They recorded a significant growth in demand for information on social issues and actively publicized the Secretary-General's millennium message and his millennium report (see p. 55). Their technical capabilities continued to be enhanced through DPI's provision of equipment and training.

At its 2000 session, the Committee on Information considered the Secretary-General's report on the findings of a case-by-case review of UNICs integrated with UNDP field offices [A/AC.198/2000/3]. Each of the 14 host countries had been asked to rate its centre's performance in respect of the stated objectives of presenting a more unified UN image and of enhancing information activities, and to propose improvements. All 14 responded that the centres had fulfilled the first objective and most were satisfied with their efforts as to the second, including their proactive information initiatives. Most further praised the services provided by the UNIC reference libraries. Of the two countries that observed a decline in service, one attributed it to the UN financial crisis, the other to the integration exercise itself.

In their comments on improvements of the overall functioning of the centres, the respondents suggested that the centres be provided with more resources, in particular staff specializing in public information and communications, and that the centres' support to depository libraries, as well as their relationship with the host countries' public and private institutions, be strengthened.

In the meantime, DPI, in cooperation with UNDP, launched several initiatives to improve overall cooperation and the performance of the integrated UNICs, including regular meetings of a DPI/UNDP working group to strengthen partnership and address specific issues; formulation of terms of reference for a review mission to visit a representative number of integrated centres to evaluate performance and assist in resolving outstanding issues; and drafting of guidelines for the integrated centres' operational framework [A/AC.198/2000/4]. Directors of the centres, in response to a request for their comments and suggestions on the integration exercise, indicated that additional staffing, financing and training would help meet enhanced information targets and goals.

The Secretary-General said he remained confident that the integrated centres would meet their public information goals and their host countries' expectations. In that regard, DPI and UNDP would continue to work together to improve the overall effectiveness of those centres.

In February [A/AC.198/2000/5], the Secretary-General reported on the allocation of resources for the UN regular budget and a breakdown of host government assistance to UNICs in 1999.

Development of UN web sites

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/82 B [YUN 1999, p. 552], the Secretary-General reported in April on the multilingual development, maintenance and enrichment of UN web sites [A/AC.198/2000/7-A/AC.172/2000/4]. He said that the further development, coordination, production and management of information content on those sites would require a substantial increase in the level of investment, as would the upgrading of the related technical infrastructure, due primarily to the need to: increase the timely dissemination of information and data to a wider and rapidly growing audience; effect cost savings by limiting hard-copy distribution, and/or by shifting printing to the end-user; present constantly updated information; and promote, through the Internet, education and public understanding of the United Nations and of the issues before it.

The first task would be to rationalize the structure of the sites, requiring a feasibility study on their complete redesign and restructuring, including the refocusing of their multilingual aspects, together with the necessary hardware and connectivity requirements and the time frame for implementation, with particular attention to enhancing the search facility to cover all official languages. It would delineate the comprehensive resource investments essential for achieving that objective across the entire web-site operation. The study, to be conducted by outside industry experts, was estimated to cost $100,000, which was not included in the 2000-2001 programme budget.

Beforehand, however, a sound foundation for ensuring the ongoing regular maintenance of UN web sites needed to be established on the basis of resource requirements set out in proposal C of the options outlined by the Secretary-General in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 550]. Without that administrative and budgetary support, the minimum necessary for the continuation of the current level of that activity, the desired objective of narrowing the differences among the web sites in all official languages, with the eventual achievement of parity, would not be attained. Those resource requirements pertained only to DPI and did not include either the infrastructure and technical support requirements for the Information Technology Services Division of the Department of Management or resources for the provision of content in other languages.

The Secretary-General observed that the current level of web-site operation had been accomplished primarily through temporary and ad hoc arrangements, using temporary assistance funds and a realignment of activities. The situation argued for a more coordinated approach. DPI, in undertaking the responsibility for the web sites across the Secretariat, as well as for some of the offices away from Headquarters, had taken on additional unforeseen tasks for which there was no budgetary allocation and had almost solely borne the associated costs. It was currently looking into ways of enhancing cooperation with content-providing departments, while minimizing such costs.

The Secretary-General concluded that Internet activity needed to be considered as an integral part of the Organization's work programme and would be included in a regular subprogramme of the 2002-2005 medium-term plan (see p. 577), as well as in the budget proposals for DPI for the 2002-2003 biennium. It was essential for each content-providing office to include Web-specific content in its regular programme activity and accordingly make provisions for its budget and for technological infrastructure support.

Since Member States had indicated that web-site activities should not be seen as replacing traditional means of communication, a realistic and cost-effective action plan to meet the requirement of linguistic parity would need to be developed.

JUNIC

At its twenty-sixth session (Geneva, 11-13 July) [ACC/2000/11], the Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC), the inter-agency Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) body on information activities within the UN system, discussed the UN millennium promotional campaign [A/AC.198/2000/10] and supported the concept of "The United Nations Works" campaign as a way to reach out to global audiences with a positive message about the United Nations. It suggested that a component of the campaign be used to educate and motivate UN staff in the spirit of fostering a "culture of communications". It proposed that ACC endorse the campaign as a system-wide initiative, to be coordinated by DPI as the lead agency. JUNIC also discussed communications strategies for UN system media relations. It agreed on the need to develop an action plan for communications training of staff at all levels to enable them to better communicate the UN message to the media at Headquarters and in the field.

Regarding system-wide cooperation in television, JUNIC examined the issue of editorial control of programming produced or aired by outside broadcasters on the basis of footage or feature stories originating from the Organization and agreed that it might be better for the Organization to relinquish editorial control over such programming. Co-productions with major broadcasters were identified as another effective means of presenting UN stories and issues to the global public. Such contacts, it was stressed, should be established through editorial and co-production departments of major broadcasters to guarantee airtime. JUNC identified the understanding of rights management issues as an important element of partnerships with broadcasting organizations.

JUNC discussed the work of the Non-Governmental Liaison Service and noted that the number of sponsoring agencies had increased and that the Service had achieved greater financial stability. In other action, it agreed that the JUNC Information Exchange Bulletin would continue to be coordinated by its secretariat and posted on the WebBoard, which would be used also to post a calendar of upcoming communications activities. Other features would be added gradually to meet the changing needs of JUNC members and take advantage of technological improvements. JUNC decided to devote more time at its future sessions to broad-based communications management issues and to establish a discussion group on information technology on the WebBoard. It agreed to hold a one-day meeting to examine recent developments in information technology and their system-wide application, and agreed to discuss in 2001 Internet and multimedia matters, as well as the communications aspects of the UN fight against AIDS.

The Secretary-General's report on the 1999 activities of JUNC [A/AC.198/2000/9] was submitted to the May 2000 session of the Committee on Information.

Proposed 2002-2005 medium-term plan in public information

The Secretary-General, in a March note [A/AC.198/2000/8], transmitted the draft 2002-2005 medium-term plan for programme 23 (Public information), whose overall purpose was to increase awareness and understanding of the work and purposes of the United Nations, highlighting issues of concern to the international community, including those addressed by major international conferences and General Assembly special sessions.

The programme strategy was based on the premise that public information and communications should be placed at the heart of the strategic management of the United Nations and that a culture of communications should permeate all levels of the Organization. To project an image of the Organization as an open and transparent public institution, emphasis would be placed on the continuing development of that culture. Partnerships would be strengthened at Headquarters and in the field to enable DPI to define the themes to be highlighted during the period of the medium-term plan and to coordinate the Organization's public information activities with a view to presenting a unified image. Information and communications plans and campaigns would be implemented in collaboration with departments and offices to publicize the Organization's work in their respective sectors. Cooperation among organizations of the UN system would also be strengthened and cooperation and partnerships with redissemulators pursued at all levels. The various elements of the system would work together in a more news-centred, media-friendly multimedia operation, providing information directly to international news editors in all Member States, including through the network of UNICs, services and offices worldwide.

Increased use would be made of the latest technology, in both the traditional and electronic media, including the Internet, to deliver news directly and instantaneously to the media worldwide. Particular attention would be given to tailoring the news disseminated to different regions, bearing in mind their technological capacity. Every effort would be made to ensure that publications and other information services of the Secretariat, including the UN web site, contained comprehensive, objective and equitable information about the issues before the Organization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/55/573], adopted resolutions 55/136 A and B without vote [agenda item 87].

Bearing in mind the results of the Ministerial Conference on Terrorism, held in Paris on 30 July 1996, and the recommendations it made,

Noting that the dissemination and use of information technologies and means affect the interests of the entire international community and that optimum effectiveness is enhanced by broad international co-operation,

Expressing concern that these technologies and means can potentially be used for purposes that are inconsistent with the objectives of maintaining international stability and security and may adversely affect the security of States in both civil and military fields,

Expressing concern about the growing proliferation of ad hoc and exclusive export control regimes and arrangements for dual-use goods and technologies, which tend to impede the economic and social development of developing countries,

Recalling that in the Final Document of the Twelfth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Durban, South Africa, from 29 August to 3 September 1998, it was noted with concern that undue restrictions on exports to developing countries of material, equipment and technology for peaceful purposes persist,

Emphasizing that internationally negotiated guidelines for the transfer of high technology with military applications should take into account the legitimate defence requirements of all States and the requirements for the maintenance of international peace and security, while ensuring that access to high-technology products and services and know-how for peaceful purposes is not denied,

1. Affirms that scientific and technological progress should be used for the benefit of all mankind to promote the sustainable economic and social development of all States and to safeguard international security and that international cooperation in the use of science and technology through the transfer and exchange of technological know-how for peaceful purposes should be promoted;

Peaceful uses of outer space

In 2000, the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Committee on Outer Space), at its forty-third session (Vienna, 7-16 June) [A/55/20], discussed ways to maintain outer space for peaceful purposes and the spin-off benefits of space technology. It also reviewed the work of its two subcommittees, one concerned with scientific and technical issues and the other with legal questions. In December, the General Assembly endorsed the recommendations of the Committee for its future work, including those made by its subcommittees.

Implementation of UNISPACE-III recommendations

Pursuant to resolution 54/68 [YUN 1999, p. 557], by which the General Assembly endorsed "The Space Millennium: Vienna Declaration on Space and Human Development", adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE III) [ibid., p. 556], the Secretary-General, in a May note [A/AC.105/L.224], submitted the action plan proposed by the Office for Outer Space

Affairs to implement the UNISPACE III recommendations.

The plan proposed initiatives to strengthen the role of the Committee on Outer Space and its subcommittees in the formulation of policy and the implementation of international cooperation in space initiatives, as well as the capacity-building activities of the United Nations Programme on Space Applications, including ways to increase synergy among the Programme's major components. To support the work of the Committee and its subcommittees, the plan proposed activities to promote the use of space science and technology within the UN system and to enhance further system-wide coordination of space-related activities, as well as new initiatives to increase the awareness of the general public and young people on the benefits of space activities and to encourage space-related industry and NGOs to play a larger role in promoting the peaceful uses of outer space. Also proposed was a set of measures to implement those recommendations not included in the programme budget for the 2000-2001 biennium.

The Committee on Outer Space, at its June session [A/55/20], endorsed the action plan proposed by the Office for Outer Space Affairs and agreed that the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee should be assigned the task of reaching a consensus on the implementation of the UNISPACE III recommendations and their associated work plans and of reporting thereon yearly. The Committee took note of the International Astronautical Federation's initiative and other initiatives to engage non-governmental entities in the implementation of selected recommendations; it agreed that those initiatives should be reviewed by the Subcommittee in 2001.

The Committee selected several priority projects from among those identified in the action plan and recommended their inclusion in the Secretary-General's letter to Member States inviting voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for the United Nations Programme on Space Applications.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 54/68 [YUN 1999, p. 557], the Secretary-General reported in July [A/55/153] on action taken by the Committee on Outer Space at its June session to implement the UNISPACE III recommendations, the strategy pursued by the Programme on Space Applications, including the Programme's reorientation following UNISPACE III, developments in inter-agency cooperation, and enhancement of the International Space Information Service.

Scientific and Technical Subcommittee

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee of the Committee on Outer Space, at its thirty-seventh session (Vienna, 7-18 February) [A/AC.105/736], considered the United Nations Programme on Space Applications and the coordination of space activities within the UN system following UNISPACE III.

The Subcommittee also dealt with matters related to remote sensing of the Earth by satellites, including applications for developing countries and monitoring of the Earth's environment; the use of nuclear power sources in outer space; international cooperation in human space flight, presentations on new launch systems and ventures; space debris; and the examination of the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit and of its utilization and applications.

United Nations Programme on Space Applications

The United Nations Programme on Space Applications, as mandated by General Assembly resolution 37/90 [YUN 1982, p. 163], continued to focus on developing indigenous capability at the local level in space science and technology through long-range training fellowships, technical advisory services, regional and international training courses and conferences; acquiring and disseminating space-related information; and promoting cooperation between developed and developing countries.

The United Nations Expert on Space Applications, in his January 2001 report to the Subcommittee [A/AC.105/750] pursuant to Assembly resolution 45/72 [YUN 1990, p. 99], said the Programme in 2000 organized regional workshops on the use of space technology in disaster management, in particular for the benefit of developing countries. The objectives of the workshops were to increase awareness of the potential benefits and cost-effectiveness of using space technologies, to determine the types of information and communications needed in managing specific disasters and to develop a plan of action leading to pilot projects that incorporated and tested the use of space tools in disaster management.

The Programme focused on the establishment of regional centres for space science and technology education in developing countries and a Network of Space Science and Technology Education and Research Institutions for Central Eastern and South-Eastern Europe. In July, the Office for Outer Space Affairs invited the regional centres and the Network to provide reports, including information regarding their main objectives and programmes.

The Programme held eight training courses, workshops and conferences in 2000. Under its long-term fellowship programmes for in-depth training, three research fellowships were tenable in 2000 at the European Space Agency (ESA) facilities in Italy. ESA further offered five fellowships for 2001-2002. Under the short-term training programmes, China offered seven one-month fellowship awards tenable in July/August 2000. In addition, various technical advisory services and activities promoting regional co-operation were provided under the Programme.

Earlier, the Subcommittee, in examining the January 2000 report of the Expert on Space Applications [A/AC.105/730], continued to express concern over the limited financial resources available for the Programme and appealed to Member States for voluntary contributions. It noted that the Programme had achieved much with limited resources and agreed that there was no need for radical changes; however, the Programme could be reoriented to better assist developing countries and countries with economies in transition in participating in and benefiting from the implementation of the UNISPACE III recommendations. The emphasis should be on identifying priority areas, optimizing the relationship between the various types of Programme activities, strengthening partnerships and increasing the financial and in-kind resources for carrying out the Programme's mandate.

The Assembly, in resolution 55/122 (see p. 587), endorsed the United Nations Programme on Space Applications, as proposed by the Expert on Space Applications.

Cooperation

The Inter-Agency Meeting on Outer Space Activities, at its twentieth session (Vienna, 2-4 February) [A/AC.105/727], discussed coordination of plans and programmes in the practical application of space technology and related areas. It reviewed cooperation within the UN system in remote sensing and related geographic information systems, the enhancement of that co-operation through the use of advanced information technologies, and the UNISPACE III action plan and implementation of follow-up activities.

The Meeting stressed that the safety of radioactive and nuclear power sources in outer space should not be treated in isolation from the existing international regime on radiation and nuclear safety and requested the Office for Outer Space Affairs to bring to the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee's attention its view that the Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power

Sources in Outer Space should take that regime into account. It recommended that the Subcommittee, in conducting its work on the use of nuclear power sources in outer space, should enhance the involvement of the International Atomic Energy Agency and take into account the work of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation and the International Commission on Radiological Protection. The Meeting agreed to provide input into the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development and contribute to any future review of Agenda 21 of the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672].

In reviewing the UNISPACE III action plan, the Inter-Agency Meeting agreed that it was difficult to identify bodies responsible for space-related activities of some UN system organizations and that no such bodies existed for certain organizations. It felt that the recommendation to establish an ad hoc intergovernmental advisory group should be reformulated and that the Committee on Outer Space, in reviewing UNISPACE III recommendations, should establish a working group to examine the matter and the system-wide coordination of outer space activities, taking into account the Secretary-General's report on the subject. The working group, once established, should be apprised of the working methods of UN system organizations that undertook space-related activities and the Meeting's work should be brought more prominently to the attention of heads of UN system organizations.

The Committee on Outer Space [A/55/20] noted the report of the Inter-Agency Meeting and the Secretary-General's report on the coordination of outer space activities within the UN system: programme of work for 2000 and 2001 and future years [A/AC.105/726].

Other related documents submitted to the Committee were Secretariat notes [A/AC.105/729/Add.1,2, A/AC.105/752] containing information received from a total of 15 Member States on their space activities, including information on national and international space programmes, as well as on spin-off benefits of space activities and other topics.

Scientific and technical issues

In 2000, the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee [A/AC.105/736] emphasized the importance of providing non-discriminatory access to state-of-the-art remote sensing data and to derived information at reasonable cost, as well as of building capacity in the adoption and use of remote sensing technology, in particular to meet the needs of developing countries. It also emphasized the importance of remote sensing systems for advancing sustainable development, including monitoring of the Earth's environment. It agreed that revision of the 1992 Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space, adopted by General Assembly resolution 47/68 [YUN 1992, p. 116], was currently not warranted. Until a firm scientific and technical consensus had been reached on such revision, it would be inappropriate to pass on the topic to the Legal Subcommittee.

Concerning space debris, the Subcommittee agreed that: international cooperation was needed to expand strategies to minimize the potential impact of space debris on future space missions; Member States should pay more attention to the problem of collisions of space objects, including those with nuclear power sources on board, with space debris and to other aspects of space debris; and national research on space debris should continue, with Member States and international organizations making available the results of that research, including information on effective practices to minimize the creation of space debris. It noted the 1999 Secretariat report on the disposal of satellites in geosynchronous orbit [YUN 1999, p. 559]. The Subcommittee further noted that International Telecommunication Union (ITU) standards and Inter-Agency Space Debris Coordination Committee recommendations regarding the disposal of spacecraft in geostationary orbit had been recently developed and were not mandatory; that even self-imposed guidelines were not being followed in some cases due to technical and managerial problems; and that more research would be needed to understand fully the space debris environment near the geostationary orbit.

The Committee on Outer Space [A/55/20] agreed with the Subcommittee concerning the revision of the 1992 Principles and that States making use of nuclear power sources should conduct their activities in accordance with those Principles. It also agreed that the Subcommittee and the Working Group should continue to receive the widest input on matters affecting the use of nuclear power sources in outer space and any contribution related to improving the scope and application of the Principles. Member States should continue to be invited to report regularly to the Secretary-General on national and international research on the subject. Further studies should be conducted on the collision of orbiting space objects, with nuclear power sources on board, with space debris.

The Committee endorsed the Subcommittee's conclusions regarding space debris and suggested that the Secretariat prepare a sample index to the United Nations Register of Objects Launched into Outer Space for the Subcommittee's 2001 session.

In response to the Committee's request that Member States report on national and international research on the safety of space objects with nuclear power sources, the Secretariat, in a November note [A/AC.105/751], submitted the replies received from three Member States and one international organization on the subject.

Legal Subcommittee

The Legal Subcommittee, at its thirty-ninth session (Vienna, 27 March–6 April) [A/AC.105/738], considered, through its working group, the definition and delimitation of outer space and the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, including ways to ensure its rational and equitable use, without prejudice to ITU's role. The Subcommittee adopted the finalized version of a conference room paper by France and other sponsors, entitled "Some aspects concerning the use of the geostationary orbit", and endorsed the report of the working group.

A working group established by the Subcommittee continued to review the status of the international legal instruments governing outer space: the 1966 Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2222(XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 41]; the 1967 Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space, adopted in resolution 2345(XXII) [YUN 1967, p. 33]; the 1971 Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects, contained in resolution 2777(XXVI) [YUN 1971, p. 52]; the 1974 Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space, contained in resolution 3235(XXIX) [YUN 1974, p. 63]; and the 1979 Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, contained in resolution 34/68 [YUN 1979, p. 111].

The working group recommended a series of measures to achieve the fullest adherence to the five instruments: States not parties to them should be invited to consider ratifying or acceding to them; States should be invited to consider making a declaration, in accordance with Assembly resolution 2777(XXVI), thereby binding themselves on a reciprocal basis to the decisions of the Claims Commission, established in the event of a dispute in terms of the provisions of the 1971 Convention; and the issue of the strict compliance by States with the provisions of instruments governing outer space to which they were currently parties should be examined further to identify measures to encourage full compliance.

The Legal Subcommittee, recalling its 1999 decision [YUN, 1999, p. 560] to suspend consideration of the 1992 Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space [YUN 1992, p. 116] pending the results of deliberations in the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, agreed to suspend its working group on the subject.

The Subcommittee, in its review of the concept of the "launching State", through its working group established for that purpose, requested the Secretariat to prepare a paper setting out the key elements of national space legislation that, in its judgement, illustrated how States were implementing their responsibilities to authorize and provide continuing supervision of non-governmental entities in outer space. It should include information on State practice drawn from, among other sources, the special presentations on new launch systems and ventures at the Subcommittee's current session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/55/569], adopted resolution 55/122 without vote [agenda item 83].

Effects of atomic radiation

The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation held its forty-ninth session in Vienna from 2 to 11 May [A/55/46]. The Committee, responding to General Assembly resolution 54/66 [YUN 1999, p. 563], continued to review problems in the field of radiation. It summarized developments in radiation science in the years leading up to the new millennium. It examined the effects and levels of radiation exposure, the radiological consequences of the Chernobyl accident (see PART THREE, Chapter III), sources of radiation exposure, including natural, man-made, medical and occupational exposures, and comparisons of exposures. It also considered radiation-associated cancer.

The Committee proposed a renewed programme of work to fulfil its obligations to the Assembly.

Chapter I

Promotion of human rights

United Nations efforts to promote human rights continued in 2000 through the Commission on Human Rights and its subsidiary body, the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights continued its human rights coordination and implementation activities, and provided advisory services and technical cooperation.

Human rights instruments and their monitoring bodies promoted civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, and aimed to eliminate racial discrimination and discrimination against women, to protect children and to end the practice of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

In May, the General Assembly adopted an optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on involvement of children in armed conflict, as well as an optional protocol to that Convention on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography.

The international community observed the International Year for the Culture of Peace, proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1997.

UN machinery

Commission on Human Rights

The Commission on Human Rights held its fifty-sixth session in Geneva from 20 March to 28 April [E/2000/23 & Corr.1], during which it adopted 87 resolutions and 13 decisions. The Commission recommended four draft resolutions and 49 draft decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. On 28 April [dec. 2000/113], the Commission decided to include in its report to the Council the administrative and programme budget implications of the resolutions and decisions adopted. On 28 July, the Council took note of the Commission's report (decision 2000/289). In October, the Commission held a special session on grave and massive violations of the human rights of the Palestinian people by Israel [E/2000/112 & Add.1] (see p. 776). It also held a special debate on poverty and human rights [E/CN.4/2000/SR.41 & 42].

On 21 March [dec. 2000/101], the Commission invited special representatives, special rapporteurs, chairpersons and chairpersons-rapporteurs of various working groups and experts to participate in its meetings.

Regarding enhancing the effectiveness of the Commission's mechanisms, pursuant to a 1999 Subcommission request [YUN 1999, p. 567], the Secretary-General submitted, in February, financial data relating to meeting costs for the Commission, the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on the Rights of the Child [E/CN.4/2000/114]. The Working Group on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights, established in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 567], adopted its report by consensus [E/CN.4/2000/112], following meetings in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 568], on 18 and 19 January and from 7 to 11 February 2000. The Commission Chairperson, on 22 March, outlined the logistics of consideration of the Group's report [E/2000/23]. On 26 April [dec. 2000/109], the Commission decided to approve and implement the report and emphasized its importance and relevance. It also decided to facilitate the report's implementation, to transmit to the Economic and Social Council for approval a draft resolution on the procedure for dealing with communications concerning violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, established by Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) [YUN 1970, p. 530] (the 1503 procedure), and a draft decision on enhancing the effectiveness of the Commission's mechanisms. Pending the Council's adoption of the draft on the 1503 procedure, the Commission, on 26 April [dec. 2000/110], decided that communications and replies thereto, on which the Subcommission in 1999 had decided to defer action to its next session, should be referred back to the Working Group on Communications, to be examined at its next annual session, following the Subcommission's 2000 session, to determine whether they should be brought to the attention of the Working Group on Situations, in accordance with the draft resolution.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 June [meeting 10], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2000/3 [draft: E/2000/L.5] without vote [agenda item 2].

Procedure for dealing with communications concerning human rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 728 F (XXVIII) of 30 July 1959 concerning the handling of communications concerning human rights and its decision 79(LVIII) of 6 May 1975 relating thereto,

Recalling also its resolution 1235(XLII) of 6 June 1967 authorizing the Commission on Human Rights to examine information relevant to gross violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, its resolution 1503(XLVIII) of 27 May 1970 establishing a procedure for dealing with communications relating to violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms and its resolution 1990/41 of 25 May 1990 concerning the establishment, composition and designation of the members of the Working Group on Situations of the Commission,

Recalling further resolution 1(XXIV) of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities (now the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights) of 13 August 1971 concerning criteria for the admissibility of communications, as well as Subcommission resolution 2(XXIV) of 16 August 1971 concerning the establishment, composition and designation of the members of the Working Group on Communications,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights decisions 3(XXX) of 6 March 1974, 5(XXXIV) of 3 March 1978 and 9(XXXVI) of 7 March 1980, all aimed at facilitating government participation and cooperation under the procedure, and decision 3(XXXIV) of 3 March 1978 inviting the Chairman-Rapporteur of the Working Group on Communications to be present during the deliberations of the Commission on that item,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights decision 2000/109 of 26 April 2000, in which the Commission, inter alia, approved the recommendations of its inter-sessional open-ended Working Group on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights concerning the review of the procedure governed by Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) and related resolutions and decisions,

1. Endorses Commission on Human Rights decision 2000/109 insofar as it concerns the review of the procedure governed by Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) and related resolutions and decisions;

2. Decides, accordingly, that the Working Group on Communications designated in conformity with paragraph 37 of the report of the inter-sessional open-ended Working Group on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights shall henceforth meet annually for two weeks, immediately following the annual session of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, to examine the communications received under Council resolution 728 F (XXVIII) that have been transmitted to the Governments concerned not later than twelve weeks prior to the meeting of the Working Group on Communications, and any government replies relating thereto, in conformity with the criteria for the admissibility of communications contained in resolution 1(XXIV) of the Subcommission, with a view to bringing to the attention of the Working Group on Situations any particular situations which appear to reveal a consistent pattern of gross and reliably attested violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, with the approval of the Chairman-Rapporteur of the Working Group on Communications, to screen out manifestly ill-founded communications in the preparation of the monthly confidential summaries of communications (confidential lists of communications) communicated to the members of the Working Group, it being understood that communications screened out would not be transmitted to the Governments concerned for reply;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General to inform the countries concerned, immediately after the conclusion of the meeting of the Working Group on Communications, of the actions taken in regard to them;

5. Entrusts to the Working Group on Situations designated in conformity with paragraph 40 of the report of the inter-sessional open-ended Working Group on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights, which shall meet annually for one week not less than one month prior to the annual session of the Commission, the role of examining the confidential report and recommendations of the Working Group on Communications and determining whether or not to refer a particular situation thus brought before it to the Commission, as well as of examining the particular situations kept under review by the Commission under the procedure, and, accordingly, of submitting to the Commission a confidential report identifying the main issues of concern, normally together with a draft resolution or draft decision recommending the action to be taken by the Commission in respect of the situations referred to it;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to make the confidential files available, at least one week in advance of the first closed meeting, to all members of the Commission on Human Rights;

7. Authorizes the Commission on Human Rights, as it deems appropriate, to consider the particular situations placed before it by the Working Group on Situations, as well as the situations kept under review, in two separate closed meetings, employing the following modalities:

(a) At the first closed meeting, each country concerned would be invited to make opening presentations; a discussion would then follow between members of the Commission and the Government concerned, based on the contents of confidential files and the report of the Working Group on Situations;

(b) In the interim between the first and second closed meetings, any member or members of the Commission could submit an alternative or an amendment to any texts forwarded by the Working Group on Situations; any such draft texts would be circulated confidentially by the secretariat, in accordance with the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Council, in advance of the second closed meeting;

(c) At the second closed meeting, members of the Commission would discuss and take action on the draft resolutions or decisions; a representative or representatives of the Governments concerned would have the right to be present during the adoption of the final resolution or decision taken in regard to the human rights situation in that country; as has been the established practice, the Chairperson of the Commission would subsequently announce in a public meeting which countries had been examined under the 1503 procedure, as well as the names of countries no longer being dealt with under the procedure; the 1503 dossiers would remain confidential, except where the Government concerned has indicated the wish that they become public;

(d) In accordance with the established practice, the action taken in respect of a particular situation should be one of the following options:

- (i) To discontinue consideration of the matter when further consideration or action is not warranted;
- (ii) To keep the situation under review in the light of any further information received from the Government concerned and any further information which may reach the Commission under the 1503 procedure;
- (iii) To keep the situation under review and to appoint an independent expert;
- (iv) To discontinue consideration of the matter under the confidential procedure governed by Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) in order to take up consideration of the same matter under the public procedure governed by Council resolution 1235(XLII);

8. Decides that the provisions of Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) and related resolutions and decisions not affected by the present reorganization of work shall remain in force, including:

(a) Provisions relating to the duties and responsibilities of the Secretary-General, it being understood that, in respect of the handling of communications and government replies relating thereto, the duties and responsibilities are as follows:

- (i) The compilation, as before, of monthly confidential summaries of incoming communications concerning alleged violations of human rights; the identity of authors may be deleted upon request;
- (ii) The transmittal of a copy of each summarized communication, in the language received, to the Government concerned for reply, without divulging the identity of the author if he or she so requests;
- (iii) Acknowledging the receipt of communications to their authors;
- (iv) The reproduction and circulation to the members of the Commission on Human Rights, as before, of the replies received from Governments;

(b) Provisions aimed at facilitating government cooperation and participation in the procedure, including the provisions of Commission decision 3(XXX), now to be applied following the meetings of the Working Group on Communications;

9. Also decides that all actions envisaged in the implementation of the present resolution by the Working Group on Communications, the Working Group on Situations and the Commission on Human Rights shall remain confidential until such time as the Commission may decide to make recommendations to the Council;

10. Further decides that the procedure as amended may continue to be referred to as the 1503 procedure.

On 28 July, the Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2000/23 & Corr.1], adopted decision 2000/284 without vote [agenda item 14 (g)].

Enhancing the effectiveness of the mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights

At its 45th plenary meeting, on 28 July 2000, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights decision 2000/109 of 26 April 2000, by which the Commission decided to approve and implement comprehensively and in its entirety the report of the inter-sessional open-ended Working Group on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights, endorsed the following specific decisions of the Commission:

(a) To merge the mandates of the independent expert on the effects of structural adjustment policies on economic, social and cultural rights and the Special Rapporteur on the effects of foreign debt on the full enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights, thus creating a post of independent expert on the effects of structural adjustment policies and foreign debt on the full enjoyment of all human rights, particularly economic, social and cultural rights;

(b) To establish a time-limit of two terms of three years for membership of special procedures working groups, as well as for special rapporteurs, whose position in relation to time-limits is covered by the statement made by the Chairperson of the Commission on 29 April 1999. In the case of the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention and the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, as a transitional measure, turnover of membership in both groups shall be accomplished incrementally over a three-year period. In order to provide the appropriate continuity during this transitional period, two members shall be replaced in year one, two in year two and one in year three;

(c) To reduce the duration of the annual meeting of the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights to five working days from the present eight days;

(d) To request the Chairperson of the Commission to convene a one-day informal meeting of the Commission in late September each year to facilitate exchange of information in advance of the consideration of the item on human rights by the General Assembly. Such a meeting shall be convened for the first time in September 2000;

(e) That the annual session of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights shall, from this year, be of three weeks' duration;

(f) That chairpersons of standard-setting working groups shall, if the working group considers it appropriate and in consultation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, be provided with the necessary financial assistance to undertake informal consultations during the inter-sessional period with a view to advancing progress in respect of the working group's mandate.

On 14 August [dec. 2000/105], the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, with the object of implementing Commission decision 2000/109 (see p. 595), decided to include on an experimental basis in its annual report an overview of its discussions on human rights violations. The Subcommission, on 18 August, revised its decision and asked the Commission's advice as to how it could best inform the Commission of its deliberations under the item on human rights violations.

Pursuant to Commission decision 2000/109, the Commission Chairperson held a one-day informal meeting of the Commission on 15 September [E/CN.4/IM/2000/1] to facilitate exchange of information in advance of the General Assembly.

Organization of work in 2001

On 26 April [dec. 2000/111], the Commission decided that its fifty-seventh session should take place from 19 March to 27 April 2001. The Economic and Social Council approved that decision on 28 July (decision 2000/285).

Also on 26 April [dec. 2000/112], the Commission recommended that the Council authorize 30 fully serviced additional meetings, to be used only if necessary, for the Commission's 2001 session, and requested the Chairperson of that session to make every effort to organize its work within the times normally allotted. By decision 2000/286 of 28 July, the Council authorized the additional meetings and approved the Commission's request to its Chairperson.

Thematic procedures

A meeting of the special rapporteurs/representatives, experts and chairpersons of working groups of the special procedures of the Commission and of the advisory services programme was held in 2000 (see p. 623).

Commission action. On 27 April [res. 2000/86], the Commission asked the thematic special rapporteurs, representatives, experts and working groups to make recommendations to prevent human rights violations; follow progress made by Governments; continue close cooperation with relevant treaty bodies and country rapporteurs; include in their reports information provided by Governments on follow-up action, as well as their own observations thereon; include in their reports gender-disaggregated data and address human rights violations directed against women, or to which women were particularly vulnerable; and address human rights violations directed against children, or to which children were particularly vulnerable, and include age-disaggregated data. The Commission requested them to include in their reports comments on problems of responsiveness and the result of analyses, and suggestions as to areas where Governments might request assistance through the programme of advisory services administered by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR). The Secretary-General was asked to convene periodic meetings of thematic special rapporteurs, representatives, experts and chairpersons of working groups and treaty bodies to enable them to exchange views, cooperate and coordinate more closely and make recommendations. He should issue annually their conclusions and recommendations; present annually a list of all persons currently constituting the thematic and country procedures; and ensure the availability of resources to implement all thematic mandates.

The Commission's requests to the Secretary-General to convene periodic meetings and to ensure the availability of resources were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 2000/281 of 28 July.

Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights

2000 session

The Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, at its fifty-second session (Geneva, 31 July-18 August) [E/CN.4/2001/2], adopted 27 resolutions and 20 decisions, and recommended 14 draft decisions for adoption by the Commission.

The Subcommission approved the composition of its working groups for 2001 [dec. 2000/119], took note of items proposed by the Bureau for the Subcommission's draft provisional agenda for 2001 [dec. 2000/120] and asked its Chairperson to submit a written report to the Commission in 2001 regarding significant aspects of the Subcommission's work [dec. 2000/106]. It expressed concern that the reduction in length of its annual session would adversely affect the effectiveness of the sessional working group on the administration of justice [res. 2000/5].

The Subcommission adjourned until 2001 the debates on State cooperation with UN human rights mechanisms [dec. 2000/117] and on the adverse effects on human rights of the proliferation and transfer of small arms and light weapons [dec. 2000/118].

Report of Subcommission Chairperson. The Commission considered a January report [E/CN.4/2000/87], submitted in response to its 1999 request [YUN 1999, p. 568] and prepared by the Subcommission's 1999 Chairperson, Ribot Hatano (Japan), describing various aspects of the Subcommission's work, including its methods of work, the rationalization of its work, and studies, reports and new subjects. The report contained an evaluation of the Subcommission's work in 1999.

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 2000/83], the Commission decided to consider the Subcommission's work in 2001.

Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights

Reports of High Commissioner. In her annual report to the Commission [E/CN.4/2000/12], the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, Mary Robinson (Ireland), discussed the prevention of human rights violations. She stated that the evolution of a human rights situation was often a barometer of conflict, which she believed would assist the Security Council in its efforts to prevent conflicts. Preventive measures currently in use included urgent appeals by special rapporteurs and thematic mechanisms; requests by treaty bodies for emergency reports; the urgent discussion of situations in such bodies as the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination; the indication of interim measures of protection under petition procedures for which treaty bodies were responsible; the urgent dispatch of personal envoys of the Secretary-General, the High Commissioner or other organizations, as well as human rights and humanitarian observers or fact-finders; the establishment of international courts; and proposals to establish a rapid reaction force. It was the High Commissioner's intention to strengthen those activities and to seek the assistance of partners to maintain a list of eminent persons who could offer their good offices to defuse situations where gross violations of human rights appeared imminent; develop a capacity for the rapid dispatch of human rights and humanitarian observers or fact-finders in situations of need; dispatch personal envoys of the High Commissioner to incipient crisis situations; and submit urgent reports to the Bureau of the Commission and to the Secretary-General, requesting that he make them available to Council members.

In an addendum to her annual report [E/CN.4/2000/12/Add.1], the High Commissioner described activities taken to promote tolerance and pluralism, pursuant to a 1998 Commission request [YUN 1998, p. 653]; provided an assessment of OHCHR field presences, as requested in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 570]; and described OHCHR efforts to promote democracy, also in response to a 1999 request [ibid., p. 630].

In a June report [E/2000/83], the High Commissioner described action taken by human rights mechanisms regarding racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance (see p. 640), social development and women's human rights and national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (see p. 636). On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of that report (decision 2000/289).

In an August report [A/55/36], the High Commissioner invited the General Assembly to outline new strategies for the more effective protection of human rights, particularly to consider steps to prevent gross violations of human rights and for the integration of human rights and development, as well as of human rights in efforts for the maintenance of international peace and security and for the implementation of the right to development. She drew the Assembly's attention to new foundations that had been developed for more effective human rights protection and, regarding the prevention of human rights violations, updated the human rights situations in Chechnya (Russian Federation), East Timor and Sierra Leone. A review of developments in areas of structural significance included human rights and development; human rights and social strategies; women's human rights; human rights issues at the Millennium Assembly of the United Nations (2000); and perspectives on the 2001 World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (see p. 641). In an annex to the report, the High Commissioner discussed the international human rights treaty system. She urged universal ratification, accompanied by the strengthening and rationalization of the treaty system, better integration of treaty-body jurisprudence into UN activities, and expansion and improvement in Secretariat servicing. It was critical, she said, to allocate adequate resources for the servicing of the treaty bodies.

On 4 December, the General Assembly took note of the report of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/55/602/Add.5] pertaining to the August report of the High Commissioner (decision 55/422).

Commission action. On 7 April [res. 2000/1], the Commission called on the High Commissioner to continue to emphasize the promotion and protection of economic, social and cultural rights and encouraged her to continue to strengthen her relationship with the relevant UN bodies, funds and specialized agencies. It also called on her to continue to strengthen the management of her Office and to improve OHCHR's responsiveness in all priority areas, especially economic, social and cultural rights. The High Commissioner was asked to submit information pursuant to the Commission's resolution in her annual report to the Commission. The Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly provide OHCHR with means commensurate to its increasing tasks, as well as more resources for special rapporteurs. By decision 2000/244 of 28 July, the Council endorsed the Commission's recommendation.

On 25 April [E/2000/23 & Corr.1], the Commission adopted by consensus a statement of its Chairperson, reaffirming its appeal to the Council and the Assembly for additional resources. On 28 July, the Council, taking note of the statement, approved the Commission's recommendation to the Council regarding the allocation of additional resources (decision 2000/287).

Annual Appeal 2000

The Annual Appeal 2000, launched by the High Commissioner, sought $53.1 million in voluntary contributions for support to national human rights institutions and to develop regional strategies with partners in the five UN regional groups established by the General Assembly (Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Caribbean, Western Europe and other States, Eastern Europe) to promote and protect human rights through national capacity-building, national plans of action, the ratification and implementation of international conventions and the pursuit of regional cooperation. As at 31 October, $36 million had been received.

Commission action. On 7 April [res. 2000/1], the Commission welcomed the Annual Appeal 2000 and asked the High Commissioner to inform Member States on all aspects of follow-up to, and preparation of, annual appeals. It noted the High Commissioner's request that voluntary contributions should be unearmarked and asked Governments to take account of her request. The High Commissioner was asked to submit information pursuant to the resolution in her annual report to the Commission.

OIOS audit

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/244 [YUN 1999, p. 1274], the Secretary-General, in April [A/54/836], transmitted a report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the audit of the OHCHR Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda (HRFOR), which was established in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1071] and had closed in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 736]. The audit, carried out at OHCHR's request, covered the period September 1998 to February 1999.

The audit determined that HRFOR's internal controls relating to finance, personnel, procurement and property management either were not in place or did not function effectively. There were also serious breakdowns in communications and cooperation between the field and headquarters. Based on the audit results, OHCHR recognized that it needed to change the administration of its field operations to improve management accountability. OIOS made a series of recommendations and, although HRFOR had already closed, OIOS expressed the view that OHCHR had benefited from the lessons learned and the related recommendations. Annexed to the report were the observations of OHCHR.

The General Assembly, on 15 June (decision 54/462 B), deferred consideration of the report until its fifty-fifth session. On 23 December (decision 55/458), it decided that the agenda items under which the report was submitted remained for consideration at the resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session.

Composition of staff

Report of High Commissioner. As requested by the Commission in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 570], the High Commissioner, in February [E/CN.4/2000/104], submitted a report on the composition of OHCHR staff reflecting grade, nationality and gender as at 31 December 1999.

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 2000/73], by a roll-call vote of 35 to 17, with 1 abstention, the Commission requested the Secretary-General to ensure that particular attention was paid to recruiting personnel from developing countries for existing vacancies and additional OHCHR posts to ensure an equitable geographical distribution, giving priority to high-level and Professional posts and the recruitment of women. It asked the High Commissioner to report in 2001.

Strengthening action to promote human rights

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 54/174 [YUN 1999, p. 571], the Secretary-General, in an August report with later addenda [A/55/213 & Add.1,2], summarized replies received from five Member States in response to his request for information on proposals for strengthening UN action in human rights, through the promotion of international cooperation based on the principles of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 55/104 without vote [agenda item 114 (b)].

Strengthening United Nations action in the field of human rights through the promotion of international cooperation and the importance of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that among the purposes of the United Nations are those of developing friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and taking other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace, as well as achieving international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Desirous of achieving further progress in international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that such international cooperation should be based on the principles embodied in international law, especially the Charter of the United Nations, as well as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other relevant instruments,

Deeply convinced that United Nations action in this field should be based not only on a profound understanding of the broad range of problems existing in all societies but also on full respect for the political, economic and social realities of each of them, in strict compliance with the purposes and principles of the Charter and for the basic purpose of promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms through international cooperation,

Recalling its previous resolutions in this regard,

Reaffirming the importance of ensuring the universality, objectivity and non-selectivity of the consideration of human rights issues, as affirmed in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Affirming the importance of the objectivity, independence and discretion of the special rapporteurs and representatives on thematic issues and on countries, as well as of the members of the working groups, in carrying out their mandates,

Underlining the obligation that Governments have to promote and protect human rights and to carry out the responsibilities that they have undertaken under international law, especially the Charter, as well as various international instruments in the field of human rights,

1. Reiterates that, by virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all peoples have the right freely to determine, without external interference, their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and that every State has the duty to respect that right within the provisions of the Charter, including respect for territorial integrity;

2. Reaffirms that it is a purpose of the United Nations and the task of all Member States, in cooperation with the Organization, to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur;

3. Calls upon all Member States to base their activities for the promotion and protection of human rights, including the development of further international cooperation in this field, on the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and other relevant international instruments, and to refrain from activities that are inconsistent with that international framework;

4. Considers that international cooperation in this field should make an effective and practical contribution to the urgent task of preventing mass and flagrant violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and to the strengthening of international peace and security;

5. Reaffirms that the promotion, protection and full realization of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, as a legitimate concern of the world community, should be guided by the principles of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity and should not be used for political ends;

6. Requests all human rights bodies within the United Nations system, as well as the special rapporteurs and representatives, independent experts and working groups, to take duly into account the contents of the present resolution in carrying out their mandates;

7. Expresses its conviction that an unbiased and fair approach to human rights issues contributes to the promotion of international cooperation as well as to the effective promotion, protection and realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

8. Stresses, in this context, the continuing need for impartial and objective information on the political, economic and social situations and events of all countries;

9. Invites Member States to consider adopting, as appropriate, within the framework of their respective legal systems and in accordance with their obligations under international law, especially the Charter, and international human rights instruments, the measures that they may deem appropriate to achieve further progress in international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

10. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to take duly into account the present resolution and to consider further proposals for the strengthening of United Nations action in the field of human rights through the promotion of international cooperation and the importance of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity;

11. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and requests the Secretary-General to invite Member States to present practical proposals and ideas that would contribute to the strengthening of United Nations action in the field of human rights, through the promotion of international cooperation based on the principles of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity, and to submit a comprehensive report on this question to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

Human rights instruments

General aspects

In 2000, seven UN human rights instruments were in force that required monitoring of their implementation by expert bodies. The instruments and their treaty bodies were: the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination [YUN 1965, p. 440, GA res. 2106 A (XX)] (Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD)); the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights [YUN 1966, p. 423, GA res. 2200 A (XXI)] (Human Rights Committee); the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights [ibid., p. 419, GA res. 2200 A (XXI)] (Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights); the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid [YUN 1973, p. 103, GA res. 3068 (XXVIII)] (Group of Three, suspended in 1995) [YUN 1995, p. 693]; the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women [YUN 1979, p. 895, GA res. 34/180] (Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW)); the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [YUN 1984, p. 813, GA res. 39/46] (Committee against Torture); and the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [YUN 1989, p. 560, GA res. 44/25] (Committee on the Rights of the Child).

On 18 August [res. 2000/27], the Subcommission recommended that the Commission consider the implications of withdrawal from, or limitation of the scope of, international treaty obligations at its next session. It decided to consider the question in 2001.

Human rights treaty bodies

Reports of Secretary-General. In a January report with later addendum [E/CN.4/2000/98 &

Add.1], the Secretary-General summarized comments received on the recommendations of the independent expert on enhancing the long-term effectiveness of the UN human rights treaty system, contained in the expert's final report [YUN 1997, p. 593], and gave his own views on the legal, administrative and other implications of the recommendations. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 53/138 [YUN 1998, p. 612], the Secretary-General, in August [A/55/313], stated that consultations with Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies, NGOs and interested persons on the final report were held and a report thereon was submitted to the Commission (see above). On 4 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note (decision 55/420).

The Secretary-General, also in January [E/CN.4/2000/106], reported on the effective functioning of human rights mechanisms. The report outlined measures taken to ensure financing and adequate staff and information resources for the treaty bodies. It also described assistance provided to States parties regarding the preparation of their reports and the publication status in all official UN languages of the Manual on Human Rights Reporting [Sales No. E.GV.97.0.16]. In August [A/55/278], the Secretary-General updated information contained in his January report.

In response to Assembly resolution 49/178 [YUN 1994, p. 1060], the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies on their twelfth meeting (Geneva, 5-8 June) [A/55/206]. The three plans of action for strengthening the implementation of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment; the Convention on the Rights of the Child; and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights had been converted into projects that were harmonized as part of a consolidated Annual Appeal by the High Commissioner to donors for extrabudgetary contributions (see p. 600). The Secretariat updated the chairpersons on efforts to develop human rights indicators and the Special Adviser of the High Commissioner briefed them on regional strategies on the new OHCHR regional approaches for the promotion and protection of human rights. The chairpersons updated each other on their treaty bodies' contributions to the 2001 World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (see p. 641). On 7 June, a joint meeting was held between the chairpersons and the special rapporteurs and representatives, experts and chairpersons of working groups of the special procedures system of the Commission and of the advisory services programme. The meeting identified areas of common concern, including the need to improve the exchange of information between the treaty bodies and the special procedures mandates; an exchange of best practices in the follow-up to concluding observations, decisions and opinions on individual cases and recommendations made by special rapporteurs that would be beneficial to both sets of mechanisms; and the possibility of joint or coordinated contributions to the 2001 World Conference.

The chairpersons agreed on the need to harmonize practices regarding the examination of States parties' reports, welcomed the organization of a workshop in 2001 to develop indicators on the right to education and recommended that they should be granted formal status within the Economic and Social Council.

The chairpersons had before them a report of the Secretary-General updating the status of the human rights instruments and the general situation of overdue reports as at 15 March [HRI/MC/2000/2]. A note by the Secretariat contained a compilation of the general comments or general recommendations adopted by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Human Rights Committee, CERD, CEDAW and the Committee against Torture [HRI/GEN/1/Rev.4]. During the year, OHCHR produced a document outlining the reporting history of States parties to the principal international human rights instruments as at 31 March [HRI/GEN/4].

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 2000/75], the Commission urged States parties to identify proposals to improve the functioning of the treaty bodies and to meet their reporting obligations. States parties that had not submitted their initial reports were invited to avail themselves of technical assistance to do so. Chairpersons of the treaty bodies were encouraged to pursue the reform process aimed at improving the effective implementation of human rights instruments. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 2002 on measures taken to implement its resolution and on measures to ensure financing and adequate staff and information resources for the effective operation of the treaty bodies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.1], adopted resolution 55/90 without vote [agenda item 114 (a)].

Conscious of the importance of coordination of the human rights promotion and protection activities of the United Nations bodies active in the field of human rights,

Recalling that the effectiveness of the human rights treaty bodies in encouraging the realization by States parties of their obligations under United Nations human rights instruments requires constructive dialogue aimed at assisting States parties in identifying solutions to human rights problems, which should be based on the reporting process supplemented by information from all relevant sources, which should be shared with all interested parties,

Recalling also the initiatives taken by a number of human rights treaty bodies to elaborate early warning measures and urgent procedures, within their mandates, with a view to preventing the occurrence or recurrence of serious human rights violations,

Reaffirming its responsibility for the effective functioning of human rights treaty bodies, and reaffirming also the importance of:

(a) Promoting the effective functioning of the periodic reporting by States parties to those instruments,

(b) Securing sufficient financial, human and information resources for the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to enable the human rights treaty bodies to carry out their mandates effectively, including in regard to their ability to work in the applicable working languages,

(c) Promoting greater efficiency and effectiveness through better coordination of the activities of the United Nations bodies active in the field of human rights, taking into account the need to avoid unnecessary duplication and overlapping of their mandates and tasks,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Welcomes the submission of the reports of the persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies on their eleventh and twelfth meetings, held at Geneva from 31

(a) Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to provide adequate resources in respect of each human rights treaty body, while making the most efficient use of existing resources, in order to give the human rights treaty bodies adequate administrative support and better access to technical expertise and relevant information;

(b) Calls upon the Secretary-General to seek, in the next biennium, the resources within the regular budget of the United Nations necessary to give the human rights treaty bodies adequate administrative support and better access to technical expertise and relevant information without diverting resources from the development programmes and activities of the United Nations;

(c) Welcomes the plans of action prepared by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to enhance the resources available to all the human rights treaty bodies and thereby strengthen the implementation of the human rights treaties, and encourages all Governments, United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, non-governmental organizations and interested persons to consider contributing to the appeal for extrabudgetary resources for the treaty bodies made by the High Commissioner until the regular budget funding meets their needs;

6. Encourages ongoing efforts to identify measures for more effective implementation of the United Nations human rights instruments;

7. Takes note of the measures taken by each of the human rights treaty bodies to improve their functioning, as reflected in their respective annual reports, and encourages continuing efforts by the treaty bodies and the Secretary-General to assist States parties in meeting their reporting obligations and to reduce the backlog in the consideration of reports by the treaty bodies;

8. Welcomes the continuing efforts by the human rights treaty bodies and the Secretary-General aimed at streamlining, rationalizing, rendering more transparent and otherwise improving reporting procedures, and encourages the Secretary-General, the treaty bodies and the persons chairing the treaty bodies at their next meeting to continue to examine ways of reducing the duplication of reporting required under the different instruments, without impairing the quality of reporting, and of generally reducing the reporting burden on States parties, including through an ongoing examination of proposals for reports focused on a limited range of issues, the harmonization of the general guidelines regarding the form and content of reports, the possibility of consolidating overdue reports, the timing of consideration of reports and the methods of work of the treaty bodies;

9. Calls upon the Secretary-General to complete as soon as possible the detailed analytical study comparing the provisions of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, which is being prepared with a view to identifying duplication of reporting required under those instruments;

12. Underlines the importance of providing technical assistance to a State, upon its request, in the process of ratifying human rights instruments and in the preparation of its initial and subsequent reports;

13. Welcomes the work done by the Secretary-General to compile in a single volume all the general guidelines regarding the form and content of reports to be submitted by States parties that have been issued by the human rights treaty bodies, and encourages the Secretary-General also to compile the rules of procedure for the treaty bodies;

14. Reiterates its concern about the persistent backlog of reports on the implementation by States parties of certain United Nations instruments on human rights and about delays in the consideration of reports of the human rights treaty bodies;

15. Also reiterates its concern about the large number of overdue reports, and again urges States parties to make every effort to meet their reporting obligations;

16. Urges all States parties whose reports have been examined by human rights treaty bodies to provide adequate follow-up to the observations and final comments of the treaty bodies on their reports;

Reservations to human rights treaties

Commission action. On 26 April [dec. 2000/108], the Commission, taking note of a 1999 Subcommission resolution and a working paper submitted by Françoise Hampson (United Kingdom) [YUN 1999, p. 574], requested the Subcommission to ask her to submit in 2000 revised terms of reference for her proposed study on reservations to human rights treaties, further clarifying how the study would complement work already under way on such reservations, in particular by the International Law Commission (ILC).

Note by Secretariat. A July note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/32] stated that Ms. Hampson had not prepared the document requested by the Commission.

Subcommission action. On 18 August [res. 2000/26], the Subcommission appointed Ms. Hampson as Special Rapporteur to prepare a comprehensive study on reservations to human rights treaties, involving the examination of the actual reservations and interpretative declarations made to human rights treaties in the light of the legal regime applicable to reservations and interpretative declarations. A preliminary report was called for in 2001, a progress report in 2002 and a final report in 2003. The Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur, who would seek the advice and co-operation of the ILC Special Rapporteur and of the relevant treaty bodies. The Subcommission requested the authorization of a meeting between its Special Rapporteur, the ILC Special Rapporteur and the chairpersons of the relevant treaty bodies or their nominees, when ILC and the Subcommission were in session.

States not parties to 1966 Covenants

Desiring to provide States that had not ratified the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights (see below and next page) with assistance in the promotion and observance of the human rights and fundamental freedoms proclaimed in the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 217 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 535], the Subcommission, on 18 August [res. 2000/23], asked the High Commissioner to convene a seminar of States not parties to the Covenants, before the Subcommission's 2001 session or as soon as possible, with a view to examining obstacles to ratification of those Covenants and ways of surmounting them. In preparation for that seminar, it requested OHCHR to seek the views of States and NGOs concerned, and to gather information regarding obstacles to the enjoyment of the human rights and fundamental freedoms embodied in the Declaration and obstacles to ratification of the Covenants and the measures taken by States to remove them. The seminar should define areas of UN assistance that might be useful for States concerned and adopt specific recommendations on the provision of assistance to those States in meeting their needs. It should also formulate agreed recommendations concerning the creation of a permanent or temporary mechanism for encouraging efforts by States to observe the human rights and fundamental freedoms contained in the Declaration and for encouraging their ratification of the Covenants.

Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocols

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 2000, parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 423], totalled 147 and 98 States, respectively. During the year, Bangladesh, Botswana and Ghana became parties to the Covenant; Cape Verde, Guatemala and Lesotho acceded to the Optional Protocol and Ghana ratified it.

In 2000, Cape Verde, Monaco and Turkmenistan acceded to the Second Optional Protocol, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty—adopted by the Assembly in resolution 44/128 [YUN 1989, p. 484]—bringing the total number of States parties to 44 at year's end.

On 26 April [res. 2000/67], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 2001 and 2002 on the status of the Covenant and the Optional Protocols.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Covenant and its Optional Protocols as at 15 November [E/CN.4/2001/87] and provided the status of withdrawals and reservations [E/CN.4/2000/96].

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Human Rights Committee, established under article 28 of the Covenant, held three sessions in 2000: its sixty-eighth from 13 to 31 March in New York, and its sixty-ninth from 10 to 28 July [A/55/40, vol. I] and seventieth from 16 October to 3 November [A/56/40, vol. I], both in Geneva.

In 2000, the Committee considered reports from 13 States—Argentina, Australia, Congo, Denmark, Gabon, Guyana, Ireland, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Mongolia, Peru, Trinidad and Tobago, United Kingdom (Crown Dependencies of Jersey, Guernsey and the Isle of Man)—under article 40 of the Covenant. It adopted views on communications from individuals claiming that their rights under the Covenant had been violated, and decided that other such communications were inadmissible. Those views and decisions were annexed to the Committee's reports [A/55/40, vol. II; A/56/40 vol. II].

On 29 March, the Committee adopted General Comment No. 28, updating its general comment adopted in 1981 [YUN 1981, p. 890] on article 3 of the Covenant concerning equality of rights between men and women. A June report of the Secretary-General [E/2000/76] contained General Comment Nos. 27 [YUN 1999, p. 575] and 28.

The twentieth meeting of States parties to the Covenant met in New York on 14 September [CCPR/SP/57] to elect nine members of the Committee to replace those whose terms were due to expire on 31 December [CCPR/SP/56 & Add.1-4].

The Commission, on 17 April [res. 2000/14], invited the Committee to contribute to the preparatory process for the 2001 World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (see p. 641). The resulting document was annexed to the Committee's report [A/56/40, vol. I].

On 26 April [res. 2000/67], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to ensure that OHCHR assisted the Committee.

Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 2000, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 419], had 143 States parties. During the year, Ghana ratified the Covenant.

On 26 April [res. 2000/67], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 2001 and 2002 on the status of the Covenant.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Covenant as at 15 November [E/CN.4/2001/87] and provided the status of withdrawals and reservations [E/CN.4/2000/96].

Draft optional protocol

Report of High Commissioner. In January [E/CN.4/2000/49], the High Commissioner presented the views of six States on a draft optional protocol that would allow the consideration of communications in relation to the Covenant and summarized options regarding the draft.

Commission action. On 17 April [res. 2000/9], the Commission asked the High Commissioner to invite States, international organizations and NGOs that had not done so to submit their comments on the draft optional protocol, as well as to invite States to submit their comments on the options relating to the proposal for a draft optional protocol, contained in her report (see above), or to propose any other option that would be conducive to a substantive dialogue.

Subcommission action. On 17 August [res. 2000/9], the Subcommission suggested that the Commission establish an open-ended working group to study further a draft optional protocol. It asked the High Commissioner to organize an expert meeting on a draft optional protocol and to report thereon in 2001.

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights held its twenty-second (25 April–12 May), twenty-third (extraordinary) (14 August–1 September) and twenty-fourth (13 November–1 December) sessions, all in Geneva [E/2001/22]. The Committee's extraordinary session was used entirely for the consideration of States parties' reports in order to reduce the backlog of reports. The pre-session, five-member working group of the Committee met in Geneva for five days prior to each session to identify issues that might most usefully be discussed with representatives of reporting States.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2000/289 of 28 July, took note of the Committee's report on its twentieth and twenty-first sessions, held in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 575].

In 2000, the Committee examined reports under articles 16 and 17 of the Covenant submitted by Australia, Belgium, the Congo, Egypt, Finland, Georgia, Italy, Jordan, Kyrgyzstan, Mongolia, Morocco, Portugal, the Sudan and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY). In addition, the Committee considered the state of implementation of recommendations it had made in 1998 regarding Israel and Nigeria [YUN 1998, p. 617].

On 27 November, the Committee held a day of general discussion on the right of everyone to benefit from the protection of the moral and material interests resulting from any scientific, literary or artistic production of which he/she was the author, organized in cooperation with the World Intellectual Property Organization.

The Committee adopted General Comment No. 14 on the right to the highest attainable standard of health.

As its contribution to the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (see p. 641), the Committee decided to submit its General Comment Nos. 11 on plans of action for primary education and 13 on the right to education [YUN 1999, p. 575].

On 26 April [res. 2000/67], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to ensure that OHCHR assisted the Committee.

Convention against racial discrimination

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 2000, there were 157 parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2106 A (XX) [YUN 1965, p. 440]. Ireland and Liechtenstein became parties during the year.

On 17 April [res. 2000/14], the Commission appealed to States that had not done so to consider ratifying or acceding to the Convention, and to States parties to consider making the declaration provided for in article 14 of the Convention (see below).

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 30 June [A/55/203].

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD), set up under article 8 of the Convention, held its fifty-sixth and fifty-seventh sessions, both in Geneva, from 6 to 24 March and from 31 July to 25 August, respectively [A/55/18].

The Committee considered reports, comments and information submitted by 24 States parties—Australia, Bahrain, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Ghana, Holy See, Lesotho, Malta, Mauritius, Nepal, Netherlands, Norway, Rwanda, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, Tonga, United Kingdom, Uzbekistan, Zimbabwe—on measures they had taken to implement the Convention and summarized its members' views on each country report and the statements made by the States parties concerned.

In conformity with article 14 of the Convention, CERD considered communications from individuals or groups of individuals claiming violation of their rights under the Convention by a State party recognizing CERD's competence to receive and consider such communications. Thirty States parties (Algeria, Australia, Bulgaria, Chile, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, France, Hungary, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, Malta, Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Senegal, Slovakia, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM), Ukraine, Uruguay) had declared such recognition.

Under article 15, the Committee was empowered to consider copies of petitions, reports and other information relating to Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories. CERD noted that it had been difficult to fulfil its functions under article 15 as the documents did not include copies of petitions and contained scant information directly related to the Convention's principles and objectives. The Committee asked that the appropriate information be furnished.

In March, the Committee adopted general recommendations XXV (on gender-related dimensions of racial discrimination), XXVI (on article 6—the right to seek just and adequate reparation or satisfaction for damage suffered as a result of racial discrimination) and XXVII (on discrimination against Roma).

The Committee asked the General Assembly to implement its March decision to hold its fifty-eighth session in New York from 8 to 26 January 2001. An October addendum to the Committee's report [A/55/18/Add.1] contained the programme budget implications of the decision. By decision 55/419 of 4 December, the Assembly decided to refer the decision back to CERD for further consideration and consultation with States parties.

Reporting on the financial situation of the Committee [A/55/266], the Secretary-General stated that, as at 30 June, the total outstanding in arrears amounted to $173,572.

As at 31 December, 30 States parties had accepted an amendment to the Convention regarding the financing of CERD [YUN 1992, p. 714]. The amendment was to enter into force when accepted by a two-thirds majority of States parties.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/600], adopted resolution 55/81 without vote [agenda item 112].

Convention against torture

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 2000, 123 States were parties to the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 39/46 [YUN 1984, p. 813]. During the year, Botswana, Gabon, Ghana, Lebanon and Qatar became parties. Forty-three parties had made the required declarations under articles 21 and 22 (under which a party recognized the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications to the effect that a party claimed that another was not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention, and to receive communications from or on behalf of individuals who claimed to be victims of a violation of the Convention by a State party) and three had made the declaration under article 21 only. Amendments to articles 17 and 18, adopted in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 735], had been accepted by 23 States parties as at year's end.

On 20 April [res. 2000/43], the Commission invited all ratifying or acceding States and those that had not done so to make the declaration provided for in articles 21 and 22 and to consider withdrawing their reservations to article 20. It asked the Secretary-General to continue to report annually on the status of the Convention.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 1 July [A/55/208] and 15 November [E/CN.4/2001/58]. On 4 December, the Assembly took note of the former report (decision 55/420).

The Assembly, in resolution 55/89, urged States that had not done so to become parties to the Convention and invited those becoming parties and those that were parties but had not done so to make the declarations provided for in articles 21 and 22 and to consider withdrawing reservations to article 20.

Draft optional protocol

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2000/35], the Commission asked the working group on the draft optional protocol to the Convention (intended to establish a preventive system of regular visits to places of detention) to meet prior to the Commission's 2001 session to complete the final and substantive text. The Secretary-General was asked to transmit the report of the working group to Governments, specialized agencies, chairpersons of human rights treaty bodies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs and to invite them to submit their comments to the group. He should invite them, as well as the Chairperson of the Committee against Torture and the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture, to participate in working group activities.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council authorized the group to meet for two weeks and encouraged the group's Chairperson/Rapporteur to facilitate the completion of a consolidated text (decision 2000/262).

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee against Torture, established as a monitoring body under the Convention, held its twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth sessions in Geneva from 1 to 19 May [A/55/44] and from 13 to 24 November [A/56/44], respectively. Under article 19, it considered reports submitted by Armenia, Australia, Belarus, Cameroon, Canada, China, El Salvador, Guatemala, the Netherlands, Paraguay, Poland, Portugal, Slovenia and the United States.

The Committee held four closed meetings in May and three in November, during which, in accordance with article 20, it studied confidential information that appeared to contain well-founded indications that torture was systematically practised in a State party to the Convention. Under article 22, the Committee considered communications submitted by individuals who claimed that their rights, as enumerated in the Convention, had been violated by a State party and who had exhausted all available domestic remedies.

The Committee's contribution to the preparatory process for the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (see p. 641) was annexed to its report [A/56/44].

Convention on elimination of discrimination against women and optional protocol

On 4 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 55/70, urged States that had not ratified or acceded to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women to do so. It also urged them to become parties to the Optional Protocol.

(For details on the status of the Convention and on the Optional Protocol, see p. 1123.)

Convention on the Rights of the Child

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 2000, there continued to be 191 States parties to the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560].

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 5 July [A/55/201] and 27 November [E/CN.4/2001/74]. On 4 December, the Assembly took note of the former report (decision 55/418).

An amendment to the Convention to expand the membership of the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) from 10 to 18, approved by the Assembly in resolution 50/155 [YUN 1995, p. 706], had been accepted by 96 States parties in 2000. The amendment required acceptance by a two-thirds majority to enter into force.

On 27 April [res. 2000/85], the Commission urged States that had not done so to sign and ratify or accede to the Convention. It called on States parties to implement the Convention and to accept the amendment to expand CRC membership. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to assist the Committee; the Economic and Social Council endorsed that request on 28 July (decision 2000/280).

Implementation

Monitoring body. In 2000, CRC held its twenty-third (10-28 January) [CRC/C/94], twenty-fourth (15 May-2 June) [CRC/C/97] and twenty-fifth (18 September-6 October) [CRC/C/100] sessions, all in Geneva. Each session was preceded by a pre-sessional working group, which reviewed State party reports and identified the main questions to be discussed with reporting States. It also provided an opportunity to consider technical assistance and international cooperation.

Under article 44 of the Convention, CRC considered initial reports from 26 States parties: Armenia, Burundi, Cambodia, Central African Republic, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Finland, Georgia, Grenada, India, Iran, Jordan, Kyrgyzstan, Malta, Marshall Islands, Norway, Peru, Sierra Leone, Slovakia, South Africa, Suriname, Tajikistan, FYROM and United Kingdom (Isle of Man and Overseas Territories).

In September, the Committee devoted its day of general discussion to violence suffered by children living in institutions managed, licensed or supervised by the State, and in the context of law and public order concerns.

CRC reports on its eighteenth to twenty-third sessions were issued in a consolidated report [A/55/41].

Children in armed conflict

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 May [meeting 97], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council [A/54/L.84], adopted resolution 54/263 without vote [agenda item 116 (a)].

Optional protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict and on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the rights of the child, in particular its resolution 54/149 of 17 December 1999, in which it strongly supported the work of the open-ended inter-sessional working groups and urged them to finalize their work before the tenth anni- versary of the entry into force of the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Expressing its appreciation to the Commission on Human Rights for having finalized the texts of the two optional protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict and on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography,

Conscious of the tenth anniversaries, in the year 2000, of the World Summit for Children and the entry into force of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and of the symbolic and practical importance of the adoption of the two optional protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child before the special session of the General Assembly for the follow-up to the World Summit for Children, to be convened in 2001,

Adhering to the principle that the best interests of the child are to be a primary consideration in all actions concerning children,

Reaffirming its commitment to strive for the promotion and protection of the rights of the child in all avenues of life,

Recognizing that the adoption and implementation of the two optional protocols will make a substantial contribution to the promotion and protection of the rights of the child,

1. Adopts and opens for signature, ratification and accession the two optional protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict and on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, the texts of which are annexed to the present resolution;

ANNEX I

Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict

The States Parties to the present Protocol,

Encouraged by the overwhelming support for the Convention on the Rights of the Child, demonstrating the widespread commitment that exists to strive for the promotion and protection of the rights of the child,

Reaffirming that the rights of children require special protection, and calling for continuous improvement of the situation of children without distinction, as well as for their development and education in conditions of peace and security,

Disturbed by the harmful and widespread impact of armed conflict on children and the long-term consequences this has for durable peace, security and development,

Condemning the targeting of children in situations of armed conflict and direct attacks on objects protected under international law, including places generally having a significant presence of children, such as schools and hospitals,

Noting the adoption of the Statute of the International Criminal Court and, in particular, its inclusion as a war crime of conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years or using them to participate actively in hostilities in both international and non-international armed conflicts,

Considering, therefore, that to strengthen further the implementation of rights recognized in the Convention on the Rights of the Child there is a need to increase the protection of children from involvement in armed conflict,

Noting that article 1 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child specifies that, for the purposes of that Convention, a child means every human being below the age of 18 years unless, under the law applicable to the child, majority is attained earlier,

Convinced that an optional protocol to the Convention raising the age of possible recruitment of persons into armed forces and their participation in hostilities will contribute effectively to the implementation of the principle that the best interests of the child are to be a primary consideration in all actions concerning children,

Noting that the twenty-sixth international Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in December 1995 recommended, inter alia, that parties to conflict take every feasible step to ensure that children under the age of 18 years do not take part in hostilities,

Welcoming the unanimous adoption, in June 1999, of International Labour Organization Convention No. 182 on the Prohibition and Immediate Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour, which prohibits, inter alia, forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict,

Condemning with the gravest concern the recruitment, training and use within and across national borders of children in hostilities by armed groups distinct from the armed forces of a State, and recognizing the responsibility of those who recruit, train and use children in this regard,

Recalling the obligation of each party to an armed conflict to abide by the provisions of international humanitarian law,

Stressing that this Protocol is without prejudice to the purposes and principles contained in the Charter of the United Nations, including Article 51, and relevant norms of humanitarian law,

Bearing in mind that conditions of peace and security based on full respect of the purposes and principles contained in the Charter and observance of applicable human rights instruments are indispensable for the full protection of children, in particular during armed conflicts and foreign occupation,

Recognizing the special needs of those children who are particularly vulnerable to recruitment or use in hostilities contrary to this Protocol owing to their economic or social status or gender,

Mindful of the necessity of taking into consideration the economic, social and political root causes of the involvement of children in armed conflicts,

Convinced of the need to strengthen international co-operation in the implementation of this Protocol, as well as the physical and psychosocial rehabilitation and social reintegration of children who are victims of armed conflict,

Encouraging the participation of the community and, in particular, children and child victims in the dissemination of informational and educational programmes concerning the implementation of the Protocol,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

States Parties shall take all feasible measures to ensure that members of their armed forces who have not attained the age of 18 years do not take a direct part in hostilities.

Article 2

States Parties shall ensure that persons who have not attained the age of 18 years are not compulsorily recruited into their armed forces.

Article 3

1. States Parties shall raise the minimum age for the voluntary recruitment of persons into their national armed forces from that set out in article 38, paragraph 3, of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, taking account of the principles contained in that article and recognizing that under the Convention persons under 18 are entitled to special protection.

2. Each State Party shall deposit a binding declaration upon ratification of or accession to this Protocol that sets forth the minimum age at which it will permit voluntary recruitment into its national armed forces and a description of the safeguards that it has adopted to ensure that such recruitment is not forced or coerced.

3. States Parties that permit voluntary recruitment into their national armed forces under the age of 18 shall maintain safeguards to ensure, as a minimum, that:

- (a) Such recruitment is genuinely voluntary;
- (b) Such recruitment is done with the informed consent of the person's parents or legal guardians;
- (c) Such persons are fully informed of the duties involved in such military service;
- (d) Such persons provide reliable proof of age prior to acceptance into national military service.

4. Each State Party may strengthen its declaration at any time by notification to that effect addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall inform all States Parties. Such notification shall take effect on the date on which it is received by the Secretary-General.

5. The requirement to raise the age in paragraph 1 of the present article does not apply to schools operated by or under the control of the armed forces of the States Parties, in keeping with articles 28 and 29 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Article 4

1. Armed groups that are distinct from the armed forces of a State should not, under any circumstances, recruit or use in hostilities persons under the age of 18 years.

2. States Parties shall take all feasible measures to prevent such recruitment and use, including the adoption of legal measures necessary to prohibit and criminalize such practices.

3. The application of the present article under this Protocol shall not affect the legal status of any party to an armed conflict.

Article 5

Nothing in the present Protocol shall be construed as precluding provisions in the law of a State Party or in international instruments and international humanitarian law that are more conducive to the realization of the rights of the child.

Article 6

1. Each State Party shall take all necessary legal, administrative and other measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions of this Protocol within its jurisdiction.

2. States Parties undertake to make the principles and provisions of the present Protocol widely known and promoted by appropriate means, to adults and children alike.

3. States Parties shall take all feasible measures to ensure that persons within their jurisdiction recruited or used in hostilities contrary to this Protocol are demobilized or otherwise released from service. States Parties shall, when necessary, accord to these persons all appropriate assistance for their physical and psychological recovery and their social reintegration.

Article 7

1. States Parties shall cooperate in the implementation of the present Protocol, including in the prevention of any activity contrary to the Protocol and in the rehabilitation and social reintegration of persons who are victims of acts contrary to this Protocol, including through technical cooperation and financial assistance. Such assistance and cooperation will be undertaken in consultation with concerned States Parties and relevant international organizations.

2. States Parties in a position to do so shall provide such assistance through existing multilateral, bilateral or other programmes, or, inter alia, through a voluntary fund established in accordance with the rules of the General Assembly.

Article 8

1. Each State Party shall submit, within two years following the entry into force of the Protocol for that State Party, a report to the Committee on the Rights of the Child providing comprehensive information on the measures it has taken to implement the provisions of the Protocol, including the measures taken to implement the provisions on participation and recruitment.

2. Following the submission of the comprehensive report, each State Party shall include in the reports they submit to the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in accordance with article 44 of the Convention, any further information with respect to the implementation of the Protocol. Other States Parties to the Protocol shall submit a report every five years.

3. The Committee on the Rights of the Child may request from States Parties further information relevant to the implementation of this Protocol.

Article 9

1. The present Protocol is open for signature by any State that is a party to the Convention or has signed it.

2. The present Protocol is subject to ratification and is open to accession by any State. Instruments of ratification or accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

3. The Secretary-General, in his capacity as depositary of the Convention and the Protocol, shall inform all States Parties to the Convention and all States that have signed the Convention of each instrument of declaration pursuant to article 13.

Article 10

1. The present Protocol shall enter into force three months after the deposit of the tenth instrument of ratification or accession.

2. For each State ratifying the present Protocol or acceding to it after its entry into force, the present Protocol shall enter into force one month after the date of the deposit of its own instrument of ratification or accession.

Article 11

1. Any State Party may denounce the present Protocol at any time by written notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall thereafter inform the other States Parties to the Convention and all States that have signed the Convention. The denunciation shall take effect one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General. If, however, on the expiry of that year the denouncing State Party is engaged in armed conflict, the denunciation shall not take effect before the end of the armed conflict.

2. Such a denunciation shall not have the effect of releasing the State Party from its obligations under the present Protocol in regard to any act that occurs prior to the date on which the denunciation becomes effective. Nor shall such a denunciation prejudice in any way the continued consideration of any matter that is already under consideration by the Committee prior to the date on which the denunciation becomes effective.

Article 12

1. Any State Party may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary-General shall thereupon communicate the proposed amendment to States Parties, with a request that they indicate whether they favour a conference of States Parties for the purpose of considering and voting upon the proposals. In the event that, within four months from the date of such communication, at least one third of the States Parties favour such a conference, the Secretary-General shall convene the conference under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of States Parties present and voting at the conference shall be submitted to the General Assembly for approval.

2. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of the present article shall enter into force when it has been approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations and accepted by a two-thirds majority of States Parties.

3. When an amendment enters into force, it shall be binding on those States Parties that have accepted it, other States Parties still being bound by the provisions of the present Protocol and any earlier amendments that they have accepted.

Article 13

1. The present Protocol, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited in the archives of the United Nations.

2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit certified copies of the present Protocol to all States Parties to the Convention and all States that have signed the Convention.

ANNEX II

Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

The States Parties to the present Protocol,

Considering that, in order further to achieve the purposes of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the implementation of its provisions, especially articles 1, 11, 21, 32, 33, 34, 35 and 36, it would be appropriate to extend the measures that States Parties should undertake in order to guarantee the protection of the child from the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography,

Considering also that the Convention on the Rights of the Child recognizes the right of the child to be protected from economic exploitation and from performing any work that is likely to be hazardous or to interfere with the child's education, or to be harmful to the child's health or physical, mental, spiritual, moral or social development,

Gravely concerned at the significant and increasing international traffic of children for the purpose of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography,

Deeply concerned at the widespread and continuing practice of sex tourism, to which children are especially vulnerable, as it directly promotes the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography,

Recognizing that a number of particularly vulnerable groups, including girl children, are at greater risk of sexual exploitation, and that girl children are disproportionately represented among the sexually exploited,

Concerned about the growing availability of child pornography on the Internet and other evolving technologies, and recalling the International Conference on Combating Child Pornography on the Internet (Vienna, 1999) and, in particular, its conclusion calling for the worldwide criminalization of the production, distribution, exportation, transmission, importation, intentional possession and advertising of child pornography, and stressing the importance of closer cooperation and partnership between Governments and the Internet industry,

Believing that the elimination of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography will be facilitated by adopting a holistic approach, addressing the contributing factors, including underdevelopment, poverty, economic disparities, inequitable socio-economic structure, dysfunctioning families, lack of education, urban-rural migration, gender discrimination, irresponsible adult sexual behaviour, harmful traditional practices, armed conflicts and trafficking of children,

Believing that efforts to raise public awareness are needed to reduce consumer demand for the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, and also believing in the importance of strengthening global partnership among all actors and of improving law enforcement at the national level,

Noting the provisions of international legal instruments relevant to the protection of children, including the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation with Respect to Inter-Country Adoption, the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction, the Hague Convention on Jurisdiction, Applicable Law, Recognition, Enforcement and Cooperation in Respect of Parental Responsibility and Measures for the Protection of Children, and International Labour Organization Convention No. 182 on the Prohibition and Immediate Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour,

Encouraged by the overwhelming support for the Convention on the Rights of the Child, demonstrating the widespread commitment that exists for the promotion and protection of the rights of the child,

Recognizing the importance of the implementation of the provisions of the Programme of Action for the Prevention of the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography and the Declaration and Agenda for Action adopted at the World Congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, held at Stockholm from 27 to 31 August 1996, and the other relevant decisions and recommendations of pertinent international bodies,

Taking due account of the importance of the traditions and cultural values of each people for the protection and harmonious development of the child,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

States Parties shall prohibit the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography as provided for by the present Protocol.

Article 2

For the purpose of the present Protocol:

Article 3

1. Each State Party shall ensure that, as a minimum, the following acts and activities are fully covered under its criminal or penal law, whether these offences are committed domestically or transnationally or on an individual or organized basis:

(c) Producing, distributing, disseminating, importing, exporting, offering, selling or possessing for the above purposes child pornography as defined in article 2.

2. Subject to the provisions of a State Party's national law, the same shall apply to an attempt to commit any of these acts and to complicity or participation in any of these acts.

3. Each State Party shall make these offences punishable by appropriate penalties that take into account their grave nature.

4. Subject to the provisions of its national law, each State Party shall take measures, where appropriate, to establish the liability of legal persons for offences established in paragraph 1 of the present article. Subject to the legal principles of the State Party, this liability of legal persons may be criminal, civil or administrative.

5. States Parties shall take all appropriate legal and administrative measures to ensure that all persons involved in the adoption of a child act in conformity with applicable international legal instruments.

Article 4

1. Each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences referred to in article 3, paragraph 1, when the offences are committed in its territory or on board a ship or aircraft registered in that State.

2. Each State Party may take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences referred to in article 3, paragraph 1, in the following cases:

(a) When the alleged offender is a national of that State or a person who has his habitual residence in its territory;

(b) When the victim is a national of that State.

3. Each State Party shall also take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the above-mentioned offences when the alleged offender is present in its territory and it does not extradite him or her to another State Party on the ground that the offence has been committed by one of its nationals.

4. This Protocol does not exclude any criminal jurisdiction exercised in accordance with internal law.

Article 5

1. The offences referred to in article 3, paragraph 1, shall be deemed to be included as extraditable offences in any extradition treaty existing between States Parties and shall be included as extraditable offences in every extradition treaty subsequently concluded between them, in accordance with the conditions set forth in those treaties.

2. If a State Party that makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty receives a request for extradition from another State Party with which it has no extradition treaty, it may consider this Protocol as a legal basis for extradition in respect of such offences. Extradition shall be subject to the conditions provided by the law of the requested State.

3. States Parties that do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall recognize such offences as extraditable offences between themselves subject to the conditions provided by the law of the requested State.

4. Such offences shall be treated, for the purpose of extradition between States Parties, as if they had been committed not only in the place in which they occurred but also in the territories of the States required to establish their jurisdiction in accordance with article 4.

5. If an extradition request is made with respect to an offence described in article 3, paragraph 1, and if the requested State Party does not or will not extradite on the basis of the nationality of the offender, that State shall take suitable measures to submit the case to its competent authorities for the purpose of prosecution.

Article 6

1. States Parties shall afford one another the greatest measure of assistance in connection with investigations or criminal or extradition proceedings brought in respect of the offences set forth in article 3, paragraph 1, including assistance in obtaining evidence at their disposal necessary for the proceedings.

2. States Parties shall carry out their obligations under paragraph 1 of the present article in conformity with any treaties or other arrangements on mutual legal assistance that may exist between them. In the absence of such treaties or arrangements, States Parties shall afford one another assistance in accordance with their domestic law.

Article 7

States Parties shall, subject to the provisions of their national law:

(a) Take measures to provide for the seizure and confiscation, as appropriate, of:

(i) Goods such as materials, assets and other instrumentalities used to commit or facilitate offences under the present protocol;

(ii) Proceeds derived from such offences;

(b) Execute requests from another State Party for seizure or confiscation of goods or proceeds referred to in subparagraph (a) (i);

(c) Take measures aimed at closing, on a temporary or definitive basis, premises used to commit such offences.

Article 8

1. States Parties shall adopt appropriate measures to protect the rights and interests of child victims of the practices prohibited under the present Protocol at all stages of the criminal justice process, in particular by:

(a) Recognizing the vulnerability of child victims and adapting procedures to recognize their special needs, including their special needs as witnesses;

(b) Informing child victims of their rights, their role and the scope, timing and progress of the proceedings and of the disposition of their cases;

(g) Avoiding unnecessary delay in the disposition of cases and the execution of orders or decrees granting compensation to child victims.

2. States Parties shall ensure that uncertainty as to the actual age of the victim shall not prevent the initiation of criminal investigations, including investigations aimed at establishing the age of the victim.

3. States Parties shall ensure that, in the treatment by the criminal justice system of children who are victims of the offences described in the present Protocol, the best interest of the child shall be a primary consideration.

4. States Parties shall take measures to ensure appropriate training, in particular legal and psychological training, for the persons who work with victims of the offences prohibited under the present Protocol.

5. States Parties shall, in appropriate cases, adopt measures in order to protect the safety and integrity of those persons and/or organizations involved in the prevention and/or protection and rehabilitation of victims of such offences.

6. Nothing in the present article shall be construed as prejudicial to or inconsistent with the rights of the accused to a fair and impartial trial.

Article 9

1. States Parties shall adopt or strengthen, implement and disseminate laws, administrative measures, social policies and programmes to prevent the offences referred to in the present Protocol. Particular attention shall be given to protect children who are especially vulnerable to these practices.

2. States Parties shall promote awareness in the public at large, including children, through information by all appropriate means, education and training, about the preventive measures and harmful effects of the offences referred to in the present Protocol. In fulfilling their obligations under this article, States Parties shall encourage the participation of the community and, in particular, children and child victims, in such information and education and training programmes, including at the international level.

3. States Parties shall take all feasible measures with the aim of ensuring all appropriate assistance to victims of such offences, including their full social reintegration and their full physical and psychological recovery.

4. States Parties shall ensure that all child victims of the offences described in the present Protocol have access to adequate procedures to seek, without discrimination, compensation for damages from those legally responsible.

5. States Parties shall take appropriate measures aimed at effectively prohibiting the production and dissemination of material advertising the offences described in the present Protocol.

Article 10

1. States Parties shall take all necessary steps to strengthen international cooperation by multilateral, regional and bilateral arrangements for the prevention, detection, investigation, prosecution and punishment of those responsible for acts involving the sale of children, child prostitution, child pornography and child sex tourism. States Parties shall also promote international cooperation and coordination between their authorities, national and international non-governmental organizations and international organizations.

2. States Parties shall promote international cooperation to assist child victims in their physical and psychological recovery, social reintegration and repatriation.

3. States Parties shall promote the strengthening of international cooperation in order to address the root causes, such as poverty and underdevelopment, contributing to the vulnerability of children to the sale of children, child prostitution, child pornography and child sex tourism.

4. States Parties in a position to do so shall provide financial, technical or other assistance through existing multilateral, regional, bilateral or other programmes.

Article 11

Nothing in the present Protocol shall affect any provisions that are more conducive to the realization of the rights of the child and that may be contained in:

- (a) The law of a State Party;
- (b) International law in force for that State.

Article 12

1. Each State Party shall submit, within two years following the entry into force of the Protocol for that State Party, a report to the Committee on the Rights of the Child providing comprehensive information on the measures it has taken to implement the provisions of the Protocol.

2. Following the submission of the comprehensive report, each State Party shall include in the reports they submit to the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in accordance with article 44 of the Convention, any further information with respect to the implementation of the Protocol. Other States Parties to the Protocol shall submit a report every five years.

3. The Committee on the Rights of the Child may request from States Parties further information relevant to the implementation of this Protocol.

form the other States Parties to the Convention and all States that have signed the Convention. The denunciation shall take effect one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

2. Such a denunciation shall not have the effect of releasing the State Party from its obligations under this Protocol in regard to any offence that occurs prior to the date on which the denunciation becomes effective. Nor shall such a denunciation prejudice in any way the continued consideration of any matter that is already under consideration by the Committee prior to the date on which the denunciation becomes effective.

Article 16

1. Any State Party may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary-General shall thereupon communicate the proposed amendment to States Parties, with a request that they indicate whether they favour a conference of States Parties for the purpose of considering and voting upon the proposals. ## Other activities

Follow-up to 1993 World Conference

Report of High Commissioner. The Commission on Human Rights considered the High Commissioner's report [E/CN.4/2000/12 & Add.1] on follow-up to the World Conference on Human Rights [YUN 1993, p. 908]. She stated that, since the Conference, the Commission's special procedures mechanisms had been complemented by the establishment of field presences in a number of countries to assist host Governments to promote human rights, monitor human rights violations and help strengthen the rule of law. Among the countries hosting field presences were Angola, Burundi, Cambodia, Colombia, Georgia/Abkhazia, Sierra Leone and countries of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The number of human rights projects implemented through field activities had grown from one in 1992 to 26 in 1999. The High Commissioner gave an overview of field presences.

Annual meeting. The High Commissioner transmitted the report of the meeting of special rapporteurs/representatives, experts and chairpersons of working groups of the special procedures and advisory services programme of the Commission (Geneva, 5-9 June) [E/CN.4/2001/6], as called for in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action [YUN 1993, p. 908], adopted at the 1993 World Conference. Participants discussed capacity-building to improve the effectiveness of the special procedures system, support services, including the new thematic database within OHCHR (Human Rights Computerized Analysis Network Environment (HURICANE)), corporate responsibility for human rights violations, monitoring (special procedures) mechanisms and improving the work of special procedures mandates on human rights defenders. Participants met with NGO representatives to exchange views on the Commission's mechanisms and strengthening the special procedures system. The chairpersons of treaty bodies and the special rapporteurs/representatives, experts and chairpersons of working groups discussed possibilities for increased interaction between the treaty bodies and the special procedures mechanisms. The meeting adopted a set of conclusions and recommendations.

By decision 55/421 of 4 December, the General Assembly took note of the Third Committee's report [A/55/602/Add.4] on follow-up to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action.

Advisory services and technical cooperation

In 2000 [E/CN.4/2001/104], the OHCHR technical cooperation programme supported countries in promoting and protecting all human rights, at their request, by incorporating international human rights standards in national laws, policies and practices and by building sustainable national capacities to implement those standards and ensure respect for human rights. Among the key result areas defined by OHCHR for 1999-2001 were national capacity-building to develop human rights strategies and structures; human rights education; the implementation of economic, social and cultural rights and the right to development; racism; the rights of indigenous people; trafficking of women and children, gender and women's human rights; the rights of the child; humanitarian law and human rights; and developing a policy for future human rights field activities and consolidating existing activities. Assistance was provided through expertise, advisory services, training courses, workshops and seminars, fellowships, grants and the provision of information and documentation.

During the year, 20 projects were completed, 41 were under way or approved and 14 were at the drafting stage. National technical cooperation field presences were operational in Chad, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Indonesia, Madagascar, Mongolia, Somalia, South Africa and Palestine. The subregional office in Pretoria, South Africa, continued to implement and facilitate the implementation of activities at the regional level, as well as in various countries of the Southern African region. The following OHCHR field presences combined monitoring and technical cooperation mandates: Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burundi, Cambodia, Colombia, Croatia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and FRY.

The programme cooperated with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) through the joint programme for human rights strengthening (HURIST), supporting the implementation of UNDP's policy on human rights. HURIST, which contributed to the international debate concerning the major areas of relevance for human rights and supported UNDP country offices, was active in Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Côte d'Ivoire, the Dominican Republic, Egypt, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Lithuania, Malawi, Mauritania, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, Nigeria, Somalia and Yemen. Another joint initiative, the Assisting Communities Together project, emphasized the role that civil society played in promoting and protecting human rights. OHCHR also cooperated with other UN agencies and programmes, as well as non-UN partners.

Activities were funded mainly by the Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights and partly by the UN regular budget. The Fund's Board, at its thirteenth and fourteenth sessions (19-21 June, 11-13 December), considered 15 new project proposals; reviewed five completed and evaluated projects; and examined the implementation status of four current projects. As at 31 October, the Fund's income amounted to $14.6 million and commitments totalled $6.7 million.

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 2000/80], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to assist the Board; to continue to ensure efficient management of the Fund, strict and transparent project management rules and periodic evaluations of its programme and projects; to arrange for information meetings open to all Member States and organizations directly involved; and to report in 2002.

Cambodia

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 2000/79], the Commission, expressing grave concern about human rights violations, noted some progress made by the Government of Cambodia. It welcomed the adoption of a five-year action plan, as well as other measures, to improve the status of women, and the five-year national plan against child sexual exploitation. Noting with concern the continued problems related to the rule of law and the functioning of the judiciary, the Commission welcomed the Government's recent commitment to judicial reform. It also welcomed efforts to establish an independent national human rights commission and requested OHCHR to provide advice and technical assistance in that regard. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 2001; that request was approved by the Economic and Social Council on 28 July (decision 2000/278).

Report of Secretary-General. In August [A/55/291], the Secretary-General stated that the Under-Secretary-General for Legal Affairs visited Cambodia (16-22 March, 4-7 July) to hold discussions with the Cambodian Task Force on the draft articles of cooperation between the United Nations and the Government in the prosecution under Cambodian law of crimes committed during the period of Democratic Kampuchea and the scope of the court's jurisdiction and its chambers, a formula to settle disagreements between the co-prosecutors, the mutual obligations of the parties, financial mechanisms and the court's premises. The draft law on establishing extraordinary chambers in the courts of Cambodia to prosecute the crimes was pending before the Judicial Committee of the National Assembly. The Secretary-General reviewed the recommendations of his Special Representative for human rights in Cambodia [YUN 1999, p. 584] and the role and achievements of OHCHR from September 1999 to July 2000 in assisting the Government to strengthen democracy and establish the rule of law and respect for human rights.

Following the conclusion of the Special Representative's mandate on 31 December 1999, OHCHR/Cambodia continued to follow up on the implementation of his recommendations, as well as the efforts of the Government to investigate specific cases of serious human rights violations (see p. 625).

Report of Special Representative. The new Special Representative, Peter Leuprecht (Austria), appointed by the Secretary-General on 18 August, reported on his visit to Cambodia (26 November-2 December) [E/CN.4/2001/103]. The visit focused on the eradication of violence, the rule of law, domestic implementation of international human rights treaties to which Cambodia was a party, poverty issues and economic and social rights, and the situation of women and children.

The Special Representative recommended action against impunity, corruption and the lack of independence of the judiciary. He called for the application and enforcement of international human rights treaties through the legislative and judicial process, and serious efforts to improve conditions of detention. Resources devoted to the military should be reallocated to such areas as education, health and social services, and the gap between rich and poor should be narrowed. The Special Representative also called for respect for labour rights, the eradication of violence against women and of the exploitation of women and children, the promotion of human rights education, the protection of human rights defenders and respect for, and promotion and protection of, the human rights of minorities.

OHCHR/Cambodia

The Secretary-General reported in August [A/55/291] that OHCHR/Cambodia recorded during 2000 an increase in allegations of violations of labour rights and housing rights, curtailing of freedom of the press, expression and association, intolerance towards ethnic minorities and migrant workers, police violence during public demonstrations, trafficking of persons and cases of sexual exploitation of children and women. Allegations of illegal arrest and detention, excessive pre-trial detention, torture during arrest, prison conditions not in accordance with international standards, intimidation of human rights defenders, lack of independence of the judiciary, interference of the executive in the judiciary and some cases of political violence and intimidation were also reported. The office continued documenting and analysing patterns of human rights violations.

The previous memorandum of understanding between the Government and OHCHR/Cambodia expired on 28 February; the Government verbally agreed to extend it until March 2002 to enable the office to continue its operations and to maintain its technical cooperation programmes. OHCHR/Cambodia technical cooperation activities included assistance to develop the legal system, creating and strengthening national human rights institutions, training for government officials, support to human rights NGOs, assistance in human rights reporting obligations and implementation of treaty monitoring bodies' recommendations.

In a report covering the role and achievements of the office from August to November 2000 [E/CN.4/2001/102], the Secretary-General described the implementation of the technical cooperation programme.

Between 1 January and 31 October, the office received 240 allegations of human rights violations, including forced evictions, arbitrary confiscation of land and related intimidation, as well as cases of non-compliance with labour rights. Allegations of denial of medical assistance to victims in custody, discrimination against ethnic minorities, sexual exploitation of women and children, human trafficking and violence against women were also reported. In addition, the office received allegations of illegal arrest and detention, excessive pre-trial detention, police violence and excessive use of force, summary and extrajudicial execution, disappearance, mob killings, torture, political intimidation and violence against members of political parties, curtailment of freedom of association and expression, and intimidation of human rights defenders. During the period under review, OHCHR/Cambodia conducted training for some 1,450 police officials, 1,580 members of the armed forces and 110 gendarmes. It held a 15-week law drafting seminar, as well as two seminars for policy makers on their role in the law-making process and capacity-building programmes for judges, prosecutors, other court officials and lawyers on the application of human rights standards in the delivery of justice. Other areas of assistance included labour rights, the environment, trafficking in human beings and support to human rights NGOs.

The Government was called on to investigate politically motivated crimes and prosecute perpetrators, take action to eliminate human rights violations, ensure due process and continue structural reforms in the police and judicial system and improvement of the prison sector. Regretting the delay of the parliamentary elections foreseen for 19 March, the Commission urgently called on the Government to hold free, fair and prompt elections.

The Commission invited the Secretary-General and Haiti to contribute to the strengthening of the Office for the Protection of Citizens, including through regional representation, incorporating a gender perspective, and through the establishment of a technical cooperation programme, in collaboration with OHCHR and the International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti (MICAH) (see p. 251), and encouraged the international community to assist in that effort.

The independent expert was requested to report to the General Assembly in 2000 and to the Commission in 2001. The High Commissioner was asked to assist him. Those requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council on 28 July (decision 2000/277).

Reports of independent expert. In 2000, the independent expert, Adama Dieng (Senegal), visited Haiti from 27 July to 8 August [A/55/335] and from 13 to 20 December [E/CN.4/2001/106]. He also visited Port-au-Prince from 25 to 29 September [ibid.], at the invitation of MICAH and the Haitian Ministry of Justice, to contribute to the first conference on reform of the justice system.

The expert's first mission took place at a time of tension between Haiti and the international community as a result of the manner in which the elections of 21 May were conducted (see p. 251). Whatever the outcome of the electoral crisis, people had gained awareness of the importance of having a voter registration card. It was essential for the political leaders to make a commitment to strengthen the culture of democracy. Within the schools, civic education was reintegrated as education for citizenship. The curriculum was launched in April with a teacher training session.

Following his second visit, the expert remained convinced that the political polarization in the country was responsible for daily violence, which was worsened by the abject poverty of the most disadvantaged classes. Haiti's greatest ill was the lack of rigorous law enforcement. There was an urgent need to defuse the tension and find a solution that ensured the rule of law and was consistent with the aspirations of the Haitian people. Recommendations to the Government addressed the police forces, the judicial system, the management of the National Prison Authority, ratification of human rights instruments, support to the Judges School and the Office of the Ombudsman, respect for freedom of opinion, expression, association, assembly and peaceful demonstration and the successful completion of the Raboteau massacre trial, at which former members of the Haitian armed forces and the Front pour l'avancement et le progrès Haïtien were found guilty. Recommendations to the international community included the provision of technical cooperation and assistance programmes, and cooperation with the Haitian authorities to arrest and extradite those convicted in absentia at the Raboteau trial. The expert recommended that the United Nations emphasize capacity-building to strengthen democratic values by holding a symposium on the culture of democracy. OHCHR should ensure support for the Office of the Ombudsman and human rights NGOs, and should undertake a programme of technical cooperation and assistance. The United Nations should donate some of MICAH's vehicles, computers and printers to the Public Prosecutor's Office and the offices of examining magistrates, and OHCHR and UNDP should set up a project for technical cooperation on human rights with other UN agencies associated in its implementation.

Somalia

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 2000/81], the Commission, condemning widespread violations and abuses of human rights and humanitarian law, urged all parties in Somalia to respect human rights and international humanitarian law pertaining to internal armed conflicts, to support the re-establishment of the rule of law and to protect UN personnel, humanitarian relief workers and representatives of NGOs and of the media. All parties to the conflict were called on to respond positively to peace initiatives. The international community was asked to provide continuing and increased assistance in response to UN appeals for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts (see p. 859) and to support OHCHR activities concerning Somalia.

The High Commissioner was asked to provide for the translation of the Commission's resolution into the local language for dissemination within Somalia through the human rights officer for Somalia based in Nairobi, Kenya. The Commission extended the independent expert's mandate for an additional year and asked her to report in 2001 and the Secretary-General to assist her. On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the extension of the expert's mandate and approved the Commission's requests to the High Commissioner and to the Secretary-General (decision 2000/279).

Secretariat note. A note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/2001/105] stated that the independent expert on the situation of human rights in Somalia resigned on 10 September.

The note described the political situation in the country (see p. 215), as well as human rights developments. The peace initiative in the country sparked vigorous political activism that led to a sharp polarization of those for it and those against it. Most of the human rights violations that occurred stemmed from that polarization. In north-west Somalia, attacks against humanitarian aid workers and UN staff continued to be a source of concern. The north-eastern part of the country witnessed violations of the right to demonstrate peacefully, fighting between sub-clans and a rise in attacks against aid workers and agencies. Militia attacks occurred in southern Somalia, and attacks against aid workers and agencies were exceptionally numerous. Central Somalia, especially the town of Merka, remained off limits to the UN community for much of the year, making it impossible to monitor human rights developments; attacks against aid workers and installations continued unabated. Lawlessness continued in the city of Mogadishu, where aid workers, their premises and other properties were routinely attacked.

The most recent OHCHR project for Somalia addressed the mainstreaming of human rights in the programmes and projects of the United Nations Country Team members by the Senior Human Rights Adviser working directly under the auspices of the Resident/Humanitarian Coordinator, and the provision of technical advice to UNDP in its law and governance programmes and projects in general and the Somali Civil Protection Programme in particular. The High Commissioner and the Resident/Humanitarian Coordinator signed the project document in December.

Human rights education

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 2000/71], the Commission urged Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to contribute to the mid-term global evaluation of progress made towards the achievement of the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education (1995-2004), proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 49/184 [YUN 1994, p. 1039]. It urged Governments to contribute further to the implementation of the Plan of Action for the Decade and encouraged OHCHR to further develop its web site, particularly regarding the dissemination of human rights education materials and tools.

The Commission asked the High Commissioner to continue to implement and expand the Assisting Communities Together project and to consider other ways to support human rights education activities. It requested the human rights treaty bodies to adopt a general comment on human rights education and to emphasize the obligations of States parties in human rights education and information. The Secretary-General was asked to submit the recommendations of the mid-term global evaluation report (see below).

Report of High Commissioner. By a September note [A/55/360], the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the High Commissioner on the mid-term global evaluation of the progress made towards the achievement of the Decade's objectives.

In Africa, some Governments had created new structures or assigned the task of initiating or supporting national programmes on human rights education to existing governmental agencies. Four national committees for the Decade were established while, in other countries, ministries of justice or of human rights dealt with activities related to the Decade. Governmental respondents reported that the pre-school to secondary-level curricula incorporated the teaching of human rights, but few universities had human rights courses. While police, the armed forces, prison officials, members of the judiciary and foreign service personnel had some human rights training, pre-service programmes for those groups and for health officials, immigration officials and journalists were rare.

In the Americas, very few Governments had established national committees for human rights education. Many countries were reforming the school curricula and had introduced human rights into the formal education system. Few efforts were aimed at institutionalizing human rights pre-service and in-service training for professionals.

Four countries in Asia and the Pacific had established national committees for human rights education, while others had designated ministries of justice, ministries of education and national human rights institutions as lead agencies for the Decade. Regarding formal education, discussions on human rights were integrated into social studies, geography, history, language or subjects on life experience. A number of countries were working on the inclusion of human rights education in schools. Universities in several countries included human rights in their syllabuses.

Fewer than one third of the 43 respondent Governments in Europe had national committees for human rights education. Only one Government reported integrated human rights at the pre-school, primary and secondary levels, while most Governments indicated such integration at some levels, mostly primary and secondary. Moreover, the responses indicated that human rights education was rarely imparted during every year of primary and secondary schooling, but was targeted at specific age groups.

The report analysed the responses by intergovernmental organizations, including the contribution of the United Nations, and by NGOs.

The High Commissioner made recommendations on the content of human rights education, programmes on human rights education, evaluation, research and monitoring, and mass media and freedom of information. Other recommendations addressed the obligations of States, a UN system-wide response to the Decade, regional co-operation and national and local actors.

Culture of peace

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 2000/66], the Commission, welcoming the adoption, in General Assembly resolutions 53/243 A and B [YUN 1999, p. 593], of the Declaration and Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace and the Assembly's proclamation of the year 2000 as the International Year for the Culture of Peace in resolution 52/15 [YUN 1997, p. 622], invited States to promote a culture of peace. The Subcommission was requested to take into account and reflect in its deliberations the provisions of the Declaration and Programme of Action, as well as the contribution of the promotion, protection and realization of all human rights for the further development of a culture of peace. The Commission asked OHCHR to organize, provide the resources required for and coordinate, during the International Year, a panel/forum on a culture of peace, focusing on the contribution of the promotion, protection and realization of all human rights to the further development of a culture of peace (see below); on 28 July, the Economic and Social Council approved that request (decision 2000/275).

Report of OHCHR. In March [E/CN.4/2000/97/Add.1], OHCHR summarized the views of two States on the contribution of the promotion and protection of human rights to the further development of a culture of peace. Earlier views were presented in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 593].

Expert Seminar. A note by the High Commissioner [E/CN.4/2001/120] transmitted the report of the Expert Seminar on Human Rights and Peace (Geneva, 8-9 December), as called for by the Commission in resolution 2000/66 (see above). The seminar was convened by OHCHR, in cooperation with the UN University for Peace (Costa Rica) and with the support of the Political Affairs Directorate of the Swiss Federal Department of Foreign Affairs, the Research Department of the Swedish International Development Cooperation Agency and the Bank of Sweden Tercentenary Foundation. The report of the Seminar took account of the presentations and discussions made at an intergovernmental forum on the contribution to a culture of peace of human rights education, convened by the High Commissioner on 11 December. Following their discussion of various aspects of human rights and peace, the 30 participants made proposals aimed at contributing to the prevention of conflicts, consolidation of peace processes and overcoming new forms of violence.

Communication. Bangladesh transmitted the Madrid Declaration, adopted at the International Conference on a Culture of Peace (Madrid, Spain, 11-13 December) [A/56/56]. The Declaration promoted action in the areas identified in the Programme of Action, including education, sustainable economic and social development, human rights and democracy, a gender perspective, democratic governance and the free flow of information and knowledge, among others.

Children and a culture of peace

A September report of the Secretary-General [A/55/377] on the International Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-Violence for the Children of the World, 2001-2010, proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 53/25 [YUN 1998, p. 639], discussed how children might be the centre of actions for a culture of peace. It presented an organizational strategy to further develop the global movement for a culture of peace and a survey of the contributions made by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund and other UN system entities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 November [meeting 74], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/47 [draft: A/55/L.43/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 33].

National institutions and regional arrangements

National institutions for human rights promotion and protection

Report of Secretary-General. In December [E/CN.4/2001/99], the Secretary-General described OHCHR activities to strengthen national institutions and measures taken by Governments and national human rights institutions in those areas, as well as cooperation between UN human rights treaty bodies and national institutions. The report covered the period from 30 November 1999 to 30 November 2000.

OHCHR continued to implement its activities on national institutions, which included advisory missions by the High Commissioner's Special Adviser on National Institutions, Regional Arrangements and Preventive Strategies and/or staff members of the Office to Cambodia, Canada, Ecuador, Fiji, Guyana, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Mexico, Nepal, New Zealand, the Philippines, Saint Lucia, Sierra Leone, South Africa, Sweden and Thailand. Advice concerning legislation to establish a national institution was provided by the Special Adviser to Cambodia, Guyana, Jamaica, Kenya, Nepal, the Republic of Korea, Sierra Leone, Thailand and Trinidad and Tobago. Relevant technical cooperative activities continued in Bolivia, Ecuador, El Salvador, Georgia, Guatemala, Indonesia, Malawi, the Republic of Moldova, South Africa, Uganda and Palestine. Further consultations on cooperative agreements continued with established institutions in Colombia, Ecuador, Fiji, Indonesia, Malawi, Mexico, Rwanda and Sri Lanka.

At the international level, OHCHR supported the Fifth International Workshop of National Human Rights Institutions (Morocco, March). At the regional level, it supported the fifth annual meeting of the Asia-Pacific Forum of National Human Rights Institutions (Rotorua, New Zealand, 7-9 August). The Office attended the second Regional Meeting of National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in the Americas and supported the fifth Annual Congress of the Iberoamerican Federation of Ombudsmen, both of which were held in Mexico in November. In May, the Office, together with the Asia-Pacific Forum of National Human Rights Institutions and the Fiji Human Rights Commission, organized the Regional Workshop on the Role of National Human Rights Institutions in Advancing the International Human Rights of Women. In November, OHCHR, in co-sponsorship with the Government of Canada and in collaboration with the Philippine Human Rights Commission and the Canadian Human Rights Foundation, conducted a workshop for national institutions and NGOs on economic, social and cultural rights.

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 2000/76], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to continue to provide assistance for holding Coordinating Committee meetings during its sessions. It also asked him to provide assistance for international and regional meetings of national institutions from within existing resources and the UN Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights (see p. 624). The Commission's requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council on 28 July (decision 2000/276).

The Secretary-General was asked to report in 2001.

Regional arrangements

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 53/148 [YUN 1998, p. 641], the Secretary-General reported in August on OHCHR regional strategies and developments [A/55/279].

In Africa, OHCHR's programme was aimed at strengthening respect for human rights and the rule of law. In the Great Lakes region, the Office had field presences in Angola, Burundi and the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The High Commissioner visited the European Union (EU) secretariat in Brussels, Belgium, on 1 February to discuss cooperation; several meetings of OHCHR and EU representatives subsequently took place. The EU, OHCHR, the Council of Europe and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) were working on an approach to provide training in human rights for international field missions. A joint mission to assess training needs was sent to Kosovo (FRY) in June. In Latin America and the Caribbean, the Office provided training in reporting obligations for Spanish-speaking countries. At the subregional level, it implemented initiatives in Central America and in the Andean subregion on the development of a judicial network, the training of officials in the administration of justice and the development of training methodologies.

In a later report [E/CN.4/2001/97], the Secretary-General stated that a subregional project for Southern Africa had been implemented. In 2000, the implementation of subregional strategies began for Central Africa, the Great Lakes region and West Africa. Subregional strategies were being prepared for East and North Africa. The High Commissioner inaugurated the Human Rights Documentation, Information and Training Centre (Rabat), a tripartite project supported by OHCHR, UNDP and Morocco. A human rights training course for senior command and staff officers from the Southern African Regional Police Chiefs Cooperation Organization was organized (Gaborone, Botswana, February). A regional expert seminar was held on the prevention of ethnic and racial conflicts (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 4-6 October). In April and November, OHCHR sent specialists to Albania to assist the OSCE mission in including a gender component in its training programme for national police. In December, an inter-agency meeting at the Council of Europe in Strasbourg, France, brought together UN and European partners to discuss the coordination of programmes in FRY. OHCHR, in collaboration with Chile, organized the Conference of the Americas (Santiago, 4-8 December) in preparation for the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (see p. 641). The Office established relations with the Caribbean Ombudsman Association and supported its work and participation in various forums. It supported the second annual meeting of national institutions of the Americas and the Caribbean (Mexico City, 19-21 November).

(For information on Asia and the Pacific, see p. 639.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 55/105 without vote [agenda item 114 (b)].

Regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/127 of 16 December 1977 and all its subsequent resolutions concerning regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/51 of 9 March 1993 and its subsequent resolutions in this regard,

Bearing in mind the relevant resolutions of the Commission concerning advisory services and technical cooperation in the field of human rights, including its most recent on that subject, resolution 2000/80 of 26 April 2000,

Bearing in mind also the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, which reiterates, inter alia, the need to consider the possibility of establishing regional and subregional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights where they do not already exist,

Recalling that the World Conference recommended that more resources should be made available for the strengthening of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights under the programme of technical cooperation in the field of human rights of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights,

Reaffirming that regional arrangements play a fundamental role in promoting and protecting human rights and should reinforce universal human rights standards, as contained in international human rights instruments, and their protection,

Noting the progress achieved so far in the promotion and protection of human rights at the regional level under the auspices of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and the regional intergovernmental organizations,

Considering that cooperation between the United Nations and regional arrangements in the field of human rights continues to be both substantive and supportive and that possibilities exist for increased cooperation,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the continuing cooperation and assistance of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in the further strengthening of the existing regional arrangements and regional machinery for the promotion and protection of human rights, in particular through technical cooperation which is aimed at national capacity-building, public information and education, with a view to exchanging information and experience in the field of human rights;

3. Also welcomes, in that respect, the close cooperation of the Office of the High Commissioner in the organization of regional and subregional training courses and workshops in the field of human rights, high-level governmental expert meetings and regional conferences of national human rights institutions, aimed at creating greater understanding in the regions of issues concerning the promotion and protection of human rights, improving procedures and examining the various systems for the promotion and protection of universally accepted human rights standards, and identifying obstacles to ratification of the principal international human rights treaties and strategies to overcome them;

4. Recognizes, therefore, that progress in promoting and protecting all human rights depends primarily on efforts made at the national and local levels and that the regional approach should imply intensive cooperation and coordination with all partners involved;

5. Stresses the importance of the programme of technical cooperation in the field of human rights, renews its appeal to all Governments to consider making use of the possibilities offered by the United Nations under this programme of organizing information or training courses at the national level for government personnel on the application of international human rights standards and the experience of relevant international bodies, and notes with satisfaction, in that respect, the establishment of technical cooperation projects with Governments of all regions;

6. Welcomes the growing exchanges between the United Nations and the bodies created by the United Nations in accordance with the treaties dealing with human rights, on the one hand, and regional intergovernmental organizations, such as the Council of Europe, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, on the other;

7. Also welcomes the appointment by the High Commissioner of four human rights personalities to serve as regional advisers, who will play a significant role in the promotion of human rights and human rights advocacy through the design of strategies and the development of partnerships for human rights, facilitate coordination of human rights technical cooperation in the region and assist regional cooperation at large, for example, among national institutions, parliamentary human rights bodies, bar associations and non-governmental organizations;

8. Recalls in this regard the positive experience of the presence of the Office of the High Commissioner in southern Africa, which will serve as guidance in the development of the regional approach of the Office of the High Commissioner;

9. Notes with interest the programme for Africa of the Office of the High Commissioner and the objective of strengthening cooperation between the Office of the High Commissioner and the Organization of African Unity with a view to reviewing, on a regular basis, needs in the area of human rights in the various sub-regions;

10. Also notes with interest the further developments in the implementation of the Framework for Regional Technical Cooperation for the Asia-Pacific Region, which is enhancing technical cooperation in the promotion and protection of human rights in the region;

11. Takes note with interest of the Quito Framework for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights, which serves as a basis for the regional strategy of the Office of the High Commissioner and aims at strengthening national capacities for the promotion of human rights in Latin America and the Caribbean;

12. Welcomes the continued cooperation between the Office of the High Commissioner and regional organizations in Europe and Central Asia, in particular in the development, as a priority, of a regional approach to preventing trafficking in persons;

13. Invites States in areas in which regional arrangements in the field of human rights do not yet exist to consider concluding agreements with a view to establishing, within their respective regions, suitable regional machinery for the promotion and protection of human rights;

14. Requests the Secretary-General, as foreseen in programme 19 (Human rights) of the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001, to continue to strengthen exchanges between the United Nations and regional intergovernmental organizations dealing with human rights and to make available adequate resources from within the regular budget of technical cooperation to the activities of the Office of the High Commissioner to promote regional arrangements;

15. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to pay special attention to the most appropriate ways of assisting, at their request, countries of the various regions under the programme of technical cooperation and to make, where necessary, relevant recommendations;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the state of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights and to include therein the results of action taken in pursuance of the present resolution;

17. Decides to consider this question further at its fifty-seventh session.

Asia and the Pacific

In March [E/CN.4/2000/102], the Secretary-General reported on regional arrangements to promote and protect human rights in Asia and the Pacific. OHCHR organized the eighth workshop on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in the Asian and Pacific region (Beijing, 1-3 March), which reviewed progress made since the last workshop, held in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 600], in the four areas of the framework for regional technical cooperation (national plans of action for human rights promotion and protection and the strengthening of national capacities; human rights education; national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights; and strategies for the realization of the right to development and economic, social and cultural rights). Other meetings held to discuss issues covered by the framework included the intersessional subregional workshop on national plans of action for human rights education (Tokyo, Japan, 17-19 January) and the intersessional workshop on the realization of the right to development and economic, social and cultural rights (Sana'a, Yemen, 5-7 February).

In a later report [E/CN.4/2001/98], the Secretary-General gave details of other workshops held to address issues covered by the framework, including the intersessional subregional North-East Asia workshop on parliamentarians and human rights (Mongolia, 9-11 August), the fifth annual meeting of the Asia-Pacific Forum of National Human Rights Institutions (New Zealand, August), the workshop on the role of national human rights institutions in advancing the rights of women (Fiji, May) and the workshop on national institutions and economic, social and cultural rights (Philippines, November).

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 2000/74], the Commission encouraged Governments in the region to make use of UN facilities offered under the programme of human rights advisory services and technical cooperation to further strengthen national human rights capacities. The Secretary-General was asked to submit in 2001 a report containing the conclusions of the ninth workshop.

Cooperation with UN human rights bodies

The Commission on Human Rights examined a report of the Secretary-General containing allegations of intimidation and reprisals against private individuals and groups who sought to cooperate with the United Nations and with representatives of its human rights bodies [E/CN.4/2000/101].

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 2000/22], the Commission urged Governments to refrain from acts of intimidation or reprisal against persons who sought to cooperate or had cooperated with representatives of UN human rights bodies, or who had provided testimony or information to them; individuals who availed themselves of UN procedures and those who had provided legal assistance to them for that purpose; those who submitted communications under procedures established by human rights instruments; and relatives of victims of human rights violations. Representatives of UN human rights bodies and treaty bodies monitoring the observance of human rights were asked to help prevent the hampering of access to UN human rights procedures, to continue to take urgent steps to prevent the occurrence of intimidation or reprisal and to include in their reports references to allegations of intimidation or reprisal, as well as an account of action taken. The Secretary-General was asked to draw the Commission's resolution to the attention of UN human rights and treaty bodies and to report in 2001.

Chapter II

Protection of human rights

In 2000, the protection of human rights—civil and political, as well as economic, social and cultural—continued to be a major focus of UN activities.

In May, the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance decided that the Conference would take place from 31 August to 7 September 2001 in South Africa. The General Assembly, in December, reaffirmed the proclamation of the year 2001 as the International Year of Mobilization against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, which aimed at drawing attention to the objectives of the Conference. In other action, the Assembly proclaimed 18 December International Migrants Day. The General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization proclaimed 23 August International Day for the Remembrance of the Slave Trade and Its Abolition.

As part of the twentieth anniversary observance of the 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, plans were made to convene an international conference on primary and secondary school education relating to freedom of religion and belief. In November, the Preparatory Committee for the conference adopted the first version of the draft final document. The conference was to take place in Madrid, Spain, in November 2001.

April and August resolutions of the Security Council condemned the deliberate targeting of civilians, other protected persons and children in situations of armed conflict.

In July, the Economic and Social Council established as a subsidiary organ a Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues. The Forum would discuss indigenous issues within the Council's mandate relating to economic and social development, culture, the environment, education and health, and human rights.

Special rapporteurs, special representatives and independent experts of the Commission on Human Rights and its subsidiary body, the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, examined, among other issues, allegations of torture; extralegal executions; impunity; mercenary activity; affirmative action; the rights of migrants; the independence of the judiciary; freedom of opinion and expression; freedom of religion or belief; human rights and terrorism; internally displaced persons; globalization and its impact on human rights; extreme poverty; illicit practices related to toxic and dangerous products and wastes; sexual violence during armed conflict; violence against women; the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography; and the situation of children affected by armed conflict.

Working groups considered arbitrary detention, enforced or involuntary disappearances, minorities, the right to development, structural adjustment policies, contemporary forms of slavery and a draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples.

Racism and racial discrimination

Third Decade against racism

The General Assembly, in resolution 48/91 [YUN 1993, p. 853], had proclaimed the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1993-2003) and adopted the Decade's Programme of Action. The Third Decade's goals and objectives were the same as those of the first Decade, which the Assembly had adopted in resolution 3057(XXVIII) [YUN 1973, p. 523]. The revised Programme of Action for the Third Decade was adopted by the Assembly in resolution 49/146 [YUN 1994, p. 988].

Implementation of Decade Programme

Commission action. On 17 April [E/2000/23 (res. 2000/14)], the Commission on Human Rights, regretting the lack of interest, support and financial resources for the Decade and Programme of Action and that few of the activities planned for 1994-1998 were carried out, recommended that the General Assembly ask the Secretary-General to assign high priority to the Programme's activities and earmark adequate resources to finance them. The Commission appealed to Governments, intergovernmental organizations, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and individuals to contribute to the trust fund for the Programme for the Decade, and asked the Secretary-General to encourage contributions. It asked States to encourage the reporting of acts motivated by racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia or ethnic reasons and to give priority to education as the main means of preventing racism and racial discrimination.

Reports of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/154 [YUN 1999, p. 605], submitted to the Economic and Social Council in June his annual report on implementation of the Programme of Action [E/2000/75]. He concluded that Member States and NGOs appeared to have mobilized themselves through the preparatory process for the 2001 World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (see below) to provide an impetus to the fight against racism and racial discrimination. Contributions made by UN bodies and specialized agencies to combat racism in all forms continued to reflect global and concerted efforts to address the issues and provide long-lasting solutions. Annexed to the report was a list of contributions received from Governments to the trust fund as at May 2000. On 28 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report (decision 2000/289).

In an August report to the Assembly [A/55/285], the Secretary-General stated that, as requested by the Commission [YUN 1998, p. 645], the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights had oriented the activities of the Third Decade towards the preparation of the World Conference and would include the activities of the Decade's Programme of Action in her 2001 annual appeal. Further proposals to implement the Programme of Action would be considered after the Conference, in order to take into account its outcome and recommendations.

Subcommission action. On 11 August [E/CN.4/2001/2 (res. 2000/3)], the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, regretting the lack of interest, support and resources for the Decade and the Programme of Action, called on Governments, UN bodies and interested NGOs to contribute fully to the Programme's implementation.

World Conference

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/111 [YUN 1997, p. 629], the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance was scheduled to convene not later than 2001. The Conference would focus on practical measures to eradicate racism, including measures of prevention, education and protection and the provision of effective remedies. The High Commissioner for Human Rights was designated the Secretary-General of the Conference and the Commission on Human Rights served as its Preparatory Committee.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 53/132 [YUN 1998, p. 646], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/55/285] on progress achieved in the preparatory process for the Conference.

At its first session (Geneva, 1-5 May) [A/55/307], the Preparatory Committee for the Conference decided that the Conference would take place from 31 August to 7 September 2001 and to accept the offer of South Africa to act as host [YUN 1999, p. 602]. It recommended that the Assembly establish an intersessional open-ended working group to meet in Geneva for five working days in January 2001 to develop the draft agenda, declaration and programme of action of the Conference. It also recommended that the Assembly authorize it to extend its second session, to be held in Geneva in May 2001, for up to five additional working days. The slogan for the Conference, "United to combat racism: equality, justice, dignity", was adopted.

The Secretary-General discussed documentation before the Committee regarding the expert seminar on racism, refugees and multi-ethnic States (Geneva, 6-8 December 1999) [A/CONF.189/PC.1/9]; the expert consultations to formulate recommendations on the Conference (Bellagio, Italy, 24-28 January 2000) [A/CONF.189/PC.1/10]; the expert seminar on remedies available to victims of racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and on good national practices in that field (Geneva, 16-18 February) [A/CONF.189/PC.1/8]; an analysis of replies from States, UN specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and national institutions to a questionnaire prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) on progress in the fight against racism [A/CONF.189/PC.1/3]; the Secretary-General's study on the effects of racial discrimination on the children of minorities and migrant workers in education, training and employment [A/CONF.189/PC.1/11]; consultations on the use of the Internet to incite racism and intolerance [A/CONF.189/PC.1/5]; and a note by the Secretariat on improving coordination between OHCHR and relevant organizations concerning action to combat racism and related intolerance [A/CONF.189/PC.1/4]. Proposals for the work of the Conference were submitted by the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights [A/CONF.189/PC.1/13 & Add.1], while contributions to the preparatory process were received from the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination [A/CONF.189/PC.1/12], the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights [A/CONF.189/PC.1/14] and the Committee on the Rights of the Child [A/CONF.189/PC.1/15]. The Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance reported orally on the phenomenon, including political activities of extreme right-wing parties, racist violence against migrant workers, the dangers of xenophobic or racist groups, discrimination against Roma and the expansion of racist hate speeches through the Internet. The Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance reported on racial and religious discrimination [A/CONF.189/PC.1/7], and the Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants submitted a report on the human rights of migrant women [A/CONF.189/PC.1/19]. (See below for additional information on the preparatory process and p. 652 for Subcommission action on the Conference and migrant workers.)

The Secretary-General discussed the information campaign to sensitize public opinion about the Conference, coordination between OHCHR, UN bodies and the specialized agencies, and OHCHR's appointment of an NGO liaison officer.

Annexed to the report was the financial status as at July 2000 of the fund for voluntary contributions for the Conference, which amounted to $1.76 million.

Preparatory process

The Preparatory Committee for the Conference, in addition to the documents discussed in the Secretary-General's report (see p. 641), considered a note by him transmitting reviews and recommendations concerning the Conference received from specialized agencies, other international organizations, concerned UN bodies and regional organizations [A/CONF.189/PC.1/17]. The Committee also had before it the contributions of NGOs [A/CONF.189/PC.1/NGO/1-6].

Preparatory activities included the European Conference against Racism (Strasbourg, France, 11-13 October) [A/CONF.189/PC.2/6], which adopted a political declaration, and the Regional Conference of the Americas (Santiago, Chile, 5-7 December), which adopted a declaration and plan of action [A/CONF.189/PC.2/7]. Other regional meetings included the Central and Eastern European seminar of experts on the protection of minorities and other vulnerable groups and strengthening human rights capacity at the national level (Warsaw, Poland, 5-7 July) [A/CONF.189/PC.2/2]; the Asian-Pacific seminar of experts on migrants and trafficking in persons with particular reference to women and children (Bangkok, Thailand, 5-7 September) [A/CONF.189/PC.2/3]; the seminar of experts on the prevention of ethnic and racial conflicts in Africa (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 4-6 October) [A/CONF.189/PC.2/4]; the Latin American and Caribbean seminar of experts on economic, social and legal measures to combat racism with particular reference to vulnerable groups (Santiago, 25-27 October) [A/CONF.189/PC.2/5]; and the expert group meeting on gender and racial discrimination (Zagreb, Croatia, 21-24 November) [A/CONF.189/PC.2/20]. Satellite meetings included the International Conference on Discrimination and Tolerance, organized by the Danish Centre for Human Rights (Copenhagen, Denmark, 7-9 May) [A/CONF.189/PC.2/Misc.1]; the International Youth Forum against Racism, organized by Canada (Hannover, Germany, 4-12 August) [A/CONF.189/PC.2/Misc.2]; and the expert meeting on strengthening the implementation of the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (see p. 611), convened by Minority Rights International in cooperation with OHCHR (Geneva, 5 August) [A/CONF.189/PC.2/Misc.3].

In August, the High Commissioner initiated the Visionary Declaration entitled "Tolerance and Diversity: A Vision for the Twenty-first Century", which was launched in New York on 5 September. Former South African President Nelson Mandela was the Patron of the Declaration. The first issue of the newsletter of the Conference secretariat, Durban 2001: United against Racism, was launched by the High Commissioner on 11 December, in commemoration of Human Rights Day. Other activities included preparation of flyers and brochures, a special event on 23 October which brought together Goodwill Ambassadors of various UN agencies and organizations, and a video conference hosted by international media and Spanish-speaking television networks (Santiago, 7 December).

Commission action. On 17 April [res. 2000/14], the Commission adopted a series of recommendations regarding the Conference, as well as requests to the Secretary-General, the High Commissioner, as Secretary-General of the Conference, and regional preparatory processes that were either approved or endorsed by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2000/23 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 2000/21 without vote [agenda item 14 (g)].

Racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of Commission of Human Rights resolution 2000/14 of 17 April 2000,

1. Approves the Commission's recommendation that the General Assembly, through the Council, request the Secretary-General to assign high priority to the activities of the Programme of Action for the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and to earmark adequate resources to finance the activities of the Programme;

2. Endorses the Commission's decision to appoint an eleven-member Bureau for the two sessions of the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, comprising two representatives per regional group and a representative of the host country as an ex-officio member, in order to ensure continuity and the adequate representation of all Member States;

3. Approves the Commission's requests to the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights:

(a) To continue and intensify, in her capacity as Secretary-General of the World Conference, the activities already initiated within the framework of the world information campaign with a view to mobilization and support for the objectives of the World Conference by all sectors of political, economic, social and cultural life, as well as other interested sectors;

(b) To undertake appropriate consultations with non-governmental organizations on the possibility that they might hold a forum before and partly during the World Conference and, insofar as possible, to provide them with technical assistance for that purpose;

4. Also approves the Commission's requests:

(a) To the Secretary-General, the United Nations specialized agencies and the regional economic commissions to provide financial and technical assistance for the organization of the regional preparatory meetings planned in the context of the World Conference;

(b) To the regional preparatory processes to identify trends, priorities and obstacles at the national and regional levels, to formulate specific recommendations for the action to be carried out in future to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and to submit to the Preparatory Committee, by its 2001 session at the latest, the conclusions of these regional preparatory processes;

(c) To the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Commission at its fifty-seventh session on the implementation of Commission resolution 2000/14 under the agenda item entitled "Racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and all forms of discrimination";

5. Further approves the Commission's recommendations that:

(a) The World Conference adopt a declaration and a programme of action containing concrete and practical recommendations to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

(b) The particular situation of children receive special attention during the preparations for and during the World Conference, especially in its outcome;

(c) The importance of adopting systematically a gender-based approach through the preparations for and in the outcome of the World Conference be stressed.

Subcommission action. On 11 August [res. 2000/3], the Subcommission suggested that the World Conference focus on, among other things, situations of racism and racial discrimination, xenophobia, related intolerance and ethnic conflict and other patterns of discrimination based on race, colour, social class, minority status, descent, national or ethnic origin or gender, as well as related topics. It recommended that the Conference define a global and system-wide strategy to combat racism and racial discrimination. The Subcommission recommended that the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance (see p. 648) and the Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants (see p. 651) play an integral role in all Conference processes. The Secretary-General was asked to provide for the participation in the Preparatory Committee, as the Subcommission's representative, of Paulo Sérgio Pinheiro (Brazil), who had been asked in 1998 to prepare proposals for the Conference's work [YUN 1998, p. 646].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/55/600], adopted resolution 55/84 without vote [agenda item 112].

Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and the convening of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its objectives, as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations, of achieving international co-operation in solving problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming also its firm determination and its commitment to eradicate totally and unconditionally racism in all its forms and racial discrimination and its conviction that racism and racial discrimination constitute a total negation of the purposes and principles of the Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention against Discrimination in Education adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on 14 December 1960,

Noting the efforts of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination since its establishment in 1970 to promote the implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

Recalling the outcome of the two World Conferences to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at Geneva in 1978 and in 1983,

Welcoming the outcome of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, and, in particular, the attention given in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action to the elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and other forms of intolerance,

Stressing the importance and sensitivity of the activities of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Recalling with satisfaction the proclamation, in resolution 48/91 of 20 December 1993, of the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, which began in 1993, and the adoption, in resolution 49/146 of 23 December 1994, of the revised Programme of Action for the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Noting with grave concern that, despite the efforts of the international community, the principal objectives of the two previous Decades have not been attained and that millions of human beings continue to the present day to be the victims of varied forms of racism and racial discrimination,

Noting with great concern that, despite the efforts undertaken by the international community at various levels, racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related forms of intolerance, ethnic antagonism and acts of violence are showing signs of increase in many parts of the world and that the number of associations established on the basis of racist and xenophobic platforms and charters is increasing, as reflected in the report of the Special Rapporteur,

Deeply concerned that, despite continuing efforts, contemporary forms of racism and racial discrimination, many forms of discrimination against, inter alia, blacks, Arabs, Muslims and Christians, xenophobia, Negrophobia, anti-Semitism and related intolerance persist or are even growing in magnitude, incessantly adopting new forms, including tendencies to establish policies based on racial, religious, ethnic, cultural and national superiority or exclusivity,

Noting with concern that racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance may be aggravated by, inter alia, inequitable distribution of wealth, marginalization and social exclusion,

Recognizing that the promotion of tolerance and respect for cultural diversity is an important factor, among others, in eliminating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Alarmed that technological developments in the field of communications, including the Internet, continue to be utilized by various groups engaged in violent activity to promote racist and xenophobic propaganda aimed at inciting racial hatred and to collect funds to sustain violent campaigns against multi-ethnic societies throughout the world,

Noting that the use of such technologies can also contribute to combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Having considered the report submitted by the Secretary-General within the framework of the implementation of the Programme of Action,

Recalling its resolution 54/154 of 17 December 1999, in which it requested the Secretary-General to include in his report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session concrete proposals on how to ensure the financial and personnel resources required for the implementation of the Programme of Action,

Recognizing the importance of strengthening national legislation and institutions for the promotion of racial harmony and for the effective enforcement of such legislation,

Remaining firmly convinced of the need to take more effective and sustained measures at the national and international levels for the elimination of all forms of racism and racial discrimination,

Deeply concerned that the phenomenon of racism and racial discrimination against migrant workers continues to increase, despite the efforts made by the international community to improve the protection of the human rights of migrant workers and members of their families,

Recalling the adoption at its forty-fifth session of the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families,

Acknowledging that indigenous people are at times victims of particular forms of racism and racial discrimination,

Noting with concern the existence of multiple discrimination, in particular against women,

Stressing the importance of urgently eliminating growing and violent trends of racism and racial discrimination, and conscious that any form of impunity for crimes motivated by racist and xenophobic attitudes plays a role in weakening the rule of law and democracy and tends to encourage the recurrence of such crimes, and requires resolute action and cooperation for its eradication,

IV General

Decides to keep the item entitled "Elimination of racism and racial discrimination" on its agenda and to consider it as a matter of high priority at its fifty-sixth session.

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on the elimination of racism and racial discrimination should remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458).

Contemporary forms of racism

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In February [E/CN.4/2000/16], the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, Maurice Glèlè-Ahanhanzo (Benin), summarized information he had received regarding discrimination against blacks and against Roma asylum-seekers in Europe, as well as trends in anti-Semitism worldwide. The report contained replies to allegations of racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia transmitted to six Governments by the Special Rapporteur in 1996, 1998 and 1999. In his conclusions and recommendations, he observed that manifestations of racism, racial discrimination and related intolerance were continually occurring in different regions. He considered that the Commission, in cooperation with the Governments concerned, should pay particular attention to the Roma in order to secure their integration in the countries where they lived, emphasizing teaching and vocational training and the development of awareness of differences and of tolerance among the majority population groups. (For Subcommission action on the human rights of the Roma, see p. 657.) The Special Rapporteur remained concerned at the discriminatory manner in which the death penalty was applied in the United States.

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/153 [YUN 1999, p. 610], the Secretary-General transmitted, in August [A/55/304], a report of the Special Rapporteur describing his activities, trends in contemporary manifestations of racism and its related forms, measures taken by Governments and action by civil society. The Special Rapporteur concluded that there had been a resurgence of racist violence, mainly as a result of renewed activities of far-right, neo-Nazi and skin-head organizations; the Internet continued to be the preferred medium for incitement to racial hatred and dissemination of racist and xenophobic ideas; and increasingly commonplace racism could be uncovered when detection mechanisms, such as a toll-free number, were introduced. He recommended the holding of international consultations at the governmental level with a view to regulating Internet use for racist purposes, and supporting initiatives that used the Internet to create and develop a culture centred on respect for the human person without distinction. The Assembly should continue to mobilize public opinion against racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia and make Member States and various organizations aware of the importance of the 2001 World Conference.

Commission action. On 17 April [res. 2000/14], the Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to examine the issue of political platforms that promoted or incited racial discrimination, to submit recommendations in 2001 to the Preparatory Committee for the Conference, and to continue his exchange of views with Member States and the UN system. Governments thus far visited were asked to implement the Special Rapporteur's recommendations, and he was asked to include that information in his 2001 report. The High Commissioner was urged to assist the countries visited by the Special Rapporteur, at their request, to implement his recommendations. She was asked to conduct research and hold consultations on Internet use to incite racial hatred, racist propaganda and xenophobia, to study ways of promoting international cooperation thereon and to draw up a programme of human rights education and exchanges over the Internet on the struggle against racism, xenophobia and anti-Semitism.

The Commission, on 20 April [res. 2000/40], invited its mechanisms and the treaty bodies, particularly the Special Rapporteur, to pay special attention to human rights violations stemming from the rise of racism and xenophobia, especially as regards their incompatibility with democracy. It invited the High Commissioner to report in 2001 on the implementation of its resolution. States were urged to promote tolerance and to fight against racism and related intolerance as a way to strengthen democracy and transparent and accountable governance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/600], adopted resolution 55/82 without vote [agenda item 112].

Measures to be taken against political platforms and activities based on doctrines of superiority which are based on racial discrimination or ethnic exclusiveness and xenophobia, including, in particular, neo-Nazism

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the United Nations emerged from the struggle against nazism, fascism, aggression and foreign occupation, and that the people expressed their resolve in the Charter of the United Nations to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war,

Aware of the determination proclaimed by the peoples of the world in the Charter to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

Convinced that any doctrine of superiority based on racial differentiation is scientifically false, morally condemnable, socially unjust and dangerous, and that there is no justification for racial discrimination, in theory or in practice, anywhere,

Noting with appreciation the efforts undertaken by various regional organizations against political platforms and activities based on doctrines of superiority which are based on racial discrimination or ethnic exclusiveness and xenophobia, including, in particular, neo-Nazism,

Noting with regret that in the contemporary world there continue to exist various manifestations of neo-Nazi activities, as well as other political platforms and activities based on doctrines of superiority which are based on racial discrimination or ethnic exclusiveness and xenophobia, which entail contempt for the individual or a denial of the intrinsic dignity and equality of all human beings and of equality of opportunity in the civil, political, economic and social and cultural spheres and in social justice,

Deeply alarmed at the recent intensification of activities of neo-Nazi groups and organizations,

Noting with concern the widening use by such groups and organizations of the opportunities provided by scientific and technological progress, including the Internet global computer network, to promote racist and xenophobic propaganda aimed at inciting racial hatred and to collect funds to sustain violent campaigns against multi-ethnic societies throughout the world,

Noting that the use of such technologies can also contribute to combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Expressing its serious concern at the rise in many parts of the world of doctrines based on racial discrimination or ethnic exclusiveness and at the growing coordination of activities based on such doctrines in society at large,

Recalling its resolutions 2331(XXII) of 18 December 1967, 2545(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 35/200 of 15 December 1980, 36/162 of 16 December 1981, 37/179 of 17 December 1982, 38/99 of 16 December 1983, 39/114 of 14 December 1984, 41/160 of 4 December 1986 and 43/150 of 8 December 1988,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1983/28 of 7 March 1983, 1984/42 of 12 March 1984, 1985/31 of 13 March 1985, 1986/61 of 13 March 1986, 1988/63 of 10 March 1988 and 1990/46 of 6 March 1990,

Welcoming the convening of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance in Durban, South Africa, from 31 August to 7 September 2001,

1. Again resolutely condemns political platforms and activities based on doctrines of superiority which are based on racial discrimination or ethnic exclusiveness and xenophobia, including, in particular, neo-Nazism, which entail abuse of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Expresses its determination to resist such political platforms and activities which can undermine the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms and of equality of opportunity;

3. Urges States to take all available measures in accordance with their obligations under international human rights instruments to combat political platforms and activities based on doctrines of superiority which are based on racial discrimination or ethnic exclusiveness and xenophobia, including, in particular, neo-Nazism;

4. Calls upon all Governments to promote and encourage, especially among young people, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, as well as to promote awareness of and oppose political platforms and activities based on doctrines of superiority which are based on racial discrimination or ethnic exclusiveness and xenophobia, including, in particular, neo-Nazism;

5. Urges all States to consider the adoption, as a matter of high priority, of appropriate measures to eradicate activities that lead to violence and condemn any dissemination of ideas based on doctrines of superiority which are based on racial discrimination or ethnic exclusiveness and xenophobia, including, in particular, neo-Nazism, consistent with their national legal systems and in accordance with the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his report to the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance information on the measures taken by Member States against political platforms and activities based on doctrines of superiority which are based on racial discrimination or ethnic exclusiveness and xenophobia, including, in particular, neo-Nazism.

On the same date [meeting 81], the Assembly, as recommended by the Third Committee [A/55/600], adopted resolution 55/83 without vote [agenda item 112].

Measures to combat contemporary forms of racism and racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 54/153 of 17 December 1999, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/14 of 17 April 2000,

Stressing that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993 attaches importance to the elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and other forms of intolerance,

Convinced that racism, as one of the exclusionist phenomena plaguing many societies, requires resolute action and cooperation for its eradication,

Having examined the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including its conclusions and recommendations,

Deeply concerned that, despite continued efforts, racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and acts of violence persist and even grow in magnitude, incessantly adopting new forms, including tendencies to establish policies based on racial, religious, ethnic, cultural and national superiority or exclusivity,

Particularly alarmed at the increase in racist violence in many parts of the world, inter alia, as a result of resurgent activities of associations established on the basis of racist and xenophobic platforms and charters, as reflected in the report of the Special Rapporteur, and at the persisting use of those platforms and charters to promote or incite racist ideologies,

Deeply concerned that those advocating racism and racial discrimination misuse new communication technologies, including the Internet, to disseminate their repugnant views,

Noting that the use of such technologies can also contribute to combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Conscious of the fundamental difference between, on the one hand, racism and racial discrimination as governmental policy or resulting from official doctrines of racial superiority or exclusivity and, on the other hand, other manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance that are increasingly visible in segments of many societies and are perpetrated by individuals or groups, some of which manifestations are directed against migrant workers and members of their families,

Reaffirming, in this regard, the responsibility of Governments for safeguarding and protecting the rights of individuals within their jurisdiction against crimes perpetrated by racist or xenophobic individuals or groups,

Recognizing both the challenges and the opportunities in combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance in an increasingly globalized world,

Noting with concern that racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance may be aggravated by, inter alia, inequitable distribution of wealth, marginalization and social exclusion,

Deeply concerned that racism and racial discrimination against migrant workers continue to increase despite the efforts undertaken by the international community to protect the human rights of migrant workers and members of their families,

Noting that the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, in its general recommendation XV(42) of 17 March 1993 concerning article 4 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, holds that the prohibition of the dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or racial hatred is compatible with the right to freedom of opinion and expression as outlined in article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in article 5 of the Convention,

Noting also that the reports that the States parties submit under the Convention contain, inter alia, information about the causes of, as well as measures to combat, contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Noting with concern the existence of multiple discrimination, in particular against women,

Particularly alarmed at the rise of racist and xenophobic ideas in political circles, in the sphere of public opinion and in society at large,

Noting with appreciation that the Special Rapporteur will continue to pay attention to the rise of racist and xenophobic ideas in political circles, in the sphere of public opinion and in society at large,

Underlining the importance of urgently eliminating growing and violent trends of racism and racial discrimination, and conscious that any form of impunity for crimes motivated by racist and xenophobic attitudes plays a role in weakening the rule of law and democracy and tends to encourage the recurrence of such crimes, and requires resolute action and cooperation for its eradication,

Recognizing that failure to combat racial discrimination and xenophobia, especially by public authorities and politicians, is a factor encouraging their perpetuation in society,

Emphasizing the importance of creating conditions that foster greater harmony and tolerance within societies,

1. Reaffirms the proclamation of 2001 as the International Year of Mobilization against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance;

2. Calls upon the relevant United Nations bodies, Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to carry out, promote and disseminate activities and action within the framework of the commemorative year in order to strengthen its impact and ensure its success, in particular the outcome of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance;

3. Expresses its full support and appreciation for the work of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, encourages its continuation, and takes note with appreciation of the report of the Special Rapporteur;

4. Requests the Special Rapporteur to continue his exchange of views with Member States, United Nations organs and the specialized agencies, other relevant mechanisms and non-governmental organizations in order to further their effectiveness and mutual cooperation;

5. Endorses the request by the Commission on Human Rights to the Special Rapporteur to examine the issue of political platforms which promote or incite racial discrimination and the violation of human rights and to submit recommendations thereon to the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference at its second session;

6. Welcomes the recommendation of the Special Rapporteur on the need to hold international consultations at the governmental level with a view to combating the misuse of the Internet for racist purposes, and stresses the importance of international law enforcement cooperation in this area;

7. Commends the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination for its role in the effective implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, which contributes to the fight against contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

8. Reaffirms that acts of violence against others stemming from racism do not constitute expressions of opinion but rather offences;

9. Declares that racism and racial discrimination are among the most serious violations of human rights in the contemporary world and must be combated by all available means;

10. Expresses its profound concern about and unequivocal condemnation of all forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, in particular all racist violence, including related acts of random and indiscriminate violence;

11. Also expresses its profound concern about and unequivocal condemnation of all forms of racism and racial discrimination, including propaganda, activities and organizations based on doctrines of superiority of one race or group of persons that attempt to justify or promote racism and racial discrimination in any form;

12. Further expresses its profound concern about and condemnation of manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance against, and stereotyping of, migrant workers and members of their families, persons belonging to minorities and members of vulnerable groups in many societies;

13. Notes with great concern that, despite the efforts undertaken by the international community at various levels, racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and other related forms of intolerance, ethnic antagonism and acts of violence are showing signs of increase in many parts of the world, and that the number of associations established on the basis of racist and xenophobic charters is increasing, as reflected in the report of the Special Rapporteur;

14. Encourages all States to include in their educational curricula and social programmes at all levels, as appropriate, knowledge of and tolerance and respect for foreign cultures, peoples and countries;

15. Recognizes that the increasing gravity of different manifestations of racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia in various parts of the world requires a more integrated and effective approach on the part of the relevant mechanisms of United Nations human rights machinery;

16. Encourages Governments to take appropriate measures to eradicate all forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

17. Calls upon all States to review and, where necessary, revise their immigration policies with a view to eliminating all discriminatory policies and practices against migrants that are inconsistent with relevant international human rights instruments;

18. Condemns the misuse of print, audio-visual and electronic media and new communication technologies, including the Internet, to incite violence motivated by racial hatred;

19. Recognizes that Governments should implement and enforce appropriate and effective legislation to prevent acts of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, thereby contributing to the prevention of human rights violations;

20. Calls upon all Governments and intergovernmental organizations, with the assistance of non-governmental organizations, as appropriate, to continue to supply relevant information to the Special Rapporteur to enable him to fulfil his mandate;

21. Commends non-governmental organizations for the action that they have taken against racism and racial discrimination and for the continuous support and assistance that they have provided to the victims of racism and racial discrimination;

22. Urges all Governments to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur with a view to enabling him to fulfil his mandate, including the examination of incidents of contemporary forms of racism and racial discrimination, inter alia, against blacks, Arabs and Muslims, xenophobia, Negrophobia, anti-Semitism and related intolerance;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all of the necessary human and financial assistance to carry out his mandate efficiently, effectively and expeditiously and to enable him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session.

Migrant workers

Reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants, Gabriela Rodríguez Pizarro (Costa Rica), in her first report submitted in January [E/CN.4/2000/82], described her activities, outlined her plan of action for the three years of her mandate, considered the relevant legal framework of international instruments, and made observations on migrants needing protection and the obstacles to achieving full protection.

In her conclusions, the Special Rapporteur stated that the first challenge was to define a concept of migrant populations that would cover new situations and to translate that into definitions in the international instruments. The situations referred to were those in which a large number of persons found themselves after leaving their country of origin or even before they did so. Consideration of the limitations of international legislation was also necessary. The Special Rapporteur expressed deep concern over the problems faced by migrants, especially women migrants who had suffered from systematic gender-based violence (see p. 711) and who had been unable to receive a satisfactory response from the relevant authorities. Among her recommendations were the establishment of an inter-agency task force to assist her; the promotion of intersectoral cooperation; the promotion of existing standards and institutional arrangements to protect migrants; ratification of the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families (see p. 621); government action to prevent trafficking in persons; and action to strengthen technical advisory services and training in international human rights instruments for civil servants and migration officials.

The Special Rapporteur visited Canada from 17 to 30 September at the invitation of the Government [E/CN.4/2001/83/Add.1]. She focused on the organization of migration in Canada, government measures to guarantee migrants' human rights, methods used to control so-called illegal migration, the reliability of investigations carried out by the authorities into the incidents considered, and measures adopted to prosecute persons responsible for the violation of the human rights of migrants.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that the greatest problem for Canada regarding immigration, in view of its regulated immigration system, was how to respond to people who arrived in Canada spontaneously. She appreciated Canada's good practices aimed at integrating migrants. Regarding detention centres, the Special Rapporteur had cases brought to her attention by migrants who had been detained for a long period. Although hygiene conditions in the centres were generally satisfactory, the Special Rapporteur was concerned at the treatment of detainees by security guards. The drafting of codes of conduct to regulate the centres was a positive development. A further concern was the lack of contact between detainees awaiting a decision on their case and their consular authorities. While noting a number of shortcomings in the realization of the rights of temporary agricultural workers, the Special Rapporteur asked that the Government take steps to prevent employer abuse. The Special Rapporteur made recommendations to the Government, civil society and migrants.

In response, Canada stated that guidelines for immigration detention stipulated that detention of asylum-seekers was an exceptional step and outlined cases when detention was applicable [E/CN.4/2001/141]. Under its new Immigration and Refugee Protection Act, the detention process would become more effective and transparent, and provide for a streamlined and more effective refugee determination process.

Commission action. On 25 April [res. 2000/48], the Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to request, receive and exchange information on violations of migrants' human rights from Governments, treaty bodies, UN bodies, specialized agencies, special rapporteurs, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs and to respond to such information. She was also asked to include in her work schedule a programme of visits for the next two years, to take into account bilateral and regional negotiations aimed at addressing the return and reinsertion of non-documented migrants or those in an irregular situation, and to report in 2001. The Secretary-General was asked to assist her. In accordance with the Commission's resolution, the Economic and Social Council, on 28 July, recommended that the General Assembly consider proclaiming 18 December as International Migrants Day. (decision 2000/288). (For General Assembly action, see p. 654.)

Subcommission action. On 11 August [res. 2000/2], the Subcommission asked the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (see p. 641) to include a separate item on migrant workers in the Conference agenda. The Conference was requested to recommend to the Assembly that it proclaim 18 December of each year an international day of solidarity with migrant workers, and to propose ways of ending racist campaigns encouraging violence against migrant workers through the Internet, sections of the media and political activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 55/92 by recorded vote (165-0-8) [agenda item 114 (b)].

Protection of migrants

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 54/166 of 17 December 1999,

Considering that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set out therein, without distinction of any kind, in particular as to race, colour or national origin,

Reaffirming the provisions concerning migrants adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, the International Conference on Population and Development, the World Summit for Social Development and the Fourth World Conference on Women,

Recognizing the positive contributions that migrants frequently make, including through their eventual integration into their host society,

Bearing in mind the situation of vulnerability in which migrants frequently find themselves, owing, inter alia, to their absence from their States of origin and to the difficulties they encounter because of differences of language, custom and culture, as well as the economic and social difficulties and obstacles for the return to their States of origin of migrants who are non-documented or in an irregular situation,

Bearing in mind also the need for a focused and consistent approach towards migrants as a specific vulnerable group, in particular migrant women and children,

Deeply concerned at the manifestations of violence, racism, xenophobia and other forms of discrimination and inhuman and degrading treatment against migrants, especially women and children, in different parts of the world,

Underlining the importance of the creation of conditions that foster greater harmony between migrant workers and the rest of the society of the States in which they reside, with the aim of eliminating the growing manifestations of racism and xenophobia perpetrated in segments of many societies by individuals or groups against migrants,

Taking note of the decisions of the relevant international juridical bodies on questions relating to migrants, in particular advisory opinion OC-16/99, issued by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights on 1 October 1999, regarding the right to information about consular assistance within the framework of due process guarantees,

3. Strongly condemns all forms of racial discrimination and xenophobia with regard to access to employment, vocational training, housing, schooling, health services and social services, as well as services intended for use by the public, and welcomes the active role played by governmental and non-governmental organizations in combating racism and assisting individual victims of racist acts, including migrant victims;

4. Calls upon all States to review and, where necessary, revise immigration policies with a view to eliminating all discriminatory policies and practices against migrants and to provide specialized training for government policy-making and law enforcement, immigration and other concerned officials, thus underlining the importance of effective action to create conditions that foster greater harmony and tolerance within societies;

5. Reiterates the need for all States to protect fully the universally recognized human rights of migrants, especially women and children, regardless of their legal status, and to provide humane treatment, in particular with regard to assistance and protection, including those under the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, regarding the right to receive consular assistance from the country of origin;

6. 7. Urges all States to adopt effective measures to put an end to the arbitrary arrest and detention of migrants, including by individuals or groups;

8. Requests all Governments to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the human rights of migrants in the performance of her mandated tasks and duties and to furnish all information requested, including by reacting promptly to her urgent appeals;

9. Encourages Member States that have not yet done so to enact domestic criminal legislation to combat international trafficking of migrants, which should take into account, in particular, trafficking that endangers the lives of migrants or includes different forms of servitude or exploitation, such as any form of debt bondage, sexual or labour exploitation, and to strengthen international cooperation to combat such trafficking;

10. Welcomes the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur that close links be established between her work and that of the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, within the framework of the objectives of the Conference, and encourages her to assist in the identification of the main issues that the Conference should address;

Other forms of intolerance

Cultural prejudice

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/160 [YUN 1999, p. 615], the Secretary-General, in an August report with later addendum [A/55/296 & Add.1], summarized the views expressed by Governments, UN agencies and NGOs on human rights and cultural diversity. #### GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 55/91 without vote [agenda item 114 (b)].

Human rights and cultural diversity

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, as well as other pertinent human rights instruments,

Noting that numerous instruments within the United Nations system promote cultural diversity, as well as the conservation and development of culture, in particular the Declaration of the Principles of International Culture Cooperation, proclaimed on 4 November 1966 by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its fourteenth session,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on human rights and cultural diversity,

Welcoming the proclamation of 2001 as the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 53/22 of 4 November 1998,

Reaffirming that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that the international community must treat human rights globally in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis, and that, while the significance of national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds must be borne in mind, it is the duty of States, regardless of their political, economic and cultural systems, to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recognizing that cultural diversity and the pursuit of cultural development by all peoples and nations are a source of mutual enrichment for the cultural life of humankind,

Taking into account that a culture of peace actively fosters non-violence and respect for human rights and strengthens solidarity among peoples and nations and dialogue between cultures,

Recognizing that all cultures and civilizations share a common set of universal values,

Considering that tolerance of cultural, ethnic and religious diversities, as well as dialogue among and within civilizations, is essential for peace, understanding and friendship among individuals and people of different cultures and nations of the world, while manifestations of cultural prejudice, intolerance and xenophobia towards different cultures and religions generate hatred and violence among peoples and nations throughout the world,

Recognizing in each culture a dignity and value which deserves recognition, respect and preservation, and convinced that, in their rich variety and diversity, and in the reciprocal influences that they exert on one another, all cultures form part of the common heritage belonging to all humankind,

Convinced that the promotion of cultural pluralism and tolerance towards and dialogue among various cultures and civilizations would contribute to the efforts of all peoples and nations to enrich their cultures and traditions by engaging in a mutually beneficial exchange of knowledge and intellectual, moral and material achievements,

1. Affirms the importance for all peoples and nations to hold, develop and preserve their cultural heritage and traditions in a national and international atmosphere of peace, tolerance and mutual respect;

2. Recognizes the right of everyone to take part in cultural life and to enjoy the benefits of scientific progress and its applications;

3. Affirms that the international community should strive to respond to the challenges and opportunities posed by globalization in a manner that ensures respect for the cultural diversity of all;

4. Also affirms that inter-cultural dialogue essentially enriches the common understanding of human rights and that the benefits to be derived from the encouragement and development of international contacts and cooperation in the cultural fields are important;

5. Recognizes that respect for cultural diversity and the cultural rights of all enhances cultural pluralism, contributing to a wider exchange of knowledge and understanding of cultural background, advancing the application and enjoyment of universally accepted human rights throughout the world and fostering stable friendly relations among peoples and nations worldwide;

6. Emphasizes that the promotion of cultural pluralism and tolerance at the national and international levels is important for enhancing respect for cultural rights and cultural diversity;

7. Also emphasizes the fact that tolerance and respect for diversity facilitate the universal promotion and protection of human rights, including gender equality and the enjoyment of all human rights by all;

8. Calls upon States, international organizations and United Nations agencies, and invites civil society, including non-governmental organizations, to recognize and promote respect for cultural diversity for the purpose of advancing the objectives of peace, development and universally accepted human rights;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in the light of the present resolution, to prepare a report on human rights and cultural diversity, taking into account the views of Member States, relevant United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations, as well as the considerations in the present resolution regarding the recognition and importance of cultural diversity among all peoples and nations in the world, and to submit it to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

10. Decides to continue consideration of this question at its fifty-sixth session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Discrimination against minorities

Commission action. On 25 April [res. 2000/52], the Commission urged States and the international community to promote and protect the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, as set out in the 1992 Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 47/135 [YUN 1992, p. 722]. The Secretary-General was called on to make available, at the request of Governments, qualified expertise on minority issues. The High Commissioner was called on to promote the Declaration's implementation; to improve the cooperation of UN programmes and agencies dealing with minority issues; and to seek contributions to facilitate minority groups' participation in the Working Group on Minorities. OHCHR was requested to organize a seminar for international and regional organizations, treaty bodies and specialized agencies to discuss their work on the protection of minorities, improve coordination and seek ways of better protecting the rights of minorities. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 2001.

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Minorities, at its sixth session (Geneva, 22-26 May) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/27 & Corr.1], reviewed the promotion of the 1992 Declaration, examined possible solutions to problems involving minorities, including the promotion of mutual understanding between and among minorities and Governments, and recommended further measures to promote and protect the rights of minorities. Members also discussed the Group's future role.

The Working Group requested its Chairperson/Rapporteur to finalize the commentary on the Declaration and to ensure its publication in a future UN manual on minorities. The Group recommended holding a seminar in the Asia and Pacific region, one in the Americas focusing on the situation of Afro-Americans and another in Africa as a follow-up to the Group's seminar on multiculturalism in Africa: peaceful and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous populations (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 13-15 May). Other proposals included a voluntary fund for minority issues and further work on databases on minority protection. The Group called on the High Commissioner to organize a seminar for global and regional organizations, treaty bodies and specialized agencies to discuss their work on the protection of minorities, improve coordination and seek ways of better protecting the rights of persons belonging to minorities. On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council approved that request (decision 2000/269).

Subcommission action. On 17 August [res. 2000/16], the Subcommission recommended that the Commission ask Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to submit their views on the desirability of drafting a convention on the rights of persons belonging to minorities and on its content. It also recommended strengthening OHCHR to enable it to provide adequate services to the Working Group and to undertake relevant studies, evaluation and action. The Secretary-General was asked to invite UN bodies and regional organizations to provide information to the Working Group on their activities regarding minority protection.

Minorities and indigenous peoples

As requested by the Subcommission in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 616], Erica-Irene Daes (Greece) and Asbjørn Eide (Norway) prepared, in July [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/10], a working paper on the relationship and distinction between the rights of persons belonging to minorities and those of indigenous peoples, for submission to the Working Group on Minorities, the Working Group on Indigenous Populations (see p. 726) and the Subcommission. Mr. Eide concluded that persons belonging to minorities often had several identities and participated actively in the common domain, while it was assumed that indigenous peoples participated less in the common domain. Indigenous rights tended to strengthen the separateness of a group from others in society. In the opinion of Ms. Daes, the main distinction in contemporary international law was with respect to internal self-determination: the right of a group to govern itself within recognized geographical areas, without State interference.

Roma

In response to a 1999 Subcommission request [YUN 1999, p. 616], Yeung Kam Yeung Sik Yuen (Mauritius) submitted, in June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/28], a working paper on the human rights problems and protection of the Roma. Given the magnitude and complexity of Roma human rights problems, he found a need to initiate a study to identify why their problems were recurrent despite the fact that they had been living for several generations within the same countries, and to make recommendations to help solve their human rights problems.

Subcommission action. On 17 August [dec. 2000/109], the Subcommission endorsed the conclusions made in the working paper and proposed a draft text to the Commission recommending that the Economic and Social Council appoint Mr. Yeung Sik Yuen as Special Rapporteur to prepare the study.

Discrimination based on work and descent

On 11 August [res. 2000/4], the Subcommission decided to entrust Rajendra Kalidas Wimala Goonesekere (Sri Lanka) with preparing a working paper on discrimination based on work and descent, without financial implications, to identify communities in which such discrimination was experienced, to examine constitutional, legislative and administrative measures to abolish it, and to make recommendations on eliminating the discrimination.

Affirmative action

Report of Special Rapporteur. In accordance with a 1998 Subcommission resolution [YUN 1998, p. 652], the Special Rapporteur on the concept and practice of affirmative action, Marc Bossuyt (Belgium), reported in June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/11 & Corr.1] that OHCHR had sent a questionnaire to Governments, international organizations and NGOs, inviting them to provide relevant national documentation on affirmative action. The Special Rapporteur described the concept of affirmative action in international law and the limits international law set on affirmative action measures.

Subcommission action. On 11 August [dec. 2000/104], the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to remind Governments, international organizations and NGOs to respond to the questionnaire.

Right to nationality

In a January report with later addenda [E/CN.4/2000/56 & Add.1,2], the Secretary-General presented information received from six Governments on measures they had taken to prevent the arbitrary deprivation of nationality, as requested by the Commission in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 611].

Rights of non-citizens

Commission action. On 25 April [dec. 2000/104], the Commission asked the Economic and Social Council to authorize the Subcommission to appoint a special rapporteur to prepare a study of the rights of non-citizens, based on a working paper by David Weissbrodt (United States) [YUN 1999, p. 611], as well as on comments made at the Subcommission's 1999 session, and to submit a preliminary report in 2001, a progress report in 2002 and a final report in 2003. The Council approved that request on 28 July (decision 2000/283).

Subcommission action. On 1 August [dec. 2000/103], the Subcommission appointed Mr. Weissbrodt as Special Rapporteur and asked him to submit reports as directed by the Commission. (See p. 690 for Subcommission action on the rights of non-citizens as asylum-seekers and refugees.)

Religious intolerance

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In a February report [E/CN.4/2000/65], the Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance, Abdelfattah Amor (Tunisia), summarized 93 communications, including two urgent appeals, sent by him to 55 States, as well as 23 replies received, regarding incidents and governmental action inconsistent with the provisions of the 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, contained in General Assembly resolution 36/55 [YUN 1981, p. 881]. In his conclusions, the Special Rapporteur noted the spread of religious extremism that affected most religions, including Islam, Hinduism and Judaism, and a general tendency to perpetuate policies, legislation and practices that affected freedom of religion and belief. Initiatives taken by the Special Rapporteur included efforts to create a compendium of national enactments relating to freedom of religion or belief; research on the status of women with regard to religion, on proselytism, freedom of religion and poverty, and on sects, new religious movements and religious communities; and plans to convene an international conference on school education in relation to freedom of religion and belief, tolerance and non-discrimination as part of the observance of the 1981 Declaration's twentieth anniversary. In a later report [E/CN.4/2001/63], the Special Rapporteur stated that the Preparatory Committee for the conference, at its first meeting (Geneva, 20-22 November), had adopted the first version of the draft final document. The conference was to take place in Madrid from 23 to 25 November 2001.

The Special Rapporteur visited Bangladesh (Dhaka and the Chittagong Hill Tracts in Rangamati) (15-24 May) [A/55/280/Add.2], where he focused on the legal aspects of freedom of religion or belief, on the influence of politics on those freedoms and on the status of women. Regarding the Chittagong Hill Tracts, the issue was the preservation of the identity of the indigenous peoples; that identity was mainly ethnic in nature, but also religious. The Special Rapporteur noted that Muslims, Hindus and Christians, who constituted 88.3, 10.5 and 0.3 per cent of the population, respectively, were distributed across the entire country, whereas Buddhists, constituting 0.6 per cent, lived mainly in the Chittagong Hill Tracts. Estimates indicated that ethnic communities accounted for 50 per cent of the population in that area, due to the large, mostly Muslim, Bengali community.

Following an examination of the legal aspects of freedom of religion or belief, the influence of the political sphere on freedom of religion or belief, the situation regarding religion or belief and the status of women, the Special Rapporteur concluded that constitutional measures guaranteed the freedom, in accordance with relevant international law, and also guaranteed the principle of non-discrimination, especially with respect to religion and gender. However, religious personal laws discriminated against women, and although efforts had been made to ensure equality for all, they had been limited. The Special Rapporteur considered that the State generally respected freedom of religion and belief, but there were problems in terms of the situation of religious and ethnic communities. The State appeared more sensitive to the interests of Muslims. Non-Muslims encountered obstacles in accessing public sector jobs and received weaker financial and educational support. That approach appeared to cause delays in implementing a 1997 peace accord in favour of the ethnic communities of the Chittagong Hill Tracts. The Special Rapporteur observed weakness in the State's efforts to combat religious extremism. He recommended protecting religion from political exploitation and that the State combat extremism, including the protection of mosques and madrasahs from extremist indoctrination. He proposed that the State implement a policy of prevention, especially through education, ensure that the media were open to the religious and ethnic pluralism of the country and be more aware of the legitimate claims of minorities and ethnic communities. The Special Rapporteur encouraged initiatives to establish a national commission for human rights and recommended that Bangladesh avail itself of the technical cooperation services of the Commission on Human Rights.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2000/33], the Commission condemned all forms of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief and urged States to: provide adequate constitutional and legal guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief; ensure that no one, because of religion or belief, was deprived of the right to life, liberty or security of person; combat hatred, intolerance and acts of violence, intimidation and coercion motivated by religious intolerance; recognize the right to worship or assemble in connection with a religion or belief and to establish and maintain places for those purposes; ensure that religious places were respected and protected; ensure that public officials respected different religions and beliefs; and promote tolerance through education and other means. The Commission decided to change the Special Rapporteur's title from Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance to Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief. The Special Rapporteur was asked to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 2000 (see p. 659) and a report to the Commission in 2001.

The Economic and Social Council, on 28 July (decision 2000/261), endorsed the Commission's decision to change the Special Rapporteur's title and approved the submission of the reports.

On 26 April [res. 2000/84], the Commission, expressing concern at negative stereotyping of religions and that Islam was frequently and wrongly associated with human rights violations and terrorism, urged States to combat hatred, discrimination, intolerance, acts of violence, intimidation and coercion motivated by religious intolerance. It called on the Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance and the Special Rapporteur on racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance to take account of the Commission's current resolution when reporting to it.

Interim report of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/159 [YUN 1999, p. 620], the Secretary-General, in September [A/55/280], transmitted the Special Rapporteur's interim report. The report covered 39 communications, including one urgent appeal, sent to 25 States, and contained the summaries of 19 replies. An analysis of the replies indicated an increase in religious extremism, whose primary victims were vulnerable groups, such as women and minorities. Apart from extremism, instances and situations of intolerance and discrimination against women and minorities were cited, and several communications dealt with defamation, which was often misused to censor the right to criticism and discussion of religion. The Special Rapporteur considered it essential that the Assembly, like the Commission, devote the fullest attention to religious extremism. He recommended that State intervention regarding religion or belief be limited to ensuring respect for the law, in conformity with international law. States had an obligation under international law to guarantee the right of minorities to freedom of religion within internationally agreed limits. He emphasized the urgency of preventing discrimination based on religion or belief.

The Special Rapporteur had submitted a contribution to the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance [A/CONF. 198/PC.1/7].

Communications. On 10 March [E/CN.4/2000/135], the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) submitted allegations claiming maltreatment of clergy and destruction of religious buildings of the Serbian Orthodox Church in the Kosovo province of FRY and in Metohija.

On 4 December [A/55/665], the Russian Federation transmitted a statement made by participants in the Interreligious Peacemaking Forum (Moscow, 13-14 November), held under the patronage of the Patriarch of Moscow and All Russia, Alexy II, expressing alarm at manifestations of extremism and terrorism and attempts to justify them by means of religious rhetoric.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 55/97 without vote [agenda item 114 (b)].

Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance

The General Assembly,

Recalling that all States have pledged themselves, under the Charter of the United Nations, to promote and encourage universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming that discrimination against human beings on the grounds of religion or belief constitutes an affront to human dignity and a disavowal of the principles of the Charter,

Recalling article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Reaffirming its resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, and the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in particular paragraph 4 thereof,

Emphasizing that the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief is far-reaching and profound and that it encompasses freedom of thought on all matters, personal conviction and the commitment to religion or belief, whether manifested individually or in community with others, and in public or private,

Reaffirming the call of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, for all Governments to take all appropriate measures in compliance with their international obligations and with due regard to their respective legal systems to counter intolerance and related violence based on religion or belief, including practices of discrimination against women and the desecration of religious sites, recognizing that every individual has the right to freedom of thought, conscience, expression and religion,

Calling upon all Governments to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on religious intolerance to enable him to carry out his mandate fully,

Alarmed that serious instances of intolerance and discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief, including acts of violence, intimidation and coercion motivated by religious intolerance, occur in many parts of the world and threaten the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Deeply concerned that, as reported by the Special Rapporteur, the rights violated on religious grounds include the right to life, the right to physical integrity and to liberty and security of person, the right to freedom of expression, the right not to be subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and the right not to be arbitrarily arrested or detained,

Believing that further efforts are therefore required to promote and protect the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief and to eliminate all forms of hatred, intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief,

1. Reaffirms that freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief is a human right derived from the inherent dignity of the human person and guaranteed to all without discrimination;

2. Urges States to ensure that their constitutional and legal systems provide effective guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, including the provision of effective remedies in cases in which the right to freedom of religion or belief is violated;

3. Also urges States to ensure, in particular, that no one within their jurisdiction is, because of his or her religion or belief, deprived of the right to life or the right to liberty and security of person, or subjected to torture or arbitrary arrest or detention;

4. Further urges States, in conformity with international standards of human rights, to take all necessary action to prevent such instances, to take all appropriate measures to combat hatred, intolerance and acts of violence, intimidation and coercion motivated by religious intolerance and to encourage, through the educational system and by other means, understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief;

5. Emphasizes that, as underlined by the Human Rights Committee, restrictions on the freedom to manifest religion or belief are permitted only if those limitations that are prescribed by law are necessary to protect public safety, order, health or morals, or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others, and are applied in a manner that does not vitiate the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion;

6. Urges States to ensure that, in the course of their official duties, members of law enforcement bodies, civil servants, educators and other public officials respect different religions and beliefs and do not discriminate against persons professing other religions or beliefs;

7. Calls upon all States to recognize, as provided for in the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, the right of all persons to worship or assemble in connection with a religion or belief and to establish and maintain places for those purposes;

8. Expresses its grave concern at any attack upon religious places, sites and shrines, and calls upon all States, in accordance with their national legislation and in conformity with international human rights standards, to exert their utmost efforts to ensure that such places, sites and shrines are fully respected and protected;

9. Recognizes that legislation alone is not enough to prevent violations of human rights, including the right to freedom of religion or belief, and that the exercise of tolerance and non-discrimination by persons and groups is necessary for the full realization of the aims of the Declaration;

10. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on religious intolerance, and encourages continued efforts on the part of the Special Rapporteur, who was appointed to examine incidents and governmental actions in all parts of the world that are incompatible with the provisions of the Declaration and to recommend remedial measures, as appropriate;

11. Welcomes the decision of the Commission on Human Rights in resolution 2000/33 of 20 April 2000 to change the title of the Special Rapporteur from Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance to Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief;

12. Takes note of the study presented by the Special Rapporteur to the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance at its first session, and encourages the Special Rapporteur to continue to contribute to the preparations for the Conference, which is to be held at Durban, South Africa, in 2001, on matters relating to religious intolerance that have a bearing on the World Conference;

13. Encourages Governments to give serious consideration to inviting the Special Rapporteur to visit their countries so as to enable him to fulfil his mandate even more effectively;

14. Welcomes the initiatives of Governments and non-governmental organizations to collaborate with the Special Rapporteur, including by the convening of an international consultative conference on school education in relation to freedom of religion and belief, tolerance and non-discrimination, to be held at Madrid in November 2001, and encourages Governments, non-governmental organizations and other interested parties to participate actively in that conference;

15. Encourages Governments, when seeking the assistance of the United Nations Programme of Advisory Services and Technical Assistance in the Field of Human Rights, to consider, where appropriate, including requests for assistance for the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion;

16. Welcomes and encourages the continuing efforts of non-governmental organizations and religious bodies and groups to promote the implementation and dissemination of the Declaration, and encourages their work in promoting freedom of religion or belief and in highlighting cases of religious intolerance, discrimination and persecution;

17. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of measures for the implementation of the Declaration;

18. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Special Rapporteur receives the resources necessary to enable him to discharge his mandate fully;

20. Decides to consider the question of the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance at its fifty-sixth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Follow-up to UN Year for Tolerance

Report of UNESCO Director-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 53/151 [YUN 1998, p. 653], the Secretary-General, in August [A/55/338], transmitted a report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) on the implementation of the Declaration of Principles on Tolerance and the Follow-up Plan of Action for the United Nations Year for Tolerance (1998-2000), adopted by UNESCO and observed in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1126]. The Director-General described activities carried out by UNESCO in the areas of awareness-raising and mobilization, and research, policies and standard-setting, in order to implement the Plan of Action, which aimed to educate, inform and empower individuals to assume the responsibilities of dialogue, mutual respect, toleration and non-violence, and to encourage pluralism and tolerance in the policies of Member States. He also described activities to observe the third (1998) and fourth (1999) International Day for Tolerance, as well as meetings and discussions held in 1999 and 2000 on the issue.

Commission action. On 25 April [res. 2000/50], the Commission, condemning all violent acts and activities that undermined tolerance and pluralism, called on the High Commissioner: to include in the OHCHR work programme the promotion of tolerance and to assist countries in their national programmes through its advisory services and technical cooperation programme; to undertake educational and public-awareness activities to promote tolerance and pluralism within the activities of the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education (1995-2004) (see p. 631), the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People (1995-2004) (see p. 727) and the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1993-2002) (see p. 640), and in the context of the 2001 World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (see p. 641) and the preparations for the twentieth anniversary of the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief (see p. 658); and to assist countries, upon request, to put in place safeguards to guarantee the enjoyment of all human rights by all segments of their population. The High Commissioner was called on to report to the Commission in 2002. The Commission's relevant mechanisms were called on to accord priority to promoting democracy, pluralism and tolerance, to study conditions that promoted intolerance and to identify principles and best practices to promote tolerance and pluralism.

Civil and political rights

Right to self-determination

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/155 [YUN 1999, p. 621], the Secretary-General, in July [A/55/176], summarized action taken by the Commission on Human Rights on the right of peoples to self-determination during the period April 1999 to June 2000. In September [A/55/176/Add.1], also in response to resolution 54/155, he summarized the views of three Member States on that right.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/601], adopted resolution 55/85 without vote [agenda item 113].

Universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance, for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights, of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and embodied in the International Covenants on Human Rights, as well as in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Welcoming the progressive exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial, foreign or alien occupation and their emergence into sovereign statehood and independence,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of acts or threats of foreign military intervention and occupation that are threatening to suppress, or have already suppressed, the right to self-determination of sovereign peoples and nations,

Expressing grave concern that, as a consequence of the persistence of such actions, millions of people have been and are being uprooted from their homes as refugees and displaced persons, and emphasizing the urgent need for concerted international action to alleviate their condition,

Recalling the relevant resolutions regarding the violation of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights as a result of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-sixth and previous sessions,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions on the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination, including resolution 54/155 of 17 December 1999,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the right of peoples to self-determination,

1. Reaffirms that the universal realization of the right of all peoples, including those under colonial, foreign and alien domination, to self-determination is a fundamental condition for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights and for the preservation and promotion of such rights;

2. Declares its firm opposition to acts of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, since these have resulted in the suppression of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights in certain parts of the world;

3. Calls upon those States responsible to cease immediately their military intervention in and occupation of foreign countries and territories and all acts of repression, discrimination, exploitation and maltreatment, in particular the brutal and inhuman methods reportedly employed for the execution of those acts against the peoples concerned;

4. Deplores the plight of millions of refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted as a result of the aforementioned acts, and reaffirms their right to return to their homes voluntarily in safety and honour;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give special attention to the violation of human rights, especially the right to self-determination, resulting from foreign military intervention, aggression or occupation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on this question to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session under the item entitled "Right of peoples to self-determination".

Rights of Palestinians

On 7 April [res. 2000/4], the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 44 to 1, with 6 abstentions, reaffirmed the permanent and unqualified Palestinian right to self-determination, including the option of a State. It requested the Secretary-General to transmit its resolution to Israel and all other Governments, to disseminate it as widely as possible, and to make available to the Commission, prior to its 2001 session, information pertaining to its implementation by the Government of Israel.

The Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/2000/13] stating that he had received no reply to his request to Israel for information on the implementation of its 1999 resolution on the situation in occupied Palestine [YUN 1999, p. 622].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/601], adopted resolution 55/87 by recorded vote (170-2-5) [agenda item 113].

The right of the Palestinian people to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Aware that the development of friendly relations among nations, based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, is among the purposes and principles of the United Nations, as defined in the Charter,

Recalling the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations,

Recalling further the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Expressing hope for an immediate resumption of negotiations within the Middle East peace process on its agreed basis and for the speedy achievement of a final settlement between the Palestinian and Israeli sides,

Affirming the right of all States in the region to live in peace within secure and internationally recognized borders,

1. Reaffirms the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to a State;

2. Expresses the hope that the Palestinian people will soon be exercising their right to self-determination, which is not subject to any veto, in the current peace process;

3. Urges all States and the specialized agencies and the organizations of the United Nations system to continue to support and assist the Palestinian people in their quest for self-determination.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 55/87:

Western Sahara

On 7 April [res. 2000/2], the Commission, commending the Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy for the agreements on the settlement plan reached between Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro, called on the two parties to cooperate with them, as well as with the Secretary-General's Special Representative, in implementing the plan. It reaffirmed support for further efforts of the Secretary-General for the organization and supervision by the United Nations, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, of a referendum on self-determination of the people of Western Sahara (see p. 220).

Mercenaries

Commission action. On 7 April [res. 2000/3], the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 35 to 11, with 5 abstentions, decided to convene in 2000 a workshop on the traditional and new forms of mercenary activities as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination. The High Commissioner was asked to report on the workshop in 2001.

The Commission called on States that had not done so to consider signing or ratifying the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/34 [YUN 1989, p. 825]. The Special Rapporteur was asked to report in 2001. OHCHR was asked to publicize the adverse effects of mercenary activities on the right to self-determination and, when requested, to render advisory services to States that were so affected.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2000/23 & Corr.1], adopted decision 2000/245 by recorded vote (29-9-9) [agenda item 14 (g)].

The use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination

At its 45th plenary meeting, on 28 July 2000, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/3 of 7 April 2000, endorsed the Commission's decision, in accordance with the request of the General Assembly, to convene a workshop on the traditional and new forms of mercenary activities as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination before the fifty-fifth session of the Assembly, and its request to the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to report on the outcome of the workshop to the Commission at its fifty-seventh session.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2000/245:

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Bahrain, Belarus, Bolivia, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Cuba, Fiji, India, Indonesia, Mexico, Morocco, Oman, Pakistan, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Venezuela, Viet Nam.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 1999 Commission request [YUN 1999, p. 623], the Special Rapporteur on the question of the use of mercenaries, Enrique Bernales Ballesteros (Peru), submitted a report [E/CN.4/2000/14 & Corr.1]. He observed that mercenary activities continued through traditional measures of recruitment and in new forms, including recruitment by private companies offering military security services, which took part in armed conflicts by virtue of contracts signed with Governments. He intended to keep the question of private military security companies under review. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Commission reiterate its call to Member States to ratify or accede to the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Fi-ancing and Training of Mercenaries, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/34 [YUN 1989, p. 825] but not yet in force.

In response to Assembly resolution 54/151 [YUN 1999, p. 623], the Secretary-General, in August [A/55/334], transmitted a report by the Special Rapporteur, who summarized replies received from Member States in response to his request for information about mercenary activities, including legislation to outlaw them and information and views on private security service and military advice. He described mercenary activities in Africa, current mercenary activities and the status of the International Convention. He concluded that no significant progress had been observed in the reduction of mercenary activities. He suggested that the methods used to recruit mercenaries by private companies that offered security services and military assistance and advice should continue to be kept under review, as data indicated that, as a result of their activities, the supply of mercenaries had increased. Regarding Africa, in addition to the profit motive, the presence of mercenaries and their paymasters was intended to either control policy or play a political role that guaranteed access to Africa's natural resources, especially diamonds and oil; the Assembly should, in addition to condemning mercenary activities, declare its willingness to strengthen mechanisms to end the phenomenon and call for a system to protect Africa's natural resources. Other recommendations to the Assembly, including a legal definition of mercenaries and the publicizing of the adverse effects of mercenary activities, were incorporated in the resolution below.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/601], adopted resolution 55/86 by recorded vote (119-19-35) [agenda item 113].

Use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 54/151 of 17 December 1999, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/3 of 7 April 2000,

Recalling also all of its relevant resolutions, in which, inter alia, it condemned any State that permitted or tolerated the recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries with the objective of overthrowing the Governments of States Members of the United Nations, especially those of developing countries, and recalling further the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the Organization of African Unity,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations concerning the strict observance of the principles of sovereign equality, political independence, the territorial integrity of States, the non-use of force or of the threat of use of force in international relations and the self-determination of peoples,

Reaffirming also that, by virtue of the principle of self-determination, as developed in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, all peoples have the right freely to determine, without external interference, their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development and every State has the duty to respect this right in accordance with the provisions of the Charter,

Alarmed and concerned about the danger that the activities of mercenaries constitute to peace and security in developing countries, in particular in Africa and in small States, and also elsewhere,

Deeply concerned about the loss of life, the substantial damage to property and the negative effects on the policy and economies of affected countries resulting from mercenary aggression and criminal activities,

Convinced that it is necessary for Member States to ratify the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries adopted by the General Assembly on 4 December 1989 and to develop and maintain international cooperation among States for the prevention, prosecution and punishment of mercenary activities,

Convinced also that, notwithstanding the way in which mercenaries or mercenary-related activities are used or the form that they take to acquire some semblance of legitimacy, they are a threat to peace, security and the self-determination of peoples and an obstacle to the enjoyment of human rights by peoples,

2. Reaffirms that the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries are causes for grave concern to all States and violate the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Urges all States to take the necessary steps and to exercise the utmost vigilance against the menace posed by the activities of mercenaries and to take the necessary legislative measures to ensure that their territories and other territories under their control, as well as their nationals, are not used for the recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries for the planning of activities designed to destabilize or overthrow the Government of any State or threaten the territorial integrity and political unity of sovereign States, or to promote secession or to fight the national liberation movements struggling against colonial or other forms of alien domination or occupation;

8. Invites States to investigate the possibility of mercenary involvement whenever criminal acts of a terrorist nature occur;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all the necessary assistance, both professional and financial;

10. Recommends that the Commission on Human Rights renew the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a period of three years;

11. Urges all States to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur in the fulfilment of his mandate;

12. Requests the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, as a matter of priority to be programmed in its immediate activities, to publicize the adverse effects of the activities of mercenaries on the right to self-determination and, when requested and where necessary, to render advisory services to States that are affected by the activities of mercenaries;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Governments to make proposals towards a clearer legal definition of mercenaries, and in this regard strongly urges the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to convene a workshop on the traditional and new forms of activities of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination before the fifty-seventh session of the Commission on Human Rights, so that a report on the outcome of the workshop may be submitted to the Commission at its fifty-seventh session;

14. Requests the Special Rapporteur to report his findings on the use of mercenaries to undermine the right of peoples to self-determination, with specific recommendations, to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

15. Decides to consider at its fifty-sixth session the question of the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination under the item entitled "Right of peoples to self-determination".

Administration of justice

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2000/39], the Commission called on the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner to strengthen system-wide coordination in the administration of justice, particularly between UN programmes in human rights, crime prevention and criminal justice, and development. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 2002 on measures to implement international human rights standards in the administration of justice.

Subcommission action. On 1 August [dec. 2000/102], the Subcommission decided to establish a five-member sessional working group on the administration of justice. At its meetings on 3, 9 and 14 August [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/44], the working group considered the imposition of the death penalty; summary, arbitrary and other extrajudicial executions; privatization of prisons; improvement and efficiency of judicial instruments for the protection of human rights at the national level and their impact at the international level; the administration of justice through military tribunals and other exceptional jurisdictions; and domestic implementation in practice of the obligation to provide effective domestic remedies.

Compensation for victims

In response to a 1999 Commission request [YUN 1999, p. 625], the independent expert on the right to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of gross violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, M. Cherif Bassiouni (Egypt/United States), submitted his final report in January [E/CN.4/2000/62], containing a revision of the basic principles and guidelines on that right. Previous versions of the guidelines were submitted in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 962], 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 623] and 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 649].

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2000/41], the Commission requested the Secretary-General to circulate to all Member States the text of the revised principles and guidelines. The High Commissioner was asked to hold a consultative meeting in Geneva for interested Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, with a view to finalizing the principles and guidelines on the basis of the comments submitted.

Note by Secretariat. A December note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/2001/61] stated that Member States had been requested to submit their comments on the basic principles and guidelines to OHCHR. As at 20 November, six replies had been received.

Rule of law

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/142 [YUN 1998, p. 663], the Secretary-General, in July [A/55/177], described assistance provided by OHCHR as the focal point for coordinating system-wide attention to human rights, democracy and the rule of law. As at 30 April, of the 47 ongoing projects in the technical cooperation programme, at least 30 supported activities related to strengthening the rule of law. Assistance included support for: developing and implementing national plans of action; establishing and strengthening national institutions; constitutional and legislative reform, administration of justice, elections and national parliaments; training for police, armed forces and prison personnel; and the promotion of human rights education. In an effort to bridge the gap between the increasing number of requests for technical assistance and the limited resources available, the High Commissioner was making efforts to integrate human rights throughout the work of the UN system, thus involving UN partners in technical cooperation projects.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 55/99 without vote [agenda item 114 (b)].

Strengthening of the rule of law

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, by adopting the Universal Declaration of Human Rights fifty-two years ago, Member States pledged themselves to achieve, in cooperation with the United Nations, the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Firmly convinced that the rule of law is an essential factor in the protection of human rights, as stressed in the Declaration, and should continue to attract the attention of the international community,

Convinced that, through their own national legal and judicial systems, States must provide appropriate civil, criminal and administrative remedies for violations of human rights,

Recognizing the importance of the role that can be played by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in supporting national efforts to strengthen the institutions of the rule of law,

Bearing in mind that, in its resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993, the General Assembly entrusted the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights with, inter alia, providing advisory services and technical and financial assistance in the field of human rights, enhancing international cooperation for the promotion and protection of all human rights and coordinating human rights activities throughout the United Nations system,

Recalling the recommendation of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, that a comprehensive programme should be established within the United Nations with a view to helping States in the task of building and strengthening adequate national structures that have a direct impact on the overall observance of human rights and the maintenance of the rule of law,

Recalling also its resolution 53/142 of 9 December 1998 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1999/74 of 28 April 1999,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Notes with appreciation the increasing number of Member States seeking assistance in strengthening and consolidating the rule of law and the support provided to these States through the technical cooperation programme of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, as outlined in the above-mentioned report of the Secretary-General;
3. Praises the efforts made by the Office of the High Commissioner to accomplish its ever-increasing tasks with the limited financial and personnel resources at its disposal;
4. Expresses its deep concern at the scarcity of means at the disposal of the Office of the High Commissioner for the fulfilment of its tasks;
5. Notes with concern that the United Nations Programme of Advisory Services and Technical Assistance in the Field of Human Rights does not have sufficient funds to provide any substantial financial assistance to national projects that have a direct impact on the realization of human rights and the maintenance of the rule of law in countries that are committed to those ends but are lacking the necessary means and resources;
6. Welcomes the deepening of the ongoing cooperation between the Office of the High Commissioner and other relevant bodies and programmes of the United Nations system, with a view to enhancing system-wide coordination of assistance in human rights, democracy and the rule of law, and in this context notes the cooperation between the United Nations Development Programme and the Office of the High Commissioner in providing technical assistance, at the request of States, in the promotion of the rule of law;
7. Affirms that the Office of the High Commissioner remains the focal point for coordinating system-wide attention for human rights, democracy and the rule of law;
8. Encourages the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to continue the dialogue between her Office and other organs and agencies of the United Nations system, taking into account the need to explore new synergies with a view to obtaining increased financial assistance for human rights and the rule of law and to promoting inter-agency coordination, funding and allocation of responsibilities in order to improve efficiency and complementarity of action concerning, inter alia, assistance to States in strengthening the rule of law;

9. Also encourages the High Commissioner to continue to explore the possibility of further contact with and support from the international financial institutions, acting within their mandates, with a view to obtaining the technical and financial means to strengthen the capacity of the Office of the High Commissioner to provide assistance to national projects aiming at the realization of human rights and the maintenance of the rule of law;

10. Requests the High Commissioner to continue to accord high priority to the technical cooperation activities undertaken by her Office with regard to the rule of law and to continue to act as a catalyst in the system by, inter alia, helping other United Nations agencies and programmes, within their respective mandates, to include in their work, as appropriate, attention to institution-building in the area of the rule of law;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution and the above-mentioned recommendation of the World Conference on Human Rights.

Humanitarian standards

The Commission considered a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/2000/94] containing information received from Governments, UN bodies and NGOs, in reply to the Commission's 1999 request [YUN 1999, p. 626], on fundamental standards of humanity applicable in all situations and consistent with international law.

Sweden, in cooperation with Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Norway, organized an expert meeting on fundamental standards of humanity (Stockholm, 22-24 February) [E/CN.4/2000/145]. The meeting concluded that the concept should be seen as a process towards increasing the protection of persons. Discussion should focus on the identification of fundamental standards of humanity, the problem of derogation, the problem of non-State actors, the need for a common strategy for universal ratification and strengthening the implementation of legal norms.

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 2000/69], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 2001, and invited States, international organizations and NGOs to discuss the strengthening of protection of the individual in all situations, with a view to promoting the ongoing process with respect to fundamental standards of humanity.

Civilians in armed conflict

On 14 February [S/2000/119], the President of the Security Council informed the President of the General Assembly that, in accordance with Council resolution 1265(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 649] on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, an informal working group of the Council was established. As some of the Secretary-General's recommendations in his 1999 report on the subject [ibid., p. 648] related to the Assembly, the report was issued as an Assembly document [A/54/619]. Members of the informal working group had suggested that four of those recommendations should be referred to the Assembly's Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations (see p. 93 for further details). On 7 April [S/2000/298], the Assembly President transmitted to the Council President a reply from the Chairman of the Special Committee (see p. 93).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 April [meeting 4130], the Security Council discussed the Secretary-General's 1999 report and unanimously adopted resolution 1296(2000). The draft [S/2000/335] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 8 September 1999 on the protection of civilians in armed conflict,

Expressing its appreciation to the informal working group established pursuant to resolution 1265(1999) for its work,

Expressing its regret that civilians account for the vast majority of casualties in armed conflicts and increasingly are targeted by combatants and armed elements, reaffirming its concern at the hardships borne by civilians during armed conflict, in particular as a result of acts of violence directed against them, especially women, children and other vulnerable groups, including refugees and internally displaced persons, and recognizing the consequent impact this has on durable peace, reconciliation and development,

Underlining the need for all parties concerned to comply with the provisions of the Charter and with rules and principles of international law, in particular international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law, and to implement fully the relevant decisions of the Security Council,

1. Emphasizes the need, when considering ways to provide for the protection of civilians in armed conflict, to proceed on a case-by-case basis, taking into account the particular circumstances, and affirms its intention to take into account relevant recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General of 8 September 1999 when carrying out its work;

2. Reaffirms its strong condemnation of the deliberate targeting of civilians or other protected persons in situations of armed conflict, and calls upon all parties to put an end to such practices;

4. Reaffirms the importance of adopting a comprehensive approach to conflict prevention, invites Member States and the Secretary-General to bring to its attention any matter which in their opinion may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security, affirms in this regard its willingness to consider, in the light of its discussion of such matters, the establishment, in appropriate circumstances, of preventive missions, and recalls, in this regard, the statement by its President of 30 November 1999;

5. Notes that the deliberate targeting of civilian populations or other protected persons and the committing of systematic, flagrant and widespread violations of international humanitarian and human rights law in situations of armed conflict may constitute a threat to international peace and security, and in this regard reaffirms its readiness to consider such situations and, where necessary, to adopt appropriate steps;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to refer to the Council relevant information and analysis where he believes that such information or analysis could contribute to the resolution of issues before it;

7. Expresses its intention to collaborate with representatives of the relevant regional and subregional organizations, where appropriate, in order further to improve opportunities for the resolution of armed conflicts and the protection of civilians in such conflict;

8. Underlines the importance of safe and unimpeded access of humanitarian personnel to civilians in armed conflicts, calls upon all parties concerned, including neighbouring States, to cooperate fully with the United Nations Humanitarian Coordinator and United Nations agencies in providing such access, invites States and the Secretary-General to bring to its attention information regarding the deliberate denial of such access in violation of international law, where such denial may constitute a threat to international peace and security, and in this regard expresses its willingness to consider such information and, when necessary, to adopt appropriate steps;

9. Reaffirms its grave concern at the harmful and widespread impact of armed conflict on civilians, including the particular impact that armed conflict has on women, children and other vulnerable groups, and further reaffirms in this regard the importance of fully addressing their special protection and assistance needs in the mandates of peacemaking, peacekeeping and peace-building operations;

10. Expresses its intention, where appropriate, to call upon the parties to a conflict to make special arrange-

11. Emphasizes the importance for humanitarian organizations to uphold the principles of neutrality, impartiality and humanity in their humanitarian activities, and recalls in this regard the statement by its President of 9 March 2000;

12. Reiterates its call to all parties concerned, including non-State parties, to ensure the safety, security and freedom of movement of United Nations and associated personnel, as well as personnel of humanitarian organizations, and recalls, in this regard, the statement by its President of 9 February 2000;

13. Affirms its intention to ensure, where appropriate and feasible, that peacekeeping missions are given suitable mandates and adequate resources to protect civilians under imminent threat of physical danger, including by strengthening the ability of the United Nations to plan and rapidly deploy peacekeeping personnel, civilian police, civil administrators and humanitarian personnel, utilizing the stand-by arrangements as appropriate;

14. Invites the Secretary-General to bring to its attention situations where refugees and internally displaced persons are vulnerable to the threat of harassment or where their camps are vulnerable to infiltration by armed elements and where such situations may constitute a threat to international peace and security, expresses, in this regard, its willingness to consider such situations and, where necessary, adopt appropriate steps to help to create a secure environment for civilians endangered by conflicts, including by providing support to States concerned in this regard, and recalls, in this regard, its resolution 1208(1998) of 19 November 1998;

15. Indicates its willingness to consider the appropriateness and feasibility of temporary security zones and safe corridors for the protection of civilians and the delivery of assistance in situations characterized by the threat of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes against the civilian population;

16. Affirms its intention to include in the mandates of United Nations peacekeeping operations, where appropriate and on a case-by-case basis, clear terms for activities related to the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants, including in particular child soldiers, as well as for the safe and timely disposal of surplus arms and ammunition, emphasizes the importance of incorporating such measures in specific peace agreements, where appropriate and with the consent of the parties, also emphasizes in this regard the importance of adequate resources being made available, and recalls the statement by its President of 23 March 2000;

17. Reaffirms its condemnation of all incitements to violence against civilians in situations of armed conflict, also reaffirms the need to bring to justice individuals who incite or otherwise cause such violence, and indicates its willingness, when authorizing missions, to consider, where appropriate, steps in response to media broadcasts inciting genocide, crimes against humanity and serious violations of international humanitarian law;

18. Affirms that, where appropriate, United Nations peacekeeping missions should include a mass-media component that can disseminate information about international humanitarian law and human rights law, including peace education and protection of children, while also giving objective information about the activities of the United Nations, and further affirms that, where appropriate, regional peacekeeping operations should be encouraged to include such mass-media components;

19. Reiterates the importance of compliance with relevant provisions of international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law and of providing appropriate training in such law, including child- and gender-related provisions, as well as in negotiation and communications skills, cultural awareness, civil-military coordination and sensitivity in the prevention of HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases, to personnel involved in peacemaking, peacekeeping and peace-building activities, requests the Secretary-General to disseminate appropriate guidance and to ensure that such United Nations personnel have the appropriate training, and urges relevant Member States, as necessary and feasible, to disseminate appropriate instructions and to ensure that appropriate training is included in their programmes for personnel involved in similar activities;

20. Notes the entry into force of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction of 1997 and the amended Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II), to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects of 1980, recalls the relevant provisions contained therein, notes the beneficial impact that their implementation will have on the safety of civilians and encourages those in a position to do so to support humanitarian mine action, including by providing financial assistance to this end;

21. Notes that the excessive accumulation and destabilizing effect of small arms and light weapons pose a considerable impediment to the provision of humanitarian assistance and have a potential to exacerbate and prolong conflicts, endanger civilians and undermine security and the confidence required for a return to peace and stability;

22. Recalls the decision of the members of the Council set out in the note by its President of 17 April 2000 to establish on a temporary basis an informal working group of the Security Council on the general issue of sanctions, and requests the informal working group to consider the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General of 8 September 1999 relating to its mandate;

23. Recalls the letter from its President to the President of the General Assembly dated 14 February 2000, takes note of the letter to its President from the President of the General Assembly dated 7 April 2000 transmitting a letter dated 1 April 2000 from the Chairman of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, welcomes in this regard the work by the Committee with reference to the recommendations in the report of the Secretary-General of 8 September 1999 which relate to its mandate, and encourages the General Assembly to continue consideration of these aspects of the protection of civilians in armed conflict;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to include in his written reports to the Council on matters of which it is seized, as appropriate, observations relating to the protection of civilians in armed conflict;

25. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit by 30 March 2001 his next report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, with a view to requesting additional such reports in future, further requests the Secretary-General to include in this report any additional recommendations on ways the Council and other organs of the United Nations, acting within their sphere of responsibility, could further improve the protection of civilians in situations of armed conflict, and encourages the Secretary-General to consult the Inter-Agency Standing Committee in the preparation of the reports;

26. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security of UN staff

Note by Secretariat. The Commission considered a note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/2000/100] that referred to its 1997 request [YUN 1997, p. 665] that the Secretary-General commission a study on the safety and security problems of UN and other personnel carrying out activities in UN operations. The note stated that the UN Security Coordinator informed the Secretariat that the General Assembly had requested a review of security arrangements to submit to the Millennium Assembly. The report was being prepared on an inter-agency basis to reflect the actual situation and would be provided to the Commission.

Report of Secretary-General. As the Commission had requested in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 667], the Secretary-General, in January [E/CN.4/2000/99], summarized the comments of Governments, UN bodies and agencies and other organizations, and the Federation of International Civil Servants' Associations on the situation of UN and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of a UN mandate who were imprisoned, missing or held in a country against their will, and on new cases that had been settled successfully.

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 2000/77], the Commission, calling on the UN system to report any incident involving the safety and security of staff to the UN Security Coordinator so that a comprehensive record might be maintained, asked States to consider signing and acceding to or ratifying the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 49/59 [YUN 1994, p. 1289] (see p. 1345). Recalling its request to the Secretary-General to review security in UN operations and to develop safety and security measures, the Commission asked him to submit the results in 2002 and to report as well in 2002 on the situation of UN and associated personnel who were imprisoned, missing or held in a country against their will and on new cases that had been settled successfully.

Arbitrary detention

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2000/36], the Commission requested the Governments concerned to take account of the views of the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, to remedy the situation of persons arbitrarily deprived of their liberty and to pay attention to the Group's urgent appeals. It encouraged them to ensure that their legislation conformed with the relevant international standards and legal instruments and not to extend states of emergency beyond what was strictly required. The Secretary-General was asked to assist Governments, special rapporteurs and working groups to ensure promotion and observance of guarantees relating to states of emergency embodied in international instruments. The Commission decided to renew the Group's mandate for a three-year period, a decision endorsed by the Economic and Social Council on 28 July (decision 2000/263), and asked the Group to report in 2001.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Arbitrary Detention held its twenty-seventh (15-19 May), twenty-eighth (11-15 September) and twenty-ninth (22 November-1 December) sessions in 2000 in Geneva [E/CN.4/2001/14]. During the year, the Working Group transmitted 34 communications concerning 94 new cases of alleged arbitrary detention to 20 Governments, of which 9 provided information. Of the 34 individual alleged cases of arbitrary detention, 24 were based on information submitted to the Group by NGOs and 10 by private sources. In 2000, the Group adopted 39 opinions regarding 115 persons in 21 countries. A description of the cases transmitted and the contents of the Governments' replies, as well as the complete text of 28 of the opinions, were contained in a separate report [E/CN.4/2001/14/Add.1]. The Group transmitted 107 urgent actions concerning 499 individuals to 45 Governments and the Palestinian Authority, of which 70 were issued jointly by the Group with other thematic or country mandates of the Commission. In 29 cases, the Governments concerned informed the Group that they had taken measures to remedy the victims' situation.

The Group, having learned of cases in which persons involved in environmental protection or the defence of human rights had been sentenced for divulging "State secrets", recommended that Governments ensure that any legislation concerning national security was not extended to cover the defence and protection of the environment or human rights. Noting that conscientious objection gave rise to repeated prosecutions and renewed sentences of deprivation of liberty, the Group recommended that States that had not done so ensure that conscientious objector status was recognized and attributed; pending the adoption of such measures, when de facto objectors were prosecuted, such prosecutions should not give rise to more than one conviction, in order to prevent the judicial system from being used to force conscientious objectors to change their convictions (see also p. 687). Regarding extradition measures, the Group recommended that Governments, in domestic law, set out the maximum permissible period of detention pending extradition of an individual to the requesting State. It also recommended that the requesting State, upon conviction and while imposing sentence on the extradited individual, take into account the period of detention served pending extradition. Annexed to the report were gender statistics regarding cases in which the Group adopted an opinion.

Impunity

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to a 1999 Commission request [YUN 1999, p. 627], the Secretary-General summarized replies from Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to a request for information on steps they had taken to combat impunity for human rights violations [E/CN.4/2000/90].

Also in response to a 1999 Commission request [YUN 1999, p. 627], the Secretary-General, in January [E/CN.4/2000/91], summarized information received from Governments and NGOs on the final report of the Special Rapporteur on the question of the impunity of perpetrators of violations of economic, social and cultural rights [YUN 1997, p. 655]. Proposals to combat impunity included the adoption of an optional protocol to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 419], under which violations could be reported (see p. 610); the adoption of a declaration against violations of economic, social and cultural rights; and the reform of financial institutions, notably the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank.

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 2000/68], the Commission emphasized the importance of holding accountable perpetrators of violations of international human rights and humanitarian law and urged States to take action in accordance with due process of law. The Secretary-General was asked to seek the views of Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs on the appointment of an independent expert to examine the issue of impunity, with a view to a decision on the matter in 2001; to invite States to provide information on steps they had taken to combat impunity for human rights violations and on remedies available to the victims; and to collect the information and report thereon in 2001.

Subcommission action. On 18 August [res. 2000/24], the Subcommission, in a resolution on the role of universal or extraterritorial competence in preventing action against impunity, invited Governments to cooperate even when there was no treaty to facilitate dealing with proceedings initiated by victims acting either within the framework of universal competence as recognized in international law or under domestic law that had established an extraterritorial legal competence, in particular because of the nationality of the victim or of the perpetrator.

Independence of the judicial system

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In February, the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, Param Cumaraswamy (Malaysia), submitted a report covering his activities in 1999 [E/CN.4/2000/61].

The Special Rapporteur transmitted 26 communications to 26 Governments and 11 urgent appeals to 9 States. Replies to communications were received from 16 countries and to urgent appeals from 5 countries. In order to avoid duplication of work, the Special Rapporteur joined with other special rapporteurs and working groups to transmit 18 urgent appeals to 12 countries. The report summarized the communications and urgent appeals, as well as replies received from Governments. The Special Rapporteur noted an increase in responses from Governments and in the number of urgent appeals submitted jointly by him. He urged the Commission to consider providing a monitoring mechanism to implement the Declaration on the Right and Responsibilities of Individuals, Groups and Organs of Society to Promote and Protect Universally Recognized Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 53/144 [YUN 1998, p. 608] (see p. 604). He continued to be concerned over the possible proliferation of standards; unless standards were uniform and consistent there could be confusion. The Special Rapporteur called on Governments, national judiciaries, bar associations and NGOs to submit to him court judgements and legislation affecting the independence of the judiciary and the legal profession.

The Special Rapporteur visited South Africa (7-13 May) [E/CN.4/2001/65/Add.2] to examine the judicial system. He concluded that magistrates were not perceived to be independent, though there was no evidence of any interference in their adjudicative tasks. The Special Rapporteur welcomed the initiative of the Judicial Service Commission in collaborating with judges to draft legislation establishing a mechanism to deal with complaints against judges, as well as the agreement that there would be no punitive measures such as fines imposed on judges. While noting the negative attitude of some judges to the proposal for a unified judiciary, he welcomed the move towards an integrated legal profession. The minimum sentencing legislation, which impinged on international standards of judicial independence, was not as regimented in South Africa as that found in other jurisdictions. The appointment and subsequent extension of acting judges could adversely affect the independent character of tribunals. The Special Rapporteur regretted that many lawyers refused to provide legal aid services when the legal aid fees were reduced. He made recommendations regarding the independence of magistrates, the proposed complaints mechanism, minimum sentencing legislation, appointments of acting judges, the position of public prosecutors, legal aid, judicial training and continued legal education.

In Belarus (12-17 June) [E/CN.4/2001/65/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur examined the state of the administration of justice. He concluded that the manner in which executive power had been accumulated and concentrated in the President had resulted in authoritarian rule. Thus, the administration of justice, including the judiciary, the prosecutorial service and the legal profession, were undermined and not perceived as separate and independent. Executive control over the judiciary and repressive actions against independent judges appeared to produce indifference among many judges towards judicial independence. The Special Rapporteur expressed deep concern that the 1996 referendum on the Constitution had proceeded contrary to the rule of law and in violation of the independence of the judiciary. The procedure for appointing six of the Constitutional Court judges, which was within the sole discretion of the President, constituted a threat to the independence of the Court. The substantial number of inexperienced judges compounded the problems associated with a short initial tenure. In addition, the low salaries and the dependence of judges on the executive for promotions and the Presidential Administration compromised judges' ability to decide cases independently. The legal profession, including prosecutors, came under excessive executive control. Recommendations were made regarding the Constitution, the judiciary and the legal profession.

The Special Rapporteur's mission to Slovakia (27-29 November) [E/CN.4/2001/65/Add.3] was confined to the issue of whether the proposed removal by Parliament of the President of the Supreme Court, Stefan Harabin, at the behest of the Government, violated the constitutional, international and regional standards on judicial independence. The Special Rapporteur stated that the Government's allegations against Mr. Harabin, if proved, were sufficient misconduct for the removal of a judge from office; he added, however, that judges were entitled to due process of law if they were to be removed before the expiry of their term of office. Therefore, he was of the view that the Government's attempt to remove Mr. Harabin through the parliamentary process without due process violated international and regional standards to secure an independent judiciary. That action could be seen as politically motivated. The Government's haste in wanting to remove Mr. Harabin shortly before the coming into force of a constitutional amendment providing for an independent mechanism to appoint and remove judges further added to that perception.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2000/42], the Commission encouraged Governments that faced difficulties in guaranteeing the independence of judges and lawyers to consult and to consider the Special Rapporteur's services, for instance by inviting him to visit their country. The High Commissioner was asked to continue to provide technical assistance to train judges and lawyers and to associate the Special Rapporteur in the development of a manual on human rights training of judges and lawyers. The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for three years and asked him to report in 2001; the Secretary-General was asked to assist him.

The Commission's decision and its requests to the Special Rapporteur and the Secretary-General were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council on 28 July (decision 2000/264).

Juvenile justice

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1998 Commission request [YUN 1998, p. 666], the Secretary-General, in a January report [E/CN.4/2000/54], discussed practical measures for the implementation of human rights international standards in the administration of justice, particularly juvenile justice, including the role of UN technical assistance. He observed that the technical assistance of OHCHR, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the United Nations Centre for International Crime Prevention helped States implement international standards through organizing programmes that related to law reform, training of personnel and institutional support and by preventing juvenile delinquency. The coordination panel on technical advice and assistance in juvenile justice provided an important tool to assist the implementing agencies in coordinating assistance.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2000/39], the Commission underlined that raising awareness of the specific situation of children and juveniles in the administration of justice and providing training in that field were crucial in strengthening the implementation of relevant standards. The Secretary-General was asked to make available to the Commission in 2002 his reports on the administration of juvenile justice, as well as on the activities of the coordination panel on technical advice and assistance in juvenile justice, submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice. (See p. 673 for information on the imposition of the death penalty on juveniles.)

Capital punishment

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1999 Commission request [YUN 1999, p. 628], the Secretary-General, in March [E/2000/3 & Corr.1], submitted his sixth quinquennial report on capital punishment and implementation of the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, covering the period 1994-1998. The report drew on current criminological research and the comments of specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and States by means of a detailed questionnaire. Of the 45 countries that replied, 33 (73 per cent) were abolitionist. Nevertheless, only 39 per cent of all abolitionist countries replied. Of the 71 States that retained and enforced capital punishment at the end of 1999, only 6 (8.5 per cent) responded. Of the 38 de facto abolitionist countries, 6 (16 per cent) replied. More so than in the past, the Secretary-General relied on information derived from various other sources to ascertain the number of death sentences imposed and executions carried out during the period under review.

At the beginning of the quinquennial period, 56 countries and territories embraced total abolition of the death penalty; at the end, all but one of them remained abolitionist. In early 1994, 14 countries were abolitionist for ordinary offences only; five became abolitionist for all offences. Countries that were considered to be abolitionist de facto (they retained the death penalty for ordinary crimes but had not executed anyone in the last 10 years or more) numbered 30 at the beginning of 1994; by the end of 1998, two had become abolitionist for all offences, one had become abolitionist for ordinary offences and seven had resumed executions, thereby becoming retentionist. Thus, 20 of the 30 remained abolitionist de facto throughout the period. The number fell to 19 in 1999 when the Philippines resumed executions (in 2000, the Philippines declared a moratorium on executions [A/54/844]). From a variety of sources it was established that, at the beginning of 1994, 94 countries and territories retained the death penalty in their law and had enforced it. Of the 13 countries that were retentionist in 1994, all had become abolitionist and all but one for all crimes at the end of 1999; another 18 retentionist countries had become abolitionist de facto by the end of 1999. Thus, there were 63 countries and territories that did not change their death penalty status. However, six of them were believed not to have carried out executions between 1994 and 1999, leaving 55 retentionist countries that had carried out executions between 1994 and 1998. Over the period under review, figures available suggested that an estimated 23,000 persons were sentenced to death and some 13,500 judicially executed.

The report included information on the implementation of the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, adopted by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1984/50 [YUN 1984, p. 709].

The Secretary-General concluded that the pace of the abolitionist movement showed no sign of faltering, with 17 countries abolishing the death penalty between 1994 and 1998; four more did so in 1999.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report (decision 2000/289).

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 27 to 13, with 12 abstentions, the Commission, on 26 April [res. 2000/65], called on States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, contained in General Assembly resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 423], that had not done so to consider acceding to or ratifying the Second Optional Protocol thereto on the abolition of the death penalty, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 44/128 [YUN 1989, p. 484]. States that maintained the death penalty were called on to restrict the number of offences for which the death penalty might be imposed; to establish a moratorium on executions, with a view to completely abolishing the death penalty; and to make available to the public information on the imposition of the death penalty. States that had received an extradition request on a capital charge were asked to reserve the right to refuse extradition in the absence of assurances from the requesting State that capital punishment would not be carried out. The Secretary-General was asked to submit in 2001 a supplement to his quinquennial report.

Communication. On 26 April [E/CN.4/2000/162], Indonesia, also on behalf of 50 other States, dissociated itself from the Commission's resolution.

Juveniles

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General's quinquennial report on capital punishment and implementation of the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty [E/2000/3 & Corr.1] (see p. 672) stated that since 1994 several countries had brought themselves into line with the safeguard pertaining to persons under 18 years of age. Only one respondent country had a provision for imposing death sentences on persons of that age group, but had not imposed the sentence during the period of the survey.

Note by Secretariat. A June note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/6], noting a 1999 Subcommission resolution [YUN 1999, p. 628] requesting information on executions of juveniles carried out between the adoption of the resolution and the start of the Subcommission's 2000 session, referred to the Secretary-General's sixth quinquennial report on capital punishment (see p. 672) and stated that the revised sixth survey of Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs would include information on the execution of juveniles. A revised version of the report would be available by January 2001.

Subcommission action. On 17 August [res. 2000/17], the Subcommission, condemning the imposition and execution of the death penalty on those aged under 18 at the time of the offence, called on States that retained the death penalty for juvenile offenders to abolish it. It asked the Commission to reaffirm its resolution 2000/65 (see p. 672).

Forensic science

Report of OHCHR. In response to a 1998 Commission request [YUN 1998, p. 667], OHCHR, in a report on human rights and forensic science [E/CN.4/2000/57], presented a revised version of the cooperation service agreement regulating the use of forensic experts provided by either a Member State or an NGO. The report also contained the special service agreement on the obligations of the individual forensic expert working as a consultant to the United Nations. OHCHR noted that special rapporteurs continued to use or refer to the need for forensic specialists.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2000/32], the Commission recommended that the Secretary-General establish procedures to evaluate the use of forensic expertise. It invited OHCHR and the UN Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division to consider revising the Manual on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extralegal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions [Sales No. E.91.IV.1], on standard procedures for post-mortem examinations. The Commission recommended that OHCHR encourage forensic experts to produce additional manuals concerned with examinations of living persons, and welcomed the Office's initiative to publish a manual on investigation and documentation of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. Another recommendation called for the Office to provide training in forensic activities relating to victims of human rights violations. OHCHR was asked to update the list of experts with biographical data and areas of expertise and to report in 2002.

Right to democracy

Report of High Commissioner. In her annual report to the Commission [E/CN.4/2000/12/Add.1], the High Commissioner, in February, discussed progress on the right to democracy, as requested in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 630].

The High Commissioner stated that the promotion of the right to democracy was infused throughout the work of OHCHR. OHCHR continued to support new and restored democracies through the human rights machinery, particularly the Human Rights Committee (see p. 609) and the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (see p. 611), and support for the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers (see p. 670), the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions (see p. 676) and the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention (see p. 669). The Office continued its programme of promoting and developing national human rights institutions (see p. 636). OHCHR technical cooperation programmes included modules covering the promotion of the right to democracy, and field representatives conducted activities related to its promotion.

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 45 to none, with 8 abstentions, the Commission, on 25 April [res. 2000/47], called on States to consolidate democracy through the promotion of pluralism and the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms; to strengthen the rule of law; to develop and maintain an electoral system that provided for genuine and periodic elections; to create and improve the legal system and mechanisms enabling the wide participation of civil society in the development of democracy; to strengthen democracy through good governance and promoting sustainable development; and to enhance social cohesion and solidarity. OHCHR and Commission and Subcommission mechanisms were asked to pay attention to those elements of democratic governance. The High Commissioner was asked to reflect progress on implementation of the Commission's resolution in her 2001 report.

Subcommission action. On 18 August [dec. 2000/116], the Subcommission, taking note of the Commission's resolution (see p. 673), entrusted Manuel Rodríguez-Cuadros (Peru) with preparing a working paper on the measures provided in international human rights instruments for the promotion and consolidation of democracy.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 55/96 by recorded vote (157-0-16) [agenda item 114 (b)].

Extralegal executions

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In January [E/CN.4/2000/3 & Add.1], the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, Asma Jahangir (Pakistan), updated activities since the submission of her last report [YUN 1999, p. 633]. Between 1 November 1998 and 5 December 1999, the Special Rapporteur transmitted communications containing allegations regarding the violation of the right to life of more than 900 individuals to 39 Governments and the Palestinian Authority, as well as urgent appeals regarding 213 individuals and specific groups of persons to prevent imminent loss of life. The report summarized the cases transmitted to Governments and the replies received. The Special Rapporteur concluded that, during the period under review, extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions did not decrease. There were more reports of large-scale indiscriminate killings of women, children or elderly persons by Government-controlled security forces, paramilitary groups or non-State actors. She recommended a series of actions to Governments relating to capital punishment, death threats, deaths in custody, excessive use of force by law enforcement officials, violations of the right to life during armed conflict, the imminent expulsion of persons to countries where their lives were in danger, genocide, impunity, children in armed conflict, traditional practices regarding the right to life ("honour killings") and the right to life and sexual orientation.

Although the Special Rapporteur's visit to Nepal (5-14 February) [E/CN.4/2001/9/Add.2] was prompted by continuing reports of alleged extrajudicial killings of unarmed civilians in the context of the conflict between armed groups of the Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist) and the Nepal police, the allegations were not limited to areas affected by internal unrest. The Special Rapporteur expressed deep concern at reports that police officers had taken the law into their own hands and summarily executed suspects, under the pretext that they did not trust the judiciary to convict them. It appeared that the judiciary often found the investigative work of the police wanting, thus leaving judges unable to convict in cases brought before them. Those weaknesses in the police and the judiciary had resulted in gross injustices and in impunity. Among other things, she recommended establishing strong, independent and credible mechanisms to investigate and prosecute alleged human rights abuses attributed to the police and other State agents; upgrading hospital and forensic facilities to carry out post-mortems; government action to curb impunity; support to Nepal by the international community; training for the police and the judiciary; and maintaining the police and security forces under strict civilian control in order to ensure transparency and accountability.

In August [A/55/288], the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's interim report, as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 53/147 [YUN 1998, p. 672], covering activities from her appointment in 1998 to 1 July 2000. She regretted that many Governments had failed to respond to her urgent appeals requesting information on alleged violations of the right to life. She also regretted that most of her earlier recommendations remained valid in the absence of concrete action by Governments to implement them. The Special Rapporteur concluded that the global situation regarding respect for the right to life was bleak, found it unacceptable that some Governments insisted on defending or ignoring extrajudicial killings committed by their security forces, especially when confronted with armed opposition groups, and was concerned over the growing pessimism in countries where human rights violations occurred regularly and with impunity. She recommended establishing effective early warning and conflict prevention mechanisms, an independent judiciary and a moratorium on executions in countries that retained the death penalty, with a view to completely abolishing it.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2000/31], the Commission, strongly condemning extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, demanded that Governments end the phenomenon in all its forms. The Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to continue examining situations of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and report annually; respond to information she received; enhance her dialogue with Governments and follow up on her recommendations after country visits; continue to pay special attention to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions of children and to related allegations concerning peaceful demonstrators or minorities; continue monitoring the implementation of international standards on safeguards and restrictions relating to capital punishment; and apply a gender perspective in her work. Governments were urged to assist the Special Rapporteur and to respond to her communications. The Secretary-General was asked to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standard of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 9, 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (see p. 609) appeared not to be respected and to continue to ensure that personnel specialized in human rights and humanitarian law issues formed part of UN missions, where appropriate, in order to deal with serious human rights violations, such as extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 55/111 without vote [agenda item 114 (b)].

Extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which guarantees the right to life, liberty and security of person, and the relevant provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Recalling also its resolutions 47/136 of 18 December 1992, 51/92 of 12 December 1996 and 53/147 of 9 December 1998, as well as Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1992/72 of 5 March 1992 and 1998/68 of 21 April 1998, and taking note of Commission resolution 2000/31 of 20 April 2000,

Recalling further Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/50 of 25 May 1984 and the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty annexed thereto and Council resolution 1989/64 of 24 May 1989 on their implementation, as well as the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 40/34 of 29 November 1985,

Deeply alarmed at the persistence, on a large scale, of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions in all parts of the world,

Dismayed that in a number of countries impunity, the negation of justice, continues to prevail and often remains the main cause of the continuing occurrence of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions in those countries,

Recognizing the contribution of the establishment of the International Criminal Court with regard to ensuring effective prosecution concerning executions in serious violation of article 3 common to the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, without previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court affording all judicial guarantees that are generally recognized as indispensable,

Convinced of the need for effective action to combat and eliminate the abhorrent practice of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, which represent a flagrant violation of the fundamental right to life,

1. Strongly condemns once again all the extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions that continue to take place throughout the world;

2. Notes that impunity continues to be a major cause of the perpetuation of violations of human rights, including extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions;

3. Acknowledges the historic significance of the adoption of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, and the fact that a significant number of States have already signed and/or ratified the Statute, and calls upon all States to consider signing and ratifying the Statute;

4. Demands that all Governments ensure that the practice of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions be brought to an end and that they take effective action to combat and eliminate the phenomenon in all its forms;

5. Takes note of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, including the attention given therein to various aspects and situations involving violations of the right to life by extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions;

6. Reiterates the obligation of all Governments to conduct exhaustive and impartial investigations into all suspected cases of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, to identify and bring to justice those responsible, while ensuring the right of every person to a fair and public hearing by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal established by law, to grant adequate compensation to the victims or their families and to adopt all necessary measures, including legal and judicial measures, in order to bring an end to impunity, to prevent the recurrence of such executions;

7. Calls upon Governments concerned to investigate promptly and thoroughly cases in various parts of the world of killings committed in the name of passion or in the name of honour, persons killed for reasons related to their peaceful activities as human rights defenders or as journalists, racially motivated violence leading to the death of the victim as well as other persons whose right to life has been violated, and to bring those responsible to justice before an independent and impartial judiciary, and to ensure that such killings are neither condoned nor sanctioned by government officials or personnel;

8. Urges Governments to undertake all necessary and possible measures to prevent loss of life, in particular that of children, during public demonstrations, internal and communal violence, civil unrest and public emergencies or armed conflict, and to ensure that the police and security forces receive thorough training in human rights matters, in particular with regard to restrictions on the use of force and firearms in the discharge of their functions;

9. Stresses the importance for States to take effective measures to end impunity with regard to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, inter alia, through the adoption of preventive measures, and calls upon Governments to ensure that such measures are included in post-conflict peace-building efforts;

10. Encourages the Special Rapporteur to continue, within the framework of her mandate, to collect information from all concerned and to seek the views and comments of Governments so as to be able to respond effectively to reliable information that comes before her and to follow up communications and country visits;

11. Reaffirms Economic and Social Council decision 1998/265 of 30 July 1998, in which the Council endorsed the decision of the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 1998/68, to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for three years;

12. Notes the important role the Special Rapporteur has played in the elimination of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions;

13. Also notes that the Commission, in its resolution 2000/31, requested the Special Rapporteur, in carrying out her mandate:

(a) To continue to examine situations of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and to submit her findings on an annual basis, together with conclusions and recommendations, to the Commission, as well as such other reports as the Special Rapporteur deems necessary in order to keep the Commission informed about serious situations of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions that warrant its immediate attention;

(b) To respond effectively to information that comes before her, in particular when an extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary execution is imminent or seriously threatened or when such an execution has occurred;

(c) To enhance further her dialogue with Governments, as well as to follow up on recommendations made in reports after visits to particular countries;

(d) To continue to pay special attention to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions of children and to allegations concerning violations of the right to life in the context of violence against participants in demonstrations and other peaceful public manifestations or against persons belonging to minorities;

(e) To pay special attention to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions where the victims are individuals carrying out peaceful activities in defence of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

(f) To continue monitoring the implementation of existing international standards on safeguards and restrictions relating to the imposition of capital punishment, bearing in mind the comments made by the Human Rights Committee in its interpretation of article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as well as the Second Optional Protocol thereto;

(g) To apply a gender perspective in her work;

14. Strongly urges all Governments, in particular those that have not yet done so, to respond without undue delay to the communications and requests for information transmitted to them by the Special Rapporteur, and urges them and all others concerned to cooperate with and assist the Special Rapporteur so that she may carry out her mandate effectively, including, where appropriate, by issuing invitations to the Special Rapporteur when she so requests;

15. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments that have invited the Special Rapporteur to visit their countries, asks them to examine carefully the recommendations made by the Special Rapporteur and invites them to report to the Special Rapporteur on the actions taken on those recommendations, and requests other Governments to cooperate in a similar way;

16. Encourages Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations to organize training programmes and to support projects with a view to training or educating military forces, law enforcement officers and government officials, as well as members of United Nations peacekeeping or observer missions, in human rights and humanitarian law issues connected with their work, and appeals to the international community to support endeavours to that end;

17. Urges the Special Rapporteur to continue to bring to the attention of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights such situations of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions as are of particularly serious concern to her or where early action might prevent further deterioration;

18. Welcomes the cooperation established between the Special Rapporteur and other United Nations mechanisms and procedures relating to human rights, as well as with medical and forensic experts, and encourages the Special Rapporteur to continue efforts in that regard;

19. Calls upon the Governments of all States in which the death penalty has not been abolished to comply with their obligations under relevant provisions of international human rights instruments, keeping in mind the safeguards and guarantees referred to in Economic and Social Council resolutions 1984/50 and 1989/64;

20. Again requests the Secretary-General to continue to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standard of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 9, 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights appears not to have been respected;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with an adequate and stable level of human, financial and material resources to enable her to carry out her mandate effectively, including through country visits;

22. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue, in close collaboration with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in conformity with the High Commissioner's mandate established by the General Assembly in its resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993, to ensure that personnel specialized in human rights and humanitarian law issues form part of United Nations missions, where appropriate, in order to deal with serious violations of human rights, such as extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions;

23. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the situation worldwide in regard to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and her recommendations for more effective action to combat that phenomenon.

Disappearance of persons

Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2000/37], the Commission, deeply concerned by the increase in enforced or involuntary disappearances and by reports concerning harassment, ill-treatment and intimidation of witnesses of disappearances or relatives of persons who had disappeared, urged Governments to cooperate with the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances. The Commission invited States to provide the Group with information on such disappearances and on giving effect to the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 47/133 [YUN 1992, p. 744]. The Group was asked to report in 2001. The Secretary-General was asked to inform the Group and the Commission of action he had taken to promote the Declaration. He was also requested to disseminate the draft international convention on the protection of all persons from enforced disappearance [YUN 1998, p. 662] and to ask States, international organizations and NGOs to submit their views on the draft and on whether a working group should consider it.

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances held three sessions in 2000: its sixtieth in New York (24-27 April) and its sixty-first and sixty-second in Geneva (21-25 August and 15-24 November) [E/CN.4/2001/68]. In addition to its original mandate, which was to act as a channel of communication between families of disappeared persons and Governments concerned, with a view to ensuring that sufficiently documented individual cases were investigated, the Working Group provided assistance in the implementation by States of the 1992 Declaration and of the existing international rules. However, due to limitations in its resources and reporting requirements, the Group's report lacked some important information.

Cases under active consideration numbered 45,998 and countries with outstanding cases of alleged disappearance totalled 73. During the period under review, up to 24 November, the last day of the sixty-second session, the Group transmitted 487 new cases of disappearance to 29 countries, 120 of which allegedly occurred in 2000. The Group regretted that of the 24 countries with unclarified cases, the Governments of 17 countries did not communicate with the Group. The Group sent urgent action appeals to 20 Governments in respect of 95 cases.

The Group adopted general comments on the 1992 Declaration, as well as comments on the draft international convention on the protection of all persons from enforced disappearance. It stressed that impunity was one of the main causes of enforced disappearance and one of the major obstacles to clarifying past cases. In accordance with the Declaration, it was crucial that Governments take measures to prevent the occurrence of future disappearances. The Group stressed the need to continue to receive cooperation from concerned NGOs, and called on Governments to guarantee protection to them.

The report contained a separate opinion by a member of the Group objecting to the application of a 32-page limit on its report, as requested in General Assembly resolution 47/202 B [YUN 1992, p. 1083], as the report did not reflect the situation worldwide of enforced disappearances or the Group's efforts to clarify the fate of some 50,000 disappeared persons.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/150 [YUN 1998, p. 679], the Secretary-General, in August [A/55/289], described activities to disseminate the 1992 Declaration. The United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI) had distributed the text through UN information centres, to UN peace-keeping offices and to the specialized agencies, and had made it available to the general public and educational institutes, upon request. It was also available on the UN web site (www.un.org). DPI had also prepared background press releases and would produce media information packets and a background brochure on enforced disappearances. The Declaration had also been distributed by OHCHR field offices.

Subcommission action. On 17 August [res. 2000/18], the Subcommission recommended that the Commission establish an intersessional working group to consider the draft international convention on the protection of all persons from enforced disappearance, and urged the Commission to give priority to the draft convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 55/103 without vote [agenda item 114 (b)].

Question of enforced or involuntary disappearances

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and the other relevant international human rights instruments,

Recalling its resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978 concerning disappeared persons and its previous resolutions on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances, in particular resolution 53/150 of 9 December 1998,

Recalling also its resolution 47/133 of 18 December 1992 proclaiming the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance as a body of principles for all States,

Expressing concern that, according to the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances of the Commission on Human Rights, the practice of a number of States can run counter to the Declaration,

Deeply concerned, in particular, by the intensification of enforced disappearances in various regions of the world and by the growing number of reports concerning the harassment, ill-treatment and intimidation of witnesses of disappearances or relatives of persons who have disappeared,

Emphasizing that impunity with regard to enforced disappearances contributes to the perpetuation of this phenomenon and constitutes one of the obstacles to the elucidation of its manifestations,

Taking note with interest of the initiatives taken at the national and international levels in order to end impunity,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/37 of 20 April 2000,

Taking note of the transmission by the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights to the Commission on Human Rights of a draft international convention on the protection of all persons from forced disappearance,

Convinced that further efforts are needed to promote wider awareness of and respect for the Declaration, and taking note in this regard of the report of the Secretary-General on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances,

1. Reaffirms that any act of enforced disappearance is an offence to human dignity and a grave and flagrant violation of the human rights and fundamental freedoms proclaimed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and reaffirmed and developed in other international instruments in this field, as well as a violation of the rules of international law;

2. Urges all Governments to take appropriate legislative or other steps to prevent and suppress the practice of enforced disappearances, in keeping with the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, and to take action to that end at the national and regional levels and in cooperation with the United Nations, including through the provision of technical assistance;

3. Calls upon Governments to take steps to ensure that, when a state of emergency is introduced, the protection of human rights is ensured, in particular as regards the prevention of enforced disappearances;

4. Reminds Governments that impunity with regard to enforced disappearances contributes to the perpetuation of this phenomenon and constitutes one of the obstacles to the elucidation of its manifestations, and in this respect also reminds them of the need to ensure that their competent authorities conduct prompt and impartial inquiries in all circumstances in which there is a reason to believe that an enforced disappearance has occurred in territory under their jurisdiction, and that, if allegations are confirmed, perpetrators should be prosecuted;

5. Once again urges the Governments concerned to take steps to protect the families of disappeared persons against any intimidation or ill-treatment to which they may be subjected;

6. Encourages States, as some have already done, to provide concrete information on measures taken to give effect to the Declaration, as well as obstacles encountered;

7. Requests all States to consider the possibility of disseminating the text of the Declaration in their respective national languages and to facilitate its dissemination in local languages;

8. Notes the action taken by non-governmental organizations to encourage implementation of the Declaration, and invites them to continue to facilitate its dissemination and to contribute to the work of the Subcommittee on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights;

9. Requests the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances of the Commission on Human Rights, in the continued exercise of its mandate, to take into account the provisions of the Declaration and to modify its working methods, if necessary;

10. Recalls the importance of the Working Group, the primary role of which is, as described in its reports, to act as a channel of communication between the families of disappeared persons and the Governments concerned, with a view to ensuring that sufficiently documented and clearly identified individual cases are investigated, and to ascertain whether such information falls under its mandate and contains the required elements, and invites the Group to continue to seek the views and comments of all concerned, including Member States, in preparing its reports;

11. Invites the Working Group to identify obstacles to the realization of the provisions of the Declaration, to recommend ways of overcoming those obstacles and, in this regard, to continue a dialogue with Governments and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

12. Encourages the Working Group to continue to consider the question of impunity, in the light of the relevant provisions of the Declaration and of the final reports submitted by the special rapporteurs appointed by the Subcommittee;

13. Requests the Working Group to pay the utmost attention to cases of children subjected to enforced disappearance and children of disappeared persons and to cooperate closely with the Governments concerned to search for and identify those children;

14. Appeals to the Governments concerned, in particular those which have not yet replied to the communications transmitted by the Working Group, to cooperate fully with it and, in particular, to reply promptly to its requests for information so that, while respecting its working methods based on discretion, it may perform its strictly humanitarian role;

15. Encourages the Governments concerned to give serious consideration to inviting the Working Group to visit their countries so as to enable the Group to fulfil its mandate even more effectively;

16. Expresses its profound thanks to the many Governments that have cooperated with the Working Group and replied to its requests for information and to the Governments that have invited the Group to visit their countries, requests them to give all necessary attention to the recommendations of the Group, and invites them to inform the Group of any action they take on those recommendations;

17. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to continue to study this question as a matter of priority and to take any steps it may deem necessary to the pursuit of the task of the Working Group and to the follow-up to its recommendations when it considers the report to be submitted by the Group to the Commission at its fifty-seventh session;

18. Renews its requests to the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Working Group with all of the facilities it requires to perform its functions, especially for carrying out missions and following them up;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to keep it informed of the steps he takes to secure the widespread dissemination and promotion of the Declaration;

20. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to it at its fifty-seventh session a report on the steps taken to implement the present resolution;

21. Decides to consider the question of enforced disappearances, and in particular the implementation of the Declaration, at its fifty-seventh session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Torture and cruel treatment

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In February [E/CN.4/2000/9], the Special Rapporteur on torture, Sir Nigel S. Rodley (United Kingdom), summarized his 1999 activities. He had sent 60 letters to 56 Governments on behalf of some 700 individuals and 32 groups involving about 3,000 persons. He also transmitted 144 urgent appeals to 51 countries on behalf of some 430 individuals (45 known to be minors and 35 known to be women), as well as 15 groups involving about 1,500 persons with regard to whom fears had been expressed that they might be subjected to torture. In addition, 26 Governments provided the Special Rapporteur with replies on 155 cases, whereas 24 did so regarding some 350 cases submitted in previous years. The Special Rapporteur provided brief summaries of general allegations and individual cases, as well as of the urgent appeals and government replies, and presented his observations where applicable. An addendum to the report contained an additional 20 replies received from Governments [E/CN.4/2000/9/Add.5].

In another addendum [E/CN.4/2000/9/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur reported on follow-up to his recommendations described in communications received from Governments between 6 December 1997 and 15 December 1999 regarding his visits to Colombia [YUN 1994, p. 1022], Chile [YUN 1995, p. 756], Venezuela [YUN 1996, p. 640] and Mexico [YUN 1997, p. 666].

The Special Rapporteur visited Brazil (20 August–12 September) [E/CN.4/2001/66/Add.2] to assess the extent of the practice of torture. He reported that torture and similar ill-treatment were widespread and systematic and found at all phases of detention. It mainly happened to poor, black common criminals involved in petty crime or small-scale drug distribution, and occurred in police stations and custodial institutions. The purposes ranged from obtaining information and confessions to financial extortion. The Special Rapporteur described conditions of detention in many places as subhuman. A culture of brutality and corruption was widespread, and the poor, usually black or mulatto or, in rural areas, indigenous, received the worst treatment. The Special Rapporteur observed that the 1997 Torture Law, which characterized torture as a serious crime, was virtually ignored. Free legal assistance was illusory for most of the 85 per cent of those who needed it, due to the limited number of public defenders. Some of the recommendations made to Brazil by the Special Rapporteur related to the abuse by police of the power of arrest, access to detainees by family members, detainees' rights to consult privately with a lawyer and the provision of free legal advice to the poor, the introduction of video- and audiotaping of proceedings in police interrogation rooms, unifying the police under civilian authority and civilian justice, installing a monitoring presence in all places of detention and training for police, detention personnel, public prosecutors and others involved in law enforcement. He urged the Government to consider inviting the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions to visit the country.

The Special Rapporteur visited Azerbaijan (7-15 May) [E/CN.4/2001/66/Add.1] to assess the situation regarding torture and ill-treatment. Based on testimony received, he concluded that the practice was widespread. He expressed concern that a person could be transferred from a remand centre back to police custody, albeit on the order of a prosecutor, thus enhancing the risk and fear of ill-treatment. Ill-treatment had been facilitated by the power of prosecutors to order detention in temporary detention facilities for up to 30 days. The Special Rapporteur recommended investigation of allegations of torture and ill-treatment by a body capable of prosecuting perpetrators; regular inspections of places of detention by prosecutors; a system of compensation for victims; public awareness campaigns on basic human rights; and improved legal aid services.

A note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/2001/116] contained comments submitted by Cameroon regarding the Special Rapporteur's visit to the country in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 636]. The note also drew attention to a statement by Cameroon before the Commission on 5 April [E/CN.4/2000/SR.27], following the Special Rapporteur's presentation of the report.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2000/43], the Commission, condemning all forms of torture as described in the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, contained in General Assembly resolution 39/46 [YUN 1984, p. 813] (see p. 613), called on Governments to prohibit the practice and urged them to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority. The Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to consider including information in his report on the follow-up by Governments to his recommendations, visits and communications and to submit an interim report (see below) to the Assembly in 2000 and a full report to the Commission in 2001.

The Economic and Social Council on 28 July approved the Commission's request to the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim and a full report (decision 2000/265).

Interim report. In August [A/55/290], the Secretary-General transmitted an interim report of the Special Rapporteur, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/156 [YUN 1999, p. 638]. The report covered issues of special concern to the Special Rapporteur, including gender-specific forms of torture, to which women were subjected, including rape, sexual abuse and harassment, virginity testing, forced abortion or forced miscarriage; children victims of torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; torture and human rights defenders; reparation for victims; and torture and poverty.

Voluntary Fund for torture victims

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2000/43], the Commission appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute annually to the Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture. It called on the Fund's Board of Trustees to present in 2001 an updated assessment of the global need for funding of rehabilitation services for torture victims and of lessons learned from the Fund's activities. The Secretary-General was asked to continue to include the Fund among the programmes receiving donations at the annual UN Pledging Conference for Development Activities, and to ensure adequate staffing and technical facilities for the UN bodies dealing with torture.

Reports of Secretary-General. In his annual report on the status of the Fund, submitted in July [A/55/178], the Secretary-General stated that contributions received between 17 May 1999 and 13 July 2000 totalled $7,567,853 from 34 countries. Contributions from two private individuals and the staff of the United Nations Office at Geneva totalled $13,567.

The Board of Trustees held its nineteenth session in Geneva (15-26 May). The total then available for grants to assist victims of torture amounted to some $7 million, of which $100,000 was earmarked for urgent assistance to victims in countries lacking appropriate treatment facilities and to assist victims of amputation and mutilation coming from Sierra Leone. A second category of grants, totalling $400,000, was set aside for organizations that might face financial difficulties prior to the Board's next session in 2001. During the year, $10.1 million was requested for 188 projects. Annexed to the report was a declaration on the International Day in Support of Victims of Torture, 26 June 2000, issued by the Committee against Torture, the Fund's Board of Trustees, the Special Rapporteur on torture and the High Commissioner.

On 4 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report (decision 55/420).

In a later report [E/CN.4/2001/59 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General stated that an additional $180,835 was received between 15 May and 15 December 2000 for allocation by the Board in 2001.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.1], adopted resolution 55/89 without vote [agenda item 114 (a)].

Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

The General Assembly,

Recalling article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and its resolution 39/46 of 10 December 1984, by which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, and all its subsequent relevant resolutions,

Recalling that freedom from torture is a right that must be protected under all circumstances, including in times of internal or international disturbance or armed conflict,

Recalling also that the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, firmly declared that efforts to eradicate torture should, first and foremost, be concentrated on prevention and called for the early adoption of an optional protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, which is intended to establish a preventive system of regular visits to places of detention, ence on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, in particular the section relating to freedom from torture, in which it is stated that States should abrogate legislation leading to impunity for those responsible for grave violations of human rights, such as torture, and prosecute such violations, thereby providing a firm basis for the rule of law,

Recalling its resolution 36/151 of 16 December 1981, in which it noted with deep concern that acts of torture took place in various countries, recognized the need to provide assistance to the victims in a purely humanitarian spirit and established the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture,

ANNEX

Principles on the Effective Investigation and Documentation of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment

1. The purposes of effective investigation and documentation of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (hereinafter "torture or other ill-treatment") include the following:

(a) Clarification of the facts and establishment and acknowledgement of individual and State responsibility for victims and their families;

(b) Identification of measures needed to prevent recurrence;

(c) Facilitation of prosecution and/or, as appropriate, disciplinary sanctions for those indicated by the investigation as being responsible and demonstration of the need for full reparation and redress from the State, including fair and adequate financial compensation and provision of the means for medical care and rehabilitation.

2. States shall ensure that complaints and reports of torture or ill-treatment are promptly and effectively investigated. Even in the absence of an express complaint, an investigation shall be undertaken if there are other indications that torture or ill-treatment might have occurred. The investigators, who shall be independent of the suspected perpetrators and the agency they serve, shall be competent and impartial. They shall have access to, or be empowered to commission investigations by, impartial medical or other experts. The methods used to carry out such investigations shall meet the highest professional standards and the findings shall be made public.

3. (a) The investigative authority shall have the power and obligation to obtain all the information necessary to the inquiry. The persons conducting the investigation shall have at their disposal all the necessary budgetary and technical resources for effective investigation. They shall also have the authority to oblige all those acting in an official capacity allegedly involved in torture or ill-treatment to appear and testify. The same shall apply to any witness. To this end, the investigative authority shall be entitled to issue summonses to witnesses, including any officials allegedly involved, and to demand the production of evidence.

(b) Alleged victims of torture or ill-treatment, witnesses, those conducting the investigation and their families shall be protected from violence, threats of violence or any other form of intimidation that may arise pursuant to the investigation. Those potentially implicated in torture or ill-treatment shall be removed from any position of control or power, whether direct or indirect, over complainants, witnesses and their families, as well as those conducting the investigation.

4. Alleged victims of torture or ill-treatment and their legal representatives shall be informed of, and have access to, any hearing, as well as to all information relevant to the investigation, and shall be entitled to present other evidence.

5. (a) In cases in which the established investigative procedures are inadequate because of insufficient expertise or suspected bias, or because of the apparent existence of a pattern of abuse or for other substantial reasons, States shall ensure that investigations are undertaken through an independent commission of inquiry or similar procedure. Members of such a commission shall be chosen for their recognized impartiality, competence and independence as individuals. In particular, they shall be independent of any suspected perpetrators and the institutions or agencies they may serve. The commission shall have the authority to obtain all information necessary to the inquiry and shall conduct the inquiry as provided for under these Principles.

(b) A written report, made within a reasonable time, shall include the scope of the inquiry, procedures and methods used to evaluate evidence as well as conclusions and recommendations based on findings of fact and on applicable law. Upon completion, the report shall be made public. It shall also describe in detail specific events that were found to have occurred and the evidence upon which such findings were based and list the names of witnesses who testified, with the exception of those whose identities have been withheld for their own protection. The State shall, within a reasonable period of time, reply to the report of the investigation and, as appropriate, indicate steps to be taken in response.

6. (a) Medical experts involved in the investigation of torture or ill-treatment shall behave at all times in conformity with the highest ethical standards and, in particular, shall obtain informed consent before any examination is undertaken. The examination must conform to established standards of medical practice.

In particular, examinations shall be conducted in private under the control of the medical expert and outside the presence of security agents and other government officials.

(b) The medical expert shall promptly prepare an accurate written report, which shall include at least the following:

- (i) Circumstances of the interview: name of the subject and name and affiliation of those present at the examination; exact time and date; location, nature and address of the institution (including, where appropriate, the room) where the examination is being conducted (e.g., detention centre, clinic or house); circumstances of the subject at the time of the examination (e.g., nature of any restraints on arrival or during the examination, presence of security forces during the examination, demeanour of those accompanying the prisoner or threatening statements to the examiner); and any other relevant factors;
- (ii) History: detailed record of the subject's story as given during the interview, including alleged methods of torture or ill-treatment, times when torture or ill-treatment is alleged to have occurred and all complaints of physical and psychological symptoms;
- (iii) Physical and psychological examination: record of all physical and psychological findings on clinical examination, including appropriate diagnostic tests and, where possible, colour photographs of all injuries;
- (iv) Opinion: interpretation as to the probable relationship of the physical and psychological findings to possible torture or ill-treatment. A recommendation for any necessary medical and psychological treatment and/or further examination shall be given;
- (v) Authorship: the report shall clearly identify those carrying out the examination and shall be signed.

(c) The report shall be confidential and communicated to the subject or his or her nominated representative. The views of the subject and his or her representative about the examination process shall be solicited and recorded in the report. It shall also be provided in writing, where appropriate, to the authority responsible for investigating the allegation of torture or ill-treatment. It is the responsibility of the State to ensure that it is delivered securely to these persons. The report shall not be made available to any other person, except with the consent of the subject or on the authorization of a court empowered to enforce such a transfer.

*Under certain circumstances, professional ethics may require information to be kept confidential. These requirements should be respected.

Freedom of opinion and expression

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In January [E/CN.4/2000/63], the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, Abid Hussain (India), described his 1999 activities and summarized the texts of communications he had sent to 41 States and the Palestinian Authority and the replies thereto.

While noting a growing tide in favour of human rights, the Special Rapporteur also remarked that the rights to freedom of opinion, expression and information were violated, almost as a matter of routine, in States with widely different political systems and institutional frameworks for governance. He encouraged States that had not ratified the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, pp. 419 & 423], to do so. Governments were urged to ensure that press offences were not punishable by imprisonment, except in cases involving racist or discriminatory comments or calls to violence. They were also urged to remove formal and cultural obstacles to women's exercise of the right to freedom of expression, including the right to receive information. States were encouraged to ensure the full realization of the right to access to information.

The Special Rapporteur visited Albania (29 May–2 June) [E/CN.4/2001/64/Add.1], where he observed that, although freedom of opinion and expression was widely apparent, the country still suffered from a general lack of a rights-oriented culture owing to many years of totalitarian rule and political isolation. True respect for the right required a change in social and cultural attitudes and practices, in addition to legislative reforms. A recently appointed Ombudsman should help to create a culture of democracy and human rights. Widespread criticism of the misuse of freedom by journalists and the unreliability of their work were described to the Special Rapporteur. Freedom of the media had been hindered to some extent by the restrictions on independent or opposition publications that resulted from financial and political pressure. The Special Rapporteur welcomed measures taken to promote and guarantee the right to freedom of opinion and expression of minorities, and noted that additional efforts were needed to make the media more sensitive to their needs. He recommended that the Government provide the ombudsman institution with adequate resources, invite the Special Rapporteurs on the independence of judges and lawyers and on violence against women to visit the country, amend the defamation provisions of the Penal Code so that the offence was no longer punishable by imprisonment and redefine the concept of a press offence, ensure the independence of the National Council for Radio and Television and disseminate basic human rights instruments and information.

Albania, in its comments [E/CN.4/2001/138] on issues raised in the Special Rapporteur's report, emphasized that some of the recommendations had nothing to do with the current situation in the country.

In July [E/CN.4/2001/4], commenting on the Special Rapporteur's report on his visit to the country [YUN 1999, p. 641], Tunisia stated that the report did not reflect the true status of freedom of opinion and expression there, nor did it take into account the countless achievements resulting from reforms since the Constitution was amended in 1987.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2000/38], the Commission expressed concern at the detention, extrajudicial killing, persecution, harassment, threats, violence and discrimination directed at persons who exercised the right to freedom of opinion and expression and the rights to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, peaceful assembly and association and the right to take part in public affairs. It appealed to States to ensure respect and support for the rights of all persons who exercised those rights; to ensure non-discrimination against them; to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur; and to create an environment to promote and protect freedom of opinion and expression. The Special Rapporteur was asked to draw the attention of the High Commissioner to those situations which were of serious concern; in cooperation with the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, to pay particular attention to the situation of women and incidents of discrimination based on sex; to consider approaches taken to access information with a view to sharing best practices; to provide his views on the advantages and challenges of new information technologies; and to seek the views of Governments and others concerned. The Special Rapporteur was asked to report in 2001.

Conscientious objection

Report of Secretary-General. The Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/2000/55] summarizing information received from 13 Governments on developments regarding the right of everyone to have conscientious objection to military service as a legitimate exercise of the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. The Secretary-General concluded that although most respondent countries recognized the right to conscientious objection to military service, not all of them accepted a general right to object—some restricted the basis to religious grounds only. Most countries provided some form of alternative service of a non-combative character, although not always of a civilian character. Annexed to the report was the global status of conscientious objection to military service. A comparison with the information contained in the Secretary-General's previous report [YUN 1997, p. 648] indicated that the international situation regarding military service appeared to be static.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2000/34], the Commission called on States to review their laws and practices in relation to conscientious objection to military service and asked OHCHR to compile and analyse best practices in regard to the right to have conscientious objection to military service and to report thereon in 2002.

Communication. On 20 April [E/CN.4/2000/160], Singapore, also on behalf of 12 other States, dissociated itself from the Commission's resolution.

Terrorism

Commission action. By 27 votes to 13, with 12 abstentions, the Commission, on 20 April [res. 2000/30], condemning all acts, methods and practices of terrorism, urged States, in conformity with international law, to prevent, combat and eliminate terrorism. States were called on to enhance their cooperation with a view to bringing terrorists to justice and, in conformity with national and international law, to take appropriate measures before granting refugee status to ensure that an asylum-seeker had not participated in terrorist acts. The Commission urged relevant human rights mechanisms to address the consequences of the acts, methods and practices of terrorist groups. The Secretary-General was asked to collect information, including a compilation of studies and publications, on the implications of terrorism, as well as the effects of the fight against terrorism on the full enjoyment of human rights from relevant sources, and to make it available to concerned special rapporteurs and working groups. The Commission endorsed the Subcommission's 1999 request [YUN 1999, p. 642] to the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2000/23 & Corr.1], adopted decision 2000/260 by recorded vote (23-14-6) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Human rights and terrorism

At its 45th plenary meeting, on 28 July 2000, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/30 of 20 April 2000, approved the request of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights to the Secretary-General to give the Special Rapporteur on terrorism and human rights of the Subcommission all the assistance necessary so that she may hold consultations with the competent services and bodies of the United Nations system to complement her essential research and collect all the needed and up-to-date information and data for the preparation of her progress report.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2000/260:

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Bahrain, Belarus, Bolivia, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Fiji, India, Indonesia, New Zealand, Oman, Pakistan, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Suriname, Viet Nam.

Against: Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Czech Republic, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Italy, Norway, Poland, Portugal, United Kingdom.

Abstaining: Croatia, Japan, Mexico, Syrian Arab Republic, United States, Venezuela.

Note by Secretariat. A June note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/31] stated that the Special Rapporteur on terrorism and human rights proposed to submit her progress report to the Subcommission in 2001, as it had not been possible to collect the data required in time to submit a report in 2000.

Subcommission action. On 18 August [dec. 2000/115], the Subcommission asked the Special Rapporteur to submit a progress report on her study in 2001. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit, as soon as possible, the preliminary report on terrorism and human rights [YUN 1999, p. 642] to Governments, specialized agencies and concerned intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for their comments; to make available to the Special Rapporteur all the information on the implications of terrorism, as well as the effects of the fight against terrorism, on the full enjoyment of human rights collected by him from all relevant sources; and to assist the Special Rapporteur.

Hostage-taking

On 20 April [res. 2000/29], the Commission, condemning hostage-taking, demanded the immediate and unconditional release of all hostages. States were called on to take measures to prevent, combat and punish hostage-taking, and thematic special rapporteurs and working groups were urged to address the consequences of such acts in their reports.

Freedom of movement

Mass exoduses

Report of High Commissioner. In response to a 1998 Commission request [YUN 1998, p. 674], the High Commissioner summarized information received from Governments, intergovernmental organizations, specialized agencies and NGOs on measures they had taken to prevent violations and denials of human rights that led to and took place during mass exoduses and displacements [E/CN.4/2000/81]. In describing the relevant activities of OHCHR, the High Commissioner pointed to the complementarity between her mandate and that of the High Commissioner for Refugees and the importance of cooperation between them. She concluded that more focused attention was required on measures to prevent and redress the human rights violations causing and characterizing mass exoduses, as well as concrete action when such crises occurred. The further development of the Commission's mechanisms in that regard was critical, she stated.

Commission action. On 25 April [res. 2000/55], the Commission called on States to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms and to refrain from denying them to individuals because of nationality, ethnicity, race, gender, age, religion or language and thus contribute to addressing human rights situations that led to mass exoduses and displacements. The High Commissioner was asked to pay particular attention to human rights situations that caused or threatened to cause mass exoduses or displacements and to address such situations through promotion and protection measures, emergency preparedness and response mechanisms, early warning and information-sharing, technical advice and expertise and co-operation in countries of origin as well as host countries. She was also asked to report in 2003 on measures taken to implement the Commission's resolution, taking into account information provided by Governments, intergovernmental organizations, specialized agencies and NGOs.

Internally displaced persons

Reports of Secretary-General's Representative. In January [E/CN.4/2000/83], the Secretary-General's Representative, Francis M. Deng (Sudan), updated developments regarding the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement [YUN 1998, p. 675] and efforts to develop an institutional framework for internally displaced persons. He discussed country visits as a way to focus on specific situations of internal displacement. The Representative presented areas where further research was needed, including addressing the problem of internal displacement in areas not under government control, the needs of internally displaced women and children, donor policies, and housing and property restitution for internally displaced persons.

The Representative visited Burundi (6-11 February) [E/CN.4/2001/5/Add.1], where the issue of regroupment (forced relocation) provided the main focus of the mission. Internal displacement affected 808,000 persons (12 per cent of the population), and over 500,000 Burundians were refugees outside the country. Internal displacement was largely the result of forced relocation, undertaken by the Government in response to the rebel attacks (see p. 143). The humanitarian consequences of regroupment had been grave; the authorities had not provided adequate assistance and protection, and although some international assistance reached the camps through NGOs, it was insufficient compared to the needs. There were also some camps that were inaccessible to the international community and thus had not received such assistance. The Representative recommended the cessation of regroupment, the dismantling of regroupment camps and the development of a strategy identifying the protection, assistance and reintegration needs of regrouped populations and returnees. He also made specific recommendations to the Government, the United Nations and donors.

In accordance with a 1999 Commission request [YUN 1999, p. 646], the Representative visited East Timor (26 February–1 March) [E/CN.4/2000/83/Add.3] to focus on the displacement that occurred in the lead-up to and following the popular consultation on autonomy in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 280]. He examined issues of protection and assistance in all phases of displacement, including protection from arbitrary displacement, and protection and assistance during displacement and during return or resettlement and reintegration. The Representative concluded that, although the period of intense terror associated with the popular consultation had passed, durable solutions for the hundreds of thousands of persons displaced, within and outside the country, still needed to be found. Recommendations focused on the physical security of and international access to refugees in West Timor; voluntary and safe return or resettlement; the establishment of a judicial system and effective mechanisms of law and order; investigation and prosecution of violations of human rights and international humanitarian law and crimes against humanity; support for reconciliation efforts; reconstruction; support to women's groups; and greater involvement of the local community.

The Representative visited Georgia (13–17 May) [E/CN.4/2001/5/Add.4] to study the situation and the current conditions of internally displaced persons, and to understand the constraints impeding solutions for those displaced. He concluded that the population as a whole faced socioeconomic difficulties, but those displaced had additional disadvantages. In situations of protracted displacement, the vulnerabilities of the displaced risked being forgotten. The Representative recommended, among other things, disseminating the Guiding Principles to internally displaced persons, improving their living conditions, supporting programmes to address psychosocial needs, ending obstructions to the right to return in safety and dignity, giving special attention to the needs of women and ensuring the full rights of internally displaced persons as citizens.

In Armenia (18–19 May) [E/CN.4/2001/5/Add.3], the Representative studied and documented the situation of internal displacement. As in other cases in the region, a shared ethnic identity between the displaced and the authorities helped to explain why, in a situation of ethnic conflict, internally displaced persons were not associated by the authorities with the "enemy" and denied national protection and assistance on that basis. The number of persons uprooted in the country was comparatively small, and the nature of the displacement crisis was such that the affected areas were not in the centre of the area of conflict. There were no camps or other large concentrations of internally displaced persons, who instead had largely been taken in by relatives or friends or settled in small groups in temporary accommodation. In the light of the difficult economic situation of the country, the Government lacked the capacity to meet the needs of its internally displaced single-handedly without international support. The mission found that the lack of attention to those internally displaced was more due to oversight of their needs than a deliberate policy seeking their integration into society. Among the hardships faced were lack of shelter and access to land, psychological trauma, little engagement in economic activity and lack of government response to their needs. Among the Representative's recommendations were data collection on the situation, the recognition of internal displacement as a factor of vulnerability, safe access to land, comprehensive demining and mine-awareness, coordination of government policy on internal displacement and support for conflict resolution.

In Angola (31 October–9 November) [E/CN.4/2001/5/Add.5], the Representative noted that of a total population of some 12 million, there were an estimated 3.8 million internally displaced persons, of whom 2.6 million had become displaced since January 1998. He observed that some tangible improvements had been made regarding their situation and in the national and international response to the problem. He was encouraged by government measures to improve institutional arrangements and its coordination with the international community, particularly UN agencies. However, he found that coordination was often not effective on the ground and a number of serious humanitarian and protection concerns remained, particularly the lack of protection accorded to the security and human rights of those displaced and the civilian population. The Representative called for better coordination, increased access to populations in need, agreed criteria for targeting food distribution and increased engagement of the Government and donors in the humanitarian response.

Commission action. On 25 April [res. 2000/53], the Commission, stressing the need to strengthen inter-agency arrangements regarding internally displaced persons that were predictable, called on States to provide adequate resources for programmes to assist and protect internally displaced persons. It called on the High Commissioner to develop projects, in cooperation with others, to promote the human rights of internally displaced persons, as part of the programme of advisory services and technical cooperation (see p. 623), and to include in her annual report information on their implementation. The Secretary-General was asked to disseminate the Subcommittee's 1998 resolution on housing and property restitution in the context of the return of refugees and internally displaced persons [YUN 1998, p. 675].

The Commission encouraged the Representative to seek the contribution of States, relevant organizations and institutions in order to put his work on a more stable basis. The Representative was asked to report to the General Assembly and the Commission and the Secretary-General was asked to assist him. Those requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council on 28 July (decision 2000/270).

Workshop. The Representative transmitted a summary report of the Regional Workshop on Internal Displacement in the South Caucasus (Tbilisi, Georgia, 10-12 May) [E/CN.4/2001/5/Add.2], organized by the Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Brookings Institution Project on Internal Displacement and the Norwegian Refugee Council. Participants reviewed internal displacement in Armenia, Azerbaijan and Georgia, and emphasized the vulnerability and range of hardships internally displaced persons endured.

Subcommission action. By a vote of 11 to 9, with 1 abstention, the Subcommission, on 18 August [dec. 2000/113], adjourned the debate on a draft resolution on the right of return of displaced persons.

Right to asylum

The Subcommission, on 18 August [res. 2000/20], expressing concern that States' restrictive practices might create difficulties for people to gain protection in asylum States when escaping serious human rights violations in their own countries, urged States to respect the principle of non-refoulement within their obligations under the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520] and its 1967 Protocol [YUN 1967, p. 477] and other instruments. It also urged them to safeguard the right of everyone to seek and enjoy in other countries asylum from persecution and to ensure that refugees and asylum-seekers were treated with respect for their fundamental human rights. The Special Rapporteur on the rights of non-citizens (see p. 657), in consultation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and OHCHR, was asked to examine the rights of non-citizens, with special attention to asylum-seekers and refugees, and to make recommendations for the Subcommittee's work.

On the same date [res. 2000/21], the Subcommittee recommended that where detention was employed, States, pursuant to the 1951 Convention, provide UNHCR with information on how detention policies and practices conformed to relevant international standards, including the Guidelines on Applicable Criteria and Standards relating to the Detention of Asylum-Seekers [<http://www.unhcr.ch>], adopted by UNHCR in 1999.

Smuggling and trafficking in persons

On 18 August [dec. 2000/110], the Subcommittee decided to include in the provisional agenda of its 2001 session a sub-item entitled "Smuggling and trafficking in persons and the protection of their human rights" under the item "Freedom of movement: the right to leave any country, including one's own, and to return to one's own country, and the right to seek asylum from persecution". It asked the Secretary-General to submit a note on the subject in 2001.

Right to development

Reports of Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 652], the Secretary-General presented replies received from six Governments [E/CN.4/2000/19] in response to his request for information on follow-up to the Declaration on the Right to Development, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 41/128 [YUN 1986, p. 717].

Pursuant to the Subcommittee's 1999 request [YUN 1999, p. 652], the Secretary-General, in a June report with later addendum [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/14

& Add.1), described steps taken by UN bodies and agencies to promote international cooperation for the realization of the right to development in the context of the United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) (see p. 796).

In accordance with Assembly resolution 54/175 [YUN 1999, p. 652], the Secretary-General submitted, in August [A/55/283], a report on the right to development based on information received from four Governments and the United Nations Development Programme. On 4 December, the Assembly took note of the report (decision 55/420).

Reports of High Commissioner. In response to a 1999 Commission request [YUN 1999, p. 652], the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights described activities taken by her Office to implement the right to development [E/CN.4/2000/20]. She also provided information related to the implementation of General Assembly and Commission resolutions and inter-agency coordination within the UN system to implement relevant Commission resolutions.

In accordance with Assembly resolution 54/175, the Secretary-General transmitted, in August [A/55/302], a report of the High Commissioner containing an overview of OHCHR and other organizations and mechanisms concerned with the implementation of the right to development. OHCHR, together with the Government of Yemen, organized an Intersessional Workshop on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Right to Development in the Asia-Pacific Region (Sana'a, 5-7 February). The Office was preparing a background note summarizing the existing material on the right to development. It provided support to the independent expert on the right to development and to the Chairperson of the open-ended working group on the right to development. In implementing resolution 54/175, the High Commissioner identified elements for a rights-based approach to development, and OHCHR prepared three background papers on the subject. The integration of elements of the right to development into the programmes and policies of development agencies as well as UN programmes was seen in OHCHR's contribution to the Human Development Report 2000 [Sales No. E.00.III.B.8] and to the preparation of the common country assessment and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework process. In addition, the Office was involved in UN initiatives to provide human rights training and, as a member of the United Nations Development Group, helped to strengthen coherence of UN development activities. OHCHR encouraged a rights-based approach to the development and implementation of the Secretary-General's strategy to halve extreme poverty by 2015.

On 4 December, the General Assembly took note of the High Commissioner's report (decision 55/420).

Commission action. On 13 April [E/2000/23 (res. 2000/5)], the Commission, reaffirming the importance of the right to development for everyone, particularly in developing countries, urged States to eliminate obstacles to development by promoting and protecting economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights and by implementing development programmes and promoting international cooperation. The Commission welcomed the consensus on the need for the Working Group on the Right to Development to meet in two five-day sessions before the Commission's 2001 session. The Commission asked the High Commissioner to report annually, to provide interim reports to the Working Group and to make the reports available to the independent expert. The Secretary-General was asked to report to the General Assembly in 2000 and to the Commission in 2001, and to assist the Working Group and the independent expert.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council authorized the Working Group to meet as proposed, and approved the Commission's requests to the Secretary-General to submit reports (decision 2000/246).

Report of independent expert. In August [A/55/306], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report of the independent expert on the right to development, Arjun Sengupta (India), that outlined the current state of implementation of the right to development and set out guidelines for implementing the right. The expert stated that the realization of economic, social and cultural rights had to be based on coordinated actions in the form of a development plan aimed at growth of gross domestic product and other resources, as well as sustained improvement of social indicators related to the various rights. The plan would be based on decentralized decision-making with the participation and empowerment of the beneficiaries, and would have to be developed through consultation with civil society and the beneficiaries in a non-discriminatory and transparent manner.

Working group activities. The Commission's Open-ended Working Group on the Right to Development met for its resumed 1999 session on 24 February to elect its Chairperson [E/CN.4/2000/21].

At its first session in 2000 (Geneva, 18-22 September) [E/CN.4/2001/26], the Working Group examined the international economic order and the need for equity in economic and financial relations, particularly matters relating to market access for developing countries, as well as foreign debt servicing. It also considered ways to fight poverty and to promote access to education and health, and problems related to migration, racism and the standard of living. The Working Group highlighted the need to establish a balance between countries with regard to their access to technology and scientific knowledge, and the promotion of conditions needed for good governance and to fight against corruption. Also emphasized was the need to establish criteria and indicators in the context of the follow-up mechanisms on the right to development, and the development of an international compact for development, as proposed by the expert (see p. 691).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 55/108 without vote [agenda item 114 (b)].

The right to development

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, expressing in particular the determination to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Recalling that the Declaration on the Right to Development confirmed that the right to development is an inalienable human right and that equality of opportunity for development is a prerogative both of nations and of individuals who make up nations,

Noting that the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, reaffirmed the right to development as a universal and inalienable right and an integral part of all fundamental human rights,

Recognizing that the Declaration on the Right to Development constitutes an integral link between the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993 through its elaboration of a holistic vision integrating economic, social and cultural rights with civil and political rights,

Expressing its concern that, more than fifty years after the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the unacceptable situation of absolute poverty, hunger, disease, lack of adequate shelter, illiteracy and hopelessness remains the lot of over one billion people,

Emphasizing that the promotion, protection and realization of the right to development are an integral part of the promotion and protection of all human rights,

Noting that the human person is the central subject of development and that development policy should therefore make the human being the main participant in and beneficiary of development,

Stressing the importance of creating an economic, political, social, cultural and legal environment that will enable people to achieve social development,

Affirming the need to apply a gender perspective in the implementation of the right to development, inter alia, by ensuring that women play an active role in the development process,

Emphasizing that the empowerment of women and their full participation on the basis of equality in all spheres of society is fundamental for development,

Underlining the fact that the realization of the right to development requires effective development policies at the national level, as well as equitable economic relations and a favourable economic environment at the international level,

Welcoming in this regard the adoption by the General Assembly of the Agenda for Development, which declares that development is one of the main priorities of the United Nations and which aims at invigorating a renewed and strengthened partnership for development, based on the imperatives of mutual benefits and genuine interdependence,

Noting with concern that the Declaration on the Right to Development is insufficiently disseminated and should be taken into account, as appropriate, in bilateral and multilateral cooperation programmes, national development strategies and policies and activities of international organizations,

Recalling the need for coordination and cooperation throughout the United Nations system for a more effective promotion and realization of the right to development,

Underlining the important role of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in the promotion and protection of the right to development, as mandated in paragraph 4 (c) of General Assembly resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993,

Recalling its resolution 54/175 of 17 December 1999,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/5 of 13 April 2000,

Welcoming the report of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on the Right to Development on its second session, including the proposed strategy contained therein, and welcoming in particular the recommendation that a follow-up mechanism should be established to ensure promotion and implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the right to development for every human person and all peoples in all countries, in particular the developing countries, as an integral part of their fundamental human rights, as well as the potential contribution that its realization could make to the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Recognizes that the passage of more than fifty years since the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights demands the strengthening of efforts to place all human rights and, in this context, the right to development in particular, at the top of the global agenda;

3. Reiterates that:

(a) The essence of the right to development is the principle that the human person is the central subject of development and that the right to life includes within it existence in human dignity with the minimum necessities of life;

(b) The existence of widespread absolute poverty inhibits the full and effective enjoyment of human rights and renders democracy and popular participation fragile;

(c) For peace and stability to endure, national action and international action and cooperation are required to promote a better life for all in larger freedom, a critical element of which is the eradication of poverty;

4. Reaffirms that democracy, development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development, are interdependent and mutually reinforcing, and in this context affirms that:

(a) The development experiences of countries reflect differences with regard to both progress and setbacks, and that the development spectrum has a wide range, not only between countries but also within countries;

(b) A number of developing countries have experienced rapid economic growth in the recent past and have become dynamic partners in the international economy;

(c) At the same time, the gap between developed and developing countries remains unacceptably wide and developing countries continue to face difficulties in participating in the globalization process, and many risk being marginalized and effectively excluded from its benefits;

(d) Democracy, which is spreading everywhere, has raised development expectations everywhere, that their non-fulfilment risks rekindling non-democratic forces, and that structural reforms that do not take social realities into account could destabilize democratization processes;

(e) Effective popular participation is an essential component of successful and lasting development;

(f) Democracy, respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development, transparent and accountable governance and administration in all sectors of society, and effective participation by civil society are an essential part of the necessary foundations for the realization of social and people-centred sustainable development;

(g) The participation of developing countries in the international economic decision-making process needs to be broadened and strengthened;

5. Urges all States to eliminate all obstacles to development at all levels by pursuing the promotion and protection of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights, implementing comprehensive development programmes at the national level, integrating those rights into development activities and promoting effective international cooperation;

6. Reaffirms that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that the universality, objectivity, impartiality and non-selectivity of the consideration of human rights issues must be ensured;

7. Affirms that international cooperation is acknowledged more than ever as a necessity deriving from recognized mutual interest and, therefore, that such co-operation should be strengthened in order to support the efforts of developing countries to solve their economic and social problems and to fulfil their obligations to promote and protect all human rights;

8. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to give high priority to the right to development, and urges all States to promote further the right to development as a vital element in a balanced human rights programme;

9. Also welcomes the high priority assigned by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to activities relating to the right to development, and urges the Office of the High Commissioner to continue to implement Commission on Human Rights resolution 1998/72 of 22 April 1998;

10. Further welcomes Economic and Social Council decision 1998/269 of 30 July 1998 authorizing the establishment by the Commission on Human Rights of a follow-up mechanism, consisting of an open-ended working group on the right to development and an independent expert with a mandate to submit to the working group at each of its sessions a study on the current state of progress in the implementation of the right to development, as provided for in Commission resolution 1998/72;

11. Welcomes the holding at Geneva from 18 to 22 September 2000 of the first session of the Open-ended Working Group on the Right to Development under the chairmanship of Mr. M. S. Dembri (Algeria), and encourages the Working Group to proceed with its second session, scheduled for January 2001;

12. Takes note of the coordination mechanisms and initiatives within the United Nations system in which the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights participates to promote the implementation of the right to development;

13. Also takes note of the second report of the independent expert on the right to development, which focuses on poverty eradication as a priority area requiring attention in the realization of the right to development;

14. Further takes note of the Human Development Report 2000, of the United Nations Development Programme, and the World Development Report 2000/2001: Attacking Poverty, of the World Bank, which cover issues relevant to human rights and the right to development, and welcomes the participation in the Working Group of representatives of international financial institutions, as well as that of relevant United Nations specialized agencies, funds and programmes and non-governmental organizations, in accordance with relevant resolutions of the Economic and Social Council;

15. Invites the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to submit a report to the Commission on Human Rights each year for the duration of the mechanism, to provide interim reports to the Working Group and to make those reports available to the independent expert, with each report covering:

(a) The activities of her Office relating to the implementation of the right to development, as contained in her mandate;

(b) The implementation of resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission with regard to the right to development;

(c) Inter-agency coordination within the United Nations system for the implementation of relevant resolutions of the Commission in that regard;

16. Urges the United Nations system to continue to support the implementation of the recent resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights regarding the right to development;

17. Calls upon the Secretary-General to ensure that the Working Group and the independent expert receive all necessary assistance, in particular the staff and resources required to fulfil their mandates;

18. Calls upon the Working Group to take note of the deliberations on the right to development during the fifty-fifth session of the General Assembly and the fifty-sixth session of the Commission on Human Rights, and any other issue relevant to the right to development;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-seventh session a comprehensive report on the implementation of the various provisions of the present resolution;

20. Decides to continue consideration of this question, as a matter of priority, at its fifty-sixth session.

Democratic and equitable international order

By a roll-call vote of 30 to 17, with 6 abstentions, the Commission, on 26 April [res. 2000/62], affirmed that a democratic and equitable international order fostered the full realization of all human rights for all and that it required the realization of a wide range of human rights. States were urged to continue their efforts, through enhanced international cooperation, to create a democratic and equitable international order. The Commission requested human rights treaty bodies, OHCHR and Commission and Sub-commission mechanisms to contribute to implementation of the resolution. The Secretary-General was asked to bring the resolution to the attention of Member States, UN organs and bodies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs and to disseminate it widely. The High Commissioner was asked to include in her annual report in 2001 information on progress made in implementing the resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 55/107 by recorded vote (109-52-7) [agenda item 114 (b)].

Promotion of a democratic and equitable international order

The General Assembly,

Noting the adoption by the Commission on Human Rights of its resolution 2000/62 of 26 April 2000,

Reaffirming the commitment of all States to fulfil their obligations to promote universal respect for, and observance and protection of, all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, other instruments relating to human rights and international law,

Affirming that the enhancement of international cooperation for the promotion and protection of all human rights should continue to be carried out in full conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter and international law as set forth in Articles 1 and 2 of the Charter and, inter alia, with full respect for sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence, the non-use of force or the threat of force in international relations and non-intervention in matters that are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State,

Recalling the Preamble to the Charter, in particular the determination to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, and in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small,

Reaffirming that everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which the rights and freedoms set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights can be fully realized,

Reaffirming also the determination expressed in the Preamble to the Charter to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, to practise tolerance and good-neighbourliness, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Considering the major changes taking place on the international scene and the aspirations of all peoples for an international order based on the principles enshrined in the Charter, including promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, peace, democracy, justice, equality, the rule of law, pluralism, development, better standards of living and solidarity,

Considering also that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set out therein, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Reaffirming that democracy, development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms are interdependent and mutually reinforcing, and that democracy is based on the freely expressed will of the people to determine their own political, economic, social and cultural systems and their full participation in all aspects of their lives,

Emphasizing that democracy is not only a political concept but also has economic and social dimensions,

Recognizing that democracy, respect for all human rights, including the right to development, transparent and accountable governance and administration in all sectors of society, and effective participation by civil society are an essential part of the necessary foundations for the realization of social and people-centred sustainable development,

Underlining the fact that it is imperative for the international community to ensure that globalization becomes a positive force for all the world's people, and that only through broad and sustained efforts, based on common humanity in all its diversity, can globalization be made fully inclusive and equitable,

Stressing that efforts to make globalization fully inclusive and equitable must include policies and measures, at the global level, that correspond to the needs of developing countries and economies in transition and are formulated and implemented with their effective participation,

Resolved, on the eve of a new century and millennium, to take all measures within its power to secure a democratic and equitable international order;

1. Affirms that everyone is entitled to a democratic and equitable international order;

2. Also affirms that a democratic and equitable international order fosters the full respect for and realization of all human rights for all;

3. Further affirms that a democratic and equitable international order requires, inter alia, the realization of the following:

(a) The right of all peoples to self-determination, by virtue of which they can freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development;

(b) The right of peoples and nations to permanent sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources;

(c) The right of every human person and all peoples to development;

(d) The right of all peoples to peace;

(e) The promotion of an international economic order based on equal participation in the decision-making process, interdependence, mutual interest, solidarity and cooperation among all States;

(f) Solidarity, as a fundamental value, by virtue of which global challenges must be managed in a way that distributes costs and burdens fairly in accordance with basic principles of equity and social justice and ensures that those who suffer or who benefit the least receive help from those who benefit the most;

(g) The promotion and consolidation of transparent, democratic, just and accountable international institutions in all areas of cooperation, in particular through the implementation of the principles of full and equal participation in their respective decision-making mechanisms;

Globalization

Commission action. On 17 April [dec. 2000/102], the Commission, recalling its 1999 call for a study on globalization [YUN 1999, p. 655] and taking note of a 1999 Subcommission resolution [ibid.], endorsed the Subcommission's appointment of Joseph Oloka-Onyango (Uganda) and Deepika Udagama (Sri Lanka) as Special Rapporteurs to prepare a study on globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights.

The Economic and Social Council approved the appointment of the Special Rapporteurs on 28 July (decision 2000/282).

Report of Special Rapporteurs. In June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/13], the Special Rapporteurs, in their preliminary report on globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of human rights, focused on the institutional framework that had been developed to pursue the essential goals of globalization, and examined the questions of equality and non-discrimination, particularly in relation to women. The Special Rapporteurs concluded that globalization had numerous implications for human rights promotion and protection. There was a dire need for human rights, emphasizing equality and non-discrimination, to be brought into the debate and policy considerations of those at the forefront of the drive for the increased globalization of contemporary society. Rules needed to be established to govern the international economy, specifically in relation to copyright violations, trade sanctions and protections for increased foreign investment. A more balanced approach was needed that ensured the integration of human rights principles into the rule-making processes from the outset. Further reviews of existing debt relief and poverty eradication measures should be undertaken from a human rights perspective. Women continued to be a grossly underrepresented group within institutions such as the World Trade Organization (WTO), the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank. There was a need to engender the institutional frameworks within which the globalization processes were developed and to conduct gender-specific analyses of the impact of globalization in its trade, investment and financial aspects.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 54/165 [YUN 1999, p. 655], the Secretary-General, in August [A/55/342], presented a preliminary report on globalization and human rights, based on reports of UN bodies and drawing on the proposals adopted by the Assembly's special session on social development (see p. 1012). The report discussed globalization issues and the relationship between the global economy and human rights. The Secretary-General concluded that, while globalization provided potential for protecting human rights through economic growth and greater interconnection between peoples and development, its benefits were not enjoyed evenly. It was difficult to assess the extent to which globalization led to or alleviated poverty. Poverty was both a cause and an effect of human rights abuses. By adopting a human rights approach, globalization could be examined in its civil, cultural, political, social and economic contexts so that the international community could meet its commitment to an international and social order conducive to respect for human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 55/102 by recorded vote (112-46-15) [agenda item 114 (b)].

Globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and expressing in particular the need to achieve international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Recalling also the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Recalling further the Declaration on the Right to Development adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/128 of 4 December 1986,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the outcome documents of the twenty-third and twenty-fourth special sessions of the General As- sembly, held, respectively, in New York from 5 to 10 June 2000 and Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000,

Recognizing that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that the international community must treat human rights globally in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis,

Realizing that globalization affects all countries differently and makes them more exposed to external developments, positive as well as negative, including in the field of human rights,

Realizing also that globalization is not merely an economic process but also has social, political, environmental, cultural and legal dimensions which have an impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Recognizing that multilateral mechanisms have a unique role to play in meeting the challenges and opportunities presented by globalization,

Expressing concern at the negative impact of international financial turbulence on social and economic development and on the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Deeply concerned that the widening gap between the developed and the developing countries, and within countries, has contributed, inter alia, to deepening poverty and has adversely affected the full enjoyment of all human rights, in particular in developing countries,

Noting that human beings strive for a world that is respectful of human rights and cultural diversity and that, in this regard, they work to ensure that all activities, including those affected by globalization, are consistent with those aims,

1. Recognizes that, while globalization, by its impact on, inter alia, the role of the State, may affect human rights, the promotion and protection of all human rights is first and foremost the responsibility of the State;

2. Reaffirms that narrowing the gap between rich and poor, both within and between countries, is an explicit goal at the national and international levels, as part of the effort to create an enabling environment for the full enjoyment of all human rights;

3. Also reaffirms the commitment to create an environment at both the national and global levels that is conducive to development and to the elimination of poverty through, inter alia, good governance within each country and at the international level, transparency in the financial, monetary and trading systems and commitment to an open, equitable, rule-based, predictable and non-discriminatory multilateral trading and financial system;

4. Recognizes that, while globalization offers great opportunities, its benefits are very unevenly shared and its costs are unevenly distributed, an aspect of the process that affects the full enjoyment of all human rights, in particular in developing countries;

5. Also recognizes that, only through broad and sustained efforts, including policies and measures at the global level to create a shared future based upon our common humanity in all its diversity, can globalization be made fully inclusive and equitable and have a human face, thus contributing to the full enjoyment of all human rights;

6. Affirms that globalization is a complex process of structural transformation, with numerous interdisiplinary aspects, which has an impact on the enjoyment of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, including the right to development;

7. Also affirms that the international community should strive to respond to the challenges and opportunities posed by globalization in a manner that ensures respect for the cultural diversity of all;

8. Underlines, therefore, the need to continue to analyse the consequences of globalization for the full enjoyment of all human rights;

9. Takes note of the preliminary report of the Secretary-General on globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights, and requests the Secretary-General, taking into account the different views of Member States, to submit a comprehensive report on this subject to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 55/102:

Intellectual property rights

On 17 August [E/CN.4/2001/2 (res. 2000/7)], the Subcommission affirmed that the right to protection of the moral and material interests resulting from any scientific, literary or artistic production of which one was the author was, in accordance with international human rights instruments, a human right subject to limitations in the public interest. Declaring that the implementation of the WTO Agreement on Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS) did not adequately reflect the fundamental nature and indivisibility of all human rights and that there were conflicts between the intellectual property rights embodied in the Agreement and international human rights law, the Subcommission reminded Governments of the primacy of human rights obligations over economic policies and agreements. The Special Rapporteurs on globalization (see p. 696) were asked to consider the human rights impact of the implementation of the TRIPS Agreement in their next report, and the High Commissioner was requested to analyse the human rights impacts of the Agreement. The Subcommission encouraged the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to clarify the relationship between intellectual property rights and human rights, including through the drafting of a general comment. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 2001.

Structural adjustment policies

A January note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/2000/51] stated that the Special Rapporteur on the effects of foreign debt, Reinaldo Figueredo (Venezuela), and the independent expert on the effects of structural adjustment policies on economic, social and cultural rights, Fantu Cheru (United States), having considered the related nature of those subjects, decided to submit a joint report, which was annexed to the note.

The authors analysed the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative and, while recognizing its limitations, concluded that its new emphasis on strengthening the link between debt relief and poverty reduction represented a tremendous step forward in the history of debt relief for poor countries. They focused on the need to link debt relief to three critical humanitarian emergencies that required an immediate response from the international community—the HIV/AIDS epidemic as a threat to Africa's development, the effects of hurricane Mitch on Honduras and Nicaragua, and the link between debt relief and implementation of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), adopted by the International Labour Conference [YUN 1999, p. 1388]. Those topics were chosen, the authors said, because they were aimed at eradicating poverty in the poorest developing countries. The authors appealed to Member States, the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner to strengthen the responsiveness of OHCHR in the area of economic, social and cultural rights by strengthening the Office's internal research and analytical capacity, and its technical assistance support to countries in macroeconomic policy and trade and investment-related topics that had a direct bearing on human rights promotion and protection.

Working group activities. A March note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/2000/53] stated that the third session of the open-ended working group on structural adjustment programmes and economic, social and cultural rights convened on 28 February. Following an adjournment to allow for consultations among regional coordinators, the working group resumed on 7 March. It agreed that the Commission be asked to extend its mandate and authorize it to hold another two-week session between the Commission's 2000 and 2001 sessions.

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 30 to 15, with 7 abstentions, the Commission, on 26 April [res. 2000/82], stressing the importance of implementing durable actions for alleviating the burdens of debt and debt service of developing countries with debt problems, considered that there was a need for a political dialogue between creditor and debtor countries within the UN system to find a solution to the problem. The Commission asked the High Commissioner to give particular attention to the problem of the debt burden of developing countries and to strengthen the responsiveness of her Office in the area of economic, social and cultural rights. The Commission took action regarding the work of the independent expert and of the working group, which were approved by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 June, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2000/23 & Corr.1], adopted decision 2000/221 by recorded vote (20-18-5) [agenda item 2].

Effects of structural adjustment policies and foreign debt on the full enjoyment of all human rights, particularly economic, social and cultural rights

At its 10th plenary meeting, on 16 June 2000, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/82 and decision 2000/109 of 26 April 2000, endorsed the Commission's decision to discontinue the mandates of the Special Rapporteur on the effects of foreign debt on the full enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights and of the independent expert on the effects of structural adjustment policies on economic, social and cultural rights and to appoint, for a period of three years, Mr. Fantu Cheru as independent expert on the effects of structural adjustment policies and foreign debt on the full enjoyment of all human rights, particularly economic, social and cultural rights, and to request him to submit an analytical report to the Commission, on an annual basis, on the implementation of Commission resolution 2000/82, paying particular attention to:

(a) The effects of the foreign debt and the policies adopted to face them on the full enjoyment of all human rights, in particular economic, social and cultural rights in developing countries;

(b) Measures taken by Governments, the private sector and international financial institutions to alleviate such effects in developing countries, especially the poorest and heavily indebted countries;

(c) New developments, actions and initiatives being taken by international financial institutions, other United Nations bodies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations with respect to structural adjustment policies and human rights;

and to provide an advance copy of his annual report to the open-ended working group on structural adjustment programmes and economic, social and cultural rights in order to assist the group in the fulfilment of its mandate.

The Council also endorsed the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to provide the independent expert with all necessary assistance, in particular the staff and resources required to perform his functions.

The Council decided to authorize the working group on structural adjustment programmes and economic, social and cultural rights to meet for two weeks well in advance of, and at least four weeks prior to, the fifty-seventh session of the Commission with a mandate (a) to continue working on the elaboration of basic policy guidelines on structural adjustment programmes and economic, social and cultural rights which could serve as a basis for a continued dialogue between human rights bodies and international financial institutions and (b) to report to the Commission at its fifty-seventh session.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2000/221:

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Bahrain, Benin, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, China, Cuba, Fiji, India, Indonesia, Oman, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Venezuela, Viet Nam.

Against: Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Croatia, Czech Republic, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Italy, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Belarus, Colombia, Costa Rica, Mexico, Russian Federation.

Prior to the text's adoption, it had been rejected by a recorded vote of 18 to 18, with 5 abstentions. However, the Council carried a motion to reconsider the draft by a recorded vote of 20 to 16, with 7 abstentions.

Social Forum

Commission action. On 26 April [dec. 2000/107], the Commission, taking note of a 1999 Subcommission resolution [YUN 1999, p. 657], endorsed the holding of a Social Forum during the Subcommission's 2000 session and decided that the Subcommission should further review its proposal to hold a forum on economic, social and cultural rights.

Subcommission action. On 17 August [res. 2000/6], the Subcommission decided to hold in Geneva a pre-sessional or intersessional forum on economic, social and cultural rights, to be known as the Social Forum, for three days, with the participation of 10 of its members. It asked the Commission and the Economic and Social Council to endorse the holding of the Forum.

Transnational corporations

The sessional working group on the working methods and activities of transnational corporations (TNCs), at its second session (Geneva, 1, 4 and 8 August) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/12], discussed draft principles relating to the human rights conduct of companies. The aims of the draft principles were to help Governments identify legislation they should enact and enforcement mechanisms to ensure that the principles had a positive influence, to encourage companies to implement the principles and to lay the groundwork for the binding international standard-setting process. The group had before it working papers on the principles relating to the human rights conduct of companies, background information and a list of existing sources of international standards drawn on in the preparation of the draft principles. The group also considered the impact of TNCs on the enjoyment of civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights.

Coercive economic measures

Report of Secretary-General. In response to a 1999 Commission request [YUN 1999, p. 658], the Secretary-General submitted the views of five Governments on the implications and negative effects of unilateral coercive measures on their populations [E/CN.4/2000/46 & Add.1].

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 36 to 9, with 7 abstentions, the Commission, on 17 April [res. 2000/11], called on States to avoid the unilateral imposition of economic coercive measures and the extraterritorial application of domestic laws that ran counter to the principles of free trade and hampered the development of developing countries. It requested the Secretary-General to bring the resolution to the attention of Member States and to seek their views and information on the effects of unilateral coercive measures on their populations and to report thereon in 2001.

Working paper. Pursuant to a 1999 Subcommission request [YUN 1999, p. 658], Marc Bosuyt (Belgium) submitted, in June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/33], a working paper on the adverse consequences of economic sanctions on the enjoyment of human rights. He described various types of sanctions, including those pertaining to trade, finance, travel, the military, diplomacy and culture. A six-prong test was presented to evaluate sanctions that involved determining if the sanctions were imposed for valid reasons, targeted the proper parties, targeted the proper goods or objects, were reasonably time-limited, were effective and were free from protest arising from violations of the principles of humanity and the dictates of public conscience. Following a discussion of designing smarter sanctions, the paper presented case studies on sanctions regimes imposed on Burundi, Cuba and Iraq. In its conclusions, the paper asserted that any sanctions-imposing body should ensure that the sanctions regime passed the six-prong test prior to implementation. There were situations where a sanctions regime that might initially be deemed acceptable subsequently failed the test. Thus, sanctions should be reviewed periodically, at intervals not longer than every six months. Legal remedies should be available for victims of sanctions regimes that violated international law, if the imposer refused to alter them. Difficulties regarding remedies for civilians arose when the sanctions were imposed by the United Nations or by a regional body, as victims might not be able to file directly against the entity. For those entities, it was proposed that special mechanisms or procedures for relevant input from non-governmental sources regarding sanctions be established. The paper made a series of recommendations to UN bodies, NGOs and victims of sanctions.

Reports of Secretary-General. In July [A/55/214], the Secretary-General stated that, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 54/172 [YUN 1999, p. 658], he had requested information from Member States on human rights and unilateral coercive measures, for submission by 30 June. He had received no replies. In September [A/55/214/Add.1], he transmitted the replies of three States. On 4 December, the Assembly took note of the reports (decision 55/420).

Pursuant to Assembly resolution 53/10 [YUN 1998, p. 778] on the elimination of coercive economic measures as a means of political and economic compulsion, the Secretary-General, in an August report with later addenda [A/55/300 & Add.1-3], presented information received from 14 States on steps they had taken to implement the resolution.

Subcommission action. On 18 August [res. 2000/25], the Subcommission appealed to States to terminate all aspects of sanctions regimes that adversely affected human rights, that contravened international law or that conflicted with other international standards. It transmitted to the Commission the working paper on the adverse consequences of economic sanctions (see p. 699) and invited the Commission to recommend measures to avoid adverse consequences for human rights in imposing and maintaining economic sanctions.

The humanitarian consequences of sanctions, including embargoes, were addressed by the Subcommission on 11 August [res. 2000/1]. It urged the Commission to recommend that competent UN bodies implement the relevant provisions of human rights and international humanitarian law, and appealed to the Security Council to alleviate sanctions regimes so that civilian goods, particularly food and medical and pharmaceutical supplies, could be imported. The international community was encouraged to alleviate the suffering of people adversely affected by sanctions, particularly by facilitating the delivery of food and medical and pharmaceutical supplies and providing educational material for health-care professionals and educators.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 55/110 by recorded vote (117-49-6) [agenda item 114 (b)].

Human rights and unilateral coercive measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/103 of 12 December 1996, 52/120 of 12 December 1997, 53/141 of 9 December 1998 and 54/172 of 17 December 1999, as well as Commission on Human Rights resolution 1998/11 of 9 April 1998, and taking note of Commission resolution 2000/11 of 17 April 2000,

Reaffirming the pertinent principles and provisions contained in the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States proclaimed by the General Assembly in its resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, in particular article 32 thereof, in which it declared that no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights,

Taking note of the report submitted by the Secretary-General, pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 1999/21 of 23 April 1999, and the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 52/120,

Recognizing the universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated character of all human rights, and, in this regard, reaffirming the right to development as an integral part of all human rights,

Recalling that the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, called upon States to refrain from any unilateral coercive measure not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations that creates obstacles to trade relations among States and impedes the full realization of all human rights,

Bearing in mind all the references to this question in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development, adopted by the World Summit for Social Development on 12 March 1995, the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action, adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women on 15 September 1995, and the Istanbul Declaration on Human Settlements and the Habitat Agenda, adopted by the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) on 14 June 1996,

Expressing its concern about the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures in the field of international relations, trade, investment and cooperation,

Deeply concerned that, despite the recommendations adopted on this question by the General Assembly and recent major United Nations conferences and contrary to general international law and the Charter of the United Nations, unilateral coercive measures continue to be promulgated and implemented with all their negative implications for the social-humanitarian ac- tivities and economic and social development of developing countries, including their extraterritorial effects, thereby creating additional obstacles to the full enjoyment of all human rights by peoples and individuals under the jurisdiction of other States.

Bearing in mind all the extraterritorial effects of any unilateral legislative, administrative and economic measures, policies and practices of a coercive nature against the development process and the enhancement of human rights in developing countries, which create obstacles to the full realization of all human rights,

Noting the continuing efforts of the Open-ended Working Group on the Right to Development of the Commission on Human Rights, and reaffirming in particular its criteria according to which unilateral coercive measures are one of the obstacles to the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development,

1. Urges all States to refrain from adopting or implementing any unilateral measures not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations, in particular those of a coercive nature with all their extraterritorial effects, which create obstacles to trade relations among States, thus impeding the full realization of the rights set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international human rights instruments, in particular the right of individuals and peoples to development;

2. Invites all States to consider adopting administrative or legislative measures, as appropriate, to counteract the extraterritorial application or effects of unilateral coercive measures;

3. Rejects unilateral coercive measures with all their extraterritorial effects as tools for political or economic pressure against any country, in particular against developing countries, because of their negative effects on the realization of all the human rights of vast sectors of their populations, in particular children, women and the elderly;

4. Calls upon Member States that have initiated such measures to commit themselves to their obligations and responsibilities arising from the international human rights instruments to which they are party by revoking such measures at the earliest time possible;

5. Reaffirms, in this context, the right of all peoples to self-determination, by virtue of which they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development;

6. Urges the Commission on Human Rights to take fully into account the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures, including the enactment of national laws and their extraterritorial application, in its task concerning the implementation of the right to development;

7. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in discharging her functions relating to the promotion, realization and protection of the right to development and bearing in mind the continuing impact of unilateral coercive measures on the population of developing countries, to give priority to the present resolution in her annual report to the General Assembly;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Member States, to continue to collect their views and information on the implications and negative effects of unilateral coercive measures on their populations and to submit an analytical report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, highlighting the practical and preventive measures in this respect;

9. Decides to examine this question on a priority basis at its fifty-sixth session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Women and the right to development

A June note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/19], recalling a 1999 Subcommission request [YUN 1999, p. 659], stated that as at 25 May 2000 the Secretary-General was unable to provide information on women and the right to development, and that he would provide that information in 2001 in a comprehensive report on the right to development, in accordance with Commission resolution 2000/5 (see p. 695).

Extreme poverty

Report of independent expert. Pursuant to a 1999 Commission request [YUN 1999, p. 660], the independent expert on the question of human rights and extreme poverty, Anne-Marie Lizin (Belgium), reported in February [E/CN.4/2000/52], stressing the need to incorporate a human and social dimension in the globalization process in order to combat poverty. The report highlighted the activities of various development actors in combating extreme poverty. Special attention was paid to State practices and the activities of the UN system, the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund) and non-governmental agencies.

The expert stated that action in respect of certain essential needs—food, primary health care, primary education—would help launch an effective strategy for combating extreme poverty. The lack of political commitment remained a major obstacle in the struggle against extreme poverty. Some measures were also paralysed by the weakness of the State and its administrative and economic structures. The debt burden, armed conflicts, natural disasters and financial crises contributed to that weakness. Legislation guaranteeing a minimum income was one of the most effective weapons for fighting extreme poverty. The expert made a number of recommendations, including a proposal for a world alliance of development actors to fight against extreme poverty, more involvement of the Bretton Woods institutions, the incorporation of economic and social rights into national human rights institutions, decentralization and recognition of the role of local authorities, good governance, regularizing the situation of persons without documents, involving women in microcredit and special measures to help extremely poor women, and the adoption of a minimum guaranteed income and basic social security legislation.

Commission action. On 12 April [E/CN.4/2000/SR.41 & 42], the Commission held a special debate on poverty and the enjoyment of human rights.

On 17 April [res. 2000/12], the Commission, reaffirming that extreme poverty and exclusion from society constituted a violation of human dignity and that urgent action was required to eliminate them, called on the General Assembly, specialized agencies, UN bodies and intergovernmental organizations to take into account the contradiction between the existence of extreme poverty and exclusion from society, and the duty to guarantee enjoyment of human rights. States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs were urged to take into account the links between human rights and extreme poverty, as well as efforts to empower people living in poverty to participate in decision-making processes on policies that affected them, and the United Nations was urged to strengthen poverty eradication as a priority throughout the system. The Commission decided to renew for a two-year period the mandate of the independent expert, who was asked to report in 2000 and 2001 and to make the reports available to the Commission for Social Development and the Commission on the Status of Women; and to contribute to the mid-term evaluation of the United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) (see p. 796), scheduled for 2002. The High Commissioner was asked to organize, before the Commission's 2001 session, a seminar to consider drafting a declaration on extreme poverty.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2000/23 & Corr.1], adopted decision 2000/247 without vote [agenda item 14 (g)].

Human rights and extreme poverty

At its 45th plenary meeting, on 28 July 2000, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/12 of 17 April 2000, endorsed the Commission's decision to renew, for a period of two years, the mandate of the independent expert on the question of human rights and extreme poverty:

(a) To evaluate the relationship between the promotion and protection of human rights and the eradication of extreme poverty, including through the identification of national and international good practices;

(b) To hold consultations, including during her visits, with the poorest people and the communities in which they live, on means of developing their capacity to express their views and to organize themselves and to involve national human rights institutions in this exercise;

(c) To consider strategies to overcome extreme poverty and the social impact of those strategies;

(d) To continue her cooperation with the international financial institutions, with a view to identifying the best programmes for combating extreme poverty;

(e) To contribute to the mid-term evaluation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty, scheduled for 2002;

(f) To report on her activities to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-seventh and fifty-eighth sessions and to make those reports available to the Commission for Social Development and the Commission on the Status of Women, as appropriate, for their sessions during the same years.

The Council approved the Commission's request to the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to organize, before the fifty-seventh session of the Commission, a seminar to consider the need to develop a draft declaration on extreme poverty and, if appropriate, to identify its specific points.

The Council also approved the Commission's recommendation that, in view of the need to take into account work undertaken elsewhere, an invitation to this seminar should be extended to government representatives and experts of the United Nations specialized agencies, funds and programmes, the relevant functional commissions of the Council, the regional economic commissions, the international financial institutions, the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights and interested non-governmental organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 55/106 without vote [agenda item 114 (b)].

Recalling its resolutions 47/196 of 22 December 1992, by which it declared 17 October the International Day for the Eradication of Poverty, 48/183 of 21 December 1993, by which it proclaimed 1996 the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty, 50/107 of 20 December 1995, by which it proclaimed the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006), 51/97 of 12 December 1996 on human rights and extreme poverty, 52/193 of 18 December 1997, in which it emphasized the follow-up to the Decade, and 53/146 of 9 December 1998 on human rights and extreme poverty,

Recalling also its resolution 52/134 of 12 December 1997, in which it recognized that the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights was essential for the understanding, promotion and protection of all human rights,

Recalling further its resolution 54/232 of 22 December 1999, in which it expressed its deep concern that the number of people living in extreme poverty continues to increase, with women and children constituting the majority and the most affected group,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1992/11 of 21 February 1992, 1993/13 of 26 February 1993, 1994/12 of 25 February 1994, 1995/16 of 24 February 1995, 1996/10 of 11 April 1996, 1997/11 of 3 April 1997, 1998/25 of 17 April 1998, 1999/26 of 26 April 1999, and 2000/12 of 17 April 2000, as well as resolution 1996/23 of 29 August 1996 of the Sub-commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

Recalling its resolution 47/134 of 18 December 1992, in which it reaffirmed that extreme poverty and exclusion from society constituted a violation of human dignity and stressed the need for a complete and in-depth study of extreme poverty, based on the experience and the thoughts of the poorest people,

Recognizing that the eradication of extreme poverty is a major challenge within the process of globalization and requires coordinated and continued policies through decisive national action and international cooperation,

Reaffirming that, as the existence of widespread extreme poverty inhibits the full and effective enjoyment of human rights and might, in some situations, constitute a threat to the right to life, its immediate alleviation and eventual eradication must remain a high priority for the international community,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Taking note with satisfaction of the interim and progress reports submitted to the Commission on Human Rights by the independent expert on the question of human rights and extreme poverty and the recommendations contained therein,

1. Reaffirms that extreme poverty and exclusion from society constitute a violation of human dignity and that urgent national and international action is therefore required to eliminate them;

2. Also reaffirms that it is essential for States to foster participation by the poorest people in the decision-making process in the societies in which they live, in the promotion of human rights and in efforts to combat extreme poverty, and for people living in poverty and vulnerable groups to be empowered to organize themselves and to participate in all aspects of political, economic and social life, in particular the planning and implementation of policies that affect them, thus enabling them to become genuine partners in development;

3. Emphasizes that extreme poverty is a major issue to be addressed by Governments, civil society and the United Nations system, including international financial institutions, and in this context reaffirms that political commitment is a prerequisite for the eradication of poverty;

4. Recognizes that surmounting extreme poverty constitutes an essential means to the full enjoyment of political, civil, economic, social and cultural rights, and reaffirms the interrelationship among these goals;

5. Reaffirms that the existence of widespread absolute poverty inhibits the full and effective enjoyment of human rights and renders democracy and popular participation fragile;

6. Also reaffirms the commitments on development and poverty eradication contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

7. Invites the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, within the framework of the implementation of the United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty, to continue to give appropriate attention to the question of human rights and extreme poverty;

8. Notes with appreciation the specific actions taken by the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to mitigate the effects of extreme poverty on children and the efforts of the United Nations Development Programme to give priority to the search for some means of alleviating poverty within the framework of the relevant resolutions, and urges them to continue this work;

9. Calls upon States, United Nations bodies, in particular the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations Development Programme, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to continue to give appropriate attention to the links between human rights and extreme poverty;

10. Decides to consider this question further at its fifty-seventh session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Right to food

Report of High Commissioner. As requested by the Commission in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 661], the High Commissioner, in a January report with later addendum [E/CN.4/2000/48 & Add.1], summarized the comments and suggestions received from Governments and UN bodies to implement the right to food, taking into account the second consultation on the right to adequate food [YUN 1998, p. 693]. She also described activities of the Subcommittee on Nutrition of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) (see p. 1172), an inter-agency mechanism for harmonizing nutrition policy, and of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, including further progress made in the definition of the right to adequate food in international law and the updated study on the right to food [YUN 1999, p. 661]. Referring to General Comment No. 12 adopted by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights regarding the right to food [ibid., p. 575], the High Commissioner stated that the implementation of the recommendations of the Comment should be prioritized.

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 49 to 1, with 2 abstentions, the Commission, on 17 April [res. 2000/10], reaffirming that hunger constituted a violation of human dignity, considered it intolerable that some 825 million people did not have enough food to meet their basic nutritional needs. It recommended that the High Commissioner organize a third consultation on the right to food, with a focus on implementation mechanisms at the country level. It decided to appoint for a three-year period a special rapporteur on the right to food, who was to report in 2001. Governments, UN agencies, funds and programmes, treaty bodies and NGOs were requested to submit comments and suggestions on ways of realizing the right to food.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 June, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2000/L.5], adopted decision 2000/219 by recorded vote (39-1-1) [agenda item 2].

The right to food

At its 10th plenary meeting, on 16 June 2000, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/10 of 17 April 2000, endorsed the Commission's decision, in order to respond fully to the necessity for an integrated and co-ordinated approach in the promotion and protection of the right to food, to appoint, for a period of three years, a special rapporteur whose mandate will focus on the right to food and who will accomplish the following main activities:

(a) Seek, receive and respond to information on all aspects of the realization of the right to food, including the urgent necessity of eradicating hunger;

(b) Establish cooperation with Governments, inter-governmental organizations, in particular the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and non-governmental organizations on the promotion and effective implementation of the right to food, and make appropriate recommendations on the realization thereof, taking into consideration the work already done in this field throughout the United Nations system;

(c) Identify emerging issues related to the right to food worldwide.

The Council also endorsed the Commission's request to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to provide all necessary human and financial resources for the effective fulfilment of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2000/219:

In favour: Algeria, Austria, Bahrain, Belarus, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Canada, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Croatia, Cuba, Denmark, Fiji, France, Germany, Greece, India, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Mexico, New Zealand, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Poland, Portugal, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, United Kingdom, Venezuela, Viet Nam.

Against: Czech Republic.

Abstaining: United States.

On 4 September, the Commission Chairman appointed Jean Ziegler (Switzerland) as Special Rapporteur.

Right to adequate housing

On 17 April [res. 2000/9], the Commission decided to appoint for a three-year period a special rapporteur on the right to adequate housing. The Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision on 16 June (decision 2000/218). On 4 September, the Commission Chairman appointed Miloon Kothari (India) as Special Rapporteur.

Women's right to property and adequate housing

On 17 April [res. 2000/13], the Commission, urging Governments to comply with their obligations and commitments concerning land tenure and the equal rights of women to own property and to an adequate standard of living, including adequate housing, recommended that they encourage financial lending institutions to ensure they did not discriminate against women. It invited the Secretary-General, as ACC Chairman, to encourage all UN bodies to undertake further initiatives promoting women's equal ownership of, access to and control over land and the equal rights to own property and to adequate housing, and to allocate further resources for studying the impact of complex emergency situations. OHCHR, UNHCR and relevant international organizations were asked to address discrimination against women with respect to land, property and adequate housing in their programmes and field activities.

Right to education

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 662], the Secretary-General reported on identifying progressive developmental benchmarks and indicators related to the right to education [E/CN.4/2000/47]. He suggested that the Commission sharpen practical approaches for the realization of economic, social and cultural rights, including the right to education. A possibility would be for the identification of indicators and benchmarks to create a positive impact on treaty recommendations. Equally, the mainstreaming of human rights within UN work would support the future integration of human rights treaty recommendations, including support for data collection, indicator disaggregation and benchmark-setting, into country programmes developed with Governments. The tasks of determining the core content of the right to education and identifying right-to-education indicators remained outstanding. The Special Rapporteur on the right to education was working on clarifying the content of the right to education, which would assist in identifying right-to-education indicators. The Secretary-General proposed that the Commission consider whether the method and approach on right-to-education indicators ought to be emulated for other economic and social rights, such as the rights to health and safe water.

Report of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on the right to education, Katarina Tomasevski (Croatia), in a February report [E/CN.4/2000/6], focused on international co-operation from the viewpoint of financial obstacles to the realization of the right, especially at the level of primary education. She described the diminishing aid flows and the relative increase of aid for education, especially by multilateral agencies, and discussed the lack of coherence in international aid policies by highlighting the varying status of education, which was defined as a need or a right, subsumed under social development or poverty eradication. In a critique of the World Bank's recent education sector strategy, the Special Rapporteur pointed out discrepancies between the Bank's commitment to promoting basic education and to increasing its education lending, and discussed the need to apply pertinent international and domestic law. She continued to apply her 4-A scheme (availability, accessibility, acceptability and adaptability) to analyse governmental obligations corresponding to the right to education. She examined State and non-State schools and the jurisprudence relating to State funding for private schools and also discussed school vouchers and school fees. The Special Rapporteur continued her approach to double mainstreaming (i.e., by merging human rights and gender throughout education). In her discussion of the human-capital approach, she stated that the approach moulded education solely towards economically relevant knowledge, skills and competence, to the detriment of human rights values. The Special Rapporteur stated that vast amounts of data in the field of education did not conform to the human rights approach to education, and the human rights community needed to design indicators regarding the right to education and human rights in education.

Commission action. On 17 April [res. 2000/9], the Commission, welcoming the convening of the World Education Forum (Dakar, Senegal, 26-28 April) (see p. 1081), asked the Special Rapporteur to continue her work and to identify ways to overcome obstacles in the realization of the right to education, notably through international co-operation. It asked the Special Rapporteur to report in 2001. The High Commissioner was asked to organize in 2001 a workshop to identify progressive developmental benchmarks and indicators related to the right to education. UNICEF and UNESCO were invited to develop a dialogue with the Special Rapporteur and to report to the Commission on their activities in promoting primary education, particularly for women and children, especially girls. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 2001.

Note by Secretariat. A July note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/15], recalling the Subcommission's 1999 request [YUN 1999, p. 662] to Mustapha Mehedi (Algeria) to prepare a final paper on the realization of the right to education, including education in human rights, stated that Mr. Mehedi was not nominated for re-election to the Subcommission and thus had ceased to be a member. It noted that as at mid-July the final paper had not been submitted.

Environmental and scientific concerns

Toxic wastes

Report of Special Rapporteur. In March [E/CN.4/2000/50], the Special Rapporteur on the adverse effects of the illicit movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes on the enjoyment of human rights, Fatma-Zohra Ouhachi-Vesely (Algeria), described her activities and summarized comments she had received from six countries, as well as information submitted by concerned organizations. She reviewed and commented on three incidents of alleged toxic dumping and summarized replies from the Governments concerned. Information was provided on follow-up to her missions to Brazil, Costa Rica, Paraguay and South Africa [YUN 1998, p. 695]. The Special Rapporteur remarked on the absence of solutions to proven cases of illicit transfer of toxic products and regarding compensation for the victims and their families. The most alarming cases were related to the uncontrolled use of chemical substances, toxic agricultural products and persistent organic pollutants. She urged the Commission to consider the human rights aspects of problems that arose from the export of contaminated ships due for scrapping to developing countries.

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 37 to 16, the Commission, on 26 April [res. 2000/72], reaffirming that illicit traffic and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes constituted a serious threat to the human rights to life, health and a sound environment, urged Governments to take measures to prevent illegal trafficking. The Commission urged the Special Rapporteur to continue to study existing problems of and solutions to illicit trafficking, in particular in developing countries. She was asked to include in her 2001 report information on persons killed or injured in the developing countries through the illicit movement and dumping of toxic wastes; the question of impunity in those crimes; the question of rehabilitation of and assistance to victims; and the scope of national legislation in relation to transboundary movement and dumping of such products.

Water and sanitation services

Note by Secretariat. In a July note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/16 & Corr.1], the Secretariat, recalling a 1999 Subcommission request [YUN 1999, p. 663] to El-Hadji Guissé (Senegal) to supplement his 1998 working paper on the right of access of everyone to drinking water supply and sanitation services [YUN 1998, p. 696], transmitted the new information reported by Mr. Guissé. Mr. Guissé described measures regarding the right to drinking water supply and sanitation services taken by Belgium, France and Spain and by the European Council on Environmental Law. He noted that the world already lacked water and, unless acceptable legal measures were taken to ensure sound management of that common asset, real conflicts would break out between and within societies. He recommended the submission of a preliminary report in 2001, a progress report in 2002 and a final report in 2003.

Subcommission action. On 17 August [res. 2000/8], the Subcommission recommended that the Commission authorize it to appoint Mr. Guissé as Special Rapporteur to conduct a study on the relationship between the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights and the promotion of the realization of the right to drinking water supply and sanitation. The Special Rapporteur was asked to define as accurately and as fully as possible the content of the right to water in relation to other human rights and to submit a preliminary report in 2001, a progress report in 2002 and a final report in 2003. The Secretary-General was requested to invite Governments, UN bodies, the specialized agencies and interested NGOs to provide the Special Rapporteur with information.

Slavery and related issues

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, at its twenty-fifth session (Geneva 14-23 June) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/23], reviewed developments in contemporary forms of slavery and measures to prevent and repress all its forms, including the consideration of corruption and international debt as promoting factors of the phenomenon. It considered as a matter of priority the questions of bonded labour and debt bondage, as well as the issue of trafficking in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others. Other forms of exploitation examined were child labour, sexual exploitation, especially of children and domestic and migrant workers, the status of the slavery conventions, the activities of the United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery (see p. 708) and the Group's working methods.

The Group concluded that, despite the progress made in human rights protection and the preservation of human dignity, various forms of slavery still existed and new insidious forms were emerging. It made a series of recommendations on the issues it considered during the session.

Documents considered by the Group included May notes [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.2/2000/2, E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.2/2000/3] by the Secretary-General updating the status of the slavery conventions (1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery [YUN 1956, p. 228] and the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 317(IV) [YUN 1948-49, p. 613]); and a May report of the Secretary-General containing information on measures taken to prevent and repress all forms of slavery, as described by Governments, UN bodies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.2/2000/4 & Add.1].

Working paper. In response to a 1999 Subcommission request [YUN 1999, p. 665], David Weissbrodt (United States) and Anti-Slavery International, in May, updated their 1999 review [ibid.] of existing treaty and customary law covering slavery-related practices and monitoring mechanisms [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/3]. The authors concluded that, in view of the fact that no international mechanism existed to monitor and enforce States' obligations to abolish slavery and related practices, the Working Group's mandate could be extended to include a review procedure. Alternatively, the Group could focus on thematic issues relevant to the prevention of slavery, or the Commission could transform the Working Group into a special rapporteur. The authors recommended the publication of their updated review.

In a May addendum to the report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/3/Add.1], the authors discussed various forms of slavery, including serfdom, forced labour, debt bondage, exploitation of migrant workers, trafficking in human beings, prostitution, forced marriage and the sale of wives, child labour and child servitude, apartheid and colonialism, trafficking in human organs and incest. They concluded that, as a number of slavery-like practices had evolved, proposals had been made to expand the definition of contemporary forms of slavery which could dilute efforts to eradicate the historical forms of slavery. Such proposals should be carefully scrutinized.

Subcommission action. On 18 August [res. 2000/19], the Subcommission addressed bonded labour and debt bondage; the United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery (see p. 708); the prevention of traffic in persons and exploitation of the prostitution of others; international cooperation for the prevention of illegal trafficking in persons, prostitution and the expansion of the world sex industry; the prevention of trans-border trafficking of children; misuse of the Internet for sexual exploitation; implementation of the slavery conventions; migrant workers; child domestic workers; child labour; forced labour; the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography; and traffic in human organs and tissues.

The Subcommission invited Member States to provide information to the Working Group, in 2002, about measures taken to suppress or prevent debt bondage and to adopt national plans of action against trafficking in persons and exploitation of prostitution. It requested OHCHR to design guidelines for national plans of action against trafficking. It called for cooperation among government and law enforcement bodies to combat trafficking for the prostitution of women and children, the globalization of that industry and the misuse of the Internet to promote sex trafficking, sex tourism, sexual violence and sexual exploitation. Condemning practices of unequal treatment of migrant workers and the denial of their human dignity, the Subcommission decided to continue to give special attention to their situation, particularly domestic workers. The Secretary-General was asked to invite States to inform the Working Group of measures adopted to implement several programmes of action and declarations on the issues of exploitation of child labour, prevention of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, commercial sexual exploitation of children and other related developments, and to report to the Commission and the Subcommission in 2001. The Subcommission asked the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography to continue to pay attention to issues relating to traffic, such as organ transplantation, disappearances, the purchase and sale of children, adoption for commercial purposes or exploitation, child prostitution and child pornography (see p. 721).

Traffic in human organs and tissue

The Commission had before it a Secretariat note [E/CN.4/2000/78] stating that pursuant to the Commission's 1999 request to the Secretary-General to continue to examine the reliability of allegations regarding the removal of organs and tissues of children and adults for commercial purposes [YUN 1999, p. 665], he had asked Governments and relevant UN agencies, as well as the International Criminal Police Organization, for information on the issue. As at 30 November 1999, no replies had been received.

Sexual exploitation during armed conflict

Report of Special Rapporteur. In June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/21], the Special Rapporteur on systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during periods of armed conflict, Gay J. McDougall (United States), updated her final report [YUN 1998, p. 698]. She reported that sexual violence continued to be used as a weapon of war, as evidenced in reports of sexual slavery and other forms of sexual violence, including rape, being used by all sides to the conflicts in Afghanistan, Burundi, Colombia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Liberia and Myanmar. Other States affected were Indonesia, Sierra Leone and Uganda, as well as the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. She considered several aspects of the Statute of the International Criminal Court that represented the progressive development of international criminal law, particularly with respect to addressing gender-based crimes and sexual violence, and cited important developments in the ad hoc international criminal tribunals dealing with the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda (see PART FOUR, Chapter II). However, those international mechanisms would address only a small fraction of the violations that were being committed in contemporary armed conflicts; thus, it remained imperative that prosecution of such crimes take place at the national level. The right of victims to reparation had been developed in a revised set of basic principles and guidelines on the right to a remedy and reparation for victims of violations of international human rights and humanitarian law (see p. 665). Regarding developments concerning Japan's system of military sexual slavery during the Second World War [YUN 1996, p. 655], the atrocities committed against the so-called comfort women remained largely unremedied as there had been no reparation to the victims; thus, the Government had not fully discharged its obligations under international law. The Special Rapporteur noted efforts to redress abuses that took place in Europe during the Second World War, including trials of Nazi war criminals, agreements to compensate Holocaust victims whose assets were confiscated by the Nazis, and agreements to compensate victims of forced labour. Recommendations called for legislation at the national level, removal of gender bias in municipal law and procedure, protection for victims and witnesses, support services for victims, documentation with a view towards prosecution and action aimed at the cessation of hostilities.

Report of High Commissioner. In response to a 1999 Subcommission request [YUN 1999, p. 666], the High Commissioner, in June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/20], described systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during specific conflict situations as reported by human rights treaty bodies, special rapporteurs and the Commission. The High Commissioner observed that the most recent conflicts had been the scene of brutal attacks against civilians, especially women and children. Sexual violence had been used systematically to terrorize civilians and destroy the social structure, family structure and pride of the enemy.

Subcommission action. On 17 August [res. 2000/13], the Subcommission called on the High Commissioner to report in 2001 on the issue of systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices in situations of ongoing conflict.

1993 Programme of Action

In response to a 1997 Subcommission request [YUN 1997, p. 679], the Secretary-General, in May [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/22], presented information received from two Governments on action they had taken to implement the 1993 Programme of Action for the Elimination of the Exploitation of Child Labour [YUN 1993, p. 965]. A November note by the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/2001/77] drew the Commission's attention to the report.

Fund on slavery

Reports of Secretary-General. In March [E/CN.4/2000/80/Add.1], July [A/55/204] and December [E/CN.4/2001/82], the Secretary-General reported on the status of the United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery.

The Fund's Board of Trustees, at its fifth session (Geneva, 7-10 February), recommended 17 travel grants, amounting to $30,800, to enable NGO representatives to participate in the deliberations of the 2000 session of the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery (see p. 706), and 17 project grants amounting to $83,500. Taking into consideration the fact that requests received in 2000 amounted to some $700,000, the Board estimated that, in order to fulfil its mandate satisfactorily, the Fund would need $362,000 before its sixth session in January 2001. The Secretary-General reported that contributions available to the Board for grants in 2001 stood at $78,685 as at 23 November 2000, with pledges amounting to $54,112.

On 4 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's July report (decision 55/420).

Subcommission action. On 17 August [res. 2000/12], the Subcommission emphasized the need for regular contributions to the Fund so that the Board of Trustees could recommend grants to assist representatives of organizations to participate in the Group's deliberations in 2001 and to finance NGO humanitarian assistance projects. It encouraged the Board to finance NGOs from all regions in order to provide the widest possible view of contemporary forms of slavery in the world.

Women

Violence against women

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In February [E/CN.4/2000/68], the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, Radhika Coomaraswamy (Sri Lanka), highlighted women's movement, consensual and non-consensual, legal and illegal, for numerous reasons, including social, political, cultural and economic reasons. The element that distinguished trafficking from other forms of movement was its non-consensual nature. The Special Rapporteur emphasized the need in international law for a clear definition of trafficking, and provided a critique of the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 317(IV) [YUN 1948-49, p. 613].

The report emphasized that movement and migration, coupled with Governments' reactions to and attempts to restrict those movements through immigration and emigration policies and the exploitation of such attempts by traffickers, placed women in situations in which they were unprotected or marginally protected by law. It highlighted the Special Rapporteur's concern about the link between protectionist, anti-immigration policies and the phenomenon of trafficking. Concern was also raised over the law and order approach that was overwhelmingly adopted by Governments to combat trafficking. Those approaches were often at odds with human rights protection and might create or exacerbate trafficking in women. The report affirmed that the lack of women's rights was the prime factor of both women's migration and trafficking. The failure of existing economic, political and social structures to provide equal and just opportunities for women to work had contributed to the feminization of poverty, which in turn had led to the feminization of migration, as women left their homes in search of viable economic options. Further, political instability, militarism, civil unrest, internal armed conflict and natural disasters also exacerbated women's vulnerability. The report stressed States' responsibility to prevent, investigate and punish acts of trafficking in women and provide protection to trafficked persons. The Special Rapporteur presented recommendations for action at the international and national levels. In an addendum to her report [E/CN.4/2000/68/Add.1], she stated that she had received 7 replies to the 18 communications she had transmitted to States regarding alleged violence against women.

A further addendum [E/CN.4/2000/68/Add.5] examined the relationship of economic and social policies to violence against women. The policies spanned from international economic strategies for globalization to national laws regulating inheritance. The Special Rapporteur observed that economic and social disparities could exacerbate the disparities between men and women and worsen women's situations. Macro-policies of States and Governments might result in human rights violations and violence, such as preventable malnutrition, preventable diseases or complications during pregnancy and childbirth resulting in death. Violence against women generally derived from the perceived inferiority of women and the unequal status granted by laws and societal norms. Recommendations were made at the international and national levels.

At the invitation of Bangladesh, India and Nepal, the Special Rapporteur visited those countries to study the issue of trafficking in women and girls (28 October-15 November) [E/CN.4/2001/73/Add.2]. The primary purpose of trafficking in the region was for forced prostitution, but girls, boys and women were also trafficked for domestic service, organ harvesting, forced begging, forced labour in sweatshops, work as camel jockeys or forced marriage. The lack of implementation of laws aimed at ending trafficking was reflected in the low conviction rates for perpetrators of violent crimes against women. In Bangladesh, according to the police, of some 7,000 cases of violence against women registered in the past year there were only 21 convictions, while 2,000 cases were being processed. In Nepal, police figures showed that of some 150 cases of trafficking offences during the past year, 55 per cent resulted in acquittals. There was a need, in terms of trafficking of women and girls from Nepal and Bangladesh to India, to collect data so as to ascertain the true scope of the problem; estimates varied from 10,000 to 25,000. For many countries, trafficking was considered an immigration problem and the campaign against trafficking was linked to the desire to close borders to people from other countries. The Special Rapporteur proposed that trafficking should be dealt with as a human rights issue. The South Asia Association for Regional Cooperation was preparing to adopt a convention for preventing and combating trafficking in women and children for prostitution, but the Special Rapporteur stated that a regional convention could not solve the problem without a regional monitoring mechanism, as well as regional cooperation among law enforcement officials. The Special Rapporteur expressed concern that legislation on trafficking as proposed in most countries in the region was unduly harsh and violated human rights law. Victims and women's groups in the three countries recounted many cases of police corruption. The Special Rapporteur received a mixed picture about the judiciary's role in fighting trafficking, especially in India as a receiving country. In all the countries, there were very few medical facilities available for AIDS patients, and AIDS education among the sex workers was also minimal owing to the ambiguous legal position of women.

In Bangladesh, one of the poorest countries, there was extensive trafficking, primarily to India, Pakistan and destinations within the country, largely for purposes of forced prostitution, although in some cases for labour servitude. Some children had reportedly been trafficked to the Middle East to work as camel jockeys. Although the Government had made efforts to improve the situation, including the enactment of laws to prohibit certain forms of discrimination against women, the Special Rapporteur was concerned about the introduction of new draconian laws and the application of the death penalty for a range of crimes against women, including trafficking, rape, acid throwing/burning and dowry violence. Police were aware of the problem of violence against women but most had not received training in handling such cases. The Government had set up women's police units to look into cases but the actual number of cases filed in court was extremely small. The Government had no special programmes relating to the social welfare of trafficked women.

Nepal was a primary sending country for the region, with India the main destination. It was estimated that 100,000 to 200,000 women from Nepal were engaged in exploitative situations of prostitution in India. Landlessness among women, unemployment and underemployment, poverty, widespread gender discrimination, religious and cultural sanctions for prostitution among certain groups and the growing acceptance of the inevitability of migration contributed to trafficking of women and children from the country. Discriminatory inheritance laws and citizenship laws were other factors. The Government had identified trafficking as one of its major priorities and had developed a national plan of action; however, it focused on the victim, awareness-raising, health and education and rescue and rehabilitation, but was not very concerned with traffickers, their prosecution and punishment. The Special Rapporteur was encouraged that the police at border posts seemed aware of the problem and were determined to deal with it. As in Bangladesh, rescue and social welfare for victims had been left to NGOs. International agencies in Nepal had been extremely active regarding trafficking.

India was a source, a transit point for persons trafficked to Pakistan and the Gulf States, and a destination for trafficked persons, and it remained the main receiving country in the region. Internal trafficking also occurred from the rural, economically depressed areas to the cities. The National Commission on Women was examining the possibility of replacing existing legislation with comprehensive trafficking prevention legislation. A manual for police training in the area of trafficking was being developed with the help of UNICEF. The Special Rapporteur questioned the use of government homes as a means of rehabilitating victims. Unlike other countries in the region, the United Nations in India did not have an integrated, coordinated strategy to address trafficking.

The Special Rapporteur presented recommendations for action at the international, national and regional levels.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2000/45], the Commission, condemning all acts of gender-based violence against women and violence occurring in the family, asked special rapporteurs, UN bodies, specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations to consider violence against women in their respective mandates and to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur. States were called on to: ratify and implement relevant international human rights instruments; report on violence against women and measures taken to implement the 1993 Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 48/104 [YUN 1993, p. 1046], and the 1995 Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170]; condemn violence against women and not invoke custom, tradition or religion to avoid obligations to eliminate such violence; enact and reinforce or amend penal, civil, labour and administrative sanctions in domestic legislation to punish and redress the wrongs done to women and girls who were subjected to violence; conduct information campaigns about violence against women; establish relations with NGOs and community-based organizations to develop policies on violence against women; and create, improve or develop and fund training programmes for judicial, legal, medical, social, educational, police, correctional service, military, peacekeeping, humanitarian relief and immigration personnel in order to avoid the abuse of power leading to violence against women. The Commission asked Governments to support initiatives of women's organizations and NGOs to raise awareness of violence against women and to contribute to its elimination. The Commission decided to renew the Special Rapporteur's mandate for an additional three-year period, a decision endorsed by the Economic and Social Council on 28 July (decision 2000/266).

Women migrant workers

In response to its 1998 request [YUN 1998, p. 701], the Commission considered a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/2000/76] containing information received from Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations on measures they had taken to address violence against women migrant workers. Concluding that more extensive information was required on the situation of women migrant workers in order to identify concrete strategies, the Secretary-General called for additional attention at the national and international levels.

Commission action. On 25 April [res. 2000/54], the Commission called on Governments, if they had not done so, to set up penal sanctions to punish perpetrators of violence against women migrant workers, and to provide victims with assistance to allow them to be present during the judicial process, to safeguard their dignified return to the country of origin, and to establish reintegration and rehabilitation schemes for returning women migrant workers. States were invited to adopt legal measures against intermediaries who encouraged the clandestine movement of workers and who exploited women migrant workers. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 2002.

Traditional practices affecting the health of women and girls

Report of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 1999 Subcommission request [YUN 1999, p. 669], the Special Rapporteur on traditional practices affecting the health of women and the girl child, Halima Embarek Warzazi (Morocco), in a June report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/17], reviewed the latest initiatives taken against the practice of female genital mutilation and other traditional practices. The Special Rapporteur welcomed the positive developments that had occurred in the struggle against some traditional practices, such as female genital mutilation, son preference, practices related to pregnancy, early marriage and the phenomenon of violence in the family. Nevertheless, despite the slow but steady progress in the campaign against female genital mutilation, the Special Rapporteur drew attention to the fact that many harmful traditional practices, discriminatory attitudes and acts of violence existed and were not being dealt with as they should. The case of the crime of honour was an illustration of such violence exclusively affecting women and girls.

Subcommission action. On 17 August [res. 2000/10], the Subcommission appealed to States to intensify public awareness concerning the effects of all forms of harmful traditional practices and asked NGOs to study the various practices and ways to eradicate them and to inform the Special Rapporteur of any situation that merited the attention of the international community. It called on Governments to implement the 1994 Plan of Action on the practice [YUN 1994, p. 1123] and asked the Secretary-General to invite them to submit information regularly on the situation regarding those practices. The Subcommission proposed that three seminars be held, in Africa, Asia and Europe, to review progress achieved since 1985 and ways to overcome the obstacles encountered in implementing the Plan of Action. The Subcommission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for a further two years and asked her to report in 2001 and 2002.

Traffic in women and girls

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 669], the Secretary-General, in January [E/CN.4/2000/66], described activities of the UN system and other international organizations to combat trafficking in women and girls. He stated that the root causes of trafficking were poverty, food scarcity, unemployment and indebtedness, violence against women, gender discrimination, the lack of appropriate legislation, lack of political will, public sector corruption, the growing feminization of labour migration on the one hand and increasingly restrictive immigration policies of recipient countries on the other, increased power and involvement of transnational criminal networks, the rapidly expanding global sex industry and the growing gap between rich and poor countries. Progress to eliminate the phenomenon and to protect the rights of trafficked persons could be made only by addressing those causes. It was important to ensure that human rights were integrated into analysis of the trafficking problem and the development of solutions. The integration of a human rights perspective into UN anti-trafficking activities was an essential aspect of the broader commitment of the Organization to the integration of human rights throughout its work.

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2000/44], the Commission called on Governments to criminalize trafficking in women and girls and to condemn and penalize offenders, urged them to address the root factors and encouraged them to conclude bilateral, subregional, regional and international agreements to address the problem. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 2001.

Mainstreaming women's rights

Reports of Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1999 Commission request [YUN 1999, p. 670], the Secretary-General reported on steps taken to integrate gender perspectives fully into the UN human rights system [E/CN.4/2000/67], particularly OHCHR, human rights treaty bodies, human rights mechanisms, UN bodies and specialized agencies. He recommended that Governments ratify the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895], and the Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 561]. The obligations of States to prevent and redress violations of women's rights needed further clarification. Progress had been made in implementing the recommendations of the expert group meeting on the development of guidelines for the integration of gender perspectives into human rights activities and programmes [YUN 1995, p. 767]. Guidelines that were still relevant were reproduced in the report and were updated to reflect changes in the UN structure.

In January [E/CN.4/2000/118-E/CN.6/2000/8], the Secretary-General presented the joint work plan of the United Nations Division for the Advancement of Women and OHCHR for 2000. It highlighted support for the work of treaty bodies and selected special mechanisms and cooperation between national machinery for the advancement of women and national human rights institutions. Cooperation between the Division and OHCHR would continue on the work of treaty bodies. The web sites of the Division (un.org/womenwatch/daw) and the Office (unhchr.ch) would be further improved to facilitate communication. The Division would continue to monitor progress in the work of treaty bodies in integrating a gender perspective and would provide gender-specific input for their work. Support would be provided for the work of the Commission's special rapporteurs on violence against women, as well as the Subcommission's experts on affirmative action and on reservations. Annexed to the report was an excerpt from the report of the 1999 workshop on gender integration into the human rights system [YUN 1999, p. 670].

In 2000, OHCHR collaborated with the Division in organizing an expert group meeting on the HIV/AIDS pandemic and its gender implications (Windhoek, Namibia, 13-17 November). OHCHR and the United Nations Development Fund for Women collaborated with the Division in organizing an expert group meeting on gender and racial discrimination (Zagreb, Croatia, 21-24 November).

Commission action. On 20 April [res. 2000/46], the Commission, emphasizing the need for further activities in the UN system to strengthen expertise concerning the equal status of human rights of women, asked the human rights treaty bodies, special procedures and other human rights mechanisms of the Commission and the Subcommission to take a gender perspective into account in implementing their mandates, and to include in their reports information on and qualitative analysis of women's and girls' human rights. It encouraged the treaty bodies to monitor more effectively the human rights of women in their activities, and reaffirmed their responsibility to integrate a gender perspective in their work. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 2001 and decided to integrate a gender perspective into all of its agenda items. The Economic and Social Council endorsed that decision on 28 July (decision 2000/267).

The girl child

On 27 April [res. 2000/85], the Commission called on States to institute legal reforms to ensure girls' enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms; to eliminate discrimination against girls and the root causes of son preference; to eradicate traditional or customary practices, particularly female genital mutilation, that were harmful to women and girls; and to enact and enforce laws to ensure that marriage was entered into only with the consent of the intending spouses, to enact and enforce laws concerning the minimum legal age for marriage, and to raise the minimum age for marriage where necessary.

(See also p. 1114.)

Women in Afghanistan

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 2000/18], the Commission, condemning the continuing grave human rights violations of women and girls in Afghanistan, particularly in Taliban-controlled areas, urged all Afghan parties, particularly the Taliban, to end those violations and to ensure: the repeal of legislative and other measures that discriminated against women and girls; women's participation in civil, cultural, economic, political and social life; respect for women's right to work; the right of women and girls to education without discrimination, the re-opening of schools and the admission of women and girls to all levels of education; respect for women's right to security of person and that those responsible for physical attacks on women were brought to justice; respect for women's freedom of movement; and equal access to facilities for physical and mental health. The Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan (see p. 750) was asked to continue to pay attention to the human rights of women and children and to apply a gender perspective in his 2001 report to the Commission.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in a July report on the situation of women and girls in Afghanistan [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/18], stated that their rights continued to be violated as a result of years of armed conflict, poverty and profound underdevelopment. There had been some easing of restrictions in some parts of the country, particularly in terms of women's and girls' access to health services, education and employment opportunities. The report examined areas of principal concern, including health, education, employment and freedom of movement. As there was little reporting and information on the situation in the territory controlled by the United Front, the Secretary-General called for strengthening the monitoring and evaluation of women's and girls' human rights promotion and protection in those areas. He described UN programmes and strategies.

The Secretary-General concluded that the situation of women and girls remained extremely serious; it was aggravated by the undeclared policy of gender discrimination. All Afghan parties, particularly the Taliban, should end the human rights violations and urgently ensure the elimination of discrimination against women; the participation of women in civil, cultural, economic, political and social life; respect for the right of women to work and reintegration in their employment; the right to education without discrimination; respect for women's right to security of person; respect for freedom of movement; and access to facilities necessary to protect their right to physical and mental health. The Secretary-General pointed to the need for the UN system in Afghanistan to reconsider its female recruitment policies and develop time-bound targets to employ more Professional internationally recruited women; give high priority to national female staff to enable them to perform their duties; and regulate, follow up and monitor Afghanistan's gradual relaxation of the mahatma edict for non-Afghan Muslim female staff—by issuing visas to non-Afghan Muslim women who were internationally recruited in the UN system.

Subcommission action. On 17 August [res. 2000/11], the Subcommission, condemning all forms of discrimination and violation affecting women and girls in the territories controlled by Afghan armed groups, considered it essential that the international community continue to follow closely their situation and bring the necessary pressure to bear so that all restrictions imposed on women were removed. It asked the Commission to insist that the Afghan armed groups abide by international human rights standards in relation to women, which entailed the repeal of all edicts and the end to all forms of discrimination based on sex. The Secretary-General was requested to make available all information compiled on the situation.

(See also p. 1120.)

Children

On 27 April, the Commission, in its resolution on the rights of the child [res. 2000/85], called on States to ensure the registration of all children immediately after birth, to respect the right of the child to preserve his or her identity and to ensure that a child would not be separated from his or her parents against their will, except when determined by competent authorities that such separation was necessary for the child's best interest. It urged Governments to protect children infected and/or affected by HIV/AIDS from all forms of discrimination, stigma, abuse and neglect, in particular in the access to and provision of health, education and social services. States were called on to promote children's right to education. The Commission asked all relevant human rights mechanisms to pay attention to the special situations of violence against children. It called on States to ensure the full and equal enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms by children with disabilities, and to protect the human rights of migrant children. They were also asked to devise economic and social solutions to the problems causing children to work and/or to live on the street, to increase protection of refugee and internally displaced children and to ensure that every child alleged to have or recognized as having infringed the penal law was treated in accordance with their obligations under the Convention on the Rights of the Child (see p. 614), adopted by General Assembly resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 561], and other international human rights instruments. States and other relevant actors were urged to promote the physical and psychological recovery and social reintegration of a child victim of any form of neglect, exploitation or abuse, torture or any other form of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, or armed conflicts. The Commission recommended that, within their mandates, relevant human rights mechanisms and entities of the UN system and specialized agencies take a child's rights perspective into account in implementing their mandates, and that they take into account the work of the Committee on the Rights of the Child (see p. 614). The Commission's recommendation was approved by the Economic and Social Council on 28 July (decision 2000/280). The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 2001.

Other aspects of the Commission's resolution—child labour, the prevention and eradication of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, and protection of children affected by armed conflict—are covered below.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/598], adopted resolution 55/79 without vote [agenda item 110].

The rights of the child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 54/148 and 54/149 of 17 December 1999, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/85 of 27 April 2000,

Bearing in mind the Convention on the Rights of the Child, emphasizing that the provisions of the Convention and other relevant human rights instruments must constitute the standard in the promotion and protection of the rights of the child, and reaffirming that the best interest of the child shall be the primary consideration in all actions concerning children,

Reaffirming the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s adopted by the World Summit for Children, held in New York on 29 and 30 September 1990, and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, which, inter alia, states that national and international mechanisms and programmes for the defence and protection of children, in particular those in especially difficult circumstances, should be strengthened, including through effective measures to combat exploitation and abuse of children, such as female infanticide, harmful child labour, sale of children and organs, child prostitution and child pornography, and which reaffirms that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are universal,

Recalling its resolution 54/93 of 7 December 1999, by which it decided to convene a special session in September 2001 to follow up the World Summit for Children, and stressing the importance of addressing the rights and needs of the child in the preparatory process of the special session and the special session itself,

Profoundly concerned that the situation of girls and boys in many parts of the world remains critical as a result of the persistence of poverty, social inequality, inadequate social and economic conditions in an increasingly globalized world economy, pandemics, in particular human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome, natural disasters, armed conflict, displacement, exploitation, illiteracy, hunger, intolerance, discrimination and inadequate legal protection, and convinced that urgent and effective national and international action is called for,

Underlining the need for mainstreaming a gender perspective in all policies and programmes relating to children,

Recognizing the need for the realization of a standard of living adequate for the child's physical, mental, spiritual, moral and social development, the protection of the child from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, the provision of universal and equal access to primary education and the implementation of the commitments on the education of children contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Concerned at the number of illegal adoptions, of children growing up without parents and of child victims of family and social violence, neglect and abuse,

Welcoming the adoption of the Optional Protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict and on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography,

Recognizing that partnership among Governments, international organizations and all sectors of civil society, in particular non-governmental organizations, is important to realizing the rights of the child,

Stressing the importance of integrating child-related issues into the work of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, the United Nations Conference on the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects and the special session of the General Assembly on the problem of human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome in all its aspects, to be held in 2001,

I

Implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child

1. Once again urges the States that have not yet done so to sign and ratify or accede to the Convention on the Rights of the Child as a matter of priority with a view to reaching the goal of universal adherence as soon as possible;

2. Invites States to consider signing and ratifying the Optional Protocols to the Convention as a matter of priority with a view to their entry into force as soon as possible, bearing in mind the convening of the special session of the General Assembly to follow up the World Summit for Children in September 2001;

3. Reiterates its concern at the great number of reservations to the Convention, and urges States parties to withdraw reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and to review on a regular basis any reservations with a view to withdrawing them;

4. Calls upon States parties to implement fully the Convention, stresses that the implementation of the Convention contributes to the achievement of the goals of the World Summit for Children, and recommends that a thorough assessment of ten years of implementation of the Convention be an essential element in the preparation of the special session to follow up the Summit;

5. Urges States to assure the child who is capable of forming his or her own views the right to express those views freely in all matters that affect him or her, the views being given due weight in accordance with the age and maturity of the child, and in this regard to involve children and young people in their efforts to implement the goals of the Summit and the Convention, as well as in other programmes relating to children and young people, as appropriate;

6. Calls upon States parties to cooperate closely with the Committee on the Rights of the Child and to comply in a timely manner with their reporting obligations under the Convention, in accordance with the guidelines elaborated by the Committee, and encourages States parties to take into account the recommendations made by the Committee in the implementation of the provisions of the Convention;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the provision of appropriate staff and facilities for the effective and expeditious performance of the functions of the Committee, notes the temporary support given by the plan of action of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to strengthen the important role of the Committee in advancing the implementation of the Convention, and also requests the Secretary-General to make available information on the follow-up to the plan of action;

8. Calls upon States parties urgently to take appropriate measures so that acceptance of the amendment to paragraph 2 of article 43 of the Convention by a two-thirds majority of States parties can be reached as soon as possible in order for the amendment to enter into force, thus increasing the membership of the Committee from ten to eighteen experts, bearing in mind, inter alia, the additional workload of the Committee when the two Optional Protocols to the Convention enter into force;

9. Invites the Committee to continue to enhance its constructive dialogue with the States parties and its transparent and effective functioning;

Sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 1999 Commission request [YUN 1999, p. 672], the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, Ofelia Calcetas-Santos (Philippines), in January [E/CN.4/2000/73], focused on the role of the family and the impact of domestic violence on the child. She described some international and country-specific developments relating to those issues, and the legal framework for the protection of children from all types of violence. After comparing the various forms of family violence, the Special Rapporteur noted certain factors linked to child abuse in the family, including a perception of power over the victim; a desire to compensate for low self-esteem; depression due to frustration and a general feeling of incompetence; a pre-conditioned attitude caused by a background of family abuse; drug, alcohol, substance and gambling addiction; cultural influence; a lack of awareness about children's rights; and conjugal difficulties. Evidence suggested an association, rather than a direct causal link, between childhood physical and sexual abuse, running away from home and subsequent involvement in prostitution. The Special Rapporteur recommended raising public awareness as to the harm of non-physical abuse; including sex education in schools; involving a range of professionals from various disciplines in conceptualizing programmes in order to ensure that the family was the primary caretaker of children; psychotherapy for sexually abused children; forums for children to be heard; and telephone hotlines for children to report abuse and consult a trained counsellor.

The Special Rapporteur visited Morocco (28 February–3 March) [E/CN.4/2001/78/Add.1] to study the issue of commercial sexual exploitation. The Special Rapporteur examined children in situations of economic exploitation, adoption, and trafficking and clandestine immigration, as well as prostitution, sex tourism and pornography. Of the three elements of the Special Rapporteur's mandate, child prostitution (boys and girls) was the most problematic and occurred in each of the five cities (Casablanca, Rabat, Meknès, Tangier, Marrakech) she visited. The widespread abuse of young girls working as household maids was also among the most serious problems. In most cases, the girls, 50 per cent of whom were below the age of 10, were sent by their families from rural areas to work as maids in houses in the cities. Morocco was facing the problem of clandestine emigration, attributable to globalization, which gave young people the perception of many opportunities in a more developed country. Child sex abuse was largely carried out by Moroccans and there were few reported cases where children had been used in prostitution for foreigners. Very few cases of child pornography were reported. The Special Rapporteur detected a genuine willingness on the part of the Government to confront the spread of child exploitation and to alleviate the suffering of children in situations of exploitation and abuse. She made recommendations regarding street children, the clandestine emigration of children, legislation, the situation of child maids, the prostitution of girls, response mechanisms to enable children to seek help, and drawing on the private sector for the protection of children and for the promotion and enhancement of their rights.

In the Russian Federation (Moscow and St. Petersburg, 2–11 October) [E/CN.4/2001/78/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur visited State institutions, including orphanages and medical centres, and met with UN agencies and other international organizations, academics and NGOs. In addition to the sale of children in the context of international adoption, child prostitution and child pornography, the Special Rapporteur considered the problem of child labour. In general, international adoption was not considered to be a common motive for trafficking. However, huge bribes were offered to judges and orphanages to speed up the adoption process, while the police had been reluctant to curtail such abuses. Legal staff attributed the growing number of children being adopted outside the country to the increasing involvement of middlemen, who were finding various ways to circumvent legal provisions. Prostitution was a widely developed business and, if the child was over 14, it was not considered a crime unless violence was involved.

The Special Rapporteur observed that the plight of social orphans—children without any effective caregivers in their lives—was particularly problematic. That phenomenon was largely attributed to extensive alcoholism among adults, which was also spreading among the younger population. The solution thus far had been to institutionalize the child, rather than confront the root problems. The lack of sex education in schools accounted for many cases of sexually transmitted diseases. The Government had tried to initiate a programme of sex education, but it was met with hostility by parents. Recommendations related to the allocation of resources to provide training in child rights, the establishment of special courts to deal with minors and their affairs, the creation of a position of children's ombudsman, greater use of foster parents, the development of networks of street educators to encourage children to leave the streets, mobilization of the media to address violence and pornography, the introduction of sex education in schools and apprenticeship programmes for youth.

Commission action. On 27 April [res. 2000/85], the Commission called on States to ensure the application of international standards concerning the prevention and the combat of trafficking and sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, to take into account the problems posed by the use of the Internet in that regard, to enact, review and revise relevant laws, policies, programmes and practices, and to criminalize and penalize all forms of sexual exploitation and sexual abuse of children. The Commission asked that assistance be provided to the Special Rapporteur for her work and to enable her to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 2000 and a report to the Commission in 2001. The Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's request on 28 July (decision 2000/280).

Interim report of Special Rapporteur. In response to the Commission's request, the Special Rapporteur submitted, in August [A/55/297], an interim report updating developments relating to her mandate and country-specific and regional developments.

(For information on the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, see p. 615.)

Child labour

Commission action. On 27 April [res. 2000/85], the Commission called on States to eliminate child labour contrary to accepted international standards; ratify the conventions of the International Labour Organization (ILO) relating to child labour; examine and devise economic policies that addressed the problem; promote education as a key strategy to prevent child labour; and assess and examine the magnitude, nature and causes of child labour and develop strategies to eliminate the practice.

Children and armed conflict

Report of Special Representative. In response to General Assembly resolution 53/128 [YUN 1998, p. 712], the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict, Olara A. Otunnu (Côte d'Ivoire), in February [E/CN.4/2000/71], provided an update on commitments to cease recruitment of children made to him during his field missions in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 710] and 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 674]. The report supplemented the recommendations he had made in 1999. The Special Representative urged the international community to eliminate child soldiering by: advocating for 18 as the minimum age for participation in conflict; monitoring and compelling adherence by all parties in conflict to their commitments to protect children; mobilizing international pressure against warring parties that used children as combatants; addressing the political, social and economic factors that facilitated the exploitation of children as soldiers; and responding to the rehabilitation needs of ex-child soldiers.

Currently, there were over 300,000 young persons under the age of 18 taking part in hostilities in over 30 countries. The Special Representative advocated the integration of the protection and welfare of children into UN-mandated peace operations. In order to achieve that objective, he proposed including in the mandates of peacekeeping operations the protection and needs of children, instituting child protection advisers in relevant peacekeeping operations, and providing training on the rights and protection of children for peace operation personnel (see also p. 94).

Commission action. On 27 April [res. 2000/85], the Commission called on States and other parties to armed conflicts to respect international humanitarian law. States and relevant UN bodies and agencies and regional organizations were called on to integrate the rights of the child into all activities in conflict and post-conflict situations. The Commission recommended that the Special Representative and relevant UN entities continue to develop a concerted approach on the rights, protection and welfare of children affected by armed conflict, and to increase co-operation among their respective mandates and with NGOs, in the planning of field visits and follow-up to the Special Representative's recommendations.

The Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's recommendation on 28 July (decision 2000/280).

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with Security Council resolution 1261 (1999) [YUN 1999, p. 672], the Secretary-General, in July [A/55/163-S/2000/712], identified steps that were under way and others that could be taken by national, regional and international actors to fulfil collective responsibilities towards children in armed conflict. Among a wide-ranging series of recommendations, the Secretary-General called on Member States to ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict (see p. 615), the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court (see p. 1238) and ILO Convention No. 182 on the Worst Forms of Child Labour [YUN 1999, p. 1388], all of which contained provisions to protect children in situations of armed conflict. He proposed measures regarding the monitoring of and compliance with obligations and commitments, ensuring access to humanitarian assistance, curbing the illicit flow of small arms, ending the threat of landmines, protecting children from the impact of sanctions, improving the situation of uprooted and displaced children, respecting the rights and special needs of girls, protecting child soldiers and providing education, especially to adolescents, throughout and after periods of armed conflict.

The Secretary-General stated that the Council had adopted the proposal that child protection advisers be deployed with peacekeeping operations, and presented the terms of reference for those advisers (see p. 94). Two peacekeeping operations currently had child protection advisers on the ground; two were seconded from UNICEF and a third was previously with a UN peacekeeping operation. The Secretariat was working to ensure that peacekeeping personnel received training in international law, including child- and gender-related provisions. Post-conflict responses for children included psychosocial healing, strengthening norms and institutions to protect children's rights, reunification of children with their families and child-friendly spaces for development and protection. The Secretary-General concluded that more timely warning systems and better ongoing monitoring and reporting were needed to prevent the worst abuses. Should preventive steps fail, concerted efforts at the local, national, regional and global levels were needed to protect children. The United Nations would continue to seek closer cooperation and more regular consultations with regional and subregional organizations and arrangements concerning children's protection.

The Agenda called for political, moral, economic and social leadership to safeguard children and protect their rights in situations of armed conflict. It was necessary that States and other parties to armed conflict respect their obligations to children affected by conflict under international human rights and humanitarian law. Other measures called for included increased accountability and the end to impunity, the release of abducted children, prevention of the root causes of conflict, promotion of children's health and well-being, and concerted action over the long term for war-affected children.

Interim report of Special Representative. In response to General Assembly resolution 54/149 [YUN 1999, p. 676], the Special Representative, in an October report [A/55/442], assessed overall progress achieved during the course of his initial three-year mandate and outlined an agenda for future action. He also described country visits made by him or representatives of his Office. During his visit to Colombia (7-9 April), the Spe-
