cial Representative congratulated the Government on having discharged the final contingent of 950 soldiers under the age of 18 in December 1999. After another appeal from the Special Representative, the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC) said in April that they had "committed an error" in recruiting youth under 15 and had repudiated the practice. The Special Representative called on FARC to demobilize those soldiers. His Office undertook a joint mission to East and West Timor (14-21 June) with the Japan Committee for UNICEF and its Goodwill Ambassador. Efforts had been made to protect children during the emergency and the ensuing reconstruction phases in East Timor (see p. 277). The Office made proposals aimed at ensuring that children's concerns were considered in policies and programmes. During his visit to Northern Ireland (26-28 June), the Special Representative appealed to political leaders to address the basic concerns of children, expressed support for the establishment of a body dedicated to promoting children's rights, and insisted that paramilitary organizations refrain from recruiting or using children in their organizations or involving them in violence. Punishment beatings should be halted, the Government should provide more support for families and parents affected by violence, and youth should be involved in the building and consolidation of peace. The Office participated in a workshop on the National Commission for War-Affected Children (16-18 August), convened by Sierra Leone with the support of the UNICEF country office and Canada. The workshop made recommendations regarding the structure, role and objectives of the National Commission and the procedures for its formal establishment, scheduled for 2001.

In future, the Special Representative intended to concentrate on building a global social and political movement of awareness, pressure and protection for children affected by armed conflict. The emphasis would be on consolidating progress achieved thus far, extending and deepening initiatives in priority areas, with a view to creating a critical and sustainable mass of activities and developing an era of application on the ground.

(For information on the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict, see p. 615.)

Abduction of children from northern Uganda

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in response to the Commission's 1999 request [YUN 1999, p. 675], summarized information on the situation of children abducted from northern Uganda received from the Sudan, international organizations and NGOs [E/CN.4/2000/69]. The International Save the Children Alliance reported that there had been a great reduction in the number of incidents in 1999 and that children who had escaped or were rescued were taken to two rehabilitation centres in Gulu. According to the centres, up until the first quarter of 1999, a total of 5,837 children had been reintegrated since the beginning of the conflict into their communities after receiving medical treatment, counselling and education. Estimates as to the number of children believed to be in the southern Sudan camp of the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA), an armed opposition group, varied between 2,000 and 5,000. Many of the children had reportedly been killed either by their abductors or as a result of having been forced to participate in conflicts. The sexual exploitation of many of the abducted girls had reportedly led to the birth of some 200 babies.

Commission action. On 26 April [res. 2000/60], the Commission, condemning LRA for the abduction, torture, killing, rape, enslavement and forcible recruitment of children in northern Uganda, demanded an end to the abductions and called for the children's unconditional release and safe return. It asked the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture (see p. 682) to assist victims and their families. OHCHR was requested to assess the situation on the ground in the affected areas, including victims' needs, in consultation with relevant UN organizations and NGOs, and to report in 2001.

The Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's request to OHCHR on 28 July (decision 2000/274).

Indigenous populations

Commission action. On 25 April [res. 2000/56], the Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council authorize the Subcommission's Working Group on Indigenous Populations to meet for five working days prior to the Subcommission's 2000 session. It welcomed the Group's proposal to highlight specific themes of the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People (1995-2004), proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 48/163 [YUN 1993, p. 865], in its future sessions, noting that in 2000 the Group would focus on the theme of indigenous children and youth. The Commission invited the Group to continue to consider ways in which the expertise of indigenous people could contribute to its work. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Group and to transmit the Group's reports to Governments, organizations of indigenous people, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for comments and suggestions.

On 28 July, the Council authorized the Working Group to meet for five days prior to the Subcommission's 2000 session and approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General (decision 2000/271).

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Indigenous Populations held its eighteenth session (Geneva, 24-28 July) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/24] to review developments pertaining to the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous peoples, and to give attention to the evolution of standards concerning their rights. In annotations to the provisional agenda [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2000/1/Add.1], the Secretary-General presented background information on land issues, education and health; the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People (see p. 727); the 2001 World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (see p. 641); and standard-setting activities, including a review of indigenous peoples' relationship with natural resource, energy and mining companies, together with information received from an indigenous organization [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2000/5]. Regarding the session's principal theme, indigenous children and youth, the Group considered a note by the Secretariat identifying issues related to the topic [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2000/2]. In consultation with indigenous representatives, the following themes emerged: indigenous children in armed conflict; discrimination in health, the administration of justice and employment; education, including the loss of indigenous languages and culture; and child labour and sexual exploitation of indigenous children and youth. In related action, the first NGO workshop on indigenous children and youth (Geneva, 19-21 July) adopted a resolution, which was annexed to the Group's report. The Group recommended that OHCHR organize a second workshop in cooperation with UNICEF, indigenous organizations and child rights NGOs.

The Group decided to propose to the Commission and Subcommission that a world conference on indigenous issues be held during the last year of the Decade (2004) to evaluate the Decade's activities and consider future action. Further recommendations related to the Decade included a meeting or workshop in 2001 to evaluate progress and a seminar, organized by OHCHR, on legal instruments between indigenous peoples and States. The Group encouraged OHCHR, in collaboration with ILO, WTO and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to organize a workshop on indigenous peoples, private sector natural resource, energy and mining companies, and human rights. It asked its Chairperson-Rapporteur to present a working paper on indigenous peoples and natural resource companies, with a view to developing model processes for the protection of indigenous peoples' cultural, social, economic and environmental rights. Regarding the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, the Group recommended that a chapter in both the declaration and the programme of action of the Conference be dedicated to indigenous peoples. The theme "Indigenous peoples and their right to development, including their right to participate in development affecting them" was chosen as the main theme for the Group's session in 2001.

The Group's Chairperson-Rapporteur, Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece), visited Mexico (28 January-14 February) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/40], where she expressed concern over the militarization of indigenous areas and the increasing use of the military for police functions; reports that communities were deprived of their traditional lands and the fragmentation of indigenous lands; allegations of government interference, particularly in Chiapas and Guerrero, including the removal of indigenous authorities and their replacement by others selected by the Government, as well as the phenomenon of re-municipalization which appeared to undercut democratic processes; and the need for more resources in the area of health. The Chairperson commended efforts by the Government to facilitate education for indigenous peoples, among other things.

Workshop. In accordance with a 1998 Subcommission resolution [YUN 1998, p. 720], OHCHR, in cooperation with the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI), organized a workshop on promoting the rights and cultures of indigenous peoples through the media (New York, 11-14 December) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2001/3]. The workshop underlined the importance of indigenous media as an indispensable tool to promote indigenous identity, language, culture, self-representation and collective and human rights, and as a vehicle for communicating international, regional and national issues to indigenous communities, as well as conveying community concerns to a wider public. Recommendations included strengthening the indigenous media, establishing an indigenous media agency, creating a UN web page on indigenous peoples and instituting training seminars for indigenous media to enable them to better use the global press.

Subcommission action. On 17 August [res. 2000/14], the Subcommission asked the Secretary-

General to transmit the Working Group's report on its 2000 session to the High Commissioner, indigenous organizations, Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs concerned, as well as to thematic rapporteurs, special representatives, independent experts and working groups, and asked that it be made available to the Commission in 2001. It recommended that the Group, upon request, assist the working group to elaborate further the draft UN declaration on the rights of indigenous people (see p. 729), and adopt for its 2001 session the principal theme "Indigenous peoples and their right to development". The Commission was asked to invite Governments, intergovernmental organizations, indigenous organizations and NGOs to provide information and data, particularly on the principal theme. The High Commissioner was requested to encourage studies on the rights to food and adequate nutrition of indigenous peoples and indigenous peoples and poverty, and, in consultation with Governments, to organize meetings on indigenous issues. The Subcommission recommended that Ms. Daes prepare a second working paper on indigenous peoples and racism and racial discrimination for consideration at the second (2001) session of the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance. It asked Miguel Alfonso-Martínez (Cuba) to submit in 2001 a working paper on principles and guidelines for private sector energy and mining concerns that might affect indigenous lands. The Subcommission recommended that OHCHR organize a parallel activity on indigenous issues during the World Conference and that funds be set aside for that purpose, as well as for the participation of indigenous peoples at the Conference. The Commission was asked to consider appointing a special rapporteur on indigenous issues to request and receive information from Governments, indigenous peoples, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs relating to the recognition, promotion and protection of indigenous peoples' human rights. It was also asked to request the Economic and Social Council to authorize the Group to meet for five days prior to the Subcommission's 2001 session. The Secretary-General was requested to prepare an annotated agenda for that session.

Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations

A June note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2000/4] contained the recommendations adopted by the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations at its thirteenth session (Geneva, 10-12

April). The Board recommended travel grants for 66 representatives of indigenous communities and organizations to allow them to attend the Working Group on Indigenous Populations, for a total of some $163,000; travel grants to allow 29 representatives to attend the working group on the draft UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, totalling some $102,200; and the allocation of sufficient funds, amounting to a minimum of $100,000, for grants to allow indigenous representatives to attend a possible new meeting on the permanent forum for indigenous peoples (see p. 730). The recommendations were approved by the High Commissioner on the Secretary-General's behalf on 13 April. Annexed to the report was a list of beneficiaries.

In July [A/55/202], the Secretary-General reported on activities of the Fund in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 682] and early 2000. The Chairperson of the Board estimated that $600,000 would be necessary to cover expenditure for 2001.

International Decade of the World's Indigenous People

Commission action. On 25 April [res. 2000/56], the Commission invited the Working Group to continue its review of activities undertaken during the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People (1995-2004). The High Commissioner, in her capacity as coordinator of the Decade, was asked to update her annual report on activities within the UN system under the Decade's programme of activities. The Commission also asked her to ensure that the OHCHR indigenous people's unit was adequately staffed and resourced; it recommended that she give due regard to developing human rights training for indigenous people. It also recommended that the situation of indigenous people be taken into account in forthcoming relevant UN conferences.

UN financial and development institutions, operational programmes and specialized agencies were asked to give increased priority and resources to improve the conditions of indigenous people; launch special projects to strengthen their community-level initiatives, and facilitate the exchange of information and expertise among indigenous people and other relevant experts; and designate mechanisms to coordinate with OHCHR activities relating to the Decade.

Report of Secretary-General. In August [A/55/268], the Secretary-General summarized implementation of the programme of activities for the Decade undertaken by OHCHR up to mid-July (see also p. 728, under "Report of High Commissioner"). Under the indigenous fellowship programme, fellows from Bangladesh, Canada, Nepal and Rwanda had worked six months in the Office. Efforts were being made to integrate indigenous issues into the OHCHR technical cooperation programmes and, in that regard, projects were ongoing in Bolivia, Ecuador and Guatemala. The Office observed the International Day of the World's Indigenous People on 27 July. An inter-agency consultation on indigenous peoples was held on 21 July. A seminar was held from 28 February to 1 March on draft principles and guidelines for the protection of the heritage of indigenous people.

Subcommission action. On 17 August [res. 2000/15], the Subcommission, welcoming the celebration of the International Day of the World's Indigenous People, recommended that it be held on the fourth day of the Working Group's session in 2001 to ensure as great a participation of indigenous peoples as possible. It also recommended that the coordinator of the Decade consider holding a fund-raising meeting to encourage financial contributions to the Voluntary Fund for the Decade (see below) and the UN Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations (see p. 727), as well as the appointment of qualified staff, including indigenous persons, to assist OHCHR in the indigenous programme, and to report thereon to the Subcommission and Working Group in 2001. Governments, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and individuals were urged to contribute to the Voluntary Fund for the Decade and indigenous organizations were invited to do the same. The Subcommission recommended that the High Commissioner organize meetings and activities within the framework of the Decade to raise public awareness about indigenous issues; organize, not later than 2002, in collaboration with relevant organizations, a workshop on indigenous peoples, private sector natural resource, energy and mining companies and human rights; take action to promote the establishment, within the United Nations Office of Legal Affairs (OLA) (see below), of a database on national legislation on matters of relevance to indigenous peoples, and a compilation of treaties and agreements between States and indigenous peoples, as well as to establish, in coordination with DPI, a global public awareness programme on indigenous issues; and organize a seminar on legal instruments between States and indigenous peoples, to discuss possible follow-up to the study completed in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 686]. The Commission was invited to recommend that the Economic and Social Council authorize the convening of a world conference on indigenous issues during the last year of the Decade (2004) to evaluate the Decade and consider future policies and programmes that would contribute to action by States to promote better relations between the indigenous and non-indigenous segments of their population.

OLA action. On 27 September [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2001/19], OHCHR transmitted a copy of Subcommission resolution 2000/15 to OLA, requesting its advice. OLA replied that it would not be for the Subcommission to establish new functions or mandates for OLA or any other Secretariat unit in the absence of a decision by the parent intergovernmental body, in this case the Economic and Social Council, as well as the consideration and approval of the financial implications of such a decision by the General Assembly. It stated that the establishment of the database would entail considerable resource requirements.

Report of High Commissioner. In December [E/CN.4/2001/84], the High Commissioner reviewed activities undertaken to implement the programme of activities for the Decade. OHCHR had implemented the Indigenous Fellowship Programme for four candidates from Bangladesh, Canada, Nepal and Rwanda (1 June–30 November) and had expanded the Programme, in collaboration with the Institute of Human Rights of the University of Deusto (Bilbao, Spain) to provide training for indigenous fellows from Latin America. Four fellows from Argentina, Chile, Colombia and Peru spent three months at the University, followed by two months at OHCHR. Two technical cooperation projects, in Guatemala and Mexico, incorporated a focus on indigenous issues. The High Commissioner also described the activities of the Voluntary Fund for the Decade (see below) and the Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations (see p. 727).

Voluntary Fund for International Decade

A June note by the Secretariat contained the report of the Advisory Group of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People on its fifth session (Geneva, 13–14 April), including its recommendations for grants from the Fund that had been approved by the Coordinator of the Decade [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/2000/3]. The Group recommended that its next session be extended from two to three or four days, and that it should be scheduled prior to the Commission's consideration of indigenous populations. Contributions available to the Group as at 11 April totalled $308,928. The Advisory Group recommended 20 project grants, which were approved by the High Commissioner, for a total of some $175,000. Other recommended activities included a second workshop for journalists for an amount of $64,000; a subregional workshop on peaceful and constructive group accommodation in situations involving minorities and indigenous peoples, to be held in Kidal, Mali, in January 2001, for a maximum of $30,000; another subregional seminar in Africa for a maximum of $30,000; a workshop on indigenous children for experts and indigenous representatives for $23,000; the fifth session of the Advisory Group for some $6,000; and translation, editing and printing of the United Nations Guide for Indigenous Peoples for a maximum of $19,800.

The Advisory Group was of the view that, in order to fulfil its mandate satisfactorily in 2001, the Fund needed some $470,000 before the beginning of the sixth (April 2001) session.

On 25 April [res. 2000/56], the Commission appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to support the Decade by contributing to the Fund.

Draft declaration

Commission action. On 25 April [res. 2000/57], the Commission, recommending that the working group to elaborate a draft UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples meet for 10 working days prior to the Commission's 2001 session, asked the group to submit a progress report.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council authorized the working group to meet prior to the Commission's 2001 session (decision 2000/272).

Subcommission action. On 17 August [res. 2000/15], the Subcommission recommended that, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/157 [YUN 1995, p. 772], the draft UN declaration on the rights of indigenous people be adopted as early as possible and not later than the end of the Decade. It appealed to participants in the inter-sessional working group and to others concerned to accelerate the preparation of the text.

Working group activities. The working group established to consider a draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, at its sixth session (Geneva, 20 November–1 December) [E/CN.4/2001/85], focused on articles relating to the full and effective enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, freedom from discrimination, future rights and actions contrary to the Charter of the United Nations. The report explained that there was no consensus on the term "indigenous peoples" at the working group; some States accepted it while others did not, in part because of the implications the term might have in international law, including with respect to self-determination and individual and collective rights. Annexed to the report were the proposals of States on those articles, as were proposals on the articles made by indigenous representatives and one NGO.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/599], adopted resolution 55/80 without vote [agenda item III].

International Decade of the World's Indigenous People

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 54/150 of 17 December 1999 and previous resolutions on the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People,

Recalling also that the goal of the Decade is to strengthen international cooperation for the solution of problems faced by indigenous people in such areas as human rights, the environment, development, education and health and that the theme of the Decade is "Indigenous people: partnership in action",

Recognizing the importance of consultation and cooperation with indigenous people in planning and implementing the programme of activities for the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, the need for adequate financial support from the international community, including support from within the United Nations system, and the need for adequate co-ordination and communication channels,

Urging all parties to continue to intensify their efforts to achieve the goals of the Decade,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the programme of activities for the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People;

2. Affirms its conviction of the value and diversity of the cultures and forms of social organization of indigenous people and its conviction that the development of indigenous people within their countries will contribute to the socio-economic, cultural and environmental advancement of all the countries of the world;

3. Emphasizes the importance of strengthening the human and institutional capacity of indigenous people to develop their own solutions to their problems;

4. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, as coordinator for the Decade:

(a) To continue to promote the objectives of the Decade, taking into account, in the fulfilment of her functions, the special concerns of the indigenous people;

(b) To give due regard to the dissemination, from within existing resources and voluntary contributions, of information on the situation, cultures, languages, rights and aspirations of indigenous people and, in that context, to consider the possibility of organizing projects, special events, exhibitions and other activities addressed to the public, in particular to young people;

(c) To submit, through the Secretary-General, an annual report to the General Assembly on the implementation of the programme of activities for the Decade;

5. Reaffirms the adoption of a declaration on the rights of indigenous people as a major objective of the Decade, and underlines the importance of effective participation by indigenous representatives in the open-ended inter-sessional working group of the Commission on Human Rights charged with developing a draft declaration on the rights of indigenous people, established pursuant to Commission resolution 1995/32 of 3 March 1995;

6. Welcomes the decision of the Economic and Social Council, in its resolution 2000/22 of 28 July 2000, to establish a Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues as a subsidiary organ of the Council, thereby fulfilling an important objective of the Decade, and encourages all parties concerned to engage in the necessary preparations for the establishment of the Forum;

7. Encourages Governments to support the Decade by:

(a) Preparing relevant programmes, plans and reports in relation to the Decade, in consultation with indigenous people;

(b) Seeking means, in consultation with indigenous people, of giving indigenous people greater responsibility for their own affairs and an effective voice in decisions on matters that affect them;

(c) Establishing national committees or other mechanisms involving indigenous people to ensure that the objectives and activities of the Decade are planned and implemented on the basis of full partnership with indigenous people;

(d) Contributing to the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People;

(e) Contributing, together with other donors, to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations in order to assist indigenous representatives in participating in the Working Group on Indigenous Populations of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights and the open-ended inter-sessional working group of the Commission on Human Rights charged with elaborating a draft declaration on the rights of indigenous people;

(f) Considering contributing, as appropriate, to the Fund for the Development of Indigenous Peoples in Latin America and the Caribbean, in support of the goals of the Decade;

(g) Identifying resources for activities designed to implement the goals of the Decade, in cooperation with indigenous people and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

8. Invites United Nations financial and development institutions, operational programmes and the specialized agencies and secretariats, as well as other regional and international organizations, in accordance with the existing procedures of their governing bodies:

(a) To give increased priority and resources to improving the conditions of indigenous people, with particular emphasis on the needs of those people in developing countries, including through the preparation of specific programmes of action for the implementation of the goals of the Decade, within their areas of competence;

(b) To launch special projects, through appropriate channels and in cooperation with indigenous people, to strengthen their community-level initiatives and to facilitate the exchange of information and expertise among indigenous people and other relevant experts;

(c) To designate focal points for the coordination of activities related to the Decade with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights; and commends those institutions, programmes, agencies and regional and international organizations that have already done so;

9. Recommends that the Secretary-General ensure coordinated follow-up to the recommendations concerning indigenous people of relevant United Nations conferences, namely, the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, held at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 3 to 14 June 1992, the International Conference on Population and Development, held at Cairo from 5 to 13 September 1994, the Fourth World Conference on Women, held at Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995, the World Summit for Social Development, held at Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), held at Istanbul, Turkey, from 3 to 14 June 1996, and the World Food Summit, held at Rome from 13 to 17 November 1996, and other relevant international conferences;

10. Emphasizes the importance of the participation of indigenous people in United Nations world conferences and their national, regional and other preparatory processes, in particular the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, to be held in South Africa in 2001, and encourages Member States to facilitate the participation of their indigenous people, inter alia, by considering including representatives of indigenous people in their delegations;

11. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to submit, through the Secretary-General, a report on the implementation of the programme of activities for the Decade to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Programme of activities of the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People".

Permanent forum for indigenous people

Working Group activities. Pursuant to a 1999 Commission resolution [YUN 1999, p. 685], the ad hoc working group on a permanent forum for indigenous people (Geneva, 14-23 February) [E/CN.4/2000/86] considered proposals to establish the forum. The group discussed the forum's mandate, terms of reference, membership and participation, financial and secretariat implications, the UN body the forum would report to, and its location and name, as well as other elements of a permanent forum. The group discussed the participation of indigenous people in the work of the UN system, including the role and function of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations and follow-up. It considered a working paper on consultations held by the Chairman-Rapporteur of its 1999 meeting [E/CN.4/AC.47/2000/2] and information received from one NGO [E/CN.4/AC.47/2000/3].

Commission action. On 27 April [res. 2000/87], the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 43 to none, with 9 abstentions, recommended a draft text to the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2000/23 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 2000/22 without vote [agenda item 14 (g)].

Establishment of a Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the provision contained in the final document of the World Conference on Human Rights, held in Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, according to which the establishment of a permanent forum for indigenous people within the United Nations system should be considered,

Recalling also that consideration of the establishment of a permanent forum is recognized as one of the important objectives of the programme of activities for the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People,

Noting the two workshops on the subject held under the auspices of the Commission on Human Rights in Copenhagen from 26 to 28 June 1995 and in Santiago from 30 June to 2 July 1997,

Recalling the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Review of the existing mechanisms, procedures and programmes within the United Nations concerning indigenous people", and noting in particular the striking absence of a mechanism to ensure coordination and regular exchange of information among interested parties—Governments, the United Nations and indigenous people—on an ongoing basis,

Taking into account the deliberations of the open-ended inter-sessional ad hoc working group on a permanent forum for indigenous people established pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1998/20 of 9 April 1998 and 1999/52 of 27 April 1999 to consider the establishment of a permanent forum and to submit concrete proposals to that effect, as well as the consideration given to the subject at the fifty-sixth session of the Commission,

Wishing to finalize this project during the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People as one means of furthering the objectives of the Decade in partnership between Governments and indigenous people,

Stressing that the establishment of the permanent forum should lead to careful consideration of the future of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights,

Bearing in mind the common resolve to promote peace and prosperity in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and recalling the functions and powers of the Council in that respect as contained in the Charter,

1. Decides to establish as a subsidiary organ of the Council a permanent forum on indigenous issues, consisting of sixteen members, eight members to be nominated by Governments and elected by the Council, and eight members to be appointed by the President of the Council following formal consultation with the Bureau and the regional groups through their coordinators, on the basis of broad consultations with indigenous organizations, taking into account the diversity and geographical distribution of the indigenous people of the world as well as the principles of transparency, representativity and equal opportunity for all indigenous people, including internal processes, when appropriate, and local indigenous consultation processes, with all members serving in their personal capacity as independent experts on indigenous issues for a period of three years with the possibility of re-election or reappointment for one further period; States, United Nations bodies and organs, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Council may participate as observers; organizations of indigenous people may equally participate as observers in accordance with the procedures which have been applied in the Working Group on Indigenous Populations of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights;

2. Also decides that the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues shall serve as an advisory body to the Council with a mandate to discuss indigenous issues within the mandate of the Council relating to economic and social development, culture, the environment, education, health and human rights; in so doing the Permanent Forum shall:

(a) Provide expert advice and recommendations on indigenous issues to the Council, as well as to programmes, funds and agencies of the United Nations, through the Council;

(b) Raise awareness and promote the integration and coordination of activities relating to indigenous issues within the United Nations system;

(c) Prepare and disseminate information on indigenous issues;

3. Further decides that the Permanent Forum shall apply the rules of procedure established for subsidiary organs of the Council as applicable, unless otherwise decided by the Council; the principle of consensus shall govern the work of the Permanent Forum;

4. Decides that the Permanent Forum shall hold an annual session of ten working days at the United Nations Office at Geneva or at United Nations Headquarters or at such other place as the Permanent Forum may decide in accordance with existing financial rules and regulations of the United Nations;

5. Also decides that the Permanent Forum shall submit an annual report to the Council on its activities, including any recommendations for approval; the report shall be distributed to the relevant United Nations organs, funds, programmes and agencies as a means, inter alia, of furthering the dialogue on indigenous issues within the United Nations system;

6. Further decides that the financing of the Permanent Forum shall be provided from within existing resources through the regular budget of the United Nations and its specialized agencies and through such voluntary contributions as may be donated;

7. Decides that, five years after its establishment, an evaluation of the functioning of the Permanent Forum, including the method for selection of its members, shall be carried out by the Council in the light of the experience gained;

8. Also decides, once the Permanent Forum has been established and has held its first annual session, to review, without prejudging any outcome, all existing mechanisms, procedures and programmes within the United Nations concerning indigenous issues, including the Working Group on Indigenous Populations of the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, with a view to rationalizing activities, avoiding duplication and overlap and promoting effectiveness.

Subcommission action. On 17 August [res. 2000/15], the Subcommission, taking note of the establishment of the Permanent Forum, noted the view expressed by many indigenous participants at the 2000 session of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations that the establishment of the Forum should not be construed as grounds for the abolition of the Working Group.

Indigenous land rights

Commission action. On 25 April [dec. 2000/106], the Commission, noting a 1999 Subcommission resolution [YUN 1999, p. 687], decided to approve the Subcommission's requests to the Secretary-General to transmit the second progress report on the working paper on indigenous people and their relationship to land [ibid.] to Governments, indigenous people, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for their comments, data and suggestions, and to assist the Special Rapporteur to enable her to submit her final working paper in 2000.

Working paper of Special Rapporteur. In June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/25], the Special Rapporteur on indigenous peoples and their relationship to land, Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece), in her final working paper, stressed the need for a flexible approach to the consideration of that issue. She noted that dozens of countries had adopted constitutional and legislative measures recognizing the legal rights of indigenous peoples to their lands and resources, in various degrees, thereby demonstrating that such measures were consistent with domestic legal systems. The paper signalled the urgency of indigenous land issues. One of the most widespread contemporary problems was the failure of States to recognize the existence of indigenous land use, occupancy and ownership, and the failure to accord legal status to protect that use, occupancy or ownership. Another frequent complaint was the failure of States to demarcate indigenous lands, as was the failure of States to implement or enforce existing laws to protect indigenous lands and resources. Other significant problems were the removal and relocation of indigenous peoples; settlement programmes on indigenous lands; the practice of requiring that indigenous land be held in trust by the State; programmes that used indigenous lands as collateral for loans; adverse management of sacred and cultural sites by States; the failure of States and others to protect the environmental integrity of indigenous lands and resources; and failure to accord indigenous peoples an appropriate right to manage, use and control development of their lands and resources.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that States enact legislation to recognize, demarcate and protect indigenous peoples' lands and resources. Governments should renounce discriminatory legal doctrines and policies and adopt corrective legislation, constitutional reforms or corrective policies. They should provide measures to implement, amend and enforce land settlements and agreements, and for dispute resolution. The Permanent Forum should consider the creation of a fact-finding body to visit sites and report on particular indigenous land and resource issues; create an indigenous land and resource ombudsman or office to provide response, mediation and reconciliation services; create a complaint mechanism or procedure for human rights violations pertaining to indigenous land and resource situations; create a body with "peace-seeking" powers to investigate, recommend solutions, conciliate, mediate and otherwise assist in preventing or ending violence in situations regarding land rights; and create a procedure whereby countries would be called upon to make periodic reports regarding their progress in protecting the land and resource rights of indigenous peoples.

Subcommission action. On 17 August [dec. 2000/108], the Subcommission asked the Special Rapporteur to update her final working paper in 2001, based on comments made by Subcommission members and replies received from Governments and other reliable sources.

Indigenous heritage

In accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 1998/277 [YUN 1998, p. 723], a seminar was held (Geneva, 28 February–1 March) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/26] to elaborate further the draft principles and guidelines for the protection of the heritage of indigenous people [YUN 1995, p. 780]. Participants endorsed the Special Rapporteur's recommendation that the report of the seminar and the revised draft principles and guidelines annexed thereto should be considered by the Subcommission, with the aim of transmitting them to the Commission in 2001.

Subcommission action. On 17 August [dec. 2000/107], the Subcommission decided to transmit to the Commission the revised draft principles and guidelines.

Persons with disabilities

On 25 April [res. 2000/51], the Commission, noting the work of the Special Rapporteur on disability of the Commission for Social Development (see p. 1035), invited him to address the Commission on Human Rights in 2002, and called on States to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur. Governments were urged to implement the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 48/96 [YUN 1993, p. 978]. The Secretary-General was asked to ensure support for the Long-term Strategy to Implement the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons to the Year 2000 and Beyond [YUN 1995, p. 1256], to report biennially to the Assembly on progress made to ensure the full recognition and enjoyment of the human rights of persons with disabilities, and to make available to the Commission on Human Rights in 2001 the latest report of the Special Rapporteur on his monitoring of the Standard Rules. UN bodies and specialized agencies were asked to address the problems that existed in creating equal opportunities for persons with disabilities. The Commission recommended that OHCHR take account of information on legislation affecting the human rights of persons with disabilities that had been collected by the Special Rapporteur. The High Commissioner, in cooperation with the Special Rapporteur, was invited to examine measures to strengthen the protection and monitoring of the human rights of persons with disabilities and to solicit input and proposals from interested parties.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's invitation to the Special Rapporteur to address the Commission and its request to the Secretary-General to report biennially (decision 2000/268).

Chapter III

Human rights violations

Alleged violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in a number of countries were examined in 2000 by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights and its Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, as well as by special rapporteurs, special representatives of the Secretary-General and independent experts appointed to examine the allegations. In October, the Commission held a special session on violations of the human rights of the Palestinian people by Israel.

General aspects

Under a procedure established by Economic and Social Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) [YUN 1970, p. 530] to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights, the Working Group on Situations of the Commission on Human Rights, established by Council resolution 1990/41 [YUN 1990, p. 648], in closed session on 31 March, considered the human rights situations in Chile, the Congo, Kenya, Latvia, Uganda, the United Arab Emirates, Viet Nam, Yemen and Zimbabwe. The Commission discontinued consideration of the situations in Chile, the Congo, Kenya, Latvia, the United Arab Emirates, Viet Nam, Yemen and Zimbabwe.

On 18 August [E/CN.4/2001/2 (dec. 2000/114)], the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights requested the Secretary-General to prepare a working document relating to mass and flagrant human rights violations that constituted crimes against humanity and that occurred during the colonial period, wars of conquest and slavery.

Africa

Burundi

Commission action. On 18 April [E/2000/23 (res. 2000/20)], the Commission on Human Rights appealed to all armed factions and other Burun-dian political forces that had not done so to join the Arusha negotiation process (see p. 143), conclude a ceasefire as soon as possible and sign a peace agreement. It expressed deep concern at the violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law, particularly reports of massacres, enforced or involuntary disappearances, and arbitrary arrests and detention, and remained concerned at the ongoing violence and the security situation in parts of the country. Deploing the unacceptable living conditions in the regroupment camps and displaced persons sites, the Commission recommended that the Government and UN agencies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) provide humanitarian assistance (see p. 858). The Commission requested the Government to end impunity and to foster a security environment conducive to the work of assistance organizations. The United Nations and the donor community were invited to augment the flow of humanitarian assistance, once a security environment existed. The Commission asked States not to allow their territories to be used as bases for incursions or attacks against another State.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for an additional year and asked her to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 2000 and a report to the Commission in 2001, giving her work a gender-specific dimension. The Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision and its requests to the Special Rapporteur on 28 July (decision 2000/253).

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In September [A/55/358], Special Rapporteur Marie-Thérèse A. Keita-Bocoum (Côte d'Ivoire) submitted an interim report, covering the period from 15 April to 15 July, following her visit to Burundi (27 June-7 July).

The Special Rapporteur described the current political and economic and social situation and developments in the peace process (see p. 143). Although there had been no change in the human rights situation, the legal system had improved somewhat as a result of reforms. The situation around the capital and in some provinces was relatively calm as a result of the decline in mass killings and massacres. Elsewhere, the situation still gave cause for concern. The main human rights violations were violations of the right to life, including those attributed to State agents, rebel groups and unknown persons; the right to personal freedom and security; physical integrity, including torture and ill-treatment and rape; freedom of opinion and expression; the right of trade unions to function freely; the right to health; the right to education; and children's right to special aid and assistance. The situation of persons deprived of their liberty had improved since the beginning of the year as a result of judicial reforms, better conditions of detention in certain prisons and support by the Government, human rights associations and humanitarian organizations. Even so, irregularities persisted. Penitentiary establishments were still characterized by massive overcrowding, inadequate food, very poor health services and delays in processing the cases of detainees. In certain jail facilities of the police, public security police and judicial police of the prosecutors' offices, as well as in the cachots (communal detention centres) of communes and zones, cases of arbitrary detention, torture or abuse, malnutrition and starvation were found. Hygienic conditions in the cachots were appalling, with no water or ventilation. Secret detention centres in the communes, zones or camps and military posts also existed. The dismantling of camps allowed free movement, ease of access to humanitarian aid and the benefit of the solidarity of neighbours. At the time of the Special Rapporteur's visit, over 230,000 people had returned to their homes. In the camps that had not been dismantled, the situation remained intolerable, with harsh living conditions.

Appreciable progress had been made in the justice system since the inception on 1 January of the new Code of Criminal Procedure, particularly regarding respect for the legally permissible period of police custody and interrogations conducted by judicial police officers. Since the application of the new Code, arbitrary arrests had decreased and considerable work had been done to sort out detainees' files. The Legal Assistance Programme, operated by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), and the training courses for judges were still positively impacting the promotion and defence of human rights. Progress, however, remained hampered by many irregularities, inadequacies and violence that were aggravated by the war, extreme poverty and the excessive number of prisoners. Major problems remained in the slowness of the judiciary, the growing corruption of certain judges and political, social and cultural pressures.

The Special Rapporteur examined the situation of women, which, she said, was defined by poverty, an excessive burden of household duties and considerable dependence on the husband. It was also characterized by low levels of representation in decision-making, insufficient training and information, and a very low literacy rate. Violence against women was often physical, psychological and sexual. Their rights to inherit property and own land were also violated, consequences of polygamy and rape. The main obstacles to women's advancement were tradition and ignorance.

The Special Rapporteur called on parties to the conflict to participate in the Arusha negotiations (see p. 143), respect people's rights and observe international humanitarian law relating to the protection of children affected by armed conflict. She recommended that the Government continue efforts to lead Burundi towards a legally constituted State; reduce detention and ensure detainees access to family members, doctors and lawyers; combat enforced disappearances; improve the living conditions of refugees; change or enhance the view of women's roles; end discrimination against women and amend laws preventing them from owning or inheriting land, property or dwellings; develop a reliable health and social service system; devote attention to street and displaced children; and ensure the right to education. The international community was called on to develop socio-economic programmes and projects and secure the sustained flow of resources for reconstruction activities, establish and strengthen prevention, observation and monitoring mechanisms to avoid an escalation of the conflict, combat extreme poverty and social exclusion, strengthen humanitarian action and work more actively to combat HIV/AIDS.

In a later report [E/CN.4/2001/44], the Special Rapporteur updated developments since the signing of the Arusha Agreement on Peace and Reconciliation in Burundi on 28 August (see p. 146). Security in the country had improved due to cooperation between the army, the administration and the people. The forced regroupment camps in the province of Bujumbura-rural and the rest of the country had been permanently dismantled. However, the economic and social situation had been deteriorating constantly; the northern provinces were plagued by drought and famine. In the cities, the middle classes were becoming increasingly impoverished.

The human rights situation did not improve substantially. The main human rights violations concerned the right to life, to physical integrity and to personal freedom and security, freedom to choose one's residence, freedom of expression and economic, social and cultural rights. The Special Rapporteur observed that the people seemed hostage to the political establishment, which was experiencing some difficulties in resolving the question of leadership. Civilians were subjected to abusive treatment by the military and armed groups; they were forced to contribute to financing the war effort and made to perform forced labour. The situation had become more precarious, especially for those living in rural areas and the collines, giving rise to hunger, cold and disease. The army continued to become involved illegally in matters reserved for the justice system. Women, particularly those from rural areas, were the main victims of war, displacement and regroupment, yet were excluded from the peace process. The Special Rapporteur supported measures taken by the Ministry of Human Rights in favour of respect for and promotion of human rights. Parties to the conflict were urged to respect the right to life and end children's involvement in their fighting, end degrading and humiliating treatment, participate in negotiations and end political hostilities. Among other measures, the Government was called on to facilitate access for organizations and UN bodies to sites for displaced persons and to victims of the crisis, train legal professionals, set up halfway houses for children released from prison, enact a law for women on inheritance and marriage contracts, abolish the death penalty and increase support to judicial bodies.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 2000/15], the Commission welcomed the commitment by the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) to cooperate with UN agencies and NGOs in ensuring the demobilization and reintegration of child soldiers; the general amnesty announced on 19 February by President Laurent Désiré Kabila, under which 200 persons accused, convicted or detained for crimes against State security had been released; the release and repatriation, carried out under the auspices of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) in the DRC, of persons at risk, mainly of Tutsi origin, and of prisoners of war; the setting up of a peace operation by the Security Council; and the Council's decision in resolution 1291(2000) to authorize the expansion of the United Nations Organization Mission in the DRC (MONUC) (see p. 123). The Commission expressed concern at the adverse impact of the conflict on the human rights situation; continuing violations of the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement [YUN 1999, p. 87]; the situation of human rights, particularly in the east of the country, and the continuing violations of human rights and international humanitarian law; the excessive accumulation and spread of small arms and light weapons and their illicit distribution; the harassment and persecution of human rights defenders and their organizations; the intimidation of church representatives and of civil society in the east; and the severe insecurity, which minimized the ability of humanitarian organizations to access affected populations. Parties were urged to implement fully the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement and to protect human rights and respect international humanitarian law. The Government was called on to protect human rights, reform and restore the judicial system, end impunity, implement democratization, remove remaining restrictions on the activities of political parties and prepare to hold democratic, free and fair elections, ensure respect for freedom of opinion and expression, and cooperate with the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) (see p. 1225).

The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for an additional year and asked him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 2000 (see p. 737), to report to the Commission in 2001 and to maintain a gender perspective in seeking and analysing information. It also asked the Special Rapporteurs on the situation of human rights in the DRC and on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and a member of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to carry out, as soon as security considerations permitted and, where appropriate, in cooperation with the National Commission of Inquiry to investigate alleged human rights violations and breaches of international humanitarian law in the DRC between 1996 and 1997, a joint mission to investigate massacres carried out in the DRC, with a view to bringing to justice those responsible and to report to the Assembly in 2000 and to the Commission in 2001. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur and the joint mission, the High Commissioner to provide technical expertise to the joint mission, and the international community to support the DRC human rights field office.

The Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decisions and its requests to the Special Rapporteurs and Working Group member on 28 July (decision 2000/248).

Note by Secretariat. An August note by the Secretariat [A/55/318] stated that the insecurity prevailing in the DRC in general and in the province of South Kivu in particular had prevented the deployment of the joint mission of inquiry.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In September [A/55/403], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of Special Rapporteur Roberto Garretón (Chile), based on his visit to the DRC (13-26 August). He noted the Government's request to the Secretary-General [S/2000/122] to investigate events in the locality of Ituri, as well as an investigation into allegations of the deaths of 15 women who were buried alive or burnt in Mwenga, situated in territory controlled by the Rassemblement congolais pour la démocratie (RCD). The Government and RCD had requested investigations into the Katogota massacre. Because of the prevailing insecurity and lack of financial resources, the investigations were still pending.

The Special Rapporteur described the various armed conflicts—the conflict between the Government and RCD, the conflict between the Government and the Mouvement de libération du Congo (MLC), clashes between Uganda and Rwanda in Kisangani, and tribal conflict between Balendu and Bahema. None of the parties to the conflicts fully respected the Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement. The conflicts, which involved at least seven national armies and many irregular armed groups, had destroyed the country, with more than half the population affected. All public moneys were diverted to the war effort. There had been terrible epidemics. Since the war made it impossible to cultivate the land, 17 per cent of the population, or some 14 million people, were affected by food insecurity. The number of sheques (street children) had risen alarmingly. More than 1.3 million people were internally displaced, many of whom were without assistance.

In the Government-controlled territory, the rights most affected were political rights, including the rights to participation, assembly, association and freedom of expression. In RCD- and RCD/Mouvement de libération (ML)-controlled territory, the rights most often violated were the right to life and physical integrity, without prejudice to political freedom. There was insufficient information on the MLC-controlled territory. Neither the Government nor RCD, RCD/ML or MLC had taken steps towards democracy. The Government maintained that it had not implemented the death penalty since February 2000. RCD, which had never done so, began to use the death penalty in 2000. The liberty of person was constantly violated, there was no freedom of expression and the right to due process was not respected by any of the parties. Torture, which was practised by all parties, resulted in death in many instances. In both Kinshasa and Goma, opposition members were prevented from leaving the country and from movement within it. The Government, with international assistance, had continued to protect people who looked like Tutsi in order to prevent reprisals against them, thereby disproving accusations of genocide. Religious persecution had been a constant. The situation of women and children continued to worsen, and although the Government and RCD had taken steps to demobilize children, neither MLC nor the Ugandan troops had done so.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that all parties implement fully the Lusaka Agreement, cooperate with MONUC and end impunity. He recommended that the Government establish an inter-Congolese dialogue; abolish the death penalty; eliminate the Military Court; free all political prisoners; cease pressure on or censorship of the press; demobilize child soldiers; restore relations with other States, intergovernmental organizations, the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and attend their conferences and meetings; implement a human rights action plan; and accord international human rights instruments precedence over national law and honour commitments made under them.

The Special Rapporteur proposed that RCD and other rebel groups cease all cooperation with foreign armies; avoid committing any act that implied the exercise of sovereignty over foreign armies; refrain from issuing fictitious accounts of atrocities committed by their troops and foreign allies and conduct objective investigations of allegations; free political prisoners; abolish the death penalty; cease to interpret acts of opposition as an alleged incitement to ethnic hatred; permit organizations of civil society to function freely; and demobilize child soldiers. Foreign armies occupying Congolese territory were urged to implement the Lusaka Agreement; refrain from reprisals; permit investigations of violations of human rights and international law; compensate victims; and return Congolese property that had been taken from the country since 1998. The United Nations should continue to support the peace process; pay attention to the human rights special rapporteurs; assist the mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights; and establish an effective arms embargo on all countries involved in the conflict. He recommended that other organs of the international community support the peace process and make their voices heard regarding the massacres committed in the DRC.

In a later report [E/CN.4/2001/40], which covered incidents that occurred up to 11 December, the Special Rapporteur stated that the investigations into the events that occurred in the locality of Ituri were still pending. He described the various armed conflicts and political developments and democratization in the country. He recounted human rights violations similar to those in his September report (see p. 737) and observed that none of the parties to the conflicts were fully respecting the Lusaka Agreement. The sense of terror in RCD-controlled territories and the entire country's humiliation were still dramatically present. The Special Rapporteur reiterated his earlier recommendations. Annexed to the report were lists of international instruments to which the DRC was a party, armed conflicts taking place in the country, irregular armed groups involved in the armed conflicts and human rights violations committed in Government-controlled territory, as well as those that occurred in territory under the control of rebel movements, between 16 December 1999 and 11 December 2000.

(For political details, see p. 119.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/55/602/Add.3], adopted resolution 55/117 by recorded vote (102-2-63) [agenda item 114 (c)].

Situation of human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms as stated in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments,

Mindful that the Democratic Republic of the Congo is a party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of victims of war, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Rights of the Child, as well as the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights,

Recalling its previous resolutions on this subject, including the most recent, resolution 54/179 of 17 December 1999, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/15 of 18 April 2000 and Security Council resolution 1304(2000) of 16 June 2000, and mindful of previous resolutions and presidential statements of the Security Council on the subject,

Recalling the Ceasefire Agreement signed at Lusaka and the Kampala disengagement plan,* the obligations of all signatories to those agreements and the obligations deriving from Security Council resolution 1304(2000),

Taking note of the outcome of the Extraordinary Summit of the Heads of State or Government of the Southern African Development Community, held at Maputo on 16 January 2000,<sup>b</sup> and of the holding of the summit meeting of the heads of State of Central Africa at Kinshasa on 27 October 2000;<sup>c</sup>

Concerned at all violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo by parties to the conflict, as mentioned in the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including acts of and incitement to ethnic hatred and violence,

Recognizing that the promotion and the protection of human rights for all are essential for achieving stability and security in the region and will contribute to the creation of the environment necessary for cooperation among States in the region,

Taking into account the regional dimension of the human rights issues in the Great Lakes region, while underlining the primary responsibility of States for the promotion and protection of human rights, and stressing the importance of technical cooperation with a view to strengthening regional cooperation for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Recalling the decision of the Commission on Human Rights to request the Special Rapporteurs of the Commission on the situation of human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and a member of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to carry out a joint mission to the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and encouraging the mission to begin its work as soon as possible, with the cooperation of the Government and all other parties concerned,

Encouraging the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to fulfil its earlier commitments, including to the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, to restore and reform the judicial system, in accordance with the relevant international conventions, and noting in this regard the declared intention of the Government progressively to abolish the death penalty and to put an end to the trying of civilians by the Military Court,

1. Welcomes:

(a) The report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

(b) The visit made to the country by the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo at the invitation of the Government and the cooperation of the Government and of all Congolese parties to the Ceasefire Agreement signed at Lusaka in this regard;

(c) The visit made to the country by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights from 1 to 3 October 2000;

(d) The activities of the human rights field office in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and encourages the Government to continue to work in close cooperation with the office;

(e) The efforts of the Ministry of Human Rights of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to improve the human rights situation in the country and, in particular, the adoption in December 1999, in concert with non-governmental organizations, of the national action plan for the promotion and protection of human rights;

(f) The general amnesty ordered by President Kabila on 19 February 2000, as a timely and significant step towards reconciliation and towards preparation for the inter-Congolese dialogue called for in the Ceasefire Agreement, but deplores the fact that many other political prisoners continue to be detained and the arrests made since that date;

(g) The commitment by the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to cooperate with the United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations in ensuring the demobilization and reintegration of child soldiers and the holding at Kinshasa, on 10 December 1999, in cooperation with the United Nations Children's Fund, of the Forum on the Demobilization of Child Soldiers and the Protection of Human Rights, and measures of demobilization of children taken by the Government and by the Congolese Rally for Democracy, and encourages other parties to the conflict to do the same;

(h) The repatriation carried out under the auspices of the International Committee of the Red Cross in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in conformity with international humanitarian law, of persons at risk because of their ethnic origin, but regrets, however, that the Government was apparently unable to provide adequate protection in the first place;

(i) The release of prisoners of war, and calls for the acceleration of exchanges of prisoners;

(j) The decision of the Security Council in its resolution 1291 (2000) of 24 February 2000 to authorize the expansion of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

(k) The work of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for the peace process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

(l) The appointment by the Secretary-General of the Special Representative for the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

2. Expresses its concern at:

(a) The adverse impact of the conflict on the situation of human rights and its severe consequences for the security and well-being of the civilian population throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

(b) The continuing violations of the Ceasefire Agreement and the continuing use of hate speech;

(c) The preoccupying situation of human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular in the eastern part of the country, and the continuing violations of human rights and international humanitarian law committed throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, often with impunity, and, with that in view, condemns:

(i) The massacres of civilians perpetrated in the course of the conflict, which constitute a disproportionate response to attacks, in particular those occurring recently on the Lisenda-8 road and at Katogata, Kamanyola, Lurbarika, Luberezi, Ngenge, Kalehe, Kilambo, Cidaho, Uvira, Shabunda and Lusenda-Lubumba;

(ii) The fighting in Kisangani between Ugandan and Rwandan forces, most recently in May and June 2000, which resulted in many civilian victims;

(iii) The bombings of the hospital at Libenge and at Gemena and elsewhere, which affected civilian populations;

(iv) The conflicts between the Hema and Lendu ethnic groups in the eastern province, where thousands of Congolese have already been killed;

(v) The occurrence of cases of summary and arbitrary execution, disappearance, torture, beating, harassment, arbitrary arrest and detention without trial, including of journalists, opposition politicians and human rights defenders, reports of sexual violence against women and children, and the continuing recruitment and use of child soldiers, as well as, in the eastern part of the country in particular, reprisals against people who have cooperated with the United Nations mechanisms;

(vi) The trying of civilians and the imposition of the death penalty by the Military Court;

(d) The excessive accumulation and spread of small arms and light weapons and the illicit distribution, circulation and trafficking of arms in the region and their negative impact on human rights;

(e) The breaches of fundamental freedoms, such as freedom of expression, opinion, association and assembly, in the whole territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular in the eastern part of the country;

(f) The acts of intimidation against representatives of the Churches and civil society, throughout the Congolese territory, as well as the killings of those persons in the eastern part of the country;

(g) The severe insecurity, which minimizes the ability of humanitarian organizations to secure access to affected populations;

(h) Reports of the illegal exploitation of natural resources and other forms of wealth of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

3. Urges all parties to the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo:

(a) To implement fully the provisions of the Ceasefire Agreement and to facilitate the re-establishment of the authority of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo throughout the territory, as agreed in the inter-Congolese political negotiations provided for in the Ceasefire Agreement, and stresses, in the context of a lasting peaceful settlement, the need for the engagement of the Congolese in an all-inclusive process of political dialogue, with a view to achieving national reconciliation and the holding of democratic, free, transparent and fair elections;

(b) To cease all military activity in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, which breaches the ceasefire provided for in the Ceasefire Agreement and the Kampala disengagement plan;

(c) To protect human rights and to respect international humanitarian law, in particular, as applicable to them, the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of victims of war and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, the Hague Convention respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land of 18 October 1907, the Convention on the Prevention and

Punishment of the Crime of Genocide and other relevant provisions of international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law, and in particular to respect the rights of women and children and to ensure the safety of all civilians, including refugees and internally displaced persons within the territory of that country, regardless of their origin;

(d) To cease all forms of repression against people exercising their fundamental freedoms;

(e) To establish the conditions necessary for the safe and speedy deployment of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

(f) To ensure the safety, security and freedom of movement of United Nations and associated personnel and humanitarian personnel within the Democratic Republic of the Congo and, in this regard, to ensure safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel to all affected populations throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

(g) To put an immediate end to the use of child soldiers, which is in contravention of international human rights standards, and to demobilize them;

(h) To define and implement all necessary measures to create conditions conducive to the voluntary return, in safety and with dignity, of all refugees and displaced persons and to ensure their protection and fair and lawful treatment;

4. Calls upon the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo:

(a) To comply fully with its obligations under international human rights law and to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms throughout its entire territory;

(b) To fulfil its responsibility to ensure the full protection of the human rights of the population in its territory, as well as to take a leading part in efforts to prevent conditions that might lead to further flows of internally displaced persons and refugees within the Democratic Republic of the Congo and across its border;

(c) To fulfil its commitment to reform and restore the judicial system, and, in particular, to reform military justice, and to stop using it to try civilians, in conformity with the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

(d) To ensure full respect for freedom of opinion and expression, including freedom of the press in relation to all types of mass media, as well as freedom of association and assembly;

(e) To remove the restrictions that still affect the work of non-governmental organizations and to promote human rights awareness, including by strengthening cooperation with civil society, including all human rights organizations;

(f) To implement fully its commitment to the democratization process, in particular the national dialogue, as stipulated in the Ceasefire Agreement, and to create, in this context, conditions that would allow for a democratization process that is genuine and all-inclusive and that fully reflects the aspirations of all people in the country, including by lifting restrictions on political parties and their activities and ensuring political pluralism, in order to lead the way for the holding of democratic, free and fair elections;

(g) To put an end to impunity and to fulfil its responsibility to ensure that those responsible for human rights violations and grave breaches of international humanitarian law are brought to justice;

(h) To cooperate fully with the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 in ensuring that all those responsible for the crime of genocide, crimes against humanity and other grave violations of human rights are brought to justice in accordance with international principles of due process;

(i) To work closely and strengthen further its cooperation with the human rights field office in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

(j) To implement fully its commitment to cooperate with United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations in ensuring the demobilization, rehabilitation and reintegration of child soldiers;

5. Decides to continue to examine the situation of human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and requests the Special Rapporteur to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session.

Equatorial Guinea

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 2000/19], the Commission encouraged the Government of Equatorial Guinea to comply with recommendations of the Commission and the Special Representative [YUN 1999, p. 694]. Welcoming the Government's intention to implement a national human rights action plan, the Commission encouraged the Government to discuss and to agree on means for its early implementation, together with a comprehensive technical assistance programme, with OHCHR. It called on the Government to ensure the independence of the National Commission on Human Rights and of the national electoral commission.

The Commission decided to renew the Special Representative's mandate for one year and asked him to report in 2001, applying a gender perspective. He was asked to verify that technical assistance provided to Equatorial Guinea supported its national plan of action on human rights. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him.

The Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision and its requests to the Special Representative on 28 July (decision 2000/252).

Report of Special Representative. Since he had not received replies from the Government of Equatorial Guinea to his requests to visit the country or for information, Special Representative Gustavo Gallón (Colombia) visited Spain (20-25 November) [E/CN.4/2001/38], where some 10 per cent of Equatorial Guinean citizens lived.

The Special Representative stated that the human rights situation in Equatorial Guinea did not improve during the year. His previous conclusions remained applicable [YUN 1999, p. 694]. There continued to be no sustained rule of law; rather, power was concentrated in the hands of the executive, which led to continued arbitrary detention and torture designed to prevent coup d'état attempts, or to prevent political parties or ethnic groups opposing the governing group from gaining power. The military and the governing party exercised various de facto and de jure powers to control the population, 65 per cent of which lacked the means to satisfy basic needs. Society as a whole was subjected to the constant presence of armed forces, which restricted the right to freedom of movement and exercised criminal jurisdiction over civilians. Legislation was not published regularly and there was no daily newspaper through which freedom of opinion might be exercised. Human rights organizations were not authorized to function, and there were no trade unions, except for a farmers' association. Women and children were the most seriously affected by discrimination, especially regarding education and health.

In 2000, technical assistance agreements between the Government and the European Commission, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the Government of Spain were concluded or were in their initial stages.

In November, the political opposition, gathered in Spain, handed the Special Representative a proposal inviting the Government to agree to arrangements which, with support by the international community, could ensure a transition to democracy, based on respect for human rights. The proposal merited consideration, said the Special Representative.

The Special Representative reiterated his previous recommendations [YUN 1999, p. 694] and added that the Government should be called on to end enforced disappearances and, to that end, to agree to organize a national register of detainees, open for consultation by anyone. It was also proposed that habeas corpus should be instituted and consideration be given to the engagement of a political dialogue outside the country between the Government and the opposition in exile to find ways to establish democracy and human rights. In view of the fact that the Government did not cooperate with the Special Representative's mandate in 2000, he recommended that the Commission appeal to the Government to take a position in conformity with its international obligations, and that the Commission arrange for the mechanisms to ensure that that was done.

Rwanda

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 2000/21], the Commission, while noting indications of improvement in the human rights situation in Rwanda, expressed concern at continued violations of human rights and international humanitarian law and urged the Government to continue to investigate and prosecute the violations. Welcoming the Government's efforts to build a State based on the rule of law and the guarantee of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, the Commission strongly condemned the crime of genocide and the crimes against humanity that were committed in Rwanda in 1994 and expressed concern that most of the perpetrators of genocide and other gross human rights violations continued to evade justice. It also expressed concern about the effectiveness of the ICTR witness protection programme and called for its improvement as a matter of urgency. The Commission encouraged the Government to support fully the National Human Rights Commission (NHRC) to enable it to investigate human rights violations and sensitize and train the population.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Representative's mandate for a further year and asked him to report to the General Assembly in 2000 (see p. 742) and to the Commission in 2001, and asked the High Commissioner to assist him. The Commission called for close consultations between the Special Representative, the Government, NHRC and other national institutions. The Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision and approved its requests to the Special Representative and the High Commissioner on 28 July (decision 2000/254).

Report of Special Representative. In August [A/55/269], the Secretary-General transmitted the report of Special Representative Michel Mousalli (Switzerland) based on his visits to Rwanda (January, March, June).

The Government was still professing its commitment to the ideals of participatory democracy, human rights, reconciliation and sustainable development, which showed in the continuing moral and material support accorded to NHRC and the National Unity and Reconciliation Commission (NURC). At the same time, some tensions had appeared in the population at large, reportedly due to the insufficiently explained personnel changes at or near the top of the political hierarchy, some apparently isolated and unexplained cases of assassinations of high-level officials, incidents of infiltration across the border with the DRC resulting in a number of deaths and the continued involvement of Rwanda in the DRC crisis (see p. 119) and its cost to the country. A drought had created severe food shortages in the eastern part of the country, and famine in some areas, resulting in internal displacement of populations in search of food. Another reported source of malaise was the significant number of cases of sexual abuse of children of both sexes, especially young girls, in some cases in the belief that a sexual relationship with a young girl would cure HIV/AIDS.

The Special Representative described security concerns in Kigali and its environs, and in the border areas, especially in north-west Rwanda, and new concerns related to the persecution of government opponents, the silencing of the press, the forced return of persons who had fled the country and the prevention of certain persons from fleeing abroad. He discussed co-operation with OHCHR, which had continued to improve. Expressing gratification at the progress made through NHRC, he was convinced that technical assistance would help it develop projects. In spite of the bold moves the Government had taken to reduce the prison population, the overall number of detainees had not declined. Conditions had worsened in the country's 154 cachots, which were meant to hold detainees for up to 48 hours, until they could be transferred to a prison. The Special Representative was distressed that prison conditions continued to violate the basic norms. Efforts to improve justice would enter a new phase with the introduction of the gacaca, a system of community justice for genocide suspects. Trials would take place in public before the entire community. Drawing on the recollections of the accused, the complainants and the villagers, the judges would compile a list of those who died in the genocide, and of those presumed responsible. The accused would be judged and sentenced. The Government established NURC, which, while focusing on creating a strong institutional foundation, had completed nationwide consultations, produced promotional material, organized reconciliation workshops and taken over the running of solidarity camps, and supported initiatives of other partners. In terms of economic and social rights, children had suffered terribly under the genocide and land and settlement issues were still outstanding. The Special Representative made a series of recommendations regarding prison and judicial reform; the media; children; human rights education; and NHRC. He made recommendations to the international community, bilateral donors, NGOs, the UN system, the High Commissioner, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), UNDP and ICTR.

In a later report [E/CN.4/2001/45/Add.1 & Corr.1], the Special Representative, following his visit to Rwanda in October, observed that the national commissions had made progress since his last report. A programme of assistance and co-operation between OHCHR and NHRC, which started in November, aimed to facilitate the effective functioning of NHRC by improving its technical and substantive capacity. NHRC held human rights training and education programmes for police officers and senior non-commissioned officers in the army and for secondary school, university and health institute students. NURC was examining the link between justice and reconciliation, particularly how the gacaca justice system could promote reconciliation.

The Government had taken major steps towards decentralization and democracy. A new structure of territorial administration was introduced in December, which accelerated efforts to release detainees without files, to regularize files and to reduce the number of those held in communal cachots by transferring them to prisons. Large numbers of the population were still without shelter; thus, reintegration needs were not met. Land tenure needed to be resolved for reconciliation and sustainable development. Concerning a new law permitting women to own and inherit land, the Government began a nationwide information campaign to educate the population. The Special Representative expressed concern that many genocide survivors were still in dire need of assistance, and that many felt abandoned by the international community. He noted the growing number of new independent newspapers, but expressed concern that a weekly English newspaper had been harassed. Newspapers were printed in Uganda, as there was no local printing press. The draft press law was largely viewed by the media as a positive and balanced approach to media regulation. The first National Conference on the Rights of the Child was held in Kigali (14-18 August) and an inter-ministerial Task Force on the Rights of the Child had been established under the Ministry of Local Administration and Social Affairs.

Sierra Leone

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 2000/24], the Commission, expressing concern regarding the continuing violations of human rights and humanitarian law committed in Sierra Leone, called on the Government to comply with its obligations to promote and protect human rights, to work closely in the human rights area with the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) and OHCHR and to prioritize the special needs of women and children. It welcomed steps taken by the Government and civil society to create a human rights infrastructure and the deployment of a child protection adviser with UNAMSIL to ensure the protection of children's rights. The Commission called on the Government to investigate reports of human rights abuses that had occurred since the signing of the Lomé Peace Agreement in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 159] and to end impunity; the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner were asked to respond favourably to government requests for assistance with the investigation of abuses.

The Commission asked the High Commissioner and the international community to continue to assist the Government to establish and maintain an effective truth and reconciliation commission and national human rights commission. The Secretary-General, the High Commissioner and the international community were requested to assist the human rights section of UNAMSIL and, in consultation with the relevant UN agencies, assist the Government to address the country's human rights needs. The High Commissioner was asked to report to the General Assembly in 2000 and to the Commission in 2001.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's requests to the High Commissioner and the international community to assist the Government and to the Secretary-General, the High Commissioner and the international community to assist the human rights section of UNAMSIL. It approved the Commission's requests to the High Commissioner to submit reports (decision 2000/256).

Reports of High Commissioner. In August [A/55/36], the High Commissioner noted that persistent fighting in Sierra Leone exacerbated the human rights violations that had characterized the conflict, among them extrajudicial executions, mutilations, torture, rape and sexual abuse, forced labour, abduction, forced recruitment and use of children, as well as women, as soldiers, wanton destruction and looting of civilian property, and massive internal displacement of persons. Regarding UNAMSIL, when the armed conflict resumed in May, a Sierra Leonean task force was established by OHCHR to support the Mission's human rights section in its response to the human rights-related aspects of the conflict. The poor security situation had so far delayed plans to deploy human rights officers throughout the country.

The High Commissioner in a later report [E/CN.4/2001/35], citing reports of the Secretary-General to the Security Council (see pp. 190-200), stated that the human rights situation in Sierra Leone remained grave. Arbitrary executions, rape, abduction and looting continued. The security situation remained a matter of serious concern. However, human rights assessment missions in Port Loko, Makeni, Magburaka, Kabala, Kenema and Daru found that the situation had improved due to the deployment of UN troops and military observers. The human rights situation in some parts of the country, especially areas not under government control, remained grave.

The human rights section of UNAMSIL, under the general guidance of OHCHR, identified human rights issues relevant to the humanitarian community and the UN agencies active in Sierra Leone. The section, in collaboration with UN agencies and NGOs, established a Sierra Leone human rights committee, which provided a forum for consultations and the exchange of ideas and information between human rights and humanitarian actors, and provided human rights training for law enforcement agencies, new UNAMSIL peacekeepers, military observers and civilian police. It provided support on the ground to the commitment of OHCHR to assist the establishment of a national human rights commission and a truth and reconciliation commission.

OHCHR provided technical assistance to the Government in drafting the Act to establish the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. According to the Act, the Commission should provide an impartial historical record of violations and abuses of human rights and international humanitarian law related to the conflict, address impunity and respond to the needs of victims. It should aim to promote healing and reconciliation and prevent a repetition of the violations and abuses. Accordingly, OHCHR had developed a project for the preparatory phase of the Commission. OHCHR and UNAMSIL jointly organized an international workshop on the Commission (Freetown, 16-17 November). Because of the renewal of hostilities in May, endeavours to establish the national human rights commission were temporarily suspended. The process resumed with the holding of the workshop on the establishment of that commission (15-16 December).

The High Commissioner concluded that the needs of Sierra Leone called for an enormous programme of international support and assistance. OHCHR would continue to assist in building national capacities in the areas of human rights, the rule of law and democracy. It would provide technical assistance for the establishment of the truth and reconciliation and national human rights commissions; capacity-building through training for law enforcement authorities; support for the local human rights community; and programmes to rehabilitate war victims, especially women and children.

Sudan

Note by Secretariat. An April note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/2000/36] summarized information contained in a draft report of Special Rapporteur Leonardo Franco (Argentina), who, owing to an emergency, had not been able to finalize his report to the Commission.

The Special Rapporteur visited the Sudan (19 February-3 March) to examine with the authorities the new Constitution and any new legislation adopted; to look into the implications of a recent declaration of a state of emergency; and to assess progress made by the recently established Committee for the Eradication of Abductions of Women and Children (CEAWC). In Khartoum, he observed signs of greater political dialogue and the enjoyment of a broader degree of the freedoms of expression, press and assembly, which was attributed to changes in the balance of power within the official party. Despite the new climate, the Special Rapporteur expressed concern that the official party continued to maintain unrelenting control over all segments of society and was reluctant to open its institutions to a greater degree of democratic participation; the independence of the judiciary was often undermined; executive action had no system of control; and the fundamental institutions and legal system remained basically unchanged. The Special Rapporteur continued to receive, although in declining numbers, allegations of cases of torture, arbitrary detention and other human rights abuses. Consistent and undisputed evidence indicated that the war was being conducted in disregard of human rights and humanitarian law principles, and that violations were perpetrated by all parties, the greater portion by the Government. He was convinced that the oil exploitation issue, in Western Upper Nile, lay at the heart of the conflict and had exacerbated the war. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the use of oil facilities for military purposes come to an end. During the mission, he received expressions of concern at the deterioration of the human rights situation in the Nuba Mountains as a result of action by the parties to the conflict.

The Special Rapporteur stated that the creation of CEAWC was a concrete indication of the political will of the Government to deal with abductions and noted the Committee's courage in helping victims of abduction and forced labour. He felt that CEAWC's work would benefit from a clear stand by government officials, openly supporting it, which had not been the case so far. He recommended the promotion of an agreement between the Government and OHCHR.

In April [E/CN.4/2000/149], the Sudan commented on the Special Rapporteur's report. Among other things, it stated that abduction was neither a government policy nor a war strategy, but an ongoing tribal practice, and confirmed that the airstrip of the petroleum companies had never been used for military operations and that it had signed an agreement with OHCHR on 29 March.

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 2000/27], by a vote of 28 to none, with 24 abstentions, the Commission welcomed the establishment in the Sudan of a Constitutional Court, the stipulation of basic human rights and freedoms in the Constitution, the creation of CEAWC, the release of political detainees, and efforts to improve freedom of expression, association, the press and assembly, to implement the right to education, and to address the problem of internally displaced persons. It expressed deep concern, however, at serious violations of human rights, fundamental freedoms and humanitarian law in the Sudan by all parties to the conflict. The parties were urged to respect and protect human rights, fundamental freedoms and international humanitarian law; stop the use of weapons; grant safe and unhindered access to international agencies and humanitarian organizations; cooperate with the peace efforts of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development; and not use children under the age of 18 as soldiers and refrain from forced conscription. The Commission called on the Government to comply with its obligations under international human rights instruments to which it was a party; ensure the rule of law; conform its national legislation with the instruments to which the Sudan was a party; end and prevent acts of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment and ensure that all accused persons were held in ordinary custody and received fair trials; improve the appeal procedures in the judiciary; investigate reports of the abduction of women and children; make further efforts to address the problem of internally displaced persons; end the aerial bombardment of civilians; ensure respect for freedom of opinion, expression, thought, conscience and religion, as well as freedom of association and assembly; and comply with the commitment made to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict not to recruit children under the age of 18 as soldiers [YUN 1998, p. 711].

The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for an additional year and asked him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 2000 and to report to the Commission in 2001, applying a gender perspective. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur. Noting the accord signed between the Government and OHCHR on 29 March, the Commission requested them to continue consultations to establish a permanent representation of the High Commissioner in the Sudan.

The Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision and its request to the Special Rapporteur on 28 July (decision 2000/258).

Interim report of Special Rapporteur. In September, the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's interim report [A/55/374].

Military hostilities had undergone a dramatic escalation, and parties to the conflict continued to commit ceasefire violations on an unprecedented level, taking a heavy toll on human life and causing much suffering, including greater forced displacement. The Government had continued its systematic policy of bombing civilians and civilian installations. Despite the existence of a more favourable political environment, the Special Rapporteur continued to receive reports of arbitrary execution, torture, arbitrary detention, attempts against the freedom of the press and other human rights violations. He stressed the need to guarantee the independence of the judiciary and to ensure the control of the security organs and the existence of a system of checks and balances. Although the state of emergency declared on 12 December 1999 had not been followed by large-scale measures against human rights, patterns adversely affecting human rights continued; thus, the Special Rapporteur called on the Government to lift the state of emergency.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.3], adopted resolution 55/116 by recorded vote (85-32-49) [agenda item 114 (c)].

Situation of human rights in the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms as stated in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments and to fulfil the obligations that they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Mindful that the Sudan is a party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights and the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/27 of 18 April 2000,

Aware of the urgent need for the Government of the Sudan to implement effective additional measures in the field of human rights and humanitarian relief in order to protect the civilian population from the effects of armed conflicts,

Expressing its firm belief that progress towards a peaceful settlement of the conflict in southern Sudan within the peace initiative of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development will contribute greatly to the creation of a better environment to encourage respect for human rights in the Sudan,

Condemning the murder of four Sudanese relief workers in April 1999 while in the custody of the Sudan People's Liberation Army/Movement,

1. Welcomes:

(a) The interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the Sudan;

(b) The visit by the Special Rapporteur to the Sudan in February and March 2000 at the invitation of the Government of the Sudan and the very good cooperation extended by the Government in this regard, as well as the stated willingness of the Government to continue to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur;

(c) The signing of the agreement of 29 March 2000 between the Government of the Sudan and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights;

(d) The activities of the Committee for the Eradication of Abduction of Women and Children as a constructive response on the part of the Government of the Sudan, the cooperation extended to the Committee by the local communities and the support of the international community and non-governmental organizations;

(e) The expressed commitment of the Government of the Sudan to respect and promote human rights and the rule of law and its expressed commitment to a process of democratization with a view to establishing a representative and accountable government, reflecting the aspirations of the people of the Sudan;

(f) Recent additional efforts by the Government of the Sudan to improve freedom of expression, association, the press and assembly, in particular the adoption of the Political Organization Act of 2000, and the announcement relating to the creation of a high commission to review the law on public order;

(g) The stipulation of basic human rights and freedoms in the Constitution of the Sudan and the establishment of the Constitutional Court, which has been in operation since April 1999;

(h) The efforts to implement the right to education;

(i) The renewed invitation extended by the Government of the Sudan to the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on religious intolerance and the efforts of the Government of the Sudan to promulgate a new law on religious liberties and activities after an open and transparent process of consultation with high representatives of all religions;

(j) Leniency measures taken by the Government of the Sudan, which led to the release of a large number of imprisoned women;

(k) The release of political prisoners and the measures taken to allow the return of exiled opposition members;

(l) The recent shelter given by the Sudan to new groups of refugees;

(m) The commitments undertaken by the Sudan People's Liberation Army/Movement during the visit to Rumbek, southern Sudan, of the Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund, not to recruit into its armed forces children under the age of eighteen and to demobilize all child soldiers still remaining in the military and hand them over to the competent civil authorities for reintegration;

(n) The convening of the fourth meeting of the Technical Committee on Humanitarian Assistance at Geneva on 2 and 3 November 2000, attended by delegations of the Government of the Sudan, the Sudan People's Liberation Army/Movement and the United Nations, and its final communiqué;

(o) The repeated statements by the Government of the Sudan in favour of a global, lasting and effectively monitored ceasefire in southern Sudan;

2. Expresses its deep concern:

(a) At the impact of the current armed conflict, worsened by the breakdown of the ceasefire in June 2000 and by the upsurge of armed confrontations, on the situation of human rights and its adverse effects on the civilian population, in particular women and children, and the continuing serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law by all parties, in particular:

(i) The occurrence of cases of summary or arbitrary execution resulting from conflict between members of the armed forces and their allies and armed insurgent groups within the country, including the Sudan People's Liberation Army/Movement;

(ii) The occurrence, within the framework of the conflict in southern Sudan, of cases of enforced or involuntary disappearance, the use of children as soldiers and combatants, forced conscription, forced displacement of populations, arbitrary detention, torture and ill-treatment of civilians;

(iii) The abduction of women and children to be subjected to forced labour or similar conditions;

(iv) The indiscriminate aerial bombardments, which seriously and recurrently affect civilian populations and installations, in particular the bombings of schools and hospitals, as well as the use of civilian premises for military purposes;

(v) The use of weapons, including indiscriminate artillery shelling and landmines, against the civilian population;

(vi) The conditions imposed by the Sudan People's Liberation Army/Movement on humanitarian organizations working in southern Sudan, which have seriously affected their safety and led to the withdrawal of many of them, with potentially grave consequences for the already endangered situation of thousands of people living in areas under its control;

(vii) The difficulties encountered by United Nations and humanitarian staff in carrying out their mandate because of harassment, indiscriminate aerial bombings and the reopening of hostilities;

(b) At continuing violations of human rights in areas under the control of the Government of the Sudan, in particular:

(i) Precarious conditions of detention, frequent use of torture, arbitrary detentions, interrogations, and violations of human rights by the security organs;

(ii) Acts of intimidation and harassment against the civilian population;

(iii) Restrictions on freedom of religion, as well as the obstacles remaining to the freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly;

(iv) Information that all means of avoiding the execution of severe, inhuman punishments have not been fully utilized;

3. Urges all parties to the continuing conflict in the Sudan:

(a) To work immediately to put in place a global, lasting and effectively monitored ceasefire as a first necessary step to a negotiated settlement to the conflict;

(b) To respect and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, to respect fully international humanitarian law, thereby facilitating the voluntary return, repatriation and reintegration of refugees and internally displaced persons to their homes, and to ensure that those responsible for violations of human rights and international humanitarian law are brought to justice;

(c) To stop immediately the use of weapons, including indiscriminate artillery shelling and landmines, in particular by the Sudan People's Liberation Army/Movement, against the civilian population, which runs counter to principles of international humanitarian law;

(d) To stop attacks on sites that usually have a significant presence of children as well as during the "days of tranquillity" which had been agreed upon for the purpose of ensuring peaceful polio vaccination campaigns;

(e) To stop immediately the use of civilian premises for military purposes, in particular by the Sudan People's Liberation Army/Movement, particularly sites that usually have a significant presence of children;

(f) To grant full, safe and unhindered access to international agencies and humanitarian organizations so as to facilitate by all means possible the delivery of humanitarian assistance, in conformity with international humanitarian law, to all civilians in need of protection and assistance, in particular in Bahr el-Ghazal, the Nuba Mountains, the Western Upper Nile and areas in need throughout the country, and to continue to cooperate in this regard with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and Operation Lifeline Sudan in the delivery of such assistance, and urges the Sudan People's Liberation Army/Movement to resume negotiations as soon as possible with a view to the withdrawal of the conditions imposed on the work of international agencies and humanitarian organizations;

(g) In particular the Sudan People's Liberation Army/Movement, not to misappropriate humanitarian assistance;

(h) To continue to cooperate with the peace efforts of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, and, in this context, urges the Sudan People's Liberation Army/Movement to commit itself to a permanent ceasefire;

(i) Not to use or recruit children under the age of eighteen as soldiers, and urges the Sudan People's Liberation Army/Movement not to use or recruit children under the age of eighteen as soldiers and to refrain from the practice of forced conscription;

(j) To fulfil their commitments concerning the protection of children affected by war, including their commitments to cease the use of anti-personnel landmines, the abduction and exploitation of children and the recruitment of children by the Sudan People's Liberation Army/Movement as soldiers, to advance the demobilization and reintegration of child soldiers, and to ensure access to displaced and unaccompanied minors;

(k) To allow an independent investigation of the case of the four Sudanese nationals who were abducted on 18 February 1999 while travelling with a team from the International Committee of the Red Cross on a humanitarian mission and subsequently killed while in the custody of the Sudan People's Liberation Army/Movement, and urges the Sudan People's Liberation Army/Movement to return the bodies to their families;

4. Calls upon the Government of the Sudan:

(a) To comply fully with its obligations under the international human rights instruments to which the Sudan is a party and to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as well as to respect its obligations under international humanitarian law;

(b) To strengthen its efforts to ensure the rule of law by bringing legislation into line with the Constitution and by the effective practice of law enforcement;

(c) To continue its efforts to bring its national legislation into conformity with the applicable international human rights instruments to which the Sudan is a party and to ensure that all individuals in its territory enjoy fully the rights recognized in those instruments;

(d) To take all effective measures to prevent and end all acts of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, to ensure that all accused persons are held in ordinary custody and receive prompt, just and fair trials under internationally recognized standards, to investigate all reported human rights violations, including acts of torture, brought to its attention and to prosecute those responsible for the violations;

(e) To seriously consider ratifying, as a matter of priority, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

(f) To make sure that all means of avoiding the execution of severe, inhuman punishments are fully utilized;

(g) To reinforce the action taken to prevent and stop abductions of women and children within the framework of the conflict in southern Sudan, to bring to trial any persons suspected of supporting or participating in such activities and not cooperating with the efforts of the Committee for the Eradication of Abduction of Women and Children in addressing and preventing those activities, to facilitate the safe return of affected children to their families as a matter of priority and to take further measures, in particular through the Committee, with which all concerned have the responsibility and the duty to cooperate;

(h) To stop definitively the indiscriminate aerial bombardment of civilian and humanitarian targets, which runs counter to fundamental principles of human rights and humanitarian law;

(i) To make further efforts to address effectively the growing problem of internally displaced persons, whose number has increased, including ensuring their right to effective protection and assistance;

(j) To continue to implement its commitment to the democratization process and the rule of law and to create, in this context, conditions that would allow for a democratization process that is genuine and wholly reflects the aspirations of the people of the country and ensures their full participation;

(k) To continue efforts to implement the commitment made to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict not to recruit children under the age of eighteen as soldiers;

(l) To implement the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners and to raise the age of criminal responsibility for children in order to take into account the observations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child;

5. Encourages the Government of the Sudan to continue to pursue its dialogue with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the basis of the agreement of 29 March 2000 between the Government and the High Commissioner, with a view to establishing a permanent representation of the High Commissioner;

6. Encourages the Office of the High Commissioner to continue to take into consideration requests for assistance by the Government of the Sudan, inter alia, with a view to establishing a permanent representation of the High Commissioner as a matter of priority;

7. Calls upon the international community to expand its support for activities, in particular those of the Committee for the Eradication of Abduction of Women and Children, aimed at improving respect for human rights and humanitarian law during the conflict;

8. Decides to continue its consideration of the situation of human rights in the Sudan at its fifty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Human rights questions", in the light of further elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 55/116:

On 28 December [E/CN.4/2001/28], Gerhart Baum (Germany) was appointed Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, following the resignation of Mr. Franco.

Togo

Note by Secretary-General. A July note by the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/8], recalling Togo's agreement to the creation of an international commission of inquiry to verify the truth of an Amnesty International report alleging that hundreds of extrajudicial executions and other human rights violations had taken place in the country in 1998 [YUN 1999, p. 702], stated that on 7 June, the establishment of the three-member Commission, under the auspices of OAU and the United Nations, had been announced.

Commission of Inquiry. The International Commission of Inquiry for Togo held three meetings in Geneva (31 July–4 August, 18–22 September and 15–22 December) [E/CN.4/2001/134]. During those meetings, the Commission adopted its rules of procedure, exchanged views with several organizations and with permanent missions to the UN Office at Geneva, heard delegations of the Government of Togo and Amnesty International, and prepared for its field mission (Togo, 11–19 November and 4–12 December; Benin (Cotonou and the Mono region on the Togolese border), 19 November–2 December; and Ghana, 2–4 December). The field mission enabled the Commission to access information sources, collect testimony and documents concerning the allegations and conduct on-site visits.

Having rejected Amnesty International's allegations [YUN 1999, p. 702] as false, Togo brought judicial proceedings against the organization's Secretary-General and individuals suspected of having cooperated with its inquiry. The legal proceedings were suspended and protection guaranteed for potential Commission witnesses against any legal proceedings or reprisals subsequent to the field mission.

The Commission concluded that a systematic pattern of human rights violations existed in Togo in 1998 and was convinced that the allegations of extrajudicial executions should be given due consideration. In the main, those singled out for execution had been members of opposition parties, but in some cases persons arrested for offences under ordinary law had also been executed. Various accounts seemed to indicate that the perpetrators were associated with the security forces, the gendarmerie and the militias that operated in tandem with the authorities. In addition to extrajudicial, summary and arbitrary executions, they had engaged in torture and ill-treatment of detainees, and the rape and abduction of women. Armed militiamen closely linked to the authorities were said to rape rural women in the presence of their husbands and abduct women and hand them over to other men for payment. In the course of those night-time raids, the militiamen also robbed their victims. Although apprised of the allegations, the gendarmerie and the local authorities had been unable to stop the crimes. Regarding the establishment of responsibilities, the Commission was of the opinion that a judicial inquiry at the national level was the sole means of identifying the individuals responsible. As to allegations that bodies had been discovered by fishermen on the high seas, defined by them as an offshore area between 10 and 20 kilometres from the coast, a number of accounts substantiated the reports. However, the divergent estimates of the number of bodies seen by fishermen did not permit the Commission either to confirm or deny an exact number. Nor could it confirm or deny, on the basis of current information, allegations that aircraft had been used to dump bodies on the high seas.

The Commission recommended the publication of its report and the appointment of another team of experts to verify technical data concerning the operation of aircraft used by the Togolese armed forces, the computerized records of flights at the Lomé-Tonkoin airport in 1998, and the trajectories of bodies in the territorial sea adjacent to the coasts of Togo and Benin. It recommended that the OAU and UN Secretaries-General appoint a team of forensic scientists to exhume and examine bodies reportedly buried in Togo and Benin. Regarding the protection of witnesses who had cooperated in its inquiries, the Commission proposed that Member States and the relevant international organizations support OHCHR to enable it to follow up the situation of the witnesses. It recommended the appointment of a special rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Togo and suggested that the Special Rapporteurs of the Commission on Human Rights and the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights concerned, respectively, with extrajudicial, summary and arbitrary executions, torture and violence against women should visit Togo periodically. The Government of Togo was urged to begin, as soon as possible, a criminal inquiry through the establishment of a special team of judges, and adopt legislative and other measures to punish and prevent such violations.

Annexed to the Commission's report was a statement by the Subcommission Chairman made in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 702] and the Commission's rules of procedure.

Colombia

Commission action. The Commission Chairperson, in a 28 April statement [E/2000/23], welcomed the willingness of the Government of Colombia to engage in constructive peace talks with the main guerrilla groups to achieve a sustainable peace, and the announcement of a promised integrated plan on human rights. Having taken note of the approval of the Military Penal Code reform bill by the Congress of Colombia, the Commission urged the Government to overcome constitutional impediments to its entry into force. The Commission strongly condemned all acts of terrorism and violation of international humanitarian law committed by guerrilla groups, deplored the persistence of worrying levels of impunity in cases of serious crimes, remained deeply concerned about the increase in the number of internally displaced persons and noted with concern the effects of violence in the country, particularly those victimizing minority groups. It asked the High Commissioner to report in 2001.

Report of High Commissioner. A report of the High Commissioner, which was based on information collected by OHCHR in Bogotá, described the human rights situation in Colombia in 2000 [E/CN.4/2001/15]. The High Commissioner visited the country (3-4 December) to verify the human rights situation and to support the work and highlight the role of the Bogotá Office and its staff.

During the year, the Office received 1,017 complaints: 108 communications were sent to the authorities and 65 field visits were made by the Office to various parts of the country that were of special concern. The Office published an updated compilation of international human rights and humanitarian law recommendations applicable to the country and two further compilations were produced, one on international human rights and humanitarian law instruments and international criminal law, the other on international and national jurisprudence and doctrine. Regarding technical assistance and advisory services, the Office increased its dialogue and developed projects with institutions responsible for protecting and promoting human rights and with NGOs and academic institutions. The Office participated in seminars, forums, workshops and conferences and held two regional workshops with NGOs.

The human rights situation continued to deteriorate in 2000, with violations qualifying as grave, massive and systematic. The main rights affected were the right to life and the rights to inviolability, freedom and security of the person. Members of the paramilitary groups were the principal violators. Violations of the right to life took the form of massacres or individual, selective killings. Although a high percentage of the executions appeared to be politically motivated, in some cases the characteristic traits of the practice known as social cleansing were identifiable. The majority of the massacres were committed during paramilitary raids, many of which resulted in the forced displacement of local inhabitants. Reports were also received of extrajudicial executions, allegedly by members of the security forces. In some areas, paramilitaries systematically carried out social cleansing against prostitutes, homosexuals, criminals, drug addicts, street children and informal garbage collectors, among others. Threats received from paramilitary groups by human rights NGOs, judiciary officials, journalists, trade unionists, religious ministers, university professors and students were closely linked to violations of the right to life. Breaches of international humanitarian law were recurrent, massive and systematic, many of them forming part of a general assault on the population.

Regarding the Government's priorities, protection of human rights and compliance with international recommendations were neither accorded the importance nor pursued with the persistence or effectiveness that the situation required. In view of the Government's weak and inconsistent commitment to counter paramilitary groups, the phenomenon grew in extent and strength. Government instruments against the paramilitary groups had proved ineffective. The High Commissioner remained concerned at impunity, and the administration of justice was again affected by security conditions in which members of the judiciary performed their work; resource shortages; the weakening of institutions; and the lack of access to certain regions of the country. Human rights defenders continued to work under very difficult conditions. The High Commissioner was also concerned by the absence of effective State control of penal establishments, the lack of a comprehensive prison policy that safeguarded inmates' rights, the abuse of pre-trial detention and the limits on the exercise of habeas corpus. Forced displacement continued to increase and extend into new areas. Although noteworthy efforts were made to assist populations at risk and vulnerable groups, the Ministry of the Interior's Protection Programme suffered from financial, administrative and structural shortcomings. The State did not accord sufficient attention to economic, social and cultural rights. Violence against minors increased and women suffered from discrimination, domestic violence, sexual abuse and trafficking.

The High Commissioner recommended that the Government strengthen its cooperation with OHCHR; find a negotiated solution to the armed conflict; ensure the respect and guarantee of human rights; prevent human rights violations or infringement of international humanitarian law from being tried in military criminal courts; focus economic and social policies on the most disadvantaged; and guarantee human rights education. Colombia was urged to give effect to the enjoyment and exercise of fundamental rights and freedoms; cease impunity; adopt a crime policy in keeping with the principles of rights-based criminal law; combat paramilitarism and dismantle it; and combat inequality between men and women. Parties to the conflict were called on to abide strictly and unconditionally by the principles and standards of international humanitarian law.

Communication. Commenting on the High Commissioner's report, Colombia charged, among other things, that it was unbalanced, went beyond OHCHR's terms of reference and ignored what had been accomplished despite the conflict [E/CN.4/2001/139].

Cuba

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 2000/25], by a roll-call vote of 21 to 18, with 14 abstentions, the Commission called on the Government of Cuba to ensure respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. Noting certain measures taken to enhance freedom of religion, the Commission called on Cuban authorities to continue to take action in that regard and expressed the hope that further positive steps would be taken with regard to all human rights and fundamental freedoms. It expressed concern about the continued repression of political opposition members and about the detention of dissidents, including the members of the Internal Dissidence Working Group, and called on the Government to release those imprisoned for peacefully expressing their political, religious and social views and for exercising their rights to full and equal participation in public affairs. Cuba was called on to consider acceding to human rights instruments to which it was not a party, to open a dialogue with the political opposition and to cooperate with other mechanisms of the Commission. It recommended that the Government take advantage of the technical cooperation programmes of OHCHR.

Afghanistan

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 2000/18], the Commission, noting with deep concern the continuing pattern of human rights violations in Afghanistan, condemned the widespread violations and abuses of human rights and humanitarian law, the continuing grave human rights violations of women and girls, the frequent practice of arbitrary arrest and detention and of summary trials, which had resulted in summary executions, and recent violations by the Taliban in Kandahar of UN immunity. It urged all Afghan parties to respect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all; cease hostilities; reaffirm publicly their commitment to international human rights and principles; protect civilians; provide effective remedies to victims of grave violations of human rights and accepted humanitarian rules and bring perpetrators to trial; fulfil their obligations regarding the safety of all personnel of diplomatic missions, the United Nations and other international organizations and NGOs; and repeal discriminatory legislation and other measures against women and girls. The Commission asked the parties to continue to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur. The Secretary-General was asked to ensure that the ongoing deployment of the civilian affairs observers in Afghanistan took place as soon as possible, security conditions permitting, and that gender issues were incorporated in their mission, and to ensure a gender perspective in the selection of the staff of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan.

The Commission asked the High Commissioner to ensure a human rights presence to provide advice and human rights training to all Afghan parties, as well as to intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. It decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year, and asked him to report to the General Assembly in 2000 and to the Commission in 2001. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him and to consider his recommendations in developing UN activities in Afghanistan.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's requests to the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner, and endorsed the Special Rapporteur's extension and the Commission's requests to him (decision 2000/251).

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Special Rapporteur Kamal Hossain (Bangladesh) visited Iran, where he interviewed Afghan refugees and met with high-ranking government officials [A/55/346].

The Special Rapporteur outlined developments from April to July aimed at promoting the peace process and described the resumption of the conflict from June to August as marked by fierce fighting and significant civilian displacement, noting that the combination of war, drought and displacement continued to take a terrible toll on Afghans and their livelihoods and there was an urgent need for humanitarian assistance (see pp. 271 and 864). Some 1.4 million Afghan refugees were in Iran and a similar number in Pakistan, even after the voluntary repatriation from both countries of a significant number (see p. 1162).

In July, reports were received of systematic human rights violations, including allegations of the summary execution of prisoners in Taliban-held areas in northern Afghanistan. The Special Rapporteur obtained first-hand information regarding harsh conditions of detention, which also included the practice of torture. Afghanistan was one of the most heavily mined countries in the world. Landmines maimed and killed people but also denied people access to farmland, water, pasture, roads and buildings, said the Special Rapporteur. They were also an obstacle to post-conflict rehabilitation, the delivery of aid programmes, food security, sustainable livelihoods, and the return of refugees and internally displaced persons to their homes. On 5 August, gunmen shot and killed seven Afghans working in the western part of the country for the UN-supported mine-action agency. The Taliban militia, which controlled 90 per cent of Afghanistan, traded accusations with the opposition over who had carried out the killings. The Special Rapporteur described the impact of Taliban edicts and the existing legal regime on the human rights situation in Afghanistan. According to some reports, there had been some relaxation of the strict ban on female education imposed by previous edicts of the Taliban authorities. On 8 March, a formal public celebration of International Women's Day was held in Kabul. The statute on the activities of the United Nations in Afghanistan, promulgated by the Taliban around 15 August, introduced substantial restrictions on the UN and specialized agency operations that provided humanitarian, economic, rehabilitation and development assistance.

In a later report [E/CN.4/2001/43], the Special Rapporteur stated that an agreement signed by the Taliban and the United Front was the first time the two warring sides had committed themselves in writing to a process of dialogue, which would be held under the Secretary-General's good offices (see p. 266).

On 20 December, Hezb-e-Wahdat forces affiliated with the United Front took over an area in Bamian province (Yakawlang district) from the Taliban. Reliable sources reported widespread killings and displacement of innocent civilians. Of the estimated 90,000 inhabitants of Yakawlang district, approximately one third fled their homes.

The suffering of the Afghan people was compounded as the result of the country being used for various forms of cross-border criminal activity, including drug trafficking. Effective action was needed to prevent such activities. Regarding health, the impact of the ongoing conflict daily added victims, both through physical violence and mental stress. While some progress had been made in establishing community-based health and rehabilitation committees, activities were restricted to only some geographical regions and only a small proportion of the need even in the areas covered. Afghanistan had some of the worst education indicators in the world. Access was low at all levels, especially for girls but also for boys. The Taliban controlled all means of communication and had banned pictures. A number of positive developments signalled that severe restrictions on women's education and employment were slowly being reconsidered by the authorities. The level of vulnerability of rural areas remained of major concern. The impact of the war on the economic infrastructure had been devastating, transport and communication facilities were derelict and there were few job opportunities outside the subsistence economy on the one hand and the criminalized economy on the other. The report observed that there was strong consensus in Afghanistan on the need for the United Nations to upgrade and intensify its political engagement and peacemaking efforts.

(For political details, see p. 262.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.3], adopted resolution 55/119 without vote [agenda item 114 (c)].

Question of human rights in Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and accepted humanitarian rules, as set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have freely undertaken under the various international instruments,

Recalling that Afghanistan is a party to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War and that it has signed the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Recalling also all its relevant resolutions, as well as the resolutions and presidential statements of the Security Council, the decisions of the Economic and Social Council, the resolutions and decisions of the Commission on Human Rights and the resolutions of the Commission on the Status of Women,

Recalling further that the United Nations continues to play its central and impartial role in international efforts towards a peaceful resolution of the Afghan conflict, and encouraging all efforts at the national, regional and international levels aimed at finding a solution to the continuing conflict through a broad-based dialogue involving all concerned actors,

Expressing deep concern at the lack of reconstruction in Afghanistan,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan and of the conclusions and recommendations contained therein, and encourages the Special Rapporteur to continue to fulfil his mandate;

2. Strongly condemns the mass killings and systematic human rights violations perpetrated against civilians and prisoners of war, including in the areas of Mazar-e-Sharif and Bamian, and notes with alarm the resumption of the wider conflict by the Taliban during the past summer, especially in the Taloqan area, resulting in the massive, forced displacement of the civilian population, in particular of women and children;

3. Condemns the widespread violations and abuses of human rights and international humanitarian law, including the right to life, liberty and security of person, freedom from torture and from other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, freedom of opinion, expression, religion, association and movement, the forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict and, in particular, the grave human rights violations committed against women and girls;

4. Reiterates its condemnation of the killings of Iranian diplomats and the correspondent of the Islamic Republic News Agency by the Taliban, which constituted flagrant violations of established international law, as well as the attacks on and killings of United Nations personnel in Taliban-held territories of Afghanistan, and calls upon the Taliban to fulfil their stated commitment to cooperate in urgent investigations of these heinous crimes with a view to bringing to justice those responsible;

5. Notes with deep concern:

(a) The persisting pattern of human rights violations in Afghanistan;

(b) The continuing and substantiated reports of human rights violations against women and girls, including all forms of discrimination against them, notably in areas under the control of the Taliban;

(c) The intensification of armed hostilities in Afghanistan and the complex nature of the conflict, including its ethnic, religious and political aspects, which have resulted in extensive human suffering and forced displacement, inter alia, on the grounds of ethnicity;

(d) The continued displacement of millions of Afghan refugees to the Islamic Republic of Iran, Pakistan, Tajikistan and other countries;

(e) The deliberate destruction of life-sustaining activities;

(f) The substantial restrictions introduced by the Taliban authorities on the operations of the United Nations and the specialized agencies that provide assistance in Afghanistan, and notes the negative impact that those restrictions have on providing women, children, in particular girls, and other most vulnerable groups with assistance;

6. Also notes with deep concern the sharp deterioration of the humanitarian situation in many areas of Afghanistan, including the Shamali Plains, the Panjshir Valley and the north-east, and calls for the full implementation of the agreement on the security of United Nations personnel in Afghanistan;

7. Urges all States to respect the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan, to refrain from interfering in its internal affairs and to end immediately the supply of arms, ammunition, military equipment, including fuel for military purposes where identifiable, training or any other military support, including the provision of foreign military personnel, to all parties to the conflict;

8. Stresses the need for national reconciliation and for the establishment of the rule of law, good governance and democracy in Afghanistan and, concurrently, the need for extensive rehabilitation and reconstruction;

9. Urges all the Afghan parties:

(a) To respect fully all human rights and fundamental freedoms, regardless of gender, ethnicity or religion, in accordance with international human rights instruments;

(b) To cease hostilities immediately, to work and cooperate fully with the Personal Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan and the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan with a view to achieving a ceasefire and to implement the Tashkent Declaration on Fundamental Principles for a Peaceful Settlement of the Conflict in Afghanistan of 19 July 1999, thus laying the foundation for a comprehensive political solution leading to the voluntary return of displaced persons to their homes in safety and with dignity and to the establishment of a broad-based, multi-ethnic, fully representative Government through the full exercise of the Afghan people of the right to self-determination;

(c) To reaffirm publicly their commitment to international human rights and principles and to recognize, protect and promote all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

(d) To respect fully international humanitarian law, to protect civilians, to halt the use of weapons against the civilian population, to refrain from the wanton destruction of food crops and civilian property, in particular homes, to stop the laying of landmines, especially anti-personnel mines, to fulfil their duty to cooperate with the United Nations mine action programme and to protect its personnel, to prohibit conscripting or enlisting children or using them to participate in hostilities in violation of international law and to ensure the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of children into society;

(e) To provide efficient and effective remedies to the victims of grave violations and abuses of human rights and of international humanitarian law and to bring the perpetrators to trial;

(f) To treat all suspects and convicted or detained persons in accordance with relevant international instruments and to refrain from arbitrary detention, including detention of civilian foreign nationals, and urges their captors to release them as well as non-criminal civilian prisoners;

10. Demands that all the Afghan parties fulfil their obligations regarding the safety of all personnel of diplomatic missions, the United Nations and other international organizations, as well as their premises in Afghanistan, and to cooperate fully and without discrimination on grounds of gender, nationality or religion with the United Nations and associated bodies and with other humanitarian organizations, agencies and non-governmental organizations;

11. Urges all the Afghan parties, in particular the Taliban, to bring to an end without delay all violations of the human rights of women and girls and to take urgent measures to ensure:

(a) The repeal of all legislative and other measures that discriminate against women and girls and those that impede the realization of all their human rights;

(b) The effective participation of women in civil, cultural, economic, political and social life throughout the country;

(c) Respect for the right of women to work and their reintegration into employment, including in the specialized agencies and human rights organizations;

(d) The equal right of women and girls to education without discrimination, the reopening of schools and the admission of women and girls to all levels of education;

(e) Respect for the equal right of women to security of person, and to ensure that those responsible for physical attacks on women are brought to justice;

(f) Respect for the freedom of movement of women;

(g) Respect for the effective and equal access of women and girls to the facilities necessary to protect their right to the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health;

12. Takes note of the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences, on her mission to Afghanistan;

13. Urges all Afghan parties to respect all international human rights instruments, including the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, to bring to an end without delay all violations of the human rights of women and girls, to take urgent measures to ensure respect for all fundamental freedoms and to respect international humanitarian law with regard to the conduct of hostilities;

14. Notes with appreciation the activities carried out by the International Committee of the Red Cross, as well as by non-governmental organizations, throughout the territory of Afghanistan;

15. Recalls its invitation extended to the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to proceed without delay to investigate fully reports of mass killings of prisoners of war and civilians, rape and cruel treatment in Afghanistan, expresses deep regret for the lack of cooperation by Afghan parties, calls upon the United Front and the Taliban to fulfil their stated commitment to cooperate with such investigations, and, noting the summary of the report on the investigations, expresses its deep regret to all the parties for the unsatisfactory results;

16. Notes with grave concern the recent reports of summary executions of prisoners in Taliban-held areas in the north of Afghanistan, which have been denied by the Taliban, and calls upon the Taliban to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur in fully investigating those allegations;

17. Invites the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner to ensure that the ongoing process of deployment of the civilian affairs observers in Afghanistan is completed as soon as possible and that gender issues and the rights of children are fully taken into account in their mission;

18. Appeals to all States, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, specialized agencies and other international organizations to provide humanitarian assistance to all in need, and urges all Afghan parties to ensure free, safe and unhindered access to all humanitarian personnel, as part of an overall effort to achieve peace;

19. Expresses its deep concern at reports of attacks on and looting of cultural artifacts in Afghanistan, emphasizes that all parties share the responsibility to protect their common heritage, and requests all Member States to take appropriate measures to prevent the looting of cultural artifacts and to ensure their return to Afghanistan;

20. Urges all the Afghan parties to extend their co-operation to the Commission on Human Rights and to all those special rapporteurs who are seeking invitations, and, in particular, calls upon the Taliban to accommodate the forthcoming visit of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur;

22. Decides to keep the situation of human rights in Afghanistan under consideration at its fifty-sixth session, in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Cambodia

For information on the human rights situation in Cambodia, see p. 624.

China

On 18 April [E/2000/23], China made a motion that no action be taken on a draft text introduced in the Commission by the United States, which, among other things, called on China to ensure the observance of all human rights, improve the impartial administration of justice and the rule of law, release political prisoners, permit the peaceful exercise of the rights of freedom of religion or belief and of peaceful assembly, preserve and protect the cultural, ethnic, linguistic and religious identity of Tibetans and others, develop productive bilateral dialogues and cooperate with the Commission's thematic special rapporteurs and working groups. The motion was carried by a roll-call vote of 22 to 18, with 12 abstentions.

East Timor

International Commission of Inquiry. On 31 January [A/54/727-S/2000/65], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council and General Assembly Presidents and to the Commission on Human Rights Chairperson Indonesia's response to the 1999 report of the International Commission of Inquiry (ICI) on East Timor [YUN 1999, p. 712]. Indonesia said that the report consisted of sweeping, uncorroborated allegations and was one-sided and selective in approach. In particular, it rejected the fact that the report held the Indonesian army responsible for the intimidation, terror, killings and other acts of violence in East Timor. Consequently, ICI's recommendation to establish an international human rights tribunal was totally unacceptable. Nevertheless, Indonesia considered it imperative that reports of human rights violations be investigated thoroughly; it had therefore established a National Commission of Inquiry on Human Rights Violations in East Timor, which had sent a fact-finding mission to the territory and had extended its co-operation to ICI.

On 18 February [S/2000/137], the Council informed the Secretary-General that it had taken note of the ICI report. It encouraged Indonesia to institute a swift, comprehensive, effective and transparent legal process in order to bring those responsible for human rights violations to justice, a key factor in ensuring reconciliation and stability in East Timor. It also reiterated its belief that the United Nations had a role to play in the process and encouraged the Secretary-General to consult with the Indonesian Government on any assistance it might need from the Organization in order to promote reconciliation and ensure future social and political stability.

Commission action. In a statement by its Chairperson, the Commission, on 25 April [E/2000/23], commending the enhancement of collaboration between the United Nations and the Government of Indonesia in human rights technical cooperation programmes, asked the High Commissioner to continue to provide assistance and advisory services in order to bring to justice the alleged perpetrators of violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in East Timor, including in the setting up of a special human rights court. It urged a rapid solution to the East Timorese refugee problem in West Timor and noted Indonesia's decision to set a deadline and take measures necessary for the refugees to express their choice freely. The Commission remained concerned at various obstacles to the voluntary repatriation of refugees, including intimidation and misinformation by remaining militias in refugee camps. The Government of Indonesia and the international community were asked to provide relief assistance to the refugees. The High Commissioner was asked to report to the General Assembly in 2000 (see next page) and to the Commission in 2001.

Reports of High Commissioner. In a March report [E/CN.4/2000/27], the High Commissioner stated that OHCHR was developing, with the Human Rights Office of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET), technical cooperation programmes focusing on capacity-building and reconciliation and on ensuring the administration of justice and dealing with impunity. At the request of the Secretary-General's Special Representative, OHCHR was working with UNTAET to provide experts on truth commissions from three different countries to meet with various groups in East Timor to discuss the diverse forms truth commissions might take and examine how they functioned. The High Commissioner described action being taken by UNTAET to strengthen the capacity of East Timorese human rights organizations and associations. Developments relating to the individual accountability for human rights violations and bringing those responsible to justice included investigations into killings and rapes that occurred between January and October 1999; the establishment of a special panel to try crimes against humanity; efforts to put in place a forensic laboratory and mortuary; the pursuit of several different options for justice; the prospect of a truth commission; and the development of a position on justice and reconciliation.

In August [A/55/36], the High Commissioner noted that the Government of Indonesia had taken steps to investigate violations of human rights and international humanitarian law [YUN 1999, p. 707] and to bring those responsible to justice, including draft legislation to establish a human rights tribunal; the initiation of investigations into the East Timor violations; and the signing of a memorandum of understanding between Indonesia and UNTAET on cooperation in legal, judicial and human rights-related matters, dated 5 April. The High Commissioner had deployed a needs assessment mission to Indonesia (1-10 April) to develop a project of support to the administration of justice system for the prosecution of human rights violations. OHCHR conducted a preliminary mission to East Timor (13-15 April) to assess the manner in which it could respond to the needs of the UNTAET Human Rights Unit.

Following her visit to East Timor (5-7 August) and Indonesia (22-23 November) [E/CN.4/2001/37 & CORR.1], the High Commissioner updated information previously submitted. OHCHR was finalizing a human rights technical cooperation project with the UNTAET Human Rights Unit for implementation in 2001. An update of information from the Unit stated that, as at 14 December, 49 suspects were in pre-trial detention on suspicion of having committed serious crimes during 1999. The Serious Crimes Investigation Unit had reported that some five cases were being finalized. In addition, 11 indictments had been issued in relation to the murder of nine persons in Los Palos, and more indictments were being drafted and were expected to be issued in 2001. Trials before the Special Panel for Serious Crimes, to be composed of East Timorese and international judges, were expected to begin in 2001. Preparatory work to establish a commission for truth, reception and reconciliation was ongoing. The Human Rights Unit was involved in developing political institutions, the constitutional process, the institutions to protect human rights and an independent and strong civil society. Four district courts had been established in Dili, Baucau, Oecussi and Suai districts, and training of the judiciary was under way. The Human Rights Unit was also working with the Judicial Affairs Unit to develop a training programme for prison officials. UNTAET was planning to adopt regulations on the establishment of a defence force for East Timor, a law reform commission, a legal aid service and the administration of juvenile justice, and a press law. The Human Rights Unit had conducted activities to support the strengthening of civil society, particularly human rights organizations, and addressed the need for protection of particular vulnerable groups (ethnic and religious minorities), the security of East Timorese refugees returning from West Timor and violence against women.

Iran

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 2000/28], the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 22 to 20, with 11 abstentions, welcomed the broad participation in parliamentary elections of 18 February, Iran's commitment to promote respect for the rule of law, progress in the area of freedom of expression, the invitation by Iran to the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to visit the country, the visit to Iran of an OHCHR technical cooperation needs assessment mission, and progress made regarding the status of women in some areas. However, expressing concern at continuing human rights violations in Iran, the Commission called on the Government, among other things, to invite the Commission's Special Representative on human rights in Iran to visit the country; to continue efforts to consolidate respect for human rights and the rule of law and abide by its obligations under international human rights instruments; investigate suspicious deaths and killings of intellectuals and political activists and bring the perpetrators to justice; ensure that capital punishment would not be imposed for other than the most serious crimes; emancipate the Baha'is and other minority religious groups; end the use of torture; end discrimination against women; and make use of human rights technical cooperation programmes.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Representative's mandate for a further year and asked him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 2000 and to report to the Commission in 2001, keeping in mind a gender perspective. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Representative. The Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision and approved its requests to the Special Representative and the Secretary-General on 28 July (decision 2000/259).

Reports of Special Representative. In September [A/55/363], Special Representative Maurice Copithorne (Canada) reported on the human rights situation in Iran, covering the period from 1 January to 15 August, based on information received from the Government of Iran, other Governments, NGOs, individuals and international media.

The most dramatic development was the accelerating attack on the freedom of the press, which by the end of the period under review had led to the suppression of the entire reformist press and the imprisonment of many journalists. The economic situation of the poor and marginalized worsened. Iranians protested unemployment, inflation and inadequate services, as well as political issues, but paramilitary vigilantes often suppressed the demonstrations. The status of women remained largely unchanged, although there was the prospect that the new Majlis (consultative parliament) would raise the age of marriage to 14 for girls and 17 for boys and facilitate access to divorce. Prostitution was widespread among youth, mainly because of economic hardship and social alienation. In February, nine women were elected to the Majlis and the first woman was appointed governor of a district. A fatwa was issued authorizing women to lead members of the same sex in prayers. There remained shadows over judiciary reform, one of them being the role of extrajudicial groups. Prisons were vastly overcrowded and executions remained suspiciously high. The evidence of the use of torture by law enforcement agencies, usually in illegal detention centres, was becoming a matter of public record. The murders and disappearances of intellectuals and political dissidents remained unsolved, and the status of ethnic and religious minorities went unaddressed. Electoral democracy continued to grow, although major institutional obstacles to the exercise of the plenary powers by the legislature were coming to the fore. On balance, said the Special Representative, certain progress made had been overshadowed by backsliding in some areas and stagnation in others. Annexed to the report was information on the denial of fair trial and related rights in a case of Iranian Jews and Moslems in Shiraz, information on the situation of the Baha'is and correspondence between the Special Representative and the Government between January and July.

In a later report [E/CN.4/2001/39], the Special Representative stated that in the second half of the year the newly elected Majlis became the most active player in seeking to improve the status of women. Too often, however, the reform legislation passed by the Majlis was rejected by the Guardian Council, apparently because it was deemed to be "un-Islamic". In late August, the city of Khorramabad—the venue of a meeting of the main national students' reformist group—witnessed the largest outbreak of violence since July 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 713]. Two leading reformers who were invited to speak to the meeting were blockaded at the airport for six hours by vigilantes bused to the scene. Three days of clashes between students, vigilantes, police and other law enforcement agents ensued.

The problem of the lack of fair trial seemed to be widespread. Over the preceding year, the overcrowding in the prison system had become a major issue. A press account described them as "overcrowded dens of drug-taking, where the spread of infectious disease is rife". A continuing problem was the illegal detention centres—facilities run by government law enforcement agencies. The Special Representative was informed that the number of executions reported in the Iranian press during 2000 was about 200, with two other persons having been pardoned. Regarding torture, he noted a circular of the Head of the Judiciary to judges enumerating various types of conduct that would no longer be tolerated. Recognized minorities—Zoroastrians, Jews, Christians—despite having reserved seats in the Majlis and considerable freedom in their religious, educational and cultural activities, were monitored closely. There were indications that the Government might introduce some changes in the treatment of at least the recognized minorities. Concern about the human rights situation of the Baha'is remained on the Special Representative's agenda with reports of discrimination and persecution. He regularly received complaints from members of ethnic minority groups that were Sunni by religion.

Regarding democracy and civil society, the Majlis, in August, passed a bill that would bar police from entering universities without permission. Another initiative was the creation of a right of access for criminal suspects to a lawyer during all phases of investigation and interrogation. Unemployment was high and workers faced a variety of problems, such as non-payment of salaries. The enrolment rate in primary education had risen to 96 per cent at the national level; immunization rates were above 97 per cent; and infant mortality, under-five mortality and maternal mortality rates had fallen significantly. Other positive developments were the re-establishment of juvenile courts and an increase in the number of juvenile judges. As Iran remained a transit point for narcotics transported from Pakistan and Afghanistan to markets in Europe and the Persian Gulf countries, drugs continued to be a security and social problem for the Government.

The Special Representative urged the Government to achieve freedom of expression, expedite reform of the judiciary, and address the concerns of ethnic and religious minorities, inflation, unemployment and a general deterioration of the social infrastructure, and the problem of urban youth disillusionment and the resulting social crisis. The Special Representative, regretting that he was unable to visit Iran, called on the Government to return to full cooperation with the Commission. Annexed to the report was information on the situation of the Baha'is, and correspondence between the Special Representative and the Government between July and December.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.3], adopted resolution 55/114 by recorded vote (67-54-46) [agenda item 114 (c)].

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other human rights instruments,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Mindful that the Islamic Republic of Iran is a party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject, the most recent of which is resolution 54/177 of 17 Decem- ber 1999, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/28 of 18 April 2000,

1. Welcomes:

(a) The interim report of the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran;

(b) The broad participation in the parliamentary elections held during February and March 2000, which expressed the true commitment of the Iranian people to the democratic process in the Islamic Republic of Iran;

(c) The commitment made by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to promote respect for the rule of law, including the elimination of arbitrary arrest and detention, and to reform the judicial and penitentiary system and bring it into line with international human rights standards in this field;

(d) The visit to the Islamic Republic of Iran of a technical cooperation needs assessment mission of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, and encourages the follow-up to that mission;

2. Notes:

(a) The provisions of the new code of penal procedure, which provide for the attendance of lawyers for all kinds of lawsuits, and the judiciary reform project, which aims, in particular, at re-establishing a distinction between the offices of the judge and the prosecutor;

(b) The legal changes recently put into effect within the Iranian judicial system by which members of religious minorities are no longer obliged to state their religion when applying for a marriage licence;

(c) Developments observed with regard to the status of women in areas such as education, training and health;

(d) The bill currently under consideration that aims at raising the age of marriage;

(e) The work of the Islamic Human Rights Commission on the human rights situation in the Islamic Republic of Iran and, in particular, its efforts to investigate illegal detentions and disappearances;

3. Expresses its concern:

(a) At the fact that, since 1996, no invitation has yet been extended by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to the Special Representative to visit the country;

(b) At the deterioration of the situation with regard to freedom of opinion and expression, in particular at restrictions on the freedom of the press, judiciary suspension of numerous newspapers, prohibition of publications and the arrest of journalists, political activists and intellectuals on the basis of laws related to national security, which are used as a pretext to deny or restrict freedom of expression, opinion and thought;

(c) At the continuing violations of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, in particular executions, in the apparent absence of respect for internationally recognized safeguards, and cases of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

(d) At the failure to comply fully with international standards in the administration of justice and the absence of guarantees of due process of law and respect for internationally recognized legal safeguards, inter alia, with respect to persons belonging to religious minorities;

(e) At the discrimination against persons belonging to religious minorities, in particular the unabated pattern of persecution of the Baha'is, including the continuing detention and the sentencing to death of some of them;

(f) At the continuing discrimination, in law and in practice, against women, who still lack full and equal enjoyment of their human rights, as reported by the Special Representative;

4. Calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran:

(a) To invite the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on religious intolerance to visit the country and to resume its full cooperation with him, in particular so that he may study the evolution of the human rights situation in the country, including through direct contacts with all sectors of society, and to make full use of technical cooperation programmes in the field of human rights;

(b) To give effect, in the near future, to its invitation to the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to visit the Islamic Republic of Iran;

(c) To consolidate respect for human rights and the rule of law and to abide by its freely undertaken obligations under the International Covenants on Human Rights and under other international human rights instruments;

(d) To make efforts to ensure the full application of due process of law and fair and transparent procedures by the judiciary and, in this context, to ensure the respect for the rights of the defence and the equity of the verdicts in all instances, including for members of religious minority groups;

(e) To ensure that capital punishment will not be imposed for crimes other than the most serious and will not be pronounced in disregard of the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and United Nations safeguards and to provide the Special Representative with relevant statistics on this matter;

(f) To accelerate the process of the investigation into the suspicious deaths and killings of intellectuals and political activists and to bring the alleged perpetrators to justice;

(g) To eliminate all forms of discrimination based on religious grounds or against persons belonging to minorities;

(h) To implement fully the conclusions and recommendations of the Special Representative with regard to religious intolerance relating to the Baha'is and other minority religious groups until they are completely emancipated;

(i) To take all necessary steps to end the use of torture and other forms of cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment, in particular the practice of amputation;

(j) To take further measures to promote full and equal enjoyment by women of their human rights;

5. Decides to continue the examination of the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the situation of minority groups such as the Baha'is, at its fifty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Human rights questions", in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 55/114:

In favour: Albania, Andorra, Australia, Austria, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Bolivia, Bulgaria, Canada, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Czech Republic, Denmark, Dominica, Ecuador, El Salvador, Estonia, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Nauru, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Palau, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Spain, Suriname, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, United Kingdom, United States, Vanuatu, Yugoslavia.

Iraq

Report of Special Rapporteur. In March [E/CN.4/2000/37], Special Rapporteur Andreas Mavrommatis (Cyprus), in view of the lateness of his appointment (December 1999) [YUN 1999, p. 716] and the fact that he had had little time to do anything beyond initial briefings, summarized his activities and initial observations on the human rights situation in Iraq. The conclusion he drew from his contacts during his first few months in office was that there was a grave humanitarian situation, given Iraq's shattered infrastructure and economy. It appeared that matters would improve if more attention were paid to improving infrastructure and accelerating the process of approval of contracts for the purchase of relevant supplies, he said.

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 32 to none, with 21 abstentions, the Commission, on 18 April [res. 2000/17], strongly condemned the systematic, widespread and extremely grave violations of human rights and international humanitarian law by the Government of Iraq, its suppression of freedom of thought, expression, information, association, assembly and movement, widespread use of the death penalty, summary and arbitrary executions and widespread, systematic torture. It called on the Government to abide by its obligations under international human rights treaties and international humanitarian law; conform its military and security forces to standards of international law; cooperate with UN human rights mechanisms; establish independence of the judiciary and abrogate laws granting impunity; abrogate decrees that prescribed cruel and inhuman punishment or treatment; abrogate laws and procedures that penalized free expression; ensure free exercise of political opposition; cease repressive practices aimed at ethnic and religious groups; cooperate to resolve the fate of missing persons; cooperate with aid agencies and NGOs to provide humanitarian assistance; ensure equitable distribution of humanitarian supplies purchased with the proceeds from Iraqi oil; and cooperate in identifying minefields in the country.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year and asked him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 2000 and to report to the Commission in 2001, applying a gender perspective. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Special Rapporteur and to approve the allocation of resources to send human rights monitors to locations that would facilitate improved information on the human rights situation in Iraq.

At Iraq's request, the Commission circulated a series of documents, including, in February, a study on the human rights consequences of the use of depleted uranium [E/CN.4/2000/121] and a document entitled "United States schemes to overthrow the system of government in Iraq in violation of international law and the Charter of the United Nations" [E/CN.4/2000/125], and, in March, studies on the economic embargo's effect on health [E/CN.4/2000/129] and on children and women [E/CN.4/2000/128].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2000/23 & Corr.1], adopted decision 2000/250 by recorded vote (26-0-17) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Situation of human rights in Iraq

At its 45th plenary meeting, on 28 July 2000, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/17 of 18 April 2000, endorsed the Commission's decisions:

(a) To extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Iraq, as contained in Commission resolution 1991/74 of 6 March 1991 and subsequent resolutions, for a further year, to request the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim report on the situation of human rights in Iraq to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session and to report to the Commission at its fifty-seventh session, and also to keep a gender perspective in mind when seeking and analysing information;

(b) To request the Secretary-General to continue to give all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur to enable him to discharge his mandate fully, and to approve the allocation of sufficient human and material resources for the sending of human rights monitors to such locations as would facilitate improved information flow and assessment and help in the independent verification of reports on the situation of human rights in Iraq.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2000/250:

In favour: Angola, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Croatia, Czech Republic, Denmark, Fiji, France, Germany, Greece, Italy, Japan, Mexico, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Saudi Arabia, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Algeria, Bahrain, Belarus, Burkina Faso, China, Cuba, India, Indonesia, Morocco, Pakistan, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Venezuela, Viet Nam.

Subcommission action. On 18 August [E/CN.4/2001/2 (dec. 2000/112)], the Subcommission appealed to the international community and to the Security Council for the embargo provisions affecting the humanitarian situation of the Iraqi population to be lifted and urged the international community and all Governments, including Iraq, to alleviate the suffering of Iraqis, particularly by facilitating the delivery of food, medical supplies and the wherewithal to meet their basic needs.

In other action, the Subcommission circulated a July study on environmental pollution resulting from the use of depleted uranium missiles [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/37], at Iraq's request, and an August aide-memoire from the United Kingdom and the United States regarding allegations by Iraq about the effects of sanctions on the country and about the actions of the two countries [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/45].

Report of Special Rapporteur. In August [A/55/294], the Special Rapporteur presented an interim report covering the period from 20 September 1999 to 20 June 2000, based on his visits to Kuwait (29 June–3 July) and London (11–15 July), as well as on information received from individuals, Iraqi opposition groups, Governments and UN agencies and programmes. The Government of Iraq had provided incomplete replies to a small number of cases, while no replies were provided to most of the specific allegations submitted by the Special Rapporteur.

It appeared that executions continued unabated during the period under review. The Government alleged that they were necessitated by the upsurge in crime and the considerable number of subversive acts. Information received from several sources indicated that Iraq allegedly staged car accidents resulting in the deaths of prominent religious or other local leaders and/or members of their families, as well as of members of the regime and individuals suspected of belonging to the opposition. There appeared to be alleged cases of arbitrary arrest and detention, as well as torture and ill-treatment of men and women. Prison conditions appeared to be grave.

Regarding the fate of Kuwaitis unaccounted for since Iraq's occupation of Kuwait, the Special Rapporteur concluded that since the Government of Kuwait had devoted extraordinary efforts and resources to the cause and that sufficient material was produced to support the Kuwaiti claim that Iraq was in a position to clarify the fate of Kuwaitis unaccounted for, Iraq appeared to lack the political will to participate in the work and to examine cases before the Tripartite Commission and its Technical Subcommittee, established to facilitate work on the issue (see p. 295). Iraq alleged that there were some 1,250 missing Iraqi citizens in respect of whom evidence existed that they were seen alive in Kuwait following the war, allegations that Kuwait had dismissed as "mere afterthoughts".

In the Special Rapporteur's view, the most disturbing of recent complaints concerned harassment, intimidation and threats against the families of Iraqi opposition members residing abroad to induce them to stop their activities. During his visit to London, the Special Rapporteur heard allegations that non-Arab residents of the Kirkuk area—especially Kurds, Turkomen and Assyrians—were driven from their homes by the Government. On the one hand, the policy of "Arabization" was reported to be continuing and the Government reportedly maintained in force measures to that effect, such as the provision of grants and other incentives to Arabs to move to the Kirkuk area and legal impediments to the possession and transfer of property by non-Arabs. On the other hand, forced deportations of non-Arab families living in the area and confiscation of their property were also reported to continue on a large scale. Allegedly, those who refused to comply were subjected to intimidation, arrest, economic hardship through the revocation of ration cards and forced expulsion, and no compensation was provided for property loss.

The Special Rapporteur urged Iraq to review and revise laws regarding the death sentence and consider a moratorium on executions, rejoin the work of the Tripartite Commission and its Technical Subcommittee and examine files submitted by Kuwait, end harassment of families of people engaged in opposition activities abroad and practices against families of wanted or arrested Iraqi citizens and the widows and children of those executed, and accept and comply with the terms of all Security Council resolutions. The Government was invited to introduce democratic and political freedoms and end unlawful practices of arrest and torture.

Communications. On 2 November [A/C.3/55/5], Iraq transmitted its response to the Special Rapporteur's interim report. It stated that his information was gathered from countries known to adopt political positions hostile to Iraq and the sources were also hostile. Thus, the allegations and claims emanating from the sources and reflected in the report were false. Iraq claimed that the charges concerning arbitrary execution were overstated. Allegations regarding arbitrary arrest and detention were devoid of truth, as were allegations of the ill-treatment of prisoners. Iraq had the right to refuse to have anything to do with the Tripartite Commission as currently constituted. It continued to search and inquire for missing persons of all nationalities. Allegations of harassment of Iraqi opposition members were stories woven in the minds of those funded by the United States and other intelligence services. Additionally, Iraq presented comments on the Special Rapporteur's recommendations.

In a communication to the Chairperson of the Commission on Human Rights [E/CN.4/2001/150], Kuwait concurred with the Special Rapporteur's view regarding the fate of its missing nationals (see above).

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a report covering the period 14 August to 30 November [E/CN.4/2001/42], the Special Rapporteur stated that he had received noteworthy allegations of fresh or continuing violations during his visit to Iran (5-9 November), where he met with Iraqis who were allegedly expelled from Iraq in the early 1980s because they were of Iranian origin. They spoke about the current human rights situation in Iraq, particularly religious persecution or intolerance, missing persons and raids on villages resulting in loss of life and arrests. Some of them spoke about abject poverty, malnutrition and having to barter or sell their food rations, and infant mortality.

The Special Rapporteur continued to receive allegations of religious intolerance and persecution, extrajudicial, summary and arbitrary executions, and ill-treatment, psychological pressure and torture of suspects during questioning. Armed raids were still carried out by Iraqi security forces against villages in the south, with the intent of capturing armed guerrillas and army deserters, resulting in loss of life, property damage and searches and arrests without warrant. Information was received that men and women, including minors, were arrested and detained on suspicion of political or religious activities perceived as hostile to the regime, or because of family ties with opposition members, other activists and armed resisters. The main category of alleged violations that had continuing effects was that of disappearances. During the reporting period, the Special Rapporteur met with representatives of the Government of Kuwait and members of the National Committee for the Missing and Prisoners of War. Iraq continued not to ac-tend meetings of the Tripartite Commission, and reiterated allegations that there were 1,250 of its citizens missing who were reportedly residing in Kuwait at the time of the occupation and were allegedly last seen in the hands of Kuwaiti forces or in Kuwaiti places of detention.

The Special Rapporteur urged the Government to respond positively to his request to visit the country, improve social, economic and cultural rights, approach the dialogue with the United Nations in a spirit of compromise, remove restrictions on the exercise of religious freedom, examine allegations of human rights violations, investigate allegations of unlawful arrest and torture and take remedial action, examine allegations of forced relocations, investigate the fate of all missing persons and join the work of the Tripartite Commission and its Technical Subcommittee. He called on the Government to ensure that unjustified or excessive force was not used against civilians and inhabited places, review and revise laws permitting the imposition of the death penalty and consider a moratorium on executions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.3], adopted resolution 55/115 by recorded vote (102-3-60) [agenda item 114 (c)].

Human rights situation in Iraq

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other human rights instruments,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Mindful that Iraq is a party to the International Covenants on Human Rights, other international human rights instruments and the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of victims of war,

Recalling its previous resolutions and those of the Commission on Human Rights on the subject, and taking note of the most recent, Commission resolution 2000/17 of 18 April 2000,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 686(1991) of 2 March 1991, in which the Council called upon Iraq to release all Kuwaitis and nationals of other States who might still be held in detention, Council resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, Council resolution 688(1991) of 5 April 1991, in which the Council demanded an end to the repression of the Iraqi civilian population and insisted that Iraq cooperate with humanitarian organizations and that the human rights of all Iraqi citizens be respected, Council resolutions 986(1995) of 14 April 1995, 1111(1997) of 4 June 1997, 1129(1997) of 12 Sep- tember 1997, 1143(1997) of 4 December 1997, 1153(1998) of 20 February 1998, 1175(1998) of 19 June 1998, 1210(1998) of 24 November 1998, 1242(1999) of 21 May 1999, 1266(1999) of 4 October 1999, 1281(1999) of 10 December 1999 and 1302(2000) of 8 June 2000, in which the Council authorized States to permit imports of Iraqi oil in order to allow Iraq to purchase humanitarian supplies, and Council resolution 1284(1999) of 17 December 1999, in which the Council, by means of a comprehensive approach to the situation in Iraq, inter alia, raised the ceiling for the allowable import of Iraqi oil in order to increase the amount of revenue available for the purchase of humanitarian supplies, laid down new provisions and procedures designed to improve the implementation of the humanitarian programme and to further achievements in meeting the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi population, and reiterated the obligation of Iraq to facilitate the repatriation of all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals referred to in paragraph 30 of Council resolution 687(1991),

Taking note of the concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Committee on the Rights of the Child on the recent reports submitted to them by Iraq, in which these treaty-monitoring bodies point to a wide range of human rights problems and hold the view that the Government of Iraq remains bound by its treaty obligations, while pointing to the adverse effect of sanctions on the daily life of the population, in particular children,

Recalling the reports of the Secretary-General concerning the implementation of Security Council resolutions 986(1995), 1111(1997), 1143(1997), 1175(1998), 1210(1998) and 1242(1999), and taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Security Council resolution 1302(2000),

Reaffirming that it is the responsibility of the Government of Iraq to ensure the well-being of its entire population and the full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, concerned about the dire humanitarian situation in Iraq, which particularly affects certain vulnerable groups, including children, as stated in the reports of several United Nations human rights treaty bodies, and appealing to all concerned to fulfil their mutual obligations in the management of the humanitarian programme established by the Security Council in its resolution 986(1995),

1. Welcomes the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Iraq and the observations, conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

2. Notes with dismay that there has been no improvement in the situation of human rights in the country;

3. Strongly condemns:

(a) The systematic, widespread and extremely grave violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law by the Government of Iraq, resulting in an all-pervasive repression and oppression sustained by broad-based discrimination and widespread terror;

(b) The suppression of freedom of thought, expression, information, association, assembly and movement through fear of arrest, imprisonment, execution, expulsion, house demolition and other sanctions;

(c) The repression faced by any kind of opposition, in particular the harassment and intimidation of and threats against Iraqi opponents living abroad and members of their families;

(d) The widespread use of the death penalty in disregard of the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the United Nations safeguards;

(e) Summary and arbitrary executions, including political killings and the continuing so-called clean-out of prisons, as well as enforced or involuntary disappearances, routinely practised arbitrary arrests and detention and consistent and routine failure to respect due process and the rule of law;

(f) Widespread, systematic torture and the maintaining of decrees prescribing cruel and inhuman punishment as a penalty for offences;

4. Calls upon the Government of Iraq:

(a) To abide by its freely undertaken obligations under international human rights treaties and international humanitarian law and to respect and ensure the rights of all individuals, irrespective of their origin, ethnicity, gender or religion, within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction;

(b) To bring the actions of its military and security forces into conformity with the standards of international law, in particular those of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

(c) To cooperate with United Nations human rights mechanisms, in particular by inviting the Special Rapporteur to visit the country and allowing the stationing of human rights monitors throughout Iraq pursuant to the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights;

(d) To establish the independence of the judiciary and abrogate all laws granting impunity to specified forces or persons killing or injuring individuals for any purpose beyond the administration of justice under the rule of law as prescribed by international standards;

(e) To abrogate all decrees that prescribe cruel and inhuman punishment or treatment, including mutilation, and to ensure that torture and cruel punishment and treatment no longer occur;

(f) To abrogate all laws and procedures, including Revolution Command Council Decree No. 840 of 4 November 1986, that penalize free expression, and to ensure that the genuine will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of the State;

(g) To ensure free exercise of political opposition and to prevent intimidation and repression of political opponents and their families;

(h) To respect the rights of all ethnic and religious groups and to cease immediately its repressive practices aimed at the Iraqi Kurds, Assyrians and Turkmen, in particular their deportation from the regions of Kirkuk and Khanaqin, and at the population of the southern marsh areas, where drainage projects have provoked environmental destruction and a deterioration of the situation of the civilian population, as well as to ensure the physical integrity of all citizens, including the Shi'a population, and to guarantee their freedoms;

(i) To cooperate with the Tripartite Commission and its Technical Subcommittee to establish the whereabouts and resolve the fate of the remaining several hundred missing persons, including prisoners of war, Kuwaiti nationals and third-country nationals, victims of the illegal Iraqi occupation of Kuwait, to cooperate with the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances of the Commission on Human Rights for that purpose, to cooperate with the high-level coordinator of the Secretary-General for Kuwaitis and third-country nationals and Kuwaiti property, to pay compensation to the families of those who died or disappeared in the custody of the Iraqi authorities, through the mechanism established by the Security Council in resolution 692(1991) of 20 May 1991, to release immediately all Kuwaitis and nationals of other States who may still be held in detention and inform families about the whereabouts of arrested persons, to provide information about death sentences imposed on prisoners of war and civilian detainees, and to issue death certificates for deceased prisoners of war and civilian detainees;

(j) To cooperate further with international aid agencies and non-governmental organizations in providing humanitarian assistance and monitoring in the northern and southern areas of the country;

(k) To continue to cooperate in the implementation of Security Council resolutions 986(1995), 1111(1997), 1143(1997), 1153(1998), 1210(1998), 1242(1999), 1266(1999), 1281(1999) and 1302(2000), and to cooperate, together with all concerned, in the implementation of the sections on humanitarian questions of Council resolution 1284(1999), to ensure fully the timely and equitable distribution, without discrimination, to the Iraqi population, including the population in remote areas, of all humanitarian supplies purchased under the oil-for-humanitarian-goods programme, to address effectively the needs of vulnerable groups, including children, pregnant women, the disabled, the elderly and the mentally ill, among others, to facilitate the work of United Nations humanitarian personnel in Iraq by ensuring the free and unobstructed movement of observers throughout the country, as well as their free access, without any discrimination, to all the population, and to ensure that involuntarily displaced persons receive humanitarian assistance without the need to demonstrate that they have resided for six months at their places of temporary residence;

(l) To cooperate in the identification of minefields existing throughout Iraq with a view to facilitating their marking and eventual clearing;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all necessary assistance in carrying out his mandate, and decides to continue the examination of the situation of human rights in Iraq at its fifty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Human rights questions", in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights.

Myanmar

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 54/186 [YUN 1999, p. 719], the Secretary-General, in March [E/CN.4/2000/29], reported on consultations held in 1999 with the Government of Myanmar by his Special Envoy, Alvaro de Soto. The Secretary-General stated that he was in the process of replacing the Special Envoy, who had assumed new responsibilities.

Communication. On 17 March [E/CN.4/2000/137], Myanmar submitted to the Commission a memorandum concerning the human rights situation in the country, in the hope that Commission members would view the question from a more objective and balanced perspective.

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 2000/23], the Commission deplored the continued pattern of gross and systematic human rights violations in Myanmar; the lack of independence of the judiciary; widespread discrimination against minorities; violation of women's and children's human rights; the escalated persecution of democratic group activists; and severe restrictions on the freedoms of opinion, expression, assembly, association and movement. It called on Myanmar to establish a constructive dialogue with the UN system; to continue to cooperate with the Secretary-General or his representative; and to consider becoming a party to international human rights instruments. The Government was urged to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur and implement his recommendations; ensure full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms; establish democracy; allow all citizens to participate freely in the political process; release political detainees; improve conditions of detention; ensure the well-being of all political leaders, including Aung San Suu Kyi; fulfil its obligations under the Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by General Assembly resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 561], and under the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by Assembly resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895]; end forced labour; allow freedom of association; cease laying landmines; end enforced displacement of persons; and end impunity.

The Commission asked the High Commissioner to cooperate with the Director-General of the International Labour Organization (ILO) with a view to identifying ways in which their offices might collaborate to improve the human rights situation in Myanmar and requested the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to the attention of the UN system.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for a further year and asked him to report to the Assembly in 2000 and to the Commission in 2001, keeping a gender perspective in mind; it also decided to ask the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur, to pursue efforts to ensure that the Special Rapporteur be authorized to visit Myanmar, and to continue his discussions with the Government and with anyone he might consider appropriate to assist in implementing Assembly resolution 54/186 [YUN 1999, p. 719], as well as its current resolution. The Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decisions on 28 July (decision 2000/255).

Report of Special Rapporteur. In August [A/55/359], Special Rapporteur Rajssoomer Lallah (Mauritius) reported on the human rights situation in Myanmar as at 31 July, noting with deep concern the continued deterioration of the situation. He continued to receive persistent reports of government policies and directives aimed at the elimination of the National League for Democracy (NLD) through intimidation, threats, coercion and charges of a political character against its members, particularly since April. He had received reports of widespread and systematic torture and other forms of ill-treatment of detainees occurring in military intelligence centres and certain prisons. Allegations of arbitrary detention were also received. According to several reports, harsh conditions of detention existed in several prisons and other places of detention. ICRC continued to have access to jails, so-called "guest houses" and labour camps. The administration of justice was marked by legal and factual constraints inconsistent with judicial independence. Government policies regarding health still appeared indecisive and inadequate. Although nominally available to all, public education was costly in terms of school fees, books and classroom facilities. Moreover, widespread reports alleged that bribery was frequently required to be paid to school authorities. The obligation to suppress the use of forced or compulsory labour in Myanmar was violated in national law, as well as in actual practice, in a widespread and systematic manner, according to ILO. Thus, in June, considering that the situation had remained unchanged, the International Labour Conference resolved to take action to bring about Myanmar's compliance with ILO Convention No. 29 on forced labour [YUN 1999, p. 1388]. A series of measures would take effect on 30 November unless, before that date, the ILO Governing Body was satisfied that the intentions expressed by the Minister of Labour had been translated into a framework of legislative, executive and administrative measures. Vulnerable groups—women, children, displaced persons and refugees, ethnic minorities—suffered violations of their rights.

The Special Rapporteur encouraged the repeal of discriminatory provisions in the Citizenship Act, and the repeal of decrees and orders criminalizing the exercise of freedom of thought and expression, association and movement, and freedom to exercise political and democratic rights in accordance with international standards. He reiterated recommendations made in 1999 [YUN 1999, pp. 718 & 719].

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported in October on the progress of discussions regarding the restoration of democracy in Myanmar [A/55/509]. In April, he appointed a new Special Envoy, Razali Ismail, who had visited the country (29 June–3 July) to build confidence with his interlocutors. The Special Envoy held consultations with government officials and with leaders of two political parties, NLD and the Shan Nationalities League for Democracy. During a second mission (9–12 October), he again held consultations, during what the Secretary-General called a setback in the atmosphere surrounding efforts for national reconciliation due to restrictions placed on the movement and access to the diplomatic corps imposed on Aung San Suu Kyi and other NLD leaders. Discussions focused on the need for national reconciliation, the practice of forced labour, the provision of UN humanitarian assistance and the issue of a visit of the Special Rapporteur. The Secretary-General welcomed the authorities' announcement that universities and colleges had been reopened for the first time in three years.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.3], adopted resolution 55/112 without vote [agenda item 114 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Myanmar

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter of the United Nations and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments,

Aware that, in accordance with the Charter, the United Nations promotes and encourages respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states that the will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government, and therefore expressing its grave concern that the Government of Myanmar has still not implemented its commitment to take all necessary steps towards democracy in the light of the results of the elections held in 1990,

Recalling its resolution 54/186 of 17 December 1999 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/58 of 3 March 1992, in which the Commission, inter alia, decided to nominate a special rapporteur with a given mandate, and taking note of Commission resolution 2000/23 of 18 April 2000, in which the Commission decided to extend for one year the mandate of its Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar,

Recalling also the observation made by the Special Rapporteur that the absence of respect for the rights pertaining to democratic governance is at the root of all major violations of human rights in Myanmar,

Still gravely concerned at the deterioration of the human rights situation in Myanmar, especially the unabated suppression of the exercise of political rights and freedom of thought, expression, association and movement in Myanmar, as reported by the Special Rapporteur, and deeply concerned that new restrictions have been placed on Aung San Suu Kyi and other members of the National League for Democracy,

Also gravely concerned that the legal system is effectively used as an instrument of oppression and at the increasing intimidation and detention of lawyers,

Recognizing that the systematic violations of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights by the Government of Myanmar have had a significant adverse effect on the health and welfare of the people of Myanmar,

Noting with interest the two recent visits to Myanmar by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General and the cooperation extended by the Government of Myanmar in that regard,

Deeply regretting the failure of the Government of Myanmar to cooperate fully with the relevant United Nations mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur, who still has not been invited to Myanmar, despite assurances by the Government of Myanmar in 1999 that it would seriously consider a visit,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Myanmar for his interim report, and calls upon the Government of Myanmar to implement fully the recommendations made by the Special Rapporteur;

2. Urges the Government of Myanmar to cooperate fully and without further delay with the Special Rapporteur, and to allow him urgently, without preconditions, to conduct a field mission and to establish direct contacts with the Government and all other relevant sectors of society, thus enabling him fully to discharge his mandate;

3. Notes with satisfaction the continued cooperation with the International Committee of the Red Cross, allowing the Committee to communicate with and visit detainees in accordance with its modalities of work, and hopes that the programme will be pursued further;

4. Deplores the continued violations of human rights in Myanmar, including extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, enforced disappearances, rape, torture, inhuman treatment, mass arrests, forced labour, including the use of children, forced relocation and denial of freedom of assembly, association, expression and movement, as reported by the Special Rapporteur;

5. Expresses its grave concern at the increasingly systematic policy of the Government of Myanmar to persecute the democratic opposition, members of the National League for Democracy, sympathizers and their families, and ethnic opposition parties, and at the use by the Government of intimidatory methods such as arbitrary arrest and detention and abuse of the legal system, including harsh long-term prison sentences, mass rallies and media campaigns, which have forced many to refrain from exercising their legitimate political rights;

6. Urges the Government of Myanmar to cease, without delay, all activities aimed at preventing the free exercise of internationally recognized human rights, including freedom of association, assembly, movement and speech, and in particular to remove all restrictions on the freedom of movement of Aung San Suu Kyi and other members of the National League for Democracy and on their freedom to communicate with the outside world;

7. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to release immediately and unconditionally detained political leaders and all political prisoners, including journalists, to ensure their physical integrity and to permit them to participate in the process of national reconciliation;

8. Expresses its concern that the composition and working procedures of the National Convention do not permit either Members of Parliament-elect or representatives of the ethnic minorities to express their views freely, and urges the Government of Myanmar to seek new and constructive ways to promote national reconciliation and to restore democracy, through, inter alia, the establishment of a time frame for action;

9. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar, taking into account the assurances it has given on various occasions, to take all necessary steps towards the restoration of democracy, in accordance with the will of the people, as expressed in the democratic elections held in 1990 and, to that end, without delay, to engage in a substantive political dialogue with political leaders, including Aung San Suu Kyi, and representatives of ethnic groups, and, in that context, notes the existence of the committee representing the People's Parliament;

10. Notes with grave concern that the Government of Myanmar has failed to cease its widespread and systematic use of forced labour of its own people and to meet all three recommendations of the International Labour Organization on that issue; this failure has compelled the International Labour Organization to limit strictly further cooperation with the Government and has prompted the International Labour Conference to adopt, subject to certain conditions, a number of measures to secure compliance by the Government of Myanmar with the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry established to examine the observance of International Labour Organization Convention No. 29 concerning forced or compulsory labour, of 1930;

11. Notes the recent visit by the technical cooperation mission of the International Labour Organization to Myanmar and the cooperation extended to the mission, while awaiting the results of the mission;

12. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to implement fully concrete legislative, executive and administrative measures to eradicate the practice of forced labour, in conformity with the relevant recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry;

13. Welcomes the reopening of most university courses, but remains concerned that the right to education continues to be a right that is exercised only by those willing to refrain from exercising their civil and political rights and concerned at the reduction in the length of the academic year, the division of the student population and its dispersal to distant campuses and the lack of adequate resources;

14. Deplores the continued violations of human rights, in particular those directed against persons belonging to ethnic and religious minorities, including summary executions, rape, torture, forced labour, forced portering, forced relocations, use of anti-personnel landmines, destruction of crops and fields and dispossession of land and property, which deprives those persons of all means of subsistence and results in large-scale displacement of persons and flows of refugees to neighbouring countries, with negative effects for those countries, and an increasing number of internally displaced persons;

15. Urges the Government of Myanmar to end the systematic enforced displacement of persons and other causes of refugee flows to neighbouring countries and to create conditions conducive to their voluntary return and full reintegration in conditions of safety and dignity and to allow the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel to assist in the return and reintegration process;

16. Deplores the continued violations of the human rights of women, especially women who are refugees, are internally displaced or belong to ethnic minorities or the political opposition, in particular forced labour, trafficking, sexual violence and exploitation, including rape, as reported by the Special Rapporteur;

17. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to implement fully the recommendations made by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, in particular the request to prosecute and punish those who violate the human rights of women, and to carry out human rights education and gender-sensitization training, in particular for military personnel;

18. Deplores the recruitment of children as soldiers, in particular children belonging to ethnic minorities, and strongly urges the Government of Myanmar and all other parties to the hostilities in Myanmar to end the use of children as soldiers;

19. Expresses its concern at the growing incidence of human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) infection, and urges the Government of Myanmar urgently to address this issue, which will have a serious long-term impact on the development of the country, and to ensure that the health system receives sufficient funding to enable health workers to meet the right of all people to the highest possible standard of health care;

20. Expresses its grave concern at the high rates of malnutrition among pre-school-aged children, which constitute serious violations of their rights to adequate food and the highest attainable standard of health and may have serious repercussions for the health and development of the affected children;

21. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to ensure full respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including economic and social rights, and to fulfil its obligation to restore the independence of the judiciary and due process and to end the impunity of and bring to justice any perpetrators of human rights violations, including members of the military, and to investigate and prosecute alleged violations committed by government agents in all circumstances;

22. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the visit of his Special Envoy to Myanmar, endorses the appeal of the Special Envoy for the initiation of a process of dialogue that would lead to national reconciliation, and supports his efforts to achieve such a dialogue;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his discussions on the situation of human rights and the restoration of democracy with the Government of Myanmar, to submit additional reports to the General Assembly during its fifty-fifth session on the progress of those discussions, and to report to the Assembly at its fifty-sixth session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-seventh session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

24. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-sixth session.

Belarus

Pursuant to the Subcommittee Chairperson's 1999 statement on Belarus [YUN 1999, p. 721], which was based on information received from Belarus regarding steps that the Government was prepared to take to further promote and protect human rights, Belarus, in June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/2000/9], reported on measures it had taken to do so.

Cyprus

In response to a 1999 Commission request [YUN 1999, p. 721], the Secretary-General, in a February report on the human rights situation in Cyprus [E/CN.4/2000/26], described activities carried out under his good offices mission and by the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus and the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus (see pp. 402-404).

On 18 April [dec. 2000/103], the Commission decided to retain the item on its agenda, on the understanding that action required by its previous resolutions would continue to remain operative, including its request to the Secretary-General to report on their implementation.

The former Yugoslavia

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 2000/26], by a roll-call vote of 44 to 1, with 8 abstentions, the Commission noted that, while there had been significant positive developments on human rights in Croatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina (composed of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Republika Srpska) had made limited improvement on human rights issues and the situation in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) remained a source of grave concern. The High Commissioner and the Secretary-General were requested, with the assistance of the international community, to develop early warning procedures to identify situations that could lead to conflict or humanitarian tragedy. The Commission recommended that Croatia be considered in 2001 under the agenda item on technical assistance and advisory services if progress on human rights and democratic principles continued.

Expressing grave concern at the ongoing serious human rights violations and the deteriorating human rights and humanitarian situation in FRY caused by the repressive policies and measures of the authorities, the Commission condemned the repression of the media, political opposition and NGOs, and the arbitrary administration of justice and application of the law. Noting with grave concern that Slobodan Milosevic and other senior leaders continued to maintain positions of power despite their indictment for war crimes and crimes against humanity [YUN 1999, p. 1214], and that FRY had repeatedly ignored the orders of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY) to transfer indicted war criminals to The Hague and had not transferred any indictee since ICTY's inception in 1992, the Commission demanded that FRY cooperate with the Tribunal. It called on the authorities to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms; end torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment of detainees, and bring those responsible to justice; repeal repressive and discriminatory legislation on property rights, universities and the media, and apply other legislation without discrimination; respect the rights of minorities; return the armed and police forces to civil and democratic control; and account for and protect the humanitarian and legal rights of prisoners deprived of liberty and removed from the Kosovo province of FRY at the end of the conflict. The Commission called for information on the fate and the whereabouts of persons missing or unaccounted for.

Regarding Kosovo, the Commission condemned ethnic violence and intimidation by all parties and urged political leaders to cooperate fully with the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) and the international security presence in Kosovo (KFOR) in their efforts to strengthen law and security, to reject violence and to support only peaceful and democratic civil or political activity. The Commission stressed the need for an independent and impartial judiciary.

Welcoming the democratic election of a reform-oriented new Government in Croatia, steps to establish an independent media, undertake judicial reform and facilitate refugee returns, and the agreement between Croatia and the High Commissioner on technical cooperation and assistance programmes [YUN 1999, p. 587], the Commission called on the Government to sustain the progress.

Noting progress by Bosnia and Herzegovina in some areas in implementing the 1995 Peace Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 544], as well as some improvement in respect for human rights and some progress on refugee returns, the Commission strongly condemned the intimidation of and perpetuation of violence against minority refugees and internally displaced persons returning to their homes, the destruction of their homes and all other acts designed to discourage their voluntary return. It called on the authorities to facilitate returns, adopt an effective and fair election law, combat the growing problem of trafficking in persons, continue to improve police standards and ensure the establishment and functioning of an independent judiciary. All parties to the Peace Agreement were called on to cooperate with ICTY, and States and the Secretary-General were urged to support the Tribunal. All indicted persons were called on to surrender voluntarily to the Tribunal's custody.

The Commission decided to renew the Special Rapporteur's mandate for a further year and asked him to report to the General Assembly in 2000 and to the Commission in 2001; the Commission's decision and request were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council on 28 July (decision 2000/257).

Communications. On 17 April [E/CN.4/2000/157], FRY, commenting on the draft text of Commission resolution 2000/26, stated that the entire text should be rejected for its highly politicized contents and for the absence of any reference to the real human rights problems in Kosovo and Metohija province. It presented amendments to the draft text.

During the year, FRY transmitted to the Commission and Subcommission communications on various subjects, including the humanitarian situation in the country, elections and the future political status of Kosovo and Metohija and people deprived of their liberty.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In October [A/55/282], Special Rapporteur Jiri Dienstbier (Czech Republic) submitted a report on the human rights situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and FRY.

The Special Rapporteur visited Bosnia and Herzegovina (24-26 January and 11-15 June), where the political environment, lack of functioning institutions and a complicated constitutional and legal framework continued to impede any real change. He noted, however, that there was more reason for optimism than a year earlier. Over 1 million refugees and displaced persons were still waiting to return to their pre-war homes or for any other durable solution. Obstacles ranged from lack of adequate security to delays in property law implementation and lack of reconstruction assistance. Although some progress had been made in restoring property rights, the process was still moving too slowly. Also, discriminatory employment impacted the sustainability of returns. The major problem in education was the division of the system along ethnic lines. Progress was noted, though, in the removal of offensive and discriminatory material from textbooks. An uneven distribution of health care negatively affected the accessibility and cost of health services for all. Return-related incidents of violence continued to be reported in some areas and impunity persisted, with perpetrators in most cases not identified, arrested or prosecuted. The police forces remained overwhelmingly mono-ethnic and had unacceptably low numbers of female officers. Political interference in the work of police and the judiciary continued. The Special Rapporteur expressed serious concern that Bosnia and Herzegovina had emerged as a significant destination point for women trafficked from Eastern Europe. There was growing evidence that the country was serving for transit purposes and was becoming a country of origin. The Special Rapporteur noted a trend towards greater implementation of decisions of the Human Rights Chamber and the Ombudsperson, although implementation rates were still little better than 50 per cent. He recommended mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes, improved and accelerated property-law implementation, the adoption of a law on labour relations with an anti-discrimination component in Republika Srpska, non-discrimination in health policy and practice, combating trafficking in persons and training for local and international police on human rights and on gender. The authorities were called on to implement the Declaration and Agreement on Education signed in May.

In reporting on human rights developments in Croatia from March to early July, the Special Rapporteur paid attention to the key issues of refugee returns, minority rights and war-crimes trials. He visited the country from 25 to 27 April.

Despite amendments to the Law on Reconstruction and adoption of amendments to the law on areas of special State concern, progress on returns had still been slow. War-crimes prosecutions of ethnic Serbs were ongoing, and the Special Rapporteur called attention to the lack of fairness in most of the proceedings, which were based on group indictments and failed to specify individual criminal acts; often, individuals belonging to groups were tried in absentia. The missing persons issue was a key factor in the peace and reconciliation process in Croatia and remained a pressing human rights concern. The Special Rapporteur expressed deep concern over Croatia's difficult financial situation and noted the dire need for investment to improve the standard of respect for social and economic rights and to implement measures to assist vulnerable groups. He noted government attempts to protect workers' rights better. Unemployment, estimated at between 18 and 20 per cent, was expected to grow due to bankruptcies. The Special Rapporteur commended the initiative of the State Commission for Gender Equality Issues to introduce legislative changes to better protect women and children. He also welcomed the signing on 6 June of an agreement on cooperation between the Government and the High Commissioner, setting out the legal status of OHCHR in Croatia, and commended the cooperation between the Government and the Office and the agreement between the Office and the city of Zagreb to establish a Human Rights Documentation Centre in government-provided premises. The Special Rapporteur concluded that, despite remarkable political changes, Croatia continued to fall short of meeting some of its human rights obligations. Recommendations included full use of the tripartite Croatian Economic and Social Council, revisions of labour and other legislation to improve the economic and social situation, resolution of cases of missing persons and the bringing of all perpetrators to justice.

The Special Rapporteur considered the human rights situation in FRY from March to mid-July, having visited the country twice. He observed that Serbia faced increasingly grave and violent violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the absence of the rule of law and due process. Serbian authorities used the legal and judicial systems to legitimize political repression and criminalize opposition activity, civil society and the expression of dissent. He noted with concern the mass detention of opposition party members and increasing violations of freedom of expression. There were violations of the rights to due process and to fair trial. Montenegro was facing many problems typical of a society in the initial stage of transition to democracy and a market economy.

With regard to Kosovo, the issue of missing persons and those deprived of liberty in connection with the crisis there (see p. 358) remained a serious obstacle to the resolution of tensions. Violence in the southern Serbian municipalities of Presevo, Bujanovac and Medvedja was increasing, including armed attacks on police checkpoints, arbitrary detentions, beatings, disappearances, kidnappings and other violence against Serb and Albanian civilians. Recommendations to FRY focused on ensuring the administration of justice; ending repression of the rights of political expression, freedom of association, independence of the media and related civil and political rights; ensuring the representation of minorities in government; and preventing torture and ill-treatment of detainees and bringing perpetrators to justice.

Regarding Kosovo, it was recommended that UNMIK ensure that all applicable laws complied with international human rights standards; expedite the appointment in Kosovo of the full contingent of planned international judges and prosecutors; redouble its efforts to train legal professionals; review a regulation on extension of periods of pre-trial detention to ensure conformity with international standards; and review regulations on the media to ensure that they conformed to international human rights standards and practices. KFOR was urged to review regulations, training programmes, codes of conduct and operational procedures for its personnel, and ensure that individuals detained by KFOR were treated in accordance with international standards. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the international community end sanctions and other forms of isolation of the people of FRY.

In a later report [E/CN.4/2001/47] covering events in the region from September to December, the Special Rapporteur observed that in Bosnia and Herzegovina there was little change or significant progress to report concerning respect for human rights and the rule of law. Compared to the dramatic changes in Croatia and FRY in 2000, change in Bosnia and Herzegovina was happening much more slowly. The main concern continued to be the return of refugees and displaced persons. Regarding trade in women and children for forced prostitution, the Council of Ministers had established a State-level working group to draw up a national plan of action.

The Special Rapporteur expressed continuing deep concern over the unequal application of the rule of law in Croatia and the politicization of local judiciaries, as demonstrated by the sharp escalation of arrests of Croatian citizens of Serb ethnicity on war-crimes charges. The arrests had a major impact on the return of refugees. The Special Rapporteur applauded the Government's commitment to respect the right of refugees and internally displaced persons to return to their homes, but noted that return continued to be obstructed in many ways. The central issue of property rights continued to slow the return process. He expressed support for the ongoing technical cooperation projects planned by OHCHR in 2001.

The last quarter of 2000 witnessed dramatic political changes in FRY, of which the most important, said the Special Rapporteur, was the 24 September presidential election in which the Democratic Opposition of Serbia candidate Vojislav Kostunica defeated Slobodan Milosevic and opened the door to a democratic transition (see p. 384). In Kosovo, UNMIK-supervised municipal elections (see p. 367) on 28 October resulted in moderate candidates being elected to a majority of local offices. Regarding Serbia (excluding Kosovo), the cases of many individuals arrested and subject to trial for political views during the Milosevic years remained unresolved, and hundreds of Kosovar Albanian political prisoners and thousands of Serbs who resisted service or deserted the security forces remained in prison or under threat of prosecution. In both Serbia and Montenegro, national minorities continued to suffer discrimination. Organized criminal activity, particularly trafficking in women, remained a serious problem. In Kosovo, violence against Serbs and other ethnic minorities continued to fuel tension, while political attacks and assassinations among Kosovo Albanians had increased since the municipal elections. The functioning of the judicial and prison systems remained far below acceptable international standards. FRY faced serious economic and humanitarian challenges. The Special Rapporteur urged the international community to redouble its efforts to ensure that humanitarian needs were met in the country.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/602/Add.3], adopted resolution 55/113 without vote [agenda item 114 (c)].

Situation of human rights in parts of South-Eastern Europe

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind all relevant resolutions on this subject, in particular Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/26 of 18 April 2000, and all Security Council resolutions and presidential statements,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other human rights instruments, the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees, the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of victims of war and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Taking note of the principles and commitments undertaken by participating States of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Reaffirming the territorial integrity of all States in the region, within their internationally recognized borders, taking fully into account all relevant Security Council resolutions,

Expressing its full support for the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"), which, inter alia, committed the parties in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to respect human rights fully, in particular issues surrounding the return of refugees,

Expressing its support for the democratic forces and non-governmental organizations in the promotion and protection of human rights and in strengthening civil society, and noting in this regard the opportunities afforded by the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe, which was adopted at Cologne, Germany, on 10 June 1999,

Welcoming the admission of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia into the framework of the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe at the extraordinary session of the Regional Table of the Pact, held at Bucharest on 26 October 2000,

Noting the importance of the respect for the rights of all persons belonging to minorities,

Welcoming all contributions of the Office of the High Representative, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights and other entities of the United Nations, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Council of Europe, the European Community Monitoring Mission, Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in the area in 2000,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 1160(1998) of 31 March 1998, 1199(1998) of 23 September 1998, 1203(1998) of 24 October 1998, 1239(1999) of 14 May 1999 and 1244(1999) of 10 June 1999, and the general principles annexed to that resolution, as well as the statement made on 24 March 1998 by the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights at the fifty-fourth session of the Commission, Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1998/79 of 22 April 1998 and 1999/2 of 13 April 1999, and the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights of 27 September 1999 on the situation of human rights in Kosovo,

Recalling also its condemnation of the Serbian military offensive against the civilian population of Kosovo, which resulted in war crimes and gross violations of international human rights and international humanitarian law being inflicted upon the Kosovars,

Condemning all violations of human rights in Kosovo, which have affected all ethnic groups in Kosovo, in particular the harassment and murder of ethnic Serb, Roma and other minorities of Kosovo by ethnic Albanian extremists,

Expressing concern that the entire population of Kosovo has been affected by the conflict there and its aftermath, and stressing that all of the national, ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities there must benefit from their full and equal rights, without discrimination,

Stressing, in this context, the importance of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991,

Distressed by the detention in Serbia of political prisoners of Kosovar Albanian or other origin, in violation of international human rights law and standards, but welcoming the pledge of authorities there to abide by international norms in carrying out judicial procedures in this and all other areas of judicial responsibility,

1. Reiterates its call for the full and consistent implementation of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement") by all parties;

2. Stresses the crucial role of human rights in the successful implementation of the Peace Agreement, and underlines the obligations of all parties under the Peace Agreement to comply with international human rights law and to secure for all persons within their jurisdiction the highest level of international norms and standards of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the rule of law and effective administration of justice at all levels of government, the freedom and independence of the media, freedom of expression, freedom of association, including with respect to political parties, freedom of religion and freedom of movement;

3. Also stresses the need for enhanced international efforts to foster and effect the prompt and voluntary return of displaced persons and refugees in safety and with dignity;

4. Condemns the growing problem of trafficking in women in the region, and calls upon all concerned authorities to combat actively this criminal practice;

5. Urges all States and parties to the Peace Agreement that have not done so to meet their obligations to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, as required by Security Council resolution 827(1993) of 25 May 1993 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, and in particular to comply with their obligations to arrest and transfer to the custody of the Tribunal those indicted persons present in their territories or under their control;

6. Notes that varying degrees of progress have been made in the human rights situation in all States and by all parties to the Peace Agreement, but that substantial efforts remain to be made in several areas;

7. Reiterates its call upon all States and parties to the Peace Agreement to ensure that the promotion and protection of human rights and effective, functioning democratic institutions will be central elements in developing civilian structures;

8. Notes the progress made by Bosnia and Herzegovina in the implementation of the Peace Agreement;

9. Also notes the progress made with regard to refugee returns in Bosnia and Herzegovina, while calling upon all authorities actively to support the return process for minority refugees and internally displaced persons, inter alia, through the eviction of illegal occupants of housing intended for internally displaced persons and refugees, in particular in areas of the Republika Srpska with a majority population of Bosnian Serbs and areas of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina with a majority population of Bosnian Croats;

10. Welcomes the "Constituent Peoples" decision of the Constitutional Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina, which reflects the commitment of Bosnia and Herzegovina to meeting the highest standards of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

11. Condemns the harassment of returning minority refugees and internally displaced persons in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including the destruction of their homes, in particular in areas of the Republika Srpska with a majority population of Bosnian Serbs and areas of the Federation with a majority population of Bosnian Croats;

12. Also condemns recurrent instances of religious discrimination and the denial to religious minorities of their right to rebuild religious sites in Bosnia and Herzegovina, in particular in the territory of the Republika Srpska;

13. Further condemns the manipulation of the press by political parties and government officials, including the selective application of slander and tax laws to harass journalists and editors;

14. Calls upon all authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina, in particular those within the Republika Srpska, to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia;

15. Calls upon the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina, including those of the Republika Srpska and the Federation:

(a) To implement the decisions of the High Representative and to fulfil their obligations under the Peace Agreement and the declarations of the Peace Implementation Council;

(b) To implement the decisions of the Commission on Human Rights on Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Office of the Human Rights Ombudsman and the Human Rights Chamber, and the decisions of the Commission for Real Property Claims of Displaced Persons and Refugees;

(c) To establish a fully staffed and funded judiciary which effectively protects the rights of all citizens;

(d) To adopt an effective and fair election law, in cooperation with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe;

(e) To implement fully all the provisions of the New York Declaration adopted on 15 November 1999;

(f) To support the work of the common institutions and implement fully the actions mandated by the Peace Implementation Council at its ministerial meeting held at Brussels on 23 and 24 May 2000;

16. Welcomes the political change following the recent elections in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, which shows the clear decision of the people to choose democracy, respect for human rights and integration into the international community over dictatorship and isolation, and looks forward to the new authorities ensuring respect for the rule of law and for the promotion and protection of human rights;

17. Also welcomes the admission of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to membership in the United Nations;

18. Further welcomes the commitment of, and encourages efforts by, the new democratic authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to investigate past abuses of human rights, including violations of the human rights of ethnic groups in Kosovo, the repression and harassment of peaceful political activists, illegal and/or hidden detentions, and other violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

19. Welcomes the appointment by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights of the Special Envoy on persons deprived of liberty in connection with the Kosovo crisis in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, and calls upon all authorities to cooperate with the Special Envoy;

20. Also welcomes the commitment of the new democratic authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to promoting and protecting free and independent media, and looks forward to welcoming the repeal of any laws that hinder the full and free exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia;

21. Calls upon all authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to respect the rights of all persons belonging to any of its national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities;

22. Welcomes the commitment by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to implement fully and in good faith its obligations under the Peace Agreement and to abide by the terms of Security Council resolution 1244(1999), and calls upon the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to cooperate with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other humanitarian organizations to alleviate the suffering of refugees and internally displaced persons, to protect them, and to assist their voluntary return to their homes in safety and with dignity;

23. Encourages States to consider providing additional voluntary contributions to support the new democratic authorities so that they may meet the pressing human rights and humanitarian needs in the area;

24. Calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to comply with their obligation to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, and welcomes the announced re-opening of the Office of the International Tribunal in Belgrade and the pledge of the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to cooperate with it;

25. Underlines the obligation of the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to abide by the terms of Council resolution 1244(1999) and the general principles on a political solution to the Kosovo crisis adopted on 6 May 1999 and annexed to that resolution;

26. Reaffirms that the human rights and humanitarian situation in Kosovo shall be addressed within the framework of a political solution based and built upon the general principles set out in the annex to Council resolution 1244(1999);

27. Welcomes the efforts of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo and the Kosovo Force, and calls upon all parties in Kosovo and the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to cooperate fully with the Mission and the Force in the fulfilment of their respective mandates;

28. Encourages States to consider providing additional voluntary contributions to support the Mission in meeting the pressing administrative, human rights and humanitarian needs in the area;

29. Welcomes the work in Kosovo of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the efforts of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe;

30. Recognizes the strong efforts of the Mission, the United Nations civilian police and the Kosovo Police Service in developing and training the core of a multi-ethnic local police force throughout Kosovo;

31. Calls upon all parties in Kosovo to cooperate with the Mission to ensure full respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms and democratic norms in Kosovo;

32. Urges all parties in Kosovo to support and strengthen a multi-ethnic society in Kosovo that respects the rights of all persons belonging to minorities and that includes them in all provisional and new civil administration institutions in Kosovo, and to support the Mission fully in this regard;

33. Welcomes the recent holding of peaceful municipal elections in Kosovo, which is a landmark in the democratic development of Kosovo and in the implementation of Council resolution 1244(1999), and commends in this regard the support by all parties of the efforts of the Mission;

34. Commends the Mission for its efforts to create an independent and impartial judiciary system in Kosovo, and urges all local Serb and Albanian leaders, and the leaders of other minorities in Kosovo, to take all steps necessary to support these efforts;

35. Calls upon all local Kosovar officials, ethnic representatives and all individuals to respect the right to freedom of opinion and expression for all points of view, the right to a free, independent media and the right to freedom of religion;

36. Calls upon the authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, and the representatives of all ethnic groups in Kosovo, to condemn all acts of terrorism and forced evictions from homes or places of work of any resident of Kosovo, whatever the ethnic background of the victim and whoever the perpetrators, to refrain from all acts of violence and to use their influence and leadership to bring all parties to cooperate fully with the Force and the Mission in stopping these incidents and in bringing the perpetrators to justice;

37. Stresses the importance of the return of refugees and of all displaced persons, whatever their ethnic background, and expresses its concern about reports of continuing harassment or other impediments in this regard;

38. Also stresses the importance for, and the responsibility of, all parties in Kosovo to suppress all harassment of individuals or groups of any background and to create a secure environment that will offer to all those who wish to remain in Kosovo, irrespective of ethnic origin, a genuine possibility of doing so;

39. Further stresses the urgent need for all ethnic groups to cooperate with the Mission and the Force to rebuild and strengthen common institutions for all and to desist from creating any sort of parallel institutions;

40. Calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to release those persons detained and transferred from Kosovo to other parts of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, or to specify the charge under which each individual is detained and to afford them due process of law, and to guarantee their families and non-governmental organizations and international observers unimpeded and regular access to those who remain in detention, and, in this regard, welcomes as a first important step the release of the prominent human rights activist, Flora Brovina, and the release of twenty-three additional detainees;

41. Calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, and all local Kosovo ethnic Serb and Albanian leaders, to provide information on the fate and whereabouts of the high number of missing persons from Kosovo, and encourages the International Committee of the Red Cross, in this regard, to continue its clarification efforts, in cooperation with other organizations;

42. Expresses its concern about the forced ethnic division of any part of Kosovo as being contrary to Council resolution 1244(1999) and to the guiding principles of the Rambouillet accords, and stresses the need for all parties in Kosovo to take all necessary measures to prevent or reverse any action that de facto or de jure permits such ethnic cantonization;

43. Condemns all trafficking in women by any party in Kosovo, and calls upon the local authorities and the Mission to take all steps necessary to prevent and stop it;

44. Requests the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to continue to monitor closely the situation of human rights in Kosovo, and to report his findings to the Commission at its fifty-seventh session and to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

45. Decides to continue its examination of this question at its fifty-sixth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Russian Federation

Republic of Chechnya

Report of High Commissioner. On 5 April [E/CN.4/2000/SR.28], the High Commissioner reported orally to the Commission on her visit to the north Caucasus region of the Russian Federation (Ingushetia, Dagestan, Chechnya, 31 March–4 April). She also had a series of meetings in Moscow with international humanitarian organizations active in the north Caucasus and with Russian and international NGOs. Before travelling, she gave the Russian Government a list of some of the most serious allegations of human rights abuses in Chechnya.

From the Commission's perspective, the most pressing and immediate issue concerned the adequacy and credibility of the response by the Russian authorities to the scale of allegations of human rights violations in the region. Nine criminal prosecutions had been opened for offences against civilians. In her discussions in Moscow with the Minister for Foreign Affairs and other government members, the High Commissioner raised the possibility of establishing a broad-based, independent national commission of inquiry. Although she recognized the complexity of the situation, the High Commissioner believed that the primary responsibility for addressing human rights violations rested with the Russian authorities; she offered to send them models of national commissions of inquiry.

On 1 April, the High Commissioner travelled to Nazran, the capital of Ingushetia, where an estimated 213,000 internally displaced persons had fled. She heard testimony from witnesses of alleged mass killings, summary executions, rape, torture and pillage; those accounts bore out the seriousness of the alleged violations by the Russian military, militia and Ministry of the Interior forces in Chechnya. She visited Chechnya on 2 April, where she spoke to some of the remaining residents of Grozny, chiefly women and the elderly, who complained bitterly of the lack of food and miserable living conditions. They were also anxious about relatives who had been detained. The scale of destruction in Grozny was shocking, said the High Commissioner.

The High Commissioner welcomed the agreement of the Russian authorities to provide access by ICRC to places of detention in Chechnya. The Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs had invited her to return to Moscow, Chechnya and the north Caucasus later in the year to assess the situation.

Commission action. On 25 April [res. 2000/58], by a roll-call vote of 25 to 7, with 19 abstentions, the Commission called on all parties to the conflict in Chechnya to halt the hostilities and the indiscriminate use of force and to hold a political dialogue and negotiations to solve the crisis. The Russian Federation was called on to establish urgently a national, broad-based and independent commission of inquiry to investigate alleged human rights violations and breaches of international humanitarian law committed in Chechnya. It was also asked to disseminate, and ensure that the military had knowledge of, basic principles of human rights and international humanitarian law.

The Commission asked the Special Rapporteurs on the question of torture, on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, and on violence against women, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict and the Representative on internally displaced persons to carry out missions to Chechnya and neighbouring republics and to report thereon to the Commission and the General Assembly. The High Commissioner was asked to facilitate their tasks and to consult with the Russian Federation to ensure the implementation of the current resolution. The High Commissioner was asked to report to the Commission in 2001 and to keep it and the Assembly informed on further developments.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2000/23 & Corr.1], adopted decision 2000/273 by recorded vote (21-6-15) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Situation in the Republic of Chechnya of the Russian Federation

At its 45th plenary meeting, on 28 July 2000, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/58 of 25 April 2000, approved the Commission's request to the relevant special rapporteurs and working groups of the Commission, namely, the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture, the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, the Representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, to undertake missions to the Republic of Chechnya and neighbouring republics without delay and to submit reports to the Commission and to the General Assembly as soon as possible.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2000/273:

In favour: Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Costa Rica, Croatia, Czech Republic, Denmark, Fiji, France, Germany, Greece, Italy, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Poland, Portugal, Saudi Arabia, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: Belarus, China, Cuba, India, Russian Federation, Viet Nam.

Abstaining: Algeria, Angola, Bahrain, Bolivia, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Colombia, Indonesia, Japan, Mexico, Saint Lucia, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Venezuela.

Middle East

Lebanon

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 2000/16], by a roll-call vote of 51 to 1, with 1 abstention, the Commission deplored continued Israeli violations of human rights in southern Lebanon and western Bekaa and called on Israel to end those practices. Israel was also called on to comply with the Geneva Conventions of 1949, particularly the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention), and to release all Lebanese who had been imprisoned and held as hostages for bargaining purposes, as well as others arbitrarily detained in the occupied territories. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to Israel's attention and to invite Israel to provide information on its implementation. He was asked to report to the General Assembly in 2000 and to the Commission in 2001.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2000/23 & Corr.1], adopted decision 2000/249 by recorded vote (43-1) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Human rights situation in southern Lebanon and western Bekaa

At its 45th plenary meeting, on 28 July 2000, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 2000/16 of 18 April 2000, approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General:

(a) To bring Commission resolution 2000/16 to the attention of the Government of Israel and to invite it to provide information concerning the extent of its implementation thereof;

(b) To report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session and to the Commission at its fifty-seventh session on the results of his efforts in this regard.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 2000/249:

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Austria, Bahrain, Belarus, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Canada, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Croatia, Cuba, Czech Republic, Denmark, Fiji, France, Germany, Greece, India, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Morocco, New Zealand, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Poland, Portugal, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, United Kingdom, Venezuela, Viet Nam.

Against: United States.

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to a 1999 Commission request [YUN 1999, p. 736], the Secretary-General stated that he had asked Israel for information on the extent of the implementation of the Commission's 1999 resolution on the situation of human rights in southern Lebanon and western Bekaa [ibid.], but had received no reply [E/CN.4/2000/28].

In September [A/55/400], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that he had asked Israel for information on the implementation of the Commission's 2000 resolution (see p. 773) and had received no reply.

Territories occupied by Israel

During the year, the question of human rights violations in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission on Human Rights. In addition to considering the matter at its fifty-sixth session in March/April, the Commission held a special session to discuss the matter in October following an escalation of violence. Political and other aspects were considered by the General Assembly, its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli Practices) and other bodies (see PART ONE, Chapter VI).

Reports of Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1999 Commission resolution [YUN 1999, p. 738], the Secretary-General reported that he had brought that resolution, which concerned the occupied Syrian Golan, to the attention of all Governments, the Committee on Israeli Practices, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian Rights), the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations [E/CN.4/2000/23]. The UN Department of Public Information provided press coverage for all meetings of the Committee on Israeli Practices and distributed information through documents, press releases, briefings and UN information centres and services.

Also in response to a 1999 Commission resolution [YUN 1999, p. 737], the Secretary-General stated that he had brought that resolution, dealing with violations of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, to the attention of the Government of Israel and all other Governments, the Committee on Israeli Practices and the Committee on Palestinian Rights, as well as to the attention of the specialized agencies, UNRWA, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, requesting information pertaining to Israel's implementation of the resolution [E/CN.4/2000/22]. He had received no reply. By a March addendum to that report [E/CN.4/2000/22/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted a reply from the League of Arab States (LAS), which contained information on Israeli violations of Palestinian human rights in the occupied territories, on the suffering of the Lebanese from occupation and the Israeli aggression in southern Lebanon, and on Israeli practices affecting the human rights of Syrian citizens in the occupied territories.

The Secretary-General submitted to the Commission, in February, a list of all General Assembly and other reports issued since 30 April 1999 on the situation of the population living in the occupied Arab territories [E/CN.4/2000/24].

Report of Special Rapporteur. In March [E/CN.4/2000/25], Special Rapporteur Giorgio Giacomelli (Italy) discussed the human rights situation in the occupied Palestinian territories. The principal concerns included the right of return of persons residing in those territories; forced eviction of Palestinians; demolition of Palestinian homes; the implantation of Israeli settlers in the territories; practices that affected the natural environment of the occupied territories (degradation of the infrastructure, land confiscation, water depletion, uprooting of trees, dumping of toxic wastes and other pollution); closures of the occupied territories and their impact on the freedoms of movement, education, religion, expression and information; collective punishment; and discrimination against Palestinian workers. In addition, the Special Rapporteur discussed human rights violations against children, women and the family, violations of the rights of Palestinian prisoners and the application of double standards regarding the administration of justice. In East Jerusalem, where violations continued to be particularly intense, he pointed to the wholesale imposition of Israeli domestic law in the city, and the special discrimination practised by Israel's arbitrary denial and revocation of residency, which divided families. The Special Rapporteur recommended rigorous implementation of the relevant international norms, which implied the reversal of illegal trends, correction and, where appropriate, restitution.

Commission action. On 17 April [res. 2000/6], by a roll-call vote of 31 to 1, with 19 abstentions, the Commission condemned the continued human rights violations in the occupied Palestinian territories, and called on Israel to cease those acts immediately. Condemning the expropriation of Palestinian homes in Jerusalem, the revocation of identity cards, the imposition of exorbitant taxes aimed at forcing Palestinians out of Jerusalem and the use of torture against Palestinians during interrogation, the Commission called on Israel to end those practices. The Commission also called on Israel to cease its policy of enforcing collective punishments; desist from all forms of human rights violations in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories and respect the bases of international law, the principles of international humanitarian law and its international commitments and agreements; and withdraw from the Palestinian territories. The Secretary-General was asked to bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of the Government of Israel and all other Governments, competent UN organs, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, to disseminate it as widely as possible and to report in 2001 on its implementation by Israel. He was also asked to provide the Commission with all UN reports issued between its sessions that dealt with conditions in which the Palestinians were living under Israeli occupation.

Also on 17 April [res. 2000/7] and by the same roll-call vote, the Commission called on Israel to comply with UN resolutions on the occupied Syrian Golan and demanded that it rescind its decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on that occupied territory. It also called on Israel to desist from changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan and to desist from imposing Israeli identity cards on Syrian citizens of the Syrian Golan and from its repressive measures against them. The Secretary-General was asked to bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of all Governments, UN organs, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, to give the resolution wide publicity and to report in 2001.

On the same date [res. 2000/8], by a roll-call vote of 50 to 1, with 1 abstention, the Commission, expressing grave concern at Israeli settlement activities in the occupied Arab territories, including East Jerusalem, and condemning all acts of terrorism, called on all parties not to allow those acts to affect the ongoing peace process negatively. The Commission urged Israel to comply fully with the Commission's previous resolutions; to cease its policy of expanding the settlements and related activities in the occupied territories; and to forgo and prevent any new installation of settlers.

Communications. During the year, the Commission received a number of communications regarding the situation in the occupied Palestinian territories, including from IAS summarizing Israeli practices from January to July [E/CN.4/2001/108] and from Palestine describing violent acts by Israel and Jewish settlers [E/CN.4/2000/136, E/CN.4/2000/146, E/CN.4/2001/7, E/CN.4/2001/109-112, E/CN.4/2001/118]. It also received from Palestine a statistical table of the human and material losses from 29 February to 29 December [E/CN.4/2001/130].

The Commission on Human Rights held its fifth special session in Geneva from 17 to 19 October [E/2000/112 & Add.1] (see next page). The session was requested by Algeria [E/CN.4/S-5/2] on behalf of the Council of Arab Permanent Representatives, members of LAS, to discuss "the grave and massive violations of the human rights of the Palestinian people by the Israeli occupying Power".

Report of Special Rapporteur. The Commission had before it a report on Israel's violations of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967 [E/CN.4/S-5/3] by the Special Rapporteur, who, in response to recent developments and the acute situation in the territories (see p. 416), had undertaken a mission to the region from 11 to 15 October.

He stated that the full range of human rights violations reported earlier (see p. 774) had remained constant. However, a number of violations from that spectrum had shown a dramatic upsurge since late September. The Special Rapporteur reported that Israel had dramatically escalated the use of lethal force against civilians, in response to demonstrations that began in Jerusalem and spread throughout the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Since 28 September, Israeli forces had killed at least 85 Palestinians, of whom more than 20 were under the age of 18, in the occupied Palestinian territories, and an estimated 2,000 to 3,700 were wounded. Israeli forces had obstructed, beaten and/or shot emergency medical personnel on duty, thus denying emergency medical aid to victims and wounding medical personnel. The level and number of casualties had strained local medical services beyond capacity. Israel's current closure of the occupied territories was characterized also by the sealing off of Palestinian populated areas, preventing free movement of people and material, and creating shortages and a sense of isolation. Freedom of movement was denied to businessmen and other professionals. Other economic losses included those resulting from the demolition of physical structures, including homes and apartments, the damaging and burning of vehicles, including ambulances, and vandalism of homes. The Special Rapporteur remained convinced that the current conflict had its roots in accumulated grievances and resentment at the continuing violations of human rights and humanitarian norms under Israeli occupation. He recommended that Israel issue orders to all its forces consistent with international humanitarian norms and that those orders be rigorously implemented. He supported the idea of establishing a mechanism for a speedy and objective inquiry into the ongoing crisis, and recommended establishing an observer and/or guarantor body to build up a sense of security and confidence on both sides.

Communication. On 19 October [E/CN.4/S-5/4], Israel stated that the Special Rapporteur's report was biased and selective. The allegations against Israel were unsubstantiated, the sources were never identified and those aspects that might have given a more balanced picture were ignored or otherwise curtailed. Attention should have been given to the continued Palestinian violations of written commitments, particularly to fighting terrorism and preventing incitement.

Commission action. On 19 October [E/2000/112 (res. S-5/1)], by a roll-call vote of 19 to 16, with 17 abstentions, the Commission strongly condemned the use of force by Israel against Palestinians, causing the death of 120 civilians, and called on Israel to end the use of force against unarmed civilians and to abide by its legal obligations under the Fourth Geneva Convention. It called on the international community to secure the cessation of violence by Israel and end the ongoing violations of the Palestinians' human rights.

The Commission decided to establish a human rights inquiry commission to gather information on violations of human rights that constituted grave breaches of humanitarian law by Israel. It further decided to request the High Commissioner to undertake an urgent visit to the occupied territories and to request several of the Commission's special rapporteurs, the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances and others to visit the occupied territories and to report to the Commission in 2001 and to the General Assembly in 2000. Those and other requests of the Commission were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in the decision below.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 November, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/2000/112 & Add.1], adopted decision 2000/311 by recorded vote (21-19-11) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Grave and massive violations of the human rights of the Palestinian people by Israel

At its 48th plenary meeting, on 22 November 2000, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution S-5/1 of 19 October 2000, endorsed the Commission's decisions:

(a) To establish, on an urgent basis, a human rights inquiry commission, whose membership should be based on the principles of independence and objectivity, to gather and compile information on violations of human rights and acts that constituted grave breaches of international humanitarian law by the Israeli occupying Power in the occupied Palestinian territories and to provide the Commission with its conclusions and recommendations, with the aim of preventing the repetition of the recent human rights violations;

(b) To request the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to undertake an urgent visit to the occupied Palestinian territories to take stock of the violations of the human rights of the Palestinian people by the Israeli occupying Power, to facilitate the activities of the mechanisms of the Commission in implementation of the present decision, to keep the Commission informed of developments and to report to the Commission at its fifty-seventh session and, on an interim basis, to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

(c) To request the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, the Representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons, the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture, the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, the Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance, the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, the Special Rapporteur on adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living, and the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to carry out immediate missions to the occupied Palestinian territories and to report the findings to the Commission at its fifty-seventh session and, on an interim basis, to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session.

Report of High Commissioner. In accordance with the Commission's request, as endorsed by the Economic and Social Council, the High Commissioner visited the occupied Palestinian territories, Israel, Egypt and Jordan (8-16 November) [E/CN.4/2001/114].

In the occupied Palestinian territories, the most persistent allegation brought to the High Commissioner's attention was the excessive use of force by Israeli security forces. The Minister of Health of the Palestinian Authority (PA) estimated that between 29 September and 9 November, some 6,958 persons (3,366 in the West Bank and 3,592 in the Gaza Strip) had been wounded and 1,016 Palestinians had been injured in Israel. Senior Israel Defence Forces (IDF) officers told the High Commissioner that the methods and weapons used were carefully calibrated according to the nature of the threat being faced and that live fire, whether from small arms or heavier weapons, had been directed only at those who had used firearms or petrol bombs in attacks against Israeli forces. The destruction of housing had left more than 1,000 children without homes, often in situations of food shortage and without access to medical care. Since the beginning of October, more than 40 schools had been closed or were unable to operate owing to curfews or closures. Many children suffered from psychological and social problems due to the current situation. Very serious allegations were made of attacks by Israeli security forces on medical personnel and ambulances. According to IDF, clearances and demolition of property had taken place as a matter of military necessity—meaning that compensation was not payable—because the structures or plantations had been used as cover by Palestinian gunmen. In response to the High Commissioner's call for lifting or easing the closures, which heavily restricted freedom of movement, IDF drew a link between the closures and the release in October by the PA of some 80 prisoners whom Israeli authorities considered a major security threat (see p. 420). Should the 80 prisoners be reincarcerated then the closures would be lifted the same day.

Since October, access to the Al-Aqsa Mosque had been denied to Muslims under the age of 45. Muslim and Christian leaders representing the Palestinian and Armenian communities in East Jerusalem wished to have full responsibility for their own holy places and complained of disrespectful behaviour by Israeli troops stationed at the holy sites. The Israeli authorities told the High Commissioner that the restrictions were necessary to prevent armed extremists from occupying the holy sites, which would necessitate an Israeli military response.

Some 128,000 Palestinian workers, normally employed in Israel, were barred from travelling to their workplaces due to closure. UN studies reported a 50 per cent reduction in normal economic activity within the territories. Access was a major preoccupation for all humanitarian organizations, affecting emergency evacuation of seriously injured civilians and the import of donations of humanitarian goods and equipment from abroad. The Ministry of Defence indicated that it was doing everything possible to facilitate humanitarian access.

Following her visits to Gaza, Hebron and Ramallah, the High Commissioner visited Israel where, among other things, she discussed with the Israeli authorities the use of force by IDF. IDF officers described as typical a situation that commenced with stone-throwing but quickly escalated into armed attacks. It was stated that out of 5,085 attacks on Israeli settlements, some 1,400 had involved live fire. According to IDF rules of engagement, attackers who used live ammunition could be shot by soldiers and sharpshooters deployed for that purpose. New weapons systems, they said, were being developed, which, IDF hoped, would be deployed to control crowds effectively at longer ranges with little or no risk of injury. The High Commissioner pursued with IDF the issue of how the use of lethal force was investigated, what punishments were available for improper or excessive use of such force, and how many investigations had been conducted to date and with what result.

Most of the Arab Israelis whom the High Commissioner met described their situation as one of exclusion, prejudice, official hostility and routine humiliation. Since 28 September, however, the threat of violence had become their primary concern. On 11 November, the Government of Israel decided to establish a State commission of inquiry to look into the clashes, since 29 September, between the security forces and Israeli citizens in which 13 Arabs were killed and hundreds of people injured. The Minister of Justice reiterated his commitment to establish a human rights commission and mentioned that research had been carried out on national human rights institutions. The High Commissioner offered the services of her Special Adviser on National Human Rights Institutions to assist the Government to establish a national commission.

In Egypt, the High Commissioner discussed with senior government officials and the LAS Secretary-General the human rights situation in the occupied Palestinian territories and the follow-up to the Commission's special session.

The High Commissioner was received in Jordan by His Royal Majesty King Abdullah II, who expressed deep concern about recent developments and said that Jordan was sparing no efforts to assist both parties in implementing decisions agreed upon in Sharm el-Sheikh in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 401].

The High Commissioner recommended peaceful negotiation, exploring the feasibility of establishing an international monitoring presence and assistance by the international community through the task force established under the terms of the Sharm el-Sheikh Memorandum. She outlined specific steps to stop the escalation of violence. The High Commissioner would continue to assist the PA to build up its institutional capacity in the area of the rule of law, offer the services of her Special Adviser on National Human Rights Institutions to assist Israel, provide secretariat support to the Commission and its mechanisms to implement resolution S-5/1, be ready to facilitate dialogue between the human rights bodies of Israel and the PA, Palestinian and Israeli NGOs and other representatives of civil society, and urge the international community to support the work of UN agencies in the occupied Palestinian territories and to contribute to the various resource mobilization initiatives.

By a December note [A/55/684], the Secretary-General transmitted the High Commissioner's report to the General Assembly.

Communication. In identical reports to the Assembly [A/55/800] and to the Commission [E/CN.4/2001/133], Israel presented its views on the High Commissioner's report. It described what it claimed were the shortcomings of the report and presented its views on the current violence and Palestinian and Israeli policies and practices.

Chapter I

Development policy and international economic cooperation

Economic growth in 2000 was unexpectedly and unusually high and widespread. World output, which jumped to 4 per cent from 2.8 per cent in 1999, the strongest increase in more than a decade, was associated with double-digit growth in the volume of international trade. The developed economies, especially North America, were important sources of the strong performance. Although the economic situation of most developing countries also improved significantly, recovery from the setbacks of the financial crises of recent years remained incomplete. In many cases, employment and real wages had not returned to pre-crisis levels and broad negative social consequences persisted.

In action on development issues by UN bodies during the year, the challenges and opportunities of globalization were recognized, but concern was expressed about the exclusion of a large number of developing countries from the benefits of globalization and the growing income and technological gap, both between rich and poor countries and within countries. Those issues were also taken up by the Millennium Assembly (see p. 47) and the tenth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (see p. 890).

In July, ministers attending the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council adopted a Declaration calling for action by Governments and the international community to improve the capacity of developing countries and economies in transition to participate in the emerging global knowledge-based economy in order to promote their economic and social development. Also in July, the Council recommended the creation of an information and communication technologies task force in order to formulate strategies for putting those technologies at the service of development. In a December resolution on the role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence, the General Assembly encouraged the Secretary-General to continue consultations on establishing such a task force.

The Commission on Sustainable Development, at its April/May session, held a multi-stakeholder dialogue on agriculture and considered preparations for the 10-year review, to be held in 2002, of progress achieved in implementing Agenda 21, adopted in 1992 by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. The Committee for Development Policy, in April, carried out the triennial review of the list of least developed countries (LDCs), recommending that Senegal be added to and Maldives be graduated from the list. Preparations for the Third United Nations Conference on LDCs, to be held in 2001, were considered by the Assembly in December.

Other action by the Assembly on international economic cooperation included calling for the elimination of unilateral extraterritorial coercive economic measures, emphasizing the need for a favourable international and national environment for the industrialization of developing countries, calling on the UN system to continue to conduct analytical studies and provide advice and technical assistance to countries with economies in transition, requesting the Secretary-General to prepare for a second high-level dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership and inviting the members of the UN system to reflect in their programmes measures for the implementation of the 1994 Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States.

International economic relations

Development and international economic cooperation

A number of UN bodies addressed development and international economic cooperation issues during 2000, including the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

On 14 December, the Assembly, by decision 55/434, deferred consideration of the launching of global negotiations on international economic cooperation for development and included the item in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth (2001) session.

On 20 December, the Assembly took note of the reports of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on its discussion of macro-economic policy questions [A/55/579] (decision 55/437) and of sustainable development and international economic cooperation [A/55/581] (decision 55/440). By decision 55/458 of 23 December, the Assembly decided that the latter item would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session.

Economic and Social Council consideration.

On 18 April, the Economic and Social Council held its third special high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund) [E/2000/79]. It considered a note by the Secretary-General identifying issues related to the reform of the global financial system and the fight against poverty in developing countries [E/2000/8] (see p. 906).

Promoting a new global human order

By a 5 May letter [A/55/74], Nigeria transmitted to the General Assembly the texts of the Declaration and the Havana Programme of Action adopted by the first South Summit (Havana, Cuba, 10-14 April). In the Declaration, the heads of State and Government of the member countries of the Group of 77 developing countries and China stressed the need for a new global human order aimed at reversing the growing disparities between rich and poor, both among and within countries, through the promotion of growth with equity, poverty eradication, expansion of productive employment and promotion of gender equality and social integration. Many of those objectives were included in the goals and targets of the Millennium Declaration (see p. 49).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 November [meeting 74], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/48 [draft: A/55/L.15/Rev.2 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 174].

The role of the United Nations in promoting a new global human order

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations and the role of the United Nations in promoting international economic and social cooperation,

Recognizing that the well-being of people and the full development of their potential is the overall goal of sustainable development,

Deeply concerned about the growing disparities between rich and poor, both within and among countries, and about the adverse implications thereof for the promotion of human development throughout the world,

Determined to promote the economic and social advancement of all peoples, and convinced of the urgency of revitalizing international cooperation towards that end,

Emphasizing that countries are responsible for their development processes, and in this context stressing the responsibility of the international community, in partnership, to assist developing countries in their development efforts,

Reaffirming the United Nations Millennium Declaration of 8 September 2000, adopted by the heads of State and Government at the conclusion of the Millennium Summit of the United Nations, in particular the goals and targets agreed therein for promoting development and poverty eradication,

Taking note of the Declaration of the South Summit adopted in Havana on 14 April 2000, on, inter alia, the need for a new global human order aimed at reversing the growing disparities between rich and poor both among and within countries through the promotion of growth with equity, the eradication of poverty, the expansion of productive employment and the promotion of gender equality and social integration,

1. Stresses the need for a broad-based consensus for action within a comprehensive and holistic framework towards the achievement of the goals of development and poverty eradication involving all actors, namely Governments, the United Nations system and other international organizations, and relevant actors of civil society, including the private sector and non-governmental organizations;

2. Notes with interest the proposal regarding a new global human order;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States and of the agencies and organizations of the United Nations system on the promotion of a new global human order, and to prepare a report thereon for consideration by the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session;

4. Decides to include in the agenda of its fifty-seventh session the item entitled "The role of the United Nations in promoting a new global human order".

Globalization and interdependence

During 2000, a number of UN bodies considered issues of globalization and interdependence, including the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its tenth session (UNCTAD X), which adopted the Bangkok Declaration and Plan of Action (see p. 891), and the General Assembly. The role of information technology in development in the context of globalization was discussed by the Committee for Development Policy and at the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council (see p. 799).

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 54/231 [YUN 1999, p. 743], the Secretary-General submitted a September report on the role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence [A/55/381]. The report focused on the need for the transfer of information and communication technologies (ICT) in the age of globalization, including issues related to such transfer to developing countries, and reviewed efforts undertaken by the UN system to enhance national ICT capacities. The report noted that the pivotal role of ICT in the emerging global knowledge-based economy was recognized in a series of documents, events and activities undertaken by the United Nations in 2000, including the Secretary-General's report "We the peoples: the role of the United Nations in the twenty-first century" [A/54/2000], submitted to the Millennium Assembly (see p. 55). Building on the proposals contained in the Ministerial Declaration adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its high-level segment (see p. 799), the Secretary-General presented a number of action-oriented recommendations regarding the role of the UN system in the transfer of ICT to developing countries. The suggestions included: providing advisory services on a number of ICT issues; strengthening collaboration among UN organizations in relation to ICT and establishing a system-wide inventory of the UN system's ICT activities; providing technical assistance to facilitate swifter diffusion of technological innovations; helping to generate reliable standardized and up-to-date statistical information on the impact of ICT on development; serving as a regional forum on ICT development and other regional activities; designing special programmes for the least developed countries (LDCs); upgrading the capabilities of UN organizations in using ICT for development; and taking steps to ensure dissemination of the UN system's wealth of knowledge and experience regarding the use of ICT for social and economic development, including creation of a web site on the Organization's ICT activities. A final section of the report, prepared by UNCTAD, addressed the promotion of policy coherence, complementarity and coordination in order to optimize the benefits of globalization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/587], adopted resolution 55/212 without vote [agenda item 100].

Role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence

Recalling its resolutions 53/169 of 15 December 1998 and 54/231 of 22 December 1999,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted on 8 September 2000,

ment at its tenth session, held at Bangkok from 12 to 19 February 2000,

Taking note also of the Declaration and the Programme of Action adopted at the South Summit of the Group of 77, held at Havana from 10 to 14 April 2000,

Taking note further of the Ministerial Declaration of the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2000 of the Economic and Social Council, held in New York from 5 to 7 July 2000,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 2000/29 of 28 July 2000, in which the Council called for the establishment of a United Nations information and communication technologies task force,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General,

Recognizing the challenges and opportunities of globalization and interdependence,

Expressing concern about the marginalization of a large number of developing countries from the benefits of globalization, the additional vulnerability of those developing countries that are integrating into the world economy and the general accentuation of the income and technological gap between developed and developing countries, as well as within countries,

Recognizing that globalization and interdependence are opening new opportunities through trade, investment and capital flows and advances in technology, including information technology, for the growth of the world economy, development and the improvement of living standards around the world, and recognizing also that some countries have made progress in successfully adapting to the changes and have benefited from globalization,

Recognizing also the importance of appropriate policy responses at the national level by all countries to the challenges of globalization, in particular by pursuing sound macroeconomic and social policies, noting the need for support from the international community for the efforts of the least developed countries, in particular, to improve their institutional and management capacities, and recognizing further that all countries should pursue policies conducive to economic growth and to promoting a favourable global economic environment,

Stressing that such national macroeconomic and social policies can yield better results with international support and with an enabling international economic environment,

Emphasizing the need to address those imbalances and asymmetries in international finance, trade, technology and investment patterns that have a negative impact on development prospects for developing countries, with a view to minimizing those impacts,

Noting with serious concern that a large number of developing countries have not yet been able to reap the full benefits of the existing multilateral trading system, and underlining the importance of promoting the integration of developing countries into the world economy so as to enable them to take the fullest possible advantage of the trading opportunities arising from globalization and liberalization,

Stressing that the process of reform for a strengthened and stable international financial architecture should be based on broad participation in a genuine multilateral approach, involving all members of the international community, to ensure that the diverse needs and interests of all countries are adequately represented,

Underlining the urgent need to mitigate the negative consequences of globalization and interdependence for all developing countries, including landlocked developing countries, small island developing States and, in particular, African countries and the least developed countries,

Reiterating that the United Nations, as a universal forum, is in a unique position to achieve international cooperation in addressing the challenges of promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence, including, in particular, promoting a more equitable sharing of the benefits of globalization,

1. Reaffirms that the United Nations has a central role in promoting international cooperation for development and in promoting policy coherence on global development issues, including in the context of globalization and interdependence;

2. Re-emphasizes the urgency of coherent action by the United Nations, the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization, as appropriate, along with the action of Governments, to promote equitable and broad sharing in the benefits of globalization, taking into account the specific vulnerabilities, concerns and needs of developing countries;

3. Calls for the effective addressing of globalization through, inter alia, making the decision-making process of international economic and financial policy more participatory, especially with regard to developing countries, the integrated consideration of trade, finance, investment, technology transfer and developmental issues by the relevant international institutions, the continuation of a wide range of reforms in the international financial system and further progress towards liberalization and enhanced market access in areas and for products of particular interest to developing countries, and, to this end, also calls for coherence and close cooperation among the United Nations, the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization;

4. Calls upon all countries, in particular the major developed economies, to enhance coherence among their financial, investment, trade and development cooperation policies, with a view to enhancing the development prospects of developing countries;

5. Stresses the importance, at the national level, of maintaining sound macroeconomic policies and developing effective institutional and regulatory frameworks and human resources, so as to realize the mutually reinforcing objectives of poverty eradication and development, including through national poverty reduction strategies;

6. Urges the international community to promote international development cooperation aimed at enhancing growth, stability, equity and the participation of developing countries in the globalizing world economy;

7. Encourages developing countries to continue to pursue appropriate development policies to promote economic development and poverty eradication, and, in this regard, invites the international community to pursue strategies that support those policies through continued efforts to address the problems of market access, persistent external debt, transfer of resources, financial vulnerability and declining terms of trade;

8. Strongly urges the international community to take all necessary and appropriate measures, including support for structural and macroeconomic reform, foreign direct investment, enhanced official development assistance, the search for a durable solution to the external debt problem, market access, capacity-building and the dissemination of knowledge and technology, in order to achieve the sustainable development of Africa and to promote the participation of all African countries in the global economy;

9. Reaffirms its resolve to give greater opportunities to the private sector, non-governmental organizations and civil society in general to contribute to the realization of the goals and programmes of the United Nations and thereby to enhance opportunities and offset the negative economic and social consequences of globalization;

10. Welcomes the efforts of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the International Trade Centre and other multilateral and bilateral efforts to help developing countries, including landlocked developing countries, small island developing States and, in particular, African countries and the least developed countries, in addressing their specific concerns within the globalizing economy, in particular through technology-related assistance in the fields of trade and policy, in the improvement of trade efficiency and policies and trade in services, and in electronic commerce;

11. Stresses the need for good governance within each country as well as at the international level;

12. Emphasizes the importance of recognizing and addressing the specific concerns of countries with economies in transition so as to help them to benefit from globalization, with a view to their full integration into the world economy;

13. Emphasizes also the technology-led dimension of globalization and the need to promote universal access to knowledge and information as well as the need to strive to bridge the digital divide and to bring information and communication technologies to the service of development and all the peoples of the world so as to enable the developing countries and the countries with economies in transition to benefit effectively from globalization by full and effective integration into the emerging global information network;

14. Encourages the Secretary-General, in this regard, to continue the ongoing consultations on the establishment of a United Nations information and communication technologies task force, and looks forward to the submission to the Economic and Social Council of the report requested by the Council in its resolution 2000/29;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in close collaboration with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other relevant organizations, an analytical report on the effect of increasing linkages and interdependencies among trade, finance, knowledge, technology and investment on growth and development in the context of globalization, containing action-oriented recommendations, including on appropriate development strategies at both the national and international levels, and to submit it to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Globalization and interdependence".

Development through partnership

On 21 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/215 [draft: A/55/L.71 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 173].

Towards global partnerships

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the central role of the United Nations, in particular the General Assembly, in the promotion of partnerships in the context of globalization,

Underlining the intergovernmental nature of the United Nations,

Recalling the priorities and objectives formulated in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, particularly in regard to developing strong partnerships in pursuit of development and poverty eradication,

Stressing that efforts to meet the challenges of globalization could benefit from enhanced cooperation between the United Nations and all relevant partners, in particular the private sector, in order to ensure that globalization becomes a positive force for all,

Taking into account ideas expressed in the report of the Secretary-General entitled "We the peoples: the role of the United Nations in the twenty-first century" of 27 March 2000 with regard to enhanced cooperation with the private sector,

1. Stresses the need for Member States further to discuss partnerships and consider, in appropriate intergovernmental consultations, ways and means to enhance cooperation between the United Nations and all relevant partners, inter alia, from the developing countries, to give them greater opportunities to contribute to the realization of the goals and programmes of the Organization;

2. Requests the Secretary-General in this regard to seek the views of all Member States on ways and means to enhance cooperation between the United Nations and all relevant partners, in particular the private sector;

3. Invites the Secretary-General also to seek the views of relevant partners, in particular the private sector, on how to enhance their cooperation with the United Nations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on this matter, containing a compilation of views of Member States, views of other relevant partners, and his recommendations in this regard, for consideration by the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

5. Decides to include in the agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Towards global partnerships".

High-level dialogue (2001)

By a 30 June letter [A/54/952], the Chairman of the Second Committee reported to the President of the General Assembly on consultations held with Member States on 9 June regarding the date, modalities, nature of the outcome and focus of the discussions of the second high-level dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership, to be held during the Assembly's fifty-sixth (2001) session with the theme "Responding to globalization: facilitating the integration of developing countries into the world economy in the twenty-first century". The first dialogue was held in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 772]. By decision 54/494 of 5 September, the Assembly took note of the letter.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Assembly resolution 54/213 [YUN 1999, p. 742], the Secretary-General submitted an August report on the status of preparations for the second high-level dialogue [A/55/314]. Based on consultations with Member States, as well as recent experience in organizing high-level events, including the Millennium Summit, the Secretary-General made recommendations concerning the modalities, outcome, focus of discussions and next steps in preparing for the second high-level dialogue.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/581/Add.4], adopted resolution 55/193 without vote [agenda item 94 (d)].

High-level dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/165 of 21 December 1993, 49/95 of 19 December 1994, 50/122 of 20 December 1995, 51/174 of 16 December 1996, 52/186 of 18 December 1997, 53/181 of 15 December 1998 and 54/213 of 22 December 1999,

Recalling also its resolution 55/2 of 8 September 2000, entitled "United Nations Millennium Declaration",

Recalling further the Agenda for Development and the relevant provisions on its follow-up and implementation, and the need to give impetus to international economic cooperation for development so as to follow up on the Agenda effectively,

Reaffirming the importance of continuing the dialogue to be conducted in response to the imperative of solidarity, mutual interests and benefits, genuine interdependence, shared responsibility and the partnership in promoting international economic cooperation for development,

Recognizing, in this context, the importance of an enabling environment and sound economic policy at both the national and the international levels,

Taking note of the need to ensure the integrated and coordinated follow-up and implementation by the United Nations system of the outcome of major United Nations conferences and summits,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Renewal of the dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership", concerning the past experience of the high-level dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership,

1. Reaffirms the importance of continued constructive dialogue and genuine partnership to promote further international economic cooperation for development in the twenty-first century;

2. Reiterates the overall theme adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 54/213, namely, "Responding to globalization: facilitating the integration of developing countries into the world economy in the twenty-first century";

3. Endorses the agreement reached at the intergovernmental consultations, as contained in the report of the Secretary-General, whereby the two sub-themes of the second high-level dialogue would be (a) "Promoting the integration of developing countries into the world economy and generating new public and private financing resources to complement development efforts" and (b) "Enhancing the integration of developing countries in the emerging global information network, facilitating access to information and communication technology for developing countries", and decides that the high-level dialogue will be convened for two days immediately prior to the commencement of the general debate at the fifty-sixth session of the General Assembly, that the high-level dialogue shall consist of plenary meetings, ministerial round-table meetings and informal panels, with the participation of non-governmental actors, and that the final outcome of the dialogue will be a summary by the President, to be presented at the closure of the event;

4. Requests the President of the General Assembly to continue preparations for the second high-level dialogue, in close collaboration with Member States and taking into account the experience of the first high-level dialogue, as well as recent experience in the preparation and organization of high-level events;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in close cooperation with Governments, all relevant parts of the United Nations system and other relevant stakeholders, to prepare for the second high-level dialogue, taking into account the results of major United Nations conferences and summits, General Assembly resolution 54/213, the outcome of the consultations held by the Chairman of the Second Committee, any further guidance provided by Member States and the outcome of the consideration of the relevant item by the General Assembly at its current session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development and international economic cooperation", the sub-item entitled "High-level dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership", and requests the Secretary-General to submit to it at that session a consolidated report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Implementation of the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation and the International Development Strategy

submitted a July report [A/55/209] on the implementation of the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, adopted by the Assembly in resolution S-18/3 [YUN 1990, p. 337], and of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (the 1990s), adopted by the Assembly in resolution 45/199 [ibid., p. 343].

Progress was assessed in relation to six inter-related goals, singled out in the Strategy: economic growth in the developing countries; international financial matters, including foreign direct investment, debt and official development assistance; world trade; science and technology, industry and agriculture; human resources development, including education and health; and the situation of LDCs.

The report concluded that increasing globalization and liberalization had borne some fruit during the 1990s, with developing countries as a whole succeeding in improving their rate of growth over that of the 1980s. However, the economic improvements were not large enough to permit many developing countries, particularly the least developed, to make meaningful progress on the economic and social fronts. In particular, the weakest persons within a country, namely those who were unskilled or inadequately educated, and some women and children, were unable to enjoy economic improvements as much as had been hoped; in some instances, they were even further marginalized.

New international development strategy

Committee for Development Policy. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 54/206 [YUN 1999, p. 745], by which the Secretary-General was asked to draft, in collaboration with all concerned organizations of the UN system, in particular the Committee for Development Policy, a new international development strategy for the first decade of the new millennium, the Committee for Development Policy (New York, 3-7 April) [E/2000/33] discussed a range of issues relating to the purpose, thrust and content of an effective new strategy. A working group was established to formulate a set of commentaries for consideration by the Secretary-General, who was to submit the draft strategy to the Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, at its fifty-fifth session. The Committee recognized that a new international development strategy had to be both comprehensive and balanced in order to respond to the needs of the new decade and be flexible enough to reflect the different constraints and opportunities of countries in very different circumstances and at different stages of development. It should be formulated so as to be readily monitored and assessed in order that progress could be measured and—where progress was found wanting—supplementary actions could be identified beyond what was formulated. The Committee stressed that formulation of a new strategy should be fully informed by a review of what was—and was not—achieved by prior UN development decades, and also that weaknesses and biases in the global system should be identified and addressed.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 54/206, the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly a report containing the draft international development strategy for the first decade of the new millennium [A/55/89-E/2000/80]. The draft, which drew on inputs from many parts of the UN system, aimed to give further impetus to international cooperation for development and to monitor long-term trends in the global economy. The draft focused on goals and desirable policy measures and actions and retained the quantifiable goals set by several major UN conferences for the year 2015.

The major challenges of the decade included development and peace; eradicating poverty and hunger; globalization and technological change; ensuring sustainable development; democracy, governance, the rule of law and human rights; promoting gender equality and the participation of women in development; addressing critical situations; and the international and national policy environment. Goals, policies and implementation measures were suggested in the areas of consolidation of peace; the eradication of poverty and hunger; economic development; social development; environmental protection and sustainable development; human settlements; human rights and governance; culture and development; and actions related to countries in special situations, including Africa and LDCs, small island developing States, landlocked developing countries, post-conflict countries and those with the highest prevalence of HIV/AIDS. The Secretary-General also suggested action for implementation of and follow-up to the strategy.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/581/Add.1], adopted resolution 55/190 without vote [agenda item 94 (a)].

Implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance and continuing validity of the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, and of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990,

Recalling the results of all the major United Nations conferences and summit meetings held since the beginning of the 1990s,

Reaffirming the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in particular the targets and commitments relating to development and poverty eradication,

Emphasizing the importance of the several other development-oriented meetings being convened under the auspices of the United Nations over the next two years, including the high-level international inter-governmental event on financing for development, the special session of the General Assembly to review and address the problem of human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome, the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, the special session of the General Assembly on children, the ten-year review of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, and the special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II),

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, and the draft text of an international development strategy for the first decade of the new millennium, submitted by the Secretary-General,

1. Expresses regret that the consultations foreseen in resolution 54/206 of 22 December 1999 could not be held;

2. Decides to postpone the further development of a new international development strategy until after the aforementioned meetings have been held;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session with an overview of the challenges and constraints as well as progress made towards achieving the major development goals and objectives adopted by the United Nations during the decade of the 1990s;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the sub-item entitled "Sustainable development and international economic cooperation: implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade".

Industrial development

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/177 [YUN 1998, p. 777], the Secretary-General, in September [A/55/356], transmitted the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) on efforts under way in the area of industrialization for development. UNIDO activities focused on supporting developing countries and economies in transition, particularly in Africa and LDCs, in adopting reforms to achieve competitiveness and a place in global markets. Those reforms were also designed to ensure that those countries experienced the social and economic benefits of globalization, rather than the downside in which wages decreased, working hours increased and the fruits of globalization were enjoyed only by a few.

By June 2000, UNIDO had 42 integrated programmes, based on specific cooperation requests, in the initial phase of implementation, valued at $280 million and covering time periods of three to four years. The organization also served as a global forum on industrial development issues and the challenges facing developing countries for Governments, representatives of industry from the public and private sectors, investors and others. UNIDO activities included a wide variety of seminars, workshops and expert group meetings related to industrial development and an active publications programme. System-wide cooperation with the UN system and other international organizations was another integral part of UNIDO's work.

In order to better respond to the needs of developing countries, UNIDO had been undergoing a major reform exercise since 1998, transforming its emphasis from headquarters-based operations to activities in the field. By the end of 1999, UNIDO had established 23 country offices and would establish nine regional centres by the end of 2000. Another important component of UNIDO's transformation was the grouping of services into 16 modules covering: industrial policy formulation and implementation; statistics and information networks; metrology, standardization, certification and accreditation; continuous improvement and quality management; investment and technology promotion; environmental policy framework; climate conventions and the 1997 Kyoto Protocol [YUN 1997, p. 1048]; energy efficiency and rural energy development (two modules); cleaner production; pollution control and waste management; the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer [YUN 1987, p. 686]; small and medium-sized enterprise policy framework; policy for women's entrepreneurship development; entrepreneurship development; and upgrading agro-industries and related technical skills.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/580], adopted resolution 55/187 without vote [agenda item 93].

Industrial development cooperation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/151 of 18 December 1991, 49/108 of 19 December 1994, 51/170 of 16 December 1996 and 53/177 of 15 December 1998 on industrial development cooperation,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted by the heads of State and Government on 8 September 2000,

Recognizing the increasing role of the business community, including the private sector, in enhancing the dynamic process of the development of the industrial sector,

Recognizing also the importance of the transfer of technology to the developing countries as an effective means of international cooperation in the field of industrial development,

Taking note of the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization,

1. Reiterates that industrialization is a key element in the promotion of the sustainable development of developing countries, as well as in the creation of productive employment, eradication of poverty and facilitation of social integration, including the integration of women into the development process;

2. Stresses the importance of domestic industrial transformation in developing countries as a way of increasing the value added of their export earnings, so that they may benefit fully from the process of globalization and trade liberalization;

3. Recognizes the need for industry to play an enhanced role in fighting the marginalization of developing countries;

4. Underlines the importance of industrial development cooperation and a positive investment and business climate at the international, regional, subregional and national levels in promoting the expansion, diversification and modernization of productive capacities in developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

5. Reaffirms the need, within the existing service modules of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, for initiatives stretching beyond those associated with economic adjustment and stabilization to support the survival and expansion of manufacturing activity in developing countries, especially in the least developed countries;

6. Emphasizes the necessity of a favourable international and national environment for the industrialization of developing countries, and urges all Governments to adopt and to implement development policies and strategies that promote, within a framework of transparent and accountable industrialization policies, inter alia, enterprise development, foreign direct investment, technological adaptation and innovation, expanded access to markets and effective use of official development assistance to enable developing countries to enhance an environment that is attractive to investment so as to augment and supplement domestic resources for the expansion, diversification and modernization of their industrial production capacity in the context of an open, equitable, non-discriminatory, transparent, multilateral and rule-based international trading system;

7. Acknowledges the interlinkage of globalization and interdependence, and reiterates the importance of the transfer of technology to the developing countries as an effective means of international cooperation in the field of industrial development;

8. Confirms the contribution of industry to social development, especially in the context of the linkages between industry and agriculture, and notes that within the totality of these interlinkages, industry serves as a powerful source of the employment generation, income creation and social integration required for the eradication of poverty;

9. Recognizes the continuing use of official development assistance also for industrial development in the developing countries, and calls upon donor countries and recipient countries to continue to cooperate in their efforts to achieve greater efficiency and effectiveness of official development assistance resources devoted to industrial development cooperation;

10. Emphasizes the importance, for developing countries, of financing for industrial development, including market-based mechanisms and instruments as well as innovative funding modalities, such as co-financing schemes and trust funds, debt-equity swaps and, as appropriate, other debt relief measures and official development assistance specifically designed to strengthen the industrial capacities of developing countries through, inter alia, the facilitation of private capital flows, and, in this regard, requests relevant entities of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in the context of their strategic partnership, to support developing countries and countries with economies in transition in their efforts to mobilize resources for industrial development, especially by means of investment promotion activities, the development of small and medium-sized enterprises, an increase in the competitiveness of their exports, the encouragement of practices to promote employment in industries and various forms of business partnerships, such as industrial joint venture schemes, enterprise-to-enterprise cooperation and venture capital funds for industrial development;

11. Reiterates the importance of cooperation and coordination within the United Nations system in providing effective support for the sustainable industrial development of developing countries, calls upon the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to continue to carry out its central coordinating role within the United Nations system in that respect, and welcomes its efforts to strengthen its cooperation with the rest of the United Nations system at both the headquarters and field levels by, inter alia, actively participating in the resident coordinator system, so as to enhance the effectiveness, relevance and development impact of such support;

12. Calls upon the international community and the relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, to support the efforts of the developing countries to intensify and expand industrial cooperation among themselves with respect to, among other things, trade in manufactured products, industrial investments and business partnerships, and industrial technology and scientific exchanges;

13. Requests the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, in cooperation with the relevant organizations of the United Nations system, as appropriate, to continue to undertake an in-depth assessment, analysis and dissemination of best practices in the area of industrial policies and strategies and of lessons learned in industrial development, taking into account the effects of financial crises and the impact of globalization on the industrial structure of the developing countries, so as to support and boost South-South cooperation by providing practical insights and ideas for international industrial development cooperation and for economic and technical cooperation among developing countries;

14. Emphasizes the need for financial support to enable the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to implement its technical cooperation programmes and to strengthen its global forum activities, and, at the same time, strongly urges present and former member States to pay their assessed contributions in full, on time and without conditions;

15. Welcomes the structural transformation and revitalization of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as well as its new approach in providing comprehensive and integrated services to its member States and the strengthening of its field representation, and requests it to continue to support the industrialization efforts of developing countries and to continue to accord priority to the needs of the least developed countries and countries in the African region;

16. Also welcomes the focus of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization both on the strengthening of industrial capacities and on cleaner and sustainable industrial development, in the context of its new programme orientation, as well as its cooperation with the relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Environment Programme;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Coercive economic measures

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/10 [YUN 1998, p. 778], the Secretary-General submitted an August report with later addenda [A/55/300 & Add.1-3] containing replies received from 14 Governments in response to his request for information on the elimination of coercive economic measures as a means of political and economic compulsion.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 October [meeting 41], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/6 [draft: A/55/L.9/Rev.1] by recorded vote (136-2-10) [agenda item 31].

Elimination of unilateral extraterritorial coercive economic measures as a means of political and economic compulsion

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, particularly those that call for the development of friendly relations among nations and the strengthening of cooperation in solving problems of an economic and social character,

Taking note of the opposition of the international community to unilateral extraterritorial coercive economic measures,

Recalling its resolutions in which it has called upon the international community to take urgent and effective steps to end unilateral extraterritorial coercive economic measures,

Gravely concerned over the continued application of unilateral extraterritorial coercive measures whose effects have an impact on the sovereignty of other States and the legitimate interests of their entities and individuals in violation of the norms of international law and the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Believing that the prompt elimination of such measures would be consistent with the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations and the relevant provisions of the Agreement on the World Trade Organization,

Recalling its resolutions 51/22 of 27 November 1996 and 53/10 of 26 October 1998,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 53/10;

2. Reaffirms that all peoples have the right to self-determination and that by virtue of that right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development;

3. Expresses its deep concern at the negative impact of unilaterally imposed extraterritorial coercive economic measures on trade and financial and economic cooperation, including at the regional level, because they are contrary to the recognized principles of international law and pose serious obstacles to the freedom of trade and the free flow of capital at the regional and international levels;

4. Reiterates its call for the repeal of unilateral extraterritorial laws that impose coercive economic measures contrary to international law on corporations and nationals of other States;

5. Again calls upon all States not to recognize or apply unilateral extraterritorial coercive economic measures imposed by any State, which are contrary to recognized principles of international law;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session an item entitled "Elimination of unilateral extraterritorial coercive economic measures as a means of political and economic compulsion".

Sustainable development

Commission on Sustainable Development

The Commission on Sustainable Development held the second part of its eighth session in New York from 24 April to 5 May [E/2000/29]; an organizational meeting had been held on 30 April 1999. The session included a multi-stakeholder dialogue on agriculture (see p. 791) and a high-level segment, which considered issues related to land and agriculture (see p. 791) and forests (see p. 797) and the status of preparations for the 10-year review of Agenda 21, adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) (see p. 792). The segment also addressed trade, finance and investment in relation to sustainable development and convened a panel on trade and indigenous people.

The Commission adopted decisions on: preparations for the 10-year review of Agenda 21 [dec. 8/1]; integrated planning and management of land resources [dec. 8/3]; agriculture [dec. 8/4]; financial resources [dec. 8/5]; economic growth, trade and investment [dec. 8/6]; the subprogramme on sustainable development of the draft UN medium-term plan for the period 2002-2005 [dec. 8/7]; matters related to the Commission's intersessional work [dec. 8/8]; the reports of the fourth session of the Intergovernmental Forum on Forests [dec. 8/2] (see p. 797) and of the first session of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development [dec. 8/9] [YUN 1999, p. 958]; and documents considered by the Commission at its eighth session [dec. 8/11].

By decision 2000/215 of 3 May, the Economic and Social Council, pursuant to its decision 1996/302 [YUN 1996, p. 1367], approved the request of 15 non-governmental organizations (NGOs) that were on the Roster for the purposes of the work of the Commission to expand their participation into other fields of the Council. By decision 2000/227 of 26 July, the Council took note of the Commission's report on its eighth session [E/2000/29] and approved the provisional agenda for the ninth (2001) session.

Agriculture and land management

The Commission's multi-stakeholder dialogue, which was held on 24 and 25 April and involved representatives of business and industry, workers and trade unions, farmers and NGOs, as well as representatives of indigenous people and scientists, discussed sustainable agriculture issues. It considered a note by the Secretary-General outlining the structure of the dialogue [E/CN.17/2000/3] and transmitting discussion papers contributed by the International Agri-Food Network, the International Federation of Agricultural Producers and Via Campesina, trade unions and NGOs [E/CN.17/2000/3/Add.1-4].

The Chairman's summary of the dialogue, which was contained in the Commission's report [E/2000/29], reflected issues raised, areas that would benefit from further dialogue and elaboration, and specific initiatives announced or proposed by the participants with regard to the following themes: choices in agricultural production techniques, consumption patterns and safety regulations—potentials and threats to sustainable agriculture; best practices in land resource management to achieve sustainable food cycles; knowledge for a sustainable food system—identifying and providing for education, training, knowledge-sharing and information needs; and globalization, trade liberalization and investment patterns—economic incentives and framework conditions to promote sustainable agriculture.

The Commission's high-level segment also discussed land and agriculture and had before it the report of the Intersessional Ad Hoc Working Group on Integrated Planning and Management of Land Resources; and on Agriculture (New York, 28 February–3 March) [E/CN.17/2000/11]. The Chairman's summary of the segment, which was addressed by government ministers and experts, was contained in the Commission's report [E/2000/29].

Agriculture was also the economic sector/major group discussed by the Commission, which had before it the documents prepared for the multi-stakeholder dialogue and for the high-level segment. In addition, it considered reports of the Secretary-General on sustainable agriculture and rural development: trends in national implementation [E/CN.17/2000/5 & Add.1] and on sustainable agriculture and rural development [E/CN.17/2000/7 & Add.1-3].

For its consideration of the sectoral theme of integrated planning and management of land resources, the Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General on the subject [E/CN.17/2000/6 & Add.1-4] and the report of the Intersessional Ad Hoc Working Group [E/CN.17/2000/11].

In a 5 May decision [E/2000/29 (dec. 8/4)], the Commission, among priorities for action, encouraged Governments to complete the formulation and elaboration of national strategies for sustainable development by 2002 and to integrate agricultural production, food security and food safety as central elements in those strategies. It also identified areas for international cooperation, including trade, information exchange and dissemination and activities to be carried out by the United Nations and other relevant international organizations.

In a 5 May decision on integrated planning and management of land resources [dec. 8/3], the Commission stated that priority areas for future work on the issues should include prevention and/or mitigation of land degradation; access to land and security of tenure; critical sectors and issues: biodiversity, forests, drylands, rehabilitation of mining areas, mountain areas, wetlands and coastal zones, coral reefs, natural disasters, and rural-urban and land management interactions; access to information and stakeholder participation; international cooperation, including that for capacity-building, information-sharing and technology transfer; and minerals, metals and rehabilitation in the context of sustainable development.

Economic growth, trade and investment

For its discussion of the cross-sectoral theme of financial resources/trade and investment/economic growth, the Commission had before it reports of the Secretary-General on financial resources and mechanisms [E/CN.17/2000/2] and on economic growth, trade and investment [E/CN.17/2000/4], the summary of the Fifth Expert Group Meeting on Financial Issues of Agenda 21 (Nairobi, Kenya, 1-4 December 1999) [E/CN.17/2000/9] and the report of the Ad Hoc Intersessional Working Group on Financial Resources and Mechanisms and on Economic Growth, Trade and Investment (New York, 22-25 February 2000) [E/CN.17/2000/10].

The Commission's high-level session also discussed trade, finance and investment in relation to sustainable development and included a panel on trade and indigenous people.

In a 5 May decision [E/2000/29 (dec. 8/6)], the Commission stated that economic growth, trade and investment would be considered in 2002 as part of the 10-year review of progress achieved since UNCED. Priority areas for future work would include: promoting sustainable development through trade and economic growth; making trade and environment policies mutually supportive; promoting sustainable development through investment; and strengthening institutional cooperation, capacity-building and promoting partnerships. The Commission called for a balanced and integrated approach to trade and environment policies in pursuit of sustainable development, taking into account the economic, environmental and social aspects, as well as the different levels of development of countries, without undermining the open, equitable and non-discriminatory character of the multilateral trading system or creating disguised barriers to trade. An important challenge was to stimulate domestic investment and attract foreign direct investment for sustainable development in developing countries and economies in transition.

In a 5 May decision on financial resources [dec. 8/5], the Commission stated that, so far, the provision of resources required for the implementation of Agenda 21, particularly in developing countries, had fallen short of needs. It called for the urgent fulfilment of all financial commitments entered into under Agenda 21, noting that the cost of inaction could outweigh the financial costs of implementing Agenda 21. Priority areas for future work would include: mobilization of domestic financial resources for sustainable development; promotion of international cooperation and mobilization of international finance for sustainable development; strengthening of existing financial mechanisms and exploration of innovative ones; and improvement of institutional capacity and promotion of public/private partnerships.

Follow-up to UNCED and to nineteenth special session

In a March report on national reporting to the Commission on Sustainable Development [E/CN.17/2000/16], the Secretary-General noted that, by mid-March, 53 countries had submitted national reports on the implementation of Agenda 21 to the Commission's eighth (2000) session. The UN Secretariat was in the process of preparing guidelines for national reports to the ninth (2001) session and making preparations for national reporting for the 10-year review of Agenda 21 in 2002.

Report of Secretary-General. In a May report [A/55/78-E/2000/56], the Secretary-General reviewed work under way in the UN system to accelerate implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the General Assembly at its nineteenth special session by resolution S/19-2 [YUN 1997, p. 792]. The obstacles identified in the Secretary-General's 1999 report on the subject [YUN 1999, p. 751]—including lack of financial resources, inadequate institutional capacity, cumbersome reporting and inconsistent decision-making by UN agencies—continued to hinder implementation, although progress had been achieved in some areas, especially inter-agency coordination. The Secretary-General recommended closer coordination of UN organizations at the regional and country levels and greater cooperation with regional bodies.

UNEP action. At its sixth special session (Malmö, Sweden, 29-31 May), the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) adopted a decision [A/55/25 (dec. 55.VI/3)] by which it asked its Committee of Permanent Representatives to review UNEP activities to contribute to the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21. To that end, the Executive Director was asked to prepare a report for consideration by the Committee to be distributed to all Governments for comments. He was also asked to submit a final version of that report to the General Assembly in 2000 and to the UNEP Governing Council at its twenty-first (2001) session.

In accordance with that request, the Secretary-General, in October [A/55/447 & Corr.1], transmitted the report of the UNEP Governing Council on UNEP's contribution to the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 (see also p. 969).

Preparations for 10-year review (2002)

Commission action. During the high-level segment of its eighth session, the Commission on Sustainable Development addressed preparations for the 10-year review in 2002 of the implementation of Agenda 21, which was adopted by UNCED in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 672]. The first such review was carried out by the General Assembly at its nineteenth special session in 1997, when it adopted the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21. The Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.17/2000/15] summarizing preliminary views and suggestions from Governments on preparations for the 10-year review, including views regarding the political level, venue, title, financing, goals, agenda and preparatory process of and participation in the 2002 event.

On 5 May [E/2000/29 (dec. 8/1)], the Commission underscored the political importance of the 10-year review and stressed that Agenda 21 should not be renegotiated. It recommended that the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session consider organizing the 2002 event at summit level and convening it outside UN Headquarters, preferably in a developing country. It also recommended that meetings of the Commission's tenth (2002) session be transformed into an open-ended preparatory committee to undertake the comprehensive review and assessment of the implementation of Agenda 21 and other UNCED outcomes, including identifying constraints to and proposing specific time-bound measures for implementation. The Commission further recommended the establishment of a trust fund for voluntary donations in support of the preparatory process and invited the Assembly to decide on the agenda, main themes, timing, venue and other procedural matters related to the 2002 event.

UNEP action. The first Global Ministerial Environment Forum/sixth special session of the UNEP Governing Council was held in Malmö from 29 to 31 May [A/55/25] (see also p. 966).

On 31 May [dec. SS.VI/1], the Governing Council adopted the Malmö Ministerial Declaration, by which the Ministers of Environment and heads of delegation, having made a number of declarations with regard to the major environmental challenges of the twenty-first century, the private sector and the environment, civil society and the environment, and the 2002 review of UNCED, concluded that, with the unprecedented developments in production and information technologies and other factors, poverty could be decreased by half by 2015 without degrading the environment, environmental security through early warning could be ensured, environmental considerations could be better integrated into economic policy, legal instruments could be better coordinated and a vision of a world without slums could be realized. They committed themselves to realizing that common vision.

Report of Secretary-General. In a July report [A/55/120], the Secretary-General described action taken by the Commission on Sustainable Development and the UNEP Governing Council to ensure effective preparations for the 10-year review in 2002.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/582/Add.1], adopted resolution 55/199 without vote [agenda item 95 (a)].

Ten-year review of progress achieved in the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, held at Rio de Janeiro from 3 to 14 June 1992, and the nineteenth special session of the General Assembly for the purpose of an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of Agenda 21, held in New York from 23 to 28 June 1997,

Recalling also that Agenda 21 and the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development should constitute the framework within which the other results of the Conference are reviewed, and from within which new challenges and opportunities that have emerged since the Conference are addressed,

Recalling further its resolutions 53/188 of 15 December 1998 and 54/218 of 22 December 1999 on the implementation of and follow-up to the outcome of the Conference and the special session, as well as its resolution 55/2 of 8 September 2000,

Recalling Commission on Sustainable Development decision 8/1 on preparations for the ten-year review of progress achieved in the implementation of the outcome of the Conference,

Recalling also that chapter 33 of Agenda 21 identified the Global Environment Facility as one source of financing for the implementation of Agenda 21,

Recalling further the importance for developing countries of chapter 34 of Agenda 21,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on ensuring effective preparations for the ten-year review of progress achieved in the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21,

Taking note with appreciation also of the Malmö Ministerial Declaration adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme at its sixth special session,

Deeply concerned that, despite the many successful and continuing efforts of the international community since the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, held at Stockholm from 5 to 16 June 1972, and the fact that some progress has been achieved, the environment and the natural resource base that support life on earth continue to deteriorate at an alarming rate,

Reaffirming the political importance of the forthcoming ten-year review of progress achieved since the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, and stressing that the review should focus on the implementation of Agenda 21 and the other results of the Conference, as well as the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 adopted by the General Assembly at its nineteenth special session,

Bearing in mind that the substantive activities of the review should take into account, as appropriate, the results relevant to sustainable development of other United Nations conferences and summits and their follow-up activities,

Bearing in mind also that national reports prepared by Governments since 1992 on national implementation of Agenda 21, to which major groups have contributed, could provide a fair basis for guiding national preparatory processes,

Reaffirming that Agenda 21 and the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development should not be renegotiated and that the review should identify measures for the further implementation of Agenda 21 and the other results of the Conference, including sources of funding;

1. Decides to organize the ten-year review of progress achieved in the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 2002 at the summit level to reinvigorate the global commitment to sustainable development, and accepts with gratitude the generous offer of the Government of South Africa to host the summit;

2. Also decides to call the summit the World Summit on Sustainable Development;

3. Further decides that the review should focus on the identification of accomplishments and areas where further efforts are needed to implement Agenda 21 and the other results of the Conference, and on action-oriented decisions in those areas, should address, within the framework of Agenda 21, new challenges and opportunities, and should result in renewed political commitment and support for sustainable development, consistent, inter alia, with the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities;

4. Decides that the Summit, including its preparatory process, should ensure a balance between economic development, social development and environmental protection, as these are interdependent and mutually reinforcing components of sustainable development;

5. Stresses the importance of early and effective preparations for the Summit and a comprehensive assessment of progress achieved in the implementation of Agenda 21 and the other results of the Conference to be carried out at the local, national, regional and international levels by Governments and the United Nations system so as to ensure high-quality inputs to the review process, and welcomes the preparatory activities carried out so far;

6. Welcomes the work undertaken at the regional level, in close collaboration with the respective regional commissions, to implement action programmes for sustainable development that could provide substantive inputs to the preparatory process and the Summit itself;

7. Also welcomes the work undertaken by the United Nations Secretariat in close cooperation with the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Development Programme, the regional commissions and the secretariats of conventions related to the Conference, as well as other relevant organizations, agencies and programmes within and outside the United Nations system and international and regional financial institutions, including the Global Environment Facility, to support preparatory activities, in particular at the national and regional levels, in a coordinated and mutually reinforcing way;

8. Further welcomes the report of the Global Environment Facility to the General Assembly on its contributions to the implementation of Agenda 21, and notes the assistance provided by the Facility to the national implementation of Agenda 21;

9. Welcomes the decision of the Council of the Global Environment Facility at its last meeting, held from 1 to 3 November 2000, to request the Chief Executive Officer to explore the best options for enhancing the support of the Facility in assisting affected countries, especially those in Africa, in implementing the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, taking into account the third replenishment;

10. Also welcomes the initiation of the third replenishment of the Global Environment Facility Trust Fund, invites all donor countries and other countries in a position to do so to make contributions to the third replenishment and ensure its successful conclusion, and invites the Facility to submit a report to the Summit on the status of the replenishment negotiations;

11. Invites relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations and international financial institutions involved with the implementation of Agenda 21, including the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), the Global Environment Facility and the United Nations Development Programme, and of conventions related to the Conference, to participate fully in the ten-year review of progress achieved in the implementation of Agenda 21, including in the preparation of reports for submission to the Commission on Sustainable Development at its tenth session and the Summit, in order to reflect their experiences and the lessons learned and to provide ideas and proposals for the way forward for the further implementation of Agenda 21 in relevant areas;

12. Encourages effective contributions from, and the active participation of, all major groups, as identified in Agenda 21, at all stages of the preparatory process, in accordance with the rules and procedures of the Commission on Sustainable Development, as well as its established practices related to the participation and engagement of major groups;

13. Decides that the Commission on Sustainable Development at its tenth session shall meet as an open-ended Preparatory Committee that will provide for the full and effective participation of all States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies, as well as other participants in the Commission on Sustainable Development, in accordance with the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council and the supplementary arrangements established for the Commission on Sustainable Development by the Council in its decisions 1993/215 of 12 February 1993 and 1995/201 of 8 February 1995;

14. Invites regional groups to nominate their candidates for the Bureau of the tenth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development by the end of 2000 so that they can be involved in its preparations in advance of the first session of the Preparatory Committee;

15. Decides that the Commission, acting as the Preparatory Committee, should:

(a) Undertake the comprehensive review and assessment of the implementation of Agenda 21 and the other results of the Conference on the basis of the results of national assessments and subregional and regional preparatory meetings, the documentation to be prepared by the Secretary-General in collaboration with the task managers, and other inputs from relevant international organizations, as well as on the basis of contributions from major groups;

(b) Identify major accomplishments and lessons learned in the implementation of Agenda 21;

(c) Identify major constraints hindering the implementation of Agenda 21, propose specific time-bound measures to be taken and institutional and financial requirements, and identify the sources of such support;

(d) Address new challenges and opportunities that have emerged since the Conference, within the framework of Agenda 21;

(e) Address ways of strengthening the institutional framework for sustainable development and evaluate and define the role and programme of work of the Commission on Sustainable Development;

(f) Consider and decide on accreditation for the participation in the preparatory process and the Summit of relevant non-governmental organizations that are not in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council;

(g) Propose a provisional agenda and possible main themes for the Summit based on the results of the preparatory activities carried out at the national, sub-regional, regional and international levels, taking into account also the input of major groups;

(h) Propose rules and procedures for the participation of representatives of major groups in the Summit, taking into account the rules and procedures applied at the Conference;

(i) Undertake any other functions that may be required by the preparatory process;

16. Also decides to hold, as recommended by the Commission on Sustainable Development in its decision 8/L, a three-day meeting of the tenth session of the Commission, so that the Commission can start its work as the Preparatory Committee for the Summit, and, in this context, invites the Commission to start its organizational work in order to do the following:

(a) Elect, from among all States, a Bureau composed of ten members, with two representatives from each of the geographical groups, one of whom would be elected Chairperson and the others Vice-Chairpersons, one of whom would also act as the Rapporteur;

(b) Consider progress in preparatory activities carried out at the local, national, subregional, regional and international levels, as well as by major groups;

(c) Decide, taking into account the provisions of paragraph 17 below, on the specific modalities of the future sessions of the Preparatory Committee;

(d) Consider a process for setting the agenda and determining possible main themes for the Summit in a timely manner;

17. Further decides that, in 2002, the Commission on Sustainable Development, acting as the Preparatory Committee for the Summit, shall hold three additional sessions, organized as follows:

(a) At its first and second sessions, to be held in January and March 2002, respectively, the Preparatory Committee shall undertake the comprehensive review and assessment of progress achieved in the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21; at its second session, the Preparatory Committee shall agree on the text of a document containing the results of the review and assessment, as well as conclusions and recommendations for further action;

(b) Drawing upon the agreed text of such a document, the Preparatory Committee at its third and final session, to be held at the ministerial level in May 2002, shall prepare a concise and focused document that should emphasize the need for a global partnership to achieve the objectives of sustainable development, reconfirm the need for an integrated and strategically focused approach to the implementation of Agenda 21, and address the main challenges and opportunities faced by the international community in this regard; the document submitted for further consideration and adoption by the Summit should reinvigorate, at the highest political level, the global commitment to a North/South partnership and a higher level of international solidarity and to the accelerated implementation of Agenda 21 and the promotion of sustainable development;

18. Decides to organize the third and final session of the Preparatory Committee at the ministerial level in Indonesia, and accepts with gratitude the generous offer of the Government of Indonesia to host it;

19. Stresses that the preparatory meetings and the Summit itself should be transparent and provide for effective participation and inputs from Governments and regional and international organizations, including financial institutions, and for contributions from and the active participation of major groups, as identified in Agenda 21;

20. Welcomes the establishment of a trust fund, urges international and bilateral donors and other countries in a position to do so to support the preparations for the ten-year review through voluntary contributions to the trust fund and to support the participation of representatives of developing countries in the regional and international preparatory process and the Summit itself, and encourages voluntary contributions to support the participation of major groups of developing countries in the regional and international preparatory processes and the Summit itself;

21. Invites the Secretary-General to submit a progress report on the state of preparations for the Summit for consideration by the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, taking into account, inter alia, the inputs of the various regional meetings;

22. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development", the sub-item entitled "Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21".

Also on 20 December, in resolution 55/200, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to provide the necessary resources from the regular budget to UNEP for the 2002-2003 biennium and to consider other ways to strengthen UNEP in view of the 10-year review of UNCED.

Inter-Agency Committee

The Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development (IACSD) of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) met twice in 2000.

At its fifteenth meeting (New York, 24-25 January) [ACC/2000/1], the Committee addressed matters for consideration by ACC, including successor arrangements for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (1990s), matters related to the Environmental Management Group and preparations for the 10-year review of UNCED in 2002. It also addressed follow-up to meetings of ACC and the Economic and Social Council, and matters related to the work of the General Assembly and the Commission on Sustainable Development. In addition to considering the reports of the ACC Subcommittees on Water Resources and on Oceans and Coastal Areas, the Committee addressed the status of implementation of the Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities.

At its sixteenth meeting (Geneva, 18-19 September) [ACC/2000/12], IACSD again considered follow-up to meetings of intergovernmental bodies and reports of its subsidiary bodies, as well as preparations for the ninth (2001) session of the Commission on Sustainable Development and for the 10-year review of progress achieved since UNCED.

Eradication of poverty

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2000/26 on the role of employment and work in poverty eradication, particularly in relation to the empowerment and advancement of women (see p. 1121).

UN Decade for Eradication of Poverty

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/232 [YUN 1999, p. 754], the Secretary-General submitted a September progress report [A/55/407] on implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006), proclaimed by the Assembly in resolution 50/107 [YUN 1995, p. 844]. The report focused on progress achieved in global poverty reduction since the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [ibid., p. 1113], highlighting the need for more concerted and sustained efforts to eradicate poverty. The impact of globalization on the eradication of poverty was examined with particular reference to LDCs, which had so far not been able to take advantage of the opportunities offered by globalization. The report outlined a variety of possible actions, policies and measures that might be undertaken at the national and international levels to enable developing countries to better benefit from globalization and concluded with a summary of coordination at the intergovernmental level and activities of the UN system in support of national efforts to eradicate poverty.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/586 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 55/210 without vote [agenda item 99].

Implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006), including the initiative to establish a world solidarity fund for poverty eradication

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/196 of 22 December 1992, by which it established the International Day for the Eradication of Poverty, as well as its resolution 48/183 of 21 December 1993, by which it proclaimed 1996 the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty,

Recalling also its resolution 50/107 of 20 December 1995 on the observance of the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty and the proclamation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006), as well as the declarations and programmes of action of the major United Nations conferences and summits of the 1990s as they relate to the eradication of poverty,

Expressing its deep concern that the number of people living in extreme poverty continues to increase, with women and children constituting the majority and the most affected group, in particular in African countries and the least developed countries,

Recognizing that, while the rate of poverty in some countries has been reduced, some developing countries and disadvantaged groups are being marginalized and others are at risk of being marginalized and effectively excluded from the benefits of globalization, resulting in increased income disparity among and within countries, thereby constraining efforts to eradicate poverty,

Also recognizing that for the poverty eradication strategy to be effective it is imperative for developing countries to be integrated into the world economy and equitably share the benefits of globalization,

Bearing in mind the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, and the Political Declaration adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-fourth special session, entitled "World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world", held at Geneva from 26 to 30 June 2000, as well as the objectives of the World Food Summit, held at Rome from 13 to 17 November 1996,

Bearing in mind also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted by heads of State and Government on the occasion of the Millennium Summit, particularly section III, "Development and poverty eradication", and its emphasis on solidarity as a fundamental value in international relations in the twenty-first century,

Recalling the commitment made by the heads of State and Government at the Millennium Summit to eradicate extreme poverty, in particular the commitment to halve, by 2015, the proportion of the world's people whose income is less than one dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger,

Recognizing that, while it is the primary responsibility of States to attain social development, the international community should support the efforts of the developing countries to eradicate poverty and to ensure basic social protection,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Stresses that the United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty should contribute to achieving the targets of halving, by 2015, the proportion of the world's people whose income is less than one dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger, through decisive national action and strengthened international cooperation;

2. Calls for strengthened efforts at all levels to implement fully and effectively the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations and all agreements and commitments adopted at the major United Nations conferences and summits organized since 1990, as well as the United Nations Millennium Declaration, as they relate to the eradication of poverty, with a view to achieving tangible results;

3. Stresses the importance of tackling the root causes of poverty and the necessity of meeting the basic needs of all, and, in this context, emphasizes the fundamental role in the eradication of poverty of strong and sustained economic growth that favours the poor, creates substantive expansion in productive opportunities and employment, increases incomes, promotes equitable income distribution and minimizes environmental degradation;

4. Reaffirms that the causes of poverty should be addressed in an integrated way, taking into account the importance of sectoral strategies in such areas as education, development of human resources, health, human settlements, rural development, productive employment, population, environment, freshwater, food security and migration, and the specific needs of disadvantaged and vulnerable groups, in such a way as to increase opportunities and choices for people living in poverty and to enable them to build and to strengthen their assets so as to achieve social and economic development;

5. Stresses the importance of increasing access to and control by the poor over resources, including land, skills, knowledge, capital and social connections, and of improving access for all to basic social services;

6. Recognizes the importance of the adoption of appropriate policy responses to the challenges of globalization at the national level, in particular by pursuing sound and stable domestic policies, including sound macroeconomic and social policies, in order to realize the objective of the eradication of poverty;

7. Reaffirms that, within the context of overall action for the eradication of poverty, special attention should be given to the multidimensional nature of poverty and the national and international conditions and policies that are conducive to its eradication, fostering, inter alia, the social and economic integration of people living in poverty, thus empowering them to participate in decision-making with regard to the policies that affect them, the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, including the right to development, bearing in mind the relationship between all human rights and development, and an efficient, transparent and accountable public service and administration;

8. Also reaffirms, as set out in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, that success in meeting the objectives of development and poverty eradication depends, inter alia, on good governance within each country; it also depends on good governance at the international level, on transparency in the financial, monetary and trading systems and on commitment to an open, equitable, rule-based, predictable and non-discriminatory multilateral trading and financial system;

9. Calls upon all countries to formulate and implement outcome-oriented national strategies and programmes, setting time-bound targets for poverty reduction, including the target of halving, by 2015, the proportion of people living in extreme poverty, which requires strengthening of national action and international cooperation;

10. Urges the strengthening of international assistance to developing countries in their efforts to alleviate poverty, including by creating an enabling environment that would facilitate the integration of developing countries into the world economy, improving their market access, facilitating the flow of financial resources and implementing fully and effectively all initiatives already launched regarding debt relief for developing countries, and emphasizes that the international community should consider further measures that would lead to effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable solutions to the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries so that they can share equally in the benefits of globalization, cope with its negative effects, avoid being marginalized in the process of globalization and achieve full integration into the world economy;

11. Reaffirms that all Governments and the United Nations system should promote an active and visible policy of mainstreaming a gender perspective in all policies and programmes aimed at the eradication of poverty, at both the national and international levels, and encourages the use of gender analysis as a tool for the integration of a gender dimension into planning the implementation of policies, strategies and programmes for the eradication of poverty;

12. Expresses its appreciation to the developed countries that have agreed to and have reached the target of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for overall official development assistance, and calls upon the developed countries that have not yet done so to strengthen their efforts to achieve the agreed target as soon as possible and, where agreed, within that target, to earmark 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of their gross national product for the least developed countries;

13. Reaffirms the role of United Nations funds and programmes, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, in assisting the national efforts of developing countries, including in the eradication of poverty, and the need for their funding in accordance with relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

14. Welcomes favourably the proposal submitted regarding the establishment of a world solidarity fund for poverty eradication, which will contribute to the eradication of poverty and the promotion of social and human development in the poorest regions of the world, and requests the Secretary-General to undertake the necessary consultations with Member States and all relevant stakeholders on this issue, bearing in mind the voluntary nature of the contributions, and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session;

15. Emphasizes the role of microcredit as an important anti-poverty tool that promotes the generation of production and self-employment and empowers people living in poverty, especially women, and therefore encourages Governments to adopt policies that support the development of microcredit institutions and their capacities, and calls upon the international community, in particular the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and international and regional financial institutions involved in the eradication of poverty, to support and explore the incorporation of the microcredit approach into their programmes and the further development, as appropriate, of other microfinance instruments;

16. Calls upon the developed countries, by means of intensified and effective cooperation with developing countries, to promote capacity-building and facilitate access to and transfer of technologies and corresponding knowledge, in particular to developing countries, on favourable terms, including concessional and preferential terms, as mutually agreed, taking into account the need to protect intellectual property rights, as well as the special needs of developing countries, by identifying and implementing practical steps to ensure the achievement of progress in this regard and to assist developing countries in their efforts to eradicate poverty in an era influenced in large measure by technology;

17. Emphasizes the critical role of both formal and non-formal education, particularly basic education, and training, in particular for girls, in the empowerment of those living in poverty, and, in this context, welcomes the Dakar Framework for Action adopted at the World Education Forum, including the reconfirmation of the mandate of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to coordinate Education for All partners and maintain their collective momentum, and invites the organs and bodies of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund, to promote the inclusion of education in anti-poverty strategies;

18. Recalls the commitments of the United Nations conferences and summits to eliminate gender disparity in primary and secondary education by 2005 and to promote universal primary education in all countries by 2015, and, in this regard, urges Member States to take immediate measures to remove obstacles to young girls' school attendance and to reduce drop-out rates;

19. Welcomes the efforts made by the United Nations system to assign priority to the eradication of poverty and to enhance coordination, and, in this regard, encourages the organizations of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, and other partners in development to continue to support all Member States in carrying forward their own strategy for the achievement of the objectives of the Decade;

20. Reaffirms the importance of agreeing on a mutual commitment of interested developed and developing country partners to allocate, on average, 20 per cent of official development assistance and 20 per cent of the national budget, respectively, to basic social programmes, and welcomes the efforts made to implement the 20/20 initiative, which emphasizes that promoting access for all to basic social services is essential for sustainable and equitable development and is an integral part of the strategy for the eradication of poverty;

21. Recognizes the devastating effect of the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) epidemic on human development, economic growth and poverty reduction efforts in many countries, in particular African countries, and urges Governments and the international community to give urgent priority to the HIV/AIDS crisis, in particular addressing the special needs of developing countries by strengthening the relevant commitments through partnerships as agreed by the General Assembly at its twenty-fourth special session, and, in this regard, welcomes the convening of a special session of the General Assembly to review and address the problem of HIV/AIDS in all its aspects;

22. Urges the implementation of the enhanced programme of debt relief for the heavily indebted poor countries without delay and the cancellation of all official bilateral debts of those countries, in the context of poverty eradication, in return for their making demonstrable commitments to poverty reduction as part of their overall development strategy;

23. Recognizes the difficulties of heavily indebted middle-income developing countries in meeting their external debt and debt-servicing obligations, and notes the worsening situation in some of them in the context, inter alia, of greater liquidity constraints, which may require debt treatment through various national and international measures designed to assist those countries to make their debt burden sustainable in the long term and to combat poverty effectively;

24. Encourages the continuing examination in all relevant intergovernmental forums of ways and means to integrate poverty reduction objectives and strategies into discussions on international financial and development issues;

25. Requests the Secretary-General, in the context of the follow-up to the United Nations Millennium Declaration, to submit to it at its fifty-sixth session a comprehensive report containing an evaluation of progress made towards achieving the goals of the Decade, as well as in the achievement of the 2015 targets on poverty reduction, and recommendations for further action to achieve the 2015 targets, including the identification of resource requirements and possible sources of funding;

26. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006)".

Science and technology for development

The Commission on Science and Technology for Development did not meet in 2000. On 18 October, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 2000/304, decided that the Commission's fifth session would be convened in Geneva from 21 to 25 May 2001.

Science and technology issues were considered by the Council, the General Assembly and UNCTAD X (see p. 890).

Information and communication technologies

Committee for Development Policy. In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/67 [YUN 1999, p. 766], the Committee for Development Policy, at its second session (New York, 3-7 April) [E/2000/33], considered the role of information technology (IT) in development. Following a review of the potential benefits and risks of IT, its production and application in developing countries and prospects for development, the Committee made recommendations for national and international action, including calls for strategies to create or enhance national information infrastructure and build human capacity for the IT age, and for international assistance to developing countries to ensure wide access to communication and information services and application of IT to solve pressing problems of human and economic development.

Economic and Social Council consideration. The Economic and Social Council, at the high-level segment (5-7 July) of its 2000 substantive session, addressed the theme of "Development and international cooperation in the twenty-first century: the role of information technology in the context of a knowledge-based global economy" pursuant to decision 1999/281 [YUN 1999, p. 743]. In addition to the report of the Committee for Development Policy on its second session, the Council had before it a report of the Secretary-General [E/2000/52], in which he explored the potential of information and communication technologies (ICTs) in advancing the process of development and optimizing the benefits of globalization. The Secretary-General stated that ICTs were central to the creation of a global knowledge-based economy and society and could play an important role in accelerating growth, eradicating poverty and promoting sustainable development in developing and transition economy countries and in facilitating beneficial integration into the global economy. At the same time, the experience of developed countries showed that indiscriminate investment in ICTs could lead to large-scale waste. The report outlined action required at the national level to maximize the potential of ICTs. It also discussed the kinds of strengthened international cooperation needed among Governments, the UN system and other international organizations, the private sector and civil society to support those national efforts.

Annexed to the report was a statement to the Council from ACC—finalized in accordance with the conclusions of ACC's first regular session of 2000 (Rome, Italy, 6-7 April) [ACC/2000/4]—by which the executive heads of the organizations and agencies of the UN system committed themselves to work, individually and collectively, towards making the goal of universal access to ICTs a reality. Other documents before the Council included the report of the high-level panel of experts on information and communication technology (New York, 17-20 April) [A/55/75-E/2000/55], convened as requested by the Assembly in resolution 54/231 [YUN 1999, p. 743], a compilation of contributions of the UN system to the Secretary-General's report to the high-level segment [E/2000/CRP.2] and contributions from the five regional commissions [E/2000/70, 71, 72, 73, 74].

On 7 July, the Council adopted a Ministerial Declaration by which ministers and heads of delegations attending the high-level segment recognized a wide consensus that ICTs were central to the creation of the emerging global knowledge-based economy and could play an important role in accelerating growth, promoting sustainable development and eradicating poverty in developing countries and economies in transition, and in facilitating their effective integration into the global economy [A/55/3/Rev.1].

The ministers recognized that consistent and coherent national and local actions were essential in order to make ICTs for development programmes effective and sustainable. National programmes should include: establishment of a legal and regulatory framework that fostered ICT development; development of the basic infrastructure for connectivity, including remote areas, and measures to bring down connectivity costs; application of ICT in schools, hospitals, libraries, government departments and other public institutions; policies to promote investment in ICTs; investment in human resource development; technical preparation of national manpower to administrate information systems and develop sustainable ICT projects; promotion of the digital enhancement of already established mass media; strategies to link established technologies, such as radio, with new technologies, such as the Internet; and creation of technological incubators linked to universities and centres for research.

The ministers and heads of delegations stated that the UN system, in particular the Economic and Social Council, as well as partnerships involving Governments, development agencies, the private sector and other stakeholders, should also play a key role in promoting coherent efforts directed at expanding the development impact of ICTs. To that end, the Council's Working Group on Informatics was asked to make recommendations regarding the creation of an ICT task force.

The Secretary-General was requested to submit to the Council in 2001 a progress report on implementation of the Declaration.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2000/29 [draft: E/2000/L.27] without vote [agenda item 7 (e)].

Information and communications technologies task force

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Ministerial Declaration entitled "Development and international cooperation in the twenty-first century: the role of information technology in the context of a knowledge-based global economy", adopted on 7 July 2000 at the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2000,

Noting that several international initiatives are being taken to bridge the global digital divide and create digital opportunities, including the establishment of a Digital Opportunities Task Force (dot force) by the Summit of the Group of Eight nations held in Okinawa, Japan, from 21 to 23 July 2000,

1. Endorses the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics as contained in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Council on the implementation of the present resolution at a resumed substantive session of the Council for approval.

ANNEX

Recommendations of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics

1. The Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics recommends that an information and communications technologies task force be created with the objectives of providing overall leadership to the United Nations role in helping to formulate strategies for the development of information and communications technologies and putting those technologies at the service of development and, on the basis of consultations with all stakeholders and Member States, forging a strategic partnership between the United Nations system, private industry and financing trusts and foundations, donors, programme countries and other relevant stakeholders.

2. The Working Group recommends that the Secretary-General undertake consultations with all stakeholders and Member States regarding the composition, governance structure, mandate, terms of reference, secretarial support and project implementation arrangements of the task force and the trust fund, taking into account, inter alia, the following elements:

Mandate

The task force would:

- Serve as a mechanism to facilitate and promote collaborative initiatives, involving, as appropriate, public and private sectors, foundations and trusts, for the mobilization of resources and for the promotion and funding of information and communications technologies programmes and projects;
- Identify and mobilize new resources, public and private;

—Promote effective utilization of existing resources for information and communications technologies for development;

—Promote collaborative initiatives, at the request of and in consultation with programme countries, for information and communications technologies programmes and projects, including at the regional, subregional and national levels, taking into account the provisions of paragraphs 14 to 17 of the Ministerial Declaration entitled "Development and international cooperation in the twenty-first century: the role of information technology in the context of a knowledge-based global economy", adopted on 7 July 2000 at the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2000 of the Economic and Social Council; —Facilitate the pooling of relevant experience of both developed and developing countries and lessons learned, in introducing and promoting information and communications technologies, in developing local content and using information and communications technologies for preserving and disseminating traditional knowledge, with a view to promoting North-South and South-South programme initiatives;

—Develop networking arrangements with other mechanisms and institutions, both public and private, engaged in information and communications technologies development activities with a view to promoting coherence and synergy and identifying joint programme initiatives;

—Administer the trust fund to be established and funded by all interested partners on the basis of voluntary contributions.

Composition, oversight and secretariat

—The composition of the task force should be balanced, in terms of partner representation (United Nations system, public and private sectors, foundations, trusts, developed and developing countries and countries with economies in transition), taking into account the need for geographical balance;

—The task force could be supported by a small secretariat on the basis of secondment from participants and funding by overhead support costs of the programmes and projects financed from the trust fund;

—The Secretary-General shall submit an annual report on the activities of the task force to the Council for its consideration.

Modalities of operation

—The modalities of operation of the task force should be simple, efficient, transparent and accountable.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Having considered a report of the Secretary-General on the role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence [A/55/381], which paid particular attention to the pivotal role of ICT in the emerging global knowledge-based economy, the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/212, in which the Secretary-General was encouraged to continue consultations on establishing a UN information and communication technologies task force (see p. 783).

On 20 December (decision 55/445), the Assembly took note of the report of the high-level panel of experts on information and communication technology (see p. 799).

Coordination mechanisms

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 54/201 [YUN 1999, p. 761], the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly a report, by the UNCTAD secretariat [A/55/96-E/2000/84], containing proposals for strengthening the coordination of mechanisms on the Commission on Science and Technology for Development within UNCTAD, in order to promote complementarity of activities within the UN system. In particular, the report recommended steps to be taken by the UNCTAD secretariat to create an electronic network relating to science and technology for development as a means to achieve coordination in the area of science and technology policy and programmes and to improve information sharing, knowledge diffusion and generation of ideas among UN agencies and other major players, including the private sector. The UNCTAD secretariat had already started the process of establishing such a network, which was expected to be operational by the end of 2000.

On 28 July, by decision 2000/301, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report.

Note by Secretariat. By a September note [A/55/413], the Secretariat drew attention to the report prepared by UNCTAD and noted that the follow-up to Assembly resolution 54/201 was also directly relevant to the Ministerial Declaration adopted at the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council.

On 20 December (decision 55/439), the Assembly took note of the Secretariat's note.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/579/Add.4], adopted resolution 55/185 without vote [agenda item 92 (d)].

Strengthening the coordination of the mechanisms on the Commission for Science and Technology for Development: promoting complementarity of activities in the area of new and innovative technologies within the United Nations system

Reaffirming its resolution 54/201 of 22 December 1999,

Taking note of the Ministerial Declaration entitled "Development and international cooperation in the twenty-first century: the role of information technology in the context of a knowledge-based global economy", adopted by the Economic and Social Council during the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2000,

Taking note also of Economic and Social Council resolution 2000/29 of 28 July 2000 on the information and communication technologies task force,

Recognizing the role of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development in coordinating the activities of the United Nations system in the area of science and technology for development, noting the work being undertaken by the Commission in its work programme for Member States, especially the developing countries, and its work with some countries with economies in transition, emphasizing the importance of the activities that are to be pursued within the framework of the Commission, including a broad spectrum of new global challenges in science and technology, and encouraging support for those undertakings,

Cognizant of the role of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development as the secretariat responsible for the substantive servicing of the Commission,

Taking note of the Plan of Action adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its tenth session, held at Bangkok from 12 to 19 February 2000, in which the Conference noted, inter alia, the growing technology gap between developed and developing countries, and stressed that actions were required by both developed and developing countries, among others, including the establishment of appropriate policy and legal frameworks, human resource development and the provision of technical assistance and, where possible, financial assistance and other incentives in order to narrow that gap and promote greater access, transfer and diffusion of technology to developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, as well as countries with economies in transition,

Recognizing the need to address the obstacles faced by developing countries in accessing new technologies, while taking into account the need to protect intellectual property rights and the special needs of developing countries,

Recognizing also the importance of establishing and strengthening partnership and networking among the public and private sectors and academic institutions of the South and the North to build and strengthen the technological capabilities and skills needed for developing countries to compete in the international markets,

Bearing in mind the cross-cutting nature of science and technology within the United Nations system and the need, inter alia, for effective policy guidance and better coordination,

Noting that the theme of the coordination segment of the substantive session of 2001 of the Economic and Social Council will be "The role of the United Nations in promoting development, particularly with respect to access to and transfer of knowledge and technology, especially information and communication technologies, inter alia, through partnerships with relevant stakeholders, including the private sector",

Recalling that the next biennial session of the Commission will be held in 2001,

Recognizing the need for adequate resources, including the provision of new and additional resources from all sources, to be devoted to fostering science and technology for development,

Recognizing also the need for strengthening the role of the Commission,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on proposals for strengthening the coordination of the mechanisms on the Commission on Science and Technology for Development within the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development with the objective of promoting complementarity of activities within the United Nations system;

2. Welcomes the recommendations regarding the establishment of a knowledge and technology for development network contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Requests the Commission to report on its biennial session, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, in particular regarding proposals aimed at promoting complementarity of activities in the area of new and innovative technologies within the United Nations system;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General to strengthen the Commission and its secretariat within the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, by providing it with the necessary resources, in order to enable it to carry out better its mandate of assisting the developing countries with their national development efforts in the field of science and technology;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, an analytical report on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution, containing, in particular, concrete proposals for strengthening the critical role of the Commission in coordinating the activities of the United Nations system in support of the efforts of developing countries to obtain, effectively utilize and benefit from science and technology for their development;

6. Decides that, as from the fifty-sixth session of the General Assembly, the item entitled "Science and technology for development" will normally be included in its agenda on a biennial basis.

Economic and social trends

Economic surveys and trends

The World Economic and Social Survey 2000 [Sales No. E.00.II.C.1], prepared in mid-2000 by the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), stated that the healing process in the global economy following the widespread economic setbacks of 1997-1998 gathered momentum in 1999 and was expected to broaden and deepen. Growth rates in all country groupings—developed countries, developing countries and economies in transition—increased in 1999 compared with 1998 and growth in world output was expected to accelerate to 3.5 per cent, the highest rate since 1996. Although trade growth remained slow in early 1999, accelerating recovery in Asia and continued rapid growth in North America increased trade values and volumes during the second half of the year, and that accelerated in early 2000. Continuing economic expansion in the United States was an important factor in sustaining international trade and external demand for a number of economies. In spite of the acceleration in output and a sharp rise in oil prices, inflation worldwide remained under control.

Developing countries and economies in transition recovered more quickly than anticipated from the currency and financial crises of 1997-1998, with economic growth returning to the East Asian countries and the Brazilian and Russian recessions turning out to be shorter than forecast. Still, many countries failed to participate in the recovery or see their pace of economic expansion return to pre-crisis levels, and many of the social consequences of the crisis persisted, with unemployment and poverty levels remaining higher than they were a few years earlier. The number of developing countries that recorded falling per capita output in 1999 remained at 37 (out of the 95 regularly monitored) and the number of those countries that achieved sustained annual growth rates of 3 per cent—considered the minimum necessary to lead to long-term poverty reduction—declined from 24 in 1998 to 21 in 1999.

In developed countries, which led the global economic upturn with growth in gross domestic product (GDP) expected to be 3 per cent in 2000, up from 2.6 per cent in 1999, investment in information and communication technology (ICT) sectors, including personal computers, the Internet and telecommunications, was the most dynamic driving force of the upswing. That was particularly evident in North America, where the United States, in April 2000, recorded an unprecedented 109 months in a row of economic expansion combined with continuing low rates of inflation and low unemployment. Although that expansion was expected to continue in 2000 and 2001, there were several downside risks, including an increasing trade deficit and concerns about the overheating of the economy. As a result, monetary policy had been tightened, with other market economies following suit.

Growth in the developed countries of Europe was also robust in late 1999, driven by exports and strengthening domestic demand. For 2000, strong performances were expected in France, Spain and the United Kingdom, while there was sustained though moderate growth in Germany and Italy and some of the smaller economies of the region were expected to grow briskly. Employment growth throughout Western Europe was steady, and, in 1999, the unemployment rate dipped below 10 per cent for the first time since 1993. However, average annual rates of unemployment ranged from almost 16 per cent in Spain to about 2.5 per cent in Luxembourg.

In contrast, the Japanese economy remained sluggish as the Government's fiscal stimulus measures failed to put either private consumption or investment demand on a sustained path. Uncertainties related to the pace and depth of corporate restructuring, combined with the large and increasing public debt, contributed to the subdued outlook. Business investment began to pick up in mid-1999, but private consumption remained weak, as indicated by the falling retail sales for 36 months in a row by March 2000. In the other developed countries of Asia and the Pacific, Australia marked its eighth year of continuous GDP growth and New Zealand achieved a modest recovery from its mild recession.

For most developing countries, the economic outlook had become more optimistic, largely due to progress in domestic economic reforms and the improved international environment, including more favourable commodity prices and more stable global financial markets. GDP growth was expected to increase from 3.4 per cent in 1999 to 5.25 per cent in 2000 and 5.5 per cent in 2001, back to the rates of the pre-crisis period. Importantly, the world's two largest developing economies and those containing the largest number of the world's poor, China and India, were expected to sustain growth rates of 6 to 7 per cent in 2000 and 2001.

In South and East Asia, growth was expected to reach some 6.5 per cent in 2000-2001, compared with 6.2 per cent in 1999. Most crisis-affected East Asian economies had been recovering at a robust pace, led by the Republic of Korea, which recorded 10.7 per cent growth in 1999. Other economies in the region also performed well, with only Indonesia virtually stagnating in 1999 and yet to embark on a strong recovery path. The strength and pace of those recoveries stemmed from stimulatory domestic policies and improvements in international trade. Some of the economies were also positioning themselves to benefit from the ICT revolution, especially in semiconductors and broader computer hardware and software. India was among the best performers in South Asia. Favourable weather in the subregion led to increased agricultural output, which supported GDP growth in a number of countries, but pervasive political uncertainties in most countries weakened the effectiveness of government policies, increased fiscal expenditures and discouraged economic activity to varying degrees. China experienced a 7.1 per cent increase in GDP growth in 1999. In the long run, however, China's economic prospects would rely on meeting the challenges of implementing structural adjustments necessary for the country's entry into the World Trade Organization and the continued reform of State-owned enterprises. Economic growth in the countries of West Asia decelerated sharply from 3.7 per cent in 1998 to 0.5 per cent in 1999. However, with oil production increasing, export markets continuing to recover and better weather leading to expanded agricultural output, regional growth, which continued to be heavily influenced by the Iraqi economy, was expected to reach 4 per cent in 2000.

In Latin America, growth stagnated in 1999, but was expected to rebound in 2000-2001. The region's performance—though dismal for many countries, particularly in South America—was better than earlier forecast because Brazil avoided a widely expected sharp contraction, while Mexico and most of the Central American and Caribbean economies grew relatively strongly. Severe recessions in several countries in South America, including Chile, Colombia, Ecuador and Venezuela, resulted in high levels of unemployment. On the other hand, inflation reached an annual average rate of 7.5 per cent for the region in 1999, the lowest in decades. Increasing exports and investment, especially in the main Latin American economies of Brazil, Chile and Mexico, were expected to set the pace of growth for the region, forecast at 3.75 per cent for 2000 and 4.25 per cent for 2001. However, regional growth could be restrained by slower recoveries in other economies, including Argentina, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela, due to high levels of unemployment, tight credit, fiscal retrenchment, political uncertainties and/or social unrest.

Africa maintained a modest rate of growth in 1999, fed by exports and increased agricultural output, but economic performance varied widely from country to country. A surge in oil prices had benefited net fuel-exporting economies in the region but countries producing non-oil commodities faced less favourable conditions. Disciplined macroeconomic policies in a large number of countries contributed to stability but domestic demand was generally weak. GDP growth was expected to increase from 2.8 per cent in 1999 to 4.25 per cent in 2000 as domestic conditions improved and exports strengthened the recovery under way. Still, persistent conflicts and political instability, combined with the HIV/AIDS pandemic, continued to have an adverse impact on the long-term economic prospects of the region.

Boosted by increased exports, rising investment and more foreign capital inflows, a firm recovery was under way in the transition economies of Central Europe and the Baltic region. However, conditions in South-Eastern Europe remained subdued. The return of positive economic growth to the economies in transition in 1999 resulted from the unexpectedly quick recovery in the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) countries after the major crisis triggered by the collapse of the Russian rouble in mid-1998. Growth was expected to accelerate from 2.1 per cent in 1999 to 3.75 per cent in 2000, which was projected to be the first year since transformation started that all the transition economies would register positive GDP growth. Still, economic performance in Central and Eastern Europe continued to be uneven. The conflict in Kosovo imposed a heavy toll, particularly in South-Eastern Europe, and structural problems in some countries, especially the Czech Republic, Romania and Slovakia, constrained the region's recovery. In the CIS, particularly the three major economies of Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation and Ukraine, the recovery was expected to be sustained in 2000, but the presence of obsolete industry in those countries, combined with possible debt-servicing difficulties and the impact of the Chechnyan conflict in the Russian Federation, could fetter prospects for growth.

The Trade and Development Report, 2000 [Sales No. E.00.II.D.19] observed that, despite a rapid recovery from the depressed conditions of 1998, external vulnerability was still a threat to growth prospects in the developing world. Concerted efforts by developing countries to become full participants in an increasingly interdependent global economy continued to be stymied by biases and asymmetries in the trading and financial system. There were too many exporters struggling to gain access to the markets of the rich countries, extreme price movements were affecting manufacturers, and trade imbalances among major industrial countries added to the anxieties of the developing world. Even after years of domestic reforms, developing countries were still dependent on highly volatile capital flows to support growth. Increased international cooperation and dialogue was needed to realize the full potential of new technologies to bridge the growing gap between rich and poor (see also PART THREE, Chapter IV).

Regarding the financial crisis and recovery in East Asia, the Report cautioned that, while the surprising speed of recovery in the region had been encouraging, there remained reasons for concern: first, recovery had been accompanied by only limited corporate restructuring and the health of the financial system continued to rely on public intervention in the credit mechanism; second, exports were unlikely to continue at their recent pace, and public deficits and debt were on the rise in most countries seriously hit by the crisis; and third, the recovery had so far been supported by highly favourable conditions in the world economy, which were susceptible to change. A fundamental lesson of the financial crisis was that excessive reliance on foreign resources and markets left growth prospects vulnerable to external shocks. Greater attention needed to be paid to domestic sources of growth, such as rising wage shares and higher social spending.

According to a report on the world economic situation and prospects [Sales No. E.01.II.C.2], prepared jointly by DESA and UNCTAD, improvements in economic growth were widespread during 2000, but particularly marked in a number of developing countries and economies in transition. The vigorous performance was associated with an exceptional acceleration in the growth of international trade, but was also accompanied by a further widening in the external imbalances among the major economies. Per capita GDP increased in 121 countries in 2000, compared with 104 in 1999. Of those, 73 were developing countries compared to 60 the previous year. Just four countries (Côte d'Ivoire, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Republic of Moldova and Zimbabwe) experienced a decline in GDP, by far the lowest number in more than a decade. Once again, the economy of the United States surpassed forecasts by a wide margin, as did many other developed economies, including the countries of the European Union. Unemployment rates fell, generally to the lowest level in many years, though they remained above 10 per cent in France and Germany.

Economic growth in almost all countries with economies in transition was also generally better than had been anticipated and well above 1999 levels, with the CIS countries growing by 6 per cent in 2000, the best performance since transition began. The economic performance of developing countries improved significantly in 2000, with growth accelerating to 5.6 per cent from 3.5 per cent in 1999. However, progress varied widely among countries, with the poorest continuing to trail behind. Aggregate output rose at a sharply higher rate than in 1999 in all main developing country regions except Africa, where the improvement was modest and the growth rate low, particularly in the sub-Saharan region. The countries of East Asia were recovering much more quickly than expected from the financial crisis of the previous two years, with growth rates reaching 7 per cent in 2000, largely as a result of strong exports of ICT products and buoyant private consumption. Similarly, Brazil witnessed faster than expected export growth and improved credit conditions, which supported domestic demand and resulted in a strong and broad-based recovery that led the way for economic improvements throughout Latin America and the Caribbean, though some South American economies lagged behind.

Human Development Report 2000

The Human Development Report 2000, prepared by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), addressed the relationship between human rights and development, stressing that human rights were not a reward of development, but rather were critical to achieving it. The report examined many examples of egregious human rights violations across the world, with the aim of placing a human rights-based approach to human development and poverty eradication firmly on the global agenda. Sections of the Report dealt with struggles for human freedoms, including freedom from discrimination, want, fear and injustice and for realizing potential, participation, expression and association, and decent work; the link between human rights and democracy; how rights could empower people in the fight against poverty; using indicators for human rights accountability; and promoting rights in development.

The Report ranked 174 countries in its human development index by combining indicators of life expectancy, educational attainment and adjusted per capita income, among other factors. Of the 174 countries listed, 46 were in the high human development category, 93 were in the medium category and 35 were in the low category. Twenty countries had experienced reversals of human development since 1990 due to the HIV/AIDS pandemic (mostly in sub-Saharan Africa) or economic stagnation and conflict (especially in sub-Saharan Africa, Eastern Europe and the CIS). Substantial disparities in global human development persisted both within and between regions. The Report pointed out that two countries with similar levels of economic prosperity could have very different rankings in human development. Progress was most often determined by a country's ability to convert economic prosperity into better lives.

discussed the role of information technology in development (see p. 799), made suggestions regarding the draft of a new international development strategy (see p. 786), and conducted the triennial review of the list of least developed countries (LDCs) (see p. 807). Regarding working methods and programme of work, the Committee proposed that special attention be given to: the concerns of LDCs, including the triennial review of the list and preparations for the Third United Nations Conference to be held in 2001; the sequencing of financial and trade policies by developing countries, taking into account their initial conditions and the opportunities and challenges offered by the global economy; securing sustainable development by improving institutional arrangements for meeting environmental and developmental vulnerabilities; and improving economic governance at the national, regional and international levels, as well as international economic cooperation more generally.

In July, the Economic and Social Council, in resolution 2000/34, took note of the Committee's report on its second session and welcomed the proposals regarding its future work programme (see p. 807).

Public administration

The fifteenth meeting of the Group of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance (New York, 8-12 May) [E/2000/66] was devoted to the theme "Globalization and the State". The Group of Experts deliberated and made a number of recommendations on the effects of globalization on the role and functioning of the State and its responses, institutional and managerial, to attain maximum benefits and minimal negative consequences of globalization. In relation to the marginalization effects of globalization, the process that affected national and global economic governance systems was addressed and a number of recommendations were made. The Group of Experts reviewed, commented and made recommendations on the public administration, finance and development subprogramme of the draft medium-term plan for 2002-2005, as well as the current programme budget for 2000-2001 and the next biennium's programme budget.

Other comments and recommendations concerned major undertakings by the Division for Public Economics and Public Administration of DESA and improvements in relationships with other UN funds and programmes, particularly UNDP, in the area of public administration and development.

Development policy

The Committee for Development Policy, at its second session (New York, 3-7 April) [E/2000/33],

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 2000/231 without vote [agenda item 13 (b)].

Recommendations made by the Group of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance at its fifteenth meeting

At its 42nd plenary meeting, on 27 July 2000, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the following recommendations made by the Group of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance at its fifteenth meeting:

Recommendation 1

The Group of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance recommends that subprogramme 8 (Public administration, finance and development) of programme 7 (Economic and social affairs) of the proposed medium-term plan for the period 2002-2005 be adopted with the changes set out in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Group of Experts.

Recommendation 2

The Group of Experts recommends that its sixteenth meeting be held during the first quarter of the year 2002 and that the number of experts participating be maximized, possibly by shortening the meeting, in order to achieve a wider geographical representation.

The Group of Experts recommends the proclamation of a United Nations public service day to celebrate the value and the virtue of service to the community at the local, national and global levels, with prizes to be awarded by the Secretary-General for contributions made to the cause of enhancing the role, prestige and visibility of public service.

Recommendation 4

In view of the crucial importance of economic and social development issues relating to institutional and managerial development, the Group of Experts takes the view that its relations and interactions with such principal organs and intergovernmental bodies as the Economic and Social Council should be greatly reinforced and that the deliberations of the Council on matters concerning economic and social development could greatly benefit from the input of the Group of Experts. To make this more effective, it recommends that the Council review the status and reporting arrangements of the Group of Experts.

Recommendation 5

The Group of Experts recommends that the United Nations establish appropriate mechanisms to provide the opportunity for ministers and/or high-level officials of Member States responsible for public administration to meet periodically to discuss themes of common interest and exchange experiences.

Recommendation 6

The Group of Experts recommends that the Council, through its subsidiary bodies, undertake a comparative analysis of national economic governance systems and examine best practices in order to assist national strategies for efficient economic governance.

Recommendation 7

The Group of Experts recommends that the Council include in its agenda discussion on issues related to economic governance and provide policy guidance for the global economic governance regimes established for the different functional areas administered by the specialized agencies.

Recommendation 8

The Group of Experts recommends to the Council that serious consideration be given to expanding on the work already done by the African ministers of public service, and that consideration be given to drawing up a United Nations model charter of public service.

On 28 July, the Council took note of the report of the Group of Experts [E/2000/66] (decision 2000/297).

Developing countries and transition economies

Least developed countries

The Least Developed Countries 2000 Report [Sales No. E.00.II.D.21], issued by UNCTAD, assessed the main trends in the socio-economic development of LDCs during the 1990s and the challenges of financing LDC development, including aid, private capital flows and debt. As an input to the preparatory process for the Third United Nations Conference on LDCs, to be held in 2001, the Report addressed the scale of the development finance challenge in LDCs, the scope for meeting that challenge through domestic resource mobilization, and the constraints limiting LDCs' access to international capital markets and attractiveness for foreign direct investment. It contained constructive proposals for improving international cooperation for LDCs in the field of development finance in order to facilitate a progressive transition away from aid dependence.

The Report stated that, while the gap between the LDC growth rate and the growth rate of other developing countries narrowed during the 1990s, there were wide disparities among LDCs, ranging from greater than 2 per cent real GDP per capita growth per annum during 1990-1998 in 15 LDCs, including 7 in Asia, to stagnation or regression in 22 LDCs during the same period. Overall, growth during the 1990s was not high enough to make a significant dent in unacceptably high rates of poverty in most LDCs and the gap was widening between LDCs and other developing countries in the rates of social progress. At the same time, aid flows to LDCs had been declining, particularly since 1995. In real per capita terms, net official development assistance (ODA) to LDCs had fallen by 45 per cent since 1990, and was back to the levels of the early 1970s.

LDC list

The number of officially designated LDCs increased to 49 in 2000, when the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Committee for Development Policy's recommendation that Senegal be added to the list (see below). The full list of LDCs comprised: Afghanistan, Angola, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Kiribati, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, Niger, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sudan, Togo, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Yemen, Zambia.

Triennial review

The Committee for Development Policy, which was responsible for adding countries to or graduating them from the LDC list, conducted the triennial review of the status of LDC designations at its second session in April [E/2000/33]. As requested by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1999/67 [YUN 1999, p. 766], an expert group meeting of members of the Committee (the Expert Group Meeting on Testing and Simulations of the Economic Vulnerability Index) met in Paris from 29 February to 2 March. In its recommendations, which were annexed to the Committee's report, the Expert Group stated that a fuller incorporation of the concept of vulnerability through the economic vulnerability index, as recommended by the Committee in 1999 [ibid., p. 768], meant a significant improvement in capturing persistent structural difficulties associated with stagnating economic growth and slow poverty reduction.

Based on the Expert Group's proposals and its own review of the list, the Committee recommended that Senegal be added (subject to the Government's acceptance) and that Maldives be deleted, as it clearly met the provisions of a 1991 rule stating that a country qualified for graduation when it met two out of the three criteria (per capita GDP, augmented physical quality of life and economic vulnerability) for two consecutive triennial reviews. Two additional countries, the Congo and Ghana, met all three criteria for inclusion in the LDC list, but the Committee decided to review their situations further at the next triennial review. Of the countries already designated as LDCs, 39 met all three criteria for inclusion; a further 3 (Bangladesh, Eritrea and Madagascar) were very low-income countries that had been shown to be, economically, only moderately exposed to external shocks; and the remaining 6 countries (Cape Verde, Equatorial Guinea, Liberia, Samoa, Tuvalu and Vanuatu) had levels of GDP per capita above those of the low-income category, but were retained on the LDC list because they remained handicapped by high levels of economic vulnerability or by low levels of human resource development.

The Committee proposed, prior to the next triennial review, to consider the treatment given to countries with large population size and to countries in transition, and to revisit the practice by which different rules and thresholds for inclusion in and graduation from the list of LDCs were applied, so as to ensure a measure of stability for the list and yet give equal treatment to countries in similar situations.

Communications. On 18 and 22 July, Maldives transmitted to the Economic and Social Council President a letter from its President [E/2000/97] and a letter from its Minister for Foreign Affairs [E/2000/104] expressing concern for, and outlining arguments against, the Committee for Development Policy's recommendation that Maldives be graduated from the LDC list.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2000/34 [draft: E/2000/L.29, orally corrected] without vote [agenda item 13 (a)].

Report of the Committee for Development Policy

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling section B of annex I to its resolution 1998/46 of 31 July 1998, in which it decided that the Council should decide on an appropriate programme of work for the Committee for Development Policy,

Recalling also its resolution 1998/39 of 30 July 1998 on the status of the least developed countries, its resolution 1999/67 of 16 December 1999 on the report of the Committee and its decision 1999/290 of 26 October 1999 on the consideration of the graduation of the Maldives from the list of the least developed countries,

Recalling further General Assembly resolutions 46/206 of 20 December 1991 and 52/210 of 18 December 1997,

Taking note with appreciation of the presentation by the Chairman and other members of the Bureau of the Committee, and of the report of the Committee on its second session, including its analysis of the role of information technology and development and its suggestions regarding an international development strategy for the first decade of the new millennium,

Noting that the report requested from the Secretariat and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the effective benefits derived by the least developed countries specifically on the basis of their inclusion in the list of the least developed countries and on the practical impact of the measures in favour of least developed countries has not yet been made available to the Committee,

Having considered the letter dated 14 July 2000 from the President of the Republic of Maldives addressed to the President of the Economic and Social Council,

Having considered also the memorandum dated 13 July 2000 submitted by the Government of the Republic of Maldives,

Taking note of section 7 of the report of the Expert Group Meeting on Testing and Simulations of the Economic Vulnerability Index, held in Paris from 29 February to 2 March 2000, which is annexed to the report of the Committee,

1. Endorses the recommendation of the Committee for Development Policy that Senegal be added to the list of the least developed countries, subject to the concurrence of the Government of Senegal;

2. Decides to defer to its next substantive session the consideration of the recommendation to graduate the Maldives from the list of the least developed countries, and requests the Committee at its third session to re-examine its recommendation in this regard, taking into account, inter alia, the reports referred to in paragraphs 3 and 4 of the present resolution and the memorandum submitted by the Government of the Republic of Maldives;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in the context of the Committee's recommendation to graduate the Maldives, to report on the progress achieved in the implementation of paragraph 4 of General Assembly resolution 46/206, and to make recommendations on additional measures that can be taken to ensure a smooth transition from least developed country status for graduating countries;

4. Looks forward to the report being prepared by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the effective benefits derived by the least developed countries specifically on the basis of their inclusion in the list of the least developed countries and on the practical impact of the measures in favour of least developed countries, and requests the Conference to include in that report an assessment of the implications of graduation for the Maldives;

5. Reiterates the importance of consulting with relevant Member States in the drawing up and use of country vulnerability profiles as well as the continuing need for transparency, objectivity and accuracy in these processes;

6. Requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to take into account the recommendations of the Expert Group on Testing and Simulations of the Economic Vulnerability Index on the format and content of future vulnerability profiles;

7. Takes note with appreciation of the revised criteria for the identification of least developed countries presented by the Committee in its report, and requests the Committee to continue its work on the methodology to be used for the identification of the least developed countries, where appropriate in association with other international organizations working on environmental and economic vulnerability issues, and to report to the Council in 2002 on the criteria which it proposes to use in the triennial review of the list of the least developed countries scheduled for 2003;

8. Requests the Committee at its third session to examine and make recommendations regarding the theme chosen for the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2001 of the Council;

9. Welcomes the proposals made by the Committee regarding its future programme of work;

10. Invites the Chairman and, as necessary, other members of the Committee to continue the practice of reporting orally to the Council on the work of the Committee.

Programme of Action for the 1990s

In October, the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB) carried out the final review of progress in implementing the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second (1990) United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (Paris Conference) [YUN 1990, p. 369] and endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 45/206 [ibid., p. 373]. The background document was The Least Developed Countries 2000 Report [Sales No. E.00.II.D.21] (see above). In agreed conclusions of 20 October [TD/B/47/II (vol. I) (agreed conclusions 459(XLVII))], TDB recognized that implementation of the Programme of Action had fallen short of expectations. The socio-economic conditions in LDCs had continued to decline and the number of LDCs had increased during the decade, with only one LDC able to graduate from the list. The Board emphasized the importance of accelerating growth and sustainable development; promoting poverty eradication in LDCs; strengthening their productive and human capacities, especially in social sectors, such as education and health; transparent and accountable governance; structural reforms; and enhancing the beneficial integration of LDCs within the rapidly globalizing economy.

Third UN Conference on LDCs (2001)

Preparatory Committee. The Intergovernmental Preparatory Committee for the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (LDC-III), scheduled for 2001, held its first session in New York from 24 to 28 July [A/CONF.191/2]. The high-level Conference would assess the results of the Programme of Action for LDCs for the 1990s; review implementation of international support measures, particularly in the areas of ODA, debt, investment and trade; and consider adopting further measures for the sustainable development of LDCs and their integration into the world economy. The Preparatory Committee agreed on a draft agenda and rules of procedure for the Conference, and began the process of drafting a new programme of action, which would be finalized at the second preparatory session in April 2001.

The Committee had before it a note by the UNCTAD secretariat on past performance, challenges and the way forward for the sustainable development of LDCs and their beneficial integration into the global economy [A/CONF.191/IPC/12]. The report outlined developments in the LDCs during the 1990s in several areas, including domestic resource mobilization, agriculture, manufacturing, mining, transport and communications, exports, supply capacity and competitiveness, social services delivery, gender and development in LDCs, and the environment. It also raised questions concerning the challenges currently faced by LDCs and suggested a framework for possible elements to be included in a new programme of action for LDCs.

The Committee also reviewed the preliminary findings [A/CONF.191/IPC/16] of a high-level panel to assess progress in national implementation of the Programme of Action and recommend ways to remedy its most critical weaknesses. A final meeting of the panel was scheduled for September. Regarding other Conference preparations, the Committee examined the results of the second and third inter-agency meetings (Geneva, 10 April; New York, 20 July) [A/CONF.191/IPC/9 & 15] and the second and third consultative forums (Geneva, 11 April; New York, 21 July) [A/CONF.191/IPC/8 & 14] on the preparatory process, as well as the conclusions of three expert-level regional preparatory meetings, held in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, for English-speaking African LDCs (27-29 March) [A/CONF.191/IPC/2], in Kathmandu, Nepal, for the Asian and Pacific LDCs (3-5 April) [A/CONF.191/IPC/3], and in Niamey, Niger, for French-speaking African LDCs (18-20 April) [A/CONF.191/IPC/4]. Country-level preparations, including national LDC action programmes, and the contributions of the UN system [A/CONF.191/IPC/10] were also considered. In addition, the Committee had before it a progress report on the Integrated Framework for Trade-Related Technical Assistance to LDCs, undertaken jointly by six agencies: the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the International Trade Centre, UNCTAD, UNDP, the World Bank and the World Trade Organization (WTO) [A/CONF.191/IPC/11].

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 54/235 [YUN 1999, p. 770], the Secretary-General submitted an August report on the state of preparations for the Third Conference [A/55/222]. He reviewed the first session of the Intergovernmental Preparatory Committee, as well as various other meetings and preparations undertaken at the regional and national levels. The report also addressed Conference promotion, resource mobilization and the participation of LDC representatives, NGOs and others.

TDB action. On 20 October [TD/B/47/11 (vol. I) (agreed conclusions 459(XLVII))], TDB requested that work on the preparation of the draft new programme of action commence immediately under the authority of the Chairman of the Preparatory Committee for LDC-III. In preparing the new programme of action, account should be taken of the views of the member States, particularly LDCs, the national programmes of action, the outcomes of major global summits and conferences, and ongoing processes within multilateral organizations, including the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and IMF) and WTO. The Board emphasized the importance of an adaptable document that would include quantifiable, measurable and implementable targets based on international development targets. It was further emphasized that the preparation, implementation and follow-up of the programme of action should be undertaken with the active involvement of major multilateral organizations. The Board stressed the need for effective monitoring and follow-up to the implementation of the new programme of action.

Communication. By a 28 September letter [A/C.2/55/4], Bangladesh transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the Declaration adopted by the Tenth Annual Ministerial Meeting of LDCs (New York, 18 September), which called on the UN system and other international organizations to participate fully in the formulation of the new programme of action and its implementation.

ACC action. The Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC), at its second regular session of 2000 (New York, 27-28 October) [ACC/2000/20], adopted a statement on LDC-III, in which it declared the full commitment of the UN system to strongly support the Conference secretariat in the preparations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/589], adopted resolution 55/214 without vote [agenda item 102].

Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/187 of 18 December 1997, in which it decided to convene the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries at a high level in 2001, as well as its resolutions 53/182 of 15 December 1998 and 54/235 of 23 December 1999,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted on 8 September 2000 by the heads of State and Government on the occasion of the Millennium Summit,

Taking note of the Declaration and the Programme of Action adopted at the South Summit of the Group of 77, held at Havana from 10 to 14 April 2000, the Declaration adopted by the Tenth Annual Ministerial Meeting of the Least Developed Countries, held in New York on 18 September 2000, and the Ministerial Statement adopted at the twenty-fourth annual meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77, held in New York on 15 September 2000,

Noting the progress made in the preparatory process for the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries at the country, regional and global levels,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of preparations for the Conference, the report of the Intergovernmental Preparatory Committee for the Conference on its first session, held in New York from 24 to 28 July 2000, and the outcome of the forty-seventh session of the Trade and Development Board on the preparatory process of the Conference,

Taking note also of The Least Developed Countries 2000 Report,

1. Recalls that the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries will convene from 14 to 20 May 2001 and will be hosted by the European Union at Brussels;

2. Decides, in the light of the recommendation of the Intergovernmental Preparatory Committee for the Conference at its first session, to convene, within existing resources, the second session of the Committee from 5 to 9 February 2001 in New York, at which the Committee will undertake the first formal reading of the draft programme of action and consider other relevant matters, while noting that the final session of the Committee will be held in New York from 2 to 6 April 2001;

3. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to defray the cost of participation of two government representatives from each least developed country in the second and final sessions of the Preparatory Committee through the use of extrabudgetary resources, and also requests that the Bureau of the Preparatory Committee keep the matter under regular review on the basis of information provided by the Secretary-General of the Conference;

4. Notes that sufficient extrabudgetary resources will need to be mobilized to defray the cost of participation of the least developed countries in the third session of the Preparatory Committee, and, in this regard, invites additional contributions from multilateral and bilateral donors, and requests the Secretary-General of the Conference to seek funding from all possible sources for this purpose;

5. Welcomes the contributions already made by multilateral and bilateral donors for the participation of representatives from the least developed countries in the sessions of the Preparatory Committee and in the Conference;

6. Emphasizes the importance of the effective participation of all relevant stakeholders from the least developed countries and their development partners, as well as of the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and other relevant multilateral organizations;

7. Recognizes the importance of the contribution of civil society actors at the Conference and its preparatory process, stresses, in this regard, the need for their active participation, including those from the least developed countries, and invites donors to make appropriate contributions for that purpose;

8. Invites the participation in the Conference and in its preparatory process of (a) the relevant non-governmental organizations that are in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council in accordance with Council resolution 1996/31 of 25 July 1996, (b) the non-governmental organizations that were accredited to the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held from 3 to 14 September 1990 and (c) the non-governmental organizations that are in consultative status with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, decides that the accreditation of other interested civil society actors, in particular non-governmental organizations and the business sector, to the Conference and its preparatory process shall be considered by the Bureau of the Preparatory Committee on a no-objection basis before 31 January 2001 for final decision by the Committee at its second session, provided that requests for accreditation are submitted to the secretariat of the Conference before 15 January 2001 and are accompanied by the relevant information, and requests the Secretary-General of the Conference to inform the community of civil society actors appropriately about this accreditation process;

9. Also invites the Bureau of the Preparatory Committee to make recommendations for the consideration of Member States during the second session of the Committee as to the form of involvement of civil society actors in the final session of the Committee and at the Conference;

10. Emphasizes the importance of country-level preparations as a critical input to the preparatory process for the Conference and the implementation of and follow-up to its outcome;

11. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, in his capacity as convenor of the United Nations Development Group, to continue to ensure the full involvement of the United Nations resident coordinators and country teams in the least developed countries in the preparations for the Conference, in particular at the country level;

12. Welcomes the statement of the Administrative Committee on Coordination on the Conference, and calls upon the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Conference, to convene inter-agency consultations, within the context of the machinery of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to ensure the full mobilization and coordination of all relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as other relevant multilateral intergovernmental organizations, during the preparatory process for the Conference and the implementation of and follow-up to its outcome;

13. Emphasizes the importance of an effective arrangement for follow-up, review and monitoring of the new programme of action for the least developed countries, and requests the Secretary-General to recom-

ment to the General Assembly concrete steps in this regard;

14. Stresses that the intergovernmental follow-up, review and monitoring of the new programme of action should be undertaken in a more effective manner, with the participation of all relevant stakeholders, particularly the least developed countries, as well as with the involvement of concerned organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and other relevant multilateral intergovernmental organizations, and emphasizes the need to explore innovative approaches in this regard;

15. Notes the current level of regular budget resources available to the Office of the Special Coordinator for Least Developed, Landlocked and Island Developing Countries, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that sufficient resources are made available throughout the remainder of the current biennium, through judicious management of the resources at his disposal, and to report on the matter at its fifty-sixth session;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to it at its fifty-sixth session a report on the outcome of the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries.

Resource requirements

In March [A/54/7/Add.13] and again in May [A/54/7/Add.14], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions considered two notes of the Secretary-General [A/C.5/54/50 & A/C.5/54/58] regarding the review of the resource requirements for the high-level intergovernmental event on financing for development (see p. 915) and LDC-III.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 April [meeting 95], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/54/691/Add.1], adopted resolution 54/258 A without vote [agenda item 121].

Review of resource requirements for the high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development and the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries

The General Assembly,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General on the review of resource requirements for the high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development and the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Reiterates the provisions of section VI of its resolution 45/248 B of 21 December 1990, in which it reaffirmed that the Fifth Committee was the appropriate Main Committee of the General Assembly entrusted with responsibilities for administrative and budgetary matters and also reaffirmed the role of the Advisory Committee;

3. Reaffirms section XIV of its resolution 54/251 of 23 December 1999, in which it decided that the special account would be maintained and the unspent balance retained until all the activities and programmes outlined in the report of the Secretary-General of 13 May 1998 and approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 53/3 of 12 October 1998 were completed;

4. Notes with concern that no extrabudgetary resources have been received to date in response to the note verbale of 14 February 2000 addressed to all States members of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, inviting them to consider providing, through voluntary contributions, resources to defray the costs of participation of government representatives in the meetings of the Intergovernmental Preparatory Committee for the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries and the Conference itself;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to explore ways of providing the resource requirements for the high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development and the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries and to report to the General Assembly at the second part of its resumed fifty-fourth session.

On 15 June [meeting 98], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/54/691/Add.2], adopted resolution 54/258 B without vote [agenda item 121].

Review of resource requirements for the high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development and the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries

The General Assembly,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General on the review of resource requirements for the high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development and the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

I

1. Welcomes the fact that voluntary contributions for the financing of activities related to the first session of the Intergovernmental Preparatory Committee for the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries have been pledged;

2. Expresses appreciation for the contributions and pledges received and, noting the current level of the resources in the Trust Fund for Least Developed Countries: Core Project, looks forward to the rapid disbursement of the funds being pledged;

3. Decides, as a precautionary measure, that should sufficient extrabudgetary resources not be immediately available for the financing of the first session of the Preparatory Committee, use would be made, on a provisional basis, of the contingency fund, on the understanding that the contingency fund would be replenished by those extrabudgetary resources as soon as they were available;

4. Decides also to revert to the question of the financing of the second session of the Preparatory Committee and the Conference itself at the fifty-fifth session of the General Assembly;

II

1. Welcomes the establishment of a Trust Fund for the Preparatory Committee for the high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development;

2. Decides that the expenses related to the travel and subsistence of the members of the Bureau of the Preparatory Committee in relation to the consultations mandated in General Assembly resolution 54/279 of 15 June 2000 shall be met through the transfer, to the Trust Fund for the Preparatory Committee, of the balance available in the Trust Fund for the Participation of Least Developed Countries in Intergovernmental Meetings;

3. Encourages members of the Bureau to finance their own travel and subsistence where possible.

Economies in transition

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/179 [YUN 1998, p. 776], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/55/188] describing measures taken by organizations of the UN system in relation to the integration of the economies in transition into the world economy. Information was provided on, in particular, analytical activities, policy advice and technical assistance to the economies in transition especially with regard to the development of the necessary conditions for attracting foreign investment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/581/Add.2], adopted resolution 55/191 without vote [agenda item 94 (b)].

Integration of the economies in transition into the world economy

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 47/187 of 22 December 1992, 48/181 of 21 December 1993, 49/106 of 19 December 1994, 51/175 of 6 December 1996 and 53/179 of 15 December 1998,

Reaffirming also the need for the full integration of the countries with economies in transition into the world economy,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting the progress made in those countries towards achieving macroeconomic and financial stability and economic growth in the course of structural reforms and the need to sustain those positive trends in the future,

Recognizing the difficulties faced by the countries with economies in transition in responding adequately to the challenges of globalization, including in the field of information and communication technologies, and the need to enhance their capacity to utilize effectively the benefits and mitigate the negative implications of globalization,

Recognizing also the continuing need to ensure favourable conditions for market access of exports from countries with economies in transition, in accordance with multilateral trade agreements,

Recognizing further the important role foreign investment should play in those countries, and stressing the need to create an enabling environment to attract more foreign direct investment,

Noting the aspiration of the countries with economies in transition towards the further development of regional and interregional cooperation,

1. Welcomes the measures taken by the organizations of the United Nations system to implement General Assembly resolutions on the integration of the economies in transition into the world economy;

2. Calls upon the organizations of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, in collaboration with relevant non-United Nations multilateral and regional institutions, to continue to conduct analytical activities and provide policy advice and technical assistance to the Governments of the countries with economies in transition aimed at strengthening the social and political framework for completing market-oriented reforms with a view to sustaining the positive trends in the economic and social development of those countries, and, in this regard, emphasizes the importance of their further integration into the knowledge-based world economy through the effective utilization of information and communication technologies;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution with particular focus on an analysis that would determine the progress achieved in the integration of countries with economies in transition into the world economy.

Island developing countries

Implementation of Programme of Action

In response to General Assembly resolutions 54/224 [YUN 1999, p. 783] and 54/225 [ibid., p. 995], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/55/185] on progress in implementing the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (SIDS), adopted in 1994 at the Global Conference on the subject [YUN 1994, p. 783], and on promoting an integrated management approach to the Caribbean Sea area in the context of sustainable development. The report was based on information provided by members of the UN system, regional organizations and Governments, especially in relation to the issues of climate change and sea-level rise; natural and environmental disasters; waste management; coastal and marine, freshwater, land, energy and biodiversity resources; tourism; national capacities; transport and communication; human resources development; social and cultural development; and trade. Progress in the development of a vulnerability index specifically for SIDS, which would assist in identifying challenges to their sustainable development, was also reviewed.

With regard to promoting an integrated management approach to the Caribbean area, the report presented information received from UNDP, UNEP and the Caribbean Community.

The report concluded that there was scope for improving coordination among the UN agencies, the regional organizations and national Governments on tasks that were planned as well as ongoing.

Communication. By a 26 September letter [A/C.2/55/3], Samoa transmitted to the Secretary-General the report of the second Alliance of Small Island States workshop on climate change negotiations, management and strategy (Apia, Samoa, 26 July–4 August). Acknowledging that adaptation to the adverse effects of climate change remained the key challenge facing SIDS, participants made recommendations regarding national communications, capacity development, scientific research, land use and other mechanisms for developing common responses to that challenge.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/582/Add.4], adopted resolution 55/202 without vote [agenda item 95 (d)].

Further implementation of the outcome of the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/122 of 19 December 1994 on the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,

Recalling also its resolutions 51/183 of 16 December 1996, 52/202 of 18 December 1997, 53/189 of 15 December 1998 and 54/224 of 22 December 1999,

Recognizing that small island developing States, given their size, limited resources, geographic dispersion and, in most cases, isolation from markets, face special challenges and unique vulnerabilities of an environmental and economic nature in their efforts to achieve sustainable development and the need to enhance their capacity to effectively benefit from the opportunities presented by trade liberalization and globalization, while minimizing their negative impact on small island developing States,

Recalling the Declaration of Barbados and the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States of the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,

Recalling also the Declaration and review document adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-second special session,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on its tenth session,

Taking note of the report of the second Alliance of Small Island States workshop on climate change negotiations, management and strategy, which was held at Apia, Samoa, from 26 July to 4 August 2000,

Noting the significant efforts to implement the Programme of Action at the national, regional and international levels and the need for regional and global institutions to continue to supplement the efforts being made at the national level, including through effective financial support,

Acknowledging the efforts of small island developing States to convene, in cooperation with the Small Island Developing States Unit of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat, a series of capacity-building workshops targeted at issues of specific relevance to small island developing States,

Welcoming the offer of the Government of Saint Kitts and Nevis to host the first Alliance of Small Island States workshop on the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety in December 2000 and the offer of the Government of Cyprus to host the third Alliance of Small Island States workshop on climate change, energy and preparations for the ninth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development in January 2001,

Bearing in mind the continued need for the financing of projects that were presented within the context of the implementation of the Programme of Action, inter alia, at the meeting of representatives of donor countries and small island developing States held in New York from 24 to 26 February 1999,

Noting with appreciation the contribution by some donor countries towards further implementation of the Programme of Action, and underlining the need for those efforts to be intensified and supplemented by other donor countries and agencies,

Noting the work being undertaken by the Committee for Development Policy and other international organizations on a vulnerability index, which incorporates, inter alia, environmental and economic vulnerability factors,

1. Reiterates the urgent need for strong and effective implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and of the Declaration and review document adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-second special session;

2. Welcomes efforts at the national, subregional and regional levels to implement the Programme of Action;

3. Invites the relevant organs and agencies of the United Nations system and the regional commissions and organizations, within their respective mandates, to reflect measures for the implementation of the Programme of Action in their programmes;

4. Invites the relevant agencies within the United Nations system, in the preparation of the ten-year review of the progress achieved in the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, to identify measures that would ensure the effective implementation of the Programme of Action;

5. Calls upon Member States, in particular the donor community, as well as the relevant organs and agencies of the United Nations system and the regional commissions and organizations, to support the efforts of small island developing States in the further implementation of the Programme of Action through, inter alia, the provision of adequate technical and financial resources, taking into account the Declaration and review document for further implementation and effective follow-up;

6. Calls upon the organizations of the United Nations system to assist small island developing States in their efforts to enhance their capacities to effectively utilize the benefits and mitigate the implications of globalization, including by bridging the digital divide and fostering digital opportunities in the field of information and communication technologies;

7. Invites all relevant stakeholders, non-governmental organizations and the private sector to participate fully in the activities identified for the further implementation of and effective follow-up to the Programme of Action;

8. Urges all relevant organizations to finalize, as a matter of urgency, the work on the development of a vulnerability index;

9. Welcomes the strengthened Small Island Developing States Unit, and requests the Secretary-General to consider ways to further strengthen the Unit, inter alia, by establishing the Small Island Developing States Information Network within the Unit and by assisting small island developing States with, inter alia, project implementation advice and assistance in the identification of short and long-term capacity needs through co-ordination with regional and international institutions, and to make proposals in that regard;

10. Welcomes the contributions of Germany, Italy, Japan and Norway to the strengthening of the Small Island Developing States Unit, and encourages other Member States to make contributions, in particular, in support of the Small Island Developing States Information Network;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development", the sub-item entitled "Further implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States";

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Chapter II

Operational activities for development

In 2000, the income of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the central United Nations funding body for technical assistance to developing countries, totalled $2,554 million, as compared to $2,608 million in 1999. The total expenditure for all programme activities plus support costs also decreased, from $2,681 million in 1999 to $2,513 million in 2000.

Within the UN system as a whole, efforts were made by relevant bodies to implement all the elements of the General Assembly's 1998 resolution on a triennial policy review of operational activities for development. In July, the Economic and Social Council noted the progress made in implementing that resolution and requested the Secretary-General, in the context of the next triennial policy review in 2001, to report on, among other things, progress in implementing the multi-year funding framework, as part of efforts to reverse the declining trend in core resources and to establish a mechanism for more predictable funding.

On 11 September, the first Ministerial Meeting on UNDP was held to seek ways to boost recognition and support for it at the country level and in key international forums. Various options were put forward for rebuilding political support for UNDP.

UNDP continued its management and programme reforms in 2000. The reforms focused on performance and results and set a leaner staffing structure in place. In the results-oriented annual report for 2000, the first such report in the formal multi-year funding framework period, the Administrator analysed UNDP performance for each of the six goals—sustainable human development, poverty reduction, the environment, gender equality, special development situations and UNDP support to the United Nations.

The United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) continued to operate under the self-financing principle, without assessed budget financing. The total value of the UNOPS project and loan portfolios amounted to $3.7 billion in 2000, comprising $1.5 billion in project value and $2.2 billion in loans under its supervision, primarily for the International Fund for Agricultural Development. Total delivery was $664 million, down from $764 million in 1999.

The United Nations Volunteers programme, administered by UNDP, grew for the fourth successive year, with some 4,800 volunteers carrying out nearly 5,200 assignments in 140 countries. During the year, the programme was evaluated and recommendations made concerning its future status and relations with UNDP. In November, the Secretary-General officially launched the International Year of Volunteers (2001) aimed at recognizing and promoting volunteerism, and in December the General Assembly called on States, organizations and the private sector to promote volunteer action in their own societies.

United Nations efforts to promote technical cooperation among developing countries (TCDC) were focused in UNDP's Special Unit for TCDC. Total core and non-core resources for TCDC amounted to $29.5 million for 1997-2000, and were allocated to building policy and institutional capacities, nurturing TCDC knowledge-networking, and forging partnerships for sustainable human development.

System-wide activities

Operational activities segment of the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council, at its 2000 substantive session (New York, 5-28 July, 18 October, 22 November), considered the question of operational activities of the United Nations for international development cooperation at meetings on 13, 14, 17, 18 and 28 July. A high-level meeting on operational activities was held on 17 and 18 July. On 13 July, the Council held an informal dialogue with the UN system country teams from Ghana and Madagascar, and, on 18 July, with the heads of UN funds and programmes. On 14, 17 and 18 July, the Council considered follow-up to policy recommendations of the Assembly and the Council, and the reports of the Executive Boards of UNDP/United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the World Food Programme (WFP). The Council, on 17 July, held a panel discussion entitled "Celebration of 50 years of United Nations development cooperation".

In May [E/2000/46/Add.1], the Secretary-General reported on progress in implementing General Assembly resolution 53/192 [YUN 1998, p. 802] on the triennial policy review of UN operational activities for development in the areas of impact evaluation; strategic frameworks and programming; harmonization of programming cycles; field-level coordination; country-level follow-up to global conferences and operational activities; gender and development; common premises and sharing of administrative services; the regional dimension; South-South cooperation; humanitarian assistance, peace-building and development; monitoring and evaluation; and capacity-building.

The Secretary-General stated that considerable progress had been achieved in implementing resolution 53/192 but more remained to be accomplished. In terms of evaluations of the impact of operational activities for development, out of the 24 planned evaluations under the current series to be completed in time for the 2001 triennial review, 2 had been completed, 4 initiated and activities for another 10 were ready, subject to financing.

Progress also continued in the operationalization of the common country assessment (CCA) and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF), designed to strengthen UN system coordination mechanisms at the programming level. Some 74 country teams were currently at various stages of the CCA/UNDAF process, based on the status of their harmonized programme cycles. However, while progress with the CCA/UNDAF process achieved so far was modifying the way the UN system collaborated at the country level, several challenges remained, including the substantive focus of the two instruments; the rationalization and simplification of relevant programming procedures; the monitoring of the UNDAF time line and its synchronization with the individual country programmes and projects derived from UNDAF; using CCA, originally conceived as a development tool, in crisis and post-conflict countries; further collaboration with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund (IMF)); and the effective involvement of civil society and the private sector in policy debates generated by the CCA and UNDAF processes.

The harmonization of programming cycles presented several difficulties, since not all UN organizations worked on a country programme basis. A degree of flexibility was needed to harmonize the cycles of organizations that applied a country programme approach and those that followed a different approach. Partial harmonization of programme cycles in countries with a large representation of the UN development system also represented a continuing challenge to collaborative programming. Given the overall difficult progress in the harmonization of cycles, the United Nations Development Group (UNDG) had requested country teams to draw up local action plans with clear time frames. As a result, as at December 1999, 98 per cent of the countries qualifying for harmonization had done so, a 73 per cent increase since 1998, and 95 countries were expected to be harmonized by 2005. UNDG had put in place a monitoring mechanism to ensure that the progress would be maintained. The harmonization of programming cycles with national budgets or planning cycles was more complicated than originally expected.

Successful efforts at collaborative programming among several organizations had further energized field-level coordination. Arrangements to involve national partners were becoming more frequent and joint funding had increased significantly. Progress was also made in the coherence of many country teams and interest was growing among organizations with country representatives to advance both the work of the individual organization and the team effort of the resident coordinator system. However, because of reduced funds to support operational activities, country teams were facing severe cuts in programme activities. Other useful means of field-level coordination were the use of thematic groups and "retreats" to focus on specific concerns and review activities in progress, and expanded access to and use of information technology.

Both UNDAF and CCA had the potential of becoming the main instruments at the country level for a system-wide integrated follow-up to global conferences. Their further application was expected to be strengthened through the CCA indicator framework to reinforce the use and adaptation of conference indicators at the country level and help in the establishment of national data sets relevant to conference follow-up. Despite the progress made, a gap continued between conference outcomes and the objectives and priorities of UN system assistance programmes. Country-specific tools and advice, country-specific frameworks and models and appropriate baseline data needed further development, and, since most decision-making and funding continued on a sectoral basis, stronger linkages were needed between and among government units, civil society and international agencies. Two new major efforts to overcome that problem were the girls' education strategy and the poverty action strategy designed by UNDG and endorsed by the Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions (CCPOQ) in March 2000 on behalf of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC).

As part of UN system efforts to support and encourage gender mainstreaming, agencies had intensified efforts to ensure a gender perspective in their management strategies and operational activities. Progress was being made throughout the UN system to implement the critical areas of concern in the Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170]. In addition, the UNDG Subgroup on Gender had focused its efforts on the CCA and UNDAF guidelines, assuring a gender perspective in the text and indicators. The UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs, in collaboration with UNDP, carried out a major study assessing gender mainstreaming in governance and poverty eradication programmes in sub-Saharan Africa, and the UNDG Working Group on Girls' Education developed a comprehensive action strategy on girls' education, which was launched by the Secretary-General in April.

Several steps were under way to support the planning, implementation and oversight of the "United Nations House" programme. New guidelines on operational management of common services were being developed and additional guidance and support were being provided to the country teams. A consolidated common database and lease management maintenance software (Aperture) were completed to facilitate management of country office premises. The UNDG Management Group on Services and Premises was also developing guidance on common and shared services.

Regarding the involvement of the regional commissions in CCA and UNDAF, the physical distance between the commissions and the majority of the country offices in their respective region prevented the commissions from being actively involved in the CCA and UNDAF participatory working process. Resident coordinators needed to give special attention to involving the regional commissions and non-resident agencies in the preparation and implementation of CCA and UNDAF. The CCPOQ Working Group on the Resident Coordinator System had encouraged all parties to propose ways to improve collaboration.

UN system entities had done much in the past year to alleviate crisis and post-conflict situations. At the Headquarters level, the Inter-Agency Standing Committee (for humanitarian affairs) (IASC) (see p. 846) considered such issues as guidance to humanitarian/resident coordinators on internally displaced persons and linkages among humanitarian, peacekeeping and political components of UN operations, especially in post-conflict situations. IASC also formed a UNDP-led reference group on post-conflict reintegration, which explored gaps and the factors compounding them and recommended several steps for United Nations action. UNDP was also redefining its role in crisis, post-conflict and recovery situations (see p. 823).

Concerning evaluation, there had been positive developments regarding follow-up to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council resolutions on the subject. However, the degree of implementation was at times uneven and a hindrance to effectiveness. One impact evaluation revealed that joint programme reviews and evaluations remained a rarity, resulting in programme-wide/country-level issues not being properly examined.

In capacity-building, there had been steady follow-up within the UN system. A guidance note on the subject was approved by CCPOQ in March on behalf of ACC. UNDP and UNICEF had been exploring the concept of capacity-building/capacity-building development, as well as methodologies and mechanisms for its planning and monitoring. However, the UN system, particularly the specialized agencies, continued to have difficulty in drawing lessons learned from their experience. The first impact evaluation suggested that it was important for all relevant UN system entities, as well as Member States, to evaluate their experience and current approaches, with a view to extracting the lessons learned and best practices.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2000/20 [draft: E/2000/L.15] without vote [agenda item 3 (a) (iii)].

Progress in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 53/192 on the triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 53/192 of 15 December 1998 on the triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system and Council resolution 1999/6 of 23 July 1999,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on operational activities of the United Nations for international development cooperation and of the consolidated list of issues related to the coordination of operational activities;

2. Reiterates that the fundamental characteristics of the operational activities of the United Nations system should be, inter alia, their universal, voluntary and grant nature, their neutrality, impartiality and multilateralism and their ability to respond to the development needs of developing countries in a flexible manner, and that all operational activities must be

country-driven, in response to and in accordance with the national development plans, policies and priorities of the recipient Governments concerned;

3. Notes the progress achieved in simplification and harmonization of programming cycles and procedures, and calls on the funds and programmes and specialized agencies involved in the coordination efforts in the field to take further steps to enhance and ensure the sustainability of this process, in particular in the area of decentralization and financial management;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, as part of the preparation of the next triennial policy review of 2001, to assess, in full and close cooperation with programme countries, the extent to which such harmonization and simplification have benefited the programme countries, inter alia, through greater coordination and synergy in programme design and implementation, as well as the obstacles encountered, and to make appropriate recommendations for consideration at the next triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development, utilizing, inter alia, the ongoing management process and an assessment, inter alia, of the joint mid-term review, joint evaluation and joint programme experiences, as appropriate;

5. Emphasizes that simplification and harmonization of procedures, in the context of decentralization of processes, as adopted by the executive boards of the United Nations funds and programmes, should be responsive to the needs of developing countries, while bearing in mind the impact of these procedures on the capacity of recipient countries to integrate the programmes of the United Nations system into the national development process;

6. Stresses the importance of ensuring full government participation in the formulation and the implementation of the common country assessment and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, and urges the funds and programmes, in full and close consultation and cooperation with them, to continue to review these processes at the country level with a view to effecting streamlining and simplification so as to reduce the administrative and financial costs to the recipient Governments as well as to the United Nations system;

7. Notes the progress and the challenges with regard to the common country assessment and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, as highlighted in the report of the Secretary-General, and encourages the funds and programmes to ensure that the United Nations Development Assistance Framework promotes a country-driven, collaborative and coherent response by the United Nations system so as to achieve a greater impact at the country level fully consistent with and in support of national priorities;

8. Also notes that coordination activities, though beneficial, represent transaction costs that are borne by both recipient countries and the organizations of the United Nations system, and emphasizes the need for their continuous evaluation and for an analysis and assessment of costs as compared with the total programme expenditures of operational activities for development, in order to ensure maximum efficiency and feasibility;

9. Reaffirms the importance of independent, transparent and impartial joint and periodic evaluations of operational activities at the country level, under the leadership of recipient Governments, and with the support of the resident coordinator system, to enhance their efficiency, effectiveness and impact;

10. Notes the preparations for the impact evaluation of operational activities, in particular of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, as mandated in General Assembly resolution 53/192, as part of the preparations for the next triennial policy review;

11. Invites the funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system, with the full involvement of the recipient Government concerned in the process of such evaluation, to participate actively and to support the ongoing study by the Secretariat;

12. Encourages greater cooperation between the World Bank, the regional banks and all funds and programmes, with a view to achieving increased complementarity and better division of labour, as well as enhanced coherence in their sectoral activities, building on the existing arrangements and fully in accordance with the priorities of the recipient Government, and in this regard emphasizes the importance of ensuring, under the leadership of national Governments, greater consistency between the strategic frameworks developed by the United Nations funds, programmes and agencies and the Bretton Woods institutions;

13. Notes the ongoing dialogue of members of the United Nations Development Group with the Bretton Woods institutions, and encourages similar consultations with the World Trade Organization, fully recognizing the primary coordinating role of programme country Governments as well as the respective mandates of these institutions, and requests them to report to the Council on this dialogue at its next substantive session, especially in the context of preparations for the triennial policy review;

14. Requests the United Nations system to take further measures to improve the effective incorporation of technical cooperation among developing countries into their programmes and projects, and to intensify efforts towards mainstreaming the modality of technical cooperation among developing countries, inter alia, through support to the activities of the Special Unit for Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, and encourages other relevant international institutions to take similar measures;

15. Notes that country-driven programming offers additional opportunities for greater use of the modalities of technical cooperation among developing countries by programme countries;

16. Requests the programmes and funds to submit to the Council, through their executive boards, information and analysis in respect of the extent to which cross-cutting themes and goals emerging from global conferences have been integrated into their programme priorities in a coherent manner, as well as in respect of specific steps taken to develop complementary and collaborative approaches with other United Nations organizations in promoting the implementation of global targets, to assist the Secretary-General in the preparation of his report to the General Assembly through the Council on this issue;

17. Notes the progress of the resident coordinator system in assisting Governments in their efforts towards an integrated and coordinated follow-up to global conferences, and encourages further work by the country-level theme groups in addressing the areas highlighted by the Council;

18. Encourages the United Nations development system to strengthen efforts towards gender mainstreaming, empowerment of women and gender equality, in particular taking into account the outcomes of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century", and the twenty-fourth special session of the Assembly, entitled "World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world";

19. Welcomes in this context the ten-year United Nations Girls' Education Initiative launched by the Secretary-General at the World Education Forum, held in Dakar from 26 to 28 April 2000;

20. Notes the lessons learned by the programmes and funds in the implementation of their gender-balance policy, and calls for further efforts to retain women at mid-career and actively to promote their career advancement;

21. Appreciates the progress achieved so far in broadening the pool of resident coordinators and in improving the gender balance of resident coordinators, and invites the funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system to make further efforts to increase and monitor their nomination of qualified women candidates for the resident coordinator vacancies;

22. Recommends that the practice of holding joint meetings of the bureaux of the Executive Boards of the United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Food Programme be continued, with a view to improving the impact of these meetings, and in this regard requests the funds and programmes to examine the possibility of having joint reports prepared by their secretariats for these meetings, focused on some issues of specific joint interest, so as to ensure an effective follow-up of the resolutions of the Council and the General Assembly concerning the coordination of operational activities for development, and to report thereon to the Council at its substantive session of 2001;

23. Underlines the progress achieved in the coordination of operational activities for development, stresses the importance of continuing efforts for improving coordination based on a system-wide approach, and in this regard welcomes the recent initiatives taken by some specialized agencies to strengthen their participation in the internal coordination mechanisms, such as the United Nations Development Group and the Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions;

24. Requests the Secretary General, in the context of the next triennial policy review, to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the impact of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework and progress in the implementation of the multi-year funding framework, as part of ongoing efforts to reverse the declining trend in core resources, and also on improving the efficiency and effectiveness of operational activities of the United Nations system, including recommendations for enhancing the impact of these processes, as well as for appropriate follow-up.

Coordination of operational activities

The Secretary-General, in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/27 [YUN 1998, p. 811], reported in June on a number of issues related to the coordination of operational activities [E/2000/CRP.1]. He informed the Council that, within his reform programme and the provisions of the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities, UNDG, including its subsidiary bodies, had been consolidated. Specific progress had been achieved in the resident coordinator system in such areas as the selection process and the adoption of the ACC guidelines on the functioning of the system, but improving the performance appraisal system and the need to provide government inputs into the work of the thematic groups within the resident coordinator system required further attention. Although steady progress was achieved in the implementation of CCA and UNDAF, faster progress should be encouraged in developing individual UNDAFs to take full advantage of the projected harmonization of programme cycles. Other issues needing attention related to process and content, ensuring a more consistent level of quality in CCAs and UNDAFs and achieving greater involvement of non-resident agencies. As to the harmonization of programming periods and procedures, progress was made in joint mid-term reviews and the harmonization of programming instruments and periods. Further work was needed in country-programme and framework formats, the realignment of monitoring and evaluation stages, more uniform project implementation procedures, compatible information technology and databases on UN activities, common premises guidelines and harmonized security operations. Coordination by national authorities of the preparation processes of the new planning and programme instruments of the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions was crucial to avoid duplication of national and international efforts. Addressing the linkages between operational activities for development and special economic, humanitarian and disaster relief assistance was crucial at the inter-governmental and inter-agency levels because of the large number of countries in special circumstances, and all possible synergies between the Council's operational activities and humanitarian segments would be particularly important in that regard.

Simplification and harmonization of programming, operational and administrative procedures

of programming, operational and administrative procedures. He stated that insufficient progress had been achieved because of the structure of the UN system and the creation of autonomous procedures, the diversity of programming procedures as a consequence of the diversity of mandates, institutional autonomy, the different analysis requirements to undertake programming, and different modalities in project execution of each organization. In particular, progress remained difficult at the country level.

Inter-agency initiatives for harmonization, through ACC and UNDG, were limited mostly to agreeing on common guidelines or defining a common understanding on a modality as guidance principles. However, there were problems in the implementation of common understandings on such topics as national execution and the programme approach because of differing modalities from agency to agency. UN country teams were sometimes unaware of the common definitions adopted at the inter-agency level at headquarters. Better results were obtained in implementing system-wide guidelines, but the actual translation of those guidelines and agreed concepts in alleviating the procedural burden was slow. Progress was achieved in harmonizing programme cycles, but consistent monitoring was required to ensure that those results were sustained. The CCA and UNDAF processes were expected to produce some visible benefits in the simplification and harmonization process at the level of individual organizations, but their synchronization with the preparation of individual country programmes required some vigilance. Budgetary, accounting, auditing and general financial practices represented an area where further steps might achieve cost reduction and higher productivity. Initiatives in the simplification and standardization of UN system reporting requirements, both financial and technical, had not been systematic and the results were often contradictory. Some progress was made in decentralization and delegation of authority, although it was uneven and affected decision-making at the country level.

Other areas where there was room for improvement included the development of common formats for project design and project documents, procurement, the development of computerization and the harmonization of management practices.

Funding UN system operational activities

Responding to General Assembly resolution 53/192 [YUN 1998, p. 802], the Secretary-General, in his main report on operational activities

[E/2000/46], provided an overview of the financial status of the UN funds and programmes, and assessed the impact of financial trends, as well as relevant decisions of the respective executive boards on funding arrangements.

He stated that combined total resources channelled annually through UN funds and programmes continued to increase and in 1999 stood at $5.13 billion, compared to $3.43 billion in 1990. However, total core resources, excluding WFP, had declined from $1.94 billion in 1994 to $1.56 billion in 1999. In UNDP, provisional data showed that for 1999 core resources amounted to $628 million, some $64 million or 8.5 per cent below the 1998 income figure of $746 million. For UNFPA, core resources declined from $305 million in 1995 to some $250 million in 1999, while contributions to UNICEF's core resources had stagnated, averaging around $542 million per year. Contributions to WFP had ranged, over the years, between $1 billion in 1990 and $1.56 billion in 1999.

The continuing decline or stagnation in core funds to UN funds and programmes to meet national demands and respond to global trends posed a serious challenge to their ability to undertake mandated tasks. The decline continued even as the funds and programmes had made great strides in structural reforms to address priority development policy issues with a more coordinated and effective approach. The factors cited for the continued decline related to the voluntary nature of core funding, an increased focus on humanitarian assistance, including specifically the need to find resources to sustain the international presence in such situations as in the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) and East Timor, and the ever-increasing demands for other uses of grant multilateral official development assistance, such as the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative and the proposal for the establishment of broad open-ended global trust funds. In addition, the highly competitive international development cooperation environment needed to be changed. Also, the diversity of issues addressed by the UN development system made it difficult to provide crisp statements about achievements.

To restore growth and enhance predictability to the core resource base of UN funds and programmes, the UNDP/UNFPA and UNICEF Executive Boards had developed sustainable funding strategies, including the setting of annual funding targets and the establishment of multi-year funding frameworks for UNDP and UNFPA, and UNICEF's resource mobilization strategy. While it was too early to assess the full impact of the new funding arrangements, the initial pledges made in the first part of 2000 were disappointing in relation to set targets. The tendency for countries that made multi-year pledges in 1999 to use that as a minimal base for a further increase in 2000 was a positive trend and a manifestation of commitment to rebuilding the regular resource base. In reviewing those new funding arrangements, greater attention needed to be paid by the UNDP Executive Board and all Member States to finding ways to facilitate greater political will and commitment so that funding levels could quickly return to a pattern of growth.

Among his recommendations, the Secretary-General proposed that, since funding commitments to UN funds and programmes remained voluntary, Governments should be further encouraged to ensure that funding arrangements became predictable and relied on shared responsibility and inter-donor group pressure to ensure fair burden-sharing.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2000/19 [draft: E/2000/L.14] without vote [agenda item 3 (a)].

Funding operational activities for development of the United Nations system

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 53/192 of 15 December 1998 on the triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system and Council resolution 1999/6 of 23 July 1999,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Reiterates that the fundamental characteristics of the operational activities of the United Nations system should be, inter alia, their universal, voluntary and grant nature, their neutrality, impartiality and multilateralism and their ability to respond to the development needs of developing countries in a flexible manner, and that all operational activities must be country-driven, in response to and in accordance with the national development plans, policies and priorities of the recipient Governments concerned;
3. Stresses the primary responsibility of national Governments for their country's development, and recognizes the importance of national ownership of development programmes;
4. Recognizes that operational activities are one of the major pillars of the United Nations and play a fundamental role in the creation of a more united, peaceful, and prosperous world;
5. Strongly reaffirms that the impact of operational activities for development of the United Nations system must be enhanced by, inter alia, a substantial increase in their funding on a predictable, continuous and assured basis, commensurate with the increasing needs of developing countries, as well as through the full implementation of General Assembly resolutions 47/199 of 22 December 1992, 48/162 of 20 December 1993, 50/120 of 20 December 1995 and 53/192 and the parts of resolution 52/12 B of 19 December 1997 relevant to operational activities for development;

6. Reaffirms the need for priority allocation of scarce grant resources to programmes and projects in low-income countries, in particular the least developed countries, and in this context expresses concern over any further decline in programme expenditures in those countries, and encourages all efforts to reverse this situation;

7. Stresses the need for a continuous overall improvement, within existing mandates, in the effectiveness, efficiency and impact of the United Nations system in delivering its development assistance, and welcomes the steps that have been taken to that end;

8. Also stresses in this regard the continued need for funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations development system to continue to report on the overall results achieved to their executive boards or governing bodies and to the Council;

9. Reaffirms that core resources, because they are untied resources, are the bedrock of the operational activities of the United Nations system, and in this regard notes with serious concern the overall decline or stagnation in core resources available to many United Nations funds and programmes, in particular the United Nations Development Programme;

10. Notes the efforts of the Executive Boards and secretariats of the United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund and of the United Nations Children's Fund to establish multi-year funding frameworks that integrate programme objectives, resources, budgets and outcomes, with the objective of increasing core resources and enhancing their predictability, and in this regard invites them to continue to develop and refine the frameworks as a strategic resource management tool;

11. Appreciates in this context the efforts of countries, including donor and programme countries, which have increased or maintained their high level of contributions to the core resources of United Nations funds and programmes during 1999 and 2000 and also of those which have made multi-year pledges to core resources;

12. Underlines the need to avoid overdependence on a limited number of donors, emphasizes the importance of shared responsibility, taking into account established official development assistance targets, including targets established at the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, and calls on donors and other countries in a position to do so to increase their contributions to the core/regular resources of United Nations funds and programmes;

13. Notes the increase in and the importance of non-core resources, including cost-sharing, trust funds and non-traditional sources of financing as a mechanism to enhance the capacity and to supplement the means of operational activities for development, contributing to an increase in total resources, even though unsatisfactory because the increase in non-core resources cannot compensate for the decline in the level of core resources;

14. Also notes in this context the contributions by private sources, which can supplement but cannot substitute for contributions by Governments, to finance or extend programmes implemented within existing guidelines of United Nations funds and programmes;

15. Reaffirms that South-South cooperation, including technical and economic cooperation among developing countries, offers viable opportunities for the development of developing countries, and in this context reiterates its request that the executive boards of the funds and programmes review, with a view to considering an increase, the allocation of resources for activities involving technical cooperation among developing countries;

16. Requests the Secretary General, in the context of the next triennial policy review, to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the progress in the implementation of the multi-year funding frameworks, as part of ongoing efforts to strengthen the strategic resource management in the funds and programmes and to reverse the declining trend in core resources.

Financing of operational activities in 1999

Expenditures of the UN system on operational activities, excluding loans and grants through the World Bank Group, reached $6 billion in 1999 [A/56/70/Add.1-E/2001/58/Add.1], the most recent year for which complete figures were available, compared with $5.3 billion in 1998 and $4.8 billion in 1997. Of the total amount, $2,044.1 million was distributed in development grants through UNDP or UNDP-administered funds, $1,429.8 million by WFP, $1,123.3 million by specialized agencies and other organizations from extrabudgetary sources, $817.9 million by UNICEF, $444 million by specialized agencies and other organizations from regular budgets (mainly the World Health Organization) and $187.1 million by UNFPA.

By region, 33.5 per cent of expenditures went to Africa, 27.7 per cent to Asia and the Pacific, 26.2 per cent to Latin America and the Caribbean, 7.1 per cent to Western Asia and 5.5 per cent to Europe.

Contributions from Governments and other sources for operational activities, excluding the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), totalled $6.9 billion in 1999, compared with $5.7 billion in 1998 and $5.4 billion in 1997.

The 2000 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (New York, 1-2 November) [A/CONF.193/3] heard the announcement of pledges by Governments to UN programmes and funds concerned with development. It noted that several Governments were not in a position to announce their contributions but proposed communicating the announcement of such contributions to the Secretary-General as soon as they were in a position to do so.

The Secretary-General provided a statement of contributions pledged or paid at the 1999 Pledging Conference, as at 30 June 2000, to 30 funds and programmes [A/CONF.190/2 & CORR.1].

The total amounted to some $1,127 million, with an estimated $536 million for UNDP.

Technical cooperation through UNDP

The UNDP Administrator, in his annual report covering 2000 [DP/2001/14 & Add.1-4], said that the year had seen a dramatic change in UNDP on both management and programme fronts, in fulfilment of his vision for the organization and in response to the new challenges and opportunities in global development. It was characterized by the coalescing of the international campaign to eradicate poverty, with a focus on promoting pro-poor growth and more inclusive globalization.

In 2000, the tone for UNDP was set by the ongoing implementation of the Administrator's Business Plans, 2000-2003 (see p. 831); the global development objectives and targets set by world leaders in the Millennium Declaration (see p. 49); and the outcome of the first Ministerial Meeting on UNDP, which boosted recognition and support for UNDP at the country level and in key international forums (see p. 836). Those events and the growing consensus underpinning them generated a challenging agenda for UNDP. In that context, UNDP was well positioned to play the role of a trusted partner, and much of the institutional change undertaken in 2000 was with that objective in mind.

The results were evidenced in the first results-oriented annual report [YUN 1999, p. 795], which marked a decisive step forward in the adoption of results-based management and led to the refinement of the strategic results framework (SRF), the development of a corporate database and intensive training for country office staff. UNDP continued its strong support to national poverty-reduction strategies, the development and implementation of which, as well as poverty monitoring, were largely successful and revealed the highest levels of outcome and output, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa. It published Overcoming Human Poverty: UNDP Poverty Report 2000. The Human Development Report 2000 [Sales No. E.00.III.B.8] also presented the eradication of poverty not just as a goal but as a challenge for human rights. The year witnessed a dramatic progression in the national human development reports (NHDRs) programme, with the establishment of a support unit at headquarters and the preparation of a UNDP policy on NHDRs.

UNDP made efforts to expand democratic governance both within and between countries, particularly in such key areas as governing institutions, human rights, decentralization, public sector management and gender issues, by providing advice and technical support to authorities, civil society and communities of the poor. The provision of advisory services to legislative, electoral, justice and human rights institutions and processes remained important in 2000. UNDP also sought to build the gender dimension into its policies, programmes and management. It supported many Governments in the preparation of national reports for Beijing+5 (see p. 1082) and helped countries to ensure that the feminization of poverty and women's own coping strategies were taken fully into account in national poverty-reduction strategies.

Efforts to focus and improve UNDP activities in crisis and post-conflict environments were undertaken with renewed vigour in 2000. UNDP expanded activities in reintegration and recovery, peace-building, mine action, natural-disaster mitigation and related areas, and continued to support war-affected populations.

UNDP strengthened HIV/AIDS as one of its critical areas of support to developing countries, providing policy advice to Governments and civil society partners on ways to achieve a nationwide, effective response to the epidemic and assisting countries with capacity-building for planning and implementing those responses.

In partnership with the public and private sectors, UNDP worked on a comprehensive strategy and implementation package to help transform the growing digital divide into a digital opportunity, while addressing basic developmental needs. The Digital Opportunities Task Force, hosted jointly by UNDP and the World Bank, was launched in July. At the country level, UNDP launched the Global Network Readiness and Resource Initiative to assist countries in building national information infrastructure strategies.

Significant achievements were made in 2000 in energy and environment as UNDP played a leading role in coordinating environmental and energy programmes, and in the area of climate change it continued to support capacity-building efforts of developing countries.

To strengthen UNDP's policy capacity, an implementation plan for the new Bureau for Development Policy was approved in May to provide policy support in the field. The Bureau was reorganized through streamlining and rationalizing staff roles and redesigning staff responsibilities. In January, the new Bureau for Resources and Strategic Partnerships was created, bringing together responsibility for relations with the Executive Board, the UN system, civil society and the private sector, along with donor outreach and resource mobilization.

UNDP continued to cooperate with the UN system, especially at the country level, through its network of country offices and through the United Nations Volunteers programme, the World Bank, IMF, regional development banks, civil society and the private sector. The Division for Business Partnerships was created, as part of the Bureau for Resources and Strategic Partnerships, to develop UNDP strategy and guidelines for working with the business sector and support partnerships at the country, regional and global levels. A draft set of new corporate policies and guidelines was prepared during the year. UNDP also developed an aid coordination policy, ensuring that external resources were aligned with national priorities, and strengthened or created aid coordination mechanisms.

UNDP continued efforts to engender a new culture of performance in the organization. The Bureau of Management was created, bringing together the former Bureaux for Planning and Resources Management and for Finance and Administrative Services and including new divisions that better reflected its needs for improved cost efficiency, client service and accountability.

UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board

In 2000, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board held three regular sessions (New York, 24-28 and 31 January, 3-7 April and 25-29 September) and an annual session (Geneva, 13-23 June) [E/2000/35].

At the first regular session, the Board adopted six decisions, including one that gave an overview of the Board's action taken at the session [E/2000/35 (dec. 2000/6)]. Other decisions dealt with UNDP Business Plans for 2000-2003 (see p. 831); assistance to East Timor (see p. 836); UNDP regular funding and cash-flow management (see p. 835); and revision of the UNDP financial regulations and rules (see p. 838).

The Executive Board, at its second regular session, adopted four decisions, including an overview decision summarizing action it had taken at the session [dec. 2000/10]. In other decisions, the Board took action on UNFPA and the United Nations Development Fund for Women (see PART THREE, Chapters VIII and X, respectively).

At the annual session, the Board adopted seven decisions, including an overview decision [dec. 2000/17]. The others concerned UNFPA programmes, the United Nations Volunteers (see p. 843), the Administrator's 1999 report (see below) and the annual report of the Executive Director of UNOPS (see p. 840).

At the third regular session, the Board adopted seven decisions. One decision gave an overview of action taken at the session [dec. 2000/24]. By another, the Board encouraged UNDP to assist affected developing countries to implement the United Nations Convention to combat desertification at the national, subregional and regional levels (see p. 976). The others concerned UNFPA and UNOPS.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2000/242 of 28 July, took note of the Board's report on its first regular session of 2000 [DP/2000/9], the decisions it adopted at its second regular session [DP/2000/19] and those adopted at its annual session [DP/2000/28].

UNDP/UNFPA reports

Annual reports

The Executive Board, on 23 June [dec. 2000/15], took note of the 1999 annual report of the Administrator [DP/2000/23 & Add.1-3].

By decision 2000/242 of 28 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the annual reports of the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director to the Council [E/2000/20].

Results-oriented annual report

The Administrator submitted the results-oriented annual report (ROAR) for 2000 [DP/2001/14/Add.1], the first within the formal multi-year funding framework period. It maintained the orientation of management for results, indicating the main features of performance (progress towards outcomes and the extent to which targets set for outputs were achieved), and pointed to issues requiring attention. The evolving methodology applied for 2000 enhanced transparency, accuracy and overall credibility of the analysis. It used an overall assessment of performance and in-depth analysis, with a parallel effort to corroborate the data reported in the ROAR with information available from independent sources.

As to the distribution of outcomes and outputs generated by the organization in 2000, the overall, strategy-setting and policy options, followed by capacity development, remained the main focus. The data also confirmed a strong UNDP presence at the level of strategy-setting and policy options, although they did not permit definitive conclusions about the pace and scale at which they might be changing.

Among its general findings, the report said that the ROAR data strongly suggested that there was considerable potential for UNDP to exercise leadership in key development processes and there had been notable advances in performance. NHDRs were completed or under way in 56 countries and were beginning to influence development policies and programmes. Assessment of the impact of liberalization and globalization on developing countries was expanded. Human rights had emerged, including political, social and economic dimensions, as a key focus in governance, with almost 40 per cent of country offices providing assistance for advocacy, awareness-raising, action planning and development of the underlying institutional framework. Poverty-reduction strategies had been formulated in 60 countries, with substantive engagement in the Poverty-Reduction Strategy Paper mechanism rising from 11 countries in 1999 to 24 in 2000. The country offices taking action on HIV/AIDS strategies had increased from 32 in 1999 to 55 in 2000, with good practices in advocacy, impact assessment and capacity development being pursued, particularly in Africa, Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS). Advances were made to integrate environmentally sustainable development and the goals of the global conventions in planning. Progress was made in gender mainstreaming within governance, poverty reduction and HIV/AIDS interventions and through capacity development. In collaboration with other UN organizations, common country assessments (CCAs) were completed or drafted in 66 programme countries, United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks (UNDAFs) in 24 countries and joint programmes in 36 countries, and greater use was made of thematic groups.

In terms of the strategic results framework goals, in the area of governance, the policy and conceptual framework for mainstreaming human rights allowed UNDP to confront successfully the challenge of implementing a rights-based approach to programming and to adapt the focus of public sector management to meet capacity development needs. Good practices acquired through NHDRs provided a solid basis for linking analysis to action, and the strong demand for support in participatory governance indicated the potential for cross-cutting linkages with poverty reduction. That called for much higher levels of resource allocation than were currently available. In poverty reduction, opportunities increased at the policy level for dealing with proper macroeconomic frameworks, target-setting, benchmarking and monitoring in relation to the poverty goal endorsed by the Millennium Declaration (see p. 49). Good practices in meeting the challenge HIV/AIDS posed to governance and poverty reduction should be synthesized to assist other regions and country offices to raise performance and become a key test of UNDP's ability to provide knowledge-driven advisory services in priority areas of country demand. An evaluation of the orientation and sustainability of UNDP activities addressing the asset base of the poor was timely. Poorly performing and increasingly marginal areas of work might have to be dropped and others developed.

Promoting environmentally sustainable development was one of UNDP's key strengths, allowing environmental concerns to be incorporated into poverty-reduction strategies. There was considerable scope for UNDP to address cross-border concerns, the follow-up to global commitments and the use, by programme countries, of the new mechanisms in such areas as climate change.

The expansion of UNDP's role in gender mainstreaming called for a reinforcement of its capacity in that area, as well as a major effort to bring together and share experiences and develop methods and tools for improved monitoring of performance. More effective partnerships with other UN partners were needed to build on the potential of complementary competencies.

In terms of support for the United Nations, support to programme countries with respect to the Millennium Declaration goals demanded a new impetus to UN reform, especially the resident coordinator system. A key task would be to employ CCA and UNDAF more systematically for integrated follow-up to conferences, definition of local targets linked to the Declaration's development goals and improvements in the benchmarking and monitoring of progress. The refocusing of thematic groups could be built upon to expand and accelerate collaborative action around the overall priority of poverty reduction. New tools, principally CCA and UNDAF and joint programming, would realize their full potential and take root in policy and practice only if they were made an integral part of the operations of UN specialized agencies, funds and programmes and were accompanied by a radical reduction in the complexity and duplication of operating policies and procedures across the UN system.

UNDP operational activities

Country programmes

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, at its first regular session in January [dec. 2000/6], approved the first country cooperation framework (CCF) for Liberia and took note of the first extension of 26 CCFs and of one regional cooperation framework (Europe and CIS), as well as the first country review reports for Bangladesh, Botswana, China, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan and Viet Nam.

At its second regular session in April, the Board, on the recommendation of the Administrator [DP/2000/12, DP/2000/16], authorized him to approve assistance to the Congo on a project-by-project basis for 2000-2001, and to Afghanistan on the same basis for 2000-2003 [dec. 2000/10]. It also approved second CCFs for Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan and Zimbabwe, took note of the first extension of CCFs for eight countries or territories, the first extension of the cooperation framework for technical cooperation among developing countries and the first regional cooperation framework for Latin America, and took note of the first country review reports for Cambodia, Uzbekistan and Zimbabwe.

In June, at its annual session [dec. 2000/17], the Board approved second CCFs for Azerbaijan, Iran, Romania and Turkmenistan and the extension of the first CCF for Brazil, and took note of the first extension of CCFs for Argentina, Chile and Uruguay.

The Board, at its third regular session in September [dec. 2000/24], approved second CCFs for Armenia, the Czech Republic, Hungary, Maldives, Poland, Slovakia, Slovenia, Uzbekistan and Viet Nam. It approved the second extension of the first CCF for Bulgaria and two-year extensions of first CCFs for El Salvador and Venezuela, and took note of first extensions for six other countries. The Board also took note of country review reports for Algeria, Guatemala, Poland and Uganda, and of reviews of regional cooperation frameworks for Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe and CIS, and Latin America and the Caribbean. The review of the first global cooperation framework was also noted. On the recommendation of the Administrator [DP/2000/40], the Board authorized him to approve projects for East Timor on a case-by-case basis for 2000-2002.

UNDP performance analysis by goal

The Administrator reported in his ROAR for 2000 [DP/2001/14/Add.1] on UNDP's performance in relation to its six goals: creating an enabling environment for sustainable human development (SHD); reduction of poverty; protection of the environment and use of natural resources; gender equality and the advancement of women; providing support to countries in special development situations; and providing support to UN activities.

Creating an enabling environment for SHD

The data in ROAR 2000, as in 1999, confirmed the importance of UNDP's work in advocacy for SHD, public sector management and support to governance institutions, as well as a growing emphasis on human rights. They also revealed increased evidence of the incorporation of SHD issues within governance initiatives and expanded support for local governance across all regions.

SHD received 42 per cent of programme resources ($684 million), both regular and other resources, representing the greatest share of total available resources.

Overall, 133 country offices (98 per cent of the total) reported under that goal. With regard to performance, positive change was reported for 54 per cent of outcomes, while annual targets were either fully or partially achieved for 92 per cent of outputs (73 per cent fully and 19 per cent partially). Performance in achieving output targets was higher than progress towards outcomes for all regions. Overall performance did not vary significantly across regions.

The results were mostly of an upstream nature, with 50 per cent of outcomes influencing strategy-setting and policy options, and an additional 38 per cent targeting capacity development. The report found substantial ongoing investment in promoting awareness of and policy dialogue on SHD, representing the second most reported strategic area of support in the SRF, across all regions, mainly by NHDRs. Human rights emerged as a key area of UNDP support to governance institutions. Decentralization was a stronger area of focus also, with 39 per cent of all country offices undertaking programmes to strengthen subnational capacity for participatory development planning and resource management. UNDP involvement in public sector management was extensive, focusing mainly on civil service reform. There was continued effort to incorporate poverty reduction, gender issues and participatory methods into governance programmes.

The spread and application of information and communication technology (ICT) were growing in all regions, mainly in strengthening capacity in governing institutions to use ICT for more effective delivery of public services.

The link between global, regional and country programmes remained weak, except in the area of local governance. In addition, regional cooperation received scant reporting at both outcome and output levels.

At the sub-goal level, there was support for policy-making and strategy-setting at the outcome and output levels, particularly in the use of NHDRs for promoting SHD. Support for analysis in globalization went beyond macrolevel considerations to examining the consequences for the poor. Emphasis was also placed on the impact of liberalization on society and the integration of pro-poor measures in national plans and policies.

An expanded number of initiatives supported private sector development.

Human rights activities were under way in some 50 country offices. The key features of work in that area included development of national human rights action plans by country offices in every region and providing assistance to human rights initiatives involving civic education, awareness-raising campaigns, strengthening or creation of ombudsman offices and extension of human rights institutions. Support was provided to parliaments and justice systems, including training parliamentary members and increasing parliaments' constituency relations and public accountability. Assistance would be provided from the global programme, which launched a $6 million programme in 2000 to strengthen parliaments. In the area of justice, mechanisms were established to increase access to legal services by the poor. Assistance was provided for the reform of justice systems, to improve court administration and case-flow management, computerization of caseloads, the training of judicial personnel and capacity development. A notable development was the establishment of a network of 350 civil society organizations working in the area of judicial reform. In terms of electoral assistance, support was aimed at ensuring transparency of electoral processes and their independent management.

Decentralization and empowerment of local organizations and the poor received great attention, with a wide variety of initiatives across all regions. UNDP assisted subnational authorities in formulating strategies and plans, and building capacities in resource mobilization, planning and service delivery, to empower communities for active participation in local-level decision-making. Support for public sector management resulted in positive change for 58 per cent of outcomes and annual targets achieved for 83 per cent of outputs. UNDP support focused on civil service reforms, including capacity development and initiatives to combat corruption, promote transparency and enhance public sector integrity, including the adoption of anti-corruption legislation. On a more limited scale, UNDP engaged in other areas, such as public sector financial management and aid coordination to strengthen nationally led mechanisms.

The ROAR indicated that, although there was a unique window for UNDP to support programme countries to manage national development and meet the challenge of globalization, there were areas of untapped potential. Those included further development of the NHDR; capacity development of partners to facilitate the integration of human rights within efforts to support SIID; focused assistance to build social capital by improving the ability of governance structures to mobilize the participation of stakeholders and build consensus among them on major development issues; expanded effort to exploit links between assistance for local governance and poverty reduction; support for public sector management to handle the challenges of globalization, such as effective regulation in a liberalized economic environment; and formulation and application of a clear strategy for e-governance that harnessed the potential of ICT.

Reduction of poverty

Support for poverty-reduction strategies and the monitoring of poverty were the main thrust of UNDP's efforts and produced the greatest changes in outcomes. Expenditure on poverty reduction accounted for 31 per cent of total resources ($512 million). Ninety per cent of UNDP country offices, 123 in all, reported on the goal of poverty reduction. Positive change was achieved for 60 per cent of outcomes but with significant regional variation. Over half of all outcomes supported by UNDP related to strategy-setting and policy options (53 per cent) and a further quarter addressed capacity development of institutions. Annual targets were either fully or partially achieved for 68 per cent of outputs. There was a greater cross-fertilization between governance and poverty programmes. The development of HIV/AIDS strategies received far greater priority in 2000, with 55 country offices reporting, up from 32 in 1999. UNDP's efforts were concentrated in the Africa region, as well as Europe and CIS. UNDP work on the asset base of the poor (such as that in microfinance, employment promotion and access to basic social services) was characterized by a range of interventions with varying prospects for generating significant results in poverty reduction, especially in terms of linkage to upstream policy change. In ICT, a new field for UNDP, the majority of results were still downstream in nature and did not capture a clear organizational niche. Progress was being made through public-private partnerships to increase access by the poor to ICT, but much remained to be done.

At the level of sub-goals, UNDP was concentrating its efforts on preparing and implementing poverty-reduction strategies by, among other things, making use of the Poverty Strategies Initiative within the global programme. It supported poverty-reduction strategies through advisory services, sectoral and thematic analyses, strengthening of monitoring capacity and playing a coordinating role in aligning donor resources more effectively. In Africa, its country offices focused on national, as opposed to regional or sectoral, strategies, including Poverty-Reduction Strategy Papers (PRSPs). The country office focus was also at the national level in Latin America and the Caribbean, with activities concentrated on advocacy, preparing sectoral or thematic studies, monitoring, systematization of household surveys, analysis of the determinants of poverty and support to PRSP development. In Asia and the Pacific, greater emphasis was placed on monitoring poverty, while in the Arab States region, assistance focused on providing training, developing local and sectoral strategies or monitoring national strategies. In Europe and CIS, the focus was also on national-level strategies but at the initial stages of development.

In terms of HIV/AIDS, positive change reported for outcomes was relatively modest at 59 per cent, reflecting the difficulties of mobilizing an urgent, countrywide response to HIV/AIDS. There was a discernible upstream shift, focusing on the governance challenge, with a large increase in UNDP interventions assisting Governments in formulating national HIV/AIDS strategies, building national capacity to coordinate effective, multisectoral strategies, and supporting the creation of decentralized structures to manage local action plans. UNDP worked with the United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme to combat the epidemic, particularly in Central and Southern Africa.

UNDP worked to support the access of the poor to productive assets, basic social services and technology, with positive change reported for close to 60 per cent of outcomes and annual targets achieving 70 per cent of outputs. Microfinance remained a major area of activity, with significant success in promoting policy, regulatory and institutional changes. Reporting by country offices on universal access to basic social services declined sharply (from 49 to 28). ICT was a new area reported on in 2000. Performance was encouraging, with positive change reported for 63 per cent of outcomes in the 24 countries reporting. Many of the results were, however, of a downstream nature.

Environmentally sustainable development

Under the goal of environmentally sustainable development, UNDP's cooperation was aimed at developing national strategic, policy, legal and regulatory frameworks; capacity development and the promotion of participatory processes; and follow-up and integration of global environmental issues into national development plans, policies and strategies. Expenditure on environmentally sustainable development accounted for 14 per cent ($251 million) of total resources. It remained the third most important goal for UNDP as a whole and for each of the five regions, with 119 country offices (87 per cent) reporting. Positive change was reported for 64 per cent of outcomes, while annual targets were either fully or partially achieved for 81 per cent of outputs (a figure that dropped to 64 per cent after adjusting for weak targets).

The findings under the goal suggested strong links between policy changes and capacity development for policy management. There was considerable investment in upstream results. The next step was for greater integration of environmental objectives into anti-poverty and development policies and programmes. Similarly, UNDP support to follow up global commitments indicated substantial scope for exploiting interlinkages or synergies between conventions. The data confirmed the importance of the Global Environment Facility (GEF) (see p. 970) in providing direction and resources for important components of the UNDP portfolio. In all regions, GEF-oriented programme development was critical in mobilizing significant non-core funding.

At the level of sub-goals, 42 country offices reported concerted efforts to incorporate the concept of environmentally sustainable development into national planning, with progress for almost two thirds of outcomes. Twenty-one reported a reinvigorated national commitment to Agenda 21 [YUN 1992, p. 672], including the implementation of national strategies by 2005. Progress was reported in drafting or amending national environmental action plans, in environmental management, energy, water and solid waste, and in the preparation of local action plans. Of some concern was the diminished emphasis during 2000 on the mobilization of domestic funding for environmental development activities. Building capacities of national as well as local institutions in sustainable environmental and energy management continued to be of major importance, with reporting by 37 country offices, especially in Africa and Asia and the Pacific, where three quarters of them reported progress in implementing capacity development programmes. UNDP cooperation was also focused on strengthening the capacities of newly established environmental ministries, agencies, coordinating bodies and environmental funds, such as those in Georgia, Guatemala, Haiti, Lebanon, Nepal, Paraguay and the Sudan.

At the downstream level, the sustainable management of natural resources and energy was primarily addressed through small-scale pilot activities, linked in many instances to public-private partnerships, mostly in Latin America and the Caribbean and in Asia and the Pacific. The UNDP/GEF Small Grants Programme proved to be an effective promoter of local-level income-generating opportunities linked with biodiversity and climate change and helped to establish community or non-governmental organization (NGO) networks on environmental issues. There was growing support of UNDP to programme countries on the follow-up and internalization of the goals of global environmental conventions through national action plans, strategies and programmes, particularly in biodiversity and climate change. Substantial progress was made in tackling the problem of ozone-layer depletion with the UNDP Montreal Protocol programme active in 73 countries. Country offices reported progress on the sensitization of national authorities to global environmental conventions through training programmes or the establishment of inter-ministerial groups, coordinating bodies and environmental units.

Gender equality and advancement of women

In 2000, UNDP efforts towards gender mainstreaming continued to focus on policy and planning, as well as capacity development. The delivery of programme resources under the goal was 1 per cent of total resources ($22 million). A total of 105 country offices (77 per cent) reported on the goal, with positive change for 77 per cent of outcomes, a relatively high rate compared to other goals. Those outcomes were mainly related to advocacy, networking and partnerships, capacity development of institutions, and strategy-setting and policy options. Annual targets were either fully or partially achieved for 74 per cent of outputs.

The data suggested progress in gender mainstreaming in UNDP cooperation, reflected by an increased demand for it in key areas of governance, poverty reduction and HIV/AIDS, capacity development across ministries, linking gender with other SRF goals and increased interventions in countries in special development situations, especially in post-conflict environments. Linkage and coherence in country-level activities improved and, in a substantial number of interventions, national action and implementation of international commitments were linked. Progress was also made in building linkages between country, regional and global programmes in the main strategic areas of the goal. The global gender programme focused on reinforcing corporate commitments and developed tools and methodologies to build capacities of country offices, strengthen the gender focal point network and develop a broad-based network of experts in the field through a consultative process involving 110 countries.

At the level of sub-goals, an increased number of countries reported on UNDP's role as a facilitator of participatory policy-formulation processes, as a source of support for national capacity development and as a promoter of advocacy work within civil society on a variety of gender-equality issues. In terms of tracking and measuring changes in the condition of women, the number of countries reporting decreased from 24 in 1999 to 12 in 2000. Work was concentrated mainly on preparing NHDRs and the training of staff in national statistical offices. Country offices and regional programmes supported government and NGO preparations for the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly on women (see PART THREE, Chapter X), through policy advice and technical cooperation and facilitating the participation of Governments and civil society in the session.

Special development situations

Under the special development situations (SDS) goal, UNDP assistance was most notable in natural-disaster mitigation, mine action and community-based recovery work. Country offices supported community-based activities in post-conflict situations, particularly in revitalizing local economies, rebuilding infrastructure and reintegrating war-affected populations. In terms of coverage, 54 country offices (40 per cent of the total) reported under the goal. As for performance, positive change was reported for 53 per cent of outcomes, with annual targets either fully or partially achieved for 89 per cent of outputs (or 69 per cent after adjusting for weak targets). Ten per cent, or $194 million, of total programme resources was devoted to the goal.

The thrust of UNDP's work in the area of reducing risk of disaster in programme countries was divided between capacity development to manage and reduce the risk of natural disasters (18 country offices) and policy development and advocacy on risk reduction. The two most common outcomes sought to integrate contemporary issues in disaster reduction in national and international disaster policy, and to expand national and regional access to approaches, methods and techniques for disaster reduction and recovery. Other outcomes focused on the establishment of early warning systems and support to UN system coordination in natural disaster response, recovery and reduction. UN disaster management teams successfully coordinated efforts to assist local authorities in planning responses to crises in the Dominican Republic, El Salvador and Indonesia. UNV made noteworthy contributions in that regard in India, Madagascar and Turkey on emergency preparedness or response, as well as awareness-raising and training on natural-disaster prevention. At the output level, progress was clustered on developing capacity for responding to disaster emergencies through the establishment of a government disaster-management focal point and response training, and data collection on local resources for disaster response and seismic hazards.

Under the sub-goal of conflict prevention, peace-building and recovery, the main area of support dealt with recovery processes at the community level. Particular emphasis was placed on re-establishing governing institutions. Specifically, the rule of law and justice institutions were supported by the majority (61 per cent) of country offices, through activities such as the training of judges and lawyers in substantive and procedural areas of law and the strengthening of democratic institutions, particularly in the Congo, East Timor, Guatemala, Haiti, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Rwanda and Somalia.

In terms of coverage, 54 country offices (40 per cent of the total) reported under the SDS category. Positive change was reported for 53 per cent of outcomes, with annual targets either fully or partially achieved for 89 per cent of outputs.

UNDP support to the United Nations

Responding to the request that they all complete goal 6—UNDP support to the United Nations—were 125 country offices (or 92 per cent of the total). Performance was adequate at both outcome and output levels and positive change was reported for 54 per cent of outcomes with annual targets either fully or partially achieved for 57 per cent of outputs.

The key findings for the goal revealed that, in relation to follow-up to global conferences, country-level initiatives were collectively too varied and dispersed to achieve the critical mass necessary for worldwide impact. There was limited cross-regional evidence of either national-level target-setting or systematic monitoring of follow-up. Evidence on integrated follow-up to conferences was sparse and the degree of national ownership did not appear to be high overall.

Progress on UN reforms was mixed. On the one hand, both CCA and UNDAF were contributing to team-building and providing a platform for conference follow-up, while UNDAF in particular was being used as a springboard for joint programming. Data also pointed to increased restructuring, refocusing and utilization of thematic groups. In addition, there was a narrowing in the focus of UN system collaboration towards HIV/AIDS, gender issues and human rights. On the other hand, the uneven quality of CCAs and UNDAFs was limiting the impact of those instruments, and the ability of UN organizations to tackle the issue was hampered by the lack of progress at headquarters on reducing procedural complexity.

The difference in emphasis between the two sub-goals—progress on the global agenda for development and operational activities for development—was mirrored by a divergence in performance, especially at the level of outcomes. Positive change was reported for less than half (44 per cent) for the first sub-goal, compared to 59 per cent for the second. At the output level, the performance rates dropped considerably (55 per cent and 53 per cent, respectively).

During the year, the most notable development at headquarters on follow-up to global conferences was the preparation by the United Nations Development Group (UNDG) of strategies relating to two critical issues: halving extreme poverty by 2015 and the promotion of girls' education, to be used in collaborative efforts with the UN system and in dialogue with development partners. Other developments included the adoption of a guidance note on the preparation of joint programmes/projects, elaboration of draft procedures for joint mid-term reviews of country programmes and UNDAFs, and the launch of DevLink, the UNDG web site to support UN country teams. With regard to administrative and management issues, progress was made on common services and premises with the publication of operational guidelines and the creation of a shared database, training for resident coordinators, team-building and preparation of a training module on poverty, continued development of the competency assessment programme, guidelines on gender balance and the system of performance appraisal, the launch of an inter-agency mobility programme and agreement on harmonized administrative procedures for national project personnel hired by various UN organizations.

The most dominant area of support at the country level was the resident coordinator system. Performance at both outcome and output levels was high. Positive change was reported for 64 per cent of all outcomes, while annual targets were either fully or partially achieved for 90 per cent of outputs, adjusted to 55 per cent to account for weak targets. Among the main efforts reported by country offices were mobilization of UN organizations around common positions on development issues as the springboard for advocacy with national and international partners; widespread application of the sequence in programmatic collaboration, starting with CCA and UNDAF and followed by joint programming; continued expansion and restructuring of the resident coordinator system machinery centred on the thematic groups; and adoption of common services, often in tandem with the creation of the United Nations House.

Programme planning and management

Reform measures

The UNDP Administrator, in a report outlining the implementation of the Secretary-General's reform measures [DP/2001/6], said that a review of ACC had led to the establishment of the High-Level Programme Committee (HLPC), which would have oversight of all programme and operational consultations under the ACC umbrella. However, he stressed that it was important that the inter-agency policy and procedural work on operational activities, which served to convert legislative mandates into actual operational policies, procedures and guidelines, continued while that new area of programme policy was dealt with. HLPC would rely on the Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions (CCPOQ) and its Working Group on the Resident Coordinator System. As the subsidiary bodies of the new HLPC were reviewed and reformed, it was important that the work be given continuity in order for legislative mandates of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council on operational activities to be implemented. In addition, it was important that the bridge provided by the current mechanisms between the United Nations and the UN system as a whole be continued, particularly the resident coordinator system.

The Administrator also reported that the experience of UNDG with sunset clauses for its subsidiary bodies had proved positive in terms of simplifying the UNDG work processes and focusing staff time only on items of top priority.

In terms of funding and resources, UNDP made progress in implementing the multi-year funding framework. In particular, the first ROAR was well received by the Executive Board and the first Ministerial Meeting on UNDP was held with the objective of building further political support for UNDP (see p. 836). During 2000, efforts to strengthen the resident coordinator system included increasing the proportion of women and staff of other agencies as resident coordinators; improving the performance appraisal of resident coordinators and the selection process through the inter-agency advisory panel; training first-time resident coordinators and country teams; and improving the competency assessment model and the annual reporting by resident coordinators.

CCPOQ, at its sixteenth session (Geneva, 29 February–2 March) [ACC/2000/7], adopted, on behalf of ACC, guidelines and information for the resident coordinator system on the UN system and human rights.

UNDP Business Plans 2000-2003

In January, the Executive Board considered the UNDP Business Plans for 2000-2003 [YUN 1999, p. 802]. The Administrator, in introducing the Plans, stressed that UNDP was believed to be facing a funding crisis, but in reality it was a development crisis. The continued erosion of UNDP's funding base would greatly affect UN development activities, particularly in Africa, where UNDP would be spending less than 50 per cent of what it had spent five years previously. However, UNDP needed to show that it could perform and have an impact through its programmes, even with reduced resources. Through programme successes, the organization could attract more resources. In the light of the declining core resource base, UNDP had sought to organize and align its services, expertise and operations behind the priorities of programme countries. The organization could deliver advice, particularly in policy dialogue and institutional development. While driving its work upstream in response to programme country demand, UNDP was moving away from a small dispersed project portfolio towards projects that supported strategic advice for change.

In a 28 January decision [E/2000/35 (dec. 2000/1)], the Executive Board welcomed the Administrator's efforts to secure the future of UNDP as a leading UN development programme and affirmed its support for those efforts. It expressed concern at the decline in the level of core resources and called on the Administrator, in the context of the implementation of the Business Plans, to increase efforts to secure predictable funding for UNDP and to reach the agreed annual funding target of $1.1 billion in core resources. The Board noted that the Business Plans emphasized that UNDP operational activities should remain country-driven. Looking forward to the timely implementation of the Business Plans, the Board requested the Administrator to report on the Plans' evolution and implementation as part of the reporting cycle established under the multi-year funding framework.

Also on 28 January [dec. 2000/6], the Board took note of the report on the comprehensive assessment of the UNDP 2001 change management process [YUN 1999, p. 804].

UNDP role in post-conflict situations

Building on the UNDP Business Plans 2000-2003, the Administrator submitted a March report entitled "Meeting the challenge: the role of UNDP in crisis, post-conflict and recovery situations, 2000-2003" [DP/2000/18]. According to the Administrator, as the incidence of special development situations increased and the diversity of the underlying causes broadened, pressures had grown on UNDP and the world community to respond in a more effective and sustainable manner. UNDP had made considerable progress in reorganizing and redirecting its efforts and resources to act in those situations, by supporting and coordinating aid, instituting organizational, management and policy changes, and financing its operations in that area, using target for resource assignment from the core (TRAC) line 1.1.3, trust funds, cost-sharing and parallel financing generated within its frameworks or programmes. As at the end of February 2000, a total of $150 million had been assigned to 225 projects in 85 countries under TRAC line 1.1.3, 75 per cent of which ($113 million) was for complex development situations in 41 countries (category I), 9 per cent ($13 million) for immediate response to sudden crises in 68 countries (category II) and 16 per cent ($24 million) to capacity-building and prevention activities in 23 countries (category III). The resources were allocated to governance projects, general reintegration and reconstruction, mine action and demobilization, and the preparation of strategic frameworks.

Despite the steps taken by UNDP to address the underlying causes of special development situations, much still needed to be done. UNDP needed to improve its performance to make it a more predictable partner within the inter-agency framework, and its operations had to be made more coherent with its overall corporate goals. Additional extrabudgetary resources were required to consolidate and expand its programmes.

As a way forward, the Administrator proposed that UNDP focus on strengthening the resident/humanitarian coordinator system, expanding its partnerships with key organizations and agencies, improving preventive activities, consolidating activities both in post-conflict and post-disaster situations under sustainable recovery programmes and strengthening its own response capacities.

Also in March [DP/2000/14], the Administrator submitted an evaluation entitled "Sharing new ground in post-conflict situations: the role of UNDP in support of reintegration programmes". The evaluation team reviewed the adequacy of UNDP interventions and assessed the quality of its response to reintegration programmes in terms of being proactive or event/donor-driven, staffing and ability to form effective partnerships. The evaluation found many instances of successful programming by UNDP in its areas of intervention. It noted in particular the important role that area-based programmes had played in recovery and the significant technical assistance UNDP had provided to national demining efforts.

The team recommended that UNDP recognize post-conflict assistance as a major part of its mission and formulate an overall policy statement on its role in that area, and specifically in reintegration programmes; reassess the level of funding for special development situations; turn its Emergency Response Division into a strong technical resource unit and clarify the field backstopping responsibilities of the regional bureaux and the Division; concentrate its support to the reintegration of war-affected populations on restoring social and human capital through area-based approaches at the community level and not at the target-group level; devise a strategy to ensure greater use of NGOs and UNVs during post-conflict situations; and assign staff to country offices early on in complex emergencies to assist in infusing a development perspective into humanitarian assistance strategies and activities. The team also recommended that country offices develop special resource mobilization strategies for use during post-conflict periods, and that UNDP step up to the challenge of serving as manager of technical-level joint programming units.

The Executive Board, in April [dec. 2000/10], took note of the report on the role of UNDP in crisis, post-conflict and recovery situations, 2000-2003, and invited the Administrator to present in 2001 a further elaboration of UNDP's specific role in special development situations and plans for its further implementation after a full and wide-ranging consultation process. The Board also took note of the executive summary of the evaluation of UNDP's role in reintegration programmes.

Communication and advocacy strategy

During the Executive Board's June session [E/2000/35], the Director of the UNDP Communications Office gave an oral report on the UNDP communication strategy, aimed at mobilizing political and financial support for the organization. He said that a clear image of UNDP, differentiating it from other UN organizations, needed to be communicated to outside constituents. UNDP benefited from a global network of knowledge grounded in its field experience and access to a wide range of experts. Its mission of reducing poverty would be accomplished through its advice to Governments and institutions on meeting development challenges, working with partners to mobilize talent and resources and playing an advocacy role through the Human Development Report and other mechanisms. The communication strategy would focus on issues related to information technology for development, sustainable trade, conflict prevention, post-crisis recovery, assistance to Governments, HIV/AIDS and UN coordination.

The Communications Office would market the plan. It intended to service UNDP country offices and headquarters through a strengthened media section at headquarters and in select cities in the field; a new Internet section that would tap web sites for media and advocacy outreach; the production of targeted and easy-to-read publications; private sector sponsorship of UNDP special events; and training.

On 23 June [dec. 2000/17], the Executive Board took note of the oral report on the communication and advocacy strategy.

Evaluation

The Administrator, in a July report on evaluation, covering the period from January 1999 to June 2000 [DP/2000/34], described evaluation activities that had contributed to increasing UNDP effectiveness.

Four strategic areas were highlighted: aligning monitoring and evaluation instruments with results-based management; strengthening substantive accountability; promoting organizational learning and partnerships; and a macro-level assessment of UNDP performance based on evaluation data. Considerable progress had been made in strengthening methodologies for results-based management and making it operational, managing the design of SRFs, working with country offices and contributing to the preparation of the first ROAR. Methodologies and tools for assessing impact at the country level and an evaluative research programme had been developed to promote stronger substantive accountability. That objective had been furthered by the systematic monitoring of evaluation compliance and by the promotion of evaluation plans as a real-time instrument for country-level substantive accountability.

The Evaluation Office, in overseeing the evaluation function of UNDP, had paid particular attention to assessing the extent to which evaluation recommendations had been followed up, and the mechanisms by which that was achieved. An upward trend was revealed in the achievement of immediate objectives, and the relevance of ownership, measured by the level of government support, in contributing towards that improvement.

The Executive Board, on 29 September [dec. 2000/24], took note of the evaluation report.

UNDP Funding

Multi-year funding framework

The Director of the Evaluation Office, in an oral report to the Executive Board in April on the emerging results of the multi-year funding framework (MYFF), which was introduced in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 806], noted that the ROAR would be the next step in the implementation of the MYFF process. Key outcomes and outputs of all six MYFF goals would be included, with more detailed analysis of the three highlighted sub-goals for 1999: strengthening the capacity of key governance institutions for people-oriented development and fostering social cohesion; promoting poverty-focused development and reduced vulnerability; and providing effective and integrated follow-up to UN global conferences within the context of sustainable human development. Further action would include revising the SRF and employing it as a management tool, using the ROAR analysis as a basis for improving future performance, furthering the ROAR methodology's evolution, sharpening UNDP's comparative advantage and identifying and building on emerging products and services.

On 7 April [dec. 2000/10], the Executive Board took note of the oral report.

UNDP, in a July report on an updated resource allocation framework and the revised MYFF [DP/2000/31], focused on the main lessons with regard to the implementation of the MYFF through the SRF and ROAR instruments. The report warned that the current trend for core resources to stagnate risked jeopardizing UNDP's ability to meet fully the results envisaged under the MYFF. The approval of the four-year MYFF was a cornerstone in consolidating results-based management (RBM) in UNDP as a new approach to managing the delivery of results, and while it was premature to draw decisive lessons from the RBM experience, the formulation of the MYFF and the ROAR had pinpointed both clear successes and issues that required further attention and effort.

The corporate ROAR for 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 795] confirmed that UNDP's programme performance was, to a great extent, consonant with the intended results and outcomes of the MYFF. It did not suggest the need for a substantive revision of MYFF, but highlighted issues that needed to be addressed to place RBM firmly at the heart of UNDP management approaches. A number of those issues concerned aspects of the SRF/ROAR methodology, which required further attention as part of a continuing, systematic effort to improve performance monitoring, and the SRF template needed to be simplified and updated to better reflect UNDP key results areas and policy focus. The information generated by the MYFF and the ROAR needed to be better organized through the integrated data management system. The link between the traditional classification of UNDP expenditures and the new SRF categories should be reviewed to strengthen the MYFF linkage between programme areas, results and financial resources.

At the country office level, there was a continuing need to ensure full alignment with other programme instruments, such as the CCF, the country office management plan and UNDAF, to ensure clarity and coherence of purpose. UNDP was also reviewing links between key aspects in country SRFs and ROARs and performance accountability, particularly in terms of the UNDP resident representative.

At the end of the first year of the MYFF, the goal of increasing voluntary contributions had not been achieved. By contrast, trust funds/third-party cost-sharing and government cost-sharing continued to grow dynamically. The aggregate figures masked the serious financial crisis that UNDP was facing in its regular resource base, which represented only 28 per cent of total UNDP resources for 1999. Other resources could not substitute for a sufficient, predictable and sound base in regular funding. As a result, the Administrator expressed concern that the opportunity presented by RBM through the MYFF and its associated instruments could be undermined.

The Administrator believed that it would be premature to present an updated integrated resource framework (IRF), which linked activities, results and financial allocations, to the Executive Board at its current session, and he proposed to submit a revised IRF in conjunction with his biennial budget proposals in 2001.

In September [dec. 2000/24], the Board took note of the report and agreed to consider in 2001 a revised IRF in conjunction with the 2002-2003 biennial budget.

Successor programming arrangements

In February [DP/2000/17], the Administrator, in a report on successor programming arrangements, provided the revised and final TRAC earmarkings for 2001-2003. Final earmarkings were provided for total TRAC resources under lines 1.1.1 and 1.1.2 of the budget for that period, by region and category of country. The total final earmarkings for the period were $1,767.5 million, compared to the preliminary figure of $1,738.8 million, based on $3.3 billion in total resources for the period and excluding TRAC earmarkings for new net contributor countries. Of that amount, 88 per cent was allocated to low-income countries with a gross national product (GNP) per capita of $375 or less and 12 per cent for middle-income countries. By region, Africa would receive 48 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 31 per cent; Arab States, 8 per cent; Europe and CIS, 8 per cent; and Latin America and the Caribbean, 5 per cent. Final earmarkings under line 1.1.1 were also provided for individual countries, grouped by region, and TRAC-1 earmarkings for new net contributor countries for 2001-2003 and reimbursable TRAC-1 for 2000.

In April [dec. 2000/10], the Executive Board took note of the report.

Financing

In his annual review of the financial situation for 2000 [DP/2001/22 & Add.1], the Administrator presented an overview of UNDP's financial status at the end of the year, as well as comparative figures for 1999.

The regular resources situation continued to present a major challenge for UNDP in meeting its MYFF goals. The continuing shortfall in voluntary contributions compared to the agreed targets led to the erosion of the amount of financial resources that programme countries received from UNDP through the TRAC system. Further, UNDP experienced significant cash-flow problems in terms of regular resources due to the irregular payment of contributions by some donors, necessitating the utilization of the operational reserve in eight months of the year, thus impeding UNDP's ability to manage its financial resources effectively. Third-party co-financing, on the other hand, had increased to 30 per cent of the aggregate income, and programme-country cost-sharing continued to represent a significant portion of the total income received.

Compared to 1999, total regular resources income decreased by 9.8 per cent to $649 million and total expenditure went down by 13.5 per cent to $702 million. Overall, there was a 29 per cent decline in the available resource balance. Voluntary contributions to the regular resources fell by 6.9 per cent, to $634 million. Contributions received from the top 15 non-programme country donors (Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, United Kingdom, United States) totalled $607 million, or 96 per cent of total resources. As at 31 December 2000, some $25 million remained unpaid for 2000 and prior years.

Total expenditure under regular resources declined to $702 million from $811 million in 1999. Programme expenditures in 2000 fell to $378 million, compared to $490 million in 1999. Regular resources programme expenditure under national execution declined by 10 per cent, from $260 million to $233 million. In terms of percentage share of programme expenditure among regions, delivery dropped in the Africa region from $206 million in 1999 to $143 million, and in Asia and the Pacific, it fell from $145 million to $131 million. Expenditure in Eastern Europe and CIS remained steady at $41 million and in the Arab States it increased slightly from $25 million to $27 million. In Latin America and the Caribbean, regular resources expenditures amounted to $25 million, excluding the top five countries.

Programme support to implementing agents decreased to $42 million, compared to $51 million in 1999, as a result of the decrease in total delivery and the change in execution patterns.

As at 31 December, the balance of unexpended resources for regular resources activities was at its lowest level since 1984 at $76 million, a decline of 29 per cent from the 1999 figure of $107 million. The level of investments for regular resources increased by 58 per cent ($26 million) to $71.9 million, due mainly to the net reduction in advances to Governments.

For the other resource activities, which comprised mainly government and third-party cost-sharing, government cash-counterpart contributions, trust funds, management services agreements and the Junior Professional Officer programme, representing the bulk of all activities managed by UNDP, overall income remained stable at $1.8 billion. However, expenditure decreased by 4 per cent ($66 million). Contributions received totalled $1.69 billion, of which 56 per cent accounted for government cost-sharing. Third-party co-financing registered a marked increase, from $495 million in 1997 to $713 million in 2000.

In September [dec. 2000/24], the Executive Board took note of the UNDP annual review report on the financial situation for 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 809].

UNDP regular funding and cash-flow management

In January [DP/2000/CRP.3], UNDP submitted a preliminary report on its regular funding and cash-flow management, which examined contributions payment performance and hedging activities in 1999. A more detailed review, covering contributions from all countries, was to be provided to the Executive Board in connection with the funding session to be held in April.

The Administrator reported that the overall experience in the payment of contributions in 1999 remained suboptimal. Of the 17 major donors that announced specific payment schedules for their 1999 voluntary contributions, with a combined value of $584 million, only 8 fully met the dates they had specified ($332 million), 4 countries ($127 million) effected payments within one month of the original dates, another 4 countries ($110 million) effected payments more than one month later and 1 country ($12 million) did not make any payment in 1999. The cash-flow contributions from major donors in 1999 did not keep pace with those of 1998. In November 1999, $157 million, or 22 per cent of 1999 pledges, remained unpaid, as compared to $18 million, or 2 per cent of 1998 pledges, a year earlier. Preliminary estimates indicated that UNDP had utilized up to $20 million from its operational reserve to meet its cash-flow needs through 30 November 1999. The cash-flow trend was particularly troublesome given the organization's commitment to and success in recent years in reducing its balance of liquid resources to a low level. Moreover, since a significant portion of 1999 pledged contributions was not received in accordance with the payment dates announced by donors, UNDP was only able to engage in hedging to the value of some $160 million in non-dollar denominated contributions. The total amounts hedged were affected by the lack of definitive information concerning amounts and/or payment schedules early in the year for several major contributors. The Administrator requested that all donors provide a set schedule of payments and ensure that it was honoured.

On 26 January [dec. 2000/3], the Executive Board noted the information presented by UNDP, the serious impact of delayed payments on cash-flow management and the importance of officially announcing regular resources contributions for 2000 as early in the year as possible. It supported the Administrator's recommendation for a comprehensive implementation of the elements of the UNDP funding strategy (YUN 1998, p. 825) concerning the announcement of pledges and adherence to a fixed payment schedule.

In March [DP/2000/CRP.6 & DP/2000/CRP.9/Rev.1], the Administrator reported on regular funding commitments and/or estimates for 2000 and onwards to UNDP and its associated funds and programmes. Estimates for the gross contributions to regular resources for 2000, using the UN official exchange rate as at 1 March 2000, were $682 million. Pledges for 2001 stood at $252 million. For 2000, 12 countries had increased their commitments by 20 per cent or more in the currency in which they pledged, 29 countries had pledged to retain their 1999 contribution levels, and a further nine programme countries had indicated their decision to resume payments to UNDP regular resources in 2000. However, it was of concern that six countries, including three members of the Development Assistance Committee of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, had announced reduced contributions. The report outlined the specific payment schedules for 2000 contributions provided to the secretariat on or before 28 March.

The Administrator said that, while the total amount of regular resources for 2000 was slightly below the level of the income received in 1999, it was estimated that by the end of the year, the downward trend would have stopped. While several programme countries were not in a position at the time of reporting to confirm their 2000 contributions to regular resources, a number of them had increased their contributions. The reversal of the downward trend by the end of 2000 was urgently required if progress was to be made towards the annual targets established by the MYFF. To rebuild the regular resource base, greater collective political commitment to increasing contributions should be developed. Since the voluntary nature of regular funding to UNDP continued to leave critical UN development activities particularly vulnerable to reductions, greater attention needed to be paid by the Executive Board to the collective MYFF targets agreed so that regular funding levels could quickly return to a pattern of growth. It was also important that in 2001 an even greater number of countries commit to the multi-year pledges. In terms of enhancing predictability, 16 Members had made indicative multi-year pledges. Given the strength of the United States dollar, it was important that those Member States that had not done so provide a schedule of payments at the second funding meeting so that UNDP could take financial decisions to protect the dollar value of the pledge. Given the continued critical situation regarding funding, the Board should review an updated regular resources situation for 2000 at its third regular session, in line with the MYFF discussion and the review of the overall financial situation, and request countries that were in a position to do so to supplement their 2000 contributions to UNDP.

In introducing the item on funding commitments to UNDP before the Executive Board in April, the Administrator pointed to five broad lessons of UNDP's current financial crisis: UNDP should remain firmly committed to its reform agenda, press ahead with new non-core strategies and partnerships, learn from the positive examples provided by the United Nations Volunteers programme and the United Nations Development Fund for Women, which had recorded increased contributions in 2000, reinforce political support for UNDP and translate political support into practical action. With regard to the last point, the Administrator emphasized the need for a more formalized transparent multi-year commitment from donors, and suggested establishing an International Development Association-like funding arrangement that would provide UNDP with a multi-year commitment that was predictable and ensured fair burden-sharing for donors. As a way forward, he proposed the holding of a ministerial-level meeting with the specific aim of debating and endorsing such a plan around the time of the General Assembly's Millennium Summit in September (see p. 47).

On 7 April [dec. 2000/10], the Executive Board took note of the report on regular funding commitments to UNDP and its associated programmes for 2000 and onwards. It also noted that the Administrator would consult with all partners to explore their interest in convening a ministerial-level meeting at the earliest appropriate date to address the organization's funding situation.

Ministerial Meeting on UNDP

The first Ministerial Meeting on UNDP was held in New York on 11 September. The purpose of the meeting was to consult Governments on the direction of the new UNDP and seek ways to boost recognition and support for it at the country level and in key international forums. The meeting, attended by ministers and representatives of 67 programme and donor countries, discussed support for the UN role in development and rebuilding political support for that mission; the new direction and reforms at UNDP; its comparative advantages and partnerships with developing countries; steps taken by UNDP to improve performance and deliver results; and the need to resolve UNDP's resource situation. It had before it a document entitled "Rebuilding support for United Nations development cooperation", containing a series of background notes on UNDP as the operational arm of the United Nations, building on results, UNDP and universality, UNDP's financial situation and UNDP's challenge ahead.

In his address to the meeting, the Secretary-General said that development had been one of the main tasks of the United Nations from the very beginning and UNDP was involved in that day-to-day work in individual countries. Being a universal network made its services uniquely valuable, since it was well placed to tell people what had worked in one country and what did not in another, problems that might arise with a particular policy and how to get around them. Through its country offices, it brought coherence to the work of the United Nations throughout the world and provided leadership to the different agencies; since not all agencies were represented in every country, UNDP's presence was even more important. UNDP was also best placed to take the lead in post-conflict peace-building, in cooperation with other UN agencies and the World Bank. UNDP was central to the whole UN mission, but it needed support and a sympathetic audience.

The Chairman, in his oral summary of the meeting [DP/2001/CRP.3], noted the endorsement of the Secretary-General's vision, outlined in his keynote address, of the UN role in development and the essential part played by UNDP, particularly in the light of the Millennium Declaration (see p. 49) and its emphasis on the continuing challenge of poverty eradication; and of the new direction of UNDP, as a poverty agency working in its areas of comparative advantage, including capacity-building in governance and policy, special development situations and new areas, such as information technology and the use of the Internet. He also noted the meeting's recognition of the value of UNDP's role as an advocate at global and national levels, including through the Human Development Report and its linkage to UNDP's universal presence, also serving the rest of the UN system; concerns that, while a universal UNDP was indispensable to the mandate of the United Nations itself, resource constraints presented a significant challenge to geographical coverage by the organization; the importance of UNDP's coordination role, as well as partnerships beyond the UN family; the importance of preserving the country-driven nature of UNDP programmes and of maintaining its capacity to respond to country priorities; recognition of the Administrator's commitment to results, internal reform and management performance and excellence at all levels; political and financial support for the reform process; and concern about the resource situation and the importance of rebuilding the core resource base.

The Chairman noted the various options put forward by ministers for rebuilding political support for UNDP, including advocacy for aid to development and to the United Nations, at the national level; options for UNDP to be considered in other international or regional forums; the proposal by a number of ministers to hold annual events similar to the 11 September 2000 meeting; ways for ministers to continue their involvement in the dialogue on UNDP and its future; means by which UNDP could communicate its improved performance from the field; and options for the role of the Executive Board.

The Executive Board, at its third regular session in September, discussed follow-up to the Ministerial Meeting. Suggestions were made that ministerial meetings be held every four years, in conjunction with the start of the new MYFFs, or in the context of UNGD meetings, or that the Bureau of the Board meet annually at the ministerial level until the funding crisis was resolved.

Audit reports

In January, the Executive Board considered the Administrator's updated report [DP/2000/6] on implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors for the 1996-1997 biennium [YUN 1998, p. 1288], which provided a tabular summary of recommendations by area of audit, together with the status of follow-up action as at 30 September 1999 and target dates for implementation. The Administrator said that progress had already been made in many areas and efforts were being made to address outstanding issues.

On 28 January [dec. 2000/6], the Board took note of the Administrator's report.

In May [DP/2000/21 & Corr.1], the Administrator submitted a report on UNDP internal audit and oversight activities for 1999 provided by its Office of Audit and Performance Review (OAPR). During that year, OAPR produced 168 audit, investigation and related reports. In addition, 33 control self-assessment workshops were held, the results of 1,231 national execution audit reports were evaluated and feedback was provided to country offices.

OAPR conducted audits/reviews of headquarters units and corporate functions. Six reports were issued, containing 118 recommendations. Of those, 101 (86 per cent) were accepted by the auditees and had been or were being implemented. Two of the six reports included the special audits of change-management and information-systems expenditures prepared at the request of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ). Of the remaining four reports, two were audits/reviews of headquarters units and two were audits of corporate functions.

OAPR provided internal audit and related services to 64 of the 134 country offices. A total of 64 internal audit reports were issued, containing 2,297 recommendations. Of those, 88 per cent were accepted by auditees and the remaining 12 per cent were being pursued. As required under UNDP financial regulations, Governments submitted audited financial reports for nationally executed projects and programmes. In 1999, 1,352 reports were received from 108 countries, of which 1,231 were evaluated (from 104 countries), and the findings were reported to the country offices concerned. Significant improvement was noted in the number, timeliness and quality of audit reports received from country offices, as compared with the year before. However, a number of concerns remained, related to internal controls, project-management structure, financial monitoring, and procurement and equipment. The Office had 56 special audit and investigation cases active during the year, an increase of 6 per cent over 1998, 33 of which were still active at the end of 1999. The issues ranged from allegations of fraud and serious misconduct to inadequate performance and potential conflict of interest. Several cases were being dealt with in cooperation with the Office of Internal Oversight Services, including that of the Reserve for Field Accommodation, a case that involved legal action against two individuals.

On 23 June [dec. 2000/17], the Board took note of the Administrator's report.

2000-2001 budget update

In September, the Administrator, in an oral update on the budget for the 2000-2001 biennium, reported that total income for regular resources in 2000 was likely to amount to only $666 million, down from $681 million the previous year, due to a strong United States dollar. Cash-flow problems had necessitated a draw-down of close to $100 million from the operational reserve, although UNDP was in the process of replenishing it. UNDP would take steps to be financially prudent by reducing total expenditure by 8 per cent in 2000, remaining committed to a zero nominal growth budget for 2002-2003, unlocking $5 million in regular resources and shifting $20 million in regular and other non-core resources from headquarters to the field through the restructuring process. A target of a 15 per cent across-the-board cut in country offices' costs was set for 2001, due to the need to cap any increase in administrative costs so that 100 cents of every dollar of regular resources would go to programme rather than overhead costs. Part of the cut would generate extra savings for new investments, such as improving connectivity for country offices. Against that background, he had decided not to submit a revised budget for the 2000-2001 biennium.

On 29 September [dec. 2000/24], the Board took note of the oral update on the 2000-2001 budget.

Revision of Financial Regulations and Rules

The Executive Board in January considered the Administrator's report containing a comprehensive revision of UNDP Financial Regulations and Rules [YUN 1999, p. 811]; a comparative table [DP/2000/CRP.5] prepared by the United Nations Office of Legal Affairs (OLA), which contained a comparison of current UNDP Financial Regulations and Rules and the proposed new Financial Regulations and Rules, as well as relevant comments by OLA; and the comments and observations of ACABQ thereon [DP/2000/7]. ACABQ had recommended that the Administrator resubmit his proposed amendments in a format that would permit the easy identification of the proposed changes with precise and succinct explanations, indicating the reasons for the changes to each regulation.

In response to ACABQ's request, the Administrator, in January [DP/2000/CRP.4], submitted further clarifications to his proposed new Financial Regulations and Rules. While noting the difficulties and positions of ACABQ, he acknowledged that, because of their comprehensive nature touching many financial and technical issues relating to UNDP activities, the proposed revisions were not easily comparable to the current Regulations and Rules. The presentation as suggested by ACABQ would not facilitate an understanding of the rationale for the overall revision. Instead, he had chosen to present the proposed revisions and to circulate OLA's comprehensive comparative table. The Administrator also responded to ACABQ comments relating to a number of specific proposals. He underlined the implications any delays in approving the revised Financial Regulations and Rules would have for the implementation of a UNDP accountability framework, reiterating that the current Regulations and Rules were no longer adequate.

The Executive Board, on 28 January [dec. 2000/4], approved the proposed revised Financial Regulations with further amendments to eight of them, which were included in an annex to the decision, with the exception of regulations 16.03 regarding a limited authority for the Administrator to advance funds from regular resources prior to the receipt of anticipated contributions to other resources; 17.04 regarding authorization for the Administrator to select an intergovernmental or non-governmental organization as executing entity; 19.01 regarding an expanded grant modality; and 25.09 regarding authority for the Administrator to establish credit facilities. It requested the Administrator to present additional information on those issues, pending approval of which the current related Financial Regulations would remain in effect. He would also defer approval of the associated financial rules for the four proposed regulations. The Board requested the Administrator to keep the Financial Regulations under review and to submit to the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (Financial and Budgetary Questions) (CCAQ) of ACC the changes in terminology. It recommended that UNDP seek the views of CCAQ on any new proposed changes of terminology in the Financial Regulations and Rules, with a view towards harmonization. The Board called for informal consultations on any proposed change to ensure that the changes and their rationale were fully explained in a useful format.

Procurement

In September, the Executive Board considered the Administrator's report on the activities of the Inter-Agency Procurement Services Office (IAPSO) from June 1998 to June 2000 [DP/2000/33].

In addition to the information on 1998 and 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 811], the report also indicated that, in May 2000, IAPSO implemented the first phase of electronic commerce through its web site, enabling clients to request full quotations, including insurance, freight charges and handling fees. Automated quotations were provided by e-mail normally within 24 hours after review. That process was currently under review to ensure that eligible clients received fully automated quotations immediately. In the long term, IAPSO planned to enter fully into electronic commerce, involving both electronic ordering by IAPSO to suppliers and receiving electronic orders from eligible clients over the Internet. It also implemented a security package to provide enhanced security for electronic-commerce transactions. As an interim measure, electronic transactions would be backed up by hard-copy documentation to ensure that UNDP Financial Regulations and Rules were followed and that there was an adequate audit trail. IAPSO was also discussing expanding its web site for the dissemination of collective price agreements with other UN organizations and international finance institutions.

The annual statistical report, 1999 [DP/2000/32], issued in August 2000, covered procurement of goods and services, international project personnel, the UNV programme and fellowships, providing details on procurement by country of supply to the UN system. According to the information provided, total procurement by the UN system under all sources of funding during 1998 was $3 billion and the share of procurement from developing countries was 42 per cent. The percentage share of procurement from developing countries had been increasing steadily over the previous few years. Under UNDP funding, the corresponding figure for the share of procurement from developing countries was 85 per cent. At the time of the report, the collection of data for 1999 procurement was still in progress.

The Executive Board, on 29 September [dec. 2000/24], took note of the report on IAPSO activities and recommended that the Office continue to explore ways in which the expanded use of collective pricing agreements could be coordinated with other entities of the UN system.

Other technical cooperation

UN activities

The Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), responsible for UN technical cooperation activities, had more than 1,100 technical cooperation projects under execution during 2000 in a dozen substantive sectors, with a total project expenditure of $72.5 million. Projects financed by UNDP represented $46.1 million; those by trust funds, $24.4 million; and, by UNFPA, $2 million.

On a geographical basis, the DESA-executed programme included expenditures of $29.3 million in the Middle East; $20.7 million in inter-regional and global programmes; $12.6 million in Africa; $7.6 million in Asia and the Pacific; $1.6 million in the Americas; and $0.7 million in Europe. Project delivery in the Middle East, which included expenditures of $21.5 million for the Iraq programme, was the largest, with a 40 per cent share of total delivery.

Distribution of expenditure by substantive sectors was as follows: energy, $28.1 million; Associate Expert programme, $13.7 million; economic policy, $11 million; public administration, $5.8 million; water, $5 million; social policy, $2.9 million; statistics, $2 million; infrastructure, $1.6 million; institutional support, $1 million; minerals, $0.6 million; public finance, $0.3 million; advancement of women, $0.3 million; and population, $0.2 million. Of the total delivery of $72.5 million, energy (including the Iraq programme) comprised 39 per cent; Associate Expert programme, 19 per cent; and economic policy, 15 per cent.

On a component basis, DESA's delivery in 2000 included $38 million for project personnel, $19.2 million for equipment, $10.5 million for subcontracts, $3.3 million for training and $1.5 million for miscellaneous expenses.

UN Office for Project Services

The United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) continued to respond to specific and diverse demands for project services, operating in accordance with the self-financing principle with no assessed budget financing and executing programmes on behalf of UN organizations.

2000 activities

The UNOPS Executive Director, in his annual report to the Executive Board for 2000 [DP/2001/19], described activities and assessed performance compared to the targets set in the 2000-2001 UNOPS Business Plan.

The total value of the UNOPS project and loan portfolios amounted to $3.7 billion in 2000, comprising $1.5 billion in project value and $2.2 billion in loan value.

Total delivery was $664 million, 20 per cent below the target of $836 million, comprising $471 million in expenditure on project portfolio and $193 million in disbursement authorizations for the IFAD loan portfolio. The shortfall in UNOPS project delivery amounted to $119 million in 2000, owing to the unforeseen rephasing, reduction and cancellation of approved project budgets. Disbursements authorized by UNOPS under the IFAD loan portfolio ($193 million) were 22 per cent below the forecast of $246 million.

Total income was $48.5 million, $3.1 million or 6 per cent short of the target of $51.6 million, distributed as follows: $36.8 million from delivery of the project portfolio; $6.5 million from loan-administration and other services; and $5.2 million in other income. Income from sources other than UNDP rose to $16.5 million, or 34 per cent of the total UNOPS income.

Recurring administrative expenditure was $52.3 million, or $0.7 million above the projection of $51.6 million. Non-recurring administrative expenditure was $3 million, 97 per cent of the projection. Total expenditure was $6.8 million more than total income, a shortfall that would be met by a drawdown from the operational reserve in that amount.

In reviewing its activities, the Executive Director said that UNOPS had intensified efforts to diversify both its client base and the type of services it provided. In partnership with IFAD, it introduced new implementation concepts, such as new methods of channelling non-traditional rural microfinance in Bangladesh, Nepal and Uganda, and the establishment of financial instruments and institutions that focused exclusively on the rural poor, such as the discount funds for lending in Chile, Paraguay, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Uruguay.

Work in countries in special circumstances included the management of the mine-action programme in northern Iraq and assisting in implementing programmes supporting internally displaced persons, a humanitarian information centre, and an urban water sanitation programme in Iraq. UNOPS began implementing a $17 million programme funded by the United Nations Environment Programme for the clean-up of environmental hot spots in four municipalities in Serbia (FRY). Its assistance provided to peacekeeping missions reached substantial levels in 2000. It implemented six projects for the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) (see PART ONE, Chapter V) worth $7 million and provided procurement and management services to the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).

In the area of social accountability, UNOPS began to develop an independently audited and verified system to ensure quality in the workplace and worked with a not-for-profit organization in Brazil to promote business ethics and social responsibility within the business community.

UNOPS released four of the nine volumes of its Operational Guide for the management of rehabilitation and social sustainability in societies affected by conflicts or natural disasters—an inter-agency effort coordinated by UNOPS. It provided procurement support services in developing countries and in countries in special circumstances. Procurement services supported post-conflict initiatives of UN organizations and missions, as well as projects in governance, public administration, capacity-building and economic and social development.

In the area of risk management, UNOPS offered a variety of contract tools, together with skills training. Specialized insurance arrangements and an operational reserve were maintained to protect against unavoidable risks. Support services were provided for procurement activities from the bidding process to contract disputes, trade advice and commercial practices.

Management advisory services were provided to the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific to support its revitalization programme, management consultancy services to the International Atomic Energy Agency, and advisory services in support of UNMIK efforts in Kosovo to rehabilitate local administrative institutions, to WFP in Guatemala in the formulation of its country programme and to the Soros Foundation and the Centre for Legal Action and Human Rights. In 2000, the Executive Director introduced a new operational concept of partnerships with the private sector and with NGOs. Eleven partnerships were signed and work initiated on developing a dedicated partnership regime that would enable UNOPS to enter into non-commercial partnerships.

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, on 23 June [E/2000/35 (dec. 2000/16)], took note of the Executive Director's report on UNOPS activities in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 812], including operation in accordance with the self-financing principle in relation to recurring administrative expenditure. It requested the Management Coordination Committee to assist UNOPS and UNDP in overcoming difficulties relating to financial reporting and arrangements. The Board noted that a drawdown of $13.8 million from the UNOPS operational reserve was effected in 1999 to cover part of its non-recurring expenditure and requested the Executive Director to inform the Board regularly on the timing and means of re-constituting the operational reserve. It also noted with concern that the cost of relocating UNOPS headquarters had risen from $8.5 million to $14 million.

UNDP/UNOPS relationship

In March [DP/2000/13], the Administrator submitted to the Executive Board an evaluation of the relationship between UNDP and UNOPS, five years after they separated pursuant to General Assembly decision 48/501 [YUN 1994, p. 806]. The evaluation team also made recommendations on improving the working relationship between the two organizations. The evaluation found that co-operation between UNDP and UNOPS functioned well when there was a clear understanding of the respective roles and possible synergies, as well as effective personal relationships. In other cases, there was a lack of satisfaction on both sides with the performance of the other party. UNOPS continued to be heavily dependent on UNDP as a funding source for most of its business. However, their relations were largely characterized by mistrust and misunderstanding, due in part to the lack of a clear definition of their respective roles and responsibilities at the corporate level. The oversight and coordination mechanisms created had not functioned adequately and there were overlaps and competing competencies between the two institutions. Both had difficulty in recognizing each other's role—UNDP with regard to UNOPS as the major executing/implementing agent of the UN system and UNOPS with regard to UNDP as its major funding source. The budgetary cuts over the past 10 years had weakened the UNDP country office structure, which had led to reduced UNOPS participation in programme implementation. The performance of UNOPS in delivering its services was uneven, creating tension between the two institutions.

In terms of the future UNDP/UNOPS relationship, the evaluation recommended that UNOPS remain a separate and identifiable entity but that its relationship with UNDP be clearly defined. The team identified six main areas where action was urgently needed: defining the respective roles and responsibilities; institutional arrangements; fund-raising and business acquisition; execution modalities; financing principles for country offices; and administrative and management issues. It presented specific recommendations on each of those areas.

Also in March [DP/2000/CRP.8], UNOPS and UNDP submitted a joint review of the recommendations contained in the evaluation report, which were set out in two categories: those that were acceptable to both organizations and could be acted on immediately and those requiring further consultations, discussions and guidance from the Executive Board. Recommendations under the first category related to the status of UNOPS, instructions to resident representatives as representatives of UNOPS, the Users Advisory Group, the project-management matrix, financial reporting and administrative issues. The second category dealt with recommendations on delineation of responsibilities, the Management Coordination Committee, resource mobilization, execution modalities and financing principles for country offices.

On 7 April [dec. 2000/10], the Executive Board took note of the two reports and decided to revert to the item at its 2001 annual session.

On 23 June [dec. 2000/16], the Board emphasized the importance of follow-up of the evaluation report on the UNDP/UNOPS relationship and requested that a progress report be submitted later in the year on implementation of the recommendations.

In response, UNDP submitted, in July [DP/2000/35], a progress report on follow-up and a joint review of recommendations, which indicated the status of consultations between the two organizations. While some progress had been made in the first category of recommendations, considerable additional consultations between UNOPS and UNDP were required before progress could be made in the second category. In the first category, the two organizations had agreed that the current status of UNOPS should be maintained, with UNOPS having full responsibility for its internal management. The UNOPS Executive Director was preparing a letter to resident representatives, detailing their precise role as UNOPS representatives. The Users Advisory Group was to be maintained. A model project-management matrix had been developed in order that the respective responsibilities of UNDP and UNOPS could be defined for each project. Efforts were also made to implement recommendations on financial reporting and administrative issues, particularly by implementing the Integrated Management Information System (IMIS). UNOPS had released the Operational Guide for implementing programmes designed for post-conflict situations, social sustainability and natural disasters. In addition, it was strengthening the management capacities of the decentralized offices.

On 28 September [dec. 2000/22], the Executive Board took note of the progress report, urged the Administrator and the Executive Director to ensure action on the outstanding recommendations as a matter of urgency and requested them to submit in 2001 a detailed report on progress achieved on all recommendations of the evaluation report.

Budget estimates

The Executive Director, in August [DP/2000/37 & Corr.1 & Add.1 & Add.1/Corr.1], issued revised 2000-2001 budget estimates for UNOPS, which proposed a decrease in total administrative expenditure from $113.8 million to $106.3 million, consisting of a decrease from $110.9 million to $103.2 million for recurring expenditures and an increase from $2.9 million to $3.1 million for non-recurring administrative expenditures. Those budget revisions were based on the targeted developments in the UNOPS project delivery and service portfolios detailed in the UNOPS 2000-2001 Business Plan.

In addition, as a flexibility provision necessitated by the variable nature of UNOPS activities, the Executive Director requested the authority to incur administrative expenditure in an amount not to exceed 5 per cent of the approved budget for the biennium when it was supported by unspent and/or projected income. The Executive Director also requested approval of the reclassification of two posts from the P-5 to the D-1 level.

ACABQ, in September [DP/2000/38], recommended that the Executive Board accept the Executive Director's proposals.

On 28 September [dec. 2000/20], the Executive Board approved the 2000-2001 revised budget estimates in the amount of $106.3 million, as well as the proposed staffing level and the reclassification of two posts from P-5 to D-1. It gave the Executive Director authority to incur expenditure, both personnel- and administrative-related, in an amount not exceeding 5 per cent of the budget estimates for the biennium in order to respond to unanticipated changes in business acquisition that were supported by unspent and/or projected income. The Executive Director was requested to work towards the replenishment of the operational reserve as a matter of urgency and to report in 2001 as part of the consolidated UNOPS report on the measures needed to restore the operational reserve to its prescribed level.

Audit reports

In May [DP/2000/26], the Executive Director provided an update on the implementation of the recommendations of the UN Board of Auditors contained in the UNOPS financial report and audited financial statements for 1996-1997, which had been covered in a first report in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 815]. Action had been taken on recommendations on procurement, evaluation of international consultants and staff appraisal, year 2000 computer compliance and the reporting of fraud. Implementation of the recommendations relating to financial reporting was being postponed until later in 2000, due to the delay in getting complete data into IMIS.

Also in May [DP/2000/25/Add.1], the Executive Director issued his annual report on UNOPS internal audit and oversight activities. The oversight framework included an external audit performed by the UN Board of Auditors; an internal audit performed by the UNDP Office of Audit and Performance Review (OAPR); and internal management oversight.

OAPR conducted audits and management reviews of headquarters and field activities. In 1999, a total of 31 audit reports were issued, of which 16 contained a total of 248 recommendations. Of those recommendations, 89 were in finance, 31 in personnel, 47 in administration (including contracts and procurement), 37 in programme, 36 in management and 8 in policy. UNOPS agreed with 231 of the recommendations and provided its response on action taken or contemplated to implement them.

Major issues identified in the audit reports included the need to discontinue joint delegations to UNOPS project personnel and UNDP resident representatives and to review and revise chapter 30 (Delegation of authority) of the UNOPS Handbook. In the suspense and clearing accounts, items were identified that had been outstanding for several years. One of the main weaknesses identified in the audit of three field activities was that none of the units had a work plan or financial information for proper monitoring of projects, and one of them lacked terms of reference and was undertaking direct services outside of UNOPS Financial Regulations. Audits of imprest account operations identified some important issues that had organization-wide implications, including the need to ensure that those accounts were immediately closed and/or transferred to UNOPS operational units or successor projects.

On 23 June [dec. 2000/17], the Executive Board took note of the Executive Director's report on the updated review of the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors and the UNOPS report on internal audit and oversight activities.

Personnel matters

The Executive Board, in June [dec. 2000/16], requested the Executive Director to report in September on steps taken to implement its 1999 decision on the appropriate authority and accountability for personnel matters [YUN 1999, p. 816] and to submit a detailed report in 2001 on the implementation of the delegation of authority. He was also asked to submit a new, justified proposal with regard to the upgrading of two existing posts from the P-5 to the D-1 level, and to review the procedures for approving the establishment of posts at the D-1 level, with a view to achieving a practice that was more consistent with the establishment of posts at all levels, up to and including the P-5 level.

In August [DP/2000/30], the Executive Director, reporting on those two personnel matters, stated that consultations between UNDP and UNOPS on the operational arrangements for implementation of the delegation of authority had sufficiently progressed to enable the UNDP Administrator to proceed with signing the delegation of authority. The two sides agreed that the overriding concern would be to ensure that UNOPS personnel were administered in the most cost-effective and efficient manner. The issuance of UNOPS letters of appointment would clarify further the accountability of the Executive Director in personnel matters. The Executive Director outlined the general provisions agreed on to govern the delegation of authority, and said that further agreements between UNDP and UNOPS would be concluded separately, specifying the UNDP services to be provided, together with associated charges based on identifiable workloads, and performance standards and time frames.

The Executive Director also described the rationale for the approval of the establishment of posts at the D-1 level and expressed his belief that he should be given the authority to establish such posts similar to his existing authority pertaining to the establishment of posts at the P-5 level and below. However, he proposed for the time being to continue the arrangement limiting his authority to establish posts at the P-5 level and below.

ACABQ, in its comments on the issue [DP/2000/38], noted that the steps taken by UNOPS to implement the Board's 1999 decision formed a sound basis for the implementation of the delegation of authority on personnel matters from the UNDP Administrator to the UNOPS Executive Director. ACABQ agreed with the view that a flexible post management system was essential to be responsive to changes in demand and project delivery and income. It was of the view that current procedures for establishing posts should be streamlined and recommended full delegation of authority to the Executive Director to cover all posts up to the D-2 category under the following conditions: posts up to the P-5 level would continue to be established by the Executive Director and approved ex post facto by the Executive Board following the current procedure; and posts at the D-1 and D-2 levels would also be established by the Executive Director, with prior ACABQ concurrence, on a temporary basis, pending approval of the budget by the Executive Board.

On 28 September [dec. 2000/20], the Executive Board approved the staffing level as proposed in the revised budget estimates for 2000-2001 (see p. 841), as well as the reclassification of two posts at the P-5 level to the D-1 level.

The following day [dec. 2000/21], the Board noted that the delegation of authority in personnel matters had been provided to the Executive Director by the UNDP Administrator and requested the Executive Director to report in 2001 on measures taken to ensure the proper discharge of the delegated authority and on the impact, if any, of the need for advance approval of the Board for establishing posts at the D-1 level and above.

UN Volunteers

UNV activities

The Administrator, in his annual report for 2000 [DP/2001/14], provided information on the United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme, administered by UNDP. He reported that the number of volunteers grew from 4,383 in 1999 to 4,800 in 2000, comprising 157 nationalities serving in 140 countries. The number of assignments increased to 5,200 compared to 4,755 the previous year.

By programme area, UNV assignments supported activities in special development situations (34 per cent), sustainable human development (31 per cent), poverty eradication and sustainable livelihoods (17 per cent) and support to the United Nations (14 per cent). While the protection of the environment and the advancement of women formed, for the most part, an integral part of the work of UNVs in those programme areas, 4 per cent of assignments were directly related to environment and gender. Development cooperation activities thus remained the hallmark of UNV programme implementation in 2000. Particularly noteworthy was the operationalization of the United Nations Information Technology Services, which would link people through the Internet through a shared knowledge base; the expansion of activities to support community efforts in responding to the HIV/AIDS epidemic; and the extended involvement in confidence-building and peace promotion activities in countries emerging from internal conflict.

In a report on the review of the financial situation in 2000 [DP/2001/22], the Administrator stated that income recorded for 2000 decreased by $2.9 million or 13.6 per cent compared to 1999. Programme expenditure increased to $24.3 million in 2000 from $23.9 million in 1999. The balance of the reserve as at 31 December was $2.1 million.

In June [dec. 2000/14], the Executive Board, taking note of the Administrator's report on UNV activities in 1998-1999 [YUN 1999, p. 816], welcomed the use of the UNDP strategic results framework, including the way in which it encompassed UNV support to the UN system as a whole. The Board reaffirmed the importance and the value added of the UNV programme at the global, regional and national levels, and welcomed the programme's contribution to national capacity-building and sustainable development through the expanded mobilization of national UNVs. It supported the bridging role that UNVs could play in the transition from humanitarian assistance to reconstruction and rehabilitation and to longer-term sustainable development. In addition, the Board decided that the theme of the special event at its annual session in 2001 would be volunteering in the framework of the International Year of Volunteers and the thirtieth anniversary of the UNV programme.

International Year of Volunteers (2001)

In November, the Secretary-General officially launched the International Year of Volunteers [DP/2001/14]. UNV, the focal point for the Year, used the preparations for the Year as an opportunity not only to articulate its own core mandate and focus but also to confirm the relevance of the organization and of its operational activities on the ground.

At the request of the Preparatory Committee for the Special Session of the General Assembly on the Implementation of the Outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and Further Initiatives [YUN 1999, p. 1037], UNV, in February [A/AC.253/16/Add.7], issued a report on the role of volunteering in the promotion of social development. The report discussed the various forms of volunteering in different regional and national contexts, from self-help and participation to service provision and campaigning. It examined the benefits of volunteering, focusing on the three key priority areas of the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and Programme of Action [YUN 1995, p. 1114]—social integration, poverty alleviation and full employment—and focused on key issues in volunteering, including globalization and relations with the State and market. Recommendations were offered to Governments for strengthening and supporting volunteering.

The General Assembly, in resolution S-24/2 of 1 July (see p. 1013), recommended the promotion of voluntarism as an additional mechanism in the promotion of social integration and invited the Commission for Social Development to consider the issue in 2001, the International Year of Volunteers.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2000/25 [draft: E/2000/L.12] without vote [agenda item 14 (b)].

International Year of Volunteers

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 55/57 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/55/591], adopted resolution 55/57 without vote [agenda item 103].

International Year of Volunteers

Recalling its resolution 52/17 of 20 November 1997, in which it proclaimed the year 2001 as the International Year of Volunteers, and also recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/44 of 22 July 1997,

Recalling also the outcome document of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, entitled "World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world", held at Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000, in which the General Assembly recommended the promotion of the involvement of volunteers in social development, inter alia, by encouraging Governments, taking into account the views of all actors, to develop comprehensive strategies and programmes by raising public awareness about the value and opportunities of voluntarism and by facilitating an enabling environment for individuals and other actors of civil society to engage in, and the private sector to support, voluntary activities,

Welcoming the decision of the Commission for Social Development, at its thirty-eighth session, to include the subject of volunteering in the provisional agenda for its thirty-ninth session,

Taking into account the valuable contribution of volunteering to both economic and social development,

Bearing in mind that volunteering is one of the important ways in which people participate in societal development,

1. Welcomes the activities undertaken by States, intergovernmental organizations, non-governmental organizations, community-based organizations and the United Nations system for the promotion of volunteerism and, specifically, in preparation for the observance of the International Year of Volunteers, and encourages them to continue their efforts;

2. Calls upon States to promote, especially during the Year, an environment conducive to the discussion, at the national and local levels, of the characteristics and trends of volunteer action in their own societies, including the major challenges which the Year can help to address, and to incorporate the subject of volunteering into high-level and other meetings and events during 2001;

3. Invites States to consider all means available for more people to become involved in voluntary action and to be drawn from a broader cross-section of society, especially from groups, including young people, older people and people with disabilities, in view of the benefits accruing to volunteers through volunteer action;

4. Encourages Governments, non-governmental organizations, the private sector, eminent persons and other relevant actors to take all possible measures to promote volunteer action, especially during the Year, in particular at the local level, and in cooperation with, inter alia, local authorities, community leaders, the media and schools;

5. Encourages organizations of the United Nations system to pay attention to the Year in their regular work and in their relevant meetings and to continue to collaborate with the United Nations Volunteers programme as focal point for the Year to ensure that the contributions of volunteers in their own areas of concern are fully recognized;

6. Requests the Commission for Social Development to make appropriate suggestions and recommendations to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, to further the contribution of volunteering to social development;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit his note transmitting the contribution of the United Nations Volunteers programme to the preparations for the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, entitled "World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world", as a document of the thirty-ninth session of the Commission for Social Development, and requests him, furthermore, to disseminate it widely within the United Nations system, including by making it available to the Commission on Human Settlements acting as the preparatory committee for the special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the Habitat Agenda, the preparatory committee for the special session of the General Assembly for follow-up to the World Summit for Children, the preparatory committee for the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance and the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-fifth session;

8. Decides that two plenary meetings of the fifty-sixth session of the General Assembly shall be devoted to volunteering, to coincide with the close of the International Year of Volunteers on 5 December 2001, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on ways in which Governments and the United Nations system could support volunteering for discussion on that occasion;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the outcome of the International Year of Volunteers and its follow-up.

Economic and technical cooperation among developing countries

The UNDP Administrator, in response to the Executive Board's request [YUN 1999, p. 817], presented, in August [DP/2000/36], an assessment of the results of activities supported by the Special Unit for Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries (TCDC). The TCDC cooperation framework was designed to promote TCDC actively and to support sustainable human development (SHD) in such areas as poverty eradication; environment; production and employment; and trade, investment and macroeconomic management. Total core and non-core resources amounting to $29.5 million for 1997-2000 were allocated to three main activity clusters: building strategic policy and institutional capacities; nurturing TCDC knowledge-networking; and forging broad-based partnerships for SHD.

As part of the UNDP decentralization strategy, the Special Unit planned to redeploy two TCDC advisers to the field to work with the network of 50 policy specialists in the regions. The aim was to strengthen the field-based, action-oriented TCDC community, which would consist of TCDC-oriented networks; interested Southern experts, knowledge institutions and centres of excellence; selected intergovernmental, non-governmental, civil society and private sector organizations; developing country government focal points; interested donor agencies; and TCDC focal points within UNDP as well as the UN system. Thus, global support for multilateral TCDC could be significantly enhanced. Within that community, the Special Unit would remain the anchor of multilateral South-South cooperation. The new programme would concentrate on areas where the need for building policy and institutional capacities was greatest. The TCDC programme would be geared to priority issues in the areas of trade and investment and macroeconomic management; social integration and transformation; science and technology for development; private sector development with emphasis on small and medium-sized enterprises; and environmental management.

Sub-strategies would be developed around the Unit's key functions, such as TCDC advocacy, policy dialogue, interregional networking, partnership-building and resource mobilization. A new TCDC cooperation framework would be submitted to the Executive Board in 2001.

The Executive Board considered the report on the Special Unit's activities and decided in September [dec. 2000/24] to resume its consideration in 2001.

UN Capital Development Fund

Contributions to the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) regular resources amounted to $23.9 million in 2000, a 12.4 per cent decrease from 1999 contributions of $27.4 million [DP/2001/22]. Contributions received for trust fund activities totalled $2 million in 2000, compared to $2.1 million in 1999. Programme expenditure (including support costs paid to implementing agents) totalled $43.2 million. Total expenditure represented an overall project delivery of 84.6 per cent. UNCDF unexpended resources as at 31 December were $70.9 million ($86.9 million at the end of 1999), including $38 million in the operational reserve.

In his annual report for 2000 [DP/2001/14], the UNDP Administrator said that UNCDF had developed a strategy to build its complementarities with UNDP on substantive, administrative, operational and resource-mobilization issues. UNCDF had made some important breakthroughs affecting policy. UNCDF and UNDP had supported Cambodia in drafting the local commune administration and management law, based on the local-level planning system that UNCDF had been piloting in several provinces. In Malawi, it had helped the Government to formulate policy on fiscal decentralization and to ensure that resources would be available to match decentralized functions. UNCDF support to start-up micro-finance operations in 2000 had indirectly given credit access to 3,600 poor clients in Malawi in just six months. By using UNCDF guarantee mechanisms, a new project in Madagascar had enabled four networks of microfinance institutions to access $1.8 million in bank loans.

Chapter III

Humanitarian and special economic assistance

In 2000, the United Nations, through the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), continued to coordinate humanitarian action in partnership with national and international actors to alleviate human suffering in disasters and emergencies, promote preparedness and prevention, and facilitate sustainable solutions. OCHA's advocacy efforts aimed to help guarantee the protection of civilians in armed conflict and marshal the resources necessary for swift and vigorous humanitarian responses worldwide. Consolidated inter-agency appeals were launched or ongoing for Angola, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Great Lakes region and Central Africa, the Maluku islands of Indonesia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, South-Eastern Europe, the Sudan and Tajikistan. The total sought for the appeals amounted to $1,922 million, of which $1,139 million was received, meeting 59.2 per cent of the requirements. In addition, an inter-agency appeal covering Afghanistan for 2000, which sought $220.8 million, received contributions totalling $106.8 million, or 48.38 per cent of the requirements.

During the year, OCHA reported contributions for natural disasters totalling $460.7 million for 45 situations in 35 countries.

ruary), the Council considered special economic, humanitarian and disaster relief assistance. It also had before it, in addition to reports on individual States, a May report of the Secretary-General on strengthening coordination of UN emergency humanitarian assistance [A/55/82-E/2000/61], submitted pursuant to requests by the General Assembly in resolutions 54/30 [YUN 1999, p. 865] and 54/233 [ibid., p. 826] and by the Council in resolution 1995/56 [YUN 1995, p. 927]. The report covered the coordination of humanitarian assistance in 1999-2000 and the coordinated response of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee (IASC) to humanitarian emergencies, especially activities carried out in support of the Council's agreed conclusions 1999/1 [YUN 1999, p. 824]. It examined strengthening the coordination of humanitarian response and the actual and potential role of technology in mitigating the effects of natural disasters and other humanitarian emergencies, including conflicts, with particular reference to the displacement of persons.

During the period under review, the United Nations took steps to ensure a more coherent approach among the humanitarian, political and human rights components of the international response to crises, as recommended in agreed conclusions 1999/1. The approach was two-tiered, involving a partnership between the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council, in addition to the search for consistency among the political, humanitarian, development and human rights bodies of the UN system. That consistency had been achieved in East Timor and the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. Regarding the importance of linking relief aid to sustainable development, as emphasized in the agreed conclusions, an IASC reference group had identified areas affecting post-conflict reintegration and rehabilitation operations, such as inadequate national capacities, the political priorities of bilateral donors, unsynchronized transitional funding, the planning and programming of transitional activities by agencies and inadequate efforts to reach agreements based on common strategic objectives. In April and May, missions to Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Congo and Somalia identified solutions to problems associated with post-conflict transitions and relief-to-development

Coordination

Humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council

During the humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council, held from 19 to 21 and on 28 July under the theme "Strengthening the coordination of humanitarian response and the role of technology in mitigating the effects of natural disasters and other humanitarian emergencies, including conflicts, with particular reference to the displacement of persons arising therefrom" (decision 2000/206 of 4 Feb-linkages. Also related to post-conflict efforts was the growing use by the Security Council of peace-building support offices, such as those in Guinea-Bissau and Liberia. IASC worked to strengthen legal and physical protection for civilians in situations of armed conflict and sought to tackle constraints to the delivery of humanitarian assistance. Inter-agency initiatives were taken to promote the rights and welfare of children in conflict situations, and to ensure that older persons were not marginalized in relief operations.

Regarding natural disasters, an IASC reference group was created to review assessment capacities, funding mechanisms, information-sharing, logistics and telecommunications. Efforts were under way to assist Governments in strengthening their early warning systems. A comparative country index of vulnerability and disaster risk was being prepared as part of a United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) initiative to develop a global disaster vulnerability report. An inter-agency initiative aimed to facilitate inter-agency collaboration in disaster reduction issues. UN disaster assessment and coordination teams were strengthened by including more participants from countries in regions likely to be affected by disasters.

During the period under review, humanitarian agencies were confronted with new or resurgent challenges. Emerging challenges in natural disasters and complex emergency responses were increasingly met by Member States through the peacetime uses of military capabilities. The UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) convened the Fribourg Forum (Fribourg, Switzerland, 15-16 June), an intergovernmental conference on cooperation and coordination in crisis management in Europe. Humanitarian agencies were increasingly recognizing the need to implement psychosocial assistance programmes in emergencies, although such assistance was not systematically included in relief programmes.

The situation of internally displaced persons was a focus of attention in 1999-2000 in countries such as Afghanistan, Angola, Burundi, Colombia and the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The Emergency Relief Coordinator (ERC) and IASC members developed new policies, training programmes and guidance material for humanitarian workers, as well as practical action to improve the quality and coverage of field operations. Estimates suggested that the number of persons displaced might total as many as 60 million. Of those, about 11.5 million were refugees (see p. 1145). Estimates were that at least 17 million and up to 25 million persons were displaced within the borders of their own countries as a result of armed conflict or generalized violence. Approximately 30 million more persons were displaced as a result of natural, environmental or technological disasters. The United Nations sought to address the needs of displaced populations in over 20 major crisis situations. Arrangements for the effective coordination of the international response were reviewed and new institutional arrangements were endorsed by IASC in April, based on the premise that Governments were primarily responsible for displaced persons. However, in cases where government action was lacking or insufficient, humanitarian agencies were urged to cooperate with national and local authorities or other actors to support and supplement efforts on behalf of displaced persons. The IASC policy reaffirmed the coordinating responsibility of the ERC as the inter-agency focal point for internally displaced persons at the Headquarters level. At the country level, the IASC policy vested the overall responsibility for the response to needs of the internally displaced in the resident/humanitarian coordinator.

The Secretary-General observed that the number and range of organizations involved in the humanitarian response to crises was increasing, that the needs of people affected by the emergencies were rising and that the coordination challenge was growing as a result. He called for a renewed commitment by Member States to multi-lateral leadership of the international humanitarian response, provision of adequate resources to support that leadership and approval of effective administrative procedures to strengthen the coordination of humanitarian assistance. The Secretary-General made recommendations to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council regarding the coordinated response to natural disasters and complex emergencies, the protection of civilians in armed conflict, the role of technology in mitigating and responding to natural disasters and other emergencies and the coordinated response to crises of displacement.

Annexed to the report was a summary of activities taken to implement agreed conclusions 1999/1 and information on lessons learned from the flood response in Mozambique (see p. 885).

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report and asked him to report in 2001 on further progress (decision 2000/243).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/164 [draft: A/55/L.54 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (a)].

Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and the guiding principles contained in the annex thereto, other relevant General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions and agreed conclusions of the Council of 1998 and 1999,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Welcoming the progress made by the Emergency Relief Coordinator and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat in strengthening the coordination of humanitarian assistance of the United Nations,

Noting the efforts made by the Emergency Relief Coordinator and the members of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee to implement fully the recommendations set forth in agreed conclusions 1998/1 and 1999/1 of the Council,

1. Welcomes the holding of the third humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council during its substantive session of 2000;

2. Invites the Economic and Social Council to continue to consider ways to further enhance the humanitarian affairs segment of future sessions of the Council;

3. Emphasizes the importance of discussion of humanitarian policies and activities in the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council;

4. Calls upon relevant organizations of the United Nations system, other relevant international organizations, Governments and non-governmental organizations to cooperate with the Secretary-General and the Emergency Relief Coordinator to ensure timely implementation of and follow-up to agreed conclusions 1998/1 and 1999/1;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, through the 2001 substantive session of the Economic and Social Council, on progress made in strengthening the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations, including the implementation of and follow-up to agreed conclusions 1998/1 and 1999/1.

Also on 14 December [meeting 85], the Assembly adopted resolution 55/163 [draft: A/55/L.38/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (a)].

International cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, from relief to development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991, which contains in its annex the guiding principles for the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations system, and its resolutions 52/12 B of 19 December 1997 and 54/219 and 54/233 of 22 December 1999, and recalling agreed conclusions 1999/1 of the Economic and Social Council and Council resolution 1999/63 of 30 July 1999,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations,

Recognizing the importance of the principles of neutrality, humanity and impartiality for the provision of humanitarian assistance,

Emphasizing that the affected State has the primary responsibility in the initiation, organization, coordination and implementation of humanitarian assistance within its territory, and in the facilitation of the work of humanitarian organizations in mitigating the consequences of natural disasters,

Emphasizing also the responsibility of all States to undertake disaster preparedness and mitigation efforts in order to minimize the impact of natural disasters,

Emphasizing further, in this regard, the importance of international cooperation in support of the efforts of the affected State in dealing with natural disasters in all its phases,

Stressing the need to optimize and disseminate the listings of organizations of the United Nations system and other relevant humanitarian and scientific organizations, as well as the need to develop further a directory of the specialized national, regional and international institutions and agencies working in the field of international response to natural disasters, together with an inventory of national capacities, in order to lay the foundation for an efficient and effective use of resources available and collaborative efforts,

Noting the establishment of the secretariat of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction and the need to strengthen cooperation and coordination among all relevant bodies of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, in dealing with all phases of natural disasters,

1. Expresses deep concern at the increasing number and scale of natural disasters, resulting in massive losses of life and property worldwide, in particular in vulnerable societies lacking adequate capacity to mitigate effectively the long-term negative social, economic and environmental consequences of natural disaster;

2. Stresses that humanitarian assistance for natural disasters should be provided in accordance with and with due respect for the guiding principles contained in the annex to resolution 46/182 and should be determined on the basis of the human dimension and needs arising out of the particular natural disasters;

3. Calls upon all States to adopt, where required, and to continue to implement effectively necessary legislative and other appropriate measures to mitigate the effects of natural disasters, inter alia, by disaster prevention, including building regulations and appropriate land use, as well as disaster preparedness and capacity-building in disaster response, and requests the international community in this context to continue to assist developing countries, where appropriate;

4. Stresses, in this context, the importance of strengthening international cooperation in the provision of humanitarian assistance for all phases of a disaster, from relief and mitigation to development, including through the provision of adequate resources;

5. Recognizes that economic growth and sustainable development contribute to improving the capacity of States to mitigate, respond to and prepare for natural disasters;

6. Stresses the need to strengthen efforts at all levels, including at the domestic level, to improve natural disaster awareness, prevention, preparedness and mitigation, including early warning systems, as well as international cooperation in response to emergencies, from relief to rehabilitation, reconstruction and development, bearing in mind the overall negative impact of natural disasters, the resulting humanitarian need and requests from affected countries, as appropriate;

7. Recognizes efforts by the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator, the members of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee and other members of the United Nations system in promoting preparedness for response at the national, regional and international levels and in strengthening the mobilization and coordination of humanitarian assistance of the United Nations system in the field of natural disasters, and in this context welcomes the expansion of the United Nations disaster assessment and coordination teams to include experts from all areas of the world;

8. Notes that the transition phase after natural disasters is often excessively long and characterized by a number of gaps and that Governments, in cooperation with relief agencies, as appropriate, when planning for meeting immediate needs, should place these needs in the perspective of sustainable development whenever such an approach is possible, and in this context takes note of the work of the United Nations disaster assessment and coordination teams;

9. Encourages enhanced cooperation among Governments, in particular through the United Nations and regional organizations, in order to strengthen early warning and preparedness mechanisms for natural disasters;

10. Encourages Governments, in particular through their disaster management or response agencies, as appropriate, relevant organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations, to continue to cooperate with the Secretary-General and the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator to maximize the effectiveness of the international response to natural disasters, based, inter alia, on humanitarian need, from relief to development, and also to maximize the effectiveness of disaster preparedness and mitigation efforts at all levels;

11. Encourages further cooperation between the United Nations system and regional organizations in order to increase the capacity of those organizations to respond to natural disasters;

12. Encourages States that have not signed or ratified the Tampere Convention on the Provision of Telecommunication Resources for Disaster Mitigation and Relief Operations, adopted at Tampere, Finland, on 18 June 1998, to consider doing so;

13. Stresses the need for partnership among Governments of the affected countries, relevant humanitarian organizations and specialized companies to promote training in, access to and use of technologies to strengthen preparedness for and response to natural disasters and to enhance the transfer of current technologies and corresponding know-how, in particular to developing countries, on concessional and preferential terms, as mutually agreed;

14. Encourages the further use of space-based and ground-based remote-sensing technologies for the prevention, mitigation and management of natural disasters, where appropriate;

15. Also encourages in such operations the sharing of geographical data, including remotely sensed images and geographic information system and global positioning system data among Governments, space agencies and relevant international humanitarian organizations, as appropriate, and also notes in this context the work being done by the Global Disaster Information Network;

16. Further encourages compatibility and complementarity of telecommunications and other technological equipment required in humanitarian and disaster relief operations;

17. Stresses the need to ensure close links, as set out in resolution 54/219, between disaster prevention activities and the improvement of natural disaster preparedness and response;

18. Encourages Governments in natural-disaster-prone countries to establish, with the support of the international community, in particular the donors, national spatial information infrastructures relating to natural disaster preparedness, early warning, response and mitigation, including the necessary training of personnel;

19. Encourages innovative efforts that link various phases of international assistance, from relief to development, such as the joint Disaster Response and Recovery Mission undertaken by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Health Organization and Pan American Health Organization in all countries affected by hurricane Mitch, and reiterates the need to ensure adequate assessment of and follow-up to these approaches, with a view to further developing and applying them, as appropriate, in other natural disasters;

20. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with relevant bodies of the United Nations system, to prepare recommendations on how to improve the potential of the United Nations to mitigate natural disasters including, in particular, through the development of an inventory of the existing capacities at the national, regional and international levels;

21. Notes the submission by the Secretary-General of his note on enhancing the functioning and utilization of the Central Emergency Revolving Fund, pursuant to the request contained in resolutions 54/95 of 8 December 1999 and 54/233 for concrete proposals for enhancing the functioning and utilization of the Fund and the invitation to consider more active use of the Fund for timely and adequate natural disaster response, and decides to consider the note comprehensively at its fifty-sixth session;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to consider innovative mechanisms to improve the international response to natural disasters, inter alia, by addressing any geographical and sectoral imbalances in such a response where they exist, as well as more effective use of national emergency response agencies, taking into account their comparative advantages and specializations, as well as existing arrangements, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session under the item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance", with a view, inter alia, to contributing towards the comprehensive report on the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, to be submitted to the Assembly at that session under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development".

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on strengthening coordination of UN humanitarian and disaster relief assistance, including special economic assistance, would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458).

UN and other humanitarian personnel

In an October report [A/55/494], the Secretary-General proposed measures to improve the existing security arrangements for UN personnel, including the appointment of a UN Security Coordinator (see p. 1346). He noted that the growing number of complex emergencies required the United Nations to provide assistance and protection in situations of armed conflict. The United Nations and other humanitarian organizations, as well as Member States, had a collective responsibility towards those who delivered assistance in high-risk environments.

On 9 February, the Security Council urged States and non-State parties to the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel (see p. 1345) to respect fully the status of UN and associated personnel, and humanitarian personnel, and underlined the importance of unhindered access to populations in need (S/PRST/2000/4).

On 19 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 55/175, called on all Governments and parties in complex humanitarian emergencies to cooperate fully with the United Nations and other humanitarian agencies and organizations and to ensure the safe and unhindered access of their personnel to affected civilians, including refugees and internally displaced persons.

OCHA review

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 54/244 [YUN 1999, p. 1274], the Secretary-General, in March [E/AC.51/2000/5], submitted to the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) the review by the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) of the implementation of CPC's 1997 recommendations on the in-depth evaluation of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs [YUN 1997, p. 897], renamed the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs by the Assembly in resolution 52/12 B [ibid., p. 1392]. The report concluded that support to IASC had been enhanced, progress had been made to address gaps in the response to emergencies, and the mechanisms to plan and monitor emergency assistance had been improved. However, efforts were still needed to make IASC more decision-oriented, to ensure stronger field coordination, to maintain close dialogue with activities other than humanitarian assistance and to promote rehabilitation programmes; OCHA and IASC had taken measures to address the difficulties. The rapid response to emergencies was hindered by the absence of special UN administrative and financial rules and procedures, suited to emergency situations. In a related matter, the IASC Steering Committee, proposed in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 898] to enhance a rapid-response capacity to humanitarian emergencies, had not been established. An effective procedure for sharing lessons learned was still needed.

OIOS recommended that, pursuant to Assembly resolution 46/182 [YUN 1991, p. 421] and Economic and Social Council agreed conclusions 1998/1 [YUN 1998, p. 841], special emergency rules and procedures should be developed by year's end. The IASC Steering Committee, or a similar mechanism, should be established by the end of 2000, and the ERC should propose to IASC a procedure to ensure effective follow-up on lessons learned and best practices. The Secretary-General concurred with the recommendations.

CPC stressed the need to finalize the development of special emergency rules and procedures, which should be approved by the relevant inter-governmental bodies [A/55/16].

On 7 April, the General Assembly in resolution 54/257 took note of the OIOS report on the 1999 review of OCHA [YUN 1999, p. 828] and the comments of the Joint Inspection Unit thereon [ibid]. It requested that, in future, the appropriate legislative mandates relating to OCHA's work be included in OIOS reports.

Resource mobilization

Central Emergency Revolving Fund

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/95 [YUN 1999, p. 825], the Secretary-General, in November [A/55/649], submitted proposals to enhance the functioning and utilization of the Central Emergency Revolving Fund (CERF) as a cash-flow mechanism for the initial phase of humanitarian emergencies. Noting that the decline in CERF use had resulted from the availability within operational organizations of their own emergency funds and other sources of financing for such start-up requirements, the Secretary-General proposed that the level of the Fund be reduced from $50 million to $40 million. Should that proposal receive approval, the concurrence of CERF-contributing Member States would be sought to transfer $10 million to a trust fund for lifesaving assistance needs, particularly in Africa, which had received low funding and little attention. To ensure more efficient utilization of the Fund, the Secretary-General proposed expanding CERF operational guidelines, which currently provided only for funding of the initial phase of emergencies, to include humanitarian assistance resulting from natural disasters, humanitarian assistance for protracted emergencies and security arrangements for UN and associated personnel.

In 2000, the Fund granted 30 advances, amounting to $38.7 million.

Consolidated appeals

According to a May report of the Secretary-General [A/55/82-E/2000/61], a review of the consolidated appeal process, which facilitated the capacity of the UN system to meet its emergency resource requirements, was carried out between November 1999 and April 2000 by humanitarian coordinators, IASC and donors. Recommendations focused on increasing flexibility, improving financial tracking and impact analysis, and advocacy and marketing of appeals. Donors, meeting in Montreux, Switzerland, in March, agreed that more emphasis should be placed on the consolidated appeal process as a continuous year-round process of inter-agency coordination, and suggested that key components should include joint assessments, monitoring and results-based evaluation.

Contributions to the consolidated appeals process had fallen from $1.96 billion in 1994 to $1.2 billion in 2000, and the share of requirements met had declined from 80 per cent in 1994 to 59 per cent in 2000. In 2000, inter-agency consolidated appeals covered Afghanistan, Angola, Burundi, the Congo, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Great Lakes region and Central Africa, Indonesia (Maluku crisis), Sierra Leone, Somalia, South-Eastern Europe, the Sudan, Tajikistan, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania. For the first time, the cost of security requirements was included in the consolidated appeals. In 2000, a total of $8.5 million in security requirements for 10 countries/regions was included. It was envisaged that all future appeals would contain a comprehensive account of the security arrangements proposed and their cost.

Mine clearance

In a November report [A/55/542], submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 54/191 [YUN 1999, p. 830], the Secretary-General presented information on various organizations involved in mine action.

In support of the United Nations Mine Action Service and its humanitarian partners, OCHA continued to make use of its field presence in complex emergency situations to ensure that the humanitarian aspects of landmines were addressed. OCHA Internet sites—ReliefWeb and Integrated Regional Information Network—produced analytical reports and articles that often contained information on countries affected by landmines. In the consolidated appeals for 2000, over $51 million had been requested for mine-action activities in six countries or regions, in support of UN agencies and their implementing partners. As at 27 September, only about $23 million had been secured.

In view of the increase in the number of countries and areas requiring assistance and the consequent need to spread a finite amount of resources and donor funds over a problem that had grown markedly, the Secretary-General proposed that the Mine Action Service should be firmly established as a core function of the Organization, with resources provided through assessed contributions. He reviewed mine-action programmes in Afghanistan, Angola, Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cambodia, Chad, Croatia, Eritrea and Ethiopia, Guinea-Bissau, Iraq, the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mozambique, Somalia, southern Lebanon, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Thailand and Yemen.

Annexed to the report was a table listing donor contributions totalling $68.6 million, as at 18 October, to the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Action, established by the Assembly in resolution 49/215 [YUN 1994, p. 173] as the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Clearance and renamed by the Assembly in resolution 53/26 [YUN 1998, p. 844].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December [meeting 82], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/120 [draft: A/55/L.44/Rev.2 & Corr.1] without vote [agenda item 47].

Assistance in mine action

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/7 of 19 October 1993, 49/215 of 23 December 1994, 50/82 of 14 December 1995, 51/149 of 13 December 1996 and 52/173 of 18 December 1997, on assistance in mine clearance, and its resolutions 53/26 of 17 November 1998 and 54/191 of 17 December 1999, on assistance in mine action, all adopted without a vote,

Considering mine action to be an important component of United Nations humanitarian and development activities,

Reaffirming its deep concern at the tremendous humanitarian and development problems caused by the presence of mines and other unexploded devices that constitute an obstacle to the return of refugees and other displaced persons, to humanitarian aid operations and to reconstruction and economic development, as well as to the restoration of normal social conditions, and that have serious and lasting social and economic consequences for the populations of mine-affected countries,

Bearing in mind the serious threat that mines and other unexploded devices pose to the safety, health and lives of local civilian populations, as well as of personnel participating in humanitarian, peacekeeping and rehabilitation programmes and operations,

Reiterating its dismay at the high number of victims of mines, especially among civilian populations, including women and children, and recalling in this context Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1995/79 of 8 March 1995, 1996/85 of 24 April 1996, 1997/78 of 18 April 1997, 1998/76 of 22 April 1998, 1999/80 of 28 April 1999 and 2000/85 of 27 April 2000, on the rights of the child, and resolutions 1996/27 of 19 April 1996, 1998/31 of 17 April 1998, 2000/51 of 25 April 2000 and decision 1997/107 of 11 April 1997, on the human rights of persons with disabilities,

Deeply alarmed by the number of mines that continue to be laid each year, as well as the presence of a large number of mines and other unexploded devices as a result of armed conflicts, and thus convinced of the necessity and urgency of a significant increase in mine-clearance efforts by the international community with a view to eliminating the threat of landmines to civilians as soon as possible,

Noting the decisions taken at the First Annual Conference of the States Parties to Amended Protocol II to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, held at Geneva from 15 to 17 December 1999, particularly with respect to Protocol II to the Convention, and the inclusion in Amended Protocol II of a number of provisions of importance for mine-clearance operations, notably the requirement of detectability,

Noting also the entry into force of Amended Protocol II to the Convention on 3 December 1998,

Recalling that the States parties at the Review Conference of the States Parties to the Convention declared their commitment to keep the provisions of the Protocol under review in order to ensure that the concerns regarding the weapons it covers are addressed, and that they would encourage the efforts of the United Nations and other organizations to address all problems related to landmines,

Noting that the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction entered into force on 1 March 1999 and that the Convention has been signed or acceded to by one hundred and thirty-nine States and ratified by one hundred and nine States, noting also the conclusions of the Second Meeting of the States Parties to the Convention, held at Geneva from 11 to 15 September 2000, taking note of the reaffirmed commitments that were made, among other things, to provide assistance for mine clearance and rehabilitation, the social and economic reintegration of mine victims and mine-awareness programmes, and taking note also of the work of the inter-sessional programme established by States parties to the Convention,

Stressing the need to convince mine-affected States to halt new deployments of anti-personnel mines in order to ensure the effectiveness and efficiency of mine-clearance operations,

Recognizing the important role that the international community, in particular States involved in the deployment of mines, can play in assisting mine clearance in mine-affected countries by providing necessary maps and information and appropriate technical and material assistance to remove or otherwise render ineffective existing minefields, mines and booby traps,

Concerned about the limited availability of safe and cost-effective mine-detection and mine-clearance equipment, as well as the need for effective global coordination in research and development to improve the relevant technology, and conscious of the need to promote further and more rapid progress in this field and to foster international technical cooperation to this end,

Concerned also about the limited availability of the technical, material and financial resources needed to meet the cost associated with mine-clearance activities in mine-affected countries,

Recognizing that, in addition to the primary role of States, the United Nations has an important role to play in the field of assistance in mine action,

Reaffirming the need to reinforce international co-operation in the area of mine action and to devote the necessary resources to that end,

Concerned about the critical financial situation of the Mine Action Service of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat,

Welcoming the mine-action coordination centres already established under the auspices of the United Nations, as well as the creation of international trust funds for mine clearance and mine assistance,

Noting with satisfaction the inclusion in the mandates of several peacekeeping operations of provisions relating to mine-action work carried out under the direction of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, in the context of such operations,

Commending the action already taken by the United Nations system, donor and recipient Governments, the International Committee of the Red Cross and non-governmental organizations to coordinate their efforts and seek solutions to the problems related to the presence of mines and other unexploded devices, as well as their assistance to victims of mines,

Commending also the role of the Secretary-General in increasing public awareness of the problem of landmines,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the United Nations in assistance in mine action;

2. Calls, in particular, for the continuation of the efforts of the United Nations, with the assistance of

States and institutions as appropriate, to foster the establishment of mine-action capacities in countries where mines constitute a serious threat to the safety, health and lives of the local population or an impediment to social and economic development efforts at the national and local levels, emphasizes the importance of developing national mine-action capacities, and urges all Member States, in particular those that have the capacity to do so, to assist mine-affected countries in the establishment and development of national capacities in mine clearance, mine awareness and victim assistance;

3. Invites Member States to develop national programmes, in cooperation with the relevant bodies of the United Nations system where appropriate, to promote awareness of landmines, especially among women and children;

4. Expresses its appreciation to Governments, regional organizations and other donors for their financial and in-kind contributions to mine action, including contributions for emergency operations and for national capacity-building programmes;

5. Appeals to Governments, regional organizations and other donors to continue their support to mine action through further contributions, including contributions through the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Action, to allow for the timely delivery of mine-action assistance in emergency situations;

6. Encourages all relevant multilateral and national programmes and bodies to include, in coordination with the United Nations, activities related to mine action in their humanitarian, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development assistance activities, where appropriate, bearing in mind the need to ensure national ownership, sustainability and capacity-building;

7. Stresses the importance of international support for emergency assistance to victims of mines and for the care and rehabilitation, and social and economic reintegration, of the victims, and also stresses that such assistance should be integrated into broader public health and socio-economic strategies;

8. Encourages Governments, relevant United Nations bodies and other donors to take further action to promote gender- and age-appropriate mine-awareness programmes, victim assistance and child-centred rehabilitation, thereby reducing the number of child victims and relieving their plight;

9. Emphasizes again the important role of the United Nations in the effective coordination of mine-action activities, including those by regional organizations, and especially the role of the Mine Action Service of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat on the basis of the policy on mine action and effective coordination developed by the Secretary-General, and stresses the need for the continuous assessment by the General Assembly of the United Nations in this regard;

10. Emphasizes in this regard the role of the Mine Action Service as the focal point for mine action within the United Nations system and its ongoing collaboration with and coordination of all the mine-related activities of the United Nations agencies, funds and programmes;

11. Encourages the Secretary-General to develop further a comprehensive mine-action strategy, taking into consideration the impact of the landmine problem on rehabilitation, reconstruction and development, with a view to ensuring the effectiveness of assistance in mine action by the United Nations, emphasizes in this respect the importance of further multisectoral assessments and surveys, notes in this regard the ongoing development by the United Nations of standards and certification guidelines for such surveys, and emphasizes the need for an inclusive process to be followed in the development of such standards and guidelines;

12. Emphasizes in this respect the importance of developing a comprehensive information management system for mine action, under the overall coordination of the Mine Action Service and with the support of the Geneva International Centre for Humanitarian Demining, in order to facilitate the setting of priorities and the coordination of field activities;

13. Welcomes recent approaches with regard to the establishment of mine-action coordination centres, encourages the further establishment of such centres, especially in emergency situations, and also encourages States to support the activities of mine-action coordination centres and trust funds established to coordinate assistance in mine action under the auspices of the Mine Action Service;

14. Encourages, whenever appropriate, the use of the United Nations Office for Project Services by the United Nations, including in peacekeeping operations, in order to ensure the unity and continuity of implementation required for integrated mine-action programmes;

15. Urges Member States and regional, governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations to continue to extend full assistance and cooperation to the Secretary-General and, in particular, to provide him with information and data, as well as other appropriate resources that could be useful in strengthening the coordination role of the United Nations in mine action, in particular in the fields of mine awareness, training, surveying, detection and clearance, scientific research on mine-detection and mine-clearance technology and information on and distribution of medical equipment and supplies;

16. Emphasizes in this regard the importance of recording the location of mines, of retaining all such records and making them available to concerned parties upon cessation of hostilities, and welcomes the strengthening of the relevant provisions in international law;

17. Calls upon Member States, especially those that have the capacity to do so, to provide the necessary information and technical, financial and material assistance, as appropriate, and to locate, remove, destroy or otherwise render ineffective minefields, mines, booby traps and other devices in accordance with international law, as soon as possible;

18. Urges Member States and regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations that have the ability to do so to provide, as appropriate, technological assistance to mine-affected countries and to promote scientific research and development on humanitarian mine-action techniques and technology so that mine-action activities may be carried out more effectively at lower costs and through safer means and to promote international collaboration in this regard;

19. Encourages Member States and regional, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations to continue to support ongoing activities to promote appropriate technology, as well as international operational and safety standards for humanitarian mine-action activities, and in this context welcomes the initiation of the revision of international mine-clearance standards and the development of guidelines for the use of mine-detection dogs and mechanical mine-clearance equipment, as well as the development of an international test and evaluation programme;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session a comprehensive report on the United Nations mine-action policy, including the progress achieved on relevant issues outlined both in his previous reports to the Assembly on assistance in mine clearance and mine action and in the present resolution, as well as the progress made by the International Committee of the Red Cross and other international and regional organizations as well as national programmes, and on the operation of the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Action and other mine-action programmes;

21. Invites the Secretary-General to study how to secure a more sound financial basis for the Mine Action Service and to present options to this effect to the General Assembly;

22. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Assistance in mine action".

New international humanitarian order

The Secretary-General, in a November report on the promotion of a new international humanitarian order [A/55/545], stated that, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/124 [YUN 1998, p. 846], he had asked States for information and expertise on humanitarian problems of special concern to them, in order to identify opportunities for future action. He suggested that in their replies they might wish to describe efforts they had taken to promote compliance with international humanitarian and human rights law and to confront situations in which those laws were violated. The report contained the reply of Bangladesh.

The Secretary-General had asked the Independent Bureau for Humanitarian Issues to conduct an in-depth study of the implementation of international humanitarian and human rights law at the field level in crisis situations, in consultation with OCHA. It was anticipated that the findings of the study would constitute the starting point for other initiatives to promote a culture of compliance. The Bureau appreciated the Secretary-General's efforts to make the discussion of the agenda item on a new international humanitarian order more issue-specific and suggested the creation of an expert group to analyse the replies of States and encourage those that had not responded to do so.

The Secretary-General suggested that the Assembly should make more effective use of the agenda item and focus on ways to promote a culture of compliance with international humanitarian and human rights law.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/55/597], adopted resolution 55/73 without vote [agenda item 109].

New international humanitarian order

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/124 of 9 December 1998 and other pertinent resolutions relating to the promotion of the new international humanitarian order and international cooperation in the humanitarian field,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the new international humanitarian order and his previous reports containing comments and views of Governments as well as of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

Recalling its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991, pertaining to humanitarian assistance, and the annex thereto,

Bearing in mind the reports of the Secretary-General submitted in the context of the Millennium Summit of the United Nations,

Noting the importance of adherence to internationally accepted norms and principles as well as the need to promote, as required, national and international legislation to meet actual and potential humanitarian challenges,

Noting with deep concern the continuing trend of systematic violations of refugee law, international humanitarian law and human rights instruments, which can lead ultimately to emergency situations,

Noting with appreciation the increased attention of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee to addressing the security needs of personnel responding to these emergencies,

Noting with appreciation also the emphasis placed by the Secretary-General on promoting strict adherence to refugee law, international humanitarian law and human rights instruments,

Recognizing that the ultimate aim of all humanitarian assistance should be to save human lives and facilitate the transition, at the appropriate time, to rehabilitation and reconstruction and to facilitate local capacity-building and institution-building, as necessary, in the affected countries and regions,

Recognizing, in addition, the urgent need further to strengthen international cooperation and coordination in the humanitarian field,

1. Notes the Secretary-General's continuing support of efforts to promote a new international humanitarian order;

2. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to promote strict adherence to refugee law, international humanitarian law, human rights instruments and internationally accepted norms and principles in situations of armed conflict and complex emergencies;

3. Urges Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and others concerned to extend cooperation and provide support to the efforts of the Secretary-General, inter alia, through the relevant United Nations agencies and organizational mechanisms set up to address the assistance and protection needs of victims of complex emergencies as well as the safety and security of United Nations and other humanitarian workers;

4. Calls upon all Governments and parties involved in complex humanitarian emergencies to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel so as to allow them to perform efficiently their task of assisting the affected civilian populations;

5. Invites Governments to make available to the Secretary-General, on a voluntary basis, information and expertise on humanitarian problems of concern to them, in order to identify opportunities for future action;

6. Invites the Independent Bureau for Humanitarian Issues to continue and to strengthen further its activities, including cooperation with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and the other relevant bodies of the United Nations system;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to remain in contact with Governments and the relevant international and non-governmental organizations and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the progress made concerning the promotion of a new international humanitarian order and compliance with refugee law, international humanitarian law and human rights instruments in armed conflicts and emergency situations.

Humanitarian aspects of peace and security

On 9 March [meeting 4110], following consultations among members, the Security Council President made statement S/PRST/2000/7 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the humanitarian aspects of issues before the Council.

The Council recalls its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security, and reaffirms the purposes and principles of the Charter. The Council reaffirms also its commitment to the principles of the political independence, sovereign equality and territorial integrity of all States.

The Council recognizes the importance of the humanitarian dimension to the maintenance of international peace and security and to its consideration of humanitarian issues relating to the protection of all civilians and other non-combatants in situations of armed conflict. The Council recognizes that humanitarian crises can be both causes and consequences of conflicts and that they can affect the Council's efforts to prevent and end conflicts, and to deal with other threats to international peace and security.

The Council affirms that timely consideration of the following humanitarian issues contributes to preventing the escalation of conflicts and to maintaining international peace and security: access for

United Nations and associated personnel, other humanitarian personnel and humanitarian supplies to the war-affected civilians; humanitarian components in peace agreements and peacekeeping operations; coordination between the Council and the relevant United Nations organs and agencies and regional bodies; and resource constraints.

The Council reaffirms its concern for the well-being and rights of war-affected civilians, and reiterates its call to all parties to a conflict to ensure safe and unimpeded access by humanitarian personnel to such civilians, in accordance with international law. The Council recognizes that the cooperation of all parties concerned is vital for effectiveness and safety in providing humanitarian assistance. In this regard, the Council reiterates its call for combatants to ensure the safety, security and freedom of movement of United Nations and associated personnel and humanitarian personnel. The Council stresses the importance of providing assistance to all those in need, with particular emphasis on women and children and other vulnerable groups affected by armed conflict, in accordance with the principle of impartiality.

The Council notes that full and timely support for humanitarian components can be critical in ensuring and enhancing the sustainability of any peace agreement and post-conflict peace-building. It emphasizes the importance of incorporating humanitarian elements in peace negotiations and agreements, including the issue of prisoners of war, detainees and missing persons and others protected by international humanitarian law. The Council invites the Secretary-General to encourage the early consideration of such humanitarian elements in peace negotiations sponsored or supported by the United Nations, as appropriate. In cases of peace negotiations sponsored or supported directly by Member States, the Council calls upon Member States to draw, as appropriate, upon the capacity of United Nations funds, programmes and specialized agencies as well as other relevant international humanitarian organizations and regional bodies.

The Council notes also that in some instances the integration of humanitarian components into peacekeeping operations would contribute effectively to the fulfilment of their mandate. In this regard, the Council notes the importance of adequate training for peacekeeping personnel in international humanitarian law and human rights and with regard to the special situations of women and children as well as vulnerable population groups. The Council notes with appreciation the inclusion of personnel to handle child protection issues in some recent peacekeeping operations, and encourages the inclusion of such personnel in future operations, particularly in the context of demobilization and reintegration of child soldiers and where there are a large number of displaced and other war-affected children. The Council welcomes and encourages efforts by the United Nations to sensitize peacekeeping personnel in the prevention and control of HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases.

The Council underlines the importance of effective coordination among relevant United Nations organs and agencies, regional bodies, other intergovernmental and international organizations and other humanitarian actors in the field in situations of ongoing conflict and peace-building through, inter alia, the development of strategic frameworks, and expresses its willingness to consider ways to improve such coordination. In this regard, the Council notes the need for further improvement in communication, information flow and coordination between the peacekeeping, humanitarian and development aspects of United Nations action.

The Council recognizes the role played by international humanitarian organizations and non-governmental organizations in providing humanitarian assistance and alleviating the impact of humanitarian crises, and further recognizes the specific mandate of the International Committee of the Red Cross in this regard. It emphasizes that it is important for these organizations to uphold the principles of neutrality, impartiality and humanity in their humanitarian activities.

The Council notes with concern that inadequate financial support can undermine efforts to address human suffering in certain contexts. The Council recognizes the need for appropriate financial support for humanitarian activities, and calls for adequate funding of humanitarian activities, bilateral or otherwise, in particular in support of multilateral efforts. The Council notes the importance of early engagement and dispersal of funds from the international financial institutions. The Council notes also with satisfaction that its previous statements calling for full support for the United Nations consolidated appeals have had a positive impact, and expresses its willingness to continue to encourage a generous response to such appeals.

The Council encourages the Secretary-General to continue to include the humanitarian situation in his regular briefing to the Council on countries under review, as well as the funding status of the United Nations consolidated appeals, where appropriate. It further requests the Secretary-General to ensure that his regular country reports continue to include a substantive, analytical section on humanitarian issues and their impact on international efforts to implement activities mandated by the United Nations.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Humanitarian activities

Africa

Angola

The UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for Angola, launched in 2000, which initially sought $258.5 million for the period January to December 2000, was revised to $262 million in July. The donor community had covered 53.9 per cent, or $141.5 million, of the revised appeal.

Progress was made in 2000 in stabilizing the situation of the people of Angola. The number of newly displaced persons dropped from 1 million in 1999 to 338,000 in 2000. Access to populations in need increased during the year, with the opening of at least six major road corridors. The extension of State administration to new areas also created opportunities for agencies to reach previously inaccessible groups, and opened the possibility of medium-scale resettlement and return. However, despite improved access, at the end of October an estimated 60 per cent of the areas hosting displaced populations were still without a humanitarian presence. Close to 10 per cent of the population (1.3 million) benefited from food assistance. The humanitarian operation was extensive, given the acute vulnerability among a large number of the population. About 4 million people, close to 25 per cent of the population, received some form of assistance during the year. A major development was the Government's increased commitment to humanitarian sectors through its national programme for emergency humanitarian assistance. In 2000, OCHA launched a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal covering January to December 2001 for a total of $202 million.

Comoros

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 53/1 F [YUN 1998, p. 847], the Secretary-General, in a June report [A/55/92], assessed the efforts of the international community to assist the Comoros to achieve national reconstruction and sustainable development. The country was effectively divided in two, as the island of Anjouan continued to be administered and to function independently. The Secretary-General observed that the difficult political and economic context inherent in the separatist crisis that had undermined the Comoros since 1997, coupled with insufficient sources of financing and the political impasse, was helping to further tarnish the country's image. Thus, it had had difficulty getting its partners to support the choices it had made regarding development and public finance management, and convincing them of its current and future viability. Those factors, compounded by the international community's disapproval following the military coup d'état of April 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 189], had prompted most of the country's development partners—which traditionally provided more than 80 per cent of all official development assistance (ODA)—to withdraw or adopt a wait-and-see attitude. Relegation of the Antananarivo agreement—a proposal to establish the Union of the Comoros within which each island would enjoy broad autonomy in respect of decision-making and administration—to the back burner caused the country to miss the opportunity to hold a donors' round table. The political context had been marked by institutional instability and had not facilitated the introduction of a suitable framework for consultation to mobilize donors and maintain assistance at a level that would make it possible to attain the objectives of Assembly resolution 53/1 F. The current situation of the Comoros still justified retaining the resolution's content. The report suggested that the resolution should be referred to the Economic and Social Council with a view to initiating a reconstruction and rehabilitation programme.

Eritrea

In January, a UN country team appeal requested $42.8 million for January to December 2000 to assist war-affected people and drought victims in Eritrea. As the response to the appeal was modest, with only $16.8 million, or 39.2 per cent, funded by 1 July, and more than 1 million Eritreans had been displaced following the outbreak of a major round of fighting on 12 May, the appeal was revised to $87.4 million to cover July to December. As at 31 December, $58.1 million, or 66.5 per cent, of the requirements were met. In June, the Eritrean Relief and Refugee Commission issued an appeal for emergency humanitarian assistance to war and drought victims for a total of $183 million. The UN emergency appeal for the drought in the Horn of Africa sought $392.6 million, including $20 million earmarked for Eritrea (see p. 884).

Until May 2000, the war between Eritrea and Ethiopia was contained in Eritrea to a limited area, with some 270,000 internally displaced persons from the border areas. After 12 May, when hostilities resumed, there was a sudden and massive increase in the population of internally displaced persons, including evacuations from large regions in Eritrea that had contributed to 75 per cent of the country's agricultural production and had hosted 48 per cent of the total population. The Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities (see p. 173) of 18 June halted more than a month-long fierce fighting and triggered the first return movements of civilians to areas that were previously insecure and/or inaccessible. By the second half of the year, the most critical emergency phase had passed. On 12 December, the Algiers Peace Agreement (see p. 180) ended the two-year border war, which, coupled with the deployment of a UN peacekeeping force, improved prospects for return movements by internally displaced persons and refugees displaced from the border areas. At the same time, more than 200,000 internally displaced persons remained in camps and continued to require a broad range of humanitarian assistance, including food and non-food aid. Relief items and emergency services were required for internally displaced persons living outside camps until conditions allowed their return. Compounding the humanitarian implications of war was the drought that affected much of the Horn of Africa (see p. 884), making recovery difficult. OCHA launched a consolidated inter-agency appeal for a total of $157.5 million to cover January to December 2001.

Ethiopia

During 2000, three appeals were launched for Ethiopia by the UN country team. In January, an omnibus appeal covering January to December 2000 totalled $55.9 million, of which $51.5 million was received as at 31 December; in June, an updated drought appeal covered June to December, for a total of $190 million, of which $101.5 million was received; and an updated appeal for rehabilitation and recovery programmes for internally displaced persons was released in August for the period September to December amounting to $30.5 million, of which $4.6 million was received. In January, Ethiopia's Federal Disaster Prevention and Preparedness Commission launched its annual relief appeal, which sought $163.4 million. On 14 November, the Commission issued an appeal for relief assistance requirements for internally displaced people and deportees, amounting to $13.6 million.

As a result of poor rains and war in Ethiopia, the number of people requiring emergency assistance by July exceeded 10 million, or 15.7 per cent of the population. With better rains in pastoral areas and the highlands and an end to hostilities with Eritrea, there were signs of improvement. However, large numbers of people, including some 350,000 displaced by the conflict, continued to face an uncertain future. Although a major relief effort and fortuitous rains averted a looming famine, full recovery was expected to be a long process, especially in the pastoral areas where livestock herds had been devastated by drought. Given the vast needs in Ethiopia in relation to the region and in accordance with the recommendations of the Special Envoy for the Drought in the Greater Horn of Africa, the Office of the Regional Humanitarian Coordinator was established in Addis Ababa to help coordinate Ethiopia-specific responses, as well as cross-border issues. Following the signing of the Algiers Peace Agreement on 12 December (see p. 180), approval was given for a $400 million World Bank-supported emergency recovery programme. A UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for Ethiopia to cover January to December 2001 sought $203.3 million.

Great Lakes region and Central Africa

The UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for the Great Lakes region and Central Africa covering January to December 2000 required $292.1 million for the regional appeal, inclusive of all World Food Programme (WFP) requirements for country-specific appeals, and $129.9 million for Burundi, the Congo, the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania. There was no appeal for Rwanda in 2000. Of the total requirement, amounting to $422 million, $243.9 million, or 57.8 per cent, was received as at October.

The humanitarian situation in the Great Lakes region and Central Africa continued to deteriorate and remained challenging for humanitarian organizations during 2000. Those most affected were caught up in the cycle of displacement, malnutrition, disease and insecurity. The lack of success in brokering peace and the ongoing conflicts in Burundi, the DRC and Uganda resulted in increased numbers of affected populations, internally, cross-border and outside the region. A UN consolidated inter-agency appeal covering January to December 2001 totalled $17.9 million.

Burundi

Despite progress on the political front, armed conflict continued to contribute to the deterioration of the humanitarian situation in Burundi throughout 2000. While the number of displaced persons decreased significantly, they remained as vulnerable as ever and had become more difficult to access because of the insecurity situation. The UN system was undertaking a national survey of internally displaced persons to assess their situation, basic needs and future plans. In November, OCHA launched a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal covering January to December 2001 for a total of $102 million.

Congo (Republic of the)

The UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for the Republic of the Congo, launched in 1999, which sought $17.1 million for January to December 2000, was revised to $28 million, of which $3.6 million, or 17.2 per cent, had been received.

Following the 1999 ceasefire, population return had accelerated and humanitarian access improved, including areas under the control of non-State actors. Support was required for communities and their returning members in their efforts to restore stability and security. The humanitarian community in the country had agreed on a series of priorities, including continuation of emergency relief combined with reintegration and rehabilitation, attaining full access to war-affected populations, ensuring that assistance met requirements in the northern regions of the country, and support for the peace process (see p. 120).

Uganda

In 2000, conflict and suffering continued in Uganda. The number of the affected population doubled from 690,000 to 1.2 million. Regional conflict and internal strife escalated, with the majority of refugees, displaced persons and drought victims lacking access to potable water, food, land, shelter, income and other basic rights. The consolidated inter-agency appeal for 2000 totalled $27.4 million, excluding WFP's budget of $39.6 million for Uganda, which was included in the Great Lakes regional appeal. By October, $16.3 million, or 59.5 per cent of the requirement, had been realized. Humanitarian activities were focused on fulfilling short-term relief needs at the expense of recovery and rehabilitation because of funding shortfalls.

In November, OCHA issued a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal seeking $78.7 million for January to December 2001.

United Republic of Tanzania

As a neighbour to conflicts and instability, the United Republic of Tanzania remained one of Africa's largest refugee-hosting countries. Ongoing civil and political unrest in Burundi and the DRC had hindered voluntary repatriation, causing increased refugee flows into Tanzania, with an estimated 484,000 refugee population as at the end of October. The Tanzanian population in the refugee-affected districts was about 1.2 million, and refugees thus comprised over one third of the districts' population. The long-term hosting of refugees had strained and negatively impacted the infrastructures and services available to the indigenous population, as well as to refugees. Other factors that affected the country, such as HIV/AIDS, malaria and natural disasters, had had a magnified impact on refugee-hosting regions.

In November, OCHA launched a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal totalling $110.4 million for January to December 2001.

Mozambique

In August [A/55/317], the Secretary-General reported on the economic and political recovery of Mozambique, following the 1992 General Peace Agreement [YUN 1992, p. 193]. Although recovery had been remarkable, the country's economy remained extremely fragile. Life had improved since the war, partly owing to favourable weather that contributed to increased agricultural production, but infrastructure remained weak. In February, flooding set back farmers, fishermen and other small businesses in the southern part of the country (see p. 885). Mozambique continued to need high levels of international assistance to complete reconstruction and to end acute poverty. The Secretary-General reviewed political and economic developments, as well as action taken to reduce poverty and combat sexually transmitted diseases and HIV/AIDS. He presented an overview of UN system initiatives and updated activities regarding education, health, water and sanitation, governance, HIV/AIDS, gender issues, environment and natural resource management, disaster management, food security and demining.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/167 [draft: A/55/L.53 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Assistance to Mozambique

Recalling Security Council resolution 386(1976) of 17 March 1976,

Recalling also its relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 45/227 of 21 December 1990, 47/42 of 9 December 1992, 49/21 D of 20 December 1994, 51/30 D of 5 December 1996 and 53/1 G of 16 November 1998, in which it urged the international community to respond effectively and generously to the call for assistance to Mozambique,

Reaffirming the principles for humanitarian assistance contained in the annex to its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991,

Recalling its resolutions 48/7 of 19 October 1993, 49/215 of 23 December 1994, 50/82 of 14 December 1995, 51/149 of 13 December 1996 and 52/173 of 18 December 1997 on assistance in mine clearance, and stressing the need to foster the establishment of national mine-clearance capacity with a view to enabling the Government of Mozambique to deal more effectively with the adverse effects of those weapons within the framework of the efforts for national reconstruction,

Recalling also its resolution 54/96 L of 10 March 2000 on assistance to Mozambique following the devastating floods,

Deeply concerned at the unprecedented floods in Mozambique, which have resulted in tragic loss of human lives and extensive destruction of property and infrastructure,

Deeply concerned also at the impact of the disaster on the economic, social and humanitarian situation in Mozambique,

Recognizing that natural disasters constitute one of the major problems for the development of Mozambique,

Aware that, to prevent and manage natural disasters, strategies at local, national and regional levels are required, in addition to international assistance,

Bearing in mind the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries on 14

September 1990, and the mutual commitment entered into on that occasion,

Noting with appreciation the mobilization and allocation of resources by States, relevant organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to assist national efforts,

Noting with satisfaction the full support by the international community of the post-emergency reconstruction programme presented by the Government of Mozambique at the International Reconstruction Conference for Mozambique, organized by the United Nations Development Programme and the Government of Mozambique, which was held in Rome on 3 and 4 May 2000,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Mozambique, and his report on assistance to Mozambique following the devastating floods,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Mozambique and his report on assistance to Mozambique following the devastating floods;

2. Welcomes the assistance rendered to Mozambique by various States, relevant organizations of the United Nations system, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and private individuals and groups to assist national development efforts, and their full support for the post-emergency reconstruction programme presented by the Government of Mozambique at the International Reconstruction Conference for Mozambique;

3. Also welcomes the progress made in the consolidation of a lasting peace and tranquillity, the enhancement of democracy and the promotion of national reconciliation in Mozambique;

4. Notes the importance of the International Reconstruction Conference for funding for the reconstruction programme, welcomes the pledges made by the development partners for the post-emergency programme, expresses its gratitude to the development partners that have already disbursed the pledged funds, and urges others to speed up the process;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to make all necessary arrangements to continue to mobilize and coordinate, with a view to supporting the efforts of the Government of Mozambique:

(a) Humanitarian assistance from the specialized agencies, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system;

(b) International assistance for the national reconstruction and development of Mozambique;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to it, for consideration at its fifty-seventh session, under the item on strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance, through the Economic and Social Council at the humanitarian segment of its substantive session in 2002, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Somalia

In a September report [A/55/415], submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/96 D [YUN 1999, p. 834], the Secretary-General reviewed the current situation in Somalia and the assistance provided to the country by the United Nations and its partners from August 1999 to July 2000. The Secretary-General reported that two countervailing forces characterized Somalia. On the one hand, commitment was shown to re-establishing the rule of law and promoting responsible public administration, while, on the other, there remained a lack of order and a potential for renewed violence, particularly in central and southern Somalia. It was essential to reduce malnutrition in southern Somalia through further emergency response activities. Emergency prevention activities would be enhanced, essential educational services would be extended and joint planning, implementation and monitoring of programmes with local authorities would be increased. The Secretary-General described three scenarios prepared by UN agencies to prioritize and coordinate action in preparation for possible crop failure or renewed conflict.

The UN consolidated inter-agency appeal, launched in November 1999, which initially solicited $124.3 million, was revised to $50.6 million in July. Of that amount, $30.2 million, or 71.5 per cent of requirements, was received. OCHA launched a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for $129.6 million to cover the period January to December 2001.

Communication. The Sudan transmitted to the Secretary-General a resolution adopted by the Eighth Summit of Heads of State and Government of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (Khartoum, 23 November) [A/55/772-S/2001/120] in support of assistance to Somalia for the realization of peace and national reconciliation and unity.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/168 [draft: A/55/L.55/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Assistance for humanitarian relief and the economic and social rehabilitation of Somalia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/206 of 20 December 1988, 44/178 of 19 December 1989, 45/229 of 21 December 1990, 46/176 of 19 December 1991, 47/160 of 18 December 1992, 48/201 of 21 December 1993, 49/21 L of 20 December 1994, 50/58 G of 20 December 1995, 51/30 G of 13 December 1996, 52/169 L of 16 December 1997, 53/1 M of 8 December 1998 and 54/96 D of 8 December 1999 as well as the resolutions and decisions of the Economic and Social Council on emergency assistance to Somalia,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 733(1992) of 23 January 1992 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, in which the Council, inter alia, urged all parties, movements and factions in Somalia to facilitate the efforts of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and humanitarian organizations to provide urgent humanitarian assistance to the affected population in Somalia, and reiterated the call for the full respect of the security and safety of the personnel of those organizations and guarantee of their complete freedom of movement in and around Mogadishu and other parts of Somalia,

Recalling further the statement by the President of the Security Council of 29 June 2000 in which, inter alia, the Security Council expressed its full support for the efforts exerted by the Intergovernmental Authority on Development to find a political solution to the situation in Somalia, underlined the importance of the widest participation of the representatives of all parts of Somali society, strongly urged representatives of all social and political forces of Somali society to participate actively, urged the warlords and faction leaders to desist from obstructing and undermining efforts to achieve peace, and also urged all States to stop providing those individuals with the means to carry on their destructive activities,

Noting the cooperation between the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States, the European Union, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the countries members of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and its Partners Forum, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and others in their efforts to resolve the humanitarian, security and political crisis in Somalia,

Noting with appreciation the continued efforts made by the Secretary-General to assist the Somali people in their efforts to promote peace, stability and national reconciliation,

Commending the initiative of the President of the Republic of Djibouti aiming at restoring peace and stability in Somalia, and noting with appreciation the efforts of the Government and people of Djibouti in hosting and facilitating the Somalia National Peace Conference, held in Arta, Republic of Djibouti,

Welcoming the outcome of the Arta peace process, led by Djibouti and sponsored by the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, which provides for the establishment of a transitional national parliament and the formation of a transitional national government,

Noting with appreciation that the mandate provided in the three-year transitional national charter emphasizes priorities, including reconciliation, demobilization of armed militia, restitution of properties to their lawful owners, holding of a national census, formulation of a new constitution, democratization, rehabilitation, recovery and reconstruction,

Welcoming the efforts of the transitional Government of Somalia to promote national reconciliation within Somalia, recognizing that progress has been achieved in some regions in re-establishing economic and administrative stability and encouraging the peaceful co-operation of all political groups with the new transitional Government towards this end,

Noting with concern that the lack of effective civil institutions in Somalia continues to impede sustained comprehensive development and that, while the environment has become more conducive to some reconstruction and development-oriented work in certain parts of the country, the humanitarian and security situation has remained fragile in other parts,

Reaffirming its support for the joint strategy for targeted assistance of the United Nations system that is focused on the rehabilitation and reconstruction of in-infrastructure and on sustainable community-based activities, as well as for the importance it attaches to the need for effective coordination and cooperation among the United Nations agencies and their partners,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Deeply appreciative of the humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation support rendered by a number of States and relevant organizations to alleviate the hardship and suffering of the affected Somali population,

Recognizing that, while the humanitarian situation remains fragile in some parts of Somalia, there is a need to continue the ongoing rehabilitation and reconstruction process alongside the national reconciliation process, without prejudice to the provision of emergency relief assistance wherever and whenever required, as security allows,

Noting with appreciation that the prospects for humanitarian, rehabilitation and development activities have been more favourable in some parts of the country, owing to the formation of stronger administrative structures, the commitment shown to re-establishing the rule of law in general, and the leadership shown by some regional authorities and by civil society groups in attempting to establish an inclusive alternative to the faction-ridden past of Somalia,

Noting with appreciation also the efforts of the United Nations system aimed at working directly with Somali communities at the local level, whenever possible, and emphasizing the need for coordination with the transitional Government and with local and regional authorities,

Welcoming the continued focus of the United Nations, in partnership with Somali elders, other local leaders and skilled local counterparts at the grass-roots level and non-governmental organizations, on a programme of assistance, including both humanitarian and developmental approaches, given the varying conditions in different areas,

Re-emphasizing the importance of the further implementation of its resolution 47/160 to rehabilitate basic social and economic services at the local and regional levels throughout the country,

1. Expresses its gratitude to all States and the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have responded to the appeals of the Secretary-General and others by extending assistance to Somalia;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continued and tireless efforts to mobilize assistance to the Somali people;

3. Welcomes the ongoing efforts of the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States, the European Union, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the countries members of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and its Partners Forum, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and others to resolve the situation in Somalia;

4. Also welcomes the strategy of the United Nations focusing on the implementation of community-based interventions aimed at rebuilding local infrastructures and increasing the self-reliance of the local population, and the ongoing efforts by the United Nations agencies, their Somali counterparts and their partner organizations to establish and maintain close coordination and cooperation mechanisms available for the implementation of relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes;

5. Notes with appreciation the holistic and prioritized approach of the United Nations system to addressing the continuing crisis in some parts of Somalia, while making long-term commitments to rehabilitation, recovery and development activities in more stable parts;

6. Emphasizes the principle that the Somali people have the primary responsibility for their own development and for the sustainability of rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance programmes, and reaffirms the importance it attaches to the creation of workable arrangements for collaboration between the United Nations system and its partner organizations and their Somali counterparts for the effective execution of rehabilitation and development activities in those parts of the country in which peace and security prevail;

7. Urges all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to continue to implement further its resolution 47/160 in order to assist the Somali people in embarking on the rehabilitation of basic social and economic services, as well as institution-building aimed at the restoration of civil administration at all levels in all parts of the country in which peace and security prevail;

8. Strongly urges all political groups in Somalia, in particular those which have remained outside the Arta peace process, to participate in the ongoing peace process and to establish a constructive dialogue with the new transitional Government, in order to achieve national reconciliation that allows for transition from relief to reconstruction and development and preserves economic and administrative progress achieved in many regions;

9. Calls upon all parties, individual political leaders and factions in Somalia to respect fully the security and safety of personnel of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and of non-governmental organizations, and to guarantee their complete freedom of movement and safe access throughout Somalia;

10. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize international humanitarian, rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance for Somalia;

11. Calls upon the international community to provide continuing and increased assistance in response to the United Nations consolidated inter-agency appeal for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance for Somalia, covering the period from October 2000 to December 2001;

12. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the critical situation in Somalia, to take all necessary measures for the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session.

Sudan

The UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for the Sudan, launched in 1999, which initially sought $125.6 million for January to December 2000, was revised to $131.5 million. The donor community covered 81.6 per cent, or $107.3 million.

Overall, most areas of the Sudan suffered from chronic structural underdevelopment, which was further compounded by ongoing conflict. People's livelihoods were directly affected in southern and eastern Sudan and indirectly in other areas as resources were diverted away from basic services and infrastructure. Violent conflict continued unabated around the oil fields in Unity State, Western Upper Nile, where the humanitarian situation remained critical. Humanitarian access to populations in the initial stages of displacement remained problematic due to insecurity and denial of access. Fighting continued in the Nuba Mountains, in parts of Bahr El Ghazal, Eastern Equatoria and Southern Blue Nile. In Bahr El Ghazal, the year was marked by the breakdown of the ceasefire in June and subsequent military activity by both sides to the conflict. Populations fleeing the conflict in Upper Nile and displaced in Bahr El Ghazal remained a priority. The humanitarian situation throughout most of the war-afflicted and other areas, except for Unity State, Southern Blue Nile and drought-affected Eastern Equatoria, had improved with better food security. Nevertheless, those gains remained very fragile, as no systematic and consistent longer-term building of local capacities for recovery could be undertaken due to funding restrictions.

In November, OCHA launched a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal covering January to December 2001 and totalling $194.2 million.

Communications. In March [A/54/818], the Sudan transmitted details of the detention, in February, by rebel militia at Fanjak district, Upper Nile State, of an aircraft of Operation Lifeline Sudan (OLS) Southern Sector. The WFP aircraft was used to transport three militia commanders from one area to another. The Sudan urged the United Nations to investigate the matter and to review OLS procedures and regulations in order to avoid a recurrence.

Also in March [A/54/789], the Sudan informed the Secretary-General that on 3 March the rebel movement expelled about 12 non-governmental organizations (NGOs), mainly from areas under the control of the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA). SPLA had acted to repatriate over 200 NGO employees to Nairobi, Kenya. On 10 March [A/54/792-S/2000/209], Portugal transmitted a statement on humanitarian aid in southern Sudan issued by the Presidency of the European Union (EU), urging negotiations with NGOs with the aim of creating conditions for unhindered operations in accordance with international humanitarian law.

On 29 July [A/54/956], the Sudan called on the international community to condemn a 27 July attack by the rebel movement on a UN boat, during which a representative of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) sustained injuries. It announced that the SPLA attack on UN personnel and relief agencies in southern Sudan was in violation of the declared ceasefire.

West Africa

In 2000, the West African subregion, including Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone, continued to experience escalating political and economic instability. By September, internal political disaffection and rebel incursions from Liberia and Sierra Leone heightened tensions in Guinea, leading to a campaign of terror and intimidation of Liberian and Sierra Leonean refugees there and to the internal displacement of Guinean citizens. Insecurity in the border areas between Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone caused further displacement of refugees. Prospects for peace in Sierra Leone were compromised by renewed hostilities and political inertia. Sporadic fighting, economic stagnation, a severe decline in international aid and the imposition of sanctions rendered the recovery process in Liberia close to collapse. A tense political and ethnic environment in Côte d'Ivoire continued to trigger the exodus of foreigners, mostly migrant workers from Burkina Faso and Mali.

OCHA launched a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for West Africa, covering January to December 2001, for a total of $65 million. The appeal constituted a key complement to the appeal launched for Sierra Leone in November (see p. 864).

Liberia

In a June report on assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia [A/55/90-E/2000/81], the Secretary-General said that the path to sustainable peace and recovery in the war-torn country remained uncertain, owing mainly to problems of governance and inadequate external support to the country's reconstruction programme. International assistance was geared towards building capacity for participatory and accountable governance and recreating a social safety net for the population. It also focused on rebuilding capacity for essential governmental operations, including the restoration of the effectiveness of the court system and confidence in the rule of law. The Secretary-General described UN assistance in the areas of governance, security and the rule of law; macro-economic reform and stabilization; resettlement, repatriation and reintegration; health; education; community revival and restoration; food security; and gender concerns.

The Secretary-General said that an assessment mission jointly led by the World Bank and UNDP in 1999 had concluded that significant progress had been made in implementing the first phase of the Government's National Reconstruction Programme, presented in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 850]. Some 90 per cent of the $230 million pledged in 1998 was being utilized. The overall security situation had improved and there were positive results from the resettlement of the conflict-affected population and rehabilitation of the war-ravaged social infrastructure. Progress had been made in stabilizing the macroeconomic environment through far-reaching monetary, fiscal and structural policy reforms. However, major infrastructures, such as the electricity grid, communications system and roads, remained dysfunctional, while the financial system and weak capacity in all sectors further constrained the recovery process.

The Secretary-General observed that the country's major challenge was consolidating the peace and addressing problems emanating from the conflict and the social disparity and ethnic divisions that fuelled the conflict. The presence of a large number of unemployed youth and former combatants in urban areas continued to threaten long-term stability, as did the economic base, which was at only one third of its pre-war level. The Secretary-General recommended that the General Assembly reaffirm resolution 53/1 I [YUN 1998, p. 850], which called for further support for rehabilitation and reconstruction in Liberia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 86], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/176 [draft: A/55/L.66 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 120 (b)].

Assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/232 of 21 December 1990, 46/147 of 17 December 1991, 47/154 of 18 December 1992, 48/197 of 21 December 1993, 49/21 E of 20 December 1994, 50/58 A of 12 December 1995, 51/30 B of 5 December 1996, 52/169 E of 16 December 1997 and 53/1 I of 16 November 1998,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Commending the Economic Community of West African States and the United Nations for their collaborative efforts with the Government of Liberia in its peace-building objectives,

Realizing that the restoration of peace has not brought rapid and sustainable social and economic recovery, despite programmes initiated by the Government aimed at reconciliation and reconstruction,

1. Expresses its gratitude to all donor countries, the specialized agencies of the United Nations system, the European Union, the Bretton Woods institutions and non-governmental organizations for their participation in a joint mission held in Monrovia from 15 to 19

November 1999 to assess the National Reconstruction Programme and the use of donor funds committed at the 1998 Donors' Conference for the reconstruction of Liberia, and urges those that have not yet honoured their pledges and commitment to do so;

2. Also expresses its gratitude to all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their assistance and support for the peace-building process in Liberia, and urges that such assistance be continued;

3. Calls upon all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide assistance to Liberia to facilitate the implementation of its National Reconstruction Programme submitted at the Donors' Conference;

4. Urges the Government of Liberia to provide an enabling environment for the promotion of socio-economic development and a culture of sustained peace in the country, including a commitment to upholding the rule of law, national reconciliation and human rights and to implementing ways and means of reducing tension and promoting sustainable and peaceful political development in the subregion;

5. Urges the United Nations system and all States, in working towards the reconstruction and development of Liberia, to direct their assistance to or through intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

6. Renews its appeal to the Government of Liberia to cooperate with the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other organizations in addressing the need for rehabilitation and reconstruction, and stresses the need for the Government of Liberia to assist and protect the civilian population, including refugees and internally displaced persons, regardless of their origin;

7. Calls upon all parties to respect fully the provisions of international humanitarian law and in this regard to ensure safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel to all affected populations throughout the territory of Liberia and the safety of United Nations and humanitarian personnel;

8. Commends the Secretary-General for his continuing efforts to mobilize international assistance for the development and reconstruction of Liberia, and requests him to continue his efforts to mobilize all possible assistance within the United Nations system to help in the reconstruction and development of Liberia, including the return and reintegration of refugees, displaced persons and demobilized soldiers;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution;

10. Decides to consider at its fifty-seventh session the question of international assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia.

Sierra Leone

The UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for Sierra Leone, launched in 1999, which initially sought $71 million for the period January to December 2000, was revised to $64.3 million in June. The donor community covered 67.6 per cent, or $43.5 million, of the revised appeal.

The security situation in Sierra Leone and the subregion remained precarious (see p. 189). Sporadic skirmishes between the main rebel group, the Revolutionary United Front (RUF), and the Civil Defence Forces continued in some areas. Interventions in small enclaves surrounded by RUF were intermittent and limited due to poor security and difficult road access. Reports from rebel-controlled areas, which comprised half the country, indicated severe food shortages and the rampant spread of disease. Subregional tensions between and within Sierra Leone, Guinea, Liberia and Côte d'Ivoire threatened to deteriorate into a large-scale complex emergency. In November, OCHA launched a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for $78.1 million to cover January to December 2001.

Asia

Afghanistan

Despite efforts on several fronts, political resolution of the conflict in Afghanistan remained elusive (see p. 262). Sporadic fighting continued and the traditional intensification of fighting had occurred in the summer months in the north and central districts. Insecurity continued to constrain the provision of assistance. The economy continued to deteriorate, fostering poverty and unemployment. The firman (edict) restricting the employment of Afghan women in UN and NGO programmes, with the exception of the health sector, affected several thousand women who had been working throughout the assistance community. The extremely low level of precipitation had destroyed nearly all the rain-fed crops and decimated the livestock (see p. 271 for drought assistance).

In response to a consolidated appeal, launched in 1999 for $220.8 million to cover January to December 2000, the donor community contributed $106.8 million, or 48.38 per cent of the requirements.

A UN consolidated appeal covering 2001, which sought $229.2 million, was launched in November.

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/189 B [YUN 1999, p. 838], the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/55/348] covering developments from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000, reviewed major humanitarian and socio-economic developments. He described assistance provided by the United Nations and its partners in the areas of food aid and food security, health, water and sanitation, education, mine action, food and agriculture, rural and urban rehabilitation, voluntary repatriation, drug control and human rights. The Secretary-General concluded that the combination of war, drought and displacement was likely to take a toll in the coming months. He noted that, apart from the humanitarian assistance, there were few responses to Afghanistan's huge rehabilitation and reconstruction needs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 86], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/174 B [draft: A/55/L.62/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda items 20 (d) & 46].

Emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/195 A of 17 December 1996, 52/211 A of 19 December 1997, 53/203 B of 18 December 1998 and 54/189 B of 17 December 1999,

Expressing its grave concern about the continuation of the military confrontation in Afghanistan, threatening regional peace and security and causing massive loss of life and extensive human suffering, further destruction of property, serious damage to the economic and social infrastructure, refugee flows and other forcible displacements of large numbers of people, as well as the failure of all warring parties, in particular the Taliban, to stop the fighting,

Noting with deep concern the worst drought for decades, which affects large parts of Afghanistan and risks dramatically exacerbating the already fragile humanitarian situation,

Remaining deeply concerned about the problem of millions of anti-personnel landmines and unexploded ordnance as well as the continued laying of new anti-personnel landmines in Afghanistan, which continue to prevent many Afghan refugees and internally displaced persons from returning to their villages and working in their fields,

Noting with deep concern that the majority of the Afghan people are unable to enjoy fully their human rights and fundamental freedoms owing to the accumulated effects of warfare, further aggravated by ongoing fighting and destruction, in particular by the Taliban, searing poverty, profound underdevelopment, and the policies and practices of the authorities,

Expressing its grave concern at the serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, in particular by the Taliban, in Afghanistan and at the inadequacy of measures taken by the warring factions to reverse the situation,

Deeply concerned by the continuing and substantiated reports of violations of human rights, in particular of women and girls, including all forms of discrimination against them, notably in areas under the control of the Taliban,

Welcoming the ongoing work of gender and human rights advisers appointed by the United Nations, who form an integral part of the office of the United Nations resident and humanitarian coordinator in Afghanistan,

Taking note of the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences,

Noting with alarm that the resumption of fighting by the Taliban during the past summer led to further displacement of civilian populations, especially in the provinces of Baghlan and Takhar,

Expressing its grave concern for the well-being of internally displaced persons and other vulnerable sections of the civilian population, who face a long winter possibly deprived of basic foods as a result of the drought and the recent fighting, as well as the repeated denial by the warring factions of adequate conditions for the delivery of aid by humanitarian organizations,

Affirming the urgent need to continue international humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan for the restoration of basic services, as well as the need for the conflicting parties to guarantee the safety and security of the personnel of all international organizations,

Welcoming the principle-centred approach towards humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation in Afghanistan, as outlined in the Strategic Framework for Afghanistan, and the consolidated appeals as tools to promote greater effectiveness and coherence in international aid programmes, and welcoming also the establishment of the independent strategic monitoring unit,

Deeply disturbed by the continuing security threat to United Nations personnel and other humanitarian personnel, including locally engaged staff, and by the fact that the authorities continue to limit their access to affected populations in certain areas,

Noting with deep concern the substantial restrictions introduced by the Taliban authorities on the operations of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations that provide humanitarian, economic rehabilitation and development assistance in Afghanistan, and noting in particular the negative impact these restrictions have on the provision of assistance to groups in need of special protection, especially women and children,

Noting with deep concern also that a significant number of Afghan refugees remain in neighbouring countries, as conditions in many parts of Afghanistan are currently not conducive to a safe and sustainable return, and acknowledging that those refugees constitute a continuing socio-economic burden for the host countries,

Expressing its gratitude to all Governments that have rendered assistance to Afghan refugees, in particular those of neighbouring countries that continue to host Afghan refugee populations, and at the same time again calling upon all parties to continue to honour their obligations for the protection of refugees and internally displaced persons and to allow international access for their protection and care,

Recognizing the need for continuing international assistance for the maintenance abroad and the voluntary repatriation and resettlement of refugees and internally displaced persons, and welcoming the voluntary return of refugees to rural districts in Afghanistan that are relatively stable and secure and not severely affected by the drought,

Expressing its appreciation to the United Nations system, and to all States and international and non-governmental organizations that have responded positively, and continue to respond, where conditions permit, to the humanitarian needs of Afghanistan, as well as to the Secretary-General for his efforts in mobilizing and coordinating the delivery of appropriate humanitarian assistance,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and endorses the observations contained therein;

2. Stresses that the responsibility for the humanitarian crisis lies with all warring parties, in particular with the Taliban;

3. Strongly condemns the resumption of major fighting by the Taliban during the past summer, especially in the Taloqan area and the Shomali Plains, resulting in further forcible displacement of civilian populations and destruction of infrastructure;

4. Notes with alarm numerous reports of the Taliban troops deliberately destroying, burning and looting homes and assets of civilians essential for their survival in the battle zones;

5. Urges all parties, in particular the Taliban, to end immediately all armed hostilities, and calls upon the leaders of all Afghan parties to place the highest priority on national reconciliation, acknowledging the desire of the Afghan people for rehabilitation, reconstruction and economic and social development;

6. Calls upon all relevant organizations of the United Nations system to continue to coordinate closely their humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan on the basis of the principles laid out in the Strategic Framework for Afghanistan, in particular to assure a consistent approach to the implementation of these principles, human rights and security, and appeals to donor countries as well as other humanitarian organizations to cooperate closely within the framework of the United Nations, taking into account the inter-agency consolidated appeal for emergency humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance to Afghanistan for 2001;

7. Strongly condemns the killing of seven Afghan employees of the United Nations-supported mine awareness programme by unidentified gunmen, as well as recent acts of violence and intimidation against United Nations personnel and offices;

8. Urges all Afghan parties, in particular the Taliban, to respect international humanitarian law, to ensure the safety, security and free movement of all United Nations and humanitarian personnel as well as their safe and unimpeded access to all affected populations, and to protect the property of the United Nations and of humanitarian organizations, including non-governmental organizations, so as to facilitate their work;

9. Calls upon the Taliban authorities to implement fully the Supplementary Protocol to the Memorandum of Understanding of 13 May 1998, signed by the United Nations and the Taliban, on the security of United Nations personnel in Afghanistan;

10. Demands that all Afghan parties cooperate fully with the United Nations and associated bodies as well as with other agencies and humanitarian organizations in their efforts to respond to the humanitarian needs of the people of Afghanistan;

11. Condemns all interference in the delivery of humanitarian relief supplies, and demands the secure and uninterrupted supply of humanitarian aid to all in need of it, especially in the Panjshir valley;

12. Strongly condemns substantial restrictions introduced by the Taliban authorities on the operations of the United Nations, in particular the recent decree of law banning the employment of Afghan women in the United Nations and non-governmental programmes, except in the health sector;

13. Calls upon the Taliban authorities to cooperate fully and without discrimination on grounds of gender, nationality or religion with the United Nations and associated bodies and with other humanitarian organizations, agencies and non-governmental organizations;

14. Denounces the continuing discrimination against girls and women as well as ethnic and religious groups, including minorities, and other violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Afghanistan, notably in areas under the control of the Taliban, notes with deep concern their adverse effects on international relief and reconstruction programmes in Afghanistan, and calls upon all parties within Afghanistan to respect fully the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all, regardless of gender, ethnicity or religion, in accordance with international human rights instruments, inter alia, the International Covenants on Human Rights, and to refrain from all attempts to single out minorities;

15. Strongly urges all the Afghan parties to end discriminatory policies and to recognize, protect and promote the equal rights and dignity of women and men, including their rights to full and equal participation in the life of the country, freedom of movement, access to education and health facilities, employment outside the home, personal security and freedom from intimidation and harassment, in particular with respect to the implications of discriminatory policies for the distribution of aid, notwithstanding some progress made with respect to access to education and health care for girls and women;

16. Urges all Afghan parties to prohibit conscripting or enlisting children or using them to participate in hostilities in violation of the provisions of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict;

17. Appeals to all States and to the international community to ensure that all humanitarian assistance to the people of Afghanistan integrates a gender perspective, that it actively attempts to promote the participation of both women and men and that women benefit equally with men from such assistance;

18. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments that continue to host Afghan refugees, appeals to the Governments concerned to reaffirm their commitment to international refugee law on the rights of asylum and protection, and calls upon the international community to do likewise;

19. Recognizes the high number of refugees in neighbouring countries, and calls upon the international community to consider providing further assistance to Afghan refugees;

20. Expresses concern over the continued laying of anti-personnel landmines, which continues to take a heavy toll on civilians and seriously impedes the delivery of humanitarian assistance, and urges all Afghan parties to call a complete halt to the use of landmines, as well as to fulfil their duties to cooperate with the United Nations mine action programme and to protect their personnel;

21. Urgently appeals to all States, the United Nations system and international and non-governmental organizations to continue to provide, when conditions on the ground permit, all possible financial, technical and material assistance for the Afghan population, especially in the areas most affected by the drought, and the voluntary, safe and secure return of refugees and internally displaced persons;

22. Calls upon the international community to respond to the inter-agency consolidated appeal for emergency humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance for Afghanistan, launched by the Secretary-General on 29 November 2000 for the period from 1 January to 31 December 2001, bearing in mind the availability also of the Afghanistan Emergency Trust Fund;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session a report on the actions taken pursuant to the present resolution;

24. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session, under the cluster of items on co-ordination of humanitarian assistance, the sub-item entitled "Emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan".

East Timor

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/96 H [YUN 1999, p. 840], the Secretary-General, in September [A/55/418], reviewed humanitarian developments and sector requirements and assistance provided by the United Nations and its partners in East Timor, beginning with the last quarter of 1999.

The Secretary-General reported that, in recognition of the need to ensure the early phase-in of development activities, a joint assessment mission, comprising experts from UN agencies, the East Timorese community, donors, the European Commission, the Asian Development Bank and the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and led by the World Bank, took place from mid-October to mid-November 1999. The mission identified priority short-term reconstruction needs and provided estimates of external financing requirements. The mission's findings were presented at a donor conference convened under the auspices of the Government of Japan (Tokyo, 16-17 December 1999). The amount of external financing requirements presented for humanitarian, reconstruction and development activities for East Timor totalled $878.3 million over a three-year period. The total pledged at the conference was $522.4 million, of which $148.9 million was for humanitarian assistance and $373.4 million for development activities. A follow-up conference was organized on 22 and 23 June 2000, hosted by the Government of Portugal and co-chaired by the World Bank and the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET). Donors expressed support for the activities of the Trust Fund for East Timor, administered by the World Bank, and endorsed a work programme for the period from July to December 2000.

In order to address emergency needs, the humanitarian community agreed on a series of common guidelines for priority intervention. The process was facilitated in the early stages of the humanitarian crisis by the Humanitarian Coordinator and OCHA. Subsequently, responsibility was transferred, effective 1 January 2000, to the UNTAET humanitarian assistance and emergency rehabilitation component.

The Secretary-General concluded that the engagement of the international community would be required to ensure that programmes continued to benefit the people of East Timor and to pave the way to self-reliance and sustainable development.

UNDP action. On 25 January [E/2000/35 (dec. 2000/2)], the Executive Board of UNDP/United Nations Population Fund approved the allocation of $5 million from the target for resource allocation from the core to meet immediate needs for assistance for 1999-2000 and the authority to make future allocations according to the formula applied to other programme countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/172 [draft: A/55/L.65 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Assistance for humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and development for East Timor

The General Assembly,

Recalling all of its relevant resolutions on the situation in East Timor, in particular resolutions 54/96 H of 15 December 1999 and 54/194 of 17 December 1999,

Recalling also its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and the guiding principles contained in the annex to that resolution,

Recalling further all of the relevant Security Council resolutions and decisions on the situation in East Timor, in particular resolutions 1272(1999) of 25 October 1999 and 1319(2000) of 8 September 2000,

Recalling the establishment by Security Council resolution 1272(1999) of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor, whose mandate includes the coordination and delivery of humanitarian, rehabilitation and development assistance,

Welcoming the response of the United Nations, other intergovernmental organizations, Member States and non-governmental organizations, with the coordination of the Transitional Administration since 1 January 2000, and in cooperation with the East Timorese people, in terms of addressing the humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and development needs of East Timor,

Acknowledging the progress made in the transition from relief to development in East Timor and, in this regard, the important role played by the Transitional Administration in supporting the resilient and determined efforts of the East Timorese people themselves,

Welcoming the progress that has been made in alleviating the humanitarian assistance needs of East Timor, while noting continuing requirements for food and shelter assistance,

Welcoming also the efforts of the Government of Indonesia and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in providing humanitarian assistance to the East Timorese refugees in the province of East Nusa Tenggara, West Timor, and in this respect recognizing the importance of the international community in assisting the efforts of the Government of Indonesia to implement resettlement and repatriation programmes of East Timorese refugees,

Emphasizing the need for continued international assistance to East Timor to support the transition from relief and rehabilitation to development, in preparation for independence, and recognizing the significant challenges that are to be faced in this regard, inter alia, in the education, health, agriculture and infrastructure sectors,

Deploing the killing of three personnel of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees at Atambua on 6 September 2000, which resulted in the withdrawal from West Timor of United Nations and other international humanitarian personnel, and welcoming in this respect the steps taken by the Government of Indonesia towards conducting a full-scale investigation, taking firm measures against those found guilty and ensuring a safe and secure environment,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Encourages the United Nations, other intergovernmental organizations, Member States and non-governmental organizations, with the coordination of the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor, and in close consultation and cooperation with the East Timorese people, to continue to collaborate to address the remaining humanitarian relief needs of East Timor, and to support the transition from relief and rehabilitation to development in preparation for independence;
3. Emphasizes the importance of continuing close consultation with and participation of East Timorese institutions and civil society, including local non-governmental organizations, in the planning and delivery of humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and development assistance to East Timor;
4. Welcomes the establishment of the East Timor National Council as an interim step towards a democratic legislative institution as well as the appointment of a joint cabinet to increase Timorese participation in the Administration;
5. Urges United Nations organizations, the international community and non-governmental organizations to continue their efforts aimed at the enhanced ownership and participation of the East Timorese, known as "Timorization" in East Timor, of the social, economic and administrative infrastructure, and in this regard stresses the need for capacity-building, inter alia, in areas such as education, health, agriculture and rural development, the judiciary, governance and public administration, security and law and order;
6. Commends Member States for their prompt response to the United Nations consolidated inter-agency appeal for the East Timor crises, which was launched on 27 October 1999, and urges Member States to fulfil their pledges to meet the external financing requirements for humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and development activities for East Timor;

7. Welcomes in this regard the convening of the Donors Meetings for East Timor in Tokyo on 16 and 17 December 1999, and in Lisbon on 22 and 23 June 2000, as well as the meeting in Brussels on 5 and 6 December 2000 which focused on the transition towards independence in East Timor in four key areas: political, public administration, public finances, and economic and social reconstruction;

8. Encourages continued international support in all sectors, including agriculture, infrastructure, health and education to assist the efforts of East Timor towards sustainable development, particularly in its transition to independence;

9. Welcomes the immediate response to food aid needs by the international community, urges it to continue to ensure food security for the remaining vulnerable groups in need, and calls upon the United Nations, other intergovernmental organizations, Member States and non-governmental organizations to assist the East Timorese in ensuring sustainable development in the areas of agriculture, livestock and fisheries;

10. Recommends that outstanding infrastructure needs remain an essential focus of international assistance in such areas as the reconstruction and rehabilitation of public buildings, educational facilities, roads and public services;

11. Commends the rapid international response in terms of providing health services to the general population, including the early deployment of immunization and disease prevention programmes, and reproductive health care and child nutrition programmes, while recognizing the need for further assistance to rebuild hospitals and for training health-care professionals;

12. Welcomes the ongoing reopening of schools, the supply and distribution of education materials, and teacher training, while emphasizing the need for capacity-building, particularly in the area of secondary and higher education, and for continued attention to the rehabilitation needs, including psychosocial support, of children affected by the violence;

13. Stresses the urgent need for sustained and enhanced efforts by the Government of Indonesia, the Transitional Administration and the international community effectively and comprehensively to resolve the question of the East Timorese refugees by the repatriation or resettlement of all those refugees, in conditions of safety and security at all stages, and based on their voluntary decisions, through the efforts of the Government of Indonesia to guarantee effective security in the West Timor camps, by the promotion of a credible and internationally observed registration process, and by the promotion of and support for reconciliation among all East Timorese;

14. Acknowledges the efforts of the Government of Indonesia, in cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Organization for Migration and other humanitarian organizations, to facilitate organized and spontaneous returns of East Timorese refugees from West Timor, including the repatriation of the former Indonesian military reservists known as Milsas, and underscores the importance of continued international assistance to support the efforts of the Government of Indonesia and relevant organizations to meet the needs of East Timorese refugees in West Timor, inter alia, by assisting their voluntary repatriation or resettlement;

15. Reaffirms the need to ensure safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel and assistance to all those in need and to ensure the safety and security of all humanitarian personnel in West Timor, recognizes in this regard the steps taken and the efforts being made by the Government of Indonesia to implement Security Council resolution 1319(2000), such as the ongoing disarming and disbanding of the militias, the deploying of additional security apparatus and the bringing to justice of those found guilty, and calls upon the Government to continue to strengthen such efforts in full cooperation with Member States, the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations;

16. Urges the United Nations to continue to address the humanitarian, rehabilitation and development needs of East Timor;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution for consideration by the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session.

Indonesia

Maluku

The conflict in Maluku between Muslim and Christian communities, which erupted in January 1999, cost thousands of lives and forced over 500,000 people to leave their homes. Some 215,000 displaced persons were reported in Maluku province and a further 207,000 in North Maluku, representing about 25 per cent of the population of the two provinces. Towards the latter part of the year, the region, made up of islands scattered across more than 1,200 square kilometres, had fewer clashes, yet tension persisted in many parts of the archipelago and few people felt secure enough to return to their homes. Many within the affected displaced population had been unable to support themselves and relied on outside assistance. In March, OCHA launched a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal totalling $14.1 million to cover 16 March to 30 September 2000, of which some $8.2 million, or 50 per cent, of requirements were met.

A further appeal, covering January to December 2001, sought $10.8 million for multisectoral activities.

West Timor

A UN consolidated inter-agency appeal that initially sought $28 million for West Timor from October 1999 to December 2000 was revised in June to $46.2 million, mainly to find durable solutions for East Timorese refugees in Indonesia, through either voluntary repatriation or local settlement in West Timor, or elsewhere in Indonesia, and to give increased aid to host communities in West Timor. As at 23 May, funds received totalled $21.1 million, or 45.7 per cent of requirements.

Kazakhstan

In a July report [A/55/212], the Secretary-General said that the international donor community had delivered humanitarian and development assistance to the affected population of the Semipalatinsk region, a former nuclear testing range in Kazakhstan (the Polygon), since the adoption of General Assembly resolutions 52/169 M [YUN 1997, p. 911] and 53/1 H [YUN 1998, p. 859], which called on the international community to contribute to the region's human and ecological rehabilitation and economic development.

The Tokyo International Conference on Semipalatinsk (Tokyo, 6-7 September 1999), jointly hosted by Japan and UNDP, aimed to raise awareness of the situation in the region and of the consequences of nuclear testing; appeal for further assistance; consider cooperation and coordination of the international community; and inform participants of the institutional arrangements of Kazakhstan to manage, coordinate, use and account for international assistance. An integrated Semipalatinsk Relief and Rehabilitation Programme, consisting of 38 impact-oriented actions for relief and rehabilitation in the areas of health, the environment and ecology, economic recovery, humanitarian issues, and information and advocacy, was distributed to the donor community prior to the Conference. The Conference pledged more than $20 million to assist the Programme.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 27 November [meeting 71], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/44 [draft: A/55/L.16 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

International cooperation and coordination for the human and ecological rehabilitation and economic development of the Semipalatinsk region of Kazakhstan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/169 M of 16 December 1997 and 53/1 H of 16 November 1998,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General,

Recognizing that the Semipalatinsk nuclear testing ground, inherited by Kazakhstan and closed in 1991, remains a matter of serious concern for the people and Government of Kazakhstan with regard to its consequences for the lives and health of the people, especially children and other vulnerable groups, as well as for the environment of the region,

Conscious that the international community should pay due attention to the issue of the human, ecological and socio-economic dimensions of the situation in the Semipalatinsk region,

Recognizing the need to coordinate national and international efforts aimed at the rehabilitation of the health of the affected population and the environment in this region,

Bearing in mind the need for know-how in minimizing and mitigating radiological, health, socio-economic, psychological and environmental problems in the Semipalatinsk region,

Recalling the Almaty Declaration of the heads of the Central Asian States of 28 February 1997, proclaiming 1998 as the Year of Environmental Protection in the region of Central Asia,

Taking into consideration the results of the international conference on the problems of the Semipalatinsk region, held in Tokyo in 1999, which have promoted the effectiveness of the assistance provided to the population of the region,

Recognizing the contribution of different organizations of the United Nations system, donor States, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to humanitarian assistance and the implementation of the projects aimed at the rehabilitation of the region,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and the information about the measures taken to solve the health, ecological, economic and humanitarian problems and to meet the needs of the Semipalatinsk region;

2. Stresses the need for continuing international attention and extra efforts in solving problems with regard to the Semipalatinsk region and its population;

3. Urges the international community to provide assistance in the formulation and implementation of special programmes and projects of treatment and care for the affected population in the Semipalatinsk region;

4. Invites all States, relevant multilateral financial organizations and other entities of the international community, including non-governmental organizations, to share their knowledge and experience in order to contribute to the human and ecological rehabilitation and economic development of the Semipalatinsk region;

5. Invites all Member States, in particular donor States, relevant organs and organizations of the United Nations system, including the funds and programmes, to participate in the rehabilitation of the Semipalatinsk region;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to pursue a consultative process, with the participation of interested States and relevant United Nations agencies, on modalities for mobilizing the necessary support to seek appropriate solutions to the problems and needs of the Semipalatinsk region, including those prioritized in the report of the Secretary-General;

7. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to enhance world public awareness of the problems and needs of the Semipalatinsk region;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on progress made in the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance”.

Tajikistan

Following the first multiparty parliamentary elections in Tajikistan (see p. 314), the country entered a new phase of nation-building, based on national reconciliation. However, those developments occurred against a backdrop of economic decline and infrastructure collapse that threatened to undermine further consolidation of the peace process. The overall situation worsened due to a severe drought that threatened the food security of more than a million people.

OCHA issued a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal that sought $34.8 million for January to December 2000, of which $27 million, or 77.6 per cent of requirements, was met by the donor community. In November, OCHA issued an inter-agency appeal covering January to December 2001 for a total of $82 million.

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/96 A [YUN 1999, p. 842], the Secretary-General, in August [A/55/347], described Tajikistan's current political and economic situation and humanitarian operations.

The Secretary-General observed that despite the conclusion of the peace process and improvement in the security environment, limited social and economic progress had been achieved. Access to food and basic social services had been further limited by deteriorating economic conditions and the prevailing drought. Humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance remained crucial, not only to sustain life but also to promote development and prevent renewed conflict. The UN team in the country was re-evaluating its activities to prepare a common strategy to support relief and recovery activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 27 November [meeting 72], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/45 [draft: A/55/L.41 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and rehabilitation in Tajikistan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/30 J of 25 April 1997, 52/169 I of 16 December 1997, 53/1 K of 7 December 1998 and 54/96 A of 8 December 1999,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 1113(1997) of 12 June 1997, 1128(1997) of 12 September 1997, 1138(1997) of 14 November 1997, 1167(1998) of 14 May 1998, 1206(1998) of 12 November 1998, 1240(1999) of 15 May 1999 and 1274(1999) of 12 November 1999, and the statements by the President of the Security Council of 21 March and 12 May 2000,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Welcoming the implementation of the main provisions of the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan,

Recognizing with satisfaction that the United Nations has played a successful and important role in the peace process and was instrumental in assisting the negotiation and implementation processes conducted under its aegis, believing that the United Nations should continue the assistance to Tajikistan in post-conflict peace-building, and welcoming in this regard the establishment of the United Nations Tajikistan Office for Peace-building,

Noting with satisfaction the efforts of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, which should be regarded as a successful operation, supported by the Contact Group of Guarantor States and International Organizations, the Mission of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and the Collective Peacekeeping Forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States, in assisting the parties in the implementation of the General Agreement,

Noting that, despite the conclusion of the peace process and significant progress in the security environment, the humanitarian situation has not improved, owing to the severe economic deterioration and the prevailing drought, and that significant humanitarian needs continue to exist throughout Tajikistan,

Recognizing that until the economy is able to support the Tajik population, humanitarian operations will remain a critical factor in strengthening the achievements of the peace process in Tajikistan,

Expressing regret that, despite the importance of humanitarian operations for contributing to peace and stability, donor response to both the 1999 and the 2000 consolidated inter-agency appeals has been insufficient,

Stressing that international funding for humanitarian operations is particularly important since such operations remain the principal means by which hundreds of thousands of Tajiks meet their basic needs,

Noting with concern the lack of support for food assistance and health programmes, which aim to save lives and must receive immediate funding if social catastrophe is to be avoided in Tajikistan,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and endorses the observations and recommendations set out therein;

2. Welcomes the implementation of the main provisions of the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, and the end of the transition period;

3. Also welcomes the continued role of the United Nations in post-conflict peace-building in Tajikistan and the establishment of the United Nations Tajikistan Office for Peace-building;

4. Stresses that Tajikistan has entered a new phase of post-conflict peace-building, which requires continued international economic assistance;

5. Recognizes that humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance remains crucial, not only to sustain life but also to promote development and prevent renewed conflict;

6. Welcomes with appreciation the efforts undertaken by the Secretary-General in drawing the attention of the international community to the acute humanitarian problems of Tajikistan and in mobilizing assistance for the post-conflict rehabilitation, recovery and reconstruction of the country;

7. Expresses its appreciation to the States, the United Nations, the World Bank and other intergovernmental organizations and all relevant humanitarian organizations, agencies and non-governmental organizations, including the International Committee of the Red Cross and the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, that have responded and continue to respond positively to the humanitarian needs of Tajikistan;

8. Encourages Member States and others concerned to continue assistance to alleviate the urgent humanitarian needs of Tajikistan and to offer support to Tajikistan for the post-conflict rehabilitation and reconstruction of its economy;

9. Warmly welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to continue the United Nations humanitarian programme in Tajikistan by issuing a consolidated inter-agency appeal for humanitarian assistance to Tajikistan for 2001, as a strategic document that will guide a gradual transition to a more development-oriented focus, and invites Member States to fund programmes included in the appeal;

10. Calls upon the Secretary-General to re-evaluate in 2001 all humanitarian assistance activities in Tajikistan with a view to addressing longer-term developmental issues;

11. Stresses the need to ensure the security and freedom of movement of humanitarian personnel, and of United Nations and associated personnel, as well as the safety and security of their premises, equipment and supplies;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to give special attention, in the dialogue with the multilateral lending institutions, to the humanitarian implications of their adjustment programmes in Tajikistan;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the humanitarian situation in Tajikistan and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

14. Decides to consider at its fifty-sixth session the question of the situation in Tajikistan under the item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance".

Europe

Northern Caucasus (Russian Federation)

The flash appeal issued in 1999 for the northern Caucasus, which sought $16.2 million and covered 1 December 1999 to 29 February 2000, was revised to $51.6 million and extended to 31 December 2000. As at 10 October, the donor community had committed $40.4 million, or 78.3 per cent of the requirements.

The humanitarian consequences of the events in the northern Caucasus continued to affect the lives of some 330,000 internally displaced persons and up to 690,000 residents in the Republics of Chechnya and of Ingushetia. There was little prospect for the return of the displaced population from Ingushetia to Chechnya during the 2000/01 winter. Assistance needs of the population in Chechnya remained largely unmet. On 16 August, the Russian Federation and the United Nations signed a memorandum of understanding, which established a firm basis for the United Nations to provide humanitarian assistance in the northern Caucasus.

In November, OCHA launched a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for $44.9 million to cover programmes from 1 January to 31 December 2001.

South-Eastern Europe (Albania and the former Yugoslavia)

The UN consolidated inter-agency appeal, issued in 1999 for South-Eastern Europe—Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM)—which sought $660 million to cover January to December 2000, was revised to $629 million, as the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) reduced its budget through prioritization. As at 31 October, $305.4 million, or 48.6 per cent of the requirements, had been committed. Resources were limited in 2000 due to reduced donor funding and the phasing out of bilateral actors.

Albania was transited by a large number of illegal migrants who might claim asylum and overburden the asylum system. Although some progress was made in disentangling asylum, trafficking and illegal economic migration, resources received were insufficient to meet the ongoing needs in the economically and security-troubled country. Assistance was needed to further institutional reform, curb illegal migration and trafficking, and extend international protection to those without Albanian citizenship. Bosnia and Herzegovina was affected negatively by the increased numbers of spontaneous minority returns, partly as a result of improved levels of implementation of property laws and the impact of underfunding the consolidated appeal for 2000, particularly programmes required to make such returns viable. A more favourable political situation and improved security conditions in Croatia facilitated the voluntary return of refugees and internally displaced persons, as well as support for peace-building and community reconciliation. Nevertheless, the funding shortfall affected the levels of protection and assistance provided, particularly to returnees in war-affected areas. In FRY, funding shortfalls forced many agencies to scale down their planned operations. Political constraints also limited the impact of the humanitarian operation (see also below). Repatriation of refugees continued but remained linked to the political and economic situation in Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina. On the whole, the objectives set for the Kosovo province of FRY were met. Programmes led to a sharp recovery in agricultural production, provided protection and relief for refugees, internally displaced persons and vulnerable returnees, and supported the rehabilitation of quality basic services in the education, health and social welfare sectors. In FYROM, host family fatigue increased towards the end of the year. Efforts were made to integrate vulnerable groups, but the remaining refugee population remained dependent on humanitarian organizations whose resources were limited.

In November, a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal sought $429 million for January to December 2001.

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/96 F [YUN 1999, p. 844], the Secretary-General, in September [A/55/416], reviewed humanitarian, socio-economic and human rights developments in FRY from 1 July 1999 to 30 June 2000. He described assistance provided by the United Nations and its partners.

Humanitarian efforts in FRY were carried out against a background of political complexities. Given Serbia's international isolation, assistance there had been limited to humanitarian aid. Montenegro was shifting to transitional initiatives. Although the international community had scored impressive achievements in Kosovo, the goal of promoting tolerance and peaceful co-existence among ethnic groups had proved elusive. The Secretary-General concluded that until the underlying political and economic problems could be resolved, the United Nations would continue efforts to address the urgent needs of affected populations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/169 [draft: A/55/L.57 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Humanitarian assistance to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991, and reaffirming that humanitarian assistance should be provided in accordance with the guiding principles contained in the annex to that resolution,

Recalling also its resolution 54/96 F of 15 December 1999,

Deeply appreciative of the humanitarian assistance and the rehabilitation support rendered by a number of States, in particular major contributors, international agencies and organizations and non-governmental organizations to alleviate the humanitarian needs of the affected population in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, in particular emergency assistance packages provided by the European Union, participants in the FOCUS humanitarian relief initiative and other countries,

Deeply concerned about the continuing urgency of the humanitarian situation in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, aware of the magnitude of the humanitarian requirements of the country, and recognizing the need to ensure effective links between relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia,

Aware of the persisting gravity of the situation of socially and economically vulnerable segments of the population, including refugees and displaced persons, coupled with significantly decreased social services capacity, especially in the health sector,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Taking note also of the report prepared by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat in Belgrade entitled "Background on the Energy Sector in Serbia for Winter 2000-2001",

Recognizing the role of the United Nations in solving the humanitarian problems facing the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and in coordinating the efforts of the international community to provide humanitarian assistance to the country,

Welcoming the admission of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe on 26 October 2000,

Welcoming also the admission of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to membership in the United Nations on 1 November 2000,

1. Calls upon all States, regional organizations, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other relevant bodies to provide humanitarian assistance to alleviate the humanitarian needs of the affected population in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, especially during the coming winter months, bearing in mind in particular the special situation of women, as well as children and other vulnerable groups;

2. Also calls upon all States, regional organizations, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other relevant bodies to offer support to the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in its efforts to ensure the transition from relief to the longer-term goals of rehabilitation, reconstruction and development of the country;

3. Welcomes the commitment of and encourages the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to continue to cooperate with the United Nations system and humanitarian organizations to address the humanitarian needs of the affected population, including refugees and internally displaced persons, and urges the relevant authorities and the international community to support programmes to ensure that the humanitarian needs of refugees and internally displaced persons in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia are met and to pursue durable solutions to their plight, in particular voluntary repatriation and reintegration, stresses the need to create conditions conducive to their safe return, and emphasizes in this regard the importance of regional cooperation in the search for solutions to the plight of refugees;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize the timely provision of international humanitarian assistance to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia;

5. Emphasizes the importance of strengthening the coordination of humanitarian assistance to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, inter alia, through the mechanisms of a consolidated inter-agency appeal, and recognizes in this regard especially the role of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs;

6. Requests the United Nations and the specialized agencies to continue their efforts to assess the humanitarian needs, in cooperation with the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, relevant international and regional organizations and bodies and interested States, with a view to ensuring effective links between relief and longer-term assistance to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, taking into account the work already carried out in this field and the need to avoid duplication and the overlapping of efforts;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to it at its fifty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance", a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Special economic assistance

African economic recovery and development

During its discussion of the integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to major UN conferences and summits, the Economic and Social Council, in July, considered a June report of the Secretary-General [E/2000/69] on the implementation of its agreed conclusions 1999/2 on the development of Africa [YUN 1999, p. 845].

Regarding consistency of coordination mechanisms, the report stated that the main modality for increased efficiency continued to be the promotion of coherent UN system support for countries in Africa, with a view to strengthening national capacity and supporting the integrated and coordinated follow-up to the major international conferences of the 1990s. The United Nations Development Group (UNDG) played an important role in that effort. Coordination mechanisms developed to harmonize development assistance provided by the UN system and interfaced with Governments included the resident coordinator system, the common country assessment, the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) and thematic groups. By the end of 2000, it was envisaged that 44 common country assessments and 19 UNDAFs would be completed in Africa.

With respect to country coverage, the cluster concept of the United Nations Special Initiative for the Implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s (see p. 874), which assigned responsibility to agencies as either coordinating or cooperating agencies, provided an opportunity for effective coordination and coherence. In the education cluster, led by the World Bank, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and UNICEF, a joint strategy for 16 low-enrolment countries had been developed and support for education sector development plans had been provided to Africa. In the cluster on harnessing information technology for development, national information and communication infrastructure plans had been approved in 10 countries, and 12 countries were in the process of preparing plans. A number of country teams had been working on coordinated responses to situations that fluctuated between crisis and development, or where the prospects of renewed crisis were considerable. Gender, reproductive health, HIV/AIDS, girls' education, poverty reduction, food security and disaster mitigation were examples of where collaboration crossed organizational boundaries to include different partners, various regions and a mixture of coordination instruments. Some agencies were working directly with regional and subregional organizations. Significant effort had been made to ensure the consistency of the various coordination mechanisms.

As to ownership of development assistance, the UN system, having established the common country assessment and UNDAF as coordination mechanisms, had started identifying the next wave of challenges, the most important of which was the need to continue efforts to ensure and improve government participation. Although it was too early to assess the impact of the two mechanisms, most country teams reported enhanced collaboration with local stakeholders, including Governments. While efforts to expand country ownership had increased, there was still much progress to be made, especially regarding the active participation of Governments in coordination meetings. The development of sector-wide approaches in Côte d'Ivoire, Ethiopia, Ghana and Uganda had fostered country ownership, with various partners supporting a single policy thrust as articulated by the Government. Weakness in institutional capacity and statistical data limitations were the main constraints to the full ownership of development assistance.

For the UN system, the framework for global coordination was the UN New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, which adressed the priority areas critical to promoting recovery, growth and sustainable development. The 1998 report of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa [YUN 1998, p. 66] and its follow-up by the UN system (see p. 116) was also a framework for addressing some of the key priority areas, with the goal of not just economic recovery and development but also a durable peace. The Office of the Special Coordinator for Africa and the Least Developed Countries of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs functioned as a point of coordination, and UNDG served to facilitate the coordination and harmonization of the various Africa initiatives to the extent that UNDAF and its coordination mechanisms integrated elements of the various programmes and initiatives of bilateral development agencies. The UN system continued to work with the regional and subregional organizations in defining common priorities at the policy and operational levels. Regarding a request contained in agreed conclusions 1999/2 to the Secretary-General to commission an independent evaluation of the New Agenda, the Office of the Special Coordinator, the Economic Commission for Africa and the Africa Recovery Unit of the Department of Public Information had jointly engaged in monitoring its implementation. The Office of the Special Coordinator was taking the lead in preparing a report on progress achieved in strengthening African capacity to coordinate international development assistance at the country level and at the subregional and regional levels, and in developing country-specific as well as comprehensive coordination mechanisms.

The report concluded that it was too early to assess UN reform in the area of coordination and harmonization, especially in Africa, but significant improvements had been made that had strengthened the overall contribution of the UN system to development in the region. Improved coordination frameworks had potential for the better management of programmes, but there was still a need to clarify and strengthen the links among them. The effects of the decline in core resources and its negative impact on human resources required to monitor programme implementation might undermine initial successes achieved thus far.

By decision 2000/290 of 28 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

New Agenda for the Development of Africa

The United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 46/151 [YUN 1991, p. 402], continued to be implemented by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), among others.

UNCTAD action. The twenty-fifth executive session of the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB) (Geneva, 22 September) [A/55/15 (Part III)] considered an August report by the UNCTAD Secretary-General [TD/B/EX(25)/2], containing an overview of UNCTAD research and analysis with regard to African development. The report summarized specific activities, including advisory services and technical cooperation, in each sector falling under UNCTAD's mandate. The UNCTAD Secretary-General noted that in the light of the Board's 1999 agreed conclusions [YUN 1999, p. 848], the UNCTAD secretariat had undertaken a study on capital flows and growth in Africa [UNCTAD/GDS/MDPB/7], which argued that growth in Africa continued to be too erratic and too slow to permit an increase in both living standards and domestic savings. The study discussed the policy approaches needed to ensure that aid was effectively translated into investment and growth, keeping in mind the policy mistakes made during the pre- and post-adjustment periods.

At its forty-seventh session (Geneva, 9-20 October) [A/55/15 (agreed conclusions 460(XLVII))], TDB stated that the average growth rate attained in the 1990s for Africa had been 2.4 per cent yearly, far below the average annual growth rate of at least 6 per cent, established as an objective of the New Agenda and needed to achieve sustained and sustainable economic growth and equitable development. It recommended increased foreign capital flows, both private and official, and institutional reforms to reverse capital flight. Foreign direct investment should be encouraged through the promotion of cooperation between industrialized countries and Africa, and efforts should be taken to mitigate the negative perception that prevented reforming countries from reaping the benefits of their efforts and to attract greater foreign capital flows. Concessionary resources akin to ODA were required to address the structural rigidities that constrained Africa's development effort, especially human resources capacities development and poverty alleviation, as well as the extension of physical infrastructure and production capacities. Efforts were needed to increase ODA and to maintain a substantial level of ODA flows to fill the investment gap; over the longer term, private capital flows and domestic savings should replace official financing, thereby reducing the aid dependence of African countries.

The Board noted that Africa's external debt had grown at a very high rate; the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative and the goal of bringing an additional 10

HIPCs to decision point by year's end were a welcome development. The Board observed that African countries needed to adopt policies to ensure the efficient use of existing and additional resources to develop human capital and social and physical infrastructure. The report on capital flows and growth in Africa (see p. 874) and a summary of the Board's discussions of the report should serve as an input to the preparatory process for the UN high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development (see p. 915), as well as for the review of the New Agenda, scheduled for 2002.

Reports of Secretary-General. A September report of the Secretary-General [A/55/350], submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 51/32 [YUN 1996, p. 832], reviewed progress made by the UN system, as well as action taken by African States and donor countries, in implementing the recommendations of the 1996 mid-term review [ibid., p. 829] of the UN New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s. The report updated a 1998 progress report [YUN 1998, p. 863].

A majority of African countries had made substantial progress in applying appropriate macro-economic policies, promoting the private sector and intensifying the democratization process, yet more improvements were needed in those areas. Africa still lagged behind other developing regions in foreign direct investment, and recommendations on its debt problem had not been fully implemented despite various initiatives. Progress was limited in trade facilitation and market access, due largely to supply constraints, including lack of competitiveness of African products. Progress had been achieved in agriculture and food production, as well as in education, health, population, gender, environment and development. A number of factors continued to hinder the effective implementation of the recommendations of the mid-term review. African countries needed to increase their share in global trade and improve their domestic savings and investment through increased revenue mobilization and improved financial intermediation. The final review and appraisal of the New Agenda was scheduled for 2002.

An addendum to the Secretary-General's report [A/55/350/Add.1], on mobilization of additional resources for African development, noted that between 1992 and 1998 net aggregate resource flows to Africa were erratic, fluctuating from $22.2 billion in 1992 to a high of $28.2 billion in 1995, and thereafter declining to $23.4 billion in 1996. They increased to $26 billion in 1997, but declined steeply to $17.1 billion in 1998, or by 22 per cent annually from 1995 to 1998. The report said that there were indications of some improvement in external resource flows to Africa in 1999.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 88], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/216 [draft: A/55/L.68 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 30].

Implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s

The General Assembly,

Having considered the progress report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, and its addendum on mobilization of additional resources for African development, a study on overall resource flows to Africa,

Recalling its resolution 46/151 of 18 December 1991, the annex to which contains the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, its resolutions 48/214 of 23 December 1993, 49/142 of 23 December 1994 and 53/90 of 7 December 1998 on the implementation of the New Agenda, as well as its resolution 51/32 of 6 December 1996 on the mid-term review of the implementation of the New Agenda,

Bearing in mind the report of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa submitted to the Security Council and the General Assembly in 1998 and its resolution 54/234 of 22 December 1999 on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, as well as the recommendations of the Open-ended Ad Hoc Working Group on the Causes of Conflict and the Promotion of Durable Peace and Sustainable Development in Africa, established by the General Assembly to monitor the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General,

Recalling that, while the primary responsibility for the development of Africa remains with African countries, the international community has a stake in it and in supporting the efforts of those countries in that regard,

Welcoming recent efforts and initiatives of the United Nations on Africa, in particular, the meeting of the Security Council on human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) in Africa, held in January 2000, section VII of the United Nations Millennium Declaration on meeting the special needs of Africa, the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council to be held in July 2001, as well as other events on development that will address issues of particular importance for Africa, such as the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries to be hosted by the European Union in Brussels in May 2001, the special session of the General Assembly on HIV/AIDS scheduled for June 2001, the high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development and the ten-year review of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

Welcoming also the strong partnership between European Union and African countries through the Cairo

Declaration and Plan of Action,* as well as the Cotonou Agreement of 23 June 2000, with its financial commitments, between the members of the European Union and the African, Caribbean and Pacific Group of States, which is mainly composed of African countries,

Welcoming further the support by the international community, including the Beijing Declaration and Programme for China-Africa Cooperation in Economic and Social Development, adopted by the China-Africa Cooperation Forum on 12 October 2000, the United States of America Africa Growth and Opportunity Act, as well as the Ministerial Conference of the Tokyo International Conference on African Development on the follow-up of the implementation of the Tokyo Agenda for Action, scheduled for 2001 or early 2002,

Taking note with great concern of the debt burden of many African countries, as debt servicing continues to drain the limited resources for development,

Reaffirming the need for the integration of African countries into the international trading system by highlighting the importance of creating, at the national and international levels, an environment that is conducive to attracting foreign direct investment and promoting international trade as engines of growth and development,

Expressing its concern at the overall declining trends of resource flows to Africa, in particular the low levels of foreign direct investment and official development assistance, which have seriously constrained, among other things, the timely implementation of the New Agenda,

Recognizing the crucial need for a substantial increase in financial resource flows to Africa to support the implementation of development activities of African countries,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the progress report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and its addendum on the mobilization of additional resources for African development, a study on overall resource flows to Africa;

2. Recognizes and calls for further broadening and strengthening of efforts by many African countries to enhance progress in areas covering economic reforms, including the putting in place of sound macro-economic policies, promotion of the private sector, enhancement of the democratization process and strengthening of civil society and participatory, transparent and accountable governance and the rule of law, as well as increased attention to the human dimension, especially education, gender, population, health and south-south cooperation;

3. Expresses its grave concern at the limited progress in many other areas, such as poverty eradication, prevention and treatment of infectious diseases, such as malaria, tuberculosis and, in particular, the HIV/AIDS pandemic, the combating of drought and desertification, agriculture and food production, food security, infrastructure development, institutional capacity for regional cooperation and integration, environment and development and conflict prevention, management and resolution;

4. Urges the implementation of the enhanced programme of debt relief to heavily indebted poor countries without delay and the cancellation of all the official bilateral debt of those countries in the context of poverty eradication, in return for a demonstrable commitment by them to poverty reduction as part of their overall development strategy, and requests the support of the international community for debt relief for African countries in a comprehensive and effective manner;

5. Stresses the urgent need to facilitate the full integration of African countries into the world economy, and in this context calls for continued efforts to enhance market access for products of export interest to African economies and support for the efforts towards diversification and the building of supply capacity, and in this regard welcomes the efforts of the European Union and the United States, in particular through the Cotonou Agreement of the European Union and the African, Caribbean and Pacific Group of States and the United States Africa Growth and Opportunity Act;

6. Expresses its appreciation to the developed countries that have agreed to and have reached the target of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for overall official development assistance, and calls upon the developed countries that have not yet done so to strengthen their efforts to achieve, as soon as possible, the agreed target of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for overall official development assistance, taking into account the special development needs of the least developed countries in Africa;

7. Urges all States, international financial institutions, in particular the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, multilateral organizations and development funds and programmes of the United Nations system, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to pursue with renewed vigour, and as a matter of urgency, the realization of the goals and objectives embodied in the New Agenda;

8. Calls upon the United Nations system, as well as other multilateral and bilateral development cooperation institutions, including international financial institutions, and non-governmental organizations, to ensure that development assistance activities in Africa are carried out in a more coordinated manner for greater efficiency, impact and tangible results under the leadership of recipient countries;

9. Reaffirms its resolution 51/32, recognizing the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative on Africa as an implementing arm of the New Agenda, and notes with satisfaction the progress achieved so far, and invites the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to strengthen this mechanism with a view to enabling it to advance coordination and harmonization of initiatives among development actors in Africa, and in this regard stresses the importance of establishing an integrated United Nations approach to Africa;

10. Also reaffirms its decision contained in resolution 51/32 to conduct in 2002 the final review and appraisal of the New Agenda in line with the provisions of section II, paragraph 43 (e), of the annex to resolution 46/151;

11. Invites the Secretary-General to encourage the closer involvement of the Organization of African Unity in the implementation, follow-up and evaluation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and beyond, including the holding of the final review of the implementation of the New Agenda in 2002;

12. Stresses the importance, in preparation of the final review and appraisal of the New Agenda, of an independent and high-level quality evaluation;

13. Reiterates, in this regard, the importance of establishing a set of performance indicators to measure the progress made in the implementation of the New Agenda;

14. Requests the Secretary-General, taking into account these indicators, to submit an independent and objective evaluation of the New Agenda to the General Assembly not later than 31 May 2002;

15. Reaffirms its decision contained in resolution 54/234 to consider at its fifty-sixth session the modalities for undertaking the final review and appraisal of the New Agenda, taking into account the mid-term review of the New Agenda, agreed conclusions 1999/2 and decision 1999/270 adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1999, and section VII of the United Nations Millennium Declaration.

UN System-wide Special Initiative on Africa

CPC action. In response to a 1999 request of the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) [YUN 1999, p. 849], the Secretary-General submitted to CPC, at its fortieth session (New York, 5 June–1 July and 21–29 August) [A/55/16], a May report [E/AC.51/2000/6 & Corr.1] updating progress made in the implementation of the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative for the Implementation of the New Agenda for the period May 1999 to April 2000.

Further progress was recorded in governance, information technology, education, health, gender and population. Programmes relating to poverty reduction through employment and informal sector development, market access and trade opportunities, water, food security, environment and South-South cooperation had shown steady progress.

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council agreed conclusions 1999/2 [YUN 1999, p. 845] and a 1999 CPC request [ibid., p. 848], the Secretary-General presented a resource mobilization strategy, which would be discussed at the second annual regional consultation meeting of UN system organizations working in Africa (see below).

Improvements had been made regarding coordination at the country, subregional and regional levels.

Annexed to the report was the proposed resource mobilization strategy and information on action taken by the UN system in response to CPC recommendations made in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 865] and 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 848]. The Secretary-General observed that much remained to be done to implement those recommendations.

On 22 June [A/55/16], CPC, expressing support for the resource mobilization strategy annexed to the Secretary-General's report, requested that an independent evaluation covering the five-year duration of the Special Initiative be carried out and submitted in 2001. The Committee reiterated the importance it attached to its 1998 recommendation that the various lead agencies be called upon, under the coordination of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) Steering Committee, to develop a common strategic framework for action.

Regional consultation. The second regional consultation of UN agencies working in Africa (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 26–27 June) stated that resource mobilization for Special Initiative activities was best addressed at the country level on the basis of country-owned sector-wide programmes.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

As the Democratic Republic of the Congo grappled with the third year of the war, the humanitarian crisis was growing throughout the country. The number of vulnerable people was estimated at 16 million, or about 33 per cent of the population, while 4.3 per cent of households faced chronic food insecurity. Health service provision halved and continued to dwindle. Access problems were encountered in government- and rebel-controlled areas. However, breakthroughs were made in Kasai, Northern Katanga, Equateur, Ituri and South Kivu.

A UN consolidated inter-agency appeal, covering January to December 2000, which had sought $71.4 million, was revised in July to $37 million. The decrease reflected the exclusion of WFP requirements that were included in the 2000 appeal for the Great Lakes region (see p. 858). Of the revised amount, $11.8 million, or 31.8 per cent of the requirements, was received. An inter-agency appeal for January to December 2001 sought $139.5 million.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/96 B [YUN 1999, p. 849], the Secretary-General, in August [A/55/319], described financial and material assistance provided by the UN system to the DRC in its economic recovery and reconstruction process.

Humanitarian activities constituted a major part of the activities undertaken by UN agencies, but support to development activities also continued. Aside from UNICEF, which had drawn up a country programme, all the other development agencies were executing interim programmes. UNHCR continued to carry out its assistance programmes for refugees in the reception zones. Interventions by UN agencies that had gone beyond emergency humanitarian assistance covered health, including the fight against AIDS, education, governance, management of development, agriculture, rural development and environment, humanitarian needs, infrastructure and employment/labour. However, their efforts were handicapped by certain decisions of DRC authorities, particularly the monetary measures to fix the exchange rate of the national currency.

Furthermore, ODA had been drastically reduced subsequent to the deteriorating relations between the DRC and its major development partners since the beginning of the 1990s. Since certain partners of the DRC later stated that they intended to resume their cooperation programmes, the various sectoral programmes formulated with the financial and technical support of the specialized agencies would serve as supporting documents for meetings to mobilize resources and/or for dialogues. Only Belgium and the EU had officially confirmed their decision to resume unconditionally their structural cooperation with the DRC.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/166 [draft: A/55/L.36 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Special assistance for the economic recovery and reconstruction of the Democratic Republic of the Congo

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/169 A of 16 December 1997, 53/1 L of 7 December 1998 and 54/96 B of 8 December 1999,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 1234(1999) of 9 April 1999, 1258(1999) of 6 August 1999, 1273(1999) of 5 November 1999, 1279(1999) of 30 November 1999, 1291(2000) of 24 February 2000, 1304(2000) of 16 June 2000, 1316(2000) of 23 August 2000 and 1323(2000) of 13 October 2000, the statement adopted by the Council at its meeting of 7 September 2000, held at the level of heads of State and Government, and all previous statements by its President relating to the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Recalling further the Ceasefire Agreement signed in Lusaka and the Kampala disengagement plan and the obligations of all signatories to those agreements and the obligations deriving from Security Council resolution 1304(2000),

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and all States in the region,

Alarmed at the plight of the civilian population throughout the country, and calling for its protection,

Gravely concerned at the deteriorating economic and social situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular in the eastern Congo, and at the effect of the continued fighting on the inhabitants of the country,

Expressing its deep concern at the dire consequences of the conflict for the humanitarian and human rights situation, as well as at the reports of the illegal exploitation of the natural resources of the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Urging all parties to respect and protect human rights and respect international humanitarian law, in particular the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Deeply concerned about the continuing extensive destruction of life and property, as well as the severe damage to infrastructure and the environment suffered by the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Bearing in mind that the Democratic Republic of the Congo also suffers from the problems encountered by a country that has received thousands of refugees from neighbouring countries,

Recalling that the Democratic Republic of the Congo is a least developed country with severe economic and social problems arising from its weak economic infrastructure and aggravated by the ongoing conflict,

Bearing in mind the close interrelationship between ensuring peace and security and the ability of the country to meet the humanitarian needs of its people and to take effective steps towards the rapid revitalization of the economy, and reaffirming the urgent need to assist the Democratic Republic of the Congo in the rehabilitation and reconstruction of its damaged economy and in its efforts to restore basic services and the infrastructure of the country,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Urges all parties concerned in the region to cease all military activity in the Democratic Republic of the Congo which breaches the ceasefire provided for in the Ceasefire Agreement signed in Lusaka and the Kampala disengagement plan and to implement fully those agreements and create the conditions necessary for the speedy and peaceful resolution of the crisis, and also urges all parties to engage in a process of political dialogue and negotiation;
3. Encourages the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to pursue sound macro-economic policies and to promote good governance and the rule of law, and urges the Government to exert all efforts for economic recovery and reconstruction despite the ongoing armed conflict;
4. Renews its invitation to the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to cooperate with the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other organizations in addressing the need for rehabilitation and reconstruction, and stresses the need for the Government to assist and protect the civilian population, including refugees and internally displaced persons within the territory of that country regardless of their origin;
5. Urges all parties to respect fully the provisions of international humanitarian law and, in this regard, to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel to all affected populations throughout the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the safety of United Nations and humanitarian personnel;
6. Renews its urgent appeal to the executive boards of the United Nations funds and programmes to continue to keep under consideration the special needs of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;
7. Invites Governments to continue to provide support to the Democratic Republic of the Congo;
8. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue to consult urgently with regional leaders, in coordination with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, about ways to bring about a peaceful and durable solution to the conflict;

(b) To continue to consult with regional leaders, in coordination with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, in order to convene, when appropriate, an international conference on peace, security and development in Central Africa and in the Great Lakes region, under the auspices of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, to address the problems of the region in a comprehensive manner;

(c) To keep under review the economic situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo with a view to promoting participation in and support for a programme of financial and material assistance to the country to enable it to meet its urgent needs in terms of economic recovery and reconstruction;

(d) To submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session a report on the actions taken pursuant to the present resolution.

Other economic assistance

Central America

Nicaragua

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/1 D [YUN 1998, p. 869], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/55/125-E/2000/91] on efforts taken to assist Nicaragua to consolidate democracy, reintegrate ex-combatants and Nicaraguans in exile, establish a national disaster prevention, mitigation and response system and adopt a national policy on population. Strategies had been proposed to reduce environmental degradation. In April, a regional UNDP/United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) project to establish a programme for the consolidation of the Mesoamerican biological corridor was initiated.

Haiti

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/11 [YUN 1999, p. 855], the Secretary-General submitted a June report [E/2000/63] on the development and implementation of a long-term programme of support for Haiti. The report covered progress achieved and constraints faced by the international community in that regard from August 1999 to May 2000.

The Secretary-General concluded that it remained difficult to lay out a precise timetable for the elaboration of a coherent long-term programme of support that would meet the approval and draw the active support of the international community, especially Haiti's key development partners. Nonetheless, the groundwork for the programme was being laid through the ongoing common country assessment, the planned formulation by the interim Government of a medium-term development strategy, and later a Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper with the support of the World Bank and IMF, and the formulation by the UN system in Haiti of an UNDAF in 2001.

A key requirement in the formulation of the international community's programme of support, as requested in resolution 1999/11, would be the availability of credible statistics on the social sectors. That information would provide a clearer picture of the social development constraints facing Haiti, as well as the baseline data needed by the Government to formulate, over the next two years, a long-term poverty-reduction strategy along the lines set out by IMF and the World Bank.

Annexed to the report was a table of external aid disbursements by donor from 1995 to 1998.

By decision 2000/235 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report and asked him to report at its next substantive session on steps taken by the Haitian Government, the UN system and the international community towards the development and implementation of a long-term programme of support for Haiti.

Third States affected by sanctions

A May note by the Secretariat [E/2000/45] stated that, pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/59 [YUN 1999, p. 856] and General Assembly resolution 54/107 [ibid., p. 1252], the Secretary-General's report on the implementation of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions [ibid.] would be available to the Council in 2000 (see also p. 1269).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2000/32 [draft: E/2000/L.26] without vote [agenda item 13].

Assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1999/59 of 30 July 1999,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 54/107 of 9 December 1999 on the implementation of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions,

Aware of the decision of the Security Council to establish on a temporary basis an informal working group of the Council to develop general recommendations on how to improve the effectiveness of United Nations sanctions, including, inter alia, the issues of unin- tended impacts of sanctions and assistance to Member States in implementing sanctions, as contained in the note by the President of the Security Council of 17 April 2000,

Taking note of the note by the Secretariat,

Taking note also of section VII, on assistance to countries invoking Article 50 of the Charter of the United Nations, of the annual overview report of the Administrative Committee on Coordination for 1999,

1. Takes note of the most recent report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions, in particular sections IV and V thereof;

2. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General containing a summary of the deliberations and main findings of the ad hoc expert group meeting on developing a methodology for assessing the consequences incurred by third States as a result of preventive or enforcement measures and on exploring innovative and practical measures of international assistance to the affected third States, and invites States and relevant international organizations within and outside the United Nations system which have not yet done so to provide their views regarding the report of the ad hoc expert group meeting;

3. Reaffirms the important role of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Committee for Programme and Coordination in mobilizing and monitoring, as appropriate, the economic assistance efforts of the international community and the United Nations system to States confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures imposed by the Security Council and, as appropriate, in identifying solutions to the special economic problems of those States;

4. Decides to continue consideration of this question, under the item entitled "Economic and environmental questions", taking into account the relevant decisions of the General Assembly and the Security Council.

States affected in the Balkans

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/96 G [YUN 1999, p. 857], the Secretary-General submitted a November report on economic assistance to States affected by the consequences of severing their economic relations with FRY [A/55/620 & Corr.1]. The report contained information provided by nine States and 19 organizations, programmes and funds of the UN system describing action they had taken to assist the affected States.

The Secretary-General concluded that because of the limited number of replies received from the affected States and the donor countries, it was not possible to make a conclusive assessment. However, recent assessments by international bodies active in the region indicated that the affected countries continued to face adjustment problems stemming from a range of factors, including the long-term consequences of major systemic transformations, violent conflicts and economic sanctions. It was essential that those problems be addressed in the context of the ongoing reconstruction and rehabilitation effort, as well as through enhancing regional cooperation for stabilization, economic recovery and development in the Balkans. At the regional level, attention was needed in the areas of infrastructure reconstruction, including the resumption of navigation on the Danube, private sector development, trade integration, investment promotion and institutional capacity-building. To date, the reconstruction and stabilization process and regional cooperation programmes had yielded positive results in the most seriously affected countries.

The UN system continued to implement substantial programmes of financial and technical assistance. In response to the renewed appeals for special economic assistance, programmes had been enhanced with a view to providing support to economic recovery, structural adjustment and development. Within the framework of the reconstruction and recovery programme for the Kosovo province of FRY, a series of emergency measures and activities had been carried out to address the regional consequences of the Kosovo crisis as a result of economic and social constraints caused by large numbers of refugees and displaced persons, as well as by disruptions in trade, transport and foreign investment in the neighbouring and other affected countries. As most urgent requirements resulting from the Kosovo crisis had been met, the focus had shifted to addressing a variety of longer-term economic and social problems of the affected States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/170 [draft: A/55/L.59 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Economic assistance to the Eastern European States affected by the developments in the Balkans

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 54/96 G of 15 December 1999,

Recalling also the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe, adopted in Cologne, Germany, on 10 June 1999, and endorsed at the Sarajevo Summit of 30 July 1999, and emphasizing the crucial importance of its implementation,

Stressing the importance of the regional cooperation initiatives, assistance arrangements and organizations, such as the Process of Stability and Good-Neighbourliness in South-East Europe (Royaumont Initiative), the South-East European Cooperative Initiative, the South-East European Cooperation Process, the Central European Initiative, the Black Sea Economic Cooperation and the Danube Commission,

Noting the leading role played by the high-level steering group for South-Eastern Europe, under the joint chairmanship of the European Commission and the World Bank, in guiding the donor coordination process for the economic reconstruction, stabilization, reform and development of the region, in close cooperation with the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe,

Mindful of the positive results of the regional funding conference for South-Eastern Europe organized by the European Commission and the World Bank, held in Brussels on 29 and 30 March 2000, and of the progress achieved in mobilizing and coordinating support of the donor community and international financial institutions for reconstruction and development efforts in South-Eastern Europe,

Welcoming the democratic changes in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and their positive effects on peace, stability and development in South-Eastern Europe,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on economic assistance to the Eastern European States affected by the developments in the Balkans and the conclusions contained therein,

1. Expresses concern at the persistence of special economic problems confronting the Eastern European States affected by the developments in the Balkans, in particular their impact on regional trade and economic relations and on the navigation along the Danube and on the Adriatic Sea;

2. Welcomes the support already provided by the international community, in particular by the European Union and other major donors, to the affected States to assist them in coping with their special economic problems during the transition period following the developments in the Balkans, as well as in the longer-term process of economic recovery, structural adjustment and development in the region;

3. Stresses the importance of the effective implementation of the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe, the objective of which is to strengthen countries in South-Eastern Europe in their efforts to foster peace, democracy, respect for human rights and economic prosperity, in order to achieve stability in the whole region, and welcomes its follow-up activities, aimed, inter alia, at economic reconstruction, development and cooperation, including economic cooperation in the region and between the region and the rest of Europe;

4. Invites all States and the relevant international organizations, both within and outside the United Nations system, in particular the international financial institutions, to continue to take into account the special needs and situations of the affected States in providing support and assistance to their efforts for economic recovery, structural adjustment and development;

5. Emphasizes the importance of a well-coordinated and timely donor response to the external funding requirements of the process for economic reconstruction, stabilization, reform and development in the Balkans, as well as financial support to other affected countries of Eastern Europe;

6. Encourages the affected States of the region to continue and enhance the process of multilateral regional cooperation in the fields of transport and infrastructure development, including the resumption of navigation on the Danube, as well as to foster conditions favourable to trade, investment and private sector development in all the countries of the region;

7. Invites the relevant international organizations to take appropriate steps, consistent with the principle of efficient and effective procurement and with the agreed measures for procurement reform, in order to broaden access for interested local and regional vendors and to facilitate their participation in the international assistance efforts for reconstruction, recovery and development of the region;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Disaster relief

In 2000, natural disasters were not confined to particular regions, nor did they discriminate between developed and developing countries. Forest fires raged for several weeks in the United States and floods caused devastation in several parts of Europe, notably in France, Italy, Switzerland and the United Kingdom. Developing countries were, however, much more severely affected, especially in terms of loss of lives and the percentage of economic losses in relation to their gross national product. Widespread drought in the Horn of Africa threatened 12.3 million people in many parts of the region, including Djibouti, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda. Mozambique required emergency humanitarian assistance following severe flooding caused by heavy rains. Madagascar was struck by tropical cyclones Eline and Hudah. Zimbabwe was also hit by cyclone Eline, which flooded the main river basins. Severe drought in the first half of 2000 afflicted much of Central and Southern Asia, particularly Afghanistan, India, Iran, Pakistan, Tajikistan, Uzbekistan and the Caucasian countries of Armenia, Azerbaijan and Georgia. Cambodia was devastated by two major floods, affecting 2.2 million people. In the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, longer-term economic problems and continuing poor harvests had been further exacerbated by an ongoing series of natural disasters, namely, floods, drought and tropical storm damage. A severe monsoon season in Viet Nam affected more than 5 million people and claimed 370 lives. In Central America, hurricane Keith battered Belize, causing extensive flood damage along with associated health risks and economic setbacks.

During the year, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) reported contributions for natural disasters totalling $460.7 million for 45 situations in 35 countries.

Through its Disaster Response Branch (DRB), OCHA mobilized and coordinated assistance to 61 natural and environmental disasters. DRB disbursed emergency cash grants of $640,000 and channelled some $6.1 million in cash and in-kind contributions into emergency relief programmes. The Branch dispatched 11 United Nations Disaster Assessment and Coordination (UNDAC) missions to support the in-country disaster assessment and co-ordination mechanisms in the aftermath of disasters, and conducted UNDAC training in Europe, Latin America and Asia and the Pacific. DRB co-ordinated support programmes and advocated humanitarian needs resulting from the Chernobyl disaster (see p. 889), and concluded the divestiture of the OCHA warehouse in Pisa, Italy, which maintained a stock of donated disaster relief items, to WFP and the remaining stocks to the United Nations Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy.

International Strategy for Disaster Reduction

The United Nations International Strategy for Disaster Reduction (UNISDR), adopted by the programme forum of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (1990-2000) (IDNDR) in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 859] and endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 54/219 [ibid., p. 861], built upon the experience of IDNDR, which was launched by the Assembly in resolution 44/236 [YUN 1989, p. 355]. The Strategy reflected a shift from the traditional emphasis on disaster response to disaster reduction. The inter-agency secretariat, which was established on 1 January, developed a framework for action to implement the Strategy, which sought to enable societies to become more resilient to the effects of natural hazards and related technological and environmental phenomena in order to reduce human, economic and social losses.

The UNISDR secretariat, which reported to the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs, was established to serve as the focal point within the UN system for the coordination of strategies and programmes for natural disaster reduction, and to ensure synergy between disaster reduction strategies and those in the socio-economic and humanitarian fields; to support the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction in the development of policies on natural disaster reduction; to promote a worldwide culture of reduction of the negative effects of natural hazards; to serve as an international clearing house for the dissemination and exchange of information and knowledge on disaster reduction strategies; and to backstop the policy and advocacy activities of national committees for natural disaster reduction.

The secretariat organized the first meeting of the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction (Geneva, 27-28 April). The Task Force was composed of eight UN agencies (FAO, ITU, UNDP, UNESCO, UNEP, WFP, WMO, World Bank), seven regional bodies and eight representatives of civil society and NGOs; the membership would be rotated on a biennial basis. The Task Force identified focal areas for its work, including ecosystems management, land-use management and unplanned urban areas; advocacy, information, education and training; public awareness and commitment; raising political will and the profile of prevention; the social and health impact of disasters; capacity-building in developing countries; mainstreaming disaster reduction in sustainable development and in national planning; lessons learned for prevention from actual disasters; private and public sector partnerships; technological disasters; and the application of science and technology in disaster reduction. It established four working groups: working group 1, led by WMO, dealt with climate and disasters, particularly the El Niño/La Niña phenomenon (see p. 883); working group 2, led by UNEP, focused on early warning; working group 3, led by UNDP, dealt with risk vulnerability and impact assessment; and working group 4, which was established at its second meeting in October and led by the Global Fire Monitoring Centre located in Freiburg, Germany, dealt with wildfires.

During 2000, the secretariat produced studies and reports, such as the Risk Assessment Tools for Diagnosis of Urban Areas against Seismic Disasters methodology for seismic risk reduction strategies, and a report on the Usoi Landslide Dam and Lake Sarez in Tajikistan.

The Trust Fund for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction was renamed the Trust Fund for the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction for the purpose of receiving voluntary contributions in support of the secretariat's activities. The Trust Fund had received contributions amounting to $2.2 million for the 2000-2001 biennium.

ACC action. In April [ACC/2000/4], ACC invited the Task Force to emphasize building and strengthening the capacities of disaster-prone countries through research and the training of experts.

In October [ACC/2000/20], the Committee observed that the Task Force might consider establishing a working group on science and technology. It was pointed out that the development aspects of the Strategy should be considered by the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, whereas the relief, emergency and humanitarian aspects should be addressed by the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee. It was observed that the UNISDR secretariat should maintain a distinct and multidisciplinary character under the joint ownership of ACC and that consultations were needed on issues of common interest to the concerned agencies and on the development of Task Force work plans. ACC asked the Task Force to continue to emphasize natural disaster monitoring, prediction, early warning and preparedness and the role of science and technology.

El Niño

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/220 [YUN 1999, p. 863], the Secretary-General submitted a June report on international co-operation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon [A/55/99-E/2000/86], a disruption of the ocean-atmosphere system in the tropical Pacific that had important consequences for weather and climate worldwide. The report reviewed the context of the El Niño phenomenon, ongoing activities and future arrangements regarding the Inter-Agency Task Force on El Niño, created under IDNDR.

A study on the prediction and amelioration of socio-economic impacts of the El Niño Southern Oscillation (ENSO) began in March for a duration of 18 months. The study, a collaborative effort of the Inter-American Development Bank and WMO, evaluated the existing institutional and technical forecasting capability in Latin America and the Caribbean, formulated project proposals and analysed the economic value of improved early warning systems.

The Secretary-General discussed the role of the working group on El Niño/La Niña established under the UNISDR Task Force for Disaster Reduction (see p. 882). He recommended that the working group assume the role of the former IDNDR Inter-Agency Task Force on El Niño and build on its outputs. He also proposed that UNISDR activity on ENSO be linked to other strategic platforms, such as the Climate Agenda and the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [YUN 1992, p. 681], the Convention on Biological Diversity [ibid., p. 683] and the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa [YUN 1994, p. 944]. The Secretary-General advocated the convening of relevant workshops and forums and support to proposed regional ENSO centres.

Annexed to the report were country and agency reviews on the impact of the 1997/98 El Niño event.

In a later report [A/56/76-E/2001/54], the Secretary-General described a global review of regional outlook forums held in Pretoria, South Africa, in October. The review recognized the significant role the regional climate outlook forums had played in capacity-building and the links they had helped to develop between meteorologists and end-users of seasonal forecasts. It made recommendations to enhance the service provided by the forums in terms of regional issues, capacity-building, the delivery of products and other technical subjects.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2000/33 [draft: E/2000/L.28] without vote [agenda item 13 (a)].

International cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 52/200 of 18 December 1997, 53/185 of 15 December 1998, 54/219 and 54/220 of 22 December 1999 and Council resolutions 1999/46 of 28 July 1999 and 1999/63 of 30 July 1999,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Reiterating that the coordination function of the Council is to give guidance to its functional commissions on natural disaster reduction within the overall context of sustainable development strategies,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General, and expresses its willingness to study them;

2. Welcomes the steps taken to ensure the continuity of international cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon within the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction;

3. Notes with satisfaction the establishment of the working group on El Niño/La Niña within the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction;

4. Recognizes the contribution to the research on the El Niño phenomenon made by existing institutions, including the International Research Institute for Climate Prediction, the Pan-American Health Organization and the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies;

5. Invites the international community to provide technical, financial and scientific cooperation for the prompt establishment of the international centre for research on El Niño in Guayaquil, Ecuador, as requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 54/220, and also invites the host country to facilitate the process of establishing the centre;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the full implementation of General Assembly resolutions 52/200, 53/185, 54/219 and 54/220, and Council resolutions 1999/46 and 1999/63.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/582/Add.8], adopted resolution 55/197 without vote [agenda item 95].

International cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/200 of 18 December 1997, 53/185 of 15 December 1998 and 54/220 of 22 December 1999 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1999/46 of 28 July 1999 and 1999/63 of 30 July 1999, and taking note of Council resolution 2000/33 of 28 July 2000,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Reaffirming the importance of international co-operation for a better scientific understanding of the El Niño phenomenon and that international co-operation and solidarity with the affected countries are indispensable,

Reaffirming also the importance of developing strategies at the national, subregional, regional and international levels that aim to prevent, mitigate and rehabilitate the damage caused by natural disasters resulting from the El Niño phenomenon,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Also takes note with appreciation of the measures adopted in order to ensure the continuity of international cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon, within the framework of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, and reiterates its invitation to Member States, organs and organizations of the United Nations system, contained in paragraphs 7, 8 and 9 of its resolution 52/200;

3. Welcomes the establishment of the working group on the El Niño/La Niña phenomenon within the framework of the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General and the relevant United Nations organs, funds and programmes, in particular those taking part in the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, and the international community to adopt, as appropriate, the necessary measures for the prompt establishment of the international centre for the study of the El Niño phenomenon at Guayaquil, Ecuador, and invites the international community to provide scientific, technical and financial assistance and cooperation for that purpose, in accordance with resolution 54/220;

5. Invites the Government of the host country to facilitate the process for the prompt establishment of the international centre for the study of the El Niño phenomenon;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the full implementation of its resolutions 52/200, 53/185, 54/219 and 54/220 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1999/46, 1999/63 and 2000/33;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2001, on the implementation of the present resolution, under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development".

Disaster assistance

Africa

Horn of Africa

In the Horn of Africa, including Djibouti, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia and the United Republic of Tanzania, poor and unreliable rain-falls during the preceding three years culminated in a serious drought in 2000, putting at risk the lives and livelihoods of nearly 16 million people. Small-scale movements of people took place during the first quarter of the year. Towards year's end, improvements in the drought situation occurred, particularly in Ethiopia and Somalia, and a large-scale famine was avoided.

OCHA launched a UN emergency appeal seeking $392.6 million to cover June to December 2000 for the first five countries. A further UN emergency consolidated appeal to cover January to December 2001 sought $352.9 million for emergency and recovery programmes.

Kenya

In 2000, the drought in Kenya unfolded against a backdrop of long-term economic decline that had had an impact on every sector. The most affected were populations in pastoral and agro-pastoral districts, where the nutritional status of children under five deteriorated significantly. By November, over 3.2 million people in 22 districts were receiving food assistance. Insecurity, particularly in the north, constrained humanitarian operations.

OCHA launched a UN inter-agency donor alert for the drought in Kenya for $146.3 million to cover June to December 2000. Of that amount, $121 million, or 82.74 per cent of the requirements, was received. A further appeal sought $122.7 million to cover January to December 2001.

Madagascar

Within a three-week period in February, Madagascar was struck by tropical cyclone Eline, followed by tropical storm Gloria. Furthermore, tropical cyclone Hudah struck in March with rare intensity in several districts that had already been battered by Gloria. The natural disasters crossed the island with strong winds, torrential flood-producing rains and landslides. The three cataclysms combined caused 222 deaths, affected 1.1 million people, left 295,613 persons in need of urgent assistance and damaged agricultural, health, educational and public infrastructures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 March [meeting 92], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/96 M [draft: A/54/L.80 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Assistance to Madagascar following the tropical cyclones

The General Assembly,

Gravely concerned about the extensive damage and the devastation caused by tropical cyclones Eline and Gloria and the floods that have struck Madagascar,

Noting with concern the destruction of thousands of homes and the damage to major sectors of the national infrastructure as well as the growing needs of hundreds of thousands of victims,

Noting also with concern that those natural disasters have been aggravated by various epidemics that have resulted in the loss of human lives,

Recognizing the efforts of the Government and the people of Madagascar to provide relief and emergency assistance to the victims of those disasters,

Noting that the determined efforts of the Government of Madagascar to promote economic growth and development are hindered by this kind of recurring natural disaster,

Aware that, to mitigate and to prevent the consequences of those disasters, international assistance is required, both for emergency relief and for rehabilitation and reconstruction of the infrastructure,

1. Expresses its solidarity with the Government and the people of Madagascar;

2. Notes with satisfaction the efforts of the Government and the people of Madagascar to provide rapid relief to the victims through their own means;

3. Expresses its gratitude to the international community, including organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, for the measures it has taken to support the efforts of the Government of Madagascar to carry out relief operations and to provide emergency assistance;

4. Requests all States and international organizations to provide additional emergency support to Madagascar, with a view to alleviating the economic and financial burden that the people of Madagascar will have to bear during the emergency period and in the subsequent process of rehabilitation;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to make all necessary arrangements to continue mobilizing and coordinating humanitarian assistance from the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, with a view to supporting the efforts of the Government of Madagascar;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General, acting in conjunction with the relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and in close cooperation with the government authorities, to assist the Government of Madagascar in effectively carrying out its rehabilitation efforts;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to it at its fifty-fifth session, under the item on strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance, through the Economic and Social Council at the humanitarian segment of its substantive session in 2000, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Report of Secretary-General. In July [A/55/124-E/2000/90], the Secretary-General reported that the most seriously affected regions in Madagascar were in isolated areas and inaccessible from Antananarivo, the capital. In the north-east, as only 28 per cent of the villages surveyed were accessible by road, large-scale deployment of aircraft was required, making the logistics of intervention difficult and costly. A UN system working group developed an intervention strategy comprising immediate emergency response to assist victims, a short-term response and a joint mechanism for responding to emergencies in general. The immediate response strategy was manifest in a flash appeal from UN agencies following cyclone Huda, disseminated through OCHA, totalling $15.8 million. Short-term strategic responses consisted of a joint WFP/FAO mission, backed by the Ministry of Agriculture (25 April–12 May), to evaluate the crop year and balance sheet following the various climatic phenomena. The United Nations was also involved in the medium-term response, which included assistance to the Government in the formulation of a medium-term rehabilitation plan. The long-term support mechanism was based on institutional support provided by UNDP with a view to preparing national institutions to deal with emergency situations arising from natural disasters. UNDP made available to the Government's National Relief Council five national consultants and an international consultant responsible for guiding the process of drawing up a national strategy to prevent and manage natural disasters and risks, and the definition of a sustainable institutional management framework. The Government launched appeals in March and April, the first of which generated $3.5 million and the second, $15.6 million.

Mozambique

Beginning in December 1999, heavy rains fell over Mozambique, reaching unprecedented levels by the end of the month. In early February 2000, the Umbeluzi, Incomati and Limpopo rivers exceeded all known records and, on 25 February, when the river floods caused by cyclone Eline reached Mozambique, the central and southern provinces experienced the most extensive floods in more than 50 years. The floods affected 2 million people, or 12.1 per cent of the population, and impacted all sectors of the economy.

On 6 March, the Security Council President issued a press statement in which the Council called for all possible steps to avert a humanitarian crisis.

On 9 March, the Economic and Social Council authorized its President to transmit to the Government and people of Mozambique his statement on the devastation caused by the floods (decision 2000/212). The President stated that the Council called on Governments to continue and intensify relief efforts. It also called on the international community and the private sector to accelerate their efforts to provide relief and assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 March [meeting 91], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/96 L [draft: A/54/L.79 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Assistance to Mozambique following the devastating floods

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the unprecedented floods in Mozambique, which have resulted in tragic loss of human lives and extensive destruction of property and infrastructure,

Also deeply concerned about the impact of the disaster on the economic, social and humanitarian situation in Mozambique,

Gravely concerned about the widespread destruction of crops, which may lead to food security problems and loss of income,

Disturbed by the resulting lack of clean water, shelter and health care and by the outbreak of diseases, particularly malaria and cholera,

Recognizing the efforts of the Government and the people of Mozambique to save lives and to alleviate the suffering of the flood victims,

Recognizing also that natural disasters constitute a major problem for development,

Aware that, to mitigate and to prevent the consequences of this disaster, international assistance is required, both for emergency relief and for rehabilitation and reconstruction of the infrastructure,

Noting the appeal to the international community made by the Government of Mozambique for emergency humanitarian aid and the need for assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the areas affected by the disaster,

Noting also the appeal made by the Secretary-General to the international community for aid and assistance to Mozambique in dealing with the effects of the floods,

Noting further the statement issued by the President of the Security Council on 6 March 2000 concerning the floods in Mozambique,

1. Expresses its solidarity, at this difficult time, with the Government and the people of Mozambique in their efforts to cope with the serious consequences of the disaster;

2. Urges the international community, the United Nations, the specialized agencies, international financial institutions and other bodies of the United Nations system as well as non-governmental organizations to respond urgently and to provide assistance to Mozambique in its relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts and programmes following the disaster;

3. Expresses its gratitude to the Member States, international and non-governmental organizations and private individuals and groups that are providing emergency relief to Mozambique;

4. Requests the relevant organs and agencies of the United Nations system and other multilateral organizations to increase their support and assistance for the strengthening of the capacity for disaster preparedness of Mozambique;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to make all necessary arrangements to continue mobilizing and coordinating humanitarian assistance from the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, with a view to supporting the efforts of the Government of Mozambique;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue mobilizing and coordinating assistance for the required reconstruction and rehabilitation of the infrastructure in Mozambique and to meet other needs for the normalization of the life of citizens;

7. Encourages the holding of an international donors conference to assist Mozambique in its humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to it at its fifty-fifth session, under the item on strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance, through the Economic and Social Council at the humanitarian segment of its substantive session in 2000, on the collaborative efforts referred to in paragraphs 5 and 6 above and on the progress made in the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts of Mozambique.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 54/96 L (see above), the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/55/123-E/2000/89] on assistance to Mozambique following the devastating floods of February and March that had killed 699 persons, displaced an estimated 544,000 and affected 5 million. OCHA/UNDAC teams played a role in preparing two emergency appeals. On 23 February, the Government and UN entities appealed for some $60 million for 300,000 flood victims. The impact of cyclone Eline was such that $130 million was contributed by donors to the relief phase. The Government and UN entities launched a transitional appeal on 22 March for $100 million of additional emergency assistance from March to August 2000 to benefit more than 600,000 victims. The International Conference on the Reconstruction of Mozambique (Rome, Italy, 3-4 May), organized by UNDP and the Government, obtained pledges of $453 million.

The Secretary-General said that a number of points emerged as salient to the coordination process, and contributed to mitigating the fallout on the affected populations, including a government-led response, supported by the United Nations; rapid mobilization of resources by the UN system; a disaster management team in Maputo, comprising the country management team and technical focal points from each agency, established by the UN system; the use of international military forces coordinated by civilians and the United Nations in an unprecedented way; and the Secretary-General's appointment of his first-ever special humanitarian envoy for a natural disaster.

Zimbabwe

On 22 February, Zimbabwe was hit by tropical cyclone Eline, at a time when some parts of the country were experiencing life-threatening floods from the main river basins. Communications systems were destroyed and bridges were damaged and swept away, as were some dwellings. The disasters occurred during a period when Zimbabwe was experiencing a deep economic crisis.

Following a UN Disaster Management Team assessment, a UN inter-agency and NGO appeal for emergency relief was issued in March for $3.3 million to meet the needs of 96,000 people.

Asia

Cambodia

A UN inter-agency appeal for emergency relief and initial rehabilitation for Cambodia, totalling $10.7 million to cover 2 October 2000 to 31 March 2001, was launched in October following two major floods that struck in less than three months and affected more than 2.2 million people. The appeal aimed to facilitate the transition to longer-term rehabilitation and reconstruction and to bridge the gap until resources for rehabilitation/reconstruction could be mobilized.

Democratic People's Republic of Korea

In response to the UN consolidated inter-agency appeal for the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK), launched in 1999, which sought $331.7 million for January to December 2000, the donor community had committed $153.1 million, or 48.8 per cent of requirements.

In 2000, the harvest was one of the worst ever, resulting in severe shortages in the domestic food supply. The poor harvest was due to climatic conditions and the cumulative effect of underlying agriculture problems that had resulted in a food gap of some 1.9 metric tons. Although efforts were being made to revitalize the domestic food production sector, the beneficiary caseload continued to be large, with some 22 per cent of the DPRK's population of 22 million reliant on supplementary rations.

In November, OCHA presented a UN consolidated inter-agency appeal to the donor community of $384 million to cover requirements from January to December 2001.

Viet Nam

The unusually early monsoon season in Viet Nam caused unrelenting rains starting in July. Prolonged flooding affected more than 5 million people, claimed 370 lives and caused damage estimated at more than $251 million. Some 670,000 people either had been evacuated or were in need of urgent relocation. In October, the UN Disaster Management Team in Viet Nam launched a UN inter-agency appeal for emergency relief and initial rehabilitation for $9.4 million to cover the period from 20 October 2000 to 20 April 2001.

West Timor

On 18 May [S/2000/450], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that Indonesia had requested assistance from the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET) to deal with an emergency in West Timor, caused by extensive flooding during which many had died and tens of thousands had been displaced. Among the dead were East Timorese refugees, most of them women and children. UNTAET had been requested to provide assistance in the form of two helicopters to evacuate flood victims and deliver relief supplies, initially for one week. The Secretary-General intended to accede to the request. On the same date [S/2000/451], the Council took note of the Secretary-General's proposal to accede to Indonesia's request.

Latin America and the Caribbean

Belize

Belize was battered by hurricane Keith from 1 to 3 October, causing extensive flood damage, along with associated health risks and economic setbacks. For weeks after the hurricane struck, the water levels continued to rise as persistent, heavy rains caused more flooding. Total damages were estimated at some $261.5 million. The UN Emergency Disaster Management Team coordinated the UN response from the capital of Belmopan.

The Government sought $17.1 million for the urgent reconstruction of houses that would benefit 4,500 persons. About half of the requirements had been met by the Inter-American Development Bank and the Belize Development Finance Corporation. OCHA sought the assistance of the international community for the remainder ($8.5 million).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/165 [draft: A/55/L.35/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Emergency assistance to Belize

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/169 of 11 December 1987, 43/202 of 20 December 1988, 44/236 of 22 December 1989, 45/185 of 21 December 1990, 46/149 of 18 December 1991, 46/182 of 19 December 1991, 48/188 of 21 December 1993 and 49/22 A of 2 December 1994,

Having been made aware of the extensive damage caused by powerful hurricane Keith during its landfall and passage through Belize from 1 to 3 October 2000,

Mindful of the human suffering caused by the displacement of thousands of people due to the loss of homes,

Aware of the devastating effect that the continuing emergency, due to flooding, is having on the infrastructure of the country, its agricultural and fisheries sectors and the delivery of health and social services,

Noting the enormous efforts required to alleviate the devastation caused by this natural disaster,

Cognizant of the efforts of the Government and people of Belize to relieve the suffering of the victims of hurricane Keith,

Conscious of the rapid response being made by the Government of Belize, the agencies and bodies of the United Nations system, international and regional agencies, non-governmental organizations and private individuals to provide relief,

Underlining the importance of efforts aimed at strengthening early warning, prevention and preparedness mechanisms for natural disasters and measures to strengthen capacity-building at the local, national and regional levels, with an emphasis on risk reduction,

Aware that the extent of the disaster and its medium-term and long-term effects will require, as a complement to the efforts being made by the Government and people of Belize, a demonstration of international solidarity and humanitarian concern to ensure broad multilateral cooperation in order to facilitate the transition from the immediate emergency situation in the affected areas to the process of reconstruction,

1. Expresses its solidarity and support to the Government and people of Belize;

2. Expresses its appreciation to all States of the international community, international agencies and non-governmental organizations that are providing emergency relief assistance to Belize;

3. Urges Member States, as a matter of urgency, to contribute generously to the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts of Belize;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the international financial institutions, agencies and bodies of the United Nations system, to assist the Government of Belize in identifying medium-term and long-term needs and in mobilizing resources, as well as to help with the efforts towards rehabilitation and reconstruction of the affected areas in Belize;

5. Encourages the Government of Belize, in conjunction with relevant partners, further to develop strategies aimed at preventing and mitigating natural disasters;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to make all necessary arrangements to continue mobilizing and coordinating humanitarian assistance from the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system with a view to supporting the efforts of the Government of Belize.

Hurricanes Jose and Lenny

In an August report [A/55/333], the Secretary-General described the destruction caused by hurricanes Jose and Lenny, which struck several small island developing States and territories of the Eastern Caribbean in October and November 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 867]. The report gave details of the response of the international community and that of countries affected, as well as an assessment of efforts by the Governments of the region to deal with such occurrences.

Antigua and Barbuda was worst affected by hurricane Jose, with one fatality, confirmed injuries of 15 persons and more than 500 people forced to seek shelter. Extensive flooding in Saint Kitts and Nevis washed out several main roads. In Anguilla, damage was limited to beach erosion in the eastern and southern sections, as well as to damage to roads and electricity and telephone systems. No significant damage was reported in the British Virgin Islands and Montserrat, except for small landslides in the latter. Regarding hurricane Lenny, severe damage occurred in Antigua and Barbuda, Saint Martin and the United States Virgin Islands, particularly Saint Croix. On the island of Barbuda, 95 per cent of agriculture was destroyed and groundwater contamination occurred across the island. On Saint Kitts, over 200 families were left homeless, and extensive infrastructure damage affected ports, sea defences and coastal communities. The western coast of Dominica experienced economic damage as a result of the hurricane's effect on tourism and agriculture, and the housing stock underwent widespread damage and destruction. Much of the damage in several low-lying communities along the coast of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines was economic, with the road and port infrastructure heavily affected. Heavy winds caused storm surges in the tourism region of Saint Lucia, Soufrière, where scores of people were left homeless.

In all cases, initial damage assessments were made difficult owing to the heavy toll on roads, ports and bridges. Prior to the impact, all national authorities had responded to the various warnings by putting into effect the preliminary stages of national preparedness plans. Most had, however, moved swiftly to begin main road repairs and to clear debris to allow relief and damage assessment teams access to affected communities.

The Secretary-General concluded that higher levels of resources were required for more comprehensive planning and response capability on a regional basis. With the support of the Government of Italy, UNDP had launched a Caribbean disaster reduction initiative to strengthen the capacities of national Governments and mandated regional organizations in the English-, French-, Spanish- and Dutch-speaking Caribbean in order to mainstream disaster reduction into development and post-disaster recovery. UNDP was also committed to coordinating the recovery planning interventions on a regional basis.

Chernobyl closure

On 15 December [A/55/744], following an order of the President of Ukraine, the Chernobyl nuclear power station closed. In 1986, a nuclear reactor at Chernobyl had caused a massive humanitarian disaster [YUN 1986, p. 584].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/171 [draft: A/55/L.60 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Closure of the Chernobyl nuclear power plant

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/190 of 21 December 1990, 46/150 of 18 December 1991, 47/165 of 18 December 1992, 48/206 of 21 December 1993, 50/134 of 20 December 1995, 52/172 of 16 December 1997 and 54/97 of 8 December 1999,

Conscious of the long-term nature of the consequences of the disaster at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, which was a major technological catastrophe in terms of its scope and created humanitarian, environmental, social, economic and health consequences in the affected countries,

Appreciative of the efforts made by the organizations of the United Nations system and Member States to mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, in particular, the contributions of the members of the Group of Seven and the European Union and others to the Shelter Implementation Plan aimed at securing the environmental safety of the sarcophagus covering the destroyed Chernobyl reactor in accordance with the memorandum of understanding between the Governments of the members of the Group of Seven and the Commission of the European Communities and the Government of Ukraine,

Noting with concern the gravity of economic and social problems arising for Ukraine as a result of the closure of the Chernobyl nuclear power plant,

1. Welcomes the decision of Ukraine to close the Chernobyl nuclear power plant on 15 December 2000;

2. Calls upon the international community to continue to assist the Government of Ukraine in coping with the range of newly emerging economic and social problems arising as a result of the closure of the Chernobyl nuclear power plant;

3. Invites all States and the relevant international and non-governmental organizations to continue to provide support to Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine, as the most affected countries, in mitigating and minimizing the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster.

Chapter IV

International trade, finance and transport

In 2000, the revival in international economic activity and trade, which began in the second half of 1999, continued. Exports and imports of all groups of countries increased at significantly faster rates and became more balanced among countries. The improvements in growth were particularly marked in a number of developing countries and economies in transition. In contrast with the expansion in trade, capital flows to developing countries declined.

In February, the tenth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD X), which had as its theme "Developing strategies in an increasingly interdependent world: applying the lessons of the past to make globalization an effective instrument for the development of all countries and all people", took place in Bangkok, Thailand. The Conference adopted the Bangkok Declaration, which reaffirmed UNCTAD as the focal point in the United Nations for the integrated treatment of development and the interrelated issues of trade, finance, investment, technology and sustainable development, and the Plan of Action, which harmonized UNCTAD's mandate with the new global economy and its challenges. In December, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to take measures to strengthen UNCTAD's management and enhance its programme delivery capacity and performance to enable it to implement the outcome of UNCTAD X. With regard to developments in the multilateral trading system, the Assembly recognized the need for expeditious and complete integration of developing countries and economies in transition into the international trading system, in full cognizance of the opportunities and challenges of globalization and liberalization. It also reiterated the importance of continued trade liberalization in developed and developing countries, including in sectors of export interest to developing countries.

In September, the Fourth United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices considered major developments in the field of competition law and policy and requested UNCTAD to expand its technical cooperation activities. In the area of commodities, the Assembly expressed concern at the declining terms of trade in most primary commodities and invited UNCTAD to assist developing countries in the financing of commodity diversification.

The Trade and Development Board, the governing body of UNCTAD, considered interdependence and global economic issues from a trade and development perspective, focusing on crisis and recovery in emerging markets. It also reviewed technical cooperation activities. The Trade and Development Report, 2000, produced by the UNCTAD secretariat, focused on the related issues of global economic growth and imbalances.

In action on financial issues, the Assembly stressed the importance of creating an enabling international economic environment through cooperative efforts by all countries and institutions to promote equitable development. Recognizing that development-oriented and durable solutions to external debt and debt-service burdens of developing countries could strengthen the global economy, the Assembly encouraged the international community to consider measures for countries with a high level of debt overhang to make their debt sustainable in the long term, and called for concerted action to address the debt problems of low- and middle-income developing countries. With regard to financing for development, the Assembly decided that the high-level international intergovernmental event on the subject would take place in 2002.

The International Trade Centre (ITC) focused on capacity-building to enhance international competitiveness and trade performance; during the year, more than 100 countries benefited from its support.

UNCTAD X

The tenth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, known as UNCTAD X, was held in Bangkok, Thailand, from 12 to 19 February [TD/390], in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 1995(XIX) [YUN 1964, p. 210] and 51/167 [YUN 1996, p. 847], with the unifying theme: "Development strategies in an increasingly interdependent world: applying the lessons of the past to make globalization an effective instrument for the development of all countries and all people". The Trade and Development Board (TDB) served as the preparatory committee for the Conference (see p. 892), which was attended by 158 member States of UNCTAD and representatives of UN specialized agencies, bodies and programmes, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). Palestine attended as an observer. At the special inaugural ceremony on 12 February, the Conference was addressed by Chuan Leekpai, Prime Minister of Thailand, by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and by Rubens Ricupero, Secretary-General of UNCTAD.

On 13 February, the Ministers of Trade of the Least Developed Countries (LDCs) discussed LDC-related issues and the preparatory process for the Third United Nations Conference on LDCs, to be held in 2001; a communiqué was adopted [TD/384 & Corr.1] and submitted to the Conference. A debate with heads of UN regional commissions took place on 14 February on the regional dimension of development and the impact of globalization on different regions in the wake of the recent financial crisis. In the course of the Conference, the following round tables were organized: High-level Round Table with Eminent Economists on Trade and Development Directions for the Twenty-first Century: the Academic Perspective; High-level Round Table with Heads of UN Agencies, Programmes and Related Institutions; and Round Table on the Human Dimension of Development: Empowering Entrepreneurs for the Twenty-first Century. At a special high-level event on 19 February, heads of State or Government discussed the main findings of the Conference.

The Conference had before it a report of the UNCTAD Secretary-General [TD/380], which discussed globalization and development: the sources of the present impasse; towards a new international commitment to growth and development: enhancing the governance of the globalizing world economy; UNCTAD: a knowledge-based institution at the service of development; and partnerships and effectiveness: increasing UNCTAD's impact on development.

The following parallel events were organized in connection with the Conference: NGO Plenary Caucus (7-8 February), which adopted a statement entitled "UNCTAD and Civil Society: Towards Our Common Goals" [TD/382]; Parliamentary Meeting (9-11 February), which adopted a Final Declaration [TD/383]; fifth Annual Conference of the World Association of Investment Promotion Agencies (9-11 February); South-South Trade Promotion Programme—Buyers/Sellers Meeting on Pharmaceuticals (12-13 February);

Symposium on Commodities and Development at the Turn of the Millennium (13 February); Special Round Table on Transnational Corporations (TNCs), Small and Medium-sized Enterprises (SMEs) and Development, Involving Federations, Organizations and Young Entrepreneurs (15 February); and the UNCTAD/UNDP Global Programme on Globalization, Liberalization and Sustainable Human Development (16 February). Other events included a one-day Symposium on Economic and Financial Recovery in Asia on 17 February.

Declaration and Plan of Action

On 19 February, the Conference adopted the Bangkok Declaration: Global Dialogue and Dynamic Engagement, which emphasized the need for increased policy coherence at the national and international levels, and reaffirmed UNCTAD as the focal point within the United Nations for the integrated treatment of development and the interrelated issues in the areas of trade, finance, investment, technology and sustainable development.

It also adopted a two-part Plan of Action [TD/386]. Part I addressed development strategies in an increasingly interdependent world: applying the lessons of the past to make globalization an effective instrument for the development of all countries and all people. It evaluated the developmental impact of globalization, and noted that, although globalization and interdependence had opened new opportunities through increased trade liberalization and advancement in technology, many developing countries, especially LDCs, had not increased their GDP per capita over the last three decades. It stated that development strategies promoted mainly by multilateral financial institutions should adapt to evolving global conditions, and the international community should elaborate strategies and policies to help developing countries to overcome any negative effect of globalization. Maximizing the benefits of globalization required sound domestic policies supported by an enabling global environment and international economic cooperation. The international community should address the imbalances in the international economy and the effects of volatility; and intensified international cooperation, in addition to national and regional efforts, would be essential to address effectively the domestic and external factors of underdevelopment. The Plan of Action also reviewed major international initiatives such as the Uruguay Round and the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s (UN-NADAF), the Programme of Action for LDCs for the 1990s and debt relief developments. It proposed measures to be taken by the international community to ensure integration of developing countries into the world economy in the areas of finance and investment, international trade and other development-related issues. Part II of the Plan of Action examined UNCTAD's engagement in the areas of: globalization, interdependence and development; investment, enterprise and technology; international trade; service infrastructure for development and trade efficiency and human resources development; LDCs, landlocked developing countries and small island developing States; and technical cooperation. It stated that, to enhance the development opportunities offered by globalization, UNCTAD should act as a forum for intergovernmental discussions; undertake research, analysis and data collection; provide technical assistance tailored to the needs of developing countries; and continue to focus on four fields of activity: globalization and development; investment, enterprise development and technology; trade in goods and services and commodity issues; and services infrastructure for development and trade efficiency. UNCTAD should also pay special attention to the concerns of LDCs and further explore the role of economic cooperation among developing countries as an instrument to promote economic growth. The Plan of Action recommended that UNCTAD's existing capacity-building programme be strengthened by organizing for officials from developing countries and countries in transition, in cooperation with the UN Staff College, training courses on the international economic agenda. The courses could draw on UNCTAD's expertise and policy analysis work, with the support of an advisory body to be established by TDB.

Other action. In a 19 February statement [174(X)], the Conference paid tribute to the King of Thailand for his contribution to the cause of development. By a resolution of the same date [res. 175(X)], UNCTAD X expressed appreciation to the Government and the people of Thailand for the hospitality accorded to the Conference participants. In another 19 February resolution [res. 176(X)], the Conference approved the report of the Credentials Committee [TD/385].

Preparatory process for UNCTAD X

At the second part of its twenty-third executive session, on 27 January [A/55/15], TDB considered and took note of the pre-Conference text, as submitted by the Preparatory Committee of the Whole, and requested the TDB President to transmit it to the Conference. The Preparatory Committee had begun its work in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 912]. The reports of a number of meetings held in 1999 in preparation for UNCTAD X [ibid.] were submitted to the Conference.

UNCTAD X follow-up

At its twenty-fourth executive session (Geneva, 24 March and 12 May) [A/55/15], TDB discussed the follow-up to the outcome of UNCTAD X, including action taken by the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget (see p. 922).

In resolution 55/182 (see p. 895), the General Assembly, taking note of the outcome of UNCTAD X, requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the UNCTAD Secretary-General, to take measures to strengthen the management and enhance the programme delivery capacity and performance of the UNCTAD secretariat in order to enable it to implement fully and effectively the outcome of the tenth session.

International trade

The Trade and Development Report, 2000 [Sales No. E.00.II.D.19] observed that the revival in world trade in 1999, in the wake of the economic recovery in East Asia, was more evident in value than in volume on account of disparate movements in the prices of internationally traded goods and services in 1998 and 1999. With the major exception of the transition economies, there was a sharp turnaround in all regions, particularly in value terms, as price declines levelled off, and the return of financial stability in the crisis-stricken Asian economies led to a modest recovery in certain non-oil commodity prices of interest to developing countries.

The volume of world imports grew by some 5 per cent in 1999, an improvement that was due mainly to a recovery in developing countries and to sustained growth in developed countries; import volumes in the transition economies contracted by 10 per cent. Owing to statistical discrepancies, the rebound in world trade in 1999 was not reflected to the same extent in terms of the volume of exports, which, unlike imports, rose less than in 1998. The slowdown was accounted for by a contraction of exports in the transition economies, as well as slower export growth in developing countries. For developed countries as a whole, the export volume growth rate was maintained at the same level as in 1998. The dollar values of both world imports and exports increased, with the exception of the transition economies, where both fell. There was a relatively rapid increase in the value of imports in the United States and a marked rebound for Japan and for developing Asia. Export earnings increased in all major economic regions except the European Union (EU) and the transition economies. Both world imports and exports showed smaller increases in value than in volume terms, on account of price declines. However, the discrepancy between volume and value figures was much narrower for 1999 than for 1998, suggesting that the downward trend in world prices had moderated.

The World Economic and Social Survey 2000 [Sales No. E.00.II.C.1], prepared in mid-2000 by the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), stated that international trade recovered in 1999 from the slowdown of 1998. Trade growth was slow during the first half of the year, with significant declines in some regions, as many economies, especially in Asia and Latin America but also among the economies in transition, continued their post-crisis adjustment by cutting import demand. However, international trade revived strongly in the second half of the year, when an accelerating recovery in Asia and rapid growth in North America increased trade values and volumes, and became one of the more dynamic features of the world economy as it entered 2000. Although the rebound in trade was widespread, contrasting increases in export supplies and import demand at the national level left large trade imbalances in some countries, while reducing or eliminating external deficits and surpluses in others. Those changes in nominal trade balances were induced by significant changes in exchange rates and in relative prices of traded goods.

Preliminary estimates placed the total value of world merchandise trade in 1999 at over $5,500 billion, a 4.6 per cent increase over 1998. Much of that increase was attributable to soaring prices for petroleum. The volume of world merchandise trade increased considerably faster than in 1998. Export volume rose by 4.8 per cent measured in dollars, and by the end of the year it exceeded the rate of increase in gross world product (GWP). Reflecting the expansion of world merchandise trade volume, the ratio of world trade growth to world output growth rose.

There was a strong rebound in developing country trade as the value of exports from that group rose 8.3 per cent in 1999. The economies in transition also recorded an increase in the value of their exports, whereas the developed economies increased the value of their trade at a slower rate. For all developing countries taken together, over 80 per cent of the increase in export value was accounted for by an increase in export volume rather than export price. However, the largest relative increase in the value of exports from developing countries was recorded by petroleum-exporting countries in Western Asia. Similarly, in Africa, the increase in export value outpaced the increase in volume. Over 70 per cent of the value of world imports was accounted for by demand originating in the developed market economies, where imports into North America and Japan grew at a pace of 11.8 per cent and 8.3 per cent, respectively. The United States continued to provide a major stimulus to the world economy as its foreign demand increased by almost 13 per cent from 1998. In contrast, the increase in import value by Western Europe was less than 2.5 per cent. The economies in transition recorded a surplus on their merchandise trade account, with a gain in export value and a lower value of imports. The reduction in import value was centred in the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), where both the value and the volume of imports declined by more than 20 per cent. The developing countries contributed to the growth of world import demand: at almost 6 per cent in value terms, imports rose faster than the world average and accounted for 30 per cent of the increment in import demand, which was especially strong in China and South and East Asia.

In a joint report on the world economic situation and prospects [Sales No. E.01.II.C.2] issued at the end of 2000 by DESA and UNCTAD, it was observed that the growth of international trade accelerated and broadened in 2000 from the uneven recovery of 1999. The volume of world merchandise imports surged almost 11 per cent in 2000. Import demand remained particularly robust in North America, strengthened among the developed economies and increased rapidly across the developing countries and the economies in transition. The rise was strong in Latin America and the Caribbean and in the Russian Federation, where imports had declined significantly in 1999, and in South and East Asia, where economic activity and international trade continued to recover from the effects of the financial crisis of 1997.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 54/198 [YUN 1999, p. 875], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/55/396], prepared in collaboration with UNCTAD, on international trade and development. It discussed developments in the multilateral trading system and other issues raised in resolution 54/198, including: investment agreements; dispute settlement; the Third Conference on LDCs (2001); landlocked countries; small island developing States; Africa; debt; the volatility of short-term capital flows and effects of the financial crisis on the international trading system; and debt.

The report stated that the main developments in the multilateral trading system were related to the 1999 third World Trade Organization (WTO) Ministerial Conference [YUN 1999, p. 1422], which ended without launching new multilateral trade negotiations or agreeing to a future WTO work programme. From a development perspective, the most important policy challenge was how to strengthen orientations of the system to formulate effective and sustained responses to the concerns of developing countries. Based on the experiences of the first five years of WTO, developing countries insisted that the WTO agreements were unbalanced and offered inadequate benefits and opportunities to them. In particular, they called for: incorporation of the agricultural trade sector within normal WTO rules, while addressing the problems of predominantly agrarian and small island developing economies and net food-importing developing countries; developed countries to open their markets to the exports of developing countries and provide duty-free and quota-free access for the exports of LDCs, with future negotiations addressing the elimination of tariff peaks and tariff escalation and prevention of the abuse of measures such as anti-dumping, countervailing duties and safeguard actions, sanitary and phytosanitary regulations, technical barriers to trade and the use of voluntary export restraints; and a review and strengthening of special and differential treatment, giving special emphasis to capacity-building in developing countries and to measures taken by industrialized countries to transfer technology and know-how and invest in developing countries.

Addressing the outcome of UNCTAD X and its relevance for the WTO process, the Secretary-General said that the Plan of Action reflected the view that the international community should address the imbalances in the WTO agreements and the international economy as a whole and that new multilateral negotiations should enable developing countries to establish the infrastructure and other conditions necessary for the implementation of the agreements. It further stated that market access conditions for agricultural and industrial products of export interest to LDCs should be improved, and consideration should be given to the proposal for a commitment by developed countries to grant duty-free and quota-free market access for all exports originating in LDCs. Essentially, the Plan of Action set out the core elements of an agenda for the "development round". The Secretary-General added that the Bangkok Conference gave UNCTAD the mandate to continue to assist developing countries in their positive agenda by providing the necessary technical and analytical inputs to their negotiating objectives, supporting their capacity-building process and providing a forum for the exchange of information.

With regard to the resumption of work in WTO, the Secretary-General stated that the export subsidies issue was a major concern of developing countries, in many of which the trade policy regime in the agricultural sector was more liberal than in developed countries where, in some of them, subsidization of agriculture continued to increase. The impact of agricultural reform on the net food-importing developing countries and LDCs needed to be addressed more vigorously. Classification of services was also subject to criticism. To achieve liberalization of one service sector meant that the regulatory framework of interrelated services also had to be adapted, hence the need to consider a so-called cluster of interrelated service sectors. The major concerns of many developing countries regarding the implementation of the WTO agreements were the lack of progress towards liberalization in sectors of interest to them; the imbalances between their rights and obligations under some of the agreements; and the conditions of market access. The implementation of the Agreement on Textiles and Clothing gave rise to many concerns. Although that sector accounted for about 20 per cent of developing countries' exports of manufactured products, the implementation of the Agreement failed to meet their expectations and, almost six years after its implementation, the committed progressive liberalization of quotas had not materialized.

The Secretary-General noted that the effectiveness of the generalized system of preferences (GSP) and other trade preferences in favour of developing countries was undermined by economic liberalization, the tightening of multilateral rules on waivers and the trend towards reciprocity in North/South trade relations. Since January 2000, international actions had been taken that underpinned the role of trade preferences and regional integration among developing countries. At UNCTAD X, States agreed to maintain the level of tariff-free or reduced-tariff access to markets through national GSP schemes for all beneficiaries, and that UNCTAD would devise mechanisms for advancing trade integration within regional integration arrangements of developing countries.

Communication. On 5 May [A/55/74], Nigeria transmitted to the General Assembly the Declaration and the Havana Programme of Action, adopted by the South Summit of the Group of 77

(developing countries) (Havana, Cuba, 10-14 April). At the first-ever South Summit, the Group of 77 and China emphasized that the process of globalization and interdependence should not be used to weaken or reinterpret the Charter of the United Nations, international law or sovereignty and sovereign equality of States, among other principles. They further emphasized that development was the best contribution to peace. The Havana Programme of Action covered globalization, knowledge and technology, South-South cooperation, North-South relations and institutional follow-up.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/55/579/Add.1], adopted resolution 55/182 without vote [agenda item 92 (a)].

International trade and development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 50/95 and 50/98 of 20 December 1995, 51/167 of 16 December 1996, 52/182 of 18 December 1997, 53/170 of 15 December 1998 and 54/198 of 22 December 1999, as well as relevant international agreements concerning trade, economic growth and development,

Taking note of the outcome of the tenth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held at Bangkok from 12 to 19 February 2000, specifically the Bangkok Declaration: global dialogue and dynamic engagement and the Plan of Action, which provide an important framework for promoting a partnership for growth and development,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted by the heads of State and Government on 8 September 2000,

Taking note of the Declaration and the Programme of Action adopted by the South Summit of the Group of 77, held at Havana from 10 to 14 April 2000,

Emphasizing that a favourable and conducive international economic and financial environment and a positive investment climate are necessary for the growth of the world economy, including the creation of employment with equal opportunities for women and men, in particular for the growth and development of developing countries, and emphasizing also that each country is responsible for its own economic policies for sustainable development,

Noting the need for multilateral trade liberalization, and noting also that a large number of developing countries have assumed the rights and obligations of the World Trade Organization without being able to reap the full benefits of, and participate fully in, the multilateral trading system, and that there is a need for progress towards liberalization and enhanced market access, including in areas and products of particular interest to developing countries,

Noting also the importance of assisting developing countries in building their capacity, in accordance with their national priorities, to engage effectively in international trade,

Stressing that full and faithful implementation of the commitments and obligations in multilateral trade agreements is important to the equitable and sustainable development and stability of the world economy,

Strongly emphasizing the importance of providing all members of the World Trade Organization with the opportunity to engage fully and effectively in the process of multilateral trade negotiations and in other activities within the multilateral trading system in order to facilitate the attainment of balanced results with respect to the interests of all members,

Taking note of the report of the Trade and Development Board on its forty-seventh session, the report of the Secretary-General on international trade and development and on the developments in the multilateral trading system, and the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the transit environment in the landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours,

Noting, in the context of international trade and development, the ongoing work of the Commonwealth Secretariat/World Bank Joint Task Force on Small States,

1. Recognizes the importance of the expansion of international trade as an engine of growth and development and, in this context, the need for expeditious and complete integration of developing countries and countries with economies in transition into the international trading system, in full cognizance of the opportunities and challenges of globalization and liberalization and taking into account the circumstances of individual countries, in particular the trade interests and development needs of developing countries;

2. Renews its commitment to uphold and strengthen an open, rule-based, equitable, secure, non-discriminatory, transparent and predictable multilateral trade system which contributes to the economic and social advancement of all countries and peoples, including equal opportunities for women and for men, by promoting the liberalization and expansion of trade, employment and stability and by providing a framework for the conduct of international trade relations;

3. Expresses concern at the declining terms of trade in most primary commodities, in particular for net exporters of such commodities, as well as the lack of progress in many developing countries in diversification, and, in this regard, strongly emphasizes the need for action at both the national and the international levels, inter alia, through improved market access conditions, addressing supply-side constraints and support for capacity-building, including in areas that actively involve women;

4. Recognizes that the substantial improvement of market access for exports of goods and services from developing countries through, inter alia, the reduction or removal of tariff and non-tariff barriers should be assigned high priority in multilateral trade negotiations;

5. Urges those countries that have announced market-access initiatives in favour of developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, and have not yet fulfilled them to expedite the implementation of those initiatives, and calls upon other countries that have not yet done so to undertake similar initiatives;

6. Deplores any attempt to bypass or undermine multilaterally agreed procedures on the conduct of international trade by taking unilateral actions that are inconsistent with the multilateral trade rules and regulations, including those agreed upon in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations;

7. Expresses concern about the proliferation of anti-dumping and countervailing measures, and stresses that they should not be used as protectionist measures;

8. Reaffirms the role of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development as the focal point within the United Nations for the integrated treatment of development and related issues in the areas of trade, finance, technology, investment and sustainable development;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and in line with the successful outcome of the tenth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to take the necessary measures to strengthen the management and enhance the programme delivery capacity and performance of the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in order to enable it to implement fully and effectively the outcome of its tenth session;

10. Reiterates the importance of continued trade liberalization in developed and developing countries, including in sectors of export interest to developing countries, through, inter alia:

(a) Substantial reductions of tariffs, the rolling back of tariff peaks and the removal of tariff escalation;

(b) The elimination of trade-distorting policies, protectionist practices and non-tariff barriers in international trade relations;

(c) Ensuring that resort to anti-dumping duties, countervailing duties, phytosanitary regulations and technical standards is subject to effective multilateral surveillance so that such measures respect and are consistent with multilateral trading rules and obligations and are not used for protectionist purposes;

(d) The improvement and renewal, by preference-giving countries, of their Generalized System of Preferences schemes with the objective of integrating developing countries, especially the least developed countries, into the international trading system and of finding ways and means to ensure more effective utilization of those schemes; and, in this context, reiterates its original principles, namely, non-discrimination, universality, burden-sharing and non-reciprocity;

11. Also reiterates that it is an ethical imperative for the international community to arrest and to reverse the marginalization of the least developed countries and to promote their expeditious integration into the world economy and that all countries should work together towards further enhancement of duty- and quota-free market access for exports from the least developed countries within the context of supporting their own efforts at capacity-building; recognizes that the full implementation of the Plan of Action for the Least Developed Countries adopted at the first Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, held at Singapore from 9 to 13 December 1996, provides for further and expeditious progress towards duty-free imports from the least developed countries; invites the relevant international organizations to provide the enhanced technical assistance required to help to strengthen the supply and institutional capacity of the least developed countries so as to help them to take the fullest possible advantage of the trading opportunities that arise from globalization and liberalization, and, in this regard, reiterates the need for a speedy implementation of the Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance to Least Developed Countries; takes note of the preparatory activities being undertaken for the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, to be held at Brussels in May 2001; and, in this connection, calls upon development partners, in particular industrialized countries, to make efforts towards the adoption of a policy of duty- and quota-free access for essentially all exports originating in the least developed countries;

12. Notes the need to better coordinate trade-related technical assistance and, in this regard, to implement the Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance to Least Developed Countries in order to promote coordination among the six core agencies, bearing in mind that the resources made available should be utilized in line with their respective roles;

13. Stresses the urgent need to facilitate the integration of the countries of Africa into the world economy, and, in this context, takes note with appreciation of the action-oriented agenda for the development of Africa contained in the report of the Open-ended Ad Hoc Working Group on the Causes of Conflict and the Promotion of Durable Peace and Sustainable Development in Africa and the recommendations contained therein; calls for continued efforts to increase market access for products of export interest to African economies and support for their efforts to diversify and build supply capacity, and, in this context, requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue to enhance its contribution to the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, taking into account the agreed conclusions of the Trade and Development Board on Africa; further encourages the Secretary-General of the United Nations to establish a new subprogramme on Africa, as agreed in the Plan of Action; and emphasizes the importance of increased inter-agency cooperation, which has proven its relevance through the joint integrated technical assistance programmes for selected least developed and other African countries;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the initiation by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in the areas falling within its mandate, of the preparatory process for the final review and appraisal of the implementation of the New Agenda, to be held in 2002, in particular focusing on market access, diversification and supply capacity, resource flows and external debt, foreign direct and portfolio investment and access to technology, and, in this context, also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report, based on the recommendations of the Trade and Development Board on Africa, on measures taken in this regard, with a special emphasis on African trade issues, for the consideration of the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session under the agenda item entitled "International trade and development";

15. Stresses the need to give special attention, within the context of international cooperation on trade and development issues, to the implementation of the many international development commitments geared to meeting the special development needs and problems of small island developing States and of landlocked developing countries and to recognize that those developing countries that provide transit services need adequate support for the maintenance and improvement of their transit infrastructure;

16. Reiterates the need for the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to enhance its contribution to the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and the review document in addressing the specific concerns of small island developing States in their efforts aimed at diversification, capacity-building and benefiting from improved market access opportunities for their effective integration into the global economy;

17. Also reiterates the importance of the effective application by all members of the World Trade Organization of all provisions of the Final Act Embodying the Results of the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations, taking into account the specific interests of developing countries, so as to maximize economic growth and development benefits for all, and the need to address implementation issues seriously, as well as to implement effectively all of the special provisions in the multilateral trade agreements and related ministerial decisions in favour of developing countries, in particular by making operational and ensuring fuller implementation of the previously agreed special and differential provisions, including the strengthening of these concepts, taking into account the changing realities of world trade and globalization, and urges Governments and concerned international organizations to apply effectively the Ministerial Decisions on Measures in Favour of Least Developed Countries and on Measures Concerning the Possible Negative Effects of the Reform Programme on Least Developed and Net Food-importing Developing Countries;

18. Recognizes the importance of increasing trade liberalization, in particular as regards areas and products of interest to developing countries, and that further liberalization should be sufficiently broad-based to respond to the range of interests and concerns of all members within the framework of the World Trade Organization, and, in this regard, welcomes the activities of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development aimed at assisting developing countries in developing a positive agenda for future multilateral trade negotiations, and invites the secretariat of the Conference to continue to provide analytical support and technical assistance, including capacity-building activities, to those countries for their effective participation in the negotiations;

19. Invites members of the international community to consider the interests of non-members of the World Trade Organization in the context of trade liberalization;

20. Invites the international financial institutions to ensure that, in their development cooperation activities with developing countries, the obligations of the latter with regard to their development policies, strategies and programmes in trade and trade-related areas are consistent with their commitments under the framework of rules agreed upon within the multilateral trading system;

21. Emphasizes the importance of the strengthening of, and the attainment of greater universality by, the international trading system and of accelerating the process directed towards accession to the World Trade Organization of developing countries and countries with economies in transition, also emphasizes the necessity for Governments that are members of the World Trade Organization and relevant international organizations to assist non-members of the World Trade Organization so as to facilitate their efforts with respect to accession in an expeditious and transparent manner, on the basis of undertaking balanced World Trade Organization rights and obligations, and further emphasizes the necessity for the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the World Trade Organization to provide technical assistance, within their mandates, that will contribute to the rapid and full integration of those countries into the multilateral trading system;

22. Stresses the need for improved measures to address the volatility of short-term capital flows as well as the effects of financial crises on the international trading system and the development prospects of developing countries and countries affected by such crises, emphasizing the fact that keeping all markets open and maintaining continued growth in world trade are key elements in overcoming such crises, and, in this context, rejects the use of any protectionist measures; also stresses, at a broader level, the need for greater coherence between the development objectives agreed to by the international community and the functioning of the international trading and financial system, and, in this context, calls for close cooperation between the members and observers of the organizations of the United Nations system and of the multilateral trade and financial institutions, with participation in accordance with their established rules, procedures and practices;

23. Requests the Secretary-General, in scheduling and organizing mandated events on trade and trade-related issues, to promote complementarity in the work of the relevant bodies of the United Nations system and with the work of other international organizations, as appropriate, bearing in mind the mandate of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

24. Recognizes the importance of open regional economic integration in the creation of new opportunities for expanding trade and investment, stresses the importance of those initiatives being in conformity with the rules of the World Trade Organization, where applicable, and, bearing in mind the primacy of the multilateral trading system, affirms that regional trade agreements should be outward-oriented and supportive of the multilateral trading system, and, in this context, invites Governments and intergovernmental and multilateral institutions to continue to provide support for economic integration among developing countries and among countries with economies in transition;

25. Requests the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue to identify and analyse the implications for development of issues relevant to investment and to identify ways and means of promoting foreign direct and portfolio investment directed to all developing countries, taking into account their interests, in particular to those most in need, as well as to those countries with economies in transition with similar needs, and bearing in mind the work undertaken by other organizations, including the regional commissions;

26. Emphasizes the fact that, in line with Agenda 21 and the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, Governments should have the objective of ensuring that trade and environmental policies are mutually supportive so as to achieve sustainable development, and also emphasizes that, in so doing, their environmental policies and measures with a potential trade impact should not be used for protectionist purposes;

27. Reaffirms the role of competition law and policy for sound economic development, takes note of the important and useful work of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in this field, and, in this regard, decides to convene in 2005 a fifth United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices, under the auspices of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

28. Emphasizes that the dispute settlement mechanism of the World Trade Organization is a key element with regard to the integrity and credibility of the multilateral trading system and the full realization of the benefits anticipated from the conclusion of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations;

29. Strongly emphasizes the need for technical assistance, including legal assistance, to developing countries through, inter alia, the Advisory Centre on World Trade Organization Law and other mechanisms, to enable those countries to take the fullest possible advantage of the dispute settlement mechanism of the World Trade Organization, based on multilaterally agreed rules and regulations, and, in this context, also emphasizes that it is important for the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue to strengthen its technical assistance to developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, landlocked developing countries and small island developing States in this area;

30. Notes the increasing importance and application of electronic commerce in international trade and the need to strengthen the capacities of developing countries to participate effectively in electronic commerce; urges the organizations of the United Nations system, within their mandates and in cooperation with other relevant bodies, with the participation of their secretariats and the States Members of the United Nations and observer States, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the International Telecommunication Union, the International Trade Centre and the regional commissions, to continue to assist developing countries and countries with economies in transition; emphasizes in this regard the need for analysis of the fiscal, legal and regulatory aspects of electronic commerce, as well as its implications for the trade and development prospects of developing countries; and, in this connection, welcomes the Ministerial Declaration entitled "Development and international cooperation in the twenty-first century: the role of information technology in the context of a knowledge-based global economy" adopted by the Economic and Social Council during the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2000;

31. Stresses the importance of assisting developing countries and interested countries with economies in transition in improving the efficiency of trade-supporting services, inter alia, through the elimination of procedural barriers and by greater use of trade facilitating mechanisms, in particular in the areas of transport, customs, banking and insurance, and business information, especially in the case of small and medium-sized enterprises, and, in this respect, invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in accordance with its mandate and in collaboration with other relevant bodies of the United Nations, including the regional commissions, to continue to assist developing countries in those areas;

32. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in collaboration with the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution and developments in the multilateral trading system.

Trade policy

Trade in goods and services, and commodities

The Commission on Trade in Goods and Services, and Commodities did not meet in 2000. Its fourth session took place in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 878].

Subsidiary bodies. In accordance with the UNCTAD X Plan of Action [TD/386], expert meetings on a number of issues took place, all in Geneva. The Expert Meeting on the Impact of the Reform Process in Agriculture on LDCs and Net Food-importing Developing Countries (NFIDCs) and Ways to Address Their Concerns in Multilateral Trade Negotiations (24-26 July) [TD/B/COM.1/31] had before it an UNCTAD note on the subject [TD/B/COM.1/EM.11/2 & Corr.1]. The Meeting discussed actions under the Marrakesh Decision (a 1994 commitment by WTO member States to assist NFIDCs and LDCs should there be negative impacts resulting from the commitments on agriculture under the Uruguay Round); negotiations on the continuation of the reform process in agriculture; and other issues. The meeting recommended that UNCTAD and other international organizations should provide technical assistance and statistical and analytical background to developing countries in analysing information on agricultural trade policies and in negotiations on accession to WTO. UNCTAD should analyse the impact of the Agreement on Agriculture on LDCs, NFIDCs and small island developing countries in agricultural trade and develop a specific action plan and budget. It should also analyse ways to reduce the cost disadvantages in agricultural trade faced by the landlocked countries.

The Expert Meeting on National Experiences with Regulation and Liberalization: Examples in the Construction Services Sector and Its Contribution to the Development of Developing Countries (23-25 October) [TD/B/COM.1/32] had before it an UNCTAD note on the subject [TD/B/COM.1/EM.12/2]. The Meeting analysed domestic policy instruments and strategies aimed at building capacities in the construction services sector, and discussed action in international trade negotiations and by international financial agencies and donors. It recommended that UNCTAD promote continued dialogue in the area of construction services and noted that a model law for promoting the development of an efficient and competitive construction services sector might be needed. UNCTAD should support the participation of developing countries in multilateral trade negotiations and organize a follow-up meeting on construction services.

The Expert Meeting on Systems and National Experiences for the Protection of Traditional Knowledge, Innovations and Practices (30 October-1 November) [TD/B/COM.1/33] had before it an UNCTAD note on the subject [TD/B/COM.1/EM.13/2]. The Meeting discussed the role of traditional knowledge in several economic and other sectors and systems for its protection. It underlined the need to raise awareness of the role and value of traditional knowledge among local and indigenous communities, policy makers and other stakeholders, and recommended continued cooperation between intergovernmental organizations carrying out programmes on traditional knowledge. UNCTAD was requested to organize seminars and promote the implementation of national strategies to harness traditional knowledge for development and trade, and assist developing countries in exploring systems for protection of such knowledge.

The Expert Meeting on the Impact of Anti-Dumping and Countervailing Actions (4-6 December) [TD/B/COM.1/34] had before it an UNCTAD note on the subject [TD/B/COM.1/EM.14/2]. The Meeting identified a number of issues relating to anti-dumping and countervailing measures that might be addressed in: future multilateral trade negotiations; the WTO Committee on Anti-Dumping Practices; the WTO dispute settlement mechanism; national policies of member States; and UNCTAD's future work and technical assistance activities.

UNCTAD/WTO study. In a joint January study on the post-Uruguay Round tariff environment for developing countries' exports: tariff peaks and tariff escalation [TD/B/COM.1/14/Rev.1], UNCTAD and WTO analysed the tariff situation that would prevail in a number of major developed and developing countries once all the Uruguay Round concessions had been implemented, taking account of the concessions granted by preference-giving countries under their GSP schemes. The study observed that problems of high tariffs and tariff escalation remained widespread for developing countries even after the Uruguay Round. Peak tariffs affected both agricultural and industrial products.

Interdependence and global economic issues

TDB, at its forty-seventh session (Geneva, 9-20 October) [A/55/15], considered interdependence and global economic issues from a trade and development perspective: crisis and recovery in emerging markets. While it was recognized that technological progress and the globalization of trade, finance and productive activity offered new opportunities for wealth creation under appropriate macroeconomic policies and with good governance, weaknesses in national policies and institutions could be punished more quickly and severely by international markets than in the past, even when there was no solid basis for a negative risk assessment. There was concern about the disparities in economic performance across and within regions and about the persistence of macroeconomic imbalances. Difficult policy choices were not restricted to developing countries; growth disparities within the industrialized world had resulted in trade imbalances, while technological and financial innovations had led to greater fragility of financial and trade flows. There was broad agreement that the recent rise in oil prices had added another element of fragility, and that oil-importing countries were in a particularly difficult situation and required compensatory financing through the multilateral financial institutions. Expanding trade opportunities and improving market access would help developing countries to become less dependent on capital inflows and hence less vulnerable to external shocks originating from international capital markets and policy shifts in the developed countries.

While increased private capital flows to developing countries might serve as a vehicle to accelerate development, international capital markets did not always allocate funds efficiently at the global level. There was a major role for national policies in crisis prevention and solution; good corporate governance, an appropriate maturity structure of external debt and an effective regulatory system for the domestic financial sector were stressed. Attention was drawn to the fact that, while much of the burden of the Asian crisis was borne by the public sector, the crisis had originated in the private sector. Consequently, more attention should be given to a prudential regulation and supervision of private capital flows.

The discussion also addressed the systemic factors behind the financial crises, and noted that greater stability of the international financial system required appropriate regulation of financial flows. Governance in the international monetary and financial system should be made more transparent and participatory, and greater regional monetary cooperation was considered useful to the prevention and management of currency crises, albeit through complementing existing multilateral arrangements. Emphasis was placed on the need for strengthened policy coordination among the major developed countries to avoid large fluctuation of the exchange rates among the three major currencies. The enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative was welcomed, but it was made clear that the debt problem remained an obstacle to faster development, especially in LDCs. An acceleration of debt relief procedures and their extension to a greater number of poor countries, as well as renewed efforts on the part of donor countries to raise their official development assistance (ODA) to previously agreed targets, were considered necessary preconditions for a reduction of poverty and a narrowing of the income gap between North and South.

Trade promotion and facilitation

In 2000, UN bodies continued to assist developing countries to promote their exports and facilitate the movement of their goods in international commerce. The International Trade Centre was the main originator of technical cooperation projects in that area.

International Trade Centre

During 2000, the International Trade Centre (ITC), under the joint sponsorship of WTO and UNCTAD, focused on capacity-building to enhance international competitiveness and trade performance [ITC/AG(XXXIV)/185 & Add.1.2]. The Centre's goals during the year were to: facilitate the integration of developing/transition economy enterprises into the multilateral trading system; support national efforts to design and implement trade development strategies; strengthen key trade support services, both public and private; improve export performance in sectors of critical importance and opportunity; and foster international competitiveness within the business community as a whole, and the small and medium-sized enterprise sector in particular. ITC maintained a programme of applied research to develop a set of competitiveness-enhancement tools suitable for adaptation by local partners for use by local trade support institutions and enterprises. Several new tools emerged, and the number of national networks partnering with ITC increased. The Centre maintained its role as the principal source of specialized technical assistance in the competitive aspects of trade-related capacity-building. It intensified its coordination with the Joint ITC/UNCTAD/WTO Integrated Technical Assistance Programme in Selected Least Developed and Other African Countries (JITAP) and became increasingly engaged, at the field level, in trade development work related to the Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance to LDCs (IF). During the year, a programme of specialized cooperation in opportunity identification, market development, institution-strengthening and enterprise assistance was maintained under various interregional, regional and national projects.

ITC increasingly broadened the reach of technical cooperation delivery: a total of 52 national, 15 regional and 22 interregional projects were under implementation, and more than 100 countries, including 27 LDCs, benefited from its support. In addition to JITAP, capacity-building in multilateral trading system issues was an area of concentration under a programme for the Arab States and the countries participating in World Trade Net. Capacity-building for trade support services reached critical mass in Central America, Romania, the United Republic of Tanzania and Viet Nam. Improved sectoral performance figured in a number of national programmes and under the ITC South-South trade promotion programme, which broadened its coverage to include Southern Africa subregional trade, intra-Arab trade, the Economic Cooperation Organization (ECO) region in Central Asia and the Greater Mekong region. Particular emphasis was placed on involving LDCs in ITC product networks and on supporting the process of formulating trade development strategies.

The Executive Forum on National Export Strategies (Montreux, Switzerland, 26-30 September) highlighted the theme "Export development in the digital economy". The Forum, which was attended by over 20 national teams, emerged as ITC's main vehicle for reviewing and assessing best practice in national export strategy management.

JAG action. The ITC Joint Advisory Group (JAG) held its thirty-third session in Geneva from 10 to 14 April [ITC/AG(XXXIII)/181]. JAG had before it reports on ITC activities in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 880]; the evaluation of the ITC programme on trade information [ITC/AG(XXXIII)/177]; the ITC strategy for trade information services [ITC/AG(XXXIII)/178]; ITC's contribution to the medium-term plan of the United Nations for 2002-2005 [ITC/AG(XXXIII)/183]; and the report of the 1999 ITC technical meeting [YUN 1999, p. 880]. It also considered the report of the ITC Global Trust Fund's Consultative Committee [ITC/AG(XXXIII)/182].

The Group emphasized ITC's important role in complementing the work of UNCTAD and WTO by undertaking a range of operational activities to help businesses understand the new multilateral trade rules, develop and implement new strategies and programmes for trade promotion and export development, and strengthen the competitiveness of enterprises. Representatives of developing countries and economies in transition testified to ITC's useful support of trade expansion programmes, and JAG expressed its appreciation for ITC's continuing efforts to expand assistance to LDCs and contribute to poverty alleviation through its Export-led Poverty Reduction Programme. ITC was encouraged to collaborate with other development partners, notably the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the World Bank, in implementing the Programme. The Group expressed satisfaction with the Global Trust Fund, which continued to be an important funding mechanism for ITC and a successful example of cooperation addressing the needs of developing countries and economies in transition, particularly LDCs, in their integration in the multilateral trading system.

Pledges of trust fund contributions to ITC were announced by Canada, China, Denmark, France, India, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland and Turkey. Pledges had been made earlier by Cyprus, the Islamic Development Bank and the Agence intergouvernementale de la Francophonie.

TDB, at its twenty-fifth executive session in September [A/55/15], took note of the JAG report.

Enterprise, business facilitation and development

The Commission on Enterprise, Business Facilitation and Development did not meet in 2000. Its fourth session took place in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 881].

Subsidiary bodies. In accordance with the UNCTAD X Plan of Action (TD/386), three expert meetings took place in 2000, all in Geneva. The Expert Meeting on Electronic Commerce and Tourism (18-20 September) [TD/B/COM.3/30] discussed policies and strategies to be adopted by developing countries in order to increase their participation in electronic commerce (e-commerce) in tourism, and the possible role of UNCTAD and other international organizations in realizing the development benefits of those policies and strategies. It had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report on the subject [TD/B/COM.3/EM.9/2]. In recommendations to Governments and enterprises, the Meeting stated that solutions for e-commerce in tourism should address broader issues of electronic commerce in general, and their effects on and benefits for development. E-tourism should be considered alongside a multisectoral strategy for improved Internet access and telecommunications infrastructure, and telecommunications and Internet services should be liberalized to attract new investment. The Meeting recommended that UNCTAD should analyse the effect of tourism-related e-commerce on development and support the development of sustainable e-tourism in developing countries.

The Expert Meeting on the Relationships between SMEs and TNCs to Ensure the Competitiveness of SMEs (27-29 November) [TD/B/COM.3/31] focused on government and corporate programmes to promote beneficial relationships between TNCs and SMEs. It had before it an UNCTAD secretariat paper on enhancing the competitiveness of SMEs through linkages [TD/B/COM.3/EM.11/2]. The experts discussed how globalization had changed the nature of TNCs' production and outsourcing networks, thereby promoting TNC-SME linkages; and how TNCs needed such linkages with SMEs to implement their global strategies. However, many SMEs missed opportunities for linkages because they could not meet international standards for production. The Meeting suggested that UNCTAD should continue its research to strengthen competitiveness by promoting linkages for interested Governments, TNCs, SMEs and support institutions.

The Expert Meeting on Human Resources Development and Training in Trade-supporting Services: Key to Growth with Special Potential for LDCs (13-15 December) [TD/B/COM.3/32] had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on the subject [TD/B/COM.3/EM.10/2]. The Meeting made recommendations for action by countries and the international community to achieve and support the application of effective policies.

Restrictive business practices

Fourth Review Conference

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/182 [YUN 1997, p. 935], the Fourth United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices was held in Geneva from 25 to 29 September [TD/RBP/CONF.5/16 & Corr.1]. The first conference to review the 1980 Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices (known as the Set) [YUN 1980, p. 626] was held in 1985 [YUN 1985, p. 563], the second in 1990 [YUN 1990, p. 464] and the third in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 961]. The Conference had before it a note by the UNCTAD Secretary-General which reviewed application and implementation of the Set [TD/RBP/CONF.5/3] and considered major developments that had taken place at the national, regional and multilateral levels in the field of competition law and policy since the Third Review Conference. The Conference also considered UNCTAD secretariat reports on: experiences gained on international cooperation on competition policy issues and the mechanisms used [TD/RBP/CONF.5/4 & Corr.1]; technical assistance, advisory and training programmes on competition law and policy [TD/RBP/CONF.5/5 & Corr.1]; competition policy and the exercise of intellectual property rights [TD/RBP/CONF.5/6]; and continued work on the elaboration of a model law or laws on restrictive business practices [TD/RBP/CONF.5/7]. The Conference also had before it a number of declarations adopted at regional preparatory meetings [TD/RBP/CONF.5/8, TD/RBP/CONF.5/9, TD/RBP/CONF.5/11, TD/RBP/CONF.5/12, TD/RBP/CONF.5/13]; and the Declaration of the CIS Antimonopoly Authorities [TD/RBP/CONF.5/10].

By a 29 September resolution, the Conference called on member States to implement the Set's provisions; recommended that the General Assembly convene a Fifth Review Conference in 2005; requested UNCTAD to expand its technical cooperation activities; and invited member States to assist UNCTAD on a voluntary basis in its technical cooperation by providing experts, training facilities or resources. The Conference invited the Commission on Trade in Goods and Services, and Commodities to consider convening an expert meeting on consumer policy as a distinct body from the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy; and decided that the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy, at its 2001 session, would consider, for better implementation of the Set, cooperation regarding merger control, and the interface between competition policy and intellectual property rights. In the light of the UNCTAD X Plan of Action [TD/386], the Group of Experts should draw up its work plan to encompass institutional capacity-building; competition advocacy and educating the public; studies on competition, competitiveness and development; and inputs to possible international agreements on competition.

TDB, at its forty-seventh session, in October [TD/B/47/11 (Vol.1 & Corr.1)], was informed of the outcome of the Conference, and noted that the convening of an expert meeting on consumer policy would not be additional to the existing 10 UNCTAD expert meetings.

Commodities

The Trade and Development Report, 2000 [Sales No. E.00.II.D.19] stated that in 1999 world commodity markets continued to suffer from the effects of the economic slowdown of 1998, which reduced demand and exerted a downward pressure on the prices of most commodities. By mid-1999, the downward trend in most prices levelled and prices increased moderately. However, they did not recover from the market slump in the aftermath of the Asian and Brazilian crises, which resulted in a decline in the commodity price index (excluding crude petroleum) of about 30 per cent. The widespread decline in non-oil commodity prices in both 1998 and 1999 reflected a combination of sluggish demand and ample supplies in almost all markets, as well as the continued effects of currency devaluation for important exporters and importers, most notably Brazil and the Russian Federation. The large devaluations in Brazil led to an increase in exports of sugar and coffee, whereas the devaluation of the Russian rouble reduced the demand for many imported commodities. At the same time as world demand for many non-oil commodities declined, due mainly to the sharp economic downturn experienced in most East Asian countries, technological advances enhanced productivity and reduced production costs, leading to an oversupply in commodity markets. Furthermore, novel applications of genetic engineering and biotechnology in agriculture, combined with favourable weather conditions, resulted in higher output of most agricultural products. Notwithstanding the improvement in the global economy in the second half of 1999, prices of non-oil primary commodities were on average well below the 1998 level. The fall was widespread, but the collapse in sugar and cocoa prices by 30 and 32 per cent, respectively, was particularly acute.

The key feature of the oil market in 1999 was the sharp rise in crude oil prices to unexpectedly high levels. They rebounded steadily throughout the year, so that prices averaged $17.5 a barrel for the year as a whole. The rally in oil prices in 1999 accounted for about $75 billion (some 40 per cent) of the increase in world merchandise exports. Oil prices rose sharply after both the producers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) and non-OPEC producers decided to cut output by 2.1 million barrels per day as of 1 April 1999. Following OPEC's decision in September 1999 to maintain supply limits until March 2000, prices continued to rise, reaching $27 a barrel in February 2000.

In a joint report on the world economic situation and prospects [Sales No. E.01.II.C.2], issued at the end of 2000 by DESA and UNCTAD, it was observed that the global economic recovery had given a stimulus to commodity demand in 2000. However, only a few commodities had benefited from the upturn and there were sharp divergences in the movements of prices of various groups of primary commodities. Prices for tropical beverages and vegetable products weakened further, those for food and agricultural raw materials firmed and those for minerals, metals and crude petroleum continued to surge. On average, the combined index of non-fuel commodity prices rose 4.5 per cent by the end of the third quarter of 2000 compared with the same quarter in 1999. In the petroleum sector, the price of a barrel of oil climbed steadily from a trough in February 1999 of $10 per barrel to a peak of $38 in September 2000.

UNCTAD report. In response to General Assembly resolution 53/174 [YUN 1998, p. 891], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/55/332], prepared by UNCTAD, on world commodity trends and prospects. The report stated that the importance of commodities in world trade was declining, and developing countries were losing their share in world commodity trade, even for their traditional export products. The loss was especially marked for African countries, LDCs and the African, Caribbean and Pacific group of countries. The extremely low prices for commodities aggravated the negative impact of the situation on the economies of commodity-dependent countries. Moreover, the margins between international prices for commodities and the final prices paid by consumers had widened, and a smaller proportion of the value of the final product went to the producing countries. The concentration on the demand side of world commodity markets continued, while State participation in developing countries' agricultural sectors was radically reduced, and purchasing firms with large financial resources had penetrated the marketing and production structures in developing countries.

The report reviewed recent developments in the world commodity economy and discussed changes in commodity market structures and recent developments in international cooperation on commodities. The report concluded that poverty-reduction efforts should attach due importance to commodity issues, and that the revival of international cooperation in commodities, within a new market-based framework, was called for. The key market access problems faced by commodity exporters should be addressed, with the elimination of tariff peaks and tariff escalation, placing agricultural commodities on the same footing as other products in the trading system and ending trade-distorting agricultural support measures by developed countries. Enhanced financial and technical assistance was also required for addressing supply-side constraints, which affected LDCs in particular. Support measures were also required for developing countries dependent on the imports of essential commodities. The report recommended that the activities of the Second Account of the Common Fund for Commodities should be expanded and increased funding made available to it to finance research and development and extension services in developing countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/579/Add.2], adopted resolution 55/183 without vote [agenda item 92 (b)].

Commodities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/200 of 21 December 1990, 47/185 of 22 December 1992, 48/214 of 23 December 1993, 51/169 of 16 December 1996 and 53/174 of 15 December 1998, and stressing the urgent need to ensure their full implementation,

Taking note of the outcome of the tenth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held at Bangkok from 12 to 19 February 2000, and the Plan of Action adopted by the Conference,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted by the heads of State and Government on 8 September 2000,

Taking note of the Declaration and the Programme of Action adopted by the South Summit of the Group of 77, held at Havana from 10 to 14 April 2000,

Taking note with concern of the report of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the declining trend of most commodity prices,

Taking note of the report of the Trade and Development Board on its forty-seventh session, held at Geneva from 9 to 20 October 2000,

Recognizing that many developing countries, in particular African countries and the least developed countries, are highly dependent on the commodity sector, which still remains the principal source of export revenues and the primary source of the creation of employment, income-generation and domestic savings, as well as a driving force of investment and a contributor to economic growth and social development,

Expressing deep concern about the negative effects of unfavourable weather conditions on the supply side of most commodity-dependent countries and any continuing effects of the 1997-1998 financial crisis on the demand for commodities, as well as the continuing depressed levels of most commodity prices, which adversely affect the economic growth of commodity-dependent countries, especially in Africa and the least developed countries, as well as commodity-dependent small island developing States,

Concerned about the difficulties experienced by the developing countries in financing and implementing viable diversification programmes and in attaining access to markets for their commodities,

Emphasizes the necessity for a domestic industrial transformation of commodity production in the developing countries, in particular African countries and the least developed countries, with a view to enhancing productivity and stabilizing and increasing their export earnings, thus promoting the sustainable economic growth of developing countries and their integration into the global economy,

1. Emphasizes the need for the developing countries that are heavily dependent on primary commodities to continue to promote a domestic policy and an institutional environment that encourage diversification and liberalization of the trade and export sectors and enhance competitiveness;

2. Expresses the urgent need for supportive international policies and measures to improve the functioning of commodity markets through efficient and transparent price formation mechanisms, including commodity exchanges, and through the use of commodity price risk management instruments;

3. Expresses concern at the declining terms of trade in most primary commodities, in particular for net exporters of such commodities, as well as the lack of progress in many developing countries in achieving diversification, and, in this regard, strongly emphasizes the need for actions at both the national and international levels, inter alia, to improve market access conditions, address supply-side constraints and provide support for capacity-building, including in areas that actively involve women;

4. Urges the developed countries to continue to support the commodity diversification and liberalization efforts of commodity-dependent developing countries, especially in Africa and the least developed countries, as well as commodity-dependent small island developing States, in a spirit of common purpose and efficiency, inter alia, by providing technical and financial assistance for the preparatory phase of their commodity diversification programmes;

5. Urges producers and consumers of individual commodities to intensify their efforts to reinforce mutual cooperation and assistance;

6. Reiterates the importance of maximizing the contribution of the commodity sector to economic growth and sustainable development, while continuing with diversification efforts in developing countries, especially in commodity-dependent countries, and, in this respect, stresses that:

(a) International support for the efforts of developing countries in the industrial transformation of their commodities is required to increase their export revenues and improve their competitiveness with a view to facilitating their integration into the global economy;

(b) In the context of the process of trade liberalization, tariff peaks should be minimized and the use of trade-distorting policies and protectionist practices and non-tariff barriers should be eliminated as they have negative effects on the ability of developing countries to diversify their exports and undertake the required restructuring of their commodity sector and have an adverse impact on liberalization measures taken by commodity-dependent developing countries and their efforts to eliminate poverty;

(c) In line with Agenda 21 and the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, Governments should make it their objective to ensure that trade and environmental policies are mutually supportive so as to achieve sustainable development; in so doing, their environmental policies and measures with a potential trade impact should not be used for protectionist purposes;

(d) In the light of the process of multilateral trade liberalization, which has led to the diminution of differentials accorded by preferred trade regimes, there is a need to take measures, as appropriate and consistent with international obligations, to address the diminution, in particular by strengthening technical assistance, by continuing to provide financial assistance to commodity-dependent developing countries and by addressing supply-side constraints faced by such countries, in order to improve the competitiveness of their commodity sectors and to overcome difficulties encountered in their diversification programmes;

(e) Timely and effective financial cooperation to facilitate the management by commodity-dependent countries of excessive fluctuations in commodity export earnings should be maintained and further pursued;

(f) Strengthening technical cooperation in the areas of transfer of new technologies and know-how in production processes and training for technical, managerial and commercial staff in developing countries is of paramount importance for quality improvements in the commodity sector;

(g) Expansion of South-South trade and investment in commodities enhances complementarities and offers opportunities for intersectoral linkages within and among exporting countries;

(h) There is a need to promote, expand and intensify research and development, to provide infrastructure and support services and to encourage investment, including joint ventures in developing countries engaged in the commodity and commodity-processing sectors;

7. Encourages the Common Fund for Commodities, in cooperation with the International Trade Centre, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other relevant bodies, to continue to expand the activities of its Second Account with the necessary and effective support for research and development and extension services in developing countries, including adaptive research on production and processing aimed at smallholders and small-sized and medium-sized enterprises in developing countries, in order to widen the scope of activities and thus ensure the effective participation of all stakeholders;

8. Invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, within its mandate, to provide assistance to developing countries in the financing of commodity diversification and to include issues related to commodities in the provision of analytical support and technical assistance to developing countries in their preparation for effective participation in multilateral trade negotiations and in formulating a positive agenda for future trade negotiations;

9. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session on world commodity trends and prospects;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session, under the item entitled "Macroeconomic policy questions", the sub-item entitled "Commodities".

Individual commodities

Coffee. At its eighty-second session (London, 27-28 September), the International Coffee Council approved the International Coffee Agreement 2001. The Agreement was opened for signature at United Nations Headquarters in New York on 1 November 2000 and was to remain open until 25 September 2001. As at 31 December, Costa Rica had signed the Agreement.

Jute. The United Nations Conference on Jute and Jute Products, 2000 held its first session (Geneva, 27-31 March) [TD/JUTE.3/7] to prepare a successor agreement to the International Agreement on Jute and Jute Products, 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 373], which was due to expire on 11 April 2000. The Conference represented the culmination of a series of meetings held within the framework of the International Jute Organization (IJO) in Dhaka, Bangladesh, which led to a recognition that there was a continued need for international cooperation on jute, a commodity produced primarily by developing countries and providing employment to millions of people. Its production, however, was suffering from the competition with its synthetic substitutes and had been affected by price instability. At its second session (Dhaka, 6-8 April), the Conference established the text of the International Instrument of Cooperation in Jute and Jute Products, 2000 [TD/JUTE.3/7]. By an 8 April resolution [TD/JUTE.3/6], the Conference requested the Secretary-General to arrange for the Instrument to be open for signature at United Nations Headquarters in New York from 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001.

Following the Conference, the EU, which accounted for about one third of IJO's financing, announced that it was unable to endorse the Instrument. Consequently, the Instrument was not deposited with the Secretary-General and IJO entered into a liquidation period.

Common Fund for Commodities

The 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities [YUN 1980, p. 621], a mechanism intended to stabilize the commodities market by helping to finance buffer stocks of specific commodities, as well as commodity development activities such as research and marketing, entered into force in 1989, and the Fund became operational later that year.

As at 31 December 2000, the number of parties to it remained at 106 States, plus the European Community (EC), the Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa and the Organization of African Unity (OAU).

Finance

Financial policy

The Trade and Development Report, 2000 [Sales No. E.00.II.D.19] stated that 1999 was less turbulent than 1998 for the currencies of major emerging market economies, whose currency regimes continued to span the spectrum from rigid pegs through various forms of managed floating to full flexibility; there was widespread easing of monetary conditions in those economies. Substantial movements in exchange rates were rare in East Asian countries but more frequent elsewhere.

The World Economic and Social Survey 2000 [Sales No. E.00.II.C.1] noted that macroeconomic policy measures had been crucial in stimulating recovery from recent international financial crises and in deepening and broadening the recovery to include a growing number of countries. In certain developed economies, the combination of strong output growth with low inflation and unemployment suggested a decoupling of the links that had traditionally prevailed among those variables when the economic cycle matured and slack capacity began to be exhausted. That decoupling was most pronounced in the United States. In many emerging market economies, the international financial crises of the late 1990s prompted changes in the institutional framework for economic policy. Examples included changes in exchange-rate regimes, improvements in the rules and instruments for monetary policy, and reforms of banking and financial systems. Those and other changes altered the channels through which financial policies affected real economic sectors.

In a joint report on the world economic situation and prospects [Sales No. E.01.II.C.2], issued at the end of 2000 by DESA and UNCTAD, it was observed that central banks in many developed economies, which had begun tightening their monetary policies in mid-1999, continued to do so until mid-2000 when signs of moderation in the pace of global economic growth began to surface and some central banks held their policy interest rates steady. While some economies in transition, particularly the Czech Republic and Slovenia, moved towards a more neutral monetary policy in late 1999 and early 2000, most of them kept a relatively tight stance during the year. Developing countries followed diverse paths with their monetary policy in 2000. Despite higher oil prices and other supply shocks, as well as improved demand conditions in several countries, prudent macroeconomic policies kept inflation under control in most of them.

Financial flows

The World Economic and Social Survey 2000 [Sales No. E.00.II.C.1] stated that net financial inflows to developing countries and transition economies in 1999 remained well below the levels of the pre-crisis 1990s, owing to subdued private flows and a sharp decline in official financing. By late 1999, however, investor sentiment towards emerging markets improved significantly, based on stronger economic performance and improved external balances of a growing number of countries. As a result, the cost of external credit fell and the flow of credit to emerging market economies began to rebound. However, countries that were on the sidelines as regards financial flows before the crisis remained so in 1999.

According to the Trade and Development Report, 2000 [Sales No. E.00.II.D.19], net private capital flows to developing and transition economies increased in 1999, but only marginally from the levels of 1998, which represented a fall of more than 50 per cent from those of 1997, and reflected the aftermath of the financial crises in East Asia and the Russian Federation. That outcome was accompanied by a more stable environment for major financial indicators than that of the preceding two years. However, there were large regional differences: recovery was recorded for inflows into Asia, while in Latin America the inflow was substantially reduced. By contrast, the changes for economies in Europe and Africa were much more limited. There was also significant variation in the volatility of different categories of inflow: estimates of foreign direct investment (FDI) mostly showed either little change or rises in 1999, while those of debt securities and bank lending were subject to greater variation. Financial crises had a more limited impact on FDI than on other major categories of private financial flow to developing and transition economies. FDI was significantly influenced by privatization and by the growing importance of cross-border merger and acquisition transitions. The rise in FDI in 1999 was associated with substantial receipts from privatization in Latin America and with asset sales in East Asia associated with bank and non-bank corporate restructuring and facilitated by the recent relaxation of restrictions on foreign investment. Net private capital inflows in the form of debt declined sharply, and net issues of international debt instruments by developing and transition economies fell slightly.

In a joint report on the world economic situation and prospects [Sales No. E.01.II.C.2], issued at the end of 2000 by DESA and UNCTAD, it was observed that net financial flows to developing and transition economies fell in 2000 to their lowest level in more than a decade, mainly owing to strong net outflows in the banking sector. Official flows increased moderately and there were higher, if small, net inflows of portfolio investment. FDI flows reached a record level in 2000, estimated at $1.1 trillion, 14 per cent higher than in 1999, but that increase was fully accounted for by flows to developed countries, with the surge in cross-border mergers and acquisitions serving as the driving force.

The World Investment Report 2000 [Sales No. E.00.II.D.20], prepared by UNCTAD, focused on cross-border mergers and acquisitions and development.

International financial system

High-level meeting of Economic and Social Council and Bretton Woods institutions. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 54/197 [YUN 1999, p. 892] and Economic and Social Council decision 2000/205 of 4 February, the third special high-level meeting between the Council and the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund (IMF)) took place in New York on 18 April [A/55/3/Rev.1]. The first two meetings were held in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 898] and 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 890]. The meeting addressed the theme of strengthening international financial arrangements and eradicating poverty and had before it a note by the Secretary-General on the subject [E/2000/8], which identified a number of issues to be discussed in two major policy areas: reform of the global financial system and fighting poverty in developing countries.

In an informal summary of the high-level meeting [E/2000/79], the Secretariat summarized the salient points and main aspects of statements made and exchanges of views that took place and provided a synopsis of the dialogue, from which four main themes emerged: the state of the world economy, globalization and international trade; strengthening the global financial system; development and poverty reduction; and the institutional dimensions to promote faster economic growth and enhance international cooperation for development.

In concluding remarks, the Managing Director of the World Bank pointed to the increasing convergence of views of the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions on development and global financial system reform based on a common set of objectives. He noted that the poverty-reduction strategy papers endorsed by the World Bank and IMF, which were required to set the basis for concessional lending by those institutions, were important for the consideration of debt relief and poverty eradication. He also observed that funding the HIPC Initiative was a major challenge. Although $2.4 billion had been pledged, the overall debt relief provided amounted to $15 billion and was a crucial part of the process to move ahead. He hoped that the middle-income countries would not participate as beneficiaries of the HIPC Initiative but grow out of debt and preserve access to capital markets. The Acting Managing Director of IMF noted that for any country, trade liberalization was one of the best ways to integrate into the global economy. Regarding the HIPC Initiative, he stated that IMF had to take into account the social and budgetary implications of the policies to be implemented, and that countries' strategies were more important than the advice of IMF or the World Bank.

In his closing remarks, the President of the Council said that the meeting had stressed the need to take advantage of the easing of financial crises to push ahead in the consideration of further reforms to foster integration of the developing and transition economies into the global economy. He noted that the structure of international institutions was incomplete, particularly in involving developing and transition economies in drawing up prudential norms and standards. Although the meeting reconfirmed the critical role of the private sector in finance and entrepreneurship, Governments played a role that the private sector could not perform, in particular in fighting poverty and HIV/AIDS and more generally to work towards the goals of equity and fairness. Governments and multilateral institutions needed to work together to provide free market access to developing countries, particularly LDCs. Sound national policies supported by increased official development assistance (ODA) and strengthened debt relief were needed.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 54/197 [YUN 1999, p. 892], the Secretary-General submitted a 27 July report entitled: "Towards a stable international financial system, responsive to the challenges of development, especially in the developing countries" [A/55/187]. The report summarized recent trends in global capital flows (see p. 906) and examined the main actions taken and concerns raised on policy in industrialized countries and the international economic environment, the reform of the international financial system and systemic reform and confidence-building at global and regional levels—issues addressed in resolution 54/197.

The Secretary-General stated that there appeared to be a widespread willingness among policy makers to consider and adopt significant changes in the international financial architecture. However, several proposals, all of which sought to build a strengthened and more stable financial system, responsive to the priorities of growth and to the promotion of economic and social equity, warranted further consideration by the international community. Those proposals fell into a number of key areas: crisis prevention; crisis resolution; and institutional structure. Noting that reform of the international monetary and financial system had reached the international political agenda, the Secretary-General observed that it was an extremely sensitive moment, as many Governments had deep interests at stake, as had the private sector around the world. Civil society had raised important political, ethical and developmental considerations. Therefore, the issue warranted discussion from multiple perspectives and in multiple forums, and since discussion was an essential part of consensus-building, it was best to include the views of all relevant stakeholders. The United Nations was a natural forum for such considerations, the Secretary-General said. In that regard, the agreement of Member States to include systemic issues in the preparatory process of the high-level international event on financing for development and the event itself, to be held in 2002 (see p. 915), provided an unique opportunity to bring the world's political decision makers together to reach a new understanding that could shape the future of financing for development.

In a 28 July addendum [A/55/187/Add.1], the Secretary-General discussed regional perspectives and developments with regard to the international financial system and provided the views of the executive secretaries of the regional commissions on the subject (see also p. 923). He stated that the Asian financial crisis and its contagion effect had generated an impetus in favour of fundamental reforms in the international financial architecture to improve the management of crises and prevent their recurrence. The crisis had also led to the recognition that there was an enormous discrepancy between the dynamic financial world and the institutions regulating it.

By a second addendum of 2 August [A/55/187/Add.2], the Secretary-General transmitted an UNCTAD note, which provided information on its work on the involvement of the private sector in the prevention and resolution of financial crises. The report stated that in past crisis situations, ad hoc bail-out operations by multilateral institutions had protected creditors from bearing the full risk of their lending decisions, putting the burden on debtors. The application of insolvency principles would help make the resolution of financial crises in developing countries more equitable, less costly and less time-consuming, and reduce the probability of their occurrence. An effective framework for greater private sector involvement would need to contain three key elements: provisions for an automatic standstill on debt servicing; maintaining the debtor's access to the working capital required for the continuation of its operations; and an arrangement for the reorganization of the debtor's assets and liabilities, aimed at sharing the adjustment burden between debtor and creditors as well as distributing equitably the costs among creditors.

Ministerial meeting. By a 17 July letter [A/55/158-E/2000/102], Japan transmitted to the Secretary-General the report of the Group of Seven (G-7) industrialized countries' major finance ministers to the heads of State and Government entitled "Strengthening the international financial architecture" (Fukuoka, Japan, 8 July).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/579/Add.5], adopted resolution 55/186 without vote [agenda item 92 (e)].

Towards a strengthened and stable international financial architecture responsive to the priorities of growth and development, especially in developing countries, and to the promotion of economic and social equity

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 54/197 of 22 December 1999, entitled "Towards a stable international financial system, responsive to the challenges of development, especially in the developing countries",

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted by the heads of State and Government on 8 September 2000,

Taking note of the high-level regional meetings on financing for development held at Jakarta from 2 to 5 August 2000, Bogotá on 9 and 10 November 2000, Addis Ababa from 15 to 22 November 2000, Beirut on 23 and 24 November 2000 and Geneva on 6 and 7 December 2000, which addressed issues of, inter alia, domestic resources mobilization, external private flows, reform of the international financial architecture, regional cooperation and collaboration, innovative sources of financing and issues relating to the external sector, including official development assistance and trade, from the regional perspective, in order to contribute to the preparatory process for the high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development,

Emphasizing the importance of mobilizing in a coherent manner all sources available for the provision of financing for development, inter alia, domestic resources, international private capital flows, official development assistance, market access for goods and services from developing countries and external debt relief, and emphasizing also the importance of utilizing those resources in an efficient way,

Expressing concern that net financial flows to developing countries continued in 1999 the contraction that had begun with the onset of the financial crisis in 1997, and regretting the continued marginalization of the least developed countries from private capital flows,

Emphasizing the importance of long-term investment flows, in particular foreign direct investment, in complementing the development efforts of all developing countries as well as economies in transition and the need for all countries to develop stable access to private capital and for regional and international cooperation to promote the mobilization of new and additional capital for development,

Concerned about the excessive volatility of speculative short-term capital flows and the contagion effects in financial markets in times of crisis,

Deeply concerned by the low levels of official development assistance,

Stressing the need for increased access to markets, in particular for goods and services that are of export interest to developing countries, inter alia, through multilateral trade negotiations,

Emphasizing the importance of finding a durable solution for those developing countries that have difficulties in meeting their external debt and debt-servicing obligations,

Encouraging the efforts to enhance the stabilizing role of regional and subregional financial institutions and arrangements in supporting the management of monetary and financial issues,

Underlining the urgent need to continue to work on a wide range of reforms for a strengthened and more stable international financial system with a view to enabling it to deal more effectively and in a timely manner with the new challenges of development in the context of global financial integration,

Stressing that the process of reform for a strengthened and stable international financial architecture should be based on broad participation in a genuine multilateral approach, involving all members of the international community, to ensure that the diverse needs and interests of all countries are adequately represented,

Reaffirming that the United Nations, in fulfilling its role in the promotion of development, in particular of developing countries, plays an important part in the international efforts to build up the necessary international consensus for the reforms needed for a strengthened and stable international financial system, taking into account the mandate of all relevant international institutions, especially the international financial institutions,

Noting that the high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development will provide a unique opportunity to consider, in an integrated manner, all sources of financing for development, and mindful that in the United Nations Millennium Declaration the heads of State and Government decided to make every effort to ensure its success,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Towards a stable international financial system, responsive to the challenges of development, especially in the developing countries", the addendum thereto on regional perspectives and developments provided by the regional commissions and the addendum thereto provided by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the work it has undertaken on the involvement of the private sector in the prevention and resolution of financial crises;

2. Underlines the utmost importance of implementing the resolve expressed in the United Nations Millennium Declaration to create an environment, at the national and global levels alike, that is conducive to development and to the elimination of poverty, inter alia, through good governance within each country, as well as good governance at the international level and transparency in the financial, monetary and trading systems;

3. Also underlines the utmost importance of implementing the commitment in the United Nations Millennium Declaration to an open, equitable, rule-based, predictable and non-discriminatory multilateral trading and financial system;

4. Stresses the special importance of creating an enabling international economic environment through strong cooperative efforts by all countries and institutions to promote equitable economic development in a world economy that benefits all people, and, in this context, invites developed countries, in particular major industrialized countries, which have significant weight in influencing world economic growth, when formulating their macroeconomic policies, to take into account their effects in terms of the external economic environment favourable to growth and development, in particular of developing countries;

5. Also stresses the special importance of creating an enabling domestic environment through, inter alia, the rule of law, capacity-building, including institutional capacity-building, and the implementation of appropriate economic and social policies, so that domestic and international resources may be effectively mobilized and used for development;

6. Reiterates the urgent need to accelerate the growth and development prospects of the least developed countries, which remain the poorest and most vulnerable of the international community, and calls upon development partners, in particular industrialized countries, to facilitate the financing of their development, inter alia, through public and private financial flows, increased official development assistance, strengthened debt relief, the adoption of a policy of duty- and quota-free access for essentially all of their exports and enhanced balance-of-payments support, and in this context welcomes the holding at Brussels in

May 2001 of the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries;

7. Recognizes the stability of the international financial system as an important global public good and a necessary condition for positive financial flows for development, and, in this context, calls upon all countries, including major industrialized countries, whose policies have significant impact on most economies, to adopt and to pursue policies that promote international financial stability and facilitate financial flows for development, and requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme, to provide information to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the analysis it has undertaken of international financial stability as a global public good;

8. Emphasizes, in this regard, the need to continue national, regional and international efforts to promote international financial stability and, to this end, to improve surveillance, early warning, prevention and response capabilities for dealing with the emergence and spread of financial crises in a timely manner, taking a comprehensive and long-term perspective while remaining responsive to the challenges of development and the protection of the most vulnerable countries and social groups;

9. Stresses the importance of strong domestic institutions to promote financial stability for the achievement of growth and development, inter alia, through sound macroeconomic policies and policies aimed at strengthening the regulatory systems of the financial and banking sectors, including considering arrangements in destination and source countries to reduce the risks of excessive international financial volatility and measures to ensure orderly, gradual and well-sequenced capital-account liberalization processes, and invites in this connection all relevant international institutions to continue to provide, upon the request of concerned countries, policy advice and technical assistance so as to strengthen their capacity in the above-mentioned areas;

10. Emphasizes the importance of deepening the convergence of the efforts of all international institutions able to contribute to the strengthening of an international financial architecture responsive to the priorities of growth and development, especially in developing countries, and to the promotion of economic and social equity;

11. Reiterates the need for broadening and strengthening the participation of developing countries in the international economic decision-making process;

12. Emphasizes the importance of the improved participation of developing countries in the work of the international institutions dealing with the reform of the international financial architecture, in particular the International Monetary Fund, as well as in relevant norm-setting processes;

13. Expresses the need for multilateral surveillance by the International Monetary Fund and regional and subregional institutions of all countries in a symmetrical manner;

14. Emphasizes that the international financial institutions, in providing policy advice and supporting adjustment programmes, should ensure that they are sensitive to the specific circumstances and implementing capacities of concerned countries and to the special needs of developing countries and should work towards the best possible outcomes in terms of growth and development, inter alia, through gender-sensitive employment and poverty eradication policies and strategies, and stresses the importance of national ownership of programmes supported by the International Monetary Fund for their sustained implementation;

15. Encourages the continuing efforts undertaken by the Bretton Woods institutions, the regional development banks and the International Labour Organization to help Governments to address the social consequences of crisis, and welcomes, in this regard, the commitments made by the General Assembly at its twenty-fourth special session on the implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development, to ensure that, when structural adjustment programmes are agreed to, they include social development goals, in particular those of eradicating poverty, promoting full and productive employment and enhancing social integration;

16. Emphasizes that the international financial institutions should, when invited by national Governments, provide assistance and advice, as appropriate, to the countries in their efforts to promote development and reduce poverty through national programmes, including, where relevant, nationally owned and developed poverty reduction strategy papers that integrate macroeconomic, structural and social policies;

17. Underlines the continuing importance of providing the international institutions, in particular the International Monetary Fund, with adequate resources to provide emergency financing in a timely and accessible manner to countries affected by financial crises, and notes the regional and subregional efforts to facilitate emergency financing in time of crisis;

18. Welcomes the progress made in developing early warning capacities to address in a timely manner the threat of financial crisis, and in this regard encourages the International Monetary Fund and other relevant international and regional institutions to continue their efforts to contribute to this process;

19. Calls upon the international community, in particular the World Bank and the regional development banks, and other relevant international and regional institutions, including the regional commissions, working with the private sector, to support the promotion of long-term private financial flows, especially foreign direct investments, inter alia, through enhanced technical cooperation, to all developing countries as well as economies in transition, in particular the least developed countries and other developing countries with special difficulties in attracting private financial flows, including those in Africa, as well as the small island developing countries, and, in this context, requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to provide information to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the work it has undertaken on this matter;

20. Reiterates its invitation to the International Monetary Fund to facilitate the dialogue among relevant actors to consider the possibility of establishing regulatory frameworks for short-term capital flows and trade in currencies;

21. Emphasizes that it is important for sovereign risk assessments made by private sector agencies to be based on objective and transparent parameters;

22. Reaffirms the need to consider appropriate frameworks for the involvement of the private sector in the prevention and resolution of financial crises, including the need to implement and further refine the framework laid down by the International Monetary and Financial Committee at its meeting held on 16 April 2000, and underlines the importance of an equitable distribution of the cost of adjustments between the public and private sectors and among debtors, creditors and investors, concerning, inter alia, highly leveraged operations, as well as the consideration, in exceptional cases, of debt standstill arrangements;

23. Emphasizes the important supportive role that stronger regional and subregional financial institutions and arrangements can play in the reform of the international financial system and the enhancement of financing for development;

24. Encourages the deepening of the dialogue between the Economic and Social Council and the Bretton Woods institutions, and in this regard recommends that at their next high-level meeting they consider the modalities needed to consolidate further a broader global agenda for a strengthened and stable international financial system that is responsive to the priorities of growth and development, in particular of developing countries, and to the promotion of economic and social equity in the global economy;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to make the present resolution available to the Preparatory Committee for the High-level International Intergovernmental Event on Financing for Development, at its second substantive session, as an input for its work on the systemic issues contained in its preliminary substantive agenda;

26. Also requests the Secretary-General, in close cooperation with all relevant entities of the United Nations, including the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the regional commissions, within their respective mandates, and in consultation with the Bretton Woods institutions, and taking into account the progress made at the high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development, to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution under a sub-item entitled "International financial system and development", with an analysis of the current trend in global financial flows, including net transfer of resources between developed and developing countries, and recommendations to consolidate further a broader global agenda for a strengthened and stable international financial system that is responsive to the priorities of growth and development, in particular of developing countries, and to the promotion of economic and social equity in the global economy;

27. Requests the President of the General Assembly to present this resolution to the Board of Executive Directors of the World Bank and the Executive Board of the International Monetary Fund, before their joint annual spring meeting, in order to bring it to their attention as an input to their discussions on the matters addressed herein.

Debt problems of developing countries

submitted a September report on recent developments in the debt situation of developing countries [A/55/422]. He stated that an analysis of key debt indicators showed that external debt and debt-servicing problems were most severe and persistent in HIPC countries, the target group of the HIPC Initiative. However, debt restructuring problems lingered in a number of other developing countries and countries in transition and they remained exposed to adverse developments in commodity prices, interest rates, exchange rates and private capital flows. Moreover, the debt-servicing capacity of some countries continued to be affected by war and natural disasters.

Discussing international debt problems and strategies, the Secretary-General stated that the total outstanding debt of developing countries and countries in transition showed little change in 1999. Their total debt at the end of the year was estimated at $2,554 billion, a slight increase over the end-1998 level. Long-term debt increased by $40 billion, while short-term debt fell slightly and represented 16 per cent of the total. The debt-service ratio remained broadly unchanged at about 18-19 per cent. The ratio of total outstanding debt to exports fell to 137 per cent; and that of debt to gross national product (GNP) decreased to below 42 per cent. Short-term debt corresponded to 53 per cent of the stock of foreign exchange reserves as compared with 59 per cent at the end of 1998. The distribution of debt among different regions remained the same as in 1998: East and South Asia, 33 per cent; Latin America, 31 per cent; Europe and Central Asia, 19 per cent; sub-Saharan Africa, 9 per cent; and the Middle East and North Africa, 8 per cent. Latin America had the highest ratio of debt service to exports, at about 35 per cent, while the highest debt-to-exports ratio, 225 per cent, was recorded by sub-Saharan Africa.

The report noted that by the end of 1999, little assistance had been delivered under the HIPC Initiative, which suffered from problems of underfunding, excessive conditionality, restrictions over eligibility, inadequate debt relief and cumbersome procedures. The HIPCs' total outstanding external debt increased by some $4.5 billion in 1999 to a level of $219 billion, and the ratio of debt to exports amounted to 389 per cent, more than twice that for developing countries as a whole and considerably above that of sub-Saharan Africa (including the region's HIPCs). There were 41 countries on the list of HIPCs—33 were in sub-Saharan Africa and 30 were classified as LDCs. Following the G-7 Cologne summit in June 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 896], deeper and broader relief was expected to be achieved through a lowering of debt sustainability targets, resulting in an increased number of countries becoming eligible for HIPC assistance. A main innovation under the enhanced HIPC framework was the explicit link to poverty reduction. Up to the end of July 2000, nine countries had reached their decision points under the enhanced scheme: Bolivia, Mauritania and Uganda were declared eligible for additional relief in February, Mozambique and the United Republic of Tanzania followed in April, Senegal in June and Benin, Burkina Faso and Honduras in July. Also, in May, Sao Tome and Principe negotiated its first Paris Club (a group of creditor countries) agreement, a flow rescheduling in support of the country's new Poverty Reduction and Growth Facility arrangement with IMF. An important development in late 1999 and early 2000 was the commitment by an increasing number of creditor countries to grant even deeper debt relief. In April, G-7 finance ministers and central bank governors committed themselves to increasing debt reduction to 100 per cent of non-ODA claims treated within the Paris Club framework, a commitment reaffirmed by G-7 leaders at their Okinawa (Japan) summit in July. However, the G-8 meeting (Okinawa, 21-23 July) [A/55/257-S/2000/766] did not advance any major new debt initiative similar to the 1999 Cologne initiative [YUN 1999, p. 896]. The leaders did agree to push forward the HIPC Initiative to ensure that as many countries as possible reached their decision points. As of July, only a small number of countries were well advanced in the HIPC process, while others had not met the requirements for entering the process. The countries concerned were almost all LDCs suffering from civil conflict or severe governance problems, and were among the most indebted HIPCs.

As to non-HIPC debtors, the report noted that 18 LDCs were not included in the HIPC category and that some of them were considered severely or moderately indebted according to the World Bank classification. A number of special measures were devised for LDCs, such as the reliance mainly on grants in the provision of financing to them, and most donor countries also extended ODA debt cancellation to LDCs. However, their external debt burden had continued to grow over time.

The report also analysed conditions in markets for commercial debt; debt restructuring agreements; financial crises and debt in emerging markets; and issues in commercial debt workouts.

The Secretary-General concluded that, in order to remove the debt overhang of the world's poorest nations, an independent panel of experts not influenced by creditor interests should be established to assess debt sustainability, eligibility for debt reduction, the amount of debt reduction needed, conditionality and financing for HIPC and other debt-distressed low- and middle-income countries. There should also be a commitment on the part of creditors to implement any recommendation of that panel regarding the writing-off of unpayable debt. Moreover, HIPCs and other countries covered by the panel's recommendations should benefit from new aid resources in grant form or on highly concessional terms in order to avoid the renewed build-up of an unsustainable debt burden. There should also be an immediate suspension of the debt-service payments of all HIPCs, and that suspension should also be extended to non-HIPC countries declared eligible for debt relief by the proposed panel. Reform of the international strategy regarding the official debt of poor countries should also address the problems of debt-distressed low-income countries not eligible for the special treatment accorded to HIPCs. Further, it was necessary to recognize that countries seriously affected by war and natural disasters and facing problems of reconstruction and recovery required debt relief and urgent assistance regardless of their longer-term prospects and debt profiles. For commercial debt, establishing orderly and equitable work-out procedures with explicit responsibilities of creditors and debtors and well-defined roles for public and private sectors remained the most important step. Given the volatility of private capital flows and the increased frequency of liquidity problems in emerging markets, provision of international liquidity, as well as temporary standstills, should constitute an essential component of an effective international financial architecture.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/579/Add.3], adopted resolution 55/184 without vote [agenda item 92 (c)].

Enhancing international cooperation towards a durable solution to the external debt problem of developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/164 of 16 December 1996, 52/185 of 18 December 1997, 53/175 of 15 December 1998 and 54/202 of 22 December 1999 on enhancing international cooperation towards a durable solution to the external debt problems of developing countries,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on recent developments in the debt situation of developing countries,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration adopted by the heads of State and Government on 8 September 2000,

Noting with concern the continuing debt and debt-servicing problems of heavily indebted developing countries as constituting an element that adversely affects their development efforts and economic growth, and stressing the importance of alleviating once and for all, where applicable, their onerous debt and debt-service burden with the aim of attaining a sustainable level of debt and debt service,

Noting with great concern the continuing high debt burden borne by most African countries and the least developed countries, as exacerbated, inter alia, by the declining trend in commodity prices, and noting that the financial crisis has aggravated the debt-service burdens of many developing countries, including low- and middle-income countries, in particular in the context of meeting their international debt and debt-servicing obligations in a timely fashion despite serious external and domestic financial constraints,

Reaffirming the need to consider further measures, as appropriate, for dealing with the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries in an effective, equitable and development-oriented manner, in order to help them to exit from the rescheduling process and unsustainable debt burdens, and welcoming the efforts already made in this regard,

Welcoming and emphasizing the importance of the efforts of debtor countries to pursue, despite the great social cost often involved, economic reforms and structural adjustment programmes that are aimed at achieving stability, raising domestic savings and investment, attaining competitiveness to take advantage of market access opportunities where available, reducing inflation, improving economic efficiency and addressing the social aspects of development, including the eradication of poverty and the development of social safety nets for the vulnerable and poorer strata of their populations, and encouraging them to continue in these efforts,

Recognizing that close attention should be paid to the impact of economic reforms on the poor and, in this context, that the country-owned poverty reduction strategy papers linked to the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative should contribute to poverty reduction,

Stressing the need for continuing global economic growth, equitable distribution of the opportunities and benefits of globalization and a continuing supportive international economic environment with regard to, inter alia, terms of trade, commodity prices, improved market access, trade practices, access to technology, exchange rates and international interest rates, and noting the continued need for resources for sustained economic growth and sustainable development of the developing countries, in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions and the results of recent United Nations conferences,

Noting that mechanisms such as debt rescheduling and debt conversions alone are not sufficient to resolve all of the problems relating to long-term debt sustainability, and, in this connection, stressing the continuing need for sound macroeconomic policies as well as the need for full, swift and effective implementation of initiatives that will further assist developing countries, in particular the poorest and most heavily indebted countries, especially in Africa, in their efforts to improve their debt situation, in view of their continued very high levels of total debt stock and debt-service burdens,

Welcoming the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, launched by the Group of Seven major industrialized countries at their meeting held at Cologne, Germany, from 18 to 20 June 1999, and the decisions on the enhanced initiative taken by the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank in October 1999 that are designed to provide deeper, broader and faster relief,

Welcoming also the actions taken by creditor countries within the framework of the Paris Club and by some creditor countries through the cancellation of bilateral debts, and urging all creditor countries to participate in efforts to remedy the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries,

Welcoming further the adoption by the Executive Boards of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank of a number of measures to speed up the implementation of the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, including greater flexibility on track record with a focus on policy implementation, as well as the emphasis that the decision point may be reached and that debt relief may be provided before the finalization of full poverty reduction strategy papers, as long as interim poverty reduction strategy papers are agreed, and noting with appreciation their approval of proposals to streamline preliminary heavily indebted poor countries documents,

Recognizing that the full implementation of the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative will require substantial financial resources, and, in this regard, stressing the need for fair, equitable and transparent burden-sharing among the international public creditor community and other donor countries, and also stressing the need to fund adequately the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Trust Fund and the Poverty Reduction and Growth Facility/Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Trust Fund, and, in this regard, welcoming the contributions and pledges made by donors to the trust funds,

Noting with concern that some highly indebted middle-income developing countries are facing serious difficulties in meeting their external debt-servicing obligations owing, inter alia, to liquidity constraints,

Stressing that the effective management of the debt of developing countries, including middle-income countries, is an important factor, among others, in their sustained economic growth and in the smooth functioning of the world economy,

Stressing also the importance of a sound enabling environment for effective debt management,

1. Recognizes that effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable solutions to the external debt and debt-service burdens of developing countries can contribute substantially to the strengthening of the global economy and to the efforts of developing countries to achieve sustained economic growth and sustainable development, in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions and the results of recent global conferences;

2. Reaffirms the need, as expressed in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, for the international community to deal comprehensively and effectively with the debt problems of low- and middle-income developing countries, through various national and international measures designed to make their debt sustainable in the long term;

3. Calls for the full, speedy and effective implementation of the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, and, in this regard, stresses the need for the donor community to provide the additional resources necessary to fulfil the future financial requirements of the Initiative, hence welcomes the agreement that financing for heavily indebted poor countries should be reviewed analytically and separately from International Development Association replenishment requirements but back to back with meetings for the thirteenth replenishment of the Association, and calls upon all donors to participate fully in this process;

4. Calls upon the heavily indebted poor countries to take, as soon as possible, the policy measures necessary to become eligible for the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative and to reach the decision point;

5. Reiterates its call upon industrialized countries, as expressed in the United Nations Millennium Declaration in the context of addressing the special needs of the least developed countries, to agree to cancel all bilateral official debts of the heavily indebted poor countries in return for their making demonstrable commitments to poverty reduction;

6. Stresses the importance of continuing to implement the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative flexibly, noting the provision of significant interim debt relief between the decision and completion points and taking due account of the policy performance of the countries concerned in a transparent manner and with the full involvement of the debtor countries, including for the setting of the floating completion point, and in this regard stresses the importance of country-owned poverty reduction strategy papers;

7. Also stresses the importance of continued flexibility with regard to the eligibility criteria for the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, in particular for countries in post-conflict situations;

8. Notes that it is important for the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to continue their efforts to strengthen the transparency and integrity of debt sustainability analysis, and also notes the importance of cooperation with debtor countries in order to obtain relevant information;

9. Welcomes the framework for strengthening the link between debt relief and poverty eradication, and stresses the need for its continued flexible implementation, recognizing that, while the poverty reduction strategy papers should be in place by the decision point, on a transitional basis the decision point could be reached with agreement on an interim poverty reduction strategy paper, but that in all cases demonstrable progress in implementing a poverty reduction strategy would be required by the completion point;

10. Emphasizes that poverty reduction programmes as linked to the implementation of the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative must be country-driven and in accordance with the priorities and programmes of countries eligible under the Initiative, and stresses the importance of a participatory process that involves civil society in this regard;

11. Welcomes the decision of those countries that have cancelled bilateral official debt, and urges creditor countries that have not done so to consider the full cancellation and equivalent relief of the bilateral official debts of countries eligible under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative and, as appropriate, action to address the needs of post-conflict countries, in particular those with protracted arrears, developing countries affected by serious natural disasters and poor countries with very low social and human development indicators, including the possibility of debt-relief measures, and stresses the importance of building coalitions with civil society organizations and non-governmental organizations in all countries to ensure in the shortest possible time the implementation of pronouncements of debt forgiveness;

12. Notes that the multilateral debt-relief funds can have a positive impact in assisting Governments in safeguarding or increasing expenditures on priority social sectors, and encourages donors and other countries in a position to do so to continue their efforts in this regard in the context of the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative;

13. Emphasizes the need to secure adequate funding for an overall financing plan for the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, including in particular the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Trust Fund and the Poverty Reduction and Growth Facility/Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Trust Fund in the context of fair, equitable and transparent burden-sharing;

14. Stresses the principle that funding of any debt relief should not affect adversely the support for other development activities in favour of developing countries, including the level of funding for United Nations funds and programmes; welcomes, in this regard, the decision of the Joint Ministerial Committee of the Boards of Governors of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund on the Transfer of Real Resources to Developing Countries that financing of debt relief should not compromise the financing made available through concessional windows such as the International Development Association; and expresses its appreciation to those developed countries that have reached, gone beyond or recently made commitments towards reaching the agreed target for official development assistance of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product, and at the same time calls upon other developed countries to meet the target for official development assistance as soon as possible;

15. Expresses its appreciation for the action taken by creditor countries of the Paris Club with regard to the debts of developing countries that are affected by natural disasters, and, in this regard, reiterates the need for relief promises to be fulfilled within the shortest possible time frame in order to free the requisite resources for national reconstruction efforts;

16. Encourages the international creditor community to consider appropriate measures for countries with a very high level of debt overhang, including, in particular, the poorest African countries, in order to make an appropriate and consistent contribution to the common objective of debt sustainability;

17. Recognizes the difficulties of highly indebted middle-income developing countries and other highly indebted middle-income countries in meeting their external debt and debt-servicing obligations, and notes the serious situation in some of them in the context, inter alia, of significant liquidity constraints, which may require debt treatment, including, as appropriate, debt-reduction measures;

18. Calls for concerted national and international action to address effectively the debt problems of middle-income developing countries with a view to resolving their potential long-term debt-sustainability problems through various debt-treatment measures, including, as appropriate, existing orderly mechanisms for debt reduction, and encourages all creditors, both public and private, and debtor countries to utilize to the fullest extent possible, where appropriate, the mechanisms for debt reduction;

19. Recognizes the need for countries, even when experiencing a debt problem, to continue to work with creditors in order to facilitate continued access to international capital markets, and, in the event that extraordinary circumstances preclude a country from temporarily meeting its debt-servicing commitments, urges creditors and Governments to work together in a transparent and timely fashion towards an orderly and equitable resolution of the repayment problem, including consideration of temporary debt standstill arrangements in exceptional cases;

20. Notes the importance of an orderly, gradual and well-sequenced liberalization of capital accounts to strengthen the ability of countries to sustain its consequences so as to mitigate the adverse impact of the volatility of short-term capital flows;

21. Stresses that debt relief should contribute to development objectives, including poverty reduction, and in this regard urges countries to direct those resources freed through debt relief, in particular through debt cancellation and reduction, towards these objectives;

22. Notes that debt relief alone will not lead to poverty reduction and economic growth, and, in this regard, emphasizes the need for an enabling environment, including sound economic management as well as an efficient, transparent and accountable public service and administration, and stresses the need to mobilize financial resources from all sources, in addition to debt-relief measures and continued concessional financial assistance, in particular to the least developed countries, in order to support their efforts for achieving economic growth and sustainable development;

23. Underlines the absolute importance of implementing the resolve expressed in the United Nations Millennium Declaration to create an environment, at the national and global levels alike, that is conducive to development and to the elimination of poverty, inter alia, through good governance within each country as well as good governance at the international level and transparency in the financial, monetary and trading systems;

24. Stresses the need to strengthen the institutional capacity of developing countries in debt management, calls upon the international community to support the efforts made towards this end, and, in this regard, stresses the importance of initiatives such as the Debt Management and Financial Analysis System and the debt-management capacity-building programme;

25. Notes the importance of providing adequate resources for debt-relief measures in the light of the difficulties that many developing countries, especially those in Africa and the least developed countries, are facing with respect to mobilizing both domestic and external resources for their development, and, in accordance with the United Nations Millennium Declaration, calls for special measures to address the challenges of poverty eradication and sustainable development in Africa, including debt cancellation;

26. Stresses the importance for developing countries to continue their efforts to promote a favourable environment for attracting foreign investment, thereby promoting economic growth and sustainable development, so as to favour their exit from debt and debt-servicing problems, and also stresses the need for the international community to promote a conducive external environment through, inter alia, improved market access, efforts aimed at the stabilization of exchange rates and the effective stewardship of interest rates, increased resource flows, access to international financial markets, flow of financial resources and improved access to technology for developing countries;

27. Calls upon the international community, including the United Nations system, and invites the Bretton Woods institutions, as well as the private sector, to take appropriate measures and actions for the implementation of the commitments, agreements and decisions of the major United Nations conferences and summits on development organized since the beginning of the 1990s, as well as of the results of review processes, in particular those related to the question of the external debt problem of developing countries;

28. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution and to include in that report a comprehensive and substantive analysis of the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries, including, inter alia, those resulting from global financial instability.

Financing for development

High-level intergovernmental event (2002)

Throughout 2000, meetings took place in preparation for the high-level intergovernmental event on financing for development. In December, the General Assembly decided that the event, originally planned for 2001, should be held in the first quarter of 2002 (resolution 55/213).

At its organizational session (see p. 916), the Preparatory Committee for the High-level International Intergovernmental Event on Financing for Development, in accordance with Assembly resolution 54/196 [YUN 1999, p. 900], undertook consultations with a number of stakeholders on the modalities of their participation in the preparations for the event and in the event itself. However, not all aspects of the consultation process could be covered within the time frame specified. In June, the Assembly considered the report of the Bureau of the Preparatory Committee on those modalities [A/AC.257/6].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 June [meeting 98], the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/279 without vote [agenda item 97 (a)]. The draft [A/54/L.82] was recommended by the Preparatory Committee for the High-level International Intergovernmental Event on Financing for Development [A/55/28].

Preparations for the substantive preparatory process and the high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development

The General Assembly

1. Welcomes the report of the Bureau of the Preparatory Committee for the high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development on modalities of the participation of all relevant stakeholders in the substantive preparatory process and the high-level intergovernmental event on financing for development;

2. Approves:

(a) The proposals contained in paragraph 7 of the report regarding modalities of the participation of the World Bank, and requests the Bureau to seek clarification on paragraph 7 (c) thereof, taking into account the views expressed in the Preparatory Committee;

(b) The recommendations regarding the participation of the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization in the work of the Preparatory Committee, as contained in paragraph 10 of the report;

(c) The recommendations regarding the participation of intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies, the funds and programmes of the United Nations and other relevant official or quasi-official organizations, as contained in paragraph 13 of the report;

(d) Paragraph 11 of the report regarding the holding of regional consultative meetings during the second half of 2000 on substantive matters before the Preparatory Committee;

(e) The recommendations regarding the participation of non-governmental organizations and the business sector, as contained in paragraphs 14 to 19 of the report, and requests the Bureau to submit to the Preparatory Committee for its approval the applications for accreditation of those non-governmental organizations which do not already have consultative status with the Economic and Social Council;

3. Requests the Bureau, in connection with the modalities proposed by the World Bank, to convey to the Bank the desire of the Preparatory Committee that the Bank participate actively in the Preparatory Committee, to reinforce the impact of the cooperation envisaged under the proposed modalities;

4. Also requests the Bureau to continue consultations intensively with the institutional stakeholders indicated in paragraph 11 (e) (i) of General Assembly resolution 54/196 of 22 December 1999 on modalities of their participation and to report to the Preparatory Committee as soon as possible with proposals and recommendations thereon, as well as possible proposals and recommendations for additional modalities of the participation of the private sector;

5. Further requests the Bureau to make proposals and recommendations to the Preparatory Committee at its resumed organizational session on subparagraphs (a), (b), (c) and (g) of paragraph 11 of resolution 54/196, taking into account discussions in the Preparatory Committee;

6. Requests the Bureau to make arrangements for open-ended informal consultations on subparagraph (d) of paragraph 11 of resolution 54/196 before the convening of the first substantive session, taking into account paragraph 3 of the resolution and the elements indicated in the report of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group of the General Assembly on Financing for Development;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to assist in the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the Bureau, as approved by the Preparatory Committee and in the present resolution, and to continue to provide all needed support to the Preparatory Committee and to the Bureau, including arrangements to facilitate the travel of Bureau members to take part in consultations with the major institutional stakeholders;

8. Reiterates its decision that the first substantive session of the Preparatory Committee should be held beginning on 15 May 2000, at United Nations Headquarters;

9. Decides that the Preparatory Committee should hold its second substantive session, of two weeks' duration, in the first quarter of 2001 and its third substantive session, of two weeks' duration, in the second quarter of 2001, at Headquarters;

10. Also decides that the Preparatory Committee should suspend its resumed organizational session and reconvene it at the earliest possible date in order to complete its work.

Preparatory Committee. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 54/196 [YUN 1999, p. 900], the Preparatory Committee for the High-level International Intergovernmental Event on Financing for Development held its organizational and resumed organizational sessions in New York on 10 and 25 February, 27, 28 and 31 March and 30 May [A/55/28]. It had before it a number of documents dealing with the modalities of the participation of all relevant stakeholders in both the substantive preparatory process and the high-level intergovernmental event on financing for development [A/AC.257/1, A/AC.257/6] and with procedural matters [A/AC.257/4, A/AC.257/5, A/AC.257/8, A/AC.257/9].

In addition to recommending to the General Assembly the adoption of a draft resolution on the preparations for the substantive preparatory process and the high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development, the Preparatory Committee adopted a decision by which it referred all outstanding issues to its first substantive session.

The Preparatory Committee held its first session in New York on 31 May and 2 June and resumed on 30 October and 16, 20 and 27 November [A/55/28]. The Committee had before it the list of NGOs recommended by its Bureau for accreditation [A/AC.257/10 & Add.1]. It recommended to the General Assembly for adoption a draft resolution on further preparations for the substantive preparatory process and the high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development. It brought to the Assembly's attention a decision on the same subject [dec.1/1], by which it adopted the preliminary agenda for the financing-for-development process, covering: mobilizing domestic financial resources for development; mobilizing international resources for development: FDI and other private flows; trade; increasing international financial cooperation for development through, inter alia, ODA; debt; and addressing systemic issues: enhancing the coherence and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems in support of development. The Preparatory Committee also adopted decisions on accreditation of NGOs [dec. 1/2]; accreditation of additional NGOs [dec. 1/3]; and extension of the accreditation of NGOs [dec. 1/4].

Other preparatory meetings. In preparation for the high-level international intergovernmental event, five regional consultative meetings on financing for development took place: Asia and the Pacific (Jakarta, Indonesia, 2-5 August) [A/AC.257/13]; Latin America and the Caribbean (Bogotá, Colombia, 9-10 November) [A/AC.257/17]; Africa (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 15-17 November) [A/AC.257/14]; Western Asia (Beirut, Lebanon, 23-24 November) [A/AC.257/16]; and Europe (Geneva, 6-7 December) [A/AC.257/15].

In accordance with resolution 54/279 (see above), the Preparatory Committee held two sets of hearings, one with civil society organizations (New York, 6-7 November) [A/AC.257/18] and the other with the business community (New York, 11-12 December) [A/AC.257/19].

Report of Secretary-General. On 24 August, the Secretary-General submitted a report on high-level international intergovernmental consideration of financing for development [A/55/315]. The report, which complemented the report of the Preparatory Committee [A/55/28], focused on secretariat activities, specifically the status of secretariat cooperation with relevant stakeholders; preparation of the regional consultations; preparations for the hearings with civil society and the business community; and arrangements for secretariat support for the preparatory process, including the establishment of an extra-budgetary trust fund.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/588], adopted resolution 55/213 without vote [agenda item 101].

Preparations for the substantive preparatory process and the high-level international intergovernmental event

The General Assembly,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Preparatory Committee for the High-level International Intergovernmental Event on Financing for Development on its organizational and first sessions,

Welcoming the continuing progress made in the consultations with the major institutional stakeholders with regard to their involvement in the process of financing for development,

Encouraging Governments and all other relevant stakeholders to consider taking concrete initiatives in support of the financing for development preparatory process and the high-level international intergovernmental event, within the framework of its substantive agenda,

Welcoming the regional consultative meetings being held to provide the regional input to the financing for development process, and encouraging the deepening of regional efforts in support of the financing for development preparatory process and the high-level international intergovernmental event, within the framework of its substantive agenda,

Also welcoming the hearings held with civil society to support the financing for development process, looking forward to the contribution of the forthcoming hearings with the private sector, and encouraging the deepening of those efforts in support of the financing for development preparatory process and the high-level international intergovernmental event, within the framework of its substantive agenda,

Expressing its appreciation to Governments for the support they have provided to the trust fund for extra-budgetary contributions for the financing for development process,

1. Decides that the high-level international intergovernmental event should be scheduled for the first quarter of 2002, at a date to be agreed upon, and extends its invitation to interested countries to consider hosting or confirming existing offers to host the high-level international intergovernmental event;

2. Also decides that the Preparatory Committee should hold a final session from 14 to 25 January 2002, on the understanding that the second session will be held from 12 to 23 February 2001 and the third session from 30 April to 11 May 2001;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to address a letter to all Governments further sensitizing them to the high profile and high level of participation that the substantive preparatory process and the high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development deserve.

On the same day, by decision 55/446, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on the high-level international intergovernmental consideration of financing for development.

Resource requirements

In March [A/54/7/Add.13] and again in May [A/54/7/Add.14], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) considered two notes of the Secretary-General [A/C.5/54/50 & A/C.5/54/58] regarding the review of the resource requirements for the high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development and the Third United Nations Conference on LDCs (LDC-III) (see p. 808).

On 7 April, by resolution 54/258 A, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to explore ways of providing the resource requirements for the two meetings and to report to the Assembly at the second part of its resumed fifty-fourth session. On 15 June, the Assembly welcomed the establishment of a Trust Fund for the Preparatory Committee for the High-level International Intergovernmental Event on Financing for Development (resolution 54/258 B).

Investment, technology and related financial issues

The Commission on Investment, Technology and Related Financial Issues did not meet in 2000. Its fourth session took place in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 902].

Subsidiary bodies. In accordance with the UNCTAD X Plan of Action [TD/386], two expert meetings took place in 2000. The Expert Meeting on Home Country Measures (Geneva, 8-10 November) [TD/B/COM.2/27] discussed national experiences and best practices in six broad categories of major types of existing home country measures used by both developed and developing countries to promote outward FDI, including transfer of technology. It had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on the subject [TD/B/COM.2/EM.8/2]. Experts noted that home countries, including the private sector, should encourage FDI flows, particularly to and between developing countries, and especially to LDCs.

The Expert Meeting on Mergers and Acquisitions: Policies Aimed at Maximizing the Positive and Minimizing the Possible Negative Impact of International Investment (Geneva, 19-21 June) [TD/B/COM.2/26] discussed trends, motivations and performance of mergers and acquisitions and their impact on host-country development policy considerations and identified issues for further research. It had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note on the subject [TD/B/COM.2/EM.7/2 & Corr.1].

International standards of accounting and reporting

The Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting (ISAR) held its seventeenth session in Geneva from 3 to 5 July [TD/B/COM.2/25]. It had before it an UNCTAD report on accounting by SMEs [TD/B/COM.2/ISAR/9].

In its agreed conclusions, the Group stressed the importance of SMEs to economic growth and development in both developed and developing countries. However, it noted that existing international and some national accounting and reporting requirements were intended primarily for large, listed companies, and identified obstacles that SMEs faced in maintaining financial records and accounts. ISAR agreed that each country should define different categories of SMEs in a manner appropriate to its needs and recommended that ad hoc expert consultations be held to consider an accounting and reporting framework appropriate for SMEs.

Taxation

On 6 June [E/2000/96], the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council that the Steering Committee of the Group of Experts had met in New York from 12 to 14 April. Following the Group's adoption of the revised text of the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries at its ninth meeting [YUN 1999, p. 903], the Steering Committee had reviewed and consolidated editorial comments and suggestions elicited by the Secretary-General from members of the Group of Experts on the text of the Model Convention and concurred on its definitive text. The Group of Experts had noted that the Secretary-General therefore intended to publish the revised Model Convention.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters [E/1999/84 & Corr.1], adopted decision 2000/232 without vote [agenda item 13 (g)].

Recommendations made by the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters at its ninth meeting

At its 42nd plenary meeting, on 27 July 2000, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the following recommendations made by the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters at its ninth meeting:

1. The Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters recommends that the Secretariat publish as soon as possible the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries. The Group of Experts also decides to keep the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention under a biennial revision process.

2. The Group of Experts has suggested the following items for its review during its forthcoming meetings:

- (a) Transfer pricing;
  - (i) Advance pricing agreements;
  - (ii) Arbitration as a means of dispute resolution;
- (b) Innovative financial instruments;
- (c) Tax implications of electronic commerce, including the scope of the permanent establishment concept;
- (d) Exchange of information;
- (e) Mutual assistance in collection of tax debts;
- (f) Pensions;
- (g) Alternative dispute resolution procedure;
- (h) Tracking changes in the Model Tax Convention on Income and on Capital of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development;
- (i) Examining the revisions of regional model conventions.

3. On the basis of the decision of the Group of Experts, the Council may wish to take note of the revised United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries, and to approve the holding of the tenth meeting of the Group of Experts in the first half of 2001.

By decision 2000/300 of 28 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on the ninth meeting of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters [YUN 1999, p. 904], taking into account the corrigendum to the report [E/1999/84/Corr.1] and the following text that was to be inserted after the word "Thereafter" in the third line of the corrigendum: "taking fully into account the fact that some Member States expressed the desire that the report should be as accurate as possible".

Transport

Maritime transport

The Review of Maritime Transport 2000 [Sales No. E.00.II.D.34] stated that world seaborne trade recorded its fourteenth consecutive annual increase in 1999, reaching a record high of 5.23 billion tons. Annual growth, however, declined at a rate of 1.3 per cent, the lowest since 1987. Preliminary data available indicated that global maritime trade growth in 2000 was expected to be 2 per cent. Total maritime activities measured in ton-miles in global trade decreased to the minimal level of 21,480 billion ton-miles in 1999, compared to 21,492 billion ton-miles in 1998.

The world merchant fleet expanded to 799 million deadweight tons (dwt) at the end of 1999, representing a 1.3 per cent increase over 1998. The relatively low rate of fleet expansion reflected the balance between new-building deliveries of 40.5 million dwt, and tonnage broken up and lost of 30.7 million dwt, leaving a net gain of 9.8 million dwt. The developing countries' share of tonnage registered in major open-registry countries had increased slowly, reaching about one third in 1999. On the other hand, the developed market-economy countries' share had pursued a downward trend, representing about two thirds of the total tonnage registered in the major open-registry countries.

Transport of dangerous goods

The Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods held its twenty-first session in Geneva from 4 to 13 December [ST/SG/AC.10/27 & Add.1,2]. It had before it the reports of its Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods on its sixteenth and seventeenth sessions, held in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 905], and on its eighteenth session (Geneva, 3-12 July) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.3/36 & Add.1]. The Committee adopted a number of amendments to the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods (Model Regulations) and to the Manual of Tests and Criteria, as proposed by its Subcommittee. It considered implementation of Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/62 [YUN 1999, p. 905], and discussed activities related to the implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672], particularly on global harmonization of systems of classification and labelling of chemicals, health hazards and hazards to the environment, and implementation of Council resolution 1999/65 [YUN 1999, p. 906]. The Committee prepared a draft resolution for consideration by the Council in 2001.

UNCTAD institutional and organizational questions

UNCTAD programme

In 2000, TDB—the executive body of UNCTAD—held four sessions, all in Geneva: the second part of the twenty-third executive session (27 January), the twenty-fourth (24 March and 12 May) and the twenty-fifth (22 September) executive sessions, and the forty-seventh regular session (9-20 October) [A/55/15]. In January, the Board took note of the pre-Conference text for UNCTAD X as submitted by the Preparatory Committee of the Whole and requested the President of the Board to transmit it to the Conference (see p. 892). In March and May, the Board discussed follow-up to the outcome of UNCTAD X; the outcome of the thirty-fifth session of the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget (see p. 922); the agenda items of the three TDB Commissions; and implementation of paragraph 166 of the Bangkok Plan of Action on the strengthening of UNCTAD's capacity-building programme. In September, TDB considered UNCTAD's contribution to the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s (NADAF)—UNCTAD's activities in favour of Africa (see p. 874); preparations for the forty-seventh session of TDB; the establishment of an Advisory Body on strengthening the capacity-building programme; and the report of the Joint Advisory Group on ITC on its thirty-third session (see p. 900).

In October, the Board discussed interdependence and global economic issues from a trade and development perspective: crisis and recovery in emerging markets (see p. 899). It adopted agreed conclusions on progress in implementing the Programme of Action for LDCs for the 1990s [agreed conclusions 459(XLVII)] (see p. 808); and on UNCTAD's contribution to the implementation of NADAF: capital flows and growth in Africa [460(XLVII)] (see p. 874). The Board adopted six decisions (see below): on technical cooperation activities of UNCTAD and their financing [dec. 461(XLVII)]; on financial sustainability of certain technical cooperation programmes and activities, pursuant to paragraph 164 (viii) of the UNCTAD X Plan of Action, in order to ensure sufficient funding [462(XLVII)]; on implementation of paragraph 166 of the UNCTAD X Plan of Action [463(XLVII)]; on the evaluation of technical cooperation programmes [464(XLVII)]; on financing of experts from developing countries and economies in transition when participating in UNCTAD meetings [465(XLVII)]; and on the establishment of an Advisory Body in accordance with paragraph 166 of the Bangkok Plan of Action [466(XLVII)]. It also took note of several reports and was informed of the outcome of the Fourth United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices (see p. 901). The Board's one-day high-level segment (16 October) was devoted to regional integration and the global economy [TD/B/47/12].

By decision 55/438 of 20 December, the General Assembly took note of TDB's report on its twenty-third, twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth executive sessions and on its forty-seventh session.

Technical cooperation activities

In a July report [TD/B/47/2 & Add.1,2], the UNCTAD Secretary-General gave an overview of technical cooperation activities in 1999, when UNCTAD's expenditures amounted to $25.4 million, an increase of some 16.5 per cent over the previous year. Of that amount, $16.9 million was from trust fund contributions, $6.5 million was financed by UNDP, and $2 million was from the regular programme of technical cooperation.

By region, approximately $5.3 million went to Africa, $4.6 million to Asia and the Pacific, $2.3 million to Europe, and $1.1 million to Latin America and the Caribbean. Some $12 million went to the interregional programme. The LDCs' share of technical cooperation expenditures in 1999 amounted to 40 per cent, up from 37.6 per cent in 1998.

By programme, the Division for Services Infrastructure for Development and Trade Efficiency accounted for 42 per cent of total expenditure. The Divisions on International Trade in Goods and Services, and Commodities, on Globalization and Development Strategies, and on Investment, Technology and Enterprise Development represented respectively 11.4, 13.9 and 15.5 per cent of total expenditure. The balance (17.2 per cent) was represented by the Office of the Special Coordinator for Least Developed, Landlocked and Island Developing Countries (3.7 per cent) and by activities reported for the secretariat as a whole (13.5 per cent).

As requested in the UNCTAD X Plan of Action [TD/386], the UNCTAD secretariat, in an August note [TD/B/47/8], submitted the indicative plan of technical cooperation programmes for 2001, including information on: ongoing projects that were expected to continue in 2001; projects proposed by the secretariat to implement the mandate of UNCTAD X as well as mandates given to UNCTAD by the General Assembly; and projects proposed as a result of specific requests received from beneficiaries. All projects included in the plan placed particular emphasis on capacity-building, in accordance with paragraph 166 of the Plan of Action.

In an October decision [A/55/15 (dec. 461(XLVII))], TDB requested the secretariat, in consultation with member States, to ensure a better relative balance in the share of technical cooperation activities of the various regions, and urged it to make maximum use of capacities from developing countries, including local and regional expertise; developing countries were encouraged to provide names of experts to the secretariat. The Board called on the secretariat to consider, in consultation with donors and beneficiaries, clustering activities and formulating umbrella projects to enhance international coordination and cooperation among donors, to create economies of scale and support cooperation among developing countries at the subregional, regional and interregional levels. TDB expressed its appreciation for the secretariat's indicative plan for UNCTAD's technical cooperation for 2001, and for reissuance of that document in the light of the comments made by the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget at its thirty-sixth session (see p. 922).

Evaluations

In July, an independent evaluation team submitted an evaluation of the UNCTAD EMPRETEC programme [TD/B/WP/129], which provided developing countries with training in entrepreneurship. The programme's activities involved the delivery of seminars, the provision of advisory services and the development of national and international networks serving the needs of entrepreneurs. As at December 1999, EMPRETEC was fully active in 12 countries, with preliminary activities being initiated in 7 others. The evaluation stated that the training component of the programme needed adaptation, and made a number of recommendations to improve the programme's effectiveness in two broad areas: enhancing the substantive and operational sustainability of national programmes and promoting international networking.

A July progress report on implementation of the three-year Trade Point Programme strategy [TD/B/WP/128], approved in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 911], stated that capacity development activities were hampered by the lack of extrabudgetary funding. Nevertheless, progress was achieved in empowering Trade Points and reducing their dependence on UNCTAD resources through regional cooperation and the strengthening of Trade Point forums. The report noted that the Global Trade Point Network (GTPNet) web site was renovated and its services enhanced. Options were presented for a suitable non-profit organization to manage the Electronic Trading Opportunities (ETO) system, and activities to be undertaken in line with the strategy were proposed.

With regard to implementation of the recommendations of the 1999 in-depth evaluation of the technical cooperation activities on competition law and policy [TD/B/WP/119 & Add.1], an August UNCTAD secretariat report [TD/B/WP/130] stated that a strategy had been developed that focused on: activities that were sustainable and could make an impact; alternative sources and ways of mobilizing human and financial resources; and the development of networking among high-level institutions in each country.

In an October decision on the evaluation of technical cooperation programmes [dec. 464 (XLVII)], TDB agreed with the recommendations contained in the evaluation of the EMPRETEC programme and urged the UNCTAD Secretary-General to implement them and report to the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget in 2001. It invited the secretariat to enhance the geographical coverage of EMPRETEC and to strengthen its cooperation with other organizations and entities dealing with entrepreneurship. The Board took note of the progress report on implementing the recommendations of the evaluation of the programme of technical cooperation activities on competition law and policy and invited the secretariat to continue the implementation. It also took note of the progress report on implementation of the Trade Point Programme strategy and requested the secretariat to proceed with the implementation in the time frame agreed. It encouraged donor countries to make available extrabudgetary resources for capacity-building projects aiming to achieve that objective, and requested the secretariat to report to the Working Party in 2001 on progress made. TDB also decided that an in-depth evaluation of the TRAINMAR (Training human resources in maritime management) programme should be considered by the Working Party in 2001.

Funding

In an October decision on the review of the financial sustainability of certain technical cooperation programmes and activities, pursuant to paragraph 164 (viii) of the UNCTAD X Plan of Action, in order to ensure sufficient funding [dec. 462 (XLVII)], TDB recommended that the UNCTAD Secretary-General establish advisory groups for the Automated System for Customs Data (ASYCUDA), the Debt Management and Financial Analysis System (DMFAS) and the Advance Cargo Information System (ACIS) programmes, consider the establishment of a DMFAS trust fund in order to ensure the financial sustainability of the central operation of the DMFAS programme as well as the different options and modalities for such a trust fund, and report to the Working Party in 2001.

Training courses

A September note on strengthening UNCTAD's capacity-building programmes and activities [TD/B/WP/133] discussed implementation of paragraph 166 of the UNCTAD X Plan of Action, which called for a strengthening of UNCTAD's capacity-building activities, particularly through regular training courses on key trade and development issues, so as to better enable developing countries and interested countries with economies in transition to meet global economic and trade challenges. The note outlined activities designed to strengthen and deepen UNCTAD's capacity-building programmes.

In an October decision [dec. 463 (XLVII)], TDB invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to seek the necessary resources to prepare and deliver three training courses in 2001 by exploring a variety of funding arrangements, including the UN programme budget, voluntary contributions and a combination thereof. It reiterated the importance of an early and full implementation of paragraph 166 of the Plan of Action, and urged the UNCTAD Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to that end in the context of the preparation of the programme budget for 2002-2003.

In another October decision [dec. 466 (XLVII)], TDB decided to review the arrangements for the implementation of the regular training courses provided for in paragraph 166 of the Plan of Action at its next regular (2001) session. It also decided to establish an Advisory Body to advise the UNCTAD Secretary-General on regular training, in accordance with paragraph 166. The draft terms of reference of the Advisory Body were annexed to the decision.

Participation of developing country experts in UNCTAD meetings

In a 17 August note on financing of experts from developing countries and economies in transition when participating in UNCTAD meetings [TD/B/WP/131], the UNCTAD secretariat stated that, at the time of reporting, two expert meetings had been held in 2000, in which 29 experts from developing countries participated: 11 from Africa, 8 from Asia and the Pacific and 10 from Latin America, of which 10 were from LDCs.

The unspent balance carried over to 2000 for the financing of experts' participation amounted to $587,712. The total cost of the participation of the experts in the two meetings was estimated at $102,421. The secretariat estimated that there would remain a balance at end-2000 of about $93,000 against the original provision established by the General Assembly in resolution 53/3 [YUN 1998, p. 912].

In an October decision [A/55/15 (dec. 465 (XLVII))], TDB invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to seek the necessary resources to finance the participation of experts from developing countries and economies in transition in UNCTAD expert meetings foreseen for 2001, including in the context of preparing the programme budget for 2002-2003.

Medium-term plan and programme budget

The UNCTAD Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget held two sessions in 2000, both in Geneva.

At its thirty-fifth session (13 and 20-21 March, 17-19 April) [TD/B/47/3], the Working Party reviewed the draft UNCTAD section of the UN medium-term plan for the period 2002-2005 and adopted a decision in which it recommended to TDB the adoption of the text of the medium-term plan, as amended by the Working Party, for transmission to the appropriate authorities at United Nations Headquarters. It also recommended that TDB consider the proposal that the UNCTAD secretariat undertake an evaluation of its activities in accordance with the indicators of achievement set forth in the plan, and present it to member States for discussion. At its twenty-fourth executive session in March [TD/B/EX (24)/3], TDB endorsed the Working Party's decision, thereby adopting the draft medium-term plan, and agreed to consider the proposal on evaluation approved by the Working Party.

The Working Party also reviewed the UNCTAD programme of work for 2000-2001, which was revised in the light of the UNCTAD X outcome. In agreed conclusions, it concurred with the revised programme of work, to be forwarded to TDB for its endorsement. The Working Party requested that the UNCTAD Secretary-General submit detailed costed proposals on the implementation of paragraph 166 of the UNCTAD X Plan of Action for consideration at the thirty-sixth session of the Working Party, as well as proposals for an Advisory Body to be established by TDB (see p. 921). At its twenty-fourth executive session in May, TDB decided that, in 2002, it would conduct a mid-term review of UNCTAD's work, based on the indicators of achievement agreed to in the medium-term plan (2002-2005). In addition, it would review the functioning of the intergovernmental machinery on the basis of a March note by the UNCTAD secretariat [TD/B/EX(24)/L.1]. TDB also endorsed the revised work programme and the related agreed conclusions.

At its thirty-sixth session (11-15 September) [TD/B/47/9], the Working Party considered progress reports on the implementation of a number of technical cooperation activities (see p. 920): the Trade Point Programme strategy [TD/B/WP/128]; the UNCTAD EMPRETEC programme [TD/B/WP/129]; technical cooperation activities on competition law and policy [TD/B/WP/130]; and UNCTAD's capacity-building programmes and activities [TD/B/WP/133]. Other reports before TDB (see above) were: a review of UNCTAD's technical cooperation activities and their financing [TD/B/47/2 & Add.1,2]; a note on financing of experts from developing countries and economies in transition when participating in UNCTAD meetings [TD/B/WP/131]; and the indicative plan of UNCTAD's technical cooperation for 2001 [TD/B/47/8]. The Working Party recommended five draft decisions on technical cooperation programmes for adoption by TDB. TDB adopted those decisions in October (see above).

OIOS investigations

On 7 April, by resolution 54/257 on reports of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS), the General Assembly took note of the following OIOS reports that concerned UNCTAD: the investigation into allegations of theft of funds by an UNCTAD staff member (see p. 1318); the investigation into allegations concerning an electronic commerce project at UNCTAD [YUN 1999, p. 911]; and the review of the programme and administrative practices of the ITC secretariat [YUN 1997, p. 1400], and the comments of the Joint Inspection Unit thereon [YUN 1998, p. 1259], reaffirming that the merging of UNCTAD and ITC had not been approved by the pertinent legislative bodies.

By decision 54/462 B of 15 June, the Assembly deferred until its fifty-fifth session consideration of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the OIOS report on allegations of theft of funds by an UNCTAD staff member.

Chapter V

Regional economic and social activities

In 2000, the five regional commissions continued to provide technical cooperation, including advisory services, to their member States, promote programmes and projects, and provide training to enhance national capacity-building in various sectors. Three of them held regular sessions during the year: the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) and the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC). The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) did not meet in 2000; both were scheduled to meet in May 2001. The regional commissions organized follow-up activities to the UN conferences and summits held in the 1990s and held regional meetings in preparation for the General Assembly's special sessions on women and on social development, as well as for future international conferences.

In December, the Assembly invited the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to elaborate a programme for improving the efficiency of the transit environment of the newly independent and developing landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours. The Economic and Social Council established the Statistical Conference of the Americas of ECLAC, proclaimed the years 2000-2009 as the Decade of Greater Mekong Subregion Development Cooperation, and endorsed the Delhi Declaration on Space Technology Applications in Asia and the Pacific for Improved Quality of Life in the New Millennium and the Strategy and Action Plan on Space Technology Applications for Sustainable Development in Asia and the Pacific for the New Millennium. It also amended the terms of reference of ESCAP to include and admit Georgia as a member.

Efforts continued in 2000 to further strengthen the regional commissions to achieve greater effectiveness and efficiency.

On 4 February (decision 2000/207), the Economic and Social Council decided that the theme at its 2000 substantive session for the item on regional cooperation would be "Follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits: exchange of regional experiences".

Meetings of executive secretaries. The executive secretaries of the regional commissions met on 13 and 14 February in Bangkok, Thailand, and on 10 and 11 May, 24 July and 17 October in New York.

At their February meeting, they considered globalization, regionalism and development within the context of their participation in the tenth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) (see p. 890). They considered regionalism as a step towards preparing countries and enterprises to face the challenges and risks of globalization and as an alternative for countries that perceived unfairness and asymmetries in the globalization programme promoted by the more developed countries. They were unanimous in underlining those asymmetries and the risk that they posed for development. They also discussed the relationship between the regional commissions and the Economic and Social Council, as well as ways to strengthen their contributions to the Council's policy review. The executive secretaries welcomed new modalities linking the commissions' activities with other UN entities in line with Council resolution 1998/46 [YUN 1998, p. 1262] on the commissions' dual role, but felt that there was additional scope for substantive interaction between the regional commissions and the Council at the intergovernmental level. In that regard, they suggested that the Secretary-General's report on regional cooperation focus more on policy issues at the regional level, including intergovernmental perspectives. The report should concentrate on new developments and significant initiatives undertaken, highlighting analytically the commissions' response to global mandates and other major issues of which the United Nations was seized. It would continue to update the Council on developments in interregional and inter-agency cooperation in response to regional priorities and draw the Council's attention to any significant initiatives undertaken with regional partners.

By decision 2000/226 of 25 July, the Council endorsed those recommendations.

Review and reform of the regional commissions

Reports of Secretary-General. In a May report [E/2000/10], the Secretary-General outlined steps taken by the regional commissions to implement the guidance given in Council resolution 1998/46 with respect to their dual role as UN outposts and the regional expression of the Organization. The report also discussed regional trends and activities, interregional cooperation, further measures undertaken by the commissions to achieve greater effectiveness and efficiency and the report of the executive secretaries (see p. 923).

In an addendum to his report [E/2000/10/Add.1], the Secretary-General reviewed cooperation between the regional commissions and other regional bodies in their respective regions. A second addendum examined the work of the regional commissions in normative and operational activities [E/2000/10/Add.2]. In a third addendum [E/2000/10/Add.3], the Secretary-General submitted the resolutions and decisions adopted at recent sessions of the regional commissions calling for action by the Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 2000/222 of 16 June, the Economic and Social Council agreed to circulate as official documents the reports of the regional commissions' meetings on the theme of the Council's high-level segment—"Development and international cooperation in the twenty-first century: the role of information technology in the context of a knowledge-based global economy" (see p. 799).

By decision 2000/226 of 25 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's reports on regional cooperation (see above) and the summaries of the economic and social situation in Africa, 1999 [E/2000/12]; the economic survey of Europe, 1999 [E/2000/11]; the economic survey of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1999 [E/2000/14]; the economic and social survey of Asia and the Pacific, 2000 [E/2000/13]; and the survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region, 1999-2000 [E/2000/15].

The Council also adopted resolutions on amendment of the terms of reference of ESCAP to include Georgia in the geographical scope of the Commission and to admit it as a member (2000/4); the Decade of Greater Mekong Sub-region Development Cooperation, 2000-2009 (2000/5); regional cooperation on space applications for sustainable development in Asia and the Pacific (2000/6); the establishment of the Statistical Conference of the Americas of ECLAC (2000/7); and the place and date of ECLAC's twenty-ninth session (2000/8).

(The summaries of the surveys and the resolutions are covered in the relevant sections of this chapter.)

The General Assembly, in resolution 54/257 of 7 April, took note of the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the audits of the regional commissions [YUN 1998, p. 918].

The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) did not hold a regular session in 2000. The thirty-fourth session of the Commission/twenty-fifth meeting of the Conference of Ministers/ninth session of the Conference of African Ministers of Finance was scheduled to be held in Algiers, Algeria, from 8 to 10 May 2001.

The eighth session of the Conference of African Ministers of Finance was held in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, on 21 and 22 November 2000 to prepare African countries for the high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development (see p. 915), to be held in 2002, and the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (LDCs) (see p. 808), to be held in 2001. The Conference adopted a resolution on the New Global Compact with Africa proposed by the ECA Executive Secretary, by which donor countries would invest resources through aid, debt relief and market access, while the African countries in turn would intensify political and economic reforms. The Conference also adopted statements on the high-level event on financing for development and on the Third Conference on LDCs (see p. 926).

The Conference of African Ministers of Finance was preceded by the Regional Consultative Meeting on Financing for Development in the African Region and Preparatory Meeting for the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (Addis Ababa, 15-17 November) [A/AC.257/14].

A meeting of the Ministerial Follow-up Committee of the Conference of Ministers responsible for economic and social development and planning (Abuja, Nigeria, 4-5 May) recommended that the pledging conference for the UN Trust Fund for African Development should take place in Addis Ababa to coincide with ECA's biennial session, starting in 2001, and endorsed the ECA medium-term plan 2002-2005.

An expert group meeting on Africa's development strategies was also held (Addis Ababa, 22-24 March), which took stock of the important aspects of the region's development agenda, economic reforms and policy, inequality, poverty, human and physical capital development, governance, conflicts and institutions, as well as structural transformation and industrial policy, and resource mobilization, savings and investment [ECA/ESPD/AD-HOC/EXP/04/2000].

Communications. On 3 February [S/2000/91], Mali transmitted the text of the Bamako Declaration on the acceleration of the integration process in West Africa, adopted by the ministerial meeting of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) and the West African Economic and Monetary Union (Bamako, 28-29 January).

On 27 April [A/54/855-E/2000/44], Algeria, Egypt and Portugal transmitted to the Secretary-General the Cairo Declaration and the Cairo Plan of Action adopted by the Africa-Europe Summit (Cairo, Egypt, 3-4 April), held under the aegis of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the European Union (EU).

On 16 December [S/2000/1201], Mali transmitted the final communiqué of the twenty-fourth session of the Authority of Heads of State and Government of ECOWAS (Bamako, 15-16 December).

Economic and social trends

Economic trends

Africa's economy grew at an estimated 3.5 per cent in 2000, compared with the 1999 figure of 3.2 per cent, according to the ECA summary of the economic and social situation in Africa [E/2001/13]. In sharp contrast to the experience in recent years, only one country (Zimbabwe) posted negative growth and no economy grew at a rate less than 1 per cent. In 21 countries, the growth rates ranged between 1 and 2.9 per cent, another 15 countries managed to grow within the range of 3 to 4.9 per cent and nine countries had growth rates between 5 and 6.9 per cent. However, only two countries (Equatorial Guinea, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya), as opposed to five in 1999, grew at or higher than 7 per cent in 2000. Growth in sub-Saharan Africa was relatively modest, increasing from 3 to 3.1 per cent.

At the subregional level, growth declined in East Africa from 4.1 to 3 per cent, with Ethiopia achieving the highest growth rate, 5 per cent, while the lowest, 1 per cent, was recorded in Burundi, the Comoros and Kenya. Likewise, growth in West Africa declined from a robust 3.7 per cent in 1999 to 2.8 per cent in 2000, mainly on account of the slowdown in Ghana and the below-average performance in Côte d'Ivoire. In contrast, North Africa boosted its growth from 2.6 per cent to 4.1 per cent and Southern Africa's growth doubled to 3 per cent, mainly due to the strong resurgence of the South African economy. Economic performance also improved in Central Africa, with growth increasing from 4 per cent to 4.5 per cent. The five largest economies in Africa (Algeria, Egypt, Morocco, Nigeria, South Africa) posted a growth rate of 3.2 per cent in 2000, compared to 2.8 per cent in 1999, while the 11 oil-exporting countries managed to push their growth to 4.4 per cent from 3.8 per cent in 1999 because of higher oil revenue. The African LDCs saw their growth shrink from 4.5 per cent in 1999 to 3.5 per cent in 2000, while the 15 landlocked countries were the hardest hit, with growth declining from 4.9 to 2.9 per cent.

At the sectoral level, there was significant recovery in agriculture, which registered a 3.6 per cent growth compared to 2.1 per cent in 1999. Despite that improvement, the region remained far short of satisfying its food needs. The industrial sector also showed a positive trend, particularly in the oil-exporting and North African countries, growing by 3.4 per cent compared to 2.8 per cent in 1999. The service sector continued its buoyant growth, with a 1-percentage-point increase to reach 4 per cent. Inflation measured 11 per cent, exceeding the 1999 level by 1 percentage point. Export volume increased by 8 per cent, while import volume rose by 5 per cent. The balance of trade registered export earnings of $131 billion during the year, 30 per cent higher than 1999. The value of imports was estimated at $117 billion. The balance on current account of the non-oil-exporting countries, however, further deteriorated. The trade balance was in deficit by $23 billion and the current account by $48 billion. External resource flows rose from $22 billion in 1999 to $23 billion in 2000. Foreign direct investment (FDI) amounted to about $6 billion, while transfers reached $8 billion. The volume of debt declined to $342 billion, compared to $359 billion in 1999, while debt servicing increased from $39.4 billion in 1999 to $43.4 billion in 2000.

Social trends

According to the summary of economic and social conditions in Africa, despite the slight progress worldwide in poverty reduction, the continent had the largest share of people living on less than $1 a day. The average income of the region's poor as a whole was only 83 cents per person per day. Africa also had the worst income distribution, with a Gini coefficient (measure of income equality) of 51 per cent. The mean share of the top 20 per cent of the population was about 48 per cent, an excess of 28 points.

The health status of the continent declined, largely due to the ravages of the HIV/AIDS epidemic. Some 25 million people, including more than 1 million children, were living with the disease, and at least 5 million people were newly infected with the virus in 2000. There were indications that the epidemic had spread out of control in Africa, where over 20 countries had a prevalence rate of 7 to 10 per cent or more. It was estimated that deaths due to HIV/AIDS in Africa would soon surpass 21 million.

Africa also faced the critical challenge of reducing widespread poverty while conserving the rich biodiversity and reducing environmental degradation. The quality and capacity of the soil to support productive agriculture were critical to sustainable development. Africa, however, was the victim of both endogenous and exogenous factors of environmental degradation, and, since agriculture would continue to play a leading role in generating incomes, providing food and industrial inputs and producing the bulk of exports, any credible attempt to reduce poverty, conserve biodiversity and reduce environmental degradation needed to focus on that sector. Moreover, Africa's population growth rate of about 3 per cent per annum was greater than the increase in food production of 2.5 per cent per annum, which called for new ways of improving and sustaining food production to move in tandem with the population growth rate.

Activities in 2000

ECA's activities in 2000 were undertaken through the following subprogrammes: facilitating economic and social policy analysis; ensuring food security and sustainable development; strengthening development management; harnessing information technology for development; promoting regional cooperation and integration; promoting the advancement of women; and promoting subregional activities for development.

Development policy and regional economic cooperation

African recovery and development

In 2000, ECA continued to monitor implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 46/151 [YUN

1991, p. 402], and the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative on Africa, launched in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 832] (see pp. 874 and 877, respectively). Activities undertaken in support of the New Agenda included follow-up conferences to review progress made in poverty reduction, employment generation and achieving social sector objectives in education, health and good governance. ECA helped African countries prepare for the Assembly's special session on the World Summit for Social Development (see p. 1012). In the context of capacity-building in Africa, ECA organized a regional conference (Addis Ababa, February), which examined the causes, trends, extent and implications of the brain-drain phenomenon for Africa's development and made recommendations for reversing it. In two follow-up meetings (Geneva, June; Dakar, Senegal, October), a draft programme document was finalized on the partnership for brain-drain reversal and capacity-building in Africa. Ad hoc experts' group meetings were held to review an ECA secretariat report on HIV/AIDS and education in Eastern and Southern Africa (Entebbe, Uganda, September), and to examine major trends in public sector policy reforms, identify impediments to their effective implementation and make recommendations for further reforms (Niamey, Niger, May). Other meetings organized by the secretariat included an expert group meeting in April on the development implications of civil conflicts in Africa, and a high-level seminar in November on external trade promotion and monitoring tools in Central Africa.

Other ECA activities in support of the New Agenda focused on building capacity through technical assistance to regional economic groupings. A major effort was launched to assess the continent's integration performance and to inform policy makers of the results to help them set policy. ECA facilitated consensus-building around common African positions in global negotiations and facilitated policy consensus in such key sectors as transportation and civil aviation.

In connection with the System-wide Special Initiative, the second regional consultation of UN agencies working in Africa (Addis Ababa, 26-27 June) reviewed activities and discussed work plans in the five priority areas of the Initiative (education, health, water, governance and information technology). It agreed to convene cluster meetings in those areas to refocus objectives through the collaborative action of the UN system and to set benchmarks to assess progress.

Third UN Conference on LDCs (2001)

As part of the preparation for the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, to be held in 2001 (see p. 808), the Conference of African Ministers of Finance (see p. 924) adopted a statement on the Conference, which called for a new approach to international development cooperation in support of the development of African LDCs. It noted that with 34 of the world's 49 LDCs in Africa, urgent action was required to avoid further marginalization of those countries in a globalizing world economy. The statement called for special measures to help the African LDCs in trade, finance and development and urged Africa's development partners to increase official development assistance and FDI, and to enhance the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative to benefit all African LDCs [YUN 1997, p. 950].

ECA and UNCTAD collaborated in organizing subregional preparatory meetings for anglophone and francophone African countries (Addis Ababa, 27-29 March, and Niamey, 18-20 April, respectively), in response to General Assembly resolution 54/235 [YUN 1999, p. 770].

Information technology

ECA carried out programmes to raise awareness about the importance of the information society and on the utilization of information and communication technology (ICT) to enhance the competitiveness of African economies. Its secretariat implemented activities in statistics, ICT, geoinformation and library services.

ECA organized an ad hoc expert group meeting (Addis Ababa, 6-10 November) to review a study on geoinformation, so as to raise awareness of the importance of geographic information in socioeconomic development and identify mechanisms to facilitate spatial data collection, access and use.

The Commission provided technical support for building national capacity in ICT, including the elaboration of a medium-term programme in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, a statistical master plan in Mauritania, the design of a sectoral statistical information system in Rwanda and an integrated information system in Lesotho. ECA also helped the Port Management Association for Eastern and Southern Africa in surveying the statistical systems in ports, as well as in organizing an expert meeting on port statistics (Mombasa, Kenya, June). It assisted several countries to develop their national information and communication infrastructure policies and plans, and the Regional Centre for Mapping of Resources for Development in Nairobi, Kenya, in restructuring its programme. Among other capacity-building activities undertaken were a workshop on international, economic and social classifications (Addis Ababa, December) and training workshops for francophone African countries on the implementation of the 1993 System of National Accounts (Addis Ababa, 20-24 March) and for anglophone African countries on household sector accounts (Addis Ababa, 20-24 November). A meeting of the Task Force of the Committee on African Statistical Development with consultants on the evaluation of the Addis Ababa Plan of Action for Statistical Development in Africa in the 1990s [YUN 1991, p. 304] met in Addis Ababa (6-10 March). The tenth meeting of the Coordinating Committee on African Statistical Development was also held in Addis Ababa (30 October-3 November).

The Scan-ICT project for building support for a phased development of a comprehensive African capacity for the collection and management of key information to support the growing investment in ICTs, as well as Africa's transition to an information society, was launched. An inaugural Scan-ICT methodology and work-plan workshop was held in November in Addis Ababa and a financing agreement signed between ECA and the EU.

Transportation and communications

ECA's secretariat carried out a number of programmes to promote the development of transportation and communications, including studies on the impact of improved rural transport on women, needs assessment for the modernization of rail track rolling stocks and telecommunications and signalling equipment in West and Central Africa. Other projects included a framework report for the development and implementation of transit agreements, privatization of ports and railways in selected African countries and a study assessing progress in the implementation of the Yamoussoukro Declaration on a new air transport policy [YUN 1988, p. 273]. The first meeting of the monitoring body of that Declaration, held in November, prepared guidelines for the Declaration's implementation. Evaluation continued of progress in the implementation of the programme for the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, adopted by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1991/83 [YUN 1991, p. 301]. The ECA secretariat organized an ad hoc expert group meeting on private sector participation in infrastructure development in Africa (Lusaka, Zambia, May) and a seminar on transport facilitation for Eastern Africa (Mombasa, Kenya, November).

Europe-Africa permanent link

The ECA and ECE Executive Secretaries, in their report on a Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar [E/2001/19], submitted by the Secretary-General pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/37 [YUN 1999, p. 918], stated that the Norskald 98/99 survey had demonstrated the need for surveys involving deeper drilling. Since one of the most important elements was the technological approach to the drilling system, two approaches were proposed in that regard. It was decided to postpone continuation of the investigations until a comparative independent study of drilling techniques had determined the most suitable technique for the surveys. The study, entitled "Evaluation of technological approaches to offshore geological coring in the Strait of Gibraltar", was conducted by a maritime classification society.

Activities in 2000 included a technical workshop on deep drilling in the Strait of Gibraltar (Rabat, Morocco, 9-10 March).

Energy and natural resources

ECA carried out several activities to strengthen regional and subregional cooperation in the development of mineral and energy resources. It organized an ad hoc expert group meeting on the subject (Douala, Cameroon, December). Several studies were prepared to define the role and framework for government/private sector participation in the minerals and energy sector in Africa. A paper on mineral resources development and alleviation of poverty in Africa was also prepared for a special conference of African Ministers of Energy and Mining (Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, December).

Food security and sustainable development

ECA's work in ensuring food security and sustainable development was aimed at promoting better understanding and management of the interrelationships between food security, population and environmental sustainability. Its Food Security and Sustainable Development Division promoted environmentally sustainable development, including the development and utilization of modern science and technology for food security.

The Division, in collaboration with the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements, organized an African ministerial conference (Addis Ababa, 6-8 November) to review progress in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, adopted at the 1996 United Nations Conference on Human Settlements [YUN 1996, p. 994]. The conference adopted a regional position for the General Assembly's special session on the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda in 2001 (see p. 989). Other meetings organized during the year included the third meeting of the Advisory Board on Science and Technology (Addis Ababa, 2-4 October) and the second meeting of the Advisory Board on Population, Environment and Agriculture (Addis Ababa, 24-26 October). ECA offered policy and advisory services to member States and implemented capacity- and institution-building activities.

The African regional preparatory process for the World Summit on Sustainable Development began in January with the first high-level stakeholders meeting, jointly organized by ECA and the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) in Addis Ababa.

Development management

Activities organized in the area of development management were aimed at enhancing public sector management, private sector development and civil society participation in the governance and development process. A consultative meeting of parliamentarians and private sector officials (Addis Ababa, November) examined the concept and role of the State in the political and economic transition process in Africa, including the legislature's role in the design and implementation of policies that would promote broad-based, poverty-reducing growth and development. The meeting emphasized the need for African countries to strengthen the capacity of the State to discharge its legitimate functions.

In the area of governance, the secretariat fielded assessment missions to selected countries and was finalizing draft indicators to measure the state of governance. It also collaborated with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in organizing the fourth African Governance Forum (Kampala, Uganda, September).

ECA activities supported private sector development to enhance the competitiveness of African economies. Two studies, one on support services for improving regional and global competitiveness of small and medium-scale enterprises (SMEs) and one on a strategic framework for designing and providing those services to enhance SMEs' regional and global competitiveness, were reviewed at an ad hoc expert group meeting (Mauritius, December). The meeting made recommendations for improving the operating environment for SMEs in Africa, including the regulatory and policy environment, facilitating access to credit, improving transport and communication infrastructure and developing human resources, support services institutions, technologies, quality control and markets.

ECA worked closely with UNCTAD and the African Capital Markets Forum to address the development of capital markets. It undertook needs assessment missions to Algeria, Egypt, Kenya, Malawi, Morocco, Tunisia, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania to identify their technical assistance needs in establishing capital markets. The secretariat also organized an Asia-Africa Summit (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, November) to promote cooperation between private sector entities in Africa and Asia.

Post-conflict reconstruction and development

ECA's work in peace-building helped create stable, enabling environments for peace in the region. Together with OAU, it facilitated the launching of the Conference on Security, Development and Cooperation in Africa (Abuja, Nigeria, May), whose main objective was to articulate principles to guide African countries in security issues, stability, economic development and co-operation. ECA organized the second consultative meeting (Conakry, Guinea, 23-24 March) on its Mano River Basin Initiative to promote sub-regional reconstruction and development in Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone.

To help policy makers appreciate the economic causes and consequences of conflicts, ECA organized an ad hoc expert group meeting (Addis Ababa, 7-8 April) on the development implications of civil conflicts. ECA developed indices of good governance to be published annually as the "African Governance Report". Issues to be dealt with included representation, institutional effectiveness and economic management capacities.

Integration of women in development

ECA activities under the subprogramme on the integration of women in development were directed at building the institutional and technical capacities of its member States to design and implement gender-sensitive policies and programmes. Its African Centre for Women assisted in improving the knowledge base on African women's issues through training, research, awareness raising and policy advisory work. The Centre launched a new annual publication, African Women's Report, which monitored and assessed the status of African women in socio-economic development. It also launched the first edition of a new CD-ROM on the status of women in Africa. Capacity-building support was provided to the African delegations attending the General Assembly special session on women (see p. 1082). Several workshops were organized to increase women's awareness of international and national human rights instruments to enable them to defend their rights and sensitize policy makers on mainstreaming gender in policies and programmes. ECA, in collaboration with the African Women's Committee on Peace and Development and Femmes Solidarité Africa, organized a conference (Abuja, June) on mainstreaming a gender perspective into the peace-building process, particularly as it related to HIV/AIDS, health and education in refugee camps.

Subregional Development Centres

The five Subregional Development Centres, based in Central, East, North, Southern and West Africa, continued to enhance the Commission's outreach programmes with the various regional economic communities. The Centres promoted regional cooperation and integration by providing effective technical support and facilitated networking and information-sharing, dissemination of ECA policy recommendations and technical publications on regional cooperation and integration issues. They also engaged in advocacy and capacity-building by convening policy forums, seminars and training workshops, and providing technical advisory services.

Social development

ECA organized the second African Development Forum (Addis Ababa, 3-7 December) on the theme "AIDS: the greatest leadership challenge". The Forum highlighted the lack of political will and leadership to make HIV/AIDS a top priority on the development agenda. Participants called for comprehensive multisectoral plans to expand and deepen country-level programmes to combat the pandemic and create an enabling environment with prevention, care and mitigation programmes to protect Africa's future development prospects. The Forum adopted the Africa Consensus and Plan of Action, which called for leadership at all levels to overcome the continent-wide threat of HIV/AIDS and contained a commitment by African leaders to invest the necessary resources to fight the disease. The Forum led to the adoption of concrete actions by African Governments and their development partners to create multisectoral programmes and plans with country-level impact.

Programme, administration and organizational questions

ECA reform

As part of efforts to deepen its reform, ECA continued to implement measures to strengthen its programme delivery and management systems. During the year, it delegated authority to its Subregional Development Centres in human resources management. The Centres were empowered to handle their recruitment, placement and promotion of General Service staff members, recruitment of consultants and contractors, and processing of staff entitlements. To enhance its administrative processes further, the Commission adopted the Integrated Management Information System and installed the Very Small Aperture Terminal to improve electronic communication between ECA and its Subregional Development Centres, as well as its link with other parts of the UN system.

Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), at its fifty-sixth session (Bangkok, Thailand, 1-7 June) [E/2000/39], had as its theme "Development through globalization and partnership in the twenty-first century: an Asia-Pacific perspective for integrating developing countries and economies in transition into the international trading system on a fair and equitable basis". The Commission reviewed the implications of recent economic and social developments and emerging issues and developments at the regional level, including regional economic cooperation; environment and natural resources development; socio-economic measures to alleviate poverty in rural and urban areas; transport, communications, tourism and infrastructure development; statistics; and issues related to least developed, landlocked and island developing countries. In addition, it considered technical cooperation activities and programme and organizational questions.

The Commission decided that the theme for its 2001 session would be "Balanced development of urban and rural areas and regions within the countries of Asia and the Pacific".

Economic trends

According to the summary of the economic and social survey of Asia and the Pacific [E/2001/14], following the impressive recovery in 1999, economic performance strengthened further in 2000. The average growth rate of the developing economies of the region increased by 1 percentage point, while the developed economies improved their collective growth rate by 1.3 percentage points. As in 1999, both developing and developed economies achieved higher gross domestic product (GDP) growth in a lower inflationary environment, despite rising energy prices and weaker exchange rates in a number of countries. All the main geographical subregions contributed to the higher GDP growth and enjoyed lower inflation, with the exception of the Pacific island economies, where collective GDP growth was negative in 2000. The most impressive subregion in terms of growth performance was South-East Asia. In East and North-East Asia deflation in 1999 was followed by modest inflation in 2000.

A favourable external environment, reflected in the buoyancy of world trade, combined with domestic measures to improve and sustain the momentum of growth in the region. The strong growth of world trade embodied a robust export performance by the ESCAP region, where the dynamism of intraregional and intra-industry trade revived almost to pre-crisis levels. Several economies in the region registered export growth of 20 per cent or more in value terms. The strong export growth was led by electronics and electronic components, of which the ESCAP region was a major supplier. Foreign capital flows to the ESCAP region rose marginally, while its share of flows to the developing economies nearly doubled, from 23 per cent in 1998 to 40 per cent in 2000, which aided the process of financial and corporate sector restructuring.

On the domestic side, declining interest rates and continuing fiscal stimulus supported output growth, while exchange-rate weakness and improved capacity utilization enhanced competitiveness and stimulated export growth. Furthermore, there was evidence that private domestic demand was beginning to play a greater role in the growth process than in 1999.

Policy issues

The principal policy challenge confronting the region was maintaining the momentum of growth in 2001 and beyond in the face of potential unfavourable developments in the external environment and within a framework of macro-economic prudence.

At the national level, Governments needed to maintain a strong commitment to macro-economic balance, streamline and rationalize public spending, improve revenue collection, enhance domestic savings, deepen and widen financial markets, and help domestic businesses through improved information on alternative markets and ways to diversify.

At the subregional level, Governments should consult more frequently on a wider range of policy questions, particularly on the implementation of regional trading arrangements and the maintenance of market access. An issue of particular concern was the problem of weak stock markets in the region. A related problem was the slow progress in many countries in financial and corporate restructuring, especially the difficulty of resolving non-performing loans in the banking systems of several countries. That restructuring needed to be accelerated with time-bound targets and relevant institutions and procedures, such as debt-recovery agencies and the strengthening of bankruptcy courts.

ESCAP, at its 2000 session, considered reports on the current economic situation in the region and related policy issues [E/ESCAP/1157] and on development through globalization and partnership in the twenty-first century: an Asia-Pacific perspective for integrating developing countries and economies in transition into the international trading system on a fair and equitable basis [E/ESCAP/1158].

The Commission noted that many ESCAP countries remained highly dependent on and vulnerable to the external environment and stressed the need for strengthening the preventive approach. It emphasized the urgency of integrating the developing countries at the regional and global levels through improvements in their technological levels, and for LDCs to move effectively in that direction. The Commission urged ESCAP to continue its technical assistance in private sector development and to promote foreign direct investment in disadvantaged economies in the region, paying particular attention to strengthening the legal and institutional framework of those economies. It also urged the secretariat to continue to act as the regional centre for the promotion of poverty eradication and to assist developing countries in integrating more effectively into the multilateral trading system, especially those seeking World Trade Organization (WTO) membership.

As requested in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 925], the secretariat undertook research on economic and financial monitoring and surveillance in the ESCAP region, including a review of existing monitoring and early warning systems within different international bodies.

The Commission noted that there were several ongoing monitoring and surveillance initiatives in the region and that it was necessary to build on them, to identify the most appropriate mechanism applicable and to widen that coverage.

Activities in 2000

ESCAP activities in 2000 were carried out under six thematic subprogrammes: regional economic cooperation; environment and sustainable development; poverty alleviation through economic and social development; transport and communications; statistics; and least developed, landlocked and island developing countries.

Development policy and regional economic cooperation

ESCAP in 2000 had before it a report on the implementation of its 1999 resolution on economic and financial monitoring and surveillance [YUN 1999, p. 925], which contained the study on that subject [E/ESCAP/1162]; a note on emerging issues relevant to the subprogramme on regional economic cooperation [E/ESCAP/1161]; and the report of the eleventh meeting of the Steering Group of the Committee on Regional Economic Cooperation [YUN 1999, p. 926].

The study revealed significant scope for regional cooperation in the area. Recommendations for future action ranged from informal exchanges of experience within the region to the establishment of formal surveillance systems at the subregional level. The Commission took note of the study and endorsed the recommendations for action by ESCAP.

The Commission also endorsed the major recommendations, conclusions and decisions of the Steering Group. It noted that the 1997 economic crisis underscored the need to reform the international financial architecture and agreed that regional cooperation needed to be strengthened to avoid or minimize any future financial crisis. It requested the secretariat to study the development impact of regional trading arrangements on their members, the harmonization of standards and the role of developing countries in international standard-setting bodies, including a comparative analysis of rules of origin under various regional trading arrangements. The twelfth meeting of the Steering Group was held in Incheon City, Republic of Korea, from 25 to 27 October.

The Commission requested that the secretariat continue to accord high priority to its technical assistance activities in policy analysis related to regional and multilateral liberalization, WTO accession, and training on the implementation of WTO agreements. It reiterated the importance of trade facilitation and stressed the need for capacity-building in that area. The Commission noted the importance of information technology and electronic commerce as catalysts for the integration of developing countries, in particular Pacific island countries and landlocked countries, into the international trading system. In that regard, the Commission adopted a resolution on the Decade of Greater Mekong Subregion Development Cooperation, 2000-2009 [E/2000/39 (res. 56/1)].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July [meeting 39], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ESCAP [E/2000/10/Add.3], adopted resolution 2000/5 without vote [agenda item 10].

Decade of Greater Mekong Subregion Development Cooperation, 2000-2009

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the responsibility of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific for initiating and participating in measures for facilitating concerted action for the economic reconstruction and development of Asia and the Pacific, and for raising the level of economic activity in Asia and the Pacific,

Noting the large membership and diverse needs of the region, and considering it essential for the secretariat of the Commission to sharpen the focus of its programme of work so as to support subregional initiatives and enhance the effectiveness and efficiency of programmes established at the subregional level,

Acknowledging the importance of having a concerted strategy and close coordination among member countries of the Commission region and the relevant development agencies, as well as the development frameworks concerned, to promote cooperation among the countries of the Greater Mekong subregion in enhancing economic and social development and poverty alleviation in the area,

Recognizing the need to strengthen the capacity of the countries in the Greater Mekong subregion as a means of helping to narrow the large development gap between countries in the region,

Noting with appreciation the contribution made by the secretariat to various development programmes in the Commission region, including the Greater Mekong subregion, and the high level of support extended to the secretariat in that endeavour by other concerned United Nations bodies and the specialized agencies,

Welcoming the statement of the Ninth Conference on the Programme of Economic Cooperation in the Greater Mekong Subregion, held in Manila on 13 January 2000, and in particular the determination expressed by the ministers to redouble their initiatives to accelerate, strengthen and extend regional co-operation within the subregion,

Noting with appreciation the continued financial support given by United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and the Asian Development Bank to a number of development programmes for countries in the subregion under the Greater Mekong subregion framework, some of which have been undertaken in collaboration with the secretariat,

Recognizing the important role played by the Mekong River Commission, which is now implementing, through its secretariat, the Agreement on the Co-operation for the Sustainable Development of the Mekong River Basin of 5 April 1995, in pursuance of an economically and socially just and environmentally sound Mekong River basin,

1. Calls upon the concerned regional members and associate members:

(a) To reaffirm their commitment to the development programmes in the Greater Mekong subregion through existing bodies, including the Mekong River Commission;

(b) To review jointly the existing development strategies with a view to developing a more concerted and rational approach that could respond effectively to the challenges of globalization while avoiding duplication of efforts in the development of the Greater Mekong subregion;

(c) To continue to work closely together to ensure that development cooperation in the Greater Mekong subregion is being pursued in a complementary manner;

(d) To formulate the development programmes in such a way that the private sector is encouraged to support them;

2. Proclaims the Decade of Greater Mekong Subregion Development Cooperation, 2000-2009, in order to draw the attention of the international community to the intensification of economic and social development in the subregion and to encourage its support thereof;

3. Requests the General Assembly to endorse the present resolution and to encourage, at the global level, support for its implementation;

4. Urges member countries, and international and intergovernmental organizations and institutions, to strengthen cooperation with and assistance to Greater Mekong subregion development programmes;

5. Encourages donor Governments and agencies, regional and international financial institutions, United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, non-governmental organizations and the private sector to assist countries in the Greater Mekong subregion in their capacity-building to enable them to integrate effectively into the regional and global economy;

6. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific:

(a) To help to mobilize the necessary resources to provide technical assistance and assistance in other areas that may be deemed necessary, upon the request of various Greater Mekong subregion development frameworks, in particular in such key sectors as human resources development, trade and investment, transportation and communications, poverty alleviation and social development;

(b) To call necessary meetings among the parties concerned to design a work programme for the development of the Greater Mekong subregion with the aim of achieving a tangible result in the given period;

7. Also requests the Executive Secretary to monitor the overall programmes of various framework activities in order to report to the Commission at its annual sessions and to all concerned member countries, and to evaluate the implementation of the programmes every three years until the end of the Decade.

On 20 December, the General Assembly endorsed Council resolution 2000/5 (decision 55/447).

Least developed, landlocked and island developing countries

Special Body on Pacific Island Developing Countries

The Commission endorsed the recommendations in the report of the Special Body on Pacific Island Developing Countries on its sixth session (Bangkok, 30-31 May) [E/ESCAP/ 1184] on transport and tourism issues and on children's welfare issues in Pacific island countries, and recommended that ESCAP activities in those areas be extended to least developed and landlocked countries.

It urged the secretariat to strengthen the ESCAP Pacific Operations Centre, especially in development planning, economic policy, social development, transport, physical planning and water supply, small business development, trade policy and environmental and sustainable development. It suggested that ecotourism issues be included in the agenda of the seventh session of the Special Body.

In addition, the Commission, in a resolution on the promotion of a sustainable energy future for small island States [E/2000/39 (res. 56/4)], requested the ESCAP Executive Secretary to facilitate the exchange of experiences and information on the efficient use of energy and the enhanced application of renewable energy technologies for small island States; to convene an expert meeting to develop pilot and demonstration projects in small island States; to assist in securing the resources for the programme's implementation; to support national and subregional training and capacity-building initiatives for the promotion of renewable energy and its efficient use; and to report to the Special Body and the Commission in 2002.

Landlocked States in Central Asia

In August [A/55/320], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the UNCTAD Secretary-General on the transit environment in the landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours, in response to Assembly resolution 53/171 [YUN 1998, p. 932]. The report discussed the economic recovery and the emerging trade and transit patterns of Central Asia, including alternative transit transport corridors; physical infrastructure bottlenecks and developments to improve physical infrastructure; measures to overcome non-physical barriers to the available transit transport corridors; and a framework for better coordination and cooperation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/55/579/Add.1], adopted resolution 55/181 without vote [agenda item 92 (a)].

Transit environment in the landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/169 and 48/170 of 21 December 1993, 49/102 of 19 December 1994, 51/168 of 16 December 1996, 53/171 of 15 December 1998 and 55/2 of 8 September 2000,

Recalling also the Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation between Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and the Donor Community and other relevant international legal instruments,

Recognizing that the overall socio-economic development efforts of the landlocked States in Central Asia, seeking to enter world markets through the establishment of a multicountry transit system, are impeded by a lack of territorial access to the sea and by remoteness and isolation from world markets as well as by a lack of adequate infrastructure in the transport sector in their transit developing neighbours owing to their economic problems,

Reaffirming that transit States, in the exercise of full sovereignty over their territory, have the right to take all measures necessary to ensure that the rights and facilities provided for landlocked States in no way infringe upon their legitimate interests,

Expressing its support for the current efforts being undertaken by the newly independent and developing landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours, through relevant multilateral, bilateral and regional arrangements, to address issues regarding the development of a viable transit infrastructure in the region,

Taking note of the report prepared by the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the transit environment in the landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours, and considering that the problems of transit transport facing the Central Asian region need to be seen against the backdrop of increased trade and capital flows and advancement in technology in the region,

Recognizing that, to be effective, a transit transport strategy for the newly independent and developing landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours should incorporate actions that address both the problems inherent in the use of existing transit routes and those associated with the early development and smooth functioning of new alternative routes, and welcoming in this context the further cooperation of landlocked States with all interested countries,

Noting that there have been a number of important developments at the subregional and regional levels, including the signing at Almaty, Kazakhstan, on 9 May 1998, of a transit transport framework agreement among States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization, the signing on 26 March 1998 by the heads of State of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan, the Economic Commission for Europe and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific of the Tashkent Declaration on the United Nations Special Programme for the Economies of Central Asia, the implementation of the expanded Transport Corridor-Europe-Caucasus-Asia programme and the signing on 8 September 1998 of the Baku Declaration,

Welcoming the presentation of the United Nations Special Programme for the Economies of Central Asia, held at Almaty, Kazakhstan, on 27 April 2000, the adoption of the concept of the Special Programme and the joint statement by the Governments of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan and Tajikistan, the Economic Commission for Europe and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific,

Emphasizing once again the importance of strengthening international support measures to address further the problems of the newly independent and developing landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours,

1. Notes with appreciation the contribution of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to improving the efficiency of the transit transport system in the landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours;

2. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Governments concerned, in cooperation with the United Nations Development Programme, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the Economic Commission for Europe and relevant regional and international organizations and in accordance with approved programme priorities and within existing financial resources, to continue to elaborate a programme for improving the efficiency of the current transit environment in the newly independent and developing landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours;

3. Invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in close cooperation with the regional commissions within their respective mandates and current resources, as well as with other relevant international organizations, to provide technical assistance and advisory services to the newly independent landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours, taking into account the relevant transit transport agreements;

4. Invites donor countries and multilateral financial and development institutions, within their mandates, to continue to provide the newly independent and developing landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours with appropriate financial and technical assistance for the improvement of the transit environment, including construction, maintenance and improvement of their transport, storage and other transit-related facilities and improved communications;

5. Calls upon the United Nations system to continue to study, within the scope of the implementation of the present resolution, possible ways of promoting more cooperative arrangements between the landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours, and to encourage a more active supportive role on the part of the donor community;

6. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in close cooperation with the regional commissions, to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session.

Economic and technical cooperation

In 2000, ESCAP received $14.8 million for technical cooperation activities, of which $4.2 million came from within the UN system and $10.6 million came from donor and participating developing countries and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations [E/2001/39].

Bilateral donors and participating developing countries had contributed a total of $9.6 million for the ESCAP technical cooperation programme and the regional institutions. Japan remained the largest bilateral donor, followed by Germany, the Netherlands and the Republic of Korea. Twenty developing countries and associated members also contributed to the ESCAP technical cooperation programme, the largest donor being China, followed by India. In addition to cash contributions, donors and developing members provided about 305 work-months of the services of experts on non-reimbursable loan, which had enhanced the implementation capacity of the secretariat's technical cooperation programme. The secretariat initiated the implementation of 69 technical assistance projects with a financial outlay of $6.5 million.

Technical cooperation among developing countries

In 2000 [E/ESCAP/1221], the secretariat implemented about 100 promotional activities related to technical cooperation among developing countries and economic cooperation among developing countries (TCDC/ECDC). It also promoted and facilitated the participation of approximately 82 officials in 43 operational TCDC activities, including training, seminars, study visits and workshops. During the year, the secretariat continued to sensitize TCDC focal points of selected least developed, landlocked and island developing countries, as well as economies in transition. It conducted a workshop on TCDC national focal points for selected LDCs and disadvantaged economies in transition (Hangzhou, China, 13-17 November), in cooperation with China's Ministry of Foreign Trade and Economic Cooperation. In that regard, the Commission stated that countries should be assisted in building up the capacities and capabilities of TCDC national focal points and urged ESCAP to mobilize resources for that purpose.

Transport, communications, tourism and infrastructure development

The Commission had before it the report of the Committee on Transport, Communications, Tourism and Infrastructure Development on its second session [YUN 1999, p. 928] and endorsed the recommendations contained therein.

The third session of the Committee (Bangkok, 15-17 November) [E/ESCAP/1212] reaffirmed its commitment to the New Delhi Action Plan on Infrastructure Development in Asia and the Pacific (1997-2006) [YUN 1995, p. 1012] and identified priority areas for integration into the Plan's next phase. It adopted recommendations for action in the water transport sector, including the review of national positions on the new round of General Agreement on Trade in Services negotiations on maritime transport services, and of the viability and business plans of the national flag fleet, the promotion of sharing experience in private sector participation in ports, and the identification of approaches to attract both domestic and foreign tonnage to register under the national flag. The Committee reiterated that priority should be given to multimodal transport and tourism in the ESCAP programme. It recommended that the secretariat support national efforts to implement the Plan of Action for Sustainable Tourism Development in the Asian and Pacific Region [YUN 1999, p. 929].

Infrastructure development

The Commission reiterated its support for the priority status of the Asian land transport infrastructure development (ALTID) project. It endorsed the main thrust areas in the implementation of the project as reflected in the report on the implementation of its 1996 resolution [YUN 1996, p. 898] on intra-Asia and Asia-Europe land bridges [E/ESCAP/1179], the completion of the formulation of the Asian Highway and Trans-Asian Railway networks covering the whole of Asia, and the operationalization and improvement of the efficiency of international land transport corridors. The Commission stressed the importance of early completion of the study on the Trans-Asian Railway in the Northern Europe/Russian Federation/Persian Gulf corridor and the second ALTID project assessment to be carried out in 2001.

The Commission had before it a report on the implementation of the New Delhi Action Plan on Infrastructure Development [E/ESCAP/1180]. It endorsed the recommendation of the Committee on Transport, Communications, Tourism and Infrastructure Development that progress on all 64 projects within phase I of the Action Plan's programme be evaluated to provide a basis for the formulation and prioritization of phase II activities. The Commission emphasized the need to incorporate demand-driven, results-oriented and cost-effective activities in phase II and reaffirmed that high priority should be given to inland water transport. It stressed the importance of involving all the concerned agencies in the formulation of phase II.

The Commission endorsed themes for a ministerial conference on infrastructure to be held in 2001: transport infrastructure and logistics; administration, restructuring and private sector participation in the transport sector; sustainable transport development; social issues in transport development; and regional and subregional cooperation in sustainable energy development. The Commission requested that the impact of the rapidly changing maritime environment and the importance of multimodal transport and logistics in globalization should be given priority in the work programme. It also requested that issues related to HIV/AIDS in the transport sector be dealt with by the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS and the World Health Organization, with the support of ESCAP's Transport, Communications, Tourism and Infrastructure Development Division.

Tourism

The Commission reaffirmed that tourism should continue to be accorded high priority in the secretariat's programme of work. It requested the secretariat to intensify activities to promote cooperation in tourism education and to strengthen activities in ecotourism. The secretariat should organize a seminar on the development of Buddhist tourism circuits, promote beach tourism and strengthen activities to promote tourism development in the Greater Mekong subregion.

The Commission asked the secretariat to support activities related to universal access to transport and tourism facilities for people with disabilities and the elderly. In that respect, it took note of Indonesia's organization, in cooperation with ESCAP, of the Asia-Pacific Conference on Tourism for People with Disability (Bali, Indonesia, September).

Science and technology

The Governing Board of the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology (APCTT) held its fifteenth session in Bali on 29 and 30 November [E/ESCAP/1203].

In 2000, APCTT organized 46 technology transfer-related events, including training programmes, regional workshops, exhibitions, seminars and expert group meetings. It arranged 800 business meetings between prospective technology suppliers and technology seekers, and facilitated 270 technology transfer negotiations per month.

The Commission endorsed the report on the Governing Board's fourteenth session [YUN 1999, p. 929] and requested APCTT to assist developing countries through technology transfer mechanisms as well as human resources development and training programmes so that the requisite capacities could be created for the transfer and adoption of new and modern technologies, including managerial and technical expertise. It urged the Centre to enhance its activities to assist small and medium-sized enterprises of developing member States in utilizing information and communication technology as a strategic tool to improve the competitiveness and profitability of those enterprises. In addition, member countries were urged to provide institutional support for APCTT and to adhere to the formula for establishing an endowment fund.

Environment and sustainable development

The Commission endorsed the recommendations of the Committee on Environment and Natural Resources Development at its second session [YUN 1999, p. 930], especially the recommendation that the secretariat continue the integration of environmental considerations into economic policy-making processes and its work on the strategic environmental initiative. The secretariat was requested to facilitate greater capacity-building in that regard, to continue to implement, at the regional level, Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) [YUN 1992, p. 672], and to strengthen the integration of environmental considerations into its overall programme of work.

The Fourth Ministerial Conference on Environment and Development in Asia and the Pacific (Kitakyushu, Japan, 31 August–5 September) [E/ESCAP/1205] adopted the Regional Action Programme for Environmentally Sound and Sustainable Development, 2001–2005, the Ministerial Declaration on Environment and Development, the Regional Message for the 10-year Review of the Implementation of the Outcome of UNCED and the Kitakyushu Initiative for a Clean Environment. They were to guide the ESCAP programme on environment and natural resources development, in particular the development of a Kitakyushu Initiative Network for a Clean Environment and the regional preparations for the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development (see p. 792).

The Commission endorsed the report of the Second Ministerial Conference on Space Applications for Sustainable Development in Asia and the Pacific [YUN 1999, p. 930] and the launching of the second phase of the Regional Space Applications Programme for Sustainable Development. The Commission adopted a resolution on regional cooperation on space applications for sustainable development in Asia and the Pacific [E/2000/39 (res. 56/3)].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July [meeting 39], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ESCAP [E/2000/10/Add.3], adopted resolution 2000/6 without vote [agenda item 10].

Regional cooperation on space applications for sustainable development in Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific resolution 51/11 of 1 May 1995 on regional cooperation on space applications for environment and sustainable development in Asia and the Pacific, in which the Commission endorsed the recommendations of the First Ministerial Conference on Space Applications for Development in Asia and the Pacific, held in Beijing on 23 and 24 September 1994, and the Beijing Declaration on Space Technology Applications for Environmentally Sound and Sustainable Development in Asia and the Pacific,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 51/123 of 13 December 1996 on international cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space, in which the Assembly, inter alia, emphasized the need to increase the benefits of space technology and its applications and to contribute to an orderly growth of space activities favourable to sustainable development,

Recalling further the recommendations of the Third United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE III),

Recalling the decision of the Commission at its fifty-fifth session in April 1999 to hold the Second Ministerial Conference on Space Applications for Sustainable Development in Asia and the Pacific in New Delhi from 15 to 20 November 1999,

Noting with satisfaction the success of the Second Ministerial Conference, which adopted the Delhi Declaration on Space Technology Applications in Asia and the Pacific for Improved Quality of Life in the New Millennium and the Strategy and Action Plan on Space Technology Applications for Sustainable Development in Asia and the Pacific for the New Millennium and launched the second phase of the Regional Space Applications Programme for Sustainable Development,

Reiterating the strong interest of members and associate members of the Commission in participating in the cooperative activities that will emerge from the second phase of the Programme and their commitment to contributing to those activities,

Recognizing the essential role of space technologies and their applications in environment and natural resources management, food security and agricultural systems, capacity-building, human resources development and education, poverty alleviation, natural disaster reduction, health care and hygiene, and sustainable development planning towards improving the quality of life,

Recalling the efforts of the Commission in promoting space applications for sustainable development in the region and its commitment to continuing to play a pivotal and catalytic role in that regard,

1. Endorses the recommendations of the Second Ministerial Conference on Space Applications for Sustainable Development in Asia and the Pacific, held in New Delhi from 15 to 20 November 1999;

2. Also endorses the Delhi Declaration on Space Technology Applications in Asia and the Pacific for Improved Quality of Life in the New Millennium and the Strategy and Action Plan on Space Technology Applications for Sustainable Development in Asia and the Pacific for the New Millennium;

3. Calls for the early implementation of the Delhi Declaration, the Strategy and Action Plan, and other recommendations of the Second Ministerial Conference;

4. Encourages all members and associate members of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific to participate actively in the second phase of the Regional Space Applications Programme for Sustainable Development and to initiate effective national implementation of the Strategy and Action Plan;

5. Recommends that the Intergovernmental Consultative Committee on the Regional Space Applications Programme for Sustainable Development, under the purview of the Committee on Environment and Natural Resources Development of the Commission, advise as appropriate on the implementation of the Programme, and invites members and associate members to enhance their representation on the Consultative Committee;

6. Invites all United Nations bodies and agencies concerned, and multilateral donors and international agencies, to provide technical and financial support for the implementation of the recommendations of the Second Ministerial Conference, the Delhi Declaration and the Strategy and Action Plan envisaged for the second phase of the Programme;

7. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific:

(a) To accord due priority to the activities proposed in the Strategy and Action Plan and to incorporate the Programme in the biennial programmes of work;

(b) To strengthen the capability of the secretariat of the Commission, subject to the availability of resources, to support the regional cooperative network towards successful implementation of the Strategy and Action Plan;

(c) To mobilize resources for technical cooperation activities in line with the recommendations of the Second Ministerial Conference, the Delhi Declaration and the Strategy and Action Plan;

(d) To report to the Commission at its fifty-ninth session on the implementation of these recommendations.

Natural resources development

Energy and mineral resources

Having considered a secretariat note on emerging issues and developments related to mineral supply and land-use planning for sustainable development [E/ESCAP/1168 & Corr.1], the Commission endorsed the general statements and conclusions regarding those issues and invited further secretariat initiatives, such as seminars, workshops and individual and group training courses focusing on specific themes, skills development and institution-building. The secretariat was to convene a meeting of heads of National Geological Surveys in the region to formulate a strategy for mutual cooperation in sustainable mineral supply and land-use planning. It was also to promote the use of geoscientific information in land-use and urban planning and to continue training activities to improve the presentation skills of National Geological Survey departments, such as the preparation of user-friendly thematic maps.

In the area of energy resources, the Commission convened a High-level Regional Meeting on Energy for Sustainable Development (Bali, 21-24 November) [E/ESCAP/1206], which adopted the Sustainable Energy Development Action Programme, Strategies and Implementation Modalities for the Asian and Pacific Region, 2001-2005, and the Bali Declaration on Asia-Pacific Perspectives on Energy and Sustainable Development, for submission to the Commission on Sustainable Development in 2001.

Water resources

In 2000, important achievements and progress were made by the Mekong River Commission (MRC), established in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1017]. Financial resources were successfully mobilized for the three MRC core programmes, on water utilization, the environment and basin development. Ten studies were completed in 2000 and MRC continued implementation of other projects and activities under its work programme, which had recently been reorganized to comprise three categories of activities: a core programme, a support programme and a sector programme.

The Commission considered the MRC report on its 1999 activities [E/ESCAP/1192].

Agriculture and development

The Commission had before it the report on the Regional Coordination Centre for Research and Development of Coarse Grains, Pulses, Roots and Tuber Crops in the Humid Tropics of Asia and the Pacific [E/ESCAP/1171], which summarized major developments in 1999 and presented activities planned for 2000 and beyond, as endorsed by its Governing Board. It also contained a review of the financial status of the Centre.

The Commission recommended that the Centre strengthen collaborative programmes for research and development, as well as human resources development and information services. It expressed concern over the continuing unstable condition of the Centre's institutional and programme support resources and urged a substantial increase in funding and early and timely allocation of funds, as well as the provision of the services of experts to ensure the effective implementation of programme activities. The ESCAP secretariat was asked to explore more funding sources to stabilize the Centre's financial situation.

The Commission noted the deliberations and recommendations of the nineteenth session of the Governing Body of the Regional Network for Agricultural Machinery (RNAM) [YUN 1999, p. 931]. It directed the secretariat to continue seeking extrabudgetary contributions for the programmes for 2000-2001 and approved the expansion of RNAM activities in post-harvest technologies and those designed to take advantage of leading-edge technologies. The Commission approved the Governing Body's recommendation that the new name for RNAM should be the Regional Network for Agricultural Engineering and Machinery (RNAEM).

The Governing Body of RNAEM, at its twentieth session [E/ESCAP/1204] (Rongcheng, China, 19-21 October), approved the extension of the project into its seventh phase, for the period 1999-2001.

Social development

The Commission considered the report of the Committee on Socio-economic Measures to Alleviate Poverty in Rural and Urban Areas on its second session [YUN 1999, p. 932], as well as a secretariat note on progress in implementing resolutions and decisions on the topic [E/ESCAP/1170].

The Commission noted that unemployment rates and the incidence of poverty remained relatively high in those countries adversely affected by the recent economic crisis. It said various targeted programmes by Governments and community-based organizations should be continued and strengthened, while more broad-based growth policies should be pursued for lower-income groups. The Commission stressed ways in which the secretariat could assist Governments to alleviate poverty, including monitoring socio-economic trends, conducting a regional study on national poverty alleviation programmes to document successful approaches, and bringing information on best practices and successful approaches to the attention of Governments. The secretariat was to carry out a regional assessment of social safety-net programmes and set priorities in its programme of work on poverty alleviation to enhance the impact of its activities.

Also before the Commission was a secretariat note on the empowerment of the rural poor through decentralization in poverty alleviation actions [E/ESCAP/1172]. The Commission noted reforms in a number of countries to alleviate rural poverty by improving governance through the devolution of authority and responsibility, but there had been no systematic documentation of lessons learned. It urged that the secretariat do more to learn from success cases and best practices and disseminate them more widely. It also urged the secretariat to undertake follow-up activities on interrelationships among governance, decentralization and rural poverty alleviation and the empowerment of the rural poor through decentralization, to assign priorities to its activities and to focus on population trends, rural development and the alleviation of poverty.

The Commission endorsed the report of the Senior Officials' Meeting on the Agenda for Action on Social Development in the ESCAP Region [YUN 1999, p. 931]. It expressed concern over the negative effects in many ESCAP countries of globalization and structural adjustment programmes that neglected to integrate social dimensions, and highlighted the need for a framework of principles and examples of good practice concerning social policy and social development that would promote a more humane and equitable development path that was more resilient to external shock. The Commission emphasized the need for targeted social protection and social justice measures for vulnerable groups, and the need for the effectiveness of social safety-net programmes as a poverty alleviation measure to be reviewed and strengthened.

At its third session (Bangkok, 6-8 December) [E/ESCAP/1208], the Committee on Socio-economic Measures to Alleviate Poverty in Rural and Urban Areas recommended that countries suffering from population pressure and high population growth should accelerate efforts to stabilize their populations using a holistic approach. Also, a High-level Regional Meeting for Asia and the Pacific in Preparation for Istanbul+5, which was to review and appraise the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) [YUN 1996, p. 992], was held in Hangzhou, China, from 19 to 23 October [E/ESCAP/1209].

Disabled persons

The Commission considered a secretariat note on equalization of opportunities and the inclusion of disabled persons in the development process [E/ESCAP/1176]. It endorsed the 107 strengthened targets for action on the implementation of the Agenda for Action for the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons, 1993-2002 [YUN 1993, p. 621], as revised by the ESCAP forum on the subject [YUN 1999, p. 932]. It noted that those targets had been adopted by regional meetings on the education of disabled children and youth and equalization of opportunities for disabled persons. The Commission requested the secretariat to strengthen its assistance to ESCAP members in support of the targets.

International Year of Older Persons (1999)

The Commission endorsed the guidelines on the implementation of the Macao Plan of Action on Ageing for Asia and the Pacific [YUN 1998, p. 942], as contained in a secretariat note [E/ESCAP/1174], and emphasized the need to implement the Plan of Action in consonance with the guidelines. It asked the secretariat to continue providing technical assistance and support to implement the Plan at the national and regional levels and to organize more training activities and information exchange forums on issues relating to ageing.

The Commission noted the successful observance in the ESCAP region in 1999 of the International Year of Older Persons, proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 47/5 [YUN 1992, p. 889]. In a report on the observance of the Year and on progress in the implementation of the Macao Plan of Action [E/ESCAP/1175], it was indicated that national agencies and mechanisms on ageing, as well as national focal points, had been established in many countries of the region. The Commission asked the secretariat to play an active part in regional preparation for the Second World Assembly on Ageing in 2002 (see p. 1140).

Women in development

The Commission endorsed the report of the High-level Intergovernmental Meeting to Review Regional Implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1999, p. 933]. It urged the secretariat to strengthen activities in advancing the status of women. It noted the initiatives taken to promote the economic situation of women and recommended that target-oriented self-employment and income-generating projects should continue to be implemented for women in poverty, particularly displaced women, widows and female heads of household. The Commission noted that protection and respect of women's human rights were a concern in the region and that countries had adopted awareness-raising measures, provided greater legal protection for women against violence, and promoted their increased participation in the decision-making process. The Commission recommended that special attention be paid to the girl child and women in difficult circumstances and emphasized the need for cooperation and coordination in dealing with trafficking in women and children.

Human resources development

On 7 June [E/2000/39 (res. 56/2)], the Commission acknowledged the successful implementation of phases I, II and III of the Jakarta Plan of Action on Human Resources Development in the ESCAP Region, adopted by the Commission in 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 282] and revised in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 715]. It called on ESCAP members and associate members to strengthen national policies to advance human resources development and to review human resources strategies with a view to developing new approaches to respond more effectively to the challenges and opportunities of globalization and a knowledge-based and information-based society. The Commission encouraged donors, regional and international financial institutions, UN bodies and specialized agencies, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and the private sector to assist developing countries to develop their human resources and to build and strengthen national capacity. In its recommendations to the Executive Secretary, the Commission asked that priority be accorded to the implementation of phase IV (2001-2005) of the Jakarta Plan of Action, the focus of which should be on building a stronger foundation in the region in education, health and sustainable livelihoods.

Natural disasters

The Commission, having considered the report of the Typhoon Committee [E/ESCAP/1193], noted the important progress and achievements made in 1999 on meteorological observations, forecasts and warnings; hydrological components, including improvements in flood forecasts and warning, as well as storm surge forecasts; and natural disaster reduction. It took particular note of the increased importance attached by the Committee to addressing the impacts of water-related disasters, including an increase in research on and the improvement of forecasts.

The Commission also considered the report of the Panel on Tropical Cyclones [E/ESCAP/1194], including the recommendations adopted at its twenty-seventh session (Muscat, Oman, 29 February-6 March). The Commission urged donor countries and institutions, as well as the ESCAP secretariat, to support the work of the Panel. It noted that a trust fund had been established with the World Meteorological Organization for the activities of the Panel and encouraged Panel members and other ESCAP members to contribute to the fund.

Statistics

The Commission examined a secretariat note on emerging issues and developments in statistics [E/ESCAP/1181]. Recognizing that the secretariat's statistical activities had assisted in strengthening the statistical capabilities of the countries in the region, it suggested that advisory services and co-operation should be strengthened in areas identified by the Bureau of the Committee on Statistics. The Commission also recognized the urgent need to develop a sound conceptual and methodological framework for the measurement of electronic commerce and endorsed the suggestion of the Working Group of Statistical Experts that a discussion group on the subject should be formed to facilitate the sharing of experience and the establishment of uniform measurement tools. It suggested that ESCAP should continue to play a coordinating role in gender statistics in the region and to promote the exchange of experience among member countries. It also suggested that its Committee on Statistics contribute to the establishment of standards on urban and rural poverty measures and that ESCAP should play a coordinating role in improving environment statistics in the region.

The Commission had before it the report of the fifth session of the Governing Board of the Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific (SIAP) (Tokyo, 6-8 October 1999) [E/ESCAP/1182]. The Commission supported the Institute's 2000-2001 work programme, as well as the long-term (2000-2005) programme, and urged ESCAP members and associate members to support the further implementation of the programme. It requested SIAP to expand its training programme and strengthen training in information technology. The Commission noted that the overall cash contribution to SIAP had declined in the past two years.

The Commission considered a secretariat note on the year 2000 computer problem [E/ESCAP/1183] and decided that since the transition had been smoother than expected and interest in the problem had reduced, the second follow-up report requested for 2001 had become unnecessary.

The ESCAP Committee on Statistics held its twelfth session in Bangkok (29 November-1 December) [E/ESCAP/1214].

Programme and organizational questions

The Commission endorsed the ESCAP draft medium-term plan for 2002-2005 [E/ESCAP/1185/Rev.1] with some amendments. It recommended that ESCAP make continuous efforts towards capacity-building in the region and be more responsive to the challenges and opportunities presented by globalization and the knowledge-based economy. It directed the secretariat to define more clearly expected accomplishments and programme indicators when formulating the 2002-2005 programme budgets.

The Commission considered a secretariat note on the implementation of the programme of work for the 1998-1999 biennium [E/ESCAP/1186 & Corr.1]. It noted that outputs and the level of programme implementation were satisfactory despite the reduced level of resources and the 15 per cent average vacancy rate in the Professional and higher categories. The Commission endorsed the programme of work for 2000-2001 and the proposed changes to that programme [E/ESCAP/1187]. It approved the tentative calendar of meetings and training programmes for the period April 2000 to March 2001 [E/ESCAP/1188] and adopted a resolution on the impending retirement of Adrianus Mooy, Executive Secretary of ESCAP [E/2000/39 (res. 56/5)].

ESCAP reform

The Commission had before it the Executive Secretary's report [E/ESCAP/1159] on the implementation of a 1997 Commission resolution on ESCAP reform [YUN 1997, p. 993]. The Commission noted the various constraints on the effective performance of its subsidiary structure, including the broad coverage of certain legislative committees which had led to less focused discussions. It recommended that deliberations focus more on the needs of member countries, and that coordination and synergy within the secretariat be improved.

Also before the Commission was the report of the Advisory Committee of Permanent Representatives and Other Representatives Designated by Members of the Commission (ACPR) and its Open-ended Informal Working Group [E/ESCAP/1195 & Add.1,2]; the latter had reconvened to assist ACPR in its work on ESCAP reform. The Commission endorsed the Working Group's proposals and urged that they be implemented as part of the reform process to strengthen ESCAP's core competence and its role in the region.

Admission of Georgia

The Commission endorsed the application of Georgia to become a member of ESCAP [E/ESCAP/1156] and approved a draft resolution for submission to the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July [meeting 39], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ESCAP [E/2000/

10/Add.3], adopted resolution 2000/4 without vote [agenda item 10].

Amendment of the terms of reference of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific: inclusion of Georgia in the geographical scope of the Commission and its admission as a member of the Commission

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting the recommendation of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific that Georgia be included in the geographical scope of the Commission and be admitted as a member of the Commission,

1. Approves the recommendation of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific that Georgia be included in the geographical scope of the Commission and admitted as a member of the Commission;

2. Decides to amend paragraphs 2 and 3 of the terms of reference of the Commission accordingly.

Change of spelling of Macau

By decision 2000/210 of 4 February, the Economic and Social Council amended paragraphs 2 and 4 of ESCAP's terms of reference by changing the English-language spelling of "Macau, China" to "Macao, China".

Subregional activities

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/100 [YUN 1999, p. 935], the Secretary-General reported in July on cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization (ECO) [A/55/122]. The report described the cooperative relationship of ECO with UNDP, UNCTAD, the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and ESCAP.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 November [meeting 70], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/42 [draft: A/55/L.22/Rev.1] without vote [agenda item 28].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/2 of 13 October 1993, by which it granted observer status to the Economic Cooperation Organization,

Recalling also the resolutions previously adopted by the General Assembly on cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization, and inviting various specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and relevant international financial institutions to join in their efforts towards implementation of economic programmes and projects of the Economic Cooperation Organization,

Bearing in mind the progress attained by the Economic Cooperation Organization in its reorganizational endeavours as well as in launching and implementing various regional development projects and programmes over the past decade,

Welcoming the endeavours of the Economic Cooperation Organization in regard to consolidating its ties with the United Nations system and with relevant international and regional organizations towards the furtherance of its objectives,

Taking note of the Tehran Declaration issued at the sixth summit meeting of the heads of State or Government of the States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization, held in Tehran on 10 June 2000,

Taking note with appreciation of the decision of the Economic Cooperation Organization at its sixth summit meeting to welcome the initiative of Mohammad Khatami, President of the Islamic Republic of Iran, on dialogue among civilizations, the United Nations having designated 2001 as the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations, in order to promote this concept through planning and implementation of appropriate cultural, educational and social activities in the regional and global context,

Recalling that one of the main objectives of the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization is to promote international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character,

Expressing grave concern over the human casualties caused by natural disasters and their devastating impact on the socio-economic situation of some States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization,

Noting with appreciation the decision of the Economic Cooperation Organization to hold ministerial-level meetings in the areas of energy, agriculture, industry and human development,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 54/100 of 9 December 1999, and expresses satisfaction at the enhanced pace of mutually beneficial interaction between the two organizations;

2. Stresses the importance of cooperation between the United Nations system and the Economic Cooperation Organization to address the challenges and opportunities of globalization in the region of the Economic Cooperation Organization by promoting the integration of States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization, as appropriate, into the world economy, particularly in areas of concern to States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization, inter alia, trade, finance and transfer of technology;

3. Notes the holding of ministerial-level meetings in the transport and communications sector and in commerce/foreign trade, which, inter alia, resulted in the adoption of annexes to the Economic Cooperation Organization Transit Transport Framework Agreement and a framework agreement on trade, respectively;

4. Welcomes the signing of a memorandum of understanding between the Economic Cooperation Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in November 1999, and expresses the hope that their mutual cooperation will add impetus to the ongoing trade/transit trade and transport arrangements in the region of the Economic Cooperation Organization;

5. Notes with satisfaction the increasing cooperation between the Economic Cooperation Organization and the World Trade Organization which has accorded observer status to the former, and the increasing involvement of the Economic Cooperation Organization in the relevant forums and ministerial conferences of the World Trade Organization, and also notes the holding of joint Economic Cooperation Organization and World Trade Organization seminars on trade negotiation simulation;

6. Welcomes the growing cooperation between the Economic Cooperation Organization and relevant international financial institutions, such as the World Bank and the Islamic Development Bank, in particular the financial assistance extended by the latter in the fields of transport, trade, energy and agriculture;

7. Expresses satisfaction at the regional arrangements made by the States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization for transporting the oil and gas of the region to different parts of the world;

8. Welcomes the holding of a joint Economic Cooperation Organization and United Nations Population Fund Conference on Expanding Contraceptive Choice and Improving Quality of Reproductive Health Programmes, held in Istanbul in May 2000, and calls upon the Fund and other relevant United Nations entities, in cooperation with the Economic Cooperation Organization, to continue activities in the field of public health and social development in the future;

9. Notes the increasing problem of the production, transit and abuse of narcotic drugs and their ill effects in the region, expresses its appreciation for the operations of the joint Economic Cooperation Organization and United Nations International Drug Control Programme project on a drug control coordination unit established within the secretariat of the Economic Cooperation Organization in July 1999, and calls upon the other international and regional organizations to assist, as appropriate, the Economic Cooperation Organization in its efforts against the drug menace in the region of that organization;

10. Also notes the expansion of cultural ties in the region under the aegis of the Cultural Institute of the Economic Cooperation Organization, and requests support for efforts to promote, and promote awareness of, the rich cultural and literary heritage of the region of the Economic Cooperation Organization through the launching of appropriate projects and programmes dealing with, inter alia, the issues regarding the initiative of President Khatami on dialogue among civilizations, with possible assistance from the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and other relevant entities;

11. Invites the United Nations system, its relevant bodies and the international community to continue to provide technical assistance, as appropriate, to the States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization and its secretariat in strengthening their early warning system, preparedness, capacity for timely response and rehabilitation with a view to reducing the incidence of human casualties and mitigating the socio-economic impact of natural disasters;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization".

Europe

The Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), at its fifty-fifth session (Geneva, 3-5 May) [E/2000/37], focused on increasing regional cooperation within the ECE region, its operational activities and a number of cross-sectoral concerns.

As called for in the Plan of Action on the Strengthening of Economic Cooperation in Europe [YUN 1997, p. 1002], the ECE secretariat organized a debate on the economic regeneration of South-East Europe. Discussions centred on supporting the transition process of the economies of South-East Europe using regional cooperation to overcome some of their key problems, and on whether strategies for economic policy and regional cooperation could ignore the political context.

The Commission reviewed ECE's operational activities and agreed that priority should continue to be given to requests for assistance from the most vulnerable transition economies, particularly those from the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) and the Balkan countries. It agreed that ways to strengthen the Coordinating Unit for Operational Activities should be explored and that the secretariat should evaluate operational projects to help it prioritize its work. The Commission encouraged countries to include ECE on their list of eligible institutions for funding and the secretariat to renew efforts to attract funds from public and private sources.

In the context of its consideration of cross-sectoral and intersectoral concerns, the Commission was updated on development with the participation of the chairpersons of the principal subsidiary bodies (PSBs). It agreed to initiate, on a regular basis, debates and possible action on cross-sectoral concerns and intersectoral issues. The Commission supported ECE involvement with the business community and agreed that such cooperation should continue along the lines suggested in a note by the Executive Secretary [E/ECE/1377]. It decided that the Group of Experts on the Programme of Work should take up the issues outlined in that paper and highlighted at the meeting, in particular the development of guidelines and procedures for facilitating public/private partnership. The PSBs were requested to examine issues, such as strengthening the involvement of small and medium-sized enterprises in ECE activities.

The Commission supported the conclusions agreed at the ECE regional preparatory meeting for the 2000 review of the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170], which constituted the region's input to the global review process (see p. 1082). As a follow-up to the International Year of Older Persons [YUN 1999, p. 1124], the Commission decided to convene a ministerial conference on ageing in Berlin, Germany, in September 2002.

The Commission agreed to look into the resource implications arising from ECE's contribution to global events and issues, including strengthening the Office of the Executive Secretary. Taking into account the limited resources available to the ECE secretariat, the Commission agreed that any new mandate should be supported by the necessary additional budgetary resources from the body delivering the mandate.

The Commission endorsed the recommendation of the Group of Experts on the Programme of Work [E/ECE/1380] that, in deciding that biennialization would currently not be in ECE's best interests, the Commission should request the Group to consider whether any improvements should be made to the format of the Commission's annual session; any recommendations arising from such deliberations should be submitted to an ad hoc informal meeting of the Commission.

Economic trends

According to the Economic Survey of Europe, 2000 [Sales No. E.00.II.E.28], the strengthening of global economic activity in 1999 continued in the first half of 2000, as the international business cycle gained more momentum than was expected at the beginning of the year. That favourable performance was due largely to the continued rapid expansion of the United States economy, leading to a very strong growth in import demand and the strengthening of cyclical growth forces in developed and developing countries. The dynamism of the world economy also stimulated domestic activity in Western Europe and the transition economies of Central and Eastern Europe. As a result of closer economic linkages within the region, foreign trade also led to mutually reinforcing economic growth between Western and Eastern Europe. However, there were indications in the latter months of the year that the global business cycle had passed its peak, as evidenced by the further tightening of monetary policy in the United States and Western Europe during 2000 and the unexpectedly sharp and sustained rise in international oil prices.

Western Europe and North America

In the United States, economic activity continued to increase at a brisk rate in the first half of 2000 with demand outpacing supply, but it slowed down more abruptly than expected in the third quarter. Real GDP rose only 0.7 per cent, compared with 1.4 per cent in the preceding quarter. The cyclical downturn had already been signalled by the Purchasing Managers' Index, which fell below the threshold of 50 per cent in August and September, and the decline in the composite leading indicators since May and in capacity utilization rates in manufacturing in the third quarter. Export growth remained strong, but the growth of imports slowed down somewhat in the third quarter.

Inflation edged upwards in 2000, mainly because of higher energy prices. The annual inflation rate was 3.5 per cent in September, while core inflation was 2.6 per cent, compared with 1.9 per cent at the beginning of the year. Higher labour costs were offset by sizeable gains in productivity. Non-farm employment increased in the first two quarters and again in September, when the unemployment rate fell to a very low 3.9 per cent.

The current account deficit rose to $425 billion in the second quarter, corresponding to 4.3 per cent of GDP, compared to an average of 3.7 per cent of GDP in 1999. Tax revenues continued to outpace government expenditures, and the federal budget surplus rose by $100 billion to $237 billion, or just over 2 per cent of GDP in fiscal 2000. The target for the federal funds rate was raised by half a percentage point to 6.5 per cent in May. Since then, it had been left unchanged, reflecting the conviction that the economy was heading for a "soft landing". Short-term interest rates in the money market responded to that tightening of monetary policy and fell slightly in the third quarter.

In Western Europe, the business cycle maintained strong momentum in the first half of 2000. Real GDP during that period was 3.4 per cent higher than a year earlier, with exports of goods and services continuing to be the main sources of growth. Domestic demand remained strong in the first half of 2000, but its rate of expansion did not accelerate. Private consumption was supported by gains in aggregate real incomes associated with rising employment, but the growth of real disposable incomes was checked by the sharp rise in energy prices, which put some pressure on consumer prices. The relatively strong growth of domestic demand led to a considerable rise in imports. In 2000, price developments were strongly influenced by the large increase in crude oil prices, and the continuing decline of the euro placed further upward pressure on import prices; both factors accounted for much of the pronounced increases in aggregate import and producer prices. The average inflation rate for the first nine months of 2000 was 2.2 per cent, although in the euro area it ranged from 2.2 per cent in Austria to 5.5 per cent in Ireland. Employment was expected to increase by 1.6 per cent, the same as in 1999. Against the backdrop of favourable trends in output and employment, the rate of unemployment fell in all countries, averaging 9 per cent in the euro area and 8.3 per cent in the EU.

The European Central Bank raised the main refinancing rate from 3 per cent to 4.75 per cent between February and October to check the potential effects of rising energy prices on inflationary expectations and to arrest and reverse the weakening of the euro in foreign exchange markets. The tightening of monetary policy was reflected in higher interest rates in the money and capital markets and in the lending rates of banks to enterprises and households.

Eastern Europe, Baltic States and CIS

According to the summary [E/2001/12] of the Economic Survey of Europe, 2000, for the first time since the start of their economic and political transformation, the former centrally planned economies of Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union were all growing in 2000: their aggregate GDP increased by 6 per cent, significantly more than the world economy as a whole. That was largely due to the strong recovery in the Russian Federation, where GDP increased by 7.7 per cent, the highest growth rate in more than 30 years. Output also recovered strongly in Eastern Europe and the Baltic States, their aggregate GDP increasing by 3.9 per cent and 4.8 per cent, respectively.

Those outcomes suggested that after 10 years of painful reforms, the prolonged and deep transformational recession in those economies had for the most part come to an end. However, for a number of countries the strong growth in 2000 represented only a meagre recovery after a long economic slump. On average, the CIS economies were still some 40 per cent below their GDP levels of 1989, and in a number of individual countries GDP in 2000 was less than half of what it was a decade earlier. Also, with the exception of a few Central European economies, domestic demand generally remained weak despite moderate recovery in 2000.

In 2000, many transition economies benefited from strong and diversified demand in their major export markets, principally for manufactured goods but also for services and a wide range of primary commodities and semi-manufactures. In particular, the Eastern European and Baltic economies capitalized on the sharp rebound in Western European import demand, while the recovery in the Russian Federation stimulated exports from neighbouring CIS countries. In addition, the commodity-exporting countries, especially the oil and natural gas exporters in the CIS, benefited from the upsurge in world market prices, which led to a considerable improvement in their trade and current-account balances.

The EU, the main trading partner for all the Eastern European and Baltic economies, accounted for about two thirds of their exports and imports. The acceleration in the volume of Western European imports in 2000 was the major factor behind Central European and Baltic exports increasing by some 20 per cent in volume. That strong export performance made a major contribution to the recovery of output in Eastern Europe and the Baltic area. However, for most transition economies, the strong performance in 2000 underlined the considerable sensitivity of those economies to changes in the external environment, especially in the short run.

The average unemployment rate in Eastern Europe was still about 15 per cent and, despite the high rate of economic growth, enterprise restructuring was still releasing more labour than was being employed in new jobs.

Activities in 2000

Trade, industry and enterprise development

The Committee for Trade, Industry and Enterprise Development, at its fourth session (Geneva, 21-23 June) [ECE/TRADE/262], approved the change of name of the United Nations Centre for the Facilitation of Procedures and Practices for Administration, Commerce and Transport to the Centre for Trade Facilitation and Electronic Business. It also modified the Centre's mandate, terms of reference and procedures.

The Committee established a Working Party for Industry and Enterprise Development to assist in creating more favourable conditions for investment, industrial restructuring and enterprise development in transition economies. It adopted its 2000-2002 programme of work and approved the topic of the forum to be held in 2001, which would focus on the service sector in transition economies and its role in stimulating trade, innovation, investment and enterprise development. The Committee also established a task team to develop draft strategic policy objectives for it, to recommend changes in its terms of reference and to propose measures to implement those strategic objectives.

Transport

The Inland Transport Committee, at its sixty-second session (Geneva, 15-17 February) [ECE/TRANS/133 & Add.1], discussed various aspects of the transport situation in ECE member countries.

The Committee noted the report of the second session of the Joint Meeting on Transport and the Environment and endorsed the creation of an ad hoc expert group to assist the Joint Meeting, particularly in the identification of priorities for the effective implementation of the Programme of Joint Action, adopted at the 1997 Regional Conference on Transport and the Environment [YUN 1997, p. 1005], and in the preparation of the 2002 mid-term review, including an evaluation of its programme of work.

The Committee requested that sufficient resources be allocated for assisting countries with economies in transition from the ECE budget and through contributions from member States to the UN/ECE Trust Fund for Assistance to Countries in Transition.

The Committee approved the report of the Working Party on Road Traffic Safety on its thirty-second and thirty-third sessions. It noted that, following serious accidents in the Mont Blanc and Tauern tunnels, the question of safety in tunnels had been considered by the Working Party. It adopted a proposal to establish a multi-disciplinary group of experts on safety in tunnels.

The Committee noted that the European Agreement on Main Inland Waterways of International Importance had entered into force on 26 July 1999 and that 10 States were currently parties to it. It invited Governments that had not done so to accede to the Agreement as soon as possible to facilitate its implementation. The Committee endorsed four new resolutions adopted by the Working Party, amending the Recommendations on Technical Requirements for Inland Navigation Vessels and the European Code for Inland Waterways.

Energy

The Committee on Sustainable Energy, at its tenth session (Geneva, 31 October–2 November) [ECE/ENERGY/43], endorsed the decisions of the Task Force on the United Nations International Framework Classification for Reserves/Resources: Solid Fuels and Mineral Commodities (UNFC) [YUN 1997, p. 1006] and noted progress in the implementation of UNFC in the solid fuels and mineral sectors in the ECE region, Asia and Latin America. It extended the trial period of application of UNFC to 31 December 2002 and requested the secretariat to revise the Project Plan of the Energy Efficiency 21 Project, 2000-2003.

In preparation for the 2001 session of the Commission on Sustainable Development (CSD-9), which was to address energy-related sustainability issues, the High-level Forum on Sustainable Energy in a Competitive Market: Forging Partnerships was held on 1 November in conjunction with the Committee's tenth session. The Committee adopted the "Contribution to CSD-9 on Sustainable Energy Development: A Regional Perspective—One More Step on the Path to a Sustainable Energy Future", and established a Task Force on Environment and Energy together with the Committee on Environmental Policy to develop guidelines for decision makers on reforming energy prices to promote sustainable energy development.

Agriculture

The Specialized Section on Standardization of Dry and Dried Produce (Fruit), at its forty-seventh session (Geneva, 19-22 June) [TRADE/WP.7/GE.2/2000/17], made corrections to the main text of the standard layout for dry and dried produce (fruit). The agreed text, indicating the changes, would be recommended to the Working Party on Standardization of Perishable Produce and Quality Development for adoption as the revised Standard Layout for Dry and Dried Produce (Fruit). It agreed to changes to the recommendation on in-shell hazelnuts and hazelnut kernels; it recommended the amended text to the Working Party for adoption as revised UN/ECE standards. It also recommended the extension of the recommendation on walnut kernels for one year and formed an informal working group to look at proposals concerning scuffing, crop year, mould and colour chart for walnut kernels.

In a joint session (Rome, Italy, 9-13 October) [ECE/TIM/95], the Timber Committee (fifty-eighth session) and the European Forestry Commission (thirtieth session) endorsed the general direction of ECE/FAO activities, reaffirming their core mandate to "monitor and analyse sustainable forest management in the region" and the similar role of FAO at the global level. The joint session also reviewed the markets for forest products in 2000 and prospects for 2001. It reviewed its activities and programme of work for 2001-2005, and agreed, in view of the imbalance between resources and aspirations, to undertake a review of the Committee's objectives, methods, resources and outputs to be completed before the 2001 ECE session.

Environment

The Committee on Environment Policy (seventh session, Geneva, 25-28 September) [ECE/CEP/74] discussed its substantive input to the fifth Ministerial Conference "Environment for Europe", to be held in 2002 in Kiev, Ukraine. It established an open-ended intergovernmental working group to prepare a legally binding instrument on pollutant release and transfer registers. The Committee welcomed a recommendation to the Meeting of the Parties to the Convention on Environmental Impact Assessment in a Transboundary Context to start the preparation of a protocol to the Convention on strategic environmental assessment.

The Committee supported the launching of negotiations for a joint protocol on civil liability to the Conventions on the Transboundary Effects of Industrial Accidents and on the Protection and Use of Transboundary Watercourses and International Lakes. An ad hoc working group on environmental monitoring was established and its terms of reference and work plan adopted. The Committee established a task force to draft guidelines on compliance with and enforcement of environmental legislation and adopted the recommendations for strengthening environmental policy and management in Armenia, Bulgaria, Kazakhstan and Kyrgyzstan.

The Executive Body for the Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution, at its eighteenth session (Geneva, 28 November-1 December) [ECE/EB.AIR/71], adopted the 2000 Review of Strategies and Policies for Air Pollution Abatement.

Human settlements

The Committee on Human Settlements (sixty-first session, Geneva, 18 and 20 September) [ECE/HBP/119] discussed the implementation of the ECE Strategy for a Sustainable Quality of Life in Human Settlements in the 21st Century and the Ministerial Declaration, adopted by the meeting of ECE Ministers of Housing and Spatial Planning (Geneva, 19 September) [ECE/HBP/119/Add.1], as the basis for its future programme of work to promote the sustainable development of human settlements, foster economic and social prosperity and support democratic governance in the ECE region.

The Committee decided that the Declaration and the Strategy constituted the ECE contribution to the special session of the General Assembly in 2001 (Istanbul+5) on the review and appraisal of progress in the global implementation of the Habitat Agenda [YUN 1996, p. 994]. The Committee would consider the impact of the Strategy and the Declaration on its programme of work and on national programmes at its 2001 session and assess the implementation of them in five years.

The Committee adopted the report of the first session of the Working Party on Land Administration and confirmed the high priority of the country profile project on the housing sector and activities related to land registration and land markets, and approved the general outline and topics suggested for the Ninth (2002) Conference on Urban and Regional Research. It welcomed the report of the Housing and Urban Management Advisory Network and supported the project proposal for an ECE handbook on housing financing.

Statistics

The Conference of European Statisticians (forty-eighth session, Paris, 13-15 June) [ECE/CES/58] considered the implications of the meetings of its parent bodies—the May session of ECE and the February/March session of the UN Statistical Commission (see p. 1200). The Conference agreed to review the Integrated Presentation of international statistical work in the ECE region, especially quality assessments of statistics, harmonized consumer price indices and agriculture statistics. The Conference considered a proposal to convert the Integrated Presentation into a database, but noted that the secretariat did not have sufficient resources to look into that possibility on its own. It welcomed the offer of interested national statistical offices to assist the secretariat in that endeavour.

The Conference also discussed sustainable development indicators, international statistical work in South-East Europe and relations between official statisticians, NGOs and academics.

Operational activities

The Commission considered a note by the Executive Secretary [E/ECE/1376 & Add.1] on ECE operational activities.

A review by external auditors of the Coordinating Unit and the Regional Advisers, responsible for carrying out ECE operational activities, concluded that the objectives and impacts of the Unit and the Regional Advisory Programme were being compromised by weaknesses, such as a lack of strategic planning, insufficient extra-budgetary funding and no fund-raising strategy. Subsequently, the secretariat held extensive discussions on the goal of operational activities and on whether existing resources were being used in the best way to achieve maximum impact. In that context, it was proposed to continue giving high priority to requests from and for projects in CIS and Balkan countries. Close cooperation between ECE and other organizations and institutions in Europe could help to enhance ECE's profile, increase the effect of its programme delivery, mobilize resources and ensure their best use. It was felt that ECE should intensify its efforts to involve the UNDP resident coordinators more in its operational activities.

It was emphasized that ECE needed more extra-budgetary funding for operational activities. It was proposed that countries that did not have ECE on their list of eligible institutions for receiving funds for operational activities should include it. Better coordination of all operational activities and mechanisms for systematic feedback and evaluation were required. The secretariat requested member countries to reflect on the question of more predictable and sustained financing for operational activities and to provide constructive suggestions in that regard.

Intersectoral activities and cross-sectoral concerns

The Commission considered a note by the Executive Secretary on intersectoral activities and cross-sectoral concerns [E/ECE/1377], which reviewed ECE intersectoral activities, highlighting progress made on the follow-up to the Vienna Regional Conference on Transport and the Environment [YUN 1997, p. 1005] and to the London Charter on Transport, Environment and Health, adopted at the Third Ministerial Conference on Environment and Health (London, June 1999). Progress in ECE's relationship with the business community was also reviewed as one of the cross-sectoral concerns identified by the Plan of Action on the Strengthening of Economic Cooperation in Europe [ibid., p. 1002]. A number of issues relating to principles that should govern such cooperation, such as mutual benefits, promotion of the UN development agenda, prevention of unfair comparative advantage and equal access to ECE's public goods, were also raised.

UN restructuring and revitalization

As follow-up to Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/46 [YUN 1998, p. 1262] on further measures for the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields, the Executive Secretary reported to the Commission [E/ECE/1378], describing actions that had been taken in response to the guidance provided by that resolution. He provided information on contributions made by ECE with respect to the process leading up to the 2000 review of the Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170]. He briefed the Commission on the contribution made by the ECE secretariat to UNCTAD X (see p. 890). He also discussed ECE's contribution to follow-up action to the International Year of Older Persons [YUN 1999, p. 1124].

At its twenty-eighth session (Mexico City, 3-7 April) [E/2000/40], the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) focused its deliberations on ensuring equity for the region's citizenry in the context of the challenges posed by globalization. The Commission considered a main document, "Equity, Development and Citizenship" [LC/G.2071(SES.28/3) & Corr.1], which examined the question of equity, integrating macroeconomic and growth-related issues with principles of universality, solidarity and efficiency, and characterizing education and employment as essential to development in democratic societies capable of promoting ongoing progress towards the full exercise of citizens' rights.

The Commission adopted the Mexico resolution on equity, development and citizenship [E/2000/40 (res. 582(XXVIII))], in which it recognized that the development patterns and opportunities open to the region's inhabitants were influenced by worldwide economic, social and cultural processes deriving from economic globalization. It urged the secretariat to continue deepening its analysis of: social policy as an integrative force, based on institutions that gave priority consideration to the principles of universality, solidarity and efficiency in the design, financing, delivery and regulation of social services, while seeking the appropriate public/private mix; responsible macroeconomic policy based on a longer time horizon; the reinforcement of citizenship; the interrelationship between development agendas of the region's countries and policies associated with globalization processes; and the construction of a stable, predictable international financial system linked to social development.

The Commission also adopted resolutions on follow-up to the 1995-2001 regional programme of action for Latin American and Caribbean women [YUN 1994, p. 739]; priority lines of action for population and development for 2000-2002;

its programme of work for 2002-2003; the 2000-2002 calendar of conferences; the establishment of the Statistical Conference of the Americas; support for the work of the Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning; technical cooperation among developing countries and regions; the place and date of the next session; and the Caribbean Development and Cooperation Committee. (See below, under the respective sections.)

Economic trends

The 2000 summary of the economic survey of Latin America and the Caribbean [E/2001/15] stated that the recovery of Latin American and Caribbean economies, which began in the final quarter of 1998, continued during 2000. The performance of the region's two largest economies (Brazil and Mexico), in particular, enabled GDP to expand at an average annual rate of 4 per cent, compared to the 1998 rate of 2.3 per cent and just 0.3 per cent in 1999. All the countries, with the exception of Argentina and Uruguay, posted positive growth rates, with the highest recorded in Belize, Chile, Cuba, the Dominican Republic and Mexico,

High international growth rates boosted the region's exports, but commodity price trends were uneven, with petroleum soaring by 60 per cent, while prices of some agricultural products fell. Exports of goods and services rose by 19 per cent in value and imports climbed by 17 per cent.

In 2000, total capital inflows for the region were estimated at approximately $52 billion, compared to $40 billion in 1999, a reflection of the larger amounts of capital flowing into Brazil, which outweighed the decline in Argentina's inflows and outflows from Venezuela. Foreign direct investment continued to be the major source of capital inflows; bond issues were used for refinancing maturing debt obligations, while bank loans and investment in local exchanges contributed very little to total capital inflows. As the year progressed, macroeconomic policy was relaxed, especially in countries that allowed their currencies to float freely. Fiscal deficits declined from 3.1 per cent of GDP in 1999 to 2.4 per cent in 2000. Consumer prices improved with a regional average of 8.8 per cent for the entire year.

Over 80 per cent of the countries for which statistics were available had single-digit inflation rates. Inflation continued to subside in Venezuela, and Ecuador's recent dollarization policy had been bringing its inflation rate down. The labour market still posed the region's most serious problems. Although the upturn in GDP growth in 2000 slightly raised employment levels, it was insufficient to lower unemployment rates, which remained at an almost record high of about 9 per cent. In addition to other factors, the situation was linked to the lag in domestic demand. Meanwhile, wages increased by an average 1.5 per cent in the 10 countries that provided information.

External debt

In 2000, the disbursed external debt of the region was over $750 billion, reflecting a nominal decrease for the first time since 1988. While external debt levels in most of the countries did not vary, the countries posting a reduction included Brazil, Ecuador, Honduras and Mexico. There was an across-the-board improvement in the debt/export ratios during the year, and the regional coefficient fell from 217 per cent in 1999 to 180 per cent in 2000. However, a number of countries continued having high levels of indebtedness. The ratio between interest payments and exports diminished to 14.5 per cent. Bolivia, which had qualified for the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative in 1998, began to apply for the second phase of the scheme early in 2000. It stood to secure about $650 million in debt relief. Honduras could also benefit from the Initiative. Ecuador, which had suspended the servicing of its external debt in October 1999, signed an agreement with 98 per cent of its creditors by which its $6.4 billion eligible debt would be reduced by nearly 40 per cent. In September, Ecuador concluded a preliminary agreement with the Paris Club of creditor countries to restructure $880 million in bilateral debt.

Activities in 2000

Development policy and regional economic cooperation

In 2000, ECLAC combined activities deriving from its role as a forum for regional dialogue, facilitating the emergence of common regional positions that could contribute to the world debate on development issues, with normative activities, comprehensive analysis of development and public policy-making processes and other operational activities, such as technical assistance, specialist information provision and training.

It monitored national and regional economic and social developments and analysed national public policies to present a systematic analytical view of the situation of regional countries and an evaluation of the main tendencies in the region so future challenges could be identified. As a result, five annual reports, including the Economic Survey of Latin America and the Caribbean and the Social Panorama of Latin America, were published.

The Special Studies Unit of the Office of the Executive Secretary conducted a study on strengthening regional institutions for external financing in the region. It also organized a seminar on aspects of financing for development in the context of financial globalization (Santiago, Chile, 7 September). A joint workshop was organized with ESCAP (Bangkok, February) on the expansion of trade and investment relations between countries in Latin America and those in Asia and the Pacific, and a project was being prepared for closer cooperation between the two commissions with regard to small and medium-sized enterprises.

To assist countries in the region to prepare for the high-level international intergovernmental event on financing for development (see p. 915), the ECLAC secretariat organized the Latin American and Caribbean Regional Consultation on Financing for Development (Bogotá, Colombia, 9-10 November) [LC/G.2132(CONF.89/4)]. The Consultation formulated a statement, "Towards the international conference on financing for development", in which it identified a number of political considerations and concerns regarding financing for development from a regional perspective.

The Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES) carried out activities related to the strategic management and reform of the State, regulation of public services, development and land-use management, national systems of public investment and basic planning functions. ILPES held 15 seminars, including one on basic planning functions for English-speaking Caribbean countries (Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, 5-6 October) and another on basic planning functions and successful experiences (Havana, Cuba, 16-17 November).

The twentieth meeting of the Presiding Officers of the Regional Council for Planning of ILPES (Montevideo, Uruguay, 9 March) considered the Institute's activities and approved its work programme.

The Commission [res. 581(XXVIII)] took note of the resolutions emanating from that meeting and recommended that ILPES significantly expand its training activities, in collaboration with the Commission's various subregional offices and divisions and other international institutions. ILPES should focus its substantive work on analysis, prospective studies, coordination and evaluation of public management and investment and of territorially based and local development. The Commission also recommended that meetings of the Presiding Officers should be held within the framework of the Commission's session. It requested the Executive Secretary to submit in 2002 a progress report on the integration and coordination of ILPES activities with those of the Commission.

Human settlements

The Latin American and Caribbean regional conference preparatory to the General Assembly's special session for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, adopted at the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) [YUN 1996, p. 992], was held in Santiago from 25 to 27 October [LC/G.2126(CONF.88/4)]. ECLAC presented a document entitled "From rapid urbanization to the consolidation of human settlements in Latin America and the Caribbean: a territorial perspective", which examined various aspects of the territorial, urban and housing situation in the region.

The conference adopted the Santiago Declaration on Human Settlements, which reaffirmed the validity and relevance of the Regional Plan of Action [YUN 1995, p. 1044]. The Declaration was considered an important instrument for moving forward regional cooperation and developing a consensus on urban issues. ECLAC was requested to pursue the design of indicators for implementing the Regional Plan of Action and the analysis of new challenges so as to keep it up to date as an instrument for the adoption of specific actions.

Social development and equity

The ECLAC secretariat convened the Second Regional Conference on Follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development (Santiago, 15-17 May) [LC/G.2108(CONF.87/4)], at which it presented a document entitled "The equity gap: a second appraisal", presenting analyses and proposals on qualitative aspects of growth, such as the relationship between growth and poverty, employment trends, and wages and productivity, social policy reform, sectoral activities and the status of integration in societies in the region.

The Conference adopted the Santiago Declaration, in which ECLAC member countries pointed to the contribution of the World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113] to the reinforcement of many social policies applied in the countries of the region during the past five years and reaffirmed their commitment to achieving the objectives of the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit.

The tenth Ibero-American Summit of Heads of State and Government (Panama City, 17-18 November) requested ECLAC to evaluate the situation of children and adolescents as a contribution to the adoption of a common approach by member countries of that forum at the General Assembly's special session for follow-up to the World Summit for Children in 2001. ECLAC, in support of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, prepared a study on ethnic and racial discrimination and xenophobia in Latin America and the Caribbean, which was presented at the regional seminar of experts for Latin America and the Caribbean on economic, social and legal measures to combat racism with particular reference to vulnerable groups (Santiago, 25-27 October) in preparation for the 2001 World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (see p. 641).

Population and development

The third meeting of the ECLAC sessional Ad Hoc Committee on Population and Development (Mexico City, 3-4 April) considered the topics of youth, population and development, and systems of indicators for monitoring and following up on the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development [YUN 1994, p. 955].

ECLAC, in collaboration with the International Organization for Migration, held a symposium on international migration in the Americas (San José, Costa Rica, 4-6 September), which examined migration trends and patterns in the Americas, the relationship between migration and development, governance of international migration and multilateral diplomacy, the economic and social importance of migration and human rights of migrants. The conclusions of the symposium were to provide an input to the plan of action to be formulated at the third Summit of the Americas, to be held in Quebec City, Canada, in 2001.

In a resolution on priority lines of action for population and development in 2000-2002 [res. 577(XXVIII)], the Commission decided that the Ad Hoc Committee should examine in 2002 the question of social vulnerability: population, household and communities, and that its secretariat should prepare documentation on the social vulnerability of small island developing States of the Caribbean, as well as of Belize, Guyana and Suriname.

The Commission instructed the Latin American and Caribbean Demographic Centre (CELADE) (ECLAC's Population Division) and the ECLAC subregional headquarters for the Caribbean to give priority to assisting countries in developing information systems with indicators to allow for adequate follow-up and appraisal of the implementation of the recommendations of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development and the Regional Plan of Action [YUN 1994, p. 740].

CELADE and other relevant international agencies were asked to continue to support the countries of the region to prepare for their censuses and, in particular, to promote and facilitate the use and dissemination of census information in implementing the recommendations of international summit meetings. They were also asked to place priority on human resources training in population and development to enhance the countries' capacity to generate sociodemographic information and knowledge. The Commission requested countries in the region to allocate sufficient resources to strengthen the incorporation of population and development programmes in public policies that included poverty reduction, and that population and reproductive health issues should be more closely linked to social, environmental and cultural policies and promoted in reforms in the education and health-care sectors. It expressed concern over the continued reduction of international financial resources available to Latin America and the Caribbean for activities in population and development; it urged countries in the region and the Ad Hoc Committee to take steps to reverse that trend and the international community to increase its technical and financial assistance.

Integration of women in development

The eighth session of the Regional Conference on Women in Latin America and the Caribbean (Lima, Peru, 8-10 February) [LC/G.2087(CRM.8/6)] reviewed ECLAC activities and the status of gender equity, especially as it related to human rights and peace. The Conference adopted the Lima Consensus as the region's contribution to the General Assembly's special session on "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century" (see p. 1082), and resolutions on the participation of associate members of regional commissions and NGOs in that special session, and on ECLAC activities relating to regional cooperation for gender mainstreaming.

Two meetings of the Presiding Officers of the Regional Conference were held (Lima, 7 February; Santiago, 13-15 September). At the ninth meeting of specialized agencies and other bodies of the UN system on the advancement of women in Latin America and the Caribbean (Santiago, 12 September) [LC/L.1467], participants agreed to strengthen inter-agency coordination forums at the regional and national levels and to request

ECLAC, UNDP, the United Nations Development Fund for Women and UNFPA to establish a working group to design a strategy to expedite incorporation of the gender perspective in UN system programmes. They also urged participating organizations to intensify efforts to open up opportunities for exchange with Caribbean countries.

In its resolution on follow-up to the Regional Programme of Action for the Women of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1995-2001 [YUN 1994, p. 739], the Commission approved the Lima Consensus as the region's contribution to the Assembly's special session on women and recommended that technical and financial resources be increased at all levels to accelerate the attainment of gender equity and the full integration of women in the development process, together with the full enjoyment of citizenship within the framework of sustainable development, social justice and democracy [res. 576(XXVIII)].

Information technology and development

The regional meeting on information technology for development (Florianopolis, Santa Catarina, Brazil, 20-21 June) [LC/L.1401] was held as a regional forum preparatory to the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council (5-7 July) on development and international cooperation in the twenty-first century: the role of information technology in the context of a knowledge-based economy (see p. 799). The meeting adopted the Declaration of Florianopolis, in which Latin American and Caribbean countries shared the aspirations of becoming full-fledged members of the information society by the year 2005, and urged the Council to support developing countries in their efforts to design and implement programmes to ensure that the entire population had access to information and communications technology-related products and services, and to promote the growth of digital network infrastructure and research. The deliberations of the meeting were transmitted to the Council [E/2000/74].

On 20 November [A/55/636], Brazil transmitted to the General Assembly the Declaration of Itacuruçá, adopted at the 2000 info-ethics seminar of governmental experts from Latin America and the Caribbean (Rio de Janeiro, 26-27 October), which recommended creating a regional programme to provide for the continuity of efforts carried out by Latin American and Caribbean countries to insert themselves fully into the digital era.

Economic statistics and technical cooperation

The Commission approved the establishment of the Statistical Conference of the Americas as a subsidiary body of ECLAC and requested the Executive Secretary to submit the proposal to the relevant UN bodies for consideration [res. 580(XXVIII)].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July [meeting 39], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ECLAC [E/2000/10/Add.3], adopted resolution 2000/7 without vote [agenda item 10].

Establishment of the Statistical Conference of the Americas of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, which was endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 33/134 of 19 December 1978,

Bearing in mind the decisions adopted at the tenth session of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, held at United Nations Headquarters in New York from 5 to 9 May 1997, in particular section B of decision 10/1, on the review of the progress made in the implementation of the new directions strategy for technical cooperation among developing countries,

Considering that, insofar as technical cooperation in the field of statistics is concerned, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean has been cooperating systematically to facilitate inter-institutional coordination among developed countries, international organizations and national statistical offices in member countries that carry out technical cooperation projects,

Bearing in mind, on the one hand, that since 1994, the Organization of American States has collaborated with the Commission in the organization of the Joint Organization of American States/Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean Meeting on Statistical Matters and, on the other, that the Permanent Executive Committee of the Inter-American Council for Integral Development of the Organization of American States, in its resolution 34 of 8 October 1998, decided to put an end to the existence, within the Organization, of the Inter-American Statistical Conference, whose Permanent Executive Committee had been the counterpart to the Commission in the Agreement on Cooperation in Statistical Matters between the Organization and the Commission of 7 October 1993, and, moreover, that the Organization has asked its member countries to bring the coordination of statistical matters into a single entity within the framework of the Commission,

Bearing in mind also that the Commission has been including the Joint Organization of American States/Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean Meeting on Statistical Matters in its programme of work, and that, therefore, the technical, operational and financial implications of establishing a Statistical Conference of the Americas of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean as one of its subsidiary bodies can be dealt with by reallocating existing regular budgetary resources,

Considering that, by its resolution 34, the Permanent Executive Committee of the Inter-American Council for Integral Development entrusted the representatives of the statistical offices of Canada, Mexico and Peru and the secretariat of the Commission with the task of preparing a proposal on the organization and operation of the Statistical Conference of the Americas of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, the content of which was improved and approved by consensus at the Meeting of Directors of Statistics of the Americas, held at the headquarters of the Commission in Santiago from 24 to 26 March 1999,

Recalling resolution 489 (PLEN.19) of the Committee of the Whole of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, on the intergovernmental structure and functions of the Commission, in which the Committee recommended that the current institutional structure of the Commission should be maintained, Commission resolution 553 (XXVI) on the reform of the United Nations and its impact on the Commission, in which the Commission recommended that the current pattern of conferences of the Commission system should be continued, and Commission resolution 573 (XXVII) on technical cooperation among developing countries and regions,

Having examined the proposal on the establishment of the Statistical Conference of the Americas of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, which is contained in the annex to the present resolution,

Considering, finally, the nature of and the objectives set forth in the proposal on the establishment of the Statistical Conference of the Americas of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean,

1. Approves the proposal on the establishment, as one of the subsidiary bodies of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, of the Statistical Conference of the Americas of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, as set forth in the annex to the present resolution, with the observations and suggestions included in the report of the Commission on its twenty-eighth session;

2. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean to submit for consideration by the relevant United Nations bodies such proposals as may be necessary for the establishment of the Statistical Conference of the Americas of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean;

3. Also requests the Executive Secretary to report on the implementation of the present resolution at the twenty-ninth session of the Commission.

ANNEX

Establishment of the Statistical Conference of the Americas of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean

1. Statistical Conference of the Americas of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean

1. Nature

The Statistical Conference of the Americas of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean shall be a subsidiary body of the Commission that shall contribute to the progress of policies on statistics and statistical activities in the countries of the region.

2. Objectives

(a) To promote the development and improvement of national statistics and work to ensure that they are comparable internationally, bearing in mind the recommendations of the United Nations Statistical Commission, the specialized agencies and other relevant organizations;

(b) To promote international, regional and bilateral cooperation among national offices and international and regional agencies;

(c) To draw up a biennial programme of regional and international cooperation activities, to meet the demands of the countries of the region, subject to the availability of resources.

3. Membership

All countries that are members of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean are members of the Conference.

4. Meetings of the Conference

The Conference shall hold its regular meetings every other year. The Conference may accept an invitation from a member Government to hold its regular meeting in its country.

5. Membership of the Executive Committee

The Conference shall elect an Executive Committee, in accordance with the regulations established by the Commission. The Chairperson of the Executive Committee shall also preside over the meetings of the Conference. The Executive Committee is empowered to convene a special meeting in the interval between regular meetings.

6. Secretariat

The secretariat of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean shall serve as the secretariat of the Conference. The secretariat shall make available to the Conference such documents and facilities as have been approved by the Commission.

II. Executive Committee of the Conference

1. Nature

The Statistical Conference of the Americas of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean shall set up an Executive Committee to support the Conference, as set forth in paragraph 4 below.

2. Composition

The Executive Committee shall be made up of a Chairperson and six members. Its members shall be elected from among the member countries of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean. Special attention shall be paid to ensuring that the subregional groups of countries are represented on the Committee.

3. Election of the Executive Committee and terms of office

At the beginning of each Conference, the Chairperson of the Executive Committee, in consultation with the members of the Committee and of the Conference, shall draw up a proposal on the election of the new Committee.

The newly elected Executive Committee shall take up its duties once the regular meeting of the Conference at which it was elected has ended, and shall remain in office until the end of the next regular meeting.

The members of the Executive Committee, including the Chairperson, shall be elected by the Conference at its regular meeting for a term of two years.

The members of the Executive Committee may be re-elected for three successive terms. The Chairperson may not be re-elected in that office for a second consecutive term, but may be elected as a member of the Committee. Anyone who has been a member of the Committee for three successive terms may be elected again after two years have elapsed since the end of that person's last term of office.

4. Duties

The Executive Committee shall have the following duties:

(a) To carry out the tasks assigned to it by the Conference;

(b) To draw up, every two years, a biennial programme of activities of regional and international co-operation on statistical matters, to be submitted at the regular meeting of the Conference;

(c) To follow up the implementation of the agreements reached at the Conference and the tasks entrusted to it by the Conference, particularly the biennial programme of activities referred to in section I, paragraph 2 (c), above;

(d) To decide on the documentation required for its meetings. As a general rule, no substantive discussion shall be initiated unless an appropriate document is available. The secretariat shall be responsible for facilitating compliance with this rule.

5. Meetings

The Executive Committee shall meet at least twice during the interval between regular meetings of the Conference. At the meeting preceding the Conference, it shall approve a biennial programme of activities of the Conference, which shall be presented at the regular meeting of the Conference.

The Executive Committee may invite to its meetings any countries or experts who can make a contribution to the fulfilment of its duties.

Technical cooperation and assistance

The Commission considered a report on ECLAC activities to promote and support technical cooperation among developing countries (TCDC) and regions during the 1998-1999 biennium [LC/G.2081(SES.28/13)].

In a resolution on TCDC [res. 583(XXVIII)], the Commission took note of the report and emphasized the need to strengthen the activities of regional Governments in enhancing the use of TCDC mechanisms and modalities in the priority areas of public economic and social development policy, and the need for more resources for development cooperation from developed countries and multilateral agencies. It set out actions the Executive Secretary should take towards that end, including intensifying the incorporation of TCDC modalities in the secretariat's work programme; holding consultations to identify priority areas for TCDC in member countries; underscoring the need for a new concept of cooperation that emphasized the transfer of resources, and consulting with member States on new measurement criteria that took into account the increasing inequity in the region; broadening the dissemination of information on technical cooperation projects and activities to national focal points for development cooperation, with special emphasis on the use of global information networks; strengthening the exchange of experiences and best practices of countries in technical cooperation projects; and supporting training programmes that enabled countries of the region to make greater and better use of global co-operation funds and programmes.

Subregional activities

Caribbean

In 2000, the ECLAC subregional headquarters for the Caribbean—the secretariat of the Caribbean Development and Cooperation Committee (CDCC) (Port of Spain)—celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary.

CDCC, at its eighteenth session (Port of Spain, 30 March–1 April), reviewed its programme of work for 1998-1999 and adopted the programme for 2002-2003. It adopted a resolution requesting a comprehensive review of its Constituent Declaration and Functions and Rules of Procedure. It also adopted resolutions on support for activities to implement the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development [YUN 1994, p. 955]; the work of the ECLAC subregional headquarters for the Caribbean; implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States [ibid., p. 783]; the importance of economic and social data in the planning and policy formulation process in CDCC member countries; activities to implement the Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170]; integrated management of the Caribbean Sea; and the 1975 Chaguaramas Declaration, which established the Caribbean Development and Cooperation Committee.

The Commission noted the report of CDCC's eighteenth session and endorsed the resolutions adopted [res. 585(XXVIII)].

Mexico and Central America

The ECLAC subregional headquarters in Mexico City placed emphasis on the review of structural reform policies, trends in foreign direct investment, social marginalization, the wider participation of women, economic integration and sectoral competitiveness. The main analysis activities carried out included a review of the economic situation in the 10 countries served by the subregional headquarters; the mobilization of resources to assess the economic, environmental and social consequences of natural disasters; the study "Desarrollo económico y social en la República Dominicana: los últimos 20 años y perspectivas para el siglo XXI"; the dissemination of the second and expanded edition of The Cuban economy: structural reforms and economic performance in the 1990s; and cooperation in the activities of the Panama-Puebla Plan, in particular the review of compatibility between the regional proposal for transformation and modernization of Central America and the "Mexico" chapter of the Plan, and support for the Meso-American initiatives and the 17 projects approved by the Presidents.

Programme and organizational questions

The Commission approved the draft programme of work of the ECLAC system [LC/G.2075 (SES.28/7)], including ILPES, for the 2002-2003 biennium [res. 578(XXVIII)]. Activities were proposed under 12 subprogrammes. The Commission requested the Ad Hoc Working Group, established pursuant to resolution 553(XXVI) [YUN 1996, p. 930], to continue to collaborate with the Executive Secretary in setting priorities for the programme of work and in the debate and analysis of strategic directions for future activities of the Commission, and called on the Executive Secretary to ensure that the member States of the Central American isthmus and the Caribbean participated meaningfully in all areas of the work programme. The Commission also approved the ECLAC calendar of conferences [LC/G.2076 (SES.28/8)] for 2000-2002 [res. 579(XXVIII)].

Venue and date of twenty-ninth session of ECLAC

On 25 July [meeting 39], the Economic and Social Council, acting on ECLAC's recommendation [E/2000/10/Add.3], adopted resolution 2000/8 without vote [agenda item 10].

Place and date of the twenty-ninth session of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind paragraph 15 of the terms of reference of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and rules 1 and 2 of its rules of procedure,

Considering the invitation of the Government of Brazil to hold the twenty-ninth session of the Commission in that country,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the Government of Brazil for its generous invitation;
2. Accepts this invitation with pleasure;

3. Approves the holding of the twenty-ninth session of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean during the first half of 2002.

Western Asia

The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) did not meet in 2000, nor did its Preparatory Committee.

The Commission's twenty-first session was to be held in Beirut, Lebanon, on 10 and 11 May 2001.

Economic and social trends

Economic trends

Economic growth, boosted by the oil sector, accelerated in the ESCWA region in 2000, according to the summary of the survey of economic and social developments in the region [E/2001/16]. The combined real GDP of ESCWA members, excluding Iraq, was estimated to have grown by 4.5 per cent, considerably higher than the 1.7 and 2.7 per cent registered in 1999 and 1998, respectively. For the majority of members, the acceleration was due to the surge in oil prices and revenues, but economic reform and liberalization policies pursued in the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) countries (Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates) were also important.

Real GDP growth rates varied significantly between the GCC countries and those ESCWA members with more diversified economies (Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon, Syrian Arab Republic, West Bank and Gaza Strip, Yemen), and among the members of each group. The combined real GDP growth rate for the GCC countries as a group was 5 per cent, while in the more diversified economies, excluding Iraq, it was 3.7 per cent.

Among the GCC countries, the highest economic growth rates in 2000 were registered in Qatar and the United Arab Emirates, and the lowest rates in Kuwait and Oman. Among ESCWA members with more diversified economies, Egypt, Jordan and Yemen achieved estimated real GDP growth rates of 3.2 per cent or higher, while the Syrian Arab Republic witnessed estimated real GDP growth of 2.5 per cent. Lebanon witnessed zero growth and real GDP was estimated to have declined by 3.5 per cent in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. As for Iraq, economic growth was estimated to have increased, owing mainly to higher oil production and revenues, but UN economic sanctions continued to depress economic conditions in the country.

For most of the ESCWA members with more diversified economies, labour-market conditions remained generally unfavourable for job-seekers. Developments in the labour markets in 2000 differed between the members with more diversified economies and the GCC countries, and among the members of each group. By far the most adverse developments in the labour market took place in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, as the closure of those areas by Israeli authorities resulted in instant additional unemployment of about 125,000 workers with jobs in Israel. The unemployment rate in the West Bank and Gaza Strip was 11 per cent during the first half of 2000; in the second half of the year, during border closures, the unemployment rate was estimated to have reached close to 30 per cent. In the GCC countries, expatriate workers accounted for a major share of the total labour force, ranging from about 33 per cent in Bahrain to almost 90 per cent in the United Arab Emirates.

Inflation rates remained low, with most ESCWA members having inflation rates of lower than 3 per cent. In the GCC countries, inflation rates ranged from 0.8 per cent in Bahrain to 2.6 per cent in Kuwait, according to preliminary estimates. Lebanon had the lowest inflation rate, negative 0.8 per cent, among the members with more diversified economies and in the region as a whole. Yemen and the West Bank and Gaza Strip had the highest inflation rates, estimated at 8.5 per cent and 8 per cent, respectively.

The jump in oil revenues during the second half of 2000 enabled most GCC countries to finance their projected 2000 fiscal year budget deficits. The considerably higher oil revenues allowed them not only to increase capital expenditures but also to reduce, or eliminate altogether, their respective budget deficits.

Oil

In 2000, the oil sector performed exceptionally well in most countries of the region. World oil prices surged by 58 per cent, and the region's oil production increased by 6.3 per cent and its oil revenues by 68.3 per cent to reach $163 billion in 2000. That was more than twice the 1998 level of $70 billion and 68.3 per cent larger than its 1999 level of $96.6 billion. The region's oil revenues in 2000 were at their highest level since 1981, when they totalled $171.6 billion. The combined oil revenues of the GCC countries amounted to $130 billion, an increase of $54 billion over the 1999 level. Saudi Arabia's oil revenues alone were estimated at $74.3 billion for 2000, which was about $31 billion more than the level for the preceding year.

Trade

The overall trade performance in 2000 was again driven by the performance of oil exports in the region. Exports of GCC countries were estimated to have increased by 56 per cent. Among the group of more diversified countries, the oil-exporting countries also registered high growth in their exports on account of high oil prices—39 per cent for Egypt, 22 per cent for the Syrian Arab Republic and 72 per cent for Yemen. Other more diversified countries, however, had a relatively weak export performance—7 per cent for Jordan and a low 3 per cent for Lebanon.

Intraregional exports increased by an estimated 2 per cent during the first two quarters of 2000. Among the GCC countries, the share of intraregional exports in total exports was highest for Bahrain, at 34 per cent, 15 per cent for Oman and 9 per cent for the United Arab Emirates. Among the more diversified economies, intraregional exports accounted for 40 per cent and 30 per cent of the exports of Lebanon and Jordan, respectively. Egypt had the highest level of exports to the region of all the more diversified countries ($459 million). The increase in oil prices and revenues led to increased economic growth and a rise in imports in the ESCWA region. The total imports of the ESCWA region (excluding Iraq and the West Bank and Gaza Strip) rose by 11 per cent in 2000. GCC countries registered a 12 per cent growth rate of imports between 1999 and 2000, except the United Arab Emirates and Oman, which registered much lower rates owing to relatively lower reliance on oil revenue. Imports of the more diversified economies grew at about 9 per cent between 1999 and 2000. However, imports to Lebanon came to a virtual halt during 2000 as the country was burdened by economic stagnation.

Social trends

The ESCWA region had undergone significant social and demographic change. Population growth and the resultant urbanization and migration in the region were posing serious challenges reflected in growing poverty, inadequate shelter, deterioration in the quality of education and health services, rising unemployment, migration and the brain drain. There were signs that certain population groups had been marginalized and that an invisible gender division of labour had emerged. There were also challenges posed by globalization and the revolution in communications technology.

Public expenditure on social support systems, particularly care for the elderly and disabled persons, was less than adequate in many countries of the region, while the role of the family and the community in providing services to their members in need was being emphasized. The family, as the primary form of "bonding social capital", was still a powerful and important cell for nurturing, education and caregiving. The demographic transformation in the ESCWA region indicated a rapid decline in children aged 0 to 14 and an increase in the proportion of the working-age group (25-64 years), accompanied by an increase in the relative weight of the elderly (65 years and over). Those demographic transformations were adding to the burden on the family of providing care for the elderly, particularly when family size was being reduced. That, compounded by other social transformations, had begun to reduce the family's capacity to provide proper care for the elderly and the needy in the ESCWA region.

The outlook for the future, both immediately and in the medium term, for most countries in the region did not indicate that the issue of building up social capital for institutionalizing participatory development would become the priority concern of planners and policy makers in the region.

Activities in 2000

During 2000, ESCWA activities under the 2000-2001 work programme [YUN 1999, p. 954] focused on regional follow-up to global conferences, environment, poverty, civil society institutions, gender, WTO and related concerns, globalization, electronic commerce and free trade in the region, as well as gender mainstreaming and human rights.

Economic development and cooperation

ESCWA published the Survey of Economic and Social Developments in the ESCWA Region, 1999-2000 [Sales No. E.00.II.L.7], which monitored and analysed the region's macroeconomic policies and economic developments in 2000 and provided a forecast for 2001. It also underlined science and technology issues and gender-sensitive participatory development. The Preliminary Overview of Economic Developments in the ESCWA Region in 2000 [E/ESCWA/ED/2000/5] provided the business community and policy makers with an early assessment of the region's economic performance and the direction of economic changes.

ESCWA undertook a study and convened an expert group meeting (Beirut, 8-10 November) to assess the electronic commerce environment in the region, discuss the constraints faced by companies in the use of e-commerce and the role of Governments in regulating and promoting it, and formulate policies and measures to enhance its use. The "Comparative study on corporate tax: prospects for harmonization in the ESCWA region" was finalized. The Expert Panel on Information Technology and Development Priorities: Competing in a Knowledge-based Global Economy (Beirut, 15-16 May) provided input to the high-level segment of the substantive session of the Economic and Social Council on the role of information technology in the context of a knowledge-based global economy (see p. 799). It was followed by another expert group meeting on capacity-building initiatives for the twenty-first century in technology (Beirut, 1-3 November), which promoted capacity-building schemes in the region, including technology parks, technology incubators and high-technology clusters.

In agriculture, a study was issued on the harmonization of norms, standards and legal instruments for selected agricultural inputs. A workshop on capacity-building in on-farm water-use efficiency (Beirut, 13-23 November) was organized to increase awareness of the critical water situation, especially its availability for agricultural use; increase efficiency and productivity in water development and use; and identify methods of obtaining quantitative measurements of on-farm water-use efficiency and provide training on the use of those methods.

Transportation

ESCWA member countries considered the facilitation of transport and trade between them an important issue requiring regional cooperation if intraregional trade, which was currently severely limited, was to be increased. In that connection, an expert group meeting on coordination of transport policies to facilitate transboundary flows (Beirut, 26-28 September) assessed the impact of regional and international developments in the transport sector on ESCWA members and considered the role of each of the three elements involved in the development of an integrated transport system: a complementary transport network, a related transport data network and a methodological framework.

Statistics

Support continued for the implementation of the 1993 System of National Accounts (SNA) [YUN 1993, p. 1112]. A workshop on the links between the balance of payments and the 1993 SNA was organized in cooperation with the UN Statistics Division and the International Monetary Fund (Beirut, 27-29 June) to facilitate the exchange of experiences; update information in those two areas, especially with regard to the definitions, classifications and concepts associated with the 1993 SNA; and discuss methods of registering, evaluating and estimating accounts, in particular accounts of transactions with the rest of the world. A Dictionary of National Accounts Terms comprised complementary sections in English, French and Arabic and was prepared in cooperation with the Council of Arab Economic Unity of the League of Arab States.

Another workshop was organized on economically active population: employment, unemployment and underemployment (Cairo, 17-21 September) to provide training and upgrade specialists' information and skills in line with international guidelines for the measurement of various aspects of the economically active population. The Regional Meeting on Social Indicators within the Framework of the Implementation and Follow-up of Major United Nations Conferences and Summits in the Arab Countries (Muscat, Oman, 29 October-1 November) presented national efforts to harmonize basic indicators; exchanged views on ways of linking the common country assessment with policies for alleviating poverty and reducing unemployment; and assessed the progress made by national programmes in filling the gaps in data and information and improving their reliability and accuracy. Publications issued on statistical issues included the Statistical Abstract of the ESCWA Region 2000 (No. 20), the National Accounts Studies of the ESCWA Region (No. 20), the Bulletin on Vital Statistics in the ESCWA Region (No. 3) and the External Trade Bulletin of the ESCWA Region (No. 10).

Natural resources, energy and environment

The Committee on Water Resources, at its fourth session (Beirut, 14-17 November), reviewed the work carried out by the Energy, Natural Resources and Environment Division during 1998-1999, examined the draft programme of work for the 2002-2003 biennium and reviewed the recommendations of expert group meetings held in 2000. An expert group meeting on implications of groundwater rehabilitation for water resources protection and conservation was held concurrently with the Committee session. The secretariat convened an expert group meeting on legal aspects of the management of shared water resources in the ESCWA region (Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt, 8-11 June) to discuss the legal aspects of shared water resources and the impact of the Convention on the Law of the Non-navigational Uses of International Watercourses, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 51/229 [YUN 1997, p. 1336].

An expert group meeting on disseminating renewable energy technologies in ESCWA member States (Beirut, 2-5 October) was convened to exchange views and experiences, including opportunities and challenges in the development of renewable energy (especially solar energy), regional and international initiatives and programmes for promoting its use, prospects for renewable energy electricity generation, and policies, regulations and financing mechanisms relating to renewable energy. The Seminar on the Initiation of the ESCWA Renewable Energy Promotion Mechanism (Beirut, 5 October) discussed the updated proposal for the Mechanism and the framework for renewable energy country profiles. By October 2000, 11 ESCWA members had agreed to participate in the Mechanism and had nominated concerned national authorities to represent them as national focal points.

Quality of life

The work of the Social Development Issues and Policies Division focused on building on earlier work relating to poverty alleviation, follow-up to global conferences, human resources development and marginalized groups. It issued studies on the role of microcredit in poverty alleviation: profile of the microcredit sector in Lebanon, and on female-headed households in selected conflict-stricken ESCWA areas: an exploratory survey for formulating poverty alleviation policies, covering Lebanon, the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and Yemen.

A round-table discussion was arranged on capacity-building of NGOs to follow up on the implementation of the recommendations of global conferences (Cairo, 19-21 September). Work continued on a local community development project aimed at mobilizing local capabilities and resources and promoting self-reliance. Under the project, workshops for training local community development workers were held in Jordan (15-26 July), the Syrian Arab Republic (29 July-9 August) and Lebanon (11-21 September).

An expert group meeting (Beirut, 25-26 October) was held on appropriate technologies for accessing population information in the ESCWA region. The Division completed No. 48 of the Population Bulletin, which focused on improving demographic analysis through increased attention to accuracy in reporting projections and census figures relating to fertility and death rates in Iraq and Kuwait.

A high-level Arab meeting for follow-up on the implementation of the Habitat Agenda (Istanbul+5) (Manama, Bahrain, 16-18 October) assessed urban development trends in the Arab countries since 1996, examined local and national urban development strategies and explored future prospects for housing and human settlements in the Arab countries. The meeting adopted the main rules and procedures for implementing the Habitat Agenda [YUN 1996, p. 994] in the Arab region, as well as the Manama Declaration on Cities and Human Settlements in the New Millennium.

An expert group meeting on the dynamics of sustainable social development: interlinkages with migration, poverty and urbanization (Beirut, 15-17 November) was organized to identify or provide the means for planning and monitoring urban development, designing integrated local development strategies and disseminating information on best practices in sustainable urban development.

Technical cooperation activities were carried out to assist disabled persons, including computer Braille and income-generating activities for blind persons in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Two workshops were held to promote self-reliance, with emphasis on employment: one in Bourj al-Barajneh, Lebanon, focused on how to start small-scale businesses (10-27 July) and the other was on self-reliance and advocacy for disabled persons (25-29 September).

Gender issues were considered in a report "Gender and citizenship and the role of NGOs in conflict-stricken ESCWA member countries: case study of Lebanon". National workshops on the development of national gender statistics programmes in the Arab countries were held in Muscat (27-29 February), Algiers, Algeria (29-30 March), and Tunis, Tunisia (23-24 November).

Chapter VI

Energy, natural resources and cartography

The development and conservation of natural resources and energy were considered by several United Nations bodies in 2000, including the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development, which discussed water and land management in the context of sustainable development and other water-resource issues. The Committee also made recommendations to the Economic and Social Council on energy-related matters.

In December, the General Assembly, in a resolution on the World Solar Programme 1996-2005, emphasized the need to intensify research and development in support of sustainable energy development and encouraged the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize technical assistance and funding for national and regional renewable energy projects.

The Fifteenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific was held in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, in April. The Conference's recommendations were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in July. The Council also endorsed the recommendations of the United Nations Group of Experts on Geographical Names, which held its twentieth session in January.

Consideration of the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency, which was presented to the Assembly in November, was deferred to the resumed fifty-fifth session in 2001.

The Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development held its second session in New York from 14 to 25 August [E/2000/32]. Two subgroups considered energy and water-resource issues.

The Committee recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption a draft resolution on case studies from Governments and international institutions on matters relating to integration of water and land management in the context of Agenda 21 for sustainable development and a draft decision on the report on its second session and the provisional agenda for its third (2001) session.

The Committee brought to the Council's attention decisions on the need to establish linkages between policy makers and professionals working on food security, water security and environmental security [E/2000/32 (dec. 2/1)], the water supply and sanitation subsector [dec. 2/2], strengthening and coordination of the activities of the UN system in the field of water resources [dec. 2/3], UN agency technical reports [dec. 2/4], priorities for action and assessment in water and related areas of Agenda 21 for the 10-year review of the implementation of the outcome of the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [dec. 2/5], reconciliation of the incompatible interests of water use, land use and ecosystems [dec. 2/6], river basin management [dec. 2/7] and sustainable exploitation of mineral resources [dec. 2/8]. In addition, the Committee brought a number of recommendations on energy to the Council's attention.

The Council did not consider the Committee's report on its second session in 2000.

Energy

At the second session of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development [E/2000/32], the Subgroup on Energy considered a report on the follow-up to the first (1999) session of the Committee [E/C.14/2000/7] and the report of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Energy and Sustainable Development (see below), on which it based its discussion of the Committee's contribution to the ninth (2001) session of the Commission on Sustainable Development and its preparatory process.

For its review of salient trends, the Subgroup had before it reports on energy and the residential sector [E/C.14/2000/8]; renewable sources of energy, with emphasis on solar energy [E/C.14/2000/9]; financial mechanisms and economic instruments to speed up the investment in sustainable energy development [E/C.14/2000/4]; and coordination of energy activities within the UN system [E/C.14/2000/6]. The Committee, in a plenary meeting, considered a report of the Secretary-General on the status of hydroelectricity generation [E/C.14/2000/5].

The Subgroup also discussed progress made in preparing the World Energy Assessment [Sales No.

00.111.B.5], initiated by the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs and the World Energy Council and published later in 2000, and its implication for sustainable energy policy development. The Committee recommended to the Economic and Social Council that a mechanism be developed to update the Assessment regularly.

Contribution to CSD (ninth session). In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1999/60 [YUN 1999, p. 959], the Ad Hoc Open-ended Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Energy and Sustainable Development, established to prepare for the ninth (2001) session of the Commission on Sustainable Development (CSD), held its first session in New York from 6 to 10 March [E/CN.17/2000/12]. The Group of Experts, having considered the Secretary-General's report on key issues of energy and sustainable development [E/CN.17/ESD/2000/3], identified the following as being of particular importance: accessibility of energy, energy efficiency, renewable energy, advanced fossil fuel technologies, nuclear energy technologies, rural energy, energy and transportation, technology transfer, capacity-building, mobilization of financial resources, and international and regional cooperation. The Expert Group recommended to CSD the agenda for its second session, to be held in 2001.

CSD, at its eighth session (New York, 24 April–5 May) (see p. 790), endorsed the agenda for the Group's second session [E/2000/29 (dec. 8/10)]. It also took note of the report of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development on its first (1999) [YUN 1999, p. 958] session [dec. 8/9].

On 25 August [E/2000/32], the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development adopted recommendations concerning the key issues formulated by the Group of Experts; it also recommended the establishment of a task force on energy within the UN system.

In preparation for the 2001 sessions of CSD and the Group of Experts, a High-level Regional Meeting on Energy for Sustainable Development of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific was hosted by Indonesia (Bali, 23–24 November) [E/CN.17/2001/10].

The Global Forum on Sustainable Energy held its first meeting in Laxenburg, Austria, from 11 to 13 December [E/CN.17/2001/7].

World Solar Programme (1996–2005)

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/215 [YUN 1999, p. 960], the Secretary-General submitted a June report on the promotion of new and renewable sources of energy, including the implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996–2005 [A/55/91]. He stated that a number of countries had taken legislative action to promote renewable sources of energy in line with the recommendations contained in the 1996 Harare Declaration on Solar Energy and Sustainable Development.

The World Solar Commission and its General Secretariat (located in the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)) continued to guide and coordinate a number of projects included in the Programme. Other areas of the UN system that were undertaking initiatives in new and renewable sources of energy included UNESCO, the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs, the regional commissions, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the Global Environment Facility, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the World Bank and the World Meteorological Organization.

The Secretary-General concluded that the number and size of the activities being carried out demonstrated that there was an increasing interest worldwide in the use of renewable sources of energy and that progress had been achieved at the international, regional and national levels in the implementation of solar energy projects and programmes, including those of the World Solar Programme.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/55/582/Add.6], adopted resolution 55/205 without vote [agenda item 95 (f)].

World Solar Programme 1996–2005

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 53/7 of 16 October 1998 and 54/215 of 22 December 1999 on the World Solar Programme 1996–2005,

Recalling also resolution 14 concerning the World Solar Programme 1996–2005, adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its twenty-ninth session in November 1997,

Reaffirming that the convening at Harare on 16 and 17 September 1996 of the World Solar Summit, at which the Harare Declaration on Solar Energy and Sustainable Development was adopted and preparation of the World Solar Programme 1996–2005 approved, was a step in pursuance of the implementation of Agenda 21, which is a multifaceted and, at the same time, fundamental programme of action for achieving sustainable development,

Recalling resolution 19 adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its thirtieth session in November 1999, concerning the Global Renewable Energy Education and Training Programme 1996-2005, which constitutes one of the major programmes of universal value of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005,

Reiterating that mutually supportive efforts at the national and international levels are imperative in the pursuit of sustainable development, which includes the provision of financial resources and the transfer of technology for the application of cost-effective energy and the wider use of environment-friendly, renewable energies,

Acknowledging that the General Assembly continues to play an important role in promoting the World Solar Programme 1996-2005,

Acknowledging also that the Commission on Sustainable Development and the Economic and Social Council play a pivotal role as forums for the discussions on new and renewable sources of energy and sustainable development,

Expressing its appreciation of the continued efforts of the Secretary-General in bringing the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 to the attention of relevant sources of funding and technical assistance,

Calling for further action to ensure that the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 is fully integrated into the mainstream of the efforts of the United Nations system towards attaining the objective of sustainable development,

Emphasizing that the achievement of more substantive results in the implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 will require the active involvement of all concerned parties, including Governments, multilateral funding agencies and relevant bodies within the United Nations system,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the promotion of new and renewable sources of energy, including the implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005;

2. Notes with appreciation the role that the World Solar Commission continues to play in the mobilization of international support and assistance for the implementation of many of the national high-priority projects on renewable sources of energy included in the World Solar Programme 1996-2005, many of which are being executed with national funding;

3. Notes that although significant financial support has been provided by some developed countries that are Members of the United Nations and some intergovernmental organizations, within and outside the United Nations system, in the implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005, more action still needs to be taken in this regard;

4. Invites the international community to support, as appropriate, including by providing financial resources, the efforts of developing countries to move towards sustainable patterns of energy production and consumption;

5. Recognizes that rural energy services, including their financing, should be designed to maximize local ownership, as appropriate;

6. Reiterates its call upon all relevant funding institutions and bilateral and multilateral donors, as well as regional funding institutions and non-governmental organizations, to support, as appropriate, the efforts being made for the development of the renewable energy sector in developing countries on the basis of environment-friendly, renewable sources of energy of demonstrated viability, while taking fully into account the development structure of energy-based economies of developing countries, and to assist in the attainment of the levels of investment necessary to expand energy supplies beyond urban areas;

7. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to promote the mobilization of adequate technical assistance and funding and to enhance the effectiveness and the full utilization of existing international funds for the effective implementation of national and regional high-priority projects in the area of renewable sources of energy;

8. Emphasizes the need to intensify research and development in support of sustainable energy development, which will require increased commitment on the part of all stakeholders, including Governments and the private sector, to deploy financial and manpower resources for accelerating research efforts;

9. Recognizes that the wider use of available renewable energy technologies requires the diffusion of available technologies on a global scale, including through North-South and South-South cooperation;

10. Takes note of the decision of the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization regarding the contribution of the Global Renewable Energy Education and Training Programme 1996-2005 in attaining the objective of sustainable development, and encourages the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in this context, to mobilize resources, both human and financial, as mandated, to ensure the effective implementation of the Programme and make efforts to promote public awareness in all Member States in this regard, with the support of international, regional and national institutions, both public and private;

11. Invites the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to make effective the implementation of the Global Renewable Energy Education and Training Programme 1996-2005 in the different regions and to strengthen the implementation of its African chapter;

12. Encourages the Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Task Force on Energy to continue its efforts to ensure that the work of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 is fully integrated into the mainstream of the efforts of the United Nations system to achieve the objectives of sustainable development and to coordinate the contributions of all relevant organizations of the United Nations system to the consideration of the theme of energy by the Commission on Sustainable Development at its ninth session, to be held in 2001, and at the ten-year review of progress achieved in the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, to be held in 2002;

13. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and in cooperation with the United Nations Development Programme, the Global Environment Facility, the United Nations Environment Programme and other relevant organizations, to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session a report on concrete action being taken for the promotion of new and renewable sources of energy, including the effective implementation of, and mobilization of resources for, the World Solar Programme 1996-2005;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development", the sub-item entitled "Promotion of new and renewable sources of energy, including the implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005".

Nuclear energy

By an August note [A/55/284], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the 1999 report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). Presenting and updating the report in the Assembly on 6 November [A/55/PV.52], the IAEA Director General stated that in 1999 nuclear power supplied roughly one sixth of global electricity. Trends varied by region: some countries were phasing out nuclear power plants, while others had embarked on new construction or innovative research and development. While the future of nuclear power remained uncertain, it was clear that certain factors would be crucial to that future: the safety of facility operations; the demonstrated feasibility of safe and environmentally sound radioactive-waste disposal; the ability to make nuclear power economically competitive; the growing need for environmentally clean sources of energy; and public acceptance.

IAEA's role, said the Director General, was to help ensure that the nuclear power option remained open, a process that required, above all, developing innovative reactor and fuel cycle technologies. In that regard, IAEA intended to establish a task force to assess the technology and energy demands of prospective users.

Noting that a major part of the Agency's nuclear technology activities was related to applications other than electricity generation, the Director General described IAEA's work in the areas of food production, human health, water resources management, environmental protection and nuclear safeguards. He also discussed IAEA's inability to implement its nuclear inspection mandate in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and in Iraq (see pp. 321, 293).

On 23 December, the General Assembly decided that the agenda item on the report of IAEA would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458).

Natural resources

Water resources

At the second session of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development [E/2000/32], the Subgroup on Water Resources reviewed reports of the Secretary-General on:

progress made in providing safe water supply and sanitation for all during the 1990s [E/CN.17/2000/13], prepared for CSD's 2000 session (see p. 790); issues related to the spatial planning of land (including minerals) and water resources [E/C.14/2000/2]; and technical cooperation activities of the UN system in the field of water resources [E/CN.14/2000/10].

On 25 August, the Committee, on the Subgroup's recommendation, adopted decisions on the need to establish linkages between policy makers and professionals working on food security, water security and environmental security [E/2000/32 (dec. 2/1)]; the water supply and sanitation subsector [dec. 2/2]; strengthening and coordination of the activities of the UN system in the field of water resources [dec. 2/3]; UN agency technical reports [dec. 2/4]; priorities for action and assessment in water and related areas of Agenda 21 for the 10-year review of the implementation of the outcome of the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) [dec. 2/5]; reconciliation of the incompatible interests of water use, land use and ecosystems [dec. 2/6]; and river basin management [dec. 2/7].

Also on the recommendation of the Subgroup, the Committee recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption a draft resolution on case studies from Governments and international institutions on matters relating to integration of water and land management in the context of Agenda 21 for sustainable development, by which the Council would invite Governments and international organizations to make available for the 10-year review of the outcome of UNCED case studies carried out by them on river basin cooperation; the protection of catchment areas for the management of drinking water sources; community involvement in land and water resources management for agriculture; water supply in both rain-fed and irrigated areas; integrated land and water resources management; and impacts of management of water resources, both quality and quantity, on the economy of a country or region. The Economic and Social Council did not consider the Committee's report in 2000.

Water supply and sanitation

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/126 [YUN 1995, p. 1059], the Secretary-General submitted to CSD at its eighth session (see PART THREE, Chapter I) a report on progress made in providing safe water supply and sanitation for all during the 1990s [E/CN.17/2000/13], including proposals for action for the ensuing decade at the national and international levels. The report, which was based on information provided by the World Health Organization/United Nations Children's Fund joint monitoring programme and took into account the request made by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1999/47 [YUN 1999, p. 964] for a number of issues to be included, was transmitted to the Council and the Assembly by an April note of the Secretary-General [A/55/65-E/2000/19].

The report stated that current estimates confirmed that in 2000 at least 1.1 billion people still lacked access to water supply and almost 2.5 billion to sanitation. Nevertheless, some progress had been achieved during the decade. According to a new methodology, approximately 4.9 billion people worldwide, representing about 81 per cent of the total population, currently had access to water supply, and 3.6 billion people, representing 59 per cent of the total population, had access to sanitation. However, in the developing regions the improvement was uneven between 1990 and 2000. In Africa, access to water supply rose from 52.3 per cent of the population to 60.7 per cent; in Asia, it rose from 74.8 per cent to 81.1 per cent; and in Latin America and the Caribbean, it rose from 80.6 per cent to 82.2 per cent. Access to sanitation over the same period rose from 56.8 per cent to 58.5 per cent of the population in Africa; from 36.4 per cent to 47.2 per cent in Asia; and from 64.9 per cent to 75.3 per cent in Latin America and the Caribbean. There was also a discrepancy between rural and urban areas, with access to water supply in urban areas in all three developing regions having fallen from 92.4 per cent in 1990 to 92.1 per cent in 2000; it had risen in rural areas from 60.7 per cent to 68.9 per cent. Access to sanitation over the same period rose from 70.8 per cent to 80 per cent in urban areas and from 26.1 per cent to 32.5 per cent in rural areas.

In view of the statistics, the report called for action on a broad front, starting with an assessment or update by Governments of their current situation, based on reliable data and on the establishment of time-bound ambitious but realistic targets.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report (decision 2000/298); the General Assembly took note of it on 20 December (decision 55/442).

International Year of Freshwater (2003)

By a 17 April letter to the Secretary-General [A/55/60-E/2000/17], Tajikistan proposed that the General Assembly proclaim the year 2003 as the International Year of Freshwater, referring to the fact that the President of Tajikistan had made such a proposal in his statement to the fifty-fourth (1999) session of the Assembly [A/54/PV.20].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/582/Add.8], adopted resolution 55/196 without vote [agenda item 95].

International Year of Freshwater, 2003

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 adopted at its nineteenth special session and decisions of the Economic and Social Council and those of the Commission on Sustainable Development at its sixth session, relating to freshwater,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980 on international years and anniversaries, in which the Council recognized the contribution that the celebration of international years could make to the furtherance of international cooperation and understanding,

Recalling further its resolution 53/199 of 15 December 1998 on the proclamation of international years,

Noting the ongoing work in the United Nations system and the work of other intergovernmental organizations on freshwater,

1. Proclaims the year 2003 as the International Year of Freshwater;

2. Invites the Subcommittee on Water Resources of the Administrative Committee on Coordination to serve as the coordinating entity for the Year and to develop relevant preliminary proposals for consideration by the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on possible activities, including possible sources of funding, that could take place at all levels, as appropriate;

3. Calls upon Member States, national and international organizations, major groups and the private sector to make voluntary contributions in accordance with the guidelines for international years and anniversaries;

4. Encourages all Member States, the United Nations system and all other actors to take advantage of the Year to increase awareness of the importance of freshwater and to promote action at the local, national, regional and international levels;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a progress report on the preparations for the International Year of Freshwater.

Inter-agency action

The Subcommittee on Water Resources of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC), at its twenty-first session (Bangkok, Thailand, 16-20 October) [ACC/2000/18], discussed and brought to the attention of the Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development (IACSD) (see PART THREE, Chapter I) matters relating to preparations for the 10-year review in 2002 of the UNCED process related to water resources; preparations for the World Water Development Report

(to be issued in 2003) and the World Water Assessment Programme; follow-up to the review of the Subcommittee's methods of work; and arrangements for the Subcommittee's twenty-second (2001) session. Also discussed were the outcome of the eighth session of CSD (see PART THREE, Chapter I); regional activities; activities related to the reduction of arsenic in drinking water; water quality and waste-water initiatives; environmental sanitation initiatives; the outcome of the second session of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development (see p. 959); public information with particular reference to the 2001 World Day for Water (22 March); and other issues related to water supply and sanitation.

On 5 May [E/2000/29 (dec. 8/11)], CSD took note of a consultant's review of the ACC Subcommittee on Water Resources and the comments of IACSD thereon [E/CN.17/2000/18].

Land resources

By a 5 May decision on integrated planning and management of land resources [E/2000/29 (dec. 8/3)], CSD established priorities for future work in the area and urged Governments and the international community to take action with regard to prevention and/or mitigation of land degradation; access to land and security of tenure; critical sectors and issues; stakeholder participation; and international cooperation, including that for capacity-building, information-sharing and technology transfer (see also PART THREE, Chapters I and VII).

Mineral resources

During the second session of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development, a one-day panel discussion took place on minerals, metals and rehabilitation in the context of sustainable development. The discussion was jointly organized by the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs and the International Council on Metals and the Environment as follow-up to CSD decision 8/3 (see above).

On 25 August, the Committee adopted a decision on the sustainable exploitation of mineral resources [E/2000/32 (dec. 2/8)], in which, taking note of CSD decision 8/3 and aware that mining investments had shifted significantly towards developing countries where they might not have had adequate regulatory frameworks for sustainable mining, it decided to examine, at its third (2001) session, the social, economic and environmental impacts of minerals extraction and metal production on integrated land and water management. It also decided to work towards formulating strategies for the rehabilitation of land and water degradation by mining operations.

Cartography

UN Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific

By decision 2000/209 of 4 February, the Economic and Social Council accepted the Government of Malaysia's offer [E/2000/5] to host the Fifteenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific in Kuala Lumpur from 10 to 14 April 2000.

As recommended by the Fourteenth Conference in 1997 and endorsed by the Council in decision 1997/221 [YUN 1997, p. 1037], the Fifteenth Conference, which was held from 11 to 14 April, focused on the continued and strengthened contribution of surveying, mapping and charting to the implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672]. The Conference's work was organized around five technical committees dealing with cadastral issues, regional geodetic infrastructure, fundamental data, development needs and geographical names.

The Conference adopted resolutions dealing with fundamental data; institutional strengthening, education and training; regional geodetic infrastructure; land administration for sustainable development; economic aspects of modern surveying, mapping, geospatial data infrastructure and land administration programmes; promotion of national and regional geographic names standardization programmes; and cooperation with the United Nations Geographic Database initiative. It also established the provisional agenda for the Sixteenth Conference. The texts of the resolutions and the provisional agenda were included in the report of the Conference [E/CONF.92/1].

By decision 2000/229 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the recommendations of the Fifteenth Conference that the Sixteenth Conference be convened for five working days in mid-2003, with a primary focus on the continued and strengthened contribution of cartography and geographic information in support of the implementation of Agenda 21; and that the Secretary-General be requested to take measures to implement the other recommendations of the Fifteenth Conference. In particular, the United Nations should continue to support surveying, mapping and spatial data infrastructure activities in the Asia and Pacific region and continue to facilitate the participation of the least developed countries and the small island developing States of the region.

On 28 July, the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the Fifteenth Conference [E/2000/48] (decision 2000/299).

Standardization of geographical names

At its twentieth session (New York, 17-28 January) [E/2000/49], the United Nations Group of Experts on Geographical Names considered the reports of linguistic/geographical divisions on their regions and on progress being made in the standardization of geographical names since the Seventh (1998) United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names [YUN 1998, p. 978]. Six working groups reported and continued their activities in the areas of training courses in toponymy, toponymic data files and gazetteers, toponymic terminology, romanization systems, country names, and publicity and funding. The Group of Experts ascertained that the provisional agenda and rules of procedure were in place for the Eighth Conference, to be held in Berlin in 2002 in accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 1998/221 [ibid., p. 979]. It also prepared a provisional agenda for a proposed twenty-first session to be held in conjunction with the Eighth Conference.

By decision 2000/230 of 26 July, the Council endorsed the recommendations of the Group of Experts that the twenty-first session of the Group be convened for two working days (26 August and 6 September 2002) in Berlin, in conjunction with the Eighth Conference, to facilitate and to follow up the work of the Conference; and that the Secretary-General be requested to take measures to implement that decision.

On 28 July, the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the twentieth session of the Group of Experts [E/2000/49] (decision 2000/299).

Chapter VII

Environment and human settlements

In 2000, the United Nations and the international community continued efforts to protect the environment through legally binding instruments and the activities of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP).

The first Global Ministerial Environment Forum/sixth special session of the UNEP Governing Council (Malmö, Sweden, 29-31 May) adopted the Malmö Ministerial Declaration, which aimed at setting the environmental agenda for the twenty-first century. The Declaration provided input to the Millennium Summit in September (see p. 47) and to the 10-year review of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development planned for 2002 (see p. 792), which together would set the global agenda for environment and sustainable development for the years ahead. In his report to the United Nations Millennium Summit (see p. 55), the Secretary-General called on Member States to become actively engaged in the Millennium Ecosystem Assessment—an international collaborative effort to evaluate the five major ecosystems (forests, freshwater systems, grasslands, coastal areas and agroecosystems). The Assessment, scheduled to be launched in June 2001, would provide parties to various international ecosystem conventions with access to the data needed to evaluate progress towards meeting convention goals.

Concerned about the need for conservation and sustainable development of forests, the Economic and Social Council established in October the United Nations Forum on Forests to promote policy development and dialogue among Governments, enhance programme coordination and strengthen political commitment in that area. The Global International Waters Assessment, inaugurated in 2000, was aimed at assessing international waters in 66 subregions, as well as the ecological status and the causes of environmental problems in those water areas. The first phase of the Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities was completed in 2000, including the preparation of 10 regional assessments and nine regional programmes.

The Conference of the Parties to the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity (Montreal, 24-29 January) adopted the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety. Upon entry into force, the Protocol would provide a framework for addressing environmental impacts of bioengineered products, referred to as living modified organisms, that crossed international borders. The Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for an International Legally Binding Instrument for Implementing International Action on Certain Persistent Organic Pollutants met in March and December and approved the draft text of a legally binding instrument. The Conference of the Parties to the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa (Bonn, 11-22 December), approved a declaration on the commitments to enhance implementation of the Convention, stressing the need for special efforts to combat and prevent desertification and/or mitigate the effects of drought between 2001 and 2010.

The Commission on Human Settlements, at its first session (Nairobi, Kenya, 8-12 May), acting as the Preparatory Committee for the special (2001) session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the 1996 Habitat Agenda, adopted a series of resolutions on the review and appraisal process. It submitted two initiatives—the Global Campaign for Secure Tenure and the Global Campaign for Urban Governance—to operationalize its own role in assisting countries to implement the Habitat Agenda. In December, the General Assembly decided on the provisional agenda for the special session and that it would be held in June 2001 in New York.

UN Environment Programme

Ministerial Forum/Governing Council special session

The first annual Global Ministerial Environment Forum, also serving as the sixth special session of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, was held (Malmö, Sweden, 29-31 May) [A/55/25], as called for by the General Assembly in resolution 53/242 (YUN 1999,

p. 975). At the session, the Ministers of Environment and heads of delegation considered major environmental challenges in the new century, the private sector and the environment, and the responsibility and role of civil society regarding the environment in a globalized world, topics that were the subject of May discussion papers [UNEP/GCSS.VI/8] submitted by the UNEP Executive Director. The Forum adopted the Malmö Ministerial Declaration [A/55/25 (dec. SS.VI/1)] (see p. 968), aimed at setting the environmental agenda for the twenty-first century. The Declaration, which emphasized a major role for UNEP, provided a significant input to the Assembly's Millennium Summit in September (see p. 47) and would contribute to the 10-year review of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) [YUN 1992, p. 670] in 2002 (see pp. 792 and 969), which together would set the global agenda for environment and sustainable development for the years ahead.

On 31 May [dec. SS.VI/4], the Governing Council decided to include in the agenda of its twenty-first (2001) session the item "Outcome of the first Global Ministerial Environment Forum", and asked its Bureau, in consultation with the Committee of Permanent Representatives and with the support of the Executive Director, to decide on the organizational aspects of the ministerial-level consultations at the second Forum, also serving as the twenty-first session of the Council, and to decide on the themes for the consultations.

The Committee of the Whole considered an April report of the Executive Director on the activities of UNEP [UNEP/GCSS.VI/6 & Add.1/Rev.1]; UNEP's contribution to the implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by UNCED [YUN 1992, p. 672], and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, contained in Assembly resolution S/19-2 [YUN 1997, p. 792]; and the provisional agenda of the second Global Ministerial Environment Forum/twenty-first session of the Governing Council.

Subsidiary body

The Bureau of the 36-member High-level Committee of Ministers and Officials of UNEP met (Geneva, 2 April) [UNEP/HLC/5/INF/1] to consider the Committee's role and mandate. The Bureau was of the view that the future of the Committee, having fulfilled its mandate to provide a political framework during the Governing Council's intersessional period, should be determined by the Council in 2001 and that the Committee itself should consider the issue. The Bureau noted that in doing so the Council would benefit from the experience gained through the convening of the first Ministerial Forum/Sixth Special Session of the Council. The Bureau recommended the consideration of a high-level intergovernmental consultative mechanism during the intersessional period of the Council and the Forum, a mechanism that was flexible and based on equitable geographical representation. It also discussed the option of a consolidated/extended Bureau of the Governing Council, the Forum and the Committee of Permanent Representatives as a possible intersessional consultative mechanism. It entrusted the Executive Director to undertake consultations with Member States to facilitate a decision on the issue by the Council in 2001.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/55/582/Add.1], adopted resolution 55/200 without vote [agenda item 95 (a)].

Report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on its sixth special session

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2997(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, by which it decided to establish the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme,

Recalling also its resolutions 54/216 of 22 December 1999 on the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on its twentieth session and 53/242 of 28 July 1999 on the report of the Secretary-General on environment and human settlements,

Recalling further the Nairobi Declaration on the Role and Mandate of the United Nations Environment Programme, adopted by the Governing Council of the Programme at its nineteenth session,

Underlining the fact that the forthcoming ten-year review of progress achieved in the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development will provide the international community with a unique opportunity to take action to implement its commitments and to strengthen the international cooperation urgently required to address the challenges of sustainable development in the twenty-first century,

Reaffirming the role of the United Nations Environment Programme in the preparations for the ten-year review of progress achieved in the implementation of the outcome of the Conference, as reflected in the decisions taken by the Commission on Sustainable Development at its eighth session,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on its sixth special session, takes note of the decisions contained therein as well as the consultations among member States in preparation for the twenty-first session, and, in this regard, also takes note of the ongoing consultations contributing to the further elaboration and implementation of the water policy and strategy of the Programme;

2. Welcomes the convening of the First Global Ministerial Environment Forum, and, in this regard, expresses its deep appreciation to the Government of Sweden for the generous manner in which it hosted and provided facilities for the Forum, and takes note with appreciation of the Malmö Ministerial Declaration as one of the contributions to the Millennium Summit and to the preparations for the ten-year review of progress achieved in the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development;

3. Stresses the importance of the section of the United Nations Millennium Declaration on protecting our common environment, in which heads of State and Government reaffirmed the principles of sustainable development as set out in Agenda 21, and in particular resolved to adopt a new ethic of conservation and stewardship in all our environmental actions;

4. Welcomes the decision of the Governing Council on the contribution of the United Nations Environment Programme to the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21;

5. Stresses that the United Nations Environment Programme, as the principal body in the field of the environment within the United Nations system, should continue to play an important role in the implementation of Agenda 21 and in the preparations for the ten-year review of progress achieved in the implementation of the outcome of the Conference;

6. Underlines the need for sufficient financial resources, on a stable and predictable basis, to ensure the full implementation of the mandate of the Programme, in particular with a view to ensuring its strong involvement in the preparatory process for the ten-year review of progress achieved in the implementation of the outcome of the Conference at its various levels, and in the implementation of the outcome of the review;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary resources from the regular budget of the United Nations to the United Nations Environment Programme for the biennium 2002-2003, in accordance with current budgetary practices, and to consider other ways to support the strengthening of the Programme in view of the ten-year review of progress achieved in the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Malmö Ministerial Declaration

In the Malmö Ministerial Declaration, adopted on 31 May [dec. SS.VI/1], the Governing Council recognized the growing trends of environmental degradation that threatened the sustainability of the planet, despite the commitment of the international community to halt them. Underscoring an alarming discrepancy between commitments and action, it emphasized that goals and targets agreed by the international community in relation to sustainable development should be implemented. The prevailing challenges appeared to be to ensure that actions were taken to implement the political and legal commitments entered into by the international community in a timely manner, and to ensure that the results of such actions reversed the current trend of environmental degradation.

The Declaration stressed the need to address the root causes of global environmental degradation embedded in social and economic problems such as pervasive poverty, unsustainable production and consumption patterns, inequity in distribution of wealth and the debt burden. It underlined that success in combating environmental degradation depended on the full participation of all actors in society and suggested measures to enhance collaboration with the private sector and civil society to address environmental issues.

UNEP activities

In an April report [UNEP/GCSS.VI/6], the Executive Director summarized the major activities undertaken by UNEP since the conclusion of the Governing Council's twentieth session in February 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 971].

UNEP concentrated on five priority areas: environmental information, assessment and research, including environmental emergency response capacity and strengthening UNEP early warning and assessment functions; enhanced co-ordination of environmental conventions and development of environmental policy instruments; freshwater; technology transfer and industry; and support to Africa. Activities in other areas of importance were described, including regional cooperation and representation, communication and public information, and the Global Environment Facility (GEF) (see p. 970).

The report contained information on the financial structure of UNEP. As at 31 March, the Environment Fund had received pledges of $12.8 million from 27 countries, of which 8 had paid a total of $3.6 million. Total contributions for 2000 were estimated at $49.3 million. For 2000-2001, it was estimated that UNEP would receive contributions to the Fund of some $98.7 million, and would have resources available for 2000-2001 of $124 million. For 2000, an allocation of $59.6 million was released by the Executive Director. Of that amount, $50 million was allocated to Fund programme activities, $2.5 million to the Fund programme reserve and $7.1 million to management and administration. UNEP administered 92 trust funds, of which 73 or $38.9 million directly supported UNEP's work programme. Another 19 trust funds supported conventions, protocols, regional seas action plans, the full Multilateral Fund, the United Nations Fund for International Partnership, funded by the United Nations Foundation (see p. 1328), and the GEF-funded trust fund. Their total expenditure amounted to $290.2 million, of which the Multilateral Fund alone accounted for $202.2 million (70 per cent) of the total expenditure. An addendum to the report [UNEP/GCSS.VI/6/Add.1/Rev.1] contained the UNEP water policy and strategy.

On 31 May [dec. SS.VI/2], the Governing Council, taking note of the report, asked the Executive Director to take into account comments made in the further development of the water policy and strategy and to take steps for its implementation and to report in 2001. It asked that future activity reports to the Council and the Committee of Permanent Representatives present a clear correlation between relevant decisions of the Council and other legislative bodies, activities and resources set aside, actual budget expenditure and qualitative evaluation of results achieved.

Agenda 21

In May [UNEP/GCSS.VI/7], the Executive Director reported to the Governing Council on the proposed process of preparation for the 10-year review of the implementation of the outcome of UNCED [YUN 1992, p. 670] in 2002. He stated that the Council might wish to consider means by which it would submit to the General Assembly its views on how UNEP activities were contributing to the implementation of Agenda 21, a global plan of action for sustainable development adopted at UNCED [ibid., p. 672], and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 contained in General Assembly resolution S-19/2 [YUN 1997, p. 792], as well as its views on UNEP's contribution to the preparatory process for the 10-year review.

The Governing Council, on 31 May [dec. SS.VI/3], requested the Committee of Permanent Representatives to review UNEP activities that contributed to the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for its further implementation; called on the Executive Director to prepare a report to the Committee for distribution to Governments for their information and comments, and to ensure UNEP's contribution to the preparatory process for the 10-year review; further requested the Executive Director to submit a final report to the forthcoming Assembly session (see below); and asked him to report in 2001.

In October [A/55/447 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the report of the Executive Director describing UNEP's contribution to the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for its further implementation. The report traced the evolution of UNEP's policy framework since UNCED in terms of the intergovernmental decisions and institutional reforms that had clarified, refined and strengthened UNEP's role and mandate, restructuring and thus positioning UNEP to catalyse and coordinate the UN system's response to the environmental dimension of Agenda 21. It presented UNEP's programme developments that had contributed to the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for its further implementation, and addressed the issue of financing.

The report concluded that, despite considerable progress in the implementation of Agenda 21, the scale of current environmental and sustainable development problems required the mobilization of political will, as well as financial and technical resources, supported by strong and focused institutions that went beyond what was currently available.

GEF action. In response to General Assembly resolution 54/218 [YUN 1999, p. 751], the Secretary-General, in June [A/55/94], transmitted a report describing GEF contributions to Agenda 21. GEF provided funds for projects that addressed biodiversity, climate change, international waters and ozone depletion, and had impacts on cross-cutting issues, most notably land degradation. It encouraged approaches and policies that contributed to sustainable outcomes or promoted equitable results for all.

In December, the Assembly decided to organize in 2002 the 10-year review of progress achieved in implementing the outcome of UNCED at the summit level to reinvigorate the global commitment to sustainable development (resolution 55/199).

(See also p. 792.)

Coordination and cooperation

Environmental emergencies

A December report of the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.21/3/Add.1] regarding the joint project on environmental emergencies carried out by UNEP and the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) (the joint UNEP/OCHA Environment Unit) contained a draft strategic framework on emergency prevention, preparedness, assessment, response and mitigation.

During the year, UNEP and OCHA sent an assessment mission to Hungary, Romania and Yugoslavia (26 February–5 March) to assess the environmental impacts of the spill of liquid and suspended waste containing cyanide and heavy metals from a gold mine in Baia Mare, Romania. Two workshops were organized (May and October) by UNEP on disaster prevention and preparedness in the mining industry. UNEP and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS) developed a joint project on mitigation, management and control of floods in South Asia to promote technical cooperation in flood management among South Asian countries. Joint UNEP/UNCHS technical missions visited Venezuela (June) to identify areas for assistance in flood mitigation and management and Mozambique to assess the impact of floods in early 2000 on the environment and human settlements. On 15 March, UNEP released a report on the environmental impact of refugees in Guinea, produced in cooperation with UNCHS and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, which analysed the environmental impact of the large influx of refugees in southern Guinea fleeing from conflicts in Liberia and Sierra Leone. From September to November, UNEP, in collaboration with Kenya, conducted a study on the drought in Kenya. The joint Unit also assisted Venezuela as a result of chemical contamination of a major port area (January), and Kosovo, following a major sulphuric acid spill from a battery factory (September) (see p. 378). The UNEP Awareness and Preparedness for Emergencies at Local Level (APELL) programme continued to contribute to raising public awareness of the need for emergency preparedness and the prevention and reduction of environmental emergencies and damage. APELL seminars were held in India, Jordan, Qatar, South Africa, Tunisia and the United Kingdom. The fourth meeting of the Advisory Group on Environmental Emergencies (Brussels, Belgium, 20-21 November) discussed cooperation between UNEP and OCHA and the work of the joint Unit.

Global Environment Facility

The Global Environment Facility (GEF), a joint programme of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), UNEP and the World Bank, was established in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 505] to help solve global environmental problems. In a December note [UNEP/GC.21/INF/4], the secretariat provided an overview of the status of implementation of the Action Plan on Complementarity [YUN 1999, p. 977] between UNEP's GEF-related activities and its regular programme of work. It also presented an overview of UNEP's GEF-related activities during 1999-2000 and UNEP's contribution to GEF corporate activities.

The 1999-2000 activities brought the overall UNEP GEF-funded project portfolio to a total of $286 million, of which $119 million was approved by GEF for 1999-2000, representing a 42 per cent increase since 1998.

During the period, UNEP consolidated a portfolio of seven activities relating to persistent organic pollutants (POPs). The period also saw project development on flyway approaches to ecosystem conservation of habitats required by migratory species, the inauguration of the Global International Waters Assessment (see p. 982), the development of the prototype of the Millennium Ecosystem Assessment (see p. 977) and the implementation of activities under the UNEP GEF strategic partnership, a $2 million grant under which activities relating to environmental analyses, outreach to the scientific community and global environmental knowledge and data management were completed. In 2000, an increased emphasis was placed on actions in Africa in support of a special initiative on land and water. The Scientific and Technical Advisory Panel, for which UNEP provided secretariat support, provided strategic support for new areas of intervention, providing scientific and technical advice on issues ranging from biosafety and sustainable use to power sector reform.

Memorandums of understanding

In 2000 [UNEP/GC.21/INF/7], UNEP signed memorandums of understanding (MOUs) with UNCHS and the International Council for Local Environmental Initiatives (June) on cooperation in sustainable urban development and management, local governance and capacity-building; with the Asian Development Bank (September) to promote sustainable development and environmental management throughout the Asia and Pacific region in information management and monitoring of trends; with the Global Legislators Organization for a Balanced Environment International (November) to promote, among parliamentarians, awareness on the state of the environment, emerging environmental issues of global significance and the environmental dimension of sustainable development; and with the World Bank (December) concerning areas of collaboration for activities related to POPs.

Environmental information

The UNEP global environmental information exchange network (INFOTERRA) representatives' meeting (Dublin, Ireland, 11-14 September) [UNEP/GC.21/INF/17] adopted the Dublin Declaration on Access to Environmental Information, by which they agreed to enhanced networking and coordinating mechanisms to strengthen partnerships, primarily in the form of consortia. National consortia would be established through MOUs between participating Governments and UNEP to provide an information flow between UNEP and the Governments, and also among Governments. The consortia were called on to use Web-based technologies and establish protocols and standards for delivering the integrated information service. The enhanced global network would be renamed UNEP INFOTERRA.

UNEP secretariat

Follow-up to OIOS review

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/244 [YUN 1999, p. 1274], the Secretary-General transmitted a March report [A/54/817] of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the follow-up to the 1996 review of the UNEP programme and administrative practices [YUN 1997, p. 1044]. OIOS concluded that UNEP had rebuilt its credibility by transforming UNEP into a viable organization with the authority and adequate, predictable resources to fulfil its mandates, as called for in the Nairobi Declaration on the Role and Mandate of UNEP [ibid., p. 1040]. However, there were lingering questions about the efficiency of the transfer of the United Nations Environment Fund management to the United Nations Office at Nairobi. The report contained recommendations, which included the operationalization of the new functional structure; the rationalization of the Executive Director's travel schedule; delegation of authority to senior managers; the alignment of programme planning with budgeting; and the institution of systematic feedback mechanisms to assess the relevance and usefulness of implemented programme outputs. OIOS proposed a further review in 2002. The Secretary-General concurred with the recommendations.

On 15 June, the Assembly decided to defer consideration of the OIOS report until its fifty-fifth session (decision 54/462 B).

Misdirection of contributions

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/244 [YUN 1999, p. 1274], the Secretary-General transmitted, in September [A/55/353], an OIOS report on the investigation into 13 misdirected contributions made by Member States totalling $701,998.94 to the UNEP Trust Fund account. OIOS concluded that the contributions were misdirected in error to the account of a private individual. If the private individual had returned the funds deposited in error instead of spending them, the matter would not have been presented to OIOS. OIOS made several recommendations, with which the Secretary-General concurred.

On 23 December, the General Assembly took note of the report (decision 55/453).

International conventions and mechanisms

Implementation of conventions related to sustainable development

As requested by the Assembly in resolution 54/217 [YUN 1999, p. 983], the Secretary-General in September [A/55/357] provided an overview of actions taken by the convention secretariats and relevant organizations to maximize benefits from complementarities in implementing conventions related to environment and sustainable development. The report also brought to the Assembly's attention emerging issues of common concern for global and regional agreements, such as the critical cross-cutting issue of trade and environment, including the interface between, and implications of, trade regimes and negotiations in the context of the effective implementation of multilateral environmental agreements.

The report suggested that consideration should be given to undertaking a comprehensive integrated assessment of progress in implementing environmental and environment-related conventions on the occasion of the 10-year review of the implementation of Agenda 21 in 2002 (see p. 969).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/582/Add.8], adopted resolution 55/198 without vote [agenda item 95].

Enhancing complementarities among international instruments related to environment and sustainable development

The General Assembly,

Recalling Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 adopted at its nineteenth special session, and its resolutions 53/186 of 15 December 1998, 53/242 of 28 July 1999 and 54/217 of 22 December 1999,

Reaffirming the need, as stipulated in the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, for greater coherence in various intergovernmental organizations and processes by means of better policy coordination at the intergovernmental level, as well as for continued and more concerted efforts to enhance collaboration among the secretariats of relevant decision-making bodies, within their respective mandates,

Emphasizing the need for the conferences of the parties and the secretariats of the environmental conventions to continue to pursue sustainable development objectives that are consistent with those conventions and with Agenda 21,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on international institutional arrangements related to environment and sustainable development;

2. Welcomes the work undertaken by the secretariats of the instruments related to environment and sustainable development and other relevant organizations to implement resolution 54/217;

3. Encourages the conferences of the parties to, and the secretariats of, the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the Convention on Biological Diversity and the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, and other international instruments related to environment and sustainable development, as well as relevant organizations, especially the United Nations Environment Programme, including, as appropriate, the involvement of the environmental management group, to continue their work for enhancing complementarities among them with full respect for the status of the secretariats of the conventions and the autonomous decision-making prerogatives of the conferences of the parties to the conventions concerned, and to strengthen cooperation with a view to facilitating progress in the implementation of those conventions at the international, regional and national levels and to report thereon to their respective conferences of the parties;

4. Also encourages the conferences of the parties, assisted by their secretariats, to coordinate the timing of their sessions and the sessions of their subsidiary bodies, taking into account the organization of work of the General Assembly and the Commission on Sustainable Development;

5. Further encourages the conferences of the parties to promote the streamlining of national reporting;

6. Invites the secretariats of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the Convention on Biological Diversity and the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, and other international instruments related to environment and sustainable development, as well as relevant organizations, to provide further information on their work to implement resolution 54/217 and other complementary activities in their contributions to the preparatory process for the review of the implementation of Agenda 21, to be carried out in 2002;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take into account the above-mentioned work in the preparation of documentation and other preparatory activities for the review of the implementation of Agenda 21, to be carried out in 2002.

Climate change convention

As at 31 December, 186 States were parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, which was opened for signature in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 681] and entered into force in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 938]. During the year, Angola ratified the Convention, Botswana, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Equatorial Guinea and Kyrgyzstan acceded to it and Belarus approved it.

At year's end, there were 31 parties to the Kyoto Protocol to the Convention [YUN 1997, p. 1048]. During the year, Ecuador, Honduras, Mexico and Samoa ratified it, and Azerbaijan, Barbados, Equatorial Guinea, Guinea, Kiribati and Lesotho acceded to it.

Conference of Parties

On 25 November, the sixth session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (The Hague, Netherlands, 13-25 November) [FCCC/CP/2000/5 & Add.1-3] suspended talks on making operational the 1997 Kyoto Protocol and strengthening financial and technical cooperation between developed and developing countries on climate-friendly policies and technologies.

The Conference made progress towards outlining a package of financial support and technology transfer to help developing countries contribute to global action on climate change. However, the key political issues, including an international emissions trading system, a clean development mechanism, the rules for counting emissions reductions from carbon sinks such as forests, and a compliance regime, could not be resolved. A compromise text was scheduled to be forwarded to a resumed sixth session to be held in 2001.

In other action, the Conference expressed solidarity with Southern African countries, particularly Mozambique, in view of the climate changes they were facing, and invited the Third (2001) UN Conference on the Least Developed Countries (see p. 808) to address matters relating to the specific concerns of the least developed countries arising from the adverse effects of climate change. The Conference took note of the GEF review of its climate change enabling activities.

The Subsidiary Body for Scientific and Technological Advice held its twelfth session (Bonn, Germany, 12-16 June) [FCCC/SBSTA/2000/5]. It also held the first (Lyon, France, 11-15 September) [FCCC/SBSTA/2000/10 & Add.1-4] and second (The Hague, 13-18 November) [FCCC/SBSTA/2000/14] parts of its thirteenth session. The Subsidiary Body for Implementation also held its twelfth session (Bonn, 12-16 June) [FCCC/SBI/2000/5] and the first (Lyon, 11-15 September) [FCCC/SBI/2000/10 & Add.1-4] and second (The Hague, 13-18 November) [FCCC/SBI/2000/17] parts of its thirteenth session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/582/Add.7], adopted decision 55/443 without vote [agenda item 95 (g)].

Protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind

At its 87th plenary meeting, on 20 December 2000, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided:

(a) To express its regret that negotiations could not be completed at the sixth session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, held at The Hague from 13 to 25 November 2000, and to call upon all parties to intensify political consultations to reach a successful conclusion at a resumed session;

(b) To invite the Conference of the Parties at its seventh session to contribute to the preparation of the ten-year review of the progress achieved in the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, and to request the Executive Secretary of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change to report to the Commission on Sustainable Development at its tenth session to this end;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to make the necessary provisions to include in the calendar of conferences and meetings for the biennium 2002-2003 those sessions of the Conference of the Parties and its subsidiary bodies that the Conference of the Parties may need to convene in that period;

(d) To request the Executive Secretary of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the work of the Conference of the Parties;

(e) To include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "Protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind".

In related action on the same date, the Assembly took note of the Second Committee's main report [A/55/582] on environment and sustainable development (decision 55/441).

Vienna Convention and Montreal Protocol

As at 31 December, 175 States and the European Community (EC) were parties to the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer [YUN 1985, p. 804], which entered into force in 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 810]. In 2000, Angola, Haiti and Kyrgyzstan acceded to the Convention.

Parties to the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, which was adopted in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 686], numbered 174 States and the EC; to the 1990 Amendment to the Protocol, 143 and the EC; to the 1992 Amendment, 116 and the EC; to the 1997 Amendment, 49 and the EC; and to the 1999 Amendment, 2.

The Twelfth Meeting of Parties to the Montreal Protocol (Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, 11-14 December) [UNEP/OzL.Pro.12/9] considered the possible adjustments of the hydrochlorofluorocarbon phase-out schedule for developing countries and adopted decisions on the transition to chlorofluorocarbon-free metered-dose inhalers, the disposal of controlled substances, methyl bromide production and illegal trade in ozone-depleting substances. It adopted the Ouagadougou Declaration, which was annexed to the Meeting's report.

Convention on air pollution

As at 31 December, 46 States and the EC were parties to the 1979 Convention on Long-Range Transboundary Air Pollution [YUN 1979, p. 710], which entered into force in 1983 [YUN 1983, p. 645]. Eight protocols to the Convention dealt with the programme for monitoring and evaluation of the pollutants in Europe (1984), the reduction of sulphur emissions or their transboundary fluxes by at least 30 per cent (1985), the control of emissions of nitrogen oxides or their transboundary fluxes (1988), the control of volatile organic compounds or their transboundary fluxes (1991), further reduction of sulphur emissions (1994), heavy metals (1998), POPs (1998) and the abatement of acidification, eutrophication and ground-level ozone (1999).

Convention on Biological Diversity

At year's end, the number of parties to the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 683], which entered into force in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 810], rose to 179 States and the EC, with ratification during 2000 by Liberia, Malta and the United Arab Emirates and approval by Azerbaijan.

The resumed session of the first extraordinary meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention (Montreal, Canada, 24-29 January) [UNEP/CBD/ExCOP/1/3] adopted the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety, so named to honour Colombia, which had hosted the extraordinary meeting in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 987]. Upon entry into force, the Protocol would provide a framework for addressing environmental impacts of bioengineered products, referred to as living modified organisms, that crossed international borders. It provided for an information-sharing mechanism so that countries could take informed decisions about the risks and benefits associated with transboundary movements of living modified organisms. The Protocol, which was open for signature in Nairobi from 15 to 26 May 2000 and in New York from 5 June 2000 to 4 June 2001, would enter into force 90 days following the fiftieth instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession. As at 31 December, there were 81 signatories and two parties (Bulgaria and Trinidad and Tobago). The text of the Protocol was contained in the meeting's report.

The first meeting of the Intergovernmental Committee for the Cartagena Protocol (Montpellier, France, 11-15 December) [UNEP/CBD/ICCP/1/9 & Corr.1] considered the preparation for the first meeting of parties to the Protocol, as well as its future work. The Committee decided to hold its second meeting in October 2001.

The Subsidiary Body on Scientific, Technical and Technological Advice, at its fifth meeting (Montreal, 31 January-4 February) [UNEP/CBD/COP/5/3], developed recommendations for the Conference of the Parties to the Convention to consider.

The fifth meeting of the Conference of the Parties (Nairobi, 15-26 May) [UNEP/CBD/COP/5/23 & Corr.1] endorsed the work plan for the Intergovernmental Committee for the Cartagena Protocol. The Conference took action on the biological diversity of inland water ecosystems, marine and coastal biological diversity, forest biological diversity and agricultural biological diversity. It endorsed an ecosystem approach and operational guidance; urged parties, Governments and relevant organizations to apply the interim guiding principles for the prevention, introduction and mitigation of impacts of alien species, which were contained in the meeting's report; established a Global Taxonomy Initiative coordination mechanism; and decided to consider at its sixth meeting the establishment of a global strategy for plant conservation. The sixth meeting of the Conference of the Parties was scheduled to take place in The Hague in 2002.

In accordance with General Assembly resolutions 54/218 and 54/221 [YUN 1999, pp. 751 & 987], the Secretary-General transmitted, in August [A/55/211], a report of the Executive Secretary of the Convention describing the Convention's contribution to the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 (see pp. 969 and 792).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/582/Add.2], adopted resolution 55/201 without vote [agenda item 95 (b)].

Convention on Biological Diversity

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 54/221 of 22 December 1999 on the Convention on Biological Diversity and other relevant resolutions, including its resolution 49/119 of 19 December 1994, in which it proclaimed 29 December, the date of the entry into force of the Convention, the International Day for Biological Diversity,

Recalling also the provisions of the Convention on Biological Diversity,

Reaffirming that the conservation of biological diversity is a common concern of humankind,

Recalling that States have, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law, the sovereign right to exploit their own resources pursuant to their own environmental policies and the responsibility to ensure that activities within their jurisdiction or control do not cause damage to the environment of other States or of areas beyond the limits of national jurisdiction,

Recalling also Agenda 21, in particular its chapter 15 on the conservation of biological diversity, chapter 16 on the environmentally sound management of biotechnology and related chapters,

Having considered the report of the Executive Secretary of the Convention on Biological Diversity as submitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session,

Emphasizing the importance of public education and awareness for the implementation of the Convention at all levels,

Noting the recommendation of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity at its fifth meeting that the date of the International Day for Biological Diversity be changed to give it greater visibility,

Deeply concerned about the continuing loss of the world's biological diversity, and, on the basis of the provisions of the Convention, reaffirming the commitment to the conservation of biological diversity, the sustainable use of its components and the fair and equitable sharing of benefits arising out of the utilization of genetic resources, including by appropriate access to genetic resources and appropriate transfer of relevant technologies, taking into account all rights over those resources and technologies, and by appropriate funding,

Recognizing the contribution of indigenous and local communities embodying traditional lifestyles, and women within those communities, to the conservation and sustainable use of biological resources,

Noting the continuing dialogue in the Committee on Trade and Environment of the World Trade Organization on the provisions of the Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights,

Encouraged by the work carried out to date under the Convention, and satisfied that most States and one regional economic integration organization are parties to the Convention,

Recognizing the importance of the adoption by the Conference of the Parties, in its decision EM-1/3 of 29 January 2000, of the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety to the Convention on Biological Diversity, and the subsequent signature of the Protocol by seventy-five parties to the Convention,

Expressing its appreciation to the Government of Kenya for hosting the fifth meeting of the Conference of the Parties, held at Nairobi from 15 to 26 May 2000,

Also expressing its appreciation to the Government of Spain for hosting the first meeting of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Inter-Sessional Working Group on article 8 (j) of the Convention regarding the traditional knowledge, innovations and practices of indigenous and local communities, held at Seville from 27 to 31 March 2000,

Welcoming the generous offer of the Government of France, accepted by the Conference of the Parties at its fifth meeting, to host the first meeting of the Intergovernmental Committee for the Cartagena Protocol, held at Montpellier from 11 to 15 December 2000,

Welcoming also the generous offer of the Government of the Netherlands, accepted by the Conference of the Parties at its fifth meeting, to host the sixth meeting of the Conference of the Parties and the second meeting of the Intergovernmental Committee for the Cartagena Protocol, which will be held at The Hague from 8 to 26 April 2002,

Urging the parties to the Convention to undertake thorough preparations to advance progress at the sixth meeting of the Conference of the Parties,

Recalling its invitation to the Executive Secretary of the Convention to report to the General Assembly on the results of future meetings of the Conference of the Parties,

1. Urges Member States that have not joined the Convention on Biological Diversity to become parties to it, without further delay;

2. Calls upon Member States that are parties to the Convention to sign and ratify the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety as soon as possible;

3. Takes note of the results of the fifth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention, held at Nairobi from 15 to 26 May 2000;

4. Reaffirms the importance of the decision of the Conference of the Parties on the adoption of its programme of work and the thematic approach to guide its work in the development of the Convention for the foreseeable future, including its in-depth consideration of ecosystems and other cross-cutting issues;

5. Notes the decision by the Conference of the Parties to undertake a limited number of pilot scientific assessments in preparation for the sixth meeting of the Conference of the Parties, to be involved in the proposed millennium ecosystem assessment, and its request to the Subsidiary Body on Scientific, Technical and Technological Advice to identify opportunities for collaboration;

6. Stresses the importance of capacity-building activities, especially in developing countries, for the implementation of the Convention and the Cartagena Protocol, particularly the development of systems to allow parties to implement the Convention and the Protocol, and encourages developed countries to provide adequate support for those activities;

7. Urges developed countries to facilitate the transfer of environmentally sound biotechnology for the effective implementation of the Cartagena Protocol, in accordance with relevant articles of the Convention and the Protocol;

8. Decides to proclaim 22 May, the date of the adoption of the text of the Convention, as the International Day for Biological Diversity henceforth;

9. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General, the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Executive Secretary of the Convention to take all steps necessary to ensure the successful observance of the International Day for Biological Diversity;

10. Welcomes the decision of the Conference of the Parties to contribute to the ten-year review of the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, and decides to invite the Executive Secretary and, if appropriate, the President of the sixth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to report to it at its relevant session;

11. Recognizes the importance of the rapid development and implementation of the Strategic Plan for the Convention, and encourages States parties to provide to the Executive Secretary, in accordance with decision V/20 adopted by the Conference of the Parties, their detailed views on the matter as soon as possible;

12. Welcomes the collaborative work between the Convention and related conventions, in particular the Convention on Wetlands of International Importance especially as Waterfowl Habitat, adopted at Ramsar, Islamic Republic of Iran, on 2 February 1971;

13. Also welcomes the decision of the Conference of the Parties regarding its programme of work for forest biological diversity, and encourages the parties to cooperate with the United Nations Forum on Forests, in particular with regard to respecting, preserving and maintaining the knowledge, innovations and practices of indigenous and local communities embodying traditional lifestyles, in accordance with article 8 (j) and related provisions of the Convention;

14. Takes note of the fact that the provisions of the Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights and the Convention are interrelated, in particular with respect to intellectual property rights and relevant provisions of the Convention, and invites the World Trade Organization and the World Intellectual Property Organization, within their respective mandates, to explore this relationship, taking into account the ongoing work in other relevant forums and bearing in mind decision V/26 B of the Conference of the Parties;

15. Encourages Member States that are members of the World Trade Organization to support the request by the Executive Secretary for observer status at the meetings of the Council for the Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights and the Committee on Agriculture;

16. Welcomes the progress made in implementing cooperation with the secretariats of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, and encourages further cooperation;

17. Stresses the need to enhance complementarities between the Convention on Biological Diversity and the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change in order to ensure that their activities are mutually supportive;

18. Invites all funding institutions and bilateral and multilateral donors, as well as regional funding institutions and non-governmental organizations, to cooperate with the secretariat of the Convention on Biological Diversity in the implementation of the programme of work;

19. Notes the work of the Global Environment Facility in assisting developing countries and countries with economies in transition in the implementation of the Convention, and urges the Facility to enhance its support for the conservation and sustainable use of biodiversity within the context of national sustainable development, and, within its mandate, in identifying and coordinating additional financial resources from bilateral and international organizations as well as the private sector for this purpose;

20. Welcomes the initiatives of the Facility in the area of capacity development to assess the capacity-building needs and priorities of developing countries, relating to the conservation of biological diversity, and to develop a strategy and implement a multi-year plan for responding to such needs and priorities, and calls upon other multilateral and bilateral organizations to cooperate with the Facility in strengthening the capacity of developing countries for the conservation and management of biodiversity;

21. Notes the efforts that the Facility is making towards developing programmes for assisting developing countries in capacity-building activities relating to the Cartagena Protocol;

22. Calls upon States parties to the Convention to settle urgently any arrears and to pay their contributions in full and in a timely manner so as to ensure continuity in the cash flows required to finance the ongoing work of the Conference of the Parties, the subsidiary bodies and the Convention secretariat;

23. Invites the Executive Secretary of the Convention to report to the General Assembly on the ongoing work regarding the Convention;

24. Requests the conferences of the parties to the multilateral environmental conventions to take into consideration the schedule of meetings of the General Assembly and the Commission on Sustainable Development when setting the dates of meetings of the conferences of the parties so as to ensure the adequate representation of developing countries at those meetings;

25. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the sub-item entitled "Convention on Biological Diversity".

Convention to combat desertification

In 2000, 12 additional States became parties to the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa [YUN 1994, p. 944], which entered into force in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 958], bringing the number of parties to 172.

The Conference of the Parties, at its fourth session (Bonn, 11-22 December) [ICCD/COP(4)/11 & Add.1], approved a declaration on the commitments to enhance the implementation of the obligations of the Convention. The participants recognized the need to strengthen international cooperation to combat desertification and drought by identifying ways to promote and facilitate access to appropriate technology by affected country parties, and to provide financial resources. The Conference decided that its ad hoc working group would review and analyse national reports in order to propose concrete recommendations on further steps to implement the Convention. In 1999 and 2000, over 150 reports were submitted by the parties and subregional and regional institutions. Countries in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Caribbean and the northern Mediterranean that had already adopted a national action programme to combat desertification illustrated initiatives taken, successes accomplished and problems encountered. The Conference adopted an additional implementation annex to the Convention for Central and Eastern European countries, as well as decisions on traditional knowledge, early warning systems, a dryland degradation assessment and millennium ecosystem assessment and administrative issues. The fifth meeting was scheduled to take place in September 2001 in Bonn.

The Committee on Science and Technology, a subsidiary body of the Conference (Bonn, 12-14 December), considered, among other things, reports on early warning systems [ICCD/COP(4)/

CST/4], traditional knowledge [ICCD/COP(4)/CST/2] and a survey and evaluation of existing networks, institutions, agencies and bodies [ICCD/COP(4)/CST/3 & Add.1].

Report of Secretary-General. As requested in General Assembly resolution 54/223 [YUN 1999, p. 989], the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/55/331], discussed the headquarters agreement for the Convention's secretariat in Bonn, the 2000-2001 programme budget, reports on and procedures for reviewing implementation of the Convention, the first review of the Global Mechanism, the Recife Initiative for a declaration on commitments under the Convention [YUN 1999, p. 989], an MOU between the Conference of the Parties and the International Fund for Agricultural Development, action by States and regional implementation.

UNDP action. On 29 September [E/2000/35 (dec. 2000/23)], the Executive Board of UNDP and the United Nations Population Fund asked UNDP to explore with the Convention's secretariat ways to support the ongoing national consultative processes of the Convention on partnership-building through the round-table mechanism. UNDP was encouraged to contribute to capacity-building and resource mobilization, particularly through its regional and national offices, with a view to assisting affected developing countries to implement the Convention at all levels. The UNDP Administrator was asked to report in 2001.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/582/Add.5], adopted resolution 55/204 without vote [agenda item 95 (e)].

Implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 54/223 of 22 December 1999 and other relevant resolutions relating to the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa,

Noting with satisfaction that the third session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention was held at Recife, Brazil, from 15 to 26 November 1999,

Expressing its deep appreciation to the Government of Brazil for the generous manner in which it hosted and provided facilities for the third session of the Conference of the Parties,

Acknowledging that desertification and drought are problems of a global dimension in that they affect all regions of the world and that joint action of the international community is needed to combat desertification and/or mitigate the effects of drought, including the integration of strategies for poverty eradication,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Welcomes the convening of the fourth session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, at Bonn, Germany, from 11 to 22 December 2000;

2. Also welcomes the very large number of ratifications of the Convention, and calls upon all remaining countries that have not yet ratified or acceded to the Convention to do so as soon as possible;

3. Further welcomes the progress made in producing a draft additional regional implementation annex to the Convention for the countries of Central and Eastern Europe, and invites the Conference of the Parties to consider adopting it at its fourth session;

4. Stresses the importance of a coherent and timely implementation of the provisions of the Convention at all levels, including the general provisions and obligations of all States parties, in accordance with the provisions of part II of the Convention;

5. Notes with satisfaction the steps being taken by affected developing country parties to the Convention, with the assistance of international organizations and bilateral development partners, to implement the Convention, and the efforts being made to promote the participation of all actors of society in the elaboration of national action programmes to combat desertification, and in this regard encourages countries to cooperate at the subregional and regional levels, as appropriate;

6. Welcomes the strengthened cooperation between the secretariat of the Convention and the Global Mechanism, and encourages further efforts in this regard for the effective implementation of the Convention;

7. Also welcomes the financial support already provided on a voluntary basis by some countries, and urges Governments, the private sector and all relevant organizations, including non-governmental organizations, to make or continue to make voluntary contributions to the Global Mechanism to enable it to implement its mandate effectively and fully;

8. Calls upon the Global Environment Facility to continue to enhance, within its mandate, its ongoing support for land degradation activities in developing countries;

9. Welcomes the decision of the Council of the Global Environment Facility, at its meeting held from 1 to 3 November 2000, to request the Chief Executive Officer to explore the best options for enhancing the support of the Facility in assisting affected countries, especially those in Africa, in implementing the Convention, taking into account the third replenishment;

10. Calls upon the Global Environment Facility and its implementing agencies to strengthen their co-operation with the Global Mechanism and the secretariat of the Convention;

11. Encourages the parties to the Convention to provide the necessary support to the secretariat so as to enable it to discharge effectively its responsibilities to the Convention;

12. Welcomes decision 2000/23 of 29 September 2000 of the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme aimed at developing cooperation between the secretariat of the Convention and the United Nations Development Programme in order to mainstream activities to combat desertification at the national, subregional and regional levels;

13. Urges all parties to the Convention that have not yet done so to pay promptly and in full their contributions to the core budget of the Convention so as to ensure continuity in the cash flow required to finance the ongoing work of the Conference of the Parties, the subsidiary bodies, the secretariat and the Global Mechanism;

14. Calls upon Governments, multilateral financial institutions, regional development banks, regional economic integration organizations and all other interested organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations and the private sector, to contribute generously to the General Fund, the Supplementary Fund and the Special Fund, in accordance with the relevant paragraphs of the financial rules of the Conference of the Parties;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to make a provision in the proposed calendar of conferences and meetings for the biennium 2002-2003 for the sessions of the Conference of the Parties and its subsidiary bodies, including the sixth ordinary session of the Conference of the Parties and meetings of its subsidiary bodies;

16. Invites the Conference of the Parties to contribute towards the preparation of the ten-year review of progress achieved in the implementation of Agenda 21 and other outcomes of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, inter alia, by elaborating proposals, including options for funding, aimed at enhancing the implementation of the Convention at the national, subregional and regional levels, and requests the Executive Secretary to report to the Commission on Sustainable Development at its tenth session to this end;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution, as well as on the outcome of the fourth session of the Conference of the Parties;

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the sub-item entitled "Implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa".

Environmental activities

Millennium Ecosystem Assessment

In his report to the United Nations Millennium Summit [A/54/2000] (see p. 55), the Secretary-General called on Member States to become actively engaged in and to help provide financial support for the Millennium Ecosystem Assessment—a proposed international collaborative effort to evaluate the state of the five major ecosystems (forests, freshwater systems, grasslands, coastal areas, agroecosystems). An initiative of the World Resources Institute, the World Bank, UNDP and UNEP, among others, the Assessment would provide parties to various international ecosystem conventions with access to the data needed to evaluate progress towards meeting convention goals. National Governments would gain access to information needed to meet reporting requirements under international conventions. The private sector would benefit by being able to make more informed forecasts. Civil society organizations would be able to access information needed to hold corporations and Governments accountable for meeting their environmental obligations.

The Assessment was scheduled to be launched on 5 June 2001 to coincide with the observance of World Environment Day.

The atmosphere

The second workshop of the Alliance of Small Island States on climate change negotiations, management and strategy was held (Apia, Samoa, 26 July–4 August) [A/C.2/55/3] in cooperation with the Division for Sustainable Development of the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs.

On 16 September, UNEP marked the International Day for the Preservation of the Ozone Layer by calling on Governments, industries, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and individuals to remain vigilant in their efforts to protect the ozone layer. Cities with high levels of ozone depletion—Ushuaia (Argentina), the world's southernmost city, and Sodankylä (Finland), the city closest to the Arctic—actively participated in the observance.

During a UNEP-facilitated meeting of 300 financial institutions, held in November through UNEP's Financial Initiatives Round Table, banks, the insurance sector and asset management companies, agreed to adjust their portfolios to favour investments that helped mitigate climate change.

Also in November, UNEP launched its Vital Climate Graphics, visual tools designed to help the public understand the concepts and threats of climate change.

Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change

The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC), at its sixteenth session (Montreal, 1–8 May), reviewed progress reports of its working groups for the third assessment report of policy-relevant scientific, technical and socio-economic dimensions of climate change. It approved the interim terms of reference of the IPCC Programme on National Greenhouse Gas Inventories.

During the year, the Panel issued special reports covering methodological and technological issues in technology transfer, emissions scenarios, and land use, land-use change and forestry.

Land degradation

The Commission on Sustainable Development, at its eighth session (New York, 24 April–5 May) [E/2000/29], considered several February reports by the Secretary-General regarding various aspects of land resources.

In a report on integrated planning and management of land resources [E/CN.17/2000/6], the Secretary-General observed that the magnitude of landscape changes through deforestation, expansion of agricultural land, urban and peri-urban growth, and unsustainable use of freshwater resources, as well as the increasing intensity of urbanization, and industrial and agricultural production, represented far-reaching environmental threats. Asia had the highest percentage of the world's degraded lands (38 per cent), followed by Africa (25 per cent), South America (12 per cent), Europe (11 per cent), North America (8 per cent) and Australia (5 per cent). The Secretary-General outlined priorities for future action, including action at the national level, a focus on "hot spots" or critical problems, organizing information on the current status and trends of land resources, and international cooperation.

A report on combating deforestation [E/CN.17/2000/6/Add.1] noted that the latest figures on forest cover indicated that between 1990 and 1995 the global area of forests decreased by 56.3 million hectares, the result of a loss of 65.1 million hectares in developing countries and an increase of 8.8 million hectares in developed countries. The many causes of forest degradation included overharvesting of industrial wood and fuelwood, overgrazing, fire and the effects of insect pests and diseases, storms and air pollution. The report outlined required action and options for international cooperation.

A further report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.17/2000/6/Add.2] reviewed progress in implementing chapter 12 of Agenda 21 (combating desertification and drought), in the context of integrated land resource planning and management, and focused on trends in achieving the objectives of the desertification Convention (see p. 976) regarding the sustainable management of drylands. At least one quarter of the total world land area, or 3.6 billion hectares, was affected by desertification.

The Secretary-General described progress made regarding sustainable mountain development [E/CN.17/2000/6/Add.3] at the national and regional levels and by inter-agency mechanisms, international and regional networking and financial mechanisms, and the planned observance of the International Year of Mountains (2002) (see p. 981). Emerging issues and priorities for action were conflict in mountain areas, highland/lowland interaction, policy mechanisms, planning and management at the national and local levels, natural hazards and risks, and funding.

A further report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.17/2000/6/Add.4] described progress in conserving biodiversity, with emphasis on landscape diversity, as an integral component of land resources. Planning strategies and policies were presented to address biodiversity and land resources management.

(See p. 790 for Commission action.)

Intergovernmental Forum on Forests

The Intergovernmental Forum on Forests (IFF), established in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1057] under the aegis of the Commission on Sustainable Development to work towards a legally binding instrument on the management, conservation and sustainable development of all types of forests, held its fourth session (New York, 31 January–11 February) [E/CN.17/2000/14]. In order to carry out its functions, IFF proposed that the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly establish an intergovernmental body called the United Nations Forum on Forests (UNFF) open to all States.

On 28 July, the Council authorized the Chairman of the consultations on options for placing UNFF within the intergovernmental machinery of the UN system to continue consultations (decision 2000/296).

Commission action. The Commission on Sustainable Development in 2000 adopted a decision containing elements for UNFF [E/2000/29 (dec. 8/2)], which were incorporated in Economic and Social Council resolution 2000/35.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 18 October [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2000/35 [draft: E/2000/L.32] without vote [agenda item 13 (a)].

Report on the fourth session of the Intergovernmental Forum on Forests

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its decision 1995/226 of 1 June 1995, approving the establishment of an ad hoc open-ended Intergovernmental Panel on Forests to pursue consensus and to formulate coordinated proposals for action towards the management, conservation and sustainable development of all types of forests,

Recalling also its resolution 1997/65 of 25 July 1997, approving the establishment of an ad hoc open-ended Intergovernmental Forum on Forests to continue the intergovernmental policy dialogue on forests and to promote and facilitate the implementation of the proposals for action of the Intergovernmental Panel on Forests,

Taking into account decision 8/2 adopted on 5 May 2000 by the Commission on Sustainable Development, in which the Commission welcomed the report of the Intergovernmental Forum on Forests on its fourth session and endorsed the conclusions and proposals for action contained therein, in particular regarding an international arrangement on forests,

1. Decides that the main objective of the international arrangement on forests is to promote the management, conservation and sustainable development of all types of forests and to strengthen long-term political commitment to this end. The purpose of such an international arrangement is to promote the implementation of internationally agreed actions on forests, at the national, regional and global levels, to provide a coherent, transparent and participatory global framework for policy implementation, coordination and development, and to carry out principal functions, based on the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, the Non-legally Binding Authoritative Statement of Principles for a Global Consensus on the Management, Conservation and Sustainable Development of All Types of Forests (Forest Principles), chapter II of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the Intergovernmental Panel on Forests/Intergovernmental Forum on Forests process, in a manner consistent with and complementary to existing international legally binding instruments relevant to forests;

2. Also decides that, to achieve the objective, the international arrangement on forests shall perform the following principal functions:

(a) Facilitate and promote the implementation of the Intergovernmental Panel on Forests/Intergovernmental Forum on Forests proposals for action as well as other actions which may be agreed upon, including through national forest programmes and other integrated programmes relevant to forests, catalyse, mobilize and generate financial resources, and mobilize and channel technical and scientific resources to this end, including by taking steps towards the broadening and development of mechanisms and/or further initiatives to enhance international cooperation;

(b) Provide a forum for continued policy development and dialogue among Governments, which would involve international organizations and other interested parties, including major groups, as identified in Agenda 21, to foster a common understanding on sustainable forest management and to address forest-related issues and emerging areas of priority concern in a holistic, comprehensive and integrated manner;

(c) Enhance cooperation as well as policy and programme coordination on forest-related issues among relevant international and regional organizations, institutions and instruments, as well as contribute to synergies among them, including coordination among donors;

(d) Foster international cooperation, including North-South and public-private partnerships, as well as cross-sectoral cooperation at the national, regional and global levels;

(e) Monitor and assess progress at the national, regional and global levels through reporting by Governments, as well as by international and regional organizations, institutions and instruments, and on this basis consider future actions needed;

(f) Strengthen political commitment to the management, conservation and sustainable development of all types of forests through ministerial engagement, the development of ways to liaise with the governing bodies of international and regional organizations, institutions and instruments, and the promotion of action-oriented dialogue and policy formulation related to forests;

3. Further decides, in order to achieve the objective and to carry out the functions outlined above:

(a) To establish an intergovernmental body called the United Nations Forum on Forests;

(b) To invite the executive heads of relevant organizations of the United Nations system and heads of other relevant international and regional organizations, institutions and instruments to form a collaborative partnership on forests to support the work of the Forum and to enhance cooperation and coordination among participants, and to call upon their governing bodies and their heads to support the activities of the collaborative partnership on forests to achieve the goals of the Forum;

(c) That the Forum shall, inter alia:

(i) Within five years, on the basis of the assessment referred to in paragraph 2 (e) above, consider, with a view to recommending to the Council, and through it to the General Assembly, the parameters of a mandate for developing a legal framework on all types of forests. This process could develop the financial provisions to implement any future agreed legal framework. The process could also consider recommendations made by the expert groups referred to in paragraph 4 (k) below on the establishment of mechanisms on finance, technology transfer and trade;

(ii) Take steps to devise approaches towards appropriate financial and technology transfer support to enable the implementation of sustainable forest management, as recommended under the Intergovernmental Panel on Forests/Intergovernmental Forum on Forests process;

4. Decides to establish the Forum as a subsidiary body of the Council composed of all States Members of the United Nations and States members of the specialized agencies with full and equal participation, including voting rights, with the following working modalities:

(a) The Forum should be open to all States and should operate in a transparent and participatory manner. Relevant international and regional organizations, including regional economic integration organizations, institutions and instruments, as well as major groups, as identified in Agenda 21, should also be involved;

(b) The Forum shall operate under the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Council, provided that this is not in contradiction with the present paragraph;

(c) The supplementary arrangements established by the Council for the Commission on Sustainable Development in Council decisions 1993/215 of 12 February 1993 and 1995/201 of 8 February 1995 shall also apply to the Forum. Within the rules of procedure, the work of the Forum should build upon the transparent and participatory practices established by the Commission, the Intergovernmental Panel on Forests and the Intergovernmental Forum on Forests;

(d) The Bureau of the Forum shall consist of one Chairperson and four Vice-Chairpersons, one of whom shall also act as Rapporteur, in accordance with the principle of equitable geographical distribution;

(e) The Forum shall report to the Council and through it to the General Assembly;

(f) The Forum shall seek ways and means of strengthening synergies and coordination in policy development and implementation of forest-related activities, inter alia, by making the reports of its sessions available to relevant United Nations bodies and other international forest-related organizations, instruments and intergovernmental processes;

(g) The Forum shall work on the basis of a multi-year programme of work, drawing on the elements reflected in the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, the Forest Principles, chapter 11 of Agenda 21 and the Intergovernmental Panel on Forests/Intergovernmental Forum on Forests proposals for action;

(h) The Forum should maintain close links with the Commission on Sustainable Development, inter alia, through the convening of joint bureau meetings, taking particular account of the importance of ensuring the coherence of its activities with the broader sustainable development agenda carried out by the Commission;

(i) The Forum may hold its sessions at venues other than United Nations Headquarters in accordance with established United Nations rules and practices;

(j) The Forum shall initially meet once a year for a period of up to two weeks, subject to the review referred to below. The Forum shall hold a high-level ministerial segment for two to three days, as required. The high-level segment could include a one-day policy dialogue with the heads of organizations participating in the collaborative partnership on forests, as well as other forest-related international and regional organizations, institutions and instruments. The Forum should ensure the opportunity to receive and consider inputs from representatives of major groups, as identified in Agenda 21, in particular through the organization of multi-stakeholder dialogues;

(k) The Forum may recommend, as appropriate, the convening of ad hoc expert groups of limited duration, involving experts from developed and developing countries, to provide scientific and technical advice as well as to consider mechanisms and strategies for the financing and transfer of environmentally sound technologies, and may encourage country-sponsored initiatives, such as international expert meetings;

5. Recommends that the General Assembly, taking into account its resolution 1798(XVII) of 11 December 1962, make the necessary provisions so that travel expenses for one representative of each of those member States of the Forum that is also a member State of the Commission on Sustainable Development and is participating in a session of the Forum are paid from the regular budget of the United Nations;

6. Invites voluntary extrabudgetary contributions in support of the participation of representatives of developing countries that are not members of the Commission on Sustainable Development in sessions of the Forum and its subsidiary bodies;

7. Decides that the Forum shall:

(a) Hold a short organizational meeting, as soon as possible, for the purpose of electing its officers, determining the duration of their terms of office and considering all proposals and options on the location of the secretariat, in conjunction with four days of informal consultations regarding the draft multi-year programme of work;

(b) Hold its first substantive session in 2001 with the following provisional agenda:

1. Adoption of the multi-year programme of work.
2. Development of a plan of action for the implementation of the Intergovernmental Panel on Forests/Intergovernmental Forum on Forests proposals for action, which will address financial provisions.

3. Initiation of the work of the Forum with the collaborative partnership on forests.

4. Provisional agenda, date and venue for the second substantive session of the Forum in 2002.

5. Proposed venues of future sessions of the Forum;

8. Recommends that the collaborative partnership on forests build on a high-level, informal group, such as the Inter-Agency Task Force on Forests, which would receive guidance from the Forum, facilitate and promote coordinated and cooperative action, including joint programming and submission of coordinated proposals to their respective governing bodies, and facilitate donor coordination. Such a partnership would submit coordinated inputs and progress reports to the Forum, operate in an open, transparent and flexible manner, and undertake periodic reviews of its effectiveness;

9. Also recommends that the Forum complete its consideration of the issues noted in paragraph 3 (c) (ii) above as a matter of priority in the context of the multi-year programme of work;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to establish a compact secretariat, comprised of highly qualified staff, constituted in accordance with established rules and procedures of the United Nations and strengthened through staff from secretariats of international and regional organizations, institutions and instruments, to support the work described above. The secretariat should service the Forum and support the collaborative partnership on forests. It should also coordinate its activities with the secretariat of the Commission on Sustainable Development;

11. Decides, bearing in mind paragraph 10 above and unless otherwise decided at the intergovernmental level, that it would be preferable to have the secretariat located at United Nations Headquarters in New York. A recommendation for a final decision on this matter should be made at the first organizational meeting of the Forum, in early 2001, taking into consideration all proposals;

12. Encourages the executive heads of relevant organizations of the United Nations system and heads of other relevant international and regional organizations, institutions and instruments to support the secretariat of the Forum, including by seconding staff, as done during the Intergovernmental Panel on Forests/Intergovernmental Forum on Forests process;

13. Recommends that the funding for the functioning of the Forum and its secretariat be provided from the regular budget of the United Nations, within existing resources, resources of organizations participating in the partnership and extrabudgetary resources provided by interested donors. Specific modalities shall be determined by relevant bodies of the United Nations and the governing bodies of the other organizations concerned;

14. Also recommends that the General Assembly decide on the funding for the functioning of the Forum and its secretariat in accordance with the budget procedures established by the Assembly in its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986;

15. Requests the Secretary-General, in proposing future United Nations programme budgets, to include provisions for the Forum and its secretariat;

16. Calls upon interested donor Governments, financial institutions and other organizations to make voluntary financial contributions to a trust fund to be established in order to facilitate, in particular, an early start of the work of the Forum and its secretariat;

17. Decides that the international arrangement on forests shall be dynamic and shall adapt to evolving conditions and that the effectiveness of this arrangement shall be reviewed in five years, and also decides that the five-year review of this arrangement shall also address the institutional framework of the Forum, including its position within the United Nations system;

18. Also decides that the establishment of the United Nations Forum on Forests shall not be construed as constituting a precedent.

Central African forest ecosystems

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/214 [YUN 1999, p. 992], the Secretary-General, in June [A/55/95], presented examples of various activities by international organizations regarding the conservation and sustainable development of Central African forest ecosystems. The report also identified obstacles in the efforts towards sustainable forest management in the region. The Secretary-General observed that improvements had been achieved by individual countries, especially at the policy level. There was still a general sense that tropical forests were threatened and that unsustainable forest management practices were still widespread. Participation of civil society in forest management required strengthening, further attention needed to be accorded to biodiversity conservation and enhanced financial support was necessary. In addition, there was a need to step up strong measures against illegal operations, such as illegal logging and poaching.

International Year of Mountains (2002)

An August report of the Secretary-General [A/55/218], prepared by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), described preparations for the International Year of Mountains (2002), declared by the General Assembly in resolution 53/24 [YUN 1998, p. 994]. FAO had been designated the lead agency for the Year. The report also explored areas that required greater attention in preparing for the Year and covered the issue of mobilizing adequate funding.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/581/Add.6], adopted resolution 55/189 without vote [agenda item 94].

Status of preparation for the International Year of Mountains, 2002

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/24 of 10 November 1998 on the International Year of Mountains, 2002,

Recalling also the relevant provisions of Agenda 21, in particular chapter 13 concerning mountain ecosystems and their conservation and sustainable development,

Recalling further Economic and Social Council resolutions 1997/45 of 22 July 1997 and 1998/30 of 29 July 1998,

Recalling the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Coordination, programme and other questions: proclamation of an international year of mountains",

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of preparations for the International Year of Mountains, 2002,

Noting with appreciation the work already undertaken to achieve sustainable mountain development by States, organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and non-governmental organizations,

1. Welcomes the activities undertaken by States, United Nations organizations, in particular the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and non-governmental organizations in preparation for the observance of the International Year of Mountains, and encourages them to continue their efforts;

2. Encourages all States, the United Nations system and all other actors to take advantage of the International Year of Mountains to ensure the present and future well-being of mountain communities by promoting conservation and sustainable development in mountain areas; to increase awareness and knowledge of mountain ecosystems, their dynamics and functioning, and their overriding importance in providing a number of crucial goods and services essential to the well-being of both rural and urban, highland and lowland people, in particular water supply, food security; and to promote and defend the cultural heritage of mountain communities and societies;

3. Encourages States and relevant United Nations funds and programmes, specialized agencies, non-governmental organizations and the private sector to support local, national and international programmes and projects for the International Year of Mountains, inter alia, through voluntary financial contributions;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session an interim report on the activities of the International Year of Mountains and to report to the Assembly at its fifty-eighth session on the outcome of the Year and the further implementation of efforts to achieve sustainable mountain development, taking into account any relevant decisions adopted during the ten-year review of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 2002.

Marine ecosystems

Oceans and seas

Global waters assessment

The Global International Waters Assessment, inaugurated in 2000, was aimed at assessing international waters and causes of environmental problems in 66 water regions and at focusing on the key issues facing the aquatic environment in transboundary waters. The programme, mainly funded by GEF, formed the assessment component of UNEP's new water policy and strategy.

Global Programme of Action

The first phase of the Global Programme of Action (GPA) for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities [YUN 1995, p. 1081] was completed in 2000, which included the preparation of 10 regional assessments and nine regional programmes of action on land-based activities. Those assessments were the basis of two global reports on the state of the marine environment and on land-based activities affecting the quality of the marine, coastal and freshwater environment. The activities of the GPA clearing house mechanism continued to expand with the development of the pollutant source categories of nodes by the relevant UN agencies and of regional prototype nodes in selected regions of the regional seas programme.

In response to a 1999 UNEP Governing Council request [YUN 1999, p. 996], an expert group meeting to prepare for the first intergovernmental GPA review in 2001 was held (The Hague, 26-28 April) [UNEP/GC.21/INF/9]. The experts agreed to focus the review on national and regional programmes of action; voluntary agreements involving the private and public sectors; capacity-building; financing; and monitoring progress and sharing experiences. The meeting of experts recommended that sewage, as one of the most important GPA components, should be assigned a priority for discussion at the 2001 review meeting and at a high-level segment on sewage.

Regional seas programme

The Executive Director, by a December note [UNEP/GC.21/INF/6], presented a progress report for 2000 on the regional seas programme, the central programme of UNEP, providing the major legal, administrative, substantive and financial framework for the implementation of Agenda 21, and its chapter on oceans in particular. The programme was based on periodically revised action plans adopted by high-level intergovernmental meetings and implemented, in most cases, within the framework of legally binding regional seas conventions and protocols. Currently, 15 regions were covered by adopted action plans, and 11 of the action plans were supported by regional seas conventions.

The Third Global Meeting of Regional Seas Conventions and Action Plans (Monaco, 6-10 November) [UNEP/GC.21/INF/14] discussed critical problems and issues facing regional seas conventions and action plans; strengthening links among regional seas conventions and action plans, and between seas conventions and chemicals-related conventions, as well as biodiversity-related conventions and agreements; GPA implementation; and oceans assessment and monitoring.

Pursuant to a 1999 Governing Council decision [YUN 1999, p. 997], the first meeting of high-level, Government-designated experts of the proposed north-east Pacific regional seas programme met (Panama City, 5-8 September) [UNEP/GC.21/INF/11] to negotiate a convention and action plan for the protection and sustainable development of that region. A major outcome of the meeting was initiating a process linking the region to the 2001 GPA review, culminating in a regional work programme for 2001-2006. A second meeting of experts was planned for March 2001 in Managua, Nicaragua.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/582/Add.4], adopted resolution 55/203 without vote [agenda item 95 (d)].

Promoting an integrated management approach to the Caribbean Sea area in the context of sustainable development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the principles and commitments enshrined in the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and the principles embodied in the Declaration of Barbados and the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, as well as other relevant declarations and international instruments,

Recalling the Declaration and review document adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-second special session,

Taking into account all other relevant resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, including resolution 54/225 of 22 December 1999,

Reaffirming the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, and emphasizing the fundamental character of the Convention,

Conscious that the problems of ocean space are closely interrelated and that they need to be considered as a whole,

Recalling the Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region, signed at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, on 24 March 1983, which contains the definition of the wider Caribbean region of which the Caribbean Sea is part,

Welcoming the adoption, on 16 October 1999 in Aruba, of the Protocol Concerning Pollution from Land-based Sources and Activities to the Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region,

Welcoming also the entry into force, on 18 June 2000, of the Protocol Concerning Specially Protected Areas and Wildlife to the Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region,

Recalling the relevant work done by the International Maritime Organization,

Considering that the Caribbean Sea area includes a large number of States, countries and territories, most of which are developing countries and small island developing States that are ecologically fragile, structurally weak and economically vulnerable and are also affected, inter alia, by their limited capacity, narrow resource base, need for financial resources, high levels of poverty and the resulting social problems and the challenges and opportunities of globalization and trade liberalization,

Recognizing that the Caribbean Sea has a unique biodiversity and highly fragile ecosystem,

Emphasizing that the Caribbean countries have a high degree of vulnerability occasioned by climate change and variability, associated phenomena, such as the rise in sea level, the El Niño/Southern Oscillation phenomenon and the increase in the frequency and intensity of natural disasters caused by hurricanes, floods and droughts, and that they are also subject to natural disasters, such as those caused by volcanoes, tsunamis and earthquakes,

Welcoming the establishment of the working group on the El Niño/La Niña phenomenon within the framework of the Inter-Agency Task Force for Disaster Reduction,

Bearing in mind the heavy reliance of most of the Caribbean economies on their coastal areas, as well as on the marine environment in general, to achieve their sustainable development needs and goals,

Recognizing the Caribbean Environment Outlook process currently being undertaken by the United Nations Environment Programme, and welcoming the support being provided by the Caribbean Environment Programme of the United Nations Environment Programme towards its implementation,

Acknowledging that the intensive use of the Caribbean Sea for maritime transport, as well as the considerable number and interlocking character of the maritime areas under national jurisdiction where Caribbean countries exercise their rights and duties under international law, present a challenge for the effective management of the resources,

Noting the problem of marine pollution caused, inter alia, by land-based sources and the continuing threat of pollution from ship-generated waste and sewage as well as from the accidental release of hazardous and noxious substances in the Caribbean Sea area,

Taking note of resolution GC(44)/RES/17 of 22 September 2000 of the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency on safety of transport of radioactive materials,

Mindful of the diversity and dynamic interaction and competition among socio-economic activities for the use of the coastal areas and the marine environment and their resources,

Mindful also of the efforts of the Caribbean countries to address in a more holistic manner the sectoral issues relating to the management of the Caribbean Sea area and, in so doing, to promote an integrated management approach to the Caribbean Sea area in the context of sustainable development, through a regional cooperative effort among Caribbean countries,

Noting the efforts of the Caribbean countries, within the framework of the Association of Caribbean States, to develop further support for their concept of the Caribbean Sea as an area of special importance, in the context of sustainable development and in conformity with the relevant provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea,

Cognizant of the importance of the Caribbean Sea to present and future generations and its importance to the heritage, the continuing economic well-being and sustenance of people living in the area, and the urgent need for the countries of the region to take appropriate steps for its preservation and protection, with the support of the international community,

1. Recognizes the importance of adopting an integrated management approach to the Caribbean Sea area in the context of sustainable development;

2. Encourages the further promotion of an integrated management approach to the Caribbean Sea area in the context of sustainable development, in accordance with the recommendations contained in resolution 54/225, as well as the provisions of Agenda 21, the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the outcome of the twenty-second special session of the General Assembly and the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development, and in conformity with relevant international law, including the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea;

3. Also encourages the continued efforts of the Caribbean countries to develop further an integrated management approach to the Caribbean Sea area in the context of sustainable development and, in this regard, to continue to develop regional cooperation in the management of their ocean affairs in the context of sustainable development, to address such issues as land-based pollution, pollution from ships and the diversity and dynamic interaction of, and competition among, socio-economic activities for the use of the coastal areas and the marine environment and their resources;

4. Calls upon the United Nations system and the international community to assist Caribbean countries and their regional organizations in their efforts to ensure the protection of the Caribbean Sea from degradation as a result of pollution from ships, in particular through the illegal release of oil and other harmful substances, from illegal dumping or accidental release of hazardous waste, including radioactive materials, nuclear waste and dangerous chemicals, in violation of relevant international rules and standards, as well as pollution from land-based activities;

5. Calls upon all relevant States to take the necessary steps to bring into force, and to support the implementation of, the Protocol Concerning Pollution from Land-based Sources and Activities, in order to protect the marine environment of the Caribbean Sea from land-based pollution and degradation;

6. Calls upon all States to become contracting parties to relevant international agreements to promote the protection of the marine environment of the Caribbean Sea from pollution and degradation from ships;

7. Invites intergovernmental organizations within the United Nations system to continue efforts to assist Caribbean countries to become parties to the relevant conventions and protocols and to implement them effectively;

8. Calls upon the international community, the United Nations system and the multilateral financial institutions, including the Global Environment Facility, within its mandate, to support actively the above-mentioned approach;

9. Calls upon Member States to improve as a matter of priority their emergency response capabilities and the containment of environmental damage, particularly in the Caribbean Sea, in the event of natural disasters or of an accident or incident relating to maritime navigation;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to it at its fifty-seventh session, under the sub-item entitled "Further implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States" of the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development", on the implementation of the present resolution, taking into account the views expressed by relevant regional organizations.

Living marine resources

Drift-net fishing, unauthorized fishing and fisheries by-catch and discards

In September [A/55/386], the Secretary-General presented information received from States, UN bodies, specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and regional and subregional fisheries organizations on efforts made to implement General Assembly resolution 53/33 [YUN 1998, p. 995] regarding the impact on the world's living marine resources by large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing, unauthorized fishing in zones of national jurisdiction, fisheries by-catch and discards. He also included information on their efforts to implement plans of action for the management of fishing capacity, for reducing incidental catch of seabirds in long-line fisheries and for the conservation of sharks.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 October [meeting 44], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/8 [draft: A/55/L.11 & Add.1] by recorded vote (103-0-44) [agenda item 34 (b)].

Large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing, unauthorized fishing in zones of national jurisdiction and on the high seas, fisheries by-catch and discards, and other developments

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 46/215 of 20 December 1991, 49/116 and 49/118 of 19 December 1994, 50/25 of 5 December 1995, 51/36 of 9 December 1996, 52/29 of 26 November 1997 and 53/33 of 24 November 1998, as well as other resolutions on large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing, unauthorized fishing in zones of national jurisdiction and on the high seas, fisheries by-catch and discards, and other developments,

Welcoming the Rome Declaration on the Implementation of the Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries adopted by the Ministerial Meeting on Fisheries of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in March 1999,

Noting that the Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries sets out principles and global standards of behaviour for responsible practices to conserve, manage and develop fisheries, including guidelines for fishing on the high seas and in areas under the national jurisdiction of other States, and on fishing gear selectivity and practices, with the aim of reducing by-catch and discards,

Recognizing that coordination and cooperation at the global, regional, subregional as well as national levels in the areas, inter alia, of data collection, information-sharing, capacity-building and training are crucial for the conservation, management and sustainable development of marine living resources,

Noting the conclusion of negotiations to establish new regional organizations and arrangements in several heretofore unmanaged fisheries, in particular the Convention on the Conservation and Management of Highly Migratory Fish Stocks in the Western and Central Pacific Ocean and the Convention on the Conservation and Management of Fishery Resources in the South-east Atlantic Ocean, and highlighting that these agreements were concluded pursuant to the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks,

Noting also the adoption by the States members of the Permanent Commission for the South Pacific of the Framework Agreement for the Conservation of Living Marine Resources in High Seas of the South-east Pacific,

Recognizing the importance of the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks and the Agreement to Promote Compliance with International Conservation and Management Measures by Fishing Vessels on the High Seas, and noting with concern that neither of these agreements has yet entered into force,

Noting with satisfaction that the Committee on Fisheries of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in February 1999 adopted international plans of action for the management of fishing capacity, for reducing the incidental catch of seabirds in longline fisheries and for the conservation and management of sharks,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General, and emphasizing the useful role that the report plays in bringing together information relating to the sustainable development of the world's marine living resources provided by States, relevant international organizations, regional and subregional fisheries organizations and non-governmental organizations,

Noting with satisfaction that, while significant work remains to be done, interested parties have made real progress towards sustainable fisheries management,

Noting that while there has been generally a marked decrease in the reporting of large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing activities in most regions of the world's oceans and seas, large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing remains a threat to marine living resources in some areas,

Expressing its continuing concern that efforts should be made to ensure that the implementation of resolution 46/215 in some parts of the world does not result in the transfer to other parts of the world of drift-nets that contravene the resolution,

Noting with concern that unauthorized fishing in zones of national jurisdiction and on the high seas/illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing remains as one of the most severe problems currently affecting world fisheries and the sustainability of marine living resources, and noting also that unauthorized fishing in zones of national jurisdiction and on the high seas/illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing has a detrimental impact on the food security and the economies of many States, particularly developing States,

Noting the significance of the work being undertaken under the aegis of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to develop a comprehensive international plan of action to prevent, deter and eliminate illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing, involving consideration of the range of possibilities for action in accordance with international law, and acknowledging the work done by certain regional fisheries organizations,

Welcoming the efforts in the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to address the causes of illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing, through a comprehensive and integrated approach which involves all relevant States and regional and subregional fisheries management organizations and arrangements in the deterrence of illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing which encourages all States to take measures, to the greatest extent possible, or to cooperate to ensure that their nationals, in accordance with article 117 of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, and vessels flying their flag do not support or engage in illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing,

Welcoming also the cooperation being undertaken with the International Labour Organization and other relevant international organizations in the joint Ad Hoc Working Group on combating illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing of the Food and Agriculture

Organization of the United Nations and the International Maritime Organization,

Recognizing the need for the International Maritime Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and regional and subregional fisheries management organizations and arrangements to address the issue of marine debris derived from land-based and ship-generated sources of pollution, including derelict fishing gear, which can cause mortality and habitat destruction of marine living resources,

Expressing concern at the significant level of by-catch and discards in several of the world's commercial fisheries, and recognizing that the development and use of selective, environmentally safe and cost-effective fishing gear and techniques will be important for reducing by-catch and discards,

Expressing concern also at the reports of continued loss of seabirds, particularly albatrosses, as a result of incidental mortality from longline fishing operations, and the loss of other marine species, including sharks and fin-fish species, as a result of incidental mortality, and noting the recent initiative to develop a convention for the protection of southern hemisphere albatrosses and petrels,

1. Reaffirms the importance it attaches to the long-term conservation, management and sustainable use of the marine living resources of the world's oceans and seas and the obligations of States to cooperate to this end, in accordance with international law, as reflected in the relevant provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, in particular the provisions on cooperation set out in part V and part VII, section 2, of the Convention regarding straddling stocks, highly migratory species, marine mammals, anadromous stocks and marine living resources of the high seas;

2. Also reaffirms the importance it attaches to compliance with its resolutions 46/215, 49/116, 49/118, 50/25, 52/29 and 53/33, and urges States and other entities to enforce fully the measures recommended in those resolutions;

3. Encourages all States to implement directly or, as appropriate, through the relevant international, regional and subregional organizations and arrangements, the international plans of action of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations for reducing the incidental take of seabirds in longline fisheries, for the conservation and management of sharks and for the management of fishing capacity, since the state of progress in the implementation of all three plans will be reported to the Committee on Fisheries of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations at the twenty-fourth session of the Committee, to be held from 26 February to 2 March 2001;

4. Takes note with satisfaction of the activities of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations aimed at providing assistance to developing countries in upgrading their capabilities in monitoring, control and surveillance, through its Interregional Programme of Assistance to Developing Countries for the Implementation of the Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries;

5. Also takes note with satisfaction of the activities of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, in cooperation with relevant United Nations agencies, in particular the United Nations Environment Programme and the Global Environment Facility, aimed at promoting the reduction of by-catch and discards in fisheries activities;

6. Reiterates the importance of continued or strengthened efforts by States directly or, as appropriate, through the relevant regional and subregional organizations, and by other international organizations, to make it a high priority to support, including through financial and/or technical assistance, with a particular emphasis on capacity-building, the efforts of developing States, in particular the least developed countries and the small island developing States, to achieve the goals and implement the actions called for in the present resolution, including to improve the monitoring and control of fishing activities and the enforcement of fishing regulations;

7. Urges States, relevant international organizations and regional and subregional fisheries management organizations and arrangements that have not done so to take action to reduce by-catch, fish discards and post-harvest losses, consistent with international law and relevant international instruments, including the Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries;

8. Calls upon States and other entities referred to in article 1, paragraph 2 (b), of the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks that have not done so to ratify or accede to the Agreement and to consider applying it provisionally;

9. Calls upon States and other entities referred to in article 10, paragraph 1, of the Agreement to Promote Compliance with International Conservation and Management Measures by Fishing Vessels on the High Seas that have not deposited instruments of acceptance of the Agreement to do so;

10. Recalls that Agenda 21, adopted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, calls upon States to take effective action, consistent with international law, to deter reflagging of vessels by their nationals as a means of avoiding compliance with applicable conservation and management measures for fishing vessels on the high seas;

11. Calls upon States that have not done so to take measures to deter reflagging of fishing vessels flying their flag to avoid compliance with applicable obligations and to ensure that fishing vessels entitled to fly their flag do not fish in areas under the national jurisdiction of other States unless duly authorized by the authorities of the States concerned and in accordance with the conditions set out in the authorization, and that they do not fish on the high seas in contravention of the applicable conservation and management measures;

12. Urges States to continue the development of an international plan of action on illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing for the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, as a matter of priority, so that its Committee on Fisheries can be in a position to adopt elements for inclusion in a comprehensive and effective plan of action at its twenty-fourth session;

13. Appeals to States and regional fisheries organizations, including regional fisheries management bodies and regional fisheries arrangements, to promote the application of the Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries within their areas of competence;

14. Reaffirms the rights and duties of coastal States to ensure proper conservation and management measures with respect to the living resources in zones under their national jurisdiction, in accordance with international law, as reflected in the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea;

15. Invites regional and subregional fisheries management organizations and arrangements to ensure that all States having a real interest in the fisheries concerned may become members of such organizations or participate in such arrangements;

16. Encourages the International Maritime Organization and other relevant agencies, organizations and States to continue working constructively with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to combat unauthorized fishing in zones of national jurisdiction and on the high seas/illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing;

17. Invites the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to continue its cooperative arrangements with United Nations agencies on illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing and to report to the Secretary-General, for inclusion in his annual report on oceans and the law of the sea, on priorities for cooperation and coordination in this work;

18. Affirms the need to strengthen, where necessary, the international legal framework for intergovernmental cooperation in the management of fish stocks and in combating illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing, in a manner consistent with the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and taking into account the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks, and other relevant principles of international law;

19. Also affirms the central role that regional and subregional fisheries management organizations and arrangements have in intergovernmental cooperation to assess marine living resources within their competence, to manage their conservation and sustainable use and thus to promote food security and sustain the economic base of many States and communities, and further affirms that they also will play a key role in implementing applicable international law including, as appropriate, the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, the Fish Stocks Agreement and the Compliance Agreement, and in promoting the application of the Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries;

20. Calls upon the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Maritime Organization, regional and subregional fisheries management organizations and arrangements and other appropriate intergovernmental organizations to take up, as a matter of priority, the issue of marine debris as it relates to fisheries and, where appropriate, to promote better coordination and help States to implement fully relevant international agreements, including annex V to and the Guidelines of the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, 1973, as modified by the Protocol of 1978 relating thereto;

21. Invites all relevant parts of the United Nations system, international financial institutions and multi-lateral and bilateral donor agencies to take into account the importance of marine science, including the importance of protecting the ecosystem, and the precautionary approach, with the aim of providing support to sub-regional and regional organizations and arrangements and their member States, for sustainable fisheries management and conservation, and notes that, for developing countries, capacity-building is essential for the sustainable development of marine living resources;

22. Recommends that the biennial conference of regional and subregional fisheries management organizations and arrangements with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations consider measures to strengthen further the role of these organizations in all aspects of fisheries conservation and management;

23. Also recommends that the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations consider inviting the intergovernmental organizations relevant to its work to join the biennial conference of regional fisheries organizations;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all members of the international community, relevant intergovernmental organizations, the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, regional and subregional fisheries management organizations and relevant non-governmental organizations, and to invite them to provide the Secretary-General with information relevant to the implementation of the present resolution;

25. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, including the status and implementation of the Agreement to Promote Compliance with International Conservation and Management Measures by Fishing Vessels on the High Seas, the implementation of the international plans of action for the management of fishing capacity, for reducing the incidental catch of seabirds in longline fisheries, and for the conservation and management of sharks, and efforts undertaken by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to combat illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing, taking into account the information provided by States, relevant specialized agencies, in particular the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and other appropriate organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, regional and subregional organizations and arrangements and other relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

26. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-seventh session, under the item entitled "Oceans and the law of the sea", a sub-item entitled "Large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing, unauthorized fishing in zones of national jurisdiction and on the high seas/illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing, fisheries by-catch and discards, and other developments".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 55/8:

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guyana, Haiti, India, Indonesia,

Conservation of wildlife

As at 31 December, the 1994 Lusaka Agreement on Cooperative Enforcement Operations Directed at Illegal Trade in Wild Fauna and Flora [YUN 1994, p. 951], which entered into force in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 970], had been ratified or acceded to by six States (Congo, Kenya, Lesotho, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia). The Agreement aimed to reduce, and ultimately eliminate, illegal trafficking in African wildlife.

The third meeting of the Governing Council of the Parties to the Lusaka Agreement took place (Nairobi, 3-5 July) to review the status of implementation of the Agreement by the parties and the Lusaka Agreement Task Force, established to combat international syndicates smuggling wildlife in the region.

Protection against harmful products and wastes

Chemical safety

As at 31 December, 72 States and the EC had signed and 12 States (Bulgaria, Czech Republic, El Salvador, Guinea, Hungary, Kyrgyzstan, Netherlands, Oman, Panama, Saudi Arabia, Slovenia, Suriname) had ratified or acceded to the 1998 Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent (PIC) Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade [YUN 1998, p. 997]. The Convention was to enter into force 90 days following the deposit of the fiftieth instrument of ratification.

The seventh session of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee (INC) for an International Legally Binding Instrument for the Application of the PIC Procedure (Geneva, 30 October-3 November) [UNEP/FAO/PIC/INC.7/15] reviewed proposals to place two additional pesticides, ethylene oxide and ethylene dichloride, on a list of hazardous chemicals that were subject to international controls. In other action, INC adopted a policy on contaminants. Other decisions dealt with approaches to consider certain contaminants, discontinuation of the interim PIC procedure, the site of the Convention's secretariat, an incident report form and the process of drafting decision guidance documents.

The 29-member Interim Chemical Review Committee, a subsidiary body established by INC in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 997] to make recommendations on the inclusion of banned and severely restricted chemicals or hazardous pesticide formulations in the PIC procedure, held its first session (Geneva, 21-25 February) [UNEP/FAO/PIC/ICRC.1/6]. The Committee considered mechanisms for adding hazardous pesticides and industrial chemicals to the PIC procedure, as well as the addition of four pesticides to PIC (bromacil, ethylene dichloride, ethylene oxide, maleic hydrazide).

Persistent organic pollutants

The fourth session of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for an International Legally Binding Instrument for Implementing International Action on Certain Persistent Organic Pollutants (POPs) (Bonn, 20-25 March) [UNEP/POPS/INC.4/5] considered individual draft articles. At the Committee's fifth session (Johannesburg, South Africa, 4-9 December) [UNEP/POPS/INC.5/7 & Corr.1], the legal drafting group made proposals for streamlining the successive drafts of the articles and annexes, which culminated in the approval of the draft articles. The Conference of Plenipotentiaries to adopt the Convention was planned for May 2001 in Sweden. The Committee agreed to name the text the "Stockholm Convention"; the draft text was appended to the Committee's report.

Hazardous wastes

As at 31 December 2000, the number of parties to the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420], which entered into force in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 685], rose to 142, with the accession of the Dominican Republic, Ethiopia, Kenya, Kiribati, Lesotho, Mali, Malta and Yugoslavia. The 1995 amendment to the Convention [YUN 1995, p. 1333], not yet in force, had been ratified, accepted or approved by 22 parties. The 1999 Basel Protocol on Liability and Compensation for Damage Resulting from Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1999, p. 998], which opened for signature in Berne, Switzerland, from 6 to 17 March and in New York from 1 April to 10 December, had 13 signatories at year's end.

The Technical Working Group of the Convention held its sixteenth (Geneva, 3-5 April)

[UNEP/CHW/TWG/16/12] and seventeenth (Geneva, 9-11 October) [UNEP/CHW/TWG/17/15] sessions. In October, the Group, among other things, adopted the technical guidelines on preventing and monitoring illegal traffic of biomedical and health-care wastes and reviewed draft guidelines for the environmentally safe dismantling of ships.

A regional consultation to prepare African countries towards reduction of reliance on DDT for malaria control (Harare, Zimbabwe, 8-10 February) [UNEP/HW CONF.1/AFRICA/Session 6/3] and an Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development/FAO/UNEP workshop on obsolete pesticides (Alexandria, Virginia, United States, 13-15 September) [UNEP/HW CONF.1/AFRICA/Background/2] were held within the context of the First Continental Conference for Africa on the Environmentally Sound Management of Unwanted Stockpiles of Hazardous Wastes and Their Prevention, to be held in January 2001 jointly by the Convention secretariat and Morocco.

Cleaner production

UNEP's Division of Technology, Industry and Economics continued efforts to work as a catalyst and encourage decision makers in government, industry and business to develop and adopt environmentally sound policies, strategies, practices and technologies. The implementation of a cleaner and safer production programme in all regions remained a priority. The sixth High-level Seminar on Cleaner Production (Montreal, 16-17 October), organized by UNEP to review and evaluate the status of cleaner production strategies worldwide, was followed by the International Pollution Prevention Summit (18-20 October), which aimed at expanding current understanding and implementation of pollution prevention. Another key event was the first Cleaner Production Round Table for Africa (Nairobi, 9-10 August), aimed at creating a mechanism for review, assessment and information exchange on cleaner production in Africa, and at linking cleaner production with sustainable consumption.

Other matters

Environmental law

In response to a 1999 Governing Council request [YUN 1999, p. 998], the Executive Director convened the Meeting of Senior Government Officials Expert in Environmental Law to Prepare a Programme for the Development and Periodic Review of Environmental Law for the First Decade of the Twenty-first Century (Nairobi, 23-27 October) [UNEP/Env.Law/4/4]. The officials adopted a draft UNEP strategic programme on environmental law for the next decade (Montevideo Programme III), which was annexed to the meeting's report. The draft programme contained components to increase the effectiveness of environmental law in such areas as implementation, compliance and enforcement; capacity-building; prevention and mitigation of environmental damage; avoidance and settlement of international environmental disputes; development of international environmental law; harmonization and coordination; public participation; and information technology. The programme also considered the issues of freshwater resources, coastal and marine ecosystems, soils, forests, biological diversity, pollution prevention and control, production and consumption patterns, and environmental emergencies and natural disasters.

Global Compact

The Global Compact, which aimed to engage the business community in advancing basic values in human rights, labour and the environment, was officially launched on 26 July in New York. The Global Compact challenged corporations and business associations to support a set of core values within their sphere of influence. The environment-related principles, taken from the 1992 Rio Declaration on Environment and Development adopted by UNCED [YUN 1992, p. 670], required business to support a precautionary approach to environmental challenges, undertake initiatives to promote greater environmental responsibility and encourage the development and diffusion of environmentally friendly technologies.

Follow-up to the 1996 UN Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II)

2001 General Assembly special session

Preparatory Committee

The Commission on Human Settlements, acting as the Preparatory Committee for the special (2001) session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, adopted by the 1996 United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) [YUN 1996, p. 992], held its first session (Nairobi, Kenya, 8-12 May) [A/55/121]. It adopted a resolution regarding international cooperation and financial support for the preparatory activities and the special session, as well as a resolution on the role of local authorities in the preparatory process and at the special session. A resolution on the scope to be covered by the review and appraisal process requested the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS) to report on the Advisory Committee of Local Authorities at the Preparatory Committee's second (2001) session and on the actions of the Global Campaign for Secure Tenure and the Global Campaign for Urban Governance (see p. 995) at the special session. Its secretariat was asked to prepare a draft declaration on human settlements in the new millennium. Other resolutions dealt with local, national and regional preparations, the outcome of the special session, and participation of youth in the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, proposing that the special session include a thematic focus on youth. In the provisional agenda for its second session, the Committee included a draft report on the overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, based on information contained in national reports, and a draft declaration on cities and other human settlements in the new millennium.

A February note by the secretariat [HS/C/PC.1/5] contained a draft text of a declaration on the role and mandate of UNCHS. February reports of the Executive Director discussed the scope to be covered by the review and appraisal process [HS/C/PC.1/2], local, national and regional preparations for the special session [HS/C/PC.1/3], and the role of local authorities, other partners and relevant UN organizations and agencies in the review and appraisal process [HS/C/PC.1/4].

Regional meetings that reviewed implementation of the Habitat Agenda included a ministerial-level meeting of the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), held together with the sixty-first session of the ECE Committee on Human Settlements (Geneva, 18-20 September) [HS/C/PC.2/2/Add.4 & Corr.1], which adopted the Ministerial Declaration Towards a Sustainable Improvement in Living Conditions; a meeting for Western Asia, organized by UNCHS and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (Manama, Bahrain, 16-18 October) [HS/C/PC.2/2/Add.6]; a meeting organized by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific and UNCHS, in collaboration with other organizations (Hangzhou, China, 19-23 October) [HS/C/PC.2/2/Add.3]; a meeting organized by the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and UNCHS (Santiago, Chile, 25-27 October) [HS/C/PC.2/2/Add.5]; and a meeting of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), organized by ECA and UNCHS (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 6-8 November) [HS/C/PC.2/2/Add.2]. In December [HS/C/PC.2/2], the Executive Director issued a draft report on the overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, which addressed the questions of constraints, priorities, strengthening of local authorities and the participation of the UN system, to be submitted to the Preparatory Committee.

Implementation

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Economic and Social Council decision 1999/281 [YUN 1999, p. 1347] and General Assembly resolution 54/208 [ibid., p. 1000], the Secretary-General, in June [A/55/83-E/2000/62], reported on the coordinated implementation by the UN system of the Habitat Agenda. He noted that further attention was required to strengthen the modalities of partnership between the UN system and its partners in civil society, particularly regarding mobilizing resources, promoting exchange of technology and access to information, raising the priority of adequate shelter and sustainable urban development in international cooperation and strengthening the strategic and operational partnerships with local authorities, NGOs, community-based organizations and the private sector. The Secretary-General discussed the Assembly's special session in terms of key commitments and strategies of the Habitat Agenda, presented guidelines for country reports, emphasized partnerships and the role of civil society, and presented various aspects of the role of the Commission on Human Settlements in monitoring and assessing progress made in implementing the Habitat Agenda goals.

The Committee of Local Authorities was established as an advisory body in January to strengthen the dialogue with local authorities involved in implementing the Habitat Agenda. It was expected to act as a think tank and as an early warning system on the future of cities. Regarding the coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda, a task manager system would address the gap in information and reporting within the UN system.

The UN system of organizations and agencies was called on to enhance its capacity for coordinated and complementary action and to make those efforts visible at regional, national and local levels. In addition, the Secretary-General presented recommendations to the Economic and Social Council aimed at the modalities of a UN-coordinated approach for implementing the Habitat Agenda, priorities for system-wide action and coordination of the UN system in preparing for the Assembly's special session.

The Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on 27 July (decision 2000/234).

Economic and Social Council action. In July, at its substantive session, the Economic and Social Council held a discussion on the coordinated implementation by the UN system of the Habitat Agenda. On 21 July [A/55/3/Rev.1 (agreed conclusions 2000/1)], the Council requested the relevant UN bodies and agencies, particularly the Executive Committee of the United Nations Development Group, to review the follow-up of their commitments on implementing the Habitat Agenda goals. Recalling General Assembly resolution 35/77 C [YUN 1980, p. 739], it asked the Secretary-General to review the matter of UNCHS participation in the work of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) and its subsidiary machinery, in the light of its role as focal point within the UN system on implementing the Habitat Agenda. ACC was invited to include in the agenda of its meetings issues relating to the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, and the Secretary-General was asked to organize regular briefings to inform Member States on ACC deliberations. The Council noted a proposal to merge existing initiatives into a streamlined Urban Forum, as well as the creation of the Advisory Committee of Local Authorities to advise the Executive Director on the role of local authorities in implementing the Habitat Agenda. The Secretary-General was asked to consider adopting a Habitat Agenda task manager system to facilitate coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda and to streamline reporting, to appoint a full-time UNCHS Executive Director and fill UNCHS vacancies for high-level positions, and to call on Member States to contribute financially to the secretariat to assist developing countries to participate in the special session and the preparatory process. Regional commissions were asked to facilitate the holding of regional meetings in preparation for the special session, and the international community, particularly developed countries, were asked to support the elaboration by developing countries of their national reports on the implementation of the Habitat Agenda.

Appointment. In July, the Secretary-General appointed Anna Kajumulo Tibaijuka (United Republic of Tanzania) as the Executive Director of UNCHS, with effect from 1 September.

Report of Executive Director. A report of the Executive Director [HS/C/PC.2/2/Add.1] stated that, by November, 69 national reports had been received by UNCHS, indicating that progress had been made towards most of the commitments in many countries but that more intensive action was needed in all areas. New housing and decentralization policies and strategies had been adopted or revised by several Governments, but implementation remained limited. Public-private partnerships, community-based approaches to shelter and sustainable urban development and stakeholder participation in local decision-making had increased, but more needed to be done in terms of resource allocation, capacity-building and empowerment to alleviate poverty and address shelter and sustainable human settlements.

Other action. At the first session of the Preparatory Committee, UNCHS submitted several new initiatives to operationalize its own role in assisting countries to implement the Habitat Agenda, such as the Global Campaign for Secure Tenure and the Global Campaign for Urban Governance, as well as the draft World Charter of Local Self-Government. The Global Campaign for Urban Governance (see p. 995), launched by UNCHS in 2000, aimed to improve the quality of life in urban areas, especially for the poor and marginalized, while the Global Campaign for Secure Tenure (see p. 995), also launched in 2000, offered viable policy options on tenure systems.

On 15 June, UNCHS organized an inter-agency meeting on the coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda by the UN system (New York). The coordination segment of the Economic and Social Council (New York, 10-12 July) considered prospects and specific action on the coordinated implementation by the UN system.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/581/Add.5], adopted resolution 55/194 without vote [agenda item 94 (e)].

Scope to be covered by the special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II)

The General Assembly,

Recalling paragraph 218 of the Habitat Agenda and its resolutions 51/177 of 16 December 1996 on the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and 53/180 of 15 December 1998 in which it decided that its special session for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the Conference would be held in June 2001 and that the Commission on Human Settlements should serve as the Preparatory Committee for the special session,

Taking into account its resolutions 54/208 and 54/209 of 22 December 1999 on the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and on the follow-up to the Conference,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Settlements resolutions 17/1 and 17/14 of 14 May 1999 on the follow-up to the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and on the preparations for the special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda,

Taking note of the report of the Commission on Human Settlements acting as the Preparatory Committee for the special session, on its first substantive session, held at Nairobi from 8 to 12 May 2000,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General on the coordinated implementation by the United Nations system of the Habitat Agenda,

I

Outcome of the special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda

1. Confirms that the special session should result in:
  - (a) Reconfirmation of the goals and commitments of the Habitat Agenda and review of the status of implementation, including the identification of progress, gaps, obstacles and challenges;
  - (b) The setting of global priorities for future action;
2. Emphasizes the role of the Commission on Human Settlements, as a standing body of the Economic and Social Council, as a central monitoring and coordinating body within the United Nations system for the implementation of the Habitat Agenda;
3. Also emphasizes the existing role of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) in supporting the implementation of the Habitat Agenda;
4. Further emphasizes, while recognizing that the implementation of the Habitat Agenda is the sovereign right and responsibility of each State, that international cooperation as stipulated in the Agenda remains an important component in the implementation of the Agenda;

II

Arrangements regarding participation of Habitat Agenda partners and observers in the special session

1. Decides that representatives of local authorities, non-governmental organizations and other Habitat Agenda partners may make statements in the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole and in the thematic committee of the special session for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II);
2. Also decides that, given the time available, a limited number of representatives of local authorities, non-governmental organizations and other Habitat Agenda partners may also make statements in the debate in plenary meeting, and requests the President of the General Assembly to submit the list of selected Habitat Agenda partners to the Member States in a timely manner for approval and to ensure that the selection of speakers is made on an equal and transparent basis, taking into account the geographical representation and diversity of Habitat Agenda partners;
3. Further decides that observers may make statements during the debate in plenary meeting in accordance with the rules and procedures of the General Assembly;

4. Decides that arrangements concerning the accreditation and participation of Habitat Agenda partners in the special session shall in no way create a precedent for other special sessions of the General Assembly;

III

Arrangements regarding accreditation of Habitat Agenda partners to the special session

1. Decides that accreditation to the special session shall be open to:
  - (a) Habitat Agenda partners that were accredited to the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II);
  - (b) Non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, with the exception of those whose application for consultative status with the Council has been rejected or whose consultative status has been withdrawn or suspended;
2. Also decides that accreditation of other interested and relevant Habitat Agenda partners that were not accredited to the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) should be considered by the Preparatory Committee, provided that those partners submit to the Committee composed of the Bureau of the Preparatory Committee and the Secretariat by 9 February 2001 an application for accreditation containing the following information:
  - (a) The purpose of the organization;
  - (b) Information identifying the programmes and activities of the organization in areas relevant to the subject of the special session and indicating in which country or countries they are carried out;
  - (c) Confirmation of the activities of the organization at the national, regional or international levels;
  - (d) Copies of annual or other reports of the organization, with financial statements and a list of financial sources and contributions, including governmental contributions;
  - (e) A list of the members of the governing body of the organization and their country of nationality;
  - (f) A description of the membership of the organization, indicating the total number of members, the names or organizations that are members and their geographical distribution;
  - (g) A copy of the constitution and/or by-laws of the organization;
- and further decides that the Bureau of the Preparatory Committee should submit by 19 February 2001 to the Preparatory Committee at its second session a list of partners that have submitted their application containing information on each partner's competence and relevance to the subject of the special session, and that the Preparatory Committee at its second session shall decide on a no-objection basis regarding the accreditation of those partners;
3. Requests the Secretary-General to disseminate widely all available information on accreditation procedures for the special session;
4. Decides that the arrangements set out above concerning accreditation to the special session shall in no way create a precedent for other special sessions of the General Assembly;

IV

Action at the local, national and regional levels

1. Calls upon all States to strengthen broad-based, participatory, gender-balanced national habitat committees, or similar consultative mechanisms, to review and report on local and national plans of action and, through consultative mechanisms, to coordinate and support further the implementation of the Habitat Agenda at the local and national levels;

2. Urges States to focus their assessment and monitoring of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda at the local, national and regional levels on key commitments related to policies and methods of evaluation, and recommends that States identify best practices, including enabling policies, legislation and exemplary plans of action, in implementing the Habitat Agenda in a gender-sensitive way, that they promote research on low-cost building technology for affordable housing and that they support the transfer of all such knowledge to ensure sustainability;

3. Confirms that the special session should facilitate sharing views on local, national and regional experiences in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda;

V

Partnership and the role of civil society

1. Encourages Member States to integrate contributions made by different partner groups towards further implementation of the Habitat Agenda in their national reports and to consider the inclusion of partner groups in broad-based, gender-balanced national delegations;

2. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) to report to the Preparatory Committee at its second session on the activities of the Advisory Committee of Local Authorities;

VI

Monitoring and assessment

1. Encourages Member States and Habitat Agenda partners to provide support for the preparation of the Global Report on Human Settlements and the State of the World's Cities report on a biennial basis so as to raise awareness of human settlements and to provide information on urban conditions and trends around the world;

2. Recommends that the Commission on Human Settlements pursue agreement by all Member States on a pool of common and easy-to-measure indicators applicable for national reporting and evaluation;

3. Encourages all relevant United Nations organizations and agencies and other development partners to support the efforts of national Governments to coordinate data collection and analysis and to develop a monitoring system at the local level on sustainable human settlements, with appropriate strengthening at all levels;

4. Encourages all Governments and partners to submit to the Secretariat examples of enabling urban policies and legislation relating to key items selected for country reporting to allow the Secretariat to combine best practices, enabling policies, legislation and action plans;

VII

International cooperation

1. Requests the Preparatory Committee, at its second session, to prepare a draft declaration on cities and other human settlements in the new millennium;

2. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) to report to the special session on the implementation of the twin goals of the Habitat Agenda, namely, adequate shelter for all and sustainable human settlements development, as well as on the actions and achievements of the Global Campaign for Secure Tenure and the Global Campaign for Urban Governance;

3. Calls upon the international community to support developing countries in the preparatory process for the special session, the second session of the Preparatory Committee and the special session itself;

4. Requests the international community to support urban poverty eradication in developing countries as well as reconstruction programmes following conflicts and natural disasters in order to allow affected countries to implement the Habitat Agenda effectively.

Also on 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/581/Add.5], adopted resolution 55/195 without vote [agenda item 94 (e)].

Preparations for the special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/162 of 20 December 1993, 50/227 of 24 May 1996, 51/177 of 16 December 1996, 52/190 of 18 December 1997, 53/180 of 15 December 1998, 54/207 of 22 December 1999 and 54/209 of 22 December 1999,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council decision 1999/281 of 30 July 1999, and taking note of agreed conclusions 2000/1 of the Economic and Social Council concerning the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Acknowledging the efforts made to secure extrabudgetary resources to defray the costs of the participation of representatives of developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, in the sessions of the Preparatory Committee for the special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and the special session itself in June 2001, as requested in paragraph 14 of resolution 53/180, and noting with concern that the response has not been adequate,

Taking note of the report of the Commission on Human Settlements acting as the Preparatory Committee for the special session, on its first substantive session, held at Nairobi from 8 to 12 May 2000,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General on the coordinated implementation by the United Nations system of the Habitat Agenda,

1. Welcomes the appointment of the new Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat);

2. Requests the Secretary-General to consider further strengthening of the Centre through the provision of the requisite support and stable, adequate and predictable financial resources, including by proposing additional regular budget resources and sufficient human resources, as envisaged by the General Assembly in its resolutions 52/220 of 22 December 1997 and 53/242 of 28 July 1999, for the consideration of the Assembly, with due regard for proper United Nations budgetary procedures;

3. Decides that the special session shall be held from 6 to 8 June 2001 at United Nations Headquarters in New York;

4. Also decides that the special session shall have a plenary, an ad hoc committee of the whole and a thematic committee, the details of which shall be worked out by the Preparatory Committee at its second session;

5. Further decides that the provisional agenda shall include the following items:

(a) Review and appraisal of progress made in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda;

(b) Further actions and initiatives for overcoming obstacles to the implementation of the Habitat Agenda;

(c) A declaration on cities and other human settlements in the new millennium;

6. Reiterates its invitation to Member States to participate in the special session at the highest political level possible and, in the meantime, to continue to extend support to the preparatory process;

7. Also reiterates its invitation to States members of the specialized agencies of the United Nations that are not members of the United Nations, as well as Palestine, in their capacity as observers, to participate in the special session in accordance with the rules and procedures of the General Assembly;

8. Invites other entities having a standing invitation to participate in the United Nations as observers to participate in the special session in accordance with the rules and procedures of the General Assembly;

9. Decides to invite the footnoted associate members<sup>a</sup> of the regional commissions to participate as observers in the special session and its preparatory process, subject to the rules of the General Assembly;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to consider defraying the costs not covered by General Assembly resolution 1798(XVII) of 11 December 1962 of the participation of one governmental representative from each least developed country in the special session and the cost of their participation in the second session of the Preparatory Committee through the use of extrabudgetary resources and, in the event that those resources prove to be insufficient, requests the Secretary-General to seek extrabudgetary funding from all possible sources;

11. Calls upon all States in a position to do so to make voluntary financial contributions to the Secretariat to assist developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, and their civil society partners to prepare adequately for, and be fully involved in, the preparatory process and the special session itself;

12. Reiterates its invitation to all relevant organs, funds and programmes, as well as the agencies of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, to continue to contribute to and be actively involved in the preparatory process and the special session;

13. Welcomes the launching of the Cities Alliance initiative by the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) and the World Bank to implement effectively the Cities without Slums programme of action as part of the efforts to achieve the twin goals of the Habitat Agenda, namely, adequate shelter for all and sustainable human settlements development in an urbanizing world, requests the Executive Director of the Centre to take a leadership and coordinating role in this initiative, and urges the Cities Alliance to include national Governments of developing countries as well as relevant United Nations organizations and specialized agencies in this initiative;

14. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) to report to the special session on the Cities Alliance initiative, including on its contribution to the implementation of the Habitat Agenda;

15. Requests the Preparatory Committee and the special session to take into account the outcome of the coordination segment of the Economic and Social Council on the implementation of the Habitat Agenda within the United Nations system;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to it at its fifty-sixth session a report on the special session;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session an item entitled "Implementation of the Habitat Agenda and outcome of the special session of the General Assembly on this topic".

OIOS review of Habitat II

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 48/218 B [YUN 1994, p. 1362], the Secretary-General, in February [A/54/764], transmitted a report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the follow-up to the 1997 review of the programme and administrative practices of UNCHS [YUN 1997, p. 1098]. The report observed that the revitalization efforts, which began in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1023] and continued in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 1003], had given new impetus to the Centre's future work, and much effort had resulted in a strategically focused draft work programme, and a streamlined organizational structure based on strategic goals, which provided for enhanced flexibility in implementing substantive activities.

The inspection observed advances in redefining the Centre's mission, in redesigning its work programme to concentrate resources on strategic goals and in aligning the new organizational and programmatic structures. OIOS noted encouraging signs of an emerging new work culture that placed a premium on initiative, creativity and flexibility. However, the administrative support necessary to sustain those efforts was weak. OIOS recommended that priority be given to financial and personnel management. The Centre, jointly with the United Nations Office at Nairobi, should continuously update, and energetically implement, concrete and detailed measures relative to financial and human resources management. The Secretary-General took note of the report's findings and concurred with the OIOS recommendations.

On 15 June, the General Assembly decided to defer consideration of the Secretary-General's report until its fifty-fifth session (decision 54/462 B).

In other action, on 7 April, the Assembly took note of the 1998 OIOS audit of Habitat II [YUN 1998, p. 1022] and of a 1997 OIOS report on an alleged conflict of interest in the Centre and the Joint Inspection Unit's comments thereon [A/52/339 & Add.1] (resolution 54/257).

Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000

The implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 43/181 [YUN 1988, p. 478] and aimed at facilitating adequate shelter for all by the year 2000 with an operational focus on national action, had been incorporated in the implementation of the Habitat Agenda. Most countries had enhanced their national shelter strategies and had incorporated them into their national Habitat Agenda action plans. Progress was especially noticeable in policy formulation reflected in enabling and participatory strategies for shelter development, the facilitation of public-private partnerships and the progressive realization of housing rights. Despite that progress, the gap between policy formulation and actual implementation had widened in many developing countries. Progress in carrying out programmes to improve living and housing conditions of low-income groups had generally been slow and inadequate as compared to the growing magnitude of the problem. In view of the complexities of translating enabling policies into sustained housing delivery programmes, UNCHS had shifted its approach. With its new emphasis on establishing norms and standards in the shelter policy sector, the Centre launched the Global Campaign for Secure Tenure (see below), which was geared towards promoting secure land tenure conditions as a prerequisite for mobilizing a people-centred housing process.

UN Centre for Human Settlements

The UNCHS work programme for 2000 focused on two subprogrammes, corresponding to the two main action areas of the Habitat Agenda: adequate shelter for all and sustainable human settlements in an urbanizing world. An operationalized version of the work programme for the year, including the specific responsibilities and objectives of the Centre's new organizational units, was submitted to the Committee of Permanent Representatives. The revitalization of the Centre gained further momentum and a new organizational structure was implemented during the year.

The Centre took steps to build the profile of an advocacy agency and focused on maximizing its operational impact through the launching of global campaigns. Following consultations with partner groups and stakeholders from civil society, the Global Campaign for Secure Tenure was launched in various regions between July and October. The events demonstrated the new advocacy role of the Centre and created political space for dialogue with the organized urban poor and women's groups. UNCHS, as a first step in following up the events with slum-upgrading projects under the City Alliance facility, set up co-operation agreements with local federations of slum-dwellers to provide support to local action plans, combining normative and operational activities. International instruments on housing rights were being activated by formulating a normative framework on secure tenure as an entry point to the application of housing rights within the context of the rights to development.

In adopting the Habitat Agenda, Member States and their partners recognized the importance of good governance and committed themselves to enabling the practice of transparent, responsible, accountable, just, effective and efficient governance of towns, cities and metropolitan areas. In 2000, the Centre conceptualized and launched the Global Campaign for Urban Governance, which represented the Centre's key contribution to implementing the Habitat Agenda's goal of sustainable development in an urbanizing world. The objective of the Campaign was to increase the capacity of local governments and urban stakeholders to practise good governance. In that regard, the Centre drafted a declaration on norms of good governance to guide the implementation of activities under the Campaign. Consultations on the normative framework of the Campaign were held during a series of international and regional meetings on urban governance and urban development strategies. Together with the draft World Charter of Local Self-Government, the declaration on norms of good governance was a vehicle for global advocacy. Furthermore, the Campaign developed an approach to identifying, supporting and promoting "Illustrative Cities", those cities whose local government was committed to developing its governance, where there was a critical mass of urban governance practices promoted by the local authority, and where there was potential for Campaign partners to work with the city in improving governance and in developing a learning process.

The Cities Alliance, a joint initiative between the Centre, the World Bank and bilateral agencies, provided financial and technical assistance for activities in two thematic areas: city development strategies and improving slum upgrading. The "Cities without Slums" action plan, a component of the initiative, was mentioned in the Secretary-General's action plan on the work of the United Nations in the twenty-first century, adopted in September as part of the Millennium Declaration (see p. 49). In June, an agreement was reached between the stakeholders of the Cities Alliance on the core partnership between the World Bank and the UN system, represented by UNCHS.

Assessment missions were carried out in Latin American and Caribbean countries affected by natural disasters, which led to action plans for rehabilitating human settlements, as well as for mitigating the effects of future events. Follow-up projects were implemented directly by the relevant Governments or with the participation of other external support agencies. UNCHS carried out assessment and identification missions to Indonesia (forest fires), Turkey (seismic vulnerability reduction) and India (floods), which led to the development of technical recommendations and longer-term collaborative activities. The Centre collaborated with UNEP in supporting China's flood vulnerability reduction. In the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, the Centre focused on providing technical assistance to rehabilitate the municipal administration; regularize housing and property rights; and restore property and land registries. UNCHS provided support to the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo in establishing the Housing and Property Directorate and the Housing and Property Claims Commission, which were responsible for settling disputes on housing and property rights; the temporary allocation of vacant housing; and the provision of legal guidance on housing and property issues. In the countries of Central and Eastern Europe with economies in transition, there was major progress in capacity-building for better urban governance.

By the end of 2000, the Global Urban Observatory of the Centre was assisting two countries and eight cities in each region in capacity-building to strengthen urban indicators and the collection of city-specific information and analysis. More than 90 cities in 20 countries had designated urban observatories and were being given training on the use of indicators for policy development. The Observatory was working on an index or indices that could be used to track progress in poverty reduction, city investment potential and overall quality of urban life.

During the year 2000, the Global Parliamentarians for Habitat organized and held several national and regional meetings, culminating in the Third Global Forum of Parliamentarians (Manila, Philippines, 25-28 July), which adopted the Manila Declaration, endorsing the new strategic vision of UNCHS.

Cooperation with UNEP continued on city environmental profiles, demonstrations in broad-based urban environmental planning and management, and normative work on guidelines and tools, as well as joint efforts for environmentally sound human settlements technology under the joint Sustainable Cities Programme. The future of the Programme was unclear due to problems with funding.

During the year, the Centre developed a comprehensive regionalization strategy based on the premise that a regional presence was necessary to increase the policy and operational capacities of the Centre and that the regional presence should be financially affordable and sustainable. Currently, the Centre had regional offices in Nairobi, Kenya (for Africa and the Arab States), Fukuoka, Japan (for Asia and the Pacific), and Rio de Janeiro, Brazil (for Latin America and the Caribbean). Activities in Europe and Central Asia were managed from Nairobi.

UN Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation

Biennial financial audit

In July [A/55/5/Add.8], the UN Board of Auditors transmitted to the General Assembly the financial report and audited financial statements of the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation for the 1998-1999 biennium. Expenditures in respect of project activities and programme support cost activities amounted to $18 million. The Board found that the Foundation did not fully comply with the UN System Accounting Standards insofar as it disclosed accounts receivable and accounts payable in net instead of gross terms. Expenditures exceeded allotment limits by a total of $1.3 million in respect of 11 trust funds and by $0.41 million in respect of three earmarked projects, indicating weak budgetary control and expenditure monitoring. In 12 of 28 cases, the Foundation did not select consultants on a competitive basis, contrary to the requirement of the comprehensive guidelines for the use of consultants. The Board made recommendations to improve compliance with the Accounting Standards, to strengthen the monitoring of expenditure and to improve the selection process for consultants.

Chapter VIII

Population

In 2000, with the world's population reaching 6.06 billion at mid-year, UN activities in the field of population were guided by the Programme of Action adopted at the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) and the key actions for the further implementation of the Programme of Action adopted at the twenty-first special session of the General Assembly in 1999.

A top priority for the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the largest internationally funded source of population assistance and the lead UN organization for advancing the ICPD Programme of Action, was the development of a new global strategy for reproductive health commodity security. UNFPA also continued to mobilize human and financial resources to provide universal access to primary education and reproductive health care; to work with both men and women to break the vicious cycle of discrimination and gender-based violence; and to focus many of its projects on young people, who needed better information and services. The Fund further strengthened emergency reproductive health services in order to help millions of people fleeing armed conflict and natural disaster, and joined with partners to protect the health of mothers and decrease maternal mortality by expanding the availability and use of emergency obstetric care for complications of pregnancy and childbirth.

At its thirty-third session, the Commission on Population and Development considered the central theme of population, gender and development. It adopted a resolution on the subject, which was brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council. The Commission considered the key actions for the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action and discussed national experience in population matters. With regard to its future work, the Commission reaffirmed that "Population, environment and development" would be the special theme for 2001, and decided that future special themes would be "Reproductive rights and reproductive health" in 2002, and "Population, education and development" in 2003.

During the year, the United Nations Population Division continued to analyse demographic trends and population policies and to prepare and publish population estimates and projections.

Follow-up to the 1994 Conference on Population and Development

Implementation of the Programme of Action

Commission on Population and Development action. At its thirty-third session (New York, 27-30 March) [E/2000/25], the Commission on Population and Development had before it a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.9/2000/2] on the twenty-first special session of the General Assembly, held in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 1005], for the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action of the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) [YUN 1994, p. 955]. The special session, known as ICPD+5, had, by resolution S-21/2 [YUN 1999, p. 1006], adopted key actions for the further implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action. The report presented the major aspects and events of the review process and the key future actions adopted by the Assembly. It also highlighted some of the findings regarding progress in, and constraints on, the implementation of the Programme of Action.

With regard to the next steps to be taken, the report noted that ICPD+5 was widely regarded as a most successful endeavour, demonstrating the effectiveness of the United Nations in building global consensus through open and inclusive discussion. Although the progress of the first five years following ICPD provided an encouraging basis on which to build, formidable challenges remained. Foremost among them was the need to ensure the reproductive rights of individuals, especially women and girls, which was as pressing in 2000 as it was in 1994. Other areas to be addressed were the shortfall in funding to implement the Programme of Action; the need to enhance country capacity to meet ICPD goals; and the need to build partnerships among UN organizations and agencies. The report further noted the need to discuss possible options to mark the tenth anniversary, in 2004, of the adoption of the Programme of Action.

On 30 March [E/2000/25 (dec. 2000/2)], the Commission took note of the Secretary-General's report.

UNFPA action. In response to a 1999 request of the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)/UNFPA [YUN 1999, p. 1019], the Fund presented to the Board's annual session in June a report on UNFPA's future programme directions in the light of the outcome of ICPD+5 [DP/FPA/2000/9]. In reflecting on its future role against the backdrop of progress made and challenges remaining, the Fund came to two main conclusions: that the three UNFPA core programme areas endorsed by the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1093] (reproductive health, including family planning and sexual health; population and development strategies; and advocacy) remained valid, although there was a need to sharpen the focus of the Fund's support; and there was a need to strengthen the interlinkages between the three core programme areas.

The Fund was also taking account of trends in global demographic and reproductive patterns, including a continuing decline in the age at menarche for girls and a gradual increase in the age at marriage, resulting in a longer period of time of sexual maturity for young people before marriage and family-building, thus increasing sexual health risks for adolescents. Also, decreasing family size and the condensation of childbearing into a shorter period resulted in a longer period of sexual but not reproductive activity that had implications for contraceptive needs and for other reproductive health issues, such as unwanted pregnancy, abortion and sexually transmitted diseases. Further, as mortality and fertility both continued to decline, population ageing and its social and economic consequences, already a concern in developed countries, were emerging in almost every developing country as well. Finally, high rates of urbanization, with their social and economic implications, were an increasing concern for many countries.

As the tasks set out in the Programme of Action, which were further elaborated in the ICPD+5 process, were clearly beyond the capacity of a single organization to achieve, UNFPA would continue to strengthen working arrangements both within and outside the UN system in order to assist countries in their efforts to achieve the ICPD goals.

On 16 June [E/2000/35 (dec. 2000/11)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board endorsed the continuing use of the Fund's three core programme areas and emphasized that UNFPA support should be focused on meeting the priority needs as identified by programme countries within those areas. UNFPA was encouraged to fulfil its leadership role as an advocate at global and national levels for reproductive health, population and development issues, as well as actions agreed at ICPD and ICPD+5, and to help to ensure that ICPD goals and ICPD+5 benchmarks of particular concern to UNFPA were achieved. The Board endorsed the Fund's overall approach to collaboration and coordination within the UN system and with other stakeholders and organizations, and at the country level under the leadership of the concerned programme country Government. The Board noted with grave concern UNFPA's financial situation and the critical need for increased mobilization of resources, particularly from bilateral donors, the private sector, foundations and other appropriate sources.

Population, gender and development

In the context of follow-up to ICPD and ICPD+5, and as approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1999/224 [YUN 1999, p. 1032], the Commission on Population and Development's special theme at its 2000 session was "Population, gender and development". The Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General on world population monitoring, 2000: population, gender and development [E/CN.9/2000/3], which provided a summary of selected aspects of the issue. It included a historical review of population and gender issues in the global agenda and provided recent information on such topics as family formation, health and mortality, including HIV/AIDS, ageing and internal and international migration.

Also before the Commission was a report of the Secretary-General on monitoring of population programmes: population, gender and development [E/CN.9/2000/4], which gave a broad overview of the range of activities that had been initiated towards the implementation of the outcome of ICPD in the population, gender and development field. It presented the strategies and approaches adopted by countries in response to the Programme of Action concerning gender in population and development and analysed the challenges and constraints encountered by countries in programme implementation and matters pertaining to resource mobilization within the area of gender, population and development.

By a 30 March resolution [E/2000/25 (res. 2000/1)], which it brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council, the Commission requested the United Nations Population Division to continue to incorporate gender perspectives in all its research on population policies, levels and trends, including the analysis of demographic, social and economic data disaggregated by age and sex, so that Governments could benefit by achieving a better understanding of the relationships between population, gender and development in the global context and through inter-country comparisons. The Population Division was also requested to pay particular attention to the gender dynamics and demographic implications of the HIV/AIDS pandemic, infant, child and maternal mortality, and ageing of populations, and to improving the statistical description and analysis of the phenomena of all forms of discrimination and abuse against women and children, including sexual abuse, exploitation, trafficking and violence, as well as to the gender dimensions of migration.

Financial resources

In response to General Assembly resolutions 49/128 [YUN 1994, p. 963] and 50/124 [YUN 1995, p. 1094], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Population and Development a report on the flow of financial resources for assisting in the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action [E/CN.9/2000/5 & Corr.1]. He observed that international population assistance increased negligibly from $1.96 billion in 1997 to $2.06 billion in 1998. Although assistance remained virtually unchanged since 1996 at about $2 billion, the 1998 figures were positive in that they reversed the downward trend first observed in 1997. However, funding levels were only roughly 36 per cent of the $5.7 billion target agreed upon at ICPD as the international community's share in financing the Programme of Action.

The Secretary-General noted that the ICPD+5 process showed many encouraging signs of progress in advancing the Programme of Action. Country after country addressing the special session of the General Assembly had pointed out progress made, lessons learned, constraints encountered and further actions required to achieve full implementation of the ICPD goals. An important part of the review exercise was an analysis of actual funding for population programmes, as compared with resource targets contained in the Programme of Action. A lack of sufficient financial resources was cited as one of the chief constraints on full implementation of the Programme of Action. ICPD+5 had called on donor countries to intensify efforts to meet ICPD's $5.7 billion target in 2000, to reverse the current decline in overall official development assistance (ODA) and to strive to fulfil the agreed target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for overall ODA as soon as possible. In view of limited resources, donor countries, international agencies and recipient countries were also called on to strengthen their efforts and enhance their collaboration to avoid duplication, identify funding gaps and ensure that available funds were used as effectively and efficiently as possible.

UN Population Fund

---

In 2000, Dr. Nafis Sadik, Executive Director of UNFPA since 1987, indicated her intention to retire at the end of the year. On 26 September [E/2000/35 (dec. 2000/18)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, commending Dr. Sadik's visionary and courageous leadership of the Fund and recognizing her vital role as Secretary-General of ICPD, expressed its deep appreciation and gratitude for her effective management and distinguished leadership, for her accomplishments and for her deep commitment to population and development.

Thoraya Ahmed Obaid was appointed as the new Executive Director effective 1 January 2001.

2000 activities

In her annual report for 2000 [DP/FPA/2001/4 (Part I)] to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, the UNFPA Executive Director stated that, as always, the major work of the Fund during the year was the implementation of the Board-approved country programmes. In 2000, 94 country programmes were being implemented, including two subregional programmes in Caribbean and Pacific island countries. During the year, some $134.2 million was spent on country programmes and the intercountry programme, which were carried out in the three core programme areas: reproductive health, including family planning and sexual health; population and development strategies; and advocacy. As in the past, the largest share of resources, 63.2 per cent, went to reproductive health activities. Of the world's regions, sub-Saharan Africa absorbed 35.5 per cent of programme assistance while Asia and the Pacific accounted for 31.9 per cent.

A major event during 2000 was the Executive Board's adoption of the first multi-year funding framework (MYFF) for UNFPA (see p. 1005), which was designed to strengthen the Fund's contribution to addressing the challenges faced by countries in implementing the ICPD Programme of Action and the key actions endorsed at ICPD+5 and to help secure increasing, predictable and stable financial resources to implement programmes. In order to achieve the goals and outputs specified in the MYFF results framework, the Fund continued efforts to strengthen results-based management through training, review of systems and tools and the use of such tools as the logical framework (logframe). One important challenge was to strengthen country-level data systems that would make it possible to track progress in UNFPA-supported country programmes and in meeting the ICPD goals and the ICPD+5 benchmarks.

In response to the HIV/AIDS pandemic, the Fund had mobilized resources to safeguard youth and intensify efforts to integrate AIDS prevention into reproductive health programmes. UNFPA's efforts to prevent the spread of HIV centred on advocacy campaigns; providing information and education to promote safer sexual behaviour; promoting voluntary counselling and testing; helping to ensure reproductive health commodity security, especially of condoms; and training service providers. The Fund received a $57 million grant in 2000 from the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation to promote adolescent reproductive health with a focus on HIV/AIDS in four countries that had been greatly affected by the pandemic and had exhibited the political will necessary to combat it—Botswana, Ghana, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania. UNFPA increased advocacy in 2000 for greater involvement of men to help stem the AIDS epidemic and to boost gender equality, including the publication of a new booklet, "Partners for Change: Enlisting Men in HIV/AIDS Prevention". In December, the Fund organized a panel discussion on "Gender and HIV/AIDS", which was the most widely attended panel at the African Development Forum 2000 in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia. The five-day forum, attended by over 1,500 representatives of African Governments and civil society, was called to marshal a new level of political commitment and to develop more effective strategies for combating HIV/AIDS in Africa.

In addition, UNFPA's annual State of World Population report for 2000, "Lives Together, Worlds Apart: Men and Women in a Time of Change", focused on the negative impact of gender inequality, not only for individuals but also for national economic and social progress. On a policy level, UNFPA participated actively in the Beijing+5 meeting, the five-year follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women (see p. 1082).

A top priority for the Fund in 2000 was the development of a new global strategy for reproductive health commodity security. Without adequate supplies of condoms and other contraceptives, the world would not be able to meet the ICPD goal of universal access to reproductive health care by 2015. The strategy, which was formulated in response to the growing need in developing countries for contraceptives at a time of declining support from donors, was endorsed by Governments, UN agencies, the World Bank, non-governmental organizations (NGOs), foundations and the private sector.

A major contribution to UNFPA's efforts to respond quickly to urgent reproductive health needs in emergency situations was the provision of emergency reproductive health kits, containing equipment and supplies to deliver babies safely, provide emergency obstetric care, provide contraceptives, treat the consequences of miscarriage and prevent and treat sexually transmitted diseases.

An increasingly effective way for UNFPA to get its messages across was through the use of Goodwill Ambassadors who raised awareness of reproductive health needs in developing countries. In 2000, the Fund appointed two new Ambassadors—Miss Universe, Mpule Kwelagobe, and a prominent German television host, Alfred Biolek. In December, Ms. Kwelagobe toured her home country of Botswana to raise awareness of HIV/AIDS. In June, UNFPA brought all of its Goodwill Ambassadors together in Geneva to discuss future strategies and to coordinate outreach and advocacy efforts.

UNFPA's annual report for 2000 focused on the Fund's advocacy activities, concentrating on efforts made at the national level through its country programmes.

In another section of her annual report for 2000 [DP/FPA/2001/4 (Part III)], the Executive Director provided information on reproductive health commodity security; implementation of UNFPA country programmes in Algeria, China, Egypt, Nicaragua, Paraguay and Pacific island countries; and humanitarian assistance.

By decision 2000/242 of 28 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the annual reports of the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director to the Council [E/2000/20].

Sector-wide approaches

In response to a 1999 UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board request [YUN 1999, p. 1024], the Executive Director presented to the Board's April session a conference room paper on sector-wide approaches (SWAPs) [DP/FPA/2000/CRP.3]. The report built on information presented in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 1024], as well as on discussions with a broad range of concerned partners, notably programme countries, other UN agencies, the World Bank and civil society groups. It also drew on recent literature documenting the experience to date with SWApS, on available case studies and on the guidelines of other UN agencies.

UNFPA continued to take an active part in the planning and implementation stages of SWApS, an essential quality of which was strong government ownership and broad political commitment. In both planning and implementation of SWApS, the Fund played an important advocacy role to see that reproductive and sexual health and reproductive rights and population variables were included, as well as gender equity and equality and the empowerment of women, taking into account the ICPD Programme of Action and the outcome of ICPD+5.

The paper provided details of UNFPA participation in SWApS in Bangladesh, Ethiopia, Ghana, Mozambique, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania.

On 6 April [E/2000/35 (dec. 2000/8)], the Executive Board encouraged UNFPA to strengthen further its participation in the design and execution of SWApS in accordance with its mandate and comparative advantage, particularly regarding normative aspects, in the areas of reproductive health, including family planning and maternal and sexual health, and population and development strategies, and its comprehensive advocacy for gender equality and the empowerment of women. The Fund was also encouraged to play an advocacy role to ensure that reproductive health and rights and population variables were included in other relevant sectors. The Board urged UNFPA to pay increased attention to the HIV/AIDS epidemic in SWApS. It endorsed UNFPA participation in common-basket funding arrangements in SWApS where the Fund was satisfied that adequate monitoring, reporting and accounting mechanisms were in place. The Fund was asked to track carefully its involvement in SWApS, compiling lessons learned and good practices, including the impact UNFPA participation in common baskets had on the achievement of MYFF outputs, and to share that knowledge with the Executive Board and, where appropriate, with Governments, donors, partners in the UN system and civil society organizations. The Fund was further asked, in collaboration with United Nations Development Group partners, to ensure adequate staff training on SWApS to enable the full participation of UNFPA in the processes. The Board asked the Executive Director to keep UNFPA financial regulations under active review, taking into account any adjustment that might facilitate the Fund's full participation in SWApS and to present proposals on the issue in 2002 after submitting it to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

Reproductive health in emergency situations

In response to a 1999 UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board request [YUN 1999, p. 1025], the Executive Director submitted a May report on ensuring reproductive health in especially difficult circumstances: UNFPA programme experience and challenges [DP/FPA/2000/12]. She stated that UNFPA had become better equipped to deal with emergency situations. It had streamlined its programming in order to be able to respond to the increasing number of requests for emergency reproductive health and population assistance. The set of 12 types of pre-packaged emergency reproductive health kits (developed by the Inter-Agency Working Group and assembled by UNFPA) had been evaluated and improved and were in increasingly greater demand by other UN agencies and NGOs. With support from Belgium, a training programme had been started for UNFPA, other UN agencies, NGOs and national staff in the use of the guidelines found in the Inter-Agency Field Manual.

A review of best practices for provision of reproductive health for adolescent refugees and internally displaced persons was taking place. A roster of UNFPA staff with special expertise and emergency experience available for temporary redeployment had been developed, and discussions were under way concerning staffing needs for country offices in special situations. With support from the United Nations Foundation, the Fund had begun an evaluation of past experience in the provision of reproductive health services to refugee and displaced populations, as well as documentation of the reproductive health status and needs of forced migrants. Newly recruited UNFPA representatives were receiving briefings on UN emergency response and post-conflict rehabilitation modalities.

The greatest impediment to effective UNFPA response in emergencies were the financial constraints. In order to be able to respond quickly, UNFPA had to be able to access funds quickly in emergency situations. UNFPA proposed using a small amount, up to $1 million per year, for special circumstances, based on principles similar to such mechanisms as UNDP's TRAC 1.1.3, which earmarked 5 per cent of UNDP core resources to be available to countries in special development situations. UNFPA would continue to seek extra-budgetary resources for support of population and reproductive health in crisis situations, considering the $1 million of core resources as a leveraging base from which to build appeals. UNFPA would set clear criteria for access to such funding and would use the same financial and accounting procedures and oversight as for other programmes. The Executive Board would be provided with a detailed report on the use of the proposed fund after the first year, with an assessment of how well the mechanism had functioned during that period.

On 16 June [dec. 2000/13], the Executive Board encouraged UNFPA to provide appropriate and timely support in emergencies. It appealed to UNFPA to ensure close cooperation in the framework of the existing international coordination mechanisms and to incorporate reproductive health issues in a timely manner in health responses to emergencies. The Fund was encouraged to continue to seek extrabudgetary resources for support of population and reproductive health in emergencies, whenever possible through the UN consolidated appeals process. The Board urged Fund members to respond in a timely manner so that such appeals from UNFPA were adequately funded, and endorsed the use of up to $1 million of regular resources per year from the interregional programme for reproductive health needs in special circumstances as a leveraging base from which to build appeals for extrabudgetary resources. UNFPA was encouraged to evaluate its organizational capacity and systematize its responses to reproductive health needs in special circumstances, and to monitor and evaluate its overall performance in that regard. The Board requested the Executive Director to include in her annual report a summary of activities funded by those resources. Annexed to the decision was a set of criteria under which emergency funds could be accessed.

Country and intercountry programmes

UNFPA's provisional project expenditures for country and intercountry (regional and interregional) programmes in 2000 totalled $134.2 million, compared to $187.1 million in 1999, according to the Executive Director's statistical overview report covering 2000 [DP/FPA/2001/4 (Part I)/Add.1]. The 2000 figure included $117 million for country programmes and $17.2 million for intercountry programmes. In accordance with criteria defined by the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 989], total expenditures in 2000 to those countries most in need amounted to $78.2 million, compared to $96 million in 1999.

In a report on the UNFPA intercountry programme, 2000-2003 [DP/FPA/2000/1], the Executive Director stated that the proposed programme was designed to produce the information, tools, strategies and approaches needed to help countries build their capacity to further implement the ICPD Programme of Action [YUN 1994, p. 956] and the ICPD+5 key future actions [YUN 1999, p. 1006]. The programme's fundamental premise was that certain needs of countries were more effectively and efficiently addressed through regional and interregional initiatives; it established linkages between sectors and across regions.

The proposed programme reflected an almost 20 per cent reduction compared to the previous programme. The distribution of resources in the total amount of $160 million would be: $93 million for the interregional programme; $25 million for the regional programme for sub-Saharan Africa; $12 million for the Arab States and Europe; $17 million for Asia and the Pacific; and $13 million for Latin America and the Caribbean. Distribution by programme area would be: $76 million for reproductive health; $45 million for population and development strategies; and $39 million for advocacy.

An addendum to the report [DP/FPA/2000/1/Add.1] contained a review of the intercountry programme for 1996-1999.

By a 28 January decision [E/2000/35 (dec. 2000/6)], the Executive Board approved the intercountry programme, 2000-2003, and took note of the review of the intercountry programme, 1996-1999.

Africa. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in sub-Saharan Africa totalled $47.7 million in 2000, compared to $59.4 million in 1999. Most of the resources (61.9 per cent) went to reproductive health and family planning, followed by population and development strategies (29.6 per cent) and advocacy (5.7 per cent).

On 28 January [dec. 2000/6], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved assistance to the Niger and Zimbabwe.

Arab States and Europe. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in the Arab States and Europe totalled $17.4 million in 2000, compared to $26 million in 1999. Most of the resources (68.5 per cent) went to reproductive health and family planning, followed by population and development strategies (22 per cent) and advocacy (4.7 per cent).

Asia and the Pacific. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in Asia and the Pacific totalled $42.8 million in 2000, compared to $58.9 million in 1999. Most of the resources (71.1 per cent) went to reproductive health and family planning, followed by population and development strategies (18.1 per cent) and advocacy (7.6 per cent).

On 28 January [dec. 2000/6], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved the country programme for Iran; on 29 September [dec. 2000/24], it approved the country programmes for Cambodia and Viet Nam.

Latin America and the Caribbean. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in Latin America and the Caribbean totalled $15 million in 2000, compared to $19 million in 1999. Most of the resources (59.3 per cent) went to reproductive health and family planning, followed by population and development strategies (25.6 per cent) and advocacy (6.3 per cent).

Interregional programmes. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA's interregional and global programmes in 2000 totalled $11.3 million, compared to $23.8 million in 1999. Of the total, 35.8 per cent went to reproductive health and family planning, 34.2 per cent to advocacy, 26.5 per cent to population and development strategies and 3.5 per cent to multisectoral activities.

Reproductive health commodities

During 2000, the functions of the Global Initiative on Reproductive Health Commodity Management were taken over by UNFPA's new Commodity Management Unit to reflect the expanded scope of the work being undertaken to ensure reproductive health commodity security. That Unit, in close cooperation with the Fund's Procurement Section, also assumed the responsibility for the activities and management of the Global Contraceptive Commodity Programme [DP/FPA/2001/4 (Part III)].

With regard to national capacity-building, the Commodity Management Unit was continuing the Global Initiative's in-depth field studies in order to estimate short- and long-term contraceptive requirements, as well as condom needs to combat sexually transmitted diseases (STDs), including HIV; recommend measures to make good quality contraceptives more accessible; and review social marketing efforts and the roles of NGOs and the private sector. A list of all reproductive health commodities was being prepared in consultation with the World Health Organization. Important publications included: Reproductive Health Commodity Security: Partnerships for Change, A Global Call for Action; Reproductive Health Commodity Security: Partnerships for Change, The UNFPA Strategy; Donor Support for Contraceptives and Logistics; and The Role of the Logistics Manager in Contraceptive Procurement: A Checklist of Essential Actions.

With regard to advocacy and donor coordination, the Commodity Management Unit had prepared global projections of condom needs for the prevention of STDs, including HIV, and contraceptives for family planning programmes, which were being used as part of the effort to specify additional levels of commodity support (from donors and the Governments of programme countries) that were needed to meet the ICPD goals for 2015.

As to emphasizing sustainability and self-reliance in meeting reproductive health commodity needs, UNFPA continued its innovative private sector initiative, which focused on helping Governments work with the private sector and NGOs to expand access to affordably priced commercial products and services in developing countries. The goal of that approach, in which selected UNFPA field offices served as facilitators or brokers between Governments and the private sector to negotiate better prices for consumers, was to free up public sector resources to better serve the needs of those who could not afford to pay full prices for contraceptive products and services.

The Global Contraceptive Commodity Programme continued to provide essential buffer stocks of contraceptives and other reproductive health supplies to developing countries. In 2000, contraceptives and other reproductive health kits were sent to 35 destinations experiencing severe shortfalls, including Afghanistan, Angola, East Timor, Eritrea, Indonesia, Mongolia, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, the Sudan and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Kosovo).

A major watershed was reached in September 2000 when UNFPA presented a global strategy for reproductive health commodity security to some 60 donors and technical agencies. Among the key points raised during the meeting were: the declining trend since 1996 in donor support for reproductive health commodities, in particular contraceptives; the consequences of contraceptive and condom shortfalls on women's reproductive health, including HIV infection, in developing countries; and the longer-term measures that should be undertaken at global and country levels to expand access to safe and affordable reproductive health commodities.

Financial and administrative questions

UNFPA's income from all sources totalled $410.8 million in 2000 compared with $325.6 million in 1999 [DP/FPA/2001/11]. That comprised $260.7 million of Regular Funds and $150.1 million from Other Funds. Expenditures totalled $211 million from Regular Funds and $66.8 million from Other Funds. Together with fund transfers of $3.5 million to Regular Funds and $8 million from Other Funds, that resulted in a net surplus of $53.2 million to Regular Funds and of $75.3 million to Other Funds. Of the $53.2 million surplus in Regular Funds, $28 million was required to replenish the operational reserve, and the remaining $25.2 million would be fully utilized in programme expenditures in 2001. Government contributions to Regular Funds in 2000 totalled $254.6 million, representing an increase of $9.4 million (4 per cent) over the previous year's total of $245.1 million.

In response to a 1998 UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board request [YUN 1998, p. 1014], the Executive Director submitted a report on administrative and operational support costs reimbursed to UNFPA [DP/FPA/2000/2]. In 1998, the Executive Board had accepted, as an interim measure, a proposed increase in those costs from 5 per cent to 7.5 per cent. The Executive Director reviewed the evolution of UNFPA support-cost arrangements, described the experiences of partner organizations within the United Nations, defined the major tasks that comprised administrative and operational support costs both at UNFPA headquarters and in the field, and provided a staff workload analysis quantifying the cost of UNFPA execution.

On 28 January [E/2000/35 (dec. 2000/6)], the Executive Board endorsed the standard rate of 7.5 per cent for reimbursement of administrative and operational support costs for UNFPA execution of co-financing trust fund activities.

Also before the Executive Board in January was a report of the Executive Director proposing revisions to the UNFPA Financial Regulations [DP/FPA/2000/3]. The revisions were the result of an overall review of the Financial Regulations as part of the development of a comprehensive UNFPA Policies and Procedures Manual and included an addition to the regulations as they pertained to procurement in order to reflect agreements reached by the Procurement Working Group established as part of the Secretary-General's reform programme.

On 28 January [dec. 2000/5], the Executive Board approved the revisions to the Financial Regulations and requested the Executive Director to keep them under active review.

Resource allocation

In response to a 1996 Executive Board request [YUN 1996, p. 989], the Executive Director submitted the first quinquennial review of the system for the allocation of UNFPA resources to country programmes [DP/FPA/2000/14]. The report, which included an assessment of the indicators used to establish the relative shares of resources for and nature of assistance provided to UNFPA programme countries, reviewed the experience of the preceding four years and examined progress made in implementing the resource allocation system since it began in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 989]. Experience showed that the system had resulted in a marked increase in the overall share of resources going to those countries in greatest need of support. The system was within close reach of the target allocation percentages set by the Executive Board in 1996. The report also proposed an updating of the methodology for allocating UNFPA resources by incorporating new interim benchmarks that constituted part of the key actions for the further implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly in resolution S-21/2 [YUN 1999, p. 1006]. The report recommended continuation of the basic framework and overall principles guiding the resource allocation system agreed to in 1996 with the addition of the ICPD+5 benchmarks.

On 28 September [E/2000/35 (dec. 2000/19)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board endorsed the approach for resource allocation proposed by the Executive Director and decided that the updated system should take effect at the beginning of the new programme cycle for any given country; in case an upgrading country faced particularly adverse circumstances, its new resource allocation level would be implemented on a gradual basis. The Board reaffirmed the 1996 procedure for categorizing countries into Groups A, B and C [YUN 1996, p. 988] and approved the relative share of resources presented in the report. The Executive Director was asked to undertake a further quinquennial review of the resource allocation system, including an assessment of the indicators and their threshold levels, and to report in 2005.

Multi-year funding framework (MYFF)

In response to a 1999 UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board decision [YUN 1999, p. 1031], the Executive Director submitted the first UNFPA multi-year funding framework for 2000-2003 [DP/FPA/2000/6]. The MYFF integrated programme objectives, resources, budgets and outcomes, with the objective of increasing core resources. Regular monitoring and evaluation to determine the most effective programming and management strategies, and feeding that knowledge back into improving performance, were essential characteristics of the MYFF, which also included resource requirements to achieve the expected results. It was hoped that the MYFF's clear definition of organizational priorities, greater emphasis on organizational effectiveness and an improved tracking of and reporting on the Fund's performance would contribute to a more accurate determination of resource requirements and utilization and would encourage a more predictable and stable funding system.

On 7 April [E/2000/356 (dec. 2000/9)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board requested the Executive Director to implement the MYFF, 2000-2003, and to provide annual updates on the development and refinement of the framework. The Board noted the funding scenarios as representing UNFPA resource mobilization targets and encouraged all countries in a position to do so to assist UNFPA to reach a total figure of regular and supplementary resources of $1,434 million for the period covered by the MYFF. The Executive Director was requested to present a detailed report in 2003 on the results achieved in the 2000-2003 MYFF cycle, lessons learned and their implications for priority-setting and formulation of the MYFF for the subsequent cycle, taking into account the need to harmonize UNDP/UNFPA/United Nations Children's Fund reporting cycles.

Programming process

In response to a 1997 UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board request [YUN 1997, p. 1086], the Executive Director submitted a May report on the country-programming approval process [DP/FPA/2000/11], which provided an overview of the Fund's current programming process, delineated lessons learned, outlined progress made in relation to harmonization goals and presented conclusions and a recommendation.

In reviewing its programming process, UNFPA found many positive features as well as some areas that could be improved. The process provided Executive Board member countries with several opportunities to be involved at an early stage, particularly at the country level. However, those opportunities had not been fully utilized. UNFPA regularly informed member countries of its planned Country Population Assessments, but only a relatively small number of member countries provided inputs in response to those notifications, although representatives of member countries in-country were more likely to do so than were those from capitals. UNFPA proposed maintaining the current arrangements for approving country programmes as set forth by the Executive Board in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1086] and recommended some improvements.

On 16 June [E/2000/35 (dec. 2000/12)], the Executive Board welcomed progress towards the development of a more inclusive country programme preparation process with enhanced national ownership. It emphasized the need for further harmonization and standardization of programmes and programming procedures for all UN funds and programmes within the United Nations Development Group and also emphasized the need for such further harmonization efforts to provide the basis for a substantive, timely and joint oversight function of the respective Executive Boards. It requested UNFPA to propose to the other members of the Development Group the establishment of a working group with the objective of developing a common programme approval process. The Executive Board requested the Executive Director to report to it in 2001 on progress and future options in the programming process.

Technical Advisory Programme

In response to a 1999 Executive Board decision [YUN 1999, p. 1030], the Executive Director submitted a July progress report on implementation of Technical Advisory Programme (TAP) arrangements [DP/FPA/2000/16].

TAP, an inter-agency arrangement through which technical assistance was provided to countries in all three of the Fund's core programme areas (reproductive health, including family planning and sexual health; population and development strategies; and advocacy), was established in 1992 and had continued to evolve since then, in terms of both its substantive areas of focus and its structural arrangements. It had a two-tier arrangement: the first tier was composed of technical specialists assigned to eight multidisciplinary regional Country Technical Services Teams (CSTs); and the second tier was made up of Technical Advisory Services (TAS) specialists posted at the headquarters or regional offices of relevant UN agencies and regional commissions, and, in general, was organized to provide technical backstopping to CSTs.

Since its inception, TAP had developed in response to changing priorities, needs and circumstances. Following the adoption of the 1994 ICPD Programme of Action, the system was modified to support more effectively the reproductive health approach and to ensure mainstreaming of gender concerns and issues. More recently, the system had been revised to meet the need to strengthen monitoring and evaluation of UNFPA country programmes, to respond to the HIV/AIDS pandemic and to utilize new information technology more effectively. In addition, CST specialists were being given more opportunity to adopt a proactive approach with respect to country programme development, focus and management.

Attention was drawn to the fact that due to the decline in UNFPA's general resources in recent years, the number of TAS and CST positions had been reduced. In 1992, a total of 156 posts were authorized, including 40 TAS specialists. In 2000, the total number of authorized posts had declined to 130, with 18 TAS specialists. Because of time lags in filling vacant posts and budgetary constraints, approximately 20-25 per cent of the authorized posts were vacant at any one time.

UN Population Award

The 2000 United Nations Population Award was presented to Professor Ismail Awadallah Salam in the individual category and the Fundación

Mexicana para la Planeación Familiar (Mexfam) in the institutional category. Professor Sallam was selected for his extensive contributions to the field of population, especially from the biomedical perspective, his long-term interest in preventive health care and making basic health care available to the poor and underserved populations of Egypt. Mexfam was selected as an innovator and leader of Mexican civil society in the fields of family planning and sexual and reproductive health. One of its new initiatives was in the area of a comprehensive programme for adolescent sexual health incorporating elements of peer training, community capacity-building, the development of age-appropriate health education materials and school-based workshops.

The award was established by the General Assembly in resolution 36/201 [YUN 1981, p. 792], to be presented annually to individuals or institutions for outstanding contributions to increased awareness of population problems and to their solutions. In September, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the report of the UNFPA Executive Director on the Population Award [A/55/419]. By decision 55/448 of 20 December, the Assembly took note of the report.

Commission on Population and Development

The Commission on Population and Development, at its thirty-third session (New York, 27-30 March) [E/2000/25], considered as its central theme "Population, gender and development", which was discussed in the context of the follow-up to ICPD [YUN 1994, p. 955]. Documents before the Commission focusing on the theme of the session were reports of the Secretary-General on world population monitoring, 2000 [E/CN.9/2000/3], and on the monitoring of population programmes [E/CN.9/2000/4] (see p. 999). Other reports dealing with the ICPD follow-up were reports of the Secretary-General on the special session of the General Assembly for the review and appraisal of the ICPD Programme of Action [E/CN.9/2000/2] (see p. 998), and on the flow of financial resources for assisting in the implementation of the Programme of Action [E/CN.9/2000/5 & Corr.1] (see p. 1000). Also before the Commission was the Secretary-General's report on programme implementation and progress of work in the field of population in 1999 [E/CN.9/2000/6] [YUN 1999, p. 1032].

In addition to adopting a resolution on population, gender and development [E/2000/25 (res.

2000/1)] (see p. 999), the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption a draft decision on the report of the Commission on its thirty-third session and the provisional agenda for the thirty-fourth (2001) session. It also adopted a decision [dec. 2000/1] by which it reaffirmed that "Population, environment and development" should be the special theme for the Commission's thirty-fourth session and that the special themes for the thirty-fifth (2002) and thirty-sixth (2003) sessions should be, respectively, "Reproductive rights and reproductive health, with special reference to HIV/AIDS" and "Population, education and development". The UN Population Division was asked to give due attention to the impact of HIV/AIDS in the preparation of reports for the Commission's forthcoming theme sessions for the years 2001-2003. In another decision [dec. 2000/2], the Commission took note of all the documents before it, including a note by the Secretariat on the draft medium-term plan of the Population Division for the period 2002-2005 [E/CN.9/2000/CRP.2].

By decision 2000/233 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Commission on its thirty-third session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the thirty-fourth session. On 18 October, the Council decided that the Commission's thirty-fourth session should be held from 2 to 6 April 2001 (decision 2000/305).

In preparation for the thirty-fourth session, the Commission's Bureau held an intersessional meeting in Nairobi, Kenya, on 27 and 28 September [E/CN.9/2001/CRP.1].

2000 UN activities

In a report on programme implementation and progress of work of the UN Population Division in 2000 [E/CN.9/2001/5], the Secretary-General described the activities dealing with the analysis of demographic variables at the world level; world population estimates and projections; population policy and socio-economic development; monitoring, coordination and dissemination of population information; and technical cooperation in population.

The Population Division completed two databases: one on contraceptive use by country and by type of method and another on fertility by country. Two areas of ongoing study were the impact of AIDS on fertility and the effect of changing marital patterns on childbearing. In response to the AIDS epidemic and extensive AIDS-related information and educational activities carried out in many countries, sexual and childbearing behaviours had changed.

Work continued on a revision of the draft of the manual on the estimation of adult mortality. The manual presented census survival methods, methods utilizing intercensal deaths, estimations of adult deaths derived from the survivorship of parents, and estimations derived from the survivorship of siblings. Work had started on updating the database on infant and child mortality. Both revisions were expected to be ready in 2001.

With regard to international migration, the Population Division issued in March a working paper "Replacement migration: is it a solution to declining and ageing populations?", which examined in detail the cases of eight low-fertility countries (France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States) and two regions (Europe, European Union). In each case, alternative scenarios for the period 1995-2000 were considered, highlighting the impact that various levels of immigration might have on population size and population ageing. The study found that the populations of most of the developed countries were projected to become smaller and older in the next half century as a result of low fertility and increased longevity. Population decline appeared certain in the absence of replacement migration. For the European Union, a continuation of the immigration levels observed in the 1990s would roughly suffice to prevent the total population from declining, while for Europe as a whole immigration would need to double. Work continued on the creation of a database on east-to-west migration in Europe, expected to become available in 2001, which would include immigration and emigration data covering the years since 1980, by country of origin and by country of destination, for the countries of Eastern Europe, the former USSR, the former Yugoslavia and Albania.

As a follow-up to that paper, the Population Division organized an expert group meeting on policy responses to population ageing and population decline (New York, 16-18 October). The experts reviewed the demographic prospects of each country and region for the next half century, identified the consequences of population decline and population ageing, and examined various policy options that Governments might adopt to cope with the unprecedented demographic challenges.

Work continued on the creation of a database on internal migration, starting with Latin America and the Caribbean, and Northern America. The database, which would become available in 2001, would include, for 51 countries and areas, information on migration over the past five years and lifetime migration, as available in each census. A report on the components of urban growth in developing countries was completed and would be published in 2001. It presented, for 55 countries in the 1960s, 1970s and 1980s, estimates of the components of urban growth (natural growth and migration-reclassification). The main conclusion was that the major component of urban growth in most developing countries was not migration but natural increase.

As to world population estimates and projections, the third and last report in the series of publications related to the 1998 Revision was issued under the title World Population Prospects: The 1998 Revision: volume III, Analytical Report [Sales No. E.99.XIII.10]. The report entitled Long-Range World Population Projections: Based on the 1998 Revision [Sales No. E.00.XIII.8] was also issued. It presented the results of long-range projections to 2150 for the major areas of the world. The long-range projections of fertility were made according to seven different scenarios. The results of the 2000 Revision of population estimates and projections to 2050 had been compiled and volume I of World Population Prospects: The 2000 Revision had been issued as a working paper. The 2000 Revision incorporated explicitly the impact of HIV/AIDS for over 40 countries and used a revised methodology to project the impact of the epidemic.

The results of the 1999 Revision of World Urbanization Prospects were issued as a working paper. A full report, including an in-depth analysis of the Revision results, was completed and was awaiting publication. According to the 1999 Revision, the proportion of people living in urban areas worldwide was expected to rise from 47 per cent in mid-2000 to 50 per cent in 2007 and to reach 60 per cent by 2030.

In the area of emerging issues in population policy, the ongoing project on abortion policies continued. During 2000, the first volume (vol. I, Afghanistan to France) of the three-volume series Abortion Policies: A Global Review was completed and submitted for publication. The second and third volumes (vol. II, Gabon to Norway; and vol. III, Oman to Zimbabwe) were also completed and were in the editing process. The publication aimed at providing objective information about the nature of abortion law and policy in all countries at the end of the twentieth century. For each country, there was a fact sheet containing information on the grounds on which abortions were performed, additional requirements and key indicators on reproductive health. Included in the background text was information on the social and political setting of changes in abortion laws and policies, the ways in which those laws and policies had been formulated and how they had evolved over time. Work continued on the database on population policies, which contained information on national population policies from all available sources, including the United Nations Population Inquiries. Preliminary work began on the eighth edition of the Population Policy Database, 2001.

The report Charting the Progress of Populations, published in January, grew out of the participation of the Population Division in activities aimed at ensuring a coordinated and system-wide implementation of the goals and commitments adopted by recent global conferences. It featured the 12 key statistical indicators which were chosen on the basis of their relevance to the goals adopted at the conferences. It provided updated data as well as an analytic summary of the information, showing how near or how far countries were from achieving the goals set out at the conferences with respect to the selected indicators in the areas of population and primary health care, including reproductive health; nutrition; basic education; safe water and sanitation; and shelter.

The Technical Meeting on Population Ageing and Living Arrangements of Older Persons (New York, 8-10 February) brought together experts from the different world regions to consider the most pressing issues concerning population ageing and the living arrangements of older persons, historical and cultural contexts, the social process through which living arrangements of older persons influenced the demand for formal and informal support systems, and how Governments responded to those perceived needs. Work was in progress on a publication tentatively entitled Population Ageing in Numbers, to be issued as a background document in advance of the Second World Assembly on Ageing in 2002.

A new wallchart, Population, Environment and Development, 2001, was linked to the topical theme of the Commission on Population and Development for 2001. The chart presented statistical data relating to countries' population size and growth, economic development and selected areas of environmental concern, including the supply of freshwater, deforestation, food and agriculture and greenhouse gas emissions.

During 2000, the Population Division prepared the latest edition of its annual report, World Population Monitoring, the theme of which was population, environment and development. The general trends of rapid population growth, sustained but uneven economic improvement and environmental change were widely acknowledged. However, the interrelationships between population size and growth, environmental change and development were not well understood. World Population Monitoring investigated what was known about those interrelationships, analysing recent information and policy perspectives on the three factors.

During 2000, the Population Division developed its web site within the site of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs. The home page of the site provided an overview of activities and organizations in the UN system that were active in the population and development area and provided a link to the Population Division web site and the sites of other relevant UN entities.

During the year, the Population Division's Population Information Network (POPIN) continued to focus on increasing access to substantive population information at the interregional, regional and national levels. Global and regional commission POPIN web sites were updated and revised, and the POPIN Internet Worldwide Directory of Population Institutions was expanded. Global POPIN and the Association for Population/Family Planning Libraries and Information Centers launched a new series of guides to electronic resources—namely, Getting Started: Selected Electronic Resources on HIV/AIDS, the Guide to Citation of Electronic Information, Copyright and Intellectual Property and Selected Electronic Training Resources on Population and Reproductive Health.

POPIN was also active at the regional level. In Africa, the Economic Commission for Africa Food Security and Sustainable Development Division, which coordinated POPIN-Africa, updated its web site to include more links to African electronic population information resources, more full-text African publications on population issues, an electronic version of the second issue of Africa's Population and Development Bulletin, and a new version of the Population, Environment, Agriculture and Development computer software model. In Asia and the Pacific, global POPIN continued to provide technical support and assistance for the maintenance and updating of the web sites of the UNFPA country support teams for the South Pacific and Central and South Asia. The POPIN of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) created electronic databases of population and family planning information and/or reproductive health indicators for a number of Asian countries. In the Arab States and Western Asia, the League of Arab States Population Research Unit web site was updated to include survey information from the Pan Arab Project for Child Development (PAPCHILD) Morocco Survey and the PAPCHILD Lebanese Survey. In Europe, the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) Population Activities Unit, which coordinated POPIN-Europe, expanded its web site to offer comprehensive access to Fertility and Family Survey data and reports, and proceedings of other ECE meetings. The Latin American and Caribbean Demographic Centre of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean redesigned, updated and expanded its web site and assisted with the creation of two new POPIN-Latin America and the Caribbean sites at the Caja Costarricense de Seguro Social in Costa Rica and the Maestria en Demografia, Universidad Nacional de Cordoba, Argentina.

The Population Division continued to implement a programme of technical assistance to build capacity among population research centres in developing countries. It co-organized and participated in a training workshop for staff of institutions belonging to the Demonet network of francophone population research centres in Western Africa, held in Niamey, Niger, in April, and assisted in the maintenance and continued development of the network's web site. In collaboration with ESCAP's Population and Rural and Urban Development Division, the Population Division organized a training workshop, "Advanced use of the Internet for population research", in Bangkok, Thailand, in December, for staff from eight population training and research centres in developing countries of the ESCAP region.

The Population Division initiated a programme of outreach to doctoral population students from developing countries, through which selected students were provided with the opportunity to participate in technical meetings organized by the Division and to receive additional training on the activities of the United Nations in the area of population. Three students (from Bolivia, India and Nepal) benefited from the programme in 2000, in connection with the Expert Group Meeting on Policy Responses to Population Ageing and Population Decline.

Demographics

The twenty-first session of the Subcommittee on Demographic Estimates and Projections of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (Geneva, 27-29 June) [ACC/2000/14] discussed the continuing collaboration in the preparation of demographic and sectoral estimates and projections in the UN system.

The Subcommittee agreed that it was essential to continue inter-agency coordination in the field of demographic and sectoral estimates and projections in order to strengthen the UN system database, maintain consistency in their coverage and timing, and ensure homogeneity in the presentation of results. The Subcommittee underscored the importance of that unique set of coordinated and consistent demographic and sectoral estimates and projections.

The Subcommittee was successful in establishing a schedule for the coordinated production and dissemination of the 2000 round of consistent demographic and sectoral estimates and projections, undertaken by the Population Division in cooperation with its partners.

The Subcommittee established a Task Force comprising the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Labour Organization, the Institute for Statistics of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Population Division, in cooperation with the regional commissions, to devise a strategy for the development, documentation and exchange of methods to interpolate and extrapolate existing estimates and projections.

The Subcommittee requested that the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (see p. 1221) be invited to make a presentation on its work in the use of demographic information in war crime cases to the twenty-second (2002) session.

The Subcommittee also discussed the activities of the Population Division, the regional commissions and other Secretariat offices, the specialized agencies and other UN bodies.

Chapter IX

Social policy, crime prevention and human resource development

In 2000, the United Nations continued efforts to advance social, cultural and human resource development and to strengthen its crime prevention and criminal justice programme.

In June, the General Assembly held its twenty-fourth special session to review and appraise the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action, adopted at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development. The special session, entitled "World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world", adopted further initiatives for social development, which reaffirmed the 1995 Copenhagen Declaration and established a broad framework for follow-up action by Governments, civil society and the international community.

The Commission for Social Development, at its February/March session, considered as its priority theme its contribution to the special session and adopted a set of agreed conclusions, which it transmitted to the Economic and Social Council and to the Preparatory Committee for the special session.

The Council, in other social development-related action, renewed until 2002 the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on disability of the Commission for Social Development, following a review of his report on the second monitoring period (1997-2000) of the implementation of the 1993 Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities.

The Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held in April, considered the state of crime and criminal justice worldwide; international cooperation in combating transnational crime; promoting the rule of law and strengthening the criminal justice system; new developments in effective crime prevention; and accountability and fairness in the justice process for offenders and victims. It adopted the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century, which was endorsed by the Assembly in December. The Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime finalized the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, as well as the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children and the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air. The Convention and related Protocols, which were adopted in November by the Assembly, were opened for signature from 12 to 15 December in Palermo, Italy, and thereafter in New York until 12 December 2002. Other crime-related issues addressed by the Assembly were the development of an international legal instrument against corruption, combating the criminal misuse of information technologies, and combating corrupt practices and illegal transfer of funds and repatriation of such funds to the countries of origin. The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice held its ninth session in April.

Regarding cultural development, the Assembly took action relating to the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations, the Olympic Truce and the Bethlehem 2000 project.

Human resource development remained the focus of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and the United Nations University.

Social development

Follow-up to 1995

World Summit for Social Development

In 2000, the General Assembly held its twenty-fourth special session to review and appraise the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action, adopted at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113]. Entitled "World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world", the special session adopted further initiatives for social development (resolution S-24/2), which included a political declaration by Member States on how to promote social development in the context of globalization and a series of recommendations for further initiatives at the local, national, regional and international levels for the further implementation of the 10 commitments adopted at the 1995 Summit.

Twenty-fourth special session

The twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly to review and appraise the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action [YUN 1995, p. 1114], adopted at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development, was held in Geneva from 26 June to 1 July [A/S-24/10]. The session was convened in accordance with Assembly resolution 50/161 [YUN 1995, p. 1122], subsequent to a recommendation of the Summit [ibid., p. 1118]. Participants at the session included delegations from 178 countries, 11 observers and representatives of 500 non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

Preparations for the session were made by the Preparatory Committee at its first [YUN 1999, p. 1037] and second sessions (see below).

In resolution S-24/2 of 1 July (see p. 1013), the Assembly adopted proposals for further initiatives for social development, including poverty eradication, the promotion of full employment, social integration, respect for human dignity, and the attainment of the goals of universal and equitable access to quality education, the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, and the access of all to primary health care. Other proposals emphasized acceleration of the economic, social and human resource development of Africa and the least developed countries (LDCs), structural adjustment programmes and cooperation through the United Nations and other multilateral institutions.

In other action, the Assembly approved the report of the Credentials Committee on 30 June (resolution S-24/1). Regarding procedural matters, the Assembly on 26 June appointed the members of the Credentials Committee (decision S-24/11); elected its President (decision S-24/12), Vice-Presidents (decision S-24/13), Chairpersons of the Main Committees (decision S-24/14) and officers of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole of the Twenty-fourth Special Session (decision S-24/15); made arrangements with regard to the organization of the session (decision S-24/21); and adopted the agenda for the special session (decision S-24/22). On 30 June, the Assembly decided that nine NGOs might make statements in the debate in plenary (decision S-24/23).

In his opening statement [A/S-24/PV.1], the Assembly President recalled that the signatories at the 1995 Summit had promised to establish time-bound targets to cut poverty, promote greater equality between women and men, achieve full employment and establish universal access to education and primary health care. Since then, some noticeable national efforts and programmes had been launched. However, overall, many developing countries had continued to fall behind. The most frequently cited indication that social development was not yet secure on the international agenda was the decline in official development assistance (ODA) that had continued since Copenhagen, where the goal of committing 0.7 per cent of gross national product for such assistance was reaffirmed. The current task was to build upon the strong foundation of consensus reached in Copenhagen and to uphold the social commitment expressed at the Summit.

Preparatory process

Preparatory Committee. The Preparatory Committee for the special session, established by General Assembly resolution 52/25 [YUN 1997, p. 1109] to consider and decide on the process to achieve the session's purpose, held its second session in New York from 3 to 14 April 2000 [A/S-24/2]. It held a resumed session on 20 and 22 June [A/S-24/2/Add.1.2], also in New York, to consider the draft final document. The Committee's first session took place in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 1037].

In April, the Committee, in addition to taking action on various procedural matters, adopted a decision bringing to the Assembly's attention a series of documents it had considered, including review reports and proposals for further action and initiatives submitted by organs and specialized agencies of the UN system and other concerned organizations [A/AC.253/16 & Add.1-17]; reports of the Secretary-General on implementation of the outcome of the 1995 Summit [A/AC.253/13-E/CN.5/2000/2] (see p. 1013), progress achieved in implementing UN resolutions concerning the right self-determination [A/AC.253/17], the development of guidelines on the role and social responsibilities of the private sector [A/AC.253/21], acceleration of development in Africa and LDCs [A/AC.253/22], promoting social integration in post-conflict situations [A/AC.253/23], the impact of globalization on social development [A/AC.253/25], the social impact of economic measures taken in response to financial crises in developing countries [A/AC.253/27], and resources for social development: additional and innovative measures [A/AC.253/28]; and the reports of the seminar on values and market economies (Paris, 19-21 January) [A/AC.253/24], as well as of the 1999 symposiums on States, markets and social progress [YUN 1999, p. 1038] and on socio-economic policies during macroeconomic stabilization in countries with economies in transition [ibid.].

Commission for Social Development. At its thirty-eighth session (New York, 8-17 February) [E/2000/26 & Corr.1], the Commission for Social Development, the body responsible for Summit follow-up and implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration, considered as its priority theme the Commission's contribution to the overall review of the implementation of the Summit. On 28 February, the Economic and Social Council authorized the Commission to hold a resumed session on an exceptional basis, which took place on 14 and 17 March, to complete its work for the special session of the General Assembly (decision 2000/211). The Commission, on 17 March [res. 38/1], adopted a set of agreed conclusions on the review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the 1995 World Summit and transmitted them to the Economic and Social Council and to the Preparatory Committee for the special session. The agreed conclusions addressed the themes of poverty eradication, full employment, social integration, Africa and LDCs, mobilization of resources for social development and capacity-building to implement social programmes.

The Commission had before it a comprehensive report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the 1995 World Summit [A/AC.253/13-E/CN.5/2000/2], which highlighted national strategies and policies to implement the Summit outcome based on information contained in national submissions. It described the scope of regional and international cooperation for social development based on information received from regional commissions, specialized agencies, funds and programmes and other national and international bodies. A series of regional overviews and analyses evaluated the implementation of the Summit in the context of progress achieved, constraints encountered and lessons learned. An analytical overview and conclusions of the report were based on 11 cross-cutting issues (importance of rehabilitating the public sector; growth of inequality; informalization of employment; the working poor; making economic growth more employment-intensive; financing social protection; conflict, crises and social development; reversing the decline of ODA; debt reduction; globalization and liberalization; and local development and values in the global economy) arising from national reports and regional and global trends. Annexed to the report was a review of progress towards targets for 2000. The Commission took note of the Secretary-General's report [dec. 38/101], which was also submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the special session.

In other action related to the special session [dec. 38/101], the Commission took note of the report on the 1999 symposium on States, markets and social progress [YUN 1999, p. 1038].

Workshops. In May [A/S-24/5], Austria transmitted to the special session the outcome of workshops held during the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (see p. 1040) relating to combating corruption and to community involvement in crime prevention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 July [meeting 10], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole [A/S-24/8/Rev.1], adopted resolution S-24/2 without vote [agenda item 9].

Further initiatives for social development

The General Assembly

Adopts the proposals for further initiatives for social development annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Further initiatives for social development

I. Political declaration

1. Five years have passed since the World Summit for Social Development, which marked the first time in history that heads of State and Government had gathered to recognize the significance of social development and human well-being for all and to give these goals the highest priority into the twenty-first century. The Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development established a new consensus to place people at the centre of our concerns for sustainable development and pledged to eradicate poverty, promote full and productive employment, and foster social integration to achieve stable, safe and just societies for all.

2. We, the representatives of Governments, meeting at this special session of the General Assembly at Geneva to assess achievements and obstacles and to decide on further initiatives to accelerate social development for all, reaffirm our will and commitment to implement the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action, including the strategies and agreed targets contained therein. The Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action will remain the basic framework for social development in the years to come.

3. Since the Summit, recognition of the imperative of social development requiring an enabling environment has spread and strengthened. Furthermore, there is a growing awareness of the positive impact of effective social policies on economic and social development. Our review and appraisal has shown that Governments, relevant international organizations as well as actors of civil society have made continued efforts to improve human well-being and eradicate poverty. However, further actions are needed for the full implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action. It has also become clear that there is no single universal path to achieving social development and that all have experience, knowledge and information worth sharing.

4. Globalization and continuing rapid technological advances offer unprecedented opportunities for social and economic development. At the same time, they continue to present serious challenges, including widespread financial crises, insecurity, poverty, exclusion and inequality within and among societies. Considerable obstacles to further integration and full participation in the global economy remain for developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, as well as for some countries with economies in transition. Unless the benefits of social and economic development are extended to all countries, a growing number of people in all countries and even entire regions will remain marginalized from the global economy. We must act now in order to overcome those obstacles affecting peoples and countries and to realize the full potential of opportunities presented for the benefit of all.

5. We therefore reiterate our determination and duty to eradicate poverty, promote full and productive employment, foster social integration and create an enabling environment for social development. The maintenance of peace and security within and among nations, democracy, the rule of law, the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development, effective, transparent and accountable governance, gender equality, full respect for fundamental principles and rights at work and the rights of migrant workers are some of the essential elements for the realization of social and people-centred sustainable development. Social development requires not only economic activity but also reduction in the inequality in the distribution of wealth and more equitable distribution of the benefits of economic growth within and among nations, including the realization of an open, equitable, secure, non-discriminatory, predictable, transparent and multilateral rule-based international trading system, maximizing opportunities and guaranteeing social justice, and recognizing the interrelationship between social development and economic growth.

6. Full and effective implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action is necessary at all levels. We reaffirm that while social development is a national responsibility it cannot be successfully achieved without the collective commitment and efforts of the international community. We invite Governments, the United Nations and other relevant international organizations, within their respective mandates, to strengthen the quality and consistency of their support for sustainable development, in particular in Africa and the least developed countries, as well as in some countries with economies in transition, and to continue coordinating their efforts in this regard. We also invite them to develop coordinated and gender-sensitive social, economic and environmental approaches in order to close the gap between goals and achievements. This in turn requires not only renewed political will but also the mobilization and allocation of additional resources at both the national and international levels. In this connection, we will strive to fulfil the yet to be attained internationally agreed target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product of developed countries for overall official development assistance as soon as possible.

7. We recognize that excessive debt-servicing has severely constrained the capacity of many developing countries, as well as countries with economies in transition, to promote social development. We also recognize the efforts being made by indebted developing countries to fulfil their debt-servicing commitment despite the high social cost incurred. We reaffirm our pledge to find effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable solutions to the external debt and debt-servicing burdens of developing countries.

8. The fight against poverty requires the active participation of civil society and people living in poverty. We are convinced that universal access to high-quality education, including opportunities for the acquisition of skills required in the knowledge-based economy, health and other basic social services, and equal opportunities for active participation and sharing the benefits of the development process are essential for the achievement of the objectives of the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action. Recognizing the primary responsibility of Governments in this regard, we acknowledge the importance of strengthening partnerships, as appropriate, among the public sector, the private sector and other relevant actors of civil society.

9. We reaffirm our pledge to place particular focus on, and give priority attention to, the fight against the worldwide conditions that pose severe threats to the health, safety, peace, security and well-being of our people. Among these conditions are: chronic hunger; malnutrition; illicit drug problems; organized crime; corruption; natural disasters; foreign occupation; armed conflicts; illicit arms trafficking; trafficking in persons; terrorism; intolerance and incitement to racial, ethnic, religious and other hatreds; xenophobia; and endemic, communicable and chronic diseases, in particular the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS), malaria and tuberculosis.

10. We reiterate our resolve to reinforce solidarity with people living in poverty and dedicate ourselves to strengthening policies and programmes to create inclusive, cohesive societies for all—women and men, children, young and older persons—particularly those who are vulnerable, disadvantaged and marginalized. We recognize that their special needs will require specific targeted measures to empower them to live more productive and fulfilling lives.

11. Enhanced international cooperation is essential to implement the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action as well as the further actions and initiatives adopted at the current special session, and to address the challenges of globalization. We recognize the need to continue to work on a wide range of reforms for a strengthened and more stable international financial system, enabling it to deal more effectively and in a timely manner with new challenges of development. We acknowledge the need for a coordinated follow-up to all major conferences and summits by Governments, regional organizations and all the bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates.

12. Determined to give new momentum to our collective efforts to improve the human condition, we here set out further initiatives for the full implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action. At the dawn of the new millennium, aware of our responsibilities towards future generations, we are strongly committed to social development, including social justice, for all in a globalizing world. We invite all people in all countries and in all walks of life, as well as the international community, to join in renewed dedication to our shared vision for a more just and equitable world.

II. Review and assessment of the implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development

1. One of the most important developments since the World Summit for Social Development in March 1995 is the increased priority which social development has been given in national and international policy objectives. The Summit also signified a recognition by States of the importance of making social improvement an integral part of development strategy at the national and international levels, as well as placing people at the centre of development efforts. The review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the Summit shows that many new national policies and programmes have been initiated. The Summit has clearly also had an impact on the United Nations system, leading to a refocusing of its activities and galvanizing action. However, it is equally clear that national and international policy responses have been uneven. Despite some advances, there has been little progress in some key areas and regress is evident in others. As noted in one of the key issues of the analytical report of the Secretary-General, one major development since the Summit is that inequality within and among States continues to grow. Achieving the goals agreed upon at the Summit will require much stronger and more comprehensive action and new, innovative approaches (see sect. III below) by all actors, national and international, governmental and non-governmental, taking into account the outcomes of the relevant United Nations conferences and summits.

2. Since the Summit, globalization has presented new challenges for the fulfilment of the commitments made and the realization of the goals of the Summit. Globalization and interdependence have provided many beneficial opportunities but have also involved potential damage and costs. If anything, these forces have accelerated and often strained the capacity of Governments and the international community to manage them for the benefit of all. Economic growth has been impressive in some places and disappointing in others. Current patterns of globalization have contributed to a sense of insecurity as some countries, particularly developing countries, have been marginalized from the global economy. The growing interdependence of nations, which has caused economic shocks to be transmitted across national borders, as well as increased inequality, highlight weaknesses in current international and national institutional arrangements and economic and social policies, and reinforce the importance of strengthening them through appropriate reforms. There is wide recognition of the need for collective action to anticipate and offset the negative social and economic consequences of globalization and to maximize its benefits for all members of society, including those with special needs. For most developing countries, the terms of international trade have worsened and inflows of concessional financial resources have declined. The high debt burden has weakened the capacity of many Governments to service their increasing external debt and eroded resources available for social development. Inappropriate design of structural adjustment programmes has weakened the management capacity of public institutions as well as the ability of Governments to respond to the social development needs of the weak and vulnerable in society and to provide adequate social services.

3. Since the Summit, policies and programmes to achieve social development have been implemented within the context of national economic, political, social, legal, cultural and historical environments. There has been an increasing interest in strengthening an enabling environment for sustainable development through the interaction of economic and social development and environmental protection. However, these national environments have been increasingly affected by global influences and forces beyond the control of individual Governments. Serious impediments to social development, many of which were identified by the Summit, still persist, including chronic hunger; malnutrition; illicit drug problems; organized crime; corruption; foreign occupation; armed conflicts; illicit arms trafficking; terrorism; intolerance and incitement to racial, ethnic, religious and other hatreds; xenophobia; endemic, communicable and chronic diseases, in particular HIV/AIDS, malaria and tuberculosis; and economic sanctions and unilateral measures at variance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations.

4. The ultimate goals of development are to improve living conditions for people and to empower them to participate fully in the economic, political and social arenas. Some Governments, in partnership with other actors, have contributed to an enabling environment for social development through efforts to ensure democracy and transparency in decision-making; the rule of law; accountability of government institutions; empowerment of women; and gender equality. Efforts have also been made to promote peace and security; respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development; and tolerance and respect for cultural and ethnic diversity. However, progress in all these areas has been uneven and requires further effort.

5. At the Summit, quantitative targets were adopted and reaffirmed in the areas of basic social services and official development assistance. Out of thirteen targets, for the following nine areas the target date set was the year 2000: education; adult illiteracy; improved access to safe water supply and sanitation; malnutrition among children under five years of age; maternal mortality; infant mortality and the under-five mortality; life expectancy; malaria mortality and morbidity; and affordable and adequate shelter for all. Available data indicate that progress in these areas remains unsatisfactory. In the field of education, for example, there are still twenty-nine countries which have enrolment rates of less than 50 per cent, instead of the target of 80 per cent of children attending primary school.

6. Gender mainstreaming is widely accepted, but in some parts of the world the implementation of this concept has often not started. In many countries, women continue to suffer from discrimination with regard to the full enjoyment of all human rights.

7. The compilation by national Governments of broad-based and disaggregated data, both qualitative and quantitative indicators, to evaluate progress in the areas covered by the targets, has presented an important challenge. In this regard, Governments may, as appropriate, seek assistance from international organizations. Since the Summit, efforts have been made to improve the quality, timeliness and country coverage of data.

8. Given the nature and the broad scope of many of the goals and targets set in Copenhagen and the inevitable lag between the initiation of policies and measurable results, a comprehensive evaluation of the impact of new policies and programmes will take time. However, it is possible to make the following early assessments.

Poverty eradication

9. One of the most significant outcomes of the World Summit for Social Development has been to place the goal of eradicating poverty at the centre of national and international policy agendas. At the international level, development targets adopted at Copenhagen have increasingly influenced the policies and planning of bilateral and multilateral development partners. Many Governments have set national poverty reduction targets and formulated poverty eradication plans and strategies, including by promoting employment and developing or reinforcing tools to evaluate progress. Some have further developed existing poverty eradication plans, programmes and measures. Microcredit and other financial instruments have received increasing attention as effective means of empowering the poor, and many countries have expanded access to such programmes. Many countries have achieved improvements in literacy, life expectancy, school enrolment and the availability of basic social services, and have enhanced social protection systems and reduced infant mortality. However, progress has been uneven, revealing continuing disparities in access to basic social services, including a lack of access to quality education. Of particular concern in this regard is the increasing feminization of poverty and the uneven access to education for girls. For example, while countries in East Asia and the Pacific have achieved enrolment rates similar to those in developed countries, almost one third of school-age children in Africa are still without access to any form of education. In South Asia, it is estimated that fifty million children are out of primary school. Also, enrolment rates in some economies in transition have been declining. Groups with special needs are also affected by social exclusion and by poverty in different manners. In many countries, there are insufficient measures for improving their situation.

10. Progress in eradicating poverty has been mixed. In many countries, the number of people living in poverty has increased since 1995. In many developing countries, social service provision has deteriorated, leaving many without access to basic social services. Lack of resources, inadequate levels of economic development and in most cases the worsening terms of international trade, as well as weak infrastructures and inefficient administrative systems, have all undermined measures to eradicate poverty. Demographic changes in many parts of the world have led to new challenges and caused new obstacles in eradicating poverty. In Africa and the least developed countries, economic growth has barely resumed. Also, in some countries with economies in transition, economic reform has been slow and social security arrangements have weakened. In several developed countries, economic growth and rising incomes have improved the living conditions of many people. In some developed countries, however, unemployment has contributed to situations of inequality, poverty and social exclusion. Countries affected by the recent international crises have experienced a sharp increase in poverty, especially among women and groups with special needs, and unemployment. Although there are now some signs that growth is resuming, the sharp reversal in this area has pushed back their progress in poverty reduction and employment by several years.

11. At the Summit and at the Fourth World Conference on Women held in Beijing, the international community recognized expressly that women and men experience poverty differently and unequally and become impoverished through different processes, and that if those differences are not taken into account the causes of poverty cannot be understood or dealt with by public actions. Persistent discrimination against women in the labour market, the existing gap in their wages, unequal access to productive resources and capital as well as education and training, and the socio-cultural factors that continue to influence gender relations and preserve the existing discrimination against women continue to hinder women's economic empowerment and exacerbate the feminization of poverty. Equality between women and men is widely accepted as essential for social development, but its implementation, including by mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes aimed at eradicating poverty and the empowerment of women, has been slow.

Full employment

12. While overall progress since the World Summit for Social Development in reducing unemployment has been slow and uneven, there has been increased attention by Governments as well as civil society, including the private sector, to the goal of full employment and to policies aimed at employment growth, as well as a renewed perception that full employment is a feasible goal. Employment promotion has increasingly been put at the centre of socio-economic development, in recognition of the central importance of employment to poverty eradication and social integration.

13. The international community has also recognized the need to promote employment that meets labour standards as defined by relevant International Labour Organization and other international instruments, including prohibitions on forced and child labour, guarantees of the rights of freedom of association and bargaining collectively, equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value and non-discrimination in employment. This is reflected in the adoption of the International Labour Organization Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work and its Follow-up, and in the unanimous adoption of International Labour Organization Convention No. 182 concerning the Prohibition and Immediate Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour. While some progress has been made in this respect, universal ratification of the relevant International Labour Organization conventions has not yet been achieved.

14. Many developed countries have strengthened their active employment promotion measures, including by the introduction of programmes to create jobs in social services and the provision of other public goods. These activities are sometimes relatively labour-intensive and also meet a growing demand for personal services, particularly for the elderly. In developing countries and those with economies in transition, labour-intensive public works programmes, in particular infrastructure investments in rural access roads, including farm-to-market roads, environmental rehabilitation, irrigation and urban regeneration schemes, have proven to be effective means of promoting employment and stimulating people-centred sustainable development. The important role of education and of vocational and skills development training at all levels in promoting employment, particularly in the long term, is increasingly recognized.

15. While in most countries the employment of women has increased steadily, gender inequalities, reflected in particular in the wage gap and a disproportionate share of family responsibilities, have remained obstacles to women's equal access to and participation in the labour market. Furthermore, in countries experiencing a lack of adequate employment and/or declining employment rates, women are often disproportionately affected and forced into the low-paid informal sector and out of social safety nets. In many parts of the world, this situation has also led to poverty and social exclusion, with inhuman consequences, such as forced prostitution, trafficking in women and children for the purposes of prostitution and sexual and other forms of exploitation, and the worst forms of child labour. At the same time, women's unpaid work remains unrecognized and unaccounted for in national accounts. To date, no universal measurement tools have been developed to evaluate women's unpaid work.

16. There has been an increase in casual and informal employment since the Summit. Casual employment arrangements have tended to spread in industrialized economies, with increasingly flexible labour markets and new mechanisms for subcontracting. In developing countries, the lack of growth of employment in the formal sector, among other factors, has led many people, especially women, into informal sector work and has increased migration to more attractive labour markets in other countries. While employment growth still remains the most effective means of reducing poverty, there appears to be a growing number of employed and underemployed persons, particularly women, with little employment security, low wages and low levels of social protection. In a number of countries, considerable attention has been focused on this issue in recent years, including the development of new initiatives. In some countries with economies in transition, there has been extensive growth of the shadow economy.

17. As a means of combating social exclusion, there have been efforts to integrate income support policies with active labour market policies for those marginalized from the labour market. It is increasingly being recognized that these policies are an important tool to reduce the dependency of individuals on social assistance and to reintegrate them into the world of work and into society.

18. In a number of countries, social dialogue among employers, employees and Governments has contributed to social and economic development.

Social integration

19. Social integration is a prerequisite for creating harmonious, peaceful and inclusive societies. Promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, promotion of a culture of peace, tolerance and non-violence, respect for cultural and religious diversity, elimination of all forms of discrimination, equal opportunities for access to productive resources and participatory governance are important for social integration. Governments have developed new policy instruments, set up institutional arrangements, strengthened participation and dialogue with all social actors, and launched programmes to foster social cohesion and solidarity. However, lack of access to education, the persistence of poverty and unemployment, and inequitable access to opportunities and resources have caused social exclusion and marginalization. A growing number of people are afflicted by poverty because of the inequitable distribution of opportunities, resources, incomes and access to employment and to social services. In many countries, there is a growing schism between those in high-quality, well-paid employment and those in poorly remunerated, insecure jobs with low levels of social protection. Owing to continued discrimination and exclusion, women and girls face particular disadvantages in this regard.

20. Governments have made progress in promoting more inclusive societies. The adoption of democratic forms of government by an increasing number of countries offers opportunities for all to participate in all spheres of public life. The devolution of political power, the decentralization of administration and the development of local and municipal authorities have sometimes contributed to the creation of inclusive and participatory societies. In some countries, there are also consultative arrangements that enable wider involvement in the planning and evaluation of policies. In those countries, Governments as well as civil society, including the private sector, are involved in these processes. An encouraging development has been the strengthening of civil society, including non-governmental organizations and volunteers. In many countries, this provides the means for people to work together through partnerships with Governments, thereby promoting and protecting common interests and complementing the action of the public sector. The promotion and protection of all human rights, including the right to development, is an important element in the promotion of social integration. In this context, it is noted that the overall level of ratification of international human rights instruments has increased considerably since the World Summit for Social Development; however, universal ratification has not yet been achieved.

21. Governments have implemented a wide range of policies and programmes to respond to the special needs of vulnerable and disadvantaged groups and to strengthen their participation in development processes through the provision of, inter alia, social services, employment opportunities, credit, skill development and training. However, further efforts in this area are required.

22. The protection of immigrants and migrant workers required the adoption of a broad range of targeted policies. Governments were urged to ensure the protection of the human rights and dignity of migrants, irrespective of their legal status. Governments were also urged to intensify efforts to provide basic social services, facilitate family reunification of documented migrants, promote social and economic integration of documented migrants, and ensure their equal treatment before the law. There has not been enough accession and ratification of the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families for it to come into force. Since the Summit, progress in implementing international instruments on the protection of migrants has been limited and problems concerning the violation of the human rights of migrants have persisted. In many parts of the world, migrants have been subjected to discrimination and documented migrants have not received adequate social protection.

23. Despite attempts to address the causes leading to and the pressures resulting from the movement of refugees and displaced persons, many countries, especially those hosting large refugee populations, have required international support to provide basic social services.

24. While there has been incremental but uneven movement towards equality and equity between women and men in all regions of the world, the fact remains that women are the most affected in times of crisis and economic restructuring. Whereas many countries have adopted national strategies on the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, including general policy recommendations and specific plans of action, concrete progress in improving the status of women and promoting gender equality has been slow and uneven. All forms of violence against women and girls remain a persistent problem for all countries and create obstacles to social integration, hindering the advancement of gender equality and the full enjoyment of human rights by women.

25. There has been continued recognition that the family is the basic unit of society and that it plays a key role in social development and is a strong force of social cohesion and integration. In different cultural, political and social systems, various forms of the family exist.

26. The increase in violent conflicts, including those around issues of local autonomy and ethnic identity, as well as conflicts over the distribution of resources, have hampered social integration and diverted attention and resources from social and economic development to conflict management. This development has underlined the importance of social integration and access to basic social services as preventive measures against crises. Access to basic social services in conflict situations and social integration in post-conflict situations have also been underlined as important preventive tools.

27. The obstacles to the realization of the right of peoples to self-determination, in particular of peoples living under colonial or other forms of alien domination or foreign occupation, have continued to adversely affect the achievement of their social and economic development.

28. In some countries, social development is adversely affected by unilateral measures at variance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations that create obstacles to trade relations among States, impede the full realization of social and economic development and hinder the well-being of the population in the affected countries.

Africa and the least developed countries

29. At the World Summit for Social Development, Governments committed themselves to accelerating the economic, social and human resources development of Africa and the least developed countries. Many of the objectives undertaken at the Summit have yet to be fulfilled by the countries concerned and their international partners, although in this regard donors continue to support the efforts by Africa and the least developed countries.

30. The deteriorating social and economic condition of the least developed countries requires priority attention to the many international development commitments towards those countries which have not been met. Many least developed countries have seen their share of official development assistance decrease, and progress has not been achieved in fulfilling the agreed target of earmarking 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of gross national product as official development assistance for the least developed countries. Technical cooperation provided by the United Nations and its affiliated agencies has been cut back since the Summit.

31. African countries have made real efforts to implement the commitments made at Copenhagen, but internal and external constraints continue to make progress extremely difficult. The mobilization of resources at the national and international levels to accelerate the economic and social development of Africa and the least developed countries through a holistic approach is needed for the full implementation of the commitments. Equitable access to education and health services, income-earning opportunities, land, credit, infrastructure and technology, as well as official development assistance and debt reduction, are vital to social development in Africa and the least developed countries.

32. Social indicators in Africa show that the continent falls dramatically short of the targets set at the Summit five years ago. About 90 per cent of countries in sub-Saharan Africa will not meet the year 2000 goals on child mortality. Life expectancy remained lower than sixty years in forty-one of the fifty-three countries during the period 1995-2000. The HIV/AIDS pandemic is having severe social, economic, political and security impacts in some of the hardest hit countries.

33. Progress has been achieved in the development of democratic institutions in a number of countries. Further progress needs to be made in Africa and the least developed countries in strengthening institutions which are transparent and accountable in order to achieve faster economic and social development.

34. In a rapidly globalizing economic world, Africa continues to be marginalized. A persistent decline in the international terms of trade for commodities exported from African countries has reduced real national income and savings to finance investment. The external debt burden has drastically reduced resources available for social development. Furthermore, promises made to provide official development assistance to developing countries in general and the least developed countries in particular have not been fulfilled. More concerted efforts and an internationally enabling environment are necessary to integrate Africa as well as the least developed countries into the world economy.

Mobilization of resources for social development

35. The mobilization of domestic and international resources for social development is an essential component for the implementation of the commitments made at the World Summit for Social Development in Copenhagen. Since the Summit, reforms to promote the effective and efficient utilization of existing resources have received increasing attention. However, inadequate national revenue generation and collection, combined with new challenges regarding social services and social protection systems due, for instance, to demographic changes and other factors, jeopardize the financing of social services and social protection systems in many countries. New budgeting and accounting techniques have been adopted in several countries. The involvement and cooperation of local authorities, civil society and beneficiary communities have been found to be valuable in raising efficiency in the delivery of services.

36. In several countries and for various reasons, a shift has been occurring in the modalities for financing social protection away from universal, publicly provided coverage to income-based, targeted assistance. Among those reasons are stagnant or declining public revenues or the need to reduce fiscal deficits as well as changing priorities for public expenditures. Also, the need to create new employment opportunities and to provide incentives for the unemployed or underemployed and coverage for new social problems as well as to address the specific needs of disadvantaged and marginalized populations has motivated changes in social protection systems. In some countries, the principle of universal free provision of services, such as health care, education and water supply, has been replaced by user fees and privatization and by more targeted social service provision. However, in many countries, the impact of such measures, especially on the poor and vulnerable, remains to be seen.

37. Despite the renewed commitment at the Summit by donor countries to meet the agreed target of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for official development assistance, overall official development assistance has continued to decline. Only four countries now meet the agreed target, with one more country about to reach it. In the meantime, the relative role of official development assistance within various forms of financing for development has also been declining. As a result of the Summit, however, earmarking of funds for social development has been formulated more explicitly in official development assistance policy. Official development assistance has been found to be more effective when countries are committed to growth-oriented strategies combined with poverty eradication goals and strategies. Poverty eradication through sustainable development is seen by most donor countries as the main objective of development co-operation. The Bretton Woods institutions have also begun to pay more focused attention to the social development dimension in their structural adjustment programmes and lending policies. This process is currently being further strengthened.

38. The 20/20 initiative has encouraged interested Governments and donors to increase the amount of resources earmarked for basic social services and to enhance equity and efficiency in their use. It has also emphasized the need for additional resources in order to pursue effectively the social development agenda, while highlighting the difficulties and limitations of many countries, in particular developing countries, in raising or reallocating domestic resources.

39. There is greater acceptance that the increasing debt burden faced by the most indebted developing countries is unsustainable and constitutes one of the principal obstacles to achieving progress in people-centred sustainable development and poverty eradication. For many developing countries, as well as countries with economies in transition, excessive debt servicing has severely constrained their capacity to promote social development and provide basic services. Although the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative has the potential to reduce debt-servicing costs significantly for the countries it covers, the fact remains that it has so far benefited only a few of them. This initiative has recently been strengthened to provide faster, deeper and broader debt relief, in the context of poverty reduction strategies in which Governments and civil society cooperate to make commitments to utilize the financial benefits to alleviate poverty. A few lender countries have adopted bilateral debt-cancellation initiatives which go beyond the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative.

40. Microcredit and other financial instruments provide financial and other services to people who are often overlooked by the traditional banking sector, thus trying to reach the poorest families. Women play a very important role in such initiatives. Experience shows that women are creditworthy and when they earn an income they are able to contribute more directly to the economy.

41. Since the Summit, the external debt problems of the middle-income developing countries have crippled their social development efforts. A need has arisen for concerted national and international action to address effectively the debt problems of middle-income developing countries with a view to resolving their potential long-term debt-sustainability problems.

Capacity-building to implement social policies and programmes

42. Capacity-building is an important means of creating a national political, socio-economic and legal environment conducive to development and social progress. Member States have taken a number of actions to enhance their capacities to achieve the goals of the World Summit for Social Development, including adopting long-term strategies for social development; conducting national assessments of their institutional capacities; taking legislative action to create an enabling environment; establishing partnerships with civil society; involving people in the management of their local affairs; mainstreaming a gender perspective into policies and programmes; improving transparent and accountable governance; strengthening the implementation, monitoring and evaluation of social policies, programmes and projects; and providing technical co-operation. However, the years since the Summit have also been marked by growing constraints on the capacity for public action. In some countries, increased constraints, including fiscal and political ones on Governments, have resulted in a reduction of the programmes and activities of the State.

43. The State has an important role in the provision of basic social services. However, in several countries, the State is no longer the sole provider of social services but rather the enabler of an overall favourable environment for social development, with increased responsibility for ensuring equitable delivery of and access to quality social services. This development has increased the need for stronger public institutions to provide an effective framework to ensure an equitable provision of basic social services for all. It is also recognized that an effective and accountable public sector is vital to ensuring the provision of social services.

44. International cooperation has been a critical element in the efforts of Governments towards capacity-building for social development. Technical cooperation, including that provided by the United Nations, has been supportive of such efforts by Governments, although in many areas such cooperation should be strengthened and broadened.

III. Further actions and initiatives to implement the commitments made at the World Summit for Social Development

1. Governments should adopt an integrated focus in order to ensure that social development objectives are incorporated in all areas of governmental decision-making. In this connection, the General Assembly recommends taking the following further initiatives at the local, national, regional and international levels for the further implementation of the ten commitments adopted at the World Summit for Social Development as contained in the report of the Summit:

Commitment 1

To create an economic, political, social, cultural and legal environment that will enable people to achieve social development:

2. Governments, while designing and implementing their development policies, should ensure that people are placed at the centre of development. Therefore, people must have the right and the ability to participate fully in the social, economic and political life of their societies. Our global drive for social development and the recommendations for action contained in the present document are made in a spirit of consensus and international cooperation, in full conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, recognizing that the formulation and implementation of strategies, policies, programmes and actions for social development are the responsibility of each country and should take into account the diverse economic, social and environmental conditions in each country, with full respect for the various religious and ethical values, cultural backgrounds and philosophical convictions of its people, and in conformity with all human rights and fundamental freedoms. In this context, international cooperation is essential for the full implementation of social development programmes and actions.

3. Make a renewed commitment to effective, transparent and accountable governance and democratic institutions that are responsive to the needs of people and enable them to take an active part in decision-making about priorities, policies and strategies.

4. Reaffirm the crucial role of Government in advancing people-centred sustainable development through actions to develop and maintain increased equality and equity, including gender equality; markets which function efficiently within a framework of ethical values; policies to eradicate poverty and enhance productive employment; universal and equal access to basic social services; social protection; and support for disadvantaged and vulnerable groups.

5. Reaffirm, promote and strive to ensure the realization of the rights set out in relevant international instruments and declarations, such as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and the Declaration on the Right to Development, including those relating to education, food, shelter, employment, health and information, particularly in order to assist people living in poverty and to ensure the strengthening of national and local institutions in charge of their implementation.

6. Urge the international community, particularly creditor and debtor countries and pertinent international financial institutions, to identify and implement development-oriented and durable solutions to external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries, which constitute an element affecting the development efforts and economic growth, inter alia, through debt relief, including the option of debt cancellation within the framework of official development assistance, and thereby strengthen the efforts of the Governments of such countries to attain the full realization of the economic, social and cultural rights of their people.

7. Enhance positive interaction among environmental, economic and social policies as also being essential for the successful attainment of Summit goals, by promoting the coordinated and simultaneous consideration of this objective in the process of policy formulation and recognizing continuously the impact of social, economic and financial policies on employment and sustainable livelihoods, poverty and social development.

8. Institute systems for ensuring the ex ante assessment and continuous monitoring of the social impact of economic policies at both the international and national levels, with a particular focus on the formulation of macroeconomic policies for dealing with financial crises and the design of economic reform programmes.

9. Develop national and, where appropriate, regional guidelines, taking into account broad definitions of productivity and efficiency, in order to undertake comprehensive assessments of the social and economic costs of unemployment and poverty to facilitate appropriate strategies for employment generation and poverty eradication.

10. Acknowledging that there is no single universal path to achieving social development, and recognizing the importance of Member States sharing information on their national experiences and best practices in social development on the basis of equality and mutual respect, request the Economic and Social Council to consider, through the Commission for Social Development, ways of sharing these experiences and practices to assist Member States in the development of policies to promote the goals of the Summit.

11. Strengthen the capacities of developing countries and countries with economies in transition to address the obstacles that hinder their participation in an increasingly globalized economy by:

(a) Stimulating and strengthening the industrialization process in developing countries;

(b) Facilitating the transfer to developing countries and countries with economies in transition of appropriate technology, know-how, knowledge and information, including for social development and capacity-building, complementing efforts of these countries in this regard through enhanced international cooperation, including technical cooperation and adequate financial resources;

(c) Increasing and improving access of products and services of developing countries to international markets through, inter alia, the negotiated reduction of tariff barriers and the elimination of non-tariff barriers, which unjustifiably hinder trade of developing countries, according to the multilateral trading system;

(d) Increasing and improving access of products and services of countries with economies in transition to international markets;

(e) Attaining, according to existing multilateral trading rules, greater universality of the multilateral trading system and accelerating the process directed towards the further accession to the World Trade Organization of developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

(f) Providing technical assistance bilaterally and through the auspices of the World Trade Organization, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the International Trade Centre and other organizations to developing countries and countries with economies in transition for capacity-building and to address the ability to trade, as well as to participate effectively in international economic forums, and in international trade negotiations, including the dispute settlement mechanism of the World Trade Organization.

12. Take steps with a view to the avoidance of and refrain from any unilateral measure at variance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations that impedes the full achievement of economic and social development by the population of the affected countries, in particular women, children and persons with special needs, that hinders their well-being and that creates obstacles to the full enjoyment of their human rights, including the right of everyone to a standard of living adequate for their health and well-being and their right to food, medical care and the necessary social services. Ensure that food and medicine are not used as tools for political pressure.

13. Reduce negative impacts of international financial turbulence on social and economic development, inter alia, by:

(a) Improving preventive and other measures and early warning capabilities to address the excessive volatility of short-term capital flows, including consideration, inter alia, of a temporary debt standstill;

(b) Enhancing institutional capacities at the national and international levels to improve transparency of financial flows, and developing, strengthening and enforcing regulatory frameworks for monitoring operations, inter alia, to reduce the potential negative impact of financial operations;

(c) Where appropriate, establishing or strengthening at the regional level intergovernmental coordination mechanisms in economic, financial and social fields to promote economic and financial stability and social development at that level;

(d) Providing technical assistance to developing countries and countries with economies in transition to strengthen their domestic capital markets and to ensure their proper regulation by national Governments;

(e) Taking measures to protect basic social services, in particular education and health, in the policies and programmes adopted by countries when dealing with international financial crises;

(f) Acting to strengthen national institutions and consultative mechanisms for economic policy formulation, involving improved transparency and consultation with civil society;

(g) Encouraging international financial institutions and other related mechanisms to be vigilant about potential financial crises in countries, and assist countries in developing their capacities to forestall and mitigate crises with a view to providing a timely and effective response.

14. Ensure the effective involvement of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in the international economic decision-making process through, inter alia, greater participation in international economic forums, ensuring transparency and accountability of international financial institutions to accord a central position for social development in their policies and programmes.

15. Enhance development cooperation in order to augment the productive potential of people in developing countries and to build the capacity, among others, of the private sector to compete more effectively in the global marketplace in order to create the basis for generating greater resources for social development.

16. Support the Cologne initiative for the reduction of debt, particularly the speedy implementation of the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative, and welcome commitments to ensure that additional financing is mobilized to fully fund debt relief to heavily indebted poor countries over the longer term and the provision that funds saved should be used to support anti-poverty programmes and social development.

17. Bearing in mind that corporations must abide by national legislation, encourage corporate social responsibility so that it contributes to social development goals, inter alia, by:

(a) Promoting increased corporate awareness of the interrelationship between social development and economic growth;

(b) Providing a legal, economic and social policy framework that is just and stable to support and stimulate private sector initiatives aimed at achieving these goals;

(c) Enhancing partnerships with business, trade unions and civil society at the national level in support of the goals of the Summit.

18. Take further effective measures to remove the obstacles to the realization of the right of peoples to self-determination, in particular peoples living under colonial and foreign occupation, which continue to adversely affect their economic and social development and are incompatible with the dignity and worth of the human person and must be combatted and eliminated.

19. Enhance international cooperation, including burden-sharing, and coordination of humanitarian assistance to countries affected by natural disasters and other humanitarian emergencies and post-conflict situations in ways that will be supportive of recovery and long-term development.

20. Create and improve conditions to allow for the voluntary repatriation of refugees in safety and dignity to their countries of origin, and the voluntary and safe return of internally displaced persons to their places of origin and their smooth reintegration into their societies.

21. Encourage relevant bodies of the United Nations system to address the issue of corruption which undermines the efforts made and efficient use of resources for social development, and in that context take note of the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice that the General Assembly adopt a resolution to start the elaboration of an effective international legal instrument against corruption, and encourage relevant bodies of the United Nations system to give it serious consideration.

22. Encourage the ongoing work on a draft convention against transnational organized crime and the additional protocols thereto, with a view to the speedy finalization of this work.

23. Give proper consideration to urgent and effective measures regarding the issue of the social and humanitarian impact of sanctions, in particular on women and children, with a view to minimizing social and humanitarian effects of sanctions.

24. Support countries with economies in transition to establish effective regulatory environments, including adequate legal frameworks and institutions, to develop progressive and efficient tax systems to provide adequate resources for social development, and to better utilize existing material and labour resources, inter alia, by implementing measures to reduce the social costs of transition, in particular in order to reverse the trend of cuts in public spending for social services, and encouraging efforts to integrate non-governmental organizations, trade unions, employer organizations and other organizations of civil society into the operation of social policy.

Commitment 2

To eradicate poverty in the world, through decisive national actions and international cooperation, as an ethical, social, political and economic imperative of humankind:

25. Place poverty eradication at the centre of economic and social development and build consensus with all relevant actors at all levels on policies and strategies to reduce the proportion of people living in extreme poverty by one half by the year 2015 with a view to eradicating poverty.

26. Urge countries that have not yet done so to incorporate goals and targets for combating poverty into their national strategies for socio-economic development and to adjust their national strategies, as appropriate to the country context, by striving to establish or strengthen institutional mechanisms that ensure a multisectoral approach to poverty eradication, and enhancing the capacity of local government to address poverty while maintaining accountability, both to the central Government for funds allocated by it and to the constituents concerning the use of those funds.

27. In the context of comprehensive national strategies on poverty eradication, integrate policies at all levels, including economic and fiscal policies, capacity-building and institution-building, giving priority to investments in education and health, social protection and basic social services, in order to help to empower people living in poverty, by:

(a) Promoting coherence between national and international strategies and programmes to combat poverty at all levels;

(b) Assisting developing countries in improving capacities for poverty-related data collection and analysis, which is necessary for formulation of poverty reduction policies;

(c) Ensuring that macroeconomic policies reflect and fully integrate, inter alia, employment growth and poverty reduction goals;

(d) Encouraging Governments to re-evaluate, as appropriate, their national fiscal policies, including progressive tax mechanisms, with the aim of reducing income inequalities and promoting social equity;

(e) Restructuring public expenditure policies to make them more efficient, transparent and with clear lines of accountability to maximize their impact on poverty eradication;

(f) Improving access for people living in poverty to productive resources by implementing measures, such as skills training and microcredit schemes;

(g) Using employment policies, including self-employment, to reduce poverty;

(h) Encouraging the growth of small and medium-sized enterprises by formulating a consistent, long-term policy to support such enterprises, and by, inter alia, furthering access to capital and credit, promoting training opportunities and appropriate technology, reducing bureaucratic regulations, promoting gender equality and labour standards, and fostering improved access of small and medium-sized enterprises to contracts for infrastructure projects;

(i) Devising ways and means to allow for better acknowledgement of the nature of the informal sector so as to evaluate its share in the national economy and, where appropriate, to improve its productivity by increasing training and access to capital, including microcredit, to progressively improve working conditions through respect for basic workers' rights, to enhance social protection and to facilitate its eventual integration into the formal economy;

(j) Establishing, strengthening and expanding microcredit and other financial instruments adapted to the needs and potentials of marginalized people and vulnerable groups in order to make microcredit available to a greater number of people, particularly women, and disadvantaged groups, especially people living in poverty, and to make information and training on its effective operation and benefits widely available;

(k) Encouraging and facilitating the development of cooperatives, where appropriate;

(l) Encouraging sustainable rural development, especially in areas low in agricultural potential;

(m) Expanding advisory services and technical assistance in the areas of agriculture, including animal husbandry and fisheries, and promoting small businesses and self-employment for rural workers, in particular women, in the light of increasing rural poverty, landlessness and rural-urban migration, and, similarly, promoting industrialization in rural areas for employment generation;

(n) Developing and promoting institutional capacities (e.g., by management training);

(o) Ensuring a gender equality perspective at all levels and taking measures to counteract the feminization of poverty, keeping in mind the potential role of women and girls in poverty eradication;

(p) Promoting participatory poverty assessments as well as social impact assessments which include sex, age and relevant socio-economic categories, defining, inter alia, the extent and localization of poverty and the groups most severely affected, in order to design anti-poverty strategies;

(q) Targeting the special needs of vulnerable and disadvantaged groups;

(r) Supporting initiatives that help to empower people living in poverty, especially female heads of households, and promote their capacities for self-organization to enable them to better utilize available opportunities, basic social services and productive resources;

(s) Ensuring community participation in the formulation and implementation of poverty reduction strategies and programmes with a view to increasing people's self-reliance and promoting a holistic approach to the various needs of the people. Civil society can play an important role in cooperation with national Governments in planning, organizing and providing basic social services;

(t) Ensuring access for all to basic social services, even during financial crises;

(u) Using health policies as an instrument for poverty eradication, along the lines of the World Health Organization strategy on poverty and health, developing sustainable and effectively managed pro-poor health systems which focus on the major diseases and health problems affecting the poor, achieving greater equity in health financing, and also taking into account the provision of and universal access to high-quality primary health care throughout the life cycle, including sexual and reproductive health care, not later than 2015, as well as health education programmes, clean water and safe sanitation, nutrition, food security and immunization programmes;

(v) Encouraging decentralization in the delivery of basic social services as a means of responding more efficiently to the needs of the people.

28. Develop and implement sustainable pro-poor growth strategies that enhance the potential and increase the ability of women and men living in poverty to improve their lives; such strategies could include improving access to productive resources and microfinance and establishing programmes to raise productivity and improve knowledge, skills and capabilities.

29. Share best practices on how to establish or improve social protection systems covering risks that cannot be mastered by the beneficiaries themselves and trap people into poverty, ensuring access to social protection, including social safety nets, for people living in poverty, and promoting the role of systems of self-help and mutual benefits, including small, community-based innovative schemes, thereby supporting social cohesion and contributing to more universal and comprehensive systems of protection, taking into account country-specific circumstances, by:

(a) Exploring ways and means, supported by resources, including, as appropriate, through the reallocation of resources and financial assistance from donors, to develop social protection systems for vulnerable, unprotected and uninsured people, and in this context call upon the International Labour Organization and other relevant international organizations, within their mandates, to render technical assistance to developing countries and countries with economies in transition, upon their request;

(b) Developing, as required, new mechanisms to ensure the sustainability of these systems in the appropriate country context, especially that of ageing populations and increased unemployment.

30. Improve national capacity to address hunger, malnutrition and food insecurity at the household level, in cooperation with the World Food Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and other concerned agencies, in particular by recognizing and supporting women in their pivotal role in providing food security. In this regard, call upon Governments which have not done so to place food security as an essential element of their poverty eradication strategies and social policies.

31. Encourage international support to countries with economies in transition in order to assist them in:

(a) Combining universal coverage of social services, with targeted assistance to the most vulnerable groups to ease the pain of transition;

(b) Implementing policies to involve those individuals marginalized by the transition and to overcome exclusion and further deprivation;

(c) Maintaining adequate social programmes.

Commitment 3

To promote the goal of full employment as a basic priority of economic and social policies, and to enable all men and women to attain secure and sustainable livelihoods through freely chosen productive employment and work:

32. Reassess, as appropriate, their macroeconomic policies with the aim of greater employment generation and reduction in the poverty level while striving for and maintaining low inflation rates.

33. Create an enabling environment for social dialogue by ensuring effective representation and participation of workers' and employers' organizations in order to contribute to the development of policies for achieving broad-based social progress.

34. Expand opportunities for productive employment, including self-employment, with particular focus on small and medium-sized enterprises, by investing in the development of human resources, entrepreneurship and employability, especially through education, vocational and management training, occupational safety and health, and by, inter alia, strengthening technical cooperation and cooperation with the private sector in this area.

35. Support the comprehensive International Labour Organization programme on decent work, which includes promoting equal opportunities for all women and men, including persons with disabilities, to obtain decent and productive work, with full respect for the basic rights of workers as defined by relevant International Labour Organization and other international instruments, including prohibitions on forced labour and child labour, safeguarding of the rights of freedom of association and collective bargaining, equal remuneration for women and men for work of equal value, and non-discrimination in employment, and improving social protection and promoting social dialogue.

36. Recognize the need to elaborate a coherent and coordinated international strategy on employment to increase opportunities for people to achieve sustainable livelihoods and gain access to employment, and in this connection support the convening of a world employment forum by the International Labour Organization in 2001.

37. Invite the International Labour Organization to facilitate a coordinated exchange of best practices in the field of employment policies to stimulate and expand employment generation, reduce unemployment, enhance the quality of work and improve labour-market and employment services.

38. Improve the quality of work and level of employment, inter alia, by:

(a) Making continued efforts towards ratifying—where they have not done so—and fully implementing the International Labour Organization conventions concerning basic rights of workers, namely, freedom of association and the effective recognition of the right to organize and bargain collectively, the elimination of all forms of forced or compulsory labour, the effective abolition of child labour and the elimination of discrimination in respect of employment and occupation;

(b) Strongly considering the ratification and full implementation of other International Labour Organization conventions concerning the employment rights of minors, women, youth, persons with disabilities, migrants and indigenous people;

(c) Respecting, promoting and realizing the principles contained in the International Labour Organization Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work and its Follow-up;

(d) Supporting and participating in the global campaign for the immediate elimination of the worst forms of child labour, including by promoting universal ratification and implementation of International Labour Organization Convention No. 182 concerning the Prohibition and Immediate Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour;

(e) Promoting safe and healthy settings at work in order to improve working conditions and to reduce the impact on individuals and health-care systems of occupational accidents and diseases.

39. Ensure effective and comprehensive action to eliminate harmful child labour, inter alia, by designing and implementing national plans of action; ensuring access to basic education; strengthening employment and income-earning opportunities for families of child workers; giving special attention to the girl child; promoting cooperation among Governments, employers' and workers' organizations, families of child workers and civil society; and stressing the need for close cooperation among the International Labour Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Bank and other relevant actors.

40. Call upon relevant organizations of the United Nations system to provide national Governments with technical assistance in a coordinated manner in order to help them in their efforts to promote social development and achieve the goals of poverty eradication, full employment and social integration, including gender equality.

41. Encourage the private sector to respect basic worker rights as reaffirmed in the International Labour Organization Declaration on the Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work and its Follow-up.

42. Improve methods for collection and analysis of basic employment data, disaggregated by, inter alia, age, sex and relevant socio-economic categories, as appropriate in the country context, including with regard to the informal, agricultural and service sectors and new forms of employment, and assess the feasibility of developing and improving mechanisms to measure unremunerated work.

43. Consider the possibility of a major event on the informal sector in the year 2002, to be organized by the International Labour Organization.

44. Invite the International Labour Organization to help Member States, upon their request, to extend a range of support measures to informal sector workers, including legal rights, social protection and access to credit.

45. Devise and strengthen the modalities of coverage of social protection systems, as appropriate, to meet the needs of people engaged in flexible forms of employment.

46. Wherever appropriate, adopt and/or strengthen legislation or other mechanisms for determining minimum wages.

47. Ensure that migrant workers benefit from the protection provided by relevant national and international instruments, take concrete and effective measures against the exploitation of migrant workers, and encourage all countries to consider the ratification and full implementation of the relevant international instruments on migrant workers, including the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of their Families.

48. Undertake appropriate measures, in cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations, as well as other relevant actors of civil society, to address the specific employment issues of youth, ageing workers, persons with disabilities, single parents and long-term unemployed, with particular regard to women, including:

(a) Improving access to new technologies, vocational training and counselling, implementing programmes for job placement and facilitating the acquisition of work experience, including on-the-job training, as well as by the recognition of work experience acquired through voluntary activities and unpaid work;

(b) Promoting lifelong learning and access to labour market information, and tailoring programmes to meet the specific needs of those groups in the acquisition of skills required in the knowledge-based economy;

(c) Involving the private sector in skill training programmes;

(d) Adapting and improving access of youth to technical, secondary and higher education curricula, to meet the needs of a rapidly changing labour market, and easing transition between learning and work;

(e) Enabling older workers to remain and actively participate in working life.

49. Promote gender equality and eliminate gender discrimination in the labour market by:

(a) Promoting the principles of equal remuneration and the elimination of discrimination, and strongly considering ratifying International Labour Organization Conventions No. 100 concerning Equal Remuneration for Men and Women Workers for Work of Equal Value, and No. 111 concerning Discrimination in Respect of Employment and Occupation and fully implementing them once ratified;

(b) Ensuring the right to equal pay for equal work or work of equal value for women and men;

(c) Assisting women and men in reconciling employment and family responsibilities, inter alia, by flexible working arrangements, including parental voluntary part-time employment and work-sharing, as well as accessible and affordable quality child-care and dependant-care facilities, paying particular attention to the needs of single-parent households.

Commitment 4

To promote social integration by fostering societies that are stable, safe and just and that are based on the promotion and protection of all human rights, as well as on non-discrimination, tolerance, respect for diversity, equality of opportunity, solidarity, security and participation of all people, including disadvantaged and vulnerable groups and persons:

50. Strengthen mechanisms for the participation of all people, and promote cooperation and dialogue among all levels of government and civil society as contributions to social integration.

51. Strengthen support for civil society, including community organizations working with groups with special needs, and accelerate the implementation of United Nations instruments relating to those groups, encouraging sustained investment in social institutions and social capital and enhancing social networks, particularly with respect to people living in poverty and other marginalized groups.

52. Ensure an enabling environment for civil society organizations, inter alia, to facilitate their participation in the delivery of social services in a coordinated, democratic, transparent and accountable manner. Efforts should also be made to facilitate the contribution of civil society organizations, particularly from developing countries, to relevant international forums.

53. Promote the effective participation and contribution of disadvantaged and vulnerable groups and persons when drawing up legislation and programmes for poverty eradication and social inclusion.

54. Promote the contribution that voluntarism can make to the creation of caring societies as an additional mechanism in the promotion of social integration. The Commission for Social Development is invited to consider the issue in 2001, the International Year of Volunteers.

55. Promote the involvement of volunteers in social development, inter alia, by encouraging Governments, taking into account the views of all actors, to develop comprehensive strategies and programmes, by raising public awareness about the value and opportunities of voluntarism, and by facilitating an enabling environment for individuals and other actors of civil society to engage in voluntary activities and for the private sector to support such activities.

56. Recognize that the family is the basic unit of society and that it plays a key role in social development and is a strong force of social cohesion and integration. In different cultural, political and social systems, various forms of the family exist. Further recognize that equality and equity between women and men and respect for the rights of all family members are essential for family well-being and for society at large, and promote appropriate actions to meet the needs of families and their individual members, particularly in the areas of economic support and provision of social services. Greater attention should be paid to helping the family in its supporting, educating and nurturing roles, to the causes and consequences of family disintegration, and to the adoption of measures to reconcile work and family life for women and men.

57. Encourage the media, including via the Internet and other forms of information technology, to contribute to the promotion of social integration by adopting inclusive and participatory approaches in the production, dissemination and use of information, including by its accessibility to disadvantaged and marginalized groups.

58. While recognizing the positive role of the media and information technology, including the Internet, identify and take measures to counter the increasing dissemination of child pornography and other obscene materials, intolerance, including religious intolerance, hatred, racism, discrimination based on sex and age and the incitement to violence through the media and information technology, including the Internet.

59. Ensure that education at all levels promotes all human rights and fundamental freedoms, tolerance, peace, understanding of and respect for cultural diversity and solidarity in a globally interdependent world, as expressed in the Declaration and Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace, as well as in the context of the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations (2001), the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education and the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.

60. Eliminate all forms of discrimination, including racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and in this context support the implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the convening of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, to be held in South Africa in 2001.

61. Ensure continued and intensified action to combat all forms of gender-based violence, and recognize that violence against women, whether in private or public life, both violates and impairs or nullifies the enjoyment by women of their human rights and fundamental freedoms.

62. Recognize the contribution of indigenous people to society, promote ways of giving them greater responsibility for their own affairs, inter alia, by:

(a) Seeking means of giving them effective voice in decisions directly affecting them;

(b) Encouraging United Nations agencies within their respective mandates to take effective programmatic measures for engaging indigenous people in matters relevant to their interests and concerns.

63. Encourage the ongoing work on a draft declaration on the rights of indigenous people with the aim of achieving completion prior to the conclusion of the International Decade on the World's Indigenous People in 2004, and support the establishment of a United Nations permanent forum to discuss indigenous issues, within the mandate of the Economic and Social Council, relating to economic and social development, culture, the environment, education, health and human rights.

64. Exchange views and information on national experience and best practices in designing and implementing policies and programmes on ageing, and in promoting full integration and continued participation of older persons in society as full actors in the development process, and in this context support the convening of the Second World Assembly on Ageing, to be held in Spain in the year 2002.

65. Support, on an urgent basis, research on the actual and projected situation of older persons, particularly in developing countries, especially on their productive role and contributions to development, in order to contribute significantly to the revision of the International Plan of Action on Ageing at the Second World Assembly on Ageing.

66. Expand the range of policies and measures, inter alia, by promoting the implementation of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, to empower persons with disabilities to play their full role in society. Special attention should be given to women and children with disabilities and to persons with developmental, mental and psychiatric disabilities.

67. Ensure access to employment for persons with disabilities through the organization and design of the workplace environment, and improve their employability through measures which enhance education and acquisition of skills, through rehabilitation within the community wherever possible and other direct measures, which may include incentives to enterprises to employ people with disabilities.

68. Intensify efforts to ensure the protection of the human rights and dignity of migrants irrespective of their legal status, the social and economic integration of documented migrants, the provision of effective protection for migrants, particularly by implementing the relevant provisions of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, the provision of basic social services, the facilitation of family reunification of documented migrants and their equal treatment under the law.

69. Promote measures, at the national and international levels, to prevent trafficking and illegal transport of migrants and trafficking in persons, particularly women and children, for the purposes of prostitution, economic exploitation and any other form of exploitation, such as domestic servitude and bonded labour. Develop clear penalties for trafficking in persons and trafficking and illegal transport of migrants, backed by effective administrative procedures and laws, ensuring the punishment of those who have been convicted of such crimes.

70. Finalize as soon as possible the trafficking and smuggling protocols which are currently being negotiated in Vienna by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime.

71. Support the efforts of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to implement its mandate, within the framework of international drug control treaties and the outcome of the twentieth special session of the General Assembly devoted to combating the world drug problem, in a balanced and comprehensive approach, which includes reducing demand, fighting trafficking and reducing the supply of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

72. Recognize that stable, supportive and nurturing family relationships, supported by communities and, where available, professional services, can provide a vital shield against substance abuse, particularly among minors. Schools and the media, inter alia, through the use of information technologies, including the Internet, should be encouraged to provide young people with information on the dangers of substance abuse and addiction and on how to seek help.

73. Recognize that the consumption of tobacco and the abuse of alcohol, especially by young women and men, pose a major threat to health, and support the development in each country of comprehensive programmes to reduce the consumption of tobacco, exposure to environmental tobacco smoke and the abuse of alcohol.

74. Further strengthen the effectiveness of organizations and mechanisms working for the prevention and peaceful resolution of conflicts and to address their social roots and consequences.

75. Strengthen the capability of relevant United Nations bodies, within their respective mandates, to promote measures for social integration in their post-conflict management strategies and activities, including in their research, analyses, training and operational activities, so as to better address trauma recovery, rehabilitation, reconciliation and reconstruction in post-conflict situations, inter alia, by promoting participatory development initiatives. Greater attention should be given to children, including unaccompanied refugee minors, displaced children, children separated from their families, those acting as soldiers and those involved in armed conflicts.

Commitment 5

To promote full respect for human dignity and to achieve equality and equity between women and men, and to recognize and enhance the participation and leadership roles of women in political, civil, economic, social and cultural life and in development:

76. Promote the full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms by all women and girls as one of the prerequisites of gender equality. Governments should ensure that the human rights of women and girls are respected, protected and promoted through the development, implementation and effective enforcement of gender-sensitive policies and legislation.

77. The elimination of discrimination against women and their empowerment and full participation in all areas of life and at all levels should be priority objectives at the national as well as at the international levels and an intrinsic part of social development. Equitable social development requires full respect for human dignity, equality and equity between women and men, and the mainstreaming of gender considerations in all levels of policy-making and in the planning of programmes and projects. Despite some progress, gender mainstreaming is not yet universal, and gender-based inequality continues in many areas of most societies.

78. Take fully into account and implement the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century".

79. Ensure gender mainstreaming in the implementation of each of the further initiatives related to each of the commitments made at the World Summit for Social Development, considering the specific roles and needs of women in all areas of social development, inter alia, by evaluating the gender implications of proposals and taking action to correct situations in which women are disadvantaged. The use of positive or affirmative action and empowerment programmes is commended to both Governments and international organizations.

80. Strengthen national efforts, including with assistance from the international community, to promote the empowerment of women, inter alia, by:

(a) Closing the gender gap in primary and secondary education by 2005 and ensuring free compulsory and universal primary education for both girls and boys by 2015;

(b) Increasing the access of women and girls to all levels and forms of education;

(c) Achieving a 50 per cent improvement in levels of adult literacy by 2015, especially for women;

(d) Increasing the participation of women and bringing about a balanced representation of women and men in all sectors and occupations in the labour market and closing the gender gap in earnings;

(e) Ensuring the reduction of maternal morbidity and mortality as a health sector priority;

(f) Eliminating all forms of violence against women, in the domestic as well as in the public sphere;

(g) Promoting programmes to enable women and men to reconcile their work and family responsibilities and to encourage men to share equally with women household and child care responsibilities.

81. Promote international cooperation to support regional and national efforts in the development and use of gender-related analysis and statistics, inter alia, by providing national statistical offices, upon their request, with institutional and financial support in order to enable them to respond to requests for data disaggregated by sex and age for use by national Governments in the formulation of gender-sensitive statistical indicators for monitoring and policy and programme impact assessment, as well as to undertake regular strategic surveys.

82. Support Governments in their efforts to institute action-oriented programmes and measures to accelerate the full implementation of the Copenhagen Programme of Action and the Beijing Platform for Action, with time-bound targets and/or measurable goals and evaluation methods, including gender-impact assessments, with the full participation of women for measuring and analysing progress.

83. Consider signing and ratifying the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.

84. Increased efforts are needed to provide equal access to education, health, and social services and to ensure the rights of women and girls to education and the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health and well-being throughout the life cycle, as well as adequate, affordable and universally accessible health care and services, including as regards sexual and reproductive health, particularly in the face of the HIV/AIDS pandemic; they are also needed with regard to the growing proportion of older women.

85. Ensure that the reduction of maternal morbidity and mortality is a health sector priority and that women have ready access to essential obstetric care, well-equipped and adequately staffed maternal health-care services, skilled attendants at delivery, emergency obstetric care, effective referral and transport to higher levels of care, when necessary, post-partum care and family planning, in order to, inter alia, promote safe motherhood, and give priority attention to measures to prevent, detect and treat breast, cervical and ovarian cancer and osteoporosis, and sexually transmitted infections, including HIV/AIDS.

Commitment 6

To promote and attain the goals of universal and equitable access to quality education, the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, and the access of all to primary health care, making particular efforts to rectify inequalities relating to social conditions, without distinction as to race, national origin, gender, age or disability, respecting and promoting our common and particular cultures, striving to strengthen the role of culture in development, preserving the essential bases of people-centred sustainable development, and contributing to the full development of human resources and to social development, with the purpose of eradicating poverty, promoting full and productive employment and fostering social integration:

86. Recognize the primary responsibility of Governments for providing or ensuring access to basic social services for all; develop sustainable, pro-poor health and education systems by promoting community participation in planning and managing basic social services, including health promotion and disease prevention; and diversify approaches to meet local needs, to the extent possible, utilizing local skills and resources.

87. Ensure appropriate and effective expenditure of resources for universal access to basic education and primary health care, within the country context, in recognition of the positive impact this can have on economic and social development, with particular efforts to target the special needs of vulnerable and disadvantaged groups.

88. Improve the performance of health-care systems, in particular at the primary health-care level, by broadening access to health care.

89. Make basic health services available to all members of society and, where appropriate, explore the possibility of promoting non-profit community-based health insurance programmes among possible methods to support the Government in the promotion of accessible primary health care for all.

90. Encourage new action at the international level, including examining the feasibility of proclaiming a United Nations literacy decade, to support national efforts to achieve universal access to basic education and primary health services for all by the year 2015.

91. Invite international organizations, in particular the international financial institutions, according to their mandates, to keep in mind the overall objective of facilitating long-term development to support national health and education programmes.

92. Reaffirm the Dakar Framework for Action on Education for All, adopted at the World Education Forum, held in Dakar from 26 to 28 April 2000, to develop or strengthen national strategies or action plans at the appropriate level to promote its goals: to ensure that by 2015 all children, particularly girls and children in difficult circumstances or with special needs, including children with disabilities, have access to and complete free and compulsory primary education of good quality; to improve early childhood care and education; to ensure access to appropriate learning, life skills and citizenship programmes; to achieve a 50 per cent improvement in levels of adult literacy; to improve the quality of education; and to take action to eliminate gender disparities and to ensure that girls and women have full and equal access to education.

93. Recognize that achieving education for all will require additional financial support by countries and increased development assistance and debt relief for education by bilateral and multilateral donors, estimated to cost on the order of $8 billion a year. It is therefore essential that new, concrete financial commitments be made by national Governments and also by bilateral and multilateral donors, including the World Bank and the regional development banks, by civil society and by foundations.

94. Take measures to better acknowledge and support the work of teachers and other educational personnel, including, where appropriate, improved compensation and benefits, relevant training and re-training programmes, human resource and career development strategies, and measures to encourage teachers' sustained contributions to quality education.

95. Encourage and assist developing countries and others in need in building capacities for secondary and tertiary education, as well as in training students in the skills and technologies necessary for effective participation in the modern, knowledge-based global economy, and promote international exchanges in the field of education so as to foster greater self-reliance in meeting the challenges of social and economic development and to increase sensitivity for and better understanding of all cultures and awareness of global issues.

96. Take all appropriate measures to ensure that infectious and parasitic diseases, such as malaria, tuberculosis, leprosy and schistosomiasis, neither continue to take their devastating toll nor impede economic and social progress; and strengthen national and international efforts to combat these diseases, inter alia, through capacity-building in the developing countries with the cooperation of the World Health Organization, including support for research centres.

97. Take multisectoral measures at the national level to enable all women and men, including young people, to protect themselves and others against, and be protected from, HIV infection in order to counteract the devastating impact of the epidemic on personal, social and economic development. It is particularly important to protect the dignity and the human rights of and improve the quality of life for people living with HIV/AIDS. Measures to enhance prevention and address the consequences of the transmission of HIV/AIDS and other sexually transmitted infections may include:

(a) Strengthening health-care services, including sexual and reproductive health;

(b) Strengthening information, education and communication campaigns to raise awareness of HIV/AIDS and to promote safe and responsible sexual behaviour, in full partnership with youth, parents, families, educators and health-care providers;

(c) Training health-care providers in all areas of prevention and control of HIV/AIDS and sexually transmitted infections, and giving special attention to the avoidance of contaminating equipment and blood products, the need to ensure a safe blood supply and the avoidance of reusing or sharing needles among injecting drug users;

(d) Developing and implementing strategies to prevent mother-to-child transmission;

(e) Promoting analyses of the political, cultural, social, economic and legal aspects of HIV/AIDS in order to develop strategies and measures to address the epidemic and its impact on national development;

(f) Providing social and educational support to communities, households, orphans and children affected by HIV/AIDS.

98. Strengthen political commitment and efforts at the international and national levels against HIV/AIDS, with a focus on developing countries and countries with economies in transition, through partnership among the Joint United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (HIV/AIDS) and its co-sponsors, bilateral donors, Governments and non-governmental organizations, including youth organizations, and the private sector, based on a multisectoral approach encompassing, among other things, education and prevention programmes and services, care, including prenatal care, access to affordable medications and other pharmaceutical agents, and support for people living with HIV/AIDS, including home-based care, family planning programmes and the empowerment of women.

99. Provide support to countries with economies in transition to revitalize systems of primary health care and to promote more vigorous campaigns for health education and the promotion of healthy lifestyles.

100. Encourage, at all levels, arrangements and incentives to mobilize commercial enterprises, especially in pharmaceuticals, to invest in research aimed at finding remedies that can be provided at affordable prices for diseases that particularly afflict people in developing countries, and invite the World Health Organization to consider improving partnerships between the public and private sectors in the area of health research.

101. Recognize the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standards of physical and mental health as contained in relevant international human rights instruments as well as in the Constitution of the World Health Organization. Further recognize the critical importance of access to essential medicines at affordable prices. Acknowledge the contribution of intellectual property rights to promote further research, development and distribution of drugs, and the fact that these intellectual property rights should contribute to the mutual advantage of producers and users of technological knowledge and in a manner conducive to social and economic welfare. Agree that Member States may freely exercise, consistent with national laws and international agreements acceded to, in an unrestricted manner, the options available to them under international agreements to protect and advance access to life-saving, essential medicines.

102. Invite the World Health Organization, in collaboration with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the World Trade Organization and other concerned agencies, to help to strengthen the capacities of the developing countries, particularly the least developed countries, to analyse the consequences of agreements on trade in health services for health equity and the ability to meet the health needs of people living in poverty, and to develop policies to ensure the promotion and protection of national health services.

103. Invite the World Health Organization to cooperate with Governments, at their request, and with international organizations, in monitoring and analysing the pharmaceutical and public health implications of relevant international agreements, including trade agreements, so that Governments can effectively assess and subsequently develop pharmaceutical and health policies and regulatory measures that address their concerns and priorities, and can maximize the positive and mitigate the negative impact of those agreements.

104. Invite the organizations of the United Nations system to cooperate with the World Health Organization to integrate the health dimension into their policies and programmes, in view of the close interdependence between health and other fields and the fact that solutions to good health may often be found outside of the health sector itself; such cooperation may build on initiatives undertaken in one or more of the following areas: health and employment, health and education, health and macroeconomic policy, health and environment, health and transport, health and nutrition, health and food security, health and housing, development of more equitable health financing systems, and trade in health goods and services.

105. Invite the United Nations system to support national efforts, where appropriate, to build on initiatives undertaken in one or more of the above-mentioned fields.

Commitment 7

To accelerate the economic, social and human resource development of Africa and the least developed countries:

106. Encourage concerted national and international efforts to promote an integrated approach to people-centred sustainable development.

107. Make concerted national and international efforts for promoting an enabling environment that will facilitate the integration of Africa and the least developed countries into the global economy and promote their participation in the multilateral trading system, inter alia, by:

(a) Implementing appropriate debt-relief initiatives that can lead to a sustainable solution to their debt burden;

(b) Improving market access for export products of Africa and the least developed countries, including through tariff- and quota-free treatment for essentially all products originating in least developed countries on as broad and liberal a basis as possible;

(c) Supporting programmes to assist them in taking full advantage of the multilateral trading regime, both on a bilateral basis and through multilateral efforts, inter alia, through the World Trade Organization, the International Trade Centre, United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other relevant regional and subregional economic organizations;

(d) Pursuing structural adjustment programmes relevant to the needs of these countries by supporting growth-enhancing, poverty-reducing economic reforms;

(e) Supporting, inter alia, initiatives in the development of venture capital funds for investment in these countries in fields conducive to sustainable development.

108. Assist Governments in Africa and the least developed countries in enhancing the productive capacity and competitiveness of their countries through, inter alia, policies and programmes to support agricultural and industrial diversification, the establishment of cooperative business networks, public and private systems for sharing information, promoting technology and encouraging domestic and foreign investment, especially in the field of technology.

109. Call upon donor Governments and international organizations to encourage investment in critical infrastructure services, including reconstruction in post-conflict and natural disaster situations, and invite Governments in Africa and the least developed countries to utilize infrastructure investments to also promote employment.

110. Encourage interested Governments to consider the establishment of a world solidarity fund to be financed on a voluntary basis in order to contribute to the eradication of poverty and to promote social development in the poorest regions of the world.

111. Call upon the World Food Programme and other concerned agencies to strengthen food-for-work activities in low-income food-deficit countries, in particular in Africa, as an important measure to expand or rehabilitate needed community infrastructure, create employment and enhance household food security.

112. Strengthen support for South-South cooperation as a means to promote development in Africa and the least developed countries by enhancing investment and transfer of appropriate technology through mutually agreed arrangements, as well as promoting regional human resource development and development of technology through, inter alia, technology-promotion centres.

113. Support increased efforts of Governments to promote and strengthen human-resource development in Africa and the least developed countries, in partnership with civil society, to achieve quality basic education for all, while at the same time continuing to invest in secondary and tertiary education, and with enhanced cooperation of the international community.

114. Support the efforts of Governments to allocate additional resources to education and the management capacities of the educational sector, and improve enrolment ratios, particularly for girls and women.

115. Support steps taken by Governments to encourage skilled and highly educated Africans to remain in the region and to utilize and further develop their skills.

116. Urge developed countries to strive to fulfil as soon as possible the agreed target of earmarking 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of gross national product as official development assistance for the least developed countries.

117. Accord priority to the least developed countries by the international community, including by United Nations funds and programmes, as well as international and regional financial institutions, in the allocation of resources on concessional terms for economic and social development.

118. Encourage the United Nations and its affiliated agencies to enhance the provision of technical cooperation to the least developed countries. In this context, call for the strengthening of the integrated framework for trade-related technical assistance to the least developed countries.

119. Encourage creditor countries to implement bilateral debt relief arrangements for the African and the least developed countries and stress that debt relief should contribute to national development objectives, including poverty eradication.

120. Give special attention to the least developed countries, in particular those in sub-Saharan Africa, in the implementation of the 20/20 initiative in cooperation with civil society in order to ensure access to basic social services for all.

121. Support the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General and in that context await the outcome of the open-ended ad hoc working group on the causes of conflict and promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa.

122. Encourage the twenty-five African countries most affected by HIV/AIDS to adopt time-bound targets for reducing infection levels, such as a target for reducing infection levels in young people by 25 per cent by 2005, and invite the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS, in conjunction with its co-sponsoring agencies, to prepare and propose means for implementing a strategy for achieving this target.

123. Support African Governments in expanding and strengthening programmes related to young people and HIV/AIDS by developing a collective strategy with the donor community, international organizations and non-governmental organizations, facilitated by the establishment of national young people's task forces, in order to ensure the necessary multisectoral response and the interventions to raise the awareness and address the needs of young people, as well as the needs of those living with HIV/AIDS and children orphaned by AIDS.

124. Invite the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS and its co-sponsors, as part of the International Partnership Against AIDS in Africa, to support countries most affected by the HIV/AIDS pandemic, upon request, in their efforts:

(a) To allocate adequate resources, in particular financial resources, as well as wider access to quality medication by ensuring the provision and affordability of drugs, including a reliable distribution and delivery system; implementation of a strong generic drug policy; bulk purchasing; negotiation with pharmaceutical companies; appropriate financing systems; and encouragement of local manufacturing and import practices consistent with national laws and international agreements acceded to;

(b) To develop a strategy for resource mobilization for programmes on young people with their full involvement;

(c) To consolidate resources by creating or strengthening technical resource networks and identifying best practices at the country and regional levels;

(d) To develop a core set of indicators and tools to monitor implementation of youth programmes and progress towards achievement of the target to reduce infection levels in young people by 25 per cent by 2005.

125. Support African Governments and civil society organizations, inter alia, through the International Partnership Against AIDS in Africa and national programmes, in the provision of key services linked to social security, care and support, prevention and treatment of sexually transmitted infections, reduction of mother-to-child transmission, access to voluntary and confidential counselling and testing, and support of behavioural change and responsible sexual behaviour in order to scale up significantly efforts in Africa to curtail the spread of HIV, reduce the impact of HIV/AIDS and halt the further reversal of human, social and economic development.

126. Support and assist research and development centres in Africa and the least developed countries in the field of vaccines, medicine and public health, thereby strengthening training of medical personnel and counsellors, improving control and treatment of communicable and infectious diseases, such as HIV/AIDS, malaria and tuberculosis, as well as assisting in making vaccines and medicines for the control and treatment of these diseases widely available at affordable prices.

127. Encourage the international community to give its full support to an effective and successful outcome of the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries to be held in Brussels in 2001.

Commitment 8

To ensure that when structural adjustment programmes are agreed to they include social development goals, in particular eradicating poverty, promoting full and productive employment and enhancing social integration:

128. Encourage international financial institutions and national Governments to adopt the principle of integration of social as well as economic aspects in the design of structural adjustment as well as reform programmes.

129. Adjustment programmes to address economic crises, including those negotiated between national Governments and the International Monetary Fund, should strive to ensure that this process does not lead to a severe drop in economic activity or sharp cuts in social spending.

130. Encourage Governments and international financial institutions to improve the ongoing dialogue on the design, implementation and reform of structural adjustment programmes, ensuring the full integration of social and economic frameworks for protecting social policies and programmes so that such programmes are genuinely nationally owned and driven; such dialogue would benefit from consultations by Governments with relevant actors and organizations of civil society. Encourage the international financial institutions to take into account the specific circumstances of countries concerned in providing support to their structural adjustment programmes.

131. Encourage the development of nationally owned poverty reduction strategies as a way to facilitate the dialogue of Governments with development partners and as a tool for the integration of social goals in national development strategies.

132. Design national policies, taking into account concerns of people living in poverty, by incorporating social development goals in the formulation of structural adjustment programmes, including poverty reduction strategies, in consultation with civil society, with a particular emphasis on:

(a) Designing economic policies for more equitable and enhanced access to income and resources to promote sustained economic growth and sustainable development, taking fully into account economic and social programmes aimed at poverty reduction;

(b) Protecting core social development expenditures identified by individual Governments from budgetary cuts, especially in times of crises, and encouraging international development banks to support national efforts in this regard;

(c) Ensuring that public services reach people living in poverty and vulnerable groups as a matter of priority, particularly through strengthening existing social programmes;

(d) Implementing adjustment and stabilization policies in ways that protect people living in poverty as well as vulnerable groups;

(e) Preserving and enhancing the social capital and strengthening the social fabric of society;

(f) Taking into account the evolving concept of poverty reduction strategy papers.

133. Ensure transparency and accountability by both Governments and international financial institutions for improved efficacy of structural adjustment programmes and fulfilment of social development goals.

134. Establish participatory mechanisms to undertake assessment of the social impact of structural adjustment programmes and reform packages before, during and after the implementation process with a view to mitigating their negative impact and developing policies to improve their positive impact on social development goals. Such assessments might involve the support and cooperation of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, regional development banks and organizations of civil society.

135. Improve information-sharing and coordination between the Economic and Social Council and the relevant organizations of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, with a view to promoting social development and exploring ways and means to reduce the negative effects and improve the positive impact of structural adjustment programmes.

136. Ensure that gender issues are taken into account in the formulation and implementation of structural adjustment programmes.

Commitment 9

To increase significantly and/or utilize more efficiently the resources allocated to social development in order to achieve the goals of the Summit through national action and regional and international co-operation:

137. Recommend that the high-level intergovernmental event on financing for development, to be held in 2001, consider the mobilization of national and international resources for social development for the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action.

138. With the assistance of the international community, upon request, strengthen national information systems to produce reliable and disaggregated statistics on social development in order to assess the impact of social policies on economic and social development as well as to ensure that economic and social resources are used efficiently and effectively.

139. Undertake efforts to mobilize domestic resources for social development in accordance with national priorities and policies, inter alia, by:

(a) Reallocating public resources for investment in social development, inter alia, through the appropriate reduction of excessive military expenditures, including global military expenditures and the arms trade, and investments for arms production and acquisition, taking into consideration national security requirements;

(b) Endeavouring to enhance the cost-effectiveness of social spending;

(c) Strengthening mechanisms and policies to attract and manage private investment, thus freeing and also increasing public resources for social investments;

(d) Facilitating ways and means for the involvement and active partnership of civil society in the provision of social services.

140. Taking into account the challenges of globalization facing developing countries, support Governments, at their request, in the establishment of guidelines for policies aimed at generating domestic revenue to pay for social services, social protection and other social programmes, inter alia, by:

(a) Promoting equitable and progressive broadening of the tax base;

(b) Improving the efficiency of tax administration, including tax collection;

(c) Seeking new sources of revenue which simultaneously may discourage public bads;

(d) Undertaking various forms of public borrowing, including issuance of bonds and other financial instruments to finance capital works.

141. Promote, through national action, the mobilization of new and additional resources for social development, inter alia, by:

(a) Extending access to microcredit and other financial instruments to people living in poverty, particularly women;

(b) Supporting community participation in the planning, provision and maintenance of local infrastructure, through mechanisms such as community contracting of labour-based works;

(c) Improving and restructuring, as appropriate, national tax regimes and administration in order to establish an equitable and efficient system that supports social development policies and programmes and, inter alia, take measures to reduce tax evasion;

(d) Requesting the international community to support the efforts of all countries aimed at strengthening institutional capacity for preventing corruption, bribery, money-laundering and illegal transfer of funds, as well as repatriating these funds to their countries of origin.

142. Promote, through international action, the mobilization of new and additional resources for social development, inter alia, by:

(a) Developing appropriate means of international cooperation in tax matters;

(b) Exploring methods for dividing the liability of multinational corporations to pay taxes on profits among the various jurisdictions in which they operate;

(c) Exploring ways to combat the use of tax shelters and tax havens that undermine national tax systems;

(d) Improving the existing mechanisms for helping to stabilize commodity export earnings so as to respond to the real concerns of developing country producers, taking into account the fact that commodity price instability has remained extremely high, with declining trends for a number of commodities;

(e) Preventing tax avoidance and promoting treaties for avoiding double taxation;

(f) Exploring ways and means to increase and widen flows of public and private financial resources to developing countries, especially least developed countries;

(g) Conducting a rigorous analysis of advantages, disadvantages and other implications of proposals for developing new and innovative sources of funding, both public and private, for dedication to social development and poverty eradication programmes;

(h) Exploring ways and means of promoting the micro- and small enterprise sector whereby it becomes a possible vehicle for a new development model.

143. Urge international action to support national efforts to attract additional resources for social development, in several important areas:

(a) Encouraging creditor countries and institutions to take action to achieve rapid progress towards faster, broader and deeper debt relief as agreed under the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative, which already considers increased flexibility with regard to eligibility criteria and through other means, to help to alleviate the debt burdens of those countries covered by the Initiative, stressing that debt relief should contribute to development objectives, including poverty reduction, and in this regard urging countries to direct those resources freed through debt relief, in particular through debt cancellation and reduction, towards these objectives, consistent with General Assembly resolution 54/202 of 22 December 1999;

(b) Strengthening the institutional capacity of developing countries in debt management, calling upon the international community to support the efforts towards this end, and in this regard stressing the importance of such initiatives as the Debt Management and Financial Analysis System and the debt-management capacity-building programme;

(c) Calling for concerted national and international action to address effectively debt problems of low and middle-income developing countries with a view to resolving their potential long-term debt-sustainability problems through various debt-treatment measures, including, as appropriate, orderly mechanisms for debt reduction, and encouraging all creditor and debtor countries to utilize to the fullest extent possible, where appropriate, all existing mechanisms for debt reduction;

(d) Calling for continued international cooperation, including the reaffirmation to strive to fulfil the yet to be attained internationally agreed target of 0.7 per cent of the gross national product of developed countries for overall official development assistance as soon as possible, thereby increasing the flow of resources for social development;

(e) Encouraging donor and recipient countries, based on mutual agreement and commitment, to implement fully the 20/20 initiative, in line with the Oslo and Hanoi Consensus documents, to ensure universal access to basic social services;

(f) Providing concessional financing for social development programmes and projects to support the efforts of developing countries to achieve social development goals and targets;

(g) Providing landlocked countries and transit developing countries with appropriate technical and financial assistance in their efforts to implement the outcome of the Summit, particularly in addressing their special needs and problems;

(h) Implementing the commitments regarding the special needs and vulnerabilities of the small island developing States, in particular by providing effective means, including adequate, predictable, new and additional resources for social development programmes, in accordance with the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and the results of the twenty-second special session of the General Assembly and on the basis of the relevant provisions of the Programme of Action.

144. Promote greater efficiency and effectiveness in the use of resources for social development.

145. Invite Governments to consider sector-wide approaches for the achievement of social development goals, in accordance with overall national development goals and priorities.

Commitment 10

To promote an improved and strengthened framework for international, regional and subregional cooperation for social development, in a spirit of partnership, through the United Nations and other multilateral institutions:

146. Develop, strengthen and make more effective indicators at the national level for assessing and guiding social development, in collaboration with research institutions and civil society, as appropriate. These could include quantitative and qualitative indicators for assessing, inter alia, the social and gender impact of policies. Also develop and strengthen national information systems to produce reliable statistics on social and economic development. The relevant bodies of the United Nations and other relevant institutions should support, upon request, these national efforts.

147. Invite the Statistical Commission, with the assistance of the Statistics Division of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat and in close cooperation with other relevant bodies of the United Nations system, including the Administrative Committee on Coordination, and, as appropriate, other relevant international organizations, to review, with a view to facilitating future consideration by the Economic and Social Council, the work undertaken in harmonizing and rationalizing basic indicators in the context of follow-up to United Nations conferences and summits, taking fully into account the decisions taken in other functional and regional commissions, and in that process to identify a limited number of common indicators from among those currently accepted and widely used by the States Members of the United Nations in order to lessen the data-provision burden on Member States, bearing in mind the work done so far in this area.

148. Strengthen cooperation at the regional level, which might include:

(a) Promoting dialogue among regional and sub-regional groups and organizations;

(b) Encouraging regional commissions to initiate or continue evaluation of the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action and the further initiatives contained in the present document;

(c) Encouraging the implementation of regional social development agendas where they exist; encouraging recipient countries, donor Governments and agencies and multilateral financial institutions to take greater account of the regional social development agenda of regional commissions and regional and sub-regional organizations, including in their funding policies and programmes.

149. Further strengthen the Economic and Social Council as the body primarily responsible for coordinating international action in follow-up to United Nations conferences and summits, which could include:

(a) Fostering a closer working relationship with the United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies;

(b) Supporting continuing existing cooperation between the Economic and Social Council and the Bretton Woods institutions and joint meetings with the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, so that the objectives and policy approaches of the United Nations conferences and summits are given due consideration by those institutions.

150. Promote South-South cooperation, particularly in terms of economic and technical cooperation, and support triangular mechanisms whereby donors would provide appropriate support.

151. Promote the full realization of the right to development and the elimination of obstacles to development through, inter alia, the implementation of the provisions of the Declaration on the Right to Development as reaffirmed by the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993.

152. Continue work on a wide range of reforms to create a strengthened and more stable international financial system, enabling it to deal more effectively and in a timely manner with the new challenges of development.

153. Consider the establishment, as appropriate, of national mechanisms, where they do not already exist, for the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action and the further initiatives contained in the present document.

154. Invite parliamentarians to continue to adopt legislative measures and to expand awareness-raising, necessary for implementing the commitments of the World Summit for Social Development and the further initiatives contained in the present document, and encourage the contribution of the Inter-Parliamentary Union in this effort.

155. Invite the Economic and Social Council to consolidate the ongoing initiatives and actions established in the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action, the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) and the recommendations contained in the present document with a view to launching a global campaign to eradicate poverty.

156. Commit ourselves and encourage the United Nations system and all other relevant actors to take further determined sustained action to implement the commitments of the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action and the results of the current special session of the General Assembly, entitled "World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world", and request the Economic and Social Council to assess regularly, through the Commission for Social Development, the further implementation of the Copenhagen commitments and the outcome of the special session, not excluding the possibility of bringing together, at the appropriate time, all parties involved to evaluate progress and to consider new initiatives.

Outcome of special session

Report of Secretary-General. A September report of the Secretary-General on the twenty-fourth special session [A/55/344], prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 54/23 [YUN 1999, p. 1038], contained an analysis of the outcome document, particularly new initiatives regarding the role of Governments; the relationship between social policies and economic development; financial stability and international financial architecture; poverty eradication; employment; social integration; gender equality and mainstreaming; health and education for all; greater integration of developing countries, Africa and LDCs and those with economies in transition; debt relief; and resources for social development. It discussed further follow-up action by the UN system, particularly the Economic and Social Council, and presented an overview of the new initiatives.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 November [meeting 74], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/46 [draft: A/55/L.40 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 37].

Implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and of the special session of the General Assembly in this regard

The General Assembly,

Recalling the World Summit for Social Development, held in Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly entitled "World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world", held in Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000,

Stressing the importance of the outcome of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly which reviewed and assessed the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action and adopted further actions and initiatives to implement the commitments made at the Summit,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly entitled "Women 2000: Gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century",

1. Reaffirms the commitments made by heads of State and Government at the World Summit for Social Development, contained in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action, which established a new consensus to place people at the centre of the concerns for sustainable development and pledged to eradicate poverty, promote full and productive employment and foster social integration so as to achieve stable, safe and just societies for all, and the decisions on further action and initiatives to accelerate social development for all, adopted at the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly and contained in the further initiatives for social development;

2. Also reaffirms that the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action and the further initiatives for social development adopted at the twenty-fourth special session will constitute the basic framework for the further promotion of social development in the forthcoming years;

3. Emphasizes the vital importance of placing the goals of social development, as contained in the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action and in the outcome document of the twenty-fourth special session, at the centre of economic policy-making, including in policies that influence domestic and global market forces and the global economy;

4. Invites the Secretary-General, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission for Social Development, the regional commissions, the relevant agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and other relevant intergovernmental forums, within their respective mandates, to take on a priority basis all steps necessary to ensure the effective implementation of all commitments and undertakings contained in the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action and in the outcome document of the twenty-fourth special session;

5. Expresses its appreciation to the Government and people of Switzerland for contributing to the successful outcome of the twenty-fourth special session;

6. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the outcome of the twenty-fourth special session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session an item entitled "Implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly", and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session a report on this question.

Commission for Social Development

The Commission for Social Development held its thirty-eighth session from 8 to 17 February and on 14 and 17 March in New York [E/2000/26 & Corr. 1]. In addition to adopting a set of agreed conclusions on the review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the 1995 World Summit for Social Development (see p. 1013), the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of draft resolutions on further promotion of equalization of opportunities by, for and with persons with disabilities (see p. 1036) and follow-up to the 1999 International Year of Older Persons (see p. 1140).

In the context of preparations for the Commission's 2001 session, the Secretariat organized, in cooperation with Germany and South Africa, expert group meetings on the challenge of social protection in a globalizing world (Berlin, 10-12 October) and on traditional and modern schemes of social protection in the context of development (Cape Town, 30 October-1 November) [E/CN.5/2001/2]. The meetings aimed to explore the development of social protection systems for vulnerable and unprotected people, as well as to make suggestions on new mechanisms to ensure the sustainability of the systems in various country contexts.

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of the Commission's report on its thirty-eighth session, endorsed the Commission's resolutions and decisions and approved its provisional agenda and documentation for 2001 (decision 2000/238).

On 18 October, the Council decided to invite those NGOs accredited to the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly to attend the Commission's thirty-ninth (2001) session, provided that they had started the process of applying for consultative status (decision 2000/310).

2000 Report on the World Social Situation

An overview of the 2000 Report on the World Social Situation [E/2000/9], presented by the Secretary-General in April, summarized global developments from a social perspective. It reviewed demographic and economic trends; societal changes affecting and affected by the situation of families, civil society and public institutions; trends in living conditions; contemporary social problems, such as discrimination, armed conflicts, violence, corruption and crime; and education, technology and information. The report identified developments that were expected to influence and shape society, radically affecting life in far-reaching and fundamental ways.

The report was to be issued as a sales publication in 2001.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the overview of the report (decision 2000/289).

UN Research Institute for Social Development

In 2000, the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) continued to conduct research into the social dimensions of development. A November report of the UNRISD Board [E/CN.5/2001/3] described the Institute's activities, including participation in the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly (see p. 1012), for which UNRISD had produced the report Visible Hands: Taking Responsibility for Social Development, a synthesis of 40 commissioned papers that highlighted patterns of economic growth, liberalization and inequality which continued to obstruct progress. UNRISD commissioned papers and held a public workshop to coincide with the Assembly's special session on women (see p. 1082), and began a project to strengthen the empirical basis for the 2001 World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (see p. 641). A special initiative was begun on improving research and knowledge on social development within international organizations (Bellagio, Italy, November).

Research continued within six projects initiated during the previous biennium: information technologies and social development; gender, poverty and well-being; business responsibility for sustainable development; public sector reform and crisis-ridden States; grass-roots initiatives for land reform; and urban governance. In addition, four new projects initiated during 1999-2000 were under way on neo-liberalism and institutional reform in East Asia; social policy in a development context; technocratic policymaking and democratization; and HIV/AIDS and development.

Although it was part of the UN system, UNRISD activities were financed through voluntary contributions from Governments, international agencies and foundations.

Persons with disabilities

Report of Special Rapporteur. During the year, the Commission for Social Development considered the final report of its Special Rapporteur on disability, Bengt Lindqvist (Sweden) [E/CN.5/2000/3 & Corr.1], describing the second monitoring period (1997-2000) of implementation of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, contained in General Assembly resolution 48/96 [YUN 1993, p. 977]. During the period under review, the Special Rapporteur continued to advise Governments upon request, participate in seminars and conferences to discuss the practical implementation of the Rules, and study the implementation of the Rules worldwide through the use of surveys. He had visited countries in transition (Armenia, Bulgaria, Mongolia, Romania, Russian Federation), where he observed that they had not yet developed guidelines for a modern disability policy. In visits to developing countries (Chile, Costa Rica, Jordan, Thailand, Uruguay), he noted that programmes varied considerably. The Special Rapporteur reported on the results of the third global survey, conducted in collaboration with the World Health Organization (WHO), the body responsible for three of the Rules under preconditions for equal opportunity (medical care, rehabilitation, support services). The survey aimed to identify government policies regarding medical care, rehabilitation, support services and personnel training, as well as strategies adopted and problems encountered when working in the area of medical care and rehabilitation of persons with disabilities. The Special Rapporteur stated that a high proportion of Governments indicated the existence of medical services (99 countries of 104 responding), rehabilitation (73 of 102) and the provision of devices and equipment (87 of 96). He noted positive developments regarding children with disabilities and legislation, but more needed to be done, in particular to improve living conditions for girls and women with disabilities and for persons with developmental and psychiatric disabilities.

Report of Secretary-General. In a December interim report [E/CN.5/2001/7] on implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons [YUN 1982, p. 981], the Secretary-General stated that in 2000 the Special Rapporteur had formulated a multi-year work programme and travelled, on request, to Belarus, Brazil, Bulgaria, Hungary, the Russian Federation and Uganda. He participated in the Nineteenth World Congress of Rehabilitation International (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 25-29 August) and the Sixth Congress on the Inclusion of Children with Disabilities (Edmonton, Canada, 22-24 October), and organized an international seminar on human rights and disability (Stockholm, Sweden, 4-10 November).

Regarding activities under the African Decade of Disabled People (2000-2009), proclaimed by the Organization of African Unity, the UN Voluntary Fund on Disability supported an international workshop on environmental accessibility and universal design in developing countries (Providence, Rhode Island, United States, 14-18 June) and the Eastern Africa regional workshop on application of universal design concepts and principles and information technologies (Nairobi, 6-10 November). Within the context of the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons (1993-2002), proclaimed in 1992 by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific [YUN 1992, p. 490], a series of regional and sub-regional technical meetings on accessibility focused on training related to barrier-free design.

The Secretary-General reported that, from 1 September 1999 to 31 October 2000, the UN Voluntary Fund on Disability provided $763,901 in grants to 26 disability-related projects. Annexed to the report was a description of the projects.

NGO Summit. The World NGO Summit on Disability (Beijing, 10-12 March) [A/54/861-E/2000/47, A/S-24/3] adopted the Beijing Declaration on the Rights of People with Disabilities in the New Century, which called for an initiative that would lead to the adoption of an international convention on the rights of all people with disabilities.

(For information on persons with disabilities and human rights, see p. 733.)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/2000/26 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 2000/10 without vote [agenda item 14 (b)].

Further promotion of equalization of opportunities by, for and with persons with disabilities

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 37/52 of 3 December 1982, by which the Assembly adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, resolution 48/96 of 20 December 1993, by which it adopted the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, and resolutions 52/82 of 12 December 1997 and 54/121 of 17 December 1999,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1997/19 on equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities and 1997/20 on children with disabilities, of 21 July 1997, Commission on Human Rights resolution 1998/31 on the human rights of persons with disabilities of 17 April 1998 and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council and its functional commissions,

Recalling further the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and reaffirming the obligations contained in relevant human rights instruments, including the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Recalling the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, in which Governments are requested to promote the Standard Rules and to develop strategies for their implementation,

Reaffirming the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits and their respective follow-up reviews, in particular as they pertain to the promotion of the rights and well-being of persons with disabilities on the basis of their full participation and equality,

Mindful of the need to adopt and implement effective strategies and policies to promote the rights and the full and effective participation of persons with disabilities in economic, social, cultural and political life, on the basis of equality, to achieve a society for all,

Noting with great concern that persons with disabilities in some circumstances are among the poorest of the poor and continue to be excluded from the benefits of development, such as education and access to gainful employment,

Noting with satisfaction that the Standard Rules play an important role in influencing the promotion, formulation and evaluation of policies, plans, programmes and actions at the national, regional and international levels to further the equalization of opportunities by, for and with persons with disabilities,

Acknowledging the active role played by non-governmental organizations, including organizations of persons with disabilities, in cooperation with Governments and relevant intergovernmental bodies and organizations, to promote awareness and support implementation and evaluation of the Standard Rules at the national, regional and international levels,

Recognizing that the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability has relied on a narrow donor base, and that a sustained and predictable financial basis for the execution of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and the implementation of the Standard Rules needs a broadening of its donor base,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the valuable work done by the Special Rapporteur for monitoring the implementation of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities of the Commission for Social Development, and welcomes his report on his second mission, 1997-2000;

2. Also takes note with appreciation of the important efforts of Governments as well as non-governmental organizations and academic institutions during the first and second missions of the Special Rapporteur to build capacities to implement the Standard Rules at the national, regional and interregional levels;

3. Welcomes the many initiatives and actions of Governments, relevant United Nations bodies and organizations, including the Bretton Woods institutions, as well as non-governmental organizations to implement further the goal of full participation and equality for persons with disabilities in accordance with the Standard Rules;

4. Urges Governments, intergovernmental organizations as well as non-governmental organizations to take practical action to create greater awareness and support to implement further the Standard Rules, and to consider taking further initiatives, as appropriate, with special emphasis accorded, as noted in the report of the Special Rapporteur, to the human rights of persons with disabilities, children with disabilities and their families, gender aspects, in particular the issue of discrimination against women and girls with disabilities, and the situation of persons with developmental and psychiatric disabilities, with a focus on integrating such persons into society;

5. Urges the relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, including relevant human rights treaty bodies, within their respective mandates, the regional commissions, intergovernmental organizations as well as non-governmental organizations to work closely with the programme on disability of the Division for Social Policy and Development of the Secretariat to promote the rights of persons with disabilities, including activities at the field level, by sharing knowledge, experiences, findings and recommendations concerning persons with disabilities;

6. Encourages the United Nations system, the Bretton Woods institutions and Governments to enhance cooperation, through appropriate mechanisms, with organizations of persons with disabilities or concerned with disability issues so as to implement the Standard Rules in an effective and coordinated manner;

7. Decides to renew the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a further period through the year 2002 so that the results of his continued promotion and monitoring of the implementation of the Standard Rules, in accordance with section IV of the Standard Rules, will be available to the fourth quinquennial review and appraisal of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/82, and to request the Special Rapporteur, assisted by the Secretariat and in consultation with his panel of experts, to prepare a report for submission to the Commission for Social Development at its fortieth session, in which he should, inter alia, present his views on further developing the proposals contained in his report on his second mission and on forms for complementing and developing the Standard Rules, and on ways to enhance the involvement of the relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system and relevant intergovernmental regional organizations regarding the implementation of the Standard Rules;

8. Encourages States parties to include in their reports to the relevant treaty bodies information on persons with disabilities, and reiterates its invitation to the Special Rapporteur and the relevant human rights treaty bodies, including the Committee on the Rights of the Child, within their respective mandates, to enhance their cooperation, as appropriate, to ensure that the rights of persons with disabilities are appropriately addressed;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to invite relevant organizations of the United Nations system to provide, upon request, advisory services to Governments, inter alia, on formulating and evaluating disability-sensitive policies and programmes, on reinforcing the disability dimension in mainstream technical cooperation activities, and for building national capacities and institutions to further equalization of opportunities in accordance with the Standard Rules, and to submit a report to the Commission at its fortieth session;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to strengthen and improve mechanisms for consultation, exchange of information and coordination, as appropriate, and active participation of relevant United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and related organizations to implement further the Standard Rules, inter alia, within the framework of the Administrative Committee on Coordination;

11. Urges relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system to identify ways and means and to develop within their existing programmes support services and related initiatives to improve living conditions for persons with developmental and psychiatric disabilities, in particular women and children;

12. Encourages Governments, non-governmental organizations and the private sector to continue to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability so that it is able to support on a predictable and sustained basis new and expanded initiatives at the regional, subregional and national levels to strengthen national capacities for equalization of opportunities by, for and with persons with disabilities, and the activities of the Special Rapporteur during his renewed mandate;

13. Urges Governments to observe the International Day of Disabled Persons, 3 December, as an opportunity for promoting the human rights of persons with disabilities and for raising awareness of their special needs with a view towards their full and effective participation in society;

14. Encourages international support for the African Decade of Disabled People during the years 2000-2009, to promote equalization of opportunities by, for and with persons with disabilities as well as to promote and protect their human rights.

Cultural development

Follow-up to 1998 intergovernmental conference

In response to General Assembly resolution 53/184 [YUN 1998, p. 1030], the Secretary-General, in August, transmitted a report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) on cultural development [A/55/339], which described activities taken by Member States, international organizations and UNESCO to implement the Action Plan adopted by the 1998 Intergovernmental Conference on Cultural Policies for Development [YUN 1998, p. 1030].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/55/581/Add.3], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/192 without vote [agenda item 94 (c)].

Culture and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/187 of 8 December 1986, 46/158 of 19 December 1991, 51/179 of 16 December 1996, 52/197 of 18 December 1997 and 53/184 of 15 December 1998 on cultural development,

Encouraged by the positive international response to the results of the work of the World Commission on Culture and Development and of the Intergovernmental Conference on Cultural Policies for Development organized by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at Stockholm from 30 March to 2 April 1998,

Noting the steps taken by Member States, organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations to implement the recommendations in the Action Plan on Cultural Policies for Development adopted at the Conference,

Bearing in mind the importance of cultural values and cultural diversity as elements of sustainable development,

Underlining the fact that tolerance and respect for cultural diversity and universal promotion and protection of human rights, including the right to development, are mutually supportive,

Emphasizing the need to enhance the potential of culture as a means of prosperity, sustainable development and global coexistence,

1. Takes note of the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization;

2. Invites all Member States, intergovernmental bodies, organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations:

(a) To ensure, in cooperation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, continuous and effective implementation of the Action Plan on Cultural Policies for Development;

(b) To intensify further their efforts to integrate cultural factors into their development programmes and projects, so as to ensure sustainable development that fully respects cultural diversity;

(c) To implement fully the Declaration and Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace adopted by the General Assembly on 13 September 1999;

(d) To commit themselves to promoting the dialogue among civilizations as an essential process for human development and mutual understanding and for strengthening international cooperation;

(e) To analyse the connection between culture and development and the elimination of poverty in the context of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006), as recommended in the Action Plan;

(f) To safeguard cultural and linguistic diversity in the context of globalization and to support action by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in this regard;

3. Encourages the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to continue its work to promote a greater awareness of the crucial relationship between culture and development;

4. Also encourages the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in conjunction, as appropriate, with other relevant United Nations bodies and multilateral development institutions, to continue to provide support, upon request, to developing countries, in particular in national capacity-building, for the implementation of international cultural conventions, including conservation of heritage and protection of cultural property, and for the restitution of cultural property, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 54/190 of 17 December 1999, as well as support and opportunities for the promotion and enhancement of cultural goods and services and of cultural tourism respectful of the integrity of cultural and natural heritage;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

International Year of Dialogue among Civilizations (2001)

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/113 [YUN 1999, p. 1044], the Secretary-General presented a November report [A/55/492/Rev.1], describing activities taken to implement the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations (2001), proclaimed by the Assembly in resolution 53/22 [YUN 1998, p. 1031]. A number of initiatives were launched to celebrate and defuse the fear of diversity and to underline the importance of inclusion. Governments, academic institutions and NGOs conducted seminars, debates and research. On 5 September, dialogue among civilizations was the subject of a meeting at the head-of-State level held at Headquarters. Reports on preparations for the Year received from Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations were available for consultation in the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs.

The Trust Fund established for the dialogue among civilizations had received limited contributions.

Communication. In October [A/55/455], Uzbekistan transmitted the text of the Declaration of the UNESCO International Congress on Inter-religious Dialogue and a Culture of Peace (Tashkent, 14-16 September).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 November [meeting 60], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/23 [draft: A/55/L.30 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 32].

United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 53/22 of 4 November 1998 and 54/113 of 10 December 1999 entitled "United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations",

Reaffirming the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, which, inter alia, call for collective effort to strengthen friendly relations among nations, remove threats to peace and foster international cooperation in resolving international issues of an economic, social, cultural and humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Noting that civilizations are not confined to individual nation-States, but rather encompass different cultures within the same civilization, and reaffirming that civilizational achievements constitute the collective heritage of humankind, providing a source of inspiration and progress for humanity at large,

Bearing in mind the specificities of each civilization and the United Nations Millennium Declaration of 8 September 2000, which considers, inter alia, that tolerance is one of the fundamental values essential to international relations in the twenty-first century and should include the active promotion of a culture of peace and dialogue among civilizations, with human beings respecting one another, in all their diversity of belief, culture and language, neither fearing nor repressing differences within and between societies but cherishing them as a precious asset of humanity,

Noting that globalization brings greater interrelatedness among people and increased interaction among cultures and civilizations, and encouraged by the fact that the celebration of the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations, at the beginning of the twenty-first century, will provide the opportunity to emphasize that globalization not only is an economic, financial and technological process which could offer great benefit, but also constitutes a profoundly human challenge that invites us to embrace the interdependence of humankind and its rich cultural diversity,

Recognizing the diverse civilizational achievements of humankind, crystallizing cultural pluralism and creative human diversity,

Bearing in mind the valuable contribution that dialogue among civilizations can make to an improved awareness and understanding of the common values shared by all humankind,

Stressing the need for the universal protection and promotion of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right of all peoples to self-determination, by virtue of which they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development,

Underlining the fact that tolerance and respect for diversity and universal promotion and protection of human rights are mutually supportive, and recognizing that tolerance and respect for diversity effectively promote and are supported by, inter alia, the empowerment of women,

Emphasizing the need to acknowledge and respect the richness of all civilizations, to seek common grounds among and within civilizations in order to address threats to global peace and common challenges to human values and achievements, taking into consideration, inter alia, cooperation, partnership and inclusion,

Welcoming the collective endeavour of the international community to enhance understanding through constructive dialogue among civilizations,

Encouraged by the positive reception of Governments, international organizations, civil society organizations and international public opinion to the proclamation of the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations, and welcoming the initiatives undertaken by governmental and non-governmental actors to promote dialogue,

Expressing its firm determination to facilitate and promote dialogue among civilizations,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the convening, at the level of heads of State, of a round table on dialogue among civilizations, organized by the Islamic Republic of Iran and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, held at United Nations Headquarters on 5 September 2000 and which further contributed to the promotion of dialogue among civilizations;

3. Invites Governments, the United Nations system, including the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and other relevant international and non-governmental organizations to continue and further intensify planning and organizing appropriate cultural, educational and social programmes to promote the concept of dialogue among civilizations, inter alia, through organizing conferences and seminars and disseminating information and scholarly material on the subject, and to inform the Secretary-General of their activities;

4. Calls upon Governments to encourage all members of society to take part in promoting dialogue among civilizations and provide them with an opportunity to make contributions to the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations;

5. Encourages all Governments to expand their educational curricula relative to the teaching of respect for various cultures and civilizations, human rights education, the teaching of languages, the history and philosophy of various civilizations as well as the exchange of knowledge, information and scholarships among Governments and civil society in order to promote a better understanding of all cultures and civilizations;

6. Encourages all Member States, regional and international organizations, civil society and non-governmental organizations to continue to develop appropriate initiatives at all levels to promote dialogue in all fields with a view to fostering mutual recognition and understanding among and within civilizations;

7. Notes with interest the activities undertaken and proposals made by Member States, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and international and regional organizations, including the Organization of the Islamic Conference and non-governmental organizations, for the preparation of the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations;

8. Decides to devote two days of plenary meetings at the fifty-sixth session of the General Assembly, on 3 and 4 December 2001, to the consideration of the item, including consideration of any follow-up measures, and commemoration of the United Nations Year of

Dialogue among Civilizations, and encourages Member States and observers to be represented at the highest possible political level;

9. Invites all Governments, funding institutions, civil society organizations and the private sector to consider contributing to the Trust Fund established by the Secretary-General in 1999 to promote dialogue among civilizations;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the necessary support for strengthening the activities pertaining to dialogue among civilizations;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session a substantive report on the prospect of dialogue among civilizations and the activities pertaining to the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-sixth session the item entitled "United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations".

Olympic Truce

On 1 September [A/54/971], the President of the General Assembly appealed to States to observe the Olympic Truce at the XXVII Olympic Games (Sydney, Australia, 15 September–1 October).

The General Assembly, on 5 September, took note of its President's appeal (decision 54/487).

Communication. On 5 September [A/54/972], Greece appealed for the observance of the Olympic Truce.

Bethlehem 2000

On 7 November [meeting 54], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/18 [draft: A/55/L.3 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 36].

Bethlehem 2000

The General Assembly,

Recalling the fact that the Palestinian city of Bethlehem is the birthplace of Jesus Christ and one of the most historic and significant sites on earth,

Noting that the world is continuing to celebrate in Bethlehem, a city of peace, the onset of the new millennium in a global vision of hope for all peoples,

Stressing again the monumental importance of the event for the Palestinian people, for the peoples of the region and for the international community as a whole, as it comprises significant religious, historical and cultural dimensions,

Aware of the Bethlehem 2000 Project as a multifaceted undertaking for commemoration of the event, which began at Christmas, 1999, and will come to a close at Easter, 2001,

Aware also of the assistance needed with regard to the above-mentioned Project, and expressing appreciation for the steps already taken towards increasing the engagement and participation of the international community, including donor countries, and organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Development Programme and the World Bank, as well as the European Commission, religious institutions and others,

Recalling the convening of the Bethlehem 2000 International Conference in Rome, on 18 and 19 February 1999, and its impact on the promotion of the Bethlehem 2000 Project and the mobilization of public awareness in all regions in support of this endeavour,

Welcoming the participation in the Bethlehem celebrations of several heads of State and Government and many other eminent personalities, including religious leaders, and expressing appreciation for the Palestinian preparations for this event,

Welcoming also the historic Jubilee 2000 pilgrimage of His Holiness Pope John Paul II to the Holy Land, his landmark visit to the holy sites in Bethlehem and the important message delivered by the Pontiff at Manger Square,

Expressing the need for immediate change in the situation on the ground in the vicinity of Bethlehem, especially with regard to ensuring freedom of movement,

Stressing the need for ensuring free and unhindered access to the holy places in Bethlehem to the faithful of all religions and the citizens of all nationalities,

Expressing the renewed hope for a successful outcome of the Middle East peace process and the achievement of a final settlement between the Palestinian and Israeli sides, so that the millennium may be celebrated in an atmosphere of peace and reconciliation,

1. Welcomes this global and historic celebration in Bethlehem and the onset of the third millennium as a symbol of the shared hope for peace among all peoples of the world;

2. Expresses support for the Bethlehem 2000 Project, and commends the efforts undertaken by the Palestinian Authority in this regard;

3. Notes with appreciation the worldwide support for the Bethlehem 2000 Project, and calls for sustained assistance and engagement by the international community as a whole, including private sector participation, in ensuring the success of the Project and of this monumental commemoration;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize the pertinent organizations and agencies of the United Nations system to increase their efforts to ensure the successful completion of the Bethlehem 2000 Project;

5. Decides to conclude, at the current session, consideration by the General Assembly of the item entitled "Bethlehem 2000".

Crime prevention and criminal justice

Tenth UN Crime Congress

The Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held in Vienna from 10 to 17 April [A/CONF.187/15], with a high-level segment on 14 and 15 April, adopted the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century. The Declaration was subsequently submitted to the General Assembly's millennium session, in accordance with Assembly resolution 54/125 [YUN 1999, p. 1050]. In other action, the Congress approved the report of the Credentials Committee.

The Congress, which was attended by 134 States, as well as observers from UN offices and organs and the specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and over 300 experts, was held under the theme crime and justice: meeting the challenges of the twenty-first century. It considered five major topics with a corresponding working paper prepared by the Secretariat: the state of crime and criminal justice worldwide [A/CONF.187/5]; international cooperation in combating transnational crime: new challenges in the twenty-first century [A/CONF.187/6]; promoting the rule of law and strengthening the criminal justice system [A/CONF.187/3]; effective crime prevention: keeping pace with new developments [A/CONF.187/7]; and offenders and victims: accountability and fairness in the justice process [A/CONF.187/8]. During the Congress, workshops were convened on combating corruption [A/CONF.187/9]; crimes related to computer networks [A/CONF.187/10]; community involvement in crime prevention [A/CONF.187/11]; and women in the criminal justice system [A/CONF.187/12].

Penuehl Mpapa Maduna, Minister of Justice of South Africa, was elected President of the Congress.

In opening remarks, the Deputy Secretary-General of the United Nations, on behalf of the Secretary-General, noted that unprecedented challenges posed by increasingly global criminal networks fostered the recognition that no country could cope with the growth of transnational crime on its own. She stressed that new forms of transnational crime undermined confidence in political institutions and affected the stability and prosperity of societies. Fighting crime should be part of a global effort to create a more peaceful and prosperous world.

Follow-up to the Tenth Congress

On 18 and 19 April, the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (see p. 1044) considered the report of the Tenth Congress and an April note by the Secretariat [E/CN.15/2000/6], recalling that the General Assembly, in resolution 54/125 [YUN 1999, p. 1050], had requested the Commission to give priority in 2000 to the conclusions and recommendations of the Tenth Congress, with a view to recommending, through the Economic and Social Council, follow-up by the Assembly at its fifty-fifth (2000) session. The Assembly had also asked the Congress to submit, through the Commission and the Council, the Vienna Declaration to the Millennium Assembly.

Following deliberations, the Commission recommended to the Council two draft texts, which were adopted as resolutions 2000/11 and 2000/12.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/2000/30], adopted resolution 2000/11 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 55/59 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/55/593], adopted resolution 55/59 without vote [agenda item 105].

Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in its resolution 54/125 of 17 December 1999, it requested the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders to submit, through the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice and the Economic and Social Council, its declaration to the Millennium Assembly for consideration and action, and requested the Commission to give priority attention at its ninth session to the conclusions and recommendations of the Tenth Congress, with a view to recommending, through the Economic and Social Council, appropriate follow-up by the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session,

Endorses the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century, adopted by the States Members of the United Nations and the other States participating in the high-level segment of the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, as contained in the annex to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century

We the States Members of the United Nations,

Concerned about the impact on our societies of the commission of serious crimes of a global nature, and convinced of the need for bilateral, regional and international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Concerned in particular about transnational organized crime and the relationships between its various forms,

Convinced that adequate prevention and rehabilitation programmes are fundamental to an effective crime control strategy and that such programmes should take into account social and economic factors that may make people more vulnerable to and likely to engage in criminal behaviour,

Stressing that a fair, responsible, ethical and efficient criminal justice system is an important factor in the promotion of economic and social development and of human security,

Aware of the promise of restorative approaches to justice that aim to reduce crime and promote the healing of victims, offenders and communities,

Having assembled at the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in Vienna from 10 to 17 April 2000 to decide to take more effective concerted action, in a spirit of co-operation, to combat the world crime problem,

Declare as follows:

1. We note with appreciation the results of the regional preparatory meetings for the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders.

2. We reaffirm the goals of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, specifically the reduction of criminality, more efficient and effective law enforcement and administration of justice, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and promotion of the highest standards of fairness, humanity and professional conduct.

3. We emphasize the responsibility of each State to establish and maintain a fair, responsible, ethical and efficient criminal justice system.

4. We recognize the necessity of closer coordination and cooperation among States in combating the world crime problem, bearing in mind that action against it is a common and shared responsibility. In this regard, we acknowledge the need to develop and promote technical cooperation activities to assist States in their efforts to strengthen their domestic criminal justice systems and their capacity for international co-operation.

5. We shall accord high priority to the completion of the negotiation of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the protocols thereto, taking into account the concerns of all States.

6. We support efforts to assist States in capacity-building, including in obtaining training and technical assistance and in developing legislation, regulations and expertise, with a view to facilitating the implementation of the Convention and the protocols thereto.

7. Consistent with the goals of the Convention and the protocols thereto, we shall endeavour:

(a) To incorporate a crime prevention component into national and international development strategies;

(b) To intensify bilateral and multilateral co-operation, including technical cooperation, in the areas to be covered by the Convention and the protocols thereto;

(c) To enhance donor cooperation in areas with crime prevention aspects;

(d) To strengthen the capability of the United Nations Centre for International Crime Prevention, as well as the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, to assist States, at their request, in building capacity in areas to be covered by the Convention and the protocols thereto.

8. We welcome the efforts being made by the United Nations Centre for International Crime Prevention to develop, in cooperation with the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute, a comprehensive global overview of organized crime as a reference tool and to assist Governments in policy and programme development.

9. We reaffirm our continued support for and commitment to the United Nations and to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, especially the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice and the United Nations Centre for International Crime Prevention, the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute and the institutes of the Programme network, and resolve to strengthen the Programme further through sustained funding, as appropriate.

10. We undertake to strengthen international co-operation in order to create a conducive environment for the fight against organized crime, promoting growth and sustainable development and eradicating poverty and unemployment.

11. We commit ourselves to taking into account and addressing, within the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, as well as within national crime prevention and criminal justice strategies, any disparate impact of programmes and policies on women and men.

12. We also commit ourselves to the development of action-oriented policy recommendations based on the special needs of women as criminal justice practitioners, victims, prisoners and offenders.

13. We emphasize that effective action for crime prevention and criminal justice requires the involvement, as partners and actors, of Governments, national, regional, interregional and international institutions, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and various segments of civil society, including the mass media and the private sector, as well as the recognition of their respective roles and contributions.

14. We commit ourselves to the development of more effective ways of collaborating with one another with a view to eradicating the scourge of trafficking in persons, especially women and children, and the smuggling of migrants. We shall also consider supporting the global programme against trafficking in persons developed by the United Nations Centre for International Crime Prevention and the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute, which is subject to close consultation with States and review by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, and we establish 2005 as the target year for achieving a significant decrease in the incidence of those crimes worldwide and, where that is not attained, for assessing the actual implementation of the measures advocated.

15. We also commit ourselves to the enhancement of international cooperation and mutual legal assistance to curb illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, and we establish 2005 as the target year for achieving a significant decrease in their incidence worldwide.

16. We further commit ourselves to taking enhanced international action against corruption, building on the United Nations Declaration against Corruption and Bribery in International Commercial Transactions, the International Code of Conduct for Public Officials, relevant regional conventions and regional and global forums. We stress the urgent need to develop an effective international legal instrument against corruption, independent of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, and we invite the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to request the Secretary-General to submit to it at its tenth session, in consultation with States, a thorough review and analysis of all relevant international instruments and recommendations as part of the preparatory work for the development of such an instrument. We shall consider supporting the global programme against corruption developed by the United Nations Centre for International Crime Prevention and the United Nations Inter-regional Crime and Justice Research Institute, which is subject to close consultation with States and review by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice.

17. We reaffirm that combating money-laundering and the criminal economy constitutes a major element of the strategies against organized crime, established as a principle in the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime, adopted by the World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime, held at Naples, Italy, from 21 to 23 November 1994. We are convinced that the success of this action rests upon setting up broad regimes and coordinating appropriate mechanisms to combat the laundering of the proceeds of crime, including the provision of support to initiatives focusing on States and territories offering offshore financial services that allow the laundering of the proceeds of crime.

18. We decide to develop action-oriented policy recommendations on the prevention and control of computer-related crime, and we invite the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to undertake work in this regard, taking into account the ongoing work in other forums. We also commit ourselves to working towards enhancing our ability to prevent, investigate and prosecute high-technology and computer-related crime.

19. We note that acts of violence and terrorism continue to be of grave concern. In conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and taking into account all the relevant General Assembly resolutions, we shall together, in conjunction with our other efforts to prevent and to combat terrorism, take effective, resolute and speedy measures with respect to preventing and combating criminal activities carried out for the purpose of furthering terrorism in all its forms and manifestations. With this in view, we undertake to do our utmost to foster universal adherence to the international instruments concerned with the fight against terrorism.

20. We also note that racial discrimination, xenophobia and related forms of intolerance continue, and we recognize the importance of taking steps to incorporate into international crime prevention strategies and norms measures to prevent and combat crime associated with racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related forms of intolerance.

21. We affirm our determination to combat violence stemming from intolerance on the basis of ethnicity, and we resolve to make a strong contribution, in the area of crime prevention and criminal justice, to the planned World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance.

22. We recognize that the United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice contribute to efforts to deal with crime effectively. We also recognize the importance of prison reform, the independence of the judiciary and the prosecution authorities, and the International Code of Conduct for Public Officials. We shall endeavour, as appropriate, to use and apply the United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice in national law and practice. We undertake to review relevant legislation and administrative procedures, as appropriate, with a view to providing the necessary education and training to the officials concerned and ensuring the necessary strengthening of institutions entrusted with the administration of criminal justice.

23. We also recognize the value of the model treaties on international cooperation in criminal matters as important tools for the development of international cooperation, and we invite the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to call upon the United Nations Centre for International Crime Prevention to update the Compendium of United Nations Standards and Norms in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in order to provide the most up-to-date versions of the model treaties to States seeking to utilize them.

24. We further recognize with great concern that juveniles in difficult circumstances are often at risk of becoming delinquent or easy candidates for recruitment by criminal groups, including groups involved in transnational organized crime, and we commit ourselves to undertaking countermeasures to prevent this growing phenomenon and to including, where necessary, provisions for juvenile justice in national development plans and international development strategies and to including the administration of juvenile justice in our funding policies for development cooperation.

25. We recognize that comprehensive crime prevention strategies at the international, national, regional and local levels must address the root causes and risk factors related to crime and victimization through social, economic, health, educational and justice policies. We urge the development of such strategies, aware of the proven success of prevention initiatives in numerous States and confident that crime can be reduced by applying and sharing our collective expertise.

26. We commit ourselves to according priority to containing the growth and overcrowding of pre-trial and detention prison populations, as appropriate, by promoting safe and effective alternatives to incarceration.

27. We decide to introduce, where appropriate, national, regional and international action plans in support of victims of crime, such as mechanisms for mediation and restorative justice, and we establish 2002 as a target date for States to review their relevant practices, to develop further victim support services and awareness campaigns on the rights of victims and to consider the establishment of funds for victims, in addition to developing and implementing witness protection policies.

28. We encourage the development of restorative justice policies, procedures and programmes that are respectful of the rights, needs and interests of victims, offenders, communities and all other parties.

29. We invite the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to design specific measures for the implementation of and follow-up to the commitments that we have undertaken in the present Declaration.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/2000/30], adopted resolution 2000/12 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Follow-up to the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 55/60 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/593], adopted resolution 55/60 without vote [agenda item 105].

Follow-up to the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 54/125 of 17 December 1999,

Taking note with appreciation of the results of the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, including the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century, adopted by the Tenth Congress during its high-level segment, which were considered by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its ninth session, held in Vienna from 18 to 20 April 2000,

1. Urges Governments, in their efforts to prevent and combat crime, especially transnational crime, and to maintain well-functioning criminal justice systems, to be guided by the results of the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

2. Requests the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to continue at its tenth session its consideration of the findings and recommendations embodied in the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century adopted by the Tenth Congress and, as appropriate, the report of the Tenth Congress, and to take appropriate action;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with Member States, draft plans of action to include specific measures for the implementation of and follow-up to the commitments undertaken in the Declaration for consideration and action by the Commission at its tenth session.

Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, at its ninth session (Vienna, 18-20 April) [E/2000/30], recommended the adoption of three draft resolutions by the General Assembly, and two draft resolutions and one draft decision by the Economic and Social Council.

The Commission brought to the Council's attention its resolution on strategic management [res. 9/1], by which the Commission decided that the theme of its tenth (2001) session would be progress made in global action against corruption.

By decision 2000/239 of 27 July, the Council took note of the report of the Commission on its ninth session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the tenth session.

Note by Secretariat. An April note by the Secretariat [E/2000/3] informed the Commission that the Secretary-General had issued his sixth quinquennial report on capital punishment and implementation of the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty (see p. 672).

UN Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme

A July report of the Secretary-General [A/55/119] provided an overview of progress made in implementing General Assembly resolution 54/131 [YUN 1999, p. 1052] on strengthening the UN Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme. It updated information contained in a February report of the Executive Director of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention [E/CN.15/2000/2].

The report noted that advances had been made in reinforcing reform measures to combat uncivil elements of society and achieve synergy in fighting crime and drug abuse. Further progress was made in strengthening the Programme's operations, particularly the global programmes against corruption, trafficking in human beings and transnational organized crime. Secretariat support for the programmes and for developing international legal instruments continued, and traditional crime and justice issues were addressed. Those measures had led to greater donor confidence, as evidenced through increased voluntary contributions to the UN Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund, which in turn enabled the Programme to expand its operational activities.

The report described action taken at the Tenth Crime Congress (see p. 1040) and the Commission's ninth session (see above) and noted that significant progress had been achieved in drafting a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and related Protocols (see p. 1048).

Regarding the technical cooperation activities of the Centre for International Crime Prevention, as at 30 June the total value of ongoing projects amounted to $5.4 million for: an assessment of corruption in Hungary; support to Lebanon's anti-corruption strategy and strengthening its legislative and institutional capacity for juvenile justice; assistance to the Philippines for coalitions against trafficking in human beings; the control and prevention of drugs and related organized crime in the Russian Federation; measures to counteract domestic violence and organized crime and for capacity-building in the area of youth justice in South Africa; preventing and controlling economic and financial crime in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia; and a global programme relating to the UN transnational organized crime survey. Under the global programme against corruption, following assessment missions, pilot projects were being finalized for Benin, Nicaragua, Nigeria, South Africa and Uganda. An expert group meeting (Vienna, 13-14 April) reviewed and strengthened an anti-corruption tool kit. In collaboration with Transparency International, the Centre organized a meeting of chief justices on the global programme's component element of strengthening judicial integrity. The Centre advanced the implementation of the global programme against trafficking in human beings, in cooperation with the UN Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute (UNICRI). Two missions were undertaken to Brazil in connection with a project to assess routes and methods used by organized crime groups to traffic human beings in the Latin American region. A project was being developed to assess trafficking flows and countermeasures in Benin, Nigeria and Togo and support government efforts to combat the disappearance of children believed to be sold by traffickers as slave labour. Progress was made in implementing the first phase of global studies on transnational organized crime, aimed at assessing transnational organized crime groups worldwide according to their level of danger. Information was collected on the most dangerous organized crime groups active in 12 countries (Australia, Canada, Colombia, Czech Republic, Germany, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Russian Federation, South Africa, United Kingdom, United States) and one region (Caribbean). In cooperation with UNICRI, the Centre drew up a project aimed at analysing and assessing the threat posed by Nigerian criminal networks active in Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Nigeria and Senegal. Another project aimed at analysing and assessing transnational organized crime in Central Asia.

Projects outside the global programmes included a juvenile justice programme in Guatemala, a project to support the establishment of a unified data bank, and a project to assess the situation of and enhance cooperation in combating organized crime among countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States. A prison reform project was designed for the Caribbean region, as was a project on crime prevention in Senegal.

Contributions and pledges to the UN Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund during 1999 and 2000, as at 30 June 2000, totalled $3.3 million and $1.6 million, respectively.

In an April report [A/55/6 (Prog. 12)], the Secretary-General discussed the proposed medium-term plan for 2002-2005 on crime prevention and criminal justice, noting that its overall objective was to strengthen international cooperation and assistance to Governments in tackling crime problems, particularly those posed by transnational organized crime, trafficking in persons, and economic and financial crime, including money-laundering, corruption and terrorism.

1998 OIOS report

On 7 April, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 54/257, by which it took note of the 1998 report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) [YUN 1998, p. 1035] on the review of programme management in the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division, which had become the Centre for International Crime Prevention. The Assembly reaffirmed that the discontinuation of mandates on crime prevention and criminal justice was within the prerogative of the pertinent legislative bodies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/593], adopted resolution 55/64 without vote [agenda item 105].

Strengthening of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, in particular its technical cooperation capacity

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991 on the creation of an effective United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, in which it approved the statement of principles and programme of action annexed to that resolution,

Emphasizing the role of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, specifically the reduction of criminality, more efficient and effective law enforcement and administration of justice, respect for human rights and promotion of the highest standards of fairness, humanity and professional conduct,

Convinced of the desirability of closer coordination and cooperation among States in combating crime, including drug-related crimes such as money-laundering, illicit arms trade and terrorist crimes, bearing in mind the role that could be played by both the United Nations and regional organizations in this respect,

Recognizing the urgent need to increase technical cooperation activities to assist countries, in particular developing countries and countries with economies in transition, with their efforts in translating United Nations policy guidelines into practice,

Recognizing also the need to maintain a balance in the technical cooperation capacity of the United Nations Centre for International Crime Prevention of the United Nations Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention between the immediate priority of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the protocols thereto and other priorities identified by the Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its relevant resolutions in which it requested the Secretary-General, as a matter of urgency, to provide the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme with sufficient resources for the full implementation of its mandate, in conformity with the high priority attached to the Programme,

Bearing in mind the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century, which was adopted by the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 55/59 of 4 December 2000, in which Member States renewed their commitment to combat organized crime in all its forms and manifestations and to promote crime prevention in all its areas,

Welcoming the successful completion of the work of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, established by its resolution 53/111 of 9 December 1998, and the progress achieved in the elaboration of the three supplementary protocols, namely the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air, the Protocol against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Their Parts and Components and Ammunition and the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the progress made in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 54/131 of 17 December 1999;

2. Reaffirms the importance of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme in promoting effective action to strengthen international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice, in responding to the needs of the international community in the face of both national and transnational criminality and in assisting Member States in achieving the goals of preventing crime within and among States and improving the response to crime;

3. Also reaffirms the role of the United Nations Centre for International Crime Prevention in providing to Member States, upon request, technical cooperation, advisory services and other forms of assistance in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, including in the area of prevention and control of organized crime;

4. Notes the programme of work of the Centre, including the three global programmes addressing, respectively, trafficking in human beings, corruption and organized crime, formulated on the basis of close consultations with Member States and review by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, and calls upon the Secretary-General further to strengthen the Centre by providing it with the resources necessary for the full implementation of its mandate;

5. Supports the high priority given to technical cooperation and advisory services in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, including in the area of prevention and control of transnational organized crime, and stresses the need to enhance the operational activities of the Centre to assist, in particular, developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

6. Welcomes the increased number of technical assistance projects in the field of juvenile justice, reflecting an increased awareness among Member States of the importance of juvenile justice reform in establishing and maintaining stable societies and the rule of law;

7. Invites all States to support, through voluntary contributions to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund, the operational activities of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme;

8. Encourages relevant programmes, funds and organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, international financial institutions, in particular the World Bank, and regional and national funding agencies to support the technical operational activities of the Centre;

9. Urges States and funding agencies to review, as appropriate, their funding policies for development assistance and to include a crime prevention and criminal justice component in such assistance;

10. Welcomes the efforts undertaken by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to exercise more vigorously its mandated function of resource mobilization, and calls upon the Commission to strengthen further its activities in this direction;

11. Expresses its appreciation to non-governmental organizations and other relevant sectors of civil society for their support to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme;

12. Welcomes the efforts of the Executive Director of the United Nations Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention to enhance the synergies between the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the United Nations Centre for International Crime Prevention, in conformity with the reform proposals of the Secretary-General;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to assist the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, as the principal policy-making body in this field, in performing its activities, including cooperation and coordination with other relevant bodies, such as the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the Commission on Human Rights, the Commission on the Status of Women and the Commission for Social Development;

14. Invites States to make adequate voluntary contributions to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund in order to strengthen the capacity of the Centre to provide technical assistance to requesting States for the implementation of the commitments entered into at the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and, in particular, to implement programmes designed to combat and prevent the trafficking in human beings, the smuggling of migrants and corruption, and to study and bring about action to combat and prevent transnational organized crime;

15. Encourages States to begin making adequate and regular voluntary contributions for the implementation of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the protocols thereto, which will be open for signature in Palermo, Italy, on 12 December 2000, through the United Nations funding mechanism specifically designed for that purpose in the Convention;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures and provide adequate support to the Centre during the biennium 2002-2003 so as to enable it to promote the speedy entry into force of the Convention and the protocols thereto;

17. Welcomes the decision of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to mainstream a gender perspective into its activities and its request to the Secretariat that a gender perspective be integrated into all activities of the Centre;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session.

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on crime prevention and criminal justice would remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458).

UN African crime prevention institute

In response to General Assembly resolution 54/130 [YUN 1999, p. 1056], the Secretary-General, in July [A/55/156], updated information on the activities, operations and funding of the African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (UNAFRI).

UNAFRI implemented the final phase of a project on regional extradition and mutual legal assistance and undertook the second phase of a project on trafficking in firearms and ammunition in Africa. The Institute, in cooperation with other concerned agencies, was developing a programme to counter the proliferation of illicit small arms in Africa. Studies on penal reform continued, as did the development of strategies to assist Governments in implementing UN standards and norms related to juvenile justice. A crime victimization survey continued to be implemented in cooperation with the University of South Africa, and a survey report on Lesotho was published.

Although UNAFRI continued to receive political support from its member States, the Governing Board, the General Assembly, the Commission and the Tenth Crime Congress, its financial situation remained precarious, constraining its capacity to deliver effective and comprehensive services to African countries. The sixth session of the Institute's Governing Board (Kampala, Uganda, 29-30 May) approved the proposed programme of work, including measures to address the serious financial situation. UNAFRI was directed to adopt innovative and attractive programmes designed as a package to enhance their market appeal. The Director was requested to undertake an evaluation of the Institute to serve as a basis for a review of its mission, functions, funding and support, and methods of work.

The Institute's total resources for 2000 amounted to $423,689, which came from member States' assessed contributions, a UN grant and specific project grants, and income received from the rental of parts of its premises and facilities, in addition to other sources. As at 30 June, member States' outstanding balances totalled some $2.5 million for the period 1989 to 2000. Contributions had been received from 15 members, while 13 had never paid.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/593], adopted resolution 55/62 without vote [agenda item 105].

United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 54/130 of 17 December 1999 and all other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind the urgent need to establish effective crime prevention strategies for Africa, as well as the importance of law enforcement agencies and the judiciary at the regional and subregional levels,

Noting that the financial situation of the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders has greatly affected its capacity to deliver its services to African Member States in an effective and comprehensive manner,

1. Commends the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders for its efforts to promote and coordinate regional technical cooperation activities related to crime prevention and criminal justice systems in Africa;

2. Also commends the Secretary-General for his efforts to mobilize the financial resources necessary to provide the Institute with the core professional staff required to enable it to function effectively in the fulfilment of its mandated obligations;

3. Reiterates the need to strengthen further the capacity of the Institute to support national mechanisms for crime prevention and criminal justice in African countries;

4. Urges the States members of the Institute to make every possible effort to meet their obligations to the Institute;

5. Calls upon all Member States and non-governmental organizations to adopt concrete practical measures to support the Institute in the development of the requisite capacity and implement its programmes and activities aimed at strengthening crime prevention and criminal justice systems in Africa;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify efforts to mobilize all relevant entities of the United Nations system to provide the necessary financial and technical support to the Institute to enable it to fulfil its mandate;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to deploy his efforts to mobilize the financial resources necessary to maintain the Institute with the core professional staff required to enable it to function effectively in the fulfilment of its mandated obligations;

8. Calls upon the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to work closely with the Institute;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to enhance the promotion of regional cooperation, coordination and collaboration in the fight against crime, especially in its transnational dimension, which cannot be dealt with adequately by national action alone;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to make concrete proposals, including the provision of additional core professional staff, in order to strengthen the programmes and activities of the Institute and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Transnational crime

Efforts were made in 2000 to complete the drafting of an international instrument against organized transnational crime, central to the implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime adopted by the 1994 World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime [YUN 1994, p. 1160] and in accordance with General Assembly resolution 54/126 [YUN 1999, p. 1058]. To that end, the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime finalized, in 2000, the Convention and two of the three supplementary legal instruments: the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children and the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air. The Committee was unable to achieve consensus on the draft Protocol against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Their Parts and Components and Ammunition.

International convention

In 2000, the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime held five sessions in Vienna, during which it finalized the Convention and the draft Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air, and the draft Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children: 17-28 January [A/AC.254/25]; 21 February-3 March [A/AC.254/28]; 5-16 June [A/AC.254/31]; 17-28 July [A/AC.254/34]; and 2-29 October [A/AC.254/38]. The Ad Hoc Committee was unable to finalize the draft Protocol against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Their Parts and Components and Ammunition, due to a lack of consensus. Many delegations emphasized the importance of finalizing the draft Protocol prior to the 2001 Conference on the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All its Aspects (see p. 518). The reports of the Ad Hoc Committee on its 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 1057] and 2000 sessions were summarized in a November report [A/55/383].

At a High-level Political Signing Conference in Palermo, Italy [A/CONF.195/2 & Corr.1], the Convention and its Protocols thereto were opened for signature from 12 to 15 December, and thereafter in New York until 12 December 2002. As at 31 December, 124 States had signed the Convention; 81, the Protocol on illegal trafficking in persons, especially women and children; and 78, the Protocol on smuggling migrants.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 November [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime [A/55/383], adopted resolution 55/25 without vote [agenda item 105].

United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/111 of 9 December 1998, in which it decided to establish an open-ended inter-governmental ad hoc committee for the purpose of elaborating a comprehensive international convention against transnational organized crime and of discussing the elaboration, as appropriate, of international instruments addressing trafficking in women and children, combating the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, and illegal trafficking in and transporting of migrants, including by sea,

Recalling also its resolution 54/126 of 17 December 1999, in which it requested the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime to continue its work, in accordance with resolutions 53/111 and 53/114 of 9 December 1998, and to intensify that work in order to complete it in 2000,

Recalling further its resolution 54/129 of 17 December 1999, in which it accepted with appreciation the offer of the Government of Italy to host a high-level political signing conference in Palermo for the purpose of signing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime (Palermo Convention) and the protocols thereto, and requested the Secretary-General to schedule the conference for a period of up to one week before the end of the Millennium Assembly in 2000,

Expressing its appreciation to the Government of Poland for submitting to it at its fifty-first session a first draft United Nations convention against transnational organized crime and for hosting the meeting of the inter-sessional open-ended intergovernmental group of experts, established pursuant to resolution 52/85 of 12 December 1997, on the elaboration of a preliminary draft of a possible comprehensive international convention against transnational organized crime, held in Warsaw from 2 to 6 February 1998,

Expressing its appreciation to the Government of Argentina for hosting the informal preparatory meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee, held in Buenos Aires from 31 August to 4 September 1998,

Expressing its appreciation to the Government of Thailand for hosting the Asia-Pacific Ministerial Seminar on Building Capacities for Fighting Transnational Organized Crime, held in Bangkok on 20 and 21 March 2000,

Deeply concerned by the negative economic and social implications related to organized criminal activities, and convinced of the urgent need to strengthen co-operation to prevent and combat such activities more effectively at the national, regional and international levels,

Noting with deep concern the growing links between transnational organized crime and terrorist crimes, taking into account the Charter of the United Nations and the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

Determined to deny safe havens to those who engage in transnational organized crime by prosecuting their crimes wherever they occur and by cooperating at the international level,

Strongly convinced that the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime will constitute an effective tool and the necessary legal framework for international cooperation in combating, inter alia, such criminal activities as money-laundering, corruption, illicit trafficking in endangered species of wild flora and fauna, offences against cultural heritage and the growing links between transnational organized crime and terrorist crimes,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, which carried out its work at the headquarters of the United Nations Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention in Vienna, and commends the Ad Hoc Committee for its work;

2. Adopts the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, and the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime annexed to the present resolution, and opens them for signature at the High-level Political Signing Conference to be held in Palermo, Italy, from 12 to 15 December 2000 in accordance with resolution 54/129;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive report on the High-level Political Signing Conference to be held in Palermo in accordance with resolution 54/129;

4. Notes that the Ad Hoc Committee has not yet completed its work on the draft Protocol against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Their Parts and Components and Ammunition, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime;

5. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to continue its work in relation to this draft Protocol, in accordance with resolutions 53/111, 53/114 and 54/126, and to finalize such work as soon as possible;

6. Calls upon all States to recognize the links between transnational organized criminal activities and acts of terrorism, taking into account the relevant General Assembly resolutions, and to apply the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime in combating all forms of criminal activity, as provided therein;

7. Recommends that the Ad Hoc Committee established by the General Assembly in its resolution 51/210 of 17 December 1996, which is beginning its deliberations with a view to developing a comprehensive convention on international terrorism, pursuant to resolution 54/110 of 9 December 1999, should take into consideration the provisions of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime;

8. Urges all States and regional economic organizations to sign and ratify the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the protocols thereto as soon as possible in order to ensure the speedy entry into force of the Convention and the protocols thereto;

9. Decides that, until the Conference of the Parties to the Convention established pursuant to the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime decides otherwise, the account referred to in article 30 of the Convention will be operated within the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund, and encourages Member States to begin making adequate voluntary contributions to the above-mentioned account for the provision to developing countries and countries with economies in transition of the technical assistance that they might require for implementation of the Convention and the protocols thereto, including for the preparatory measures needed for that implementation;

10. Also decides that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime will complete its tasks arising from the elaboration of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime by holding a meeting well before the convening of the first session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention, in order to prepare the draft text of the rules of procedure for the Conference of the Parties and other rules and mechanisms described in article 32 of the Convention, which will be communicated to the Conference of the Parties at its first session for consideration and action;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to designate the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the United Nations Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention to serve as the secretariat for the Conference of the Parties to the Convention in accordance with article 33 of the Convention;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to provide the Centre for International Crime Prevention with the resources necessary to enable it to promote in an effective manner the expeditious entry into force of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and to discharge the functions of secretariat of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention, and to support the Ad Hoc Committee in its work pursuant to paragraph 10 above.

ANNEX I United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime

Article 1

Statement of purpose

The purpose of this Convention is to promote co-operation to prevent and combat transnational organized crime more effectively.

Article 2

Use of terms

For the purposes of this Convention:

(a) "Organized criminal group" shall mean a structured group of three or more persons, existing for a period of time and acting in concert with the aim of committing one or more serious crimes or offences established in accordance with this Convention, in order to obtain, directly or indirectly, a financial or other material benefit;

(b) "Serious crime" shall mean conduct constituting an offence punishable by a maximum deprivation of liberty of at least four years or a more serious penalty;

(c) "Structured group" shall mean a group that is not randomly formed for the immediate commission of an offence and that does not need to have formally defined roles for its members, continuity of its membership or a developed structure;

(d) "Property" shall mean assets of every kind, whether corporeal or incorporeal, movable or immovable, tangible or intangible, and legal documents or instruments evidencing title to, or interest in, such assets;

(e) "Proceeds of crime" shall mean any property derived from or obtained, directly or indirectly, through the commission of an offence;

(f) "Freezing" or "seizure" shall mean temporarily prohibiting the transfer, conversion, disposition or movement of property or temporarily assuming custody or control of property on the basis of an order issued by a court or other competent authority;

(g) "Confiscation", which includes forfeiture where applicable, shall mean the permanent deprivation of property by order of a court or other competent authority;

(h) "Predicate offence" shall mean any offence as a result of which proceeds have been generated that may become the subject of an offence as defined in article 6 of this Convention;

(i) "Controlled delivery" shall mean the technique of allowing illicit or suspect consignments to pass out of, through or into the territory of one or more States, with the knowledge and under the supervision of their competent authorities, with a view to the investigation of an offence and the identification of persons involved in the commission of the offence;

(j) "Regional economic integration organization" shall mean an organization constituted by sovereign States of a given region, to which its member States have transferred competence in respect of matters governed by this Convention and which has been duly authorized, in accordance with its internal procedures, to sign, ratify, accept, approve or accede to it; references to "States Parties" under this Convention shall apply to such organizations within the limits of their competence.

Article 3

Scope of application

1. This Convention shall apply, except as otherwise stated herein, to the prevention, investigation and prosecution of:

(a) The offences established in accordance with articles 5, 6, 8 and 23 of this Convention; and

(b) Serious crime as defined in article 2 of this Convention; where the offence is transnational in nature and involves an organized criminal group.

2. For the purpose of paragraph 1 of this article, an offence is transnational in nature if:

(a) It is committed in more than one State;

(b) It is committed in one State but a substantial part of its preparation, planning, direction or control takes place in another State;

(c) It is committed in one State but involves an organized criminal group that engages in criminal activities in more than one State; or

(d) It is committed in one State but has substantial effects in another State.

Article 4

Protection of sovereignty

1. States Parties shall carry out their obligations under this Convention in a manner consistent with the principles of sovereign equality and territorial integrity of States and that of non-intervention in the domestic affairs of other States.

2. Nothing in this Convention entitles a State Party to undertake in the territory of another State the exercise of jurisdiction and performance of functions that are reserved exclusively for the authorities of that other State by its domestic law.

Article 5

Criminalization of participation in an organized criminal group

1. Each State Party shall adopt such legislative and other measures as may be necessary to establish as criminal offences, when committed intentionally:

(a) Either or both of the following as criminal offences distinct from those involving the attempt or completion of the criminal activity:

- (i) Agreeing with one or more other persons to commit a serious crime for a purpose relating directly or indirectly to the obtaining of a financial or other material benefit and, where required by domestic law, involving an act undertaken by one of the participants in furtherance of the agreement or involving an organized criminal group;
  - (ii) Conduct by a person who, with knowledge of either the aim and general criminal activity of an organized criminal group or its intention to commit the crimes in question, takes an active part in:
    - a. Criminal activities of the organized criminal group;
    - b. Other activities of the organized criminal group in the knowledge that his or her participation will contribute to the achievement of the above-described criminal aim;
- (b) Organizing, directing, aiding, abetting, facilitating or counselling the commission of serious crime involving an organized criminal group.
2. The knowledge, intent, aim, purpose or agreement referred to in paragraph 1 of this article may be inferred from objective factual circumstances.
3. States Parties whose domestic law requires involvement of an organized criminal group for purposes of the offences established in accordance with paragraph 1 (a)(i) of this article shall ensure that their domestic law covers all serious crimes involving organized criminal groups. Such States Parties, as well as States Parties whose domestic law requires an act in furtherance of the agreement for purposes of the offences established in accordance with paragraph 1 (a)(i) of this article, shall so inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations at the time of their signature or of deposit of their instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval of or accession to this Convention.

Article 6

Criminalization of the laundering of proceeds of crime

1. Each State Party shall adopt, in accordance with fundamental principles of its domestic law, such legislative and other measures as may be necessary to establish as criminal offences, when committed intentionally:
- (a) (i) The conversion or transfer of property, knowing that such property is the proceeds of crime, for the purpose of concealing or disguising the illicit origin of the property or of helping any person who is involved in the commission of the predicate offence to evade the legal consequences of his or her action;
  - (ii) The concealment or disguise of the true nature, source, location, disposition, movement or ownership of or rights with respect to property, knowing that such property is the proceeds of crime;
- (b) Subject to the basic concepts of its legal system:
- (i) The acquisition, possession or use of property, knowing, at the time of receipt, that such property is the proceeds of crime;
  - (ii) Participation in, association with or conspiracy to commit, attempts to commit and aiding, abetting, facilitating and counselling the commission of any of the offences established in accordance with this article.

2. For purposes of implementing or applying paragraph 1 of this article:

- (a) Each State Party shall seek to apply paragraph 1 of this article to the widest range of predicate offences;
- (b) Each State Party shall include as predicate offences all serious crime as defined in article 2 of this Convention and the offences established in accordance with articles 5, 8 and 23 of this Convention. In the case of States Parties whose legislation sets out a list of specific predicate offences, they shall, at a minimum, include in such list a comprehensive range of offences associated with organized criminal groups;
- (c) For the purposes of subparagraph (b), predicate offences shall include offences committed both within and outside the jurisdiction of the State Party in question. However, offences committed outside the jurisdiction of a State Party shall constitute predicate offences only when the relevant conduct is a criminal offence under the domestic law of the State where it is committed and would be a criminal offence under the domestic law of the State Party implementing or applying this article had it been committed there;
- (d) Each State Party shall furnish copies of its laws that give effect to this article and of any subsequent changes to such laws or a description thereof to the Secretary-General of the United Nations;
- (e) If required by fundamental principles of the domestic law of a State Party, it may be provided that the offences set forth in paragraph 1 of this article do not apply to the persons who committed the predicate offence;
- (f) Knowledge, intent or purpose required as an element of an offence set forth in paragraph 1 of this article may be inferred from objective factual circumstances.

Article 7

Measures to combat money-laundering

1. Each State Party:
- (a) Shall institute a comprehensive domestic regulatory and supervisory regime for banks and non-bank financial institutions and, where appropriate, other bodies particularly susceptible to money-laundering, within its competence, in order to deter and detect all forms of money-laundering, which regime shall emphasize requirements for customer identification, record-keeping and the reporting of suspicious transactions;
  - (b) Shall, without prejudice to articles 18 and 27 of this Convention, ensure that administrative, regulatory, law enforcement and other authorities dedicated to combating money-laundering (including, where appropriate under domestic law, judicial authorities) have the ability to cooperate and exchange information at the national and international levels within the conditions prescribed by its domestic law and, to that end, shall consider the establishment of a financial intelligence unit to serve as a national centre for the collection, analysis and dissemination of information regarding potential money-laundering.
2. States Parties shall consider implementing feasible measures to detect and monitor the movement of cash and appropriate negotiable instruments across their borders, subject to safeguards to ensure proper use of information and without impeding in any way the movement of legitimate capital. Such measures may include a requirement that individuals and businesses report the cross-border transfer of substantial quantities of cash and appropriate negotiable instruments.

3. In establishing a domestic regulatory and supervisory regime under the terms of this article, and without prejudice to any other article of this Convention, States Parties are called upon to use as a guideline the relevant initiatives of regional, interregional and multilateral organizations against money-laundering.

4. States Parties shall endeavour to develop and promote global, regional, subregional and bilateral co-operation among judicial, law enforcement and financial regulatory authorities in order to combat money-laundering.

Article 8

Criminalization of corruption

1. Each State Party shall adopt such legislative and other measures as may be necessary to establish as criminal offences, when committed intentionally:

(a) The promise, offering or giving to a public official, directly or indirectly, of an undue advantage, for the official himself or herself or another person or entity, in order that the official act or refrain from acting in the exercise of his or her official duties;

(b) The solicitation or acceptance by a public official, directly or indirectly, of an undue advantage, for the official himself or herself or another person or entity, in order that the official act or refrain from acting in the exercise of his or her official duties.

2. Each State Party shall consider adopting such legislative and other measures as may be necessary to establish as criminal offences conduct referred to in paragraph 1 of this article involving a foreign public official or international civil servant. Likewise, each State Party shall consider establishing as criminal offences other forms of corruption.

3. Each State Party shall also adopt such measures as may be necessary to establish as a criminal offence participation as an accomplice in an offence established in accordance with this article.

4. For the purposes of paragraph 1 of this article and article 9 of this Convention, "public official" shall mean a public official or a person who provides a public service as defined in the domestic law and as applied in the criminal law of the State Party in which the person in question performs that function.

Article 9

Measures against corruption

1. In addition to the measures set forth in article 8 of this Convention, each State Party shall, to the extent appropriate and consistent with its legal system, adopt legislative, administrative or other effective measures to promote integrity and to prevent, detect and punish the corruption of public officials.

2. Each State Party shall take measures to ensure effective action by its authorities in the prevention, detection and punishment of the corruption of public officials, including providing such authorities with adequate independence to deter the exertion of inappropriate influence on their actions.

Article 10

Liability of legal persons

1. Each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, consistent with its legal principles, to establish the liability of legal persons for participation in serious crimes involving an organized criminal group and for the offences established in accordance with articles 5, 6, 8 and 23 of this Convention.

2. Subject to the legal principles of the State Party, the liability of legal persons may be criminal, civil or administrative.

3. Such liability shall be without prejudice to the criminal liability of the natural persons who have committed the offences.

4. Each State Party shall, in particular, ensure that legal persons held liable in accordance with this article are subject to effective, proportionate and dissuasive criminal or non-criminal sanctions, including monetary sanctions.

Article 11

Prosecution, adjudication and sanctions

1. Each State Party shall make the commission of an offence established in accordance with articles 5, 6, 8 and 23 of this Convention liable to sanctions that take into account the gravity of that offence.

2. Each State Party shall endeavour to ensure that any discretionary legal powers under its domestic law relating to the prosecution of persons for offences covered by this Convention are exercised to maximize the effectiveness of law enforcement measures in respect of those offences and with due regard to the need to deter the commission of such offences.

3. In the case of offences established in accordance with articles 5, 6, 8 and 23 of this Convention, each State Party shall take appropriate measures, in accordance with its domestic law and with due regard to the rights of the defence, to seek to ensure that conditions imposed in connection with decisions on release pending trial or appeal take into consideration the need to ensure the presence of the defendant at subsequent criminal proceedings.

4. Each State Party shall ensure that its courts or other competent authorities bear in mind the grave nature of the offences covered by this Convention when considering the eventuality of early release or parole of persons convicted of such offences.

5. Each State Party shall, where appropriate, establish under its domestic law a long statute of limitations period in which to commence proceedings for any offence covered by this Convention and a longer period where the alleged offender has evaded the administration of justice.

6. Nothing contained in this Convention shall affect the principle that the description of the offences established in accordance with this Convention and of the applicable legal defences or other legal principles controlling the lawfulness of conduct is reserved to the domestic law of a State Party and that such offences shall be prosecuted and punished in accordance with that law.

Article 12

Confiscation and seizure

1. States Parties shall adopt, to the greatest extent possible within their domestic legal systems, such measures as may be necessary to enable confiscation of:

(a) Proceeds of crime derived from offences covered by this Convention or property the value of which corresponds to that of such proceeds;

(b) Property, equipment or other instrumentalities used in or destined for use in offences covered by this Convention.

2. States Parties shall adopt such measures as may be necessary to enable the identification, tracing, freezing or seizure of any item referred to in paragraph 1 of this article for the purpose of eventual confiscation.

3. If proceeds of crime have been transformed or converted, in part or in full, into other property, such property shall be liable to the measures referred to in this article instead of the proceeds.

4. If proceeds of crime have been intermingled with property acquired from legitimate sources, such property shall, without prejudice to any powers relating to freezing or seizure, be liable to confiscation up to the assessed value of the intermingled proceeds.

5. Income or other benefits derived from proceeds of crime, from property into which proceeds of crime have been transformed or converted or from property with which proceeds of crime have been intermingled shall also be liable to the measures referred to in this article, in the same manner and to the same extent as proceeds of crime.

6. For the purposes of this article and article 13 of this Convention, each State Party shall empower its courts or other competent authorities to order that bank, financial or commercial records be made available or be seized. States Parties shall not decline to act under the provisions of this paragraph on the ground of bank secrecy.

7. States Parties may consider the possibility of requiring that an offender demonstrate the lawful origin of alleged proceeds of crime or other property liable to confiscation, to the extent that such a requirement is consistent with the principles of their domestic law and with the nature of the judicial and other proceedings.

8. The provisions of this article shall not be construed to prejudice the rights of bona fide third parties.

9. Nothing contained in this article shall affect the principle that the measures to which it refers shall be defined and implemented in accordance with and subject to the provisions of the domestic law of a State Party.

Article 13

International cooperation for purposes of confiscation

1. A State Party that has received a request from another State Party having jurisdiction over an offence covered by this Convention for confiscation of proceeds of crime, property, equipment or other instrumentalities referred to in article 12, paragraph 1, of this Convention situated in its territory shall, to the greatest extent possible within its domestic legal system:

(a) Submit the request to its competent authorities for the purpose of obtaining an order of confiscation and, if such an order is granted, give effect to it; or

(b) Submit to its competent authorities, with a view to giving effect to it to the extent requested, an order of confiscation issued by a court in the territory of the requesting State Party in accordance with article 12, paragraph 1, of this Convention insofar as it relates to proceeds of crime, property, equipment or other instrumentalities referred to in article 12, paragraph 1, situated in the territory of the requested State Party.

2. Following a request made by another State Party having jurisdiction over an offence covered by this Convention, the requested State Party shall take measures to identify, trace and freeze or seize proceeds of crime, property, equipment or other instrumentalities referred to in article 12, paragraph 1, of this Convention for the purpose of eventual confiscation to be ordered either by the requesting State Party or, pursuant to a request under paragraph 1 of this article, by the requested State Party.

3. The provisions of article 18 of this Convention are applicable, mutatis mutandis, to this article. In addition to the information specified in article 18, paragraph 15, requests made pursuant to this article shall contain:

(a) In the case of a request pertaining to paragraph 1 (a) of this article, a description of the property to be confiscated and a statement of the facts relied upon by the requesting State Party sufficient to enable the requested State Party to seek the order under its domestic law;

(b) In the case of a request pertaining to paragraph 1 (b) of this article, a legally admissible copy of an order of confiscation upon which the request is based issued by the requesting State Party, a statement of the facts and information as to the extent to which execution of the order is requested;

(c) In the case of a request pertaining to paragraph 2 of this article, a statement of the facts relied upon by the requesting State Party and a description of the actions requested.

4. The decisions or actions provided for in paragraphs 1 and 2 of this article shall be taken by the requested State Party in accordance with and subject to the provisions of its domestic law and its procedural rules or any bilateral or multilateral treaty, agreement or arrangement to which it may be bound in relation to the requesting State Party.

5. Each State Party shall furnish copies of its laws and regulations that give effect to this article and of any subsequent changes to such laws and regulations or a description thereof to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

6. If a State Party elects to make the taking of the measures referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 of this article conditional on the existence of a relevant treaty, that State Party shall consider this Convention the necessary and sufficient treaty basis.

7. Cooperation under this article may be refused by a State Party if the offence to which the request relates is not an offence covered by this Convention.

8. The provisions of this article shall not be construed to prejudice the rights of bona fide third parties.

9. States Parties shall consider concluding bilateral or multilateral treaties, agreements or arrangements to enhance the effectiveness of international cooperation undertaken pursuant to this article.

Article 14

Disposal of confiscated proceeds of crime or property

1. Proceeds of crime or property confiscated by a State Party pursuant to articles 12 or 13, paragraph 1, of this Convention shall be disposed of by that State Party in accordance with its domestic law and administrative procedures.

2. When acting on the request made by another State Party in accordance with article 13 of this Convention, States Parties shall, to the extent permitted by domestic law and if so requested, give priority consideration to returning the confiscated proceeds of crime or property to the requesting State Party so that it can give compensation to the victims of the crime or return such proceeds of crime or property to their legitimate owners.

3. When acting on the request made by another State Party in accordance with articles 12 and 13 of this Convention, a State Party may give special consideration to concluding agreements or arrangements on:

(a) Contributing the value of such proceeds of crime or property or funds derived from the sale of such proceeds of crime or property or a part thereof to the account designated in accordance with article 30, paragraph 2 (c), of this Convention and to intergovernmental bodies specializing in the fight against organized crime;

(b) Sharing with other States Parties, on a regular or case-by-case basis, such proceeds of crime or property, or funds derived from the sale of such proceeds of crime or property, in accordance with its domestic law or administrative procedures.

Article 15 Jurisdiction

1. Each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences established in accordance with articles 5, 6, 8 and 23 of this Convention when:

(a) The offence is committed in the territory of that State Party; or

(b) The offence is committed on board a vessel that is flying the flag of that State Party or an aircraft that is registered under the laws of that State Party at the time that the offence is committed.

2. Subject to article 4 of this Convention, a State Party may also establish its jurisdiction over any such offence when:

(a) The offence is committed against a national of that State Party;

(b) The offence is committed by a national of that State Party or a stateless person who has his or her habitual residence in its territory; or

(c) The offence is:

(i) One of those established in accordance with article 5, paragraph 1, of this Convention and is committed outside its territory with a view to the commission of a serious crime within its territory;

(ii) One of those established in accordance with article 6, paragraph 1 (b) (ii), of this Convention and is committed outside its territory with a view to the commission of an offence established in accordance with article 6, paragraph 1 (a) (i) or (ii) or (b) (i), of this Convention within its territory.

3. For the purposes of article 16, paragraph 10, of this Convention, each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences covered by this Convention when the alleged offender is present in its territory and it does not extradite such person solely on the ground that he or she is one of its nationals.

4. Each State Party may also adopt such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences covered by this Convention when the alleged offender is present in its territory and it does not extradite him or her.

5. If a State Party exercising its jurisdiction under paragraph 1 or 2 of this article has been notified, or has otherwise learned, that one or more other States Parties are conducting an investigation, prosecution or judicial proceeding in respect of the same conduct, the competent authorities of those States Parties shall, as appropriate, consult one another with a view to coordinating their actions.

6. Without prejudice to norms of general international law, this Convention does not exclude the exercise of any criminal jurisdiction established by a State Party in accordance with its domestic law.

Article 16 Extradition

1. This article shall apply to the offences covered by this Convention or in cases where an offence referred to in article 3, paragraph 1 (a) or (b), involves an organized criminal group and the person who is the subject of the request for extradition is located in the territory of the requested State Party, provided that the offence for which extradition is sought is punishable under the domestic law of both the requesting State Party and the requested State Party.

2. If the request for extradition includes several separate serious crimes, some of which are not covered by this article, the requested State Party may apply this article also in respect of the latter offences.

3. Each of the offences to which this article applies shall be deemed to be included as an extraditable offence in any extradition treaty existing between States Parties. States Parties undertake to include such offences as extraditable offences in every extradition treaty to be concluded between them.

4. If a State Party that makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty receives a request for extradition from another State Party with which it has no extradition treaty, it may consider this Convention the legal basis for extradition in respect of any offence to which this article applies.

5. States Parties that make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall:

(a) At the time of deposit of their instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval of or accession to this Convention, inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations whether they will take this Convention as the legal basis for cooperation on extradition with other States Parties to this Convention; and

(b) If they do not take this Convention as the legal basis for cooperation on extradition, seek, where appropriate, to conclude treaties on extradition with other States Parties to this Convention in order to implement this article.

6. States Parties that do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall recognize offences to which this article applies as extraditable offences between themselves.

7. Extradition shall be subject to the conditions provided for by the domestic law of the requested State Party or by applicable extradition treaties, including, inter alia, conditions in relation to the minimum penalty requirement for extradition and the grounds upon which the requested State Party may refuse extradition.

8. States Parties shall, subject to their domestic law, endeavour to expedite extradition procedures and to simplify evidentiary requirements relating thereto in respect of any offence to which this article applies.

9. Subject to the provisions of its domestic law and its extradition treaties, the requested State Party may, upon being satisfied that the circumstances so warrant and are urgent and at the request of the requesting State Party, take a person whose extradition is sought and who is present in its territory into custody or take other appropriate measures to ensure his or her presence at extradition proceedings.

10. A State Party in whose territory an alleged offender is found, if it does not extradite such person in respect of an offence to which this article applies solely on the ground that he or she is one of its nationals, shall, at the request of the State Party seeking extradition, be obliged to submit the case without undue delay to its competent authorities for the purpose of prosecution. Those authorities shall take their decision and conduct their proceedings in the same manner as in the case of any other offence of a grave nature under the domestic law of that State Party. The States Parties concerned shall cooperate with each other, in particular on procedural and evidentiary aspects, to ensure the efficiency of such prosecution.

11. Whenever a State Party is permitted under its domestic law to extradite or otherwise surrender one of its nationals only upon the condition that the person will be returned to that State Party to serve the sentence imposed as a result of the trial or proceedings for which the extradition or surrender of the person was sought and that State Party and the State Party seeking the extradition of the person agree with this option and other terms that they may deem appropriate, such conditional extradition or surrender shall be sufficient to discharge the obligation set forth in paragraph 10 of this article.

12. If extradition, sought for purposes of enforcing a sentence, is refused because the person sought is a national of the requested State Party, the requested Party shall, if its domestic law so permits and in conformity with the requirements of such law, upon application of the requesting Party, consider the enforcement of the sentence that has been imposed under the domestic law of the requesting Party or the remainder thereof.

13. Any person regarding whom proceedings are being carried out in connection with any of the offences to which this article applies shall be guaranteed fair treatment at all stages of the proceedings, including enjoyment of all the rights and guarantees provided by the domestic law of the State Party in the territory of which that person is present.

14. Nothing in this Convention shall be interpreted as imposing an obligation to extradite if the requested State Party has substantial grounds for believing that the request has been made for the purpose of prosecuting or punishing a person on account of that person's sex, race, religion, nationality, ethnic origin or political opinions or that compliance with the request would cause prejudice to that person's position for any one of these reasons.

15. States Parties may not refuse a request for extradition on the sole ground that the offence is also considered to involve fiscal matters.

16. Before refusing extradition, the requested State Party shall, where appropriate, consult with the requesting State Party to provide it with ample opportunity to present its opinions and to provide information relevant to its allegation.

17. States Parties shall seek to conclude bilateral and multilateral agreements or arrangements to carry out or to enhance the effectiveness of extradition.

Article 17

Transfer of sentenced persons

States Parties may consider entering into bilateral or multilateral agreements or arrangements on the transfer to their territory of persons sentenced to imprisonment or other forms of deprivation of liberty for offences covered by this Convention, in order that they may complete their sentences there.

Article 18

Mutual legal assistance

1. States Parties shall afford one another the widest measure of mutual legal assistance in investigations, prosecutions and judicial proceedings in relation to the offences covered by this Convention as provided for in article 3 and shall reciprocally extend to one another similar assistance where the requesting State Party has reasonable grounds to suspect that the offence referred to in article 3, paragraph 1 (a) or (b), is transnational in nature, including that victims, witnesses, proceeds, instrumentalities or evidence of such offences are located in the requested State Party and that the offence involves an organized criminal group.

2. Mutual legal assistance shall be afforded to the fullest extent possible under relevant laws, treaties, agreements and arrangements of the requested State Party with respect to investigations, prosecutions and judicial proceedings in relation to the offences for which a legal person may be held liable in accordance with article 10 of this Convention in the requesting State Party.

3. Mutual legal assistance to be afforded in accordance with this article may be requested for any of the following purposes:

- (a) Taking evidence or statements from persons;
- (b) Effecting service of judicial documents;
- (c) Executing searches and seizures, and freezing;
- (d) Examining objects and sites;
- (e) Providing information, evidentiary items and expert evaluations;
- (f) Providing originals or certified copies of relevant documents and records, including government, bank, financial, corporate or business records;
- (g) Identifying or tracing proceeds of crime, property, instrumentalities or other things for evidentiary purposes;
- (h) Facilitating the voluntary appearance of persons in the requesting State Party;
- (i) Any other type of assistance that is not contrary to the domestic law of the requested State Party.

4. Without prejudice to domestic law, the competent authorities of a State Party may, without prior request, transmit information relating to criminal matters to a competent authority in another State Party where they believe that such information could assist the authority in undertaking or successfully concluding inquiries and criminal proceedings or could result in a request formulated by the latter State Party pursuant to this Convention.

5. The transmission of information pursuant to paragraph 4 of this article shall be without prejudice to inquiries and criminal proceedings in the State of the competent authorities providing the information. The competent authorities receiving the information shall comply with a request that said information remain confidential, even temporarily, or with restrictions on its use. However, this shall not prevent the receiving State Party from disclosing in its proceedings information that is exculpatory to an accused person. In such a case, the receiving State Party shall notify the transmitting State Party prior to the disclosure and, if so requested, consult with the transmitting State Party. If, in an exceptional case, advance notice is not possible, the receiving State Party shall inform the transmitting State Party of the disclosure without delay.

6. The provisions of this article shall not affect the obligations under any other treaty, bilateral or multilateral, that governs or will govern, in whole or in part, mutual legal assistance.

7. Paragraphs 9 to 29 of this article shall apply to requests made pursuant to this article if the States Parties in question are not bound by a treaty of mutual legal assistance. If those States Parties are bound by such a treaty, the corresponding provisions of that treaty shall apply unless the States Parties agree to apply paragraphs 9 to 29 of this article in lieu thereof. States Parties are strongly encouraged to apply these paragraphs if they facilitate cooperation.

8. States Parties shall not decline to render mutual legal assistance pursuant to this article on the ground of bank secrecy.

9. States Parties may decline to render mutual legal assistance pursuant to this article on the ground of absence of dual criminality. However, the requested State Party may, when it deems appropriate, provide assistance, to the extent it decides at its discretion, irrespective of whether the conduct would constitute an offence under the domestic law of the requested State Party.

10. A person who is being detained or is serving a sentence in the territory of one State Party whose presence in another State Party is requested for purposes of identification, testimony or otherwise providing assistance in obtaining evidence for investigations, prosecutions or judicial proceedings in relation to offences covered by this Convention may be transferred if the following conditions are met:

(a) The person freely gives his or her informed consent;

(b) The competent authorities of both States Parties agree, subject to such conditions as those States Parties may deem appropriate.

11. For the purposes of paragraph 10 of this article:

(a) The State Party to which the person is transferred shall have the authority and obligation to keep the person transferred in custody, unless otherwise requested or authorized by the State Party from which the person was transferred;

(b) The State Party to which the person is transferred shall without delay implement its obligation to return the person to the custody of the State Party from which the person was transferred as agreed beforehand, or as otherwise agreed, by the competent authorities of both States Parties;

(c) The State Party to which the person is transferred shall not require the State Party from which the person was transferred to initiate extradition proceedings for the return of the person;

(d) The person transferred shall receive credit for service of the sentence being served in the State from which he or she was transferred for time spent in the custody of the State Party to which he or she was transferred.

12. Unless the State Party from which a person is to be transferred in accordance with paragraphs 10 and 11 of this article so agrees, that person, whatever his or her nationality, shall not be prosecuted, detained, punished or subjected to any other restriction of his or her personal liberty in the territory of the State to which that person is transferred in respect of acts, omissions or convictions prior to his or her departure from the territory of the State from which he or she was transferred.

13. Each State Party shall designate a central authority that shall have the responsibility and power to receive requests for mutual legal assistance and either to execute them or to transmit them to the competent authorities for execution. Where a State Party has a special region or territory with a separate system of mutual legal assistance, it may designate a distinct central authority that shall have the same function for that region or territory. Central authorities shall ensure the speedy and proper execution or transmission of the requests received. Where the central authority transmits the request to a competent authority for execution, it shall encourage the speedy and proper execution of the request by the competent authority. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall be notified of the central authority designated for this purpose at the time each State Party deposits its instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval of or accession to this Convention. Requests for mutual legal assistance and any communication related thereto shall be transmitted to the central authorities designated by the States Parties. This requirement shall be without prejudice to the right of a State Party to require that such requests and communications be addressed to it through diplomatic channels and, in urgent circumstances, where the States Parties agree, through the International Criminal Police Organization, if possible.

14. Requests shall be made in writing or, where possible, by any means capable of producing a written record, in a language acceptable to the requested State Party, under conditions allowing that State Party to establish authenticity. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall be notified of the language or languages acceptable to each State Party at the time it deposits its instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval of or accession to this Convention. In urgent circumstances and where agreed by the States Parties, requests may be made orally, but shall be confirmed in writing forthwith.

15. A request for mutual legal assistance shall contain:

(a) The identity of the authority making the request;

(b) The subject matter and nature of the investigation, prosecution or judicial proceeding to which the request relates and the name and functions of the authority conducting the investigation, prosecution or judicial proceeding;

(c) A summary of the relevant facts, except in relation to requests for the purpose of service of judicial documents;

(d) A description of the assistance sought and details of any particular procedure that the requesting State Party wishes to be followed;

(e) Where possible, the identity, location and nationality of any person concerned; and

(f) The purpose for which the evidence, information or action is sought.

16. The requested State Party may request additional information when it appears necessary for the execution of the request in accordance with its domestic law or when it can facilitate such execution.

17. A request shall be executed in accordance with the domestic law of the requested State Party and, to the extent not contrary to the domestic law of the requested State Party and where possible, in accordance with the procedures specified in the request.

18. Wherever possible and consistent with fundamental principles of domestic law, when an individual is in the territory of a State Party and has to be heard as a witness or expert by the judicial authorities of another State Party, the first State Party may, at the request of the other, permit the hearing to take place by video conference if it is not possible or desirable for the individual in question to appear in person in the territory of the requesting State Party. States Parties may agree that the hearing shall be conducted by a judicial authority of the requesting State Party and attended by a judicial authority of the requested State Party.

19. The requesting State Party shall not transmit or use information or evidence furnished by the requested State Party for investigations, prosecutions or judicial proceedings other than those stated in the request without the prior consent of the requested State Party. Nothing in this paragraph shall prevent the requesting State Party from disclosing in its proceedings information or evidence that is exculpatory to an accused person. In the latter case, the requesting State Party shall notify the requested State Party prior to the disclosure and, if so requested, consult with the requested State Party. If, in an exceptional case, advance notice is not possible, the requesting State Party shall inform the requested State Party of the disclosure without delay.

20. The requesting State Party may require that the requested State Party keep confidential the fact and substance of the request, except to the extent necessary to execute the request. If the requested State Party cannot comply with the requirement of confidentiality, it shall promptly inform the requesting State Party.

21. Mutual legal assistance may be refused:

(a) If the request is not made in conformity with the provisions of this article;

(b) If the requested State Party considers that execution of the request is likely to prejudice its sovereignty, security, ordre public or other essential interests;

(c) If the authorities of the requested State Party would be prohibited by its domestic law from carrying out the action requested with regard to any similar offence, had it been subject to investigation, prosecution or judicial proceedings under their own jurisdiction;

(d) If it would be contrary to the legal system of the requested State Party relating to mutual legal assistance for the request to be granted.

22. States Parties may not refuse a request for mutual legal assistance on the sole ground that the offence is also considered to involve fiscal matters.

23. Reasons shall be given for any refusal of mutual legal assistance.

24. The requested State Party shall execute the request for mutual legal assistance as soon as possible and shall take as full account as possible of any deadlines suggested by the requesting State Party and for which reasons are given, preferably in the request. The requested State Party shall respond to reasonable requests by the requesting State Party on progress of its handling of the request. The requesting State Party shall promptly inform the requested State Party when the assistance sought is no longer required.

25. Mutual legal assistance may be postponed by the requested State Party on the ground that it interferes with an ongoing investigation, prosecution or judicial proceeding.

26. Before refusing a request pursuant to paragraph 21 of this article or postponing its execution pursuant to paragraph 25 of this article, the requested State Party shall consult with the requesting State Party to consider whether assistance may be granted subject to such terms and conditions as it deems necessary. If the requesting State Party accepts assistance subject to those conditions, it shall comply with the conditions.

27. Without prejudice to the application of paragraph 12 of this article, a witness, expert or other person who, at the request of the requesting State Party, consents to give evidence in a proceeding or to assist in an investigation, prosecution or judicial proceeding in the territory of the requesting State Party shall not be prosecuted, detained, punished or subjected to any other restriction of his or her personal liberty in that territory in respect of acts, omissions or convictions prior to his or her departure from the territory of the requested State Party. Such safe conduct shall cease when the witness, expert or other person having had, for a period of fifteen consecutive days or for any period agreed upon by the States Parties from the date on which he or she has been officially informed that his or her presence is no longer required by the judicial authorities, an opportunity of leaving, has nevertheless remained voluntarily in the territory of the requesting State Party or, having left it, has returned of his or her own free will.

28. The ordinary costs of executing a request shall be borne by the requested State Party, unless otherwise agreed by the States Parties concerned. If expenses of a substantial or extraordinary nature are or will be required to fulfil the request, the States Parties shall consult to determine the terms and conditions under which the request will be executed, as well as the manner in which the costs shall be borne.

29. The requested State Party:

(a) Shall provide to the requesting State Party copies of government records, documents or information in its possession that under its domestic law are available to the general public;

(b) May, at its discretion, provide to the requesting State Party in whole, in part or subject to such conditions as it deems appropriate, copies of any government records, documents or information in its possession that under its domestic law are not available to the general public.

30. States Parties shall consider, as may be necessary, the possibility of concluding bilateral or multilateral agreements or arrangements that would serve the purposes of, give practical effect to or enhance the provisions of this article.

Article 19

Joint investigations

States Parties shall consider concluding bilateral or multilateral agreements or arrangements whereby, in relation to matters that are the subject of investigations, prosecutions or judicial proceedings in one or more States, the competent authorities concerned may establish joint investigative bodies. In the absence of such agreements or arrangements, joint investigations may be undertaken by agreement on a case-by-case basis. The States Parties involved shall ensure that the sovereignty of the State Party in whose territory such investigation is to take place is fully respected.

Special investigative techniques

1. If permitted by the basic principles of its domestic legal system, each State Party shall, within its possibilities and under the conditions prescribed by its domestic law, take the necessary measures to allow for the appropriate use of controlled delivery and, where it deems appropriate, for the use of other special investigative techniques, such as electronic or other forms of surveillance and undercover operations, by its competent authorities in its territory for the purpose of effectively combating organized crime.

2. For the purpose of investigating the offences covered by this Convention, States Parties are encouraged to conclude, when necessary, appropriate bilateral or multilateral agreements or arrangements for using such special investigative techniques in the context of cooperation at the international level. Such agreements or arrangements shall be concluded and implemented in full compliance with the principle of sovereign equality of States and shall be carried out strictly in accordance with the terms of those agreements or arrangements.

3. In the absence of an agreement or arrangement as set forth in paragraph 2 of this article, decisions to use such special investigative techniques at the international level shall be made on a case-by-case basis and may, when necessary, take into consideration financial arrangements and understandings with respect to the exercise of jurisdiction by the States Parties concerned.

4. Decisions to use controlled delivery at the international level may, with the consent of the States Parties concerned, include methods such as intercepting and allowing the goods to continue intact or be removed or replaced in whole or in part.

Article 21

Transfer of criminal proceedings

States Parties shall consider the possibility of transferring to one another proceedings for the prosecution of an offence covered by this Convention in cases where such transfer is considered to be in the interests of the proper administration of justice, in particular in cases where several jurisdictions are involved, with a view to concentrating the prosecution.

Establishment of criminal record

Each State Party may adopt such legislative or other measures as may be necessary to take into consideration, under such terms as and for the purpose that it deems appropriate, any previous conviction in another State of an alleged offender for the purpose of using such information in criminal proceedings relating to an offence covered by this Convention.

Article 23

Criminalization of obstruction of justice

Each State Party shall adopt such legislative and other measures as may be necessary to establish as criminal offences, when committed intentionally:

(a) The use of physical force, threats or intimidation or the promise, offering or giving of an undue advantage to induce false testimony or to interfere in the giving of testimony or the production of evidence in a proceeding in relation to the commission of offences covered by this Convention;

(b) The use of physical force, threats or intimidation to interfere with the exercise of official duties by a justice or law enforcement official in relation to the commission of offences covered by this Convention. Nothing in this subparagraph shall prejudice the right of States Parties to have legislation that protects other categories of public officials.

Protection of witnesses

1. Each State Party shall take appropriate measures within its means to provide effective protection from potential retaliation or intimidation for witnesses in criminal proceedings who give testimony concerning offences covered by this Convention and, as appropriate, for their relatives and other persons close to them.

2. The measures envisaged in paragraph 1 of this article may include, inter alia, without prejudice to the rights of the defendant, including the right to due process:

(a) Establishing procedures for the physical protection of such persons, such as, to the extent necessary and feasible, relocating them and permitting, where appropriate, non-disclosure or limitations on the disclosure of information concerning the identity and whereabouts of such persons;

(b) Providing evidentiary rules to permit witness testimony to be given in a manner that ensures the safety of the witness, such as permitting testimony to be given through the use of communications technology such as video links or other adequate means.

3. States Parties shall consider entering into agreements or arrangements with other States for the relocation of persons referred to in paragraph 1 of this article.

4. The provisions of this article shall also apply to victims insofar as they are witnesses.

Article 25

Assistance to and protection of victims

1. Each State Party shall take appropriate measures within its means to provide assistance and protection to victims of offences covered by this Convention, in particular in cases of threat of retaliation or intimidation.

2. Each State Party shall establish appropriate procedures to provide access to compensation and restitution for victims of offences covered by this Convention.

3. Each State Party shall, subject to its domestic law, enable views and concerns of victims to be presented and considered at appropriate stages of criminal proceedings against offenders in a manner not prejudicial to the rights of the defence.

Article 26

Measures to enhance cooperation with law enforcement authorities

1. Each State Party shall take appropriate measures to encourage persons who participate or who have participated in organized criminal groups:

(a) To supply information useful to competent authorities for investigative and evidentiary purposes on such matters as:

- (i) The identity, nature, composition, structure, location or activities of organized criminal groups;
- (ii) Links, including international links, with other organized criminal groups;
- (iii) Offences that organized criminal groups have committed or may commit;

(b) To provide factual, concrete help to competent authorities that may contribute to depriving organized criminal groups of their resources or of the proceeds of crime.

2. Each State Party shall consider providing for the possibility, in appropriate cases, of mitigating punishment of an accused person who provides substantial cooperation in the investigation or prosecution of an offence covered by this Convention.

3. Each State Party shall consider providing for the possibility, in accordance with fundamental principles of its domestic law, of granting immunity from prosecution to a person who provides substantial cooperation in the investigation or prosecution of an offence covered by this Convention.

4. Protection of such persons shall be as provided for in article 24 of this Convention.

5. Where a person referred to in paragraph 1 of this article located in one State Party can provide substantial cooperation to the competent authorities of another State Party, the States Parties concerned may consider entering into agreements or arrangements, in accordance with their domestic law, concerning the potential provision by the other State Party of the treatment set forth in paragraphs 2 and 3 of this article.

Article 27

Law enforcement cooperation

1. States Parties shall cooperate closely with one another, consistent with their respective domestic legal and administrative systems, to enhance the effectiveness of law enforcement action to combat the offences covered by this Convention. Each State Party shall, in particular, adopt effective measures:

(a) To enhance and, where necessary, to establish channels of communication between their competent authorities, agencies and services in order to facilitate the secure and rapid exchange of information concerning all aspects of the offences covered by this Convention, including, if the States Parties concerned deem it appropriate, links with other criminal activities;

(b) To cooperate with other States Parties in conducting inquiries with respect to offences covered by this Convention concerning:

- (i) The identity, whereabouts and activities of persons suspected of involvement in such offences or the location of other persons concerned;
- (ii) The movement of proceeds of crime or property derived from the commission of such offences;
- (iii) The movement of property, equipment or other instrumentalities used or intended for use in the commission of such offences;

(c) To provide, when appropriate, necessary items or quantities of substances for analytical or investigative purposes;

(d) To facilitate effective coordination between their competent authorities, agencies and services and to promote the exchange of personnel and other experts, including, subject to bilateral agreements or arrangements between the States Parties concerned, the posting of liaison officers;

(e) To exchange information with other States Parties on specific means and methods used by organized criminal groups, including, where applicable, routes and conveyances and the use of false identities, altered or false documents or other means of concealing their activities;

(f) To exchange information and coordinate administrative and other measures taken as appropriate for the purpose of early identification of the offences covered by this Convention.

2. With a view to giving effect to this Convention, States Parties shall consider entering into bilateral or multilateral agreements or arrangements on direct cooperation between their law enforcement agencies and, where such agreements or arrangements already exist, amending them. In the absence of such agreements or arrangements between the States Parties concerned, the Parties may consider this Convention as the basis for mutual law enforcement cooperation in respect of the offences covered by this Convention. Whenever appropriate, States Parties shall make full use of agreements or arrangements, including international or regional organizations, to enhance the cooperation between their law enforcement agencies.

3. States Parties shall endeavour to cooperate within their means to respond to transnational organized crime committed through the use of modern technology.

Article 28

Collection, exchange and analysis of information on the nature of organized crime

1. Each State Party shall consider analysing, in consultation with the scientific and academic communities, trends in organized crime in its territory, the circumstances in which organized crime operates, as well as the professional groups and technologies involved.

2. States Parties shall consider developing and sharing analytical expertise concerning organized criminal activities with each other and through international and regional organizations. For that purpose, common definitions, standards and methodologies should be developed and applied as appropriate.

3. Each State Party shall consider monitoring its policies and actual measures to combat organized crime and making assessments of their effectiveness and efficiency.

Article 29

Training and technical assistance

1. Each State Party shall, to the extent necessary, initiate, develop or improve specific training programmes for its law enforcement personnel, including prosecutors, investigating magistrates and customs personnel, and other personnel charged with the prevention, detection and control of the offences covered by this Convention. Such programmes may include secondments and exchanges of staff. Such programmes shall deal, in particular and to the extent permitted by domestic law, with the following:

(a) Methods used in the prevention, detection and control of the offences covered by this Convention;

(b) Routes and techniques used by persons suspected of involvement in offences covered by this Convention, including in transit States, and appropriate countermeasures;

(c) Monitoring of the movement of contraband;

(d) Detection and monitoring of the movements of proceeds of crime, property, equipment or other instrumentalities and methods used for the transfer, concealment or disguise of such proceeds, property, equipment or other instrumentalities, as well as methods used in combating money-laundering and other financial crimes;

(e) Collection of evidence;

(f) Control techniques in free trade zones and free ports;

(g) Modern law enforcement equipment and techniques, including electronic surveillance, controlled deliveries and undercover operations;

(h) Methods used in combating transnational organized crime committed through the use of computers, telecommunications networks or other forms of modern technology; and

(i) Methods used in the protection of victims and witnesses.

2. States Parties shall assist one another in planning and implementing research and training programmes designed to share expertise in the areas referred to in paragraph 1 of this article and to that end shall also, when appropriate, use regional and international conferences and seminars to promote cooperation and to stimulate discussion on problems of mutual concern, including the special problems and needs of transit States.

3. States Parties shall promote training and technical assistance that will facilitate extradition and mutual legal assistance. Such training and technical assistance may include language training, secondments and exchanges between personnel in central authorities or agencies with relevant responsibilities.

4. In the case of existing bilateral and multilateral agreements or arrangements, States Parties shall strengthen, to the extent necessary, efforts to maximize operational and training activities within international and regional organizations and within other relevant bilateral and multilateral agreements or arrangements.

Article 30

Other measures: implementation of the Convention through economic development and technical assistance

1. States Parties shall take measures conducive to the optimal implementation of this Convention to the extent possible, through international cooperation, taking into account the negative effects of organized crime on society in general, in particular on sustainable development.

2. States Parties shall make concrete efforts to the extent possible and in coordination with each other, as well as with international and regional organizations:

(a) To enhance their cooperation at various levels with developing countries, with a view to strengthening the capacity of the latter to prevent and combat transnational organized crime;

(b) To enhance financial and material assistance to support the efforts of developing countries to fight transnational organized crime effectively and to help them implement this Convention successfully;

(c) To provide technical assistance to developing countries and countries with economies in transition to assist them in meeting their needs for the implementation of this Convention. To that end, States Parties shall endeavour to make adequate and regular voluntary contributions to an account specifically designated for that purpose in a United Nations funding mechanism. States Parties may also give special consideration, in accordance with their domestic law and the provisions of this Convention, to contributing to the aforementioned account a percentage of the money or of the corresponding value of proceeds of crime or property confiscated in accordance with the provisions of this Convention;

(d) To encourage and persuade other States and financial institutions as appropriate to join them in efforts in accordance with this article, in particular by providing more training programmes and modern equipment to developing countries in order to assist them in achieving the objectives of this Convention.

3. To the extent possible, these measures shall be without prejudice to existing foreign assistance commitments or to other financial cooperation arrangements at the bilateral, regional or international level.

4. States Parties may conclude bilateral or multilateral agreements or arrangements on material and logistical assistance, taking into consideration the financial arrangements necessary for the means of international cooperation provided for by this Convention to be effective and for the prevention, detection and control of transnational organized crime.

Article 31

Prevention

1. States Parties shall endeavour to develop and evaluate national projects and to establish and promote best practices and policies aimed at the prevention of transnational organized crime.

2. States Parties shall endeavour, in accordance with fundamental principles of their domestic law, to reduce existing or future opportunities for organized criminal groups to participate in lawful markets with proceeds of crime, through appropriate legislative, administrative or other measures. These measures should focus on:

(a) The strengthening of cooperation between law enforcement agencies or prosecutors and relevant private entities, including industry;

(b) The promotion of the development of standards and procedures designed to safeguard the integrity of public and relevant private entities, as well as codes of conduct for relevant professions, in particular lawyers, notaries public, tax consultants and accountants;

(c) The prevention of the misuse by organized criminal groups of tender procedures conducted by public authorities and of subsidies and licences granted by public authorities for commercial activity;

(d) The prevention of the misuse of legal persons by organized criminal groups; such measures could include:

- (i) The establishment of public records on legal and natural persons involved in the establishment, management and funding of legal persons;
- (ii) The introduction of the possibility of disqualifying by court order or any appropriate means for a reasonable period of time persons convicted of offences covered by this Convention from acting as directors of legal persons incorporated within their jurisdiction;
- (iii) The establishment of national records of persons disqualified from acting as directors of legal persons; and
- (iv) The exchange of information contained in the records referred to in subparagraphs (d) (i) and (iii) of this paragraph with the competent authorities of other States Parties.

3. States Parties shall endeavour to promote the reintegration into society of persons convicted of offences covered by this Convention.

4. States Parties shall endeavour to evaluate periodically existing relevant legal instruments and administrative practices with a view to detecting their vulnerability to misuse by organized criminal groups.

5. States Parties shall endeavour to promote public awareness regarding the existence, causes and gravity of and the threat posed by transnational organized crime. Information may be disseminated where appropriate through the mass media and shall include measures to promote public participation in preventing and combating such crime.

6. Each State Party shall inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the name and address of the authority or authorities that can assist other States Parties in developing measures to prevent transnational organized crime.

7. States Parties shall, as appropriate, collaborate with each other and relevant international and regional organizations in promoting and developing the measures referred to in this article. This includes participation in international projects aimed at the prevention of transnational organized crime, for example by alleviating the circumstances that render socially marginalized groups vulnerable to the action of transnational organized crime.

Article 32

Conference of the Parties to the Convention

1. A Conference of the Parties to the Convention is hereby established to improve the capacity of States Parties to combat transnational organized crime and to promote and review the implementation of this Convention.

2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall convene the Conference of the Parties not later than one year following the entry into force of this Convention. The Conference of the Parties shall adopt rules of procedure and rules governing the activities set forth in paragraphs 3 and 4 of this article (including rules concerning payment of expenses incurred in carrying out those activities).

3. The Conference of the Parties shall agree upon mechanisms for achieving the objectives mentioned in paragraph 1 of this article, including:

(a) Facilitating activities by States Parties under articles 29, 30 and 31 of this Convention, including by encouraging the mobilization of voluntary contributions;

(b) Facilitating the exchange of information among States Parties on patterns and trends in transnational organized crime and on successful practices for combating it;

(c) Cooperating with relevant international and regional organizations and non-governmental organizations;

(d) Reviewing periodically the implementation of this Convention;

(e) Making recommendations to improve this Convention and its implementation.

4. For the purpose of paragraphs 3 (d) and (e) of this article, the Conference of the Parties shall acquire the necessary knowledge of the measures taken by States Parties in implementing this Convention and the difficulties encountered by them in doing so through information provided by them and through such supplemental review mechanisms as may be established by the Conference of the Parties.

5. Each State Party shall provide the Conference of the Parties with information on its programmes, plans and practices, as well as legislative and administrative measures to implement this Convention, as required by the Conference of the Parties.

Article 33

Secretariat

1. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall provide the necessary secretariat services to the Conference of the Parties to the Convention.

2. The secretariat shall:

(a) Assist the Conference of the Parties in carrying out the activities set forth in article 32 of this Convention and make arrangements and provide the necessary services for the sessions of the Conference of the Parties;

(b) Upon request, assist States Parties in providing information to the Conference of the Parties as envisaged in article 32, paragraph 5, of this Convention; and

(c) Ensure the necessary coordination with the secretariats of relevant international and regional organizations.

Article 34

Implementation of the Convention

1. Each State Party shall take the necessary measures, including legislative and administrative measures, in accordance with fundamental principles of its domestic law, to ensure the implementation of its obligations under this Convention.

2. The offences established in accordance with articles 5, 6, 8 and 23 of this Convention shall be established in the domestic law of each State Party independently of the transnational nature or the involvement of an organized criminal group as described in article 3, paragraph 1, of this Convention, except to the extent that article 5 of this Convention would require the involvement of an organized criminal group.

3. Each State Party may adopt more strict or severe measures than those provided for by this Convention for preventing and combating transnational organized crime.

Article 35

Settlement of disputes

1. States Parties shall endeavour to settle disputes concerning the interpretation or application of this Convention through negotiation.

2. Any dispute between two or more States Parties concerning the interpretation or application of this Convention that cannot be settled through negotiation within a reasonable time shall, at the request of one of those States Parties, be submitted to arbitration. If, six months after the date of the request for arbitration, those States Parties are unable to agree on the organization of the arbitration, any one of those States Parties may refer the dispute to the International Court of Justice by request in accordance with the Statute of the Court.

3. Each State Party may, at the time of signature, ratification, acceptance or approval or accession to this Convention, declare that it does not consider itself bound by paragraph 2 of this article. The other States Parties shall not be bound by paragraph 2 of this article with respect to any State Party that has made such a reservation.

4. Any State Party that has made a reservation in accordance with paragraph 3 of this article may at any time withdraw that reservation by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 36

Signature, ratification, acceptance, approval and accession

1. This Convention shall be open to all States for signature from 12 to 15 December 2000 in Palermo, Italy, and thereafter at United Nations Headquarters in New York until 12 December 2002.

2. This Convention shall also be open for signature by regional economic integration organizations provided that at least one member State of such organization has signed this Convention in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article.

3. This Convention is subject to ratification, acceptance or approval. Instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. A regional economic integration organization may deposit its instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval if at least one of its member States has done likewise. In that instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval, such organization shall declare the extent of its competence with respect to the matters governed by this Convention. Such organization shall also inform the depositary of any relevant modification in the extent of its competence.

4. This Convention is open for accession by any State or any regional economic integration organization of which at least one member State is a Party to this Convention. Instruments of accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. At the time of its accession, a regional economic integration organization shall declare the extent of its competence with respect to matters governed by this Convention. Such organization shall also inform the depositary of any relevant modification in the extent of its competence.

Article 37

Relation with protocols

1. This Convention may be supplemented by one or more protocols.

2. In order to become a Party to a protocol, a State or a regional economic integration organization must also be a Party to this Convention.

3. A State Party to this Convention is not bound by a protocol unless it becomes a Party to the protocol in accordance with the provisions thereof.

4. Any protocol to this Convention shall be interpreted together with this Convention, taking into account the purpose of that protocol.

Article 38

Entry into force

1. This Convention shall enter into force on the ninetieth day after the date of deposit of the fortieth instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession. For the purpose of this paragraph, any instrument deposited by a regional economic integration organization shall not be counted as additional to those deposited by member States of such organization.

2. For each State or regional economic integration organization ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to this Convention after the deposit of the fortieth instrument of such action, this Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of deposit by such State or organization of the relevant instrument.

Amendment

1. After the expiry of five years from the entry into force of this Convention, a State Party may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall thereupon communicate the proposed amendment to the States Parties and to the Conference of the Parties to the Convention for the purpose of considering and deciding on the proposal. The Conference of the Parties shall make every effort to achieve consensus on each amendment. If all efforts at consensus have been exhausted and no agreement has been reached, the amendment shall, as a last resort, require for its adoption a two-thirds majority vote of the States Parties present and voting at the meeting of the Conference of the Parties.

2. Regional economic integration organizations, in matters within their competence, shall exercise their right to vote under this article with a number of votes equal to the number of their member States that are Parties to this Convention. Such organizations shall not exercise their right to vote if their member States exercise theirs and vice versa.

3. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article is subject to ratification, acceptance or approval by States Parties.

4. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article shall enter into force in respect of a State Party ninety days after the date of the deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of an instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval of such amendment.

5. When an amendment enters into force, it shall be binding on those States Parties which have expressed their consent to be bound by it. Other States Parties shall still be bound by the provisions of this Convention and any earlier amendments that they have ratified, accepted or approved.

Article 40

Denunciation

1. A State Party may denounce this Convention by written notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Such denunciation shall become effective one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.

2. A regional economic integration organization shall cease to be a Party to this Convention when all of its member States have denounced it.

3. Denunciation of this Convention in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article shall entail the denunciation of any protocols thereto.

Article 41

Depositary and languages

1. The Secretary-General of the United Nations is designated depositary of this Convention.

2. The original of this Convention, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned plenipotentiaries, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed this Convention.

ANNEX II

Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime

Preamble

The States Parties to this Protocol,

Declaring that effective action to prevent and combat trafficking in persons, especially women and children, requires a comprehensive international approach in the countries of origin, transit and destination that includes measures to prevent such trafficking, to punish the traffickers and to protect the victims of such trafficking, including by protecting their internationally recognized human rights,

Taking into account the fact that, despite the existence of a variety of international instruments containing rules and practical measures to combat the exploitation of persons, especially women and children, there is no universal instrument that addresses all aspects of trafficking in persons,

Concerned that, in the absence of such an instrument, persons who are vulnerable to trafficking will not be sufficiently protected,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 53/111 of 9 December 1998, in which the Assembly decided to establish an open-ended intergovernmental ad hoc committee for the purpose of elaborating a comprehensive international convention against transnational organized crime and of discussing the elaboration of, inter alia, an international instrument addressing trafficking in women and children,

Convinced that supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime with an international instrument for the prevention, suppression and punishment of trafficking in persons, especially women and children, will be useful in preventing and combating that crime,

Have agreed as follows:

I. General provisions

Article 1

Relation with the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime

1. This Protocol supplements the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime. It shall be interpreted together with the Convention.

2. The provisions of the Convention shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to this Protocol unless otherwise provided herein.

3. The offences established in accordance with article 5 of this Protocol shall be regarded as offences established in accordance with the Convention.

Article 2

Statement of purpose

The purposes of this Protocol are:

- (a) To prevent and combat trafficking in persons, paying particular attention to women and children;
- (b) To protect and assist the victims of such trafficking, with full respect for their human rights; and
- (c) To promote cooperation among States Parties in order to meet those objectives.

Article 3

Use of terms

For the purposes of this Protocol:

- (a) "Trafficking in persons" shall mean the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring or receipt of persons, by means of the threat or use of force or other forms of coercion, of abduction, of fraud, of deception, of the abuse of power or of a position of vulnerability or of the giving or receiving of payments or benefits to achieve the consent of a person having control over another person, for the purpose of exploitation. Exploitation shall include, at a minimum, the exploitation of the prostitution of others or other forms of sexual exploitation, forced labour or services, slavery or practices similar to slavery, servitude or the removal of organs;

(b) The consent of a victim of trafficking in persons to the intended exploitation set forth in subparagraph (a) of this article shall be irrelevant where any of the means set forth in subparagraph (a) have been used;

(c) The recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring or receipt of a child for the purpose of exploitation shall be considered "trafficking in persons" even if this does not involve any of the means set forth in subparagraph (a) of this article;

(d) "Child" shall mean any person under eighteen years of age.

Article 4

Scope of application

This Protocol shall apply, except as otherwise stated herein, to the prevention, investigation and prosecution of the offences established in accordance with article 5 of this Protocol, where those offences are transnational in nature and involve an organized criminal group, as well as to the protection of victims of such offences.

Article 5 Criminalization

1. Each State Party shall adopt such legislative and other measures as may be necessary to establish as criminal offences the conduct set forth in article 3 of this Protocol, when committed intentionally.

2. Each State Party shall also adopt such legislative and other measures as may be necessary to establish as criminal offences:

(a) Subject to the basic concepts of its legal system, attempting to commit an offence established in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article;

(b) Participating as an accomplice in an offence established in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article; and

(c) Organizing or directing other persons to commit an offence established in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article.

II. Protection of victims of trafficking in persons

Article 6

Assistance to and protection of victims of trafficking in persons

1. In appropriate cases and to the extent possible under its domestic law, each State Party shall protect the privacy and identity of victims of trafficking in persons, including, inter alia, by making legal proceedings relating to such trafficking confidential.

2. Each State Party shall ensure that its domestic legal or administrative system contains measures that provide to victims of trafficking in persons, in appropriate cases:

(a) Information on relevant court and administrative proceedings;

(b) Assistance to enable their views and concerns to be presented and considered at appropriate stages of criminal proceedings against offenders, in a manner not prejudicial to the rights of the defence.

3. Each State Party shall consider implementing measures to provide for the physical, psychological and social recovery of victims of trafficking in persons, including, in appropriate cases, in cooperation with non-governmental organizations, other relevant organizations and other elements of civil society, and, in particular, the provision of:

(a) Appropriate housing;

(b) Counselling and information, in particular as regards their legal rights, in a language that the victims of trafficking in persons can understand;

(c) Medical, psychological and material assistance; and

(d) Employment, educational and training opportunities.

4. Each State Party shall take into account, in applying the provisions of this article, the age, gender and special needs of victims of trafficking in persons, in particular the special needs of children, including appropriate housing, education and care.

5. Each State Party shall endeavour to provide for the physical safety of victims of trafficking in persons while they are within its territory.

6. Each State Party shall ensure that its domestic legal system contains measures that offer victims of trafficking in persons the possibility of obtaining compensation for damage suffered.

Article 7

Status of victims of trafficking in persons in receiving States

1. In addition to taking measures pursuant to article 6 of this Protocol, each State Party shall consider adopting legislative or other appropriate measures that permit victims of trafficking in persons to remain in its territory, temporarily or permanently, in appropriate cases.

2. In implementing the provision contained in paragraph 1 of this article, each State Party shall give appropriate consideration to humanitarian and compassionate factors.

Article 8

Repatriation of victims of trafficking in persons

1. The State Party of which a victim of trafficking in persons is a national or in which the person had the right of permanent residence at the time of entry into the territory of the receiving State Party shall facilitate and accept, with due regard for the safety of that person, the return of that person without undue or unreasonable delay.

2. When a State Party returns a victim of trafficking in persons to a State Party of which that person is a national or in which he or she had, at the time of entry into the territory of the receiving State Party, the right of permanent residence, such return shall be with due regard for the safety of that person and for the status of any legal proceedings related to the fact that the person is a victim of trafficking and shall preferably be voluntary.

3. At the request of a receiving State Party, a requested State Party shall, without undue or unreasonable delay, verify whether a person who is a victim of trafficking in persons is its national or had the right of permanent residence in its territory at the time of entry into the territory of the receiving State Party.

4. In order to facilitate the return of a victim of trafficking in persons who is without proper documentation, the State Party of which that person is a national or in which he or she had the right of permanent residence at the time of entry into the territory of the receiving State Party shall agree to issue, at the request of the receiving State Party, such travel documents or other authorization as may be necessary to enable the person to travel to and re-enter its territory.

5. This article shall be without prejudice to any right afforded to victims of trafficking in persons by any domestic law of the receiving State Party.

6. This article shall be without prejudice to any applicable bilateral or multilateral agreement or arrangement that governs, in whole or in part, the return of victims of trafficking in persons.

III. Prevention, cooperation and other measures

Article 9

Prevention of trafficking in persons

1. States Parties shall establish comprehensive policies, programmes and other measures:

(a) To prevent and combat trafficking in persons; and

(b) To protect victims of trafficking in persons, especially women and children, from revictimization.

2. States Parties shall endeavour to undertake measures such as research, information and mass media campaigns and social and economic initiatives to prevent and combat trafficking in persons.

3. Policies, programmes and other measures established in accordance with this article shall, as appropriate, include cooperation with non-governmental organizations, other relevant organizations and other elements of civil society.

4. States Parties shall take or strengthen measures, including through bilateral or multilateral cooperation, to alleviate the factors that make persons, especially women and children, vulnerable to trafficking, such as poverty, underdevelopment and lack of equal opportunity.

5. States Parties shall adopt or strengthen legislative or other measures, such as educational, social or cultural measures, including through bilateral and multilateral cooperation, to discourage the demand that fosters all forms of exploitation of persons, especially women and children, that leads to trafficking.

Article 10

Information exchange and training

1. Law enforcement, immigration or other relevant authorities of States Parties shall, as appropriate, cooperate with one another by exchanging information, in accordance with their domestic law, to enable them to determine:

(a) Whether individuals crossing or attempting to cross an international border with travel documents belonging to other persons or without travel documents are perpetrators or victims of trafficking in persons;

(b) The types of travel document that individuals have used or attempted to use to cross an international border for the purpose of trafficking in persons; and

(c) The means and methods used by organized criminal groups for the purpose of trafficking in persons, including the recruitment and transportation of victims, routes and links between and among individuals and groups engaged in such trafficking, and possible measures for detecting them.

2. States Parties shall provide or strengthen training for law enforcement, immigration and other relevant officials in the prevention of trafficking in persons. The training should focus on methods used in preventing such trafficking, prosecuting the traffickers and protecting the rights of the victims, including protecting the victims from the traffickers. The training should also take into account the need to consider human rights and child- and gender-sensitive issues and it should encourage cooperation with non-governmental organizations, other relevant organizations and other elements of civil society.

3. A State Party that receives information shall comply with any request by the State Party that transmitted the information that places restrictions on its use.

Article 11

Border measures

1. Without prejudice to international commitments in relation to the free movement of people, States Parties shall strengthen, to the extent possible, such border controls as may be necessary to prevent and detect trafficking in persons.

2. Each State Party shall adopt legislative or other appropriate measures to prevent, to the extent possible, means of transport operated by commercial carriers from being used in the commission of offences established in accordance with article 5 of this Protocol.

3. Where appropriate, and without prejudice to applicable international conventions, such measures shall include establishing the obligation of commercial carriers, including any transportation company or the owner or operator of any means of transport, to ascertain that all passengers are in possession of the travel documents required for entry into the receiving State.

4. Each State Party shall take the necessary measures, in accordance with its domestic law, to provide for sanctions in cases of violation of the obligation set forth in paragraph 3 of this article.

5. Each State Party shall consider taking measures that permit, in accordance with its domestic law, the denial of entry or revocation of visas of persons implicated in the commission of offences established in accordance with this Protocol.

6. Without prejudice to article 27 of the Convention, States Parties shall consider strengthening cooperation among border control agencies by, inter alia, establishing and maintaining direct channels of communication.

Article 12

Security and control of documents

Each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary, within available means:

(a) To ensure that travel or identity documents issued by it are of such quality that they cannot easily be misused and cannot readily be falsified or unlawfully altered, replicated or issued; and

(b) To ensure the integrity and security of travel or identity documents issued by or on behalf of the State Party and to prevent their unlawful creation, issuance and use.

Article 13

Legitimacy and validity of documents

At the request of another State Party, a State Party shall, in accordance with its domestic law, verify within a reasonable time the legitimacy and validity of travel or identity documents issued or purported to have been issued in its name and suspected of being used for trafficking in persons.

IV. Final provisions

Article 14

Saving clause

1. Nothing in this Protocol shall affect the rights, obligations and responsibilities of States and individuals under international law, including international humanitarian law and international human rights law and, in particular, where applicable, the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees and the principle of non-refoulement as contained therein.

2. The measures set forth in this Protocol shall be interpreted and applied in a way that is not discriminatory to persons on the ground that they are victims of trafficking in persons. The interpretation and application of those measures shall be consistent with internationally recognized principles of non-discrimination.

Article 15

Settlement of disputes

1. States Parties shall endeavour to settle disputes concerning the interpretation or application of this Protocol through negotiation.

2. Any dispute between two or more States Parties concerning the interpretation or application of this Protocol that cannot be settled through negotiation within a reasonable time shall, at the request of one of those States Parties, be submitted to arbitration. If, six months after the date of the request for arbitration, those States Parties are unable to agree on the organization of the arbitration, any one of those States Parties may refer the dispute to the International Court of Justice by request in accordance with the Statute of the Court.

3. Each State Party may, at the time of signature, ratification, acceptance or approval of or accession to this Protocol, declare that it does not consider itself bound by paragraph 2 of this article. The other States Parties shall not be bound by paragraph 2 of this article with respect to any State Party that has made such a reservation.

4. Any State Party that has made a reservation in accordance with paragraph 3 of this article may at any time withdraw that reservation by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 16

Signature, ratification, acceptance, approval and accession

1. This Protocol shall be open to all States for signature from 12 to 15 December 2000 in Palermo, Italy, and thereafter at United Nations Headquarters in New York until 12 December 2002.

2. This Protocol shall also be open for signature by regional economic integration organizations provided that at least one member State of such organization has signed this Protocol in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article.

3. This Protocol is subject to ratification, acceptance or approval. Instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. A regional economic integration organization may deposit its instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval if at least one of its member States has done likewise. In that instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval, such organization shall declare the extent of its competence with respect to the matters governed by this Protocol. Such organization shall also inform the depositary of any relevant modification in the extent of its competence.

4. This Protocol is open for accession by any State or any regional economic integration organization of which at least one member State is a Party to this Protocol. Instruments of accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. At the time of its accession, a regional economic integration organization shall declare the extent of its competence with respect to matters governed by this Protocol. Such organization shall also inform the depositary of any relevant modification in the extent of its competence.

Entry into force

1. This Protocol shall enter into force on the ninetieth day after the date of deposit of the fortieth instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession, except that it shall not enter into force before the entry into force of the Convention. For the purpose of this paragraph, any instrument deposited by a regional economic integration organization shall not be counted as additional to those deposited by member States of such organization.

2. For each State or regional economic integration organization ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to this Protocol after the deposit of the fortieth instrument of such action, this Protocol shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of deposit by such State or organization of the relevant instrument or on the date this Protocol enters into force pursuant to paragraph 1 of this article, whichever is the later.

Article 18

Amendment

1. After the expiry of five years from the entry into force of this Protocol, a State Party to the Protocol may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall thereupon communicate the proposed amendment to the States Parties and to the Conference of the Parties to the Convention for the purpose of considering and deciding on the proposal. The States Parties to this Protocol meeting at the Conference of the Parties shall make every effort to achieve consensus on each amendment. If all efforts at consensus have been exhausted and no agreement has been reached, the amendment shall, as a last resort, require for its adoption a two-thirds majority vote of the States Parties to this Protocol present and voting at the meeting of the Conference of the Parties.

2. Regional economic integration organizations, in matters within their competence, shall exercise their right to vote under this article with a number of votes equal to the number of their member States that are Parties to this Protocol. Such organizations shall not exercise their right to vote if their member States exercise theirs and vice versa.

3. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article is subject to ratification, acceptance or approval by States Parties.

4. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article shall enter into force in respect of a State Party ninety days after the date of the deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of an instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval of such amendment.

5. When an amendment enters into force, it shall be binding on those States Parties which have expressed their consent to be bound by it. Other States Parties shall still be bound by the provisions of this Protocol and any earlier amendments that they have ratified, accepted or approved.

Article 19

Denunciation

1. A State Party may denounce this Protocol by written notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Such denunciation shall become effective one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.

2. A regional economic integration organization shall cease to be a Party to this Protocol when all of its member States have denounced it.

Article 20

Depositary and languages

1. The Secretary-General of the United Nations is designated depositary of this Protocol.

2. The original of this Protocol, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned plenipotentiaries, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed this Protocol.

ANNEX III

Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime

Preamble

The States Parties to this Protocol,

Declaring that effective action to prevent and combat the smuggling of migrants by land, sea and air requires a comprehensive international approach, including co-operation, the exchange of information and other appropriate measures, including socio-economic measures, at the national, regional and international levels,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 54/212 of 22 December 1999, in which the Assembly urged Member States and the United Nations system to strengthen international cooperation in the area of international migration and development in order to address the root causes of migration, especially those related to poverty, and to maximize the benefits of international migration to those concerned, and encouraged, where relevant, interregional, regional and subregional mechanisms to continue to address the question of migration and development,

Convinced of the need to provide migrants with humane treatment and full protection of their rights,

Taking into account the fact that, despite work undertaken in other international forums, there is no universal instrument that addresses all aspects of smuggling of migrants and other related issues,

Concerned at the significant increase in the activities of organized criminal groups in smuggling of migrants and other related criminal activities set forth in this Protocol, which bring great harm to the States concerned,

Also concerned that the smuggling of migrants can endanger the lives or security of the migrants involved,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 53/111 of 9 December 1998, in which the Assembly decided to establish an open-ended intergovernmental ad hoc committee for the purpose of elaborating a comprehensive international convention against transnational organized crime and of discussing the elaboration of, inter alia, an international instrument addressing illegal trafficking in and transporting of migrants, including by sea,

Convinced that supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime with an international instrument against the smuggling of migrants by land, sea and air will be useful in preventing and combating that crime,

Have agreed as follows:

I. General provisions

Article 1

Relation with the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime

1. This Protocol supplements the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime. It shall be interpreted together with the Convention.

2. The provisions of the Convention shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to this Protocol unless otherwise provided herein.

3. The offences established in accordance with article 6 of this Protocol shall be regarded as offences established in accordance with the Convention.

Article 2

Statement of purpose

The purpose of this Protocol is to prevent and combat the smuggling of migrants, as well as to promote co-operation among States Parties to that end, while protecting the rights of smuggled migrants.

Article 3

Use of terms

For the purposes of this Protocol:

(a) "Smuggling of migrants" shall mean the procurement, in order to obtain, directly or indirectly, a financial or other material benefit, of the illegal entry of a person into a State Party of which the person is not a national or a permanent resident;

(b) "Illegal entry" shall mean crossing borders without complying with the necessary requirements for legal entry into the receiving State;

(c) "Fraudulent travel or identity document" shall mean any travel or identity document:

(i) That has been falsely made or altered in some material way by anyone other than a person or agency lawfully authorized to make or issue the travel or identity document on behalf of a State; or

(ii) That has been improperly issued or obtained through misrepresentation, corruption or duress or in any other unlawful manner; or

(iii) That is being used by a person other than the rightful holder;

(d) "Vessel" shall mean any type of water craft, including non-displacement craft and seaplanes, used or capable of being used as a means of transportation on water, except a warship, naval auxiliary or other vessel owned or operated by a Government and used, for the time being, only on government non-commercial service.

Article 4

Scope of application

This Protocol shall apply, except as otherwise stated herein, to the prevention, investigation and prosecution of the offences established in accordance with article 6 of this Protocol, where the offences are transnational in nature and involve an organized criminal group, as well as to the protection of the rights of persons who have been the object of such offences.

Article 5

Criminal liability of migrants

Migrants shall not become liable to criminal prosecution under this Protocol for the fact of having been the object of conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol.

Article 6

Criminalization

1. Each State Party shall adopt such legislative and other measures as may be necessary to establish as criminal offences, when committed intentionally and in order to obtain, directly or indirectly, a financial or other material benefit:

- (a) The smuggling of migrants;
- (b) When committed for the purpose of enabling the smuggling of migrants:
  - (i) Producing a fraudulent travel or identity document;
  - (ii) Procuring, providing or possessing such a document;
- (c) Enabling a person who is not a national or a permanent resident to remain in the State concerned without complying with the necessary requirements for legally remaining in the State by the means mentioned in subparagraph (b) of this paragraph or any other illegal means.

2. Each State Party shall also adopt such legislative and other measures as may be necessary to establish as criminal offences:

- (a) Subject to the basic concepts of its legal system, attempting to commit an offence established in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article;
- (b) Participating as an accomplice in an offence established in accordance with paragraph 1 (a), (b) (i) or (c) of this article and, subject to the basic concepts of its legal system, participating as an accomplice in an offence established in accordance with paragraph 1 (b) (ii) of this article;
- (c) Organizing or directing other persons to commit an offence established in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article.

3. Each State Party shall adopt such legislative and other measures as may be necessary to establish as aggravating circumstances to the offences established in accordance with paragraph 1 (a), (b) (i) and (c) of this article and, subject to the basic concepts of its legal system, to the offences established in accordance with paragraph 2 (b) and (c) of this article, circumstances:

- (a) That endanger, or are likely to endanger, the lives or safety of the migrants concerned; or
- (b) That entail inhuman or degrading treatment, including for exploitation, of such migrants.

4. Nothing in this Protocol shall prevent a State Party from taking measures against a person whose conduct constitutes an offence under its domestic law.

II. Smuggling of migrants by sea

Article 7 Cooperation

States Parties shall cooperate to the fullest extent possible to prevent and suppress the smuggling of migrants by sea, in accordance with the international law of the sea.

Article 8 Measures against the smuggling of migrants by sea

1. A State Party that has reasonable grounds to suspect that a vessel that is flying its flag or claiming its registry, that is without nationality or that, though flying a foreign flag or refusing to show a flag, is in reality of the nationality of the State Party concerned is engaged in the smuggling of migrants by sea may request the assistance of other States Parties in suppressing the use of the vessel for that purpose. The States Parties so requested shall render such assistance to the extent possible within their means.

2. A State Party that has reasonable grounds to suspect that a vessel exercising freedom of navigation in accordance with international law and flying the flag or displaying the marks of registry of another State Party is engaged in the smuggling of migrants by sea may so notify the flag State, request confirmation of registry and, if confirmed, request authorization from the flag State to take appropriate measures with regard to that vessel. The flag State may authorize the requesting State, inter alia:

- (a) To board the vessel;
  - (b) To search the vessel; and
  - (c) If evidence is found that the vessel is engaged in the smuggling of migrants by sea, to take appropriate measures with respect to the vessel and persons and cargo on board, as authorized by the flag State.
3. A State Party that has taken any measure in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article shall promptly inform the flag State concerned of the results of that measure.

4. A State Party shall respond expeditiously to a request from another State Party to determine whether a vessel that is claiming its registry or flying its flag is entitled to do so and to a request for authorization made in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article.

5. A flag State may, consistent with article 7 of this Protocol, subject its authorization to conditions to be agreed by it and the requesting State, including conditions relating to responsibility and the extent of effective measures to be taken. A State Party shall take no additional measures without the express authorization of the flag State, except those necessary to relieve imminent danger to the lives of persons or those which derive from relevant bilateral or multilateral agreements.

6. Each State Party shall designate an authority or, where necessary, authorities to receive and respond to requests for assistance, for confirmation of registry or of the right of a vessel to fly its flag and for authorization to take appropriate measures. Such designation shall be notified through the Secretary-General to all other States Parties within one month of the designation.

7. A State Party that has reasonable grounds to suspect that a vessel is engaged in the smuggling of migrants by sea and is without nationality or may be assimilated to a vessel without nationality may board and search the vessel. If evidence confirming the suspicion is found, that State Party shall take appropriate measures in accordance with relevant domestic and international law.

Article 9 Safeguard clauses

1. Where a State Party takes measures against a vessel in accordance with article 8 of this Protocol, it shall:

- (a) Ensure the safety and humane treatment of the persons on board;
- (b) Take due account of the need not to endanger the security of the vessel or its cargo;
- (c) Take due account of the need not to prejudice the commercial or legal interests of the flag State or any other interested State;
- (d) Ensure, within available means, that any measure taken with regard to the vessel is environmentally sound.

2. Where the grounds for measures taken pursuant to article 8 of this Protocol prove to be unfounded, the vessel shall be compensated for any loss or damage that may have been sustained, provided that the vessel has not committed any act justifying the measures taken.

3. Any measure taken, adopted or implemented in accordance with this chapter shall take due account of the need not to interfere with or to affect:

(a) The rights and obligations and the exercise of jurisdiction of coastal States in accordance with the international law of the sea; or

(b) The authority of the flag State to exercise jurisdiction and control in administrative, technical and social matters involving the vessel.

4. Any measure taken at sea pursuant to this chapter shall be carried out only by warships or military aircraft, or by other ships or aircraft clearly marked and identifiable as being on government service and authorized to that effect.

III. Prevention, cooperation and other measures

Article 10 Information

1. Without prejudice to articles 27 and 28 of the Convention, States Parties, in particular those with common borders or located on routes along which migrants are smuggled, shall, for the purpose of achieving the objectives of this Protocol, exchange among themselves, consistent with their respective domestic legal and administrative systems, relevant information on matters such as:

(a) Embarkation and destination points, as well as routes, carriers and means of transportation, known to be or suspected of being used by an organized criminal group engaged in conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol;

(b) The identity and methods of organizations or organized criminal groups known to be or suspected of being engaged in conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol;

(c) The authenticity and proper form of travel documents issued by a State Party and the theft or related misuse of blank travel or identity documents;

(d) Means and methods of concealment and transportation of persons, the unlawful alteration, reproduction or acquisition or other misuse of travel or identity documents used in conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol and ways of detecting them;

(e) Legislative experiences and practices and measures to prevent and combat the conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol; and

(f) Scientific and technological information useful to law enforcement, so as to enhance each other's ability to prevent, detect and investigate the conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol and to prosecute those involved.

2. A State Party that receives information shall comply with any request by the State Party that transmitted the information that places restrictions on its use.

Article 11 Border measures

1. Without prejudice to international commitments in relation to the free movement of people, States Parties shall strengthen, to the extent possible, such border controls as may be necessary to prevent and detect the smuggling of migrants.

2. Each State Party shall adopt legislative or other appropriate measures to prevent, to the extent possible, means of transport operated by commercial carriers from being used in the commission of the offence established in accordance with article 6, paragraph 1 (a), of this Protocol.

3. Where appropriate, and without prejudice to applicable international conventions, such measures shall include establishing the obligation of commercial carriers, including any transportation company or the owner or operator of any means of transport, to ascertain that all passengers are in possession of the travel documents required for entry into the receiving State.

4. Each State Party shall take the necessary measures, in accordance with its domestic law, to provide for sanctions in cases of violation of the obligation set forth in paragraph 3 of this article.

5. Each State Party shall consider taking measures that permit, in accordance with its domestic law, the denial of entry or revocation of visas of persons implicated in the commission of offences established in accordance with this Protocol.

6. Without prejudice to article 27 of the Convention, States Parties shall consider strengthening cooperation among border control agencies by, inter alia, establishing and maintaining direct channels of communication.

Article 12 Security and control of documents

Each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary, within available means:

(a) To ensure that travel or identity documents issued by it are of such quality that they cannot easily be misused and cannot readily be falsified or unlawfully altered, replicated or issued; and

(b) To ensure the integrity and security of travel or identity documents issued by or on behalf of the State Party and to prevent their unlawful creation, issuance and use.

Article 13 Legitimacy and validity of documents

At the request of another State Party, a State Party shall, in accordance with its domestic law, verify within a reasonable time the legitimacy and validity of travel or identity documents issued or purported to have been issued in its name and suspected of being used for purposes of conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol.

Article 14 Training and technical cooperation

1. States Parties shall provide or strengthen specialized training for immigration and other relevant officials in preventing the conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol and in the humane treatment of migrants who have been the object of such conduct, while respecting their rights as set forth in this Protocol.

2. States Parties shall cooperate with each other and with competent international organizations, non-governmental organizations, other relevant organizations and other elements of civil society as appropriate to ensure that there is adequate personnel training in their territories to prevent, combat and eradicate the conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol and to protect the rights of migrants who have been the object of such conduct. Such training shall include:

(a) Improving the security and quality of travel documents;

(b) Recognizing and detecting fraudulent travel or identity documents;

(c) Gathering criminal intelligence, relating in particular to the identification of organized criminal groups known to be or suspected of being engaged in conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol, the methods used to transport smuggled migrants, the misuse of travel or identity documents for purposes of conduct set forth in article 6 and the means of concealment used in the smuggling of migrants;

(d) Improving procedures for detecting smuggled persons at conventional and non-conventional points of entry and exit; and

(e) The humane treatment of migrants and the protection of their rights as set forth in this Protocol.

3. States Parties with relevant expertise shall consider providing technical assistance to States that are frequently countries of origin or transit for persons who have been the object of conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol. States Parties shall make every effort to provide the necessary resources, such as vehicles, computer systems and document readers, to combat the conduct set forth in article 6.

Article 15

Other prevention measures

1. Each State Party shall take measures to ensure that it provides or strengthens information programmes to increase public awareness of the fact that the conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol is a criminal activity frequently perpetrated by organized criminal groups for profit and that it poses serious risks to the migrants concerned.

2. In accordance with article 31 of the Convention, States Parties shall cooperate in the field of public information for the purpose of preventing potential migrants from falling victim to organized criminal groups.

3. Each State Party shall promote or strengthen, as appropriate, development programmes and cooperation at the national, regional and international levels, taking into account the socio-economic realities of migration and paying special attention to economically and socially depressed areas, in order to combat the root socio-economic causes of the smuggling of migrants, such as poverty and underdevelopment.

Article 16

Protection and assistance measures

1. In implementing this Protocol, each State Party shall take, consistent with its obligations under international law, all appropriate measures, including legislation if necessary, to preserve and protect the rights of persons who have been the object of conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol as accorded under applicable international law, in particular the right to life and the right not to be subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

2. Each State Party shall take appropriate measures to afford migrants appropriate protection against violence that may be inflicted upon them, whether by individuals or groups, by reason of being the object of conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol.

3. Each State Party shall afford appropriate assistance to migrants whose lives or safety are endangered by reason of being the object of conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol.

4. In applying the provisions of this article, States Parties shall take into account the special needs of women and children.

5. In the case of the detention of a person who has been the object of conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol, each State Party shall comply with its obligations under the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, where applicable, including that of informing the person concerned without delay about the provisions concerning notification to and communication with consular officers.

Article 17

Agreements and arrangements

States Parties shall consider the conclusion of bilateral or regional agreements or operational arrangements or understandings aimed at:

(a) Establishing the most appropriate and effective measures to prevent and combat the conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol; or

(b) Enhancing the provisions of this Protocol among themselves.

Article 18

Return of smuggled migrants

1. Each State Party agrees to facilitate and accept, without undue or unreasonable delay, the return of a person who has been the object of conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol and who is its national or who has the right of permanent residence in its territory at the time of return.

2. Each State Party shall consider the possibility of facilitating and accepting the return of a person who has been the object of conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol and who had the right of permanent residence in its territory at the time of entry into the receiving State in accordance with its domestic law.

3. At the request of the receiving State Party, a requested State Party shall, without undue or unreasonable delay, verify whether a person who has been the object of conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol is its national or has the right of permanent residence in its territory.

4. In order to facilitate the return of a person who has been the object of conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol and is without proper documentation, the State Party of which that person is a national or in which he or she has the right of permanent residence shall agree to issue, at the request of the receiving State Party, such travel documents or other authorization as may be necessary to enable the person to travel to and re-enter its territory.

5. Each State Party involved with the return of a person who has been the object of conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol shall take all appropriate measures to carry out the return in an orderly manner and with due regard for the safety and dignity of the person.

6. States Parties may cooperate with relevant international organizations in the implementation of this article.

7. This article shall be without prejudice to any right afforded to persons who have been the object of conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol by any domestic law of the receiving State Party.

8. This article shall not affect the obligations entered into under any other applicable treaty, bilateral or multilateral, or any other applicable operational agreement or arrangement that governs, in whole or in part, the return of persons who have been the object of conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol.

IV. Final provisions

Article 19

Saving clause

1. Nothing in this Protocol shall affect the other rights, obligations and responsibilities of States and individuals under international law, including international humanitarian law and international human rights law and, in particular, where applicable, the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees and the principle of non-refoulement as contained therein.

2. The measures set forth in this Protocol shall be interpreted and applied in a way that is not discriminatory to persons on the ground that they are the object of conduct set forth in article 6 of this Protocol. The interpretation and application of those measures shall be consistent with internationally recognized principles of non-discrimination.

Article 20

Settlement of disputes

1. States Parties shall endeavour to settle disputes concerning the interpretation or application of this Protocol through negotiation.

2. Any dispute between two or more States Parties concerning the interpretation or application of this Protocol that cannot be settled through negotiation within a reasonable time shall, at the request of one of those States Parties, be submitted to arbitration. If, six months after the date of the request for arbitration, those States Parties are unable to agree on the organization of the arbitration, any one of those States Parties may refer the dispute to the International Court of Justice by request in accordance with the Statute of the Court.

3. Each State Party may, at the time of signature, ratification, acceptance or approval of or accession to this Protocol, declare that it does not consider itself bound by paragraph 2 of this article. The other States Parties shall not be bound by paragraph 2 of this article with respect to any State Party that has made such a reservation.

4. Any State Party that has made a reservation in accordance with paragraph 3 of this article may at any time withdraw that reservation by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 21

Signature, ratification, acceptance, approval and accession

1. This Protocol shall be open to all States for signature from 12 to 15 December 2000 in Palermo, Italy, and thereafter at United Nations Headquarters in New York until 12 December 2002.

2. This Protocol shall also be open for signature by regional economic integration organizations provided that at least one member State of such organization has signed this Protocol in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article.

3. This Protocol is subject to ratification, acceptance or approval. Instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. A regional economic integration organization may deposit its instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval if at least one of its member States has done likewise. In that instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval, such organization shall declare the extent of its competence with respect to the matters governed by this Protocol. Such organization shall also inform the depositary of any relevant modification in the extent of its competence.

4. This Protocol is open for accession by any State or any regional economic integration organization of which at least one member State is a Party to this Protocol. Instruments of accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. At the time of its accession, a regional economic integration organization shall declare the extent of its competence with respect to matters governed by this Protocol. Such organization shall also inform the depositary of any relevant modification in the extent of its competence.

Entry into force

1. This Protocol shall enter into force on the ninetieth day after the date of deposit of the fortieth instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession, except that it shall not enter into force before the entry into force of the Convention. For the purpose of this paragraph, any instrument deposited by a regional economic integration organization shall not be counted as additional to those deposited by member States of such organization.

2. For each State or regional economic integration organization ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to this Protocol after the deposit of the fortieth instrument of such action, this Protocol shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of deposit by such State or organization of the relevant instrument or on the date this Protocol enters into force pursuant to paragraph 1 of this article, whichever is the later.

Amendment

1. After the expiry of five years from the entry into force of this Protocol, a State Party to the Protocol may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall thereupon communicate the proposed amendment to the States Parties and to the Conference of the Parties to the Convention for the purpose of considering and deciding on the proposal. The States Parties to this Protocol meeting at the Conference of the Parties shall make every effort to achieve consensus on each amendment. If all efforts at consensus have been exhausted and no agreement has been reached, the amendment shall, as a last resort, require for its adoption a two-thirds majority vote of the States Parties to this Protocol present and voting at the meeting of the Conference of the Parties.

2. Regional economic integration organizations, in matters within their competence, shall exercise their right to vote under this article with a number of votes equal to the number of their member States that are Parties to this Protocol. Such organizations shall not exercise their right to vote if their member States exercise theirs and vice versa.

3. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article is subject to ratification, acceptance or approval by States Parties.

4. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article shall enter into force in respect of a State Party ninety days after the date of the deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of an instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval of such amendment.

5. When an amendment enters into force, it shall be binding on those States Parties which have expressed their consent to be bound by it. Other States Parties shall still be bound by the provisions of this Protocol and any earlier amendments that they have ratified, accepted or approved.

Article 24

Denunciation

1. A State Party may denounce this Protocol by written notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Such denunciation shall become effective one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.

2. A regional economic integration organization shall cease to be a Party to this Protocol when all of its member States have denounced it.

Article 25

Depositary and languages

1. The Secretary-General of the United Nations is designated depositary of this Protocol.

2. The original of this Protocol, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned plenipotentiaries, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed this Protocol.

Strategies for crime prevention

Corruption

In January [A/AC.254/25], the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime (see p. 1048), in response to General Assembly resolution 54/128 [YUN 1999, p. 1062], discussed the desirability of an international legal instrument against corruption. The Committee was of the view that the legal instrument was desirable and that it should be independent of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime (see p. 1050).

The Committee transmitted its views to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, which drafted a resolution for the Assembly's adoption (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/2000/30], adopted resolution 2000/13 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

An effective international legal instrument against corruption

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 55/61 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/593], adopted resolution 55/61 without vote [agenda item 105].

An effective international legal instrument against corruption

The General Assembly,

Noting the corrosive effect that corruption has on democracy, development, the rule of law and economic activity,

Recalling its resolutions 53/111 of 9 December 1998, by which it established the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, and 54/126 of 17 December 1999, in which it requested the Ad Hoc Committee to complete its work in 2000,

Recalling also its resolution 54/128 of 17 December 1999, in which it requested the Ad Hoc Committee to explore the desirability of an international instrument against corruption, either ancillary to or independent of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime,

Taking note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on its seventh session, during which it considered the implementation of resolution 54/128,

Recalling the debates and especially the statements made at the high-level segment and the results of the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, in particular the Vienna Declaration on Crime and Justice: Meeting the Challenges of the Twenty-first Century,

Bearing in mind the need to prepare a broad instrument that takes into account existing international conventions against corruption,

1. Recognizes that an effective international legal instrument against corruption, independent of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, is desirable;

2. Decides to begin the elaboration of such an instrument in Vienna at the headquarters of the United Nations Centre for International Crime Prevention of the United Nations Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report analysing all relevant international legal instruments, other documents and recommendations addressing corruption, considering, inter alia, obligations as regards criminalization of all forms of corruption and international cooperation, regulatory aspects of corruption and the relationship between corruption and money-laundering, and to submit it to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at an inter-sessional meeting in order to allow Member States to provide comments to the Commission prior to its tenth session;

4. Requests the Commission, at its tenth session, to review and assess the report of the Secretary-General and, on that basis, to provide recommendations and guidance as to future work on the development of a legal instrument against corruption;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to convene, upon completion of the negotiation of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the related protocols, an intergovernmental open-ended expert group to examine and prepare, on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General and of the recommendations of the Commission at its tenth session, draft terms of reference for the negotiation of the future legal instrument against corruption;

6. Requests the intergovernmental open-ended expert group to submit the draft terms of reference for the negotiation of the future legal instrument, through the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice and the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session for adoption;

7. Decides to establish an ad hoc committee for the negotiation of such an instrument to start its work in Vienna as soon as the draft terms of reference for such negotiation are adopted;

8. Invites donor countries to assist the United Nations in ensuring the effective participation of developing countries, in particular least developed countries, in the work of the intergovernmental open-ended expert group and the ad hoc committee, including travel and local expenses;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Commission and the intergovernmental open-ended expert group with the required facilities and resources to support their work.

Corrupt practices and illegal transfer of funds

Pursuant to General Assembly resolutions 53/176 [YUN 1998, p. 1046] and 54/205 [YUN 1999, p. 1063], the Secretary-General, in September [A/55/405], submitted a report prepared by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, describing measures taken by 47 countries, as well as international organizations, groups of countries and NGOs, to give effect to Assembly resolutions aimed at preventing corrupt practices in international commercial transactions and the illegal transfer of funds.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/580], the General Assembly adopted resolution 55/188 without vote [agenda item 93].

Preventing and combating corrupt practices and illegal transfer of funds and repatriation of such funds to the countries of origin

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 53/176 of 15 December 1998 on action against corruption and bribery in international commercial transactions, 54/205 of 22 December 1999 on the prevention of corrupt practices and illegal transfer of funds and 55/61 of 4 December 2000 on an effective international legal instrument against corruption,

Concerned about the seriousness of problems posed by corruption, which may endanger the stability and security of societies, undermine the values of democracy and morality and jeopardize social, economic and political development,

Recognizing the importance of international co-operation and existing international and national laws for combating corruption in international commercial transactions,

Noting with appreciation the recent adoption of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and its two protocols,

Recognizing the important role of the business community, including, in particular, the private sector, in enhancing the dynamic process of the development of the agricultural, industrial and service sectors and the need to create an enabling environment at the national and international levels for business in order to facilitate economic growth and sustainable development of developing countries, most especially African countries, taking into account the development priorities of Governments,

Mindful of the very important role that the private sector can play in fostering economic growth and development and of the active involvement of the United Nations system in facilitating the constructive participation and orderly interaction of the private sector in the development process by embracing universal principles and norms, such as honesty, transparency and accountability,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the prevention of corrupt practices and illegal transfer of funds,

1. Reiterates its condemnation of corruption, bribery, money-laundering and the illegal transfer of funds;

2. Calls for further international and national measures to combat corrupt practices and bribery in international transactions and for international co-operation in support of those measures;

3. Also calls for, while recognizing the importance of national measures, increased international cooperation, inter alia, through the United Nations system, in regard to devising ways and means of preventing and addressing illegal transfers, as well as repatriating illegally transferred funds to the countries of origin, and calls upon all countries and entities concerned to co-operate in this regard;

4. Requests the international community to support the efforts of all countries to strengthen institutional capacity and regulatory frameworks for preventing corruption, bribery, money-laundering and illegal transfer of funds, as well as for the repatriation of those funds to the countries of origin;

5. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General, as contained in resolution 55/61, to convene an intergovernmental open-ended expert group to examine and prepare, on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General and of recommendations of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its tenth session, draft terms of reference for the negotiation of the future legal instrument against corruption, and invites the expert group on the same basis to examine the question of illegally transferred funds and the repatriation of such funds to the countries of origin;

6. Decides to keep this matter under review, and, in this regard, requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with Member States and relevant bodies of the United Nations system, to prepare, without duplicating material contained in the report requested by the Assembly in resolution 55/61, an analytical report containing information on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution and, bearing in mind resolution 54/205, concrete recommendations, inter alia, with regard to the repatriation of illegally transferred funds to the countries of origin, and to submit the report to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session under the item entitled "Sectoral policy questions: business and development".

Criminal misuse of information technologies

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/55/593], adopted resolution 55/63 without vote [agenda item 105].

Combating the criminal misuse of information technologies

The General Assembly,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in which Member States resolved to ensure that the benefits of new technologies, especially information and communication technologies, in conformity with recommendations contained in the Ministerial Declaration of the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2000 of the Economic and Social Council, are available to all,

Recalling also its resolution 45/121 of 14 December 1990, in which it endorsed the recommendations of the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and noting in particular the resolution on computer-related crimes, in which the Eighth Congress called upon States to intensify their efforts to combat computer-related abuses more effectively,

Emphasizing the contributions that the United Nations, in particular the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, can make in the promotion of more efficient and effective law enforcement and administration of justice and of the highest standards of fairness and human dignity,

Recognizing that the free flow of information can promote economic and social development, education and democratic governance,

Noting significant advancements in the development and application of information technologies and means of telecommunication,

Expressing concern that technological advancements have created new possibilities for criminal activity, in particular the criminal misuse of information technologies,

Noting that reliance on information technologies, while it may vary from State to State, has resulted in a substantial increase in global cooperation and coordination, with the result that the criminal misuse of information technologies may have a grave impact on all States,

Recognizing that gaps in the access to and use of information technologies by States can diminish the effectiveness of international cooperation in combating the criminal misuse of information technologies, and noting the need to facilitate the transfer of information technologies, in particular to developing countries,

Noting the necessity of preventing the criminal misuse of information technologies,

Recognizing the need for cooperation between States and private industry in combating the criminal misuse of information technologies,

Underlining the need for enhanced coordination and cooperation among States in combating the criminal misuse of information technologies, and, in this context, stressing the role that can be played by both the United Nations and regional organizations,

Welcoming the work of the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Noting the work of the Committee of Experts on Crime in Cyberspace of the Council of Europe on a draft convention on cybercrime, the principles agreed to by the Ministers of Justice and the Interior of the Group of Eight in Washington, D.C., on 10 December 1997, which were endorsed by the heads of State of the Group of Eight in Birmingham, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, on 17 May 1998, the work of the Conference of the Group of Eight on a dialogue between government and industry on safety and confidence in cyberspace, held in Paris from 15 to 17 May 2000, and the recommendations approved on 3 March 2000 by the Third Meeting of Ministers of Justice or of Ministers or Attorneys General of the Americas, convened in San José, Costa Rica, from 1 to 3 March 2000 within the framework of the Organization of American States,

1. Notes with appreciation the efforts of the above-mentioned bodies to prevent the criminal misuse of information technologies, and also notes the value of, inter alia, the following measures to combat such misuse:

(a) States should ensure that their laws and practice eliminate safe havens for those who criminally misuse information technologies;

(b) Law enforcement cooperation in the investigation and prosecution of international cases of criminal misuse of information technologies should be coordinated among all concerned States;

(c) Information should be exchanged between States regarding the problems that they face in combating the criminal misuse of information technologies;

(d) Law enforcement personnel should be trained and equipped to address the criminal misuse of information technologies;

(e) Legal systems should protect the confidentiality, integrity and availability of data and computer systems from unauthorized impairment and ensure that criminal abuse is penalized;

(f) Legal systems should permit the preservation of and quick access to electronic data pertaining to particular criminal investigations;

(g) Mutual assistance regimes should ensure the timely investigation of the criminal misuse of information technologies and the timely gathering and exchange of evidence in such cases;

(h) The general public should be made aware of the need to prevent and combat the criminal misuse of information technologies;

(i) To the extent practicable, information technologies should be designed to help to prevent and detect criminal misuse, trace criminals and collect evidence;

(j) The fight against the criminal misuse of information technologies requires the development of solutions taking into account both the protection of individual freedoms and privacy and the preservation of the capacity of Governments to fight such criminal misuse;

2. Invites States to take into account the above-mentioned measures in their efforts to combat the criminal misuse of information technologies;

3. Decides to maintain the question of the criminal misuse of information technologies on the agenda of its fifty-sixth session, as part of the item entitled "Crime prevention and criminal justice".

UN standards and norms

Juvenile justice reform

In an April report on juvenile justice reform [E/CN.15/2000/5], prepared pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolutions 1997/30 [YUN 1997, p. 1158] and 1998/21 [YUN 1998, p. 1047], the Secretary-General analysed the roles, functions and activities of partners, including UN entities, within the parameters of relevant UN instruments and policies, particularly the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 561]. The report contained information provided by the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the Committee on the Rights of the Child and WHO.

Noting that the standards originating in the United Nations were incorporated into the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the report described the activities of the Committee on the Rights of the Child (see p. 614), the Convention's monitoring body, and reviewed UN action with regard to standard-setting, monitoring and implementation of instruments and technical advisory services.

Non-binding instruments establishing and governing juvenile justice were described, including the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (the Beijing Rules), adopted by the Assembly in resolution 40/33 [YUN 1985, p. 746]; the United Nations Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency (the Riyadh Guidelines), adopted by the Assembly in resolution 45/112 [YUN 1990, p. 738]; and the United Nations Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of Their Liberty, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 45/113 [ibid., p. 743].

Restorative justice

In April [A/CONF.187/15], following a discussion on restorative justice, the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders concluded that restorative justice was desirable, as was quality control and evaluation of relevant initiatives. It was suggested that the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice should be invited to formulate basic principles and standards to guide States in the fair and effective use of mediation and other processes of restorative justice.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/2000/30], adopted resolution 2000/14 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Basic principles on the use of restorative justice programmes in criminal matters

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1999/26 of 28 July 1999, entitled "Development and implementation of mediation and restorative justice measures in criminal justice", in which the Council requested the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to consider the desirability of formulating United Nations standards in the field of mediation and restorative justice,

Noting the discussions on restorative justice during the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in relation to the agenda item entitled "Offenders and victims: accountability and fairness in the justice process",

Recognizing that the use of restorative justice measures does not prejudice the right of States to prosecute alleged offenders,

1. Takes note of the preliminary draft elements of a declaration of basic principles on the use of restorative justice programmes in criminal matters, annexed to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to seek comments from Member States and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as the institutes of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, on the desirability and the means of establishing common principles on the use of restorative justice programmes in criminal matters, including the advisability of developing an instrument, such as the preliminary draft elements of a declaration annexed to the present resolution, and on the contents of this draft;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to convene, subject to the availability of voluntary contributions, a meeting of experts selected on the basis of equitable geographical representation to review the comments received and to examine proposals for further action in relation to restorative justice, including mediation, as well as the possibility of developing an instrument such as a declaration of basic principles on the use of restorative justice programmes in criminal matters, taking into account the preliminary draft elements of a declaration annexed to the present resolution;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its eleventh session on the comments received and the results of the meeting of experts;

5. Invites the Commission to take action at its eleventh session on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General;

6. Calls upon Member States, building on the results of the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, to continue to exchange information on experiences in the implementation and evaluation of programmes for restorative justice, including mediation.

ANNEX

Preliminary draft elements of a declaration of basic principles on the use of restorative justice programmes in criminal matters

I. Definitions

1. "Restorative justice programme" means any programme that uses restorative processes or aims to achieve restorative outcomes.

2. "Restorative outcome" means an agreement reached as the result of a restorative process. Examples of restorative outcomes include restitution, community service and any other programme or response designed to achieve reparation for the victim and community and reintegration of the victim and/or the offender.

3. "Restorative process" means any process in which the victim, the offender and/or any other individuals or community members affected by a crime participate together actively in the resolution of matters arising from the crime, often with the help of a fair and impartial third party. Examples of restorative processes include mediation, conferencing and sentencing circles.

4. "Parties" means the victim, the offender and any other individuals or community members affected by a crime who may be involved in a restorative justice programme.

5. "Facilitator" means a fair and impartial third party whose role is to facilitate the participation of victims and offenders in an encounter programme.

II. Use of restorative justice programmes

6. Restorative justice programmes should be generally available at all stages of the criminal justice process.

7. Restorative processes should be used only with the free and voluntary consent of the parties. The parties should be able to withdraw such consent at any time during the process. Agreements should be arrived at voluntarily by the parties and should contain only reasonable and proportionate obligations.

8. All parties should normally acknowledge the basic facts of a case as a basis for participation in a restorative process. Participation should not be used as evidence of admission of guilt in subsequent legal proceedings.

9. Obvious disparities with respect to factors such as power imbalances and the age, maturity or intellectual capacity of the parties should be taken into consideration in referring a case to and in conducting a restorative process. Similarly, obvious threats to the safety of any of the parties should also be considered in referring a case to and in conducting a restorative process. The views of the parties themselves about the suitability of restorative processes or outcomes should be given great deference in this consideration.

10. Where restorative processes and/or outcomes are not possible, criminal justice officials should do all they can to encourage the offender to take responsibility vis-à-vis the victim and affected communities, and reintegration of the victim and/or offender into the community.

III. Operation of restorative justice programmes

11. Guidelines and standards should be established, with legislative authority when necessary, that govern the use of restorative justice programmes. Such guidelines and standards should address:

- (a) The conditions for the referral of cases to restorative justice programmes;
- (b) The handling of cases following a restorative process;
- (c) The qualifications, training and assessment of facilitators;
- (d) The administration of restorative justice programmes;
- (e) Standards of competence and ethical rules governing the operation of restorative justice programmes.

12. Fundamental procedural safeguards should be applied to restorative justice programmes and in particular to restorative processes:

- (a) The parties should have the right to legal advice before and after the restorative process and, where necessary, to translation and/or interpretation. Minors should, in addition, have the right to parental assistance;
- (b) Before agreeing to participate in restorative processes, the parties should be fully informed of their rights, the nature of the process and the possible consequences of their decision;
- (c) Neither the victim nor the offender should be induced by unfair means to participate in restorative processes or outcomes.

13. Discussions in restorative processes should be confidential and should not be disclosed subsequently, except with the agreement of the parties.

14. Judicial discharges based on agreements arising out of restorative justice programmes should have the same status as judicial decisions or judgements and should preclude prosecution in respect of the same facts (non bis in idem).

15. Where no agreement can be made between the parties, the case should be referred back to the criminal justice authorities and a decision as to how to proceed should be taken without delay. Lack of agreement may not be used as justification for a more severe sentence in subsequent criminal justice proceedings.

16. Failure to implement an agreement made in the course of a restorative process should be referred back to the restorative programme or to the criminal justice authorities and a decision as to how to proceed should be taken without delay. Failure to implement the agreement may not be used as justification for a more severe sentence in subsequent criminal justice proceedings.

IV. Facilitators

17. Facilitators should be recruited from all sections of society and should generally possess good understanding of local cultures and communities. They should be able to demonstrate sound judgement and the interpersonal skills necessary for conducting restorative processes.

18. Facilitators should perform their duties in an impartial manner, based on the facts of the case and on the needs and wishes of the parties. They should always respect the dignity of the parties and ensure that the parties act with respect towards each other.

19. Facilitators should be responsible for providing a safe and appropriate environment for the restorative process. They should be sensitive to any vulnerability of the parties.

20. Facilitators should receive initial training before taking up facilitation duties and should also receive in-service training. The training should aim at providing skills in conflict resolution, taking into account the particular needs of victims and offenders, at providing basic knowledge of the criminal justice system and at providing a thorough knowledge of the operation of the restorative programme in which they will do their work.

V. Continuing development of restorative justice programmes

21. There should be regular consultation between criminal justice authorities and administrators of restorative justice programmes to develop a common understanding of restorative processes and outcomes, to increase the extent to which restorative programmes are used and to explore ways in which restorative approaches might be incorporated into criminal justice practices.

22. Member States should promote research on and evaluation of restorative justice programmes to assess the extent to which they result in restorative outcomes, serve as an alternative to the criminal justice process and provide positive outcomes for all parties.

23. Restorative justice processes may need to undergo change in concrete form over time. Member States should therefore encourage regular, rigorous evaluation and modification of such programmes in the light of the above definitions.

International fund

In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/21 [YUN 1998, p. 1047], a working group of experts on the possible establishment of a fund for victims of crimes and abuse of power was convened in January.

The group endorsed the creation of such an international fund and suggested that it be used to support the development and/or strengthening of victim support services through technical assistance, develop measures for special victim types or groups, particularly with regard to transnational crime, and design international awareness-raising campaigns promoting victims' rights and effective crime prevention.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July [meeting 43], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/2000/30], adopted resolution 2000/15 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Implementation of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the importance of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 40/34 of 29 November 1985, and the adoption of the Declaration as an important landmark in international efforts to improve the treatment of victims,

Bearing in mind that the General Assembly, in its resolution 40/34, called upon Member States to take the necessary steps to give effect to the provisions of the Declaration, and urged United Nations entities, other intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to cooperate in the implementation of those provisions,

Recalling its resolution 1998/21 of 28 July 1998, in which it requested the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States regarding the desirability and feasibility of establishing an international fund for victims of crime and abuse of power and to convene a working group on this matter, consisting of Member States that expressed an interest in such a fund,

Recalling also the plan of action for the implementation of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, annexed to its resolution 1998/21,

Deeply concerned about the continuing victimization by crime, especially organized crime, violence, terrorism and abuse of power, in particular of vulnerable individuals such as women and children, which exacts a vast human cost and impairs the quality of life in many parts of the world,

1. Notes with appreciation the work done by the working group of experts that met in January 2000 pursuant to resolution 1998/21;

2. Takes note of the finding of the working group of experts that there is a need to provide adequate assistance to initiatives in the area of victim care;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on possible ways and means of providing adequate assistance to initiatives in the area of victim care, taking into account, inter alia, the existing mechanisms providing such assistance and the report of the working group of experts, and to submit it to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its tenth session;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General, Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to take the necessary steps to give effect to the provisions of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power in cooperation with United Nations entities and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

5. Invites the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to consider at its tenth session the report of the working group of experts and the report of the Secretary-General.

tute for Training and Research (UNITAR) [A/55/14], covering the period from 1 July 1998 to 30 June 2000, presented the accomplishments achieved during the Institute's restructuring period, as well as its current situation and future challenges. The report described the activities of UNITAR's training programme in multilateral diplomacy and international affairs management, and training and capacity-building programmes in social and economic development. Annexed to the report was a chronological list of training activities during the reporting period, statistical data on participation, a list of materials published during the reporting period and financial data.

Report of Secretary-General. A September report of the Secretary-General [A/55/510], prepared in accordance with General Assembly resolution 54/229 [YUN 1999, p. 1069], noted that UNITAR programmes had remained steady and sustained. Some 120 programmes, seminars and workshops had been organized throughout the world each year since 1996. Project delivery on a limited number of well-identified areas in which UNITAR had expertise and sound track records, introduced as part of the restructuring process, had continued. The network of partnership with national and regional academic and specialized centres had been expanded, particularly in Africa. Research on the design and development of new pedagogic methodologies was continued and efforts were made to develop distance learning, including e-training.

The Secretary-General said that UNITAR's financial situation had improved, but remained fragile. The funding of Special Purpose Grants was satisfactory but voluntary contributions to the General Fund remained insufficient. The Secretary-General discussed the provision of additional facilities to the Institute.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/584], adopted resolution 55/208 without vote [agenda item 97].

United Nations Institute for Training and Research

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/125 of 19 December 1994, 50/121 of 20 December 1995, 51/188 of 16 December 1996, 52/206 of 18 December 1997, 53/195 of 15 December 1998 and 54/229 of 22 December 1999,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General and the Executive Director of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research,

Welcoming the efforts made towards consolidation of the restructuring process of the Institute and the recent progress made by the Institute in its various programmes and activities, including the improved cooperation that has been established with other organi-

UN Institute for Training and Research

Report of Executive Director. A report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Instizations of the United Nations system and with regional and national institutions,

Expressing its appreciation to the Governments and private institutions that have made or pledged financial and other contributions to the Institute,

Noting that contributions to the General Fund have not increased and that the participation of the developed countries in training programmes in New York and Geneva is increasing,

Noting also that the bulk of the resources contributed to the Institute are directed to the Special Purpose Grants Fund rather than to the General Fund, and stressing the need to address that unbalanced situation,

Noting further that the Institute receives no subsidy from the United Nations regular budget, that it provides training programmes to all Member States free of charge and that similar United Nations institutions based at Geneva are not charged rent or maintenance costs,

Reiterating that training activities should be accorded a more visible and larger role in support of the management of international affairs and in the execution of the economic and social development programmes of the United Nations system,

1. Reaffirms the importance of a coordinated, United Nations system-wide approach to research and training based on an effective coherent strategy and an effective division of labour among the relevant institutions and bodies;

2. Also reaffirms the relevance of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research in view of the growing importance of training within the United Nations and the training requirements of States and the relevance of training-related research activities undertaken by the Institute within its mandate;

3. Stresses the need for the Institute to strengthen further its cooperation with other United Nations institutes and relevant national, regional and international institutes;

4. Welcomes the progress made in building partnerships between the Institute and other agencies and bodies of the United Nations system with respect to their training programmes, and, in this context, underlines the need to develop further and to expand the scope of these partnerships, in particular at the country level;

5. Welcomes also the decisions taken so far by the Secretary-General to ensure continuity in the management of the Institute and to consider the proper grade for the post of Executive Director;

6. Requests the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research to intensify its efforts to attract experts from developing countries and countries with economies in transition for the preparation of relevant training materials for the programmes and activities of the Institute, and stresses that the courses of the Institute should focus primarily on development issues;

7. Renews its appeal to all Governments, in particular those of developed countries, and to private institutions that have not yet contributed financially or otherwise to the Institute, to give it their generous financial and other support, and urges the States that have interrupted their voluntary contributions to consider resuming them in view of the successful restructuring and revitalization of the Institute;

8. Calls upon developed countries, which are increasingly participating in the training programmes conducted in New York and Geneva, to make contributions or consider increasing their contributions to the General Fund;

9. Encourages the Board of Trustees of the Institute to continue its efforts to resolve the critical financial situation of the Institute, in particular with a view to broadening its donor base and increasing the contributions made to the General Fund;

10. Also encourages the Board of Trustees to consider diversifying further the venues of the events organized by the Institute and to include the cities hosting regional commissions, in order to promote greater participation and reduce costs;

11. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Institute and United Nations funds and programmes, to continue to explore ways and means of systematically utilizing the Institute in the execution of training and capacity-building programmes for the economic and social development of developing countries;

12. Notes with appreciation the services rendered by the Executive Director of the Institute in the light of the challenges emanating from the increased responsibilities encountered by his office;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to consider re-classifying the rental rates and maintenance costs charged to the Institute with a view to alleviating its current financial difficulties, which are aggravated by the current practice of charging commercial rates, taking into account that other organizations affiliated with the United Nations enjoy such privileges;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to it at its fifty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item on training and research would remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-fifth (2001) session (decision 55/458).

United Nations University

In a September report [A/55/412], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 53/194 [YUN 1998, p. 1058], presented measures taken to improve interaction between the United Nations University (UNU) and the rest of the UN system. He observed that over the preceding year, UNU had continued to progress in developing closer relations with other UN entities. Under the UNU Council's four-year strategic plan (2000-2004), developed in consultation with UN organizations and agencies, ongoing projects and new initiatives would be structured within two broad programme areas: peace and governance, and environment and sustainable development.

The Secretary-General concluded that, in spite of the relatively modest level of funding, UNU continued to expand its activities and programmes. UNU research findings had played an important role in policy formulation within the UN system. However, there was a need for better communication between UNU research producers and potential system-wide research consumers, an area partially addressed through a new dialogue process initiated in Geneva during 2000, which brought the two together to discuss enhanced collaboration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 87], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/55/584], adopted resolution 55/206 without vote [agenda item 97].

United Nations University

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions on the United Nations University, including resolution 53/194 of 15 December 1998,

Having considered the report of the Council of the United Nations University, as presented by the Rector of the University on 31 October 2000, and the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind the need to continue to ensure a coordinated, system-wide approach to training and training-related research issues and to continue to pursue a coherent strategy for building on common fields of interest and complementarities among the various training and research institutions in the United Nations system,

Expressing its deep appreciation for the voluntary contributions made to date by Governments and other public and private entities in support of the University,

Noting with satisfaction that, since its creation twenty-five years ago, the University has developed a distinctive identity in the United Nations system and the international academic and scientific community,

1. Welcomes the adoption by the Governing Council of the United Nations University of the "Strategic Plan, 2000: Advancing Knowledge for Human Security and Development", which has a programmatic focus on research, policy studies, capacity-building and dissemination of information in the two thematic areas of peace and governance and environment and sustainable development, in line with the priority concerns of the United Nations;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the steps taken by the Council and the Rector of the University to promote the work and the visibility of the University, in particular among Member States, the United Nations and its agencies, through such measures as organizing a series of public forums for the purpose of disseminating the results of its research, and requests them to further intensify such efforts;

3. Welcomes the contribution made by the University to the work of the United Nations, both in intergovernmental processes, including United Nations global conferences, and in analytical work, and requests the Rector to intensify his efforts to extend the policy studies programme of the University;

4. Emphasizes the continuing need of the University to strengthen the capacity of scholarly and scientific institutions in developing countries by extending its capacity-building programmes and through innovative partnerships and networking, involving the United Nations system, academic entities, professional associations, private sector bodies and other elements of civil society that will bring additional input to the work of the University;

5. Welcomes the progress made by the University in improving interaction and communication between the University and the rest of the United Nations system, noted in the report of the Secretary-General, requests the Rector to intensify his efforts in this regard, and also requests the Secretary-General to encourage other bodies of the United Nations system to improve their interaction and communication with the University so that it may serve as a think tank for the system;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in this connection, to continue his consideration of innovative measures to improve interaction and communication between the University and other relevant bodies of the United Nations system and, in the light of resolution 53/194, to ensure that the work of the University is taken into account in all relevant activities of the system so that the system may draw more extensively upon the work of the University, and to submit a report thereon to the Assembly at its fifty-seventh session;

7. Welcomes the progress made with regard to the participation of the University in the work of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, and encourages the University to play an active role in this regard in order to better understand and respond to the needs of the United Nations system as it carries out its work;

8. Also welcomes the initiative taken by the University, together with the United Nations Office at Geneva, in bringing together United Nations research entities, and invites the Secretary-General to use those annual meetings to develop greater synergy among them, and between them and other bodies of the United Nations system;

9. Takes note of the important ongoing cooperation between the University and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in particular in the follow-up activities to the World Conference on Higher Education, held in Paris from 5 to 9 October 1998, the preparation of the World Water Development Report and the initiation of the programme on dialogue among civilizations;

10. Recognizes the importance of the creation of linkages, collaboration and cooperation with other research institutions and universities throughout the world, in particular in developing countries, in order to facilitate the exchange of information, experience and best practice so as to mainstream the perspective of developing countries in the activities of the University;

11. Requests the University to broaden the reach of its dissemination activities by using innovative methods, including new information and communication technologies, to ensure that the knowledge developed by the University is made available to all those to whom it may be of benefit;

12. Requests the Council and the Rector, taking into account the previous resolutions of the Assembly and the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on the University, to continue to make further efforts to ensure the efficiency and cost-effectiveness of the activities of the University, as well as its financial transparency and accountability, to intensify efforts to augment its Endowment Fund and to find innovative ways to mobilize operating contributions and other programme and project support;

13. Invites the international community to make voluntary contributions to the University, including its research and training centres and programmes, and in particular to its Endowment Fund.

Education for all

The Education for All (EFA) 2000 Assessment—a detailed analysis of the state of basic education worldwide—which was launched in 1997 under the auspices of the EFA Forum [YUN 1997, p. 1181] to follow up the 1990 World Conference on Education for All [YUN 1990, p. 763], demonstrated significant progress in many countries. However, in 2000, more than 113 million children did not have access to primary education, 880 million adults were illiterate, gender discrimination continued to permeate education systems, and the quality of learning and the acquisition of human values and skills fell short of the aspirations and needs of individuals and societies.

The World Education Forum (Dakar, Senegal, 26-28 April), sponsored by the United Nations Development Programme, UNESCO, the United Nations Population Fund, UNICEF and the World Bank, was convened to assess progress towards education for all since the 1990 World Conference. At the opening of the Forum, the Secretary-General launched the 10-year United Nations Girls' Education Initiative. The Forum adopted the Dakar Framework for Action, Education for All: Meeting Our Collective Commitments, which reaffirmed the goal of education for all, committed participants to work towards specific educational goals by 2015 or earlier, and called for the development or strengthening of national action plans and the reinforcement of national, regional and international mechanisms.

Chapter X

Women

United Nations efforts to advance the status of women and ensure their rights in 2000 centred on implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, a comprehensive plan for women's empowerment based on the goals of equality, development and peace, which was adopted at the Fourth (1995) World Conference on Women. In June, the General Assembly held its twenty-third special session to review progress in implementing the 12 critical areas of concern outlined in the Platform for Action. The special session—known as Beijing+5 and entitled “Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century”—culminated in the adoption of a political declaration and an outcome document containing further actions and initiatives for overcoming obstacles to realizing the Platform's goals. Those documents reaffirmed the importance of gender mainstreaming in all areas and at all levels and the complementarity between mainstreaming and special activities targeting women.

In December, the Assembly addressed follow-up to the Fourth World Conference and the outcome of the special session, as well as issues related to the elimination of all forms of violence against women, including crimes committed in the name of honour, and the girl child.

In October, following discussions on the issue of women, peace and security, the Security Council adopted a resolution calling for measures to protect women and girls from gender-based violence during armed conflict. The Council also urged adoption of a gender perspective during the negotiation and implementation of peace agreements.

The Economic and Social Council adopted resolutions addressing the situation of women and girls in Afghanistan, Palestinian women, revitalization of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, and follow-up to the Council's 1999 high-level segment on the role of employment and work in poverty eradication: empowerment and advancement of women.

The Commission on the Status of Women took action with regard to the release of women and children taken hostage in armed conflicts and on issues related to women, the girl child and HIV/AIDS. The Commission also acted as the preparatory committee for Beijing+5.

In June, the United Nations Development Fund for Women published the first Progress of the World's Women 2000, a new biennial report documenting advances and challenges with regard to improving women's economic, social and political status and securing their rights. The 2000 report charted progress made from the mid-1980s to the late 1990s, particularly in relation to the economic dimensions of gender equality and women's empowerment in the context of globalization.

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women considered reports from 15 States parties to the 1979 Convention.

Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women

Twenty-third special session (Beijing+ 5)

The General Assembly held its twenty-third special session from 5 to 10 June to appraise and assess implementation of the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women [YUN 1985, p. 940] and the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, adopted in 1995 by the Fourth World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1170]. The theme of the session was “Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century”. Convened in accordance with resolution 52/100 [YUN 1997, p. 1188], the special session, also known as Beijing+5, culminated in the adoption of a political declaration and of further actions and initiatives to implement the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action (the outcome document). The declaration reaffirmed the commitment of Governments to the goals and objectives of the Fourth World Conference and to implementation of the 12 critical areas of concern set forth in the Platform for Action: women and poverty; education and training of women; women and health; violence against women; women and armed conflict; women and the economy; women in power and decision-making; institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women; human rights of women; women and the media; women and the environment; and the girl child.

The outcome document listed and described 199 actions to be taken at the national and international levels by Governments, the UN system, international and regional organizations, the private sector, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and other actors of civil society. In particular, it called for action in the areas of education, social services and health; violence against women and girls; the persistent burden of poverty on women; natural disasters and environmental management; the development of strong, effective and accessible national machineries for the advancement of women; and the formulation of strategies to enable women and men to reconcile and equally share work and family responsibilities.

In addition to further action on the 12 critical areas of concern, the outcome document addressed issues that had become prominent since the convening of the Fourth World Conference: women's access to decision-making, particularly in peacekeeping processes; gender-sensitive approaches to HIV/AIDS and humanitarian crises; changing patterns of migratory flows; technologies; violence against women, including trafficking and in armed conflict; and the realization of women's full enjoyment of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights. The document also proposed measures to address the challenges presented by globalization to implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action.

Addressing the special session, which was attended by representatives of 178 Member States and a large number of international organizations and institutions, the Secretary-General focused on the importance of education, stressing that it was both the entry point into the global economy and the best defence against its pitfalls. Once educated and integrated into the workforce, women would have more choices and provide better nutrition, health care and education for their children.

In a decision on organizational arrangements for the session, the Assembly established an Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole to consider the question of the review and appraisal of progress made in the implementation of the 12 critical areas of concern in the Beijing Platform for Action and the question of further actions and initiatives for overcoming obstacles to its implementation (decision S-23/21). In other action, the Assembly appointed the members of the Credentials Committee (decision S-23/11); approved the report of the Credentials Committee (resolution S-23/1); elected the President of the Assembly (decision S-23/12); elected the Vice-Presidents of the Assembly (decision S-23/13); elected the Chairpersons of the Main Committees (decision S-23/14); and elected the officers of the Ad Hoc Committee (decision S-23/15) (see APPENDIX III for details). The Assembly also adopted the agenda for the special session (decision S-23/22) and decided that five NGOs might make statements in the debate in plenary (decision S-23/23).

Preparatory process

Preparatory committee. The Commission on the Status of Women, acting as the preparatory committee for the special session of the General Assembly, held its third session in New York from 3 to 17 March and on 20 April [A/S-23/2]; it held its resumed third session on 2 June [A/S-23/2/Add.1,2 (Parts I-IV) & Add.2/Corr.1] to complete negotiations on the draft political declaration, continue work on the proposed outcome document on further actions and initiatives for implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and finalize organizational arrangements. A panel discussion entitled "Outlook on gender equality, development and peace beyond the year 2000" took place on 6 March.

On 15 March, the General Assembly, by decisions 54/466 and 54/467, decided, as recommended by the Commission acting as preparatory committee, on arrangements regarding the participation and accreditation of NGOs in the special session.

Reports of Secretary-General. The preparatory committee had before it a January report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.6/2000/PC/2 & Corr.1-3], which comprised a review and appraisal of progress made towards implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action nationally, regionally and internationally. The three-part report provided the background to the Beijing Conference, the intergovernmental process since Beijing and an overview of the major trends in implementation of the Platform for Action. It also analysed implementation in each critical area of concern and the institutional and financial arrangements called for in the Platform for Action. Part three of the report identified some of the political, economic, social and cultural changes noted in the Platform for Action that had become particularly pronounced in the five years since the Beijing Conference and that posed new challenges for the Platform's implementation. The overview of trends drew on responses from 133 Governments to a questionnaire prepared by the Secretariat in collaboration with the regional commissions. Those trends concerned changes in policy, legislation and institutions and programmes initiated by Governments to comply with the strategic objectives set forth in the 12 critical areas of concern of the Platform of Action.

In a January report on emerging issues affecting the situation of women [E/CN.6/2000/PC/4], submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 52/231 [YUN 1998, p. 1062], the Secretary-General presented material on further actions and initiatives for the preparation of the outlook beyond the year 2000, which was based on the results of an international workshop, "Beijing+5—Future Actions and Initiatives" (Beirut, Lebanon, 8-10 November 1999). The workshop assessed the impact of trends of global change since 1995 on gender equality, development and peace in terms of the implementation of the Platform and recommended measures to address the emerging challenges. Experts attending the workshop found that the 1995 World Conference had led to new legislation and an increased awareness of women's rights and gender equality, which had not been matched by significant changes in attitudes and practices in key areas. Women's participation in economic and political life at decision-making levels was stagnating; new perceptions of gender identities and roles were evolving at the margins rather than in the mainstream; and a gap persisted between legislation and enforcement, as demonstrated in the area of violence against women. Future actions and strategies needed to respond to new realities, including globalization. The workshop's action-oriented recommendations, which cut across the three themes of equality, development and peace and the 12 critical areas of concern, addressed attitudes and practices, governance, alliances and coalitions, social and economic justice, and peace-building.

Other reports. The preparatory committee also had before it a report on the mainstreaming of gender within UN projects and programmes [E/CN.6/2000/PC/3] and considered the results of five regional preparatory meetings [E/CN.6/2000/PC/6 & Add.1-5]: for Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, Thailand, 26-29 October 1999); for Africa (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 22-26 November 1999); for Western Asia (Beirut, 12-15 December 1999); for Europe (Geneva, 19-21 January 2000); and for Latin America and the Caribbean (Lima, Peru, 8-10 February 2000). Additional documents before the special session included a statement submitted by the Administrative Committee on Coordination [A/S-23/8], expressing its commitment to and outlining actions for intensified action in support of accelerated implementation of the Platform for Action and gender mainstreaming.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 June [meeting 10], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole [A/S-23/10/Rev.1], adopted resolution S/23-2 without vote [agenda item 10].

Political declaration

The General Assembly

Adopts the political declaration annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Political declaration

We the Governments participating in the special session of the General Assembly

1. Reaffirm our commitment to the goals and objectives contained in the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, adopted in 1995 at the Fourth World Conference on Women, and the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women to the year 2000 as the culmination of the United Nations Decade for Women, 1976 to 1985;

2. Also reaffirm our commitment to the implementation of the twelve critical areas of concern in the Beijing Platform for Action, which are women and poverty, education and training of women, women and health, violence against women, women and armed conflict, women and the economy, women in power and decision-making, institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women, human rights of women, women and the media, women and the environment, and the girl child; and call for the implementation of the agreed conclusions and resolutions on the follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women since the fortieth session of the Commission;

3. Recognize that we have primary responsibility for the full implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and all the relevant commitments for the advancement of women, and, in this connection, call for continued international cooperation, including the reaffirmation to strive to fulfil the yet to be attained internationally agreed target of 0.7 per cent of the gross national product of developed countries for overall official development assistance as soon as possible;

4. Welcome the progress made thus far towards gender equality and the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and reaffirm our commitment to accelerate the achievement of universal ratification of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and in this regard acknowledge the efforts at all levels of Governments, the United Nations system, and intergovernmental, other international and regional organizations and urge continued efforts for the full implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action;

5. Recognize the role and contribution of civil society, in particular non-governmental organizations and women's organizations, in the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, and encourage their participation in further implementation and assessment processes;

6. Emphasize that men must involve themselves and take joint responsibility with women for the promotion of gender equality;

7. Reaffirm the importance of mainstreaming a gender perspective in the process of implementation of the outcome of other major United Nations conferences and summits and the need for a coordinated follow-up to all major conferences and summits by Governments, regional organizations, and all of the bodies and organizations of the United Nations system within their respective mandates.

We the Governments, at the beginning of the new millennium,

8. Reaffirm our commitment to overcoming obstacles encountered in the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and to strengthening and safeguarding a national and international enabling environment, and to this end pledge to undertake further action to ensure their full and accelerated implementation, inter alia, through the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes and promoting full participation and empowerment of women and enhanced international cooperation for the full implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action;

9. Agree to assess regularly further implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action with a view to bringing together all parties involved in 2005 to assess progress and consider new initiatives, as appropriate, ten years after the adoption of the Beijing Platform for Action and twenty years after the adoption of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

10. Pledge to ensure the realization of societies in which both women and men work together towards a world where every individual can enjoy equality, development and peace in the twenty-first century.

At the same meeting, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole [A/S-23/10/Rev.1], adopted resolution S-23/3 without vote [agenda item 10].

Further actions and initiatives to implement the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action

The General Assembly

Adopts the further actions and initiatives to implement the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Further actions and initiatives to implement the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action

I. Introduction

1. The Governments which came together at the special session of the General Assembly have reaffirmed their commitment to the goals and objectives contained in the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action adopted at the Fourth World Conference on Women in 1995 as contained in the report of the Conference. The Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action set as goals gender equality, development and peace and constituted an agenda for the empowerment of women. The Governments reviewed and appraised progress and identified obstacles and current challenges in the implementation of the Platform for Action. They recognized that the goals set and commitments made in the Platform for Action have not been fully achieved and implemented, and have agreed upon further actions and initiatives at the local, national, regional and international levels to accelerate the implementation of the Platform for Action and to ensure that commitments for gender equality, development and peace are fully realized.

2. The Beijing Platform for Action identified twelve critical areas of concern for priority action to achieve the advancement and empowerment of women. The Commission on the Status of Women has reviewed progress in each of the twelve critical areas of concern and since 1996 has adopted agreed conclusions and recommendations for accelerated implementation. The Platform for Action, together with these agreed conclusions and recommendations, forms the basis for further progress towards the achievement of gender equality, development and peace in the twenty-first century.

3. The objective of the Platform for Action, which is in full conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and international law, is the empowerment of all women. The full realization of all human rights and fundamental freedoms of all women is essential for the empowerment of women. While the significance of national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds must be borne in mind, it is the duty of States, regardless of their political, economic and cultural systems, to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms. The implementation of the Platform for Action, including through national laws and the formulation of strategies, policies, programmes and development priorities, is the sovereign responsibility of each State, in conformity with all human rights and fundamental freedoms, and the significance of and full respect for various religious and ethical values, cultural backgrounds and philosophical convictions of individuals and their communities should contribute to the full enjoyment by women of their human rights and the achievement of equality, development and peace.

4. The Platform for Action emphasizes that women share common concerns that can only be addressed by working together and in partnership with men towards the common goal of gender equality around the world. It respects and values the full diversity of women's situations and conditions and recognizes that some women face particular barriers to their empowerment.

5. The Platform for Action recognizes that women face barriers to full equality and advancement because of such factors as their race, age, language, ethnicity, culture, religion or disability, because they are indigenous women or of other status. Many women encounter specific obstacles related to their family status, particularly as single parents, and to their socio-economic status, including their living conditions in rural, isolated or impoverished areas. Additional barriers also exist for refugee women, other displaced women, including internally displaced women, as well as for immigrant women and migrant women, including women migrant workers. Many women are also particularly affected by environmental disasters, serious and infectious diseases and various forms of violence against women.

II. Achievements in and obstacles to the implementation of the twelve critical areas of concern of the Beijing Platform for Action

6. Assessment of achievements and obstacles must be made in relation to the commitments made in the Beijing Platform for Action and its twelve critical areas of concern, namely by looking into the actions taken and the results attained, as indicated in national reports, as well as by taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General and of the results, conclusions and agreements of the five regional meetings held in preparation for the special session of the General Assembly and other relevant sources. Such assessment shows that, even though significant positive developments can be identified, barriers remain and that the goals set and commitments made in Beijing need to be implemented further. The summary of achievements and of persistent or new obstacles can therefore constitute a global framework for the identification of further actions and initiatives to overcome obstacles and to achieve the full and accelerated implementation of the Platform for Action at all levels and in all areas.

A. Women and poverty

7. Achievements. Considerable progress has been achieved in increasing recognition of gender dimensions of poverty and in the recognition that gender equality is one of the factors of specific importance for eradicating poverty, particularly in relation to the feminization of poverty. Efforts have been made to integrate a gender perspective into poverty eradication policies and programmes by Governments, in co-operation with non-governmental organizations. Multilateral, international and regional financial institutions are also giving increased attention to the incorporation of a gender perspective into their policies. Progress has been made by pursuing a two-pronged approach of promoting employment and income-generating activities for women and providing access to basic social services, including education and health care. Microcredit and other financial instruments for women have emerged as a successful strategy for economic empowerment and have widened economic opportunities for some women living in poverty, in particular in rural areas. Policy development has taken account of the particular needs of female-headed households. Research has enhanced the understanding of the differing impacts of poverty on women and men and tools have been developed to assist with this assessment.

8. Obstacles. Many factors have contributed to widening economic inequality between women and men, including income inequality, unemployment and the deepening of poverty levels of the most vulnerable and marginalized groups. Debt burdens, excessive military spending, inconsistent with national security requirements, unilateral coercive measures at variance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations, armed conflict, foreign occupation, terrorism, low levels of official development assistance and the unfulfilled commitment to strive to fulfil the yet to be attained internationally agreed target of 0.7 per cent of the gross national product of developed countries for overall official development assistance and 0.15 to 0.2 per cent for the least developed countries, as well as the lack of efficient use of resources, among other factors, can constrain national efforts to combat poverty. In addition, gender inequalities and disparities in economic power-sharing, unequal distribution of unremunerated work between women and men, lack of technological and financial support for women's entrepreneurship, unequal access to, and control over, capital, particularly land and credit and access to labour markets, as well as all harmful traditional and customary practices, have constrained women's economic empowerment and exacerbated the feminization of poverty. Fundamental economic restructuring experienced by the countries with economies in transition has led to lack of resources for poverty-eradication programmes aimed at empowerment of women.

B. Education and training of women

9. Achievements. There is an increased awareness that education is one of the most valuable means of achieving gender equality and the empowerment of women. Progress was achieved in women's and girls' education and training at all levels, especially where there was sufficient political commitment and resource allocation. Measures were taken in all regions to initiate alternative education and training systems to reach women and girls in indigenous communities and other disadvantaged and marginalized groups to encourage them to pursue all fields of study, in particular non-traditional fields of study, and to remove gender biases from education and training.

10. Obstacles. In some countries, efforts to eradicate illiteracy and strengthen literacy among women and girls and to increase their access to all levels and types of education were constrained by the lack of resources and insufficient political will and commitment to improve educational infrastructure and undertake educational reforms; persisting gender discrimination and bias, including in teacher training; gender-based occupational stereotyping in schools, institutions of further education and communities; lack of childcare facilities; persistent use of gender stereotypes in educational materials; and insufficient attention paid to the link between women's enrolment in higher educational institutions and labour market dynamics. The remote location of some communities and, in some cases, inadequate salaries and benefits make attracting and retaining teaching professionals difficult and can result in lower quality education. Additionally, in a number of countries, economic, social and infrastructural barriers, as well as traditional discriminatory practices, have contributed to lower enrolment and retention rates for girls. Little progress has been made in eradicating illiteracy in some developing countries, aggravating women's inequality at the economic, social and political levels. In some of these countries, the inappropriate design and application of structural adjustment policies has had a particularly severe impact on the education sector since they resulted in declining investment in education infrastructure.

C. Women and health

11. Achievements. Programmes have been implemented to create awareness among policy makers and planners of the need for health programmes to cover all aspects of women's health throughout women's life cycle, which have contributed to an increase in life expectancy in many countries. There is: increased attention to high mortality rates among women and girls as a result of malaria, tuberculosis, water-borne diseases, communicable and diarrhoeal diseases and malnutrition; increased attention to sexual and reproductive health and reproductive rights of women as contained in paragraphs 94 and 95 of the Platform for Action, as well as in some countries increased emphasis on implementing paragraph 96 of the Platform for Action; increased knowledge and use of family planning and contraceptive methods as well as increased awareness among men of their responsibility in family planning and contraceptive methods and their use; increased attention to sexually transmitted infections, including human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) among women and girls, and methods to protect against such infections; increased attention to breastfeeding, nutrition, infants' and mothers' health; the introduction of a gender perspective in health and health-related educational and physical activities, and gender-specific prevention and rehabilitation programmes on substance abuse, including tobacco, drugs and alcohol; increased attention to women's mental health, health conditions at work, environmental considerations and recognition of the specific health needs of older women. At its twenty-first special session, held in New York from 30 June to 2 July 1999, the General Assembly reviewed achievements and adopted key actions in the field of women's health for the further implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development.

12. Obstacles. Worldwide, the gap between and within rich and poor countries with respect to infant mortality and maternal mortality and morbidity rates, as well as with respect to measures addressing the health of women and girls, given their special vulnerability regarding sexually transmitted infections, including HIV/AIDS and other sexual and reproductive health problems, together with endemic, infectious and communicable diseases, such as malaria, tuberculosis, diarrhoeal and water-borne diseases and chronic non-transmissible diseases, remains unacceptable. In some countries, such endemic, infectious and communicable diseases continue to take a toll on women and girls. In other countries, non-communicable diseases, such as cardiopulmonary diseases, hypertension and degenerative diseases, remain among the major causes of mortality and morbidity among women. Despite progress in some countries, the rates of maternal mortality and morbidity remain unacceptably high in most countries. Investment in essential obstetric care remains insufficient in many countries. The absence of a holistic approach to health and health care for women and girls based on women's right to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health throughout the life cycle has constrained progress. Some women continue to encounter barriers to their right to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health. The predominant focus of health-care systems on treating illness rather than maintaining optimal health also prevents a holistic approach. There is, in some countries, insufficient attention to the role of social and economic determinants of health. A lack of access to clean water, adequate nutrition and safe sanitation, a lack of gender-specific health research and technology and insufficient gender sensitivity in the provision of health information and health care and health services, including those related to environmental and occupational health hazards, affect women in developing and developed countries. Poverty and the lack of development continue to affect the capacity of many developing countries to provide and expand quality health care. A shortage of financial and human resources, in particular in developing countries, as well as restructuring of the health sector and/or the increasing trend to privatization of health-care systems in some cases, has resulted in poor quality, reduced and insufficient health-care services, and has also led to less attention to the health of the most vulnerable groups of women. Such obstacles as unequal power relationships between women and men, in which women often do not have the power to insist on safe and responsible sex practices, and a lack of communication and understanding between men and women on women's health needs, inter alia, endanger women's health, particularly by increasing their susceptibility to sexually transmitted infections, including HIV/AIDS, and affect women's access to health care and education, especially in relation to prevention. Adolescents, particularly adolescent girls, continue to lack access to sexual and reproductive health information, education and services. Women who are recipients of health care are frequently not treated with respect nor guaranteed privacy and confidentiality, and do not receive full information about options and services available. In some cases, health services and workers still do not conform to human rights and to ethical, professional and gender-sensitive standards in the delivery of women's health services, nor do they ensure responsible, voluntary and informed consent. There continues to be a lack of information on availability of and access to appropriate, affordable, primary health-care services of high quality, including sexual and reproductive health care, insufficient attention to maternal and emergency obstetric care as well as a lack of prevention, screening and treatment for breast, cervical and ovarian cancers and osteoporosis. The testing and development of male contraceptives is still insufficient. While some measures have been taken in some countries, the actions set out in paragraphs 106 (j) and (k) of the Platform for Action regarding the health impact of unsafe abortion and the need to reduce the recourse to abortion have not been fully implemented. The rising incidence of tobacco use among women, particularly young women, has increased their risk of cancer and other serious diseases, as well as gender-specific risks from tobacco and environmental tobacco smoke.

D. Violence against women

13. Achievements. It is widely accepted that violence against women and girls, whether occurring in public or private life, is a human rights issue. It is accepted that violence against women, where perpetrated or condoned by the State or its agents, constitutes a human rights violation. It is also accepted that States have an obligation to exercise due diligence to prevent, investigate and punish acts of violence, whether those acts are perpetrated by the State or by private persons, and provide protection to victims. There is increased awareness of and commitment to preventing and combating violence against women and girls, including domestic violence, which violates and impairs or nullifies the enjoyment of their human rights and fundamental freedoms, through, inter alia, improved legislation, policies and programmes. Governments have initiated policy reforms and mechanisms, such as interdepartmental committees, guidelines and protocols, national, multidisciplinary and coordinated programmes to address violence. Some Governments have also introduced or reformed laws to protect women and girls from all forms of violence and laws to prosecute the perpetrators. There is an increasing recognition at all levels that all forms of violence against women seriously affect their health. Health-care providers are seen to have a significant role to play in addressing this matter. Some progress has been made in the provision of services for abused women and children, including legal services, shelters, special health services and counselling, hotlines and police units with special training. Education for law enforcement personnel, members of the judiciary, health-care providers and welfare workers is being promoted. Educational materials for women and public awareness campaigns have been developed as well as research on the root causes of violence. Research into and specialized studies on gender roles are increasing, in particular on men's and boys' roles, and all forms of violence against women, as well as on the situation of and impact on children growing up in families where violence occurs. Successful co-operation has been achieved between governmental and non-governmental organizations in the field of preventing violence against women. The active support of civil society, in particular women's organizations and non-governmental organizations, has had an important role, inter alia, in promoting awareness-raising campaigns and in the provision of support services to women victims of violence. Efforts towards the eradication of harmful traditional practices, including female genital mutilation, which is a form of violence against women, have received national, regional and international policy support. Many Governments have introduced educational and outreach programmes, as well as legislative measures criminalizing these practices. In addition, this support includes the appointment of the Special Ambassador for the Elimination of Female Genital Mutilation by the United Nations Population Fund.

14. Obstacles. Women continue to be victims of various forms of violence. Inadequate understanding of the root causes of all forms of violence against women and girls hinders efforts to eliminate violence against women and girls. There is a lack of comprehensive programmes dealing with the perpetrators, including programmes, where appropriate, which would enable them to solve problems without violence. Inadequate data on violence further impedes informed policy-making and analysis. Sociocultural attitudes which are discriminatory and economic inequalities reinforce women's subordinate place in society. This makes women and girls vulnerable to many forms of violence, such as physical, sexual and psychological violence occurring in the family, including battering, sexual abuse of female children in the household, dowry-related violence, marital rape, female genital mutilation and other traditional practices harmful to women, non-spousal violence and violence related to exploitation. In many countries, a coordinated multidisciplinary approach to responding to violence which includes the health system, the workplace, the media, the education system, as well as the justice system, is still limited. Domestic violence, including sexual violence in marriage, is still treated as a private matter in some countries. Insufficient awareness of the consequences of domestic violence, how to prevent it and the rights of victims still exists. Although improving, the legal and legislative measures, especially in the criminal justice area, to eliminate different forms of violence against women and children, including domestic violence and child pornography, are weak in many countries. Prevention strategies also remain fragmented and reactive and there is a lack of programmes on these issues. It is also noted that, in some countries, problems have arisen from the use of new information and communication technologies for trafficking in women and children and for purposes of all forms of economic and sexual exploitation.

E. Women and armed conflict

15. Achievements. There is a wider recognition that the destructive impact of armed conflict is different on women and men and that a gender-sensitive approach to the application of international human rights law and international humanitarian law is important. Steps have been taken at the national and international levels to address abuses against women, including increased attention to ending impunity for crimes against women in situations of armed conflict. The work of the International Tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda has been an important contribution to address violence against women in the context of armed conflict. Also of historical significance is the adoption of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, which provides that rape, sexual slavery, enforced prostitution, forced pregnancy, enforced sterilization and other forms of sexual violence are war crimes when committed in the context of armed conflict and also under defined circumstances, crimes against humanity. The contribution of women in the areas of peace-building, peacemaking and conflict resolution is being increasingly recognized. Education and training in non-violent conflict resolution have been introduced. Progress has been made in the dissemination and implementation of the guidelines for the protection of refugee women, and in addressing the needs of displaced women. Gender-based persecution has been accepted as a basis for refugee status in some countries. There is recognition by Governments, the international community and organizations, in particular the United Nations, that women and men experience humanitarian emergencies differently, and there is a need for a more holistic support for refugee and displaced women, including those who have suffered all forms of abuse, including gender-specific abuse, to ensure equal access to appropriate and adequate food and nutrition, clean water, safe sanitation, shelter, education, social and health services, including reproductive health care and maternity care. There is greater recognition of the need to integrate a gender perspective in the planning, design and implementation of humanitarian assistance and to provide adequate resources. Humanitarian relief agencies and civil society, including non-governmental organizations, have played an increasingly important role in the provision of humanitarian assistance, as well as in the design, where appropriate, and implementation of programmes to address the needs of women and girls, including refugee and displaced women and girls in humanitarian emergencies, and in conflict and post-conflict situations.

16. Obstacles. Peace is inextricably linked to equality between women and men and development. Armed conflicts and conflicts of other types, wars of aggression, foreign occupation, colonial or other alien domination, as well as terrorism, continue to cause serious obstacles to the advancement of women. The targeting of civilians, including women and children, the displacement of people, and the recruitment of child soldiers in violation of national or international law, by State and/or non-State actors, which occur in armed conflicts, have had a particularly adverse impact on gender equality and women's human rights. Armed conflict creates or exacerbates the high level of female-headed households, which in many cases are living in poverty. The underrepresentation, at all levels, of women in decision-making positions, such as special envoys or special representatives of the Secretary-General, in peacekeeping, peace-building, post-conflict reconciliation and reconstruction, as well as lack of gender awareness in these areas, presents serious obstacles. There has been a failure to provide sufficient resources, to distribute adequately resources and to address the needs of increasing numbers of refugees, who are mostly women and children, particularly in developing countries hosting large numbers of refugees; international assistance has not kept pace with the increasing number of refugees. The growing number of internally displaced persons and the provision for their needs, in particular women and children, continue to represent a double burden to the affected countries and their financial resources. Inadequate training of personnel dealing with the needs of women in situations of armed conflict or as refugees, such as a shortage of specific programmes that address the healing of women from trauma and skills training, remains a problem.

17. Excessive military expenditures, including global military expenditures, trade in arms and investment for arms production, taking into consideration national security requirements, direct the possible allocation of funds away from social and economic development, in particular for the advancement of women. In several countries, economic sanctions have had social and humanitarian impacts on the civilian population, in particular women and children.

18. In some countries, the advancement of women is adversely affected by unilateral measures at variance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations that create obstacles to trade relations among States, impede the full realization of social and economic development and jeopardize the well-being of the population in the affected countries, with particular consequences for women and children.

19. In situations of armed conflict, there are continued violations of human rights of women, which are violations of fundamental principles of international human rights law and international humanitarian law. There has been an increase in all forms of violence against women, including sexual slavery, rape, systematic rape, sexual abuse and forced pregnancies, in situations of armed conflict. Displacement compounded by loss of home and property, poverty, family disintegration and separation and other consequences of armed conflict are severely affecting the populations, especially women and children. Girls are also abducted or recruited, in violation of international law, into situations of armed conflict, including as combatants, sexual slaves or providers of domestic services.

E. Women and the economy
